Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the subject before us is the second reading of a bill to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act of 1944. It is unfortunate that this bill, which came up for first reading in April of this year, comes down to the house now at this late date. I support the bill because it is one part of a policy to give stability to our agricultural producers; but in my opinion it is unfortunate that it is not properly integrated with other types of policies in order to provide the measure of stability that should prevail in agriculture. In order to have a workable plan, even under this act, it is necessary to integrate that policy with a policy of stability in agriculture, namely, parity prices. In order to do that we would have to establish a parity by which our agricultural producers would get a fair price for their products, thus giving them a decent standard of living. Having established that base parity, we would have to arrive at a formula under which, when the costs of agriculture increased in the various productive fields, we would increase the parity price so that our producers would be able to get out of their produce the money with which to buy back enough goods to preserve a proper balance with the base period. It is unfortunate that we have not used the Agricultural Prices Support Act in order to do that.

I had an order for return in the house on February 25, 1948. My question was:

1. How much has been spent under the agriculture support act since it was passed in 1944?
2. For what purposes, and to what amount, has this act been invoked?

The answer to the first question was that only $807,618.90 has been spent, and of that amount, $75,212.23 has been spent on administration; that $109,305.18 has been spent to cover operating losses of the meat board, the dairy products board and the special products board with respect to overseas contracts for 1946-47; that $123,101.49 has been spent for price support in respect of the 1946 potato crop in the eastern provinces, and that $500,000 has been spent for price support in respect of the 1947 apple crop in Nova Scotia.

I quite agree with the expenditure of those moneys in order to try to bring some form of parity to the producers in those fields and alleviate some of the distress that was occasioned in marketing those products. But I want to bring to the attention of the government some of the submissions which have been made on behalf of agriculture in the last two years.

In 1947 the United Farmers of Canada and the Alberta Farmers' Union presented a brief to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I may say that they speak on behalf of the agriculture groups in the country. One of the recommendations contained in that brief was that the foreword of the act we are now discussing should be changed to read, "An act for the support of the prices of agricultural products." I maintain that the act as it is now constituted does not meet the needs of agriculture. In other words it must be extended in its use in order that moneys may be used from the public treasury so that we can have parity in this country.

Yesterday we passed a resolution to ratify the international wheat agreement. That is one form of trying to get world peace—agreement so that we can have a flow of agricultural products from Canada to overseas importers or consumers. We have also passed the United Kingdom wheat agreement, with which I am in accord; because as a producer and as a member of the House of Commons I recognize the fact that, until we give stability to agricultural producers in this country, we cannot have any stability whatsoever in our economy at large.

Since agriculture is a basic industry, it is essential that one of the first things to do is to give to our agricultural producers the stability as a result of which they will not experience the booms and busts they have experienced in the past. I am in agreement with the recommendations of the United Farmers of Canada and the Alberta Farmers' Union with respect to their recommendations to the government that this act be extended and called "An act for the support of the prices of agricultural products."

With regard to section 1, they recommend that it read:

This act may be cited as the Agricultural Parity Prices Act, 1944, amended 1947.

They go on further to recommend an amendment to section 3 to read as follows:

There shall be an agricultural parity prices board under the direction of the minister consisting of five members including a chairman and a vice-chairman to be appointed by the governor in council and who shall hold office during pleasure.

They recommend an amendment to section 9 of the act to read as follows:

The board shall be empowered to recommend a price change in regard to wheat to maintain a parity balance between agricultural prices and the cost of goods and services that agricultural producers must purchase or pay for. None of the consolidated revenue fund named in this act shall however be used for the purpose of adjusting wheat prices.

I could read all the recommendations, but since they have been tendered to the government I do not think I need do so at this time. Let me say, however, that in a further memorandum to the government in March of this year the interprovincial farmers' union council recommended to the government that a fact finding board be set up——to determine price parity on agricultural products in line with goods and services which enter into production and living cost and that the changes necessary toward that end in the Agricultural Prices Support Act be passed at the present session of parliament.

I am most unhappy about the fact that the government has failed to follow up the recommendation of this large body representing agriculture in Canada. In their brief they outlined the facts of the increased cost to agricultural producers. We in western Canada today are faced with an increase in the cost of fuel. I may say that we have in the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta about 237,000 tractors. The cost of our oil and fuel with which to operate those tractors amounts to about $6,000,000 per annum. Since our cost of production has gone up so enormously it can be seen that we need increased prices, rather than the prices established under the United Kingdom agreement, so that we can operate efficiently and profitably. Our costs of production have gone up—labour costs as well as fuel costs; the cost of farm machinery has gone up owing to the increase in freight rates, and there has been an increase in the cost of farm machinery itself. We are in a precarious position.

I think the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture will understand that if we are to have a healthy state of agriculture in this country, we must keep our agricultural producers in a state of prosperity; if that were done, I think it would be reflected in our whole economy.

In conclusion I repeat that I am greatly disappointed that the government has not seen fit to carry out the recommendations of the large body of farmers represented by the United Farmers of Canada and the Alberta Farmers' Union. I am in full accord with their representations to the government. I think the government should use this act as a permanent part of their stabilizing policy for agriculture. I lament the fact that only a small amount has been used for this purpose in the past; the fund should be used to give stability to the prices of the various products produced by agriculture.

Mr. JULIAN H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): In support of my leader's statement this morning in reference to the beef situation in Canada, and in view of the ever-increasing cost of living, I should like to refer to the fact that a few government supporters have gone to their cabinet ministers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) suggesting that democracy should not be fooled with any longer. Certainly the great majority of the people of this country are clamouring for democracy rather than socialism, and they should not be led astray any longer. They believe democracy is the right form of government as compared with socialism; but now we have the confusion caused by the indecision of the cabinet ministers with respect to the price of beef in this country; we have beef being held back, and as a result the cost of living keeps going up.

The situation is similar to that with respect to the excise tax imposed upon the people of this country by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). Now the people have to guess when it will be removed, or how much of it will be removed, and we have the retail merchants asking the question: Are we going to be compelled to absorb losses amounting to thousands of dollars in order to pay for this experiment? At the same time we have the wholesale meat dealer wrestling with the question whether or not our cattle will be exported to the United States.

In all fairness, and with all sympathy for the members of the Liberal party, I hope they will go to their cabinet ministers in greater numbers and suggest that the people of Canada learn once and for all, without further nonsense, whether beef is going to be exported, so that we can finally arrive at the price the consumer will have to pay. At the same time let us know whether the excise tax is to be removed, so that we may know what we must pay for other commodities. When that is done, democracy will begin to function again and socialism will be a thing of the past.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): After what the last speaker has said, I want to make it perfectly clear that in supporting this bill I do not consider that I am supporting socialism. I look upon this as a measure which is required in order to give fair play and justice to the primary producers of this country. The secondary industries in Canada, as in all countries, have always been in a position to set their prices high enough to return the cost of production plus a fair profit. The primary producers have never been in that position. They have always had to take whatever prices the trade wished to pay them, with a complete disregard for what it might have cost to produce the goods.

The Agricultural Prices Support Act was introduced in 1944, as has been stated already, as a temporary measure to assist in the transition from war to peace. From time to time various farm organizations have urged upon the government the desirability of making this a permanent measure. Strangely enough, at one time in this session I was laying emphasis on the fact that this measure should be made permanent, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) interjected that as far as he was concerned there was nothing in the measure which would indicate that it was not permanent. Apparently the government does not agree with him, however, because the government has found it necessary to bring down this amendment.

One reason why it is essential to maintain a measure of this kind in this country is the fact that for the past eight years the farmers have been accepting prices lower than they could have obtained had it not been for certain government controls. The Minister of Agriculture pointed out that they had been taking these lower prices for eight years, and that in return they had been promised that prices would be stabilized. As a result the government has been trying to stabilize prices, and it has promised that stabilized prices will be maintained in future.

Just what do we mean by stabilized prices, and does this act go far enough in establishing a basis for prices of that kind? Subsection 2 of section 9 of the act states:

> In prescribing prices under paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection one of this section, the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

If that is the basis on which the government is to proceed, I do not think there will be any criticism from agriculture. In other words, under this act it is the duty of the government to see that a fair relationship is maintained between the prices of agricultural products and the prices of the products of other industries. Under this act, in reality the farmers are guaranteed a parity price; but whether or not that is the interpretation the government will place upon this section in the future remains to be seen, because as yet we have not met a serious situation requiring action on the part of the government. That is so as far as the prairie farmers are concerned, though it may not be strictly true of other parts of the country, particularly those concerned with the production of potatoes and apples. But it is very necessary that parity prices be maintained in future in order that the farmers may obtain their fair share of the national income.

The main objection I have to the amendment now before the house is that it continues the act merely as a temporary measure, subject to action by the governor in council. Thus we may have a repetition of what has happened already this year. We may not be aware of it, but we may find one day that section 9 has been taken out of operation by proclamation. We would like to see the legislation made permanent.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Section 9 continued in force.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: One o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: There are only three sections in the bill. Does the committee wish to consider it before one o'clock?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I have a number of questions to ask.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What objection has the department or the government to making this legislation permanent rather than a transitional measure? That is the issue across the country today; it is only a transitional measure. As my leader has said, it is three years since the war ended, yet we still have these temporary transitional measures. The people have great fear of the future; and if this legislation were made permanent it would do a great deal to stabilize agriculture by giving some assistance to the producers throughout the country. I could say a great deal more at this time, but I believe the country is entitled to some explanation from the parliamentary assistant, on behalf of the government, on this most important issue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: One o'clock.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Do hon. gentlemen wish to go ahead and discuss this bill? I can go on with it, if that is their wish. No one is more strongly in support of stabilizing agriculture than this government, but at future sessions there will be plenty of opportunity to discuss the matter further. For the present we are going to extend its operation for a period of two years, and at the end of that time we can make the legislation permanent or otherwise as may be considered desirable.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is there anything that could be put into this bill which would prevent such a debacle as occurred last year in connection with coarse grains? As the parliamentary assistant knows, last fall the prices of coarse grains were stabilized, and the farmers delivered their coarse grains at those low prices. On October 21 the government announced the withdrawal of subsidies. After the farmers had delivered large quantities of their oats and barley—barley deliveries at that time were about 39,000,000 bushels and oats almost the same—and the subsidy had been taken off, the open market handling of coarse grains permitted a manipulation and prices went up about 30 cents on oats and 40 cents on barley. The result was that the feed companies who bought up coarse grains were able to purchase at a low price and then sell them to western farmer feeders at a higher price. Naturally this had a reaction upon the cost of living all along the line.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Before the luncheon recess I was asking whether the action of the government last year in removing the subsidy did not permit the feed and grain companies in the west who bought the farmers' feed to make an extra profit and prevent the farmers who delivered their coarse grains before October 21 from getting the full price for their product.

This is a bill to guarantee to the farmers a maximum price. The action of the government prevented the farmers from getting the money for which their product was actually sold to the feeders in eastern Canada. It also had the effect of increasing the cost of living all across the board for consumers in Canada because the price of milk, butter, eggs and meat went up. Not only did the farmers, who delivered their grain prior to October 21, lose, but the consuming public also lost through an increase in the cost of living caused by the removal of the subsidy. Can this bill not be made to provide against a recurrence of such a situation, and what redress is contemplated for the farmers who lost money by this action of the government?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Unless ceilings were reimposed it would not be necessary to do anything. As to reimbursing the farmers, the hon. member knows that some companies have already helped the farmers and I have no doubt that more of them will. This bill is for the purpose of stabilizing the price of farm products, and the wheat board is under instructions from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to set a fair price for oats and barley, No. 1 feed, f.o.b. Fort William. The price is 96 cents and a fraction for barley, and 65 cents for oats. I think that will have a stabilizing effect on the coarse grain industry in western Canada.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has any decision been made by the government about reimbursing the farmers for the loss they sustained by the action of the government?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is a matter of government policy over which I have no control. The government's policy will be announced at the proper time.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It was announced over the radio that the Minister of Agriculture had stated in Saskatchewan that the government would reimburse the farmers.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order in discussing that on this clause.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The Moose Jaw Times-Herald of Saturday, June 19, carries this item:

Mr. Gardiner told his audience the farmers would not lose $210 million on coarse grains. He said he had recommended the federal government pay 6 cents a bushel on oats and 12 cents on barley. He expected the latter would be cut to 11 cents, however, as the wheat pool was paying 16 cents.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member is out of order in discussing that question on this clause.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): With all deference to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, this bill is to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and here we have a statement by the Minister of Agriculture that certain payments will be made by the government to the farmers who lost a huge sum of money during the debacle last October. I am asking the parliamentary assistant whether funds will be used under this act to reimburse the farmers for that loss. I think that is a fair question, and that I am entitled to an answer. The parliamentary assistant has said that the grain companies are paying part of that loss, and I understand that the wheat pools have made certain payments. I also recall that the former member for Rosthern, Mr. Tucker, flew to Ottawa from Saskatchewan and stated that he was going to ask the government to give such assistance. I think payment could be made under this act. If not, out of what fund would it come? We should have a statement on that point from the government before the end of the session.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I do not think payments could be made under this act in respect of coarse grains. They might be made in some other way.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): How could they be made?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not in a position to answer that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If such a payment is made, would it not be tantamount to taking public funds to subsidize the profits made by the grain exchange through the handling of coarse grains last fall? They are the only people who made money on it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I must ask hon. members not to carry on this debate on the clause now before the committee, because in my opinion it is out of order.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The money would not come out of this fund?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It is evident that the Minister of Agriculture and his parliamentary assistant should get together on this question of reimbursing the farmers. Before the luncheon recess I asked the parliamentary assistant why this legislation was not made permanent instead of transitional, but I did not get a satisfactory answer. Section 1 of the bill reads:

Section 9 of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1944-45, shall be deemed to have continued in force from the 31st day of March, 1948, until the coming into force of this act and shall continue in force thereafter for such further period as the governor in council may fix by proclamation.

I protest as strongly as I can against temporary legislation of this type, now that the war has been over for more than two years and we are again in a time of peace. The government should decide either to continue this measure permanently, or to repeal it. What our farmers are complaining about is that they get no permanent policy, no lead from the government, no encouragement. Take for example, the cattle situation, about which the hon. member for Brant read a telegram this morning. It is difficult for many heads of households to procure a proper meat diet for their families. Two years ago the minister of agriculture in Manitoba and the beef producers association of the prairie provinces presented a brief to the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, asking that the producers be allowed to ship their cattle to the most natural market in the world, the United States, that they be paid the prevailing price in Canada, that the difference between that price and the price in the United States be pooled in a central fund, that records be kept of the cattle marketed, and that a distribution be subsequently made from that fund to the producers in this country. What better safeguard than that could you have for the consuming public of Canada? The government had that placed before them by the producers, by the provincial ministers of agriculture and others over two years ago. I have brought the matter up on the agricultural estimates at each succeeding session, and the government have refused to tackle the matter on that basis. A situation is being created in this country under which some of the producers may be holding their cattle off the market. On the other hand we have a buyer's strike being advocated in this country. Housewives are organizing not to purchase meat at present prices. It is a very serious situation in a country such as this, at at time so long after the termination of the war. I am sure that it will be greatly aggravated.

On May 7 the minister pointed out on the agriculture estimates that while the embargo had been imposed in 1942, it was done as a matter of price control and had been handled by the Department of Finance up to that time, May 7.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On May 7 it was transferred back to the Department of Agriculture.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is wandering far afield from this item.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is beef no longer an agricultural product, Mr. Chairman?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: This is a bill to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944, which is a different thing from what the hon. member is discussing.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would the chairman mind telling me what it covers and what I can discuss?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The sum of $200 million has been voted to support agricultural prices.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What does it include? What are the agricultural products that can be discussed under this section? I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that if you read the original act you will see that it provides for all agricultural products other than wheat. If I am wrong, I stand to be corrected. The act states:

> In this act and any regulation hereunder, unless the context otherwise requires: (a) "agricultural products" means any natural product of agriculture except wheat, designated by the governor in council, and includes processed meat, dairy and poultry products, if so designated.

The act goes on and describes the powers, and so on.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would ask the hon. member to read that part of the act which deals with embargoes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): After all, I am talking about marketing.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would ask the hon. member to read the section which deals with embargoes or the lifting of embargoes. It does not come under this at all.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman, you are drawing a pretty tight line in your interpretation of the original act. Certainly that is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): On a point of order, this amendment to the act has only one object, namely, to extend the life of the act. It does not ask for the reopening of all the sections of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944. What we are asking is to rectify, I would not say a mistake, but a wrong interpretation of the 1944 statute. We are asking that the life of the act be extended, and nothing else. I always thought that in committee the discussion should be relevant to the item under consideration. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that hon. members can discuss the pros and cons of extending the act, but I cannot see how full debate on the act itself can be permitted.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That was the very point I was endeavouring to make. I read the section. I was pointing out as strongly as I could my objection to this type of legislation being put into effect by order in council.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Is the hon. member in favour of this amendment?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Yes, but I would rather have it in statutory form.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If the hon. member is in favour of the amendment, and he has his reasons for being in favour of it, I cannot see why he is discussing the whole act.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not satisfied with the amendment as proposed. This amendment to the act depends for its life upon an order in council. The government may carry it on, or nullify it, as it sees fit. I do not believe in that type of legislation in peace time.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We are not seeking to change the act at all. The only thing we are asking parliament is, does it wish to have this act in force for a further period? That is the whole question that is before the committee. I am surprised at the discussion which has taken place, when every member who has spoken up to now has said that he was in favour of extending the life of this act.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I speak to the point of order? I, too, represent a rural riding, and for once I am in accord with the Minister of Public Works. I cannot see the consistency of the argument of the hon. member for Souris. This is the very thing that the farmers want. They want the act extended.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): By statute, or by order in council?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: This is a bill; it is not an order in council, or else I am mistaken. I think every farm member should vote in favour of it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. member be kind enough to deal with the clause as it is? After all, speeches in committee must be strictly relevant to the clause under consideration.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): My objection all through has been not to the method embodied in this legislation, but to the manner in which it is handled. It was set forth in 1944 that it was to be only a transitional measure. When does the transitional period expire? That is the point. We are continuing to deal with this matter by order in council. I was citing one of the situations which is alarming in this country today, and how it came about. I refer to the marketing of beef cattle. I will not discuss it any further. The producers know why this situation has been brought about, and why thousands of cattle are at a standstill in the Toronto yards this morning, and the same thing may apply in all of the yards across Canada. It has come about as a result of this government's legislation. I am discussing embargoes. I presume that if I gave some of the reasons that enter into the cost of agricultural production I might be ruled out of order, but these are closely tied up with the present situation. On the orders of the day today we had a question raised on the excise taxes. That all enters into the cost of production.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is before the committee is a clause amending section 9 of the Agricultural Products Act 1944, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1944-45. It says that that section shall be deemed to have continued in force from the thirty-first day of March, 1948, until the coming into force of this act, and shall continue in force thereafter for such further period as the governor in council may fix by proclamation. That is what is before the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to say a word on the point of order. I hesitate to say something that might have the effect of prolonging the debate, but it does seem to me that you, sir, should consider what section 9 is that this bill proposes to extend. I admit that the hon. member for Souris is getting beyond the powers contained in section 9 when he talks about embargoes, but not very far beyond it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It is the real cause of the difficulties in meat.

Mr. KNOWLES: Section 9 has two subsections, and subsection 1 has paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j). These are listed under powers of the board. In fact, if one looks through the act he finds that the meat of it is right there in section 9. The other sections constitute the board and arrange for their salaries, oaths of office and so on. Section 9 gives the board power to set prices at which the board may purchase agricultural products, power to pay the difference between the set price and what the farmers are getting, power to sell or otherwise dispose of agricultural products purchased by the board, power to purchase, and so on. With the other members of this group I am wholly in support of this act. We should like to see it made permanent. I agree with the Minister of Public Works that if we are all for it, the discussion seems to be unnecessary. My only point of order is that though it may be unnecessary, surely it is in order. Perhaps if we can agree that it is in order, the discussion would end sooner than if we all quarrel about the point of order.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps I did not make myself clear. The purpose of the amendment is to extend the life of section 9. We are not seeking to amend that section, to increase or decrease the powers contained therein.

Mr. ROWE: Why extend it?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Your leader saw good reasons why we should extend it; he made a speech this morning, but the hon. gentleman was not here. All we are asking is this: Is this house in favour of extending these powers? We are not asking that they be changed, and all discussion on this item, I respectfully submit, should be relevant to the amendment brought in by the minister. If we were seeking to amend section 9 to vary the powers contained therein, this discussion would be wide open, but that is not the object of the amendment.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I take it I am not in order in discussing the cost of agricultural production, or anything of the kind, which might lead to the necessity for this act.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The purpose of the bill is simply to continue in force section 9 of the Agricultural Prices Support Act, 1944. It is to extend the time.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I take it from your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and from the opinions expressed by the Minister of Public Works and others on the government side, that this extension does not mean very much. I wish to ask the parliamentary assistant whether it is a fact that this act comes into being only by order in council, and whether it can be nullified at any time by order in council without reference to parliament. I should like to get the answer to that question.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Once the governor in council decides under the act the length of time to which it shall extend, it will extend for that period. If the time decided upon is two years, it will run for that period.

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Chairman, did I understand the parliamentary assistant to say, just before the luncheon recess, that the government intends to keep the act in effect for a period of two years?

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is not necessary. Before, it was for a period of two years, but it is not necessary this time. It may or may not be two years.

Mr. QUELCH: It may be longer.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It may be longer or shorter.

Mr. FAIR: If it is longer than the government think, and if they intend to do anything about making it permanent, it might be a good idea to move in the very near future.

Mr. HACKETT: I wish to say a few words on the purport of this bill, which is to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act of 1944.

By section 12 of the act of 1944 it was provided that section 9 of the act should come into force on a date to be fixed, and remain in force for such period as might be determined by proclamation of the governor in council published in the Canada Gazette.

I am not enthusiastic about the type of economy that is spelled out in this act, but I am speaking on another point at the moment. Following the provisions of section 12 of the act, a proclamation dated the first day of April, 1946, brought the act into force for a period of two years. A further proclamation was authorized by order in council dated March 25, 1948. The Department of Agriculture was then advised by the Department of Justice that the order in council was ultra vires and that the act could be continued only by an act of parliament. We are now asked to pass an enabling act which confers upon the governor in council the prerogative of determining how long this act shall remain in force —and when I say "this act", I refer to section 9 of the act, which is the essence and the body of the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

It means that this type of legislation is subject to the whim and caprice of the minister and those about him, with the result that there is no certainty about the legislation as it affects prices of commodities covered by the act.

It may be objected that there was no great certainty in a competitive market, but at that time everybody was subject to a rule which is as old as time, the rule of supply and demand. Under this enactment it is open to the government absolutely to ruin farmers in some sections of the country, as the dairy farmers in the eastern townships have been ruined, by precluding them from getting for butter a price which they were forced to demand by reason of the cost of labour and of feed. The result is that we have a shortage of butter, which is having a deleterious effect upon the health of the community, and is bringing about, in an agricultural and dairy country like ours, the necessity of importing this commodity from far lands.

The chairman appears to be a little uneasy. Possibly he is questioning whether I am speaking to the point, but I beg his attention and submit that we are asked today to enact legislation which covers all the points that were raised by the hon. member for Souris. We are today exactly in the position we were in when the act was first introduced into the house. It is open to us to discuss every aspect, every paragraph, every condition, every possibility which may arise under the act, because today, according to the government itself, there is no such act. The attempt further to enforce it by order in council was found by the Department of Justice to be in excess of the powers conferred by the act.

This house is asked to continue the manipulation of prices by the government. The war has been over for three years. Many specifics have been resorted to, to keep prices low, and what has been the result? Scarcity, high prices driving the people from the land into the cities, inadequate housing in the cities, and a whole series of maladies resulting from lack of equilibrium and lack of order, which necessarily follow from controls exercised by people who are not familiar with the aspect of life which they are attempting to control.

Added to all of that is the uncertainty of the enactment. Nobody knows what may be done at a propitious moment on the eve of an election, or in the heat of an election campaign. There is nothing to prevent the passing of an order in council which will create great inducements for any locality to support the administration.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am always looking at that first section which is being considered by the committee. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what would happen if the committee voted down section 1 of the bill?

Mr. HACKETT: I did not hear the question.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am asking the hon. gentleman to tell me what would happen if the committee turned down this section 1.

Mr. HACKETT: Nothing would happen, because according to the judgment of the Department of Justice the act died some months ago. We would get back to the one specific which the government has failed so far to apply, that of letting people manage their own business and charge for commodities prices that the markets will yield in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): This is just political eyewash, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is taking the stand that this act does not exist at the moment.

Mr. ROWE: You said it did not.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We all know that by order in council we prolonged the life of the act. We were advised that we needed a statute to effect this purpose. Now we are presenting the statute. The act has been in force. It has never been attacked before the courts, and unless the committee today says the act should not be continued in force, it will continue in force. We are trying to remedy the defect. That is all we are doing. If the hon. gentleman says he is opposed to this act, and that seemed to be the basis of his argument—

Mr. HACKETT: The hon. gentleman rose to ask a question, Mr. Chairman. In my experience, I have found that it is always wise to permit a gentleman, especially when he is a courteous one, to ask a question. But I point out that there is a slight distinction between a question and a speech. This act was passed for a specific time. This act was under sentence of death. That sentence has been carried out. The act is dead. It is as dead as a doornail.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was a transitional measure.

Mr. HACKETT: Its only claim to existence rests upon one of these emergencies which the courts have already decreed do not exist. But this act itself has gone out of existence.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On March 31.

Mr. HACKETT: It went out of existence on March 31 of this year; and any impositions that have been enacted since then have been illegally enforced without right, cause, or power. This is an attempt to legislate for the past and to legislate for an indeterminate future; it is an attempt to place upon commodities which are dealt in by the farming element of the country, a continued and dangling promise of prosperity in order to induce a little temporary enthusiasm.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. ROSS (Souris): An attempt to get public favour.

Mr. HACKETT: We are complaining that we are burdened with taxation. This act can be made effective only by the taxes that you and I pay. The hardships and the austerities which were gladly assumed during the period of the war no longer find application in a free community. For that reason I am opposed to this act, as well as to the illegalities which it attempts to cover up.

Mr. CHARLTON: If the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture had read the explanatory notes on the right-hand page, I am sure he would have seen, from his own words, that the act expired on March 31, 1948. It was passed in 1944. It was put into effect in 1946 for a two-year period, and that period expired on March 31, 1948.

The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture said that this act was supposed to bring stability to the farmers. What possible stability can there be when it it left to the governor in council to say when the act shall expire? There cannot possibly be any stability in that. There is no act now. This is just an example of what this government does and of what it has been doing for the last four or five years to farm production across this country.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): What stability will there be if we do not pass this bill?

Mr. ROWE: More than we have now.

Mr. CHARLTON: I am not opposed to this bill. I want that to be understood. I am just pointing out what happened during the past four of five years as a result of government inefficiency in handling this measure. This is just one example of that inefficiency. They let the act expire. From March 31 this year until the present there has been no Agricultural Prices Support Act. Have we any assurance from the government that they will not do the same thing in two years? No. It does not say in the bill. It simply says:

. . . until the coming into force of this act and shall continue in force thereafter for such further period as the governor in council may fix by proclamation.

What assurance have we that the act cannot be thrown out in the next six months? What possible stability can there be for the farmers? They have been disallowed a chance of making a little extra money, and now the government come along and say: We are not sure whether we shall let you have this act for another six months, or two years, or five years. If the government cannot make this permanent legislation, why not set the period? Are they ashamed to set it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. CHARLTON: Certainly.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I presume the hon. member is assuming—and I am sure he is correct in so doing—that we shall be in power for the next ten or fifteen years.

Mr. CHARLTON: The governor in council will still be there, and he will still have that power, no matter what government is in power.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am glad the hon. member admits it.

Mr. MILLER: I should like to ask a question of the parliamentary assistant. Have any payments been made under this act, on any account, since March 31 of this year?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, some payments have been made, but only payments that were started prior to March 31. No new payments have been made.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On what were the payments made?

Mr. McCUBBIN: On apples and potatoes.

Mr. CHARLTON: The parliamentary assistant has not yet answered my question. Why will the government not state a time in this bill?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Once this bill is passed, they will set the time in the proclamation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLER: Will the parliamentary assistant tell us this: Suppose the bill is passed, and then the governor in council passes an order in council fixing the period for one year, is there anything to stop the governor in council from passing another order in council to amend the first one, either increasing or decreasing the period of time provided by the first order in council?

Mr. CASE: The hon. member is speaking of a great many orders in council.

Mr. McCUBBIN: When lawyers start discussing some of these points with me, of course that is not in my class at all. But I can say this much. Only one proclamation will be issued, and only one order in council.

Mr. HACKETT: One at a time.

Mr. McCUBBIN: That will set the time; it will continue until the end of that time; and there will be no order in council varying it.

Mr. CHARLTON: How can the parliamentary assistant stand in his place and make that statement when he says he cannot state government policy?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am stating the ruling under the old act; that is all.

Mr. ROWE: I think the parliamentary assistant is only expressing his confidence in the department he represents.

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is worth something.

Mr. ROWE: It would appear to me, as the Minister of Public Works has pointed out, that the whole point is contained in the explanatory note, which says:

> A further proclamation was authorized by order in council dated March 25, 1948, but the Department of Agriculture was then advised that the section could be continued only by act of parliament.

In reply to the hon. member for Stanstead, the hon. gentleman has said the government passed an order in council before the act died in March, though they were advised it could not be done except by an act of parliament. He said the courts had not tested it; therefore he assumed they had not the power, and an order in council has been passed already. He asked what would happen if we did not pass this bill. Evidently he assumes that if the courts did not question it, he could still carry on.

This is the situation as I see it. Even in wartime it was suggested that the act could be continued only by act of parliament, but now in peacetime the government wants the right to pass more orders in council and get away from an act of parliament. I am amused at the confidence, shown by the parliamentary assistant, in the governor in council, who, he says, may extend it for one year or for two years, and that this decision will not be altered, when the proposed amendment reads—

> —until the coming into force of this act and shall continue in force thereafter for such further period as the governor in council may fix by proclamation.

Then there is the further provision:

> This act shall come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation of the governor in council.

In other words, if this amendment is adopted the governor in council can say when it shall come into force, when it shall go out, and how long it shall be continued. I think the parliamentary assistant shows a great deal of confidence in what is going to be done by the governor in council through these orders in council, if he can give any assurance as to any period of time.

As the hon. member for Stanstead has said so clearly, no one knows better than you, Mr. Chairman, that the instability in this country today, which is causing thousands of people in Europe to starve, which has brought about a hectic situation in the poultry and egg business, which has played havoc with the bacon business, and which has brought high prices, has come about simply because of government interference with the marketing of agricultural products. Someone may ask what stability we can expect if this amendment is adopted and we give the governor in council carte blanche to fix the prices of agricultural products perhaps just before a provincial election or a by-election or a general election, and so please that great element whose support the government is losing so rapidly at the present time.

It does seem to me this is a very important matter. Everyone who comes from a rural riding, including the parliamentary assistant, knows that this year the chickens hatched amounted to only about thirty-five per cent as compared with last year, while we actually required an increase of thirty-five per cent; and at the same time we have millions of children starving in Europe. It is not exactly a matter of the dollar sign, but as long as we continue under a profit system—and unless everyone is to share alike, as hon. gentlemen to my left would suggest, with everyone owning something and no one owning anything—I submit we have a responsibility to encourage production. The parliamentary assistant knows as well as he knows he is sitting where some day he may sit permanently—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: That is if his party does not go to the country in between times—that many returned soldiers have used their resources to start poultry farms throughout this country. Even those who are lawyers who may not be as well acquainted with the agricultural districts, as some of us, have seen many barns altered, with windows in the upper lofts, to accommodate poultry.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend laughs. He knows the story. Those buildings are empty now, or else the owners are borrowing money from all the banks in the country.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. HARTT: Your roosters are not working hard enough.

Mr. ROWE: Your chickens are coming home to roost. That is why poultry production this year is down by about thirty-five per cent. That is why the production of butter is down. That is why the production of bacon is down, and that is why we have failed to meet our overseas commitments. By this experimental folly we have contributed to the starvation of millions of children overseas.

I think I am as much interested in agriculture as any hon. member of this house. I am not in agreement with this policy. I disagree with the general principle, and I disagree with the irresponsible way it is brought before parliament. Never before in the history of this country have we had a government which in peacetime has put through so much legislation by order in council, and left so much to be administered by those who have no responsibility to the electors. What are we here for? Why, Mr. Chairman, this parliament is becoming a farce. During the period of the war the party to your right asked for extended privileges with respect to orders in council. They were given carte blanche. Things had to be done, and we were prepared to co-operate. But surely if legislation which, as has been so well said, interferes with that private enterprise in which the great majority of the citizens of this country believe, had to be brought in during wartime by act of parliament, what justification is there today for saying it must still be left to the whim of the government and be done by order in council? Now no one knows when it will be brought in, with the exception of the cabinet sitting quietly over in the east block; no one knows when it will be discontinued or when it will be changed.

I would not want to be so cruel as to say that when another provincial election comes round we may hear a great deal about prices, embargoes and so on; that might not be in order under this bill. I hardly know when I am in order, however, or when I am out of order. I presume you know, Mr. Chairman; but if a person cannot talk about agricultural prices on a bill to amend the Agricultural Prices Support Act, I do not know when he can talk about them. I do not think you can bring them up under railways and canals, or old age pensions, for example.

I urge the government to give us something more definite; and let it be done by act of parliament. Tell us when it is to come in and when it is to go out. Probably it is too late, but I urge the government to let this go out entirely and permit the law of supply and demand to govern agricultural prices. Then you will find agricultural production in this country increasing all along the line. However, that is a question of policy. We are being asked for an extension of this legislation. I submit that if we are to extend it, that should be done by an act of parliament, which is the responsible way of putting through legislation, instead of leaving it to the whim of the government.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is no one to whom I listen with more pleasure than to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. Whether he speaks on this or any other subject he is always interesting. But if he had read the section we are discussing he would have learned at least one thing. The purpose of this amendment is to have the act continued from March 31 last. That is when it will come in, if the house agrees. I do not know whether the hon. member agrees with his leader, but this morning he said that he was in favour of this legislation. If he does not agree with his leader—

Mr. ROWE: We have some freedom on this side of the house.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): He said exactly the same thing we said.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This act was in force until March 31 of this year but the Department of Justice told the Department of Agriculture that it could not prolong its life by an order in council, that we would have to come to parliament for authority. What we are asking today is whether the committee agrees to extend this act which has been in force up to March 31, 1948, to a date to be fixed, as it was last time, by proclamation. I think the misunderstanding among hon. members arises because of a wrong interpretation of section 12, which reads:

Section nine of this act shall come into force on a date to be fixed—

The date is fixed in this one; we know that; that is a certain fact.

—and remain in force for such period as may be determined, by proclamation of the governor in council published in the Canada Gazette.

That proclamation was issued for two years. Somebody thought that we could issue another proclamation to prolong the life of the act, but Justice told us that we could not, that we would have to come back to parliament and ask once more for that power. We are asking parliament today to legalize this act, which has been in force, and permit it to be in operation in the future until a date to be fixed by proclamation.

This is one of the simplest bills I have ever seen brought in to the house, and any discussion beyond the scope of it is beyond me. If you are for the amendment we would like to know, because in your own party I think the hon. member for Souris said that while he did not like it, he was in favour of it; the hon. member for Brant said that it was not very good, but he was in favour of it. Then we have the hon. member for Stanstead saying, "No, I abhor legislation of this sort; I am against it." He was quite outspoken about it. I thought at one time that my gentleman farmer friend in front of me agreed, but at another time he was not too sure. If he had been here this morning and heard his leader, I think he would admit that while it may not be what he wants, it meets the necessities of the moment.

The group to the left of the official opposition agree to this, and they have repeatedly said so. I do not know why they are trying to stop the passage of this amendment. They have made long speeches—

Mr. GRAYDON: Surely a member can speak on a piece of legislation?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When they get beyond the scope of the amendment they are not in order.

Mr. ROWE: I am not going to prolong the discussion. I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, especially when he was so courteous to me. I take it as a compliment when he calls me a gentleman farmer, because all the farmers in my district are gentlemen. I should like to ask him if an order in council was not passed since March 31.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is admitted in the explanation of the bill that on April 6 that was done in good faith.

Mr. KNOWLES: Your good faith was on March 25.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We thought at that time it was all right, but we were told that we would have to come back to parliament. This is one instance in which this government has come back to parliament.

Mr. GRAYDON: Just once.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It seems that we all agree.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend says that they are coming back to parliament so that they will not have to come back to parliament. Now that he has given an explanation I am not going to prolong the discussion by making it embarrassing for the government.

Mr. DROPE: Mr. Chairman, it has been amazing to listen to the lecture we have heard from the Minister of Public Works about what we should do in connection with agriculture. This act expired three months ago while the house was in session. It is just another example of the agricultural policy of this government. They are behind all the time, and they are three months behind with this bill. It seems to me that the Department of Agriculture should be cleaned up if our basic industry is not to be left behind, and this might be a good time to start in.

Every time we ask questions about agriculture—I have asked a few in the last month or two—we are told that it is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course. I would like to find out what the government's policy is. The Minister of Public Works is talking about our leader, but what is his leader saying about it? The country does not know, and we as members of the house do not know. If we are going to provide this nation with food and have something to export, we should have a long-range policy which cannot be terminated overnight. Why was not this bill brought in before the end of March?

Mr. McCUBBIN: We wanted all the farmer members to be here when it was brought in. They are all here today, so we thought it would be a good time to bring it in.

Mr. KNOWLES: Where is the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. DROPE: If they do not know the answer, why do they not say so?

Mr. CHARLTON: How and by whom will the floor prices be set?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The floor prices will be set by the government on the recommendation of the agricultural prices support board.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

AMENDMENT TO SUBSTITUTE "GOLD COMMISSIONER" FOR "COMMISSIONER", ETC.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 363, to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Sections 1 to 8 inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9—Tagging of claims.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): In my opinion subsection 1 of section 45 of the original act as now amended by section 9 of this bill is too drastic and should have some safeguarding words added to it. It now reads:

(1) As soon as reasonably possible after the recording of the claim the holder of the claim shall affix or cause to be affixed securely to each of the posts of the said claim a metal tag plainly marked or impressed with the recorded number and letter or letters, if any, of the claim, and in default the claim may be cancelled by the mining recorder on the application of anyone who in the opinion of the mining recorder has been misled by the lack of such tags.

(2) The mining recorder on application shall supply the numbered tags, mentioned in subsection one, free of charge.

(3) This section applies in respect of all claims recorded after the first day of June, nineteen hundred and forty-eight.

To a certain extent that follows the provision in the gold mining law of British Columbia, except that in British Columbia, before the claim is located, these metal tags are furnished by the mining recorder to the person about to locate the property, and the metal tags are put on from the start. However, if the minister prefers to have it done after the claim is recorded I am not going to quarrel with it; but I do say that in default of the metal tags on the posts, the claim should not be cancelled without an inquiry. Therefore I move an addition to subsection 1 of section 45, which, if adopted, would make the section read as follows:

. . . in default, the claim may be cancelled by the mining recorder on the application of anyone who in the opinion of the mining recorder has been misled by the lack of such tags, after a notice in writing by the mining recorder of a hearing before the mining recorder has been served on such claim holder and on said person or persons applying for cancellation. Said notice to contain the name or names of the persons applying for cancellation, alleging that they have been misled and stating how misled, and after a hearing of all of said parties before the mining recorder.

I think that is only fair, and it is in line with another paragraph of the same act under which co-owners of mineral claims are called upon to do their proportionate amount of the representation work annually. They must pay their proportionate amount of the renewal, and if one fails to do that, a hearing is held before the mining recorder and the defaulting owners are given a notice of the hearing. An opportunity is afforded them to come before the mining recorder at that hearing and state their case. I think the complaint should be known to the person complained of. He should know what the complaint is, and a complete hearing should be held before the mining recorder goes so far as to cancel the claim.

Mr. MacKINNON: The hon. member has discussed this matter with me and with the officials of the department, and I have drafted an amendment to this section which I purpose asking my colleague the minister of external affairs to move. It follows exactly along the lines of the representation the hon. member has made. It has been submitted to Justice and they have passed it. I will read it, and if it is satisfactory to the hon. member I will ask my colleague to move it:

45. (1) As soon as reasonably possible after the recording of the claim the holder of the claim shall affix or cause to be affixed securely to each of the posts of the said claim a metal tag plainly marked or impressed with the recorded number and letter or letters, if any, of the claim and in the event of default, the mining recorder may after a hearing, cancel the entry for the claim upon the application of any person who, in the opinion of the mining recorder, has been misled by the lack of such tags; notice of the hearing together with a copy of the application, shall be served on the recorded owner of the claim in the manner directed by the mining recorder at least ten days before the date fixed for the hearing.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I so move.

Mr. HACKETT: May I make a suggestion which I hope the minister will consider. It refers to the delay. It seems to me that ten days is a very short delay. Thirty days would be a more equitable time, considering the vast distances of that remote land, and it would probably in the end save time because, if the person were to go before the board and say he was not able to proceed because of the very shortness of the notice, he would probably get an adjournment. I therefore suggest that the minister make it thirty days instead of ten.

Mr. MacKINNON: One effect the suggestion might have would be to delay matters, but I really have no objection to extending it from ten to thirty days.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The word "thirty" can be substituted for the word "ten".

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 10 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On section 13—When dominion land surveyor may include fraction within the claim. Proviso.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I have an amendment to this section, a copy of which I will send to the minister. Section 13 relates to the original clauses of the act numbered 81, 82, and 82A. I am moving an amendment to be entered as 82B.

82B. No entry granted for a mineral claim shall be subject to cancellation in the discretion of the minister unless such cancellation is first recommended by the commissioner.

The preceding sections and subsections of section 13 refer to surveys. This Yukon Quartz Mining Act was enacted in 1924 in the second session that I attended in this House of Commons. Prior to that time, the mining law of Yukon in regard to quartz and lode mining was by order in council passed at Ottawa, regardless altogether of the circumstances pertaining to Yukon, methods of mining, and what was advisable or not advisable.

I drafted the act and submitted it to the miners of Yukon. As far as possible it met their requirements. I submitted it to the then minister of the interior, as he was called, the late Hon. Charles Stewart. He submitted it to his legal advisers and together we agreed on the act. Mr. Stewart piloted it through the house, and it has stood from 1924 down to this time with some more or less minor amendments down through the years.

In the act there was one section which the department was very anxious to have in. I did not approve it, but rather than hold up the legislation or jeopardize it, I refrained from making any long fight against it. I was assured by the minister and his staff that the wide provisions of that section would never be abused, and all through the years they have never been abused. No attempt was made to violate the provisions of that section until March of this year when there occurred what I regard as a violent abuse of the section. I will read the section to the committee:

The recorded owner of a mineral claim shall have a survey thereof made at his own expense by a duly qualified dominion land surveyor under instructions from the surveyor general within one year from the date upon which notification by the minister to do so may be sent to him.

2. Such notification shall not be given until the expiration of at least one year from the date upon which the claim was recorded.

3. If the survey is not made, and if the returns of such survey are not received and approved by the surveyor general within one year from the date of notification, the entry granted for the mineral claim shall be subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the minister.

There is too much discretion there to be given to any minister. The section should not be brought into play unless there is absolute need of it, and in my opinion, knowing the situation in Yukon as I do, I do not think there is need of it today. Under the provisions of that section, this is the order that went out to the claim owners. Notices were prepared in Ottawa and sent to the various mining recorders of the territory:

Upon instructions from the Minister of Mines and Resources and pursuant to section 78 of the Quartz Mining Act, you are hereby notified that you must within one year from the date upon which notification is sent to you, at your own expense, have a survey made of all mineral claims owned by you which were recorded prior to March 31, 1947.

A storm of protest against that came in to the department. Then along came another letter from the mining recorder, also prepared in Ottawa and sent out to have the name put in and be sent out by the mining recorder. This is the way this demand No. 2 reads:

The increasing interest displayed in mineral resources of Yukon Territory has emphasized the necessity of having surveys made to determine the boundaries of older quartz mining claims. Many complaints have been received recently as a result of those entering the field being unable to accurately locate claims from stakes on the ground or from descriptions in the record book.

The minister has therefore authorized the enforcement of section 78, Yukon Quartz Mining Act, and I have been instructed by the minister to notify you in his behalf, and you are hereby so notified, that you shall have a survey made at your own expense by a duly qualified dominion land surveyor under instructions from the surveyor general within one year from the date of this notice, of all claims standing in your name and recorded for over one year.

Then the attention of the claimant is called to the penalty, which is that the claim shall be subject to immediate cancellation at the discretion of the minister. Then along comes another letter. The two I have read were by no means well received. No. 3 reads as follows:

The correspondence which has been received as a result of the notices sent to claim holders under section 78 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act has been reported to the department and I have been instructed to furnish further information to all those to whom these notices have been sent, supplementing the information already given.

The necessity of a survey of mineral claims has been a fundamental requirement of the Quartz Mining Act from the beginning.

That is absolutely incorrect and not so.

The two-post staking system which is in effect in Yukon territory contemplates that there will be an early survey so that the boundary of each claim may be defined.

That is not a correct interpretation at all. It was never the intention that there would be an early survey. The two-post system is in effect and has been used in British Columbia for the last fifty years; and quartz mining in British Columbia is greater in magnitude than anything that has been undertaken in Yukon to date, although it is coming on. The two-post system has been satisfactory to the miners all down through the years and there has never been a demand for a change. The letter continues:

This requirement was not enforced during the time when it was imposible to obtain the services of a surveyor. The net result of this leniency——has been that those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of the territory are unable to ascertain the limits of the properties that can be secured either by purchase or staking.

Listen to that—"leniency".

I doubt that. If there are people of that sort who are delayed and prevented, they should come out from under cover, say who they are, say who is delaying them, and have those people who are delaying them disciplined and made subject to the provisions of this act. Do not hit the whole mining population over the head with that section. The letter continues:

Now that the services of dominion land surveyors are available it has been considered appropriate to require claim holders to have their claims surveyed. There is no intention of taking arbitrary action.

Oh, none at all.

If it is impossible to have a survey made, either because the surveyor cannot get around to it, or for good and sufficient reason the claim owner while developing the property is unable to pay the expense of the survey, then the circumstances will be considered by the minister on the representations of the claim holder.

And so on. That, I think, was the third demand.

Mr. MacKINNON: I would appreciate it if the hon. member for Yukon would finish the reading of the document. He stopped in the middle of it. It is important in connection with the statement.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Then following those notices came a demand to the claim owners for a deposit from them of $200 per claim. A man owning ten claims had to put up $2,000. That demand was not welcomed either. Now the department has come down to $100. That is the last demand.

Further than that, there are three mining districts in Yukon; the Dawson district, the Whitehorse district and the Mayo district. I am informed by the minister's officials that no surveys are to be required in the Dawson or Whitehorse districts, but that it will all be confined to the Mayo district. That is where the big silver mines are. That is where certain people, I think, want to get more property instead of going out in a manly way and going after it. Those operators of silver-lead mines in Yukon are in the way of making millions of dollars of profit on Canadian investment, and I am glad they are. They have silver-lead ore so rich that it is hard to realize it. It is so valuable that it does not need to be milled, but only to be sorted and sent out to the smelters in its native state. To say that the people wishing to acquire claims to more property cannot find the boundaries of claims already located and that have become the property of various owners, is not correct. There is a map of all the surveyed claims in that silver mining area and there is a blueprint in the mining recorder's office at Mayo and Dawson, showing the location not only of the surveyed claims but of all the recorded claims.

If people are anxious to acquire a property from claim owners, those claim owners will go out and show them where the boundaries are and what they have to acquire. I have received—as I am sure the minister and his staff have also—literally hundreds of protests. I have one protest here containing signatures of over 164 claim owners against that attempt on the part of the minister's officials to drive those claim owners into having their claims surveyed. The minister will pardon me if I quote from a letter written to me by him, dated May 25. He says:

It may interest you to know that in the Northwest Territories the department employs mining inspectors to see that the assessment work which is claimed by affidavit is actually performed on the claims. So far, this has not been the policy under the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. You are aware, of course, that the British Columbia mining administration, which has two-post staking, employes mining inspectors.

I can understand that the minister is not up to date on the policy of his department, because he has only come to it. But he says that it has not been the policy under the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. When this quartz mining act was passed in 1924, mining inspectors were at once appointed; they did their work, inspected the claims and saw that the mining was done properly and with safety to the miners in the mine. But for some unaccountable reason the government and the department have dropped the position of mining inspector altogether and we have no mining inspectors in Yukon. That is not the fault of the miners; it is the fault of the government itself. When the minister says it is not the policy, it is true it is not the policy, but it is provided by the act. British Columbia has the two-post staking system and its mining inspectors. We should have our mining inspectors, and we want the staking in Yukon to be the two-post staking. I set out the situation fully in a letter I wrote the minister; and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read that letter and have it on record, because to the miners of Yukon this is a most important matter. On May 20 I wrote the then acting minister, whose appointment I am glad to say has been confirmed, saying:

The Yukon Quartz Mining Act was enacted by the parliament of Canada in 1924.

In the 24 years the act has been in operation mineral claims have been located, owned, sold and mined with entire satisfaction to both companies and individuals owning them, and until March of this year, no minister of mines, nor any of his staff has abused the power given the minister by section 78 of the act by notifying the recorded owners of unsurveyed mineral claims in Yukon that a survey of the claims must be made at their expense by a fully qualified dominion land surveyor under instructions from the surveyor general within one year from the date upon which such notification by the minister to do so may be sent to him, and if the survey is not made, and if the returns of such survey are not received and approved by the surveyor general within one year from the date of notification, the entry granted for the mineral claim shall be subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the minister.

I need not read the whole letter, but in it I set out the various notices I have already read to the committee. Then I said to the minister, as I now say to the committee:

The department of mines states there are in Yukon approximately 1,657 recorded unsurveyed mineral claims, and it is assigning a surveyor to make surveys of mineral claims in Yukon, that such surveying in Yukon can be done during three or four months of the year, depending on locality. It follows that it will take a number of years to have those claims surveyed.

At the time this letter was written the amount demanded of the claim owners was $200 a claim, and I was acting on that figure. As I have already said, it has been reduced to $100 a claim.

Two hundred dollars per claim is exacted from the owners of the 1,657 unsurveyed claims. That will be $331,400—

Now, at $100 a claim, it will be half that amount, but these words will apply to that figure just as they applied to the earlier figure.

—which sum or any part of it, if expended in prospecting and development work would do far more to develop mining than if tied up for unnecessary surveys.

[Mr. Black (Yukon).]

As to the two-post system, the predecessors of the mining companies operating there now produced in a few years from those few mines values in silver-lead of over $25,000,000. The amendment I have moved provides that no entry granted for a mineral claim shall be subject to cancellation in the discretion of the minister unless such cancellation is on the recommendation of the commissioner. With all respect to the minister, he must remember that he is not a miner. He is here in Ottawa, three or four thousand miles from the mines to which this law is to apply. He has a perfectly good commissioner who, before being appointed to that position, was a lawyer practising first in Winnipeg and later in the mining camp of Yellowknife. He is in sympathy with the miners; he knows what they need, and he would never recommend the cancellation of a mining claim unless there was great misbehaviour on the part of the owner.

I ask the minister: Why penalize the owners of all claims, in even one of the three mining districts, if there are people holding unsurveyed mineral claims and who, as a result, are hampering progress and preventing other claims from being acquired? Let those who are complaining come into the open and say who is holding them up. Then the minister and his officials can quickly attend to those people and make them get out of the way. But do not make this apply to all the law-abiding miners in the whole Mayo district.

Therefore I considered it necessary and advisable to offer the amendment, and I only hope the minister will see his way clear to permit it to go through.

Mr. MacKINNON: I did not attempt to interrupt the hon. member while he was commenting on section 78 of the act, which is not being amended at all by this bill. This matter, with respect to which the hon. member for Yukon read certain instructions that were sent out by the department, has been the subject of conversations between my officials and myself and others interested, including the hon. member for Yukon. Following those discussions, new instructions were issued, which I believe meet with the approval of the hon. member. That is why I was anxious to have him read the full statement, to show that the clauses to which he objected have already been amended by the department.

I could go into the various points raised, but I do not think it is necessary. There was a real demand from people interested in mining development for the surveying of various claims in the Yukon territory. It is the intention of the department only to survey those claims alongside present developments, in order to enable the men doing development work, as well as those in close proximity to those properties, to know exactly the extent of the claims.

We are following the two-post staking in the Yukon; that has always been followed there and in British Columbia. Each claim holder is required to do $100 worth of work on his development each year in order to hold the claim. The department is providing a surveyor to survey any claims that require to be surveyed, and we are doing that work for $100. That will be accepted as a discharge in full of the necessary work on the claim for that year.

I am sorry I cannot accept the amendment to section 13 by adding, as the hon. member suggests, a provision that no entry granted for a mineral claim shall be subject to cancellation in the discretion of the minister unless such cancellation is first recommended by the commissioner. There is no doubt in the world that, before the minister ever acts, he gets advice from the commissioner, and on that advice he takes action. I think it would be a retrograde step for the minister here at Ottawa to attempt to throw off any of his own responsibility in a matter of this kind. I believe the minister must accept and assume the final responsibility; and the information upon which he acts is the information and the recommendation coming from the commissioner. Under those circumstances I do not see how I can accept this amendment.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the minister advise the committee if there is anything in the regulations making it imperative that the minister should have a report from the commissioner before acting? I agree with the minister that responsibility rests with the minister. He should exercise it and assume all the praise or penalties that might arise from the decision at which he arrives. If I am correctly informed, mining is not only an important industry in the Yukon territory, it is possibly the only one.

In the last few months something has come about that has caused a great deal of anxiety among the hardy breed of men called miners or prospectors. It would seem unfortunate if anything should occur which would tend to diminish their enthusiasm or energy in the pursuit of their difficult and burdensome calling. The minister has not said that new conditions have not come into existence. I did not understand from the hon. member for Yukon exactly what had aroused the fears, if not the suspicions of his constituents, but apparently about March last a number of threats of cancellation or cancellations took place.

Would there be any particular difficulty in inserting in the regulations a provision whereby an action taken by the minister should be preceded by a report from the commissioner? I am not suggesting that the minister be bound by that report because, as he has well said, the responsibility is his, and I for one am content that it should remain where it belongs in its entirety, upon the shoulders of the minister. But, after all, the minister is far away from the Yukon. The Yukon is now more accessible in some ways than it has ever been before, and it is possible that practices which formerly did not obtain in that country may be germinating there and causing hardship to the prospectors and miners. It seems to me that if that provision were in the regulations the minister would get a report which would be based upon the facts, and among those facts would be the views of the prospector or owner of the claim. Therefore no hurried decision would be taken, and I think the situation would be met.

Apparently there is something new, because for twenty-four years this act has been administered, as I understand, to the entire satisfaction of the population of the Yukon. But today that population is disturbed and upset. There must be some reason for that. I am sure that the minister wishes the important work of prospecting to go on and that those who follow that calling should have all the protection that good administration will provide. Therefore I ask him if he does not consider it feasible to put into the regulations that provision which would lead these people to believe that they will continue to receive the equitable administration which they have known in the past.

Mr. MacKINNON: Not to the same extent as the hon. member for Yukon, but to a quite considerable extent I am familiar with the situation in Yukon. In recent years the easiest access from the Yukon to the outside world has been through my own city of Edmonton. On visits to Yukon I have had an opportunity to familiarize myself to a certain extent with conditions there. I may say there are no regulations in Yukon under this act; there are regulations in the Northwest Territories.

I do not know that the miners or claim holders of the Yukon have become aroused. I heard nothing about it until this legislation was placed before me. The whole aim of the department in bringing forward these amendments is to make mining development in the Yukon easier and quicker. There have been requests for the surveying of claims, particularly in districts where there has been development.

Under the orders and instructions that have been set out, no person holding a claim some distance from development need have any worry about being compelled to do any surveying. It would be a physical impossibility, even if the department wished it, to survey any but the claims in the Keno-Mayo district alone within the next year or two. Holders of claims in Yukon have been informed as follows:

> Those who are unable to comply or who wish to establish a case for special consideration by reason of their bona fides as actual developers of the property they hold under entry should disclose the circumstances which in their opinion would justify the minister in not cancelling their claims.

Everything is being done to aid the mining development of Yukon. As I have said, that is the whole interest of the government in introducing this legislation.

Mr. LENNARD: I rise to support the hon. member for Yukon and the argument put forward by the hon. member for Stanstead. I have here an editorial published in the June, 1948, issue of the Western Miner of Vancouver, which deals with the arguments that have been put forward this afternoon. I wonder if the minister and the committee would permit me to place this on the record. I can read it, but I ask for that permission in order to save time.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have read the article in the Western Miner. If the hon. member for Wentworth is anxious to put it on the record, I have no objection, but the editorial is based upon false premises. It is based upon what the hon. member for Yukon read at the start before he had had the department's correction. As I say, I have no objections, but I want to state that, having read the editorial, I know it is based on false premises.

Mr. LENNARD: The minister having stated his stand and apparently having no objection to this editorial being put on the record, in fairness to those interested I ask for unanimous consent to put it on the record.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not like to object; but some time ago the hon. member for Lethbridge wished to put something on the record and I suggested that it would be a bad precedent. It seemed to be then agreed that our record should be a true picture of what goes on in the house. Though it does take a little time to read something of sufficient importance to be on the record I think it is preferable to take that time and do it in that way. There are other places where the written record gives a very poor picture of what actually takes place in the deliberations, and I think it would be unfortunate if our house slipped along such a path. The hon. member might give us the pleasure of hearing him read such portions as he thinks should be on the record.

Mr. LENNARD: It will be a pleasure to do so, as requested by the minister. This editorial appeared in the Western Miner, published at Vancouver, and is dated June 1948. It reads:

> The Department of Mines and Resources would be well advised to reconsider its present attitude regarding compulsory surveying of mineral claims in Yukon territory. A bureaucratic interpretation of section 78 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act now provides that owners of mineral claims in Yukon must, within one year, have their claims surveyed by a dominion land surveyor and have the survey approved by the surveyor general. Failing this, entries granted for such claims will be subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the Minister of Mines. Seeking to defend its position, the government states that: "The necessity of a survey of mineral claims has been a fundamental requirement of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act from the beginning. The two-post staking system which is in effect in the Yukon territory contemplates that there will be an early survey so that the boundary of each claim may be defined. This requirement was not enforced during the time when it was impossible to obtain the services of a surveyor. The net result of this leniency has been that those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of the territory are unable to ascertain the limits of the properties that can be secured either by purchase or staking"—and (2) "Now that the services of dominion land surveyors are available, it has been considered appropriate to require claim holders to have their claims surveyed. There is no intention of taking arbitrary action. If it is impossible to have a survey made, either because the surveyor cannot get around to it, or for good and sufficient reason the claim owner, while developing his property, is unable to pay the expense of the survey, then the circumstances will be considered by the minister on the representations of the claim holder." All of which is a fine-sounding bit of official gobbledygook and nothing more.
> It is interesting to note that George Black, M.P., long associated with Yukon mining, states definitely that when the Quartz Mining Act was drafted and when it was submitted to parliament in 1924 there was absolutely no contemplation, under the two-post staking system, of an early survey. Certainly the member for Yukon, who drafted the original legislation, is more competent to pass on the intent of parliament than the civil servants who are now trying to impose their own interpretation. Aside from that point, altogether, it is difficult to understand why the department should try to hang this question of surveys on such a tenuous thread as the two-post staking method. And to advance the argument that surveys are necessary because those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of the territory are unable to ascertain limits of properties, is nothing short of crass stupidity. To date surveys have not been found necessary in other parts of Canada when mining claims change hands, and if the four-post staking method provides the answer, why not have any claims in question restaked using four posts? Surely it is not the desire of the department to impose on prospectors a penalty of $200 per claim held in Yukon territory to overcome a deficiency in staking regulations which have been in force for almost a quarter of a century. In actual fact, of course, once the government's base lines have been run, any company engineer could readily "ascertain the limits" of the claims in question, and if they warrant development such a survey would be made as a matter of course.

To state that the government was "lenient" in not enforcing the survey regulations during the time when it was impossible to obtain the services of a surveyor is patently bureaucratic balderdash and is repeated here only as a further example of official circumlocution. The same applies to item (2) in the government statement. Just what do they mean when they say there is no intention to take arbitrary action? If the question of whether or not a prospector holds title to a claim rests with the idiosyncracies of the surveyor who may or may not "get around to it", or with the personal whim of the minister and his subordinates, depending on whether or not the department happens again to feel in a "lenient" mood, there will be little or no new mining development in Yukon territory.

As everyone associated with mining knows, the future of the industry in this country rests on the discovery and development of new deposits. It is the prospector who stakes the original claims and does the preliminary development. His position is one of paramount importance and every possible assistance and encouragement must be rendered him if we are to offset the rapid depletion of known ore bodies. These are fundamentals which one would expect even the Ottawa desk miners to recognize. Instead of suggesting that the department bear the cost of any claim surveys deemed essential to the further development of mineral resources, however, (and the amount involved would be inconsequential) the best that has been forthcoming to date is that the prospectors, by way of encouragement no doubt, should hand over $200 per claim or face the probability of cancellation. Apart from the fact that most prospectors don't have that kind of money, if they did have $200 per claim to spend one would think that the greatest possible benefit to all concerned would come from spending it on additional development. Nobody in his right mind wants to have a mineral claim surveyed at a cost of $200 until he is reasonably assured that he stands a chance of getting his money back some day. And particularly in these times when it is all too difficult to interest venture capital in mine development (thanks in great part to Ottawa's long-haired idealists), prospectors are having a tough time just getting by, without any additional burdens. If the department really wants to help the Yukon prospectors in their efforts to find and develop new mines, the compulsory survey regulations should be deleted from the quartz mining act immediately. Otherwise the Yukon prospectors say they will quit the territory, and they mean it.

I apologize to my fellow members for being for once a bit long-winded, but I tried to avoid it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Does the act apply only to claims staked after the coming into force of the act? What protection is there for those who have already staked their claims?

Mr. MacKINNON: There will be no interference with them.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This applies only from now on?

Mr. MacKINNON: To all claims.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): This afternoon, as always, the minister has been reasonable, but his attitude is quite different from that of his staff when this crusade was begun. With them it was a "must", a command, on pain of cancellation. It is true that the editorial read by the hon. member for Wentworth was written before those "musts" and commands and threats had been toned down by the minister. He knew better, but evidently his staff did not. This whole heartache which has been caused to the miners of Yukon is based on this statement:

> There are those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of Yukon territory and are unable to ascertain the limits of the properties that can be secured either by purchase or staking.

If there are people in that predicament, let us know who they are, and who is holding them up, and then discipline those who are holding them up. I asked this question of the minister:

> Who are those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of Yukon territory and are unable to ascertain the limits of the properties that can be secured either by purchase or staking, referred to in the notices sent to the owners of unsurveyed mineral claims in Yukon by the mining recorders of Yukon on instructions of the Minister of Mines and Resources?

This is the naive answer, if I may use that word, which the minister gave me:

> Companies and individuals who have already made substantial investments in mining in the Yukon and are interested in its development in the future.

That was a lot of information. Who could it possibly have been, but individuals or companies? We knew that before the question was asked. Since it was not an answer, I repeated the question on June 2. To that question the minister said this:

> Mr. Speaker, may I answer this question orally?

He proceeded to read it as follows:

> It is not customary, nor, except under most unusual circumstances, is it appropriate, to make public reference by name to persons who communicate with departmental officials on matters of private concern. To violate this procedure might result in the disclosure of the personal and business interests of individuals or companies in a way that would be unnecessarily detrimental without serving any valid public purpose. In the present instance it is felt that the publication of the names of the persons and companies involved would not result in any public benefit, but would be an unwarranted disclosure of documents which it would not be appropriate, nor in accord with official policy, to publish.

The question of substance involved in this matter has been fully answered in earlier replies to questions asked by the hon. member for Yukon.

Far from it. I had the assurance to make this remark:

Perhaps I might speak, on a question of privilege. The minister says that to answer the question would not be in the public interest. It would be more appropriate to say that it would not be in the interests of some private institutions, and the minister knows it.

I am not going to press it, but this whole heartache of the miners had been caused by that, because some miners owning mining claims or mineral claims have failed to have them surveyed. Whoever are blocking these claims should be disciplined. They should be known, and the people they are blocking should be known. Let the minister and his staff do that and cure it. Do not penalize all the claim owners in the Mayo and Keno districts. The government has dropped the demand for surveys in the Dawson mining district. They have dropped them in the Whitehorse district. The claim owners in the Mayo district must still have claims surveyed or pay $100 for the claim because somebody is holding somebody else up. Why not get at the bottom of it? Why not make a disclosure and deal with these people who are doing wrong, not the innocent ones?

Mr. MacKINNON: The hon. member for Yukon sees something in the woodpile that is not there.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): There is a nigger in the woodpile, and I am trying to smoke him out.

Mr. MacKINNON: My officials tell me that sufficient applications have been received in the department for surveys to keep our surveyors busy for the next year.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Reference has been made to the leniency of the government in not enforcing that section and having surveys made. For years and years after the act was passed there were plenty of dominion land surveyors in Yukon, and such a thing as demanding of a man that he have his claim surveyed was never thought of. It was only when these people who are behind the scene got busy that this was put into force.

Amendment (Mr. Black, Yukon) negatived.

Section 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Schedule.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): This section contains a schedule of fees. To some extent the fees have been reduced. I should like to call the attention of the minister and his staff to the fact that a fee for recording a mineral claim in Yukon is now $10, and the proposed schedule continues it, whereas in British Columbia it is only $2.50. Why it should cost more to record a claim in Yukon than in British Columbia, I fail to see.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Special—

33. To provide for assistance to encourage the improvement of cheese and cheese factories, $1,700,000.

Mr. WEBB: I see there is an increase of $200,000 in this item this year. Will the parliamentary assistant give us a breakdown of this item? I am particularly interested in the reconstruction of cheese factories. What districts of the province get this amount?

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member for Leeds asks a question with respect to the increase of $200,000 in this item. Materials have become more easy to procure than they were during the past years. We find that more applications are now coming in for the construction of and assistance to cheese factories. We felt that during the coming year more would be needed. There is a decrease in the amount of bonus that we are paying, for the simple reason that our cheese production is down, and not as much will be needed.

Mr. WEBB: I am interested in this, because I come from an area of fairly high cheese production. Is there any kind of breakdown that shows where these subsidies go?

Mr. McCUBBIN: By provinces, the total amount paid last year was: Ontario, $341,535; Manitoba, $553; Alberta, $9,082; British Columbia, $1,037; New Brunswick, $484; Prince Edward Island, $401; Quebec, $688,798.

Mr. WEBB: I am interested in the building of cheese factories. This refers to standardization of cheese pressing equipment, reconstruction of cheese factories and so on. Does this take in all that?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes. Would the hon. member want a breakdown for his own county? If he does, we can get it for him.

Mr. DROPE: How far does the department go in regard to subsidies for construction and reconstruction? What percentage of the cost is undertaken and what are the requirements?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Fifty per cent of the cost.

Mr. DROPE: What is the limit?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Any amount within reason.

Mr. DROPE: It must be approved by the department?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is it provided for individuals as well as co-operatives?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Either.

Mr. CHARLTON: In what way do you standardize cheese pressing equipment? Has the old equipment been changed? Has there been an increase in size?

Mr. McCUBBIN: In diameter. There is a variation among the different cheese factories, and the department has tried to standardize them.

Mr. CHARLTON: What is the standard weight?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The diameter of the hoop is fifteen inches, and the weight is ninety pounds.

Mr. CHARLTON: The regular 90-pound Cheddar.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: Has the department ever considered using the rectangular press? It has been used by some cheese factories. The cutting of cheese is greatly facilitated. The cheese can be cut into pound or half-pound portions, and in that way it is readily packed for retail sale. Has the department considered having the rectangular instead of the round press?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That was considered some years ago but not recently. The presses are more easily held together by hoops.

Mr. FRASER: The Minister of Agriculture only a short time ago told a deputation that, in the future, cheese would be put up in the rectangular shape instead of the present round one. In fact, in Peterborough county at the present time, the Trent cheese factory is putting out the rectangular cheese. The product is sold to one cheese man in Oshawa and he makes it up in half-pound and pound packages. I understand that last year he sold 198,000 pounds of cheese. I have tried the cheese, as have other hon. members, and it is really excellent, mild, medium and strong. I believe it is generally agreed that, in the future, cheese will be put up in this way.

Mr. JAENICKE: I understood the parliamentary assistant to give a breakdown on premiums paid on quality cheese.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I did not give premiums.

Mr. JAENICKE: I did not hear Saskatchewan mentioned. Are they entitled to anything?

Mr. McCUBBIN: What I gave was for construction, but if the hon. member wishes I can give the premiums.

Mr. JAENICKE: By provinces?

Mr. McCUBBIN: If the hon. member wishes.

Mr. WEBB: While the parliamentary assistant is looking up those figures, I see there is a reduction of $200,000 on premiums for high quality cheese. Is there any reason for that?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The reason is that production of cheese was down. I have the figures for the premiums paid. The premiums are paid on the basis of one cent on 93 score and two on 94, and the amount of money paid in the different provinces last year, 1947-48, up to the first of April of this year, was: Prince Edward Island, $459.89; New Brunswick, $1,407.52; Quebec, $98,733.57; Ontario, $801,330.23; Manitoba, $4,635.13; Saskatchewan, $283.02; Alberta, $8,387.04; British Columbia, $3,907.23; making a total of cheese premiums of $919,143.63.

Mr. CHARLTON: I understood that the figures given before included premiums and subsidies for building.

Mr. McCUBBIN: No. The figures I gave before were for construction. This is premiums.

Mr. CHARLTON: What year was that for, in connection with construction?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That was 1947-48.

Mr. CHARLTON: The figure here was only $200,000, and I understood that the figure for Quebec was $600,000 in subsidies for construction and that the figure for Ontario was something like $400,000, which makes a total of $1,000,000 right there. The total figure for last year was only $200,000, as I understood it.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The Quebec figure for the amalgamation, insulation and refrigeration and pressing equipment—that is, on the building—is $668,798.

Mr. CHARLTON: That is just the building subsidy.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, and the pressing equipment. It is the amalgamation, insulation and refrigeration and pressing equipment.

Mr. CHARLTON: What was the figure for Ontario?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I gave Quebec. The province of Ontario figure was $341,535. There was another one in Saskatchewan. It was Saskatchewan the hon. member for Kindersley was asking for, was it?

Mr. JAENICKE: Yes.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Nothing was paid in Saskatchewan.

Mr. JAENICKE: That is the only province in which nothing was paid?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes. There are not many cheese factories in Saskatchewan anyway.

Mr. JAENICKE: What is the condition under which those premiums are paid? I did not understand that.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is entirely on quality, not on quantity.

Mr. JAENICKE: Is that on cheese that is exported.

Mr. McCUBBIN: On all cheese.

Mr. JAENICKE: For domestic use as well.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. JAENICKE: Have you an inspector in Saskatchewan to look at the cheese—

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. JAENICKE: —to see whether or not it is eligible for premium?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is right.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like to point out that it seems peculiar that in last year's estimates the amount for subsidies for construction and reconstruction of cheese factories was only $200,000. The subsidies in two provinces alone are over $1,000,000. Yet the estimate for this year is only $400,000. I think that requires some kind of explanation.

Mr. WEBB: I do not think they divided their figures very well.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The amount is the same this year as it was last year.

Mr. CHARLTON: The amount of which?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The total for premiums and for subsidies.

Mr. CHARLTON: The total amount is the same?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: But the amounts set aside in the estimates at page 108 are $400,000 in subsidies for building and $1,300,000 for premiums on high quality cheese.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: Do you take some of the amount that is set aside for premiums, for subsidies, if you do not have enough for the subsidies alone?

Mr. WEBB: I think we had better start all over again, Mr. Chairman. There are two items here. All we are trying to do is to have those two items split up. There is a subsidy for construction, et cetera, and then there is a premium on high quality cheese. The parliamentary assistant must be amalgamating them there somewhere.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am sorry, but I was getting into the wrong figures. There are too many figures here for me. I will give them over again and I would ask hon. members to check them. I would ask them to mark them down.

Mr. WEBB: What are we talking about now?

Mr. McCUBBIN: We are talking about subsidies in connection with amalgamation, refrigeration, insulation and building, whatever you like to call it. I was getting at the wrong figures. The figures are as follows:

New Brunswick	nil
Prince Edward Island	nil
Quebec	$ 35,192.31
Ontario	100,620.19
Manitoba	nil
Alberta	2,630.52
British Columbia	nil

Mr. JAENICKE: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. McCUBBIN: There could not have been any paid in Saskatchewan because the figures are not shown here at all.

Mr. JAENICKE: What was that $283 the parliamentary assistant told us about a little while ago? What figure is that?

An hon. MEMBER: That is wrong.

Mr. JAENICKE: What is that $283.02 that he told us about?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That was for premiums on quality.

Mr. JAENICKE: I did not understand that.

Mr. KNIGHT: In view of the disparity between the amount of premiums in the two provinces, will the parliamentary assistant tell us what is the production for Alberta and Saskatchewan? In other words, what is the production of cheese in those two provinces, in pounds?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The total make of cheese, that is, for 1947—

Mr. JAENICKE: Is that the same period for which the premiums have been paid?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This is a calendar year. The premiums cover a fiscal year, from April 1, 1947 to April 1, 1948. But what I am giving is the calendar year of 1947.

Mr. JAENICKE: All right.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The figures are as follows:

	Pounds
Prince Edward Island	658,000
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	737,000
Quebec	24,812,000
Ontario	88,895,000
Manitoba	3,590,000
Saskatchewan	380,000
Alberta	3,111,000
British Columbia	533,000

Mr. CHARLTON: Those figures are for the year ended December 31, 1947?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: Could the parliamentary assistant give the total for that year and the total for the year previous, so that we may see the reduction?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have the figures for the calendar year 1946:

	Pounds
Prince Edward Island	737,000
Nova Scotia	nil
New Brunswick	970,000
Quebec	43,195,000
Ontario	96,367,000
Manitoba	3,228,000
Saskatchewan	440,000
Alberta	3,258,000

Manitoba was the only province showing an increase in 1947 over 1946.

Mr. TUSTIN: The first item shown in the details for this vote deals with the subsidy for cheese factories and equipment. When this item came up last year I asked the minister why it had been reduced to $200,000, and he told me it was because most of the factories had been reconstructed and re-equipped. Taking the figures the parliamentary assistant has just given, I find that the subsidies paid amounted to less than $140,000 out of the $200,000 voted last year; yet this year there is an increase to $400,000. Is it expected that there will be much more improvement in cheese factories this year than last year?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, that is the feeling of the department. Materials are becoming more plentiful, but at the same time they are getting more expensive. Nevertheless we hope there will be an increase in the construction and equipping of these factories.

Special—

37. Agricultural research special projects, $200,000.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: The first item in the details shows $30,000 for salaries and wages. Does that include salaries being paid the scientists working on that project?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This item is for agricultural research, and it concerns the projects at Lethbridge and Swift Current.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: My question was whether the item of $30,000 includes the salaries being paid scientific workers on those projects.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The amount of $30,000 covers wages and salaries.

38. Land reclamation and development in British Columbia under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $130,000.

Mr. JONES: I should like to know to what lands this particular item has reference.

Mr. McCUBBIN: If the hon. member will wait for just a moment I can give him the information.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I have looked through the estimates but have been unable to find an item under which I could deal with a subject I wish to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant. This item is for land reclamation and development in the British Columbia area. I have in my constituency an important project commonly called the Souris river project, but there is no provision in any estimate for that work. This year we had the misfortune of flood conditions, and much valuable grazing land was flooded. In addition the Saskatchewan prairie nurseries were severely damaged.

I have taken up this matter with the department of agriculture at Regina and with Mr. Gray of the P.F.R.A.; and I believe it is well known to the government that this Souris-Estevan project in the valley of the Souris river takes in from three to ten thousand acres of land. If we could get assistance from the federal government to control flood conditions in the spring, we could rehabilitate some thirty or forty families of veterans. I am quite interested in the matter because, as Mr. Gray of the P.F.R.A. states, through the pump irrigation system we could supply the land in that area perhaps more cheaply than at any other project in Saskatchewan. So next year I hope an item will be brought in under which we shall see some real development there.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I should think that could be handled under the P.F.R.A.

In reply to the hon. member for Yale, the project in question is near Kamloops. It is a Veterans' Land Act proposition. We do a part; the province does a part, and the Veterans' Land Act administration does a part. It is a three-way project.

Mr. JONES: Is there any other item through which the Minister of Agriculture intends to carry out his promise made during his recent visit to Yale, to develop the land around Westbank?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The project at Westbank also comes partly under this item.

Mr. JONES: Is the work at Westbank to be proceeded with?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is the intention of the department.

Mr. JONES: Is it in these estimates? This sum would barely cover half the cost, and it is for Kamloops.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is just to make a start; once you get started, it will be carried on further.

Mr. JONES: Kamloops is 100 miles from Westbank.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): How are these appropriations spent? We have quite large votes here, and I understand from the parliamentary assistant to the minister that some of these problems can be handled by the P.F.R.A. I quite agree with that; yet here we have a vote for $200,000 for clearing and settlement of new land under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council. How much of that was spent, and by whom?

[Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia).]

Mr. McCUBBIN: I think the hon. member is dealing with the next item. We would wait for an application from the province and then we would assist.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am happy to hear the parliamentary assistant to the minister say that, because some of us have been asking for these things for years. If the parliamentary assistant will come to my constituency I can show him one proposition which is capable of development and which would provide many happy and contented homes for veterans, provided that we can get some assistance from the federal government.

39. Clearing and settlement of new lands under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $200,000.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am a little confused by the discussion which has gone on. Do these new lands have anything to do with veteran settlers? What are these new lands for, and who are the people it is proposed to settle on them?

Mr. McCUBBIN: When any group of settlers, veteran or otherwise, want to settle on new lands, if the province wishes to assist them and will make application to the dominion, the dominion will give assistance through this vote.

Mr. HARKNESS: Was any of the money, voted last year, spent?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No application came from any province.

Mr. McCUAIG: There is one project in my riding where I understand that the department will not give title to the land. Some of the returned men there want to buy land but they cannot obtain title.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Is the hon. member not discussing P.F.R.A.?

Mr. McCUAIG: Yes.

Mr. McCUBBIN: We are far past that. If the hon. member for Maple Creek wishes to get the information we will certainly give it to him.

Item agreed to.

41. For assistance in construction of potato warehouses under regulations to be approved by the governor in council, $100,000.

Mr. FRASER: Where are these warehouses? I was wondering what facilities there are in Canada to hold potatoes over until the spring or summer. Just the other day I bought 10 pounds of Prince Edward Island potatoes for a friend of mine and I had to pay 87 cents.

Mr. McLURE: The hon. member got them quite cheap.

Mr. FRASER: I think they are extremely nice potatoes, but a little high in price.

Mr. McLURE: How much of this item was spent last year to assist in the construction of potato warehouses? Have regulations yet been approved by the governor in council with regard to the building and construction of potato warehouses? How is this assistance given? Does application have to be made at a certain time of the year? My province is probably more interested in this than most provinces, and I should like to have that information.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. member for Queens is certainly justified in asking for that information, because his province gets all the money. The co-operative make application to the province and, if they will put up 25 per cent and the province will put up 37½ per cent, the dominion puts up the other 37½ per cent. It is a three-way split, 75 per cent between the dominion and the province and 25 per cent by the co-operative.

Mr. McLURE: Can an individual do that, or must it be a co-operative?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am told that it must be a co-operative.

Mr. CHARLTON: The parliamentary assistant to the minister said it was all spent in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, because that was the only province that made application.

Mr. CHARLTON: The other provinces could get a share, but they just did not apply?

Mr. McCUBBIN: If a co-operative in your district or mine will make application to the department at Toronto and the province passes on it we would be willing to pay our share.

Mr. McLURE: Can I take it for granted that this $100,000 will be set aside for Prince Edward Island?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I would not say that.

42. Agricultural Products Act—To provide for losses incurred in respect of the purchase, sale and export of agricultural products under the Agricultural Products Act, including authority for the Minister of Finance, at the request of the Minister of Agriculture, from time to time, to pay amounts in the aggregate not exceeding $40,000,000 out of any unappropriated money in the consolidated revenue fund as recoverable advances, $100,000.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I see that $100,000 was appropriated in 1947-48. How much of that was spent?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This item is for the purchase and sale of products to the United Kingdom under the British agreements. Not a single dollar was spent last year, and none may be spent this year, but we have to set aside a certain amount for use if necessary.

Mr. McLURE: Are fur products included under this item?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No, just agricultural products such as beef, bacon, cheese, eggs and so forth.

Mr. McLURE: Under what item do furs come? They are under the prices support board.

Mr. McCUBBIN: No, not to my knowledge.

Mr. McLURE: The prices are supported on the market in a decline. I think they come under the marketing act as one of the products of the farm.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

43. Freight assistance on western feed grains, $7,750,000.

Mr. HARKNESS: Would the parliamentary assistant explain the present situation regarding freight assistance on western feed grains? This item shows the biggest reduction from last year, but I understand that a further amount is to appear in the supplementaries. Just what is the situation?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This amount covers the period from April 1 to August 1 of this year, and a further amount will appear in the supplementaries to cover the period from August 1, 1948, to July 31, 1949.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Does this include freight assistance given to eastern millers on the bran portion of the wheat which they turn into flour?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This covers feed grains only.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It includes no assistance on bran?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—
44. Freight assistance on agricultural lime for soil amendment purposes, $350,000.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: To which provnces is this assistance being given?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Most of it went to the maritime provinces and Quebec. The amounts paid were, in round figures: Prince Edward Island, $18,654; Nova Scotia, $28,141; New Brunswick, $51,686; Quebec, $149,978; Ontario, $5,698; British Columbia, $4,550.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I notice that the prairie provinces are not included. I think it is an excellent idea to assist farmers who are anxious to amend their soil. In the prairie provinces we have a deficiency of phosphorus, and a large quantity of it is supplied in the form of phosphatic fertilizers. I would suggest to the parliamentary assistant that it might be a good idea from the economic point of view to assist our farmers in the west who use these phosphatic fertilizers, just as assistance is given to other provinces which are using lime.

Mr. McCUBBIN: This does not refer to soil fertilizers but only to limestone for soil amendment purposes.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—
46. Meat board, including quality premiums on A and B1 grade hog carcasses, $6,153,702.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What were the amounts paid in 1947 to the packing companies, to which companies were payments made, and what was the number of carcasses on which the special bonus was paid?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The premium was not paid to the packing companies but to the producers entirely.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Through the packing houses?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is there any grading of these hogs as A and B1 hams when they come on the domestic market?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: So that the premium is not reflected in the price.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Not a particle.

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. HARKNESS: The vote is approximately the same as last year, so that the department, I take it, estimates that the number of A and B1 hogs will be approximately the same as last year. Is the vote approximately the same because you estimate the total production will be about the same as last year, or because you estimate that the quality will be improved though the total production may be decreased? What is the situation in regard to that? Why is the same amount being appropriated as last year.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is very difficult to estimate at this time, but we feel that it will be approximately the same as last year.

Mr. HARKNESS: Can the minister tell us whether the policy of paying a premium has been successful, as shown by the fact that, relatively speaking, there are more A hogs and B1 hogs as time goes on? As I understand it, the purpose of this is to get improved quality. Can we have any information as to whether the system has been successful and whether quality is improving?

Mr. McCUBBIN: As near as we can figure it out, it is just about holding even over the years, although the subsidy or bonus, whatever you like to call it, should not be discontinued. I feel that it is a help to the hog producer of this country. It encourages him to produce quality hogs rather than quantity. The quality has not changed much over the years.

Mr. HARKNESS: Being in the hog business myself, I certainly do not think the premium should be discontinued. What I was trying to get at was what effect it has actually had on production in the matter of increasing quality. The last figures I saw showed that, out of eighty grade carcasses in the west, relatively speaking, the percentage of selects was considerably less than the number in eastern Canada. Has this situation been corrected to any extent? Is there any explanation of the situation? Apparently the A and the B1 grading in the east are considerably higher than in the west. Naturally a lot of hog producers in the west look on that situation with a considerable amount of suspicion. Can the parliamentary assistant give us any information in regard to that point?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is a very hard question to answer. Why there should be more grade A's and B's in Ontario than in western Canada might be easily answered by saying that we are more particular in the types of hogs we try to produce in eastern Canada than they are in western Canada.

Mr. McLURE: I should like to give the hon. member for Calgary East an answer to his question as recorded in Hansard of last year when this matter was discussed. At that time the Minister of Agriculture said that the best bacon hog in Canada, in fact in the world, was the bacon hog of Prince Edward Island. I just want to say to the hon. member for Calgary East that the quality of the hogs in the west will improve very soon, because within the last six months no fewer than four carloads of pigs have been shipped from Prince Edward Island out to that section of the country for breeding purposes. Last week two carloads of breeding sows were shipped from Prince Edward Island to Ontario. It is worthwhile to turn up the record of last year and see what the Minister of Agriculture said with reference to the quality. I do not want to be too boastful, but the Minister of Agriculture said at that time that any good farmer who would buy one of these good sows from Prince Edward Island and have a litter of ten, provided that he knew how to raise hogs, would have no difficulty in having ten select premium A's, unless there was one runt.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is a well known fact throughout Canada that Prince Edward Island does raise a high-quality hog. I am glad to hear the hon. member say that sows from that province are going into other provinces where they may assist in every way to improve the quality of hogs. We want to assist in the years that lie ahead. If we are to hold the British bacon market it will depend on quality hogs.

Mr. HACKETT: With your consent, Mr. Chairman, and with the consent of the parliamentary assistant and the committee, I ask to be permitted to put a few questions on item 45. I have been here consistently for the last week—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. Let us pass item 46 first.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I presume that this is the board which handles the processed beef which goes to Britain under the contract and to other European countries.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Can the parliamentary assistant tell us where they enter into the shipment of beef to the United States? Is it intended that they shall handle the bulk of the beef which is shipped to the United States in processed form? Under the negotiations that are being entered into, will producers be able to ship their live cattle to the United States as was done prior to the embargo of 1942?

Mr. McCUBBIN: When the embargo is lifted there will be free and open marketing as far as beef cattle are concerned. Any farmer or any shipper will be able to ship as he did in past years, and the beef will not be handled under any meat board or association of any kind.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion —

47. Special products board, $25,000.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I want to be clear where we are. We have passed item 46 and are going back to item 45.

Mr. HACKETT: I am asking the committee to revert to item 45.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I thought we would deal with these two items, and then the hon. member for Stanstead could raise his point on item 45.

Mr. CHARLTON: I have a question to ask. In the auditor general's report, two items appear on pages 20 and 21. I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question when the estimates were up before. On pages 20 and 21, items Nos. 61 and 62, having to do with the production of seed, are detailed. I think I had better read No. 61 because it is hard to understand:

> Vote 477. Beginning in 1943-44, the agricultural supplies board entered into contracts with growers, under a plan styled "The dominion seed program", to ensure adequate production of vegetable seeds. Seed produced by growers, but not disposed of by them, was purchased by the board and stored pending resale. The cost of seed thus purchased was $234,358.74, including freight and storage. Sales amounted to $9,615.25. Thus, $224,743.49 is invested in 208,898 pounds of unsold seed.

That comes to $1.07 a pound. Can the parliamentary assistant give some explanation of the item?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. member for Brant has brought up this question before. I had a little statement prepared. If hon. members do not mind I should like to read it. This may not be the information desired, but, if not, the hon. member can question me further. After the harvesting of the 1946 crop, world prices of many kinds of vegetable seeds dropped considerably. This was particularly true with respect to carrot and onion, two kinds which the board held in considerable quantity. During the latter war years it was possible to dispose of all amounts of seed in excess of domestic requirements to such agencies as UNRRA. The policy of the agricultural supplies board was to avoid offering its holdings on the domestic market at prices lower than those prevailing. Efforts to dispose of the seed were, therefore, largely confined to the export market, and the final sale was made in 1947 for post-UNRRA relief purposes.

Figures referred to in the auditor general's report for 1947 cover purchases and sales to March 31, 1947 only. Obviously, all seed which the agricultural supplies board purchased and was unable to dispose of immediately was held in storage for resale. Since March 31, 1947, the dominion seed program has been brought to a close; and the following figures cover activities, not only up to March, 1947, but up to the conclusion of the program. A total of 237,403 pounds of seed was purchased at a net cost of $238,093.36, including freight and storage. Total sales amounted to 216,985 pounds, and $123,772.94 was recovered. Purchases exceeded sales by 20,418 pounds.

The total loss of money involved for the entire period that the program was in effect amounted to $114,320.42, which was accounted for by (a) the reduction in resale value and (b) the loss of 20,418 pounds of seed which had to be destroyed owing to loss in germination while in storage.

Mr. CHARLTON: Part of the 200,000 pounds odd has been sold since this report came out. Did that cover onion seed alone?

Mr. McCUBBIN: There were seeds of almost every variety in it, such as beets, mangels, spinach, cauliflower, lettuce, carrots, cucumbers, radishes, parsnips, tomatoes, and so on.

Mr. CHARLTON: In what provinces was it carried out?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Mostly in British Columbia and Nova Scotia, and some in Ontario.

Mr. HERRIDGE: In the fall of 1945, I brought up the question of the appointment of an egg inspector for the southern interior of British Columbia, and the minister said then it was impossible to appoint one, owing to shortage of staff. I raised the matter again in 1946 and was assured that it would be taken into consideration. Again in 1947 I brought it up and it was still being considered. The southern interior of British Columbia is still without an egg inspector.

We have had an increasing poultry industry in that part of the province. I am referring to that portion of British Columbia which extends from the Okanagan valley to the Alberta boundary, being bounded on the north by the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway and on the south by the international border. A good many eggs from this district are shipped to the special products board, while great numbers are sold locally in the stores. The organized poultry men have been anxious for some years to have an egg inspector appointed to assist in instructing those who are shipping eggs to the special products board and also for the purpose of having a check on sales in the domestic market. They have made frequent representations to the department in this respect, and so have I on their behalf, but so far nothing has been done. I urge the parliamentary assistant to bring the matter again to the attention of the minister, because at the present time the poultry industry in the southern interior of British Columbia cannot be properly serviced, so far as this aspect of inspection is concerned, by the inspector located in Vancouver.

Mr. McCUBBIN: One of the officials of the poultry division of the Department of Agriculture is leaving for British Columbia next week, and the matter will be drawn to his attention to see whether something can be done.

Mr. McKAY: Can the parliamentary assistant say why there is this substantial reduction in this item for this year, amounting to $59,000? May I ask a further question with regard to the details of services given on page 110 of the estimates? Of the expenditures this year amounting to $25,000 under the special products board, $20,000 consists of miscellaneous items. That sounds odd to me, and I think we should have a breakdown, because if you have $4,000 for temporary assistance; services of forwarding agencies, $1,000, and $20,000 for miscellaneous, it would seem that an explanation is called for.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The reduction from $84,000 to $25,000 is accounted for by the fact that this is practically all for departmental administration, salaries. There is a cutting down in this department and that is the reason for the reduction.

Mr. McKAY: Are the activities being definitely cut down?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Some of the officials who were in the department, such as egg inspectors, have been transferred back to the Department of Agriculture, and they will not be paid through this vote but through departmental votes. It is a reconversion period, and it is simply a matter of the changing of officials who are being paid through a different channel.

Mr. McKAY: What about my question with regard to the miscellaneous item of $20,000?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The $20,000 covers travel, telegrams, telephone calls. It includes the expenses of our officials who are going around the country under the board.

Mr. McKAY: How many officials are there on the board?

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is difficult to give a direct answer to that question. There are the expenses of the advisory committees who are brought in under the special products board. Their expenses are all paid and they are numerous. It would require a good deal of research to get the information for which the hon. member asks.

Mr. McKAY: The parliamentary assistant cannot tell me how many officials there are on the board?

Mr. McCUBBIN: There are four officials on the board. That covers all other expenses of members on the advisory committees as well.

Mr. GILLIS: What is the function of these advisory boards?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The same as the fish board.

Mr. McCUBBIN: With regard to all these boards, the members come from any of the provinces in the different parts of Canada. They come here to advise upon things like egg contracts; or if it were the meat board, it would be meat contracts. They advise in respect of these various products that are shipped overseas. I think it is a legitimate thing. It is something that the federation and other organizations have been asking for. I think producers in the different parts of Canada should be consulted in an advisory capacity.

Item agreed to.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Stanstead wishes to revert to item 45, dairy products board.

Demobilization and reconversion—

45. Dairy products board, $19,546.

Mr. HACKETT: I should like the parliamentary assistant to tell the committee how many pounds of creamery butter were produced in each of the years 1947, 1946, 1945, and the first three months of 1948.

Mr. GRANT: You might as well ask for 1932.

Mr. McCUBBIN: To answer the question asked by the hon. member for Stanstead, I have here the amounts for the different provinces. Is that what the hon. member wants?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have the figures for 1946 and 1947. I have not them for 1945.

Mr. HACKETT: Have you any for 1948?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No, I have not any for 1948. I am told that we may have them. I think we have them here. But we will give the others first and then give those for 1948. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The figures are as follows:

Butter Production

Province	Pounds
	1946	1947
Prince Edward Island ..	3,896,000	3,660,000
Nova Scotia	6,988,000	6,617,000
New Brunswick	6,921,000	6,908,000
Quebec	85,355,000	97,527,000
Ontario	69,171,000	77,030,000
Manitoba	26,049,000	26,265,000
Saskatchewan	37,025,000	36,330,000
Alberta	30,744,000	32,068,000
British Columbia	5,332,000	4,436,000

Mr. HACKETT: Has the parliamentary assistant the figures for the first three months of 1948?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I did not hear the question.

Mr. HACKETT: Are the figures the parliamentary assistant intends to give now, those for the first three months of 1948?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No. I will give the figures for the five-month period to June 1; from January to the end of May. The figures are as follows:

Butter Production (January 1—June 1, 1948)

Province	Pounds
Prince Edward Island	784,000
Nova Scotia	1,987,000
New Brunswick	1,600,000
Quebec	19,305,000
Ontario	24,661,000
Manitoba	7,804,000
Saskatchewan	9,972,000
Alberta	9,633,000
British Columbia	1,676,000

Mr. ROWE: Is that for four months?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is for the five months, January to June 1.

Mr. ROWE: Has the parliamentary assistant the relationship between those figures and those for the five months of 1947? Is there an increase over 1947?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have not checked that up, but I have the figures for the first five months for 1947, the same as I have for the first five months of 1948, if the hon. member wishes them for purposes of comparison.

Mr. ROWE: Is there an increase? If so, what is the percentage?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have not checked that up yet. There is a 6·6 per cent decrease.

Mr. ROWE: A 6·6 per cent decrease in the first five months this year?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, over the first five months of last year.

Mr. ROWE: A six per cent decrease.

Mr. HACKETT: In order to make arithmetic easy, since there appears to have been produced in the first five months of 1948 in the province of Quebec, 19,305,000 pounds, let us say that it is 20,000,000 pounds. That would be 4,000,000 pounds to the month. If you multiply that by twelve, you will get 48,000,000 pounds for the year. I am aware that this would not be a fair method of computation, because naturally there is more butter produced during the summer season than during the winter season; but the difference is not 50 per cent. I should like the parliamentary assistant to state, if he can, the anticipated production of butter for the year 1948, and if it exceeds 60,000,000 pounds.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. member's arithmetic may be all right in practice, but it is not all right in butter making, if he is quoting four winter months to us.

Mr. HACKETT: Five months.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes, four winter months and one summer month.

Mr. HACKETT: That is right.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Of course, the high period will be in June and July.

Mr. HACKETT: I am aware of that.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Of course I can only take last year's figures. In the province of Quebec there was an increase of 12,000,000 pounds in 1947 over 1946. What it will be this year no one can answer until the end of the year.

Mr. HACKETT: I understand that the parliamentary assistant has not the figures for the first five months of the years 1946 and 1947.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have for 1947.

Mr. HACKETT: What are they?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have them for 1947, yes. Do you want them for the province of Quebec?

Mr. HACKETT: We might take them all.

Mr. ROWE: Let us have the figures for Quebec and Ontario, the largest producers.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the parliamentary assistant give us the figures for Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. McCUBBIN: In the province of Quebec there is little change. In the first five months 20,942,000 pounds were produced in 1947 and 19,305,000 pounds in 1948.

Mr. ROWE: That is in Ontario?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is Quebec. In the province of Ontario the figures are 26,349,000 pounds in 1947 and 24,661,000 pounds in 1948.

Mr. HACKETT: Then will the parliamentary assistant please state how many head of dairy cattle were exported in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am sorry I have not those figures for the hon. member for Stanstead, but I have seen them and, if my memory serves me aright, this year they are a little in excess of last year. More cattle were shipped this year.

Mr. HACKETT: And last year was a little in excess of the year before?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am comparing the first five months of this year with the first five months of last year; but I am not in a position to say how great the excess may be.

Mr. HACKETT: Then will the parliamentary assistant be good enough to say how much butter was imported into Canada in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

Mr. WARREN: Just before that question is answered, I wonder if the hon. member for Stanstead would permit a question. The hon. member seems to be handling the dairy industry for the official opposition, and I should like to know if he has ever had the pleasure of milking a cow.

Mr. ROWE: No, but he knows more than the cow.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not think I shall waste the time of the committee on this line of argument. I have had some experience from which I hope I have derived profit, and when that experience becomes pertinent I shall draw upon it. In the meantime, I should be glad if the parliamentary assistant would answer the question.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. member wanted the information for some years back?

Mr. HACKETT: I asked for it from 1945 on.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The figures are as follows:

	Butter imported
	Pounds
1943	1,154
1944	740
1947	5,118,869

Mr. HACKETT: Has any butter been imported in 1948?

Mr. McCUBBIN: A few pounds were imported, perhaps two or three hundred pounds.

Mr. HACKETT: Then will the parliamentary assistant be good enough to say what the price of creamery butter is in Canada at the present time?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. gentleman realizes that the ceiling price is sixty-seven cents. I have today's prices on the commodity exchange. Will that be all right?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

Mr. McCUBBIN: There were 600 boxes at 66⅜ cents and 400 boxes at 66½ cents, making a total of 1,000 boxes.

Mr. HACKETT: Then can the hon. gentleman give the latest prices he has for the same commodity in the United States?

Mr. McCUBBIN: From 80½ to 81 cents.

Mr. HACKETT: I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the committee for permitting me to get this information at a time which may not have been convenient to all concerned.

Mr. CHARLTON: The figures the parliamentary assistant put on Hansard were for imports of butter. Would he place beside those figures the exports of butter in each of those years, so that we may get the net position? I think it is rather misleading now.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I shall have that information in a moment.

Mr. CHARLTON: I believe the parliamentary assistant will find that there were exports in each of those years, and that the net position will be an export position.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): From time to time one hears alarming and, for all I know, exaggerated predictions as to the butter shortage we shall face later in the year. Can the parliamentary assistant make any comment on that? Has the department any forecasts which may be given now either to prove or to disprove these assertions? I have heard that a shortage of 30,000,000 pounds is anticipated.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not in a position to answer that question. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is speaking of rumours. Though production may not be as high as it was last year, we still have the production for seven months to come in, and I have every reason to believe that production in Canada will take care of the consumption for next winter.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, Mr. Chairman, this is not a rumour; it is a fact that we are short 30,000,000 pounds right now. This is a prognostication, but it is quite possible and even probable that we shall have no butter at all, at least not nearly enough butter to supply our own people, next November. Are those not facts?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Who said that?

Mr. WARREN: I did.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why don't you ask someone who knows something about it?

Mr. WARREN: There is good grass.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not in a position to dispute what the hon. member for Calgary West has just said, but I do not think anyone can say how much we are short at the present time.

Mr. COCKERAM: We are short, though?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not saying we are short. The consumer is getting all the butter he wants now, and at the ceiling price, a curtailed price, for which he should be thankful. The producer is not kicking; he is getting a fair price. When you have the producer and the consumer satisfied you have gone a long way. As far as next winter is concerned, we still have seven good months ahead of us, and I hope that production will be high enough to take care of consumption next winter, though of course I am not a prophet and do not wish to prophesy.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I would remind hon. members that this item was passed quite some time ago.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Oh, no.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I beg your pardon, sir.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Surely no one wants to be technical about this very important matter.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We do not want to get into a long discussion on an item already passed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I appreciate the technical point, but you, Mr. Chairman, and the parliamentary assistant were good enough to waive that, and surely the substance of the discussion warrants further inquiry. May I ask the amount in storage now as compared with the amount in storage a year ago?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I hope I have the right answer for the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. On June 1, 1947, there were in storage 23,883,885 pounds of creamery butter, and on June 1 this year, the amount in storage was 19,796,000 pounds.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Being a farmer, I know a little about this. We have heard from a lot of pseudo-experts tonight. I want to tell my hon. friends to my right that, since I have come into the house, they have advocated a policy which has brought about the situation we are facing today.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member wishes to ask the parliamentary assistant any question on this item he should do so.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The reports are that we are about 30,000,000 pounds of creamery butter short in storage as compared with last year. The reason for that shortage is the same as that given by a rancher. He said that when people were prepared to pay prices for cattle they would get the cattle. When our dairy farmer gets the proper price for his dairy products, he will supply them. If necessary, there should be subsidies to meet the costs of production. Then we would have sufficient milk, milk products and butter in this country. My hon. friends to my right are disturbed but this is all due to the policies they have advocated.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What policies?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Decontrol; no subsidies.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The hon. member for Brant asked a question a while ago with regard to exports of butter.

Mr. CHARLTON: I simply wanted to show the export position versus the import position, so that it would not appear we had imported butter every year. We have imported some, but we have also exported.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Last year we exported 3,125,000 pounds, and the year before we exported 4,509,000 pounds to Newfoundland and British West Indies.

Mr. CHARLTON: The net is on the export side?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is right.

Mr. ROWE: Every person seems to have the belief that there will be a shortage of creamery butter this coming winter. That is understandable perhaps with present prices of milk and milk products. There has been a great deal of controversy with respect to oleomargarine, and this has caused considerable concern among the dairy farmers of Canada. I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant if any consideration has been given to permitting the manufacture of a new substitute for butter. It is said that this can be produced from milk and dairy products. While it has not the same fat value as butter, it is supposed to have the same food value. I understand that its manufacture is prohibited at the present time, but it might provide a substitute for creamery butter. Has application been made to the department for permission to produce this product which could replace creamery butter in a time of critical shortage?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Made out of what?

Mr. ROWE: Milk and dairy products.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Some representations have been made to me about it, but no representations have been made to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ROWE: Or to the government?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No representations have been made to this department at any rate.

Mr. ROWE: I am simply asking for information; I do not want to embarrass the parliamentary assistant. I understand that this can be manufactured from dairy products, and in a time of critical shortage it could take the place of butter. I think dairymen throughout the dominion would much prefer to have butter replaced with a product produced from milk rather than with oleomargarine.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What is it?

Mr. ROWE: It is a substitute for butter. If they were allowed to manufacture it, then I could name it. It is manufactured from milk and dairy products and would be an asset to the dairy industry.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

161. Departmental administration, $305,232.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Chairman, I was sworn in as Minister of Mines and Resources on June 11, eleven days ago. I am not on that account asking for any compassion, although I am very much appreciative—

Mr. ROWE: That is a good item to start with.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have been in close touch in many ways and for many years with the Department of Mines and Resources, the old department of the interior, but from the other side of the desk. My first experience with the department was back in the early days when I was an employee of the then minister of the interior, the Hon. Frank Oliver, publisher of the Edmonton Bulletin. I think everybody admits that he was one of Canada's great statesmen.

I should like to give a brief summary of the estimates of the department before we proceed with the individual items. The estimates of the Department of Mines and Resources provide for a considerable increase —$12,150,000—over those of the previous year. In large measure this increase reflects a situation which has been accumulating for a number of years. During the depression and war years, expenditures for improvements in the national parks and Indian reserves and for the development of the Northwest Territories and Yukon were, of necessity greatly curtailed. The result has been that the ordinary facilities in the parks and Indian reserves have so deteriorated that larger appropriations are now required to meet the most urgent needs. We are under most severe pressure from the Northwest Territories and Yukon where we have nearly twenty years of arrears to make up. Normal development of these areas cannot be longer delayed.

With the cessation of hostilities and the resulting increase in available manpower, the mining industry is stepping up its activity and making more requests for mineral dressing investigations. Also, reconversion problems and post-war increase in industrial activity have resulted in many demands for physical metallurgy investigations.

A new laboratory will shortly be completed and equipped with semi-commercial sized rolling mill, extrusion press and other equipment primarily for work on light metals and their alloys. Operation of this laboratory will account for a considerable part of the additional appropriation now asked for.

Similarly, with the forest industry, post-war demands for investigation and research in silviculture, fire prevention and forest management have greatly expanded, and this is reflected in this increase in the estimates. There has been a much larger use of timber in recent years, first to meet the needs of war, and subsequently the demands of peacetime requirements. For many years our industries dependent on the forest for their raw material were able to cut out, and move on to areas of new supplies. There is a limit to the distance that industries can go for supplies, and more industrialists are now giving thought to a policy of forest management to continue production on accessible forest lands.

It will be seen that a large part of the increase in our estimates is to provide funds for the operations of the eastern Rockies forest conservation board, a joint dominion-provincial organization created by statute last year to plan, direct and supervise the construction, operation and maintenance of all projects and facilities required for the proper protection and conservation of the forests and the protection of the watersheds within the area of the eastern Rockies.

The demand for accurate maps for the development of Canada's natural resources, particularly of northern Canada, is reflected in the increase in the appropriations requested for the surveys and mapping units of the department, which include also the charting of our shores. It is intended this year to provide two new hydrographic ships for this purpose.

If Canada hopes to attract United States tourists, it will be necessary to appropriate sufficient funds to ensure that present facilities in our national parks are attractive and adequate and that improvements are made where required. It is particularly important that facilities be made available for the man in the average income bracket. Therefore an active parks program must be initiated at once. A new road development program for the parks is planned, which will include the reconstruction and preparation for hard-surfacing of roads which are inferior in quality and the improvement of hazardous portions of existing roads. A modest building program will also be undertaken.

The government of New Brunswick recently transferred to the dominion an area of land for the creation of a national park, and it is proposed to make a start on the new park this year.

As mentioned before, during the depression and war years expenditures for buildings and other construction projects in the Indian reserves were so curtailed that not only is it necessary now to ask for substantial increases for the repairs to Indian buildings and houses, but the accumulation of new building needs has reached the stage where it is not possible to carry on the administration of Indian affairs without considerably increased appropriations for building purposes.

A substantial increase is required for Indian education. It is proposed next year to provide ninety-seven new classrooms for day school purposes and four residential schools in isolated locations. There are 12,000 Indian children of school age for whom no educational facilities have yet been provided. We can make some progress with the adult Indian, but the education of the child is where the work must begin if the Indian is to become a useful citizen. His health, habits, energies and ambitions must be supervised and directed, and this can best be done through the school, where early and continuous training will fit him to take his place in the life of the country. This cannot be accomplished without modern, clean, well-lighted school buildings and qualified teachers.

A large part of the increase in the vote for Indian welfare is necessary for the construction of Indian houses. In most cases the Indians build their own houses from material supplied, in many instances the lumber being from their own sawmills. In this way the greatest number of houses is secured with the minimum expenditure of funds.

It is necessary to ask for a considerable increase for immigration purposes also. This is due largely to the necessity of providing adequate facilities both in Canada and abroad to deal with the increasing flow of immigrants and visitors to this country.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not want to say anything that will bother the minister, because I know he has been only a short time in this department, and I know his whole heart is in the development of this country, particularly the western country and the far north. But there are three general programs I should like to ask a word about, and if the minister cannot answer, that will be all right.

In former years there was always an item in these estimates for proceeding with the work of development of oil from the tar sands at Fort McMurray. I do not see anything in the estimates for that purpose this year; yet I know that this country has an investment there in cash of approximately $2,000,000 in one way or another. If the minister knows, I would ask him just what the position is at Fort McMurray today. The main separation plant was burnt down. I saw it after it was burnt. I may be going there again this year, but I am not sure that I shall have time to go. Can the minister tell the committee just the situation of the buildings there which belong to the government and whether any equipment is still there? If he cannot answer that, I have two other questions to ask.

Mr. MacKINNON: There will be a substantial item in the supplementaries to provide for further research work in connection with the development of the so-called tar sands at Fort McMurray. All the plant and equipment that we had at Waterways has been sold to the Abasand company. They are maintaining the buildings and the refinery.

Mr. MacNICOL: Have they rebuilt the separation plant?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: The refinery, then, is just standing where it was before, at the rear of where the separation plant was located? Is all the equipment under protection? The new Abasand company, an Edmonton company, is under the direction, I believe, of the Alberta government.

Mr. MacKINNON: This is entirely separate from the development down the Athabaska river, which is being assisted by the Alberta government.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not think I shall worry the minister any more, because I can see he is not familiar with the matter.

I observe an item in the estimates for coal development in the Yukon area, and I am glad to see that item. My hon. friend the member for Yukon is familiar with the Yukon's resources, and I am very glad we have coal in the Yukon. Part of the business of the Department of Mines and Resources should be the development of coal anywhere. Is the minister conversant with the probable development of hard coal in the Highwood area of Alberta?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am familiar in a general way with the coal resources of the Highwood area and other high-grade coal resources in other parts of the eastern slope of the Rockies. I do not know just what information my hon. friend seeks. But he did refer to the development of coal properties in the Yukon. Moneys have been advanced to assist in the opening up of coal deposits there to serve the Yukon on a basis on which the government hopes to be reimbursed through sales.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister is new in the department. I hope he will be better by next year. The minister will be more familiar with what the department is doing with reference to oil, if it comes under his department. Will he tell us how much oil has been delivered in the Leduc area so far and what the prospects are?

Mr. MacKINNON: I should like to give what answer I can to the hon. member. The so-called Leduc sector of the Edmonton oil field is, as everyone knows, under great development at the present time. Unfortunately, the work there has recently been held up by a very large producer getting out of control. That difficulty has not yet been fully overcome.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They got it under control the day before yesterday.

Mr. MacKINNON: The hon. member for Calgary West must have later information on that than I have. On my last inquiry I was informed that, although they were making great progress in getting the well under control, they had not yet succeeded. I am delighted to know that the well is now under control.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The last newspaper from the west carried that information.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am sorry, but I cannot give the figures of the amount of oil produced there. The amounts vary from day to day.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I was pleased to hear the minister say that his department was taking an interest in putting better roads in our national parks. Of course roads in the west are a major problem. The great trouble is that you may have good roads in the parks, but in the process of getting to the parks you wreck your car. I notice in the votes that money is allocated for road construction into the Northwest Territories, and into the Yellowknife district.

Within my own riding we have an area called Atlin, in which placer mining is carried on to a considerable extent. I do not want to ride the Department of Mines and Resources, because I do not believe they are wholly to blame for what happened. It might be this unknown quantity called the treasury board. British Columbia offered to pay their share of the road amounting to $100,000 from Atlin up to the Yukon border if the federal authority would pay their $100,000 and build their half of the road from the British Columbia border to the Alcan highway. This investment of $200,000 would have produced almost as large an amount as that. It would have paid for itself in the actual value of gold produced. On top of that you could liken it to a park area, because perhaps it is the most beautiful townsite in Canada. At Atlin lake there is fishing and hunting for big game. It is my understanding that, although the government of British Columbia offered to pay its $100,000, the federal government would not come through with its half. It would have been an acquisition to the country. It would have been an attraction to the tourists and would have side-tracked many who go to Fairbanks. They would have turned down and gone to Atlin. I should like the department to keep that in mind when making up next year's estimates, because it is impossible to develop that placer mining field unless roads are put in. They cannot get the heavy equipment in until the road is built.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am happy that we have the minister as head of this department. I was glad to hear what he had to say in regard to the government taking action on conservation of our forests and investigation into our mineral resources and how to use them. If we had had proper conservation of our forests in the past twenty-five years we would not have had the terrific forest fires which I myself saw in flying over the Chapleau area of northern Ontario. It is to be regretted that, owing to policies followed in Canada under which timber operators were given large timber berths and allowed to cut the timber and leave slashings in the forests, huge fires have resulted. The department has been unable to prevent terrible losses, amounting to millions of dollars, in our timber berths. I hope that the minister will take measures to guard against further fires of that kind.

Another matter to which I should like to refer is that of our various mineral deposits. I want to refer particularly to the potash deposits in Saskatchewan. I am told by authorities of the federal government that these deposits are of extreme importance; and, should we exploit them properly, they will perhaps be of as great significance as the potash deposits in Germany. Indeed they offer as great an opportunity for potash development as we find in some of the fields in Mexico. If the minister has any information on that I should like him to pass it on to us. Will he give us any communications or plans of development of the potash deposits that have passed between the federal government and the government of Saskatchewan? I think he will readily recognize that it is a tremendous proposition. It would take sums of money running into many millions of dollars properly to develop that field. If we had a progressive attitude toward that development we could have a large export surplus of potash to send to other countries, and this would assist us to correct our unfavourable balance of trade with other nations.

Mr. MacKINNON: There has been correspondence between the department and the government of Saskatchewan regarding the development of potash resources, but no decision has been arrived at. In connection with the forests, it is the intention of the department to bring in, at the next session, a forests act which will look toward the development and preservation of our timber resources.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister not make a statement in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Skeena? It is of the utmost importance that a road should be constructed between the Atlin country and the Alaska highway. Apparently the provincial government has offered to pay half the cost. What position is being taken by the dominion government?

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not want to block my own estimates. I was quite ready to answer the question of the hon. member for Skeena by informing him that the item of which he spoke—and of which he spoke as being a matter that was lost for this session—is still under consideration. I am not sure what the result will be. Instead of being a cost of $100,000 to the provincial government and $100,000 to the dominion government, it is expected by our officials that the cost will be at least double that to both the province and the federal government. But the need is recognized. The wealth of the mineral field that this road will open up is recognized. Everything cannot be done at once. We are building roads in the Yukon territory alone this year to the extent of $425,000.

Mr. YOUNG: I should like to ask the minister a question. I understand that he is a new minister and I am a new member, so that we start on a fairly even level, although possibly he will have the advantage. I should like to inquire especially about the policy of this department in regard to Indians who are over the age of seventy. In British Columbia there are a number of Indians living in reservations on the borders of the constituency I represent, and I understand from them—I should like to check this with the minister—that recently this department has granted an increase of $8 a month to these aged people. Previously they were receiving something in the nature of $5 a month, which was given them in the form of necessities by the Indian agent. The condition of these people at the present time is most necessitous. We are all aware that anyone of the white race who is asked to live on $40 a month as an old age pension is in no paradise; and when we consider that these Indian races eat as we eat and have to live as we have to live, what they receive is a remarkably small sum. Does the department intend to increase the amount? When I say "increase," I do not mean increasing it another $8, but increasing it in line with the cost of living.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Old age pension comes under the health and welfare department and not under this.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. KNOWLES: But is this not an Indian affairs matter, Mr. Chairman? Perhaps the hon. member could ask the question under item 213.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Item 213 would be the vote.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If the minister would prefer to wait until we get that item to discuss Indian affairs, we could do so.

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Bureau of mines—

164. Mineral resources investigations, $1,135,857.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain the work carried out under this vote?

Mr. MacKINNON: The apparent increase is $512,723. However, in 1947-48 there was provided in votes 532 and 534 of the demobilization and reconversion estimates the sum of $384,500 for services being carried on in the divisions of mineral dressing and metallurgy and mineral resources. This will be continued in 1948-49 under the main vote. The difference between this amount and the apparent increase of $512,723 represents an actual increase of $128,223. The vote provides for office, laboratory and field investigations relating to metallic minerals, industrial minerals, fuels and mineral economics, including those directly connected with post-war problems, and the laboratories equipped to carry out investigations on both small and semi-commercial scales are housed in several modern buildings on Booth street, Ottawa. Investment in buildings and equipment is almost $3,000,000. As a group, these laboratories are probably without their equal anywhere. The services provided are in ever-increasing demand by industry and by other government agencies.

Mr. GREEN: The help is available to all the provinces and not merely to the Northwest Territories?

Mr. MacKINNON: It is for all Canada.

Mr. COCKERAM: I wish to congratulate the minister on this increase in the estimates of the department, and I would ask him whether these laboratories are being extended in any considerable degree. To what extent will the increase be available for increase in the metallurgical staff dealing with these problems? It is well known in the mining industry that there has been great delay in getting results, and with this increase we hope that the service can be brought up to date.

Mr. MacKINNON: The staff is being constantly increased. We have just finished equipping a new laboratory and are planning the erection of two additional buildings at an approximate cost of $35,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: There is an increase of only four in the permanent staff. That is what I had in mind. There should be a greater increase in the technical personnel of the department.

Mr. MacKINNON: While there is an increase of only four in the permanent staff, there is a large increase in the temporary staff.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister says there is a large increase in the temporary staff, but in spite of the increase in wages over last year there is an increase of only $2,000 for temporary staff. It seems to me you are spending a great deal of money but not filling up the staff to do the job you propose to do.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): When these expenditures are made for investigation into mineral resources in any province, are they made on a proportionate basis with the province concerned? When you go into a province to investigate certain mineral resources, does the department spend dollar for dollar with the province?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is no formula that is used in all cases. It is a matter of arriving at an arrangement in accordance with the necessities of development.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister state whether he will increase the personnel of that branch above $2,000 for temporary assistance so as to give better service to industry?

Mr. MacKINNON: From what I learn from my officials, there is a much larger increase than would be indicated by the $2,000 mentioned, and the staff is, I am told, being increased.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Bureau of mines—

166. Investigations of radioactive ores, $134,200.

Mr. MacNICOL: This vote calls for $134,000 odd. This particular branch does not seem to have any head. Most of the expenses are connected with temporary staff in the amount of $78,000 out of $134,000. Much of the rest is for travelling expenses and supplies. Just what are they doing and where are they finding the material, if that can be stated?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that this is a subject in respect of which, inasmuch as it deals with radioactive ores, the department is careful in the information it makes public. I can say, however, that the project has been underway since 1945 and was undertaken at the request of the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the president of the national research council. At the outset the objective was to improve the recovery of pitchblende from the ore of the crown company, Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, but this has since been expanded to include ores from other sources. The investigation is part of a much larger and highly secret project on atomic energy which is being carried out by certain government departments.

Mr. MacNICOL: I thought it had reference to other ores, because the country owns the whole area at Great Bear lake and, I presume, all the properties roundabout. I can quite realize that the department does not want to reveal where they are, and I will not press the question if they do not wish to. I was wondering where those other areas are in which the investigators are trying to discover radioactive ores.

Mr. MacKINNON: It is nearly all research work done here in Ottawa.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is apart from Eldorado Mines, I take it?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. COCKERAM: Can the minister tell us how many investigations for the last year are covered by that item? The vote is for $134,000. How many separate analyses were made of radioactive ores in the last year?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am afraid I cannot give that information.

Mr. GREEN: Is that work done for the atomic energy control board?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes, and for Chalk River.

168. Forest research and investigations, $649,639.

Mr. SKEY: I was pleased to hear the minister say a few minutes ago that the government planned a forest act next year. Will he outline to the committee what this forest act will embrace or what sort of thing is being contemplated by the government?

Mr. MacKINNON: The details of the contemplated forest act have not yet been worked out, but it is planned to assist the forest industry throughout Canada.

Mr. SKEY: May I ask if the minister plans to call a conference with the forestry branches of the provincial governments before passing this act, in order to find out how the federal government can help them?

Mr. MacKINNON: It has been my good fortune in another department to work closely on matters of mutual interest to the provinces and the dominion. I am quite sure that this problem will be approached on the same basis.

Mr. SKEY: May I just tell the minister what I have been trying to get at in the last two questions? It is simply this. The provinces obviously need help in fire prevention. The federal government holds within its hands the greatest weapon by means of which to protect the provinces against forest fires; I refer to the Royal Canadian Air Force. The minister's department has already been able to work ably and well with the R.C.A.F. in the mapping project. In regard to forest conservation and protection from fires, the minister's department should undertake, with the provinces of Canada, a regular plan of action and scheme to put a force of machines to work, and not just one, as they have at the present time in northern Ontario. They should put a whole force of machines into action, with dry ice and every other form of fire-fighting equipment, so that we can conserve our natural wealth. In that way our armed forces at the same time will be doing the country a great service.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I am happy to hear what the hon. member for Trinity has just said, coming as I do from a province in which we have given great consideration to the losses in our forests and in which we have undertaken to train young men to jump by parachute from planes in order to stop forest fires in their early stages. This has meant that we in Saskatchewan feel that if we can get co-operation from the federal government in this regard, we shall go a long way in reducing the menace of fires and the destruction of our valuable timber.

I should like to ask the minister with regard to this item 168—which is for the substantial amount of $640,000, an increase of $41,000 over last year—if it is the policy of the government to investigate the by-products of our timber. In Saskatchewan we now have research going on to utilize a great deal of our timber which formerly went to waste in the form of slabs and portions of our trees which could not be used for lumber. I should like the minister to give us at some length, if he would be so kind, information in that regard.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. MacKINNON: This involves specialized studies including the following:

Silvicultural investigations concerning the growth of different tree species, natural regeneration, and methods to improve forest stands peculiar to the various forest regions of Canada; to determine the factors affecting the forest growth, reproduction and depletion in all its phases and to evolve from such studies basic data for improved forest management on areas accessible for exploitation.

To determine the forest inventory of Canada with relation to its accessibility for marketing, the volume of merchantable timber available to industry and the relationship between production and depletion, so that industry can be geared to the growth potential of the forest.

To develop scientific methods to expedite the collection of forest inventory data through technique and scientific devices to interpret forestry data from air photographs.

The study of factors of tariffs, taxation, et cetera, on sale of forest products in world markets as they affect both the internal and external economy of Canada.

And finally, to determine and correlate the factors involved in measuring forest fire danger, including temperature, humidity, rainfall, wind velocity and evaporation, as they affect the inflammability of the various forest fuels; the design, testing and development of equipment and methods to increase the efficiency of forest fire detection and suppression.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the minister tell us how much money he has at his disposal for expenditure in the matter of detecting and fighting forest fires? It is one thing to have a beautiful plan laid out for the next twenty-five years; and it is another thing to have something with which to stop a forest fire next week, if it breaks out in Ontario or British Columbia or Albert and destroys more forests than all our highfalutin ideas on reforestation would replace in 100 years. We want to know what we are to have done right away. How much money has the minister available to spend?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): More forest fires are put out by rain than by anything else.

Mr. MacKINNON: Apart from the protection of our forests in our national parks, in the Yukon, Northwest Territories and experimental stations, forest fire protection is a matter purely for the provinces.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will grant that, according to the British North America Act, it is a responsibility of the provinces, but it should be borne in the mind of every member of the government of Canada that every stick of timber that is destroyed in any province is a loss to Canada. We can just figure out the responsibility of the government in the light of that fact. I suppose it is too late for the minister to bring any influence to bear upon the government this year, but I would suggest that for next year he request that a liberal allowance be granted with which to co-operate in putting out fires which may occur at any time in any province of Canada.

169. Forest products research, $435,862.

Mr. HERRIDGE: This item deals with forest products research, which is a matter of deep interest to many people living in British Columbia, where the forest industry is of such importance. It is of particular interest also to many people I have the honour to represent. I should like the minister to give us some information in detail as to the type of research being carried on in connection with forest products, the staff engaged in that program in British Columbia at the present time, and the projects on which they are working. Again, I should like to know how this information is given to the operators of forest industries and others concerned. I speak with some knowledge of the forest industry in my own constituency, since I have been engaged in it to a certain extent for nearly forty years. From my experience I can say we have a tremendous waste in forest products even today. For instance, if it were not for the expensive equipment required we could make from sawdust excellent briquettes which burn satisfactorily, but at the present time all these processes are far too expensive to be used by small mills. I could go on almost endlessly mentioning the things in which we are interested as far as forest products research is concerned, but I should like the minister to give us some idea of the projects being undertaken at this time, and particularly the work being done in British Columbia.

Mr. MacKINNON: This vote provides for the operation of the forest products laboratories, which are in three units: first, the Ottawa laboratory, concerned with research and studies primarily affecting the sawmilling and wood-using industries in eastern Canada; second, the Vancouver laboratory, which is conducting studies and tests affecting this industry in the western coastal region; and third, the Montreal laboratory at McGill University, operated by the pulp and paper research institute of Canada under a joint agreement between the dominion government, the Canadian pulp and paper association and McGill University, which serves the pulp and paper industry only.

I might mention some of the work carried on at the Ottawa laboratory. There is the division of timber mechanics; the division of wood chemistry; the division of wood utilization and lumber seasoning; the division of wood preservation and timber pathology; and publications.

Mr. PEARKES: Is this a grant to the forestry branch of the University of British Columbia?

Mr. MacKINNON: The University of British Columbia provides the space on the campus and we provide the buildings and personnel to carry on the work.

Mr. PEARKES: You make no financial grant, in the same way as you make a grant to McGill University?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is scarcely a good comparison, because the work at McGill is being carried on by the pulp and paper industry, McGill university and the dominion government. There is no direct grant for this purpose to the University of British Columbia at the present time.

Mr. PEARKES: The timber industries in British Columbia make a grant to the University of British Columbia. I hope that the government will consider doing the same thing next year.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to offer a suggestion to the minister, because of the deep interest in this subject on the part of a number of the people I represent. I understand that the forestry branch of the government of Sweden, which carries on similar investigations, is in the habit of keeping in close touch with the development of logging and sawmill machinery, and other machinery allied to the lumber industry, and that in northern Europe there have been developed in recent years some efficient small sawmill units and things of that type which are not in use in Canada at the present time. I am just offering the minister the suggestion that our forest products research branch, or some branch working closely with it, should give some attention to that subject, so that these newer ideas may be brought more quickly to the attention of our lumber operators and people interested in the forest industry.

171. To provide for the salaries and expenses of dominion members of the board and their alternates and sundry expenses in connection with the maintenance and operation of the Ottawa office of the board, $30,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister please explain this item, especially in view of the next item, which is for the sum of $175,000? The details given for this item simply show amounts for temporary assistance and travelling expenses, and do not show anything for the salaries of the members of the board. How many members are on this board, and what salaries are paid?

Mr. MacKINNON: The board consists of three members, two appointed by the dominion government and one by the province of Alberta. I believe the chairman, General Kennedy, receives a salary of $12,000 a year. The other appointee of the dominion government is Mr. Wardle, of the Department of Mines and Resources. He is a civil servant, who receives no special salary for this work. At the moment I do not remember the representative of the province of Alberta or his salary.

Mr. COCKERAM: Where does General Kennedy's salary appear? I see only $12,000 for temporary assistance.

Mr. MacKINNON: This vote provides for the salary of the chairman of the board, for the travelling expenses of the chairman and the other dominion member, and for the maintenance and operation of the Ottawa office.

Mr. COCKERAM: But it just shows temporary assistance; that is what I am getting at. What do you pay the permanent members of the board, and where is that shown in these estimates?

Mr. MacKINNON: The chairman of the board is not a civil servant.

Mr. COCKERAM: Then where would he get his salary?

Mr. MacKINNON: Out of this sum we are voting.

Mr. COCKERAM: There is $12,000 for temporary assistance. Does that represent the salary of the chairman of the board? That is what I should like to know.

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Eastern Rockies forest conservation board—

172. Dominion contribution towards annual maintenance, including staff and expenses, $175,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: This has to do with the reforestation of the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains, which I have been pressing for some years and which I am glad to see now is under way. Last year, if I remember rightly, we voted a total of some $6,000,000 to be expended over a number of years. Last fall, on a call to the bureau of reclamation offices in Denver to inquire into what they are doing on the eastern slopes of their mountains, where they are reforesting, I learned something which may indicate one of the causes of the excessive floods in British Columbia. I learned that forest fires in the United States had a serious effect on the watersheds of the big rivers there, because the accumulation of soot from the burning fires prevented the growth of the glaciers, which is most important. These fires strip off the forests, and the result is that the run-off is much more rapid than it otherwise would be. I have been wondering whether that is not one of the causes of the rapid run-off in the British Columbia watersheds.

I notice that this vote is just for the eastern slope of the Rockies. The destruction in the Fraser river watershed is about 30,000 acres a year. In ten years this means that 300,000 acres of forest have been destroyed. This means that the winter accumulation will run off much more rapidly than it otherwise would. This was one of the major causes of the terrible floods in the Fraser valley. There should be a vote, at least by next year, for the reforestation of the slopes of the Rocky mountains in the Fraser river watershed.

I am all for this vote, having promoted this matter for years. I simply ask if it would not be well to make an investigation of the Fraser river watershed to see if the floods which they have had this year and which are higher than in any recorded year in the past, are not partly the result of the denuding of the mountain slopes.

Mr. MacKINNON: The problem of the western slope of the Rockies is a problem for British Columbia; the problem of the eastern slope becomes a problem of the dominion government inasmuch as the water supply of three provinces, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, is affected.

Mr. MacNICOL: I outlined all that when the bill was going through, but I am going to ask the minister to consider the reforestation of the slopes in the Fraser river watershed that have been burned off. It is a dominion matter, because we have agreed to pay half the expenses of the results of the floods.

Mr. MacKINNON: We are now and have been working on an investigation of the Columbia river watershed in conjunction with the United States, but I shall give consideration to what the hon. member has said.

Mr. GREEN: Why is that work being done on the Columbia river watershed?

Mr. MacKINNON: It is an international matter.

Mr. GREEN: Is it the intention to undertake forest conservation measures in any other part of Canada than the eastern slope of the Rockies?

Mr. MacKINNON: We can initiate such undertakings only in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and the national parks; the initiation of a project of that kind elsewhere would have to be by the province.

Mr. GREEN: Would the dominion be willing to enter into a scheme, say with the province of British Columbia, of forest conservation?

Mr. MacKINNON: I can always discuss it with my colleagues.

Mr. GREEN: Is the dominion in a position to enter into negotiations with the province for forest conservation?

Mr. MacKINNON: If British Columbia, which owns its own natural resources, including the timber resources, came to the dominion government with a proposal for joint control of some kind, consideration would be given. I do not think anything further can be said.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Although it has not been mentioned, it is an obvious matter that a large percentage of the forest fires, which do great damage in Alberta, originate in British Columbia. That is no reflection upon British Columbia; it is just the fact. How can we take care of forest fires in Alberta unless there is some provision for co-operating with British Columbia in taking care of forest fires when they are just beginning?

It seems to me to be somewhat inconsistent to say that the problem belongs to British Columbia when the eastern slope of the Rockies is a dominion concern because it affects three provinces. Fires in British Columbia affect two provinces, and perhaps three. A forest fire starts in British Columbia, gets out of control and crosses the Alberta border where we are completely unable to handle it. It seems to me that the minister should take a more far-reaching and long-range attitude toward this whole matter of forest conservation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Having seen a forest fire, I should like to ask a question. Is it not a fact that there is no way of stopping a forest fire that has got going, except by rain or a change in the wind? You can go up behind a fire with your buckets and gas engines, but all you can do is to try to see that it will not start again.

The second thing I want to ask is this. If the dominion and the provinces are going into fire prevention, would there not be a complete duplication of effort? If you are referring to contributions, that is an entirely different matter; but would it not be extravagant to have side by side a dominion fire protection service and a provincial fire prevention service?

Mr. MacKINNON: What has been said by the hon. member for Calgary West is a statement of fact rather than a question. I do not think there is any doubt but that once a large fire gets rolling, it is practically impossible to stop it, except by rain or by having it burn itself out.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am glad the hon. member for Calgary West mentioned this matter, because it gives me a chance to clarify my position. I am not stupid enough to suppose that the dominion government should set up an independent fire prevention service, but the dominion government could co-operate with the provinces in much the same way that it has co-operated with British Columbia in connection with the floods. Canada did not have a flood prevention service in British Columbia; all we did was to assure British Columbia that we would be behind them in everything they intended to do.

Did the dominion government take any part in fighting the forest fires which have raged recently in Ontario?

Mr. SKEY: They are still going.

Mr. MacKINNON: The dominion government did not participate except in our own reserves.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Did Ontario seek the assistance of the dominion government?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told not.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If they had done so, would the dominion government have been prepared to help them?

Mr. FRASER: The dominion government lent planes to Ontario to help with the dry ice proposition.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I just want to get some information. Along with others, I have been here for thirteen years and have been greatly dissatisfied over the fact that apparently nothing is being done to take care of our forests. We have only one set of forests; when they are devastated, we shall have no forests, and the next generation will not be in anything like as fortunate a position with respect to forests as we are. That is a position which ought not to exist. In Germany and many European countries they take the greatest care to see that every time a tree is cut down, another is planted in the ground in its place. If we would use anything like husbandry in respect of our forests we would have a magnificent assest for a thousand years for coming generations. What I should like to see is something done right away, not twenty-five years from now after the forests have been largely destroyed. I should like to see a start made tomorrow. Has the minister any intention or idea of starting such activities?

Mr. FERGUSON: The province of Ontario is already doing for itself all the things the hon. member has mentioned and is spending its own money in doing it. Why duplicate the work? You would have the dominion and the provincial fire-fighters falling over themselves, each trying to do the same job. Why spend the taxpayers' money twice?

Mr. BLACKMORE: That remark is utter nonsense. To say that Ontario has done all it possibly could is sheer tommy-rot.

Mr. FERGUSON: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If Ontario does not need help I may tell the chairman and the committee that Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan do. They have not as much money to spend, but have relatively as many forests to take care of as Ontario.

Mr. MacKINNON: Earlier this evening I stated that the dominion is in touch with the other provinces, Ontario for one, for the purpose of making a study of the most scientific methods of fire protection.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has any progress been made? What has actually been done besides getting in touch?

Mr. PEARKES: What steps does the federal government take to protect its own forest lands against fire? There are thousands of acres of dominion-owned forest lands in British Columbia, on Indian reserves and elsewhere. What steps does the federal government take to protect dominion forests?

Mr. MacKINNON: The dominion government is using the best methods known to safeguard the forests in the parks and on other dominion-owned lands. There is an extensive system comprising fire rangers, look-out towers and water stations all through our national parks.

173. Geological survey administration and miscellaneous services, $114,000.

Mr. FULTON: On this and many other items under this department, it is necessary for members to have before them the latest report of the department. I find that the latest report of the Department of Mines and Resources is for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946, which is over two years ago. It is extremely difficult for members to know what is being done and to examine the estimates as they should be examined without up-to-date reports before them. Can the minister tell us when the report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1947, will be available?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am advised that the report for 1947 is almost ready and will be distributed very shortly.

Mr. FULTON: Will it be distributed before the end of the session?

Mr. MacKINNON: It is still in the hands of the king's printer. It may possibly be distributed before the end of the session.

Mr. FULTON: In the list of reports and returns to be made to the House of Commons by public officers and private corporations in accordance with standing order 84, the departmental report of Mines and Resources, including the reports of directors of branches under the minister, is to be made during the session. That appears on page 8 of the list of reports to be presented to the House of Commons. If the report is in our hands before the end of the session it will technically comply with that requirement, but it is a matter for strong comment that we have not the report in our hands now when the estimates of this department are being considered. The report should be hurried up and made available without delay.

Mr. COCKERAM: I notice an increase of fourteen in the staff, but only three more geologists. Are more geological parties going out this year than last? The amount for temporary assistance is down. I am inclined to think there has been a cut in this service rather than an increase.

Mr. MacKINNON: There are twelve geological parties in British Columbia, nine in Alberta, four in Saskatchewan, ten in Manitoba, three in Ontario, five in Quebec, two in New Brunswick, two in Nova Scotia and one in Prince Edward Island. The service is larger this year than last.

Mr. COCKERAM: How does it compare in expenditure? Have you more geological parties out this year than last?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is an increase of $200,000 for this purpose this year.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Last year the department carried on an aerial survey of northwest British Columbia, which covered the Groundhog coal fields. I do not think that aerial photography has been completed. When is it planned to send out a ground crew in that area?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that a ground crew is there now.

Mr. McLURE: On several occasions I have complained about mapping. The present minister, who was then in another department, corrected what I complained of at that time. The only complaint I have to make now is that I noticed the other day a T.C.A. map which left out Prince Edward Island, probably because the T.C.A. does not operate in that province. Just the same, when it was making a map, it could have included Prince Edward Island.

177. Canadian hydrographic service, $2,361,911.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is utterly impossible at this stage of the session to inquire exhaustively into such large expenditures. I notice that, of this $2,361,911, approximately $1,600,000 is for materials and equipment. Obviously we cannot get the list of that at the present time. Then I note that about $400,000 is for temporary assistance and wages. Why is there such a large amount earmarked for temporary assistance?

Mr. MacKINNON: This item looks large, but hon. members must remember that provision is made for the purchase and fitting of two hydrographic ships.

Mr. PEARKES: For a considerable period of time there has been dissatisfaction among the crews of two hydrographic ships on the west coast, the William J. Stewart and the Parry. It came to a climax last month when they were asked to sign at last year's wages, which were $27 to $40 less than the wages that were paid on government ships of the same kind for the same ratings on the east coast. Some adjustment was made. Have the wages been brought up now, so that they are comparable with wages paid on the east coast? Have the crews signed on to the satisfaction of all concerned?

Mr. MacKINNON: The wages were adjusted through the joint efforts of this department and the Department of Labour. I am informed that the men have all signed on and that the rates are satisfactory.

Mr. PEARKES: A good deal of difficulty was experienced last summer in maintaining these ships. There was a tremendous turnover of personnel. That was largely on account of living conditions on the William J. Stewart. Is any provision made in this item for the improvement of living conditions, general lay-out, messing quarters, galleys and so forth on that vessel?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that improvements were made in living conditions on the William J. Stewart. I have not the details, but improvements were made.

Mr. PEARKES: Structural improvements?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am sorry, I have not the details.

Mr. PEARKES: I wish the minister would look into that, because I think there is still room for a great deal of improvement in the actual structural lay-out of the vessel.

Mr. MacKINNON: I shall do that.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to revert to item 176 for a moment, which was passed over. It includes the expenses of the geographic board of Canada. I understand that the provinces as well have their geographic boards which deal with the naming of mountains and lakes in the provinces. I presume that the national geographic board is particularly concerned with the naming of mountains and lakes in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, and so on. What were the expenses of the geographic board of Canada? Who are the members of the board? What do their duties consist of? What policy is followed in naming mountains, lakes and natural features under their jurisdiction?

Mr. MacKINNON: It is impossible for me at the present time to give all the information asked for by the hon. member for Kootenay East as to the membership of the geographic board. I believe the board consists of some fifteen members. The provinces are represented on this board. I shall be glad to take note of the hon. member's question and send him the information personally.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I notice there is an increase of over $1,500,000 with respect to the hydrographic service. I am not begrudging the increase. I was wondering why the increase. Have we undertaken more extensive services than in the past?

Mr. MacKINNON: I have just explained that the large increase in the vote is caused by the purchase of two ships at a cost of $1,500,000.

Mr. GREEN: There is some suggestion that permission should be obtained from the United States for British Columbia to use the highway connecting the two cities of Grand Forks and Rossland, but on the other side of the boundary. Can the minister say just what progress has been made with these negotiations, or what the position is with regard to that question?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that that does not come under this department. That possibly comes under external affairs.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Does the international peace garden come under the jurisdiction of this department?

Mr. MacKINNON: To what peace garden does my hon. friend refer, the one south of Brandon?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Yes.

Mr. MacKINNON: It does not come under the parks branch of this department. Representations have been made to the department and to me by the hon. member for Brandon and others, urging that this international peace garden be brought under the parks' jurisdiction. No decision has yet been arrived at. I have been in correspondence with people interested in the park, looking to the possible giving of more assistance in some way to that project.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. PEARKES: Are there any re-surveys, or are any changes planned in the northern boundary between Canada and Alaska west of Prince Rupert?

Mr. MacKINNON: There have been discussions between the Canadian authorities and the United States as to the definite location of the boundary, but there is nothing really to report on it at the present time.

Mr. PEARKES: When did the last discussions take place?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that these discussions have taken place on and off for several years until quite recently, at the technical level.

Mr. PEARKES: No decision will be reached in that respect, I hope, without reference to the province of British Columbia, because of the vital importance of this to certain industries there.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am sure that the province of British Columbia will be kept informed of what is being done, as it is at the present time.

Mr. GREEN: Is the province of British Columbia consulted, or is it merely informed of what is done by the dominion? The provincial government is very much concerned in the issue.

Mr. MacKINNON: I cannot conceive of this being done without the full knowledge, consent and co-operation of British Columbia.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was going to ask the minister a question of which I am sure he would not have knowledge. Perhaps his officials can tell him if there is a report of the international joint commission in connection with the diversion of the water from Chamberlain lake in Maine, which is one of the main sources of the Allagash river which flows into the St. John river and is therefore in the international watershed, in which water is diverted out of Chamberlain lake within the St. John river watershed into the Penobscot watershed in Maine. If there is a report I should like to obtain one.

Mr. MacKINNON: The international joint commission does not come under this department.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—Surveys and mapping bureau—

181. Legal surveys, including grant of $350 to assist in printing the publication of the Canadian institute of surveying, $468,088.

Mr. COCKERAM: This is one of the new branches of the Department of Mines and Resources. Can the minister give the number of employees a year ago and the number today?

Mr. MacKINNON: I have not that information before me, but I shall be glad to get it and send it to the hon. member.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like to get it.

Item agreed to.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Surveys and mapping bureau—

183. Map compilation and reproduction, $309,405.

Mr. SKEY: Can the minister give some details of the work being done in map compilation?

Mr. MacKINNON: The purpose of the vote is to maintain the map compilation and reproduction division. The work of the division is to prepare, compile and draw maps from existing information, which includes a topographic series of maps, electoral maps, road route maps, maps for use of various government departments, natural resources, railway maps, maps of Canada and all types of compiled maps.

Mr. SKEY: Thank you. That is for the armed forces as well?

Mr. MacKINNON: That work is done by the armed forces in co-operation with our people.

Mr. SKEY: In this department, do you put together the aerial maps taken by the photographic unit of the R.C.A.F.?

Mr. MacKINNON: Maps are made from aerial photographs taken by the air force and by private companies engaged by the department of Mines and Resources.

Mr. SKEY: Therefore this is not the entire expenditure?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Item agreed to.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Dominion water and power bureau—

184. Dominion water and power bureau, including the administration of the dominion water and power and irrigation acts, and including grant of $350 to the international executive council, world power conference, $384,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: What particular function does the department perform in relation to water power and irrigation?

Mr. MacKINNON: This vote is used for the work of the dominion water and power bureau in making hydrometric measurements and securing essential data on the flow of international waters, and the administration of the Dominion Water Power and Irrigation Acts.

Mr. MacNICOL: All you do is to make a compilation of the flow of rivers.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is one of the purposes.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have nothing to do with irrigation?

Mr. MacKINNON: Nothing.

Item agreed to.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Dominion water and power bureau—

185. To provide for studies and surveys of the Columbia river watershed in Canada, $280,000.

Mr. HERRIDGE: This amount is the same as that voted last year for surveys in the Columbia river basin, a project in which the people of my constituency, and indeed the people of British Columbia as a whole, are interested. Can the minister give some information as to the program being carried out this year in connection with these surveys? What work is to be done?

Mr. MacKINNON: The carrying out of studies and surveys in Canada has been entrusted to the dominion water and power bureau of the mines, forests and scientific services branch of the Department of Mines, by the Canadian section of the international joint commission. This bureau has its own staff, and by securing the co-operation of other services of the department and of the Department of Public Works, it arranges for necessary field surveys and investigations, and office studies which are now in progress.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I saw a newspaper report to the effect that a contract had been let to a private company for drilling for dam sites on certain rivers. Can the minister give more detailed information? Are dam sites to be drilled for and, if so, on what rivers? What districts will be surveyed?

Mr. MacKINNON: We are drilling for dam sites on various rivers. I have no further details.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister not give better information on the work that is being done? This is a substantial sum of money being spent, and the whole plan is of the utmost importance to the interior of British Columbia. The hon. member for Yale mentioned the question yesterday in connection with the level of Okanagan lake. Is the department not in a position to give a more complete report on the plans?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is little I can add to what I have said, except that the work is proceeding in various sections of the Columbia river valley.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is it not proceeding in conjunction with the bureau of reclamation in the United States? I saw plans of it in Denver. The United States has as much to do with this work as we have, if not more. It is going to raise the height of the Grand Coulee fifty feet, which will back the water up into Canada a long distance beyond the boundary. They have their plans all ready, and they told me in Denver that we were working with them. I am in favour of it.

Mr. MacKINNON: We are. The work is being done under the control of the international joint commission.

Mr. MacNICOL: And the bureau of reclamation in the United States?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: What minister is responsible to parliament in connection with the international joint commission?

Mr. MacKINNON: The Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Item agreed to.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Dominion water and power bureau—

186. Lake of the Woods control board, $10,375.

Mr. SINNOTT: At the present time the dam at Lake of the Woods is causing considerable trouble in the vicinity of Lac du Bonnet. I believe that the agreement which they have with the United States for the control of these waters is to hold back the waters for a considerable time, and the dams are then opened wide, with the consequence that volumes of water rush out at once, reaching Lac du Bonnet some weeks later. The farmers in the district there living along the banks have their grain seeded and, when the waters are let out with such great force, the river sometimes rises five or six feet, backing up and flooding out the farmers in the district. I would ask the minister to look into the matter and see whether this can be remedied so that better control of the waters will be established.

Mines, forests and scientific services branch—
Dominioin observatories—

192. Dominion astrophysical observatory, Victoria, B.C., $50,679.

Mr. PEARKES: I notice on page 169 of the estimates that the permanent staff of the astrophysical observatory outside Victoria is being reduced by one. Possibly he has been replaced by a temporary officer, but I notice that the salaries of at least three of the scientists employed in that observatory have apparently been reduced, because the amount provided is less than that provided last year for these particular individuals. May I ask whether it is a fact that the salaries have been reduced? I ask that question, because these men are highly skilled scientists who are rendering a valuable and useful service, not only to the community in which their laboratory is located but to the whole of Canada. I am under the impression that the salaries are far too low. I hope that there has not been a reduction in any individual's salary. Perhaps the minister would make some comment.

Mr. MacKINNON: I may say that the only notable increases in the vote are in salaries and acquisition of new equipment.

Mr. PEARKES: If the minister would be so kind as to look at page 169, he will see that apparently the salary of the assistant dominion astrophysicist has been reduced from $5,100 to $4,920; that the next item has been reduced from $4,425 to $4,290; and similarly for the third item there has been a reduction from $3,825 to $3,690.

Mr. MacKINNON: The only explanation I can give to that is that newer people come into the office at a lower step in the salary range.

Item agreed to.

Lands and development services branch—
193. Branch administration, $44,500.

Mr. FULTON: I notice that in this branch there are, as far as I have been able to find, at least two publicity editors, editorial assistants and so on. What is the responsibility of those officers? On page 170, in the details of services, and again at page 172, will be found set forth the items relating to publicity editors and their salaries.

Mr. MacKINNON: Will the hon. member please repeat his question? I could not follow it.

Mr. FULTON: My first question was that in this branch there are a number of appropriations for publicity and for salaries of publicity editors. If the minister will look at pages 170 and 172 in the details of services, he will see where that detail is given. What is the responsibility of those officers?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that these people get out the publications relating to publicity for the parks.

Mr. FULTON: Do they have anything to do with the preparation of the magazine Domar? That is what I really wanted to ask.

Mr. MacKINNON: None, I am informed.

Mr. FULTON: Can the minister say what officer of the department is responsible for it?

Mr. MacKINNON: Although I have not yet had time to see it, I am told that Domar is produced by the editorial and information division at the offices in Ottawa.

Mr. FULTON: What is the cost of that per month? I believe that is a monthly publication.

Mr. MacKINNON: The cost per month is $403, including all charges.

Mr. FULTON: Including what?

Mr. MacKINNON: Including mailing and all charges.

Mr. FULTON: Is there any subscription for the magazine?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed not.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the editing in this department for? There is an item of publicity editor, $3,120. It is not much, but what does he do?

Mr. MacKINNON: What vote is that under?

Mr. MacNICOL: Vote 194. It is on page 170 of the estimates.

Mr. MacKINNON: The answer to that is just the same as the one I gave to the hon. member for Kamloops.

Lands and development services branch—

194. Lands division—administration of dominion, ordnance and admiralty and public lands; seed grain collections, $197,885.

Mr. McCUAIG: I see that seed grain collections come under this item.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and the committee the matter of the old outstanding 1914-1923 seed grain relief. The answer to a question on the order paper shows that $10,132,640 was given out by the federal government between 1914 and 1923 for seed relief; that $8,417,887 was paid back; that $1,432,900 in interest was paid back, leaving an unpaid balance of principal and interest of $1,431,003 and $1,652,009 respectively. That was as of March 31, 1948. It further shows that no notices of this account were sent out by the government since 1930; that is eighteen years ago. It shows further that the bookkeeping in connection with this account cost $22,000 to keep it open.

Most of this relief was given out in 1914. I would say that not over fifteen per cent of the people who received this relief are now residing on the land. A great part of this land is today held under grazing lease, or has gone back in what is called "gone-back preemption." I should like to point out to the committee that between 1923 and 1938 all the relief given out was cancelled by the governments concerned. The Saskatchewan government on its own responsibility cancelled 50 per cent of the 1938 seed relief.

In view of these facts, I should like to say to the minister, first, that in my opinion this account is a dead horse, having regard to any equity that is left in the land against which the relief is charged; second, that it was considered to be almost a national emergency in the years that this relief was given out; third, that eighty-five per cent of the people who received that relief are either dead or have left the land; fourth, that this seed and relief has been cancelled in every province, and I do not see why the federal government hangs on to this old item, at some cost in keeping the accounts. A question placed on the order paper asked the cost to the federal treasury of keeping this account open since 1945, and the answer was $22,000. I believe it would be a good thing to wipe off this amount, and I would ask the minister to give that suggestion his serious consideration. Perhaps he would care to make some comment on it.

Mr. SINNOTT: If the province of Saskatchewan will pay it off, we will wipe out the bookkeeping item.

Mr. MacKINNON: This matter has been submitted in the past to committees of which I have been a member, and I shall be glad to give it further consideration.

Item agreed to.

Lands and development services branch—Northwest Territories and Yukon services—Mackenzie division—

196. Forest conservation, including Wood Buffalo park, $321,810.

Mr. SINNOTT: I should like to ask the minister a question, and to say I am happy to see him in his present position. He has a kindly face, and I know he has a kindly regard for the progress which may be made in Canada. In my riding there is a vast territory to be explored, with rich possibilities both in mining and as a farming community. The district I speak of is northeast of Lac du Bonnet. The Wadhope Mines are situated there, as well as the Bissett mines. A large mine has been opened at Cat lake, which has extensive lithium deposits; and in addition we have in that territory copper and zinc which has never been touched. So tonight I would ask the minister to consider putting in next year's estimates an amount of not less than $100,000 for this project, which is deserving and will pay for itself a hundredfold if we have an opportunity to develop it.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the hon. member where the lithium deposit is located?

Mr. SINNOTT: At Cat lake, which is about thirty miles northeast of Lac du Bonnet.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is the mineral called spodumene?

Mr. SINNOTT: Yes.

Mr. SKEY: Does the hon. member need the money for a road, or what?

Item agreed to.

Lands and development services branch—Northwest Territories and Yukon services—Mackenzie division—

Roads, buildings and water systems—construction and improvements—

197. Roads (revote $441,000), $585,700.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What roads are these and why is there a decrease of over half a million dollars as compared with last year?

Mr. MacKINNON: The principal item here is for the completion of the Grimshaw-Slave Lake road, or that portion of it within the Northwest Territories. The amount provided for that is $471,700. Other items are the construction of streets and roads in Yellowknife township, $69,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does this include the road on the north side of the lake from Slave Point?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes, it includes the last portion.

Item agreed to.

Lands and development services branch—Northwest Territories and Yukon services—

204. Coal development, $150,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is this the vote for the coal which has been developed at Whitehorse and Dawson?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Lands and development services branch—National parks services—

206. National parks and historic sites services, $7,372,878.

Mr. McLURE: Does the minister know whether a monument or any other marking is to be erected to the late Lucy Maude Montgomery? I understand that this has been brought to the attention of the historic sites committee, and I should like to know whether any action is to be taken in this respect.

Mr. MacKINNON: I believe the historic sites committee has under consideration the placing of what is called a marker at the home of the late Lucy Maude Montgomery.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): There is an increase here of nearly $5,000,000. Would the minister have something to say about that?

Mr. COCKERAM: What land was purchased, and what was the price?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told that this increase is largely explained by the initial development of a new national park in New Brunswick, together with road improvement projects throughout the other parks, and necessary construction work such as sewer and water supply projects, combined with certain essential construction work and the improvement of the parks in general. In addition, maintenance costs have risen sharply since preparation of the estimates for 1947-48.

Mr. FULTON: I wonder if the increase in this item might possibly have anything to do with the new departmental publication called Domar which, according to one of its first issues, was devoted to the policy of sponsoring "better and bumper" picnics. Does the minister know anything about that?

Mr. MacKINNON: I mentioned that as yet I have not had an opportunity to see the magazine.

Mr. HAZEN: How much is it proposed to spend this year on the park in New Brunswick; what will be the nature of the work, and how many men will be employed?

Mr. MacKINNON: It is estimated that about $500,000 will be spent this year in the construction of roads, playgrounds and buildings.

Mr. COCKERAM: I asked the minister what land was purchased and at what price, and what buildings were purchased, and at what prices, for this $4,894,000.

Mr. MacKINNON: The province of New Brunswick acquired the land.

Mr. COCKERAM: For how much?

Mr. MacKINNON: I have no idea.

Mr. COCKERAM: There must be some figure, because we have the amount of $4,894,000 this year.

Mr. MacKINNON: That has nothing to do with the cost of the land itself, which was acquired by the province of New Brunswick and transferred to the dominion, free of charge.

Mr. COCKERAM: But the explanation given is, "Acquisition of land and/or construction of buildings, works and structures, $4,894,210." What does the government get for that amount of money?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told that this is merely the title of the vote, and that it covers all parks.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is nearly $5,000,000. I think we are entitled to a little more information as to what land has been purchased. Surely we can have some explanation. That is a good deal of money, and we should know what it is for before we pass the item.

Mr. MacKINNON: I think the only way I can give a fairly complete answer is to state the expenditures in the various parks. It will probably serve the purpose of the hon. member if I give three or four of the large items. The estimated expenditures for this year were as follows:

Jasper	$2,308,520
Banff	756,650
Kootenay	687,500
Riding Mountain	487,500

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It refers to acquisition of lands.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told that that is just the heading in the estimates.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Last year I was in Dawson and I had an opportunity to look over some of the old landmarks in that town. There is just one of the old dance halls left, this particular one having been built in 1898 or 1899. I found it of great interest to go through that.

Mr. MacKINNON: Did you see the photographs?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I should like to see that dance hall restored. If it were in Skagway they would have Dan McGrew lying out in the middle of the hall and would be making a fortune out of it. We put up all kinds of monuments to a life of virtue, but we have nothing yet to a life of sin. If that old dance hall were saved, when the highways opened up, United States tourists would be flocking in and hundreds of thousands of United States dollars would be kept in this country. It would be of great interest to those people. This is part of our history and every child has read about it.

Mr. MacKINNON: I was not asking the hon. member if he had seen any postcards; I was asking him if he had seen the painting of the Floradora sextette that is in that hall?

Mr. CHARLTON: Has a grant been made to the Bell homestead at Brantford, the Mohawk church, or the birthplace of Pauline Johnson?

Mr. MacKINNON: I shall have to get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. KNIGHT: There is to be a great increase in the expenditures on national parks. I am particularly interested in Prince Albert national park, because so many of the people from my constituency go there for their summer holidays. I understand that Jasper and Prince Albert parks are to share in a road building program. I should like to know the nature of the top surfacing and for what length of road the improvements will be made?

Mr. MacKINNON: The main road in Prince Albert park is being prepared for hard surfacing.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is that the road in the park or the road leading to the park?

Mr. MacKINNON: In all cases the road work is being done within the parks.

Mr. KNIGHT: Will the asphalt construction be carried out this year?

Mr. MacKINNON: Not this year.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is the minister planning to build housing of any type in that park?

Mr. MacKINNON: No housing program is contemplated.

Mr. KNIGHT: I hope that the minister will see that the people in the low-income brackets are taken care of. I am thinking particularly of the shack tenters and ordinary tenters who, in the past, did not receive sympathetic treatment from the former superintendent. While I had to condemn the attitude of the superintendent who was there last year toward these people, I want to commend the attitude of the present superintendent. I understand that he is a great improvement over the last man. Is lumber still being cut by a private company at a nominal fee inside Riding Mountain park?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that the shack-town space in Prince Albert park is being increased this year. The policy of providing attractions for people in the lower income groups is being emphasized throughout all our parks. I am informed that an old timber licence was in operation at the time the Riding Mountain park was established and some timber is still being taken out.

Mr. KNIGHT: How long is that contract likely to go on? I understand that that company has the privilege of cutting timber in perpetuity, that it is permitted to go in and cut anything that is saleable. I do not want to be sarcastic, but I hope that the government has no reforestation program for that particular park, because they would be simply reforesting so that a private company might continue to cut. There has been a tremendous exploitation of the timber on our common land and surely, when some of those lands are enclosed as a national park, there should be some way to stop this iniquitous—I used that word advisedly—contract.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that we are reducing the size of the timber limits as cutting operations take place.

Mr. FULTON: In the total departmental estimates there is an increase of $12,000,000 over last year, and item 206 accounts for $5,000,000, or pretty nearly half of the total increase. I do not think we have yet had a sufficient breakdown of what all that extra money is to be spent on, to satisfy us that the increase has been thoroughly accounted for. The deputy minister in a statement in the departmental magazine, in the issue of April, 1948, spoke with pleasure of the increased amount of the estimates of the department and said:

> As almost all other departmental budgets have been reduced, the increase approved for Mines and Resources is clear evidence of the government's determination to push ahead with the development of Canadian resources.
> Fortunately, when the estimates are passed, we will be able to obtain additional assistance in all branches, and with clear evidence of governmental approval we can now look forward to the year 1948-49 with the hope of seeing many real accomplishments in the fields for which we are responsible. When parliament approves the estimates, it will then be up to us.

If that was all planned and prepared before the estimates were submitted to the house, the minister and his deputy should be in a position to supply the committee with detailed information for the reasons behind this increase. We are not disposed unnecessarily to criticize the increase; but we should like to know how much is to be used for buildings, how much for road construction, and what other work is to be done with this additional $5,000,000.

Mr. MacKINNON: Perhaps the hon. member for Kamloops would be satisfied if we gave him a breakdown for one of the parks, say Banff or Jasper. I cannot do so right now.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. CASSELMAN: Put the breakdown on the record tomorrow.

Mr. MacKINNON: I shall be glad to do that tomorrow, for Banff park.

Mr. COCKERAM: For the whole thing.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am sure hon. members do not realize how much detail they are asking for. It would fill pages of Hansard to put the whole breakdown on the record. I am suggesting a sample breakdown.

Mr. FULTON: Could the minister not tell us how much in each of the parks will be spent for roads, how much for buildings, how much for salaries, how much for new construction or work not previously done in the parks? The figures could be grouped under main headings, so that we would have some idea of what new work is being undertaken.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): All the detail that is given of the $2,300,000 for Jasper is that it is for land and the construction of buildings. Surely we can be given more details than that.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Tomorrow we shall consider amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946; Bill No. 394, to amend the Department of National Defence Act; Bill No. 338, an act respecting income tax. Then we shall go into supply and consider the estimates of the Departments of Mines and Resources, Public Works, Labour, Fisheries and National Revenue. I do not know that Public Works will be the second department to be taken up. Labour may come ahead of that.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Will the minister have the income tax bill reprinted before it is presented?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There has been no order from the banking and commerce committee to have the bill reprinted. We have the bill as it was sent to the committee, and the amendments will be moved as each section is called.

Mr. MacINNIS: I understood the Minister of Finance to say the other evening that the bill was being reprinted.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I got information during the evening. I am told that the committee which sat on this bill did not put in a request to have the bill reprinted, and it has not been reprinted.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What do we do after we get through with all that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If we pass all those items of business tomorrow there will not be very much left.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 23, 1948

The house met at eleven o'clock.

KINCARDINE CENTENNIAL

INVITATION TO MEMBERS TO ATTEND CELEBRATION

Mr. A. E. ROBINSON (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, to you and to all hon. members of the House of Commons I wish to say that on your desks has been placed an invitation from the mayor of Kincardine to attend our centennial celebration. This occasion is part of a two weeks' homecoming to Bruce county, which I have the honour to represent. I can assure hon. members that any who are able to attend will be made welcome and have a very enjoyable time.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the invitation refers to "Scotchmen's day." They are not Scotchmen but Scotsmen.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

TRANSFER OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to table order in council P.C. 2526, of June 8, 1948, passed under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, transferring the control and supervision of the government telegraph and telephone service (except the telephone exchange service for government offices at Ottawa) to the Minister of Transport; also transferring the powers, duties and functions of the Minister of Public Works under the Telegraphs Act to the Minister of Transport.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): With reference to the announcement that telephone services are to be transferred to the Department of Transport, I would ask the Minister of Transport whether any arrangements have been made to transfer employees of public works now attached to this service to the Department of Transport, and whether there have been any negotiations with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada whereby this company would take over the service now performed by the employees of public works.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): With reference to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question, I am not aware of any negotiations with Bell Telephone, but if there are any I shall advise him. With reference to the first part of the question, I shall inquire of the officers of the department and advise him as soon as possible.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. HATFIELD:

1. Did the federal government make agreements with the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, in what way or ways did the agreement with British Columbia differ from those of the other six provinces?

3. In what way or ways did the agreement with Alberta differ from those of the other six provinces?

4. In what way or ways did the agreement with Saskatchewan differ from those of the other six provinces?

5. In what way or ways did the agreement with Manitoba differ from those of the other six provinces?

6. In what way or ways did the agreement with New Brunswick differ from those of the other six provinces?

7. In what way or ways did the agreement with Nova Scotia differ from those of the other six provinces?

8. In what way did the agreement with Prince Edward Island differ from those of the other six provinces?

Mr. BELZILE:

1. Yes.

2 to 8. The general terms of the agreements signed by the seven provinces are the same, except that different provinces selected different options for determining the amount of the guaranteed minimum annual payment.

The option selected by New Brunswick, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia provides that this guaranteed minimum annual amount shall be the sum of:

(a) $12.75 in respect of each person in the population of the province in 1942; plus

(b) Fifty per cent of the provincial income and corporation tax revenue for the year ended nearest December 31, 1940; plus

(c) statutory subsidies payable in 1947.

The guaranteed minimum annual amount in the case of each province under the above option is as follows:

New Brunswick	$ 8,773,420
Manitoba	13,540,038
Alberta	14,227,882
British Columbia	18,120,124

The option selected by Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan provides that the guaranteed minimum annual amount shall be the sum of:

(a) $15 per capita in respect of each person in the population of the province in 1942; plus

(b) statutory subsidies payable in 1947.

The guaranteed minimum annual amount in the case of each province under the above option is as follows:

Nova Scotia	$10,870,140
Saskatchewan	15,291,490

The option selected by Prince Edward Island provides that the guaranteed minimum annual amount shall be $2,100,000, made up as follows:

(a) $15 per capita in respect of each person in the population of the province in 1942; plus

(b) statutory subsidies payable in 1947; plus

(c) an additional amount of $93,068.

In the case of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the wartime tax agreement terminated before the commencement of the agreements under the tax rental agreements act and special provision was made in the agreements signed with these three provinces to provide for payments to cover this transitional period. These payments are a proportion of the guaranteed minimum annual amount less the same proportion of the statutory subsidies and less adjustments to take account of the succession duties collected by the provinces in the transitional period.

The appendices to the agreements which list the particular taxes to be suspended or retained by the provinces differ for each province in order to deal appropriately with the various provincial taxing acts.

[Mr. Belzile.]

AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES—DECISION OF NOVA SCOTIA SUPREME COURT

Mr. ISNOR:

Will the decision given on June 12 by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia respecting dominion-provincial powers, not being exchangeable, and specifically concerning labour and taxation matters, affect the dominion-provincial financial agreement signed by both parties last year?

Mr. BELZILE: No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SUNNYBROOK MILITARY HOSPITAL

Mr. LENNARD:

1. What was the contract price for Sunnybrook military hospital, Toronto?
2. What has been the total cost to date?
3. What is the estimated final cost?

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT AND VETERANS LAND ACT

Mr. WINKLER:

1. Have there been cases under the soldier settlement board where the veteran has given up for any reason, and later came under the Veterans' Land Act?
2. If so, were there applications which were refused, and what were the reasons for refusal?

FLOOD CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ASSISTANCE IN RESTORATION OF FARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a report in the Vancouver Sun of yesterday, that the federal government will grant no assistance in the restoration of the farms in the flooded-out areas. When will the Prime Minister be in a position to make a statement in regard to financial relief to the flooded-out victims of British Columbia?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I may tell my hon. friend that I have been in communication with the premier of British Columbia, and the premier of British Columbia has also been in touch with both members of the commission which has been looking into flood matters. A statement is being prepared which will be approved by both the premier of British Columbia and myself, and when it is ready it will be given to the house.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): May I ask the Prime Minister whether any decision has yet been reached with regard to federal assistance for flood damage compensation in areas outside the lower Fraser valley in British Columbia? If not, at what stage are the negotiations at the moment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think I am in a position to give my hon. friend any information in addition to that which I have just given the hon. member for Fraser Valley.

Mr. FULTON: May I point out that my question had to do with compensation for areas outside the Fraser valley, a matter which is exercising those who come from that area. The hon. member for Fraser Valley asked about compensation in the area from which he comes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are continuing communications between the two governments, and there is every desire on the part of each to arrive at an arrangement satisfactory to both. These communications take a little time, and when an official statement can be made it will be given to the house.

OKANAGAN LAKE—REPORT OF COMMISSION OF 1943

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. JONES (Yale): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister say whether action will be taken soon to implement the report having to do with the water level of Okanagan lake?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There seems to be some ambiguity as to what report the hon. member is referring to. I got his notice this morning and had inquiries made. It is possibly a report made by a board of British Columbia engineers to the Department of Public Works in 1946. In any event, with the information indicated in the question, and a reference the hon. member gave me to what he said in the House of Commons on June 21, inquiries are being made to obtain for him as much information as can be made available.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I may supplement the answer just given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In 1943 a commission was set up by the government of British Columbia and the Canadian government appointing three engineers from Ottawa and three from that province to report on remedial works to be made on lake Okanagan. The report was brought down in 1946. Since then the Canadian government and the province have been considering action to implement the report, and we hope to have action taken during the coming year.

POSTAL SERVICE

AIR MAIL RATES TO YUKON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): I addressed a question to the Postmaster General on June 16, pursuant to the announcement that on the first of July air mail rates would be reduced from seven cents to four cents. I asked him whether that applied to mail in and out of Yukon. To that question he replied: "It does when we are sending our mail by air." May I ask what he means by that statement, "sending our mail by air"? Does he mean simply post office mail, or general public mail?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): When I made that announcement I made it with reference to Trans-Canada Air Lines. I said that as regards the feeder lines, we would work on them immediately, as soon as we established the first one. I would like to verify the position before giving an answer. I will discuss the matter with my officials and reply tomorrow.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): One other question. I understand that when a letter with a four cent stamp on it is mailed at a post office for delivery by air mail, it is left to the discretion of the post office officials whether that letter goes via air mail or not. If that is the policy, does the minister approve of it?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): All letters put into letter boxes, or deposited in the post office, and carrying a four cent stamp, will go by air mail whenever we gain time in delivery. Take, for example, a letter mailed in Montreal on Saturday for delivery in Toronto cannot be delivered before Monday. It is not necessary to send that letter by air, but if someone wishes to put seven cents on it to make sure, we deliver the letter on Saturday night to the post office there, but it may not be delivered to the consignee before Monday unless it bears a stamp for special delivery.

WHEAT

QUESTION AS TO RATIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. C. MILLER (Portage la Prairie): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he tell the house when notification of ratification of the international wheat agreement will be made to Washington and when the agreement will go into effect?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The government of the United States is the recipient of ratifications of the agreement, and the agreement is left open for ratification until the first of July, 1948. What action will be taken at that time is a matter for the committee in charge of the agreement to decide. If the agreement has a satisfactory number of ratifications by July 1, it will go into effect on August 1. If not, the position will be examined by the committee in charge and a decision made.

CANNED AND PROCESSED FISH

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REQUEST FOR COMPULSORY INSPECTION—SALES PROMOTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): On June 21 I directed two questions to the Minister of Fisheries. I would like to have an answer as soon as possible.

Hon. R. W. MAYHEW (Minister of Fisheries): The questions asked by the hon. member for Queens have been noted, and when the estimates of the department are before the committee today, as we hope, answers will be given.

CATTLE

EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant a question about the embargo on beef going into the United States, in view of the fact that there have been disturbances in the market by rumours which evidently have come from the department for several weeks as to the lifting of the embargo. This has had a consequent effect on consumer prices, and I would ask the parliamentary assistant—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to put his question briefly.

Mr. ROWE: I was coming to the question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has already stated that the government—

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. ROWE: I am not asking you, my hon. friend. May I ask the parliamentary assistant to state to the house and the country whether the government intends to lift the embargo for a certain period. I ask this so that the rumours, which are having a serious effect on the market in Canada, may be disposed of.

[Mr. Miller.]

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I may tell the hon. gentleman that negotiations are going forward with reference to the lifting of the embargo, but when it will take place I am not in a position to say.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is going to be lifted, though?

COARSE GRAINS

EXTENSION OF WHEAT BOARD ACT TO OATS AND BARLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. Seeing that we are near the end of the session and that there is extreme interest in the west in the handling of coarse grains, will the minister tell the house whether further consideration is being given the question of bringing coarse grains under the Canadian wheat board? Will he also say something in regard to Bill No. 135, to amend the wheat board act?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The conditions under which Bill No. 135 would be made operative were stated at the time the bill was introduced. One of the conditions was that there would be complementary legislation by the three western provinces. At the moment there is complementary legislation by one of the provinces, but not by the other two; and unless we have complementary legislation in all three, it will not be possible to put the bill into effect.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I understand that Saskatchewan has already passed the necessary complementary legislation. Are negotiations taking place between the other two provinces and the federal government?

Mr. HOWE: A meeting was held in Ottawa last week with the representatives of all three provinces, and the provinces are well aware of the requirements.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the government?

BUTTER

REFERENCE TO DISCUSSION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE ON JUNE 22

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): I wish to ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture if he is quite certain of the accuracy of the statement he made last evening, that the quantity of butter in storage on May 1, 1948, is practically the equivalent of the amount in storage a year before.

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I did not say that last night. I said there was a difference. I said that the amount of butter in storage now was less than it was a year ago, but I still think that we shall have enough for next winter.

Mr. ROWE: Is it the same this morning as it was last night? That is the question.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1946.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

AMENDMENT OF ACT TO RELEASE FUNDS CONTRIBUTED AT EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. HUGUES LAPOINTE (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence) moved the second reading of Bill No. 394, to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Moneys to cease to belong to Canada.

Mr. PEARKES: I understand that the purpose of this bill is to enable certain moneys, which were made available by the members of the various officers training corps throughout the country to promote the efficiency of their corps, to be released from the consolidated revenue fund and to be placed in the hands of trustees so that they may be used for their original purposes.

Before and during the war it had been the custom for officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the officers training corps to assign pay received from the Department of National Defence for various purposes, such as the building of drill halls and armouries, and so forth. That practice was wholly commendable, and the moneys had been set aside for that specific purpose. Apparently these moneys have recently been placed in the consolidated revenue fund, and the intention of this amendment is to provide that they shall be made available for the original purpose. With that I heartily agree. But yesterday I asked the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence whether moneys derived from canteen sources were placed in these funds which it is now proposed to release from the consolidated revenue fund. The parliamentary assistant informed me then that there were no such moneys derived from canteens, but he advised me during the day that this statement was not correct; that a small percentage, some three per cent, of the total moneys was derived from canteens which were run by these officers training corps.

I am afraid that presents this bill in rather a different light. The committee will no doubt recall that only last year we had a committee on army canteen funds. Those funds were placed in an army benevolent fund which was to be administered under the chairmanship of the late Major-General Browne for the benefit of the men of the army who returned from the war and who were eligible to receive portions of this fund for the purpose for which it was created. I wonder whether the portion of these moneys which was derived from the canteen funds should not be placed in the army benevolent fund as were the funds which were derived from other canteens of units of the non-permanent militia, as they were called in the pre-war days.

There was a great deal of feeling at one time that the non-permanent units would like to administer and use for the benefit of the men who passed through them, or for promotion of the efficiency of their particular units, the funds accumulated in the canteens which they had operated. For instance, the highland units were anxious to obtain kilts; other units perhaps thought it would be a good thing to obtain instruments for regimental bands, or to promote the efficiency of their reserve army unit at the conclusion of the war. I am not sure that we are right in assigning to these purposes the money which came from canteens when we have denied to the units of the non-permanent militia or reserve army the right to utilize their canteen funds for their own particular purposes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As the hon. member for Nanaimo pointed out, yesterday in the course of the explanation I gave at the resolution stage I answered a question of the hon. gentleman as to whether any of the funds affected by this legislation were canteen funds. My reply was in the negative. Later I was informed that a small percentage was canteen funds. However, I wish to point out that the benevolent fund to which my hon. friend has just referred, which was created last year by an act of this parliament, affected only canteen funds of the active force, and that no canteen funds of reserve force units were placed in the benevolent fund. The canteen funds of the C.O.T.C. were those of a strictly reserve unit which, under the act creating the benevolent fund, would not be included.

I might add that the action now being taken by the department is the expressed wish of all the C.O.T.C. units which existed during the war, numbering some twenty-eight. Since the end of the war they have repeatedly pressed the department for the release of these funds from the consolidated revenue fund, to be used for their original purposes. In some instances the amounts are considerable. In some cases the entire amount was collected through voluntary assigned pay on the part of the members of the corps, and substantial subscriptions by private individuals and bodies for memorial purposes, or for building accommodation strictly for the use of that particular contingent. The department has taken the view that considering the circumstances which existed in connection with a C.O.T.C. unit, which are quite different from those of the ordinary reserve units, the funds should be remitted in trust to the units concerned, to be used for the purposes for which they were originally collected. For instance, in one particular case all the members going through the particular C.O.T.C. unit—and I understand some 8,000 went through during the war—assigned their pay, both headquarters and camp pay, for the purpose of building a memorial to the C.O.T.C. of the particular university. I believe the wish of those men, who could have drawn their pay and then subscribed it to a particular fund with the same result, should now be acceded to.

Mr. COCKERAM: Can the parliamentary assistant tell us the total amount of money involved, with a breakdown by corps?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The total is $317,895.38. The breakdown would be lengthy. If the committee is willing, I might simply place it on Hansard.

Mr. LENNARD: Put it on Hansard.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I should like to give a short explanation for the purposes of the record. In some cases the funds include an unexpended portion of government allowances to these contingents for purposes of administration and organization. These were kept in the same accounts as the regimental funds. When the decision was reached to release the funds, a board of officers was convened in every case to determine the unexpended portion of government allowances, if any, and where such exist they are being deducted from the amount returnable to the C.O.T.C. Those funds will be retained in the consolidated revenue fund.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the parliamentary assistant unanimous consent to have the statement appear on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. MacINNIS: This is departmental material?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

(The statement appears on following page.)

Mr. LENNARD: I presume the governor in council will appoint as trustees in each instance responsible local people interested in the local university, who will receive the money?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is correct. In some cases the trustees already have been chosen and a trust fund created.

Mr. GILLIS: I just want to get the record straight. The hon. member for Nanaimo would lead one to believe that this might involve the regular army, navy and air force units. That is not so?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is not so?

Mr. GILLIS: There is a special act dealing with those bodies?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is correct.

Mr. COCKERAM: The parliamentary assistant stated that these amounts include certain unexpended portions of grants made in the past to these C.O.T.C. units, and it strikes me there is no reason why that money should not be given back to them. Nothing was done in connection with the reserve army to recover any money unexpended at the end of the war, and I believe the C.O.T.C. units need encouragement and money. If through economy and good management they were able to save some money, I see no reason why it should be paid back to the government. They should be allowed to retain all the money for the benefit of the unit.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The only answer I can give the hon. gentleman is that under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act these are considered public moneys. The difference is that the sums we are now trying to release consist in large part of pay and allowances and subscriptions by individuals, not by the government. Just what is the method of accounting with respect to the unexpended portion of governmental grants is something I could not say. I dare say that if they are still in the funds of the C.O.T.C. that may be taken into consideration when the annual grant is made, but I do not think we can deal with governmental allowances through this bill. I suggest that the hon. gentleman bring up the question when we discuss the estimates, and at that time a thorough explanation may be given.

Section agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 338, respecting income taxes.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Sections 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 6—Dividends, annuities, etc.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to paragraph (j), about which I believe the minister has received representations. It reads:

Amounts received by the taxpayer in the year that were dependent upon use of or production from property whether or not they were instalments of the sale price of the property, but instalments of the sale price of agricultural land shall not be included by virtue of this paragraph.

I know the hon. member for Calgary West wishes to speak to this paragraph. It has been brought to my attention that under this paragraph royalties on oil wells are being taxed not as capital but as income. Let me point out that the so-called royalties are in effect the capital of the person receiving them. Why is this form of capital singled out for the treatment indicated in the paragraph? It seems to me that the taxing authorities have a feeling that this is a sort of bonanza or windfall which may come to a person concerned, and therefore in a rough fashion this is a process of taking a slice of the receipts. I suggest that that is an inadequate reason for departing from ordinary taxation procedure. It may be in the minds of the government that people are getting huge windfalls and that therefore they should not be greatly concerned about the tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not quite clear as to the facts the hon. member may have in mind, but I am informed that there is no change in the law respecting the taxation of royalties. Oil royalties as such are and always have been subject to tax, with the appropriate deductions for depletion.

This section is not designed to tax oil royalties as such. It is really intended to effect a transaction which is an exchange of rights for royalties which are income. I am told there is no change in the substantive law. The pertinent section in the law, as my hon. friend probably knows, is section 3 (1) (f), which defines, as being included in income—

> Rents, royalties, annuities or other like periodical receipts which depend upon production or use of any real or personal property notwithstanding that the same are payable on account of the use or sale of any such property.

I have been assured by the law officers of the Department of Justice that there is no change in the substantive law.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I did not intend to suggest there was a change contemplated at the present time. My understanding is that the change was made earlier. Originally an attempt was made to tax oil as revenue, and this was ruled out. There was a case which tested that procedure, with which the minister is no doubt familiar. In that case the privy council held that the sale of oil was the realization of a capital asset and therefore was not subject to taxation. I understand that thereafter the legislation was altered. I presume the wording is the same as that which we have now.

The point I raise now is the principle involved. Surely the minister will agree that in substance this is a taxation of capital. This oil which comes out of the ground is a wasting asset. Why should we tax this capital any more than any other kind? How can it be suggested that this is anything other than capital which the owner of the land is receiving?

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to say only a word on the same subject. I do not know whether the committee is clear as to the exact meaning of a royalty. Perhaps I might put it this way. We will say that a man owns a quarter-section of land and the oil underneath it. This question is of particular interest to the Leduc area because it is one of the oldest settled areas in Alberta. When the government of Canada granted land titles, the grants included the rights to mines and minerals—and oil has been held to be a mineral. A man owns the oil just as much as someone in Ottawa may own a building; there is no difference in principle. Oil may be found in a neighbourhood, following which an oil company will come along and buy the oil under the land. But the company will buy only, we will say, seven-eighths of it. In this instance I am speaking only for the small group of farmers who own the oil rights under their land. The oil company will make a development, with the farmer still owning one-eighth.

Let us assume that across the river in Hull I have some huge tanks containing 100,000 barrels of oil. It may be that I have no sale for it in Hull, or that it commands a better sale in Ottawa. I move my 100,000 barrels of oil to Ottawa so that I can sell it here. Obviously no tax would be involved. Exactly the same reasoning applies to oil under the ground. Instead of moving the oil horizontally, as in the illustration I have given, I move vertically the oil which is under the ground. That is the only difference in principle, legally or otherwise, that can possibly be attached to this question of royalties.

It is said that certain allowances are made. I know that; and I have no objection to them. But this is a tax on capital, and it is nothing else. You do not need to worry about the companies who develop the oil. That is their business, and so they pay taxes. I am not speaking for them at all. I am speaking for the individual farmer who owns this land and has oil as part of his land.

Let us assume that down here a few years ago I bought a thousand shares of Consolidated. That is an imaginary purchase, of course, because I never had enough money to buy a thousand shares of Consolidated. Then suppose that after holding those shares for some time I sell them at present prices. I have made a capital gain. I owned some oil, it increased greatly in value, and I sold it. I have done nothing more than make a capital gain. Remember I am not in the oil business; I am a farmer and I am still farming the surface of my land.

Let me give another illustration—and this actually happened. The owner of a quarter-section of land is permitted under government regulations to drill four wells. In the case I have in mind the farmer, or his solicitor when he sold seven-eighths to the oil company very foolishly put in a clause providing that the company must develop those wells consecutively and without delay. He has four wells operating on that property. The four wells bring in daily a lot of oil. They are limited to 175 barrels a day—to take a round figure we will say 200 barrels. That farmer has, then, 800 barrels a day coming in. That will sell for approximately $3 a barrel, or $2,400. One-eighth of that is $300, and according to the present ruling he would pay income tax on the total $300. A mile away, we will say, is another man who has sold his land. They get cash, of course, as much as $200,000 for a quarter section. He has made his sale, but his sale agreement does not contain this quick development clause, and so the company drills one well on his property and then goes and looks after its business elsewhere. The result is that that man pays this year only on the product of that one well, whereas his neighbour is paying taxes on the four producing wells. The man who had the quick-drilling clause in his agreement is in a bracket away beyond the chap a mile away who has only one well producing. The law works an extreme injustice as between those two persons. I want to make this plain: I am talking of actual cases. I know of cases which parallel the illustrations I am giving.

I would like very much to have someone tell me, first of all, why this capital gain is taxable, and next, whether something cannot be done to level off as between the two farmers about whom I have been speaking.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have followed my hon. friend closely. It is a technical subject, and I have not, of course, his knowledge of the practical operations, and certainly not of the way in which these contracts are drawn. But this is a question of policy. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, I appreciated later, was speaking not of the drafting of the act but of the policy. I am told that this has been the policy since 1934, and all I can say now is that I will study the question that has been raised by the hon. member for Calgary West, and see what, if anything, can be done. It would be a matter that would have to be taken care of as a budgetary item and not by revision through this bill.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I suppose I must be content with what the minister has said, but he will remember what happened in the Spooner case, which went to the privy council. The privy council held that this was a capital asset, and then the government for reasons best known to itself passed a statute which said it is not a capital asset. That, in laymen's language, is what happened. The main point I have in mind is this, apart altogether from the individuals who will be called upon to pay these tremendous taxes. This policy is a departure from the over-all principle of our taxation, because we in Canada have not yet seen fit, as they have to some extent in the United States, to tax capital gains, and why we should pick out these poor farmers—they were poor; they are not now—and tax their capital gains while we do not tax the capital gains of well-off people who buy stocks and shares, is something I cannot understand. The farmer who has been working on his farm for perhaps thirty or forty years has his capital gains taxed. That may be a matter of government policy. If it is, it is a kind of government policy which someone should be prepared to justify.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will certainly look into it. The change was made when Mr. Bennett was prime minister. Perhaps he knew more about oil than I do. At any rate I will look into it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I answer the remark that the change was made when Mr. Bennett was prime minister? It was made by the same officials in your department who were there when Mr. Bennett was there.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think any officials made Mr. Bennett's decisions for him, did they?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is possible for anyone, including Mr. Bennett, to make a mistake.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know it is a favourite sport to blame things on officials. I find people all too prone to blame their own shortcomings on officials.

Mr. HACKETT: There is a kindred question which I think might be considered by the minister when he is considering the matters raised by the hon. members for Calgary West and Muskoka-Ontario. I refer to the allowance made for depletion. Twenty per cent is allowed on dividends from Canadian wells, and only ten per cent on dividends from wells situated elsewhere, principally in the United States.

The argument has been advanced that governments can supervise more effectively the accountancy and methods of operation of Canadian companies than they can of United States companies. With the treaty arrangements which exist between the United States and this country, that is not altogther a satisfactory answer. Moreover, the same principle does not apply to mines. The department allow certain depletion with regard to mines in Canada, and if my information be correct they allow the same depletion with regard to mines outside of Canada, particularly in the United States. As the act is being revised, it would seem well to endeavour to introduce more uniformity and equity into its terms.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sure the minister realized that I was pinch-hitting for the hon. member for Calgary West. I do not need to tell him that. I do want to add this one thing. This taxation is in essence a kind of punitive taxation. It appears to be the result of the feeling that here is somebody who has something of which he may be despoiled, and we can do it. When the minister is thinking this over I suggest very earnestly that it is not a good basis of taxation. If capital gain should be taxed, for which there is an argument, all right, tax it; but I think it is undesirable to pick out one and leave the others alone.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Appropriation of property to shareholders.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The committee made an amendment to section 8, subsection 2. The amendment is, "shall be deemed to have been received by the shareholder as a dividend for the year."

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Winding-up.

Mr. JACKMAN: Subsection 3 says that in the case of reorganization or readjustment of the capital stock the new shares shall be taxable in the hands of the shareholder to the extent that any unearned surplus is used to make up the capitalization or the new stated value of the shares. I think that is a fair enough provision so far as it affects Canadian companies, where the earned surplus would ordinarily be taxable when paid out. But it causes a considerable amount of embarrassment and confusion to Canadian shareholders of the United States corporations which subdivide their shares and allocate a part of their United States earned surplus, which would in no case be taxable by our own government when they issue the new subdivided shares. For that reason I feel that there should be some limitation in subsection 3 so that a Canadian shareholder in the position I have outlined would know what his taxation status was, and that the best thing for him to do would be to dispose of his United States shares and thereby lose opportunities to benefit himself and the whole Canadian economy.

If the United States company is subdividing its shares it is not very likely to consider the distribution of more than all its earned surplus. On the other hand, it will likely be distributing its current earnings, and the shareholder here would not benefit from the earned surplus that is not to be distributed. The company is obviously in a profitable condition if it is subdividing its shares. I do not think the government would lose any revenue, but on the other hand it would simplify the holding of United States shares by Canadians and allow them to stay in a situation which had proven profitable, and which would continue to prove profitable, and thereby make greater income in their hands available to the taxing authorities.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I may say a word in reference to what the hon. member for Rosedale said. I am aware of the problem that he has put forward. It is a complex one, and there are serious administrative difficulties. Among other things it must be shown that there is undistributed income in the hands of the United States company which renders the Canadian shareholder liable to taxes on the reorganization. I am told that in some cases the financial structure is so complex that it has been far from clear that there was any tax liability. We are aware of the problem. We have not been able to devise any limitation which can be put in here which would be sufficiently general to make it administratively possible to handle the section.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why is it not possible simply to limit this section to subdivision of shares on the part of the Canadian company?

Mr. ABBOTT: We would lose taxes on something which is properly income and which we should get. That is the difficulty there.

Section agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 11—Capital cost of property.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment to paragraph (b) of subsection 1 of section 11. The amendment reads:

Such amount as an allowance in respect of an oil or gas well, mine or timber limit, if any, as is allowed to the taxpayer by regulation.

Mr. FRASER: The minister no doubt has had a letter from the professional engineers asking whether their expenses could be deducted from their income tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I have not only had a letter but I have had a delegation from the professional engineers. This question as to what is deductible from wages and salaries has been before the committee a great many times. If the engineer is engaged on a fee basis and has a gross income, he of course deducts his expenses; but the representation to which my hon. friend referred related to engineers who are employed on a salary by corporations and others. As the committee knows, there are no deductions from salaries for expenses. That has to apply to engineers the same as it does to others, but I have had the representations to which the hon. member referred. It really should come under section 5, although it may be brought up here.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There is a further amendment to section 11. The amendment refers to subsection 2 on page 9 of the bill. As amended it will read as follows:

There may be deducted in computing the income of a shareholder from shares in a corporation whose income is from the operation of an oil or gas well, or mine, such amount, if any, as is allowed by regulation.

Then, subsection 3 will read:

Where a deduction is allowed under paragraph (b) of section 1 in respect of oil or gas well, mine or timber limited operated by a lessee, the lessor and lessee may agree as to what portion of the allowance each may deduct and, in the event that they cannot agree, the minister may fix the portions.

Mr. FULTON: I want to put forward briefly a point which was raised with respect to paragraph (g) of subsection 1 of section 11, having to do with deductions from income for contributions to superannuation funds. Since this matter was raised in the committee I have had a number of further representations to the effect that while this deduction is applied to those who contribute to approved superannuation or pension funds, no provision is made for those who arrange their own retirement by way of insurance premiums or annuity policies, and that fact works a grave hardship. The suggestion made, that the minister take this into consideration and revise it if possible at the next budget, seems to have met with a degree of favourable approval in the committee. I would ask the minister to repeat the assurance, if he can, and say whether in the meantime he has given further thought to the matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not been able to give further thought to this particular question, but I did assure the members of the banking and commerce committee that these sections relating to deductions for pension schemes and the like would be thoroughly reviewed before the presentation of the next budget.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I raise one other question? I have had letters from persons employed in an industry in central Ontario seeking information as to why the government is charging income tax on cost of living bonuses. Apparently these cost of living bonuses fluctuate in certain plants. If the cost of living goes down, the bonus disappears, but when the cost of living goes up, a compensating factor is provided by the additional amount. I am not an expert on income tax, and I think that remark applies to many hon. members in this house. Perhaps it is because we have not had enough income to become really experienced in it. In any event, can the minister enlighten me, as one of the inexperienced laymen so far as this subject is concerned, just what this all means, and what the possibilities are of giving these people the relief for which they are asking?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not familiar with the exact form which this cost of living bonus takes, but I suppose it is an increase in salaries or wages depending upon the increase in the cost of living index. It is true it is expected that it will take care of the increased cost of living, but that applies to other wage increases, whether tied to the cost of living index or not, and the general principle of the income tax law, as hon. members know, is that income is taxed. After all, broadly speaking, one's whole income is intended to enable one to meet the cost of living. For that reason no consideration has ever been given to establishing a tax exemption on earnings. As to expenses, these are deducted from gross income as allowed under the law before arriving at net income. I do not think it would be possible, and certainly it would not be consistent with the income tax structure, to permit this form of wage or salary increase to be exempt from income tax. That is the principle on which the law has proceeded.

Mr. McMASTER: There are several questions I wish to ask and perhaps the minister can answer them all at the same time.

I would like to know whether the regulations when they are made will be published, and also why parliament should not be asked to approve of such regulations.

I would like to know why the sum of $900 has been fixed as the maximum for contributions to pension funds, whether or not a larger percentage should be allowed, perhaps to the man in the lower brackets, and to what extent it will help him as against loss to the public as a whole of its revenue.

I come now to clause (j), which refers to the amount allowed to the taxpayer who is separated from his wife. I think the converse applies when the wife separates from her husband. I would like to know whether or not this puts the taxpayer who is separated from his wife in a preferred position in the matter of income tax. As I understand it, most of us are allowed $750 as exemption on account of having a wife, which is not always sufficient to meet what we actually spend for her; yet if a man is separated from his wife he is allowed an expenditure of perhaps $2,000 or $3,000 if his payments amount to that much. The maximum should be $750. I will admit that the wife is taxed also, but as to those in the lower income tax brackets, the wife might have little other income and she would be in a preferred position.

Then we come to subsection 5(a), the capital cost of property. Again I would like to know what the capital cost of property is. How is it arrived at? I believe that in some cases property when transferred, having been depreciated once, starts once again on the long road of depreciation for the new owner. I would like to know how the department intends to arrive at the capital cost.

Mr. ABBOTT: First as to the question of regulations, my hon. friend was not in the committee when I explained that in the revision we have tried to eliminate as many of the ministerial discretions as possible. I expressed the view that perhaps we had eliminated too many, and we may have to put some back, because most of them were put in to enable the rigorous provisions of the act to be relaxed. In any event, that will be demonstrated by the process of trial and error. The principle followed, where it is obviously necessary to leave some measure of flexibility in the act, and it is not possible to spell out every single case, is to provide that they may be covered by regulation to be adopted by the governor in council in the form of order in council, to be published. I would expect that these regulations would form a volume which would be available to all taxpayers, and to lawyers and accountants for the purpose of enabling them to inform themselves and to advise their clients.

The regulations under this act have not yet been prepared. They are being worked on, but the act is not to come into force until the first of January next, and well before that time we expect to have the regulations adopted. I would hope that well in advance of the first of January they will be published so that they can be subject to examination and criticism by those interested. That is the reason for the regulations.

I do not recall why $900 was selected as the amount which may be deducted from earnings as contribution to an approved pension plan. It represents $75 a month, and six per cent interest on $15,000. But one has to take a figure somewhere, and that figure was selected some time ago. There is no change in the law here.

As regards the question of alimony, it is some little time since I piloted this resolution through the house, and since I have never been personally interested, the relevant considerations have escaped me at the moment. I think it is fair, however. It was introduced first for one year and representations were made that it was too rigorous and an amendment was made in the following year to make it permanent. That is my recollection.

Mr. JACKMAN: There was nothing left after the two taxes were imposed. It created a hardship which was impossible.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the hon. member is right. The change was made after the other tax was imposed. The last question asked by the hon. member was: What is capital cost of the property, in subsection 5? I am informed that it is what the taxpayer paid for it.

Mr. McKAY: In regard to subsection 8 of section 11, which has to do with expenses of transport employees, a good many railway workers, the running trades in particular, complain that the amount allowed for deduction from income tax on account of expenses while working away from home is inadequate. They point out that the cost of living has gone up substantially in hotels and rooming houses, and of course the cost of meals has increased 40 per cent. I think the general consensus amongst these workers is that there should be an increase of at least 33⅓ per cent in this exemption.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no requirement for any increase. They are allowed their actual expenses for board and room while away from home. It may be that some of the brotherhoods have an arrangement with the Department of National Revenue under which a standard rate is taken; I do not know. But that is an administrative matter. A member of the running trades is entitled to claim his actual out-of-pocket expenses for board and room. Of course they must be reasonable. I do not suppose he would be allowed to take a suite at the Chateau Laurier—I am saying that in a joking way, of course. But the law enables him to claim his actual expenses for board and room when away from home.

I think this section is giving reasonable satisfaction to the trades, and it is being extended to other transport workers.

Mr. JAENICKE: Is this changed?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not changed. There was a budget item extending the operation of this clause. There is no change in this bill.

Mr. HACKETT: I asked the minister when the bill was before the house if he would give certain detailed information as to the tax imposed by the state of New York, as to the number of states in the union which had higher income taxes than New York and the number which had lower income taxes. It seems to me that this may be an opportune moment for him to give that information.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have that information, Mr. Chairman, but I left it in my office. I thought I had it among my papers here. I can send for it and have it in a few minutes.

Mr. HACKETT: If the minister will get it and bring it forward at some conveniently early moment, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. COCKERAM: As to the question brought up by the hon. member for Kamloops, allowance for insurance payments, may I ask if such an allowance is not made under the British income tax act? People over there are allowed a deduction for insurance premiums, are they not?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I was told there was some deduction. I am not quite sure. I would have to verify that. I am going to look into the whole situation, anyway.

Mr. CASE: The minister made a statement with respect to the running trades on the railroads. He said jokingly that he did not suppose they would be permitted to have a suite at the Chateau Laurier, but the fact remains that if they have a suite at the Chateau Laurier and can prove that they spent their money living in that place, they are entitled to that exemption. They submit their bills to prove they actually paid the money out. Is that right?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. They would not be able to do that, because under section 12, subsection 2, no one is entitled to deduct, in computing income, anything except in respect of an outlay or expense which was reasonable in the circumstances. I do not think it would be considered reasonable that, let us say, a conductor or an engineer who in the course of his duties had to stay overnight in Ottawa should take a suite at the Chateau Laurier. Perhaps I should not have used that example; I said it jokingly. It is quite clear that that would not be allowed. It must be a reasonable expense.

Mr. CASE: That is all right. What I wanted to get at was this. If he can submit bona fide vouchers that he has paid out a certain amount of money, and it is a reasonable expense—we will use that word—he is entitled to that exemption?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is quite correct.

Mr. SKEY: I was not in the committee at the beginning, but can the minister tell me if his attention has been called to the fact that in the preamble the word "may" in the second line might be changed to "shall"?

Mr. ABBOTT: Which section is my hon. friend referring to?

Mr. SKEY: Section 11, subsection 1. The tax foundation have criticized this preamble in that it does not say "shall".

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told by the assistant deputy minister that "may" is the correct word. It is permissive. It does not require him to give a reduction unless he wishes to do so.

Mr. SKEY: The point is that the taxpayer should be protected by a stronger clause, and they have suggested "shall be entitled to deduct."

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what "may" means. It is the old argument of the lawyers as to the correct use of "may" and "shall". I think it is all right, Mr. Chairman. It has been this way for a long time.

Mr. FLEMING: I have just come in from another committee. With regard to section 11, may I ask if the amendments which were made in the banking and commerce committee have been incorporated in the bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: All the amendments have been incorporated in the bill which was before the committee.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Deductions not allowed in computing income.

Mr. SKEY: Section 12 has been criticized on the ground that it—

> . . . excludes many ordinary and proper business expenses resulting in a necessary exercise of administrative discretion going beyond the law and causing uncertainty for the taxpayer.

Has the minister's attention been called to that criticism?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not aware of that criticism. This section—with others, of course—has been the subject of representations from all sorts of representative groups such as boards of trade, the tax foundation, the chartered accountants association, the Canadian Bar Association, and others. There is, if anything, a relaxation of the present wording by this section. It has always, however, been the law in some form.

Mr. SKEY: The tax foundation have recommended that the wording be changed to something of this type:

No deduction shall be permitted in respect of any item of any item of expenditure or of charge except so far as it is attributable to and incurred for the purposes of the business.

That is the wording proposed by the British codification committee, 1936. They felt that would be an improvement to this section and would protect the businessman to a considerable extent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure consideration was given to it. This language represents what we finally decided was the most desirable.

Mr. COCKERAM: There has been some criticism by business with regard to this bill. I have here a letter from the board of trade of the city of Toronto which reads in part:

Also it is regretted that those charged with the duty of preparing Bill No. 338 have so largely disregarded the many uniformly supported recommendations put forward by this board and other professional and business organizations with a view to bringing income for tax purposes more into conformity with actual income under modern business practice.

A request was made that these organizations be allowed to appear before the committee, but evidently it was not desired that that should be done. I think these business organizations still feel that they have been pushed aside. They were asked for recommendations in the first place, then they were pushed aside and not much attention was paid to the recommendations they made.

Mr. ABBOTT: As to the board of trade of the city of Toronto, this was discussed in the committee. The board of trade of the city of Toronto on March 25, submitted a complete brief which was carefully considered. Nearly all, in fact I think all the recommendations in the brief related to substantial policy matters, not to drafting changes. They were considered; but as I had occasion to say before, in this revision we are not making substantial policy changes. That I feel is a matter for budgetary announcement and debate in the house as part of the budget. Certain changes which were not in the law before and which are in this bill I brought in as budget announcements in this year's budget, and appropriate amendments were made to the Income War Tax Act to have effect until January 1, 1949. By and large, however, the job we have tried to do on this bill is a re-arrangement, a revision and simplification, if possible, without making any radical policy changes. Those are matters, as I say, which the government must decide, and any proposals of the kind would be introduced as budget proposals.

Mr. SKEY: Broadly speaking all the criticism of this bill can be summed up in the simple word "discretionary". All these people feel that the powers left with the minister are too great, that they do not sufficiently protect the taxpayer.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am interested in that statement, if I may say so, because most of the ministerial discretions have been removed, and I have had representations from individuals and organizations such as the Canadian Bar Association, the chartered accountants association and others, expressing considerable doubt as to whether we had not taken out too many discretions.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know this matter of discretions has been made quite a point, but I have taken out nearly all the discretions. I seldom venture to prophesy, but I am going to do so now. I prophesy that I, or whoever is Minister of Finance in future, will be urged by groups of taxpayers to restore some of these discretions, and that before very long. I ask hon. members to remember that prophecy.

Mr. TIMMINS: I think we should keep the record clear in respect to this bill and what happened when it was before the committee. The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding of the progress of the bill in committee is that no personal representations were permitted by any group in Canada. In other words no group appeared before us and made oral representations. I think the minister will consider I am fair in saying the attitude he took was that this was purely a matter of codifying the bill, in a sense—making a few little amendments; that on the whole it was in the nature of a codification and that having regard to the length of time we had to deal with the bill, representations would not be acceptable. Further than that, whatever briefs did come in—and there were a number—came to the members of the house and to the minister, and were considered not by the committee but by the minister's advisers.

Mr. ABBOTT: And by the minister.

Mr. TIMMINS: And by the minister himself. I want to keep the record straight in this matter, if I can, by saying that we had only about three sittings, four at the most, of the committee, and that we dealt only with matters of which we as members of the committee had knowledge, either from the briefs we had received from various associations and groups concerned with this bill or from our personal experience. As a matter of fact we dealt with this matter in the course of about a week, and I think the public should know that we did not deal with it in committee as we have dealt with a number of other bills, when people were allowed to come forward and make oral representations in an endeavour to convince members of the committee or the minister or his deputies that some changes should be made.

Mr. LENNARD: Just for budget consideration I should like to put forward a suggestion which has been put forward many times before; that is, that the most serious fault in connection with stimulating business, providing employment and all the desirable things from the standpoint of our national economy, is the double taxation of corporations. In that regard I should like to ask one question. Is double taxation of incorporated companies and their shareholders in force in England?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told it is now, that they have a tax on business profits in England as such. I understand that the condition which prevailed previously, whereby the taxpayer could take credit for the normal tax which had been deducted from his dividend by the corporation before he received it, still prevails, but that there is a business tax on the corporation itself.

Mr. LENNARD: The taxation on business profits in England was just above a certain level, was it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told it was on all profits. I am not personally familiar with the matter.

Mr. LENNARD: There is no basic level taxation in England?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no exemption; there is no standard profit. It is just a business profits tax.

Mr. GILLIS: What has taxation in England to do with this bill, may I ask? Why does the hon. member insist on having the minister explain whether there is a business tax on profits in England?

Mr. LENNARD: That is my business. That was my question.

Mr. GILLIS: You are merely talking for propaganda.

Mr. LENNARD: No propaganda about it all.

Mr. GILLIS: If the hon. member wants to raise that question and take up the time of the committee with it, we are quite prepared to tell him all about it; but I do not think it has anything to do with this bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree, Mr. Chairman; I do not think it has. Before I forget I should like to reply to the hon. member for Stanstead, and give him the information I promised to get about state income taxes in the United States, for which he asked at an earlier stage of the discussion.

My information is that the state taxes are almost nominal and might have been left out of the calculations I gave in the budget speech without affecting the substance of the argument. For example, taking a married man with two children in New York state as a typical example, at $5,000 this taxpayer would pay $16. At $7,500 he would pay about $65, and at $10,000 he would pay about $132. Needless to say, these amounts are only small fractions of the taxes payable to the federal government in the United States at those levels, and they make very little difference in a comparison of the total income taxes in the two countries.

The calculations which have been made by the officials of my department show thirty-one states which levy personal income tax. Of those states at least twenty impose higher taxes than New York state. In six of the remaining states the taxes are somewhat lower, while in the other four we have not sufficient information to lead to any conclusion. On the basis of population distribution I am informed that about sixty per cent of Americans live in states having income tax; about ten per cent of the total population lives in New York state, and about twenty-seven per cent in states having an income tax higher than New York state. I have a long table here containing a great many figures which I have not studied very carefully, but which I should be glad to make available to my hon. friend if he would care to have it. I do not know that we need place it on Hansard.

Mr. HACKETT: I should be very glad to have it tabled.

Mr. ABBOTT: Very well.

Mr. HLYNKA: I do not know whether this is the proper section on which to bring up this question, but a few days ago I asked the minister about farmers who had sold their land to oil companies on a royalty basis, and who are being taxed very heavily. Would the minister care to comment on that point, and say what is the position of those who sold on a royalty basis instead of for a lump sum?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that would come under the previous section. I know the representations my hon. friend made to me. This would represent quite a substantial policy change. As I remember it, the hon. gentleman was suggesting a basic exemption, which I could not undertake to make in a revision of this kind. That would have to be considered as a budgetary item and brought down in that way, as I have stated in connection with similar questions of policy; it would have to be subject to debate in the house. However, I am aware of the hon. gentleman's representations, and I think I have correctly stated their general nature.

Mr. FULTON: Under section 12(1) (b) the effect is to say that no deduction shall be made in respect of an outlay, loss or replacement of capital, or allowance in respect of depreciation except as expressly permitted by this part. Could the minister direct my attention to the provision with respect to depreciation under this part? I can find depletion, but neither here nor in committee have I seen what provision is made for depreciation.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would be in virtue of regulations made under 11(1) (a).

Mr. FULTON: That covers the reference in the marginal note to capital costs.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what depreciation applies to—and obsolescence. It is a charge to enable one to get back his capital.

Mr. FULTON: I thought from the marginal note it was intended to cover the outlay of capital for the acquisition of property.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; broadly speaking, depreciation of course is taken against—

Mr. FULTON: I know what depreciation is.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is taken against the capital cost to the taxpayer. Therefore while the marginal note may not have been completely descriptive, charges of that kind relate to capital cost items.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. FULTON: In these regulations has consideration been given to the question of allowing depreciation of any type on a basic herd?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that the so-called basic herd policy has been discussed with the associations, and that regulations are being worked out. It is a complicated procedure. Whether there is such a thing as a basic herd is the first question. I suppose there is; it is a colloquial description. The method by which the owner of a herd of cattle should be taxed is the extent to which he receives income. It is an administrative problem to work out what he is entitled to charge as a deduction for that which in respect of a manufacturing operation would be classified as depletion or depreciation. I am told that is being worked out.

The law as it stands is completely flexible to enable the basic herd principle to be recognized in any way that may be found legal. I suppose a provision would have to be made by regulation, and I am told that it has been pretty well worked out.

Mr. FULTON: I realize the difficulty of working out the depreciation of a herd of cattle. But from my reading of the draft regulation I am afraid nothing has been done along those lines, and it appears that no allowance for capital loss may be allowed. I thought if that was carried into effect and if no allowance for capital loss were permitted, the basic herd would not in effect be recognized as a capital asset. I hope that either an allowance for capital loss will be made or some means will be found of allowing depreciation in a basic herd, which in effect is recognized as a capital asset.

Mr. ABBOTT: A senior official of the Department of National Revenue has been following the hon. member closely, and I am sure his remarks will be carefully considered in completing the drafting of the regulations.

Section agreed to.

On section 13 —Chief source of income.

The CHAIRMAN: This section was amended by the committee to read as follows:

(1) The income of a person for a taxation year shall be deemed to be not less than his income for the year from his chief source of income.

(2) The minister may determine which source of income or sources of income combined is the taxpayer's chief source of income for the purposes of this section.

Mr. ABBOTT: I pointed out to the committee on banking and commerce that we had had several representations from representative groups that this was a place where ministerial discretion ought to be put back. I said I had a completely open mind on the subject, and if the committee wished to put it back I would be delighted to do so. The committee seemed to feel that it was an appropriate place to restore the provision, and it has been thus restored. I still have an open mind in the matter.

Mr. CASE: The act is fairly technical, and at times I find it difficult of interpretation. Perhaps in the present instance I am somewhat confused in my thinking, and I should be pleased to have an explanation from the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: A good many people have different sources of income. For instance one member the other day who, in addition to being a member of parliament, is also a successful farmer, asked if he could charge the losses on his farm against his indemnity as a member of parliament. The rule is that if an individual has a secondary source of income —or to be more specific, if my principal occupation is that of a cabinet minister but I operate a farm on the side, I cannot charge my farm expenses, in the event of my making a loss on my farming operations, against my salary as a cabinet minister. Secondary income can be charged only with the expenses incurred in connection with the earning of that secondary income.

Sometimes it is difficult to determine a man's principal occupation for taxation purposes, as against his secondary occupation. It was for that reason that it was felt by many that the only way to resolve the question was to place the discretion in the hands of the minister, in the interests of the taxpayer. That has been done, and I believe I have given the explanation for it.

Mr. KNOWLES: What will the minister's decision be in his own case?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have no farm.

Mr. KNOWLES: But you are a lawyer.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot practise law, either.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): The point I would make is that in a year in which a farmer who happens to be a member of parliament, or is in some other business, makes a loss on his farming operations, those farming operations are a secondary source of income. He would always be losing.

Mr. TIMMINS: What will be the mechanics of determining the chief source of income? Will that discretion be passed on to a deputy who might be acting in the taxation division at Toronto, or must all these cases come directly to the minister? Is there an appeal from the minister's decision?

Mr. ABBOTT: If the taxpayer is not satisfied with the determination given in Toronto, he may appeal to the minister. He will say: You are wrong; you have classified me as a financial man whereas in fact I am a farmer; my farming hobby is operating at a a loss but I wish to be classified as a farmer. That is the question which the deputy in the first instance must consider, and which must finally be analysed by the minister. There is ao appeal from the minister's decision. The exercise of a discretion is in fact the exercise of a discretion.

Mr. TIMMINS: There can be no appeal from it?

Mr. ABBOTT: No, not if it be exercised reasonably.

Mr. HACKETT: Perhaps the minister would wish to add that this is a discretionary power which cannot be exercised arbitrarily.

Mr. ABBOTT: Quite.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister would not attempt to say he has arrived at the decision that a certain gentleman is a farmer because he does not like the colour of his hair. I believe the courts have decided that the discretion must be a judicial discretion and one based upon reason. It may not rest on pure whim.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is quite correct.

Mr. MILLER: Would the converse of the minister's example be true? If it were possible—and it could be—for a taxpayer to suffer a loss on his primary source of income, could he charge it up to the profit on his secondary income?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Section agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 14—Method for computing income.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. The Toronto Globe and Mail in a news item on page 15 of today's issue, Wednesday, June 23, comments on a report which I presented to the house yesterday as chairman of the committee on the Indian Act. The portion of this news report to which I object deals with the use of intoxicants on Indian reserves, and reads:

> Evidently heeding these arguments, the committee recommended friendship with orthodox and reformed churches within the Russian sphere of influence.

The Indian Act committee did not deal with that matter and had no intention of dealing with it, and it should not be credited in a newspaper with having made a recommendation in regard to it. There was obviously no intention on the part of the Ottawa correspondent of the Globe and Mail—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that it is not in order to raise a question of privilege while the house is in committee of the whole.

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps I might be permitted to finish this paragraph.

Mr. IRVINE: Can we not give unanimous consent and have it over with?

Mr. ABBOTT: Granted.

Mr. BROWN: There was obviously no intention on the part of the Ottawa correspondent of the Globe and Mail to inject a matter of delicate international implications into an otherwise very fair report of the work of our committee, but there was evidently a slip-up in the newspaper's composing room, because the words I have quoted and to which I object are misplaced from another news item on the same page.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We are on clause 14.

Section agreed to.

Sections 15 to 20 inclusive agreed to.

On section 21—Husband and wife.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to raise one point for the minister's consideration. I take it that it is fair to say that clause 21 in a sense disregards entirely the conception of the English law with regard to the position of a wife holding property and so on. I do not know whether the minister is at all affected by the conception of the law of the province in which he lives, under which the relations between husband and wife in this regard are very different. I remember when I first went to live in Quebec it seemed a good idea that a husband could not give a present to his wife, but I discovered later that that was not as alluring as it seemed to be.

Considered and careful recommendations have been made on this question by the Canadian Tax Foundation. The minister is familiar with them and I do not need to labour the point. But I do ask him this question: Why is it that none of the recommendations from this reputable source have been given effect to? I think the minister will agree that the recommendations of the Canadian Tax Foundation recognize the full legal status of women, even when married, and at the same time their recommendations would prevent anything in the nature of fraud or colourable transactions.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will have a look at their recommendations again. For the moment they have gone out of my head. The principle of this section is very simple. There is nothing to prevent husband and wife from making transfers one to the other if they care to do so, and if it is legal to do so in the jurisdiction in which they live, but these transfers are not permitted to affect the relative income tax liability of the consorts. That is the purpose of the section. It does not seem to me that there is anything objectionable in its terms. Subsection 2 relates to one of the consorts being employed by the other. That is a principle which has been in the law for a long time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to put on the record one of the recommendations of the Canadian Tax Foundation with respect to clause 21. I will first read the clause as it stands:

> Where a person has, on or after the first day of August, 1917, transferred property, either directly or indirectly, by means of a trust or by any other means whatsoever, to his spouse, or to a person who has since become his spouse, the income for a taxation year from the property or from property substituted therefor shall be deemed to be income of the transferor and not of the transferee.

Their recommendation is to insert after the word "spouse", where it first occurs, the words "and not for a consideration reasonably corresponding to the fair value of the property so transferred". As the section reads in the bill, a husband is not allowed to enter into a transaction of any kind with his wife, even though she has her own property, and the purpose of the amendment proposed by the Canadian Tax Foundation is to head off any colourable or fictitious transaction. In other words, what this organization recommends is that it should be possible for ordinary business transactions to take place between husband and wife, provided it is clear that they are proper business transactions and not a frame-up.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend will look at the brief he will see that it says a little further on:

> The recommendations are self-explanatory. It was realized that the administrative problem is formidable, but agreed that the taxpayer should be adequately protected in bona fide situations.

Where do we stop? A good many transfers are made for love and affection, and that is a valid consideration and would reasonably correspond to the fair value of the property transferred.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It might easily not.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would not want to say that. So far as husband and wife are concerned, where a close relationship exists between them, it is not unreasonable that transfers between them should not affect the tax position of the transferor. That is the view which the law has taken for a good many years, and I would be most reluctant to make a change in policy of that kind.

Mr. HACKETT: It seems to me that this is a far-reaching section. I should like the committee to listen to the few lines which are found in subsection 1, which read as follows:

> Where a person has, on or after the first day of August, 1917, transferred property, either directly or indirectly, by means of a trust or by any other means whatsoever, to his spouse, or to a person who has since become his spouse, the income for a taxation year from the property or from property substituted therefor shall be deemed to be income of the transferor and not of the transferee.

Is there some other subsection which mitigates the absoluteness of that rule?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. HACKETT: Let us take this case, and it is not one which will make any heavy demand upon the imagination. A young man becomes engaged to a young woman and they enter into a marriage contract. That is a very ordinary transaction in the jurisdiction with which the Minister of Finance is familiar. By the terms of that document the young man confers upon the spouse a benefit of $50,000. If he has the money he can give it to her at that time, and I understand that under this section the revenue from it will be taxable revenue in the hands of the husband for ever. Or, being penniless at the time, he may, having made this gift, pay it at a future time. I cannot speak for the law in other provinces, but that is one of the few exceptions which the law of the province of Quebec makes as regards benefits between spouses. That young man may make a gift of future property to his spouse-to-be, and if fortune smile upon him he may make this payment in the future. When the undertaking is implemented, the property transferred becomes the absolute property of the spouse. Unless there be in the act some provision which I have not yet discovered—and I understood from the minister that there was nothing to mitigate the harshness of the section I have read—it will no longer be possible for a future husband, or a person who is about to become a husband, to make a transfer of property in favour of his future wife which will free him from the obligation of paying income tax on any revenue that may be derived from the capital transferred.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that there is much comment I can make, other than that this is a provision which has been in the law for a great many years. My hon. friend has said that I am familiar with the provisions, which relate to the jurisdiction from which we both come, that gifts are made in contemplation of marriage. Whether it prevails in other jurisdictions, I do not know. I have no doubt it does, but perhaps not to the same extent as it does in Quebec. The law provides that as between the two consorts these gifts shall not affect the income tax position of the person who makes the gift, and that for income tax purposes, and income tax purposes only, the revenues of the property transferred, or to be transferred, will be considered as the income of the transferor. One could argue, I suppose, that that provision should be changed, and that is what my hon. friend is doing; but I must again say it seems to me that if that short of change were to be made it is one which should be a budgetary provision and made as a distinct departure from the existing law.

Mr. GREEN: Subsection 2 of section 21 deals with the case of a spouse who is an employee of the husband or wife, as the case may be. It provides that the remuneration or salary paid to that employee cannot be deducted from the income tax of the business. The Canadian Tax Foundation suggested that there be added to the end of the subsection these words:

> But this subsection shall not apply where the employee spouse is a bona fide employee, is paid at the prevailing wage rates and actively fills a position necessary in the business.

The suggested amendment does seem to be reasonable. Would it not be possible to have it added to subsection 2?

Mr. ABBOTT: That recommendation was carefully and extensively considered. I think it will be apparent to hon. members that it imposes a difficult test for the tax administration to determine, as the tax foundation said in their submission. They realized that it imposed extremely difficult administrative problems.

Again, this is a rule which has been in the law for a great many years. Whether it goes back to the origin of the law in 1917 or 1918 I cannot say offhand, but it has been the rule. The recommendation was considered, but it was felt that it would be administratively impossible to enforce without the risk of grave abuses.

Mr. GREEN: The government would get the tax anyway, would it not? It would get the tax from the spouse who happened to be an employee, if it did not get it from the business.

Mr. ABBOTT: But at a very different rate. The obvious thing is that it would be an easy way for the husband and wife to divide their income and thereby get into the lower bracket.

Mr. HACKETT: I had not quite finished. I beg to differ from the minister when he states that subsection 1 of section 21 has been in the act from its inception or for a long time. The bill indicates that subsection 1 of section 21 replaces subsection 2 of section 32. Subsection 2 of section 32 is in these terms:

> Where a husband transfers property to his wife, or vice versa, the husband or the wife, as the case may be, shall nevertheless be liable to be taxed on the income derived from such property or from properties substituted therefor as if such transfer had not been made.

I am going to point out some of the differences between the bill and the old law. In the first place, the old law is not retroactive. This subsection enables the tax collector to go back some thirty-one years and compel an individual who had transferred property to a person who later became his wife to pay income tax on benefits which his wife had legally and properly received and possibly paid income tax on for thirty odd years. With great deference I submit that the enactment of such legislation is nothing less than tyrannous and is something heretofore entirely unknown to this legislative body.

In the second place, I point out that the law as it stood did not apply to contracts between persons who were about to become man and wife. Any contract entered into which favoured the founding of a home and the protection of the family has always had the approval of the legislature. But here we find that even persons entering into the bonds of matrimony may not, as regards taxation and income tax, make any arrangements with regard to the future. That is to say, it is no longer possible for one of the contracting parties before marriage, and in anitication of the burdens and uncertainties of marriage, to make any provision for the future of the other, and to that extent I do not hesitate to say that this law is against the welfare of the family. It is anti-social and amazing in its harshness.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Furthermore, I would point out to the minister that when he spoke of this act on April 29, 1947, as reported at page 2557 of Hansard, he said that the new act was merely a recodification and would contain no new law. That is the substance and significance of his words. He said:

> I am endeavouring to make this a relatively simple budget and I am not, therefore, proposing any other substantial changes at this time in the income tax, although I shall later mention some minor amendments. We have been busy during the past year upon the rewriting of our basic income tax law in an effort to improve its arrangement, to make it clearer and simpler, and to remove ambiguities and anomalies. Hon. members will, I think, be particularly pleased with the extent to which it will be less dependent upon the exercise of ministerial discretions—

And so forth. If that undertaking meant anything it meant that there would be no substantial or radical changes in the act. This is a radical, far-reaching change, a change that goes to the very foundation of the home, and I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell), that section 21 (1) be struck from the bill and replaced by the section in the act as it now stands, 32 (2).

Before I sit down I would like to say a word to my colleagues from the province of Quebec. I ask them whether they are aware, whether they fully realize, that this is an invasion upon a right which they have cherished and for which they have stood and will stand, I believe, despite these unconsidered and anti-social amendments.

If there is one place in Canada where the integrity of the family has withstood the onslaught of modern phases and fancies it is in the province of Quebec, and I shall be astonished if the members from that province, having considered the full meaning and purport of this bill, will give their support to it when it is a direct undermining influence upon that greatest of institutions, the home.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have been greatly impressed and moved by the appeal which the hon. member for Stanstead has made as to the sanctity of the home. I say to him that I am just as jealous of the traditions and the laws of the province of Quebec as he is, but I say to him also that this is not making any changes in the laws of the province of Quebec. It is essential that a person who makes a marriage contract, whether in the province of Quebec or anywhere else, shall not, by transferring from wife to husband or from husband to wife, get income tax advantage which another taxpayer cannot get.

That is all that this section does, and it is not aimed particularly at Quebec or any other province. It is intended to provide that these interconjugal transfers, if I may so describe them, will not affect the income tax position of consorts. That is all this section is intended to do. It is intended to ensure that the man who is smart enough to make a contract whereby he reserves to himself the right to transfer to his wife $25,000, $50,000 or $100,000, which he has not today, but when he gets it, shall not get income tax advantage by making that contract. That is all the section is intended to do. It is not attacking the sanctity of the home or the laws of the province of Quebec. It is not attacking anything. It is intended to ensure that every taxpayer shall pay his fair share of taxes. I do not think I can make it any clearer.

Mr. HACKETT: The section seems to assume that a person has transferred property to his spouse, or to a person who has since become his spouse. Taking the case which I cited to the minister, let us suppose that a young man, anticipating matrimony, transferred to a person who later became his spouse $10,000, that transfer having taken place after the first day of August 1917. The transfer was made before marriage, as a condition of marriage. I interpret the section to mean that the revenue from this $10,000 must be computed as the revenue of the husband.

Mr. ABBOTT: For income tax purposes.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, from 1917.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not from 1917.

Mr. HACKETT: From the time of marriage. Let me make this clear. At any time since the first of August 1917—

Mr. ABBOTT: The tax is not retroactive.

Mr. HACKETT: A young man enters into a marriage contract with a young woman and transfers to her, before marriage, the sum of $10,000, and the marriage takes place. I take it that the income on that $10,000 must be considered as the income of the husband and not of the wife, and that is the ground of my objection.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be correct, from the time of marriage.

Mr. HACKETT: From the time of marriage, and I say that is a departure. That was not the law; it is something new, and it is something to which I invite the attention of my friends, if not my party associates, from the province of Quebec.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: When an amendment of this kind is proposed, I think the first question the chairman should consider is whether it would change the income tax in such a way as to affect the balance of ways and means. If in any way it would affect that balance, it would have to be ruled out of order. Before making a ruling on that point I should like to have the opinion of the minister or some others, because in a matter of this kind the Chair should have some guidance.

Mr. ABBOTT: I must confess I had not thought of it. I was thinking of the question on its merits, Mr. Chairman. Unquestionably it affects the balance of ways and means, because this is a section which will either render an item of income taxable or exempt it from income tax. From that point of view I suppose it is an amendment which could be moved only by a member of the government. I have argued the amendment with my hon. friend on its merits, which I think perhaps was desirable. But on a strict interpretation, I believe the amendment is out of order if it is moved by some one other than a member of the government.

Mr. HACKETT: I wish to speak to the point of order. I had a citation from Beauchesne—unfortunately I am unable to put my finger on at the moment—to the effect that an amendment could be offered even to a money bill where, as this amendment does, it would result in a reduction in taxation.

Mr. FULTON: Citation 502.

Mr. HACKETT: I am told by the hon. member for Kamloops that it is citation 502. I remember it quite well, because it was read against me the other day, in part only. I asked that the rest of it be read, but I did not get very far.

Mr. FULTON: Citations 497 and 502.

Mr. HACKETT: Citation 502, Beauchesne, third edition, reads as follows:

> A private member may move that certain specified taxes be readjusted and that the scope of tax exemptions be enlarged.

Citation 497 appears to be against what I am moving, in the first part, and that was all that was read the other day. It is in the following terms:

> No member other than a minister of the crown may introduce a bill for the reduction of duties. The government must take full responsibility for the taxation levied to provide the revenue. But the house enjoys complete freedom to make every representation possible to the government with regard to the manner in which the ministers discharge this responsibility. This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration.

On that basis, if this amendment entails a reduction in taxation, I submit, with great deference, that it is in order.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I think hon. members may be confused in their ideas as to what is a money bill and what is a budget item. A budget item provides the revenue to take care of the expenditure in the financial arrangements for the year.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the chairman be kind enough to allow me to say one word more before he makes a ruling?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. HACKETT: I was just going to say that if this is not a proper amendment, then I fear that the committee is losing a great deal of time. If it is not competent to the committee to deal with the taxes that are to be levied under this bill—and after all, the whole purpose of the bill is to provide a means for raising taxes—then it would reduce almost to an absurdity the submission of the bill to the committee.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: In answer to the hon. member may I say that as far as the Chair is concerned we are trying to get the situation clear. I understood there were no changes in this bill with regard to the levying of taxes.

Mr. HACKETT: There are.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I understood that it was a recoding of the bill, without changing any item of taxation that had already been approved in the budget. I may be wrong, but it is on that basis that I am now considering the point. If the hon. member will turn to citations 555 and 556 of Beauchesne, second edition, he will find they read as follows:

555. No increase can be considered either of an existing, or of a new or temporary tax for the service of the year, except on the initiative of a minister acting on behalf of the crown.

556. The house can make amendments which diminish the amount or reduction of taxation, or postpone the day when the reduction takes place, although the amendments may increase to that extent the charges proposed to be levied upon the people.

So long as an existing tax is not increased, any modification of the proposed reduction may be introduced in the committee on the bill, and is regarded as a question, not for increasing the charge upon the people but for determining to what extent such charge shall be reduced.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I offer a suggestion?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, please. Citation 552—

Mr. KNOWLES: That is the one.

[Mr. Hackett.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: —reads as follows:

Though it is the function of the committee of ways and means to impose rather than to repeal taxes, examples of the repeal of taxation effected in this committee are to be found upon the journals. Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee; but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as, for instance, a proposal to substitute probate and legacy duty on real property as an alternative for an inhabited house duty, the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

The point I wish to make is that it is not in order for the committee to upset the balance of ways and means.

Mr. FULTON: May I make an observation on that point?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If this amendment would do that, as I am assured by the minister it probably would, then I would have to rule it out of order.

Mr. FULTON: Surely we should bear in mind the fact that this bill, in the minister's own words, is only a codification of tax procedure. It is provided in the bill itself that it shall not come into effect until January 1, 1949. Therefore if we amend the bill to provide some difference in procedure for the collection of taxes, which difference will not become effective until January 1, 1949, surely it cannot be held that this will upset the balance of ways and means for the year. This is not a money bill or a ways and means resolution in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms.

Mr. ABBOTT: It covers three months of the current fiscal year.

Mr. FULTON: The taxes are imposed on the income of the calendar year; therefore I do not think a change which would become effective only on January 1, 1949, would upset in any way the balance of ways and means for this year.

Mr. KNOWLES: When I was trying to catch your eye previously, Mr. Chairman, I was anxious to draw your attention to citation 552 in Beauchesne, second edition, which you have just read. It seems to me that the terms of that citation not only apply to this particular situation but call to mind at least two precedents in this very session of parliament.

The specific terms of that citation, as I see them, are to the effect that in committee it is in order to move an alternative tax. In other words a member can move to strike out a tax provided he offers an alternative of equivalent amount. The first precedent of which I remind the committee is the proposal made by the hon. member for St. John-Albert on June 2, 1948, having to do with interest rates on arrears of taxation. In that case no alternative was offered, and it was ruled out of order. On the other hand early this session, when we were on Bill No. 3, I remember moving an amendment to strike out certain taxes which were repugnant to us and in their place to reimpose the excess profits tax; and that was allowed as a proper amendment. It seems to me we are getting that practice cleared up, and it is becoming understood that you cannot just strike out a tax. That is out of order. But if you propose an alternative, as I did on at least one occasion, it is in order.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I add one word on the point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops, with which I should think the minister would agree? This is a codification.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have never used that word.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Or something to that effect. Then surely what the hon. member for Kamloops has said is true, that since the bill comes into effect only at the beginning of next year, and since the year for estimating the income tax is the calendar year, there will be no effect on the situation until the minister comes in with his budget next year, when he will still be able to take any action he wishes.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I am glad to have this expression of opinion by hon. members, but I am afraid I shall still have to rule this out of order.

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not think the question of procedure need have arisen at all, because the minister has not pointed out that this would necessarily increase or decrease the taxation the government would collect. It is quite possible that the wife might be in the same bracket as the husband, or vice versa. Therefore I do not see that the amendment would necessarily interfere with the collection of taxation or the balance of ways and means, and for that reason I think it is in order.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It has been ruled out of order. Shall the section carry?

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask how this situation would be determined under the section as it now stands? Suppose a father gives his daughter $10,000. Subsequently she marries and purchases a house. Later she sells the house to her husband and invests the proceeds in securities which produce income. Is that income taxable in the wife's bracket or in the husband's bracket?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is an interesting case. I do not know that it has ever arisen, and perhaps I should not give an opinion. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I were discussing it. In that case I should think the wife's income would include the interest on the securities, and of course the house would belong to the husband. In most jurisdictions there is no prohibition against a contract of sale between a husband and wife. There is a prohibition in the province of Quebec, from which the hon. member for Stanstead and I come, so that that transaction could not be entered into in Quebec. In other provinces, I understand, such a contract is permissible, and under those circumstances I would think the wife would report income on the securities and the husband of course would own the house.

Mr. FERGUSON: That is just your opinion.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is free, too; I make no charge for it.

Mr. FERGUSON: That is all right. We have had many free opinions from over there which did not amount to very much. When this becomes law, however, your opinion will not count for much, because the law will be determined by the income tax authorities or by the courts. This is a drastic law. The amendment you are putting through will have far-reaching effects, and it cannot be just treated in this way, by saying this is a new case. This amendment will have an effect in cases such as those cited by the hon. member for Rosedale, as well as others. It is an important change, and I think it should be gone into a little more thoroughly.

Mr. ABBOTT: In the case cited by the hon. member for Rosedale there is no change at all in the law. That has been the law for years. The case mentioned by the hon. member, of the husband who purchases the property from his wife and the wife who puts the money into securities, has been subject to the application of this or the corresponding section for years.

Mr. HACKETT: I must take exception to the minister's statement that there is no change in the law.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said with respect to the case cited by the hon. member for Rosedale.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—Transfers to minors.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment to this section. The word "and" at the end of paragraph (a) of subsection 1 is deleted, together with paragraph (b) of the same subsection.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is section 22 the same as we passed it in committee?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; this incorporates the amendments made in committee.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 23 and 24 agreed to.

On section 25—Married status.

Mr. KNOWLES: I realize that the minister has said a good many times today that all we are doing in this bill is a consolidating and administrative job. He has told us repeatedly that the government does not wish to make any changes in policy—

Mr. ABBOTT: Any major changes, I said.

Mr. KNOWLES: —at this time. On the other hand I noted that this morning the minister, with the broad smile he can display on occasion, told us he had an open mind.

Mr. ABBOTT: He always has that.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is fine; I am glad to know that still holds. It seems to me this is one section in connection with which we should get the benefit of that open mind. This is the section which, amongst other things, sets the exemption levels at $750 for a single person and $1,500 for a married person. Since those figures were fixed in a previous year, and even since the minister earlier this year told us he did not wish to raise those levels, there have been still further increases in the cost of living. In addition there have been certain ructions amongst the members supporting the government. We do not know exactly what has happened—

Mr. ABBOTT: Except that nothing has happened.

Mr. KNOWLES: Quite so; that is the tragedy. We are sure of one thing, and that is the letter the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) wrote the Prime Minister. It is before us in definite terms; and a very good letter it was.

Mr. ABBOTT: Excellent. He wrote one to me, too.

Mr. KNOWLES: And your reply to the hon. member has been given publicity too.

Mr. ABBOTT: Delighted to hear it.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. KNOWLES: And you made no charge for that, either. Yesterday the Prime Minister assured us that all was peace and harmony in the cabinet. He took what I thought was an unnecessary crack at his fellow members of the press gallery regarding certain reports which had appeared in the papers recently. But it all adds up to this, that even hon. members opposite, and even the government, who claim to be on such peaceful and harmonious terms, know that the people of Canada are not satisfied with the inaction of the present government in relation to the problem that is hitting the people of Canada hardest at the present time; I refer to the increased cost of living.

Mr. ABBOTT: The election is almost over in Saskatchewan.

Mr. KNOWLES: Well, here is one place where the Minister of Finance, with that open mind of his, could make a change which would be acceptable by those in his own party, who are interested and which would mean something to the people at large. It is hard to know what figure to suggest now, because the cost of living keeps going up. But surely this exemption level ought not to be lower than $1,200 for a single person and $2,000 or perhaps $2,400 for a married person.

If I did not know it from the discussion which took place a few moments ago, then I would know from the rules of the house that any attempt on the part of a private member to move an amendment to change these figures would be ruled out of order. After all, to raise the exemption level would change the amount of income available to the government. I might, of course, propose as an alternative a reimposition of the excess profits tax, but that might be difficult to win in this house. I do suggest however that we ought not to ride over this section too quickly. It is not improper for the committee to take a bit of time to discuss the matter. It would not be out of the way for members from all groups on this side of the house, and those on the government side, to let the government know that a change in these exemption levels is highly desirable. It does not meet the whole of the problem; something has to be done about the cost of living. But it would be a help if the exemption levels were brought up to some figure consonant with what it costs to maintain a decent standard of living at the present time.

I hope the minister will not stand on ceremony; I hope he will not insist that no major change can be made at the present time. He has the authority. He has often told us that he was not engaged in any popularity contest so far as his taxation measures are concerned. Here is a chance to regain some of the popularity he has lost by making a worthwhile step at this closing period of the session. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the question of raising the exemption levels.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not suppose I need to urge hon. members on all sides of the house to make speeches asking for increases in exemption levels. I am quite sure everyone would be pleased if it were possible to do so. I should be pleased myself. But in the course of the budget debate and at other times I have had occasion to give the reasons why I do not think that very important policy move can be made this year. The exemption levels in Canada, as I have had occasion to reiterate on a number of occasions, are already higher —much higher—than they are in the United Kingdom, and the United States. I hope at some time it may be possible to increase them, but I also hope that all members who are in sympathy with that very desirable objective will not feel called upon to urge it now. I am sure all hon. members are as much interested in that as is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. GILLIS: I shall not raise any argument which will disturb the balance of ways and means. I do believe, however, that there are administrative details in the act which could be cleared up. I have had correspondence with the department on two or three matters which seem to be sore spots.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a general statement on the subject with which we all agree. I do not think, however, from the minister's statement that there will be any change.

There are two or three points I would bring to the minister's attention. First of all, $300 a year for purposes of income tax are added to the salaries of sleeping car porters, on the basis of the assumption that they receive that amount of money per year in tips. Whether they get that much or not, they are taxed on an extra $300. They may make it on some sections of road, but there are other sections where sleeping-car porters do not take in $300 in tips. I believe that is a wrong principle. First it encourages the railway company to pay low wages. Furthermore, it is not fair to sleeping-car porters who may not receive that much in tips.

Mr. ABBOTT: A porter may keep a record and put in his actual receipts.

Mr. GILLIS: Even so, I think it is unfair. If a porter does a good job which requires his working longer hours, shining shoes and all that kind of thing, a passenger who wishes to give him a dollar or two should be permitted to do so without making it necessary for him to declare it as income. If it is desired to tax that extra amount, then the railway companies should be told to pay larger salaries so that the government could get it back in the regular way. This would be an administrative change.

My next point has to do with the exemption for a boy or a girl in university until he or she reaches the age of twenty-one. After that age is passed the student is no longer considered as a dependent for income tax purposes. The period ought to be extended until the student graduates. In may instances parents are having great difficulty in putting young people through university. Perhaps a student will reach the age of twenty-one before his last year at school. That is the most expensive year, and that is the time when the student is cut off as a dependent, with the hardship which stems from that situation.

I suggest that the regulations be changed so that the age be placed beyond twenty-one years, and that it apply until graduation. If the provision is necessary in early years of university training, it continues to be necessary until the day of graduation.

I wish to discuss also the matter of exemption for wives and husbands both of whom are employed. Rather than make a speech on the subject I shall read a paragraph from a letter I have received, which I would ask the minister to consider carefully. We hear a good deal of talk about the sanctity of the home. I believe the present arrangement respecting husbands and wives who have taxable incomes is creating a complication in the minds of people, one which leads them to think that it is much better to pick up a girl, live with her and not marry her because in that way one can save money. On this matter of the sanctity of the home, it surprises me, when there are so many gentlemen of the cloth in the chamber, that they have not been waving their arms about the matter for a long time.

The letter states in part:

> A single man and woman both earning in excess of $750 each, living together, unwedded, with one child or dependent, can receive an exemption of $2,250. Here is how: he files an income tax form, for himself and child which gives him married status with an exemption of $1,500; woman files one for herself for an exemption of $750. But the married man whose wife earns $750 files a form for himself and child, single status $850, wife's form $750, total

$1,600. I verified the above exemptions at our district income tax office. They could not give an explanation, but said that according to income tax form T-1 Special, that was how it stood. And moreover the unwedded couple are allowed exemptions for a housekeeper, yet the married couple are not, even though it is an absolute necessity if both are to work. Now in view of the above facts anyone can see that the married man is not getting a single man's status. He is paying $129 more in income tax than the single man; if he wants single status man and wife have to live apart. He will then save $129 and the government will not receive a cent more from her.

That is how the exemptions work out. I think it is due to an oversight. I suggest that the minister set one of his experts to work and at least even this thing up, because as things stand it is completely wrong. I have discussed it with some of the district officials and they cannot account for it. I suggest that the minister take it into consideration and do something about it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. HAZEN: May I refer the minister to section 130 of the act which reads:

Section nine B, subsection two of section twenty-five—

I can find no section 9B, subsection 2 of section 25.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is a comma after 9B, Nine B is a section of the Income War Tax Act, not this act. It relates to the non-resident income tax deduction.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I should like to support the hon. member for Cape Breton South in his protest against what I believe to be an injustice in regard to income tax imposed on porters and men of that class. I brought this up last year and was supported by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. The tips which these men receive are gifts of the residue of moneys which the taxpayer, after he pays his taxes, hands out to porters and people who give him personal service. I was surprised when the complaint was first made to me that these gifts were arbitrarily taxed in Nova Scotia, for instance, while no such tax was imposed in central Canada. I am told there is a double injustice, because in central Canada, in Quebec, an exemption is made for expenses which is not allowed to porters in Nova Scotia. These porters are being compelled to pay an arbitrary amount upon gifts they receive as a courtesy in carrying out their duties, and I support the request that an adjustment should be made to protect our porters and others similarly engaged.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I am familiar with these representations. They have been made to myself and the Minister of National Revenue by maritime members, particularly the senior hon. member for Halifax, who has written and spoken to me about it. As I mentioned in answer to the hon. member for Cape Breton South, it is open to porters and others to keep a record of their gratuity receipts, and if they amount to less than the arbitrary amount, they can report the lesser amount as being the actual amount received.

Mr. McKAY: Will their statements be accepted?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. HLYNKA: Last year I brought up the question of taxing as single persons married men whose families happen to be in Europe. I have received many letters on this subject, particularly this year, in which these workers complain that they are being taxed as single men. One man in Winnipeg, an ordinary labourer, wrote me that he was bringing nine members of his family to Canada from displaced persons camps. Yet he is taxed as a single man. Can they not be granted married status for income tax purposes? It seems to me unfair that these married men should have to pay income tax as single men, in spite of the fact that they have to send parcels and assistance of one kind and another to their families in displaced persons camps. Cannot something be done about that?

Mr. ABBOTT: As a result of an amendment last year or the year before, married men in that position are given married status if they can show that they are in fact supporting their dependents abroad. I understand that the income tax branch takes a broad view of what evidence may be accepted in support of their statements, evidence given through a consul, evidence of remittances and that sort of thing. I think the thing can be and is being worked out administratively in a satisfactory way, but if my hon. friend has any special cases in mind I am sure that my colleague the Minister of National Revenue will be very glad to look into them.

Mr. HLYNKA: I have in my office at the present time no fewer than twenty-five cases of men who have received notice that they will have to come through with their income tax for 1946 and 1947, and in some cases 1945. I shall be glad to give the details to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I should like to repeat the plea I made last year for exemption from tax of hospitalization expenses of people living in small towns in remote parts of the country, for example, at Massett on the Queen Charlotte islands. Anyone there requiring hospitalization has to go to Prince Rupert or Vancouver, and in my opinion they should be granted exemption for their transportation expenses to the hospital. After they have been hospitalized for a certain time in Prince Rupert or Vancouver, they may be moved to another room when they have reached the convalescent stage, and that means further expense. It has got to the point where people with families cannot afford to live in small towns, especially in frontier areas. I made these representations last year, and I again bring them to the attention of the minister in the hope that something will be done.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a difficult problem, and we are still considering it.

Mr. FAIR: Following up what the hon. member for Skeena has just said, a couple of days ago I received a letter which is self-explanatory. It reads:

> Some weeks back I suggested to you the financial hardship imposed on those whose physical condition necessitated obtaining medical attention in the cities when these services were unobtainable in rural areas, by the income tax board failing to allow exemptions for board, railroad fare and hospitalization.

He goes on to say that, because of limited equipment in the local hospitals, many patients are sent to Edmonton for hospitalization. Many districts in the different provinces are similarly situated. They have small hospitals, but serious cases have to be sent to the larger centres for treatement. I trust that the minister will give sympathetic consideration to the complaint of this correspondent and allow such expenses, so that they will be able to send their sick ones to hospital.

Mr. LENNARD: If a married couple in Quebec has no marriage contract, would they be entitled to claim that half of the husband's earnings belonged to himself and the other half to his spouse?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. LENNARD: I wanted to know if that were the case.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, it is not the case.

Mr. LOCKHART: What is the minister's defence of $100 exemption for a child, plus $5 family allowance? How can that take care of a child in these days?

Mr. JACKMAN: It would not buy the shoes.

Mr. ABBOTT: No one has ever held that a child should be entirely supported out of tax money. Everything is relative. We give $1,500 marital exemption and $100 for each child. In the case of a wealthy taxpayer, it is worth $50 or more to him. In the case of a taxpayer in the low brackets, it may be worth only $10 or $15 as a tax exemption. The $100 applies to children of family allowance age. The chances are that the average family allowance is about $7 or $8 a month, so that there is $96 direct payment in family allowances, and the tax value of $100, depending upon the taxpayer's bracket. I am not going to make any defence of it. That was the figure which was established. I think, in all the circumstances, it is a fair figure. One could control the tax revenues either in tax rates or in amounts of exemption, or by half a dozen other ways.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—Charitable gifts.

Mr. ISNOR: I am speaking on behalf of the hon. member for Brandon who was called out of the house. He asked me to make inquiry about the interpretation of paragraph (b) of section 26, which has to do with medical expenses. The particular question which he asked me to place before the minister is this, whether medical supplies as supplied by a druggist could be included in the interpretation of medical expenses. The hon. member read a distressing letter to me, and in the circumstances he felt that the taxpayer was fully justified in asking that the bills from the druggist be included in the interpretation of medical expenses.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a question which, as the senior hon. member for Halifax will recall, has come before the house on previous occasions. It was raised in committee the other day. The ruling is that druggist bills are not deductible as such. If drugs and medical supplies are supplied by the doctor or by the hospital they are recognized as medical expenses. The administrative difficulty of checking the thousands of drugstores throughout the country to prevent evasion, drugstores that deal in a lot of things besides drugs, would be stupendous. It is felt that it would be really too difficult to check the bona fides of claims for supplies of drugs. When the drugs are included in the doctor's bill, or in the hospital bill, they are accepted as part of the recognized medical expenses.

Mr. LENNARD: That means that if a doctor prescribes and a druggist fills the prescription and the patient pays the druggist, he is not allowed the exemption.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. FRASER: When we were in committee on this section I believe the minister promised that the Minister of National Revenue would issue a directive in regard to exemption for donations to memorial halls, rinks and so forth that are non-profit making.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that that has not been finalized yet, if I may use a rather objectionable word, but they are still working on it. I expect that it will be available very soon.

Mr. FRASER: I hope the minister will hurry it along, because a number of these projects are now under way. I feel quite sure that they would get a little more money if the directive were issued.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure that any individual project could take it up with the minister and get a ruling on the individual case, on the facts of the case. What is contemplated in the directive to which I am referring is a general circular which would go out to all offices, giving them guidance on the general principles of these cases.

Mr. FRASER: I know that at Lakefield and Peterborough we have had letters sent to Mr. Scully for some few months, but no reply has yet come through.

Mr. ABBOTT: We shall try to hurry him up.

Mr. LENNARD: I hope that the minister makes it definite, if for no other reason than that I get appeals from a great many people, and always somewhere in the appeal it is said that if I donate anything it will be exempt from income tax. I donate and, when the year-end comes and I put it in my income tax deductions, the old income tax branch tells me that I am wrong.

Mr. ABBOTT: On that point may I say my own experience has been that none of these charitable organizations represents to prospective subscribers that such a donation will be exempt from income tax unless they have obtained assurance that it will be. In doubtful cases I think they get rulings. Perhaps my hon. friend's experience has been less fortunate than mine.

Mr. CASE: In the main our experience at home has been this. They have made sure that they had the necessary sanction for exemption.

This clause seems to go quite a way toward assisting those who require medical attention. I think at the present time most people are prepared to admit that chiropractic and osteopathic treatment have their place in correcting one's ills, and so forth. I do not see anything in this clause to provide that payments made to that profession on account of one's health may be deducted as medical expenses. Is there any reason why that should not be included?

Mr. ABBOTT: The language of the act is medical practitioners. I do not know what stand the Department of National Revenue has taken administratively as to whether chiropractors are recognized as coming within that description or not.

Mr. GRANT: They do not.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend says they do not.

Mr. CASE: I wonder why. I am not offering an amendment. I suggest that consideration be given to that, because I know of people—as a matter of fact I have had a little experience myself—who have found that profession more helpful to them than the medical practitioners in certain circumstances. They should be able to obtain the benefit of the deductions for those expenses as they would be for expenses to a medical practitioner.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a matter of interpretation of the phrase "medical practitioner". I understand that the Department of National Revenue has not included chiropractors in that interpretation. Of course it would be open to the courts to take a different view if the matter were brought before them.

Mr. SKEY: May I return to a discussion of the medical side of it? It has come to my attention that sufferers from diabetes, who must necessarily have insulin injections, are not able to make any deduction from their income tax for the constant expense of insulin which they must buy, either through their doctor or from the druggist. In chronic illnesses such as these, it seems to me that the government should give some consideration to people who must necessarily make a continuing expenditure of that kind.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall look into that, because I can see that it would be a special type of case.

Mr. JACKMAN: After the committee hearings, did the minister give any consideration to making the four per cent of the taxpayer's income read four per cent of the taxpayer's income after taxation? It makes quite a difference. I noticed, further on, that there is a limitation of $1,000 in any case; therefore I do not think it would ever injure the treasury. It would be a factor and it would be merciful in certain cases, particularly in view of the fact that the person with the large gross income does pay in doctor's fees, particularly for operations, a substantial part of the cost of the public wards, and so forth.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did give consideration to that. My hon. friend raised it in committee. I must say I do not feel that we should make that distinction. I may be wrong; but in any event I came to that conclusion. Of course it would be obviously advantageous to the man with the larger gross income.

Mr. JACKMAN: Advantageous to everybody.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT: Suppose a man goes to Rochester for an operation which costs him $2,000. Is there any provision to take care of that cost?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. He can claim $2,000 as a deduction from his income to the extent to which it is in excess of four per cent of his income. Four per cent is regarded as the average, and anything in excess of that can be claimed as a deduction. It used to be five per cent and was reduced to four per cent. It was originally five per cent, the extra one per cent being allowed to cover such things as drugs.

Mr. LENNARD: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that hon. members who wish to speak address the Chair, and speak in a voice loud enough for the rest of us to hear them. Members sitting near the minister mumble and we do not know what they are saying.

The CHAIRMAN: That is a good idea. As Chairman I wish to bring one point to the attention of the committee. This discussion has been general, and while it was taking place I looked up the resolution on which the bill was based. The resolution was passed on June 4, on which date the Minister of Finance moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to revise and consolidate the law respecting the levying of income tax and the administration thereof.

The committee is bound by the terms of the resolution, and hon. members will notice that the only power is to revise and consolidate the law. It occurred to me, therefore, that it would be beyond the power of the committee to make any substantial change in the law. I do not think it would be permissible to have another discussion at this time on the fiscal policy of the government. That discussion took place when the budget resolutions were before the house and the committee. Shall the section carry?

Section agreed to.

On section 27—Dividends received by a corporation.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): This clause deals with "business losses", (26)(d). When I was home recently a case was brought to my attention of a business having been closed and put up for sale by the sheriff. The proceeds were about to be distributed, and seven days before the distribution was to take place the income tax branch notified the sheriff that there was an account owing for income tax two years previously, and instructed him not to make the distribution. These are the facts as they came to me. In Nova Scotia and in other provinces, workmen's liens are given priority; and in this case, if the income tax branch has its way, no payment would be made to the workmen from the proceeds of the sheriff's sale because the income tax branch claims the full amount. That would be a great injustice to these workmen. They worked for some months prior to the projected sale, and they would be denied pay for their labour. If the minister cannot answer the question now, I would ask him to do what he has promised to do in other cases, namely, to look into the matter to see whether there is not an injustice as far as these workmen are concerned, and that he give instructions to the department in Halifax, so that the men get their priority for wages, as should be their right.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to look into the situation. It relates to the Halifax office?

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Yes.

Sections 28 to 44 inclusive agreed to.

On section 45—Farmers.

The CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment in the second line of the clause, which will now read:

> Every individual whose chief source of income is farming or fishing . . .

Mr. LENNARD: Is any effort being made to simplify the form for farmers' income tax returns?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am assured that the officials are working day and night on it.

Mr. LENNARD: It does not come under the minister's jurisdiction?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is under National Revenue, but one of the senior officers in front of me assures me that they are working at it.

Mr. FAIR: I suggest that the officials could save themselves a good deal of time by greatly simplifying the forms, instead of putting so much work on them.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what they are trying to do.

Mr. FAIR: I hope they eliminate three-quarters of the questions. This section provides that on or before December 31 in each taxation year the taxpayer shall pay two-thirds of the tax as estimated by him at the rates for the year on his estimated taxable income for the year, or on his taxable income for the immediately preceding year. Is that something new?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. It has been the law. The only amendment is to extend it to fishermen as well as to farmers. The general treatment is the same. In contradistinction to most taxpayers, farmers do not have to make quarterly payments. They can wait until the year is over before paying the estimated amount of the tax, and the final payment is due on April 30 following.

Mr. FAIR: Has consideration been given to deducting from the farmer's income tax the amount he does not get for his produce, to which he is entitled?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think that is a matter which has been given consideration recently.

Mr. FAIR: It is about time it was considered.

Mr. GRAYDON: Many of us come in daily contact with farmers, and one of the difficulties is that those who are making the laws governing farmers do not know enough about agriculture to make those laws really applicable to people living on the land. The farmers throughout the dominion are always ready to obey the law. There are no more law-abiding people in the country. They want to do the right thing. At the same time, they have a perfect right to ask that they shall not be put into unnecessary straight-jackets by people who may not know anything about agriculture. That is the attitude which most farmers take toward many government regulations.

The government has gone into business extensively, in agriculture and other things, and it becomes more important than ever that the officials of the department, or those who are making these laws, should receive practical suggestions from bona fide farmers themselves. It is about time that the farmers themselves were allowed to make some suggestions as to how matters can best be worked out so far as their own business is concerned. It is not enough to go to a farmer who is a big operator. It is not always best to take advice entirely from someone who is not in the lower brackets of agriculture. The great bulk of the farming community is composed of people who are operating in small units. The department should seek advice of some of the smaller unit farmers in Canada, in order to see how this thing can best be worked out to the advantage of all.

These farmers come to members from time to time with many suggestions. The government departments are too far removed from the ordinary dirt farmers with regard to income tax forms and income tax levies. When a farmer, who has hardly enough time to do his ordinary work, is asked to go into big business almost and have his income tax return filled out in the same way as they are filled out by people who have bookkeepers, accountants and all that sort of thing, it is something that does not work with him. He needs something far simpler than that, or else he may have to go out of business. He cannot afford to carry a huge bookkeeping organization on the farm. He has enough trouble now to make ends meet without being faced with that necessity.

There must be a way out of this. I do not wish to be unnecessarily critical, but I should like to see if this government and parliament cannot get down to some kind of basis whereby the farmer will be able to find out what he is required to pay without going through all this terrible period of misery, one could almost call it, that those engaged in agriculture all over Canada must go through before they put in their income tax returns. I shall make a suggestion to the minister. This government spends a great deal of money on other things which are not nearly as important as this is. I think it would be a good thing for the minister to cut out some of this red tape and to bring here, at the expense of the government, a few dozen good small-unit farmers and get their advice with regard to what they think should be done in this matter. Having done that, the government should follow their advice, instead of that of some of these high-ranking officials who perhaps never saw a farm.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am glad my hon. friend brought this matter up, because the Department of Finance is not nearly as devoid as some may think of officials who have some interest and background in practical farming.

The assistant deputy minister of finance who sits in front of me here today, and who is in charge of taxation, was born and brought up on a farm. His brother still runs it; and it was his father's farm. The assistant deputy minister of justice, who sits in front of me today, was born and brought up in a little village in Saskatchewan. The brother of the deputy minister of finance still runs the family farm in Glengarry county, not far from here. Even the Minister of Finance himself was brought up in a small town, and lived on a farm from the time he was five years of age until he was thirteen. He learned to milk a cow; and, while it is true that he has not been in constant contact with the farming community, I can assure members of the committee that he knows something about the problems of the small farmer.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There was no income tax then.

Mr. ABBOTT: I just mention that to show that the department is not staffed by people who have not had some practical experience on the farm.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I follow that point up with the minister? I am terribly serious about this matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: So am I.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am not making a light suggestion to the minister, because every person representing an agricultural section of Canada is faced with this important problem. It is also important from the general point of view of our citizenry at large that the income tax form be reduced to some simple terms so that there will be satisfaction as between agriculture and the government which is collecting the taxes. While the minister and all his deputies may have been brought up on farms, so was I; and when I go back to the farm now, I find that there have been a great many improvements and a great many changes in agriculture. More than that, as somebody pointed out a little while ago, in those days—in my day and in the minister's—we had to master a great many other practical things on the farm, but we certainly did not have to spend as much time as the average farmer now must in making out the infernal income tax forms that only a Philadelphia lawyer could possibly understand. I ask the minister why he does not accept my suggestion, bring some dirt farmers here and get their views.

Mr. ISNOR: How about a few fishermen?

Mr. GRAYDON: The expenditure for that purpose, I would say, would be the best bit of expenditure the government has made. It is important that the good will of agriculture be obtained with respect to the income tax just the same as it is important that the good will of other sections of the population should be obtained. Do not be unreasonable about the matter. The farmers want to do the fair thing, but they want to do it in a way which is practical for them and for the government as well. I make that serious suggestion.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know my hon. friend is serious. He will recall that two or three years ago when the question of farmers' income tax returns first became a serious matter, the tax branch consulted the Department of Agriculture, called the farm organizations in, and discussed the matter at length. The net result was that a six-page form was produced, instead of a four-page one.

Mr. GRAYDON: You did not have one of the people I am now suggesting.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not suggesting this in a joking way. It is in the interests, not only of the farmers but of all the taxpayers, to have the forms as simple as possible. At the same time, the reasons that any income tax form is complex is in order to make the tax equitable. The simplest thing in the world is to make a flat percentage tax and say to the people that they will pay that tax, with no deductions for anything. But when you include deductions for depreciation, for medical expenses, for this and for that, then of necessity you get into a complicated form. That is what creates the difficulty. I am in complete agreement with my hon. friend that, whether it relates to the farmer, to the wage earner or anybody else, efforts should be made to have the forms just as simple as they can possibly be made.

Mr. QUELCH: I cannot believe that the officials who were responsible for drafting section 45 (a) can have had any experience whatsoever in grain farming. That section gives two alternatives, and they are both bad. Let me read the section:

> (a) on or before December 31 in each taxation year, two-thirds of the tax as estimated by him at the rates for the year on his estimated taxable income for the year or on his taxable income for the immediately preceding year.

Let us take the first one of those. He should estimate what his income will be and pay two-thirds by December 31. I think the minister more than anybody else will appreciate the difficulty farmers are having today in filling out their income tax forms. They are having plenty of difficulty in filling them out by April 30. Before a farmer can possibly estimate what his income will be, he will have to fill out that form. Therefore you are asking him to fill out that form—he does not have to mail it, but he must fill it out in order to find out what his income will be—in order that he may pay two-thirds of it by the end of December. I suggest that will be a difficult thing, because he will find it hard enough to have these forms completed by April 30. Then the section gives the following alternative:

> . . . or on his taxable income for the immediately preceding year . . .

That is, of course, absolute and utter nonsense. How can anybody suggest that the income of a farmer last year is a guide to what his income may be this year? If he is a grain farmer, for instance, last year he may have threshed forty bushels to the acre, which would give him a good income. This year he may be hailed out and have no income at all. How could the department possibly suggest that a return for last year will be any guide whatever as to his income this year? The returns vary from year to year. They vary from five per cent—

Mr. ABBOTT: That same thing applies with regard to other occupations. In other occupations an estimate has to be made at the end of the first quarter.

Mr. QUELCH: Yes. But the minister will admit that the farming industry is a difficult one. Especially is that true with regard to grain farming, because practically the whole return comes in, in the fall of the year. I will frankly admit that I have never sent in two-thirds at the end of the year. I did not even know that I was supposed to do that; and I doubt if one per cent of the farmers today realize that they are supposed to send in two-thirds of the amount of their tax at the end of the year. I have never been notified. I have regularly sent in my income tax in April. I have never received a letter from the taxation branch telling me I should have sent in two-thirds of the tax by the end of December. Why? Nor have I been charged interest, or at least I have never been notified that interest was being charged. Is it actually the law today that the farmer should sent in two-thirds of his tax by the end of December? If so, how many farmers are doing so? What is the penalty for not doing so? And if there is no penalty, why should the farmer do it? Certainly I think that point needs clarification. I do not know of a single farmer who sends in two-thirds of his tax by the end of December. They wait until April, and they do not feel very happy about sending it in even then.

So I suggest that the minister could very well wipe out that provision as far as farmers are concerned. I do not believe more than a very small fraction of the farmers are complying with it, and I think the minister will agree that they are finding it hard enough to have their income taxes paid by April. Why put in a clause which can do nothing more than irritate the farmers? You are just going out of your way to put in a little section to get them mad, just as you did when you put out that net worth statement. You got them so mad that you finally had to withdraw it. Do not wait until they get mad about this. The only reason they are not mad about it is that they do not know it is there. If you start trying to force the farmers to send in two-thirds of their tax by the end of December you will meet with just about the same kind of reception as you got when you sent out that net worth statement. So I suggest that it would be far better to withdraw this section and tell the farmers to have their income tax returns in by the end of April.

Mr. ABBOTT: This section has been in the act since 1943. I do not want to irritate the farmers any more than anyone else, but I do not think the farmer is entitled to any extraordinary or special treatment.

An hon. MEMBER: But he gets it.

Mr. ABBOTT: He gets it in many cases. The average taxpayer has to pay his tax by instalments. At the beginning of the year he has to estimate what his income will be, and he has to pay one-quarter of the tax at the end of the first three months, another quarter at the end of six months, another quarter at the end of nine months, and the balance by December 31. The farmer gets special consideration here. He does not have to pay any of his tax until the end of the calendar year, and then he has an option. He can estimate his tax on his estimated income and pay three-quarters of it, or he can take his last year's income and pay the tax on three-quarters of that, paying the balance by April 30. I think that is fair. We are deducting from the salary and wage earner day after day, month after month as he goes along. We require instalment payments by those who receive income from interest and dividends. We make lawyers and other professional men who are on a fee basis pay in quarterly instalments, and I think this is fair for the farmer. I do not believe the farmers of this country want special privileges.

Mr. QUELCH: They want some sense shown in these matters.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I am right in that; I believe I am.

Mr. QUELCH: There is all the difference in the world. You talk about someone in a secondary industry paying on a quarterly basis. The grain farmer does not get any return until the fall. If he had to make a quarterly return he would show certain expenses without any returns, and at the end of the half year he would show the same thing. His returns do not come in until the fall of the year.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know much about grain farming, but how many farmers in western Canada or elsewhere have not sold their crop by December 31?

Mr. QUELCH: There would be very few farmers who had not sold their wheat by December 31.

Mr. ABBOTT: And that is the first time the farmer has to make any payment.

Mr. QUELCH: But why ask him to make any payment then? Why not let it go until April?

Mr. ABBOTT: Because other people have started making their payments at the first of the year.

Mr. QUELCH: Let the minister answer this question, then. How many farmers are sending in two-thirds of their income tax by the end of the year?

Mr. ABBOTT: I could not say; that is not my department. I can say that the law is, and has been for five years, that the farmer should send in two-thirds of his tax at the end of the calendar year.

Mr. QUELCH: And they are not doing it, because they do not know the provision is there. Apparently the income tax branch have not notified them.

Mr. ABBOTT: Other income taxpayers know what the law is. I do not know why the farmer should not know about it. Special booklets are sent out explaining the law, and I believe the farmers are learning quickly.

Mr. QUELCH: Does the booklet in connection with farm income tell them they must pay two-thirds of their tax by the end of the year?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course it does.

Mr. QUELCH: But my point is that the farmers do not know about it. Perhaps they should, but they do not, and they are not sending in that percentage. The thing I cannot understand is why the income tax branch have not notified the farmers, when they receive their tax returns in April, that they should have sent in a certain percentage of the tax by the end of December. They are not doing so. I have never paid anything in December, and I did not know I had to. Nor have I ever received any notice from the income tax branch.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only explanation I can give is that, of course, there has been a tremendous increase in the number of returns. Until the assessors get at the returns and see what has been the record of payment, they do not appreciate or realize that an instalment payment has not been made. I think that situation will correct itself pretty soon, as the taxpayers realize their obligations. The only point I am making is that, if anything, this is a rule which works in favour of the farmer and fisherman as against other types of enterprise.

Mr. QUELCH: I do not think it does, because they are not comparable.

Mr. CHARLTON: I want to support wholeheartedly what has been said by the previous speaker. If the minister had been on a farm in the last few years when income tax forms had to be made out; if he had to keep the books which are necessary in order to make out those forms, I think he would be more willing to listen to our complaints in this regard. I have made out income tax forms for several years, and I never knew we were supposed to send in two-thirds of our tax by the end of December. I, in common with the last speaker, never received any notice. The farmer is the greatest gambler in this country. At the first of the year, when he plants his seed, he never knows whether he will get a crop, nor does he know what he will be paid for it. To ask him to make a payment in six months—

Mr. ABBOTT: Twelve months; he can wait until the end of the year.

Mr. CHARLTON: And in many cases at the end of the year he has not sold the crop.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then it goes into the next year, anyway, if he is on a cash basis. I do not know whether members of the committee appreciate it, but this is a part of the pay-as-you-go tax plan put into operation in 1943, when those earning salaries and wages were compelled to have a portion of those salaries and wages taken out each week or month, depending upon the pay period, as a tax payment. In the case of investors and businessmen, payment was to be on a quarterly basis. In the case of farmers and fishermen, they pay two-thirds at the end of the year, and then they have another three months in which to pay the balance. I do not know; perhaps my ideas of what is fair are all wrong, but it seems to me that is eminently fair and reasonable. Certainly if you contrast the farmer with the wage earner, the worker in the city, it is more than fair. The farmers may not know about it, but I cannot see that it is unfair.

Mr. QUELCH: But the wage earner gets his wage every week or every month. The grain farmer gets his returns at the end of the year, and he does not get any money until then. To say he should pay money each month would be utter nonsense.

Mr. JAQUES: I should like to support the remarks of the previous speakers with respect to this clause. I can assure the minister I have had a number of letters from farmer constituents of mine; and while no one likes to pay taxes, these letters express far greater objection to the nature of the form they have to fill out than to the tax itself. It is perfectly true that it has created a great deal of ill-feeling. We want to avoid ill-feeling where we can; but I can assure the minister that this feeling is widespread among farmers in the west, including those in my own riding. As I say, I have had many letters dealing with this matter.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): As other hon. members have said, I believe farmers who are eligible for taxation are prepared to pay it. But they are hesitant because, if they make returns, some smart mathematician who does not know anything about farming may trip them up. A farmer, who may have made out his return with the very best of intentions, will find himself in difficulty.

Another thing which bothers him is that it may be four or five years before he obtains a clearance for his return. No business, except the taxation branch, can be carried on in that way. I can see no reason in the world why returns should not be cleared in the calendar year in which they are filed; not four or five years later, at a time when a man cannot remember where he stood.

This government has socialism beat a mile. It is a partner in every enterprise that wins, but it is not a partner in the enterprise that loses. If a socialist government were to take office it would have to participate in the losses as well as in the gains. Farmers complain that in the years when they have good crops they are penalized, and they wonder why they should continue to produce. I think this form should be simplified.

Mr. ABBOTT: Hon. members will appreciate that most of the discussion would be more appropriate on the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue, because this matter concerns him primarily. It is not the concern of the Minister of Finance. While I do not wish to curtail discussion, it is not my personal responsibility to look after those matters, and I should think that hon. members might discuss them under the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. CHARLTON: This makes it necessary for the farmer to make out his income tax before December 30?

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not.

Mr. CHARLTON: To estimate two-thirds of his tax, he could not possibly do so without doing that. In effect it is asking him to make out two sets of forms in the same year —and one is bad enough. I would add, further, that I subscribe to what was said earlier with respect to having a farm background for inspectors. I would urge that any inspectors going out to farmers—

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member knows, of course, that this does not come within my department.

Mr. CHARLTON: I realize that; but it has been mentioned before and I should like to have my views on record. Inspectors going out to interview farmers should, by all means, have a farm background.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: While it is not the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to collect the tax, it is the responsibility of the minister and his department to see that taxes are assessed on a realistic basis. What has been said emphasizes the fact that income tax laws are not realistic when applied to farming. I would refer the minister to what happened in 1942 and 1943. In those years the government regulations prohibited farmers from delivering their grain. They were put on a quota basis, and were allowed to deliver five bushels per authorized acre. The remainder of the grain was held on the farms. In those years the farmer suffered a loss on the operation of his business, so far as cash income was concerned. Then in 1944 he was told to deliver all he could. The quota was opened up, and immediately the farmer was placed in the income tax brackets, through the income he had received in that one year.

I believe one would find a good deal of protest throughout the country, because the laws applying to farm incomes do not consider the peculiar nature of the occupation of farming as a business, as differentiated from other types of business, or even from the man who earns his income as an employee.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are allowed the five-year average.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes, I know the average is allowed. I think it will be found that at the present time many farmers are asking that the law be altered, so that they may make some kind of payment on their income tax when they deliver grain or other produce. It might be arranged so that, when the extent of their exemption is reached, a certain proportion might be taken from the receipts from their deliveries over and above that amount.

We can deal with the collection of income tax when we are discussing the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, but I do protest that the legislation respecting farm incomes is entirely out of line with the whole business of farming; and the farming community resents very much the present set-up.

Section agreed to.

On section 46—Other individuals.

Mr. TIMMINS: I should like to make a protest with regard to this section. Under the section it appears that every individual, with the exception of those to whom section 44 (2) and section 45 apply, must pay their income tax in four equal quarterly instalments on March 31, June 30, September 30 and December 31. If one does not pay the tax of those dates, interest is charged for the remainder of the year.

During the war the practice of requiring quarterly payments of income tax grew up. As I remember it, the arrangement was a voluntary one. It was with some considerable shock, therefore, that I learned the other day in committee that now the quarterly payment of the tax is compulsory, as is shown on the form which was shown to me by the Minister of National Revenue.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat was right when he said that the collection of the tax must be realistic. Speaking personally, I find it difficult to estimate the tax each quarter as I go along. I, for one, would like to be in a position to look at a little bit of money as I accumulate it before I have to pay it out. I believe the people of the country generally do not know that if they do not pay their tax payments at these quarterly instalment periods they must pay interest on that money at a rate of five or six per cent.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been four per cent in the past.

Mr. TIMMINS: The people should understand and should be told.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is four per cent until January 1, 1949.

Mr. TIMMINS: I do not think this a realistic procedure. People in this country are having a real struggle to pay income tax and to pay it almost before they get the money in their hands.

Mr. ABBOTT: That happens to every salary and wage earner.

Mr. TIMMINS: The salary and wage earners know what they are getting from day to day. Other people, including small merchants, people in business and those in the professions have a hard time to find out exactly what they get every three months. It seems to me that this is too harsh.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am familiar with the problem. When I was paying income tax from the practice of law I had the same difficulty the hon. member has described in estimating what my income would be over the year. Nevertheless I made my quarterly payments.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Chairman, from the way the minister has expressed himself I would suggest, with all deference, that the minister is probably a little too optimistic in his views about farmers. I was raised on a farm and have experienced the ups and downs of farming. I know there is a tremendous amount of uncertainty in all matters relating to farming, and in that respect the farmer is in an entirely different position. Consequently, in the matter of paying taxes he should be given the utmost consideration.

There are farmers with good land who have found just the right way to farm it and who, therefore get a good income every year, but other farmers three or four miles away who do not happen to have the same kind of land or perhaps do not work it the right way, or through no fault of their own, through hail or frost and other vicissitudes, get little or no income at all.

Take the area I live in. The farmers in some parts could not get on their land this year until after the 1st of June. Naturally they are in great uncertainty. No one can tell what they will be able to make. That is just one illustration. There is drought, disease, wind, insects and all that kind of thing entering into a farmer's life besides adverse prices and markets. Do not let the idea get abroad that farmers ought to be treated on the same basis as other producers in the country. The farmer's lot is, at the very best, a very hard and precarious one; that goes for the vast percentage, from seventy-five to eighty per cent, of the farmers throughout this land, and it is usually that seventy-five to eighty per cent who are the ones who are worried almost to death in making out income tax forms and struggling to clear themselves from a lot of official interference. It is these people about whom I am greatly concerned, not the few fortunate ones who are able to get along.

I say once more, let us be as considerate of our farmers as we possibly can be. A discussion took place in the house the other day as to why we had fallen down in butter production. One of the main reasons is the income tax structure. The farmer milks his cows at night after a long day's work, and again in the morning before a long day's work, and all of it is done in his overtime. To take the income which that man happens to make, perhaps a few hundred dollars, from the milking he does, and to add that to his income and increase his income tax accordingly, is just pure mismanagement of the nation's affairs. If we cannot talk that fact into the government, it will be knocked into the government by a deficiency in production, and by that time it will be too late, because the means will be out of the farmers' hands to produce such commodities as milk, butter, eggs, beef and pork. It is my settled opinion, after talking with a great number of farmers in my constituency and in other parts, that this uncertainty about production which is worrying us so much today is largely the result of the income tax regulations.

Mr. SINNOTT: I wish to thank the minister for the background that he has been good enough to give us today with respect to his officials. However, a lot of the trouble we are running into over the income tax forms is not the result of the officials in front of him but is due to a man named Brown, from Winnipeg, who was a former banker.

The income tax is complicated to the last degree, but the hon. member for Lethbridge has given a very good illustration of how it works out in practice. If the minister would go around my constituency with me and talk to the farmers he would find not dozens but hundreds of them who would tell him that the situation pointed out by the hon. member for Lethbridge is a true picture of the actual conditions.

The farmer is in a class by himself. He is not looking for special privileges. He keeps a few cows as a sideline and has to be up milking them at six o'clock in the morning before he goes out into the fields, and then milk them again at night after his day's work in the field. On many farms the children help with the milking. If something is not done to relieve the income tax burden on the farmers, production will be curtailed a lot more yet. We must be realistic and try to find the cause for decreased farm production. It is largely because of the income tax. Provision must be made to encourage production by giving the farmer and his children the same opportunity that other people have. The man who lives in a city and has five or six boys under sixteen very often has one of his boys peddling papers; another will be running errands for some store, and all of them have an opportunity of making a good many dollars on the side, which is never counted as part of the family income. But the farmer and his family are considered as one unit, and the father pays the penalty in increased taxation. Some change must be made in the income tax if the farmers are to be encouraged to produce more farm products.

Sections 47 and 48 agreed to.

On section 49—Payments on behalf of others.

Mr. MILLER: Subsection 2 requires the trustee to obtain a certificate from the minister before distributing any property under his control. Can the minister tell us what, if anything, is being done to expedite the issuing of these certificates? Until the certificate is issued, the final administration of an estate is held up, and there is need of a better system to speed up the issuance of certificates, particularly when one is paying a premium to a bonding company.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know the problem, for I used to encounter it myself. I know it sometimes took a long time to get a clearance certificate before one could distribute the assets. I am told by the official in front of me that every effort is made to get the certificates out as quickly as possible. But first, of course, the returns have to be assessed. We are trying to improve the system all the time.

Section 50 stands.

Sections 51 to 56 inclusive agreed to.

On section 57—Exemptions.

Mr. BRADSHAW: May I call the minister's attention to paragraph (h), dealing with mutual insurance corporations. In 1946 a tax was imposed on mutual fire insurance companies, the tax being thirty per cent of their earned surplus for the year. I consider that this clause works against the smaller companies. You have to build up your surplus according to the Ontario insurance act. We have to build up a surplus of eighty cents per $100 of insurance in force in order to guarantee our operations. The small mutual fire insurance company is in a field by itself. It does not go into commercial risks. It is only a farmers' mutual. Section 67 of the bill provides that a company may refund out of the yearly increase any surplus to its policyholders. On the face of it, this section would appear to give the farm mutuals the choice either of paying the income tax out of the yearly increase in surplus or of refunding the yearly surplus to their policyholders. On the other hand, the Insurance Act prohibits this. In fairness to the smaller companies, I should like to move an amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him? I am very familiar with the point he is making, because he has come to me with a delegation and has put it before me. The point he is making relates to section 67. This section gives complete exemption to certain types of corporations. Section 67 allows deductions from gross income on patronage dividends or refunds, or whatever it may be. Perhaps I am anticipating the amendment which my hon. friend proposes to make, but I know what he wants. He wants mutual insurance companies to be allowed to create reserves up to a certain limit, without having to pay taxes on the amount so placed in the reserve.

Mr. BRADSHAW: With all deference to the minister I think subsection 1 (h) should be amended and made a separate clause. It should read as follows:

A mutual insurance corporation in which the excess of assets over liabilities at the end of the taxation year in dollars per thousand dollars of net insurance in force at the same date is less than the amount set out in the following table:

When total net amount at risk exceeds	$25,000,000—	$ 6.00
When total net amount at risk exceeds	10,000,000—	7.00
When total net amount at risk exceeds	5,000,000—	8.00
When total net amount at risk exceeds	2,000,000—	10.00
When total net amount at risk exceeds	1,000,000—	20.00
When total net amount at risk is less than	1,000,000—	30.00

In excess of $25,000,000 risk, the company can have excess assets of $6 per $1,000 of net insurance in force without being liable to tax. Over that amount, the company would be liable for 30 per cent tax. I am not opposed to the insurance company paying taxes, but it has to build up its reserves in order to guarantee its survival.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I said, I am familiar with the point which my hon. friend is raising. I think I should say at the outset that his amendment is out of order. It increases the exemption clause of mutual insurance companies, and as such can be proposed only by a minister of the crown.

What the hon. member is suggesting is that in the case of mutual insurance companies they should be entitled to create reserves out of tax-free income up to the point required either by the bylaws or by the provincial legislation under which they are organized. That question has been carefully considered by myself and by my officials. I have not felt that that special exemption could be extended to these companies. I assure my hon. friend and the committee that I am thoroughly familiar with the problem. As to the specific amendment, I think I would have to take the stand that it is out of order because it is proposed by a private member.

Mr. MILLER: In support of the case that has been proposed by the hon. member, may I make a request of the minister? Unless the amendment, or some such amendment, is accepted by the minister, the section does discriminate against these smaller companies which must of necessity, to comply with the Ontario insurance act, refuse to pay out their earnings until they have resources to satisfy that act. In other words, a small company or a large company which already has sufficient reserves on hand can pay out to its policyholders the amounts that it has on hand and escape tax; but the others, the smaller companies which have not created those reserves, are of necessity bound to retain it in their hands, and must not pay it out. Therefore they are being deprived of the right of escaping from the payment of these taxes, and instead of keeping enough to build up these reserves they have to keep an extra 30 per cent to build up an equivalent reserve. I would make this request to the minister in support of what the hon. member said a moment ago. I would ask the minister to keep this subsection in mind until after the dinner recess, provided that we do not get finished, and then give it a little further thought to see if it cannot be amended.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have always an open mind on these matters. Let me say at once that this is a section to which I have given a great deal of thought. The problem is exactly that of the co-operatives, which have asked that reserves be established out of tax-free income up to the standard required either by provincial co-operative legislation or otherwise. I must say that, after the extensive consideration which I have given to this problem relating to the mutual insurance companies, I could not accept the amendment. I do not like to appear dogmatic, and I would not if it were not for the fact that I received these representations and if I had not considered them thoroughly. Perhaps it is not necessary for me to give all the reasons. It is an important question of policy, so that if any change were made I would make it as a budgetary change. As I see things now, I cannot grant the concession.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. It is perfectly in order for hon. members to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and ask for an amendment, or that consideration be given to it, but the amendment would be out of order on two grounds: first, as the minister has pointed out, it would affect the balance of ways and means. Second, I think hon. members should keep in mind the wording of the resolution which preceded the introduction of the bill, which read as follows:

> Mr. Abbott moved that the house go into committee of the whole at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:
> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to revise and consolidate the laws respecting the levying of income tax and administration thereof.

That does not make any provision for changing existing taxes.

I think hon. members are right in taking advantage of the opportunity to bring the matter to the attention of the minister, and ask that he give it consideration. I shall have to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. BRADSHAW: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. As president of an insurance company, I know this will be a hardship on the smaller companies. We do not know what our risk will be. Sometimes it may be $6,000; sometimes it may be $20,000. In my own company we have $5,000,000 of risk. We are running on twenty cents a hundred, and have our surplus of $40,000 in values. Suppose we make two cents a hundred, $2 on $100. On the $10,000 of our surplus every year we have that income. We may have a loss of $6,000. Say we have a surplus of $2,000. We pay $600 on the $2,000; but we may have a loss of $10,000 or $20,000, we do not know. It is not a corporation. I claim that a mutual fire insurance company is not a corporation, not a profit-making corporation.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): May I say a word in support of what the hon. member for Perth and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie have said? It seems to me that the net result of this taxation will be that some of the mutual fire insurance companies of the country will be taxed out of existence. Mutual insurance companies are in this peculiar position. With increasing values of farm stock and buildings, a considerable amount of increase in insurance has been placed on these farms. Should there be decreases in values in the future with losses occurring, they will be put in a serious situation. I am afraid it will put some of the smaller companies out of business.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister himself raised the question of co-operatives, but is he not in this legislation assisting them to build up reserves, by means which I need not mention in detail, and is that not substantially what this mutual company is asking for? I would hope, notwithstanding the fact that the minister says he has considered it, that he might consider it again.

Mr. ABBOTT: The provisions of this act extend to mutual insurance companies. Section 67 extends to mutual insurance companies and to any corporation. The only thing the section does is to exempt completely from income tax certain types of mutual insurance companies. There is no change in the law. It is the same law that has been in existence for two or three years. Section 67 may indirectly help mutual insurance companies along with other mutual corporations, but there is no change at all, and the essence of what is desired is to create reserves out of tax-free income. If that can be done under section 67, well and good. I do not know that it can, but that is the only section under which it can be done. As a general rule, that is not the principle followed in the taxation law.

Section agreed to.

On section 58—Trusts or estates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to point out something to the minister, and here I appeal not only to his open mind but to his open heart. It is connected with universities. I have no doubt he is familiar with the point I wish to raise. I refer to subsection 4 of this section. This, I think, is a change in the act working to the disadvantage of universities. I would remind the minister that universities are having greater and greater difficulty in collecting funds, and greater and greater difficulty by reason of added expenses. As I understand the situation there is now being introduced a change whereby income which is not payable during the year to a beneficiary is taxable, whereas in the past income could be accumulated for the benefit of universities and not be taxed during the year, provided that it was being accumulated for a charitable purpose.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not clear as to the facts my hon. friend has in mind, but there is no change in the law from what it has been for several years. The arrangement is different; the words may be transposed; but there is no change in the law; and the effect of the law, since the Burns case, which was referred to in the committee, is that one cannot accumulate moneys in a charitable trust and pay them over at a later date to charity. The money must be paid year by year as the revenues are earned, in order to benefit by the exemption. There is no change as a result of this bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am perplexed, because the statement I have here is that the bill abandons the use of the term "for the benefit of unascertained persons" and substitutes language which seems wider, namely, income . . . as was payable in the year to a beneficiary. My understanding, and I thought I had confirmed it, is that this does so change the law as to work a hardship on universities and other charities.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is difficult to argue legal interpretation in committee, but I am assured by the assistant deputy minister of justice that there is no change in the law. The old section provided that income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unascertained persons or persons with a contingent interest shall be taxable in the hands of the trustee. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no change in the law with respect to the income of trustees.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Suppose income is being accumulated for the purpose of a university; the use of the phrase 'unascertained persons" would not, I take it, include universities.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But now it says, "income . . as was payable in the year to a beneficiary."

Mr. ABBOTT: What section is my hon. friend referring to?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am referring to section 58 subsection 4.

Mr. ABBOTT: Would my hon. friend mind stating the point again?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does the minister agree that the use of the term, which is in the old act, "for the benefit of unascertained persons" would not include a university or a charity for which the money was being accumulated? As I understand the law, it was only when it was for the benefit of unascertained persons that a tax was payable 'on it year by year in the hands of trustees as it was accumulated, whereas now the wording is broader and it is taxable unless it is payable in the year to a beneficiary.

Mr. ABBOTT: The relevant section under 11, which is the old section, was 11 (2), which taxed income accumulating in trust for the benefit of unascertained persons or persons with contingent income, which was taxable in the hands of the trustees.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I stop the minister there and ask whether he thinks that, under that, income in trust, accumulated for the eventual benefit of a charity, would be taxable?

Mr. ABBOTT: I was going on to say that subsection 4 of the old section provided that income received by an estate or trust and capitalized shall be taxable in the hands of the executors or trustees, or other like persons, acting in a fiduciary capacity. Those two sections have been combined in the new law, but there is no change in the law.

Sections 59 to 108 inclusive agreed to.

On section 109—Garnishment.

Mr. BARRETT: I understand that the onus is put on the employer to pay taxes which the employee may be owing, even though those taxes accrued while the employee was working for another man. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that, as is the case in other similar circumstances, where a man has incurred a tax liability for the previous year and then goes to work for a new employer, a garnishee for his past indebtedness may be placed in the hands of the new employer. That can happen to any person who is indebted for past due obligations. The man for whom he is working at the present time can have a garnishee order put in his hands and the salary attached.

Mr. LOCKHART: Then he will quit.

Mr. BARRETT: The garnishee would more or less be a court order. This matter was drawn to my attention by a farmer in my own constituency. In perfectly good faith he engaged the services of a man this spring. The other day he received a letter from the income tax branch saying that this man was in default in the amount of $300 or $400 and that the employer—the farmer who employed him—would be held liable if he paid this man any part of his wages. The income tax branch did not say what percentage of the man's wages the farmer was to hold back, or whether he was supposed to pay the whole thing. The effect would be that if he refuses to pay this man any part of the wages that he engaged to pay him, the man will just quit and go somewhere else. It seems to me that the onus ought to be put on the man himself in some way, so that he understands the position in which his employer is put.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall have to discuss that matter with the officials, but I am not familiar with the practice there. The enabling provision here is the usual enabling provision which has been in the act for some time. It may be that the practice in handling these matters could be improved, so that both the employer and the employee whose wages have been seized could be more promptly and accurately advised as to just what their respective liabilities were. I shall be glad to take that up with the departmental officials and see if that can be accomplished.

Mr. MILLER: As the minister knows, most garnishees apply just to what is in at the time of the service of the writ of garnishment, but this is a future attachment. Is any provision made whereby a man working for wages would have anything at all to live on, or is the whole thing taken?

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand that in most provinces—and I know it is the case in my own—only a certain portion of the man's wages or salary can be attached. That rule would apply to income tax liability the same as to any other. I do not know what the practice is in my hon. friend's jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER: The section does not say that. It says that the employer must pay over all his earnings. That is in subsection 3 of section 109. That seems to be pretty tough on the man's wife and family.

Mr. ABBOTT: In the section provision is made.

Mr. MILLER: The department may stipulate the amount.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right, I am told that the reason for doing that is that it is only in the province of Quebec that a fixed amount is stipulated beyond which the employee's salary cannot be garnisheed.

Mr. MILLER: What is the practice?

Mr. ABBOTT: This gives to the minister the right to extend the same sort of treatment that is obligatory by law in some jurisdictions.

Mr. MILLER: What I am trying to get at is this. What is the practice?

[Mr. Barrett.]

Mr. ABBOTT: The practice is to take only a relatively small portion.

Mr. BARRETT: As I understand the situation from this man who was speaking to me, no stipulation at all was made in the letter. No amount or no portion of the man's wages was mentioned.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend will give us the particulars of the case, we shall have it looked into at once.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Where an employer discovers that one of his employees has not discharged his responsibility with regard to income tax payment, is it not possible to avoid the necessity of going through the form of garnishment and attachment? Is it not possible for the department to notify the employer that he must pay to the receiver general any moneys payable to the individual concerned? In this particular case the individual has pay for three weeks' holidays owing to him, which is almost sufficient to discharge his obligation of $200 or $300 with regard to unpaid income taxes during the year. Could the department not demand of the employer that any moneys held to the credit of the employee be used to discharge his obligation? What I am trying to get at is this. In order to avoid the necessity of going through garnishment and attachment, could that not be done?

Mr. ABBOTT: The so-called garnishment is effected by a letter from the minister. I am told that in practice it is usually worked out by voluntary arrangements; the employer, the employee and the department agree that an amount which is reasonable be paid over each week or each month, as the case may be, in satisfaction of this liability.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): When it so happens that there is sufficient money to discharge the obligation, and when the employee is now out of the employment of the employer and the employer has that money which is due to the employee for holiday pay, is it not possible for the department to collect the whole of the debt?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should think, under those circumstances, it should collect the whole thing.

Mr. McMASTER: What is the practice with regard to people who go to work transitorily, work maybe for a week in Canada and then leave the country? I refer to somebody coming in here, making perhaps $2,000 or $3,000 in a week's work and then leaving the country. In the United States I believe means are available for collecting income tax at the time.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would depend upon the circumstances. Under section 44, subsection 1, there would be a deduction of 15 per cent by the employer, or the person in Canada paying the wages, fees or commissions, which would be remitted to the receiver general. That would be on the assumption that the employee was a non-resident.

Mr. McMASTER: I thought that was only with regard to dividends, interest and royalties.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend will look at section 44, subsection 1, he will find that it reads in this way:

> Every person paying salary or wages or other remuneration to an officer or employee, a superannuation or pension benefit, a retiring allowance, an annuity payment, director's fee or fees, commissions or other amounts for services . . . shall deduce or withhold therefrom such amount as may be prescribed . . .

It is now 15 per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: If the taxpayer finds that he must employ outside help in order to keep his books, is he allowed to deduct the money he pays for that purpose as an expense from his income? The reason I ask the question is this. While technically the money is not spent in earning the income, the man would not be free to devote himself to earning income, likely at a much higher rate, if he had to keep track of his own accounts so that he would be able to fill out his income tax return at the proper time. I should like the minister to answer whether or not he is allowed to deduct those expenses as a legitimate item.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would depend. If he is in business, he is entitled to deduct his bookkeeping expenses, the same as any other expenses. If he was purely an investor; if he simply holds stocks and bonds, I do not think he is entitled to the cost of keeping a record of his investment receipts.

Mr. JACKMAN: It seems absurd that he is not allowed to do so, because if he has to keep a double-entry system himself, as he must if he is to keep accurate books, he will have to devote much of his time to that type of work; whereas he is much better employed, from the standpoint of the treasury as well as himself, if he sticks to his own knitting and lets somebody else do that piece of work which is perhaps not directly attributable, as I pointed out in my explanation, to bringing in the income.

I hope the minister will give consideration to that point, because a great many people find they cannot look after their own books. They do not know how to do double-entry bookkeeping, to begin with, so that if they are to know where they stand, particularly in relation to the revenue department, they must employ outsiders to keep their books for them. Surely that is a legitimate expense which they should be allowed. Otherwise a man must take his own time to do the work and cannot earn as much; so he would not be in as high a bracket for the purposes of the income tax branch as would be the case otherwise.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have no doubt there would be cases in which that would be appropriate. It is a little hard to give an opinion on a hypothetical set of facts. Each case would have to be dealt with on its own merits.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In regard to indebtedness for income tax, where a taxpayer may be indebted to the government, or the government may think he is indebted, a number of taxpayers have complained that there seems to be no cut-off date. Recently a farmer drew to my attention the fact that he had been asked to send in a return for 1940. All his receipts had been burned. He had no income tax to pay that year and he made no return. Now he can make no statement of his expenses and practically no statement as to his income. Is there any cut-off date at all in the act, beyond which the government does not collect income tax? Surely, if a man is not assessed within eight years it should be assumed that he is not to be taxed.

Mr. ABBOTT: No date is fixed for the filing of a return. A date is fixed after which the return which has been filed may not be reassessed.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But there is no date beyond which a person may not be asked to file a return?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. Theoretically one who has not filed returns could be asked to go back as far as 1917, when the act came into force.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If there were such a cut-off date it would do away with a great deal of difficulty on the part of those who find themselves asked by the officials of the department to send in returns after eight or nine years. Surely some date should be placed in the act, which would relieve a person of the worry of such a thing after a long period of time, particularly in areas where it is practically understood that the average person had no income tax to pay, and where he had been informed by the papers and even by statements of government officials that if he were not taxable he did not have to send in a return.

Mr. ABBOTT: This is not in my department, of course, but I am told that in practice the department does not ask for returns for previous years unless it has strong reason to suspect that a tax return should have been filed.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I would still suggest that a date be put in.

Section agreed to.

On section 110—Seizure of chattels.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has this been in the act previously?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. There is nothing new in this clause at all.

Mr. QUELCH: Does the minister not think a ten-day limit is rather short? It is all right in districts where a person is close to the post office, or where there are good roads. As the minister is aware, however, there are many areas, especially in western Canada, where at times it is almost impossible to traverse the roads to reach the post office. I know in my part of the country there are times when we do not get our mail for two weeks, or sometimes three. As a result, people may find that the government will be seizing their chattels. That is true of ordinary mail. It is even more true of registered mail. Your neighbour may bring out your regular mail in the ordinary course, but he would not be able to bring out a registered letter, which would have to wait until you went for it. Could the period not be extended, say to three weeks? In the latter part of the winter, especially, roads are often blocked for two or three weeks, and they are often impassable during the first month of spring. This year, for example, many roads and bridges were washed out. A man might easily be three weeks getting his mail, and he would not have any knowledge that a notice of this kind had been sent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that this is rarely if ever applied. It is a protective section put in to enable the tax department, if they have some reason to think a taxpayer may be disposing of his chattels with a view to avoiding payment of tax, to allow a short delay within which he must pay, and then attach the chattels. But I am told by the officials before me that it is rarely if ever used.

On section 119—Offences.

The CHAIRMAN: An amendment was made by the committee to this section. Shall I read the amendment?

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We would like to have it, please.

The CHAIRMAN: The section was amended in committee to add the following as subsection 3:

(3) Where a person has been convicted under this section of failing to comply with the provisions of this act or a regulation, he is not liable to pay a penalty imposed under section 51, section 122, or section 117 for the same failure unless he was assessed for that penalty or that penalty was demanded from him before the information or complaint giving rise to the conviction was laid or made.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 120 to 124 inclusive agreed to.

On section 125—Artificial transactions.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister give some explanation of this section? I believe the suggestion has been made by the Canadian Tax Foundation—

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is the next section.

Mr. GREEN: I know they are complaining of both sections 125 and 126. Apparently the suggestion has been made that already there are sufficient checks in other sections of the act to prevent the evasion which is supposed to be covered by section 125.

Mr. ABBOTT: Subsection 3 was put in as a result of representations made by the tax foundation and others.

Mr. GREEN: Under subsection 3 the onus is on the taxpayer, is it?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. GREEN: The taxpayer would have to show that the transaction—

Mr. ABBOTT: Was bona fide; but presumably he would have no difficulty in doing so.

Section agreed to.

On section 126—Tax avoidance.

Mr. ABBOTT: An amendment was made to this clause in committee, and I promised to give consideration to a further amendment before the bill was considered by the committee of the whole. The amendment made by the banking and commerce committee inserted the word "main" in the second line of the section, so that it will read:

Where the treasury board has decided that one of the main purposes for a transaction or transactions effected before the coming into force of this act was avoidance or reduction of taxes . . .

In committee I suggested that I might be prepared further to amend this section by putting the word "improper" before "avoidance or reduction", so that it would read, "was improper avoidance or reduction of taxes". I am prepared to ask one of my colleagues to move such an amendment. In order to give effect to the amendment, however, I would add a further subsection as subsection 6, which would read:

An avoidance or reduction of tax may be regarded as improper for the purposes of this section although it is not illegal.

The reason for the amendment is that the word "improper" might be interpreted as meaning "illegal". The evil which this section seeks to correct is that by legal but rather devious means an avoidance or reduction of tax may be accomplished which should not be accomplished. In its present form the section has been in the act since, I think, 1943. It came in, in wartime. It was in the act in another form before that, and in its present form it came in, in 1943. I am prepared, according to the undertaking I gave, to ask one of my colleagues to move this further amendment.

Mr. HACKETT: I am going to say just a few words about this section, because it seems to me that it goes much farther than even the rapacity of the tax gatherer can justify. The language is simple, it makes a crime of seeking a reduction in one's income tax. We discussed this matter at some length in the banking and commerce committee. I assume that the law will be fairly interpreted and that it will be applied, as we believe all our laws are, with justice and with the utmost care. But why it should be suggested that a person who seeks, under the law, a reduction in his income tax is a person concerning whom a direction may be made, is a little difficult to understand.

The wording of 126 (1) is:

Where the treasury board has decided that one of the—

And the minister has suggested an amendment.

—purposes for a transaction or transactions effected before or after the coming into force of this act was avoidance or reduction of taxes—

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The word "improper" was added.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

—improper avoidance or reduction of taxes that might otherwise have become payable under this act . . .

And so on. He suggests that the word "improper" be defined; and "improper", as I understand the amendment, is not to be interpreted as "illegal". The transaction may be legal and still be improper. I suggest that this is not only putting the court in a difficult situation but admitting the inability of parliament to enact effective legislation. It places in the hands of treasury board the power to write a direction whenever it wishes; because the only condition of such a direction is that the taxpayer shall seek a reduction in taxes which treasury board may call improper, but which is not illegal.

I regret very much to see legislation go on the statute books which gives to officialdom the right to penalize where there is no illegality; and that is the position which the committee is now being asked to assume. It is more or less fashionable these days to abuse officials and refer to them as bureaucrats. Be that as it may, this section is an evidence of a desire to have one's way, despite the law. It is a statement by parliament that officialdom shall reign, whatever the law says. That, Mr. Chairman, is a further encroachment upon fundamental liberties and civil rights which the House of Commons should resent.

We have gone through a number of sections hastily this afternoon, more hastily than wisdom would dictate. But when we are blandly asked to enact legislation which, regardless of its meaning, says, "Somebody is going to have the right to penalize you and to issue a document which, when it goes before the tribunal which revises these matters, may not be revised"—because the appeal board has no right to revise a direction—then I say we are going too far.

I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops:

That section 126 in the bill be deleted and that section 32A in the old act be substituted therefor.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are repeating what took place in the committee on banking and commerce. I must congratulate the hon. member for Stanstead. He is in his best oratorical form this afternoon and has just made a most impressive presentation of the evils of this section.

Mr. JACKMAN: It deserves it.

Mr. ABBOTT: Those of us who were in the house in 1943, however, will recall equally clearly the speech made by the then minister of finance, in which he pointed out the evils of tax evasion, and the advantage which was being taken of loopholes in the law which it had been impossible to foresee, and which necessitated the introduction of this section.

I shall not attempt to repeat the arguments put forward at that time or those which I offered the other day in the committee on banking and commerce. But I wish to say this, that the resourcefulness of those who wish to avoid or to reduce their taxation liability is practically unlimited. One tries as best one can to keep plugging up the loopholes in the income tax legislation; but it is not quite possible to keep up with the resourcefulness of individuals such as I have described.

I have agreed to the insertion of the word "improper", which is the only change from the existing section 32A. In effect the section as it now appears in the bill—

Mr. HACKETT: Plus the limitation of the word "improper".

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend wishes me to withdraw my amendment I shall withdraw it. The section would then be in exactly the same terms as section 32A. The amendment has been proposed because I wish to meet the views held by members of the committee that the section does authorize broad powers. But the purpose the section is intended to achieve is an important one. In these days when we are taxing the wages and salaries of people with small incomes I think we should have every necessary weapon to prevent avoidance or the reduction of taxation by the more well-to-do taxpayers. That is the reason for this section.

I am quite prepared to have my colleague propose the amendment I have suggested; but if the committee does not want that, we shall go back to the wording of section 32A.

Mr. HACKETT: I ask you to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: We are dealing with clause 126.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, when the house rose at six o'clock I was about to discuss this section a little more in detail. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, has found that I have injected a little enthusiasm into my utterances. I can tell him that there are some things which do arouse me. When I see what seems to me to be a challenge to law and to order and to the very basis of our system of government, the British system, a system evolved by the British, a system which we helped to develop; when I see what I consider not only a challenge but a violation of the supremacy of law, I do become disturbed.

My hon. friend has suggested an amendment to the income tax bill which will subject the taxpayer to the direst penalties, although he may not have broken the law. To achieve that purpose, the minister has worded the law in such a way that any person who seeks a reduction in the tax—

Mr. ABBOTT: An improper reduction.

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend says, "an improper reduction". Let it be said that he has inserted a clause defining "improper" in a way that makes it clear that "improper" does not mean "illegal". "Impropriety" as used in the amendment does not mean "illegality", whatever else it may mean. The result is that we have a law which, although not broken, may subject a person who has acted within it to a fine and to the payment of taxes that are not exigible under the law.

That is a matter which arouses a great deal of trepidation in anyone who is attached to and appreciates the real significance of what we have been pleased to call the rule of law. This section is a direct attack upon the rule of law; it is a violation of it. It says that if an individual, in the view of the treasury board, has sought a reduction of taxes—

And hon. MEMBER: An avoidance.

Mr. HACKETT: No, not avoidance only; a person who seeks avoidance or a person who does not seek avoidance but who seeks a reduction improperly is liable to the sanctions of the section. But "improperly" does not mean "illegally". So it means that a person who seeks a reduction legally may be prosecuted.

This means that we are reverting to the Star Chamber method. It means that the taxpayer of this country who happens to be out of favour with the authorities who man the treasury board may be made a criminal without breaking the law, may be punished and fined a large amount although not without the law. I say to this committee that this is a most serious departure from everything that we have believed existed in this country, of everything about which we have boasted in this country.

We all sit here very quietly. Most of us are anxious to get away. We have been here since last December. We are weary; we are anxious; we are overburdened; but here we are, most of us unaware of the, I was going to say, irretrievable step that we are taking. Most of us appear to be completely apathetic. Do we realize that we are putting back into the hands of an element entirely beyond the control of parliament, rights, privileges and prerogatives which were wrested from uncontrolled authority centuries ago?

Liberty is something that cannot be toyed with. We have not had it very long in this country, and we have seen it seriously violated in the last few years, so much so that a great deal of the time of this house, the time of this committee and the time of the united nations has been spent in discussing human rights and elemental freedoms. Yet, without apparent interest and with complete apathy, this house is writing into our taxing law an iniquitous invasion of private rights and of human freedoms.

Mr. ABBOTT: This section has been in the law since 1943, and the proposed amendment I would think makes the section less objectionable from my hon. friend's point of view.

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend was very patient with me. I wish he would not say that this section has been in the law since 1943, because that is a complete inaccuracy.

Mr. ABBOTT: All right. The section which is proposed in this bill is somewhat less objectionable, I would think, from my hon. friend's point of view than the section which has been in the law since 1943. The section which has been in the law since 1943, section 32A, provides:

> Where the treasury board is of the opinion that the main purpose for which any transaction or transactions was or were effected . . . was the avoidance or reduction of liability to tax, it may, if it thinks fit, direct that such adjustment . . .

The proposed section in the bill is:

> Where the treasury board has decided that one of the main purposes for a transaction or transactions effected before or after the coming into force of this act was . . .

And I am suggesting "improper avoidance of a tax." That has been in the law since 1943 in a form which I think is somewhat more rigorous than the form I am suggesting here. It was put into the law because of a fact which we discovered. There were these elaborate schemes for tax avoidance which were difficult, if not impossible, to spell out in the law itself. I think there have been only three or four cases in which this section has been availed of, but I remember one case very well where, by a combination of three or four companies set up in Nassau and Panama, and one or two other places, a Canadian resident was able to avoid legally the payment of some $2 million tax. This section was availed of to bring that taxpayer before the treasury board to show cause why he should not pay these taxes. It was not taken any further; the taxes were paid. It was legal; but on any basis of justice, fairness, or whatever adjective one wants to use, that Canadian resident should not have been able to avoid payment of that $2 million of taxes.

I have asserted this before; I assert it again, and my predecessor has done the same thing, that no person, by using the loopholes which the law may offer, should be able to avoid the payment of his just share of the responsibilities for carrying the burden and the costs of carrying on the business of the country.

One may say, if it is legal, if it complies with the formal requirements of the law, then he should be able to do so. Well, perhaps so; but in the light of experience, it was found that a section of this kind was essential if practices of the kind which I have indicated were to be prevented.

There is an appeal from the findings of the treasury board in this matter to the Exchequer Court of Canada. The exchequer court can hear any evidence it sees fit to hear, can review the findings of treasury board and can come to the conclusion that one of the main purposes of the transactions involved was not the avoidance or reduction of taxation. So far as I am personally concerned, I think it is a section which should stay in the law, and I am proposing it for that reason.

As I have said, a corresponding section, one perhaps somewhat less rigorous from the lawyer's point of view, has been in the law for five years. I will ask one of my colleagues to move the amendment which I have suggested, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that is as far as I am prepared to go in connection with the section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to add a word or two on this subject. The minister has made a clever speech—

Mr. ABBOTT: An honest speech.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): —putting forward a view of this principle which it is awfully easy to accept. I believe that I dislike as much as anybody people who resort to clever devices within the law to escape income tax. I believe that we should have the best and ablest people in the service of the government to defeat these things. On the other hand, to say that, it seems to me, is a whole world different from saying you are going to give to certain people a power above the law. That seems to me to lead us into a situation to which there is no end. I said the other night in committee, and I repeat, that if we could be sure that we would have a man like the Minister of Finance always administering a law such as this I would have very little fear of it. But many people in Canada know, as I know, that there has been in this country a government inspired by vindictiveness almost beyond belief in taxing, so that decent people went in fear of, one might say their lives, because an extreme law was used in a vindictive way.

There is no exaggeration in what the hon. member for Stanstead has said, that once people are given power above the law, one does not know where it stops. The case which the minister gave, of course one hates; but we are setting one case of that kind against the unlimited number of other cases which might be affected in the circumstances in which it has been set up.

Let us look at another thing. The minister says that this was set up in 1943. He says it has been used four times since then.

Mr. ABBOTT: Do not hold me to the number. I know of four cases.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is what the official said the other night. I remember that, because I was so struck with it that this had happened so seldom. Incidentally, I think that is a great tribute to the honesty of the taxpayer.

Mr. ABBOTT: Or the effectiveness of the section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let us go back to what we are actually doing. It has been said much better than I can say it by a learned judge administering the law that you cannot begin to say what is the spirit of the law. You are either within the law, or you are without the law. Once you leave that, it seems to me that you are exactly out on the uncharted sea which the hon. member for Stanstead has told us about.

Before I take my seat I want to say just one thing. To me, as to the hon. member for Stanstead, it is disturbing to a degree, first of all to find the minister, for whom we all have great respect, taking this so lightly; to have other people in the house whose hearts I respect though not always their heads, taking the view that, just because you will occasionally have a sharp and, to my mind, an unworthy kind of man, who tries to sail close to the wind, and who will get an advantage in spite of all the able officials that we shall have, get an advantage which will be very shortlived because the law will be very quick in overtaking him, for that reason we are to maintain this section which was put in as a war measure; and we are to go on doing this in the name of fairness. We are to do this thing which takes us back to the powers the hon. member has referred to, and which I think were summarized in the old days by saying that the law depended on the length of the chancellor's foot. In other words, the law was not known; it was made by the feelings of the man who administered it. When you have good men doing that it is bad enough; but when you have bad men doing it, as you may have one day, then there is no limit to the evil.

Mr. FULTON: As the hon. member who has the honour of seconding the amendment moved by the hon. member for Stanstead, I wish to say a few words on this section. First, it seems to me, from what the minister has said just now and before the dinner recess, that his position with respect to this section, and to the amendment which he has moved, is based on the principle that legislation should be drafted on the basis that there are a few fraudulent people in the country who will take advantage of every loophole. That is a proposition of fact, the belief in the existence of those few fraudulent people, which may or may not be true. But my first quarrel with the principle and with the practical application of this section is that that is a false proposition on which to base legislation, because I think our law should not be made for people such as that. Our law must be made to benefit the honest majority.

Mr. ABBOTT: This section does not affect the honest majority.

Mr. FULTON: This section does affect the honest majority in spite of what the minister says, because it is applied to the honest majority just as much as it is applied to the fraudulent few, if there be those fraudulent few who seek to take advantage of the law. That is an inherent weakness in much of the law we find in the country today, and I believe, as strongly as I can believe anything, that our income tax law especially, which applies to every person in the land, must be so designed as to meet the case of the average taxpayer who dislikes paying taxes. That is a healthy sign, for it would be unfortunate for the country if we reached the point where people liked paying taxes.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a long way off.

Mr. FULTON: Our law must be designed to meet the case of the average taxpayer, who is not fraudulent, and must not be so designed, on a general basis, that in order to catch the occasional few we put ourselves in the position of doing injustice to the honest majority. But that is the position in which this section puts us because, as the hon. member for Stanstead pointed out, it places the treasury board and the enforcing officials beyond the ordinary law. It puts them in the position of making the law, and it is not this House of Commons that makes the law.

The house makes the law and the treasury board says, it does not matter what the law is; it does not matter whether you have followed the law, whether you have done even those things which the minister himself, in the banking and commerce committee, said were perfectly legal; because you have done them, we say you have done them for an improper purpose and we hold you liable.

Because I believe that is a false principle on which to proceed; because I am of the opinion that if there be loopholes that can be taken advantage of it is better to go on plugging the loophole until eventually we arrive at something that is as near perfection as we can achieve, instead of leaving the loopholes wide open and leaving it to the discretion of the treasury board to plug those loopholes as it sees fit—because I so believe, I have pleasure in seconding the amendment and shall vote for it when it is put to the vote.

Mr. JAENICKE: I cannot agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Stanstead and the hon. member for Kamloops. In fact I suggest to the minister that he drop the amendment and leave the language as it is, because in my opinion "improper avoidance" implies proper avoidance, and I cannot imagine that there could be a proper avoidance brought about by some taxpayer purposely scheming to avoid taxation. And that is all this section means. I think it is proper and necessary. What about the millions of other taxpayers who make their returns properly and without scheming to avoid or even cause a reduction in their taxation?

Mr. FULTON: They are as much subject to this as anyone else.

Mr. JAENICKE: I agree with the minister that no honest taxpayer need fear the section. I think we should pass the bill as it is.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering section 126, and I have an amendment that the clause be amended by substituting certain words. The hon. member for Stanstead has also moved an amendment, and in order to keep the procedure straight—

Mr. HACKETT: An amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TIMMINS: Perhaps you would read the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HACKETT: If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, my amendment is there. The minister said he was going to get one of his colleagues to move his amendment, but it has not yet been moved.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. I had assumed that when I had completed my explanatory remarks the amendment would be moved, and technically my hon. friend is quite correct. My amendment has not been moved, and in the circumstances I will not move it for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN: When the minister spoke this afternoon he said that one of his colleagues would move the amendment, and I wrote Mr. Fournier's name at the top of it. However, the minister says the amendment has not been formally moved. I understand that there is an amendment moved by the hon. member for Stanstead to the effect that clause 126 be deleted and that section 132A of the former act—

Mr. HACKETT: It is 32A (1).

The CHAIRMAN: —be inserted in its place. All those in favour of the amendment will please say "yea."

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In regard to this amendment, it seems to me that one appeal this evening was made on the ground that this was contrary to some of the principles of British law. As a layman, I would say that one of the basic principles of British law, as I understand it from my study of history and of government, is that it shall give justice to all and that it will prevent, if possible, the avoidance of what is intended by the law. Section 126 as it stands is a measure on the part of the government to prevent evasion and to give justice. If there is any weakness, my hon. friends to the right seem to think it is by reason of the fact that the treasury board is given certain powers to direct. Under section 5 of this bill, the exchequer court is available to everyone. That being so, I do not see what basis there is for the charge that this is Star Chamber legislation.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. CASSELMAN: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Hackett) negatived on division.

Mr. ABBOTT: I indicated that I would ask to have an amendment moved, and no doubt the Minister of Public Works will be glad to move the amendment you have in your hand, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by Mr. Fournier (Hull) that clause 126 be amended:

1. By substituting the expression "improper avoidance or reduction of taxes" for the expression "avoidance or reduction of taxes" in the fourth line of subsection 1 thereof.

2. By substituting the expression "improper avoidance or reduction of taxes" for the expression "the avoidance or reduction of tax" in the third line of paragraph (b) of subsection 5 thereof.

3. By adding the following subsection thereto:

(6) An avoidance or reduction of tax may be regarded as improper for the purpose of this section although it is not illegal.

Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. FULTON: On division.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 127 to 130 inclusive agreed to.

On section 131—Application of this act.

The CHAIRMAN: I may point out that section 131 was amended by the committee by adding in the last line after the word "are" and before the word "applicable" the words "unless otherwise specifically provided".

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 50.

On section 50—General.

Mr. FULTON: I appreciate very much the generosity of the committee in allowing this clause to stand this afternoon while I had to be in another committee meeting. I shall try to keep my remarks within short compass. The effect of section 50 is to increase the rate of interest for the penalty for late payment of taxes from four to six per cent in one case and from six to seven per cent in the other.

Mr. ABBOTT: In committee it was amended to seven per cent. That remains unchanged.

Mr. FULTON: It was six to eight per cent. It was amended in the banking and commerce committee and it is six to seven per cent.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I agreed to that amendment.

Mr. FULTON: We have this position, then. If a taxpayer completes his assessment, sends it in with a cheque in full for the amount of the tax which he has assessed, some months later the department, having reviewed his assessment, may send him out a notice of the revised assessment and notify him that he has underpaid the tax as the department has assessed it; and then he is liable to pay interest at six per cent for the period in which the tax has been underpaid.

Mr. ABBOTT: With a limit of twenty months.

Mr. FULTON: With a limit of twenty months maximum interest penalty. The maximum of twenty months applies to the time the department has been in arrears. If his assessment is not received for more than twenty months—

Mr. ABBOTT: After twenty months interest ceases to run.

Mr. FULTON: —interest ceases to run after that time. But the point is that even though it may be the fault of the department, owing to its inability to make the revised assessment in time, the taxpayer still has to pay interest. The interest is raised now to six per cent, whereas before it was four per cent. I should point out that this amendment has not been in the law right along, but is the result of a budget resolution introduced this year and an amendment to the income tax act passed this year.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was there for years until two years ago.

Mr. FULTON: If the minister will allow me to complete my statement I will cover the point he has in mind. As a result of the budget resolution and the amendment to the income tax act passed this year, the rate was raised from four to six per cent in one case and from six to eight per cent in the other, the eight per cent rate having been reduced to seven per cent in the banking and commerce committee. When this resolution was discussed in the house, the hon. member for St. John-Albert, seconded by myself, introduced an amendment to reduce the interest penalty to the old rate, namely, four and six per cent respectively.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was four per cent and seven per cent. I know my hon. friend wants to be accurate. It was never lower than seven per cent for arrears after notice of assessment.

Mr. FULTON: The amendment to which I refer was ruled out of order at the time it was introduced in the debate on the budget resolution, on the ground that it would upset the balance of ways and means. I propose to move the same amendment at this time, on the following grounds.

First, the extra penalty involved in this increase in the interest rate affects the taxpayer even though he is not himself at fault, even though he has made an honest assessment and paid his assessment in full, and even though the fault is that of the department in its inability—and I use that word advisedly—to get out the revised assessment in time. That is the first ground, that even if the taxpayer is not at fault, he will now pay interest at six per cent as a penalty.

In the second place, I do so on the ground that the minister himself has said, as reported at page 4067 of Hansard, that the interest charge of six per cent is frankly in the nature of a penalty. In other words, there is nothing here designed to increase the amount of taxes collected. The interest rate of six per cent is frankly in the nature of a penalty. Because we think, as we thought at the time when we first introduced the amendment, the taxpayer should not be penalized for the default of the department, I suggest that the interest rate should be reduced to the old rate of four per cent.

With respect to the possibility of this upsetting the balance of ways and means, Mr. Chairman, I think we can confidently say that, in introducing this amendment at this time in this manner, we are not liable to be criticized on that ground, because the bill now before the committee is a codification of income tax procedure. The bill will not become operative until January 1, 1949, and therefore it will not upset the balance of ways and means.

Mr. ABBOTT: It will affect this fiscal year, which does not end until the end of March.

Mr. FULTON: Therefore it cannot possibly affect the balance of ways and means for this year because, may I point out, taxes are collected on the basis of the income of the calendar year.

Mr. ABBOTT: An instalment is due on March 31.

Mr. FULTON: It is based on the income of people to the end of the calendar year. So this change could not possibly upset the balance of ways and means. In that connection I would point out that, in the minister's own words, it is merely a penalty. He cannot be said, surely, to have predicated his balance of ways and means on the slim chance of collecting a two per cent extra penalty. It is not a tax provision; it is only a penalty provision. So I think the amendment is in order at this time on those grounds, and is well justified on the basis that taxpayers should not be penalized, because the department itself may have occasioned the delay in making the revised assessment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John-Albert:

That section 50, subsection 1, be further amended by changing the figures "6 per cent" and "7 per cent" where they occur in lines eighteen and twenty-three thereof to read "4 per cent" and "6 per cent" respectively.

I might point out that I am using the figure "7 per cent" there because the minister indicated that was the correct one.

Mr. ABBOTT: This is the same amendment, of course, which was ruled out of order when this bill was before the house; and I do not intend to repeat the arguments which I made then as to why it is out of order. I frankly find it difficult to see why people are so much exercised about the difference between four per cent and six per cent interest to people who do not pay their taxes in full. It was six per cent for many years until a couple of years ago.

Mr. FULTON: It never should have been.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps. But after having reduced that rate to four per cent, we found that advantage was being taken of it by a good many people in this country who felt that this was a nice, cheap way of getting an unsecured loan from the government at four per cent per annum. Not only do they do that by filing their tax returns, showing a certain amount of tax payable and then not paying the full amount of tax, knowing the assessment department will not be able to assess the return for a year or two; but a great many people, who are not quite so scrupulous as the ones to whom I have just referred, will charge in a great many expenses which they know or have reason to believe will probably be disallowed when the department gets around to assessing the return. But of course that will be eighteen months or a couple of years from now, and in the meantime they will have had the use of the money at four per cent. This provision is put in to prevent abuses of that kind; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall insist that it stay in the law.

Mr. FULTON: I can tell the minister why some people are exercised because of this sort of thing. It is because they have seen an injustice done to perfectly honest taxpayers who have made what they regarded as an honest assessment. Their revised assessment has not been received for two or three years after they turned it in; and they were then charged interest when, through no fault of their own, they are in arrears on the payment of their taxes. That is why people get exercised, because they see perfectly honest taxpayers subjected to an interest penalty because the department itself is in arrears in making the revised assessment.

Mr. ABBOTT: Let them make their tax returns out correctly.

Mr. FULTON: As was pointed out by the minister in the argument he put forward, if there are people who assess themselves at one sum, and then send in a cheque for a smaller sum, thus taking advantage of the situation which he outlined, there can be no objection to charging them the full interest rate. But in the case of the great average mass of taxpayers—probably 1,999,000 out of 2,000,000 taxpayers—who make their assessments honestly and who pay in full, I suggest that it is unfair to penalize them because there may be some who take advantage of a loophole in the tax law. I am not so concerned about the wealthy man—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FULTON: —who takes advantage of the law and who may be penalized or may be charged the full interest rate. Let the minister bring in an amendment to deal with him. But I am concerned about the man who tries to be honest, and who is simply set against government in all forms because he finds himself unjustly treated by the department against which he has no recourse. Hon. members across the way may say, "Oh, oh", if they like. Of course one cannot go fully into the motives which cause one to move amendments or to make suggestions, but I say that is what I have in mind in moving this amendment. I do not think it is a matter to be shrugged off; nor is it a matter, I suppose, about which one should get heated, especially when one finds in one's own experience, as I am sure all hon. members have found—because no hon. member is unique in this or any other respect—that honest taxpayers are penalized through no fault of their own. So I think we should try to draw up such amendments as will prevent these hardships being inflicted upon them.

Mr. HACKETT: There is one aspect of this situation I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. When six per cent was the rate previously it was the normal rate, which applied almost universally. Today the interest rate is much lower. One can borrow for three and three and a half per cent—

Mr. ABBOTT: Not on unsecured loans.

Mr. HACKETT: —and four per cent, with reasonable security.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not on unsecured loans.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. HACKETT: I hope the taxpayer is not considered as other than good security. After all, the taxpayer is the security of Canada, and it is that aspect of the situation I am asking the minister to consider. Really the rates of six and seven per cent today are equivalent to ten and twelve per cent at the time these penalties were originally imposed. They become penalties, in fact.

Mr. ABBOTT: Anyone can avoid the payment of these rates by preparing a proper income tax return and paying the amount of the tax due. I am just as solicitous as anyone else for the average taxpayer; but the taxpayer I am particularly solicitous about is the one who honestly makes up his return, accurately computes his tax, and pays it when due; and that taxpayer does not pay any interest.

Mr. HACKETT: Then why does not the minister provide a category for these nefarious people, who apparently must be numerous, or he would not be passing legislation to fit them? Why does he not prepare a class which will include them? Why should the ninety-nine innocent people suffer because of the one who is not as careful as he might be in paying his tax?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is a very good lawyer, but if he could draw up a clause—

Mr. HACKETT: I am willing to help.

Mr. ABBOTT: —which would accurately describe a taxpayer who claims an expense which is subsequently disallowed, and prove that this claim was made intentionally, he is better than I think he is.

Mr. HACKETT: But that is the basis of the hon. gentleman's argument, that there are people who are doing this intentionally, in order that they may benefit improperly and dishonestly through it. I say, let us deal with them; but why treat the ordinary individual who makes up his return, sends in what he believes he owes and then wakes up perhaps twenty months later—it cannot be longer than that, because the interest does not run beyond that period—to find that he owes the government a substantial sum? I suggest to the minister that good business warrants some segregation, some selection between those who pay readily and willingly all they believe they owe, and those who fall into the category the minister has described.

Mr. MacINNIS: As far I know, Mr. Chairman, you did not rule on the point of order. Before you do so I should like to say I do not think the minister's point is well taken. If this is a deterrent; if fewer people will pay the interest, you are likely to collect more taxes with the six per cent and four per cent than with the six per cent and eight per cent. So I do not think the minister has made a case at all. If this is to be a deterrent to people underpaying their taxes I think he is away out, so I believe you might very well rule the amendment in order.

I think the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Stanstead have made a fairly good case here. The principle the minister is adopting is that he is going to punish a man who has done something without premeditation, if that is the word, or without intent, in the same way that he is going to punish a man who did the same thing with intent. Surely that is a bad principle. While there is nothing I hate more than a chiseler I do not think you should punish the person who has made a mistake in the same way as you punish the person who has defrauded with intent. That is exactly what is being done in this case.

While I am speaking on this subject, though it may not have anything to do with the particular section, I believe the income tax branch is extremely negligent in returning moneys that have been overpaid. I do not want to raise a personal question, but I made an overpayment on my 1942 tax, and I did not get it back until 1948, after considerable correspondence. I received no interest.

Mr. ABBOTT: You will from now on.

Mr. MacINNIS: As far as the department was concerned, very likely I would never have got it back. I do not know how they keep their records, but I do say that in this instance you are penalizing the person who inadvertently underpays his income tax in the same way as you are penalizing a person who has done so with intent.

Mr. GILLIS: I have to agree with my leader in this instance. When this clause was discussed in the house before the bill went to committee I pointed out to the minister that there were instances of hardship in the application of interest, where taxes were wrongly computed. The person who suffers most under this section is, in my opinion, the industrial worker, ninety per cent of whose tax is supposed to be collected at the source. He keeps no record himself; but, through broken time and time lost through sickness, the records of the company are at fault in many cases. At the end of April, when he comes to file his return, he is not really in a position to figure his tax. So he makes a guess at it, an honest guess. That return may lie in the income tax office for fifteen months, and at the end of that time he may get a bill for $75, $100 or $200 which he had no idea he owed; not a large amount, mind you, for the class of people my hon. friends to the right are thinking about—

Mr. FRASER: That is very unfair.

Mr. GILLIS: —but a lot of money for the fellow who is making only $1,200 or $1,500 a year and paying his tax. It is absolutely unfair to collect interest in a case of that kind, and I believe the collection of this interest might very well be dropped. Very reluctantly I agree with hon. gentlemen to the right on that. I believe section 126, which we just passed—and I hope the minister has not weakened it by accepting the amendment—is a kitchen-sink clause which might very well take care of the category some of my hon. friends are trying to protect.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Why assume that? I think you had better take that back.

Mr. MacNICOL: Be a sport and take it back.

Mr. GILLIS: I never take anything back, and I do not say anything I do not mean.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GILLIS: My hon. friend is a good lawyer. Any time he is retained either to defend or to prosecute, the first thing he gropes for is a motive. I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that in prosecuting this particular section the motive is profit. I think my assumption is fairly reasonable.

Mr. FRASER: Your assumption is only a C.C.F. assumption, and it is not worth anything.

Mr. GILLIS: That is scarcely the view taken by people who elected members to the House of Commons and the legislature. Some people do not agree with you.

Mr. FRASER: If you use that kind of method to get them in, I do not doubt you can get them in under false pretenses.

Mr. GILLIS: It is not false pretenses. People are smartening up; they are getting wise to you.

I have pointed out that the case of a serviceman who had enlisted in 1942 with an income which placed him in the income tax brackets. He went overseas and returned in 1945. He was billed interest for the years he was actually overseas in the services. The income tax officials had no alternative, from a legal standpoint, to collecting. But one can imagine the state of mind a man would be in when he was constantly being dunned for interest on the unpaid portion of his 1942 tax.

The rate of interest should be dropped. I know, as the minister has said, that all the details cannot be written into legislation. I hope that when the regulations are being prepared some provision will be made whereby the departmental officials will have the necessary latitude to make adjustments where there are extenuating circumstances such as I have outlined.

Mr. ABBOTT: I suggest that the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: This question was raised when the budget resolutions were before the committee, and at that time the motion to reduce was ruled out of order. While the minister has said there is a penalty here, there is no reference to a penalty in the section. It seems to me that if a person does not pay his tax by a certain date or in a certain time, then he has to pay an amount which is increased by the amount of interest.

Section 50 refers to taxes which will be received. The amendment is to reduce the tax. Therefore it would reduce the revenue and would be a burden upon the treasury. It is not competent for a member to make such a motion, and I therefore rule it out of order.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Chairman, I am not allowed to debate your ruling, but, with respect, I must say that I cannot accept this as being comparable with a budget resolution, or that it would upset the balance of ways and means. I would ask you, sir, to reconsider your ruling. If not, I must respectfully appeal against it.

Mr. CASSELMAN: The hon. member has appealed the ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that, yes.

Mr. SPEAKER resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

I have ruled that the motion to change the figures six per cent and seven per cent as an addition to a tax where the taxpayer's income is less than the amount payable should be reduced to four per cent and six per cent, is out of order as it is creating a burden on the treasury.

The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has appealed.

[Mr. Gillis.]

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 50 carry?

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting.

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course it requires unanimous consent to have the bill read the third time at this sitting, but I would ask the house whether it would consider doing that. The bill will be going to the other place, and I presume it will receive some consideration there. I put that before the house. If it does not wish to give the bill third reading I will not press it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Mr. SPEAKER laid on the table of the house a report from the civil service commission relating to the permanent appointment of Mr. William Jennings as manager of the joint parliamentary restaurant.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1948-49

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1949, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLY

DISTRIBUTION OF NAILS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. H. W. TIMMINS (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I bring to the attention of the house a matter which I consider of major national importance? I hold in my hand an invoice in respect of a keg of four-inch nails bought in the city of Toronto at the price of $16.75.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TIMMINS: This may be a matter of laughter to some members, but I think the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply will thank me for bringing it to his attention and he will probably act on the information which I intend to submit to the house. Actually a keg of four-inch nails costs $5.85 if it could be bought, but this particular keg cost $16.75, which represents an increase of about 300 per cent. Not only have I the invoice, but I have here the keg of nails.

The minister has told us on previous occasions that sometimes these nails come across the border from the United States and that he has no control over the price that may be obtained for American nails. That is so, but this keg of nails, which is in the lobby and can be produced, bears the stamp of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Montreal. Evidently, therefore, this keg of nails was produced in Canada and was on the market to be sold in the ordinary course of events.

On May 10 last at page 3774 of Hansard I asked a question of the minister of reconstruction regarding this matter. On that occasion I said:

> Builders in Toronto are in a desperate position in regard to nails. Representations have been made to the minister's department to see what can be done to cut through whatever obstacles are holding up production. Apparently at the present time the wire is not available, and I understand that the minister has control of the disposition of wire materials to various firms.

I will not read the rest of it. The minister at the time replied, quite properly:

> I have asked our people to give all the preference they dare to give to nails, and we are going to take a bite out of wire products. There will be complaints about that, but you cannot distribute more than there is in toto. We are in process of diverting wire from other uses into nails. We are not going to make any barbed wire for a few months. I hope hon. members who have been worrying about nails will not start worrying about other products, because that is the only way to get more nails.

In fairness to the minister, it must be said that he did follow the matter up, and on June 1 the steel controller issued a directive or order of his department under that date. Without going into any details, I may say he did direct the steel producers to increase production on nails, and as a matter of fact a great many more nails have been produced. The minister will agree with me that those nails were for house builders. That was why he urged the increased production of nails. The fact is, however, that the nails are not going to home builders, and it is my purpose to try to satisfy the house and the minister that something must be done about the matter.

I was in touch with the steel controller, and he told me frankly that the bottleneck in respect of getting nails to home builders was that down to the level of the wholesaler distribution was fair and equitable, but when it got away from the wholesaler there was trouble and he was trying to do what he could to find ways and means of setting a pattern for getting nails into the hands of the builders themselves.

What brought this whole thing about was an advertisement which appeared in a paper in Portage la Prairie about two or three weeks ago. There was an advertisement of 10,000 kegs of steel nails which were available, all sizes. The advertisement read:

> Nails—steel—10,000 kegs available of all sizes. Write for price list. Sherman's box 1005, postal station "C", Toronto, Can.

After having received that particular clipping, I had an investigation made by some members of the National House Builders' Association of Toronto. The result was that they purchased this keg of nails for $16.75. But not only did we find that advertisement in the Toronto paper; we found these others. Here is one:

> Nails! Nails! Nails!
> Nails, common, steel, 2½ inch, 3 inch, 4 inch, $14.50 per keg. 3534 Dundas St. W., MU. 4815, open daily 8 to 8.

That was followed by another advertisement:

> Nails
> $16.75 per keg, common steel 1¾ inch, 2 inch, 2½ inch, 3 inch, 4 inch and 6 inch. Finishing nails slightly higher. LA. 2823, 1275 Queen St. W.

That, Mr. Speaker, is right in my own district of Parkdale. Nails are being sold at $16.75 a keg. That was followed by another advertisement:

> Nails, steel, common, finishing, 624 Bloor St. W. LL. 3200.

That is also in the city of Toronto. As a matter of fact, this leakage with respect to the distribution of nails to home builders is not just an isolated case. Here was another advertisement which mentions 10,000 kegs of nails.

A friend of mine who was making the investigation said he saw in the garage where he bought his nails, 100 or 200 kegs of nails which were available for sale. There is certainly a hole in the administration with respect to the distribution of these nails. It is quite apparent that among our citizens there is a good deal of chiseling going on. There are a great many small-town chiselers who are running up the cost of building in this country.

An hon. MEMBER: Big town.

Mr. TIMMINS: All right; big town, if you like. There are a great many small chiseling people who are doing these things. I am saying to the minister that something ought to be done and ought to be done right away. I am quite prepared to hand these advertisements to the minister. He ought to have an investigation made tomorrow because, just as soon as this gets in the press, these people will be closing up shop. But the nails are there in Toronto, and if these people are guilty of chiseling on the people who want to build homes, then we should act at once. As I understand it, in the wartime prices and trade board order there is a section which says that if you sell above what is fair and reasonable, you are committing a crime. Certainly 300 per cent is not fair and reasonable. We all know that. I am bringing this to the attention of the minister. I am not criticizing him and I am not criticizing his department. I know the steel controller has been trying to find some machinery by means of which to have these nails distributed properly. But some place along the line the system has broken down. Some place along the line there are those who are taking advantage of the Canadian people, and I ask the minister to give the matter immediate attention.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can say to my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, and I think he agrees, that no other feature of steel control has received the attention that the distribution of nails has received. I am certain that Canadian manufacturers are selling at fair and reasonable prices. I believe they are selling to reliable distributors, and I think to that extent we have found no flaw in the system. From the distributors down, some nails perhaps get into the wrong hands, although I think the distributors are most conscientious in attempting to distribute the nails to reliable or bona fide users.

I have said before that nails are brought in from the United States and sold here. In the United States nails cost nearly twice as much as they do in Canada, which is a tribute to the fact that we have kept our steel production in order from a price viewpoint. These nails are brought in and distributed at a profit. I said that I saw no particular harm in that. If anyone is so desperate or so pressed for nails that, rather than wait for nails at the Canadian price of about $5.80 a keg, he must pay $16.50; and if they are not Canadians nails; if they are nails in addition to the Canadian product—

Mr. TIMMINS: If the house would like me to bring in the keg, I will do so; and it does not say they are United States nails.

Mr. HOWE: No. The hon. member undoubtedly has a keg of nails that was manufactured in Canada, handed down through our distribution system, diverted into the wrong hands and is being resold at an exorbitant profit. If we could learn the history of that transaction we would, of course, prosecute. But I think the remarkable thing is that, of all the nails distributed, it is one keg that we are talking about.

Mr. TIMMINS: If the minister will pardon me for interrupting, this firm that sold these nails advertised that they had 10,000 kegs of them.

Mr. HOWE: We will make an investigation; and if there are 10,000 kegs of Canadian nails, I can assure my hon. friend a prosecution will be launched tomorrow.

The hon. member made one other statement that I think I should correct. He said the additional nails we are making out of wire that was formerly put into fencing wire and barbed wire are not going into housing. I can assure him definitely that those nails are going into housing, because they are being distributed to house builders through government agencies. Those nails definitely do go into housing. The former pattern has not been changed for the former production, but the government has commandeered excess production and is taking its own methods to make sure that it all goes into house building.

ARTICLE IN VANCOUVER "SUN"

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a cutting from the Vancouver Sun of June 21, it being a statement by Dillon O'Leary, dated Ottawa, June 21, and headed: "MacInnis calls Jaques liar, no reprimand". This is a misstatement and is a reflection on the chairman of the committee, on the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and on myself. The hon. member for Vancouver East did say that a statement I made in the house, that the C.C.F. supported zionism, was a lie; but that is quite a different thing from calling me a liar.

I also hold in my hand a cutting from the Canadian Jewish Chronicle of May 21, 1948, headed "Israel rally at Montreal supports zionist policies and its armed forces. Messages of greetings and support were received from individuals and organizations including the provincial executive of the C.C.F. party". In the light of this evidence, will Mr. O'Leary correct his misstatement?

SHIPMENT OF CEDAR POLES TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Before we go into supply, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a situation in my riding. As many hon. members know, in my riding are produced some of the finest cedar poles in the world. There is a large stand of cedar poles in the Columbia river basin. In taking out these poles, many hundreds of small operators find their living. This year, owing to late snow in the mountains and an extremely late spring, poor roads and finally the floods, the operations of many of these operators have been seriously delayed and curtailed.

At the present time they are required to ship one carload of poles to the Canadian market for every two cars shipped to the United States market. That regulation works a hardship on the small operators, because they cannot carry a large stock of various sizes, and the Canadian market absorbs only a certain type of poles. I know what I am talking about, because I have sold poles myself. The United States market absorbs a wide range of these poles. As a result of these regulations and these conditions, large numbers of off-size poles have accumulated in the yards of the small operators. They cannot market these poles in Canada, but they could be marketed in the United States to great advantage. In addition, prices in the United States are somewhat higher than in Canada.

Therefore I bring this situation to the attention of the minister and urge that, under the circumstances I have outlined and in view of the short season, some consideration be given to allowing these pole operators to ship a larger quantity of poles to the United States than is permitted at the present time.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Lands and development services branch—
National parks services—

206. National parks and historic sites services, $7,372,878.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have just one comment to make on this item—

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources): While the hon. member is considering his comment, with his permission this may be a good opportunity for me to answer some questions that were asked just before we rose last evening, shortly after eleven o'clock.

The hon. member for Brant asked whether the department, through its historic sites service, had made a grant to the Bell homestead at Brantford, to the Mohawk church, or the birthplace of Pauline Johnson. I am told that no grant has been made in any of these cases; but I understand that the members of the Indian band residing on the reserve on which Pauline Johnson was born have been contemplating from time to time the erection of some kind of memorial. The department is naturally interested in this proposal and welcomes the initiative being taken by the band.

[Mr. Herridge.]

The hon. member for Kamloops inquired as to the reason for the delay in tabling the annual report of the Department of Mines and Resources for the year ended March 31, 1947. This matter has been checked, and I find that final proof of the report was sent to the king's printer several weeks ago. Its production has been delayed by the heavy load of sessional publications with which the king's printer has had to contend. It is the hope of the department that the next annual report will be prepared at such an early date that there will be no doubt as to its being available to members of parliament while the house is still in session. I should add that the report of this department, containing as it does a summary of a great deal of scientific material, is necessarily a slow and difficult document to produce.

The hon. member for Danforth and the hon. member for Calgary West questioned me about the well which had run out of control in the Leduc sector of the Edmonton field. It was indicated by one hon. member that this well had been brought under control. Unfortunately, on checking this matter, I found that we had received airmail advice yesterday to the effect that the well is still pouring out from ten to fifteen thousand barrels a day. Steps have been taken to pump some six thousand barrels of this oil back into the ground in a safe area, but as yet the situation is by no means satisfactory. Production in the field, apart from this one well, is almost at a standstill.

The hon. member for York South asked for figures relating to the number of departmental employees this year as compared with a year ago in the mines, forests and scientific services branch, or in the legal survey division; I was not altogether clear as to which was desired. However I am able to give the hon. member the following information, which I trust will meet his wishes. The legal survey and map service at May 31, 1947, had a total personnel of 140. The legal surveys unit and map compilation and reproduction unit, which together correspond with the organization mentioned above, on May 31, 1948, had 150 employees. In other words, there was an increase of ten persons during the year.

If the hon. member was inquiring about the branch as a whole I think I can best answer in this way. A year ago there were three branches of the department, with a total membership of 3,538. Today those three branches have been consolidated into two, with a total membership of 3,960. Thus there has been an increase between May 31, 1947, and May 31, 1948, of 422 persons in this area of departmental activity.

The hon. member for Kootenay West asked about the membership of the geographic board of Canada. The present members are:

F. H. Peters, chief, surveys and mapping bureau.
K. G. Chipman, chief topographical engineer.
R. J. Fraser, dominion hydrographer.
Lt-Col. C. H. Smith, officer commanding, army survey establishment.
J. G. Wright, Northwest territories administration.
Norman Fee, dominion archives.
A. MacFarlane, Post Office Department.
Doctor Trevor Lloyd, geographical bureau.
L. B. Skinner, secretary.

The provincial members are:

Prince Edward Island—Hon. Walter Jones, premier.
Nova Scotia—Doctor Allan E. Cameron, president, Nova Scotia technical college.
New Brunswick—J. C. B. Pugh, department of lands and mines.
Ontario—F. W. Beatty, surveyor-general, department of lands and forests.
Manitoba—J. C. Beresford, director of surveys.
Saskatchewan—A. J. Bereskin, controller of surveys.
Alberta—H. P. Brownlee, department of trade and industry.
British Columbia—W. G. H. Firth, chief geographer, department of lands.

Several hon. members asked for a breakdown of expenditures in connection with the national parks. I should be glad to read all these items if necessary, but if I could get the permission of the committee I might have them appear in Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister permission to have these figures appear in Hansard?

There are many miscellaneous items for all parks designed to overcome arrears in maintenance or to extend necessary public services but as these are reflected in the general breakdown which I have given at the opening of my remarks it will be unnecessary for me to enumerate these miscellaneous items although some of them are quite substantial.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have only one comment to make on this item. I have not seen the details of the expenditures, but I note an increase of $4,951,000, and I imagine the figures the minister has tabled will show what properties are to be bought and what construction is to go on. I should like to know if there is any immediate necessity for this work to be done. It struck me that this was a large increase in expenditure on the acquisition of land and the construction of buildings and works, from $602,000 last year to $4,894,000 this year. If there is a good deal of construction to be done in this connection it seems to me that this work could be postponed for some considerable time. We may need work of this kind if we should run into some sort of unemployment, and this work could be done then. Unless there is some particular reason why this expenditure should be made now, I do not think we have any right to vote the money to carry it on. If the minister can give some reason why it should go on now rather than some time later, that would be different; but at the moment it seems like work which could be proceeded with if we should have to deal with an unemployment situation.

Mr. MacKINNON: I quite understand the reasons that have prompted the hon. member to make these comments; but the projects to which he refers are projects which are being considered by my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. They are called shelf projects, which have been given consideration and have been placed to one side, but which may be proceeded with at a later date. There is no money provided in these items for the purchase of land.

Mr. COCKERAM: Why is that put in?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is a heading which is used in the department. There have been purchases of land in the past, and there will be in the future. But at the present time in this item there is no amount for the purchase of land and, may I say, very little for the construction of buildings. To a great extent these items are for the construction of highways in the parks which fell into disrepair during the war years when practically no money was spent on park development.

The necessity for proceeding with this work has been well known to the government. It has been urged on us from all sides in Canada as an encouragement to United States tourists to come to our parks and spend their dollars on vacations here. I am sure, when the hon. member sees the items in Hansard, he will approve them.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): My point in rising was to get the details, so that the committee itself could judge as to the necessity for proceeding with the work at the present time. I am not criticizing having this work done to attract tourists.

Mr. CHURCH: For some years past I have been calling the attention of the government to this item. The report the minister gave was a very good one, as far as it went. However I would call his attention to the situation which prevails in the chief tax producing provinces of the dominion.

I am not objecting to these historic parks and sites in other provinces; far from it. I believe in a policy of national parks and historic sites. But I find that Ontario has been overlooked for many years. For example, we have no large national park in the whole province. We have small islands near lake Ontario in the St. Lawrence river, one up at Pelee island, and parks of that kind.

But we must consider what a great investment these national parks can be. Let us have in mind the Rideau lakes district. The Rideau canal was constructed by the British government after the war of 1812 as a backdoor to lake Ontario, and was paid for by the British taxpayers. A magnificent chain of rivers, lakes and streams connects with the canal system. Many people see it while they drive along in their automobiles. That canal system could be linked up with the great chain of lakes and with the inland waterways. In the Trent district we have the Murray canal, and a canal system reaching right up the Severn into the Muskoka district. Then, it is possible to link up the lake Simcoe district, the Muskoka district, the Parry Sound district and that around Georgian bay with the district at the head of lake Ontario. Parks in those areas should be connected. They would be crown property, held either in the right of the province or in the right of the Minister of Public Works for the dominion.

These parks should be linked up into a great chain of public parks so as to attract tourist revenue, not only in the summer months, but also in the winter when winter sports in those park areas would be possible.

I believe Ontario has been overlooked. I have in mind old Fort Henry, in the Kingston area. It is, no doubt, an historic site. At the time the minister visited the coliseum during the time of the magnificent international trade fair within recent weeks, he probably knows that opposite the place where the fair was held is a fort which was taken by the Americans in the war of 1812-14. There is no reason why some money should not be spent on that fort, and something done along the lines of what has been done at Fort Henry.

I suggest that during the parliamentary recess the minister might consider what is said to him by a deputation which has been appointed by the city council in Toronto to interview him. One must remember that the city has spent about $26,000,000 in grounds, buildings and permanent exhibits in connection with the Canadian National exhibition.

As one of the main contributors in the matter of taxation, Ontario should receive further consideration, because that province has been overlooked. One might mention the historic site and battlefields of the war of 1812-14 which are to be found in the Niagara district. The Ontario government has taken care of some of them. But there are many other points connected with the first and second great wars which should have recognition. I have in mind places where our troops were trained. The government should have a policy of seeking out, in every military district of the country, the sites where the soldiers were trained before they went overseas.

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not wish to delay the passage of my estimates, but I think it is only right to make brief comment on what the hon. member has said. In Ontario the dominion has only three small parks, namely at Point Pelee, Georgian bay islands and the St. Lawrence islands. The parks which are operated by the dominion government have been presented to the dominion by the various provinces. If the province of Ontario wishes to do the same, namely, to acquire land for national park purposes and present it to the dominion government, I have no doubt the government would sympathetically consider taking it over and developing it.

Mr. BREITHAUPT: I should like to refer briefly to the Georgian bay park, particularly Beausoleil island national park camp, which is devoted to a great deal of beneficial youth work. In my view it should be developed further. The former minister said he would visit there, but unfortunately he was taken ill and it was not possible for him to do so. I should like to know what plan the department has for extending Beausoleil national park in Georgian bay?

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not think there are any other plans for extending this park at the present time. As a matter of fact, I expect to be in the neighbourhood this summer to attend the Bruce old boys reunion and I may have an opportunity to look into the situation while I am there.

Mr. LENNARD: I should like to couple my name with that of the hon. member for Waterloo North in connection with Beausoleil national park, owing to the fact that there is a sea cadet centre there. The sea cadet movement is using every available centre for the training of boys, and I feel that this was one reason the hon. member for Waterloo North raised the matter.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to support the hon. member for Wentworth, because boys from the Lakefield preparatory school go there, and the park could be greatly improved.

Mr. COCKERAM: I would point out that these figures are about $900,000 short. There should be more figures in here.

Mr. MacKINNON: I think the figures which I placed on Hansard with the permission of the committee are in great detail and will show the total amounts.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I do not want to delay the minister's estimates. I am pleased to see him in this portfolio. Along with other members, I regret that his predecessor (Mr. Glen) has had to give up the portfolio because of illness.

I should like to know what appropriation has been made for the extension of the museum at Fort Beausejour, located at the boundary between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This museum was built about 1932; it has been extended, but it is now overcrowded with relics of the past, thanks to the work of Doctor J. C. Webster, C.M.G., who has given many years of invaluable work to our national parks and historic sites.

I want to commend the minister and the department for what they have been able to do in the development of our parks and museums and what this means to our tourists. I have a letter here referring to this, and I should like to quote just a sentence or two as follows:

> I often wonder what kind of a tourist business we would have in the maritimes if our places of historic interest were non-existent. How many Americans would travel through Maine and New Hampshire with their varied scenery to view the maritimes, with the same kind of forests, lakes and rivers?

Mr. MacKINNON: A wing is being added to the museum this year, and an amount of $40,000 has been provided.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): What steps have been taken to preserve the French dry dock in the vicinity of Fort Beausejour. I understand that here again Doctor Webster has been making material personal contributions toward the acquisition of land, in order that this most historic work of its kind in North and South America may be preserved for the benefit of our country.

Mr. MacKINNON: Since the gentleman's name has been mentioned, I should like to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the work of Doctor Webster, chairman of the historic sites and monuments board. The work done across Canada is of great value in keeping alive in a most practical way our Canadian history and providing attractions to tourists.

Mr. PEARKES: A total of $4,894,000 odd is listed under the head of acquisition of lands, repairs and construction of buildings, et cetera. I know the minister has said that there is to be no acquisition of land, that all this money is to be spent on the construction of roads, buildings, et cetera—I think I am quoting the minister correctly—in order to encourage tourists to come to our national parks.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is one reason only.

Mr. PEARKES: To construct buildings to encourage tourists to come there.

Mr. MacKINNON: If the hon. member will allow me, I said that no money was being there is to be no acquisition of land, that very little was to be used for the construction of buildings; that it was mainly for the improvement of roads in our parks for the encouragement of tourists and the pleasure and enjoyment of our own people.

Mr. PEARKES: I did not suggest that there was any money to be spent for the acquiring of lands, but improvements are to be made within our national parks to attract tourists and for our own people.

I should like to jump ahead a few items and come to the one dealing with Indian agencies. The details show a similar item, but the amount is only $533,725. That is the amount which is to be expended on homes, on roads and for the general improvement of these agencies; yet we are going to spend $4,800,000 on our national parks in order to attract tourists.

I think we should do something to improve the habitations of Canadian Indians. Later on, I intend to refer to some glaring instances in my own constituency where the houses in which these wards of the government are expected to exist are absolutely intolerable. I suggest seriously to the minister that he transfer $2,000,000 from this item and apply it to the item covering the acquisition of land and the construction of buildings, works and structures for our own Indians.

Mr. McLURE: A few days ago when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was dealing with a little matter of roads I brought to his attention a situation in our park. In this case the ownership is in dispute as between the federal and the local authorities, and the result is that the road is not repaired. This road leads to our national park and also to the golf course, and it is simply a mud hole. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated here in the house that he knew of the situation and would take it up with the Minister of Mines and Resources. I assure the minister that he will have this matter repeated to him by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Does the minister happen to have a list of historic sites which have been set aside in Alberta south of Calgary within the last ten years?

Mr. MacKINNON: We have not the information in that form, but it can be obtained for the hon. member.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is a historic site called "Writing on Stone", which is close to Milk River and Coutts. The last time I went by there I gained the impression that this site would repay some care. Apparently it comes down from a time rather long ago in the history of our Indians. If the stories about it could be obtained and written on a plaque or stone, and the area fenced in, instead of being allowed to be trampled down by cattle, I think it would pay dividends.

Mr. MacKINNON: I shall draw that matter to the attention of the historic monuments board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is important also, because it is not far from the splendid Coutts-Lethbridge highway, probably the finest highway Alberta has thus far been able to build, a main highway for tourists from the United States.

Mr. PEARKES: In addition to the $4,894,210 for the acquisition of land and the construction of buildings, works and structures, there is another item of $719,963 for repairs and upkeep of buildings, works and structures. Since I understood the minister to say the $4,000,000 odd was devoted to the upkeep of buildings, what is the $700,000 for?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is for the maintenance work required in all the national parks.

Mr. PEARKES: What is the difference between that and the other item which preceded it, which was for the same purpose?

Mr. MacKINNON: The other has to do with new construction. This is for the maintenance of existing works.

Lands and development services branch—
Dominion wildlife service—

208. Wildlife resources conservation and developments, including administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, $181,350.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am afraid that this is one branch of the minister's department which needs a bit of checking over. This is the branch which looks after predatory animals. Recently I was in Essex county and paid a visit to Point Pelee. There I was interviewed by quite a number of residents, who called to my attention the destruction in the park, which could be much more beautiful than it is if it were properly taken care of. In fact it is the only national park in western Ontario. I commend the park to the minister's attention. It should be beautified; but, above all, the first thing that should be done is to kill the predatory animals in the park. All the farmers around about are complaining about the department encouraging the maintenance of the predatory animals such as wolves, red foxes and coyotes, which are destroying the pheasants and other so-called wild but harmless animals. The Leamington Post and News of June 17 had this to say:

People who do not believe in the control of predatory beasts are invited to visit Point Pelee national park adjacent to Leamington, Ontario. Here exists at the present time, one of the best possible demonstrations of what happens when animals that prey upon other animal life are not killed.

In every one of the nine provinces of Canada, it is the policy of the provincial government to foster an increase in the number of deer within its borders. They are wanted for food for humanity. Most of the provinces, therefore encourage the slaughter of wolves and coyotes by paying a bounty of several dollars for each one killed, while several counties in Ontario pay a bounty also on red foxes.

In the federal parks within these provinces, the dominion government, under the management of the federal fish and game department, protects all predators, and any man would be prosecuted for shooting a coyote, wolf, or red fox inside such a federal park.

A few years ago pheasants were so plentiful around this Leamington national park that citizens took motion pictures of them from their cars as they motored through the park. Then coyotes and red foxes came in and, under the policy of the dominion government, were given the protection referred to. Farmers living within the boundaries of the park were even notified to keep their dogs chained up—which certainly did not make sense to them while coyotes were being permitted to run at large without molestation.

I have had quite a number of letters from that beautiful county, no more beautiful county in Canada, and I am going to ask the minister to take this under his control. I say to him that if anyone in his department is protecting wolves and coyotes in this park, I would ask him to tell him to take a walk somewhere else. He should not be in the department helping to maintain the national parks.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wish to say a few words in connection with one species of wildlife, namely ducks and geese, because one might put these two birds together. There is an article in Rod & Gun, which is taken from Field and Stream and which is headed: "Can our duck shooting be saved?" This magazine says, "Yes, but the remedy must be drastic." Duck shooting is a great sport, but the duck population of this country is going down and down. We have had limits on the number of ducks that a man is allowed to take in a day, and the number he can have in his possession and so on. We have associations such as "Ducks Unlimited". I wish there were; I wish we had ten Ducks Unlimited, so that the duck population might be increased. There are a lot of factors that enter into the matter. There are 400,000 more hunters than there used to be, and it is easier to get to the duck-shooting grounds. There are two or three solutions of the problem; but, as I say, drastic measures must be taken, or there will not be any ducks. The article goes on to say:

Protection came too late for only one, the Eskimo curlew. It took twenty to twenty-five years for our gulls, terns, shore birds, herons, egrets, ibises and cormorants to become common once more. During the same period the abolition of spring shooting of ducks produced tangible results in five years.

The article goes on to say:

So great is the vigour and fertility of our waterfowl that I honestly believe a five-year closed season would quadruple their numbers.

There is no doubt about it, if we had a closed season. I do not know that it is possible to have it. There is no doubt that the future of our waterfowl shooting depends upon the ability to secure the necessary knowledge and to finance the techniques which have been worked out, and of hunters to exercise enough self-restraint; but I do not think sufficiently drastic action has been taken.

I wonder whether there is sufficient co-operation by the people of the United States. It is no use our breeding ducks here in our north country and then having them slaughtered in the south. I know that there is co-operation between the two countries. I do not know that there is co-operation between the various states. For instance, they will have a closed season in one flight lane and the shooters all go over to the other lane. That is not having a closed season. For the benefit of this country I wish, if it might be possible, that we could arrange with the United States to have a closed season for, say two years, on the shooting of ducks in both the United States and Canada. That would make a tremendous difference.

Ducks increase in geometrical proportion. They come back very quickly, but unless we take drastic action there will be no duck-shooting for anyone. These birds can be preserved. The Jack Miner foundation is doing its best in its small way. It gets $5,000 a year, but grain has gone up and it would be a good idea to give it a little more money. This is one of the most important things in our country, because we must preserve our wild life, and particularly our wild bird life. It is a great asset to the country; but, as I say, unless we do something drastic, we shall find ourselves without any ducks in a short time.

I commend to the minister this article in the magazine Rod & Gun. It appears in the last number, the June issue. The minister comes from a duck-shooting country and perhaps he has been out many times. I, too, used to be fond of shooting. It is a fine sport and I want to see it saved for the young people of Canada; but, unless we take the necessary steps, there will be no ducks left in the country.

Mr. MacKINNON: About three weeks ago at the instance of the Department of Mines and Resources a conference was held in Ottawa to which wildlife officials of all provinces were invited. I believe that representatives from all the provinces attended as well as representatives from wildlife organizations in the United States, the object being to work out methods of co-operation looking toward the preservation of wild life.

Mr. HAZEN: Did that convention produce results? Did anything come of it? Was it decided to take action in the way of shortening the shooting season for migratory birds or providing a closed season?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that substantial agreement on seasons to be recommended resulted from that conference.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I desire to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for St. Paul's. I congratulate the minister on the forward-looking policy of the department in inviting the provincial people to a conference, and I trust that the dominion government will go forward in the role of leader. The preservation of game is a strictly provincial matter, just as is the preservation of our forests, but the provinces will be able to do far better under dominion leadership and with dominion financial support. The importance of our wild life can hardly be over-emphasized.

Mr. HAZEN: I read in a newspaper not very long ago that the department was considering the establishment of a bird sanctuary or game refuge in the vicinity of James bay. I hope that some action of that kind is being contemplated. Does the government propose to establish, or to consider the question of establishing, a sanctuary there? It is important that we have more sanctuaries of this kind than exist at the present time.

Mr. MacKINNON: We have established sanctuaries at James bay, and arrangements are being made for the establishment of others. The wildlife conference held early in June of this year, to which I have referred, will meet annually.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a correction in what I said just now.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. It is not in order for an hon. member to read from a magazine dealing with the question before the committee.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I made a mistake. The article I quoted from was from Field and Stream, but it is in the magazine Rod & Gun.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—
213. Branch administration, $110,187.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In the matter of Indian affairs, probably one's first words should be words of commendation to the former minister on the progress made on this important question of Canadian Indians, and I hope that the present minister will get a picture of the responsibility and the opportunity which exists in regard to emancipating these unfortunate people who are within our gates and who find themselves the wards of this government.

May I express appreciation of what has been done within the last three years and since a committee was set up to deal with the revision of the Indian Act? That committee has done valuable work, and its findings have revealed shocking conditions among the 130,000 human beings who live within the borders of the country. My complaint is that, in spite of what has been done, it is too little, too late and much too slow.

The condition among the Indians calls for immediate redress. We can no longer stall or wait. The matter demands action from this government. It requires the revision of the act and drastic action within the department, on the part of those responsible for the administration of Indian affairs.

The majority of these people at the present time live under conditions of poverty, want, disease and ignorance. There are a few bright spots where conditions are better, such as Caughnawaga, the Six Nations reserve, some in Alberta and a few on the western coast of British Columbia where the Indians are engaged in fishing. Some of them are doing very well. We must not forget that these people are human beings, and under the present set-up they have no control over their own destiny, no say in their own government, no say about their own affairs. They have limited approach toward justice; they are not able to pay for legal advice. The conditions among many of these people, particularly in the backward areas, are such that the reserves on which they are compelled to live are not sufficiently well supplied with natural resources to provide them with a decent standard of living. In many cases they lack the necessary assistance to make a start in providing for themselves.

Years of protest and complaint have finally brought about the setting up of a committee of this house, which has revealed a shocking state; and it is time, now that we know enough about the matter, to do something about rectifying some of the basic wrongs. We find from the records that 18,000 Indian children are receiving some kind of education, either in residential or in day schools, but the shocking condition is revealed that 12,000 Indian children are receiving no training whatever. After sixty years of administration in this country, to have these facts facing us is a revelation as to how serious the situation is and how completely the Indians have failed to accept responsibility in this regard.

The whole hope of the future of the Indians must lie in our ability to train them adequately. I am pleased that something is being done, that there are some signs of improvement, and that the government is already spending some larger sum in education. There are signs of progress. As I said before, I am pleased at the amount of money which is being spent by the Department of Health and Welfare to make a survey of the situation with regard to health among our Indians, with a view to doing something about remedying the condition of these people. I think the evidence given before the committee would show that these Indians have the capacity to become fine citizens—they are fine people; they have excellent qualities—if they are only given an opportunity. I think the evidence will reveal that the Canadian Indian is a sick man. Until we remedy the economic position, health conditions and conditions of training among them, we cannot hope to solve this problem.

The fact of the matter is that the actual training of the Indians does not suit them for the kind of life they must live. Many of them go to residential schools, learn how to live under modern conditions, return to their reserves after they have reached the age of sixteen and find that they do not like to go back to their terrible housing and living conditions on the reserve. However, they find themselves unable to take their position in the modern white man's way of life, and they seem to become lost between two worlds. They sink down into a hopeless condition, and few of them really make a success or show any of the signs of progress which we would hope for.

There is another thing which reveals something which I think is basically wrong with our treatment of these people. For instance, there has recently been considerable discussion about the matter of granting the franchise to Canadian Indians. One of the big troubles with regard to this matter has been that the Indians themselves are not taken into the confidence of those who are administering their affairs. They only hear that a report has been tabled in this house stating that it is the intention of a committee or a group of people to recommend to the house that the franchise be granted. The Indian wants to know what that entails. Does it mean that they are to become citizens of Canada? Does it mean that they are to lose any of the rights or privileges which they have enjoyed under the treaties? If it means that they are to lose their treaty rights, the Indians themselves do not want to have much to do with it. A great many of them are suspicious of those who administer their affairs, because they have not been taken properly into the confidence of those people. The Indians should have been brought into consultation with those who administer their affairs, told of these suggestions and been allowed to know exactly what the Canadian people intended to do.

Mr. BROWN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: My hon. friend is a member of this committee. He has brought this subject up.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What is the hon. member's question?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BROWN: I am coming to my question.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is a speech.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member has brought this question up. Will he now tell us the means and methods whereby he would have the Indians represented on the Indian affairs committee? He has not done so in the last two years.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Oh, let us get on.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: As I believe the hon. member, who is chairman of that committee, knows very well, the Indians appeared before this committee and representations were brought before the committee. There are Indian organizations across this country in each of the provinces, in each of the divisions of Canada; and they hold annual conventions. There is an organization of Indians across the whole of Canada which could quite quickly, with a little bit of assistance, choose those who could speak for them. It would be quite possible to have representatives from the Indian groups across Canada sit in with this committee, with watching briefs, to talk over the matter and give the Indian viewpoint. I think I mooted that procedure at the early meetings of the committee, but the committee voted my recommendation down.

It is most important that, if we are to suggest any such thing, the Indians should be given every assurance that the granting of any franchise would in no way interfere with any of their rights. It is quite evident also that the Indians are suspicious of this, and some of them have already stated that they do not want to have anything to do with it. As a matter of fact, they do not know what it entails and are naturally suspicious; and such a thing would vitally affect them.

The matter of treaties and of the rights and privileges under treaties requires immediate remedy. The recommendations of the committee that were recently tabled in this house should be adopted by this house and implemented by the department, particularly with regard to the setting up of a claims commission. The matter of hundreds of treaties, under which the various Indians in various groups across Canada are now living, requires adjustment. In my own province of Saskatchewan it has been revealed that the original reserves set aside for the Indians occupy considerable territory in different parts of that province. Since those reserves were set aside, it is a matter of fact that some 400,000 acres have been taken away from them and have been either sold to white people or used in other ways. Those reserves are, in reality, the property of the Indians. They were set aside in order that the Indians might make a livelihood upon them. If we would look over the terms of the original treaties, we would find that it was certainly the intent of those treaties that the Indian should be properly cared for, that he should be properly trained, and that the great white mother or queen, who was ruling this country at that time, would see that the Indian was properly recompensed and properly cared for as a result of this surrender of these vast territories.

The Indian resents the position of inferiority in which he is placed. The Indian is a noble being. It has been revealed that under proper conditions he has remarkable capacity, a fine intellect and certainly excellent qualities of character. I do not think he has been improved by his contact with the white man in every instance. I suggest that a change is needed in the attitude of the white Canadian people toward these our red brothers. I believe that ultimately we shall have to take these people into our confidence, treat them as equals and give them an opportunity to share in the making of their own destiny.

Mr. YOUNG: As a member from a Vancouver constituency where the condition of the Indians in our area is particularly pressing, I should like to add my voice in support of the remarks made by my colleague. I should like to draw to the minister's attention the remarks made earlier in this debate or on this report by the hon. member for Nanaimo.

In the Vancouver newspapers last winter appeared a great number of letters, which were written by citizens, about the conditions of the Indians in British Columbia and about the conditions in the Indian schools. It appears that in these schools the boys and girls are completely segregated and are not permitted to speak to one another at all in the classrooms during the school day. They eat separately and are treated in an entirely different way from children of the same age of our own race. This type of old-fashioned regimentation in schools is producing in the Indian mind a psychology at variance with the general outlook of the average white child, and they are growing up with peculiarities which set them apart from the rest of the population to a greater extent than would be caused by any matter of pigmentation or racial background.

At the University of British Columbia, where I was recently a student, Indian students are as brilliant and capable as any others. During the last term a representative of the native brethren came to address the student body. He spoke clearly, in an educated manner, and presented the case for the Indians. From the floor of that meeting the question was raised as to whether the Indians desired the franchise; that is the very point which was brought up by the hon. member who spoke previously this evening. The reply of the Indian who was addressing the meeting was that they wanted the franchise, but if it were to cost them privileges and treaty rights, then something would have to be added to the franchise to make it worthwhile from their point of view.

I should like to ask the minister if he is aware of the situation with respect to Indian girls from the Capilano reserve in North Vancouver, who come to the city and go along that street we call the skid road, otherwise known as Cordova street. There they are taken into hotel rooms by various people and debauched; and many are found in these rooms with liquor in their possession. According to newspaper reports, hardly a day goes by that some man is not prosecuted for this type of crime. No doubt the minister has this information; and I hope and trust that everything possible will be done to remedy that condition, by one method or another. Every effort is made locally to keep down crimes of this kind; and, since these people are wards of the government and a federal responsibility, every co-operation should be given by this department.

I should like to ask whether there has been any suggestion that this country should follow the example set by New Zealand, where Liberal and Conservative governments have made possible direct representation of the aborigines in the parliament of the country, so that their conditions may be made known, their requests met and their needs fulfilled. It was suggested by one hon. member that some method might be found whereby Indian organizations could send representatives to meet with a parliamentary committee, and I would strongly urge that such a policy be adopted in future, if at all possible.

Some time ago I was ruled out of order when I sought to take up with the minister the matter of the payments now being made by the department to Indians over the age of seventy. I refer particularly to a recent increase of $8 a month, in addition to the $5 which originally was presented to these Indians in the form of necessities by the Indian agent. I would appeal to the minister and the department to do whatever can be done to bring this amount more in line with the needs of the people receiving it. I feel that it is a deep disgrace to our country that this situation has been permitted to continue for so long. I do not suggest that it is done deliberately. I cannot believe that; but I believe we as a nation have been guilty of neglect. Whether neglect is as great a crime as deliberate intention, in this particular case the crime is almost as great; and in the interests of the country at large, the whole attitude of the department and of the federal government should be changed and a more humanitarian ideal pursued in the treatment of our native peoples.

I want to make one last reference to the schools in which the majority of the Indian boys and girls in my province are educated at the present time. It has been suggested that the teachers employed in schools which are under private charitable auspices are not up to the standard, and in fact are definitely below the standard, of the teachers in the ordinary public schools, and that this is partly due to the fact that the organizations employing them pay smaller salaries, on the average, than they could obtain in the ordinary schools. If this is the case, as we have reason to believe it is; if it is the policy to employ the cheapest teachers, who perhaps are not able to fill ordinary posts in the public schools, and give them to the Indians, there is every reason to suppose that the Indian children will not develop to the point where they can be regarded as normal Canadian citizens. Such a policy is extremely detrimental to the development of the Indian from his present position to one of responsibility as a fellow citizen.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Our Indian policy in Canada is far short of what it should be. While the committee on the Indian Act has been at work for three years, I seriously fear that the net result of all our efforts will be exceedingly disappointing, not only to the Indians but to Canadians at large. I do not wish to be unduly critical; I intend to be constructive. The minister should set out on a definite, progressive policy with regard to our Indians, and should not be afraid to spend money. It seems to me that up to the present time our whole policy with regard to Indians has been to see how niggardly we could treat them, how small a sum of money we could spend on them. That is not the way to make a great people.

I am going to suggest several things, though I do not wish to delay the committee unduly.

In the first place, I believe a revolving fund of around $50,000,000 should be established from which, under the direction and with the advice of Indian councils and government agencies, Indians would be able to borrow to establish themselves in farming or whatever activity they might desire to follow. This is a serious disability on the reservation in my constituency. Young people coming along have no means at all of obtaining cattle, for example, with which to start cattle raising, or to do anything else they want to do.

Another revolving fund ought to be established to enable less fortunate Indians to build moderately priced homes. And much care should be given, may I advise the minister, to the provision of an adequate water supply for our Indians. On the reservation I have the honour to represent, some Indians have to haul water in barrels on a wagon for fifteen miles every other day in order to have a water supply at all. How in the world can they compete successfully if they have handicaps of that kind? That sort of thing must be overcome. I have been striving for some time to bring about some arrangement under which Indians might drill wells, but the department always seems to want the Indians to get the money from their own band funds. In many cases their band funds are almost negligible. I draw the minister's attention to this matter of a water supply definitely, because Indians suffer from unsuitable water just as much as white people would.

There should be a fund for providing scholarships for young Indians to enable them to attend colleges, universities and technical schools. Those scholarships should be real scholarships which would enable the young Indian people to go to school and enable them to hold their heads up among their fellows, and to participate in every way, just as our white young folks do.

We should examine into the possibility of establishing one or more Indian institutes or universities in which Indian history, Indian legends, Indian religions, Indian culture and Indian skills, arts, crafts and languages could be accumulated, learned and rendered available to young people, so that they could go there for a year or two and learn how their people lived in the past.

This matter has been neglected far too long. Many of the splendid Indian skills of fifty years ago have been almost entirely lost; I have in mind the tanning of skins, making of moccasins and the other crafts with which they were familiar. We should consider that the Indians have a great contribution to make to this country. They are a great race with a great past, and a great future. They are a people with splendid characteristics. Indians are in no way inferior to white people, and in many respects they are superior to us. We should recognize that fact immediately, and govern their treatment with that in mind.

There should be a fund to help the Indians organize. We have just recently had a convention meeting of Indians here in Ottawa. Practically every Indian who had anything to do with coming to the convention is financially hurt. They were not able to get the money with which to come here. There was no fund available. There should be a fund provided by the dominion government to help the Indians to organize provincially and on a dominion-wide basis. We must recognize that the Indians must learn to govern themselves in an Indian fashion.

Then, the matter of taxation of Indians is a disgrace to this country. Generally speaking, Indians have a very small chance to make good from an economic standpoint. I make that statement, judging by the Indians in my own province. When a particular Indian happens to get ahead a bit he cannot return to the reserve with his money without the government coming in and taxing that money. I say that is an absolute disgrace to the country. It is disgraceful that Indians should be taxed on money they earn off the reserves. Surely, if we ourselves neglect the welfare of the Indian reserves to such a great extent we should let the Indians who go off the reserves and earn some money take it back and spend it in those reserves.

We should insist on a greater degree of Indian self-government. Every Indian effort to establish self-government throughout the country which would bring them in co-operation with the dominion government ought to be encouraged. I could tell stories of the last year which would reflect no great credit on the dominion government in respect of the way in which they have treated the Indian efforts to attempt self-government. Perhaps Indians have acted in a way which was just a little bit different from the way in which we think they should have acted. But when the Indians try to help themselves we should help them, not interfere with them.

The Indian claims commission suggested by the hon. member for Yorkton is a good suggestion. In the days of long ago the Indians had many privileges. They had the privilege of hunting, of fishing, of berrying, of logging and of grazing off the reserves, and to do those things freely on the reserves. When the treaties were entered into they were signed with the idea that the Indians would continue to have those privileges indefinitely.

Away back around 1875 no one ever dreamed that the area, for instance, south of the city of Calgary would be settled. It was assumed that the Indians would be able to take timber and to take the things they wished off the country. Now look where they are. They are confined to little pieces of territory. They have lost all their hunting, fishing, berrying and logging privileges. Where they used to make money from these activities, they cannot do so any more. There is hardly any other way for them to make money.

We simply must face this matter squarely and give it some more definite attention. Treaties were signed with the Indians, and those treaties should be recognized and observed by the dominion government. If they are not, then we shall build up a situation which will be dangerous for the future. We simply cannot go on disregarding these people as we have done in the past, because the day will come when they will become a problem and we shall not be very happy about it when they do.

For instance, in the matter of old age pensions, no one should have considered leaving the Indians out of the old age pensions scheme. Just imagine!—the people who are the least able to make their way have to be deprived of old age pensions, while those pensions are provided for the white population. We should have gone about the matter in exactly the opposite way. The Indians should have been the first to receive old age pensions. It is harder for an Indian to make money than for a white person. They should be receiving the old age pension at sixty years of age instead of at seventy.

Mr. MacKINNON: Will the hon. member permit me—

Mr. BLACKMORE: I shall have finished in a moment or two.

Mr. MacKINNON: Thank you.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We should give the Indians old age pensions right away and, as I say, at the age of sixty instead of at seventy. It should be done at once. They need it, and they need it badly in order to be able to nourish themselves.

Blind pensions should be just as generous for the Indians as for the white population. Other benefits should be just as generous. Family allowances should be more generous for Indians than for whites. We are giving them the same. But the ordinary Indian has nowhere near the facilities for making a living for his children that the white person has. I lived right alongside a reserve for fifty-six years, and for fifty of those years I was aware of the way in which the Indians lived on their reserve. I have known that since I was eight years of age. I know the conditions under which they lived; and they were not good. The Indians should have had far more benefits.

I earnestly urge that the minister be not restricted in any way in any cheese-paring economy practices such as have been afflicting the committee on Indian affairs all the way through its deliberations. Let the minister consider the Indian Act, and make the report of the committee his point of beginning. I make these observations, knowing he will be sympathetic. He will have my complete support in any forward policy he may wish to introduce with respect to our Indian population.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am not a member of the Indian affairs committee, but I am informed by the chairman of that committee, as by the officials of my department who have sat on the committee, that practically all the points raised by the hon. member for Yorkton, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and the hon. member for Lethbridge have been dealt with in the committee on Indian affairs and that a favourable report along the lines of the arguments offered by those hon. members is incorporated in the report which has been tabled in and adopted by the house.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: When was it adopted?

Mr. BLACKMORE: It has never been adopted.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It has not yet been moved.

Mr. MacKINNON: It has been tabled, and I am informed its adoption will be moved tomorrow.

Mr. CASSELMAN: It is on today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Chairman, there are only half a dozen more items in this department, and I should appreciate it if we would disregard the clock and, with the unanimous consent of the house, proceed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. CHARLTON: I wish to refer to a matter with respect to the Indians in Brant county. I have here a resolution from the Brant county council, which has to do with the Six Nations reserve in that county. It has to do with justice on that reserve.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Perhaps the hon. member could place it on Hansard if he does not wish to read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. CHARLTON: Well, I wish to make a few brief remarks.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Well, either say it or put it on Hansard.

Mr. CHARLTON: This resolution is fairly self-explanatory. It is simply asking that an amount of money be granted by the dominion government to defray the cost of administering justice in connection with the Six Nations reserve.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is not the practice to permit resolutions to be placed on Hansard unless the committee is willing to give consent.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. CHARLTON: I will go ahead and read it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is bad practice and, unless unanimous consent is given, such a resolution should not be placed on Hansard.

Mr. CHARLTON: It reads:

At the June session of the Brant county council, the following resolution was duly passed and is submitted herewith for your sympathetic consideration.

"Since the organization of the county of Brant, nearly one hundred years ago, it has had to pay for the administration of justice on an Indian reserve within its county. The county receives no taxes from this reserve, and as the Indian population here is 5,500 and the county's 24,800, it can be understood the administration of justice costs for Indian offenders is considerable, although they are law-abiding generally, but like other nationals they have many law breakers.

The province of Ontario pays for Indian offences on the same basis as for other indictable crown cases, but the Dominion of Canada, which is the guardian and trustee for moneys for these people, does not contribute any money for the maintenance of our courts, although representations have been made to various dominion governments over a period of eighty years, and each government appealed to has informed the county council that the administration of justice in each province is the responsibility of the provincial government, which in turn will only pay its normal proportion for all justice costs, claiming the Indians are wards of the Dominion of Canada and further costs will not be assumed by the province.

At the 1948 spring assizes, an Indian was convicted and sentenced to hang for a murder which occurred on the reservation, the costs of this trial were approximately $3,000—it is possible the county can recover $1,000 from the province in the normal way, the Brant county taxpayers, with those of the city of Brantford, will have to pay the balance, for as stated earlier, no taxes are paid into the county from the Indian reservation.

This is the second murder trial and conviction for an Indian in the past fifteen years, apart from other serious crimes.

We are asking each county council in Ontario to support Brant county in its appeal for more generous treatment by the dominion government, by writing to the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada; to the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Justice; the Hon. J. A. Glen, Minister of Mines and Resources, and to its local member of parliament, requesting the government to pay an equitable sum to all counties in which there is an Indian reservation, towards payment of administration of justice costs on that reservation."

We are also sending copies of this resolution to the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Minister of Justice, the Hon. Minister of Mines and Resources, and W. Ross Macdonald, Esquire, M.P., Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons.

Yours very truly,

R. E. W. Lawrason.

Mr. PEARKES: I wish to express my regret that such a meagre amount is being provided for the improvement of Indian reserves. I have already referred to the fact that $5,500,000 is being spent upon improvements and maintenance of our national parks for the benefit of tourists and Canadians on holiday. A few weeks ago the Minister of National Defence announced that $20 million will be spent to provide houses for members of our active forces who are married. I have no objection to that being done, but I object to only $500,000 being spent for the maintenance of the reserves and the provision of houses for our Indians.

I have brought to the attention of the department the details of the conditions that exist in my own constituency. I know whereof I speak, because I live next to an Indian reserve, and there are a number of smaller Indian reserves scattered throughout my district. There is one just outside Duncan, right on the highway. Any tourist driving up the the island highway must pass through Duncan and see the miserable hovels in which these Indians are living.

Then, right in the heart of Nanaimo is Nanaimo reserve No. 1. I went there last fall at the invitation of the chaplain of the reserve. I drove up to the boundary line and was told that I would have to leave my car. I stepped off a paved road onto a dirt track full of pot-holes. I left houses where there were electric lights, sewers and water, and I went in among hovels where there were no lights, no water, no sewers. This is right in the heart of Nanaimo beside a combined terminal for buses, rail and steamships upon which the Canadian Pacific are spending $2 million in order to attract tourists. The first thing a tourist will see will be the appalling conditions under which the Nanaimo Indians are living.

I pleaded with the department to do something to improve the roads, and they generously granted $100, making it $300 instead of $200 for the maintenance of roads. This enabled the Indians to bring in a few cartloads of cinders to put in the worst mud-holes. This is all I have been able to get from the department and it is not good enough. The Indians have pleaded that their houses be improved and that something be done to make their condition more satisfactory.

Another matter I brought to the attention of the department was the fact that the children on Nanaimo reserve No. 2. some eight miles away, have not been able to obtain any education for the last five or six years, simply and solely because the department will not bring the few Indian children on that reserve into the school at Nanaimo.

I do not care how long it takes to get these estimates through. I want the assurance from the minister that something will be done about that reserve before these estimates are passed.

Mr. MacINNIS: Surely this is a ridiculous way to deal with these important estimates? At this late hour we are being kept here to pass them.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KNOWLES: The business tomorrow?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Introduction of a few bills, and third reading of Bill No. 338, respecting income tax. Then we shall go into supply and consider the remainder of the items.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the hon. member for Essex West whether it is his intention to proceed with the motion for the concurrence in the report of the Indian affairs committee at eleven o'clock?

Mr. BROWN: It is the present intention that the motion for concurrence will be made tomorrow.

It being twelve minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 24, 1948

The house met at eleven o'clock.

INCOME TAX

CANADA-NEW ZEALAND INCOME TAX AGREEMENT ACT, 1948

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 395, respecting an income tax agreement between Canada and New Zealand, signed at Ottawa, in Canada, on the twelfth day of March, 1948.

Mr. MacINNIS: Explain.

Mr. McCANN: Mr. Speaker, an agreement has been signed between New Zealand and Canada in reference to taxation. The purpose of the agreement is to avoid, where possible, the double imposition of income and similar taxes where Canadians are carrying on business in New Zealand or otherwise receiving income from New Zealand sources, and where New Zealanders are carrying on business in Canada or otherwise receiving income from Canadian sources. It also provides that the taxation authorities of the two countries may exchange information which may be necessary to make the agreement effective and to prevent fraud and avoidance of taxes which are subject to the agreement.

The purpose of the bill is to give the agreement the force of law in Canada, and it provides that in the case of inconsistency between the agreement and the operation of any other law, the agreement will prevail to the extent of such inconsistency.

The Minister of National Revenue is given the authority to make orders and regulations to carry out the provisions of the agreement, which orders and regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette and laid before parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL ACT

TRANSACTIONS BY CANADIAN RESIDENTS, IN CANADA OR ELSEWHERE

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 396, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to close what appears to be a sort of loophole in the Foreign Exchange Control Act. When the Foreign Exchange Control Act was enacted the intention was that its provisions should have extraterritorial effect in so far as they relate to transactions by Canadian residents. In other words it was intended, and is indeed essential to the proper operation of exchange control, that certain transactions by Canadian residents should be subject to control whether those transactions are entered into in Canada or elsewhere. In most of the relevant sections of the act, this intention was made clear by the use of the words "either in Canada or elsewhere", but through an oversight these words were omitted from sections 21, 22 and 23.

The omission in the case of sections 21 and 22 has recently been disclosed by a decision of a magistrate in Toronto in a prosecution against a Canadian resident for failing to sell to the foreign exchange control board through his bank about $15,000 in United States funds and disposing of them without a permit. The evidence established that the resident was personally in possession of these funds in Niagara Falls, New York, where he used them to buy certain goods which were subsequently smuggled into Canada. The magistrate held in effect that sections 21 and 22 of the Foreign Exchange Control Act did not apply, since the receipt and disposition of the funds took place entirely outside of Canada while the resident himself was outside of Canada.

The effect of this decision—I may say that an appeal has been taken—if maintained, is that any Canadian resident who obtains payment of United States funds while in the United States could dispose of the funds there without committing an offence. This would, of course, defeat one of the primary purposes of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, which is to ensure that United States dollars and other foreign exchange earned by Canadian residents from exports, services rendered for non-residents and from other sources must be sold to the foreign exchange control board where they will be available to meet Canada's foreign expenditures.

Because of the serious consequences which might follow as a result of the apparent defects in sections 21, 22 and 23 the government feels it necessary to ask now for the amendments contained in the bill. They are purely of a technical nature, and merely will enable those sections to be applied as originally intended.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the minister shall have leave to introduce said bill?

Mr. FULTON: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

EMERGENCY EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

AMENDMENT OF SCHEDULES TO ACT OF 1947-48

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in Votes and Proceedings of yesterday appears notice of a bill in my name to amend the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act, which was referred to by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) a few days ago as one of the bills that the government intended to bring down. I had expected it to be on the order paper today for introduction, but, apparently through some mistake either in my office or in the law clerk's office, it was one day behind the other bill which has just been given first reading. If the house would give unanimous consent, I would like to advance it one stage in order that the bill may be distributed to members and put on the order paper for discussion at whatever time the house sees fit.

Mr. BRACKEN: On behalf of my associates, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we offer no objection to proceeding with the first stage of the measure now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. ABBOTT moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 397, to amend the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

IMPORT RESTRICTIONS—PICTORIAL POSTCARDS, ETC.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's):

1. Have any permits been issued for the importation into Canada from Great Britain of any pictorial postcards, greeting cards, or similar artistic cards or folders, finished or unfinished, or any Christmas seals, stickers, tags and enclosure cards, printed, embossed or otherwise decorated, which articles come under the prohibited list, schedule I of Bill No. 3?
2. If so, to what company, partnership, person or persons have these permits been issued?
3. What was the reason for their issuance?
4. What condition of exceptional hardship would result if the permits had not been issued?
5. What is the nature of the permits?
6. For what types and quantities of the above articles have permits been granted?
7. What is the approximate value of the articles under the permits so granted?

Mr. ABBOTT: Stand.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, this is a simple question and I would like to get the answer today. I do not see any reason why it could not be answered now. There is nothing much involved in it, and we shall not have another opportunity to get the answer. I do not see the reason for the delay.

EXPORT TRADE—ELECTRICAL PRODUCTS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce taken any action regarding the request addressed to him by the Canadian Electrical Manufacturers' Association and dealing with the retention of their former export trade in empire markets, including Great Britain?
2. If so, what action has been taken to work out some arrangements in connection therewith without any hardship to the British dollar situation?

Mr. McILRAITH: The request referred to in part 1 of the question has been received and considered, and the answer has been given to the association.

AMMONIUM NITRATE

Mr. HATFIELD:

1. For what quantity of ammonium nitrate were export permits issued from January 1, 1947, to June 1, 1948?
2. What quota for the export of ammonium nitrate did Canada hold during the 1947-1948 season?
3. What was the value per ton on the above exports?
4. What was Canada's allotment in the international pool of ammonium nitrate?
5. To whom were the export permits issued and for what quantities?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Export permits were issued from January 1, 1947 to June 1, 1948, for an amount of 203,156 short tons of ammonium nitrate material. It is not known what portion of this was actually exported.

2. There is no quota in terms of specific nitrogen material. Allocations are established on basis of total nitrogen in terms of metric tons N. Export permits are approved on cyanamid, ammonium nitrate, sulphate of ammonia and ammonium phosphate after Canadian requirements are supplied. The exportable surplus of nitrogen, which includes the above products for the fertilizer trade year 1947-1948 amounts to 132,422 metric tons N.

3. Export prices vary according to supplying companies and countries of destination.

4. No allotments of ammonium nitrate specifically. Allocations of nitrogen are set up by the international emergency food committee on a total nitrogen basis, regardless of the nitrogenous material.

5. It is not in the public interest to disclose the private business of the individual concerns.

PASSPORTS FOR INFANT CHILDREN

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

1. Were any passports issued by the Department of External Affairs during each of the years, 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947, and up to March 31, 1948, to permit the expatriation of babies from Alberta on the application of the superintendent of child welfare of that province?

2. If so, how many and in favour of what countries?

3. How many were issued to each country during each of these periods?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I had a word with the hon. member and explained to him that the information requested by his question had been prepared with respect to the years 1945, 1946 and 1947 and could be supplied at once, but that to prepare it for 1944 and 1948 would take a considerable time. I understood him to say that he would prefer to have the answer for 1945, 1946 and 1947 at once, and on that understanding I am giving that information now.

1. Yes.

2. 1945, 54; 1946, 64; 1947, 11. United States, Costa Rica, Panama.

3. 1945—United States, 53; Costa Rica, 1. 1946—United States, 62; Costa Rica, 1; Panama, 1. 1947—United States, 10; Costa Rica, 1.

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

Have protests been received by the government from federal or state child welfare authorities of the United States against the granting of passports for the entry of infant children into the United States from Alberta?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No protest has been received so far as is known by the government.

Mr. CASTLEDEN:

1. What check is made of infant children crossing the Canadian border with foster parents from the United States?

2. Are any children permitted to cross the Canadian border into the United States without passports?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If crossing temporarily, no passports are required by any Canadian citizens. If entry is for permanent landing, children will require passports.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

QUESTION AS TO VETERAN T. HARVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, or to his parliamentary assistant, or to the government. Will the minister ascertain and announce to the house at the earliest possible date the answer to each of the following questions:

1. Where is veteran T. Harvey, Regimental No. D76502 and pension No. 550593, known to have been discharged from Ste. Anne's hospital, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q., on June 14, 1948; known to have been in Ottawa June 17, 1948; known to have been at 507 Place d'Armes, Montreal, some time since June 17?

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest to the hon. member a question of this kind should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Speaker, the matter is too urgent for the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but according to the rules of the house, he is asking the perfect type of question for the order paper.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is certainly an urgent matter.

WHEAT

EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): In view of the change of policy announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 18 with respect to the removal of price ceilings on Ontario wheat, can he tell us now, especially having regard to the crop year beginning July 1, whether the export of wheat can be made to the United States without permit?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It depends on whether the international wheat agreement is implemented. At the moment there is nothing to interfere with the export of Ontario wheat.

Mr. ROWE: In view of the importance of having the matter clarified before harvest, will the minister indicate whether Ontario farmers will be free to export wheat to the United States?

Mr. HOWE: I have indicated that at the moment the government policy is that Ontario wheat may be exported. Any change in government policy will be announced in due course.

Mr. STEPHENSON: May I ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe? Can buckwheat be exported under the new regulations the minister mentioned?

Mr. HOWE: It is my understanding that buckwheat, like other coarse grains, is subject to export control.

POSTAL ROUTES

AIR MAIL RATES TO YUKON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): Yesterday a question was asked by the hon. member for Yukon with reference to air mail. I have the answer today.

Under the arrangements completed for the conveyance of letter mail by air, to be effective July 1, 1948, all letters weighing one ounce or less will be given air transportation when, by doing so, delivery to the addressee can be expedited. While the great bulk of such conveyance will be undertaken by Trans-Canada Air Lines, it is the intention to use also all other feeder air lines which now carry mail. Points removed from T.C.A. main lines and outlying areas generally, including Yukon territory, will thus be brought within the orbit of this new and improved service.

PRICES

MEAT PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF CEILING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is based on a statement made by the minister in reply to a question on price control which will be found at page 1864 and page 1865 of Hansard of March 4, 1948. The question is this. Now that current prices for meat and meat products have increased beyond former ceiling prices, will the minister use the price control machinery which he referred to on March 4 and impose price ceilings on meat products to protect consumers?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The question of imposing a ceiling on the retail price of meat is a very complicated one, as I have indicated in the house before. It involves working out individual ceiling prices on 200 items. The price of meat, as hon. members know, has risen since the end of January or early in March, whenever that statement was made, and the ceiling which had been established at that time would bear no real relation to the present prices. The question whether any such action might be taken is a matter of government policy on which I am not prepared to make a statement at the moment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DOUGLAS G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the session is nearing an end, and as several questions on the order paper have not yet been answered, will it be possible to have questions called tomorrow?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend's request is quite reasonable. I will ask my colleagues to endeavour to have the answers ready, if possible.

P.E.I. FERRY SERVICE

RETURN TO SERVICE OF S.S. "ABEGWEIT"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the minister of Transport. Is the S.S. Abegweit back on the Borden-Tormentine ferry service? If not, when may we expect it to be back?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am happy to tell the hon. gentleman that the S.S. Abegweit sailed from Montreal yesterday. By today it should be in service on the route between Tormentine and Borden.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

TRANSFER OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I should like to reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard), with reference to the transfer of government telephone and telegraph services to the Department of Transport, and whether the Bell Telephone company had been consulted in connection with them. The order in council which was tabled yesterday provides for the transfer of the government telephone and telegraph services to the Department of Transport, save and except those telephone services within the area of the city of Ottawa which will be assigned to the Department of Finance. A certain number of the personnel who were in the Department of Public Works will be assigned to the radio service branch of the Department of Transport. I made the answer yesterday that I was not aware of any negotiations which had been undertaken by the Bell Telephone company with regard to that part of the government telephone and telegraph services which have been assigned to transport; and I find that to be the case.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 338, respecting income taxes.

Mr. RODNEY YOUNG (Vancouver Centre): Before the bill is read a third time I should like to make a few remarks with reference to the three per cent tax on co-operatives. Since I arrived in this house I have been inundated with telegrams and letters about that particular section, which is of immense importance to my constituents.

It seems to me that there is a great deal of difference between the principle of the co-operative societies and the principle of normal business, and that the effect of this three per cent tax is to treat the co-operative societies as if they were in business in a normal sense. The effect of the operation of the co-operative societies during the present period of high prices has been to protect the small income man and protect the consumer from the increase in the cost of living. I suggest, therefore that it would be excellent policy on the part of this house to do what it can to protect these organizations in their efforts to give the consumer a decent break.

I should like to point out that certain hon. members, in discussion since I arrived in this house, have more or less publicly regretted that organizations such as trade unions, which originally existed for non-political purposes, have seen fit lately to assume a political complexion. I should like to assure hon. members who make these references that there is a reason for such action on the part of the trade unions. The reason is that they have felt that in the exercise of their function as trade unions, they have not been given sufficient protection by this government and preceding governments, and consequently it has seemed to them to be wise to support one political party rather than remain non-political. I suggest that hon. members of the house who disapprove this course should take into consideration past history in dealing with the circumstances of the co-operative societies.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. YOUNG: I am speaking—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that on second and third reading of a bill only the principle may be discussed, and not the particular clauses. Discussion on the clauses of the bill should take place in committee.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is the principle of the whole bill.

Mr. YOUNG: The principle of the bill, so far as I have analysed it, is to regard the co-operatives as normal business houses engaged primarily in trade for the purpose of making progress for their investors, their shareholders, or the associated people in co-operatives. My contention is that it is precisely because the bill regards the co-operative societies in this light that it is not fulfilling the intent of taxation in the normal taxation of the business world. The co-operatives are organizations of consumers designed to protect consumers against the business world, not organizations of consumers to go into business for the express purpose of making profits.

Mr. ISNOR: Where do they get their reserves?

Mr. YOUNG: In any case where people co-operate in order to purchase or to sell products, capital investment is necessary to the continuance of their business.

Mr. ISNOR: Where do they get their reserves?

Mr. YOUNG: They get them by laying aside a portion of the part of the costs which otherwise they would have had to pay to private business in the form of profits.

Mr. ISNOR: That is the word.

Mr. YOUNG: The purpose of this bill is the taxation of profits, not taxation to prevent profits. The members of co-operatives are endeavouring to reduce the cost of the commodities which they have to purchase in order to live. Hon. members on the opposite side of the house may find my contention difficult to understand. I have no doubt that it is alien to their philosophy, but I still believe it is correct.

Mr. ISNOR: Profits are profits.

Mr. YOUNG: I believe that in the course of time hon. members will come to see this point of view. Otherwise they will suffer the misfortune which came upon those in Great Britain who took the attitude that is now being taken on this bill. The net result was that during the first great war the co-operative societies, which formerly had been non-political, were forced into the political field.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. YOUNG: I am speaking—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon. member that he is completely out of order. We have before the house an act respecting income taxes. I cannot permit the hon. member to discuss political systems and so on. He should confine himself to the bill which is before the house.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, it is not my intention to break the rules of the house; but, because of the well-placed interruptions of other hon. members I have been diverted from my original intention.

In conclusion let me say that there are a million and a half people engaged in and connected with 4,500 co-operatives. Those people are trying to reduce the cost of living. They are bearing a heavy burden of taxation, particularly in the form of indirect taxation which all those whose salaries and wages are in the lower brackets are compelled to pay. I suggest that any effort the department can possibly make to reduce this three per cent taxation on organizations which no doubt have had beneficial effects upon our national life, would be in the interests of the country as a whole and would do a great deal to prevent the lowering of the standard of living brought about by taxation methods in other spheres.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Indian affairs branch—

213. Branch administration, $110,187.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment last night I had begun a few remarks in relation to this matter. Those of us who were in the house at that time will recall the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo. I had pointed out that the conditions to which he referred in the Indian reservation in his constituency were similar to those in most, if not all, of the reserves across Canada. I suggested then, and I suggest now, that we should not try to force through these important items in the estimates without a thorough discussion on Indian affairs.

For the last three years we have had a committee looking into this matter, and a report has been tabled. Before we deal with these estimates we should have a discussion on that report. We should know what the recommendations are, and what the government intends to do with them. One of the last observations made last evening was that of the hon. member for Essex West, to the effect that he intended to move the motion standing in his name in Votes and Proceedings for the adoption of the report. I regret that when the order for motions was called this morning, he did not so move.

I submit we should have a debate on that report before we can deal properly with these items in the estimates. If the hon. member does not intend to move the adoption of the report, then someone else should do it. Before we leave this session we would have some understanding as to the government's intention in connection with the investigation which has taken two years of joint effort of the House of Commons and the other place.

Mr. CHURCH: While I am a member of the committee on Indian affairs, unfortunately I was not able to attend all its meetings. However I wish to compliment the committee on the progress it made in informing the people of the country with respect to those who were here hundreds of years ago, a long time before the coming of the early settlers. They were here hundreds of years before the French came to Canada.

These people have been considered good enough to help serve in our armed forces in two wars, and they should be considered good enough to be made citizens of Canada. I would wipe out the whole administration of the Indian affairs branch, from top to bottom, and make the Indians citizens of this country. Long ago all the restrictions in the treaties with respect to tribes should have been abolished, because the treaties will have to be carried out anyway. The provisions are set out in the act.

A large body of public opinion was represented before the committees of last year and this year, and the representations made there had the support of the Christian churches of Canada. They supported not only the giving of votes to the Indians, but full rights of citizenship. In my view the joint committee required to answer only two questions: First, are you or are you not in favour of the present system respecting the status of the Indians under treaties? Second: Are you in favour of a modern new day for Indians of Canada, as they have in the United States under the supervision of their secretary of the interior?

The committee has made some progress. Indian affairs are handled by a branch of the administration. Perhaps I should say nothing more this morning, because I want to see the estimates put through as quickly as possible. Too much time has already been wasted in our proceedings.

Credit for the great improvement in the Indian situation should go to the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness), who in the first session of this parliament introduced a motion calling the attention of the country to the position of the Indians, following which a committee was appointed. In 1946 the committee received representatives of all the Christian churches in this country, as well as large delegations representing other interests. That work was continued last year and this year. The committee has had a great many meetings, and I appreciate the work that has been done by its members, the chairman and the officials of the department.

This is my policy as far as the Indians are concerned. I would give them full status as citizens and, with that status, all the other services which are corollary to it, social services and everything else. The sooner this country awakens to the fact that there must be a happier day for these people, the better it will be for all concerned. Look at the northern parts of this country, which Frobisher, Hudson, Mackenzie, Fraser and all those other great men explored in the early days. Not a cape was rounded or a river entered without an Indian in a canoe leading the way for these pioneers of civilization. At the present time a large body of public opinion is very much disappointed at the little progress that has been made, at the suffering of the Indians in many parts of the north through lack of hospitals, schools, and nursing and other necessary services.

This government has made some improvement in past years, but I do not believe it has gone far enough. These are the views I have always held on this question. One of the recommendations of the committee, I believe, is that the Indians should be given the vote. They should have had it long ago. They were good enough to fight in defence of our country in many wars, and they should be good enough to be treated as citizens and human beings. All too often we forget that they are human beings. While something has been done to improve their condition, I believe a better day should be dawning for the Indians of this country.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The first question I would like to ask the minister is whether or not it is possible for this department to give us a report. I notice that no report has been issued by his department for this year. The last one was for the year ended March 31, 1946.

Mr. MacKINNON: That matter was thoroughly dealt with when my estimates were discussed in the house yesterday or the day before, and a complete and I think satisfactory explanation was given. It was to the effect that in the preparation of the report there was some delay owing to the scientific information involved, but it is now in the hands of the printer, and may be distributed even before the end of this session. I further stated that it would be the objective of the department in future to have this report prepared as early as possible so that it would be in the hands of members of the house early in the session.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Without the report it is difficult to estimate the progress that has been made or discuss the estimates of the department. It is particularly difficult to discuss the work of the Indian affairs branch without having before us full information.

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but he has the advantage of being on the Indian affairs committee, and I am sure he is well informed on all matters which were discussed there.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But we have no record, for instance, as to the progress made during the last year in respect to education. I am a member of that committee, where I think a great deal of good work has been done. After years of protestation in this house it was finally agreed that the act would be revised after the war. Finally in 1946 the committee was set up, and began its work about May of that year. For three sessions the committee has been carrying on its investigations. Last evening, commenting on the progress made, I said I was glad that something had been done. In view, however, of the serious situation prevailing among most of the Indians of this dominion, it is greatly to be regretted that more progress could not have been made. The committee has been sitting for three years; a report has been presented within the last few days, and we expected it would be moved today.

After three years of work we have the committee bringing in a report recommending that a claims commission be set up to deal with the matter of Indian treaties. If that commission is set up next year it may carry on its work for another three years. If it was the intention of the committee that such a commission should be created, that might well have been done three years ago and the whole matter could have been dealt with now. I think members of the committee will agree that the matter of Indian treaties is far too detailed and much too broad in its implications to be satisfactorily dealt with by a committee of this house. A claims commission, somewhat similar to the body which was set up in the United States, has been found necessary.

The Indians in Canada are under treaties, some of them hundreds of years old, and some only fifty or sixty years old. The various bands of Indians have different ideas as to what their treaties mean. Some have copies of their old treaties; some have not. One of the problems involved is the holding of property. The Indians of the Oka reserve, for instance, are under the impression that they own property in that area, but they have no title and no copy of their treaty, which seems to have been lost; therefore they find their property being taken from them. The Six Nations Indians believe that under treaty they have a right to govern and control that part of Canada entirely on their own. Throughout the whole question of treaties and treaty rights there are complications and implications which must be determined by someone. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction among the Indians because there is no clearly defined line of demarcation.

The time is long past when this matter should be dealt with to the satisfaction of the Indians as well as the white men. Under these treaties, for instance, the Indians were to be guaranteed the right to keep on hunting and fishing. Since the federal government turned over the natural resources to the provinces, however, the provincial governments have passed legislation prohibiting the Indians from hunting and fishing in certain areas, and they think that is an infringement of their treaty rights. Consequently they are asking for redress, but they do not get much satisfaction from the provincial authorities, who do not recognize any responsibility in this regard.

I regret very much that the claims commission was not set up years ago. In the report of the committee, which we thought would be moved this morning, I find this recommendation:

> Your committee deems it advisable that, with few exceptions, all sections of the act be either repealed or amended. The law officers of the crown would, of course, need to make other necessary and consequential revisions and rearrangements of the act which, when thus revised, should be presented to parliament as soon as possible, but not later than the next session.

I think it is to be regretted that a revised act was not available to this house this session. As I said before, conditions are so seriously below par, so bad in some areas, that the Canadian people cannot but be ashamed that such things should exist within our own borders.

The committee is also recommending that it continue its work next session. During this session the sittings of the committee have been taken up almost entirely with revision of the act. We went through it clause by clause. We made our recommendations, and discussed matters with the officials of the department. There is a great deal of regret among hon. members that no bill is to be available for presentation at this time. The matter is much too urgent to be delayed any longer. To some of us it seems apparent that it is a matter of policy, that a policy has not been settled upon by the department in connection with many of these matters. I think it is time that that was done and the matter referred to this house for final settlement.

> Your committee recommends that a commission in the nature of a claims commission be set up, with the least possible delay, to inquire into the terms of all Indian treaties in order to discover and determine, definitely and finally, such rights and obligations as are therein involved and, further, to assess and settle finally and in a just and equitable manner all claims or grievances which have arisen thereunder.

One of the things basically wrong with the administration of Indian affairs is the attitude of the people of Canada, the government and the officials of the department toward the Indians. They are treated as wards and inferiors. Complaints were presented to the committee by Indians concerning the treatment they had received from many agents, and they revealed a situation which should not exist. We should take the Indians into our confidence; we should place our cards on the table and discuss with them a solution of this problem.

I regret that this report does not contain more reference to co-operation between those who are determining the welfare and the future of the Indians, the destiny of the Indians, and the people who are responsible for the administration of their affairs. These people should be called into consultation. If we are to discuss treaty rights, surely the people who signed the treaties, surely those who are concerned with the administration of those treaties, should have a voice in the council chamber. They should be sitting around the table so that agreement could be reached. The various bands should select those whom they want to represent them in the council chamber. It is vital that these people should have some say in the shaping of their own destiny. Otherwise they will say: This is just being given to us; we have no voice in it; we have nothing to do with it but accept it; we have no appeal.

We are falling down in not arriving at a policy and determining the future of these people. I think in every case where a claims commission is set up, the Indians who are governed under the various treaties should be permitted to select their own representatives and not be represented by someone selected by the Indian affairs branch.

It is evident that one of the things which causes considerable difficulty in administration is the definition of "Indian". I realize that this may present certain problems, but here again Indians should be selected. There should be a decision as to the line of demarcation between what may or may not be an Indian, whether he should be a full-blooded Indian or whether there would be included those who have been under the treaties for many years but who may not be in a direct blood line from a native. The Indians themselves should have more to say in that regard.

Another matter which causes a great deal of concern among the Indians is their liability to pay taxes without having a voice in the affairs of the country. They are being taxed without being given representation. However, there are two sides to this question. It was apparent throughout the sittings of the Indian affairs committee, particularly during the past year, that the Indians' side of the question has not been presented by the representatvies of the Indians. I am not speaking in any derogatory way of Mr. Norman E. Lickers, who was selected by the committee as a sort of legal adviser and liaison officer. He was employed by the committee and gave valuable assistance in the carrying out of its work. He is proof of the capacities of these people if given the proper education and opportunity. I think he felt, however, that he faced difficulty in trying to represent the 130,000 Indians across Canada.

I think this matter of voting has been badly handled. If you look over the minutes of the meetings of the committee you will find it was unanimous in the view that to offer the franchise to the Indians would in no way interfere with their rights or privileges. But that was not made clear either in the report to this house or in the reports which have gone out across Canada. The result has been protests from the Indians and from their organizations. Many of them do not want the franchise; they want to remain as Indians. They do not desire to become Canadian citizens with all that that implies. They feel that they have certain rights or privileges which should be respected. My quarrel is that when the recommendation was made to the house that the Indians be granted the franchise, it was not made clear that the exercise of that franchise would not be considered a means by which the Indians would be deprived of any of their rights and privileges.

Another matter is the encroachment of white persons upon Indian reserves. This is something which is causing great concern to the Indians on the reserves. In some parts of Canada the reserve is owned in common; there is no separate leasing of property by individual Indians. In other areas the Indians have been able to get some sort of claim or title to their property and have been able to dispose of it, and in some instances property has been sold to white people. The result is that many Indian reserves are becoming badly split up. Complaints were made recently about white people moving on to the Caughnawaga reserve and building houses.

In order to settle these matters there should be representation of all sides. Great care should be taken to see that justice is done to these people and their welfare protected. The early treaties should be respected in every way.

The ninth clause of the fourth report, which we expected to be moved this morning, reads as follows:

> In 1946 and again in 1947 the joint committee on the Indian Act made recommendations with regard to administrative improvements which could be effected without the revision of existing legislation and which, when put into effect, would remove some of the causes out of which arise grievances and complaints of many Indians.
> There are still some "administrative improvements" which your committee deems advisable.
>
> Your committee, therefore, again recommends that the administration of all aspects of Indian affairs be placed under one ministerial head.
> Your committee reiterates the recommendation made by the 1947 joint committee on the Indian Act, viz:
> 10. The director of the Indian affairs branch . . . should be named a commissioner who shall have the rank of a deputy minister and shall have at least two assistant commissioners of whom one should be a Canadian of Indian descent.

I hope that every effort will be made to implement that recommendation, and that, as far as possible the choice of a commissioner will be made as a result of the recommendations of the Indians themselves.

The history of the dividing of the authority and the work of the Indian affairs branch under two heads dates from the time the department decided that the condition of health among our Indians was generally so bad that it would require special care and special work. Last year the government set aside several millions of dollars to undertake a survey of the health of the Indians. The Department of National Health and Welfare did a splendid job, and is continuing its work to remedy some of the deplorable conditions which exist among the Indians, particularly in the outlying settlements.

The proceedings of the Indian affairs committee revealed that the matter of Indian agents was a serious one for the department. The officials of the department agreed that the key to much of the proper administration of the department depended upon the type of agents selected. It was revealed in the committee that many of the agents appointed, some of them part-time, some of them with very little education, had few qualifications for the position. For instance we found an Indian agent in charge of several agencies, some of them three or four hundred miles apart. We found an agent living in one part of a province and his agency in another. It was possible for him to visit some of the agencies, where hundreds of these Indians live, only once or twice a year. How can an agent properly administer the affairs of an agency under those conditions? This is just an example of the neglected condition into which the administration of the Indian affairs of Canada has falled over many years. It has fallen into bleak neglect.

In recommendation No. 11 the committee suggested advisory boards. It said:

> Your committee recommends that the government consider the advisability of appointing such advisory board or committees as, from time to time, are deemed necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of the Indian Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If some of these fellows who called "carried" would come in here and discuss this matter I should be glad to accommodate them.

Mr. HACKETT: Honourable gentlemen!

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Thank you for the correction.

Mr. GILLIS: When they are in the house.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The original report of the committee emphasized the need of changing the educational system and the whole set-up of the education of our Indians. If there is any hope for these wards of our country it lies in the administration of our educational facilities and in the way we train them.

[Mr. Castleden.]

The last report that I have received on Indian affairs, which is dated 1946, revealed that about some 18,000 Indians were being trained. It showed that only about 130 reached grade 9 or were attending grade 9 classes. Out of 30,000 Canadian Indian children between the ages of seven and sixteen, only 130 reached grade 10. This fact has to be faced by this government. At the time of the last report, forty per cent of all the Indian children in those ages were receiving no training whatsoever. How can any people expect to attain any status, advancement or progress in a world such as we have today when forty per cent of the children are denied an education?

I appreciate what the government has done in the past year. I have been pleased with the progress which has been made. New blood has been brought into the department, persons who seem to be concerned about the welfare of the Indians. Money is being spent. This year I think an appropriation is being set aside to set up a few schools. But the program is entirely inadequate. I have yet to find evidence that the government has decided upon a policy with respect to education. It is time that a policy was decided upon and brought down to the house and accepted by the house, and something done to tackle the problem. To my way of thinking that is the basis upon which we shall succeed in the treatment of these people and in raising them from their present depressed state. Until this foundation stone is laid, until we have proceeded along some definite line of training, the future is mighty dim for these people.

The records will show that after the Indians pass through what educational facilities are given to them they are not fitted for their new positions; they are not trained to fit into the life of their reserves or to enter into the life of their white neighbours. They are left there, and they are just drifting. Without proper training there is no hope. After three years of study of this matter, surely the officials of the department ought to be able to bring down a policy. The committee has received evidence. The committee has studied the question to the best of its ability. The committee has expressed its opinion on the matter. It is time that a policy was arrived at.

In the past the education and training of our Indians has to a large extent been left to the various church organizations. They have looked after the education and training of the Indian children. Results have not proved that that system has been to the best advantage of the Indian. Half of the Indians are now being trained in residential schools and the other half in day schools. The religious organizations themselves are not satisfied with the job they are doing. Some of them are willing to withdraw from the field. Some of them feel that the policy is wrong, that they are not able to continue, even with the grants that are given to them, amounting to an average of about $200 per child.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the hon. gentleman say what religious organizations are willing to withdraw from the missionary field?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I did not say the missionary field; I said the educational field. On two occasions the Church of England and the United Church expressed themselves as willing to withdraw. They said that they were quite unable to cope with the situation. The difficulty with the whole matter at the present time is that there has been a failure to arrive at some policy. Until we arrive at some policy we cannot go forward. The time is long overdue to have this matter threshed out. The government should decide what it is going to do. It should pass these regulations and get the act into operation so that we can lay the foundation for a better day for our Indians.

The most hopeful sign that I have seen in the proceedings of the committee is the changed attitude of the Indians themselves. I happen to be in close contact with an Indian organization in my own province, the Union of Saskatchewan Indians. I have been in contact with similar organizations in Alberta, British Columbia, Ontario, and with the North American brotherhood. After the committee started its operations, after it started delving into Indian affairs, the Indians were asked to appear to present their case. They came and presented their brief in a very fine way. Some of these people are hopeful that a new day is dawning for them, that they are to have an opportunity to be led out of the condition of depression and neglect and hopelessness in which they have been left for too many years—something which is a disgrace to the Canadian people and the government of Canada.

These people are looking with hope to this house and I think it is shameful that we have nothing more to bring forward at this time than a recommendation that the committee should sit again. A draft of the revised act should have been prepared by this time, and, after consultation with the Indians through their organizations, presented to the house. The Indians have been denied the right to sit in consultation with the committee on the drafting of reports and recommendations. I suggest that before an Indian act is presented to the house the Indian organizations themselves should be given every opportunity to discuss the terms of the act, so that they may feel that their white brothers have considered them of sufficient importance to consult them with regard to their future.

Mr. MacKINNON: Some of the remarks of the hon. member indicate with approval that there has been considerable improvement lately, with the prospect of further improvement.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That was my first remark yesterday.

Mr. MacKINNON: The hon. gentleman suggested that an Indian act should have been ready by now, but no one knows better than he that the Indian Affairs committee concluded its sittings only on Monday of this week, and this is Thursday. The hon. member also argued that the Indians themselves should have an opportunity, before the act is prepared, to sit in and discuss it. I do not propose to follow his speech, but I should like to make some reference to what has been said.

I think the department is doing very much more for the Indians this year than hon. members are aware of. It is quite possible that, as a direct result of the way in which the estimates are handled, partial information is secured by members from the estimates without very much knowledge on their part of what is provided by the department for the year. The hon. member for Nanaimo spoke last evening about conditions on certain Indian reserves on Vancouver island. The department is aware of the conditions to which the hon. member referred, and efforts are being made to improve them.

The hon. member went on to draw an unfavourable comparison between the amounts being spent on certain road and other services in the national parks and the amount included in vote No. 214, which refers to Indian agencies. He indicated that the amount of the latter vote was inadequate for Indian housing. Actually, of course, there is no proper basis of comparison between these two estimates. The Indian agencies vote is used in the main for the payment of the field staffs of the Indian affairs branch. It has nothing to do with housing.

We know that housing conditions on some of the Indian reserves are unsatisfactory, and we have done something and hope to do much more to help the Indians to change these conditions for the better. We have under consideration a housing program that would involve an initial outlay of some $2,000,000. This program has been delayed for the reason that it has been found impossible to secure the necessary labour and building material to proceed with a worthwhile program. In the meantime, a number of sawmill outfits have been purchased by the department and established on Indian reserves, with the object of providing the lumber, when seasoned, for the construction of houses. The department this year aims at constructing ninety-five additional Indian classrooms for the education of Indian children, and seventy-five administrative buildings—houses for agents, warehouses, offices, et cetera.

The house will be interested in having a clear picture of how the expenditure on Indian affairs has been increased in recent years. In the year 1936-37 the total expenditure of the branch was just over $5,000,000. For the present year the expenditure, including supplementary estimates and health services, is almost $26,000,000. There has been a more substantial increase in the expenditures of this branch than in any other major unit of the public service. I am not suggesting that it is sufficient, but the department is concerned with the problem, is giving it its best attention, and is depending upon the Indian affairs committee for guidance.

As I have said before we are not satisfied with what has been done in connection with Indian affairs. We hope, however, that as a result of the work of the joint committee on Indian affairs, it will be possible to proceed with our program of educational, welfare, and other developments in a manner that will bring the maximum benefit to our fellow citizens of the Indian race.

I may add that in the Indian affairs branch alone for this year there is provided through the estimates, including the supplementary estimates, an increase of $4,700,000 over last year, and in addition there is an increase in the health services for Indians of over $2,000,000 as compared with last year.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is that in the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. MacKINNON: The last item is. The amount of $4,700,000 is an increase in Indian affairs in my department, and the $2,000,000 is an increase in the department of health.

Mr. CHARLTON: Does the minister intend to comment upon the resolution I put before the committee last night?

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. MacKINNON: The question has been referred to Justice and is under consideration there.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: With regard to the ninety-five new classrooms which it is intended to build this year, has anything been done yet?

Mr. MacKINNON: The building program is proceeding immediately, and I am informed that it is quite promising. The program will be carried out in full.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What have they to expect in the way of a future program? Ninety-five classrooms will not take care of 12,000 children.

Mr. MacKINNON: It is a start.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is it intended to extend that next year?

Mr. CHARLTON: In view of the fact that the minister has referred to the report of the Indian affairs committee, I think we should have some assurance from him that there will be an opportunity to discuss it later, or we can have the discussion now. Which does he prefer?

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not think that on my estimates I could object to any discussion of the Indian affairs report.

Mr. CHARLTON: I do not wish to hold up the minister's estimates but I am not sure whether the chairman of the Indian act committee intends to move concurrence in its report. This might be our only opportunity to discuss the report. I want an assurance that we shall have an opportunity later; otherwise I want to do it now.

An hon. MEMBER: Do it now.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—

214. Indian agencies, $1,963,366.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: There is an increase here of half a million dollars. Does the department intend to increase the number of agencies in the various provinces in order to take care of the Indians in the outlying areas who practically never see the agent, or hardly more than once a year?

Mr. MacKINNON: I could not hear the hon. member's question sufficiently well to follow it, but my officials tell me that the inquiry is as to the number of officials that will be required for the establishment of additional agencies.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How many new agents and employees of the department are there to be, having regard to the increased estimates, in order to take care of Indians in the outlying reserves?

Mr. MacKINNON: A survey is being made by the civil service commission and the department in order to get that information.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is a little bit slow.

Item agreed to.

Immigration branch—

221. Administration of the Immigration Act, $494,733.

Mr. TIMMINS: I think we ought to have a statement from the minister as to the policy of Canada with respect to immigration. I should like to place on the record two statements which have been made this year. In Toronto on February 19 last the Minister of Agriculture said:

> Canada should set its immigration objective at 500,000 a year and within ten years increase it to 1,000,000 a year. We can more than double our population in fifteen years.

In an address in Ottawa on February 19, 1948, Mr. Glen, a former minister of the department, said:

> Canadians have applied for the admission of 25,000 relatives from Europe, but only 2,000 have reached Canada so far.

We know that at the present time Australia has a plan on foot for something like 70,000 immigrants a year from the British isles. As I understand it, they have been pressing Canada to enter into an empire population policy so that we would each in turn get our share of the people who are coming from the old land and from Europe as well. In an address a few months ago, a member of the British House of Commons intimated that Great Britain has a population which is far in excess of the productivity of the country— he mentioned an excess of probably 10,000,000 people. What is the policy with respect to bringing from Europe the cream of the people who would like to be here? What is the policy of the government with respect to joining with Australia and New Zealand in bringing people here from the old country? What is the policy of Canada in the light of the fact, which we all admit, that we need immigration of the best people we can get from Europe and the British isles?

Mr. MacKINNON: The policy of the government is to foster the growth of the population of Canada by the encouragement of immigration, and by legislation, regulation and vigorous administration, to ensure the careful selection and permanent settlement of such numbers of immigrants as can advantageously be absorbed in our national economy.

Under existing regulations the following classes of immigrants are admissible to Canada:

1. British subjects from the United Kingdom, Ireland, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Australia or the Union of South Africa, who possess sufficient means to maintain themselves until employment is secured.

2. United States citizens similarly possessed of means of maintenance.

3. The husband or wife; the son, daughter, brother or sister, together with the husband or wife and unmarried children; the father or mother; the orphan nephew or niece under twenty-one years of age of any legal resident of Canada able to receive and care for such relatives.

4. Agriculturists intending to farm in Canada.

5. Farm labourers, persons experienced in mining, lumbering or logging entering Canada to engage in assured employment in either of these industries.

6. A person entering Canada to marry a legal resident.

7. A person who entered Canada as a non-immigrant, enlisted in the Canadian armed forces and having served in such forces has been honourably discharged.

Provision has also been made for the admission of 30,000 displaced persons from occupied territory in Europe.

Until early in the present year the limiting factor in the movement of immigrants was the shortage of transport. In order to solve this problem active steps have been taken by the government to increase transatlantic accommodation for immigrants. Arrangements were made with the Cunard line to retain the S.S. Aquitania in the Canadian service, this vessel to provide 12,000 berths for immigrants from May until the end of the present year. Arrangements were made for the assignment of the D.E.V. Beaverbrae to service between Germany and Canadian ports, carrying 750 displaced persons per voyage.

Last month by an arrangement with Trans-Canada Air Lines the government inaugurated a scheme for the movement of immigrants from the British isles to Canada by air. The arrangement provides for 260 scheduled flights carrying 10,000 immigrants by March 31, 1949.

Mr. McKAY: Is the minister prepared to answer these few short questions: What is the number of immigrants admitted to Canada so far this year? What countries have contributed most to this flow of immigrants? Has the minister any record of the number of emigrants from Canada, such as those who have gone to Yugoslavia and the United States?

Mr. MacKINNON: For the first four months of this year 32,492 immigrants have entered Canada. They came from thirty or forty countries, with these countries or groups leading: Great Britain, United States, and northern Europe. If the hon. member would like the figures for any particular country, I can give them to him.

Mr. McKAY: Could the minister give a breakdown of the first five groups, for instance? That would be sufficient for our purposes.

Mr. MacKINNON: The first six are:

British isles	14,942
United States	2,143
Northern Europe	3,755
The Netherlands	2,280
Polish	2,769
Ruthenian or Ukrainian	2,017

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Could the committee have a breakdown of the countries comprising the group known as northern European?

Mr. MacKINNON: Those countries are:

Belgium	389
Denmark	164
Netherlands	2,280
Finland	52
France	236
Germany	376
Norway	101
Sweden	39
Switzerland	118

Mr. MacINNIS: Do the figures the minister has given include displaced persons?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: Can he give the number of displaced persons for the same period?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told it is just under 7,000.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The minister said that among those who had been brought to this country were 376 Germans. I should like to know whether or not these are German nationals, for this reason. As the minister knows, we have in this country a substantial minority of Canadian citizens of German descent, many of whom still have elderly relatives in Germany who are living under deplorable conditions. These Canadians would like the opportunity of bringing their relatives to this country. Up to the present most of them have not been able to do so, for various reasons, I suppose the most important being that Germans are still regarded as enemy nationals.

I need not expand upon the record of Canadians of German origin in this country. In the cases I have investigated I am certain that their relatives in Germany have been as sincerely democratic and at times as fanatically anti-nazi as those in Canada. What prospect is there that these Canadian citizens may be able in the near future to bring out their relatives who are German nationals?

Mr. MacKINNON: That matter has been discussed, but as yet no decision has been reached. At the present time, since we have not concluded a peace treaty with Germany, German nationals are not admitted to Canada. I do not want to prolong this discussion, but I am sympathetic to what I believe the hon. member has in mind. I was brought up in the county of Bruce, Ontario, whose early settlers consisted of highland Scots and people of German origin, largely coming from an older generation who settled further down in western Ontario. We did not know those people as anything but Canadians. Some of them spoke Gaelic, some spoke German, but after they went to school at least they all spoke English. At the time of the first world war I would say fifty per cent of the first Bruce battalion were Canadians of German descent. In every way they were the best possible settlers and the best people we could have. They have made a great contribution to this country, not only in western Ontario but all across Canada. I am very sympathetic to the suggestion that carefully selected people with that background should be allowed into Canada as soon as possible.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): As to the 376 persons who came from Germany, were they German nationals?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. HODGSON: Has there been much immigration from Italy?

Mr. MacKINNON: Our offices in Italy were opened very recently. I am told that 167 Italians were admitted during that four-month period.

Mr. HODGSON: I asked the question because I have a settlement of Italians in my riding, and they have been good citizens. They also have relatives they are trying to get into this country as soon as possible.

Mr. GILLIS: This matter of immigration is a broad subject. I do not expect the minister to have all the answers, but I am concerned about one thing in connection with our immigration policy as a whole—the displaced persons who are being brought to this country.

The departments of immigration and labour are pretty much involved in that matter.

In the first place the method of screening and selection employed on the other side is slow and uncertain. Transportation also has been slow, though I believe it is improving. I understand the immigration department bring in these displaced persons under contract for certain types of work, and the point I am interested in is whether the departments of immigration and labour are working closely together to see to it that we are not displacing many people in our own country in the matter of employment.

During the past several months, since this session opened, I have received letters of complaint from different sections of Canada to the effect that displaced persons coming here were actually displacing our own people in certain industries. This will create resentment and friction. I know it has interrupted completely the means taken by the Department of Labour to solve the employment difficulties in the maritime provinces. The department had a system under which our unemployed were being siphoned off to other parts of Canada. I believe it was last October that the regulations prepared for the movement of people from the maritimes into central Canada were discontinued. No longer were any people from that part of the country assisted in securing employment in central Canada.

While we are in accord, from the humanitarian point of view, with giving sanctuary in this country to displaced persons, at the same time our first obligation is to see that our own people are taken care of. There is a feeling growing up in the mining, lumbering and railway industries that these people are being used to displace Canadians who normally would be employed in these activities.

I am not being critical in what I say. I know that it is a new venture, and that the mechanics of it are in a stage of development. Great care should be taken, however, by the Department of Labour and the immigration branch, to see that our employment situation in Canada is not adversely affected. I expect that within a year or two we shall not be as favourably placed in the matter of employment as we are today. There will be a roll-back in that field. We must be careful not to aggravate the situation by accepting a policy based upon humanitarian reasons rather than economic requirements. How closely is the Department of Labour working with the immigration branch to see that these conditions are not made worse?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is an immigration-labour committee in Ottawa which decides on the number to be admitted for labouring jobs. That committee is active, and there is close co-operation between the Department of Labour and the immigration branch. In addition there are overseas eight teams connected with the immigration work, consisting of representatives from immigration, labour, national health and welfare, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. GILLIS: What are the terms of the contracts under which displaced persons are brought in? How long are they under contract, and what responsibility has the government to them after the contracts are carried out?

Mr. MITCHELL: Perhaps if the hon. member would leave that question until the estimates for the Department of Labour are being considered, it might be answered then. The matter of employment service cuts across the Department of Labour.

Mr. GILLIS: I said that it was tied in. If the Minister of Labour wishes, I shall leave my question until later.

Mr. McKAY: Will the minister answer the third question I asked?

Mr. MacKINNON: We have no actual figures with regard to emigrants, and there is no way of getting them except by communicating with the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries. I am told, however, that we are getting many more.

Mr. McKAY: From those countries?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes, from those countries.

Mr. McKAY: Have any Chinese or Indians been admitted to Canada in the past year?

Mr. MacKINNON: Under the classification of admissible relatives during the past year, twenty Chinese and 116 East Indians have been admitted.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): In spite of what the Minister of Labour said following the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I believe we should have some report from the Minister of Mines and Resources respecting our policy of immigration.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have just given that information.

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member was not in the house.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Does the government take full responsibility for the selection of all immigrants coming to this country? I have heard of one or two groups working in Europe in the selection of immigrants to come to Canada. While at a later time they may have had the assistance of federal authorities, it would seem that in the first instance selections were made by non-governmental groups.

Mr. MacKINNON: The international relief organization selects possible immigrants and recommends them for immigration. After screening, they are accepted or rejected.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I assume that on the international refugee organization teams there are Canadian personnel who make the selections for Canada. I want to be sure of that. Are there non-Canadian personnel who are choosing immigrants to come to Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON: As its name suggests, the refugee organization is an international organization. There are Canadians on the team, and they are all working together.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I wish to be certain that Canadians are choosing the immigrants who will come to Canada.

Mr. MacKINNON: There is no question about it. The final choice is by Canadians.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf): I should like to know something about the emigration movement of Yugoslavs leaving Canada to rebuild the Yugoslav republic. It would appear from a statement made by Mr. Yardas, as it appears in this morning's Gazette, that these people are going to Yugoslavia because they have been displaced by newcomers from displaced persons camps. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has mentioned that some of our fellow citizens may be replaced by the bringing in of too many from overseas. Mr. Yardas has made this declaration after speaking to some of the Yugoslavs returning home.

What is the government's policy respecting those who, having left Canada, return here after a year or two? I know there are not many of them, but there are a few. Is the government taking strict precautions in respect of these Yugoslavs who are coming back? I am afraid they are back here to spread Tito's philosophy. The government will have to take every possible step to see that those coming back will not give us trouble through the spreading of that philosophy.

Mr. MacKINNON: The subject of Canadians of Yugoslav origin who leave Canada is not a matter for this department. Should any of the persons to whom the hon. gentleman has referred attempt to enter Canada again, they would have to do so as new immigrants. Because of their action on leaving Canada in this way, they would be subject to strict screening.

Mr. GILLIS: Has the department had to deport any displaced persons who entered this country within the last year?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. GILLIS: I am basing my question on a recent press report. The newspapers should not mislead us. According to these reports, five people entered Ontario illegally last year.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is a different case altogether.

Mr. GILLIS: It was stated that the immigration branch had to pick them up and return them to the old country. What was the procedure followed on the other side that made it possible for these people to enter this country illegally? Were our own officials tangled up in some way?

Mr. MacKINNON: Most certainly not.

Mr. GILLIS: They came in with passports.

Mr. MacKINNON: Anyone familiar with immigration knows that many people get into Canada illegally, with forged passports and in other ways. The officials of the immigration branch are on the lookout for these people all the time. They pick them up and deport them. In some cases they appeal to the minister, and the whole matter is carefully reviewed and a decision given. There is no foundation whatsoever for the statement that any immigration authorities are in any way responsible. I know I am correct in making that statement.

Mr. GILLIS: I did not think they were, and that is why I asked the question. My information is that the manipulation was in Great Britain, but the press reports would lead one to believe that our own officials were mixed up in it.

Mr. MacKINNON: They were not.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I shall take only a minute or two of the time of the committee. I support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. There is a growing uneasiness among the people of this country concerning our immigration policy. I have had the opportunity to talk with labour and legion officials and with members of other organizations about this, and I trust that the minister and his officials listened carefully to what the hon. member for Cape Breton South had to say.

I am convinced that a lot of people are coming into this country under false pretences.

People are coming in who are supposed to be farmers but who have never been on a farm and who know nothing about farming. That can be proved at any time by anyone who attempts to ascertain the actual facts. At Easter time on the train going west there were a number of displaced persons who were headed for logging camps in northern Ontario. The train conductor told me that he had been told by someone who spoke their language that over half of the D.P.'s had never been in a lumber camp in their lives and that many of them had expressed the intention of getting to a city as soon as possible. I think if inquiry be made of the lumber operators in northern Ontario and northern Manitoba it will be found that some of this labour has been most unsatisfactory. I should like to know what is done to determine whether a man is a farmer, a lumber man or a miner because I am sure many people are coming in under false pretences.

I saw a report in the newspaper some days ago that the government intended to charter a ship or ships to bring British immigrants to this country. I hope the Minister of Labour will make a note of this. What is done to make sure that people are what they claim to be? What has been done to bring British immigrants to this country?

Mr. MacKINNON: A statement was made earlier when the hon. member was out of the chamber.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Can the minister give the approximate geographical location of the immigrants who have come in since the war?

Mr. MacKINNON: The following figures are approximate only:

	per cent
Ontario	50
Prairie provinces	22
Maritime provinces	5
British Columbia	14
Quebec	9

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): How many Japanese or people of the Japanese race have entered Canada since the war?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that there were none in 1947 and one in 1946.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): How many Japanese who were sent back to Japan have applied for permission to come to Canada, and what is the situation with regard to those applications?

Mr. MacKINNON: A few applications have been received from that class of people for re-entry to Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): What is to happen to those applications? Will that be a matter of policy to be decided in due course?

Mr. MacKINNON: I think so.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

General services—

231. Grants to military associations and institutes, as detailed in the estimates, $116,950.

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, it is an appalling thought that although hardly three years have gone by since V-E day, May 8, 1945, ended the war in Europe and brought relief and new hope to the hearts of men in every part of the world, many nations should now be engaged in spending money on armaments on a scale never before known in the history of the world in peacetime. At that time on V-E day the Russians were our allies, and they were respected for the part they had played and the sacrifices they had made for the common cause. Since then the Soviet union has flouted these war-won friendships, obstinately obstructed every move to arrive at understanding, and promoted chaos and disorder and the darkness of the iron curtain as the only conditions in which communism can exist and spread.

This attitude has produced changes in policy and conduct in every part of the world; it has forced the western democracies together, produced western union and the statements of President Truman and of our Prime Minister on March 17. It has produced an attitude in Canada towards defence which is quite different from any that we ever had before in peacetime. Of one thing I am sure, and that is the determination of the Canadian people to defend our country against any attack. That is the view of all Canadians except communists. National defence is not the exclusive concern of the sailor, the soldier or the airman, but has become a matter of major national interest as well as of government policy.

Organization. After the conclusion of hostilities in 1945, the first task of the forces was the orderly demobilization of personnel who served during the war, the preparation of plans for future organization, and the disposal of vast quantities of surplus property and equipment costing no less than $1·6 billion. These tasks were largely completed more than a year ago.

During the past year we have been advancing the organization a further stage. Perhaps hon. members would like to see on Hansard a chart showing the organization, particularly as it relates to planning. I shall put it on Hansard later if the committee will consent.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister permission to place this chart on Hansard?

Mr. CLAXTON: In most countries the forces are still engaged on the change-over from a war basis, but in Canada the department and the three services have been put on a completely new basis. Since September 30, 1947, all men in the armed forces have been permanent force personnel. Canada has gone further in unification and elimination of duplication than any other country.

Because of our singular position as a member of the British commonwealth and as the friendly neighbour of the United States, it is in our interest to have the maximum co-operation with the forces of both countries. The armed forces of Canada work more closely with the armed forces of the United Kingdom and of the United States than do those of any other countries. We have interchanges of information, staff, training officers, equipment, designs and so forth. These arrangements are, I believe, entirely satisfactory to all concerned.

Training of officers. There have been interesting and progressive developments in connection with the training of officers. With the opening of the national defence college at Kingston in January we began an institution for the advanced study of problems of war and security and their relation to other aspects of government action and policy. At the first course senior officers of the three services and officials of the departments of justice, external affairs, trade and commerce, the R.C.M.P. and Canadian Arsenals Limited, are working together for thirty-one intensive weeks on the major political, economic and military problems of national defence and on bringing these problems into the perspective of their regular work.

During the year we completed setting up the training establishments necessary for the navy, army and air force, so that now training is being carried on in Canada in every branch of the army and air force and very nearly every branch of the navy. There is close co-operation regarding training and exchanges of staff and students with the corresponding British and United States schools. Selected officers from the three services are given post-graduate courses at Canadian and other universities. As to cadet training, Royal Roads at Esquimalt last fall started operation as a joint R.C.N.-R.C.A.F. college, and this September will begin training officers for all three services. R.M.C. Kingston will reopen in September also as a tri-service college. There were 405 applications to fill the 183 vacancies for entrance next September. Having officers for all three services trained at the same colleges is an original and bold innovation which we believe will prove to be fully justified. The habit of co-operation found so necessary in war is more easily and securely learned at this early age.

A further source of officers for the forces, both permanent and reserve, is the universities. A student member of the Canadian Officers Training Corps can qualify for a commission in the permanent force on equal terms with a graduate of one of the service colleges. There are similar arrangements for the navy and the air force. This program is in full operation, with 3,144 potential officers taking three and a half months training this summer as part of their courses, which will include the equivalent of a full year's full-time practical work in addition to their regular university work. Applications far exceed the number of vacancies.

Men in the ranks suitable for commissions will be assisted in securing the required standard of senior matriculation and sent at government expense, if under twenty, to a service college; if over that age, to a university.

Because of its paramount importance we are setting standards for officer training that have not been excelled in this or any other country.

Educational standards for recruits in the ranks have been correspondingly high. Until recently junior matriculation was very generally required, and even though the requirement has been lowered for some classifications, our men must have more formal education than is ordinarily required in other countries. This is desirable because they form the core or nucleus around which we must build large forces should the need for them arise. Opportunity is given to the men to advance their education while in the forces.

Reserve training. With regard to reserve training, all three services have been set up on a post-war basis with modern equipment and full-time training officers. Many units have most of their officers and N.C.O's. and about fifty per cent of their establishment. In addition, we still have over a million trained men and women who saw service in the second world war.

Defence research. The importance of defence research and of the development of new weapons is shown by the appropriation of $16,000,000 requested for this purpose. Our personnel work closely with other research scientists engaged in allied fields of research in this and other countries. We are concentrating on research problems in which this country has a special interest or for the solution of which she has special facilities.

Industrial defence. The recently appointed industrial defence board includes representatives of government departments and associated agencies, as well as outstanding industrialists who made a great contribution to industrial organization during the second world war. The primary purpose of the board is "to advise the government of Canada and the Minister of National Defence on all matters relating to the industrial war potential of Canada". During the last war Canada became an arsenal of democracy. In the event of another war, that would again be necessary but would present quite a different problem. Since 1939 we have more than doubled our industrial capacity and added greatly to our skills. At that time, however, the economy was operating at something like two-thirds of its then capacity. Today the economy is operating at practically the full limit of its greatly increased capacity, and there are still shortages of essential materials. In an economy working at full capacity any increase in production for defence purposes could only be achieved by a corresponding curtailment of civilian production.

Canada has a strong interest in the standardization of training and operational techniques, communications procedure, classification and handling of stores, industrial standards and the adoption of common weapons and equipment. Discussions have been taking place with the United States towards this end. Similar discussions have been carried on with the United Kingdom. Progress is being made.

Housing and construction program. Among other matters I should mention is defence housing.

My predecessors realized the desirability of providing the conditions of normal family and community life for armed forces personnel as far as that could be done. A trip across Canada in April 1947 showed me the need of additional married quarters, and we pressed on with an accelerated program of conversion and construction. In a statement in the house on May 27, 1948, I referred to this year's program, calling for completion this year of 2,350 new houses in 36 localities at a cost of approximately $20 million. On January 1, 1947, the armed forces had 1,241 married quarters. By March 31, 1948, 2,863 units were added and 1,864 were under construction, of which 1,179 were new houses, making, with the 1,171 to be begun after April 1, 1948, a total of 7,139 married quarters. These new houses are allocated on the basis of need, not rank, and rental rates will be the normal quarters allowance.

Progress already made indicates that the great majority of the houses will be finished and occupied before the winter sets in. The effect of this home construction on the morale of the men was evident when I was at the joint air school at Rivers, Manitoba, a few weeks ago, where houses are being completed at the rate of one a day. At Churchill, the building program includes 44 married quarters and barrack and messing accommodation for 600 men. The construction season there is only a hundred days, and work was planned so that materials and labour were on the job before the beginning of the construction season. We expect the whole program at Churchill to be completed before next winter.

The construction program will soon meet the most pressing need for married quarters. As it does it will alleviate civilian shortages, because each service family moving into married quarters will make another dwelling unit available for a civilian family. We will then go on to replace with more permanent structures some of the war-built temporary buildings which are difficult to maintain in good shape. We are beginning with the construction of new barrack accommodation for the navy at Halifax.

Recruiting. Hon. members will recognize that accommodation, like other conditions of service, has a definite bearing on recruiting. In line with the policy of doing everything possible to put the members of the armed forces on an equal footing with their opposite numbers in civilian life, the pay and allowances fixed in 1946 were increased by an average of approximately ten per cent, with effect from October 1, 1947. Pensions are already on a generous scale—the government contributes nearly twice as much as the individual. Improvements have been made in the quality and scale of clothing.

During the year ending March 31, 1948, 7,029 recruits were obtained for the three services.

At May 31, 1948, the strength of the armed forces were as follows:

	Navy	Army	Air Force	Total
Now authorized	7,500	18,750	12,075	38,325
Authorized for additional commitments	375	1,329	2,121	3,825
Total authorized	7,875	20,079	14,196	42,150
Strength May 31, 1948	6,995	16,462	12,291	35,748
Per cent of total authorized	89	82	87	85

The active forces are six times as large today as they were on the average during the years 1930 to 1939. Moreover, many jobs previously done by soldiers are now done by civilians.

Today we have 3,756 civilian workers in the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt, where there were 394 in 1939. We have 6,918 other civilians engaged at prevailing rates on construction and maintenance work in addition to the men employed by contractors. There are also 8,728 who may properly be called civil servants. There are 1,100 civilians in the defence research board. The total of service personnel and civilians in the department today is 56,250 compared with the average figure of 8,072 for the years from 1930 to 1939, or about seven times as great.

The position of the reserve forces is as follows:

	Navy	Army	Air Force Aux.	Total
Authorized target ...	4,400	47,102	2,632	54,134
Strength ..	3,873(1)	35,518(2)	848	40,239
Per cent ..	88	76	32	70

(1) Includes 1,154 U.N.T.D. personnel.
(2) Includes 1,897 C.O.T.C. personnel.

Mr. GREEN: When the minister gives the target figure, can he give the total authorized figure as well?

Mr. CLAXTON: I have the total authorized as it has been authorized by the government, and that is the figure I have.

Mr. GREEN: Is that what the minister means by the target figure?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes. That is the figure authorized by the government.

The figure authorized for the naval reserve for 1948-49 is being increased to 7,500.

Shortage of men to do the essential ground crew work in the air force auxiliary squadrons has delayed their organization. Eight squadrons have been made active and it is expected that at least two more will be set up in the next few months, one at London and the other at Calgary.

We need numbers of good men for the active and reserve forces, especially men who were too young to see service in the last war. Everyone in Canada must recognize the importance of the armed forces. Every fit young Canadian should recognize his duty to serve his country. I know of no better life and I know of no better opportunity. Members, veterans and others should encourage young Canadians to serve in either the full-time active force or the part-time reserves.

External policy and defence. I come now to the defence needs and objects of Canada.

The prime purpose of the external policy of a nation which is not aggressive is to ensure the preservation of our peace and our freedom by peaceful measures and thus make the use of defence forces unnecessary.

It follows that as external prospects darken, defence forces have to be increased. They have to be increased in order to make it clear that, if war breaks out, our side will win.

The close relationship between external affairs and defence is exemplified by the Secretary of State for External Affairs being a member of the cabinet defence committee. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs attends cabinet defence committee and chiefs of staff committee meetings. There is also a close working relationship between External Affairs and the intelligence and planning agencies of the armed forces.

For a power of middle rank, situated as Canada is, there is no possibility of Canada fighting alone. Today there is only one possible aggressor; the only war in which Canada would take part would be a world war, a total war. If Canada is attacked, it will be as an incident of a world war, a total war.

Canada's defence policy is based on the assumption that our armed forces will be used only in association with those of friendly great powers. Hence our close working arrangements with the United Kingdom and our joint defence agreement with the United States. Hence our declared willingness to join in creating a new collective security league, under article 51 of the charter, composed of states of western Europe and of the north Atlantic.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have stated our position in as clear terms as it can be stated. That position is generally accepted by the people of all parts of Canada; we are united in support of our country's foreign policy because it is based on a realistic recognition of what are our major national interests.

Defence objectives. Our immediate defence objectives can be simply stated. They depend on certain assumptions from known facts. But first I start with one assumption from known feeling. It is this, as I have stated: Every Canadian wants to do everything that is necessary to defend his own country; that is, every Canadian who is not a communist. There are, as you know, a great many ways to defend Canada against communism, and none of them must be neglected. Today I have to do with military defence, and I am going to adopt a rather unusual course. I am going to state some of the military assumptions on which our plans are based. They are frankly matters of opinion on which there may be several views. The views I am putting forward here are based on the best advice we can get, the advice on which the government has been acting.

This is a difficult subject to deal with at any time, but never more so than today. There never has been a period in history when the time factor has been so important, or so difficult. We are in a period of change and development, but no one can yet say with accuracy when a given development will occur or exactly what its consequences will be. We must be ready to cast aside out-of-date ideas and plans, just as much as out-of-date weapons. For these reasons I wish to assure the committee that we are constantly considering future possibilities. Twice a year the chiefs of staff present a joint appreciation and plan to the cabinet defence committee. Their planning teams are at work all the year round. Possibilities, probabilities and plans are under review on the assumption that war might take place at dates ranging from the present time on into the indefinite future.

The "push-button war." For a moment, however, let me speak of the present. New weapons, such as guided missiles, atomic bombs, jet-propelled aircraft and high-speed submarines, have naturally excited speculation. The "push-button war" has become so widely accepted as a phrase that many people have come to think, as a fact, that its day is already here. It is reported that the United States has made improvements in the power of the atomic bomb and that planes have passed through the sonic barrier. Theoretically it is possible for missiles to be guided by various devices to their destination hundreds if not thousands of miles away. The submarine which under water can do something like twenty-three knots is known to exist. But these new developments have not in fact yet been carried to the point where it is possible for them to change the character of war or make out of date either existing concepts or existing equipment.

It should be remembered that it is just three years since V-E day, the end of the war in Europe, and not quite three years since the first atom bomb was dropped on Nagasaki. During that time it is true that many people in many nations have been working intensively to perfect old weapons and develop new ones. But this takes time. Subject possibly to one or two exceptions, no plane was used in the second world war which was not on the drawing boards in 1939. It is a startling fact that the British Meteor and Vampire planes, which are today among the best in the world, were both produced four years ago, in 1944, and they were built to designs begun a good many years before that.

The view of every responsible and reputable scientist and soldier I know of is that the day of push-button warfare has not yet come. Let me quote an outstanding authority, the man largely responsible for the organization of the work on the atom bomb, Dr. Vannevar Bush, chairman of the joint research and development board in the United States. Writing to the armed services committee of the United States senate on April 1, 1948, Dr. Bush said:

> There is talk of a push-button war, and only too much of an inclination to regard such a war as one in which we alone would be pushing the buttons. There is sometimes even a tendency to believe that the advances of science and their applications to war have decreased the need for men. It is highly important that these fallacies should not be allowed to interfere with realistic thinking on the subject in these days of tension.

Dr. Bush went on:

If we were to enter a war tomorrow it would be a tough slugging match, much the same sort of tough slugging match from which we recently emerged, with some improvement of weapons in various categories it is true, and with new features, but nevertheless a rigorous trial of strength that would test the staying power and fighting ability of this country to the utmost in every department of its activity. It would be a war in which we would need to gird ourselves by all means for sustained rigorous effort. It would be a war in which we would need men and armies as well as implements with which they could fight.

That is the view of one of the world's outstanding experts.

A second and similar point is that our own exercises and experience confirm the view held, I believe, by most authorities, that in the immediate future any attack on North America would be diversionary, designed to panic the people of this continent into putting a disproportionate amount of effort into passive local defence.

A third point is that a potential aggressor, if it had atomic weapons at all, would use them on targets of the greatest strategical importance, and it is very unlikely that in the near future such an aggressor would use any such weapons he had on many targets in Canada. In this short-term period Canada is almost certainly going to be neither the Belgium nor the Bikini of the next war.

These statements are made in the light of all the knowledge available and on the best possible advice. What must be realized, if we are to play our role sensibly, is that there is neither an easy nor sudden solution to the problem of our national defence. There is no easy guarantee of security; it cannot be bought for a billion a year. Rather it must be patiently and anxiously striven for. The signs point ahead to countries like Canada having to face a long period of great uncertainty. We cannot live with our problems day by day without clear heads and stout hearts and mutual support.

One danger is that the Soviet union, without any genuine change of attitude, may suddenly appear to be seeking co-operation in a deliberate effort to induce the people of North America and of the western union to say, "Why bother about all this defence business." A second danger is that we should come to regard war as inevitable. A third danger is that we should commit our future resources to expenditures, equipment and plans that will be out of date when needed.

Role of Canada's forces. Because we live alongside the United States, it is often thought that our role should be the same. Canadians are prone to expect our country to spend or arm on a corresponding scale and to act in much the same way as the United States, just because we have so many common interests at heart. But in fact the difference of size makes many of the problems, and still more the possible course of action, of the two countries very different. The United States is the world's greatest power, with all the consequences that result from this fact in every corner of the world. Canada has shown in two world wars her capacity to make great, even amazing, contributions to victory; during and since the war we made contributions to the conditions of peace, proportionately as great as or greater than any other country; but the fact is that by themselves our forces could never deter the Russians, nor in a general conflict could they deliver a knock-out blow. What we want are forces which can defend Canada and enable us to play such part as parliament and the people may support in any efforts for common defence with other countries.

Against this background it is now possible to set down Canada's present defence aims and objectives. They are: (1) to provide the force estimated to be necessary to defend Canada against any sudden direct attack that could be or is likely to be directed against it in the near future; (2) to provide the operational and administrative staffs, equipment, training personnel and reserve organization which would be capable of expansion as rapidly as necessary to meet any need; and (3) to work out with other free nations plans for joint defence based on self-help and mutual aid as part of a combined effort to preserve peace and to restrain aggression.

In the United Kingdom a white paper on defence issued last February summarized their objective:

His Majesty's government are determined to maintain balanced forces adequate to fulfil their responsibilities in peace and to serve as a nucleus of expansion in war.

In Canada we are planning so that the three services and our great agricultural and industrial resources each has the means to play its role to meet the needs of the particular time. All these forces must work as a team, together and with others.

The business of defence has become very complicated. You may remember how Switzerland prided herself, and rightly, on her citizen army, when each man after his year of service brought home his uniform, his rifle and his cartridge belt, ready to serve his country again. But this cannot be done by a modern army. Today only about ten per cent of the fighting effectives of any modern force are riflemen, and even those riflemen now use six other weapons. But how would a man bring home one-sixth of a tank, one-fifth of a radar set, and so on? The same question may be asked about nations. No one country can be fully enough armed to meet and master the onslaught of modern war; each has its fraction of power to contribute to the common defence.

Defence today is a complex business which must be balanced, integrated and planned. Our plans are being made now for up to five and even ten years ahead, with changes provided for to meet expected developments. We are trying to ensure that everything we do today will be a sound basis on which to make future developments of any kind and at any time. Our plans are flexible. If, as we hope, western union grows into a North Atlantic security understanding, this may involve further modifications, just as in the more distant future there might be modifications resulting from any more general arrangement under the charter of the united nations which was agreed to by parliament.

For the short term, however, our roles are clear and evident. At sea our role would largely consist of guarding the lines of communication as the Royal Canadian Navy did so well during the last war. Canadian ships once again would be called upon to provide the vital protection for troops and supplies travelling the northern seas our sailors know so well.

Recognizing the importance to us of the northern waters, an exercise will take place with the new arcticized aircraft carrier Magnificent, two destroyers and a tanker going north into Hudson strait this summer. The destroyers will go on to Churchill, the first Canadian warships ever to enter Hudson bay. We are also constructing for the navy a large modern icebreaker. During this last year the navy carried out training cruises totalling 91,366 miles. Fourteen fighting ships were in commission and twenty-two in reserve, with 58 auxiliaries in commission and 67 in reserve, most of these auxiliary vessels being small craft.

The active army, in the first place, is to include a brigade group or later such additional force as may be considered necessary, trained and equipped to deal with any diversionary attack. Secondly, the active army is to provide the administrative and training staff—the cadre of officers, N.C.O.'s and tradesmen—to train the reserve army and with it form the nucleus for as large a force as Canada may need.

In the air, only three countries are at present able to maintain an effective strategic bombing force. We are, however, maintaining one permanent and two auxiliary bomber squadrons. In this way we will keep abreast of modern trends and development in the art of bombing. Our main peacetime task will be to supply interceptor fighter squadrons and ground forces necessary to deal with attacks on Canadian territory. These will be valuable units from which to draw the nucleus of larger forces should the situation demand it. The R.C.A.F. will activate two regular fighter squadrons during the next twelve months. The operations of these units will require the activation of additional bases in Quebec and New Brunswick, located at Chatham, Mont Joli, and Bagotville. In this way we will fill in our chain of bases across Canada, and will be able to get experience in operating conditions in all parts of the country.

During the year we completed taking delivery of 85 Vampires, 30 Mustangs, 23 North Stars, 20 Firefly IV's, 27 Seafuries, 3 Sikorsky Helicopters, 3 Chipmunks, and 36 Austers, bringing the total number of planes of all types to something well over 1,000. An idea of the cost of present-day defence equipment may be gained from the cost of these 237 planes at today's prices, not less than $35,000,000. Work on the "Chinook" jet engine and the airframe of the two-seater fighter is being accelerated to bring this plane into production in Canada as speedily as possible should it test out satisfactorily. This powerful jet plane is specially designed to meet Canadian conditions and is the first fighting plane to be designed and made in Canada. Work on new planes, modifications and overhaul was provided for a number of Canadian industries to enable their essential organizations to be kept together.

In recognition of the increasing importance of the air this year for the first time we shall be spending more on the air force and fleet air arm than on either the navy or army.

Form and amount of estimates. The form of this year's estimates shows a number of changes from last year. Considerably more detail is given and there is a new provision for current year commitments as an addition to the amount to be appropriated.

Putting together all the relevant items of defence in the main estimates there is authority for an appropriation of $232,408,239.95, and for a commitment of $20 million, or a total of $252,408,239.95 for 1948-49, where last year there was an appropriation of $239,960,617.40. While the final figures are not in, it is estimated that the amount expended in the year 1947-48 will be $196 million.

As I pointed out, our plans are subject to constant examination and development. The supplementary estimates which were put before you yesterday will seek an additional $15 million in cash appropriations for the air force and further authority to commit, of $17,238,578 for the three services for 1948-49 and $31,505,959 for navy and air force in future years. The supplementary estimates will also seek an additional $3,800,000 for defence research to accelerate development work on the jet engine and frame. Further supplementaries will be sought later if necessary to carry on the program as planned or as it may be altered to meet changing circumstances.

Putting these various items together, the total cash appropriations sought for defence for 1948-49 are $251,208,239.95, with authority to commit for an additional $37,238,378 this year and $59,938,028 for future years, which will permit an increase in defence activity generally greatly in excess of the increase in cash expenditure over last year of $55,000,000 or approximately 28 per cent.

As you will see from the figures I gave earlier, we now have 85 per cent of the active forces at present authorized. These targets have not in any substantial way limited our recruits or our efforts this year. As we near the target, however, that might happen. We shall continue to recruit above the announced target figures, using the additional men as they are obtained to activate more ships, to bring the brigade group nearer to strength and to re-activate several air force stations. The government will do everything it feels to be required to meet the defence needs of Canada as these may change from time to time.

Civilian activities. Service personnel—officers and men and nursing sisters—when they become full-time servants of their country do not cease to be members of the community. That has been dramatically brought home this year. The work of the three services in connection with civil activities included the heroic rescue of Canon Turner; the photographing of 111,043 square miles of territory by vertical camera and 293,000 miles by tri-camera to provide maps for mining and other civilian as well as military purposes; assisting dominion observatory officials to re-locate the magnetic pole; putting a weather ship near Greenland; search and rescue work at sea by the R.C.A.F.; flying on fifty operations, twenty-three of which resulted in the rescue of persons in distress; the construction of Bailey bridges by reserve units of the Royal Canadian Engineers; maintenance of the northwest highway system, the northwest staging route and the northwest territories and Yukon telegraph system; continued work on winter living and testing winter equipment at Churchill, and the highly creditable job by active and reserve units of the navy, army and air force in fighting the flood conditions and providing relief in British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. These all meant more in service to the country than our forces have been able to do before in peacetime.

Conclusion. During this last year it was my privilege to visit most of the establishments of the navy, army and air force across Canada. There I met not only officers and men, but also members of the civilian community. With all of them I discussed the relationship of the forces to the community. I had one conviction. The closer the civilian comes to the armed forces, the more inclined he is to like them and to give them his approval and support. I imagine that the people of the Fraser valley will say the same thing. On that account we have encouraged visits, arranged for open-house occasions, such as visits to ships and camps and air force day, and done everything possible to bring the services and civilians closer together. In sport there was a good example in the Olympic champions, the R.C.A.F. Flyers, who on and off the ice gave a good account of themselves and their country.

There can be no doubt as to the quality of the forces we are building. It is essential, not only that our forces be trained for duty, but also that their own people, the citizens of this country, be proud of them, respect and admire their efficiency, and realize that even when the headlines are not threatening and the march of armed feet is silent, the defence forces of this country are continuing to do their work in maintaining peace.

Two wars and a world-wide depression have shown that we cannot dissociate ourselves from the security of others. We shall continue to work with other nations to preserve peace and to create the conditions in which peace can be preserved, at home and abroad. We are building defence forces in accord with what any self-respecting Canadian would regard as our need and our responsibility.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Chairman, for the past fifty-five minutes the minister has been reading a statement regarding the estimates and the future defence policy of Canada, in the preparation of which he has had the assistance of an adequate staff. It is not easy for anyone to rise immediately after such a statement has been made and offer adequate criticism or comment thereon, but I consider it my duty to endeavour to offer such criticisms as I feel are necessary and to comment upon one or two of the statements that have been made.

Before doing that I should like to offer my sincere congratulations to the minister upon his return from hospital where he has been incapacitated for a few days with what is described as a minor ailment, but which I believe has been quite painful. Also I join with the minister in the remarks he has made with regard to the work done by the defence forces in assisting civilian life in this country, particularly in the flooded areas of the province from which I come. I am quite certain that the people of the Fraser valley and the interior of British Columbia will appreciate what the sailors, soldiers and airmen have done during their trying experiences. If I were to offer any comment upon these operations it would be to express some regret that there were not more men available and that the troops from the prairies who were made available were not sent earlier. However, it is not fair to offer that comment, because I have not the correspondence that passed between the premier of British Columbia and the government, and I do not know whether the premier asked for more troops than were actually available.

I turn now to the estimates which are shown on page 32 of the blue book, the main estimates. By a strange coincidence we find the items for national defence on the left-hand page, while those for national health and welfare are on the right-hand page. It is interesting to note that the total amount authorized for national defence is some $30,000,000 less than a single item, that for family allowances, at the bottom of the opposite page. While the minister opened his remarks by referring to the necessity which many countries feel of having large expenditures for national defence, I somehow am of the opinion that no Canadian should think we are spending an undue amount on national defence this year. Even with the supplementary estimates, which total some $18,800,000 for this department, the total amount does not equal that one item for family allowances.

When we begin to examine these various items we find that the total figure is not quite as impressive as it might seem to indicate. Going down the list, you find various grants to rifle associations, military institutes and so forth, and then a series of pensions which are authorized to the dependents of various persons who have served the department. You come then to the main item which is under the rather peculiar title of "Demobilization and Reconversion". It is necessary to refer to the details shown on later pages before a thorough examination can be made.

On referring to these details, I find that there are many items which could hardly be described as contributing directly to the defence of the country. For instance, there is an item of $9,000,000 for pensions. I know that these pensions have been paid, but I think we should call attention to the fact that all this money is not immediately available for the actual purposes of national defence; the words "national defence" being used with the rather limited application to actual defence.

The announcement was made a short time ago that some $20,000,000 were to be used for the construction of certain houses to accommodate officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the active forces. I could not help smiling when the minister referred to the fact that the necessity of providing this accommodation had been recognized by his predecessor, because it came to my memory how—I think it was in 1945 or 1946—in commenting on the estimates at that time, I had emphasized the necessity of providing good quarters for the permanent force of our country. At that time the minister definitely pooh-poohed the idea and said that that could still wait. However, cognizance has been taken of the necessity and it is right that we should provide this accommodation.

Under various headings of acquisition, construction, purchases, maintenance, repairs and rentals of property which are given in the details, I notice that there is a sum of approximately $40,000,000. These are necessary, but let the committee remember that that is hardly contributing actually to the defence of the country. Then there is the question of civil salaries and wages. In the various branches of the department they total something approximating $3,000,000. These are items which must be subtracted from Canada's amount, however, so far as actual defence requirements are concerned. They are necessary adjuncts to include in any estimates, but I do not think we should be misled—and I am not suggesting that the minister has tried to mislead us—into assuming that the whole of this amount of money is actually available for really legitimate defence purposes.

We are told that in the past year some $200 million was actually spent out of a total appropriation of $243 million. A somewhat similar policy is being followed here, I believe, in that a sort of floating reserve is being made available. I notice that it was given in a press release made by the minister some time ago. There are no material changes in that.

As the minister said, this way of presenting the estimates is novel. I think we shall have to ask him how he proposes to deal with one major item, namely, item 243. If everybody rises in his place and discusses first of all the navy, then the army and then the air force, and back again, it will lead to a great deal of confusion. I hope the minister will have some way in which we can deal with that big item in an orderly manner and take it step by step, so that the estimates can be examined in a straightforward, methodical and orderly way.

Turning to policy, one would expect to find the foreign policy of the nation reflected in the defence estimates, as the minister rightly said it would be. There is no time to make a long statement on the foreign policy of this country. That has been defined in announcements to this house and in various press dispatches. It was not very long ago that the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in this house:

> The best guarantee of peace today is the creation and preservation by the nations of the free world—under the leadership of Great Britain, the United States and France—of an overwhelming preponderance of force over any adversary or combination of adversaries.

These are proud words. I suggest that they were proud words which the minister used in his memorandum, and we must examine these estimates to see whether they were proud words supported by something more than mere words, or whether they were just idle vapourings which would really carry no weight in the country.

I do not think I should be over-simplifying the case if I said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and also the Minister of National Defence, in his statement today, would lead the country to believe that we were ready and willing for any emergency. Perhaps some doubt might be expressed as to the willingness, because of the uncertainty and the indecision which was voiced a few days ago and, I think, repeated by the minister today, in the statement that Canada would not be willing to join in any defence pact, in so far as western Europe was concerned, unless the United States were also in that pact. All I can say in that respect is that it is a very good thing for Canada, and a very good thing for this world, that we did not wait for the United States in 1914 or in 1939.

We must examine the figures which have been given to us and see whether they support the statement of our readiness. The three military objectives which the minister announced this afternoon were—I jotted them down briefly—one, to provide against a sudden attack; two, to provide the staff necessary to enable a rapid expansion of our forces, and, three, to join in the making of joint plans to ensure and preserve the peace of the world. I have no comments to make upon the third objective. The minister has explained that there is a planning staff, consisting of officers of experience, who are studying continually the plans which are necessary for the preservation of world peace, and no doubt to consider also the other two items. But when I come to examine the figures which have been given to us at various times regarding the availability or the readiness to meet a sudden attack I fear that I am not satisfied, and I cannot help saying I believe that to meet a sudden attack at the present time Canada is impotent.

Today we have been given certain figures regarding strength. I am not able to remember all these figures—I do not know that they are very important—but earlier this session questions were put on the order paper as to the strength of the forces at that time, and the strength given as at March of this year was considerably less than the figures which were given today. Naturally, recruits are coming in. But remember that a man who has joined the forces since March of this year can hardly be considered thoroughly trained and ready to take his place in the field. Therefore, in order to meet a sudden emergency, I think it would be wiser to take the figures of last March than the figures given today, which include the latest joined recruit.

As regards the Royal Canadian Navy, it was shown that there were 6,782, while in the naval reserve there were 3,247. We know there are not enough personnel in the Royal Canadian Navy to provide full ships' complements for the vessels we have.

When we return to the army, the total number given in March was 15,409. We have a reserve army of 28,743. The minister in his statement gave numbers slightly in excess of that. About 1,000 would have joined the active force since then, and the reserve forces have increased to 35,000.

The minister gave target figures to which he referred. Frankly, I do not understand those, because they were different from the limited establishments which he imposed in 1947. A further reduction seems to have been made in the targets at which we are now aiming. I would, however, bring this fact to the attention of the committee. While we may have 15,000 or 16,000 men in the active army, we must remember that only a very small proportion of these can be termed combat troops; that the large majority of these men are employed on administrative work around headquarters, driving lorries, acting as clerks and so forth; and that even in the combat regiments there are always personnel who have to be employed on administrative duties.

As I said earlier, I have not the full details regarding the correspondence which may have been exchanged between the Premier of British Columbia and this government; yet it is significant that the combat units of British Columbia and the prairie provinces had to be pretty well drained of active personnel in order to provide approximately 2,000 men who were fighting in the flooded areas.

But the point I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can is that we must not be misled by the idea that 15,000 or 16,000 men are readily available.

When we pass on from there we come to the Royal Canadian Air Force. There were in March some 11,636; I believe the number has now increased to 12,296. I think that was the figure the minister gave. But also in March there were, according to the figure he gave, only 1,282 actual flying personnel. That gives some idea of the large number of men it is necessary to employ on administrative duty in order to provide a small fighting force in the air; and if that figure of 1,282 which was given to us as being correct in March is still approximately correct, that gives us some idea of the extent of the force we have available now to meet a sudden attack.

If one wishes to see what opportunities there are of expanding that force rapidly, I suggest that we take the figures for March. I find that there are only 692 personnel in the Royal Canadian Air Force auxiliary squadrons. That is not a very hopeful indication that the small number of active air force personnel could be rapidly expanded. I am sure I am correct in saying that these 692 are certainly not all flying personnel. There would be only a limited proportion of these flying, because the squadrons would have to have a certain number of ground personnel as well.

It is not only numbers that we have to consider. We have to consider the efficiency of these forces. If we are to rely entirely on the active army, there are, as I have shown, only very small numbers; but I believe that by recruiting at large now we could get many men—I believe the minister said many hundreds of thousands of men—who were trained along the lines of 1944 and who would no doubt come back and join the colours. As soon as they could be welded into units they would be available, but that would take time.

I suggest that, although we may have that large number of men who were trained in the war, they could not be as readily organized as they were in 1939, because our reserve army units have not had the same opportunities of training as units that were available prior to the outbreak of world war II.

I have here a publication known as the Canadian Army Journal, issued under the authority of the chief of the general staff, which was sent to hon. members with the compliments of the Minister of National Defence. With reference to training which was carried out in my own province, I notice that the composite camp which was held at Chilliwack for reserve force units of British Columbia, other than artillery, engineers, armoured regiments and the Canadian Scottish regiment, lasted for a week at that centre. That embraces infantry units in the city of Vancouver, and so on, and they were able to send into camp a total of fifteen officers and ninety-nine other ranks.

Rather naively the officer who wrote this article said that the administration of this camp was no problem. I should not think it would be. Turning to the training of other units, the Canadian Scottish regiment—I ask hon. members to realize that this is a regiment, a full battalion—went into camp with thirteen officers, fifteen warrant officers and men, and sixteen rank and file, making a total of forty-four.

The report states that it was not possible to carry out the regular training, but all ranks received general military training and the program culminated in a platoon exercise.

I bring this up only to let this committee know that there is a considerable question in my mind as to the readiness of our defence forces to meet this sudden attack to which the minister refers.

Then I come to two even worse cases than that, and I am sorry that I have to quote British Columbia figures exclusively because I have not them for elsewhere. Two regiments in the interior, the Ninth Reconnaissance regiment, an armoured unit which one might expect to be sent early in order to meet any sudden attack, trained exactly three officers and nine other ranks; while the Rocky Mountain Rangers trained three officers and thirteen other ranks. That is the condition of the units in British Columbia; and from conversations I have had, I have reason to believe that it is materially worse in other parts of this country. It is a fact, as disclosed by what the minister was saying, that the emphasis has been placed on the training of officers, non-commissioned officers and specialists at certain schools of instruction. That is all very well; but we must not, ostrich-like, believe that we have in the active army units which could be made readily available, and we certainly have not such units in the reserve army.

When we refer to the reserve army we must not be misled by that name. Usually "reserves" give the indication that they are men who have passed through a period of training and are held in reserve readily available to fill the ranks of some unit which is in existence. That is not so in Canada. We never used to refer to our non-permanent units as reserve units. They are separate units, largely composed of only partly trained personnel.

We have a naval force about half the size of the force which was indicated in 1946. We have, as hon. members know, the Magnificent, on loan from the British navy, which has just joined us in the last few weeks. We have one cruiser capable of sailing the high seas; the other is in reserve. We have no complement of men ready to man her immediately. Half our destroyers are in reserve, and it would take time to bring in the naval reserves and fit them into their places in the ship's company in order that those destroyers might take their place in the event of a sudden emergency. If we are to guard our sea lanes, as was suggested, we are short of trained personnel in the fleet air arm, and it is to be remembered that we have no submarines. While we may have sent a few officers and ratings to the Royal Navy for training, we have nothing like experienced crews to man any submarine, should that necessity arise.

I have already referred to the air arm. I am pleased to hear the minister say that more emphasis is to be placed on the air arm than has been shown in the past, because I have firm ideas with regard to its necessity and importance. While it may be possible for us to raise a force that we might be able to send across the seas or use for the defence of Canada, we must recognize the fact that at best this will take two or three months; and a force which requires two or three months at best to raise the first nucleus is not a force which is capable of dealing with a sudden attack which might come now or at any time in the near future.

I think the failure, and it is a failure, on the part of this government to provide that force is mainly because the government has consistently refused to recognize our changed position in the general make-up of the world organization for defence and the changed geographical position of Canada in view of the new inventions which have appeared on the defence scene in the last few years. I cannot help feeling that there is a certain wilful blindness to the lessons which should have been learned from Pearl Harbor, Czechoslovakia, Poland and many other places where such attacks were launched. Campaigns are won by nations doing the impossible, in exactly the same way as battles are won by units and individuals accomplishing the impossible.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

I will cite only one instance. It was declared impossible for an expeditionary force from Great Britain to land on the coast of France during this war until a port had been captured. Our raid at Dieppe showed the great hazards and risks entailed in the capture of a port. What did General Montgomery and General Eisenhower do? They built a port—it was called "Operation Mulberry"—and towed it across the English channel. By this means they had a ready-made port from which to launch their offensive against Germany.

I issue a serious warning against basing one's plans on the fact that certain things are not possible. I do not believe it is likely that a push-button war could be initiated by any country in the immediate future. But I am equally convinced that countries may spring a strategic or tactical surprise which, while not going to the length of push-buttor warfare, might find us in an extremely unfortunate position. I feel that this blindness which has been adopted has had a tendency to make us adhere to time-honoured, though perhaps time-worn formations. I do not know that we are alone in that respect.

I should like to read a paragraph from a report published by the air policy commission of the President of the United States, under the chairmanship of Thomas K. Finletter. It is entitled "Survival in the Air Age", and is an official publication of the United States. This is what the report states, at page 30:

> We view with great anxiety the pressures from many sides directed towards the maintenance of yesterday's establishment to fight tomorrow's war; of unwillingness to discard the old and take on the new; of a determination to advance the interest of a segment at the sacrifice of the body as a whole. All this is understandable. For it comes in large part from loyalty of each service to its traditions. But we can no longer afford the waste it involves.

I feel that we are trying to build on the old formations of days gone by, which were designed to meet circumstances entirely different from those of today, defence organizations to meet situations which were never present in the time of our forefathers but which are definite realities today. I do not like all this talk about Canada's defence forces being so stream-lined, that everything has been so nicely integrated. It is easy to talk like that; but at the invitation of the Minister of National Defence, which I greatly appreciated, an opportunity was given hon. members to visit the main ordnance stores here in Ottawa. They are up to date in many respects, but time-honoured and time-worn traditions still prevail. We saw men using new and modern equipment to pile the stores. Then we came to a barrier, and the ordnance officer said, "Now I must hand you over to an officer of the army medical corps, who will show you how the stores there are piled." We went on and came to another barrier, where we were handed over to an officer of the army dental corps, who showed us how the stores were piled by his corps. This was all in the one building, but of course it was necessary to have the building divided into compartments, because the ordnance corps reported to the master general of the ordnance and the quartermaster general, while the army medical corps and the army dental corps reported to the adjutant general. And who could expect a man accustomed to piling bundles of puttees to be able to pile bundles of bandages? Who could expect a man who kept accounts as to how chairs, barrack room, were issued, to know how to account for the issue of chairs, dental?

Mr. CLAXTON: How about a man mixing medicine as well as paint?

Mr. PEARKES: I hope that situation has been changed. I am sure the minister is working in that direction. I just say these things to show that we have not yet reached our goal, and I am sure the minister agrees that much work remains to be done in order to do so. I should add that naval personnel were working there, and perhaps naval stores also were issued.

Then I want to refer to one statement made by the minister which I do not find supported by the estimates. He said more money was being spent this year on the air force than on either of the other two services. I do not think that is correct, according to the figures contained in the estimates. As I total them, we are spending $80,000,000 on the air force, whereas the total being spent on the army is $95,241,000.

I have emphasized the importance of the air force. As a soldier I would welcome greater emphasis being placed on our air arm, because I believe it is of primary importance. We must find a means of stopping the enemy bomber from reaching its target. That is the first requirement as far as the defence of Canada is concerned. To do that we must not only have an interceptor force readily available; we must also have the means of obtaining early warning. A week or so ago I had an opportunity to attend the industrial fair in Toronto. I do not know whether the minister attended personally, but I know some of his officers were there. At that fair three radar sets were displayed; and I regret to say that, while Canada was far ahead in the radar field during the war, the British equipment demonstrated, I think by a group of firms known as Cosser, was far ahead of the radar sets made by our Commercial Corporation or Arsenals Limited. I hope we are not losing ground in that all-important field; but the difference in definition was so marked that a layman could see how far we were behind the British sets, and it really was not funny.

Finally I want to say just one word about the important subject of civil defence. I believe some nebulous plans are being made, though they have not gone beyond the blueprint stage. I would urge the importance of developing the civil defence of this country, because if we are ever threatened the civilian population of our cities may have to take the brunt of the enemy's onslaught just as much as the actual fighting forces. To mention one very small field, just as an example of the direction in which preparation for civil defence might be attempted, I would refer to the co-ordinating and unifying of fire-fighting forces throughout the country. As it is now, in the province of Ontario you have in some towns fire departments which are incapable of rendering assistance to fire-fighting detachments in other towns only a few miles away.

I have perhaps over-emphasized lack of numbers, or have devoted more attention to that point than I should, because I am not sure that the shortage of numbers is the main shortage we are experiencing. I feel that shortage of equipment and shortage of the means of producing equipment in this country, particularly air force equipment, is one of our greatest handicaps; and that supporting industry which, as the minister said, turned this country into one of the arsenals of democracy during the last war, seems to have been allowed to slip back, so that it cannot play its all-important part in the national defence of this country.

Mr. SKEY: I am one of those who was pleased this afternoon to hear the Minister of National Defence refer to the close connection of his department with the Department of External Affairs; and I am also pleased to see the minister back in the house supported, as he was at one time, by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That in itself is significant, to see the minister's statement listened to with interest by those who have perhaps the most responsible positions in Canada's government. That has not happened for many a long month in this house.

I hope the minister's colleagues took note of some of the things which were missing from his statement. I refer in particular to one paragraph:

> Canada has a strong interest in the standardization of training and operational techniques, communications procedure, classification and handling of stores, industrial standards and the adoption of common weapons and equipment. Discussions have been taking place with the United States towards this end. Similar discussions have been carried on with the United Kingdom. Progress is being made.

He reports in four words the most important aspect of the whole defence picture—"Progress is being made". Canada is expected to be satisfied, and hon. members are likewise expected to be satisfied with the words, "Progress is being made". I ask him today: What progress?

Referring again to this statement, may I point out the extreme fallacy in the arrangement of these different things he has mentioned. Standardization of training, operational techniques and the like all depend upon the adoption of common weapons and equipment, which is placed at the end of this list. All these other things will fall into their proper slots as soon as we start to use common weapons and equipment. It is as simple as that. I hope the attention of the minister's advisers will be called to that one reference which I make at the beginning of these remarks.

I go back to the matter of co-operation with the United States and the United Kingdom. We have noted the purchase for Canada of eighty-five Vampire fighters which, I understand, are first-class operational aircraft, the finest perhaps in the world today in that field. Although we hear many reports, we still know that Britain continues to make a workable, able and efficient aircraft, and that she is some years in advance of other countries in the world in the production of jet engines for aircraft.

The pity seems to be that these aircraft had to be shipped to us from the United Kingdom for assembly here in Canada, and that we are without the means to produce them in our own factories by Canadian labour. There, it seems to me, is the essential weakness in purchasing our equipment abroad. If the producers of these aircraft could be persuaded to make them in Canada, and to continue to keep their production up to date, in Canadian aircraft factories, we would be able to have a source of supply here at home of a modern air weapon, and in that respect achieve standardization with the United Kingdom.

On the other hand, I notice that we bought twenty-three Mustang fighter aircraft from the United States. These aircraft and the spare parts for them can be obtained on this continent. That is a step forward, although I regret that they are not produced here in Canada by Canadian labour, so that our industrial machine could maintain production in the event of any difficulty, and the additional supplies and spares could be obtained from our own industrial machine.

I should like now to make a suggestion to the minister in both these fields. If we are to co-operate with the United States and the United Kingdom, Canada has scarcely the financial resources sufficient to keep its air force equipped with modern weapons by buying them from either the United States or the United Kingdom. We already have a tremendous adverse balance of trade with the United States. If we are to standardize our equipment and if we must buy our equipment from them we shall never rid ourselves of that adverse financial balance. Therefore, if we would seek to standardize, and if they will accept co-operation, it will be necessary for the American aircraft industry or the American defence department to let contracts in Canada. They could let contracts for aircraft with which we could equip our forces, and deliver to them any surplus quantities for the equipment of their own forces with one particular type of machine.

To my mind this is essential, because I believe Canada's air defence should be based upon North American industry and equipment. It means that our government should adopt a policy of integrating our air equipment with that of the United States forces. The joint defence board should be asked immediately to decide the respective defence roles of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the United States air force.

Our Canadian representatives would be well advised to adopt for the present a policy which would be primarily defensive, because of our size and our inability adequately to undertake more than one specialized role in the defence of the continent. When these decisions have been taken our government should arrange for the mass production in Canada of the type of aircraft selected for Canadian defence in a program of North American cooperation. As I have said, part of this production could be absorbed by the United States forces.

When this suggestion is made to our cousins south of the border there will probably be a distinctly negative reaction. That is not surprising, because their aircraft industry has been hit as hard as, if not harder than our own Canadian industry, and has need of sustenance by means of new contracts. I understand from reliable sources, however, that about 65 per cent to 70 per cent of the content of any aircraft built in Canada is of United States origin. That is, Canadian aircraft manufacturers must buy from United States sources up to 70 per cent of the value of the aircraft they are making. So it can be seen at once that the American aircraft industry will not be greatly damaged by the suggestion I am about to make, and our own process of co-operation and standardization will be immeasurably assisted.

I rise frequently in the house to advance the idea of adequate air defence, for the simple reason that I believe that, through the continued development of our air force, we can protect this continent. We can do something more; we can protect the peace of the world. I say this, because in history we have had two examples where the peace of the world has been maintained by strong military forces. The first to which I would refer was the Roman empire, which was based upon the Roman legions. They kept the peace by keeping at bay the barbarians who threatened the frontiers of their empire. That was known as the Pax Romana.

The second example is the Pax Britannica, which followed Nelson's great victory over Napoleon's fleet at Trafalgar. It was based upon the British navy, a navy which devoted itself to clearing the sea lanes of the world of pirates and privateers in the navies of those countries which did not wish to trade peacefully.

In this new era of world development, many legions are too few and fleets of ships are too slow to cover the space and distances necessary to secure our western civilization. The only disciplined arm of national defence which can be devoted economically to peace is our air force. If that single thought can be projected beyond any service or national prejudice we can accomplish a Pax Americana based on air supremacy.

That is the thought which I should like to leave with this committee today. I urge the minister to ask his defence advisers to sit down again with the United States members of the joint defence board to see if some degree of standardization and co-operation cannot be worked out.

On April 16 I asked the minister some questions about joint defence. I noted at that time that the house of representatives of the United States had voted 417 to 5 to spend over $3,000,000,000 on air defence in order to raise their air force to 70 groups for the protection and security of their country. I went on to ask him if he was endeavouring to arrive at any joint agreement by which Canada might assist in the over-all defence of this continent. The minister replied that it would be almost inconceivable for the United States to request any action by us or to suggest that we should co-operate with them. To me that was a foolish reply. We do not need to fear our friends, and surely we can work with them. It seems to me that it is too bad if that effort has broken down and we are to be a party to letting the situation remain as it is.

Earlier I commented on the fact that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were in the chamber while the minister was speaking. At this point I should like to place on the record a statement by General Eisenhower, contained in his official report of February 7, 1948, as follows:

> I believe we have finally learned that national defence is not the exclusive property and concern of men in uniform, but the responsibility as well of labour, management, agriculture, industry and every group that goes to make up the national complex.

And a little later on, he said:

> The United States army supports the theory that air power occupies a dominant position in modern warfare.

Whenever I have an opportunity I rise in this house to put forward, not old worn-out ideas but new ones, to make constructive suggestions to the minister in order to try to achieve the thing we all want, namely, the security of our country by the proper defensive equipping of our armed forces. I have finished for this afternoon except to quote an old Hindu proverb, which reads:

> A man without a stick will be bitten even by a sheep.

We want Canada to have a stick. We want these international wolves who may be appearing in sheep's clothing at the present time to know we have a stick. We know a great many who have suffered from their attentions in the past now realize that they have long fangs.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time, not to attempt to analyse the minister's statement or to criticize it. Some analysing and criticizing has been done by the hon. gentlemen who preceded me. The minister's statement was a sombre one. As he said, after no more than three years from the end of hostilities we now have to think of our defences against aggression which may come any day. I think hon. members will agree that this is indeed a deplorable thing. I am satisfied that this has not been part of our making and for that we indeed can feel thankful.

The position of the Minister of National Defence is not an easy one at this time, for many reasons. The danger of war is here and we must try to prepare for an emergency without adding to that danger. Canada has never been a military country, although our exploits in wars that we have engaged in have been considerable, when one considers our population and our resources. If we are to prepare adequately for an emergency I assume that we should have some knowledge of how great that emergency may be. That is something we do not know, nor do we know from what direction or at what time it may come.

I gather that there has been some difficulty in getting men for the various branches of the armed services on a voluntary basis. If we were to try to get them on any other basis I am satisfied that it would only make the world situation worse and add to our own difficulties. I was glad to hear the minister say our defence policy is closely associated with our external policy. I am satisfied that, no matter what happens, at some time we shall have to get down to world co-operation. We must work for that with those who are willing to work with us, and we must offer every inducement to those who will not work with us, to come in with us and work for peace.

We are now planning the defences of Canada which I imagine every hon. member feels is necessary. It is amazing that those who are so keen on planning for national defence should be so much opposed to economic and social planning, not only on a national but on an international basis. Unless we do that we shall never have freedom from the fear of aggression. As a matter of fact, I think one comes before the other. If we are to get the world into a position where we can avoid war we can do so only by getting the world together and planning for the improvement of the economic and social conditions of mankind. I hope that we shall never leave that out of the picture.

I read an article the other day, but I cannot remember the name of the periodical which contained it. The author was showing that in the matter of its natural resources the United States was not in a position now to put the same effort into a war as it did in the last one, simply because of the lack of these natural resources which are today called upon in a great war such as the last two. These wars are the wasters, not only of our human resources but of our natural resources which are needed for economic development. We should not—I am glad that the minister did not do so—in our preparation to defend ourselves, consider that war is inevitable. Today there are strong forces working for peace as well as those forces which we believe are working for war, or at least working for that kind of economic chaos which naturally leads to war.

I do not know that there is anything further I can say or need to say on this matter, except I hope that the government will do everything within its power while it is preparing the defence of this country, associating ourselves with other countries that are of like mind, to build up the economic and social conditions of the world wherever we can, because I am satisfied that that is the only way in which peace can be maintained.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister is confronted with the task of enlisting young Canadians to build a new Canadian army, an army adequate for a possible world war III. The task is to be accomplished within living and immediate memory of world war II just finished. Men will not readily enlist, unless they have implicit confidence in the unblemished honour of their government in respect of keeping its promises.

Military success depends largely on morale; for lack of morale in the forces, or among the people, can play directly into the hands of the communists. One of the worst enemies of morale is a sense of injustice. Because of this fact, I consider it my duty to bring to the minister's attention the case of a veteran of world war II, namely, Thomas P. Harvey, No. D76502.

There is a saying that used to be passed about among people when I was a boy, that the non-thrifty housekeeper could throw more out of the back door with a teaspoon than a good providing husband could throw in through the front door with a scoop shovel. It is quite conceivable that in a government such as ours we could have an unthrifty department somewhere throwing more morale out with a teaspoon through the back door than the minister could throw in through the front door with a scoop shovel, endeavouring to build up morale with which he can enlist a suitable army and maintain a suitable spirit among the people to enable Canada to fight the kind of fight that she has fought so splendidly in two world wars.

I am afraid that the Canadian people as a whole, and the army as a whole, after world war I were disillusioned. I am afraid that, after world war II, the state of mind was not disillusionment but embitterment. For that reason I am going on the borderline of order to bring this matter to the attention of the minister, which I think is only a type of similar things which are in progress in different parts of Canada, and which are tending to embitter the people of Canada and make them so, that probably in the case of another emergency we shall not have that alacrity which existed in world war I; or that, shall I say, submissiveness which existed in world war II. We might have active hostility toward military participation of the nation. According to the best evidence I can find, this is the greatest danger which confronts us in case of a war with the nation of which we all think but do not care to speak as being our possible next enemy.

Before the orders of the day were called this morning, I endeavoured to ask three questions which I thought were of vital importance to the minister and which, in the absence of certain other ministers, perhaps he should urge should be answered without further delay. The questions were:

Will the minister ascertain and announce to the house at the earliest possible date the answer to each of the following questions:

1. Where is veteran T. Harvey, regimental No. D76502 and pension No. 550593, known to have been discharged from Ste. Anne's hospital, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q., on June 14, 1948; known to have been in Ottawa June 17, 1948; known to have been at 507 Place d'Armes, Montreal, some time since June 17?

2. Has the said veteran Harvey been forcibly detained some time since June 18, 1948?

3. Is the said veteran Harvey now being denied freedom to communicate with certain of his friends outside of his present place of abode?

I am still anxiously uncertain as to the whereabouts of veteran Harvey, and I say this in all earnestness to the minister. If the evidence which I have should prove to be valid, then I am afraid that his case is a matter which everyone in Canada and this government should seek to ferret out with no further delay.

Mr. CLAXTON: I am not quite clear whether the hon. member suggests that the Department of National Defence has anything to do with this man. I say that, because it would not appear that the Department of National Defence had anything whatever to do with him.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It may be that the Department of National Defence does not have anything to do with the case. I am not exactly sure, but I cannot see how in the world the Department of National Defence can conduct its affairs in preparation for world war III effectively, unless the Department of Veterans Affairs is taking proper care of the people who fought in world war II.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BLACKMORE: For the reason which I indicated—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question which the hon. member is raising is one for the Department of Veterans Affairs. I gather from what he has said that the man to whom he refers has been discharged from the army. If that is correct, the matter should be taken up with another department and not with the Department of National Defence. There is nothing in these estimates that would enable the hon. member to go into that question.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If that is your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and if that is the desire of the minister, then I shall defer consideration of this case until a more appropriate time. I have brought the name of the gentleman to the minister's attention and the minister has kindly listened to the questions. I would urge upon him that he take some sort of measure to see that injustices similar to those which I fear have been perpetrated upon veteran Harvey shall be removed from all veterans before long.

Mr. CLAXTON: I will ask my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs to look into the case at once.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I thank the minister. I have little else to say. I will say no more regarding this particular matter.

May I conclude, however, by saying that I am well pleased with the minister. I have been watching him closely as the man upon whom the fate of Canada and perhaps of the British empire hangs or will hang in the future. Naturally, being a citizen of both these units, I am deeply concerned. I believe the country's military affairs are in good hands, and I assure the minister that we will do all we can in our group to support him in the arduous task to which he has been called. At the same time, whenever we see anything in his department that calls for criticism we will not hesitate to bring the matter to his attention with all the emphasis we may find it possible to summon.

Mr. FULTON: The minister has made a lengthy and important statement of defence policy in introducing his estimates this afternoon. Certainly, to those of us who for some years have strenuously advocated that there should be regular statements and discussion of defence policy, the minister's practice, last year and again this year, is a source of satisfaction, and we should like to express our agreement with the course he has followed. But inasmuch as the statement is so important, we would not be discharging our part of the duty that rests upon us all if we let it go without some comment.

Critical analysis has already been made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Skey), but there are other features of the statement which require some analysis and comment because, although it is a source of great satisfaction that we have had the statement, and are not left with the feeling that defence matters are being treated inadequately in that respect, I feel that some aspects of the policy outlined in the statement are inadequate. It is the inadequacy of the policy that I should like to examine for a few minutes before going on to the other question that I wish to discuss, namely the position of our reserve force.

In analysing the statement the minister made this afternoon, and statements he has made on other occasions in this house and in speeches outside the house, one can only gain the impression that the present assumption of the department is that the next war will probably be fought on the same terms as the last one; that is to say, any war which might be thrust upon us in the near future will be fought on the same basis as the war which was concluded just three years ago.

There seem to be two parts to that assumption. There are some signs of planning or willingness to plan for a war which might be thrust upon us in ten or fifteen years' time—what might be called a deliberate war. I think, however, it is safe to assert that the assumption is that what is regarded as an accidental war, or what the department calls an accidental war, which might come within the next two or three years, shall we say, will be fought on exactly the same general basis, the same general plan of campaign, as the war we have just finished.

That, to my mind, is a basically unsound assumption, and any plans for Canada's defence based upon that assumption are unsound and inadequate. It seems to me that there are many factors which when analysed should convince us that any war, whether it comes in the next one, two or three years, or in fifteen or twenty years' time, will be fought on a basis vastly different from that on which the war that started in 1939 was fought. It follows, therefore, that Canada's defence policy should consist of much more than plans for what I believe is called a deliberate war, a war in the fairly distant future.

With regard to an immediate or accidental war, I suggest that if war came at any time in the near future it would be an accident as far as we are concerned, although we can depend upon it that in the minds of those nations which would be the aggressors there would be nothing accidental about it. It would come because they thought that by a sudden war they could obtain an initial advantage which would make it a short war.

So long as we continue to base our plans for defence on the assumption that war, if it came, would be fought on the same basis as the last war; so long as our plans are predicated on that idea, I suggest that any war in the next two or three years would in fact be a short one because our preparations would be totally inadequate.

That means that even the short-range defence policy must be so designed as to take into account the progress made in weapons, armaments and tactics during and since the last war. Here I would refer to the minister's statement of this afternoon. He said that "a second danger is that we should come to regard war as inevitable." That, of course, is quite true; it is a mental attitude that must be resisted. But he went on to say that "a third danger is that we should commit our future resources to expenditures, equipment and plans that will be out of date when needed."

Of course that is a danger; nevertheless it is a fact which we must face. We must have some equipment and some plans, and we must make some expenditures to meet the possibility of war in the immediate future and, as I have said, to meet the fact that war when it comes will be fought on a vastly different basis from the last one. What seems to be happening at the present time is that the department is so much concerned not to build weapons and prepare plans which will be out of date ten or fifteen years from now that it may fall into the trap of having virtually no plans and no weapons adequate to meet an immediate war. If the assumption of the department that an immediate war would be fought on the same terms as the last one were correct, the danger I see would be minimized. But certain as I am that an immediate war would be fought on a different basis, the weakness in the department's analysis becomes evident, and that is the main weakness in the defence policy being at present pursued.

Another point which shows the weakness to which the policy exposes us is contained in another part of the minister's statement where he analyses Canada's present defence aims and objectives. He lays down as a first objective:

> To provide the force estimated to be necessary to defend Canada against any sudden direct attack that could be or is likely to be directed against it in the near future.

This objective, to my mind, if we accept it —and I think it is a sound objective that should be and will be accepted—obviously imposes on us the necessity of having forces adequate to meet that sudden attack. That attack may come in the immediate future—in one, two or three years. On the other hand, if we are so obsessed with the idea of not having out-of-date plans and equipment that we have virtually no plans, equipment and forces at all for the near future, then obviously we shall not be in a position to meet that danger and to achieve our first objective.

The first requirement in order to meet that first objective is obviously that we should have sufficient forces with which to meet the danger; and because of our peculiar position, that involves the necessity of strong and prepared reserves capable of immediate mobilization and formation into an effective fighting force. Here again, when we analyse the figures with regard to our reserves, as I shall do in a moment, it seems to me that we can see the weakness in the department's plans for meeting the immediate war.

In further analysis of this weakness, I should like to refer the committee to the minister's statement where he discusses the possibility of a push-button war. I agree with him to some extent that, to talk of a push-button war and to concentrate on that as an immediate likelihood, might lead us into dangers and wrong courses of action. On the other hand, I think the minister and the department have been led into discounting altogether the possibility of such a war in the immediate future, and into going so far as to say in effect that in the immediate future there will be no substantial change in the weapons and tactics from those with which we started the war just concluded.

I wish to refer to a passage of the statement the minister made this afternoon in which he said:

> Theoretically—

And I should like to emphasize that word.

> —it is possible for missiles to be guided by various devices to their destination hundreds, if not thousands, of miles away.

It is not only theoretically possible; it is actually possible. It was being done at the end of the last war. V-1 rockets were used for one and a half years before the end of the last war. V-2's or guided missiles were being used at the end of the last war. Those who have had practical experience in the matter and know the over-all picture, have said in no uncertain terms, that had it not been for the fact that by 1945 we had attained land and air superiority over the enemy so that we could overrun his territory and take over his bases, thus preventing him from using those guided missiles, the outcome of the war might have been much different from what it was. Certainly the fate of London and of other cities in England would have been horrible to contemplate. The point is, of course, that these missiles or weapons were in existence, were being used at the end of the last war and will be used in larger numbers, and in more perfectly developed form, at the beginning of any war in the future.

Mr. CLAXTON: On ranges of about 200 miles.

Mr. FULTON: I think that is an entirely unwarranted assumption when one remembers—

Mr. CLAXTON: I admit they were used. But I asked if it is not true that they were used at the end of the war on ranges up to about 200 miles?

Mr. FULTON: That is not my impression. I should not care to engage in an argument on that basis, but my recollection is that the ranges were considerably more than 200 miles. But we must remember this fact. Russia is the country which took over that portion of Germany in which experiments on those weapons were being carried on. It certainly would be a false assumption to suppose that Russia, as well as ourselves, has refrained from any further development of guided missiles.

The minister went on in that portion of his remarks to say this:

> But these new developments have not in fact yet been carried to the point where it is possible for them to change the character of war or make out of date either existing concepts or existing equipment.

That statement is, I think, typical of the weakness in policy which I have been pointing out. Those weapons were changing the character of war. They were making out of date existing equipment. I am not saying that the department is totally blind to the importance of research or of adapting our methods to meet possible new weapons and equipment. It would be foolish for me to make that statement categorically. But I suggest that the frame of mind which would lead to the formulation and expression of such a statement as that, indicates that at the moment we are not preparing our defence plans to meet an immediate war in any realistic fashion; that we are not bearing in mind that the character of warfare is being changed every day; and that we are in fact making no effective plans to meet the next war which, whenever it comes, I am certain will be characterized by a totally new, much more rapid, and in many respects totally unexpected, form of attack.

The whole tenor of the minister's statement in that regard indicates the belief in the minds of the department that we shall again have an opportunity for leisurely preparation—and by "leisurely" I mean comparatively leisurely—leisurely mobilization, leisurely assembling of our forces and leisurely direction of our forces to those places where we wish to send them, and that we shall be able to conduct the war as the last one was conducted in its early stages. I maintain that the whole tenor of the minister's statement in that respect indicates that in our thinking—or if not in our thinking, in our preparations—at present we have gone little, if any, beyond the concept in our minds during the 1939-45 war.

One other portion of the minister's statement further reinforces this supposition. The minister has spoken of the necessity to take a realistic viewpoint of Canada's defence needs. He has made a point with which I take exception, because it seems to me again to be a denial of what we must do to meet an immediate war. He said in his statement:

> . . . but the fact is that by themselves our forces could never deter the Russians, nor in a general conflict could they deliver a knock-out blow.

The second portion of that statement is perhaps true, and I am not going to enter upon an argument concerning it at the moment; but the frame of mind inherent in the first portion of the statement seems to me to be open to serious criticism: "The fact is," the minister says, "that by themselves our forces could never deter the Russians." Certainly that is true of our forces as at present constituted, because they are not designed or geared to fight the type of war which I believe the Russians or any other aggressor nation would force upon us, were that war to come in the immediate future. So to that extent the statement is true. But it certainly would not be nearly so true if at the present time our forces were designed and streamlined to meet the type of warfare we shall have to meet, whether it comes this year, next year or five, ten or fifteen years from now. Of course, by themselves our forces are not going to deter Russia or any other country from attacking us, as long as they are based upon the assumption that we shall have any extended mobilization and preparation period. Just as long as we leave ourselves in that position, Russia will not be deterred by our forces, because virtually they will not exist. But if they did exist; if they were geared to meet the type of war we shall have to meet, whenever it comes, certainly the chance would be much better that they would be able to deter Russia or any other country from attacking Canada.

In this connection I should like to point out an apparent contradiction, perhaps a change of mind on the part of the minister, as between his statement today and a statement he made in Montreal in February of this year. At that time he was delivering an address at McGill university sponsored by the McGill Liberal club, and I am reading the report of that speech which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of February 10. The minister pointed out that American experts estimate Russia's total armed forces at around four million, compared with slightly over one million in their own country. He went on to say:

> . . . by suppressing and distorting the truth she keeps her people in ignorance and poverty behind the "iron curtain."

The report in the Gazette continues:

> Mr. Claxton stressed that he was not suggesting that Russia was poised on the brink of war, but merely that she and her satellities have shown that they are not ready to seek permanent security under the law, and that as a consequence—

Then the report quotes from the minister's address:

> —"Canada must ensure positive security under her own arms."

I think that that is a much more realistic approach to the problem of defence in Canada than his address this afternoon, in which he said that by themselves our forces could never deter the Russians. Of course they could not, as long as our policy remains what it is today. If it were brought up to date, however, and put on a more realistic basis, certainly it cannot be denied that they could deter the Russians and could give a very good account of themselves, if they were given a fair chance by the designing of our defence policies to meet such an attack as the Russians might direct against us. I point to the unwisdom of the minister making that statement and permitting that situation to exist. If the situation did not exist the statement might be a good camouflage; but if the statement is made and the situation exists, and the Russians or any other potential aggressors know it, it is a serious lack of realism in our defence policy.

This afternoon the minister quoted figures as to the actual strengths of our permanent and reserve forces, and compared them with the authorized strengths. My impression, which is shared by the hon. member for Nanaimo who dealt with this point, is that the figures of authorized strengths the minister gave were the ceilings at present imposed by the department, not the ceilings authorized under the act of parliament setting out the maximum for our armed forces, or the maximum authorized for our reserve forces. That being the case, of course the percentages quoted by the minister were a great deal higher than they would have been had the comparison been between the strength today and the maximum strength in contemplation for our armed forces.

I want to give those strengths again; I want the committee, and I hope particularly the minister, to consider the position of the auxiliary air force, as an example. The importance of the air arm was emphasized by the hon. member for Trinity. I do not think any member of this committee, including the minister, would disagree as to the importance of an adequate air force in Canada's defence scheme. I am taking the auxiliary air force as an example, though admittedly it is the worst. We find that in March of this year the total authorized strength of the auxiliary Royal Canadian Air Force was 4,500; that the present authorization was 3,121 as of the date the return was made, but that the present actual strength of the auxiliary air force was only 692. Those figures are serious in view of the importance of the air arm in Canada's defence. The situation is slightly better, though serious deficiencies exist, in the actual strengths of the other arms of Canada's defence forces.

These figures, together with the other considerations I have put forward, suggest that our defence policy for the present, in reference to any war we may have forced upon us in the immediate or even more distant future, is unrealistic and, as far as the immediate future is concerned, totally inadequate.

Mr. Chairman, the arguments advanced so far, in considering Canada's defence policy, and indeed the minister's own statement, indicate the truth of the position which is generally accepted, that Canada is not able to keep adequate defence forces permanently under arms. That is to say, we are not able to maintain a great permanent force. In view of that fact however, and in order to meet the type of war we may have thrust upon us, I believe it is necessary to have large numbers of highly trained reserves. So I believe that in our defence policy the emphasis should be on building up adequate reserves of highly trained personnel. Again in that respect the policy is at present totally inadequate. Just here I should like to read a paragraph from an article by Colonel W. Goforth, former director of weapons research for the Canadian army, which appeared in Maclean's for June 15. At page 51, dealing with reserves, Colonel Goforth says:

> Our reserve forces are not "reserves" in the true military sense at all. A real "reservist" is a well-trained reinforcement. He is annually exercised in arms and medically examined. His combat equipment is earmarked for his immediate personal use. His transportation, pay, rations and other details are fully arranged in advance. . . . He can be promptly absorbed into a vacancy in some well organized fighting unit—ready to march. None of our Canadian reserve forces could begin to qualify on these severe but esential standards.

Colonel Goforth lays down some other requirements for national defence, which he has summarized in eight paragraphs, of which I should like to read three more.

> Canada has no civil defence whatsoever.

Those are his words.

> It is not even in the blueprint stage. So far as is known not one full-time officer or civil official is now engaged on this vital task.

He goes on in the sixth paragraph:

> Our early-warning radar is largely immobile and obsolete. Next to air interception, the most valuable means for defending Canada against any enemy air attack or air-borne invasion, is early-warning radar.

Then he continues in paragraph 8 with a point which, I suggest, should be seriously considered by all members of the committee, and certainly by the department:

> French-speaking representation in our defence organization is inadequate. One of the worst blind spots of our defence authority is its continued failure to realize that full partnership of French-speaking Canada in our armed forces is a military as well as a political necessity. So far as is known there is, today, not one representative of this vital one-third of our population in the top levels of the Canadian defence hierarchy; namely the posts of minister, deputy minister; naval, military, air and research members of the defence council; flag, general and air officers in regional commands.

And dealing further with this, he concludes:

> This case falls to the ground before the obvious fact that Canada must have the wholehearted support of both her main racial elements if she is to develop and maintain an effective defence system.

I suggest that this point should be borne in mind and studied by the department, in order to see that our French-speaking population has a more adequate representation in the defence organization; because we know that, should any threat to Canada's homeland develop, all our people will be called upon to meet it, and I am absolutely certain that the threat would be met by all our people. That being so, it is only just and necessary that all our people should have representation in the top hierarchy of our defence organization.

I have said our reserves are inadequate. It is the reserves on which we should lay emphasis in order to met any sudden or immediate war, because we cannot maintain a permanent force of sufficient size. I have given figures of our reserve air force to show how seriously deficient it is and the same general situation prevails in the other arms of our services. The minister gave a reason this afternoon why in his view we could not have a large and highly trained reserve force. In my opinion that reason is nothing short of laughable.

I shall read the passage from his remarks where he compared the situation today with the situation as it existed in Switzerland where, as he said, the Swiss reservist used to go home with his rifle, and have it and the ammunition with him at home. The minister said he was in fact a highly trained and organized reservist of the army of those days. Then he proceeded to say that today's equipment is so complicated and so ponderous that we cannot have an adequate reserve force.

Mr. CLAXTON: I am sure my hon. friend would not wish to misquote me. I did not say anything of the kind whatsoever.

Mr. FULTON: I certainly do not wish to misquote the minister. At the moment I do not seem to be able to lay my hand on the passage where he made his statement. I believe, however, that I can state fairly that the minister did give that outline of the Swiss reserve force, and said this sort of force would not be of any use today in view of the complications in our equipment and weapons. He said you cannot take home one-sixth of a tank or one-fifth of radar machine, or any thing similar to that.

Of course you cannot take home one-sixth of a tank or one-fifth of any other machine and say you have a proper reserve force. But that is not to say that we cannot train our men in the use of tanks, that we cannot train them in the use of radar. Certainly a large part of our defence force today consists of other than riflemen. Only riflemen can take their rifles home with them. One cannot, of course, take home a piece of an aeroplane, if he is in the air force.

> Today only about 10 per cent of the fighting effectives of any modern force are riflemen, and even those riflemen now use six other weapons. But how would a man bring home one-sixth of a tank, one-fifth of a radar set, and so on?

The argument simply does not apply, because in order to have training in tanks, radar, the handling of aircraft and any other line of military training required by our forces, one does not have to bring the equipment home at night. He goes down to train with that equipment, and uses it during the period of training. The force is organized into a well-trained and formulated reserve unit.

As the hon. member for Nanaimo pointed out today, we have practically no such trained units in Canada at the present time. He gave figures of the number of men who have gone to camp, and indicated that in one rifle battalion there were only thirty-three. In that respect I refer to Colonel Goforth's requirement that a real reservist is a well-trained reinforcement.

In addition to trained men, to be adequate a reserve force must have organization; the units as well as the formation must be complete. As Colonel Goforth pointed out, our reserves must be given an allotted place in those units and formations, so that in the event of sudden attack we may have a reserve force capable of being sent out, capable of rapid mobilization—not leisurely, but quickly—and ready to meet an immediate threat.

In conclusion, I should like to read from the white paper on defence published last year under the authority of the present Minister of National Defence. It is based largely on the speech he made in the house on July 9, 1947, when introducing his defence estimates. Speaking about the reserve force, he is quoted at page 11 as follows:

> We can never express too warmly the appreciation this country owes to the officers, N.C.O.'s and men and their civilian friends who by their voluntary support maintained our reserve forces through the difficult period of the years between the wars.

In outlining the defence objectives last year, he mentioned these two as numbers 5 and 6:

> 5. Development of reserve forces of an age and with educational and physical standards and training approximating those of the active forces and who will in time be capable of entering speedily on active service at sea, on land or in the air.
> 6. Provision for reserve forces of the most modern training methods, administration and training officers, and adequate equipment.

In view of the figures given this afternoon showing the serious disproportion between the men actually on strength in the reserves and the authorized strengths, and in view of the figures given by the hon. member for Nanaimo as to the appallingly low number of men in our reserve units who went to the various training camps, it can be safely and certainly said that neither of these objectives is being carried out or fulfilled, nor are we fulfilling the debt of gratitude outlined by the minister himself.

I realize that in the remarks I have made as to the necessity for an adequately trained and organized reserve force there is a fundamental problem which must be faced. We have not the men in the forces at the moment and our program is deficient in that respect. The reasons are numerous and certainly they are highly controversial.

First, I think we should reject entirely and I think the minister should reject entirely the words which he uttered in this house on March 16 with respect to "good progress" being made in connection with recruitment and organization of the armed forces. I suggest that that is not a fact. Then we must contemplate more far-reaching steps than are at present being taken to bring our reserves up to strength. We must face the problem and find a means of solution. The problem involves a recasting of our outlook and of our whole appreciation of defence needs at the moment. It involves our having the courage to resort to the measures necessary to fulfil our plans and fill up our ranks.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the minister has recently undergone an operation and is not feeling too well, and therefore I shall not speak at any length. I must say I do not claim to have the knowledge of staff principles and military organization, strategy and tactics evidenced by the previous speaker, and therefore I shall not presume to advise the minister and his advisers as to the necessary military organization for this country.

From what I have heard and observed I think the Minister of National Defence in a quiet and efficient way is doing all that is considered necessary according to the best advice he receives. The impression I get throughout the country is that the Minister of National Defence is recognized as one who does not do things with fanfare and trumpets, but is quietly working in a more efficient way than possibly a great part of the public is aware of.

I rise at this time to ask a question which I asked the minister last year. I and several other members of the house observed a military force marching past the parliament buildings some 2,000 strong. One section was bearing the latest model of Lee-Enfield rifles, while other sections showed crowns and stars on the shoulder-straps of the men. They were in full uniform. I asked the minister at that time if those troops came under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence and his reply was that they did not. I then asked the minister if it was legal to uniform, drill and equip troops with arms, and he said that that matter would receive his consideration and was being considered by the judge advocate general. He told me that he would give me an answer at a later date.

I have not received that answer, and I rise this afternoon to ask the minister if in the period of twelve months he has finally been able to evolve an answer.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Chairman, if the minister is not answering the hon. member for Kootenay West at the moment I should like to place two questions before the minister. The first is this: Is the minister prepared to recommend that there be set up a committee on defence matters? This has been recommended ever since 1945, and on each occasion we have had the support of all opposition parties, and in fact the support of the Prime Minister on one or two occasions.

I would point out to the minister how important it is to have a group of members of this house who understand the nature of our defence problems and the steps that are being taken to meet them. Under our present set-up, we have these estimates up for discussion for the first time within two or three days of prorogation and hon. members have no opportunity to go into the question thoroughly. Yet this work of defending Canada is of vital importance to the nation. The minister of external affairs and the Minister of National Defence have emphasized the seriousness of the international situation, and the minister went so far today as to name countries.

It is vital that there should be a group of members in this house who are informed on questions of defence. We are attempting to fill up our ranks through a system of voluntary recruiting. This means that right across the country there should be people who know the facts and can urge our young men to join the forces. If we had a committee on defence matters there would be a group of members in a position to take a lead in assisting with recruiting. Two or three years ago we set up a committee on external affairs, and the fact that that committee was set up has greaty increased the interest taken in this house in matters having to do with external affairs.

My second question is this: Why do we not have a mobile brigade up to full strength? That plan was announced by the previous minister of national defence on October 16, 1945. At that time the then minister, after referring to the reserve army, went on to deal with the active army in these words:

> The second will be the permanently employed active force, whose duty it will be to assist in the training and administration of the reserve army and to supply the necessary staffs, services and scientific research and development personnel, augmented by a small formation of essential field units. This formation will be maintained as a trained field force, fully equipped, ready to meet whatever commitments may arise. Until we know more about our international obligations and consequent requirements, these active force units will be retained as a minimum and would be subject to whatever expansion might later be required in the light of any obligations which we might accept to assist in maintaining the peace of the world. Preliminary estimates indicate that the numbers involved in the active permanently employed force will be between 20,000 and 25,000 all ranks.

Of course that is much higher than the number we now have. The minister pointed out today that the main duties of the army were, first, to prepare a force to defend Canada against sudden or direct attack now or in the near future. He went on to say that this brigade group was to be a trained and equipped force to deal with any diversionary attack. I think we are all agreed that this is the minimum of the force we should have. I cannot understand why we do not bring this brigade up to full strength and keep it at all times ready to fight. I should like to know why it is that we have deviated from the original intention, which was that this brigade group should be up to strength, fully trained and ready to fight on short notice.

Mr. CLAXTON: May I have a word before we rise? I should like to express my appreciation to the hon. member for Nanaimo and to others who have been good enough to make kindly references to my recovery from a recent operation. As hon. members know, I am blessed with unusually good health, and therefore any interruption of it is upsetting, but I am very glad to be back in the house.

I should like also to express appreciation of the constructive and helpful way in which the debate has proceeded. A number of points have been raised to which I should like to refer, and I shall do that at the earliest possible moment when the committee next sits, which will be at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Item 231.

Mr. CLAXTON: Mr. Chairman, before the committee rose at six o'clock, some questions were raised to which I should make reply. The hon. member for Nanaimo, in his interesting remarks, referred to a matter also referred to by the hon. member for Kamloops, with regard to the readiness of the armed forces of Canada to meet sudden attack, which was the first point I made as one of the objectives of the defence forces of Canada.

When this question is raised, it is desirable to examine, however briefly, from what sources there could come a possible attack. As I said in my opening remarks, the only possible aggressor is the Soviet union, and the only way the Soviet union can attack Canada is by sea or by air. By sea, since the Soviet union has no large fleet, attack would be possible only by submarine. Of the two, I think we may regard air as the more likely means of attack.

Without going into this in any detail, I would ask hon. members to consider the probabilities of any such attack in view of the distance, the strategic objectives that might be achieved, and the air lift the Soviet union might have.

Mr. FULTON: Would the minister permit one question in order that he might deal with it in his reply? Would he concede the fact that the sea distance between Soviet Russia and the outer islands of Alaska is less than fifty miles and conceivably an attack might come that way, a short sea attack, followed by a land attack?

Mr. CLAXTON: If such an attack occurred it would surely be made on the territory nearest to the Soviet union, that is the territory of the United States in Alaska. How they could bypass that and attack the coast of British Columbia is rather difficult to see. Should such an attack occur, the only possibility that need be considered at the present time is that of an attack by air, and there we would have to estimate the ability of the Soviet union to give an air lift that would enable such an attack to be made, and then see what would be likely to be the result of that attack.

It is difficult to say how many four-engine planes the Soviet union has, but I am sure my hon. friends are thinking of something in the neighbourhood of a division.

Mr. FULTON: No, much more.

Mr. CLAXTON: I see. Well, let us take a division. A division would probably take 1,000 four-engine planes one way, and I should think the result of that would be that the planes would be lost and that the people who landed would be lost too.

Mr. FULTON: Has the minister not contemplated the possibility of a shuttle service?

Mr. CLAXTON: A shuttle service over a distance of something like 4,000 miles is inconceivable. The attackers could be mopped up stage by stage as they come along.

Mr. FULTON: What about the twenty-mile barrier to Alaska?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is another problem, the problem of the United States of America. We are talking about Canada at the present time.

I imagine that the United States forces are adequate to deal with that. If they are not, the Americans will see to it. But when you consider the prospects of such an attack on Canada, you have to consider the possible strategic benefits which might result from an attack of that kind. The only result would be that the Soviet union would lose the 1,000 planes they had sent over, if they had 1,000 planes of that type to send over, which I doubt, and then they would lose the men they had landed.

That is why I made the point I did on the advice that was available to me, that the only kind of attack which is envisaged as possible should war break out in the immediate future is an attack of a diversionary nature which would be cleared up quite speedily.

Mr. PEARKES: Before the minister leaves that point, would he permit a question? I see the possibility of the loss of these 1,000 planes, provided that we have something whereby to inflict those casualties upon the enemy. I should like to know what we have in our air force at the present time, or in any other air force, which might reasonably be expected to inflict 1,000 casualties on planes coming here, if that were the case. And I presume those 1,000 planes would be at least escorted by protective aircraft, fighters of some sort. I cannot believe that they would just crash for the fun of it.

Mr. CLAXTON: There are no fighters in the world that can go 4,000 miles or anything like the distance that would be involved. I do not even suggest that the planes would be knocked down as they came, because everyone knows that one, two, three or any considerable number of planes can get through in any area of the world. But the question is what happens after they do get through. I suggest that the probability that has to be taken into account in our calculations of any such attack is so slight at the present time that it is something that hardly needs being counted in the realm of active possibility; for, as I suggested, the outcome would be certain and the strategic advantages would be nil.

Mr. FULTON: Why?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. FULTON: Why would the strategic advantage be nil?

Mr. CLAXTON: Because the forces would be destroyed within a short time.

Mr. FULTON: By whom?

Mr. CLAXTON: By our Canadians.

Mr. FULTON: By our 25,000 men?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CLAXTON: Then my hon. friend spoke about the number of officers and men in the reserve army who were at camp during the season 1947-48. As he knows, the purpose of the reserve army camps in 1947-48 was to give training to officers, N.C.O.'s and a small cadre of tradesmen. The numbers which he referred to—which were small, of course—were the numbers of officers, N.C.O.'s and tradesmen who were available to take that training at that time. In this connection and also in connection with the reference made by the hon. member for Kamloops to the article by Mr. Wallace Goforth on the nature of our reserves, I might suggest that the remarks which have been made about our reserves might have been made with equal truth about any of the reserves, let us say, the national guard in the United States or the territorial army of the United Kingdom. To indicate as clearly as I can the state of preparation arrived at in Canada in comparison with that in other countries, I should like to refer to the remarks of Lord Nathan, the government leader in the House of Lords, in a speech he made in a debate on defence on March 17, 1948, in which he said:

> The forces are still in the throes of the extensive reorganization which is inevitable at the end of a great war.

Mr. FULTON: When were these remarks made?

Mr. CLAXTON: On March 17, 1948. To continue:

> The enormous temporary element which constituted the great bulk of the strength in 1945 has had to be released as speedily as possible, and at the same time the much depleted regular element built up. During such a period of drastic reorganization, the forces cannot use their manpower to the best advantage. Personnel in units are constantly changing. Trained and experienced men have to be replaced by untrained men and, as a result, a disproportionate amount of manpower and time has to be allotted to the training of individuals. We are now at the moment of transition, and obviously that must inescapably be a most difficult time for the services.

Then he went on later to say:

> . . . the regular forces have been building up, and they have already been built up to a figure of upwards of 350,000, which tops the pre-war figure . . . The various auxiliary forces have been re-established on a voluntary basis. A start has already been made and nearly 43,000 recruits have been obtained to date. On the whole, I do not think that is too bad. In the territorial army in particular, it has been necesary . . . to build up slowly, pending the provision of accommodation and other facilities.

In the United States the national guard, which is the equivalent of our reserve forces, has a present strength, for the army and air force together, of 234,000. Australia and New Zealand will begin recruiting for the reserve force on July 1, 1948. I suggest to hon. members that against this background the record of achievement of our reserve forces since the war has been good. It is not as good as I should like to see it, but it reflects great credit on the officers and men who have been giving their time to this important work. When we compare the present situation with the situation as it was after the first great war, when I myself was in the non-permanent active militia, we can see a great change in the size, equipment, training facilities, pay, strength and quality of the reserve forces. Our hope is that, with the support of hon. members and others, the reserves may be built up just as speedily as possible, so that they will be an effective fighting force to take their part in the defence of Canada and serve as the nucleus of a larger force should it be necessary.

The hon. member for Nanaimo remarked on the fact that we had no submarines. That is quite true. We have never felt it necessary in Canada to have submarines, except for the purpose of anti-submarine warfare training. We feel that it is much easier for us to borrow or obtain the services of a British or a United States submarine when that is desirable, rather than to go into this business ourselves and try to establish a submarine service which inevitably would be dependent on either British or United States sources for the submarines and also for the modifications necessary to bring them up to date.

The hon. member for Nanaimo made an agreeable reference to the ordnance corps depot here. He remarked on the fact that, while certain men were piling puttees, different men were needed to pile bandages. That is an easy reference, if I may say so, and I interjected, "Can we use the same personnel to mix paint as we use to mix medicine?" At the depot here we have the central medical stores for all three services of Canada under the command of an officer of the Canadian army medical corps. He is in charge of the medical stores there and of their care and distribution, and also a large quantity of drugs is manufactured and quantities of supplies are made up. This work requires specially trained personnel. However, the close working relationship with the members of the Canadian ordnance corps is indicated by the hon. member's own remark, that when he came into the part of the building that was devoted to the central medical stores, he was shown over the place by a medical officer. I do not know who else should have shown him over it.

The hon. member also referred to the question of civil defence. We have had this matter under consideration for some time; and, as hon. members know, it is a matter to which the greatest attention must be devoted to secure, first of all, close co-operation between the federal government agencies that may be concerned, which would include national defence, justice—namely, the R.C.M.P.—national health and welfare, and transport. From there we move into the field of close working relationships with the provinces and, through them, with their agencies, the municipalities. That work is in hand; preliminary studies have been made. I can assure hon. members that it is not proposed at present to set up civil defence establishments across Canada, as we believe this would be a waste of effort and time. The work will be directed to seeing what should be done, and to arrive at sound plans that can be put into effect with people with whom they have been discussed and worked out so that, in case of need, anything necessary may be done in good time. In this regard, United States secretary of defence Forrestal last May announced the appointment of a similar agency; and we shall get into touch with the people there who are actively engaged in this work as well as the people in England, and correlate their experience with our own during the last war. Then we will work out a plan which will be constantly kept up to date as part of the war book, in preparation for any emergency.

The hon. member referred to shortages of equipment and shortage of the means of producing air force equipment. This was also referred to by the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. SKEY: I did not refer to any shortages. I said we should produce the equipment.

Mr. CLAXTON: That is right. On the question of shortages referred to at some length by the hon. member for Kamloops and mentioned in passing by the hon. member for Nanaimo, I should like to know what equipment we are short of, which we should have, and which it would be useful for us to have at the present time. As far as I know, we are not short of any such equipment. We had large stocks of the latest equipment at the end of the second world war, and, in addition, since that time we have acquired considerable quantities of equipment of various types. I repeat, I should like to know what equipment we are short of for the active or reserve forces. If we are short of any equipment which we should have we shall be glad to look into the question and see whether it would be useful for us to acquire that equipment now rather than run such risks as there may be—and there may be risks which we may have to run—in waiting until, in the not too distant future, we may have or be able to obtain something much better. I point out that if we follow every type of equipment we have, or that any nation which might fight in a future war has or might have, through every modification it will take a great deal more money than this country will be willing to spend on defence. The fact is that we have to make our estimate of the risks involved, and keep up to date with knowledge, information, plans and designs, and from time to time make modifications or introduce such new equipment as we feel may be justified by the need.

The hon. member for Trinity referred to the question of standardization, and one of the points he made was that the matters listed in my statement were in the wrong order, that I should have put the last thing first. I am quite willing to put it first. I assure him that his interesting and useful remarks are along the line of the discussions that have been entered into by the officers of the department from time to time with their opposite numbers in the United Kingdom and the United States; and they are the subject of constant consideration.

There was one point, however, on which I should make one comment. The hon. member did say he thought it would be a good thing if we could produce in Canada some of the planes we have to acquire either from Britain or from the United States, the Vampires from Britain and the Mustangs from the United States; and he suggested that it might be possible to have a British firm come to Canada to manufacture Vampire planes here.

That is an interesting suggestion, but I wonder what would be the implications. If such a firm came to Canada it would have a market here to the extent of such Vampire planes as we were ready to buy. They would be very expensive, because the Canadian producer would have to tool up and produce a limited number of such planes, since our needs are not large. If the planes were produced for sale in sterling bloc areas, then the British government or the purchasers would have to find Canadian dollars with which to buy the product of their subsidiary in Canada. That is not an attractive proposition, and I doubt very much whether any British firm would enter into such an undertaking. With regard to the production in Canada of American type planes, there again it would be much more economic for us to purchase the planes from the United States.

Mr. SKEY: But what about the loss of exchange, and the loss of employment?

Mr. CLAXTON: My hon. friend himself said that, even if the planes were produced in Canada, some sixty per cent of the content—I think that was the figure he indicated—would have to be purchased in the United States.

Mr. SKEY: At least we would break even.

Mr. CLAXTON: That would still leave the out-go to the United States as a considerable item.

Mr. SKEY: If the minister will permit, I suggested that we produce machines here for sale to the United States as well as for use by the Canadian air force.

Mr. CLAXTON: It is an interesting proposition which we are exploring in every direction, I can assure the hon. member—but not with Mustangs—

Mr. SKEY: I would not think so.

Mr. CLAXTON: —because that would not be profitable. Also the Mustang is an intermediate plane which will soon be replaced by something else. No; our attitude toward this matter is that the right course for us to follow is to produce in Canada a plane designed particularly to meet Canadian needs. Toward that end we have been working for several years. Through A. V. Roe in Toronto we have produced in the Chinook engine the prototype of what looks likely to be a very good jet engine. The airframe is being tested; and if that two-seated long-range fighter tests out satisfactorily, that will be the kind of plane which we should produce in Canada. But until we can find out whether we have or have not a good plane, it would probably be wise on our part to postpone all possible purchases or ventures in this field; not to the point of danger, but postpone it to the point where we may be able to get a Canadian plane at about the same time as we might get a plane of British manufacture. If we placed orders for Vampires or other British planes now it would be a considerable number of months before they were delivered.

I can tell the hon. member that the subject is being thoroughly explored and followed up.

The hon. member for Kamloops referred to the question of equipment as if we were short of modern equipment or modern plans. We have quantities of the latest equipment in use at the end—not the beginning—of the second world war. Our officers are in communication with their opposite numbers both in the United States and in the United Kingdom, not only revising plans but examining designs of equipment, and generally keeping their fingers upon the latest developments.

The hon. member suggested that my phrase that the Canadian forces "could by themselves never deter the Russians" was ill-advised. I shall stand by my phrase. I think that is common sense. No nation of 12,000,000 people could alone deter a powerful nation, one apparently with the aggressive inclinations, and having the resources and the strength of Russia.

Mr. FULTON: I, too, will stand by that statement so far as our present forces are concerned.

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes. Then the hon. member made some reference to the air force. I made perfectly clear the reason why the air force auxiliary was not as large as we would like to see it, namely, a shortage of ground-crew. The reason why we are short of ground-crew is that there is full employment in industry, and it is difficult either to recruit trained tradesmen as regular air force personnel or to get men to join the auxiliary force and to do at night, part time, the same kind of work they are doing in the daytime. However, recently much better progress is being made, and techniques of recruiting have been developed which we hope will cure that situation.

The hon. member referred to Mr. Goforth's article, and particularly his references to the desirability of there being officers and men from the French-speaking section of the population. With that, of course, I agree. With regard to the first six points of Mr. Goforth's article, I suggest that he might have made them with equal accuracy respecting the United States, the United Kingdom or any other country, as he did respecting this country.

Mr. FULTON: Oh, no.

Mr. CLAXTON: Oh, yes. But the matter of the French-speaking personnel is a special Canadian question, and is one which I must say I have had under my own personal consideration ever since I was appointed to the department. It involves difficulties, and we are doing everything possible to meet those difficulties. May I add that we are trying to have the largest possible number of English-speaking officers in the armed forces learn the French language. At every headquarters throughout Canada there are voluntary classes, one of which was at national defence headquarters here in Ottawa. I believe at one time there were 276 officers taking lessons in French. We regard that as desirable, and hope that Canada will have, as nearly as possible, a bilingual army. What Mr. Goforth stated with respect to senior officers might be technically correct; but there is an associate deputy minister holding the rank of deputy minister, who is French-speaking. I refer to Colonel Matthieu, a gentleman with a distinguished war record. Two of the area commanders, Brigadier Bernatchez at Winnipeg and Brigadier Allard at Quebec, both with fine war records, are French-speaking.

The hon. member tried to make some play on my reference to the Swiss reserves. The point of my remark was to show how much more complicated the process of defence had become as compared with what it was when that kind of reserve force obtained in Switzerland. Our own reserve force units are equipped with tanks, radar apparatus, anti-aircraft guns and all the latest equipment to a point where some of them are being almost crowded out of their armouries because they have so much equipment. That is one of the points we shall have to follow up, in an endeavour to provide more accommodation.

The hon. member referred to the fact that back in March I had said that "good progress" is being made with regard to recruiting. That was an encouraging and proper kind of remark to make. I also wish to see better progress made with regard to recruiting. But the fact that in one year we have recruited a number of men roughly equivalent to the total strength of the permanent force, on the average, between 1930 and 1939, particularly at a time of full employment, is an indication that the armed forces have an appeal for the young men of this country. We hope the armed forces will continue to have that appeal, and that more of our young men will enlist.

The hon. member for Kootenay West referred to a question he raised on July 9 last with regard to the drilling of some uniformed personnel who were not members of the armed forces and who had, as he said, the latest model of Lee-Enfield rifles. At that time, following his question, I thought I had given him all the information available on the subject. A full investigation was made, but by the time he brought the matter up it was not possible to find out the full particulars. Under section 99 of the criminal code the governor in council may issue an order prohibiting drilling in uniform. I believe such an order was issued back in 1916, and since then it has been rather difficult to trace what has happened. We are not aware of any unauthorized body of men in Canada being equipped with Lee-Enfield rifles. There is a report that some Ross rifles were disposed of as surplus immediately after the first great war to some organization, and it is possible that is what his question relates to. If I have not answered him sufficiently I will try to get further information and answer him privately later.

The hon. member for Vancouver South again raised the question as to whether the government would entertain the possibility of having a committee on defence matters. As I pointed out when that question was raised last year, my own personal inclination would be in favour of that course. I can see quite a few advantages from my own point of view as minister in having an opportunity of talking things over and having them explained in such a committee. I must say, however, that the suggestion raises considerations far greater than any such personal inclinations, and those considerations I have put before the house and this committee on a previous occasion. I do not do so in any final sense, but I must say this, that once you get into the appointment of functional committees dealing with the work and operations of a single department of the government, you begin to approximate our system of government much more closely to that of the United States.

Mr. GREEN: What about the committee on external affairs?

Mr. CLAXTON: I am not going to defend the appointment of that committee, and I do not suggest that it should necessarily form a precedent for others, but I do suggest that our system of government, with the executive responsible through parliament to the people and modeled on the British system, is something we ought to cherish and to watch most carefully. The appointment of functional committees of the type suggested tends to approximate our system much more closely to that of the United States and therefore should be watched with a careful eye. However, once again I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver South that his suggestion has a lot to commend it, and I shall be very glad indeed to call it to the attention of my colleagues. But there again the appointment of committees is a matter for the judgment of the house and it is for the house to decide.

The other question the hon. member asked was with regard to the mobile brigade. That mobile brigade still forms, as I indicated in my statement today, the main agency by which Canada would deal with any direct attack on Canada. There has been no abandonment of it whatever. It is in training now. The armoured and infantry battalions have been grouped together at Petawawa for the first time and this summer will engage in unit training. The other branches of it are at Rivers, where the army-air co-operation school is located, at Chilliwack where there is the engineers' school, and at Shilo the artillery school, and other branches are at other places.

The brigade is being trained. We have got through the stage of training the trainers, which is the first stage, and now the men themselves are receiving unit training.

Mr. GREEN: My question was, why is the force not recruited up to full strength?

Mr. CLAXTON: It is being recruited, as fast as the recruits come in, toward full strength. I hope I have answered the questions raised, and if there are any others I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the minister's returning tonight to give answers to the various questions which were raised here this afternoon, because I understand that he is really breaking doctor's orders in being here, that he is, in military language, A.W.O.L. from hospital. There are various other questions I should like to raise and I believe other members have questions but perhaps we can raise them on other items. No doubt an opportunity will be given when these estimates are before us again.

There is just one thing I should like to say before the minister goes, and that is to point out what seems somewhat of an inconsistency between the statement that he read and the remarks that he has made this evening. This afternoon he referred to the fact that it was now possible to set down Canada's present defence aims and objectives. They are (1) To provide a force estimated to be necessary to defend Canada against any sudden direct attack that could be or is likely to be directed against her in the near future. When we pointed out the fact, as we gathered it from other parts of his statement, that we felt Canada had not anything in the way of a defence force to meet this attack, the minister this evening said: Oh, there is not going to be any such threat. That is like putting up a coconut-shy just for the purpose of throwing balls at a coconut.

Mr. GILLIS: I hate to get into this discussion with military experts. The only practical suggestion made this afternoon and this evening was that made by the hon. member for Vancouver South when he suggested, as he has done on previous occasions, that a committee of this house be set up for the purpose of studying the defences of Canada in co-operation with the military authorities. Over 100 members of this house are ex-service personnel with war experience in varying capacities, and they could contribute something to the headquarters personnel in mapping out the defence requirements and defence estimates of the country. I would strongly urge the minister to give that suggestion his serious consideration.

But what really prompted me to get up at this time was the repeated emphasis by hon. members to my right that the defence plans of Canada must be based on a threat of aggression from Russia. I think that is absolutely wrong.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister said it.

Mr. GILLIS: I think it is absolutely wrong for any member of this house representing the public of Canada to take the attitude that the defence of Canada must be built on the possibility of aggression by Russia.

Mr. FULTON: Our whole point was that it should be built against aggression from any point, including Russia.

Mr. GILLIS: That is not what you said.

Mr. FULTON: I know what I said. You were not here when I said it.

Mr. GILLIS: I remember when you made your first speech and your second speech. I listened carefully—

Mr. FULTON: It shows how wrong you were.

Mr. GILLIS: Just a minute; wait until I am through.

Mr. MERRITT: Not a man overseas.

Mr. GILLIS: I am going to tell you something about your own part of the country with regard to defence which I think is essential at this time, and I hope you will be doing something about it before I am through. Defence, as everything else, is a practical matter. It is not a matter of dreaming or of theories. It is only about three years since we finished a war, a war to end wars, a war against aggression and tyranny, and we broke the only force in the world that threatened the world. All the nations which are united today in the united nations were allied together for that purpose. We succeeded in a common objective, namely, defeating the forces of aggression. Since the end of that war we formed the united nations. That is the cornerstone of Canada's foreign policy, and also the cornerstone of Canada's defence policy.

Mr. SKEY: It is more like a millstone.

Mr. GILLIS: All right; when we accepted the charter of the united nations we decided to band ourselves together for the purpose of bringing the nations together in one world, of setting up a common front of the nations of the world, which were allied together, to save democracy and freedom and to expand it. We formed ourselves in what, in my opinion, is the basis of government at the international level. There are quarrels, and all that kind of thing, but under the united nations charter Canada and all the nations which are within that machinery today, decided that certain things were to be done to secure the peace of the world.

An international peace force was to be set up. We had a common objective; we said we would crack down on aggressors, and Russia as part of the international machine—

Mr. SKEY: She is the brakes.

Mr. GILLIS: Just a minute, now. She may or may not be. Do not forget this. It is not as simple as all that. You are dealing with people of different nationalities, different languages, different outlooks on life, different experiences, backgrounds and environments. Perhaps her thinking is conditioned on her experiences, her background and her environment. I am very hopeful. I am not prepared to stand up in my place in this house at any time and advocate, or listen to someone advocate, that the basic policy on defence in Canada should be built up on the fear of aggression from one of our former allies. I do not think it exists. I am not afraid of a major war from any direction in your lifetime or in mine.

What my hon. friends fail to realize is that the war which they fear has been going on since 1945. It is an economic war.

Mr. FULTON: All we are afraid of is that, after fighting a war from 1939 to 1945, we may have to do so again. We do not want to have to do so again.

Mr. GILLIS: We are not going to have to fight another war unless you promote it.

Mr. MERRITT: What are you advocating —disarmament?

Mr. GILLIS: No. If you listen for a minute I shall tell you.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Give in to the commies and you will not have to fight another war.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not giving in to the commies at all, and my hon. friend has too much sense not to know that.

Mr. FULTON: You are not realistic.

Mr. GILLIS: I am trying to be realistic. This standing up in the house and saying we are afraid that someone is going to attack us just will not do. I am telling you I am not afraid that someone is going to attack us.

Mr. FERGUSON: That is fine.

Mr. GILLIS: You are being swallowed up every day, and you do not realize it. There is an economic war going on.

Mr. SKEY: Speak for yourself.

Mr. GILLIS: Russia has been kidding you that she is going to shoot you some day. In the meantime you are putting the clothes over your head in bed at night and are afraid that the bogey man will get you.

Mr. FULTON: Is that the way Czechoslovakia was kidded?

Mr. GILLIS: Certainly it is.

An hon. MEMBER: Is that what the Minister of Defence thinks?

Mr. GILLIS: I am not worrying about what the Minister of Defence thinks. He has no more responsibility for this than you have. Little country after little country has been absorbed while you sat down and urged the Minister of Defence to build more and bigger planes, bigger tanks and bigger something else.

Mr. SKEY: Nonsense.

Mr. GILLIS: While the other fellow came along and took you over; that is all.

Mr. FULTON: Certainly if you were here he would.

Mr. GILLIS: There is going to be no shooting war. You do not need to worry about that. There is an economic war on now. The faster you fellows get that through your heads, the better it will be for Canada and for the world.

Mr. FULTON: Certainly if we go on as the hon. member suggests we would have a shooting war.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Filibuster.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I ask hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. GILLIS: If you would only get down to realities and talk common sense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GILLIS: Some hon. members never seem to learn much in this house. I think the minister is being realistic. He has brought forward a pretty reasonable program of defence for Canada. He is not preparing for war. He has not told anyone in the house so far that he is afraid of an attack from Russia or from the United States. If we are to learn something about national defence I think the only sensible proposal that has been put forward in the house was put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver South. Let us appoint the hon. member for Kamloops, the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who is so much interested in national defence and in arming against the aggression from an imaginary enemy that does not exist, on a board with officials of national defence, and let them have a look at things as they really are, things that cannot be brought up in this house. I am reasonably sure that if that were done it would convince them that the thing that has to be done in the future to prevent war—

Mr. SKEY: Czechoslovakia was not taken over?

Mr. GILLIS: She was taken over because of stupid people—

Mr. FULTON: Like yourself.

Mr. GILLIS: —who hung on to something that did not exist in life. They created a form of thinking along the lines of that which hon. members are thinking tonight, and the other fellow walked in, in the meantime, and took things over while you were asleep.

Mr. SKEY: My friend, you are asleep.

Mr. FERGUSON: Took it over with machine guns.

Mr. GILLIS: No, there was no shooting. He just took it over from the Tories who were asleep. They went sound asleep with the clothes over their heads worrying about an attack from an imaginary enemy, and in the meantime the enemy walked in and took them over.

Mr. FULTON: Just as you are doing in this country.

Mr. GILLIS: We are not doing so badly on this matter of defence.

Mr. FULTON: Just the way you are doing in this country.

Mr. GILLIS: I think we are being fairly sensible about it. I think the government of Canada and the sensible people of the North American continent realize that the thing that will offset war in the future is living up to the charter of the united nations, feeding hungry people, raising their standards, eliminating insecurities and fears that drag half the world down into the ashpit. That is what will avoid war in the future; not building up armies and preaching wars against a people who a short time ago were very respectable in this house as our allies.

There is one thing of a practical nature I should like to say to the minister. He mentioned tonight that in the field of jet aircraft he was carrying on an extensive development at the A. V. Roe company in Toronto. I know this does not come within his jurisdiction, but I point out to him that on Sunday—this is Thursday—a strike vote is to be taken in that plant. The government has considerable jurisdiction over that plant. There is apt to be an interruption on that aeroplane in which the minister is so much interested. I am suggesting that he get in touch with the Minister of Labour and try to offset any labour difficulties there, so that we may get the necessary planes to offset the inevitable war that my hon. friends to the right are talking so much about.

Mr. FULTON: The subject which was before the committee, as I understood, was the defence of Canada, but the hon. member who has last spoken has sought to supplant it with another issue altogether. With him I would be glad to enter into controversy at any moment, because his ideas are so erroneous that they really should be answered. He has spoken about the economic war, which of course has no relation to the question of national defence. He has spoken about people being asleep in this country. Perhaps we were asleep in this country until what went on in Czechoslovakia and other countries woke us up. If we were not wakened up, as perhaps we were not by what took place from 1935 to 1939, and between 1939 and 1945, I hope we have been wakened up by what took place in 1948 in Czechoslovakia, where, under the guise of so-called economic war, which was fostered by those who wanted Russia to take over their country, we saw Russia step in and take that country without a shot being fired, as the hon. member says. However, that situation does not prevail in Canada. There is opportunity for all in Canada, and the only people who are concerned to go around and say a situation exists in Canada which justifies Russia or anyone else taking us over are my hon. friends to the left.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not true.

Mr. FULTON: I know it is true.

Mr. GILLIS: Stick to national defence.

Mr. FULTON: The hon. member for Cape Breton South says, "Stick to national defence". I was sticking to national defence until he introduced this extraneous issue. I wish, as does the hon. member for Nanaimo, and every other member of this house, to see the Minister of National Defence released for the moment from his responsibility; and, had it not been for what the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, which was so erroneous that it required some answer, I would not have spoken at the moment. But the fact is that those who were asleep from 1935 to 1939 and those who, like my hon. friends, have been asleep from 1939 to 1948, are asleep no longer. We know the issues. We know that this economic war they talk about is just phony as far as Canada is concerned, and we are not going to allow ourselves to become the prey to any phony economic war or any actual war of aggression with armed forces. That is why we have been discussing the defence of Canada, and that is why we have been criticizing the policy of the Minister of National Defence.

With respect to the minister, I have this to say. Imperfect as I think his policy is, it is so much nearer perfection, so much more realistic and so much more attuned to the best interests of Canada than the sort of nonsense talked by my hon. friends to the left tonight that I will say no more about it at the moment, but reserve my right to discuss it at a later day.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Special—
Indian affairs branch—

224. Fur conservation, and development of native crafts, and to authorize, subject to the approval of the governor in council, the appointment of such extra temporary officers, clerks and employees as may be necessary for the purpose of this item, $286,000.

Mr. CHARLTON: In view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Yorkton this morning, and in view of the remarks made by the minister regarding the report of the committee on Indian affairs, I consider it essential that I should say something about that question at this time, since I was a member of the committee from the time of its inception in 1946.

Since 1867 there have been only two parliamentary inquiries into Indian affairs. One took place in 1920 and another in 1926; and, since that time, until 1946, a period of twenty years, no attempt has been made to rectify the injustices that exist in the present act.

I am not blaming the officials of the department, because I believe that most of them are sincere and conscientious in their efforts under the existing legislation. They do the best they can, as evidenced by the co-operation given to us during the sittings of the committee that considered the Indian Act. In that committee, after listening to all the delegations and studying the briefs presented, we tried to recommend amendments to the act which we felt would be accepted by the majority of the Indians of Canada.

I tried to be fair this morning. I did not wish to make any remarks under the estimates of this branch; I wanted to defer them until concurrence in the report was moved. I gave the minister a chance to assure us that concurrence in the report of the Indian affairs committee would be moved, but that was not forthcoming, and I can only say that it is now obvious that concurrence will not be moved.

It is incredible that after three sessions, with this committee sitting and this house considering Indian affairs, this report is not to be concurred in before the end of the session. It simply means that the work of the committee has been a failure, if this parliament will not adopt that report before the end of the session. The work of the committee has been useless.

Representing the largest and, I might add, the most advanced Indian reserve in Canada, I say on their behalf that I disagree with the general idea advanced in most of the sittings of the committee that there should be complete assimilation of the Indian population. I most heartily disagree with that. The Indians of the Six Nations tribe are a very proud people. They do not wish to be completely assimilated, thereby losing their identity as Indians. The Indians of the Six Nations reserve have proven their ability to govern themselves. They have set an example that could well be followed today throughout the world, in the fact that six tribes which were at war at one time were able to settle their differences and are now, as they have been for many years, living in complete harmony with one another.

It would seem almost futile to discuss this report at the present moment, because if a motion for concurrence is not forthcoming, then the whole thing will be thrown out.

As I said before, it seems to me a most ridiculous situation, after this committee has sat for three sessions and has done the amount of work it has done, that this report should not be brought forth and concurred in.

I wish to say just a few words with regard to a couple of the recommendations in this report. The first is No. 8 and is headed "Social and economic status of Indians and their advancement." I will just read it:

> Your committee recommends that the government consider the advisability of granting a pension to aged, blind, or infirm Indians. This is in addition to recommendations previously made with regard to the social and economic advancement of Indians.

I was greatly disappointed to note that the committee thought they had to recommend that the government consider the advisability of this sort of thing. It should have passed that stage many years ago. It should recommend that these aged Indians be considered the same as any other people in this country and be given the old age pension.

The committee recommended that the Indians should have the vote on the status of urban dwellers. That recommendation, however, did not find its way to the House of Commons, through the neglect or failure of someone to see that it did. Some days ago in the house an amendment was moved to the Dominion Elections Act, and it was voted down. Why should these people not be given the vote, especially those on the Six Nations reserve at Brantford who, as I have said, are more advanced than most across the country? Why should these people not be allowed to vote? The only tax they do not pay is the land tax on their reserve. They pay the other taxes, such as sales, excise, and gasoline taxes, and income tax on money earned off the reserve. Therefore I think it is time these people were given representation.

Since coming here and acting as a member of the Indian Act committee, I have always taken the stand that Indians of ability should be given positions in the branch, and I still stick to that stand. I am glad to see the recommendation made that the assistant deputy, or commissioner, should be a Canadian of Indian descent.

In conclusion, I urge the government to see that the motion for concurrence in this report is made before the end of the session; because, if that is not done, the committee might just as well not have met these past three sessions.

Immigration branch—

228. For expenditures in connection with looking after Canadian interests abroad, $100,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not know whether I am in order, but I want to urge on the minister that he do something to increase his staff overseas, so that the technicalities in connection with immigrants may be overcome more quickly. I know the staffs over there are short-handed. We want all the good immigrants we can get in this country. If we do not make it a little bit easier and make it possible to get over the technicalities more quickly, we shall lose out in this matter. I urge the minister to do something along the line I have suggested.

Mr. HAZEN: I have in my hand an editorial from the Telegraph-Journal of Saint John, dated June 16, 1948. I do not propose to read it all; in fact, I do not know whether I would be in order if I did so. But I should like to draw it to the attention of the minister. It is headed "Intelligence not wanted", and it goes on to say:

Ten Baltic and Polish young women who have just disembarked in Canada, after a trip from displaced persons' camps in Germany, make the bitter complaint that this country seems to put a premium on stupidity. To get here, they claim, they had to hide the fact that one girl studied commerce for two years in Riga, another was a student nurse in a hospital, another a clerk, another a pharmacy worker. They were quietly advised by their friends to appear "good and dumb"—and so they were allowed to come to Canada. Meanwhile, Australia is gladly taking girls with brains as well as brawn.

The editorial goes on and points out:

. . . those who are doing the selecting in Europe have been trying to pick out girls who will not use maid's work as merely a subterfuge to get into Canada and then try immediately to quit their jobs and seek "white collar" work.

That may be the object the immigration authorities have in view in selecting these girls. Then the editorial goes on to say:

But it would be interesting, just the same, to know what work Australia is able to offer to intelligent and educated D.P. girls that Canada, too, can't offer.

Does the minister care to make any comment on that editorial or to throw some light on what happened? If that is correct, why is it that girls with some education and some intelligence are not allowed in the country, or apparently they have to play dumb to get in here?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources): I am quite sure the hon. member for St. John-Albert is not taking that editorial or that newspaper story at its face value. We in Canada have ten girls for every one that has gone to Australia, I am informed. They are girls of intelligence. They are girls who are, for the time being, at least, doing domestic work in Canada and working in institutions. We are encouraging people of intelligence; that is the type of people we want here in Canada. The reporter in this particular case—and I have read the editorial, I believe it is, or the newspaper article—must have got hold of the odd crank there always is in any movement of immigration.

Mr. HAZEN: Is any intelligence test required before these girls are admitted?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is a general screening, I may say; and some of our rejections are on the basis of lack of intelligence.

Mr. MacINNIS: Can the minister give an answer to the question if it is put in this way? In selecting girls for admission to Canada, if a girl said that her occupation was secretarial work, typist, schoolteacher, or something of that kind, would she have the same chance of getting in as a girl who said her work was domestic service?

Mr. MacKINNON: She would have a better chance to come to Canada if she could convince us that she intended to work as a domestic or in an institution, temporarily.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then that would mean that the girl who would not work as a domestic would have a poorer chance of getting into Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON: I think that is quite right.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then I imagine the point made by the editorial is correct, that in selecting persons to come to Canada we do not want educated women who will not work in domestic service. We want girls who are not so well educated, who cannot fill jobs which require a certain amount of education or training.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is not quite fair or quite correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then will the minister please explain it?

Mr. MacKINNON: We are desirous of getting intelligent girls to come to Canada in this immigration movement, but girls who for a term are willing to do domestic work or work in institutions. There are plenty of intelligent prospective immigrants to select from, and that is the kind we get.

Mr. MacINNIS: We should not confuse the words "intelligence" and "education". A person with no education at all may be very intelligent, but she is limited in the services she can render. She cannot offer the same service as a person with more formal education or more specialized education. A stenographer, a schoolteacher, or a girl trained in secretarial work can do housekeeping, but a girl who has not been trained cannot do those jobs. According to the minister's answer, as I see it, the girl who has had training in office work has a poorer chance of obtaining entry into Canada than a girl who has not.

Mr. HLYNKA: I realize that the minister has just taken over this department and that it may be difficult for him to reply to certain questions in detail. However, should he be in a position, with the assistance of his officials, to answer certain questions which I should like to ask, I would be grateful to him. Has the minister figures showing the percentage of the proposed immigrants from among the displaced persons who have been rejected on medical grounds.

The second question is, what are the health requirements or health standards of the department as applied to displaced persons and refugees? To put it in another way, what are the required minimum health standards which must be possessed by displaced persons and refugees before they are admitted to Canada?

In this connection I would point out to the minister that the officials of the preparatory commission of IRO are of opinion that the health requirements of most countries are excessively high. Having in mind the conditions under which these people have lived for the past nine years, I consider it unreasonable of us to expect them to be in perfect health. In cases I find the department usually refuses to admit displaced persons for health reasons. Then, when these persons refer the matter to me they explain that if one member of the family is just below the standard required the entire family is refused entry. At its sittings in Geneva last January, the preparatory commission of IRO felt that something should be done about this matter of the excessively high health standards required by a number of countries. In one part of the report I find this statement:

> It is the opinion of the executive secretary, that if the family unit can become self-supporting in a new country, the presence of one sick member of the family should not debar the whole family.

Then it goes on:

> It is undoubtedly true that at present selection missions are removing the best of the refugees from the point of view of physical fitness, and are in themselves creating a hard core of the unfit. It is the view of the executive secretary that the standards imposed are excessively high.

I could quote many passages from this lengthy report, but I think it will suffice if I refer to only one other, which says that if the calorie intake of any section of the population falls below this emergency subsistence level for any length of time, serious consequences must be expected.

The daily calorie intake that should be provided for displaced persons is set at 1,900. According to the report, I find that in the French zone of Austria, for instance, at times the people receive less than 1,000 calories a day, while the amount required by a normal person is about three thousand. So the minister will realize that at this time it is not fair for us to demand that displaced persons come up to the health standards we set prior to the second great war.

There are so many arguments in favour of setting lowered health requirements for displaced persons that I do not think I should mention many more, but I believe the humanitarian aspect should enter into this problem. The Canadian immigration teams and the department have been taking the attitude that they are dealing with persons as so much physical labour or so many numbers. We are not treating them as human beings; and I feel that at this time we certainly ought to take the human element into consideration.

I have before me a number of letters which I selected at random from the group of more than a thousand I now have running currently. An elderly lady finds herself in a displaced persons camp in Munich, Germany, which is in the United States zone. She is sixty-five years of age. She has been refused admittance to Canada; yet this old lady has not a single relative anywhere in Europe. She has two sons in Windsor, Canada, and a daughter in St. Catharines. Her two sons and her daughter are willing to put up any guarantee that the department may wish to set. Yet, just because this woman is sixty-five years old and not in the best of health, she is denied the privilege of coming to Canada. She has no contagious disease of any kind, and I for one cannot see why the department could not admit this woman to Canada, so long as her sons and her daughter are prepared to take care of her.

Surely that would be a proper thing to do. Yet we treat these people as if they were not human beings. I have here another case; and I received three letters in one day from this person. He states that, because the medical examiners have found that his son's child was not in the best of health, it has been ruled that this family cannot come to Canada until and unless the child is completely cured.

Let me say to the minister that if he had an opportunity to see the conditions under which these people live he would know that the majority of them have to live in a space of about thirty-six square feet per individual. No child can become healthy under conditions of that kind. There is no hope that the child can recover, or that any other person could recover, unless they are given better quarters to live in and better food to eat.

Then I have the case of a young man on whose behalf someone has applied for entry into Canada. But, no, he was too light. His weight was not what the Canadian health officials thought it should be, with the result that he was rejected. The same man was accepted by the United States army, and is today in the armed services of the United States. If he is heavy enough for the United States army, surely we should not have refused him admission to Canada.

And so on, down the line. I have with me a chart which has been drawn up by the preparatory commission of the international relief organization. When the medical examiners of that organization take down their records certain health standards are indicated. This chart sets forth an exacting health standard, a high standard indeed. However, even though the international relief organization approves the health standard of certain proposed immigrants, Canadian doctors refuse it. Surely, if a person is healthy enough to satisfy the doctors of IRO he should be healthy enough to satisfy our Canadian doctors; unless, of course, we want to rule out completely the humanitarian consideration, and various other considerations which enter into this matter. If we are not interested in the future of these people, and if we do not want them to be interested in the future of Canada, then that is the way to proceed. But if we want them to build up their homes in Canada; if we want them to spend their future years here; if we want them to be citizens of this country, then, even if there are one or two members in a family who may be a little weaker than the others, we should allow the weaker ones to come with the stronger ones.

The minister knows very well, coming from the same province as I do, the progress the pioneers of these various stocks have made in western Canada, and the contribution they have made to the development of our country. Surely we should have no doubt that they will be able to look after themselves, once they get here. All we have to do is to look at the relief records between 1930 and 1939. I can say with pride that we shall not find many names on those records of people of European origin. They got along as best they could, and perhaps on a little less than other people would require.

I say, therefore, that we should not require so much from them. When I take my seat I should like to have the minister comment on what I have said. I have been receiving letters every day from all parts of Europe and Canada. People are panicky because of the attitude of the Canadian medical men who examine these people, and who set up such rigid standards. It is unreasonable—and I say that frankly.

Would the minister explain to the committee the situation with respect to what is known as form 55. I have before me many letters, and I have others in my files, all of which state that sons, brothers or other relatives have remained in Europe for a long time, having failed to receive approval from the immigration authorities because form 55 has been lost. What does this mean? It was explained to me by one of the Canadians who worked for the preparatory commission of IRO that a Canadian immigration official will call at a certain camp with the purpose of questioning a certain number of persons. The doctor will have a certain number of persons to examine medically. He may bring with him 100 files so as to examine 100 persons in that camp. However, the doctor becomes tired and decides to move on to another camp perhaps fifty or one hundred miles away. Having examined only fifty, he will not examine the other fifty, but will just leave them and take the documents along with him, moving off to the far end of Germany.

Another examiner will come to the same camp a few days later. Then, when these people ask him if they should appear for examination and questioning they receive the obvious answer, "We are sorry; we cannot deal with you because your form has been lost". Surely some system should be organized to see that only so many forms are taken by officials at a time, and that all are dealt with. Then these persons could be advised that they have to appear at a certain camp, and they would know where they stand. But this procedure of dragging the matter along month after month is not fair.

I have the case of a man here whose brother-in-law is at Bonnyville, Alberta. He states that his application was approved nearly two years ago. He has been waiting for the last six months in a transit camp, and he states that his form 55 is missing. Therefore he has to wait.

I do not like bringing up these matters. I would rather wish to be able to rise in my place and thank the government and the department for doing their best in dealing with this tragic problem—because it is a tragic problem. I appeal to the minister and to the officials of his department to do something, and to see that these things are organized on a somewhat better basis than they have been prior to now.

I know, for instance, that the Canadian immigration branch has an office in Heidelberg, Germany, in the United States zone. That is the Canadian immigration headquarters in the United States zone of Germany. These poor Canadian officials—I call them poor because they are asked to do an almost impossible task—have to take their typewriters and a large number of files along with them and drive in a car from camp to camp to examine prospective immigrants. They have no office; they simply call at a camp and are given a room where they can sit down and examine the people. They spend a little time in a camp and do not know where they are to sleep or where they are to eat. The situation is not at all what it should be. If we are really serious about this thing, we should establish smaller stations where our officials can examine the people, so that they will not be forced to wait for months and months in a transit camp until some official comes along and examines them. The situation is bad; I am sorry I must say that, but I feel that these unfortunate people deserve more consideration than they have been getting.

I have another question. Has the department medical examiners attached to Canadian embassies in Poland, Roumania, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and the U.S.S.R.? If not, where should prospective immigrants residing in these countries go for their medical examination? They should be instructed exactly where to go. As it is now, they write all over creation trying to find out to whom they should apply for exit visas and permits to come to Canada or to whatever other country they wish to go. Again, what procedure should be followed by these prospective immigrants residing in the countries I have named if settlement arrangements in Canada are found satisfactory? That procedure should be fully explained and the instructions set out clearly in the regulations, or perhaps a bulletin could be issued to the press.

I have another question which the minister is not obliged to answer. It has to do with the assistance which IRO is supposed to give to cover the transportation costs of an immigrant from a displaced persons camp. In the speech I made in this house on May 29 I quoted a paragraph from the minutes of the preparatory commission of IRO, in which it was clearly stated that, as from the middle of January—I think that was the date—even individual immigrants might apply for assistance to cover their transportation costs. That information has not been made public. I know a man in Winnipeg who is working on the railroad as an ordinary labourer and who has paid the fares of nine members of his family whom he is bringing over from Europe. Nobody had told him that part of the transportation costs may be covered and should be covered by IRO, according to the decision of the preparatory commission of IRO, by the money voted by IRO for that purpose. Surely that information should be made public. A shrewd person who knows about this assistance will take advantage of it, but those who know nothing about it pay the transportation costs themselves.

Again, any firm which brings out a group of workers is reimbursed by IRO for the transportation costs. Most industrialists know about that. As a matter of fact, I suppose that IRO itself gets in touch with the industrialists and tells them: You paid out so much for transportation costs, and here is a cheque to cover it. But the ordinary individual does not know about this assistance, and so, I say, more light should be thrown on the various procedures that should be followed by the ordinary people, so that they will be told what they ought to know.

I cannot for the life of me understand why we treat this matter so lightly. To bring out an immigrant from a displaced persons camp to Canada is like pulling a tooth; it is so difficult. Certain cases which I referred to the department nearly three years ago are still pending. I have written and written to the department about them, and finally I get almost a stereotyped reply that the matter is now out of the department's hands and that I should apply to IRO. Then I write to IRO in Switzerland, and I get an answer from them that, so far as they are concerned, they have approved the application, and that it is out of their hands. Then I write to the Canadian immigration office in Europe and they tell me that they have approved it. The net result of all this is that the prospective immigrant is kept waiting for months and months before final action is taken.

The most unfortunate group of all in these displaced persons camps is the one composed of middle-aged and older people, fifty years of age and over. For those over sixty years of age there is absolutely no hope. After six years of war and three years in a displaced persons camp, living on the rations they have had to live on, their chances are very slim indeed unless some country will take up their case from a humanitariain standpoint. I appeal especially on behalf of these older people. If there is a relative in Canada who is willing to guarantee that his mother or father or uncle or some other relative in a displaced persons camp will not become a public charge in Canada, Canada should accept that guarantee and let the immigrant come forward.

Mr. SKEY: Just before the minister answers the able remarks just made by the member for Vegreville, I should like to put in a word in support of what he said regarding form 55. These forms are filled out here; once they are approved, they go overseas, and then the merry-go-round begins. Form 55 is lost, or it is never where it is wanted. It is a terrible disappointment to Canadians in this country who want to bring members of their families to Canada to find that when they can provide for them, when they are acceptable under our laws, they still have months and months to wait, while they chase form 55 halfway around Europe and finally track it down. Once they are approved and examined there, they have to wait for many more hard months. I know of the shipping difficulties that the government have, and I have some sympathy with them on that score; but it seems to me that this administrative set-up could be a little more expeditiously handled.

I should like to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Vegreville in that respect particularly, and a lot of other things that he said tonight to the minister.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have listened attentively to the most distressing picture painted by the hon. member for Vegreville, and supported by the hon. member for Trinity. It is quite possible that, because the minister and the officials are sympathetic, we appreciate the distressing nature of the situation.

The department officials, and particularly Mr. Jolliffe who is in front of me, can tell a much sadder story than the one which has been recounted by the hon. member for Vegreville, because Mr. Jolliffe is a man of a large heart, patient, sympathetic, capable and, I think, is doing a wonderful job as head of the immigration branch. I can assure hon. members that the department's approach to this problem is one of sincere sympathy.

In dealing with the various points mentioned by the hon. member for Vegreville, I shall be as brief as I can and still give what information I can. A question was asked as to the proportion of immigrants or displaced persons who have been rejected for medical reasons. It may be possible to get those figures, but I am sorry we have not them at the present time. If we can get them I shall be glad to give them to the hon. member or to any other hon. member interested.

I was asked as to the minimum health standards set up by the department. There are two tests, the tuberculosis test and the venereal disease test; otherwise people are expected to be in good mental and physical health.

Mr. FRASER: They are X-rayed.

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes, they are all X-rayed. The comment has been made that the standards are excessively high. I question that statement, but I believe that the standards should be kept high. Certain allowances are made, when we get our medical reports that the state of an immigrant's health is directly attributable to the life he or she has lived since becoming a displaced person, so long as there are not serious health difficulties such as tuberculosis or communicable diseases.

We do not break up families. If one member is much below the standard or is sufficiently below the standard that he or she cannot be accepted we do not accept the other members of the family. That is the policy of the department. Whether it is right or wrong it is the policy arrived at after a great deal of earnest thought.

I may say that our doctors examine the applicants for admission to Canada and our immigration authorities take the advice of these doctors. Canada has done more for displaced persons than all other non-European countries put together. We have already admitted approximately 25,000 displaced persons.

Mr. HLYNKA: How many of these came in group movements, and how many as individuals?

Mr. MacKINNON: Nineteen thousand came in group movements, and about 7,000 as close relatives.

The matter of what is to be done with displaced persons who are substandard in health will have to be settled in some kind of international agreement.

In connection with form 55, the application forms are all sent to the teams in Germany by air mail as soon as the application is approved. In addition, the approved names are sent to the international relief organization by air mail. The IRO is responsible for bringing the immigrants to the immigration teams.

Mr. SKEY: Have we a representative on the IRO?

Mr. MacKINNON: A number of Canadians. The question was asked as to what procedure was taken on applications in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and the U.S.S.R. These go to the Canadian missions where they are examined by a doctor approved by the Canadian authorities. We have no missions in Hungary or Roumania.

Comment was made on the cost of bringing these displaced persons to Canada, and reference was made to the fact that their relatives are being asked to pay for them where they are able to do so. The international relief organization has a limited budget and has to stretch it as far as possible. Canada has contributed $3,000,000 up to February of this year. That is more than anyone else has contributed except the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are any companies reimbursed for the cost of bringing them out, and are any private individuals reimbursed? The hon. member for Vegreville brought up that point.

Mr. HLYNKA: That, of course is the responsibility of IRO, not of the immigration branch. I brought it out for the purpose of clarifying the issue, so that this information would be published by the IRO or perhaps by the immigration branch, in order that the people would know who is responsible for the cost. Of course IRO is responsible.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have answered briefly, Mr. Chairman, but I have covered the principal points raised by the hon. member for Vegreville. I want to assure the committee that this whole problem is approached with the greatest sympathy. It is an overwhelming problem. I cannot understand how some of the officials in the immigration branch have stood up under the pressure to which they are being subjected. They are doing their utmost, as I say, with a difficult problem, and they deserve a great deal of credit.

Mr. MacINNIS: I listened with great attention, as I am sure the committee did, to the hon. member for Vegreville. He made some points that are worthy of careful consideration by the immigration branch. One of the points that impressed me was the turning down of a whole family because one person in the family was not able to make the grade, to put it that way, from a physical standpoint. We should look at the question somewhat differently from that of ordinary immigration. These are refugees. A refugee, if I understand the term, is a person seeking sanctuary, and when you give sanctuary to that person you are not doing so in order to benefit yourself. When we allow immigrants to come in; when we urge them to come to this country, we do so ordinarily because we want them, because it is good for us and not necessarily because it is good for them. It is purely a business proposition.

Mr. MacKINNON: It is not altogether selfish.

Mr. MacINNIS: There is no harm in being selfish as long as a person is intelligently selfish. The fact of the matter is that we are doing it because we want these people here. But when we are doing something for refugees we are doing it for their benefit and not for ours, and it is hypocritical of us to take credit for the fact that we allow healthy persons from the refugee camps to come in, in order to make good producers in Canada. After every country has taken the cream—I do not know how many were there in the first place, a million and a half or so—who will take the rest? Who will take the cripples, the maimed, the ill, who cannot be productive in any country? If we are to do this in a Christian charitable way, we should be prepared to take our share of the sick and the afflicted, as well as those who can become good producers.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there any screening in the case of a parent who comes to Canada from the United Kingdom if a son living here undertakes that the parent will not become a public charge? Does the parent coming into the country have to be screened? Is he allowed to come in if the son undertakes that he will not be a public charge?

Mr. MacKINNON: The only screening is to safeguard health. It is purely a matter of health.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there any screening of the son who lives in this country, or is his financial condition gone into to find out whether he is in a position to take care of the parent to see that that parent does not become a public charge?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that in such cases exceptions have been made.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not wish to go into particular cases, but I wish to bring to the attention of the minister or of the head of the immigration branch a case which I shall ask him to look into, because it is one in which, in my opinion, there was not proper screening, and in which the financial position of the son, who must have undertaken to look after this parent, was not carefully investigated. I refer to people who formerly lived in this country, who had to be looked after while they were here, and who went back to the old country. Now they are in this country again and are a cause of some worry to charitable people in the neighbourhood.

Mr. McCUAIG: Is it a fact that no record is kept of people emigrating from Canada and going to other lands? Is no record kept by the government?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed that we do not keep any record of people going out from Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to say one word by way of agreement with the the remark made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I understand that the United States has undertaken to receive a substantial number of displaced persons, and I wish to know whether we have considered our duty in the matter, because if we leave the whole of the task to those who are less able than ourselves it will never be done.

Mr. McCUAIG: With reference to the question I asked, I was informed that the dominion bureau of statistics gave information to the senate that over 6,000,000 people had left Canada since confederation. Where did they get the record?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am informed, from the United States figures.

Item agreed to.

Immigration branch—

229. Repatriation of wives and dependents of members of the Canadian armed forces overseas, $117,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: With your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, and that of the minister, may I ask a question with reference to item 225. It has to do with aerial photography. How much of that $1,240,000 was spent for commercial companies, how much for the Royal Canadian Air Force, and how much represents inter-departmental committee expenses? With the indulgence of the minister, I should like to get an answer. I beg your pardon for reverting to the item.

Mr. MacKINNON: Is that for last year's work?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is the same item as last year's.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I think we should dispose of the item that has been called, and if the hon. member wishes to revert to an item already passed that can be done when the present item is carried.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MacKINNON: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the hon. member for Queens wanted to say something on item 224 and I would ask that we revert to that item.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Item 224, Indian affairs branch.

Mr. McLURE: With your consent, Mr. Chairman, I can go ahead. Under this item I wish to discuss fur conservation for a moment or two. I have before me the answer to that now. I want to know how much of this vote was spent on fur conservation. I am informed that the bulk of it is spent on fur conservation, but I had a request that I find out what benefit this is to the Indians. A letter was written to me a short time ago to which I tried to give a fair answer, and with the information I can get here this evening it will be a good record. One fur conservation project which the department has had under its care is known as Summerberry. It was intended to conserve muskrats and it has turned out to be of great profit to the department. When I say "great profit" I mean that it is paying its own way. I wish to put on record the fact that this year, from the Summerberry rehabilitation of muskrats project, 103,000 skins were sold which realized $294,580. If the department can continue this work of fur conservation it will do a great deal to benefit the Indians.

Another question which I would ask the minister to answer is this. Of what benefit is this to the Indians, and how many Indians are employed in the trapping of these muskrats? I understand from one of the officials that one-third of the trappers each year are Indians and that they earn enough money each year to equal a monthly income throughout the whole year. The reason I asked to have this put on the record is that I want to send it to those who have been making the inquiry; and I know it is a good thing to send out, because the department has made a wonderful success of its fur conservation proposition in Summerberry near The Pas in Manitoba and also in any conservation areas it has under its control.

Mr. MacKINNON: The hon. member has asked what benefit this project is to the Indian. We require that one-third of the trapping licences will be reserved for Indians.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The question I wish to ask the minister has to do with item 225, $1,240,000. The item is for three different things: to defray the expenses of the inter-departmental committee on air surveys, payments to commercial companies and payments to the Royal Canadian Air Force for air photography. I should like to know how much is spent on each part; whether or not this commercial work has been let by tender to commercial companies; and whether these photographs, when they are finished, are available to commercial companies, we will say, for surveying timber limits.

Mr. MacKINNON: I have not the exact figures before me, because the contracts have not all been let for this year. But the proportion will be about three to one; that is, three in favour of the R.C.A.F. to one in favour of the commercial companies. The work done by commercial companies is all let by tender. What was the other question?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The amount to defray expenses of the inter-departmental committee on air surveys.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am told that is a small item, practically nothing.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. GILLIS: May I ask a question on item 229?

Mr. MacKINNON: Make it short, please.

Mr. GILLIS: It is short. The item has to do with the repatriation of wives and dependents of members of the Canadian armed forces overseas. There is an increase in that vote of $95,000 this year over last year. Why should that be? I thought this matter of repatriation was nearly wound up?

Mr. MacKINNON: The explanation of this increase is that it is owing to the transfer of the administration and cost of the movement from the Department of National Defence to the immigration branch.

Lands and development services branch—
National parks services—

766. National parks and historic sites services —further amount required, $524,850.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Will the minister give us a breakdown of that half million dollars in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. MacKINNON: May I give this explanation. That item is to provide for increased wage rates for employees paid on an hourly basis. There is also the sum of $70,000 for maintenance of highways in the following parks: Banff national park, $35,000; Kootenay national park, $20,000; Yoho national park, $15,000. These additional amounts are required for maintenance and replacing culverts on highways within these parks as the result of flood conditions in these regions.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—

770. Indian agencies—further amount required, $231,128.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The amount in the original estimates for Indian agencies was an increase of some $545,000 over the previous year, and this is for an additional $231,000. In the details of service at page 175 of the estimates, a decrease is shown in the number of Indian agents, superintendents, inspectors, et cetera. Today the minister said that the Indian affairs branch was following closely the recommendations of the committee on Indian affairs. The committee was somewhat disturbed about the fact that we did not have enough Indian agents. Here the department is asking for an additional sum of almost three-quarters of a million dollars, while there is a decrease in the number of Indian agents. Can the minister give us information as to what the increase is for, and whether or not it is the intention of the department to increase considerably, if not to double, the number of agents so that they can give us a little bit more supervision work among the Indians of Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON: The principal items included in this increase are: supplies and materials, $10,000; telephones, telegrams and postage, $7,000; printing, stationery and office equipment, $10,000; and then the large item, construction of buildings, works and structures, $137,500.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

137. Expenditures for vocational training under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942, and agreements between the dominion and provinces approved by the governor in council, including projects for training of persons to fit them for gainful employment, youth training, apprenticeship training, vocational training at the secondary school level, foremanship and supervisory training, as well as to provide for undischarged commitments of previous years (including certain items formerly under demobilization and reconversion), $3,377,500.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to ask for more information about that. May we be told something about it? There is a large increase, and I should like to know just what the point is.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): If my hon. friend will wait for a couple of minutes, I will give him a breakdown of the increase—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item stand?

Mr. MITCHELL: —if the hon. member does not mind coming back to that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No.

Item stands.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

138. Administration, including expenditures incurred in connection with the activities of the national employment service as delegated by the Minister of Labour in accordance with section 88 of the act, $18,465,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I realize that the administration has gone down in cost, but I want to get an idea about this. For example, I notice on page 144 of the estimates a considerable number of new posts set out. Might we have an explanation of the reason for these additions?

Mr. MITCHELL: The reason is the tremendous expansion in the coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is almost a paradox, but it costs the government more when we have full employment than when employment is below normal. By the very nature of things the organization is increased, together with the contribution by the government to the unemployment insurance fund. At present more people are employed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As the minister says, it does seem a bit of a paradox. One would have thought that in a time of full employment, when you are merely on the receiving end, there would not be nearly as much to do as when you are faced with the problem of unemployment. Is the answer that when you have unemployment all the fund does is automatically to make certain payments to those who are out of employment, or is any other duty carried on by the fund?

Mr. MITCHELL: One must not forget the tremendous numbers who pass through the employment offices. We spoke of the displaced persons this evening. The placement of those people is undertaken through the agency of the employment service. In the last year about seven hundred thousand people have passed through those offices, going from one job to another. One must remember that there has been almost a complete disappearance of what might be called private employment agencies. Most of the people brought from Great Britain under the Ontario immigration scheme were placed at work through the instrumentality of the employment service.

Another activity that has been carried on is the placement of university students in employment during the summer months. In fact almost every activity that has for its purpose the placement of men and women in employment is undertaken by the employment service. Today we have reached the point where some of the Canadian trade unions have made it part of their agreements that the employment agency shall do the actual employment, rather than the old office at the gate we used to see in days gone by. A big organization like General Motors of Canada, for instance, uses the employment service exclusively. Then we have had the transference of labour, during the summer months particularly, from the western provinces to the east and vice versa, which is handled by the employment service.

I mentioned university students, and in that connection I brought along with me a letter from the students' administrative council, Hart House, University of Toronto, addressed to one of my officials in that city. It reads:

> It is particularly difficult, in fact it is almost impossible, to express adequately in a letter the great debt of gratitude that this department owes to you and your department for the magnificent work which your officers and your department have accomplished within the university in placing this great student body in summer work.
> The statistics which I have received from you speak for themselves. They are most impressive and such a tremendous job would have been impossible without devoted application to duty on the part of your officers who were at the university. Your own interest and co-operation has left nothing to be desired and I can only say that I look forward with the greatest of pleasure to renewing this association next year.
> I do wish, however, to place on record my appreciation of the very valuable work done by Mr. Halse who for the past two seasons has been with us at the university. I have been stopped in the corridors, on the street, and elsewhere by the students who are grateful for the time and energy he took in their particular cases. I know that Mr. Halse spared no efforts towards anyone who was interviewed by him in seeing that they were suitably placed. He has done a magnificent job and we owe him as well a very great debt of thanks.
> I will include the statistics of placement in my report to the president of the university which is sent to the provincial and dominion governments. I will be glad to send you a copy of this report when it is completed.
> Yours sincerely,
>
> "E. A. Macdonald"
> General Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like a little further information, and I am speaking to the minister as a man who, I believe, largely shares my own feeling that we want people to do as much as possible for themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL: Certainly I do.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On pages 144 and 145 of the estimates I observe a whole list of new officials who have been appointed. Frankly I always have the feeling that, unless it is carefully watched, a department can grow, and that new jobs can grow also; and at the same time I feel that eighteen and a half million dollars is a lot of money. Would the minister turn to page 144 and look at these appointments? I take it that those shown for 1948-49 but not for 1947-48 are new appointments. About half way down the page I see these positions: assistant supervising inspector; chief contributions officer; chief planning officer; administrative officers, grade 1. I take it that this whole group are new appointments.

While I am on my feet, may I ask the minister also to explain the whole group at the top of page 145, who apparently also are new, since no item is shown for 1947-48. Can the minister explain just what new activities have been undertaken?

There is also this other question. Is the government taking over expenses which should be borne by the companies themselves? The minister said the companies were very glad to use this service. If it is relieving them of expense, that may well be so. If this is the only efficient way to do it, I am answered; but I should like to know.

Mr. MITCHELL: These are people who were previously temporaries and who are now made permanent, rather than additions to the staff. As a matter of fact, the strength of the employment service has been reduced by some 1,500 in the last eighteen months. I agree with my hon. friend that sometimes we forget that every time a civil servant is employed he becomes a charge upon the living standards of the producers of this nation. It is said that we are doing things for the employers. I believe the employers did a great many things for us, as a government; and that goes for all governments. Perhaps it is not too bad if the wheel turns the other way sometimes. My mind goes back to the old days in my hon. friend's city, when you saw on Bay street outside the Telegram office, and on the street where the Star is located, lines of people waiting to get the papers in order to look for jobs, and then running off to look them up themselves. Even in those days the Ontario government had an employment service. It is much more satisfactory if you can channel these people through an agency under the jurisdiction of the government. I believe that is better than the old days of the private employment agencies, when the worker paid for the service rendered.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I agree with the minister to this extent, that I have no desire to see queues on Bay street, which he described so well. I think he has answered my question. Do I understand that the list at the top of page 145 are people who were previously temporary?

Mr. MITCHELL: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Did I understand the minister to say there had been a shrinkage of 1,500 in the staff?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On a rough calculation that would be a reduction of about $2,000,000 in salaries. I am taking 1,500 employees at $1,000 each, which would give $1,500,000. The reduction in the item is $695,000. I realize there may be other additions. First of all, will he tell me the actual reductions in salaries.

Mr. MITCHELL: This represents reclassifications, increases in salaries and promotions. This was approved in the past couple of years. The figure is taken care of in that way.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish the minister would explain a little more fully his statement that this service is more expensive in a time of full employment.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think that is correct. The fewer people employed, the smaller are the contributions to the fund. The greater the employment, the greater are the contributions. There are contributions by the employer, the employee and the state.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should have thought that was a comparatively small amount compared with the service required in finding employment or in making transfers if, in fact, there is a great deal of that going on.

Mr. MITCHELL: The administration of a fund covering 3,250,000 people is a man-sized job and takes a big organization. That is not the only part of it. There is the placement end of it. You have also the insurance end, and the contributions being made by the three parties to the fund. In addition to that, you have the payment of insurance benefits to those people who are entitled which, in turn, entails a good deal of bookkeeping.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps it would clarify matters for the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario if it were pointed out that the payment of unemployment insurance benefits makes placement officers necessary. The recipient of unemployment insurance must come to the placement officers in order to find out if there is employment. The two must go together.

Mr. GILLIS: This afternoon I asked questions of the Minister of Mines and Resources regarding the amount of co-operation between the Department of Labour and the immigration branch concerning displaced persons. I asked if they were being admitted into Canada after due regard to employment conditions in this country, and seeing to it that our own people are not displaced. The Minister of Mines and Resources stated at that time, as did also the Minister of Labour, that the matter would be answered by the Minister of Labour when his estimates were before the committee. I presume he is now in a position to do so.

I should like to ask a question regarding the unemployment insurance commission and its place in the field of the placement of employees in Canada. During the war, selective service performed a useful function. One could seek employment and be placed through the placement officials of the selective service personnel. Employers were compelled to register their requirements. The office performed a useful function, because employers were obligated to register their requirements, and selective service had the right to direct employees to employment.

This condition no longer obtains. I think it is a function in the unemployment set-up which at some time in the future will have to be restored.

Mr. MITCHELL: Do I understand the hon. member correctly, that he believes there will have to be a restoration of direction of labour?

Mr. GILLIS: Absolutely. If that is not done, the minister cannot stand in the house and tell me or other hon. members that he has a placement branch in his unemployment insurance set-up. He has no such thing. All he has is a group of officials who can interview prospective applicants for employment, and tell them where they may secure employment. In the great majority of cases the employers in this country are not placing their requirements in the unemployment insurance offices. They are picking and choosing to suit themselves. No longer has that office the right to direct employees to employers. I am saying that must come back some time; because I believe that in the not distant future we shall face a situation in Canada where these offices will have to perform that kind of function.

We have pockets of unemployment across the country, all the way from Vancouver in British Columbia to Louisburg in Nova Scotia. Immigration authorities are bringing to this country displaced persons from Europe. In the first analysis we decided we were bringing them in for humanitarian reasons. I should like to know from the minister under what type of contract these displaced persons are being brought in. What is the length of contract? What are these people obliged to do?

For example, I received a letter from a mining camp in northern Quebec advising me that displaced persons had been taken on in that camp. Under the terms of their agreement they were obliged to work for their employer for one year. During that time they were not permitted to join a union. Is that true?

Secondly, is the Department of Labour checking closely with our own unemployed pockets across the country to see to it that Canadians are placed first in employment, before people are brought into this country under the guise of relieving displaced persons camps in Europe, for humanitarian purposes, while actually they are replacing Canadians who should be employed? The minister said this afternoon that he would answer these questions. I would ask him to do so now.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. MITCHELL: That is a pretty long bill. If I miss any, I shall come back to it later.

Mr. GILLIS: I will remind you, if you do.

Mr. MITCHELL: First of all, I think my hon. friend tipped his hand as to the kind of state we would have to live in if his party were ever in power. I do not think he did it deliberately.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, I did it deliberately.

Mr. MITCHELL: Well, so long as we know—

Mr. GILLIS: But not what you have in mind.

Mr. MITCHELL: Now, just a minute. In all humility, I suppose that during the war I had more power over the lives of men and women in this country than any other man has had in the history of North America. That was made necessary by war conditions. I can remember the objections my hon. friend raised, and quite properly, against directions given in the mining industry, but I always used to say to myself that the do's and don'ts and shalt's and shalt not's which I had to set in motion would not be allowed to impair the basic freedom of the people of Canada. I believe in the right to strike, but you do not allow that right when you say to a fellow: You are directed to such and such a job. That is a police state. When I said at the conclusion of the war that selective service would go down the drain I was convinced, against the opinions of many of my friends and others, that the resiliency of the Canadian people was such that over 1,000,000 men and women could pass out of the armed forces into industry and commerce and agriculture in this nation without the necessity of controls. I disagree with my hon. friend on his approach to this problem.

Mr. GILLIS: Disagree on what?

Mr. MITCHELL: I was born in Great Britain, but I do not have to live there. However, I will say this, that when you start pushing people around and keep on doing it for a decade, particularly when those people are in the young and formative stage of life, you are not far from the kind of state that I am sure my hon. friend does not believe in and I do not believe in.

Mr. GILLIS: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I asked a couple of questions and I would ask the minister to answer them. I do not understand what he is talking about when he is speaking of a police state.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have a perfect right to draw my own conclusions. I believe in the right of a man to quit his job if he wants to, and to refuse a job if he wants to.

Mr. GILLIS: If he has a job. What about the 30,000 unemployed in the maritimes?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend has asked me a good many questions and I will try to answer them all. At the moment we are providing transportation to jobs for people in Sydney, Halifax, Pictou, New Glasgow and Vancouver, and that movement has never stopped. My hon. friend will remember the situation in Windsor not very long ago. We received representations from the mayor and council of the city and from our own officials, and accordingly we made provision for the movement of men out of that area, but for some reason best known to themselves the men did not want to leave it. I suppose that is quite natural. We have paid transportation for about 2,800 people from the area to which my hon. friend referred.

Mr. GILLIS: I thought that was discontinued last October.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, it is in operation at this moment.

Mr. GILLIS: It was announced in the house that it was being discontinued.

Mr. MITCHELL: There has been some mention of displaced persons. I think it is fair to say of the three newly elected members of the C.C.F. in this house that they are, like myself, to all intents and purposes displaced persons. I gather that from the inflection in their voices.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: Most of us left the old country to better ourselves in this dominion, and it is only a matter of degree whether you come from the old country or from Latvia or Poland or some other country.

Mr. McIVOR: Or Ireland.

Mr. MITCHELL: Or Ireland, as my good friend suggests. I was much impressed with what my good friend the hon. member for Vancouver East said when speaking of the problems of displaced persons. But what he said did not agree with what was said by the hon. member for Swift Current when he spoke not long ago in this city. I quote from the Ottawa Citizen, which I rarely do:

> Mr. Bentley labelled the bringing of D.P.'s to Canada as a kind of fascism. "It was not kindness that prompted the action but an effort to bring in competition for Canadian organized labour and to bring down wage bills. If carried on long enough it will end up with them all on the soup line."

That was the statement made by the hon. member for Swift Current, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen. I do not think he believes that any more than any other man in this house does. The government and the people of this country were motivated by the highest ideals when they assumed the obligation of taking a certain proportion of these displaced persons in Europe; and to say that they were brought out here to undermine the living standards of our own people is not a statement of fact.

Mr. GILLIS: No one said that.

Mr. MITCHELL: I was just reading what the hon. member for Swift Current said, as reported in the Citizen. I hope he did not say that.

Mr. GILLIS: That is just a sentence taken out of the context.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, it is not. I do not do that sort of thing. I will send the clipping over to my hon. friend. There is an old saying that when you accuse the other fellow you should take a look in the glass at yourself.

Mr. GILLIS: You have not yet answered any of my questions.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am afraid my answers are not to my hon. friend's liking.

Mr. GILLIS: What about the contract with displaced persons? It is nearly eleven o'clock now.

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall be here tomorrow. It is not a contract. It is an understanding. It is not a contract enforceable at law. I was charged with the responsibility of developing that idea, and it was done solely for the purpose of protecting the people involved. We took the position that these people should not be brought to Canada to undercut the living standards of our own people. I think it has worked out remarkably well. I have no knowledge of the denial of the right to any of these people to belong to any organization: I know a certain political party in this country—I am not referring to my hon. friend's party—which has gone out of its way to try to influence these people into a line of thinking such as they have left behind them in their home countries. On my own street I have seen girls who came to this country only six months ago from displaced persons camps, and you would never recognize them now for the same people. They look healthier; they are better dressed; they are happier; they are glad to be here. I have in my files scores and scores of letters from men and women who have come to Canada from displaced persons camps and who are happy to be living in this land of freedom.

Let me say to those who talk so much about conditions in this country that I have some knowledge of the people who want to come to Canada. I have some knowledge in my department anyway of the people who want to come to Canada. I do not know of any applications to go back to the countries to which I have referred. Everybody wants to come to North America or to go to somewhere in the British commonwealth. Not long ago I talked to the minister of immigration of Australia. They are anxious to get these good people to emigrate to that country. I think they have set a target of 75,000 for the coming year. The only thing that is holding them up is the provision of shipping. In the years to come, I think these good people from these camps in Europe will give full credit to the Canadian people for the contribution they made to permit them to make a new start in life. Let us be decent about the matter. Let us approach them as human beings. I think it can be truthfully said that, as far as the government is concerned, we are doing our very best to see that these people are placed with good employers, without in any way impairing the living standards of the men and women engaged in industry.

I know, and the hon. member knows, there are people in this country who say that if you are not a communist you are a fascist. I know there are people in this country who are going up and down this land and giving statements to the newspapers. I know them by reputation. They say that everybody who does not agree with them is a fascist. I have never taken that point of view. This country could very well get along without these people. If they do not like the country in which they live, for goodness sake let them go to the country they like.

Mr. GILLIS: I do not want the committee or the minister to get the impression that I was quarreling with the government for bringing displaced persons into this country. What I had in mind was whether, in the face of the unemployment problem in Canada, there was co-operation and understanding between the immigration branch, which is bringing them in, and the Department of Labour to see to it that they were brought in and placed in sections of Canada where they would not displace our own people? The minister did not answer that question.

Mr. MITCHELL: One thing at a time.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. GILLIS: Perhaps he will answer tomorrow. I have a great admiration for the selective service department which was set up during the war. I do not think the minister had a more effective section of his department in Canada. They did an excellent job. I was disappointed because, as soon as the war finished, the offices were closed. The greatest contribution that that section of the minister's department could make was in the transition from war to peace when it was really necessary, to a large extent, to a greater extent in fact than it was during the war, to direct the employer and the employee. That function dropped off.

When I said that I thought that, sooner or later, these employment agencies which work in co-operation with the unemployment insurance offices would resume that function. May I say that I believe they will in the not far distant future—I was not suggesting the police state. It is much better for a young fellow or a young girl to walk into an office in any section of Canada, speak to the placement officers and ask them if they have anything on the board in the way of employment in the town or city and to have the clerk in the office refer to the board and say, "Yes, So-and-so wants so many people", and be able to call that employer and have some authority to direct the boy or girl that is on the street to some kind of gainful employment under some kind of government supervision than to have what we have now, these young people walking the streets.

You have these offices set up across Canada, but employers are not using them. They are not placing their requirements in your employment insurance offices and in the hands of the placement officers. They have gone back to the point where they say they will hire whom they like, with the result that there are a lot of boys and girls on the road in Canada today with no employment, although there is employment if they were directed to it. For the minister to construe that kind of attitude as advocating the police state is not fair. I do not think he did so deliberately. I think he did so because he misunderstood exactly what I meant. What I meant was a place to which the unemployed of any town or city in Canada could go and receive some kind of intelligent direction into employment that exists in that city; but because of the haphazard method adopted now by employers and by those agencies, those who want work have no direction in finding it, and those who need employees are not in the position where they can place their orders with some recognized responsible body to which the employees could be referred. That is all I meant by that.

The minister has not answered for my benefit the question on the type of contract under which displaced persons are brought to this country.

As I said this afternoon, when I made a few remarks to the Minister of Mines and Resources, if we are bringing displaced persons in from Europe for humanitarian reasons, for the purpose of rebuilding them and getting them back on their feet from the standpoint of health and the building of morale, that is fine. I am all for it. But the first obligation of the people of Canada and the government of Canada is to our own people, especially when one considers the unemployment that we have in the maritimes. As the minister knows, there are approximately 27,000 registered unemployed seeking work in Canada. It is the responsibility of the government of Canada to see that they are placed. To all intents and purposes they are displaced persons. We lose approximately 15,000 of these young people to the United States every year. In fact, we have been doing that for the last fifty years. It is time that we started to keep these young people at home in Canada. That is our best immigration.

The minister says that the policy of the government is not to undermine the standards of the people of Canada by bringing displaced persons in. I am not suggesting that it is government policy, but I am suggesting that some employers in this country will use these people for that purpose unless the government is on its toes and sees that it is not done.

The main object of my questions this afternoon to the Minister of Mines and Resources was to make sure that the Minister of Labour, through whose department these people are brought in, consults with the lumber industry and the union in that particular industry to see that wages, conditions and standards are kept up in so far as these people are concerned. The same thing applies to the textile mills. There should be co-operation with the textile workers' union.

The minister made a statement in the house at one time that they had done that with those who were brought in for the needle trades. He said they were brought in with the co-operation and understanding of the garment workers' union. If that is still done, that is fine. But I pointed out to the minister a few moments ago that I received a letter from northern Quebec to the effect that in the gold mining industry of that section of the country displaced persons who were brought in there were under a year's contract, and during that year they had practically no freedom to do anything except to work out the year under whatever conditions the management of the industry laid down. It is on these points that I want to be assured. My principal objective in asking these questions was to find out what will happen to the 27,000 displaced persons in the maritimes who are seeking employment in other parts of Canada.

A few moments ago the minister said that the arrangements in his department to move them to other parts of Canada were still in effect. Well, I remember distinctly—and I am now speaking from memory—questioning the minister on this point during the present session. He informed the house at that time that the regulations under which they had moved some 4,000 people from the maritimes into central Canada expired in October, 1947. As far as I know, until the present time these regulations have not been re-enacted or revised, and it is on these points that I want some assurance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked for leave to discuss item 137, though we had passed it. That discussion took place, and I think we should pass 137. Item 142 is the one before the committee.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think you must be moving very fast, Mr. Chairman. I can follow fairly swift counting, but I have only got as far as item 138.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, item 138.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked to have item 137 discussed, and we were past that. We were past item 141. He also wished to say something on item 138. Item 137 we should pass now, and item 142 is the one before the committee.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am agreeable to item 137 passing.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MacINNIS: On item 138 I wish to ask the minister some questions.

Mr. MITCHELL: I wish to reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Vancouver East, and I think we had better wait until tomorrow.

Mr. GILLIS: We may be in a better humour tomorrow.

Progress reported.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

QUESTION AS TO VETERAN T. HARVEY

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer orally questions directed yesterday on the orders of the day by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). The first question was:

Where is veteran T. Harvey, regimental No. D76502 and pension No. 550593, known to have been discharged from Ste. Anne's hospital, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q., on June 14, 1948; known to have been in Ottawa June 17, 1948; known to have been at 507 Place d'Armes, Montreal, some time since June 17?

The answer is: Mr. Harvey visited the district office of the Department of Veterans Affairs in Montreal yesterday, June 24. He was seen by a medical officer who advised him to enter hospital for his pensionable condition of tuberculosis. Mr. Harvey said that he had some personal business to attend to and that he would present himself for hospitalization when his business was completed. He left no address.

The second question was:

Has the said veteran Harvey been forcibly detained some time since June 18, 1948?

The answer is: Not by this department.

The third question was:

Is the said veteran Harvey now being denied freedom to communicate with certain of his friends outside his present place of abode?

The answer is: Not by this department.

I might add that Mr. Harvey left the hospital after signing a refusal to take further treatment. He left of his own accord, returned yesterday of his own accord seeking to find out whether or not he would be admitted, was told that he would be, and is free to return at his own request.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the parliamentary assistant tell us what hospital Mr. Harvey so left after refusing to receive treatment as indicated; to what hospital did he return recently, as indicated by the parliamentary assistant; and is it so that prior to his discharge from Ste. Anne's on June 14, 1948, veteran Harvey was forcibly detained in Ste. Anne's hospital for several weeks?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

IMPORT RESTRICTIONS—PICTORIAL POSTCARDS ETC.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's):

1. Have any permits been issued for the importation into Canada from Great Britain of any pictorial postcards, greeting cards, or similar artistic cards or folders, finished or unfinished, or any Christmas seals, stickers, tags and enclosure cards, printed, embossed or otherwise decorated, which articles come under the prohibited list schedule I of Bill No. 3?
2. If so, to what company, partnership, person or persons have these permits been issued?
3. What was the reason for their issuance?
4. What condition of exceptional hardship would result if the permits had not been issued?
5. What is the nature of the permits?
6. For what types and quantites of the above articles have permits been granted?
7. What is the approximate value of the articles under the permits so granted?

Mr. BELZILE:

1. Yes.

2. Bets Book Shop, 2224 Oak Bay Ave., Victoria, B.C.; Furness Withy & Co. Ltd., St. Sacrement St., Montreal, P.Q.; Grenfell

Labrador Medical Mission, 48 Sparks Street, Ottawa, Ont.; Guild Book Shop, 15 Metcalfe St., Ottawa, Ont.; J. Kemp, 2079 Crescent Rd., Victoria, B.C.; H. O. Loescher Canada Ltd., Niagara Falls; Mahons Stationery, 90 Spring Garden, Halifax, N.S.; Menzies & Co. Ltd., 266 King St. W., Toronto, Ont.; R.A.E.J. Agencies Ltd., 1 Buckingham St., Halifax, N.S.; Stafford Roberts, 14 Lonsdale Rd., Toronto, Ont.; G. Morris Taylor, Jasper, Alta.; Valentine Edy Co. Ltd., Printers & Publishers, Canada Bldg., Winnipeg Man.

3. Permits have been issued for the following reasons and to take account of conditions of exceptional hardship as indicated below:

(a) Greeting cards individually marked "sample—not for resale" are permitted import in reasonable quantities on application by greeting card manufacturers. Most greeting card manufacturers in Canada adopt their designs from abroad and sample cards are normally imported to permit canvass of the Canadian market before production in Canada. It would seriously disrupt established trade practice and create considerable hardship if manufacturers were not permitted to import these samples.

(b) Some small shipments to the value of less than $20.00 came forward shortly after import was prohibited. It was deemed unreasonable and excessive hardship, in relation to the quantities and value of the goods, to insist that they be returned overseas or destroyed. Accordingly, import permits were given and the importers warned that no further exceptions could be made.

(c) In some cases the goods were printed with Canadian names, trade marks or designs that rendered them valueless outside Canada. In others, the processing of materials to such specifically Canadian designs was well under way as of November 17, 1947. It was considered an exceptional hardship to prohibit import in such cases; therefore, permits were given for goods wholly or substantially made to distinctively Canadian specifications at that date.

(d) One shipment, approximately $200 in value, was shipped from England on November 19, 1947. It was considered a permit should be approved in this instance.

(e) One shipment of goods designed for free distribution in Newfoundland by a non-commercial organization was admitted.

(f) One shipment of postcards was admitted on the following basis: while technically an import into Canada, the goods were consigned by an English steamship company to its Canadian agents to be supplied ultimately to the consignor's own ships when in Canadian ports, for distribution to the passengers.

4. See answers to No. 3.

[Mr. Belzile.]

5. Permits are issued on Emergency Import Control Division Form EC-6, "Special Permit to Import Controlled Goods." Permits authorize the collector of customs at a designated port of entry to permit import of a stated quantity of specifically described goods up to a stated maximum value in Canadian dollars when consigned to the person or persons named therein (normally, the applicant or his agent), in one or more consignments as specified therein, on or before a stated expiry date.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

RELIEF AND REHABILITATION IN THE FRASER VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to make a statement on relief and rehabilitation in the Fraser valley as approved by the Premier of British Columbia on behalf of the government of British Columbia and myself on behalf of the government of Canada.

After consultation with the Fraser Valley relief and rehabilitation commission established by the governments of Canada and British Columbia, the two governments have agreed that the assistance to be given by the government of Canada to British Columbia in helping to meet the requirements for emergency relief and for the rehabilitation of the flooded areas in the Fraser valley arising out of the national disaster created by the floods shall take the form of a lump sum grant by the federal to the provincial government of $5,000,000.

It has been agreed by the two governments that this grant will be understood to cover the share of the government of Canada in temporary emergency relief as well as the share of financial liability for measures of rehabilitation which the government of Canada agreed to accept in accordance with the announcement made in the House of Commons on June 9.

In addition to the lump sum grant of $5,000,000 for relief and rehabilitation, the government of Canada will provide seventy-five per cent of the cost of repairing, strengthening and reconstructing the dikes in the Fraser valley and removing water and debris from the flooded land, and the provincial government will provide the remaining twenty-five per cent of these costs. The two governments have agreed to establish a Fraser Valley diking board that will carry on this work as quickly as the board can be organized and take over the actual responsibility for this work from the various local, provincial and military authorities now dealing with it.

In view of the lump sum grant by the federal to the provincial government, the government of British Columbia, together with the flood relief committee, the Red Cross and the local authorities, will assume responsibility for whatever relief and rehabilitation measures they deem necessary in the flooded areas, not only in the Fraser valley but elsewhere throughout the province, except as regards the repair and reconstruction of the dikes and the removal of water and debris in the Fraser valley. It has also been agreed by the two governments that the armed forces will remain to assist the province until the emergency is ended, and it has been tentatively agreed that the end of the emergency will be regarded as occurring when the water level at Mission falls to eighteen feet.

It was recognized by the provincial government that what the armed forces had already spent on relief would be a part of the $5,000,000 grant, and the amount spent by the armed forces on protecting and repairing the dikes would be a part of the diking costs.

The Canadian army has also undertaken for the present to make available to the diking board a small staff of engineers and the 23rd field squadron of engineers to assist in carrying out a portion of the work. The federal government has designated Mr. F. G. Goodspeed, assistant chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, to share with provincial authorities responsibility for work on the dikes and related matters, and has designated officials of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Health and Welfare to assist the provincial authorities.

Further supplementary estimates will be introduced in parliament today or tomorrow to provide the authority for the expenditures to be made by the government of Canada under these arrangements; also further supplementary estimates for the special expenditures of the Department of Public Works in its own operations made necessary by the emergency.

While the destruction of property in the Fraser valley reached the proportions of a national disaster, there is reason to be profoundly thankful that so few lives were lost because of the prompt and effective measures taken by members of the armed services as well as by the civil authorities to meet the emergency, and especially because of the magnificent voluntary efforts put forth by the citizens of the province. May I add that the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments in the constructive work of the diking board should give to the people of the Fraser valley a greater sense of security than they have known hitherto for their homes, their families, and their future.

In conclusion, I wish on behalf of the federal government to express warm appreciation of the untiring efforts of the members of the Fraser Valley relief and rehabilitation commission, General Hoffmeister and Hon. Mr. Hamber.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the house has listened with interest and approval to the statement made by the Prime Minister with regard to the plans for co-operating with the province of British Columbia in connection with the flood disaster in the Fraser valley. However, just one question occurs to my mind. The Prime Minister has indicated that a Fraser Valley diking board is to be set up. I did not catch by whom that board is to be set up, or to whom it is to report and be responsible. Perhaps the Prime Minister would make that point clear. I did not hear clearly what the recommendations are with respect to the flooded areas outside the Fraser valley in British Columbia. Perhaps the Prime Minister would amplify his remarks on that point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The board will be a joint one under federal and provincial authority. Details have yet to be worked out.

As to the flooded areas outside of the Fraser valley, as well as areas within the Fraser valley, it was felt by both the province and the dominion that the whole matter could best be managed if the government made a substantial grant to the province for all purposes of relief and rehabilitation; the province, in consideration of the size of the amount of the grant which is being made, to take care of those areas that are outside the Fraser valley.

Mr. BRACKEN: The amount of that grant has not been determined?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The federal grant is $5,000,000.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is that included in the $5,000,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I understand the $5,000,000 is a token grant to the provincial government, to be administered by them for rehabilitation purposes. Is that correct?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is more than a token grant. It is a substantial grant, and it is to cover the expenditures in regard to rehabilitation. The provincial government takes full responsibility for the administration of the moneys given to it by the federal government, and full responsibility for the work of rehabilitation from now on.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I understood the Prime Minister to say that certain other funds would be available to the provincial government in connection with the loss of crops. Is that correct?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say to my hon. friend what other funds may be available, other than those mentioned in the statement I have just made. Perhaps I should repeat that portion of the statement for my hon. friend's benefit:

> In view of the lump sum grant by the federal to the provincial government, the government of British Columbia, together with the flood relief committee, the Red Cross and the local authorities, will assume responsibility for whatever relief and rehabilitation measures they deem necessary in the flooded areas not only in the Fraser valley but elsewhere throughout the province, except as regards the repair and reconstruction of the dikes and the removal of water and debris in the Fraser valley. It has also been agreed by the two governments that the armed forces will remain to assist the province until the emergency is ended, and it has been tentatively agreed that the end of the emergency will be regarded as occurring when the water level at Mission falls to 18 feet.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I presume the Premier of British Columbia is satisfied with this token grant of $5,000,000. Is that correct? I am not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I stated to the house a day or two ago that I would make a statement, which would be approved by the premier of the province and by myself before being given to the house. The statement I have read has the approval of both the government of British Columbia and the federal government.

Mr. FULTON: I understood the Prime Minister to say the amount spent by the armed forces would be deducted from this amount of $5,000,000. I think that is a pity; but does that mean just the amount that has been spent for materials that have been used, or would it also include the pay and allowances of the armed forces who have been helping in this work?

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I might answer that question. It is not intended that it should include the pay and subsistence allowances of the armed forces, but only extra expenditures made by the armed forces in connection with the work they are doing.

Mr. GREEN: Could the Prime Minister give us any estimate of the total damage that has been suffered, including the cost of rehabilitation? Apparently he has made a settlement with the Premier of British Columbia for $5,000,000 plus three-quarters of the cost of repairing the dikes. Surely there has been some estimate of the total damage, including the cost of rehabilitation; or is this settlement made without either government having any idea of the approximate damage done?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No doubt my hon. friend is aware that a commission was appointed, of which Hon. Mr. Hamber and General Hoffmeister were members. This commission has given careful examination to these matters; they have gone into the matter of the probable loss as a result of the disaster. This is the amount that has been recommended to the federal government by General Hoffmeister, who was our representative on the commission.

Mr. GREEN: But can the Prime Minister not give us the estimated total damage? Apparently a settlement has been reached. There must be some idea of the total damage that has been suffered.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot give it to my hon. friend immediately, because I have not the figures with me, but the commission has made that recommendation. They have gone into the whole matter themselves; and I think the country has complete confidence in the commissioners who are dealing with this matter.

Mr. GREEN: Can the Prime Minister get that figure?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The house will realize that there is no motion before it, and I cannot permit a debate on this matter at this stage. Hon. members may put questions, but they should understand that a debate cannot be permitted.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Shall we be going into committee of supply some time today?

Mr. ABBOTT: I point out to the hon. member for Fraser Valley that there will be a special item in the estimates which will have to be voted before we prorogue—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We won't prorogue for a week.

Mr. ABBOTT: —covering this grant, and full opportunity will be given for anyone who cares to do so to discuss the whole matter.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, which he may take as a notice of motion because he may not be able to answer it now. I should like to know how much money has been paid by the federal treasury to burnt-out drought areas in any part of Canada during the past twenty years. The reason I ask this question is that I am told it is nonsense, that we cannot pay for flood relief.

PRICES

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as chairman of the special committee on prices. When does the minister propose to table in the house the report which was adopted by the committee in the early hours of this morning by a majority vote of Liberals and C.C.F. as against the contrary votes of the other members of the committee? My second question is, will the report as tabled contain the recommendations which the majority of the committee purported to adopt in excess of the powers granted the committee by the house? The report was steamrollered through the committee last night, and it is a monstrosity.

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not propose to deal with the last observation of the hon. gentleman, but I hope to be able to table the report some time today, subject to circumstances over which at the moment I have no control.

OLEOMARGARINE

QUESTION OF REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question which was asked earlier this month by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) and the senator from Waterloo. Has the government yet decided to accede to the unanimous resolution of the senate asking that the validity of the present ban on the manufacture and sale of margarine in Canada be made the subject of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: When the farmers are flooded out.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): No, the government has not had an opportunity, with the intense pressure of the work of the session at this time, to give consideration to this question.

IMPORT PERMITS

MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT FOR USE IN ESSENTIAL INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RODNEY YOUNG (Vancouver Centre): Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house as to the facility and speed with which permits will be granted for machinery and equipment imported from the United States for use in the fishing, logging, construction, mining and sawmill industries?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As is well known, the policy established for the issuance of import permits under the terms of the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act provides that such permits will be issued for the importation of equipment required for essential industries, provided that such equipment is not available from Canadian sources. As the fishing, logging, construction, mining and sawmill industries are considered essential to the economic welfare of Canada, import permits will not be withheld for equipment to be used by those industries, provided that alternative equipment cannot be obtained from Canadian manufacturers. Such permits as are requested will be issued immediately, provided that the proper information as to the end use and the non-availability of suitable alternative equipment from Canadian manufacturers is supplied at the time the permit is requested.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS IN SEAMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Press reports this morning indicate that the efforts of the Minister of Labour to open negotiations in the steamship companies' seamen's strike have fallen through. Is the minister going to make any other effort to bring the two parties together?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I expected that the question would be asked this morning. I think I had better read the letter which I sent to Mr. Buckley with reference to the telegram he gave to the press yesterday. My letter states:

> I have your telegram of June 24 and I have copy of the telegram you sent Mr. Matthewson.
> There are two phases of the situation which might be mentioned:
>
> The first is that a report which I quote hereunder has reached me and I am sure I do not need to make any comments. These events would have an effect, of course.
> Welland—"Sixteen men were moving toward Port Colborne to man the ship John T. Burke tied up at Welland South dock. They were in a panel truck. Near Chambers corners the truck was stopped by a group of men travelling in a lorry, painted red. This group of men attacked the crew, beating them up unmercifully, with the result that five are now in hospital, five are missing and six are suffering from minor injuries.
> The Ontario provincial police later impounded a Red-army-style lorry and detained ten men travelling in it."
> Montreal—"Last night in Montreal harbour the crew of the S.S. Mont Sandra went aboard the S.S. Kinmount, which was tied up at No. 3 grain elevator.
> They were armed with axes and smashed various parts of the ship's furniture and equipment. They attacked the crew of the Kinmount, injuring four of the men to the extent they had to go to the hospital, and threw the galley stove overboard."

The other phase of the situation which I call to your attention is the fact that conversations between the negotiating committee and Mr. Matthewson were to be exploratory. I made this quite clear to you in our discussions. In your wire to Mr. Matthewson I think the difficulty is that you were too definite.

We are continuing our efforts.

Mr. CHURCH: What is the intention of the government in connection with such occurrences as these? It is the duty of the government to try to bring the parties together. This has now reached the proportions of a national emergency. There is $10,000,000 in the estimates to pacify Europe; why not try to pacify those at home and bring the two sides together and settle matters?

Mr. FERGUSON: Mr. Speaker, when is the government going to do something about unions taking the law into their own hands and carrying on in the manner in which they do? There is utter disregard of the laws of this country. I would ask the Minister of Justice how much longer we are to tolerate a handful of men deliberately breaking the law, and owners of property trying to carry on without proper police protection.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FERGUSON: How much longer are men going to be able to attack other people's property with crowbars and axes, without the government stepping in and stopping that kind of nonsense?

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to direct a supplementary question—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not always possible, I presume, for the authorities to preserve complete order in a country. But in this instance, as I have repeatedly said, the responsibility is that of the provincial authorities rather than the dominion authorities, for the preservation of law and order is within their territorial jurisdiction. The dominion has jurisdiction along the lines and in accordance with the principles I have stated to the house on several occasions.

Mr. FERGUSON: Is it not the duty of the dominion government when piracy occurs to take immediate steps? That is not a provincial matter—it is piracy on the high seas, and that is a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the dominion government.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question of the violation of law, which has been raised by the Minister of Labour, is not the root of the dispute the fact that the companies have violated the labour code as set out in P.C. 1003? When the minister is answering this question, will he say whether the lake seamen's union has been certified by the labour relations board, and if any agreement between the companies and the lake seamen's union has been registered with the board?

Mr. MITCHELL: The question who is breaking the law is before the courts; therefore from my point of view the matter is sub judice. Groups of people outside can say all they like about the courts, and they are doing that in some parts of the country. People who ought to know better are doing it. But I cannot express an opinion upon it.

I would say this to my hon. friend—and I think what I say covers the whole field—that it is a difficult situation, as he well knows. I am sorry for both sides to the dispute, although I believe there is a measure of blame on both sides. But there is no use in the labour department, my officials and myself, doing our utmost to settle a dispute of this kind if other parties concerned are going to try to negotiate an agreement through the newspapers. That makes it doubly difficult.

I thought last week, if I may say so at this time, that we had reached a point where the parties concerned would sit down together in the cities of Toronto and Montreal. But circumstances over which I had no control prevented that from happening. I place no blame at the present time. But I do believe this, that you can conduct a strike without this kind of thing about which I have told Mr. Buckley. I do not believe that kind of action helps the Department of Labour, nor does it help the good people on either side of the dispute in the efforts made to bring it to a conclusion.

I hold no brief for the employers in this dispute, but when they are ready to sit down with these people and then get news of that kind—well, I do not know how you can expect any sensible individual to bring the dispute to a successful conclusion.

I do know this, that a good many people who express their views in some of the newspapers of this province think they have the answers to all these questions. They are the people who write the editorial, and who never settled anything in their lives. If they have the answers, I wish they would come forward with them and I will give them good jobs in my department.

RADIO BROADCASTING

REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO POLITICAL BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation a regulation which bans political broadcasts for forty-eight hours before election day, and up until the closing of the polls on election day; and is that regulation still in force?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): It is still in force.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Then I should like to ask two supplementary questions. If it is still in force, why did the C.B.C. last night not only permit but give fifteen minutes free time to Mr. M. J. Coldwell to broadcast from Regina for political purposes over a period of an hour and a quarter before the polls closed in Saskatchewan? My second question is: Why, two weeks ago, did the C.B.C. permit a private station in Vancouver Centre to carry, on the evening of June 6, a transcription to a forceful speech by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), which was not intended to improve the vote of the government candidate two days later in the by-election on June 8?

Mr. McCANN: I am unable to give the answers at the present time to the hon. member's questions. However, the estimates of the C.B.C. will probably be up today or tomorrow, and the hon. member will then have an opportunity to ask his questions. I am sure, with the officials here at that time, I shall be able to answer him.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

TRANSFER OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance in connection with the telephone-telegraph service. What section of the telephone and telegraph services has been taken over by the Department of Finance from the Department of Public Works? Will the employees of the Department of Public Works now engaged in this work be transferred to the Department of Finance on the same conditions of employment and salary? Has the department entered into any negotiations with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada Limited?

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest that the hon. member put his question to the minister when the committee is considering the estimates.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): We will never get an answer otherwise.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I shall see that an answer is obtained.

YUGOSLAVIA

ALLEGED DISTRIBUTION OF PROPAGANDA BY LEGATION AT OTTAWA

Mr. JULIAN H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. How much longer is the distribution throughout Canada by the Yugoslav government of insidious, poisonous, lying propaganda to be permitted—propaganda such as we have been receiving through the mails from the Yugoslav legation? How soon is democracy going to take the necessary action to nip this poisonous weed in the bud? How much longer are we to have to put up with it?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): I will look into the matter about which the hon. gentleman has questioned me. His question has been in such a form that I think possibly the hon. member does not expect an answer.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 330, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We cannot hear what is going on, and as far as I am aware no one knows what the amendments are.

Mr. ABBOTT: The amendment is to give effect to an amendment which I agreed to in the banking and commerce committee of this house, namely, to make the rate of interest on tax arrears thirty days after assessment seven per cent, not eight per cent. The amendment was made at my request.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

INCOME TAX

CANADA-NEW ZEALAND INCOME TAX AGREEMENT ACT, 1948

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. 395, respecting an income tax agreement between Canada and New Zealand, signed at Ottawa, in Canada, on the twelfth day of March, 1948.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. McCANN: The full text of the agreement as signed at Ottawa on the 12th of March, 1948, by the Hon. D. C. Abbott, Minister of Finance for Canada, and the Hon. Walter Nash, Minister of Finance for New Zealand, is set out in the schedule to the bill.

The purpose of the agreement is to avoid, where possible, the double imposition of income and similar taxes where Canadians are carrying on business in New Zealand or otherwise receiving income from New Zealand sources, and where New Zealanders are carrying on business in Canada or otherwise receiving income from Canadian sources, and it also provides that the taxation authorities of the two countries may exchange information which may be necessary to make the agreement effective and to prevent fraud and avoidance of taxes which are subject to the agreement.

The purpose of the bill is to give the agreement the force of law in Canada, and it provides that in the case of inconsistency between the agreement and the operation of any other law, the agreement will prevail to the extent of such inconsistency. The Minister of National Revenue is given the authority to make orders and regulations to carry out the provisions of the agreement, which orders and regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette and laid before parliament.

The agreement is based on the principles established in the preceding income tax agreements which Canada has made with the United States and the United Kingdom. Double taxation is avoided by a reciprocal system of tax exemptions and tax credits.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Do I understand correctly that this bill follows closely or exactly the precedent set up in connection with the United Kingdom and United States?

Mr. McCANN: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There are no special circumstances which would affect the situation. I should like to get an idea of the amount and the number of people involved.

Mr. McCANN: I do not think we have any figures of the amounts likely to be involved. After it has been in operation for a year, one might be in a better position to answer that question. The terms of this agreement, as outlined in the schedule, are almost identical with the terms of the agreements with the United Kingdom and the United States.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Have any representations been received from Canadian firms or individuals in New Zealand who are actually concerned?

Mr. McCANN: The representations made to Canada were made by the New Zealand government.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EMERGENCY EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

AMENDMENT OF SCHEDULES TO ACT OF 1947-48

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 397, to amend the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act.

He said: This bill proposes a number of changes in the list of items subject to import control under the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act. Before explaining the nature and purpose of these changes, I wish to review briefly the results that have been achieved to date under the program of exchange conservation, and to indicate certain measures of relaxation that may be possible if our reserve position continues to improve at a satisfactory rate over the next few months.

The house will recall that before the introduction of the exchange conservation measures on November 17 of last year, our exchange reserves, that is to say, our official holdings of gold and United States dollars, were declining at an alarming rate. The figures are familiar enough, and I shall not repeat them on this occasion. It is sufficient for my purpose to recall that during the period from the beginning of 1947 until the middle of November the rate of decline was about $70 million per month, a rate which, if it had continued unchecked, would have exhausted our then remaining reserves of approximately $500 million within a short period—indeed probably before today we would have been completely out of gold and United States dollars.

Drastic action had to be taken, and was taken. The comprehensive program which was developed has been in operation for only about seven months, and indeed, some parts of one aspect of the program, the restriction of capital goods imports, have only recently been put into effect. Nevertheless I am pleased to be able to report that the program is working —working indeed more satisfactorily than I myself had dared to hope. As I shall explain in greater detail in a moment, we have reduced our imports of goods from hard currency areas; we have reduced our travel expenditures in such areas; we have obtained an increasing proportion of our needed supplies from other sources, and we have had a very encouraging increase in our exports to the dollar area as well as to the world as a whole. As a result of these changes in the trend of our trade in goods and services, not only have we stopped the rapid decline in our exchange reserves, but we have reversed the trend and have had an encouraging improvement in our reserve position.

As I have said, our exchange reserves amounted to approximately $500 million when the program was put into effect. They dropped to $461 million on December 17. Knowing the experience of some other countries with somewhat similar programs, we had expected that these reserves would show a further substantial drop before the declining trend could be got under control. That figure for December 17, however, proved to be the low point, and since that time there has been a fairly steady upward trend, wholly apart from the increase in our holdings of United States dollars due to the drawings upon the Export-Import bank loan. On June 23 last, the date of the latest report I have received, they amounted to slightly over $742 million. This total includes $140 million obtained by drawing upon the Export-Import bank loan. If we deduct the amount of these borrowed funds, we have a balance remaining of $602 million, representing the result of the working of ordinary economic forces.

I think it will be agreed that the increase thus indicated from the low point of $461 million at December 17 is a gratifying one. It is true, of course, as I indicated in the budget speech, that during the period in question there were one or two items of a special or non-recurring character. These accounted for an increase in our reserves of the order of $60 million. But there were also during the same period offsetting items on the other side, including advances of $112 million to the United Kingdom under the 1946 loan and of about $74 million to other countries under various export credits. As the house knows, drawings on the loan to the United Kingdom have been suspended since mid-April, and the further amount to be drawn by other countries under various export credits will be small; some of these credits have already lapsed, and all will have terminated by the end of the year. I need not remind hon. members that if the portion of our exports so financed could have been sold for cash rather than for credit, there would have been a further increase in our cash reserves of $186 million during the seven months in question. We hope to play a further part in promoting world recovery, within the limits of our reasonable capacity, but we cannot continue to do so on the scale of the recent past, and thanks to the assistance which western Europe will now secure from the European recovery program approved by the United States Congress, that should no longer be necessary.

While I have expressed a large measure of satisfaction, and indeed of gratification, with the results up to date of the exchange conservation program, I wish to emphasize that we cannot as yet afford to be complacent. We have still a considerable distance to go before we can regard our holdings of gold and United States dollars as satisfactory. We must continue to increase those holdings to the point where they will be adequate to meet the drains which will undoubtedly occur from time to time—whether due to internal boom and consequent high imports, or to internal misfortune such as a crop failure and consequent low exports, or to the financial difficulties of some of our best customers, or to worldwide economic fluctuations. But while we must face realistically the task still ahead of us, we have reason to be proud of the progress already made.

Each part of the exchange conservation program has contributed to the improvement in our exchange reserves which I have described. I am informed that the limitation on travel funds has effected very substantial savings of United States dollars, and I wish to pay tribute to the way in which Canadians have accepted this very necessary but nevertheless vexatious restriction on their freedom of movement across the border. I am also gratified by the friendly attitude of our American neighbours who might well have misunderstood our motives, but who are, in fact, visiting this country in great numbers—considerably larger numbers, I believe, than last year.

A few days ago figures were released to the public, showing the effects upon imports of the restrictions imposed upon items included in schedules I and II of the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act during the first quarter of 1948. The figures for April are now available, and with the permission of the house I would like to place on Hansard figures for the first four months of the year so that they will be available in convenient form to hon. members.

IMPORTS UNDER SCHEDULE II (QUOTA LIST)

NOTE: The above tables compare imports of goods covered by Schedules I and II of the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act during the first four months of 1948 with the corresponding statistics for 1947. It will be noted that some imports continue to be shown under the prohibited list of Schedule I during the first four months of 1948. This arises out of the fact that not all of the commodities included in the statistical classification under which imports are classified were covered by the prohibitions. Also in certain instances permits were granted to deal with cases of exceptional hardship, as provided in the Act.

The figures in these tables show that imports from scheduled countries, that is, the United States and certain other dollar countries, under schedules I and II were $86 million less during the first four months of 1948 than during the corresponding period of 1947. Goods which were prohibited under schedule I accounted for $31,000,000 of the decrease, and those placed under quota by schedule II for the remaining $55,000,000. The average monthly decrease in imports from these scheduled countries was thus $20·5 million in the first four months of this year as compared with the first four months of last year.

Turning to imports from non-scheduled countries, that is, countries which might roughly be termed non-dollar countries or countries which are also short of dollar exchange, the results are equally satisfactory, though for a different reason. As hon. members know, the government adopted a policy of non-discrimination in its import restrictions as being the best policy from Canada's long-term point of view as a trading nation. In applying that policy an attempt was made, however, to place as few restrictions as possible on trade with non-scheduled countries. The results for the first four months show that imports from soft currency countries of goods listed in schedules I and II of the act were 32 per cent higher in the first four months of 1948 than in the first four months of 1947. British trade has been affected scarcely at all by the prohibitions under schedule I, and it has already begun to benefit considerably from the operation of quotas under schedule II.

My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) gave to the house a detailed survey of the results of operations under schedule III of the act, which comes under his jurisdiction, and there is therefore no need for me to repeat the information he gave. However, I do think it worthy of comment that during the past seven months it has been possible for us to continue to import the capital goods and materials required to enable us to carry on the expansion of our industrial capacity which has been under way since the conclusion of hostilities. As my colleague emphasized, the program is designed not merely to save dollars in the short run, but also to help us to solve our long-run problem of achieving a better balance in our trading relationship with the dollar area.

As the government has endeavoured to make clear on a number of occasions, our approach to the dollar problem is essentially a positive approach. We introduced restrictions with the greatest reluctance, and only because they were vitally necessary to stem the decline in our reserves. In any event, as I have already outlined, they have had the desired results. But the government is much more gratified by the increase that has taken place in our earnings from exports. In each month since the turn of the year the value of our commodity exports to the United States has exceeded that for the corresponding month of 1947 by a substantial amount, the increase for the whole period from January 1 to May 31 being $136 million, or approximately 34 per cent. Making the same comparison for exports to all countries, the increase is $111 million, or 10½ per cent.

The future is a matter of uncertainty, and I would be the last to indulge in gratuitous prophecy. But I do think that the results achieved during the past seven months, on both the negative and positive sides of the program, are such that I should indicate at this time that, if serious setbacks do not occur in the meantime, the government plans to relax the restrictions on the imports of certain goods that are habitually consumed by Canadians and are looked upon as highly desirable, if not altogether essential.

In particular, the government believes that it will be possible towards the end of 1948 to take certain of the commonly consumed fresh fruits and vegetables off the prohibited list and put them under quota so as to permit Canadian consumers to obtain a reasonable quantity of this fresh produce when domestic supplies are beginning to become relatively scarce.

This indication of policy is in line with the statement which I gave in reply to a question of the hon. member for Fraser Valley, which appears on page 1431 of Hansard for February 20, 1948. At that time I said:

> As I now see the situation and as I now view the prospects of our exchange position I think it is highly improbable that a complete removal of these restrictions with respect to fresh fruits and vegetables will occur much before the end of this calendar year, and it may be that some degree of restriction will continue into the early part of 1949. As far as possible it would be the government's intention not to remove or relax these import controls at a time when that action would have serious or disastrous effects on the marketing of Canadian produce. But I cannot bind the government to any unconditional guarantee that no produce grown in Canada in 1948 will have to face any competition from imported goods. As I said nearly three months ago, the government intends to relax restrictions on basic or essential items such as cabbages, carrots, potatoes, and onions when it becomes clear that Canadian supplies are nearing exhaustion.

As hon. members know, the government has already permitted limited importation from time to time of certain fresh vegetables, such as cabbages, carrots, potatoes and onions.

Furthermore, the government is hopeful that importations of citrus fruits which are now under quota will continue to be available in at least as large quantities as up to now and if possible that the quotas will be enlarged.

Meanwhile, steps will be taken to authorize the resumption next winter of imports of British West Indies tomatoes, which for a number of years, since the application of a high tariff against them by the United States, have been grown especially for the Canadian market. These imports will be subject to quota limitations related to imports from that area in recent years.

Summing up the situation in so far as fresh fruits and vegetables are concerned, I expect that next winter, while we may have to continue restricting the importation of the less commonly used and more expensive items, it will be possible to have available not only adequate supplies of citrus fruits but also reasonable supplies of such staple vegetables of widespread consumption as lettuce, celery and tomatoes at a time when Canadian supplies are not available.

I now turn to the contents of the bill that is before the house. The amendments to schedules I and II are few in number and simple in character. The amendments to schedule III are more extensive, but they are in large part merely consequential upon changes in tariff wordings which were made in the budget in order to provide for reduced rates of duty on various imported materials and components required by Canadian industries. They will be dealt with by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I wish to summarize briefly the proposed changes in schedules I and II, for which I am responsible. These changes will be brought provisionally into force as of tomorrow. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will deal with schedule III later.

Schedule I. Three of the seven changes which it is proposed to make in schedule I are merely clarifications; two broaden existing provisions to cover goods which may be imported in substitution for other goods which are already prohibited, and two involve the addition of completely new items. The combined effect of these changes is expected to be a substantial additional saving of foreign exchange and more equitable treatment as between competitive or partially competitive products. The substance of the various amendments is as follows:

(a) The explanatory note at the head of schedule I is expanded in order to make it clear that no description in the prohibited list shall be deemed to include any goods classified under a tariff item listed in schedule II.

(b) A new item is inserted to cover acoustical wallboards, pads and tile of any material. Acoustical wallboard of wood fibre was already covered, but similar or competitive products made of asbestos or gypsum were not.

(c) The gummed paper item is reworded to make it clear that it applies to printed as well as to unprinted gummed paper.

(d) A new item is inserted to cover synthetic resin soft sheets or strips, and manufactures thereof. It includes such products as plastic shower curtains, aprons, tablecloths, et cetera, and the pliable sheeting from which they are made. It does not include the hard plastic materials which are used extensively for structural and industrial purposes. Nor does it apply to any articles included in schedule II. They will remain subject to quota without change.

(e) The item covering mirrors is expanded to include mirrors of glass coated with any material. Formerly it applied only to silvered glass.

(f) A new item is inserted to cover asphalt tile.

(g) A provision which is no longer necessary, by reason of the addition of the proviso to the note at the beginning of the schedule, is repealed.

Schedule III. Three items are inserted in category 4 of schedule II. They cover vacuum cleaners, motorcycles, bicycles and tricycles.

Bicycles and tricycles are a new addition to the schedule which appears desirable in view of a sharp increase in imports from scheduled countries. Vacuum cleaners and motorcycles are being transferred from schedule III to schedule II, and imports from scheduled countries will be subject to quota. Production parts will remain subject to control under schedule III.

While the effect of the bill is to impose some further restrictions on imports, the new items do not differ in character from the items already included in the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act. They are designed to effect savings in dollar exchange where least harm will be done to the economy as a whole and to leave greater resources available for the importation of the more essential items.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The minister mentioned motorcycles and bicycles. Would his statement in that regard apply in equal measure to the parts that go to make up a motorcycle or a bicycle, such as the saddle?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those are under schedule III, production parts. Schedule II, which is the quota schedule, would affect only the entire machine and not the parts. I suggest that we could handle those questions better in committee.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest that the hon. member wait until the house is in committee.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief comments to make on what the minister has said. I should perhaps have been more impressed by the minister's statement if it had been shorter. I was rather reminded of the remark, "Methinks the lady doth protest too much". The minister was at pains to point out that everything was lovely, but I was not sure, as he read the statement, that everything was in fact quite as satisfactory as he suggested. However, some progress has been made, and we should be unaffectedly glad. I confess further that when the minister says that everything is good, or pretty good, and in the next breath tells us that he has had to draw down $140 million of the $300 million, I have a sense of disturbance and the feeling that all is not so well.

We must remember that by the unwise policy pursued until November of last year the government precipitated a perfect spate of buying so that there was bound to be something of a reaction. We need not therefore take too much comfort from the improved figures; nevertheless, to the extent that there is an improvement, we should take what comfort we can.

I would remind the house that notwithstanding the very favourable picture the minister has attempted to give us, we have had to draw in our horns a bit with regard to the credits we were hoping to make, and to take the view that our position does not warrant our doing just what we had hoped to do, and that to me is also regrettable.

The minister explained how the various measures had worked effectively, but I do not find any attempt made to give any figure to show the effectiveness of the blessed 25 per cent austerity tax. It may be that the suggestion of the report that has been freely circulated, though I understand without warrant, may be realized a little later than the month of December, as the minister now tells us. I understand there are gentlemen sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker, who would like to question the December date and bring it as close to us as June.

There is one thing I should like to mention. I think it is an interesting commentary on the pleasing picture which the minister has sought to give us that we shall be asked in a few minutes to consider another bill, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act. In that we seem to be pursuing still further the inquisition into—one might almost say the persecution of—our citizens.

Mr. ABBOTT: The inquisition of smugglers.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We shall deal with that when we come to it. At the moment, however, it shows that the government is scraping the barrel as much as it can to get dollars, and to the extent that it is doing so properly, in the circumstances it has created, that of course is the only thing left for it to do.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I might supplement the remarks of my hon. friend by a description of the bill as it applies to amendments to part III of the act.

Category III provides for some further amendments in wording in order to conform with the revised Customs Act and for bringing radio repair parts under control. Category IV similarly brings under control all radio repair parts not covered in III, and also all parts of electric light fixtures and electric appliances. In the past, repair parts, with the exception of automobile repair parts, have been admitted freely and without requiring a permit. It has been found very difficult, however, except in a few cases, to distinguish between imports of repair parts and imports of similar parts for production purposes. In these circumstances it appears fairer all round to put imports of all parts under control and on a quota basis.

Category V covers amendments which, I believe, will provide for better administration. In the four tariff item numbers affected, it is proposed to delete that part of the wording which provides that permits will not be necessary for importations which do not exceed a certain value. Experience has shown that a more specific definition is required to cover such exclusions, and it is proposed, subject to this amendment being approved, that a type of general permit will be provided under each of the tariff items noted, to allow for what might be termed "casual importations," to values not exceeding the values now stated in the act, which are made by an importer for his own use and which are not intended for resale.

It will be noted that minor changes are proposed to the wording and punctuation of certain of the items. These changes become necessary to define the meaning of the items included in the act and are in accordance with the accepted wording of the customs tariff.

Category VI brings fibre glass and glass wool and a number of industrial chemicals into schedule III. Fibre glass imports were originally prohibited, but the prohibition was removed by order in council when it was established that imports were essential for insulation in various appliances such as refrigerators and stoves. Imports have increased substantially from $938,000 in 1947 to current annual rate of $1,400,000. It now appears that the imported fibre glass is being used for a number of general insulation purposes which could be quite satisfactorily served by Canadian products. By including fibre glass in schedule III it will be possible to restrict imports to those essential for technical reasons for certain specialized insulation requirements.

Imports of the industrial chemicals which it is now proposed to include in schedule III totalled something over seven and a half million dollars in 1947. It is believed that it is now possible, as a result of improvements in the domestic supply position, to save some appreciable amount of exchange on these items.

Perhaps this is an opportune time to make a few observations on the general development and progress of our capital goods import control—the administration of schedule III. On June 10 last I gave a detailed review of the statistical results of our controls to date, and a description of our organizational approach and procedure. I need not reiterate the details of what I said before, but I should review briefly the record of the administration of schedule III up to the present.

To begin with, it must be appreciated that the problems in administering schedule III are very different from those of schedules I and II. The administration of all the schedules is directed to the same objective, of course—to conserving United States dollars; but from the very nature of the different commodities and situations with which they deal, the methods adopted must be different. Schedules I and II are designed primarily to cut down imports of consumer goods which we can, in a pinch, do without. Schedule III is designed primarily to control and direct imports of capital goods to the most constructive purposes and best national advantage from an exchange point of view.

The dollar value of imports from the United States of goods enumerated in schedule III was held at $187 million in the first four months of 1948. This represents a reduction, although not a large reduction, from the levels reached by these same imports in 1947. The larger part of the savings so far is accounted for by automotive vehicles and parts, where my original estimate of a $75 million saving in 1948 is well on the way to being realized. Other items have been brought under control from time to time, many of them at very recent dates; so that the full effect of the program is not yet apparent in the import statistics. With a new list of items announced to take effect on June 26, eighty-nine per cent of the original schedule III items have been brought under control, and these accounted for ninety-six per cent of all the imports in schedule III in 1947.

Three different methods have been followed in the detailed administration of the schedule III items. These procedures have been developed as being appropriate in each case to meet the needs of the problems which were encountered. Dollar allotments are issued to manufacturers who are importers of parts for production use enumerated in schedule III. These vary a good deal from one industry to another, but they follow the general lines of the formula established in the automobile industry, which latter has been published in detail. Up to the present, about 1,200 of these dollar allotments have been issued.

In cases not subject to dollar allotments, import permits are issued on an individual basis to cover the particular shipment concerned. Up to the end of May, $21·5 million of import authorizations were granted in this way. The third method of control is project approvals, which cover all imports necessary for a particular construction project or industrial plant. These project approvals are, in effect, an assurance to the builder concerned that individual shipment permits will be issued as they are needed.

The whole program has been developing in a very substantial and encouraging way. I gave some concrete examples in my statement on June 10. Substantial expansion is planned, and is now getting under way, in a number of important manufacturing fields affected by the import restrictions. From automobiles to automobile parts, radar to television, typewriters to washing machines, micro-motors to buses, heating pads to penicillin, venetian blinds to asbestos cement pipe, biscuits to grape juice, we have new products and new industries springing up weekly. A pattern has developed which we think is a sound economic approach to the problem of the best distribution of activity between United States parent companies and Canadian branch plants. A number of arrangements have been worked out by which the Canadian plant concentrates on a standard model for both the domestic market and for export, and the United States parent turns over the export markets for this particular model to the Canadian plant. This is, of course, a feasible proposition only if the Canadian plant can meet the United States plant costs. I am glad to say that in most of the cases we have examined it was clear that the Canadian plant, on the mass production basis which the export orders made possible, could compete advantageously with the United States plant.

There are long-run implications of this development of particular interest to us. There may have been some element of pressure in inaugurating these developments, but they have proceeded only because the companies concerned are satisfied that they are basically sound and economically advantageous. While the exchange and import restrictions are, we hope, of temporary duration, the stimulus given Canadian industry, the new markets found for Canadian products, the recognition of Canadian industrial and cost advantages, are all constructive factors which will continue.

Our natural resources development programs also have long-range objectives in view. It is not enough for us to consolidate our wartime industrial expansion, or to meet our exchange problem solely by defensive means. We must build for the future, and build on the basis of an economically sound international division of labour. It is by this method, and this method only, that we shall assure a balanced position for our foreign trade, which is of such great importance to our general economy. Consequently, I welcome the evidence that new investment in Canada is looked upon as not only sound from the point of view of supplying the domestic market, but as advantageous in supplying all world markets open to us.

An interesting development in this connection has been in the motion picture business. A group which includes all the major United States motion picture units has formed an association known as the Canadian Co-operation Project. The specific objective of this project is to make what contribution the movie industry can to a solution of our exchange problem, and more specifically to spread general information about Canada and whip up tourist interest. As an example of the efforts of this group, while there were 61 Canadian subjects in American newsreels in 1947, there have already been 64 this year. Just yesterday contracts were concluded covering some $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 of feature productions in Canada, which Canadian interests are financing on approximately a fifty-fifty basis, and from which Canada will get a pro rata share of world earnings. A number of other commitments, chiefly for short features of tourist interest, have been made and others are being negotiated. In view of the way the American movie industry is plugging Canada, the least I can do is plug the production "Neighbour to the North" which is appearing at a local theatre. This will give an idea of the type of assistance, which cannot always be measured in dollars but which has very important dollar importance, which this industry can give.

We are accused on one side of a new protectionism, and on the other of a new socialist dictatorship. We are accused at one and the same time of not doing enough in a positive way to encourage Canadian industry and economic expansion, and of encouraging so much that we are intensifying an already highly inflationary situation. As usual, the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes.

There has been, of course, an inevitable but temporary element of protectionism in banning imports of a number of consumer goods in high demand in Canada, but at the same time steps have been taken to expand competitive production in Canada and to stimulate exports, even at the expense of some continuing shortages in the domestic market. On the other hand, these measures have not been forcibly imposed on defenceless industry by a dictatorial bureaucracy: they have been worked out with the wholehearted co-operation of responsible industry in this country by the simple expedient of putting the facts of the situation in each case squarely before the industry concerned. This means that there is nothing immediately spectacular in our positive program—no highly advertised five year government plans—but we do know that we are building firmly and practically.

If anything, we have more cause for concern over the criticism that we are attempting too much than that we are not doing enough. The magnitude of the current investment boom in Canada is almost alarming. We forecast new capital investment, in 1948, of $2·8 billion at the beginning of the year; the indications are that this will be exceeded. Fortunately we have been able to arrange for increased supplies of basic products and building materials required in this connection, and the more essential parts of the program, such as housing, and necessary industrial and utility expansion, have not been delayed. In fact, we are already reaching a stage at which the very large capital investments made both during and after the war are beginning to pay off materially in increased production. I would not minimize, however, the pressure that continues on scarce supplies—on construction labour of all kinds, on key materials such as steel, and of course, on our United States dollars and the things that must be imported from the United States.

There is a fundamental point I would like to emphasize. Our exchange problem and the measures we have taken to meet it arise directly from the terrible destruction of the last war. I refer not only to the human and material destruction, but to the breakdown of the former international exchange and trade systems and to the loss of free government institutions in some parts of the world. At the same time we have on this continent, and in this country, employment, production, income, and, in general, prosperity and standards of living higher than ever before.

I am sure that most Canadians do not appreciate the tremendous strides Canada has made in the world scene in the last decade. We are today the third trading nation in the world, by quite a wide margin. Our wartime industrial development was no flash in the pan; we have gone on since the war, converted and expanded, and our industrial efficiency and output today compare favourably with that of any other country in the world. I could reel off a list of first in every field, from housing construction and family allowances to power developments and paper production, that bear witness to our productivity and, I should add, to our good fortune.

We who are sitting here have been privileged to see Canada grow from economic adolescence to maturity, and to become one of the leading commercial and industrial countries of the world. It almost seems that we have profited from the war destruction and the necessary post-war rehabilitation. But I think on this our conscience can be clear. We have done more per capita to assist European recovery than has any other country. We intend to continue contributing to the extent of our resources, in co-operation with the United States, through the Marshall European recovery program. Apart from any other considerations it is obviously in our long-run interests to do what we can to restore the basis for a free world trading economy. This will require some degree of sacrifice from this country, some temporary abstinence, some restrictions on otherwise worthwhile projects. To make an effective contribution to European recovery we must develop a substantial over-all surplus of exports. To some extent we can do this by producing more. To some extent we shall have to do it by consuming less. Every export from Canada has an appreciable United States dollar-content, direct or indirect. Until there is a greater degree of multilateral trade, and until exchange convertibility can be restored, we must maintain controls that will reduce our less essential imports from the United States, and also controls that will direct imports in the capital goods field to their most useful purpose. The latter controls are the particular responsibility of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the best effort of that department is being directed toward administering these controls fairly and efficiently, in the best interests of Canada's financial stability.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the statements of the two ministers are indeed important and extremely interesting. Taking them together, as the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) has said, we should not refrain from giving what credit may be due and expressing satisfaction with what progress is being made. With the hon. member, however, I do feel that if the government or the ministers wish to take credit for the way in which this program is working, we should be careful to see that they are really justified in doing so.

The figures given by both ministers, first as to the increase in our reserve of American dollars, and second as to the change in the export trade picture, are quite impressive. As has been pointed out, however, the increase in our United States dollar reserve is not so impressive when it is remembered that $140 million is the result of our drawing upon a loan.

The other comment I wish to make in that connection is that while we may be building up slightly larger supplies of United States dollars, we have not yet reached the stage where we can say with confidence that our trade situation is such as to enable us even to start looking toward the removal of these controls. If we do, our supply of United States dollars will immediately rush down the drain again. We have no more United States dollars than we had when this program was started last November, and I do not think we have seen anything which would lead us to assume that we have yet gone very far in changing the trade picture along the road to the eventual goal of being able to take off these controls. In fact, even although the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) says the government has this point in mind, the industries we are building up, and the pattern of development we are undertaking, is inevitably being built up within what must be the narrow limits of controls, and of the policy which the minister has in his mind.

Instead of enabling us to take off those controls, the effect may be the very opposite, namely, to compel us to keep them on. In other words, the more we build up these things with controlled exchange, and the more we operate along those lines while not permitting it to operate along other lines, the more urgent it becomes to keep those particular lines going and, as a result, to keep the same controls. Certainly in these circumstances more pressure will be put on by the industries which have been built up under that system. They will press not to change the situation and not to expose them to the vagaries of free exchange and free competition from without our borders.

That was the danger we saw when this program was inaugurated. We are pleased that we have actually got more United States dollars than we had at that time; but we do not think that the danger has been lessened in any way. We think our Canadian economy is built up along what are in fact unsound lines, lines which will eventually compel us to keep those very controls which on all sides, when the program was begun, were admitted to be undesirable.

If we have come to the point where we can relax restrictions and contemplate imports which will cost us United States dollars, if the situation has been eased to that extent, then it seems to me that instead of doing this —or certainly as well as doing this—we can take at least more items out from under the 25 per cent excise tax, which forms the other side of the program. I believe as a matter of fact that it would be better to give that relief before giving this relaxation, or the type of relief along the lines indicated in the bill.

Where it is applied, obviously the 25 per cent tax increases the cost of living. I shall not embark upon a long dissertation upon the cost of living. I have no doubt the minister has received as many representations in the matter as he cares to receive. But he cannot deny that this cost of living increase, apart altogether from the economic side of the picture, is having a serious effect upon the outlook of the people of Canada. They are beginning to wonder whether governments care very much what happens to the cost of living.

It is important economically, certainly, and it is also important from the point of view that the people are finding it difficult to meet that rising cost. Everything that can be done should be done as soon as possible to reduce the cost. Instead of giving relief by releasing import restrictions, or certainly as well as doing that, there should be further relaxation of the 25 per cent excise tax by taking some of the items out from under that tax.

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, what I have to say will be brief. It seems to me, however, that statements as important as those made this morning by the two ministers ought not to pass without one further comment. What I have to say has to do with what Canada is being paid for these exports about which the minister spoke when he said that United States subsidiaries here are taking over the export market for their parent companies.

If we are being paid in United States dollars, that is fine. If we are being paid in sterling credits, thus adding to Canada's sterling credit situation, that is not so good. But if we are being paid in Canadian dollars which our government has lent these other countries then we are in the position of financing exports of the subsidiaries of companies in a foreign country. Will the minister tell us exactly the currency in which we are being paid?

Mr. ABBOTT: Convertible currency for everything, except what is sent under United Kingdom credits or credits to the other western European nations. We do not deal on any other basis. It is cash.

Mr. SKEY: A cash basis, fully convertible?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; we cannot afford to do anything else.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Schedule I amended.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was not aware when I made my observations a few moments ago that we had a double-barrelled statement this morning. Having heard them both, I feel that the firm of Abbott and Howe, in the advertising field, ought to be a great success, because it certainly did a good job in advertising the exploits of the government.

Mr. HOWE: And you spread the gloom.

Mr. ABBOTT: The achievements of the government.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Achievements, real or alleged?

I do not propose to take much time of the committee, but I do wish to comment on one phrase used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, one to which I listened with considerable interest. I refer to his statement to the effect that investments are developing at an almost alarming rate, and that the investments are chiefly investments in capital goods.

Let me say to the minister, when he speaks of alarm, that the present situation is due largely to the measures he took himself by reason of the extravagant double depreciation.

I would remind him further of what I said in the house before, that the present cost of living is due in some measure, even in substantial measure, to the fact that goods and services and labour have been taken away from commodities which sustain the life of the consumer, and put into capital goods. When the minister says he is alarmed I would remind him that the alarm is justified, and is brought about by a condition which in substantial measure he has created.

Mr. CASE: I can see nothing in the bill to determine the method employed to regulate the value of the Canadian dollar. This is a bill to amend the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act. What rule of procedure did the government employ to determine the artificial value of the Canadian dollar? In the ordinary course of events the dollar would have been at a discount of ten per cent, and had it been allowed to seek its own level it probably would have receded still further. Be that as it may—

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I wonder if he would make his remarks on the next bill, which is an amendment to the Foreign Exchange Control Act. I think it would be more in order.

Mr. CASE: Would it be proper to ask what regulation is passed to determine the value of the Canadian dollar?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is done by the Minister of Finance under the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Mr. JAENICKE: During the course of his statement the minister said that the imports from soft currency countries were $30,000,000 in respect of goods under schedules I or II.

Mr. ABBOTT: They showed an increase of that amount over the corresponding period for last year.

Mr. JAENICKE: If I understand aright, schedule I is the prohibition schedule under which import permits would be issued by the minister in case of hardship.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. JAENICKE: Outside of the tomatoes which we got from the Bahamas and Jamaica, what other permits were granted under schedule I?

Mr. ABBOTT: There are a number of items which are partly banned. The statistics are all in the tables which I placed on Hansard today. The principal increases are in the quota items under schedule II.

Mr. SKEY: When the minister says "fully convertible", what does he mean?

Mr. ABBOTT: I mean in hard currency, in cash, in currency which can be converted into United States dollars, which is the currency we want. If we sell in the Argentine the exporter must get his payment either in United States dollars or in a currency such as Swiss francs, which is convertible into United States dollars. In other words, we cannot afford to sell except for hard currency, or currency which we can convert into United States dollars. It will have to be either gold or convertible exchange.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): This might be a good place for the minister to express his well-known sympathy toward those who require kerosene operated refrigerators. Could a small quota not be provided which would show what our intentions are? I do not think the minister fully appreciates how the people in a riding such as mine get along. We do not have many of the summer campers and luxury tourists for whom the minister is afraid to provide these kerosene operated refrigerators and thus create a loss in foreign exchange. Many people in my riding are able to get fresh vegetables not more than once a week. The hon. member for Vancouver North says that the same thing applies to his riding. No ice is available, and these people cannot go down to a corner store to buy fresh vegetables or fresh meat because the store is not usually a large enough establishment to have an alternative method of refrigeration. I think if the minister would give some thought to this he could even offer an amendment now. I would be most grateful to have it as a gesture of good intentions toward these folk.

Mr. ABBOTT: I indicated a moment ago in my statement, in rather guarded terms it is true, that I contemplated that if we continued to improve our position, we would be making a progressive relaxation. I felt that this fall we might be able to establish reasonable quotas for fresh fruits and vegetables such as lettuce, tomatoes and celery. I will say to my hon. friend that having regard to the general iindication of relaxation which I gave, I think it will be possible to give early consideration to the establishment of a quota for kerosene operated refrigerators.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I concur in the remarks of the hon. member because what he has said would apply to many people in small towns in British Columbia.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. FULTON: I would point out that summer is here, and those who live in out-of-the-way places find it difficult to get along without these refrigerators. The other day I referred to the minister a case in which a man was able to get in supplies only once a week, and he needed to have some way of keeping those supplies. I am glad the minister intends to give consideration to this matter, but I hope he will be able to do something before the hot weather is at its height.

Mr. JACKMAN: The Minister of Finance said that these changes in the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act will affect substantial savings of exchange. Does he mean we shall have to go still further with the imposition of restrictive measures, which he appears to dislike and which the people of Canada abhor?

Taking the exchange reserves as of December 17, 1947, the low point, as being $461 million; then taking the present position and adjusting for pluses and minuses, I note that we are up $189 million. Eighty-six million dollars of that came through savings effected under schedules I and II. If I remember correctly, there was no great saving under schedule III, under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because of the great expansion in manufacturing facilities. If I am wrong, he will correct me.

What I should like to find out from the combined ministers is whether of the $189,000,000 which we have added to our exchange reserves, $86,000,000 approximately has come from these restrictions and $103,000,000 from the normal trade channels ex no legislative restrictions whatsoever. I feel that if we have bettered our position through these restrictions only to that extent, then we are simply applying a palliative; we are not getting to the root of our troubles, and the outlook is bleak.

I would feel much better about the whole matter if I thought that our ordinary commerce position was such that we were rectifying our exchange position by natural means, and perhaps through some of the constructive means which the Minister of Trade and Commerce said would be undertaken and which are now perhaps in operation to some extent. Will the minister let me know whether my calculation is approximately correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should like to think that the saving was $189,000,000, but unfortunately it is $141,000,00. The difference in our reserve position as between the low point of December 17, 1947, and June 23, 1948, excluding our Export-Import bank borrowings, is $141,000,000, the difference between $602,000,000 as of the latter and $461,000,000, which was the low point on December 17. That represents our exchange receipts from all sources, including invisibles such as the tourist trade. It is impossible to pin-point any portion of it and say that that was due to the restrictive side of the program, but the figures which I mentioned in my speech indicate an estimated saving on last year's figures as a result of the restrictive programs. What our imports would have been without the restrictive program, no one can say.

On balance the position is this: Our net reserve position has shown a moderate but steady improvement, and that has been due both to the restrictive measures which were imposed and to the positive measures in the form of increased exports to dollar areas, which have been substantial.

Mr. JACKMAN: I should like to be right on these figures. I understand that on June 23 we had $742,000,000 in reserve. I have deducted from that the $140,000,000 which came from the Export-Import bank. That leaves $602,-000,000. Then the minister mentioned that there were certain non-recurring items of $60,000,000 which we should deduct. I do not know what they were, but that makes $542,000,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: We should add the $186,-000,000 that we sold on credit if we are going to do that. My hon. friend would do better to take the net figures. The low point was $461,000,000 in December, while the figure today ex the import bank borrowings is $602,000,000, a difference of $141,000,000.

Mr. CASE: What part has the loan played in these plans?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have drawn $140 million upon the Export-Import bank loan. When that act was before the house it was explained that it was arranged as a measure of protection. Obviously $600 million is far too low a figure for our exchange reserves, having regard to the volume of our transactions. Even when we include the $140 million we have already drawn upon the Export-Import bank loan, the figure is still too low. We still have another $160 million in the Export-Import bank loan when we see fit to draw it.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister led me up the wrong alley. I put the figures down as he was speaking. Naturally we deduct from the $742 million the $140 million obtained by drawing upon the Export-Import bank loan, leaving $602 million. We are agreed up to that point. Then the minister said there were certain non-recurring items which should be deducted.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily non-recurring items. In fairness I pointed out that there were special items to the amount of $186 million.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have that figure, but then the minister added, non-recurring items of $112 million.

Mr. ABBOTT: $186 million.

Mr. JACKMAN: And cash for exports, $186 million. I left that out entirely, because I did not want to bring in anything which should not properly be taken into the calculation. Exactly what are the non-recurring or special items of $60 million to be deducted, and what are the special or non-recurring items of $112 million to be added?

Mr. ABBOTT: The $60 million represents special deductions, some, I think—I have not the date here—under the non-interest-bearing loan to the United Kingdom. But the essential figures were given in my statement, and my hon. friend when he has these figures before him in Hansard will be able to analyse them more completely.

Our reserves in cash and United States dollars are $742 million, of which $140 million represents drawings upon the Export-Import bank. That is up from the low figure of $461 on December 17. Included in that is $150 million of special payments. I pointed out that drawings on the loan to the United Kingdom have been suspended since mid-April; various exports credits of other countries have lapsed, and if all these exports had been sold for cash our reserves would have been much larger.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister mentioned $112 million. What did that represent?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not my notes here; I sent them up to Hansard. But from memory I think the $112 million were drawings on the United Kingdom loan and the $74 million were drawings on other export credits.

Mr. JACKMAN: In regard to the $60 million which the minister mentioned as a special payment from the United Kingdom—

Mr. ABBOTT: There were two or three items; I think $34 million was from the United Kingdom.

Mr. JACKMAN: How do we get United States dollars through that transaction? I thought that the repayment of that loan was through realization on Canadian securities still held by Britishers. They sold them, and that paid off part of the loan; but how did that become United States currency unless the Britishers sold C.P.R. stock, we will say, which they held in the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not that information before me, but the arrangements included the sale of both Canadian and United States securities.

Mr. JACKMAN: The interest-free loan to the United Kingdom is being repaid partly in United States currency, is it?

Mr. ABBOTT: I can get that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. JACKMAN: I mention it as one of the reasons why we received more United States or hard currency than the British figures would indicate. I should be glad if the minister would get that information.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. TIMMINS: I draw the minister's attention to the underlined words in section 1(a):

> Provided that where any goods described in this schedule are included in a tariff item listed in schedule II, those goods shall not be deemed to be included in this schedule but shall be deemed to be included in schedule II.

In other words there is a transfer from schedule I to schedule II. Does that just happen automatically? The explanatory note says:

> The underlined words are added to clarify the position where goods that are described in schedule I may also fall within a tariff item in schedule II. The effect of the amendment is that in such case the goods may be imported subject to quota and the import of the goods is not wholly prohibited.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not an expert on tariff schedules, but this amendment is required to avoid ambiguity regarding certain goods described in schedule I but which also fall within a tariff item in schedule II. This proviso makes it clear that such goods are entitled to entry under quota under schedule II and are not prohibited under schedule I.

Mr. TIMMINS: The minister is just repeating the words I uttered.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I gave a more elaborate explanation.

Mr. TIMMINS: Yes, he did use the words "certain goods". How does the public find out what these "certain goods" are, which may come in under quota and which are prohibited? The public is in a beautiful jumble about it.

Mr. ABBOTT: There are certain things which have a general description in schedule I. Take, for instance, desk sets. If they come under a tariff item listed in schedule II, schedule II prevails over schedule I. My hon. friend as a lawyer will appreciate that there may be a conflict between the two, and this proviso makes it clear that schedule II governs in case of a conflict. It is up to the importer, if he sees desk sets prohibited under schedule I, to see whether there is a tariff item in schedule II which includes a particular type of desk set which he can bring in under quota. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Schedule II amended.

Mr. JACKMAN: In regard to goods transferred from schedule III to schedule II, are bicycles and tricycles allowed to come in under quota?

Mr. ABBOTT: Under permit, I think, at present, but under the amendment they will come in under quota.

Mr. JACKMAN: If we put a quota on bicycles and tricycles it will have the non-discriminatory provision attached to it. We do not want United States bicycles to come in here, but we should not discourage, in fact, we should encourage British bicycles to come in. I presume that if this goes through, the quota will apply against all countries equally and it may therefore endanger one of our imports from the United Kingdom.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think this will encourage, as has happened in other cases, imports from the United Kingdom, and discourage them from the United States. We have been importing bicycles heavily from the United States, but putting bicycles in category IV of the quota section will, I am informed, permit British bicycles to continue to be imported in substantial quantities but will restrict United States importations for which we have to pay in United States dollars, which we really cannot afford to do.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Does this apply to bicycle saddles as well?

Mr. ABBOTT: No, I answered that earlier. Production parts are under schedule III. This applies only to the completed article. Parts come in, as they did, under schedule III, under the permit system.

Mr. BRADSHAW: In my riding a manufacturing plant is producing chiefly bicycle saddles. There has been a decrease in its volume of sales of bicycle saddles. The plant is equipped to supply bicycle saddles for the whole dominion, but more United States funds have been spent on bicycle saddles in the first month of 1948 than in the whole year 1946. Approximately $62,000 has gone to the United States in the first four months of 1948 as compared with $78,000 for the whole of 1947. If saddles continue to be imported at the present high rates there will be spent needlessly from $50,000 to $75,000 of United States funds. This is not in the million class, but it puts an industry in my riding out of business.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am familiar with the case, and I may say that it is not intended to put any restriction on imports of bicycle saddles under 612.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why should there not be a restriction on American bicycle saddles?

PRICES

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house having reverted to the order: Presenting reports by standing and select committees:

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the special committee on prices, copies in English and French, together with all exhibits and the evidence.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will a copy be made available to each member today?

Mr. MARTIN: Mimeographed copies are being distributed to all members as quickly as possible.

Mr. BRACKEN: I understood before I came in that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had made a statement with respect to the report of the prices committee. From what I gather, he did not indicate whether a motion would be made for concurrence. May I ask him to say now whether he proposes to have such a motion made, and if so, when?

Mr. MARTIN: It is my intention, with the consent of the house, to move concurrence tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock, in accordance with arrangements which I understand the whips are trying to make with the various political groups.

EMERGENCY EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

AMENDMENTS OF SCHEDULES TO ACT OF 1947-48

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 397, to amend the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering section 2. Shall the section carry?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Just before the luncheon recess I understood a question was raised as to why some provision had not been made for shutting out United States bicycle saddles so as to protect the bicycle saddle manufacturing industry in Canada. I am not sure whether the minister answered that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did, but briefly. It is not proposed to put restrictions on the imports of saddles. Incidentally, under the tariff item, harness and saddlery, including bicycle saddles, are covered by 612. There is no intention of imposing prohibitions against the importation of these articles. It is only the completed machine that is placed on a quota list.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I would ask the minister to explain why that should be. Why should not an industry in Canada, which is capable of producing the needs of Canada, be protected against competition from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: As I have tried to indicate, this measure is not introduced for protective purposes. It is introduced in order to conserve exchange. When we impose protective devices, it is done through the tariff and not through the import restrictions. These may have an incidental protective effect, but that is not what we want. What we want is exclusion in order to conserve United States dollar resources, and there is no intention of putting on any protective devices so far as bicycle saddles are concerned.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I have some difficulty in following the minister's reasoning. I find it hard to see why a dollar of United States currency saved as the result of shutting out bicycle saddles is not as valuable as a dollar of the same currency saved by the shutting out of any other commodity from that country.

Mr. ABBOTT: In 1947 there were imported 96,778 saddles valued at $106,396. Of this, $26,187 worth came from the United Kingdom, $1,978 from the Netherlands and $78,231 from the United States.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could not Canadian manufacturing concerns have manufactured all the saddles we needed in Canada had they been given encouragement?

Mr. ABBOTT: We are not preventing the Canadian manufacturer from manufacturing all the saddles he wants, but he has to do it in competition with manufacturers elsewhere. Protection is provided under the normal tariff, but we are not introducing these restrictions for protective purposes. It has never been the intention to do that, and as far as I am concerned it will never be the intention.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All other restrictions we have had since December 17 were merely for the purpose of conserving United States dollars. Why would not the restriction of imports of saddles have conserved United States dollars just as well as, and certainly with far less annoyance than, the restriction of imports of lettuce from the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: We would have to restrict them from all sources, including the United Kingdom, or put them under a quota.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister shut out United States lettuce and lettuce from commonwealth sources. Why should it not be just as reasonable to shut out United States saddles and saddles from other sources?

Mr. FRASER: This morning the minister said that at the end of the year he might allow lettuce, fresh fruits and other such produce to come in. He did not fix a definite date. Does he not think that in fairness to the farmer he should fix a date so that the farmer can make arrangements to supply our needs until that time?

Mr. ABBOTT: My statement was carefully worded.

Mr. FRASER: I know it was.

Mr. ABBOTT: It lives up completely to the assurance I gave in February last that restrictions would not be removed in such a way as unnecessarily to harm the Canadian grower, and a phrase I used this morning was that these quotas would be established when supplies of similar Canadian produce had become exhausted.

Mr. FRASER: If the farmer had been informed last year that restrictions were going on, he could have supplied our needs. Why not give him a chance to supply our needs up to the time contemplated?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is exactly what I said this morning.

Mr. FRASER: I know it is. The farmer can grow more if you allow him to grow more.

Mr. ABBOTT: Such things as lettuce and tomatoes will not keep after a certain period—

Mr. FRASER: Celery will.

Mr. ABBOTT: Celery will, I know.

Mr. FRASER: Turnips will.

Mr. ABBOTT: I qualified my statement this morning by saying that if we keep on progressing as we have done, I hope to be able to do it, but I cannot give a more definite date.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am seeking the principle on which the minister's exclusion behaviour was based. Let us take for example coal oil refrigerators. Exclusion was accomplished there and is still in effect. What was there about coal oil refrigerators that would qualify them for exclusion, in order to save United States dollars, when United States bicycle saddles were not excluded?

Mr. ABBOTT: Refrigerators all came from the United States; only some of these saddles did. Refrigerators were far more valuable, costing more than the comparatively small amount involved in bicycle saddles. That is the only answer I can give.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If that is so, I am still looking for a fundamental principle, and I imagine there must be a fundamental principle underlying this. I understand that barber chairs, for example, are excluded, provided that they have in them a certain percentage of metal. I understand that United States bicycle saddles are not excluded. They have a certain amount of metal in them. What I should like to find out is why the barber chair should be excluded for the sake of conserving United States dollars and these saddles not be excluded for the same reason. The minister has already indicated that if we excluded United States bicycle saddles we would have to exclude saddles from the Netherlands and Great Britain. I am informed that the Jones Manufacturing Company, which makes bicycle saddles, could have supplied the total requirements of Canada if they had been given a chance to do so.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is nothing to prevent them from doing that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why not shut out these others and give them a chance?

Mr. ABBOTT: Let them compete with the others.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Evidently the reason why they cannot is that the others come in and compete with them.

Mr. ABBOTT: They have already a substantial duty to protect them. I think they ought to be satisfied with that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: With regard to barber chairs, there is more than a substantial duty; there is an absolute restriction. I do not wish to labour this matter, but if we are to save Canadian dollars the principle should apply across the board instead of with respect to everything we can produce in Canada. This admission of United States bicycle saddles looks to me to be an infringement of the rights of the Jones bicycle and saddle manufacturing company. I hold no brief for them, except that I am interested because they presented their case before the banking and commerce committee, and I thought it was a good one. I thought that the government ought to be prepared to explain, in a form more satisfactory than the explanations thus far made, why they did not give the Jones manufacturing company far more consideration than they have up to the present time.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Schedule III amended.

Mr. MERRITT: In section 3, subparagraph (5) on page 8, the minister will find an amendment referring to tariff items 427 and 427a. Those items are basket items: "All machinery composed wholly or in part of iron and steel, not otherwise provided". As I understand it, the amendment changes the tariff item as applied to schedule III by excluding the words "over $200 in value". It is this particular aspect of the amendment that I want to direct to the attention of the minister.

May I point out first of all that this is a basket item. Under these two items a wide variety of goods which do not come under specific items will be excluded. I would have thought that it be advisable to maintain the $200 limit for this reason. Since the minister probably does not know for sure what items will be caught in item 427, I would have thought that the $200 clause would greatly reduce the paper work that must be done when somebody brought in some small item worth $20 and had it taken from him at the border because he did not have a permit. I should like the minister to state why it was found necessary to make this clause tighter than the ordinary tariff item which originally existed in the schedule.

I have another point, which is really the same kind of thing, in connection with this basket item. As I understand it, under this item a large amount of machinery has been caught which is used in British Columbia by cannery operators. I am informed that the bringing of 427 under the restrictions has caused considerable alarm out there in producing industries which want to import goods that are necessary in their production and that are not manufactured in Canada; and when I say that, I refer to item 427a in particular. Among the things that have been caught, as I understand it, are lumber carriers and other mobile lifters. They are in great demand, and they perform a useful function in a sawmill or cannery. I do not think they can be used effectively in anything but productive employment. They are used, of course, in warehouses, to carry lumber around, and to carry cans of fish after the fish is canned.

My second suggestion to the minister apart from the $200 item, is that he give consideration to excepting from 427 and 427a some of these specific items which have been caught by the basket, and which, as I understand government policy, it is not particularly desired to restrict. The policy of the government seems to be to issue a permit when goods are to be used in productive employment, or at least for stimulating additional production. I would think he might well except these carriers from the operation of the general basket item. Will the minister comment on that?

Mr. HOWE: With regard to the $200 minimum value, it was found to be too indefinite for customs purposes. It was intended for casual importations only, but we believe that it will be used to clear a great volume of small shipments which was not the intention of the act. Now it will be possible to get a permit for casual importations for a person's own use, which is an administrable item. But ordinarily any shipment, unless a general permit has been issued, must be cleared by special permit.

With regard to the second question, why items cannot be exempted, there are several difficulties. One is that usually the tariff item covers materials used for logging, fishing and mining, which are obviously proper for importation, but which are also used for other purposes which may not be so proper. For instance, a donkey engine is used for logging, and it is also used for a good many other things. Then there is the further fact that while my hon. friend refers to items not made in Canada, most items are made in Canada; and if there is a Canadian source, obviously it would not be proper to give an import permit. The system of clearing applications for import permits is a rapid process. All the information is at hand; there is ample staff available, and I see no reason why any particular section of the community should be treated differently from any other section in the matter of requirements for obtaining permits.

Mr. MERRITT: My point was a little more restricted than that. I did not ask for a general exemption in respect to imports used in the logging, fishing and sawmill industries. I asked whether the minister would give a specific exemption for carriers and mobile lifters, and other items which I have not in mind at the moment by name, which he may not wish to restrict but which nevertheless may be caught by the basket item. To exempt carriers and mobile lifters would relieve the people out there a great deal, unless of course the minister wants to restrict their imports, as I understand he does not. It is an item with respect to which they feel keenly. Could the minister not make an exception of that one article, which as I say cannot be used on the street or in the home, or anything like that, but must be used in production?

Mr. HOWE: Well, Mr. Chairman, permits for the two items mentioned are issued freely if we know the end user of the items. If they are simply brought in for stock, permits are not issued. I do not know where the hardship comes in. A man does not buy those every day in the week; he has some little notice of his need for them. Now that the cost of air mail has been reduced from seven cents to four cents, I see no hardship in having to send an air-mail letter and getting a prompt reply.

Mr. MERRITT: There is the matter of the additional paper work. If the permit is to issue as a matter of course, I imagine they will be better satisfied; but then I do not see why this is included at all.

Mr. HOWE: It is issued as a matter of course, provided we know the end user. If it is simply a dealer importing we do not issue permits, and do not intend to do so. If it is a bona fide user applying for an item, then the permit issues.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to ask the minister a question about the elimination of the $200 ceiling. I noticed that the minister told the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard there was "no hardship" in sending a request by air mail, and I say that is just an illustration of the fact that when we get into this control business it goes on and on. The minister has taken out this $200 ceiling, and I observe the reason he has given for it. I should like to know the magnitude of the importations or requests under that basis, and the evidence on which the change was made. Presumably the $200 ceiling was considered carefully when it was put in, and I should like some indication that there has been real evidence of a situtation which required this change, rather than just a desire to make the thing more complete and have more people under control.

[Mr. Merritt.]

Mr. HOWE: The reason is that considerable confusion exists in clearing these items of less than $200.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is not what you said before.

Mr. HOWE: If a man gets a $200 item every day he may set himself up in business fairly well without coming under the regulations at all. It is much more satisfactory to let him apply for what he needs in the usual way, no matter what it is. If he needs blanket permission, he can apply for it and give his reasons, and the permit will be issued.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought that might be the reason, but the minister did not give us that before. Now we are clear on the point.

Mr. McKAY: As a matter of information, would the minister tell us what is the basic chemical indicated on page 8, line 46? I thought I knew something about chemistry, but this has me floored.

Mr. HOWE: All I can say is that the tariffs indicate that very valuable imports are made under the item, and I am told it will be manufactured here in Canada in sufficient volume.

Mr. McKAY: What is it?

Mr. HOWE: I don't know. If I did I would not be a member of parliament.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This bill was brought in in a hurry; most of us did not see it until a few moments ago, and I should like to ask one general question. Are the other changes, which at first blush look formidable, more or less of the nature of the change the minister has just described? Is there any change of real magnitude in schedule III?

Mr. HOWE: We have added a list of heavy chemicals. The original restrictions did not apply to that field. The reason was that we had not a report from the proper officers as to what should be done in that respect. We find a considerable unnecessary leakage of United States funds in the importation of heavy chemicals which are available in Canada at satisfactory prices. About all we have done is change the wording of the items and add the list of heavy chemicals.

Mr. MOORE: A short time ago a leading newspaper stated that schedule III had not yet been proclaimed, and that large quantities of heavy machinery were being imported without much reference to these requirements.

Has this schedule now been proclaimed? If not, when does the government intend to have it proclaimed?

Mr. HOWE: I explained this morning that it was proclaimed by stages, the reason being that we wanted to confer with the trade and work out a pattern which would effect the maximum saving in exchange without shutting down industry. I said that at the present time eighty-nine per cent of the items had been proclaimed, and that they represented ninety-four per cent of the total value of imports included in the items.

Mr. MERRITT: I understand that items 427 and 427a have just been proclaimed.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. MERRITT: Within the last few days.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MERRITT: Can the minister give us any idea of the total savings he expects to achieve under these clauses?

Mr. HOWE: We cannot estimate savings. I could give the total imports, but they have nothing to do with the savings, which will depend upon the number being brought in unnecessarily.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL ACT

TRANSACTIONS BY CANADIAN RESIDENTS, IN CANADA AND ELSEWHERE

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 396, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Buy and sell foreign currency only from and to authorized dealers.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the minister going to say anything about this clause?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that there is much I can add to what I said yesterday when the bill was introduced. Its purpose is to close a loophole which it had not been realized existed in the act. The loophole was brought to the attention of the officers of the control board as the result of a case in the magistrate's court in Toronto. The facts of the case were these: A Canadian resident in Toronto, between September 1946 and April 1947, bought in the United States about $15,000 worth of cameras which were shipped to him in Niagara Falls, New York, c.o.d. Evidence was given at the trial by two witnesses from Buffalo and Niagara Falls, New York, who produced and identified the original records of the railway express agency under which this man was shown to have received the shipments at Niagara Falls, New York, and that he paid therefor at the railway express agency office amounts totalling about $15,248 in United States currency. Four other witnesses gave evidence indicating that this man was ordinarily resident in Canada.

At the conclusion of the evidence for the prosecution, counsel for the defence argued that there was nothing to show that the accused had received in Canada any part of the moneys paid for the shipments, and that sections 19 and 22 do not impose obligations on residents with respect to transactions taking place entirely outside Canada. The magistrate accepted this argument and dismissed the charges. An appeal has been taken.

As I said yesterday, the intention of course in drafting the Foreign Exchange Control Act was that so far as it relates to transactions by residents it should have extraterritorial effect; and in most sections this is made clear by the use of the words "in Canada or elsewhere". The committee will appreciate that if it is maintained, this decision would seriously prejudice the administration of the act, since it would mean that any Canadian resident who obtained payment of United States funds while in the United States—for example, for exports from Canada—could dispose of the funds there without committing an offence.

I believe the committee will realize that in order to carry out the intent and purpose of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, if this decision in Toronto is sound, the loophole must be plugged. In other sections the expression "in Canada or elsewhere" is used, but in these sections, numbers 19 to 22, for some reason those words are not used.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sure that we all agree that however bad or regrettable a law may be, when it is on the statute book we must not allow it to be made a fool of. So far as this measure is necessary I have no comment to make with respect to it. But I do draw to the attention of the minister the fact that section 22, as it will now read, will be very broad indeed. It states:

Every resident, other than an authorized dealer who, either in Canada or elsewhere, has or acquires the ownership or possession of foreign currency—

And so on. That applies to a person going to the United States, who, not through any commercial transaction at all, but by reason of his relationship or friendship with some other persons, may receive some money. He would then come under the purview of this section. In effect he would thereby become liable. Is that a fact, and if so, could not the minister devise some amendment which would not apply to that kind of case?

Mr. ABBOTT: There would be no intention of attacking a case such as the hon. member has described. The general rule envisaged under the act is that a resident of Canada who comes into the possession of dollar exchange is obliged to account for it, as the act says, to the authorized dealer, who in effect is the Minister of Finance. The case my hon. friend has in mind is that of a man who might be down in the United States and who would have obtained a permit to go there. A friend might give him $50, which he would be free to use. I suppose the hon. member is suggesting he might be committing a breach of the law if he did not turn it in.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not suggesting many people would have consciences as delicate as that of the minister. But would it not be possible to make it clear just what is meant? I imagine the intention is to apply to moneys which would develop in the course of business transactions, and not in the course of ordinary personal relationships. Is that a fair statement of the situation? If it is, then it seems to me the bill as it stands now goes too far.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no change in the law as it stands, except to make it applicable to Canadian residents outside their own country. I think the intent of the act is that those of us who come into possession of foreign exchange—and I refer more particularly to United States dollars—are obligated to turn that money in. We are obligated to turn in to the common pool any surplus which we are not entitled to use legitimately. I do not know how we can change this particular section to give any greater safeguard to individual Canadians who might be travelling in the United States. I can assure the committee that we have no desire to persecute people, but without this change there would be a glaring loophole in the law which would be completely improper if allowed to remain there, and to remain unchanged.

Mr. JAENICKE: Let us suppose a Canadian has received an inheritance in the United States. He is entitled to a payment out of the estate of, we will say, his uncle. He wants to leave it down there and lend it to somebody else. Could he do that, or would he be precluded from doing so by section 22?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not my officials before me. I think the policy up to the present time has been to allow Canadian residents to retain investments in the United States, subject of course to the obligation of turning in to the exchange control board the revenues received from those investments. Mind you, the act must be broad enough to enable the exchange control board, if it becomes necessary to do so, to take over all foreign investments. The act has always had that provision in it, as other exchange control acts have. Our exchange position has never been such that we have had to require our residents to turn in their foreign investments for Canadian currency. They have had to do that to a very large extent in England, but we have never had to do it here, nor do I expect that it will be necessary. Nevertheless there is power in the act to do it.

Mr. FRASER: I have in mind the case of a woman who during the past winter went to California. When passing through Windsor, she received from her daughter in that city $500 in United States currency. What would happen in that case?

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe the mother would be perfectly free to spend the $500 in the United States as she saw fit. If she came back to Canada with $100 she would have to turn it over to the board, because only $10 is allowed.

Mr. HAZEN: What is the definition of a resident, under the act?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should have a copy of the act, but I have not one with me.

Mr. HAZEN: I had a case brought to my attention recently which I should like to mention. A Canadian employed by a company in this country was transferred to a city in the United States. He could not find a house to rent, and was obliged to buy one. After a time the company transferred him back to Canada. He then sold the house, paid off his mortgage, and had some dollars left. He went to his banker and said he wanted to have the money transferred to Canada, because he was coming back to this country. The banker said, "We will get Canadian funds and have them deposited to your credit in Canada." Apparently this was done. Some considerable time later he received a letter from the foreign exchange control board asking him what he meant by doing a thing like that. The board told him what he had to do was to send that money back to the United States, get Canadian funds in its place, and bring those funds back to Canada. His reply was: "How can I take the money back to the United States? I have spent it; I have not got it to take back." The whole thing seems so bureaucratic and silly.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will look into the facts of the case.

Mr. GILLIS: I want to ask the minister a question which is perhaps in a reverse direction, as it has to do with money going out of Canada. I wrote to the minister about the case of a resident of Canada whose wife and family are in France. He cannot get transportation to bring them to Canada and he is restricted to sending them $10 a week for maintenance. I could not believe that such restrictions were in effect. I wrote the minister some time ago, but as yet I have not received an answer.

Mr. ABBOTT: It may be that with the pressure of work I have not been able to reply to my hon. friend. The position is that the banks are limited to permitting $10 a week to be given out, but an application could be made to Ottawa and these applications are frequently agreed to. If so, the applicant would be permitted to send an appropriate amount to his family depending upon their requirements abroad. In giving general discretion there has to be a top limit.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Resident required to sell all foreign currency to authorized dealer.

Mr. JACKMAN: There does not seem to be a definition of "resident" in the act.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is. I have the act here now.

Mr. JACKMAN: Suppose a Canadian goes to the United States to work for a week or two, or a month, and is paid in United States funds. Surely he does not have to turn that money over to an authorized purchaser and not use any of it down there for his own expenses?

Mr. ABBOTT: Where a Canadian is moving to the United States to take up work, the practice is—

Mr. JACKMAN: Just to take a temporary job.

Mr. ABBOTT: —to apply for a change of status. Of course, he would be entitled to pay his expenses in the United States, but so long as he remains a resident of Canada he would be obliged to sell any surplus to the exchange control board when he came back to Canada at the termination of his temporary employment. The definition of resident is to be found in section 2, subsection (u) of the Foreign Exchange Control Act. It is a long definition, and perhaps the committee would not wish me to read it.

Mr. JACKMAN: Suppose a man goes to the United States to work for three or four weeks on a reorganization project. He would have considerable expenses while there. Surely he would not have to turn over his gross receipts?

Mr. ABBOTT: He would have to turn over his net receipts.

Mr. JACKMAN: The act does not say, one way or the other.

Mr. ABBOTT: He would have to turn over his net receipts after the payment of all expenses incurred while down there.

Mr. JACKMAN: He might have to pay United States taxes as well.

Mr. ABBOTT: He certainly would not have to turn over United States taxes he had paid.

Mr. JACKMAN: You do not say that he is allowed to pay the tax there. This section states explicitly that he must turn over everything he receives. Canadians do not want to be made criminals without having any idea of so becoming. Looking at the other side of the page I notice that the old section 22 provides that a Canadian may not have any United States currency in his possession, that he must turn it over to the authorized agent.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only change being made in section 22 is to insert the words, "either in Canada or elsewhere", which are underlined.

Section agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRY R. JACKMAN (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that section 3 of the bill is meant to help the United Kingdom foreign exchange board. Surely if a Canadian wishes to cash a cheque for a person from another country he should be free to do so. As far as I can see, under this section you might become liable if you accepted a negotiable instrument from a person whom you did not know was from another country.

Is this section designed to help our own foreign exchange control or to help that of some other country?

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Demobilization and reconversion—

142. Bureau of technical personnel and placement of university graduates, $39,569.

Mr. MacINNIS: Last evening I had received permission to say something on item 138.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a moment or two to answer the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Last evening, in discussing mobility of labour, the hon. member for Cape Breton South was of the opinion that the arrangements which unemployed men in certain areas of the maritimes could be furnished with transportation to other places in Canada where jobs were available had been cancelled. He said he understood I had made a statement to that effect in this house. I think he is mistaken, and if I gave any such impression, I was mistaken. The fact is that the arrangements in regard to providing transportation to move men to employment have not been cancelled, and have been in effect since early in 1947.

On February 17, page 1283 of Hansard, I made a statement of this kind reporting on the progress of the transfers, and my parliamentary assistant made a further and more extended statement on June 16 last, that latter statement appearing on page 5284 of Hansard.

In his statement my parliamentary assistant discussed a movement of men whose fare was paid as well as transfer of men in the ordinary way where the government did not pay.

While I am on this subject I may say that we have done a great deal in the matter of taking care of what the hon. member for Cape Breton South describes as "pockets of unemployment", by seeing to it that through the clearance system of the national employment service the unemployed persons are, to use technical jargon "exposted to jobs". That is the technical phrase they use. Once a fellow has been to a university he sometimes uses peculiar expressions.

Where the placement necessitates a long journey we often supply transportation under one of two methods: first, where we can, we have the employer provide the transportation on a refundable basis; and secondly where this is not possible, the government itself provides the transportation.

Some of the places where the government supplies transportation are those my hon. friend mentioned, namely, in the maritimes, Halifax, Cape Breton, New Glasgow and Pictou, and during the winter we arranged a movement from Vancouver city to eastern Canada.

Many transfers were arranged where the companies paid the fare. For example, the Ontario Hydro moved a large number of men, and a number of lumber companies advanced fares.

The plans developed for transferring men from one part of the country to another have worked out wonderfully well and have resulted in alleviating the unemployment situation in their home areas. The actual number moved from the maritimes at government expense was 2,644. During the winter the movement slowed down.

Some questions were asked in regard to displaced persons. First of all, I should like to say that there is a very close arrangement with the immigration department. When employers offer to engage displaced persons their statement is checked to make sure that the workers are not available in Canada, and if in the opinion of the national employment service there is no need to bring people from the displaced persons camps, that application is not accepted. We insist on prevailing wages being paid, and see to it that the working conditions are good, that housing is available, and that the charge for board is not unreasonable.

After the men or women are placed, we have a follow-up system through the employment service, and periodically visits are made to see that there is no difficulty.

As I stated, we make periodical inspections and in addition where there is any complaint from either the employer or the employee we check at once, and occasionally we do make transfers. In other words, a person is not required to stay with an employer if he finds conditions unacceptable.

Some question was raised as to the type of undertaking. We have not provided for a contract; we have adopted the plan put into effect by the British government, which is that the displaced person makes application to come to Canada, and in doing so agrees to follow the line of work provided for him by the Minister of Labour for a stated period, usually one year. With the consent of the house I should like to put on Hansard the form used, called "Memorandum of undertaking".

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister permission to place this document on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

(The form follows:)

do hereby undertake that on my arrival in Canada I will accept employment in ..... or such other employment as may be selected for me by the Minister of Labour for Canada or his authorized representative, at the wage rate and under the working and living conditions prevailing in the locality of employment for comparable classifications of employment, and that I will conform to the prevailing rules and working regulations of the industry in which I am employed.

I understand that I may be required to reimburse my employer for costs paid by him for my transportation to place of employment, under terms and conditions as to repayment approved by the Minister of Labour for Canada.

I agree that I will remain in the employment mentioned above, or such other employment as may be selected for me from time to time by the Minister of Labour for Canada or his authorized representative, for a period of one year.

I acknowledge receipt of a copy of this undertaking.

Our experience has been that the D.P.'s themselves are appreciative of the fact that they have been brought to Canada, and on the whole they are quite willingly carrying out their undertaking. On the other hand we have had cases where attempts have been made to find ways and means of getting into other occupations. For example, two girls who were placed with a hospital in Saint John thought it would be a good idea to leave Saint John and go to the United States. Of course when they were discovered in the United States they got into trouble and were returned.

We do impress on the D.P.'s that they have an obligation, and we do require them to live up to it as far as we can. I must say that in this the national employment service has been remarkably successful. Never before has greater care been taken in arranging a movement of workers to this country, and I must say to hon. members that I am sometimes astounded at the success we have had. As I said last night, hundreds of letters of approval and appreciation have been received from the D.P.'s themselves and from employers. The Ontario hydro—and this is significant, Mr. Chairman—has taken sixteen hundred D.P.'s and has had only one man leave. I do not know of a smaller turnover in any undertaking in this country, and I think it reflects credit both on those in charge of the industry and on the men themselves. As I stated last night, there is nothing to prevent any of these D.P.'s from joining any organization they wish to. In passing I might say that they are carefully screened. We do not want any communists, and so long as I am in control of this movement no communist will knowingly be allowed to enter Canada from Europe. Let that be clearly understood.

Mr. GILLIS: Or nazis either.

Mr. MITCHELL: Or nazis either. There is a big enough place for those fellows to play elsewhere, without upsetting our economy in Canada. I think a man, whether he is a D.P. or any other kind of immigrant, has a colossal nerve to come into this country and preach a philosophy or ideology which has for its purpose the overthrow of democratic institutions as we understand them. We can well get along without that kind of people.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hear, hear. Let us do it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to express our appreciation of the great help we have had from the Y.W.C.A., the Catholic Women's League, the Canadian Red Cross, provincial educational institutions, the Sisters of Service and church organizations. I wish to pay tribute to the great assistance that has been rendered by all these organizations, particularly in the movement of young girls from displaced persons' camps in Europe. It is a difficult thing to move large groups of young girls from Europe to a strange land, and every precaution is taken to see that they are well taken care of and placed in what we consider to be good homes in this country.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South also mentioned pockets of unemployment. It is true that such pockets do develop in every country, and Canada is no exception. In transferring unemployed persons to other places, two methods are followed with regard to transportation costs. In some cases the employer advances the fares; in others the government pays the fares. This plan has worked wonderfully well and thousands of men and women are moved through the agency of the national employment service every month.

The arrangement in regard to the fares of unemployed people from Halifax, Sydney and Cape Breton has not been cancelled, and I regret if I gave any such impression. The operation has continued since it was first started in 1947. The total number moved to date is approximately 2,700. Those are cases where the government paid the fare. Speaking from memory last night I said the number was 2,800. It is not to be expected that married men will be too ready to leave their homes, and there has not been as great a movement as might have developed but for this fact. Usually we can find housing in the new location for single men but not for families.

Never before has better service been given the workers of Canada in the matter of finding them suitable jobs. I firmly believe that the high level of employment in Canada is due in no small measure to the fact that we now have in Canada a national employment service, which is giving excellent service to employees and employers alike. In the year 1947 our various offices placed 769,849 persons —I said around 700,000 last night, speaking from memory—which is evidence that both employers and employees are using the service.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will the minister give the most recent employment figures available, either for the larger cities or for different areas, such as the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the prairie provinces and British Columbia?

Mr. MITCHELL: We have not at hand the figures for the larger cities, but if they are available I shall be glad to supply them. On April 29 the number of men and women, was 165,452. When you are handling some 5,000,000 men and women gainfully employed in the industrial and commercial structure of the country, that is a very good figure. It compares favourably with the figure given by any other country. If I may say so, the figures are dead before they are born. They change from day to day, and particularly at this time of the year when you get weather such as we have had yesterday and today. In such weather in the building trades you get a labour turnover that is to be expected. I think it can be truthfully said that the labour situation at the moment is as tight as it has ever been, having regard to what the hon. member for Cape Breton South has said with reference to certain centres. On June 17 the figure had dropped to 119,120.

Mr. MacINNIS: Can the minister give the number of persons on the insurance register as at May 31, or the latest date he has?

Mr. GILLIS: And will the minister give it province by province?

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member wants to have it province by province and the hon. member for Vancouver East wants to have it by larger centres. I will get as good a breakdown as I can. At the end of April the number of persons drawing unemployment insurance benefits was 139,477.

Mr. SKEY: I was interested in the minister's statement that displaced persons coming in are not restricted from joining any organization. Has the department some means of informing those who are coming in of their rights in Canada and of the fact that they cannot be compelled to join certain organizations? Are they informed as to what they should do when approached by agents of certain foreign powers or people who are interested in spreading communist propaganda?

Mr. MITCHELL: There is a letter written in English, German, Polish and French. As regards communist organizations—I like to call them by their right name, communist or fascist—I believe that people coming into the country have had enough experience in Europe to know they will not be involved in any overnight revolutions in Canada. They went through a wonderful university in Poland, Germany, Latvia and all the other countries from which they come.

Mr. SKEY: In some of those countries they cannot trust the police, and they should know that they can trust the police in Canada.

Mr. GILLIS: I wish to thank the minister for his answer to the questions I posed last night. I assure him that I did not ask those questions simply for the purpose of delaying the proceedings. I really had complaints on the points I mentioned and I am glad that the minister gave a comprehensive answer. Again I wish to thank him.

Mr. MITCHELL: On my part, I am glad that my hon. friend asked the question he did. Let the light shine in.

Mr. GILLIS: That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: The intelligence is not all on one side of the street.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

148. To provide for expenses that may be incurred in the arranging for and the movement of workers from outside Canada and to work on farms and other essential industry in Canada when Canadian labour is not available to meet the need; including costs connected with the supervision and welfare of persons already immigrated to Canada under former authorized labour movements, and administrative expenses connected therewith, $700,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: Are the workers mentioned in this item the same workers to whom the minister referred a little while ago?

Mr. MITCHELL: The same people.

Item agreed to.

730. Fair wages, conciliation, industrial relations, industrial disputes investigations, including the administration of legislation relating thereto, and for activities re promotion of co-operation in industry, between labour and management—further amount required, $14,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: On the orders of the day I asked some questions in regard to the labour dispute, and I wish to follow that up a little further now. The minister mentioned that the efforts at reopening negotiations had fallen down because, as I understood him to say, certain violence had occurred at one or two points. I understand that these incidents occurred last night or yesterday, but the refusal of the shipping companies to enter into negotiations had been declared the day before, June 23. I was talking to the secretary of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, Mr. John Buckley, and he told me that the minister had advised him by letter to get in touch with Mr. J. A. Mathewson, K.C., of Montreal, with a view to opening up negotiations so as to find a settlement of the dispute.

I believe the minister said that Mr. Buckley's telegram was too specific, that he implied too much. Surely that is a very small point on which to base a refusal to enter into negotiations. I understand that one reason why the companies concerned refused to negotiate is that they claim they have an agreement already with another union. I would ask the minister whether an agreement has been registered with the national war labour board. I do not know whether the law requires that agreement to be registered. Have the companies produced any evidence to show that they have an agreement with another union?

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer is no.

Mr. MacINNIS: Another question. Has the national war labour board certified any other bargaining agencies for these unions except the Canadian seamen's union?

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer to that is no.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister in reply to my question said that the decision was now for the courts, that the question was sub judice and that he could make no reference to it. Perhaps that is so; but did not the union, before it took the question to the courts, have to get permission either from the war labour board or from the minister for that purpose?

Mr. MITCHELL: When I spoke of certification I should have broken that down. In the Canada Steamship Lines there is no certification; there is in the Colonial Steamship Lines. Yes; they had to get leave to prosecute, and they got it from the national labour relations board, on which the parent organization of the Canadian seamen's union is represented by Mr. J. A. D'Aoust.

Mr. MacINNIS: The implication, then, as far as the national war labour board is concerned, in granting permission to prosecute, is that there has been a violation of P.C. 1003. I think that must be accepted. The minister says there has been no certification for one of the companies; which one was it?

Mr. MITCHELL: Canada Steamship Lines.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is it not a fact that the reason there is no certification is that the company refused to have a vote taken among its employees?

Mr. MITCHELL: No. I do not think that is an altogether correct assumption.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is my opinion. I should be glad to be corrected by the minister.

Mr. MITCHELL: A continuing agreement was in force there. We made some endeavours last year. If I may, I should like to say this to my hon. friend. I do not know whether I should think out loud or not on these matters, but last year we kept this thing running by the skin of our teeth, if I may say that. I was particularly interested in feeding the people of Europe and keeping the people of Canada warm last winter in view of the gas and oil situation on a world-wide basis. Steps were taken to take a vote on the Canada Steamship Lines, but it was late in the season and the ships were going up and down the lakes. That was what stood in our way. We must remember this, though; there is a tremendous turnover in this industry. In normal times there is practically a new set-up every year. It is not like the Steel Company of Canada, or the Canadian Pacific, or one of those big organizations in which there is some degree of a stability of employment. The turnover in this industry is tremendous, things being what they are. I used to be an employee myself, so that I am not casting any reflections.

Mr. MacINNIS: The fact that there is a large turnover in the employment in this industry would perhaps point to the fact that conditions in the industry have something to do with it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would say so.

Mr. MacINNIS: People do not usually leave an industry in which conditions are good.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): They are frozen out of this one.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the average individual leaves a job today, generally speaking he must find a job tomorrow; and he will not leave a good job in order to take a chance on getting a poor one. There may be people who would throw up a job and take a chance, but the average person likes security and will stick to a good job when he finds one.

The point I wish to make in this matter, and I think I have just brought out the evidence to support it, is that in all this dispute the steamship companies have been absolutely unco-operative with the government, and that they have defied and ignored every law on the statute books. Until they conform with the laws and carry them out, they have no right to claim, nor have we, that the other side has no case.

There is another report that was made by a conciliation board, which I have not been able to obtain. It is not made public for the reason, I think, that this case is in court. But I think that report should be made public as well as the Brockington-McNish report. As the minister said a few moments ago, it is time that we let the sunshine in and let it be known that all the good people are not on one side of the railway track.

Mr. GILLIS: The seamen's case in court now is based on P.C. 1003. Parliament is likely to prorogue tomorrow night.

Mr. MITCHELL: We hope.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Saskatchewan fixed that.

Mr. MacINNIS: It fixed a great many things.

Mr. GILLIS: You had better ask the Minister of Agriculture when he gets back.

Mr. SINCLAIR: He is coming back with his shield, not on it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GILLIS: All the bills that have been passed at this session of the house will be receiving royal assent. Bill No. 195 will then be replacing P.C. 1003. How will that affect the seamen's case in court? Will not P.C. 1003 go out automatically and the law then be the provisions of Bill No. 195?

Mr. MITCHELL: I would not think it would have any effect at all. I am thinking out loud at the moment. There is a section in the act—I cannot think of the number of it at the moment—that makes provision for the continuance under the new bill, the industrial disputes bill, of a particular agreement that was negotiated under P.C. 1003.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, any other agreement.

Mr. MITCHELL: That was necessary because, while this dispute is difficult and miserable, it was necessary to take care of the good people. I am not casting any reflection on the labour organizations or on the employers. I should like to say this if I might, and then I am through. I think my hon. friend knows my views about labour organizations, and I express this one frankly. I think the proper place in which to correct an organization is on the inside, not on the outside. If you do not like the policy that has been followed by your officers, the proper thing to do is to clean up on the inside. Political parties have to do that, and you have to do it in your family; but you should not go out and talk about it.

I was always taught—and I am a great believer in the rule that the simple things govern the destiny of our civilization—that a family row should stay inside the family and should not be carried out to the street. That is a rule in which I believe, particularly with regard to labour negotiations. The less said until you get negotiations under way, the better. People being as suspicious as they are by nature, the less said publicly, the more chance you have of settling a dispute. I know people like to see their names in the newspapers. I suppose that is only natural. But in labour negotiations, when people are suspicious and hang on to little phrases and expressions of opinion, the less said the better, until a settlement has been reached. I think you can have a brass band when the matter is settled, and it is then all right to go to our newspaper friends and say, "Here is the settlement; three cheers for the red, white and blue". I think that is the proper way to do it.

Item agreed to.

731. Labour Gazette and other publications authorized by Labour Department Act—further amount required, $19,000.

Mr. McIVOR: I have been waiting for an opportunity to say a word, because I find in the House of Commons it is a good policy to be a good listener; but when one has something to say, the opportunity usually comes.

I do not forget the day that I stood up when I was on the other side of the chamber, when the Prime Minister had a vacancy in the Department of Labour and was looking for a minister. He was advised by leading labour men that there was one man in Canada who had a great record and that he would make a good Minister of Labour. I think a judicial and legally trained mind can be of great benefit in any department of government; but there is one department in which I think a minister should have first-hand experience—

Mr. SINCLAIR: Every department.

Mr. McIVOR: —he should know what it is to toil; he should know the problems of labour, and how to handle them. He should have a head on his shoulders, and he should have patience. I congratulated the Prime Minister upon the appointment of the present Minister of Labour.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The item before the committee has to do with publications authorized by the Labour Department Act.

Mr. McIVOR: I am going to prove that the minister has made good, by giving the record of the past year. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1948, the Minister of Labour handled 135 cases under the wartime labour relations regulations, P.C. 1003. The breakdown of these cases is as follows:

Dominion cases dealt with
Settled by conciliation officer	19
Settled by conciliation boards	1
Settled following board procedure	8
Still in hands of conciliation officer	11
Still in hands of boards	8
Negotiations still in progress after board reports	5
Total	52
Provincial cases dealt with
Settled by conciliation officer	17
Settled by conciliation boards	12
Settled following board procedure	24
No settlements	25
Cases reverting to provincial authorities	5
Total	83

That makes a grand total of 135 cases handled. If this government is not prepared to take off its hat, figuratively speaking, and pay its respects to the Minister of Labour and his officials for the way in which they have dealt with these matters, then I think it is lacking in courtesy and appreciation. Last year, when the minister said a good trade union would be of great benefit to the workers, I agreed. A well-run labour union is a great benefit, not only to the workers but to industry; and we have such a union at the head of the lakes, in Fort William. I advised the president and other members of that union to keep party politics out, because it would be a curse to them sooner or later, and they have agreed to do so. Today they are putting labour on a sound foundation; and I pay my respects to the minister and wish him and his officials all success as they carry on their work.

Mr. WILLIAMS: In looking at the regular and supplementary estimates, I see that nearly $300,000 is devoted to these purposes. That is shown in item 133 and in the item now before the committee, 730.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The item before the committee at the moment is 731.

Mr. WILLIAMS: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Item 730 was carried.

Mr. WILLIAMS: No, sir. Before it was carried, if it was, I was on my feet several times.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member wishes to speak to item 730, certainly we will permit him to do so, but the item was carried and I called item 731.

Mr. WILLIAMS: Then I would appreciate your permission to speak to item 730.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. WILLIAMS: This $300,000 is quite a large sum, but notwithstanding the size of it we still have quite a number of industrial disputes in this country. The nature of those disputes is not always easy to assess, and often they are difficult to settle. I am not one of those who think a Minister of Labour is a sort of magician. After all, he is human; and there are times when it becomes practically impossible to settle a dispute. On the other hand, many disputes could be settled easily if action were taken quickly. By way of illustration, a dispute has been going on now for five months, involving a good, old-established trade union and an old-established industrial concern. I am referring to the John Bertram company in Dundas, near Hamilton, and the international association of machinists. In 1943, for the first time, they got a union into that plant.

Mr. MITCHELL: If I may raise a point of order. I have absolutely no jurisdiction over that dispute. It is a provincial matter, and the place to raise it is in the provincial legislature. I think my hon. friend has come to the wrong house. Mind you, I know the Bertram company. I used to live in Hamilton, and I know many of the men employed there. I have known the machinists union ever since I have been in Canada and count many of their officers, including their international president, as personal friends. I have spoken to them in a personal way about this dispute, but I have no authority whatever in connection with it.

Mr. GILLIS: That is a point I should like cleared up. P.C. 1003 was accepted by the Ontario government and made applicable to all industry in this province. That definitely links the Department of Labour in Ottawa with the regulation of industrial disputes in Ontario, even if it only means working with the minister of labour provincially. The same thing was done in connection with Bill No. 195. It was made applicable to all industry in Ontario because Mr. Drew accepted it.

A moment ago the hon. member for Fort William told us that everything was just fine. I think the hon. member for Ontario was quite justified in pointing out that there are places in this province where the Minister of Labour should be exerting whatever influence he may have on the Ontario government in order to clean up such disputes as we have at the Bertram plant. Mind you, I am not concerned about the company, nor am I so much concerned about the employees. The community is affected, however; it is the real sufferer. While no one wants to exert pressure on the minister, under the set-up in this province I think he has some jurisdiction.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have to take my advice on questions of law from the justice department. In a recent case in my hon. friend's province, the supreme court definitely stated, if my memory serves me correctly, that under the British North America Act the provincial government has not power to delegate authority to the federal government. I forget the name of the case, but I presume that point will be argued before the Supreme Court of Canada. In Saskatchewan a couple of years ago—and I am not offering any criticism, because Mr. Williams, the minister of labour there, is a personal friend—they had a strike at a box factory in Prince Albert. I am just wondering what would have happened in this house if I had risen and expressed my opinion on that dispute.

Speaking internationally, it is my belief that this world would be a better place if people would stay in their own back yards. That is a sound principle to apply to any kind of legislation. The world would be a better place today if some of the international crackpots were out of the way; and if there were more people with some degree of common sense, like my hon. friend the member for Cape Breton South, the world would be a happier place in which to live. Naturally my sympathies are with the men engaged in labour—and I see the hon. member for Vancouver East is ready to deliver a blast. Frankly, however, we cannot become involved in the jurisdiction of the provinces. In Quebec there is a premier who believes in the principle of provincial rights, and we have that same condition right across Canada. And the only place—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I do not believe we should permit a long discussion on an item which has already been passed, particularly if it has nothing to do with the item before the committee. Hon. members are always willing to permit an hon. member to make representations, with respect to the item in hand. The one before us now has to do with the Labour Gazette and other publications.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am afraid I shall have to differ with you, Mr. Chairman. You see, between the time I begin to rise from my seat and the time I have succeeded in getting your eye, you are about three items ahead of me. You will have to make some allowance for the fact that we are getting older. In my view we are on item 730, and about it I should like to say only a word. The minister remarked that I was about to deliver a blast, or something of that kind when, as a matter of fact, I am coming to his defence. I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South is a little bit out. I happen to sit next to him, and I do not want to be unfair to him; but in this particular I think he is somewhat wide of the mark.

The mere fact that the Ontario legislature has accepted P.C. 1003 does not give the Minister of Labour any right to interfere in labour disputes which come under the jurisdiction of that provincial government. Until the administration has been transferred by the province of Ontario to the federal government—if that can be done under our present constitutional set-up—the Minister of Labour has no right to interfere. I think he is quite right when he does not interfere, and he ought not to do so until his assistance is asked for. At that time I believe he should be willing to help.

Mr. WILLIAMS: I am still taking this opportunity to speak to item 730, unless the Chairman rules me out of order, notwithstanding the point of order raised by the Minister of Labour. He was somewhat mistaken in his point of order, because I was not going to ask him—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. If the hon. member is going to discuss the strike, then I must ask him not to do so. If he has in mind some other matter which would come under this item, he might be permitted to go on.

Mr. WILLIAMS: I was going to make the point that the antagonisms which arise because of delays in disputes increase greatly the difficulties of the department, and consequently those of the minister. I was not going to ask the minister to intervene in the dispute in question. I was going to attempt to bring out, by referring to this as well as some other disputes, the financial advantage which might accrue to the department by politely and courteously offering its services before these antagonisms develop, instead of sitting back and waiting until it is asked to come in. If I am permitted to go on I would develop that point a little further.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member may proceed if he will deal with that principle and not with something in which the government is not involved.

Mr. WILLIAMS: That is the principle I have in mind. Certainly I do not intend to ask the minister to intervene in matters over which he has no jurisdiction. I understand clearly the distinction between the jurisdiction of the federal Minister of Labour and the respective jurisdictions of the ministers of labour of the provinces. I suggest that, instead of our waiting until a strike takes place, some action should be taken. For instance, the federal minister has jurisdiction over the railways, if we wish to discuss a case in point. The minister and his department endeavour to do all kinds of things before conditions reach a stage where settlement becomes increasingly difficult. I wish that in other phases of activity a similar disposition would be shown by those charged with the responsibility of settling labour disputes. Instead of waiting until people's minds become inflamed, I wish they would step in a little earlier and offer some help.

I do not think it is good policy to stay in your own back yard when you can render some assistance to your neighbour in clearing up some dirt in his back yard. I believe that in these questions of labour relations we can be neighbours. After my experience in labour relations, I am positive we can render considerable service and consequently reduce the enormous costs involved, instead of making it necessary to go through protracted negotiations and conciliations which, in the final analysis, are recommendations only and the decision as to whether one or other of the parties will accept the final finding of the board of conciliation is still left.

I offer this only as a suggestion in the light of my personal experience in these matters. If the minister does not wish to accept what I have said as useful information, that is his privilege. I offer it, however, as one who, though new in the house, is old in this phase of industrial relations.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

95. Departmental administration, $277,000.

Mr. REID: Mr. Chairman, before I speak to this item, there are a few matters of general interest I should like to mention. May I first extend my congratulations and best wishes to the newly appointed Minister of Fisheries from British Columbia. For many long years British Columbia has been asking for representation in the fisheries department. It has been long held by those in the east that the minister holding that portfolio should come from the maritimes, even though British Columbia produces over 50 per cent of the fish and fish products produced in Canada. When the maritimes are mentioned it means one, two or three provinces, but British Columbia alone produces 50 per cent of all the fisheries of Canada, including those in inland waters. Hence we felt that we had a good case for recognition. I am therefore glad to say that at long last we have been given that recognition, and I wish the new minister every success in his new duties.

I should like to place before the department one particular matter which I think should receive serious consideration by the minister after the session is over. I refer to proposed power development in British Columbia which if carried out as proposed will destroy two-thirds of the sockeye salmon run on the Fraser river. On March 27 an announcement was made in the press that a big aluminum plant would be established in British Columbia. The production of aluminum, it appears, requires electric power.

It is not generally known, although it is to members from British Columbia, that the government of British Columbia has made a complete survey of the potential water powers of that province. The latest bulletin which I hold in my hand was issued by the water powers branch of the provincial government in 1938. Any hon. member who is interested can get a copy which contains very complete maps and graphs showing the potential hydro-power development.

I am speaking now more particularly as a member of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission. We who are interested in fisheries, particularly those of the Fraser river, have for some time viewed with alarm the possible development of hydroelectric power in British Columbia. That alarm is caused by what took place in the United States. In spite of the fish ladders which were constructed on the Columbia river at a cost of many millions, the fact is, despite all the wonderful statistics published by the United States fisheries department, salmon fishing on the Columbia river is gradually going down.

True, the fish ladders which were constructed have permitted the salmon to get up over the dams to reach the spawning beds; but, although the authorities have tried for twelve years, no one has yet discovered how to bring the little fingerlings down over the dams, and that is the crux of the entire situation. Fingerlings by the millions are unable to negotiate the large falls. They have protected them to a certain extent in going through the turbines, but investigation has shown that millions of the fingerlings die, or are lost when migrating down stream over the dams.

In the past, the fisheries department, no matter under what government, has not taken any great interest in what happens or might happen to the fish after dams have been built. I should like to cite one instance. The British Columbia power company erected a hydroelectric plant on the Alouette river to supply Vancouver and other places with electricity. The entire river was dried up, and today it serves no purpose so far as the salmon fisheries are concerned.

The press report which I hold in my hand states that the Aluminum company are about to proceed to construct an electric power plant on Chilko lake. Most of the projects set out in the book which I hold in my hand have in mind the construction of dams, but this project indicates that something new is to be done. The water from the lake is to be taken away by means of flume or tunnel and dropped into another lake. Chilko lake by the way produces about two-thirds of the sockeye salmon in the Fraser river.

They would take the water from the lake and perhaps take it into Bute inlet. I say "perhaps," because one or two different schemes are outlined. They are going to utilize the water from the lake for the development of electric power. That water will be taken from the Fraser river entirely and the lake drained or used. Sockeye salmon will be prevented from going to Chilko lake, first by the dam at the inlet to the lake and, second, by the fact that the water from the lake is to be drained off for the development of power and diverted on to the sea.

In 1913, before the disaster which occurred at Hell's Gate, an estimated 2,500,000 cases of salmon were produced from the sockeye going up the Fraser river. If one takes an average of ten salmon to a case that equals 25,000,000 salmon. We estimate that in those days at least 20,000,000 salmon went up the Fraser and its various tributaries to spawn.

Then the disaster at Hell's Gate occurred, but I do not intend to go into that at the moment. Fish ladders have been constructed there by the two governments, the government of the United States and the government of Canada. Last year 3,000,000 sockeye were counted going up to the spawning beds, while 6,000,000 were caught by the fishermen of the United States and Canada. When you consider the difference between the run of 1947 and that of 1913 you will understand why the members of the commission are so much alarmed and perturbed over this projected industry.

We are not arguing as members of the commission that there should not be any development of hydroelectric power from the waters of British Columbia, but we do point out respectfully to both the provincial government and the industrialists that in the interior of British Columbia there are water areas which could be utilized for the development of power and to which no salmon go. We have made a complete survey of the lakes and rivers of British Columbia and can show by our charts, maps and data the lakes and rivers which produce salmon and also those which do not produce any salmon.

Before projects such as the one which I have mentioned are carried out—and this one would destroy two-thirds of the sockeye run of the Fraser river—we say that these water areas should be examined. As it is now, without any consultation with the federal Department of Fisheries or the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission, projects detrimental to the fishing industry on the Fraser river and its tributary streams and lakes are commenced, or proposed.

I have stated on many occasions that the provincial authorities do not look very kindly on the fisheries of the Fraser river. They are power-minded, and I use that phrase in a double sense, meaning hydroelectric power, and second, the power of complete control over these rivers. Fisheries come, of course, under the dominion government, and the provincial authorities are therefore not as much interested in salmon as they should be. Although we have approached the provincial government on many occasions and have had assurances from at least two premiers and their deputies; yet when industrialists come along and ask for the right to construct dams and go ahead with power projects they are given every assurance that their applications will be granted, and neither the dominion Department of Fisheries nor the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission is made aware of what they are doing.

They had the same trouble in the state of Washington, and the federal authorities at Washington, D.C., took the matter up with the provincial authorities of Washington state, whose authority compares with the province of British Columbia. On this side of the line we call them provinces, and on the other side of the line they call them states. The federal authorities persuaded the Washington state authorities to pass a statute, a part of which I am going to read, and I suggest to the Minister of Fisheries that he take serious note of this and between now and next session take this matter up with the provincial government of British Columbia with a view to their passing similar legislation.

The act passed by the state of Washington provided:

> In the event that any person, firm, corporation or government agency desires to construct any form of hydraulic project or other project that will use, divert, obstruct or change the natural flow or bed of any river or stream or that will utilize any of the waters of the state or materials from the stream beds, such person, firm, corporation or government agency shall submit to the department of fisheries and the department of game full plans and specifications of their proposed construction or work, complete plans and specifications for the proper protection of fish life in connection therewith, the approximate date when such construction or work is to commence and shall secure the written approval of the director of game.

I say to the Minister of Fisheries in all kindness that it is time that we had some such protection in Canadian laws. As it is now, the only protection we have is contained in section 20 of the Fisheries Act, which reads:

> Every slide, dam or other obstruction across or in any stream where the minister determines it to be necessary for the public interest that a fishpass should exist, shall be provided by the owner or occupier with a durable and efficient fishway, or canal around the slide, dam or other obstruction . . .

I shall not take time to read the whole of the section, but I draw the minister's attention to this section 20 of the Fisheries Act and point out to him respectfully that it is no protection whatsoever to our fishing industry, because when you come to examine it carefully you find that no action can be taken until the dam is actually constructed, in which case the run of fish for that year may be completely wiped out before any action can be taken by the dominion government.

I am not going to thresh old history. I merely point out that on one of the tributaries of the Fraser, the Alouette, a dam was built for the development of power and it wiped out a valuable salmon run which before had gone up the Alouette river.

I am greatly concerned, and I know the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission is also greatly concerned in regard to the project I have mentioned, and I say in all seriousness to the minister that no time should be lost after the session in making representations to the provincial government, first of all, to find out whether it is true; second, to find out whether permission has been granted; and third, to request that before any licence is granted the whole fisheries industry, and particularly that of the sockeye salmon industry, be examined as to the possible effects upon it by the construction of the dam, provided that a licence is granted by the provincial government to proceed with the project. I am not going to labour the point further, but I thought I would take a few minutes to impress upon the minister the seriousness of the matter, because action is necessary now before the project is further proceeded with.

There are one or two other matters I wish to place before the minister for his consideration after the end of the session. First, I would suggest that we have a fisheries representative in the external affairs department of the government. In the United States, when their minister of external affairs is dealing with nationals of other countries, a fisheries expert sits in to advise and is thereby enabled to give some protection to the fisheries of the United States. The time has long since passed in this country when we should have such an official attached to the Department of External Affairs.

In support of what I urge, let me recall what happened regarding Newfoundland and Great Britain. I do not know who fell down on the job, but I know that almost since confederation Canada has been the chief supplier of salt cod to Italy and various other countries on the continent of Europe. We understand that there is at the present time a dearth of United States currency in Great Britain, which is hampering her trade to quite an extent, but some time ago the news came out that Great Britain had made United States funds available to Newfoundland to enable her to capture our market for salt cod in Italy and other countries. Something like nine thousand tons of salt cod were sold by Newfoundland to Italy and other countries, through Great Britain assisting Newfoundland with United States dollars. Had we had at that time a fisheries expert attached to the Department of External Affairs, a deal of that kind might not have been allowed to go through.

My fourth point is this. There should be closer co-operation between the department and the fisheries research board. Two years ago I made what was interpreted as a violent attack in this connection. I did so knowingly, because I felt that the fisheries research department had to be shaken up in some way. I am not going to indulge in any carping criticism, but I might mention that between sessions I visited the station at Nanaimo, and I must say there is need for closer co-operation between the minister's department and the officials of the fisheries research board. The first step has been taken. We have one officer attached to the board, but that does not establish sufficiently close co-operation.

There is another matter which I would ask the minister to consider between now and the next session, and that is off-shore fisheries. Off the coast of Vancouver island, beyond the three-mile limit, the nationals of the United States and Canada are fishing, and from reports reaching me I think it is safe to say that the fisheries close to Vancouver island are being depleted. It is true they are outside the three-mile limit, but the United States has taken action to protect its own nationals who fish beyond the three-mile limit off United States territory. We cannot sit idly by and see our off-shore fisheries depleted by nationals of other countries.

May I also bring to the minister's notice the importance of a decision with regard to Hecate strait. I made a speech on this subject last year and I do not intend to repeat it on this occasion, but Hecate strait was designated as Canadian waters many years ago. In fact Canadian or government vessels have in past years chased off American boats. Looking to the future, I suggest that steps be taken to proclaim Hecate strait Canadian waters. I point out that if we allow United States fishermen to fish in those waters with impunity there is nothing to hinder vessels from Japan and Soviet Russia from entering the waters and depleting them, and when they do so we shall find ourselves in some difficulties if we try to chase them off. They will reply that Americans had been fishing there.

I suggest also to the minister that some thought be given to a revision of the Fisheries Act. I do not know how many years it is since the act was revised, but in between sessions the minister should look that question over with his officials. If he does, I think he will find that my suggestion that the act be reviewed as soon as possible is a good one, and, if acted upon, it would be a step in the right direction.

One further remark I wish to make has reference to the dyeing of seal furs. I could take up all these matters under the several items as they came up, but I think it might be better for me to deal with them all at the same time. That would save time. In connection with the dyeing of seal furs, I notice that there is an estimate of $550,000. That matter was debated when the treaty came before the house, but I would suggest that steps should be taken, even if money has to be spent, for the setting up of a dyeing establishment in British Columbia.

After all, no province except British Columbia, if you get down to the morals of the thing, can claim any of the money we receive from the United States on account of the sale of these furs. Bear in mind that the people of British Columbia had an industry there. It is true they were hunting seals in open waters, and at some other time I shall give the history of that. At the moment I simply point out that we in British Columbia have a moral right to the moneys obtained from these furs, because it was British Columbia fishermen who were put out of business when the treaty went through. It affected no other fishermen in Canada. Some thought should be given to this matter, and I am confident that the minister will look into it with a view to establishing an industry in the dyeing of these furs.

It cannot all be done in one year, because the process is a secret one; but why should we send our furs either to St. Louis or to Great Britain? When we investigate the establishment of industries, I think it will be readily agreed that this is one industry that belongs to British Columbia. I am willing to debate that with any member of the committee.

I close by again wishing the minister every success in his new position.

Hon. R. W. MAYHEW (Minister of Fisheries): I will try to answer some of the questions the hon. member has put to me in so kindly and constructive a manner. I wish to thank him for the job he has been doing and for the way in which he has made his presentation to me.

As regards the Chilko lake power plant of the Aluminum Company of Canada, that is a new development. At the present time it is really not on paper. It is talked of, but I do not mean to say it is not a possibility or even a probability, though it is quite a new venture. I assure my hon. friend that it will receive the immediate attention of the department; in fact, it has already received attention. Further attention will be given it, and as I shall be going to the west coast soon I will take that occasion to discuss the matter with the provincial government.

It is quite true that our legislation would enable us to tell anyone developing power plants on any of our rivers that he must provide fish ladders. The hon. member for New Westminster is quite right. At the same time, we would be a little late with our present legislation and we shall have to take that into consideration.

The hon. member referred to the fisheries department being represented with external affairs, and I can assure him that there has been the closest possible liaison between the two departments. That will be continued. The Department of Fisheries is one department that is greatly concerned with what goes on in our relations with our neighbours, and I assure the committee that that is the case at the present time.

As regards the Newfoundland and United Kingdom deal on cod fish, that is an offer by the United Kingdom to the Newfoundland government. It is one that we would have no control over; but we can negotiate and are negotiating with the United Kingdom government, seeking to be put in the same position as the government of Newfoundland in the matter of fish.

So far as the liaison with the research board is concerned, we have already representatives on that board in the persons of Doctor Needler and Mr. Sutherland, and another official whom we expect on our staff very shortly, Doctor Pritchard. So that that is taken care of.

As regards the curing of fur seals at the present time, that is done in the United States in St. Louis and at Martin's in London. Apparently they are the only people who have the knowledge necessary to cure these seal skins. It is not simply a question of building a plant; you must get the technical knowledge to do the curing when the plant is established. That may be obtainable in some form or another. These seal skins are worth $20 per skin more with the St. Louis process than they are with the process in England. This matter must be given considerable study before we would embark on the building of a plant, but all the items the hon. member has brought to my attention will receive consideration.

The hon. member referred to the Fisheries Act. I have inquired about that, and I find that it has been some time since the act was really reviewed. I have asked the legal adviser to have a look at it to see what changes, if any, need to be made.

Mr. PEARKES: As representing the constituency adjacent to that represented by the minister, I offer him my congratulations on his appointment as Minister of Fisheries. I am quite certain that he will bring the full measure of his ability and his long experience to the department, and I express the hope that he may hold that appointment for the rest of his parliamentary career.

I should like to ask one question which concerns fisheries in the northern part of our province. The international boundary between British Columbia and Alaska runs from a point northwest of Prince Rupert due west to the southern end of Prince of Wales island, known as Point Muzon. I was rather disturbed the other day when the Minister of Mines and Resources said quite recently consideration had been given on a technical level with regard to the changing of that international boundary. If that international boundary is moved further south—and I presume that is the direction in which it is intended to make any change—our valuable salmon-halibut fisheries in the Dixon entrance and perhaps in Hecate strait will be seriously interfered with. It is a matter of tremendous importance to the fishing industry. I wish the minister would tell us how far those negotiations with the United States have gone for the changing of the boundary, to which the Minister of Mines and Resources referred at page 5684 of Hansard of June 22 of this year.

Mr. MAYHEW: Preliminary steps have been taken with the Department of External Affairs, objecting to any change in boundary that would alter the fishing grounds of Canada. It has only been preliminary, but I assure the hon. member for Nanaimo that is going on and will be prosecuted to the limit of our ability.

Mr. PEARKES: Did I hear the minister say that his department was objecting to any changes?

Mr. MAYHEW: Any changes that would be detrimental to the fishing industry of Canada.

Mr. PEARKES: If the boundary were moved farther south, thus giving a larger share of those northern waters to the United States, surely that would be detrimental to the fishing industry of Canada, would it not?

Mr. MAYHEW: I would naturally think anything that lessens our area at all would be detrimental. But the matter is under study at the present time and has been taken up with the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. PEARKES: The minister cannot give us any further information on the subject? It is one of national importance as well as one of importance to the fishing industry. Obviously some sort of consideration is being given at the present time to changing the international boundary of Canada. I think the people of this country are entitled to know what is behind this move. Why should Canada desire at this time—if she does so desire—a change to be made? This is something that just cannot be passed over without some explanation from the government. I wish the minister would explain as fully as he possibly can how far these negotiations have gone, what are the proposals which have been made either by Canada or the United States and how they will affect the fishing industry of Canada. It is something about which the people of Canada should be informed. It is something in which the fishing industry of British Columbia would be most vitally concerned.

Mr. MAYHEW: I am afraid there is nothing more that I can add to what I have said. Negotiations are going on. The province of British Columbia has also been brought into the discussion, and the interests of Canada will be taken care of.

Mr. MERRITT: At whose instance were those negotiations started?

Mr. MAYHEW: It was referred to us by external affairs, so that I imagine it started in the Department of External Affairs. Probably the hon. member's question would be better directed to that department.

Mr. MERRITT: I mean, by which country were negotiations started? Is it a change desired by Canada or a change desired by the United States?

Mr. MAYHEW: I cannot answer that at the present time.

Mr. PEARKES: The Minister of Mines and Resources used the expression "until quite recently, at the technical level." I presume that the negotiations have now moved forward from the technical level to the cabinet level, if the matter has been referred by one department to another.

Mr. MAYHEW: It is still on the technical level, so far as I know. It has not been on the cabinet level yet.

Mr. WINTERS: As a member from the east coast, I should like to start by saying a word of welcome to the new Minister of Fisheries. We regard it as a fitting tribute to the great industry on the west coast that, after all these years, they should finally have their first Minister of Fisheries. We also feel that they have the right man in the job; one who has had a significant and successful career in industry and who brings a great deal of experience to the portfolio. I should also like to say that we were pleased about the appointment of the parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Prince. We feel that in the balance between east and west the government has a strong combination that will produce.

Mr. McIVOR: And take care of all in between.

Mr. WINTERS: I should like for just a few moments again to bring to the attention of the committee some of the problems which are facing commercial fishermen. The fishing industry has always to struggle to fit into any economic pattern and present-day conditions present real problems. I think the difficulty has greater emphasis on the east coast, but fishermen the country over usually feel that they are in an orphan industry.

When the national income is high, people purchase high-priced foods and eat fish far too seldom. When the national economy is tight, there is not enough money to pay a reasonable price for fish, with the result that the fisherman suffers again. It is in the nature of a marginal industry; it reacts first to an economic let-down and benefits last from an upswing.

It is fully realized that if Canadians would eat more fish, the industry would be much healthier, and so would our Canadian citizens. But until the internal consumption goes up quite materially, we shall have to depend to a large extent on foreign markets, where we are at the mercy of various governments. Our national consumption of fish is still far and away below our national production.

With the price of meat high, a solution of part of our cost of living worries is to eat more fish and less meat. Now is the golden opportunity for the industry to make a determined attempt to expand domestic consumption; but in order to do so, it will be obliged to put on the market a good quality product. This involves a comprehensive inspection, and in this both the department and the industry have been making good progress. This is, however, a field for a considerable amount of further development.

In the fresh fish market our best customer is the United States. The predominant export on the east coast, apart from lobsters, is fresh fillets of cod and haddock. Much has been said of tariff concessions gained at Geneva, and we are not unmindful of the splendid work done by our representatives. But the best that could be done for cod and haddock fillets was to have the outstanding tariff rate bound at what it was. In other words for our most important fresh fish product, there was no change in tariff; but we are in a little better position as a result of a revision of the quota system, whereby the United States now allocates the total quota on a quarterly basis instead of annually as heretofore. This enables us to compete on better terms with countries such as Iceland which might otherwise flood the United States market at one season of the year and, in so doing, use up most of the quota.

Prices of fresh fish increased during last winter to the point where fishermen could make a decent living if catches were good. As is well known, deep-sea fishermen work on a share of the catch basis; the shore fishermen, of course, earn in direct relation to the amount of fish they catch. During the winter the weather was against our fishermen and fish were scarce. In the spring and early summer, fish have been plentiful and the price has held, but the weather has been most adverse. As a result, though deep-sea schooners and draggers have done well recently, shore fishermen have not been experiencing good catches and returns have been relatively low. The lobster season in many districts was not up to average, and fishermen who count heavily on this product have suffered varying degrees of disappointment.

The salt and pickled fish branch of the industry is having its own special and serious problems. This branch depends almost entirely upon the export market in the West Indies. The ironic problem here is that, though the demand is good, the countries which wish to buy cannot do so because of a shortage of dollars. For provinces such as Nova Scotia and for industries such as fishing, which historically have looked for their prosperity to foreign trade, the impact of the present relationship between dollar and sterling countries is a heavy blow. This is a problem to which our financial experts should give their best attention.

I wish to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for New Westminster, who gave a splendid presentation of the fishery problems of the west coast. He pointed out that the United Kingdom appears to be discriminating against Canada in favour of certain empire countries in the matter of dollar dealings. Recently there have been concessions on the part of the United Kingdom to certain of our competitors, which have given them an advantage over Canada in the European market. The hon. member for New Westminster referred specifically, I think, to dealings with Greece. While we in Canada have no wish that anything shall be done to upset arrangements entered into with other members of the British commonwealth, the least we should expect from the mother country is to be treated on the same basis as the rest of the commonwealth with respect to an industry that is so vital to our welfare.

With regard to dry salt fish, there is a problem arising out of a United States regulation for which it is difficult to account. The regulation provides that a higher duty shall apply to fish having less than 43 per cent moisture than to fish having more than 43 per cent moisture. The continental United States market is not important to us, but the trouble is that the regulation applies to Puerto Rico, in which we are vitally interested. The rate on fish having more than 43 per cent moisture was reduced in 1922 at the request of New England fish processors, who wished to obtain cheaper fish to process and market as boneless fish. A wet fish is used for this purpose. Neither the tariff nor the differential applying at 43 per cent is of any importance to the United States or Canada when only these two countries are concerned; but the trouble is that the differential influences Puerto Rico to buy a wet or green fish at lower tariff rates, and Nova Scotia fish, having a higher moisture content, do not stand up well in warm climates. In other words, we cannot assure the quality that is so vital in international dealings, when the moisture content of our fish is high. On the other hand, Newfoundland and Labrador dried fish, with the higher moisture content, do not deteriorate so rapidly in warmer climates, with the result that Newfoundland has a decided advantage over us in this market. Then, too, when it is considered that there is no satisfactory and consistent method for determining the moisture content of dried fish, it must be concluded that the 43 per cent line of demarcation is pretty arbitrary.

This may not sound important, but I can assure the committee that it is of the greatest consequence to salt fish producers in Nova Scotia. We urge our negotiators at any future trade talks with the United States to do their best to have the differential removed. Failing that, we would urge that the moisture content at which the differential applies be increased from 43 per cent to around 50 per cent, thereby giving us a better chance to compete with Newfoundland. At a recent meeting of the banking and commerce committee, Mr. F. Homer Zwicker of Lunenburg was given an opportunity to present this case on behalf of the salt fish exporters association.

He was given valuable assistance by the senior hon. member for Halifax, who is a member of that committee and quite familiar with the situation, and who realizes the difficulty under which our salt fish trade is obliged to operate as a result.

The fishing industry is a hard one for all concerned. The returns to operators and fishermen alike, depend upon the amount of fish caught, export markets and our own domestic consumption, all of which are highly variable. Add the hazards, discomfiture and hardships endured in open boats in all kinds of weather, and one can well imagine that there is no other industry in which personal initiative and courage run higher. Fishermen cannot demand and get pay raises with assured incomes as can labourers in other industries. They can only share in what they catch, and be paid only in relation to what consumers will pay for their products. Nevertheless the conditions under which deep-sea fishermen work and the returns to all types of fishermen have improved. Recently the hon. member for Cape Breton South stated that production increased by 196 per cent between 1938 and 1945, and that since the war it had gone back to about what it was in 1938. This is entirely contrary to the facts. The total value of sea fish landed in the three maritime provinces and Quebec in 1938 was $8,687,000, while in 1946 it was $34,358,000. In 1947, despite the fact that there was a strike of three months' duration, the value of the catch was $23,288,000, or almost three times what it was in 1938.

The same hon. member referred to the fisherman as the forgotten man, and pointed to his low income. It is true that returns to fishermen are not as high as the government or the industry would like to see them, and shore fishermen in particular often do not receive adequate compensation in relation to the work they do and the hazards they take; but it is fair to look at the over-all picture. In the first five months of 1948, six schooners, picked at random, shared $997.68 per man, or very close to $200 a month. Of six draggers for which I have figures for the same period, each deck hand averaged $1,255.32, or $251 a month. On some draggers the men averaged over $300 a month. In 1939 the price of cod and haddock averaged about one and a half cents a pound for the whole round fish. In 1945 the price of codfish varied from 3½ cents to 4 cents, and the price of haddock from 4½ cents to 5 cents. The 1948 prices to date are the same as those in 1945. Therefore, whereas the hon. member from Cape Breton South says that conditions in the fishing industry improved up to 1946 and then receded to where they were before the war, the encouraging fact is that, with continued heavy fishing and sustained prices, it is a reasonable estimate that deep-sea fishermen will get as much or more in 1948 than they did in 1946.

The statements made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South are the sort of characteristic inaccuracies which are harmful to the industry and to the maritimes. At a recent meeting in Cherry Hill, the Rev. Fred Young, who, I understand, is a professional organizer for the C.C.F. party, discussed fishing problems. As reported from Bridgewater on May 7, the Rev. Mr. Young stated that, while the Lunenburg county fisherman is getting from three to four cents a pound for his catch, the Halifax consumer pays twenty-nine cents a pound for the same fish. He may, or may not, have been aware of a gross inaccuracy; nevertheless he is comparing unlike quantities. It is true that the fisherman is paid from 3½ to 4 cents a pound for the fish in the round, whole state; but it takes about three pounds of this fish to make a pound of fillets; and it is the price of fillets which Mr. Young quotes at twenty-nine cents a pound. The spread, including processing, distribution, selling, refrigerating, and other costs is, therefore, between twelve cents and twenty-nine cents, and not between four cents and twenty-nine cents, as is used for propaganda purposes. In the same report Mr. Young continued his attempt to spread unrest in the industry by making the mysterious statement that a C.C.F. government in Canada would establish floor prices under fish, thereby lowering consumer prices and greatly increasing consumption.

As I have said before in this discussion, and on previous occasions, the shore fisherman is the man who, more than any other, works abnormally hard for uncertain returns in the face of great hazards. He is constantly running the risk of losing his boat and his gear, and at the present time there is no means whereby he can obtain insurance such as that available to registered or tonnage boats. This has been a matter of concern, and some months ago I asked the department to undertake a study with a view to determining the feasibility of initiating an insurance program with the premiums to be shared jointly by the fishermen and the government. I was pleased to learn that this matter had been raised as far back as 1931 by one of my predecessors, an outstanding Conservative member, Mr. W. G. Ernst, who later became minister of fisheries. Unfortunately, for various reasons, no plan was brought forth at that time, nor has any suitable program been worked out for the east coast to date.

The Department of Fisheries has assigned to the problem personnel who have given it the most searching study and have compiled comprehensive figures on losses, damage and other factors. I wish to compliment the department upon the manner in which they have applied themselves to this study and to express the hope that a plan can be formulated which will be satisfactory to the fishermen; for it would provide a vital stimulant to inshore fishing, which is that phase of the industry most urgently in need of support. It would enable these fishermen to operate with more confidence and would serve to provide an element of solidarity and stability, which the industry can well use.

I should like to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster respecting his suggestion that a fisheries expert be included in the Department of External Affairs. To my mind that is a good suggestion. I believe also that we could use more men with a detailed knowledge of fisheries in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

May I repeat what I said last year with respect to the continental shelf. I believe it is time the Canadian government took some steps to extend Canadian sovereignty over those waters which normally we regard as our own home waters, namely, the waters usually embraced within the limits of the continental shelf.

In closing, may I again extend the best wishes of the east coast fisheries to the new minister, and hope that he will remain in his office for some considerable time.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Mr. Chairman, I should like to compliment the minister upon his appointment. It is good to see a Minister of Fisheries from British Columbia. I have enjoyed in the past the co-operation of the Department of Fisheries, and I have no doubt that it will continue in the future.

I have only one or two points I should like to mention at the present time. First, there is the matter of the short halibut season, and the fact that the fishermen in the Canadian halibut fleet are interested in seeing that the international halibut commission be given more power, so that the season may be spread out over a longer period of time. The purpose would be to prevent such a large mass of fish from coming in, in such a short space of time, and thus prevent a depression in the market. This short season is bad for the fishing grounds. It is hard to handle such large quantities in so short a space of time. I have no doubt that there will be some depression in fish prices, and these large quantities coming on the market will help to depress the price still further. I would ask the department to take an interest in this matter so that such a crisis might be averted.

The suggestion by the hon. member for New Westminster in which he asks for a fisheries expert in the external affairs branch is a good one. I should like to see a little more aggressiveness on the part of Canada when we are dealing with the United States. It would seem that we take their desires at face value, but that they are slow when we ask for concessions.

Then, possibly the minister would answer the question I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other evening, namely, about fish livers. I shall not repeat my question in detail, because the minister is familiar with it.

May I speak respecting the need of proper repair equipment in northern British Columbia for patrol vessels? The department needs that equipment, and I should like to see them move from their present quarters at Dodge Cove to quarters at Seal Cove, where the Department of Transport is now located and at which point the Department of Fisheries controls one area. Those facilities are needed because the boats require constant attention in the northern waters.

Then, in the matter of research, at one time there was an office at Prince Rupert. I shall not go so far as to say that a full station should be established there; but in view of the amount of fish going through there, there should be established at least a substation at that point. I am sure if that were done it would be appreciated by the fishing industry.

Again let me say that I wish the minister a long term of office in his department.

Mr. MAYHEW: Probably the hon. member for Skeena is aware that during the last week and at the present time the halibut commission have been holding a meeting in Ottawa, and that they have been discussing the question he has raised. They are placing their suggestions before the department. What may follow I am not now in a position to say, but I know the matter is under study.

It was suggested that there should be a representative of the fisheries department in the Department of External Affairs. I have already said that there is close liaison with that department. I think it is more important that there be a man who understands fisheries in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I am happy to say that there is such a man there now.

May I say that I fully realize the value of promoting sales in any industry, and particularly in this one. That matter will have the closest attention. But I would point out that if you are to have sales volume you must go right back to the fisherman. You must see that the fish is properly stored in his boat, that he has proper transportation facilities to get his fish to market, and that the handling, even in the smaller stores, is done in the right way. A long process must be followed to get the fish from the boat to the table, and each move is vital. I consider that the merchants in our various cities and towns are simply the agents of our fishermen.

The part this government must play is to carry out proper inspection at the different stages the fish must go through to reach the table. It is only by good merchandising that we can increase the production of this industry. So far as I possibly can do it, that will be done. As hon. members go through the estimates they will find, as they stop at the different items—I hope they will not stop at every item—that large amounts are being asked for to carry on research and inspection work, the very things that I have just said we should try do to.

At the present time we have in the department a staff of capable young men who were brought there by the late Mr. Bridges when he was minister. We are beginning to feel the results of his work in this department. I am sure that with the energy and enthusiasm of our departmental officials we can go on to develop this industry.

I had intended making some lengthy remarks, but other arguments broke in and I shall not go on with them at the present time. However I want to say that I am happy to have as my parliamentary assistant the hon. member for Prince. He is from The Island, and with the minister being from another island on the Pacific I think we shall be able to achieve results.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I had intended to confine my remarks to one or two later items, but the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster on the Chilko lake situation brings me to my feet at this time for an obvious reason. Chilko lake and Bute inlet are in my riding, so that we immediately have that conflict of interest between power development and the fishing industry.

Chilko lake development is one of the most unusual in British Columbia, or for that matter in Canada. As hon. members know, the interior of British Columbia is cut off from the coast by the great barrier of the coast range. The great watershed of the Fraser river is to the east of that range. Some 150 miles north of Vancouver a great fjord, Bute inlet, cuts the range. On the other side of the last mountain between the height of Bute inlet and the interior of British Columbia lies one of the largest lakes in British Columbia, Chilko lake. This lake is at an elevation of almost 3,000 feet.

Normally the waters of that lake find an outlet through the 400 miles of the Fraser river to the sea. The proposal is to drive a tunnel through this one mountain and tap this tremendous volume of water which lies at this great height of 3,000 feet. Normally such a power development would be used to send power to Vancouver and New Westminster, but because of the mountainous nature of the country the only way in which the power can be used is to use it normally. That is why there has been no development of that site until now. It would take an industry like the Aluminum Company of Canada to make proper use of that power.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the reason why power could not be transmitted the high cost of constructing transmission lines?

Mr. SINCLAIR: The reason is the whole coast mountain range with its long fjords cutting across. This would require a land line of at least 2,000 miles to reach Vancouver. The result is that the power must be used locally by locating a power plant at the head of this long fjord.

As the hon. member for New Westminster properly said, this is one of the great tributaries of the Fraser river, and if all that water is diverted into Bute inlet it will have a serious effect, not only on the main body of the Fraser but on its tributaries. As a result, the great salmon run in the Fraser river will be seriously injured. I think between these two extremes is a type of development which will permit a flow of water out of the lake as well as allowing salmon to come in to spawn and the fingerlings to get out.

One point brought out by the hon. member was an excellent one, the fact that this must be done now. Unfortunately, until now the various provincial governments have paid little attention to the value of our streams as salmon streams. The Aluminum Company of Canada is spending $1,000,000 on surveys in that area and, unless immediate action is taken, it will be too late. One of the first tasks of our new British Columbia minister of fisheries should be to protect the salmon industry's interests in lake Chilko.

Another interesting point arises here, the flood situation. I am quite sure the hon. member for Fraser Valley will welcome this development, because the siphoning off of this great amount of water would certainly tend to reduce the flood threat on the Fraser river during the spring. This brings up once more the point which the hon. member for New Westminster emphasized in his capacity as a member of the international salmon commission. This great Fraser river is not just a salmon stream or a power stream; it must be regarded as a stream in which flood control, power development and the salmon interests all play a part.

Perhaps this is the time to mention that the fisheries department has been instrumental in creating a new industry of tuna fishing on the Pacific coast. This type of fishing has been carried on extensively in recent years in Mexico and California, and lately some of our fishermen have been venturing out farther and farther from shore to engage in this type of fishing. The Department of Fisheries has provided great assistance in furnishing a pilot boat for our fishermen.

There is being developed on the west coast still another new industry in which I believe one of our colleagues is interested. I do not know whether the whaling industry can be called a fishing industry. When industries are started in eastern Canada they are quite often helped with subsidies, and even when they get going there seems to be a tendency to continue to pay those subsidies. If this whaling industry should have a difficult time in its first year of operations I hope the fisheries department will remember the assistance they have given and are still giving in these estimates to various kinds of fisheries on the eastern coast.

My last point is in connection with another form of assistance of which our west coast fishermen are badly in need. I intend to speak of it at some length on the estimates of the Minister of Public Works, and that is why I am particularly pleased that we have a British Columbian as Minister of Fisheries, one who comes not only from British Columbia but from the coast, and one who, as a private member, pleaded hard with the Minister of Public Works to obtain for the fishermen on the Pacific coast a little dredging for their harbours, fishing floats, breakwaters and so forth, which this country so readily provides for the eastern provinces. I intend to deal with that at some length on the appropriate estimates, but just now I would recall to the Minister of Fisheries his own difficulties as a private member in obtaining fishing floats for Victoria and assure him that, though he now has our solid support, he will have our vociferous support if he will go as hard after the Minister of Public Works in his ministerial capacity as he did as a private member.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I should like to join with my fellow members in expressing our pleasure in the appointment of the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, as the new Minister of Fisheries. I assure him that he can count on the co-operation of both eastern and western coast members on both sides of the house. I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Prince on the recognition his native province has received in his high appointment as parliamentary assistant to the minister. I think it an excellent idea that his province now has recognition in cabinet circles. I am quite sure that the Minister of National Revenue has acquired an able lieutenant in the person of the hon. member for New Westminster, whose knowledge of the fishing industry is outstanding, and who, I think I am correct in assuming, will continue to give to the fishing industry the benefit of his advice.

We are pressed for time, Mr. Chairman, and in the few minutes that remain before six o'clock I shall confine my remarks to the operation of the fisheries prices support board. A period of five months is not long enough to enable us to form a judgment of the operations of that board in the big problem with which it has to deal. This year there has been an increase in expenditures of around $140,000, which it quite a substantial item. It is important that the vast sum of $25 million—not vast in comparison with Department of Agriculture expenditures—should be used in a worthwhile manner. I certainly hope that it will not be used in some socialist experiment of underwriting the mistakes of fishermen and operators in the industry.

It is fortunate that our new Minister of Fisheries has had a vast experience in the field of selling, because what the fishing industry of Canada needs is a more aggressive sales policy. For the last eight years the fishing industry, particularly on the Pacific coast, has been living in an atmosphere of unreality. There was a ready sale for anything we packed. It disappeared from our counters before we had an opportunity to take a few cans for our own sampling. But that condition is now past, although, generally speaking, I believe that the industry on the Pacific coast is in an excellent position so far as its sales problems are concerned. But what next year will bring is a matter of concern to those in the fishing portion of the industry on the Pacific coast. However, our boats and plants are in excellent shape to enable our industry to compete in the markets of the world.

Our canned salmon pack is small and we shall have no difficulty in disposing of it. There does not seem to be the same outlook for herring, but we can use our facilities in processing them into meal and oil to make it a satisfactory operation.

With the money that is now available to the minister through the fisheries prices support board, I trust that he will give a great deal of thought to the opportunity he now has of making fish available to the housewives all over this country. Never before was there a time when the price of beef and other meats was so high. It is the minister's golden opportunity to make fish with its valuable protein content so attractive to the housewives of Canada that we shall have a vastly greater sale of fish.

The fisheries prices support board purchased 190,000 cases of chicken haddie from the eastern coast. I believe that is all right. The only difficulty, it seems to me, is that nobody knows what to do with this chicken haddie. I do not know whether the minister has ever purchased any for his own use; but I have done some baching myself, and I know it is an excellent pack of nice white meat, wholesome and appetizing in appearance, but I have never met anybody in Canada who knew how to cook it into a tasty dish. If some spices or smoke were added to it, it would be a worthwhile product, and I would urge the minister to encourage the fisheries prices support board to do something to popularize this excellent food.

Take salt cod. The minister knows that to maritimers it is the finest food produced in Canada. It is an excellent product. It comes packed in a wooden box and is not in itself unattractive, but not ten per cent of the housewives in this country have any idea how to cook it properly and serve it to their families, although there is no finer food produced in Canada. There is never an opportunity for maritime members to purchase a salt fish cake. Even the chef in the restaurant does not know how to cook it, and if a chef like that does not know, it is not likely that our housewives would know any better how to cook it.

I would also suggest that the minister ask the fisheries prices support board to go out and spend some money in providing freight cars to bring our fish from the coasts to markets all across Canada. The fisheries research board has been doing some work in that direction in co-operation with the railroads, although I do not think the railroads have been as co-operative as they might have been. I would ask the minister to set aside sufficient money to equip two experimental cars with their own diesel-engine operated low-temperature refrigerating equipment to bring our Pacific coast and eastern coast fish into central Canada in first-class condition. I bring that to his attention particularly, because a little while ago in the parliamentary restaurant I had some fresh halibut from the Pacific coast and it tasted as if it had just come out of the sea. One week afterwards I ordered it again and it was like eating a piece of cotton batting. That was merely because it had not been properly refrigerated.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1949

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting further supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1949, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering item 95, fisheries.

Mr. McLURE: Mr. Chairman, prior to the adjournment of the debate at six o'clock I had what might be termed a rather left-handed compliment paid me by the Minister of Public Works when he said that if I started to speak he would tell the Chairman not to look at the clock. I took that to mean that he wanted me to be brief. I know that brevity is golden; but at the same time, when we are dealing with these fisheries estimates, I for one will not allow them to go through en bloc just for the purpose of accommodating some hon. members who wish to get home a little earlier to their constituencies.

The fisheries are an important item and we should look carefully into the estimates for them. Even if we have to spend an extra day or so here, what does it matter. I challenge any member of this house on either side to present a better record than mine in attendance in the chamber or in days absent during the session. For that reason I for one am not going to be brushed off too hurriedly in the consideration of these estimates.

I have noticed that on many occasions in the discussion of fisheries I have found it necessary to congratulate a new minister, for the simple reason that so many hon. gentlemen have occupied that portfolio. The different ministers of fisheries have been excellent men, but I do not believe that the government has given them its best support. The men in that department are able men, and even if they do not get the fullest support of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of National Revenue, they carry on and do a splendid job.

I have spoken several times on the fisheries of Canada, especially from the standpoint of my own province; and, as I have said, I have had occasion to congratulate a number of ministers directing that department even in my short time in this house. Altogether I have congratulated nine of them, and now I congratulate the new minister from British Columbia who occupies that important position. I hope that in the near-to-hand shuffle of cabinet ministers which will take place again, he will not be shuffled into some other department. In the last four months we have had four or five ministers in the department. That is not fair to the hon. gentlemen who fill the portfolio, nor is it fair to the fishing industry as a whole.

While congratulating the minister, I wish to extend my felicitations to his parliamentary assistant, who represents the constituency of Prince, which is adjacent to my own constituency of Queens. I hope that in the position he now holds he will give his very best to the fisheries of the maritime provinces in particular and generally to the industry throughout Canada. I might also hold out this hope for him, as I have seen it expressed already in the press, that in the coming cabinet shuffle which may take place in the next month he will find himself in the musical chair occupying the portfolio of Minister of Fisheries if a shuffle is made again of the present minister.

I will not say very much more about these two newly appointed hon. gentlemen, but I hope they will spend their energies and devote their abilities entirely to the fisheries of the maritimes and generally, of course, to those of Canada as a whole. In the maritimes at the present time our second primary industry is not what it should be. We are up against many difficulties.

The department has found it difficult this year to get a market for certain of our canned and processed fish. I shall deal with that later on, because I have a question or two which I wish to ask the minister.

This debate was opened by the hon. member for New Westminster, and rightly so. Who could introduce a debate on fisheries more capably than or even as well as the hon. member for New Westminster? I have heard him on many occasions and I am always glad to listen to him. I say that for many reasons; for one thing his accent, and for another, his knowledge of our fisheries in general and particularly his knowledge of the industry in his own province of British Columbia. I doubt whether there is any other man in this house who can hold a candle to him in that regard. Another reason for which I admire him—I cannot enumerate them all—is the way in which he boosts the fisheries of British Columbia. He is just as good in that respect as he is in playing the bagpipes, and that is an accomplishment. At one time I was hoping that I would be able to congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster, but his sojourn as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Fisheries was short lived; I do not know whether it was two days or two weeks. However, he is still occupying an important position as parliamentary assistant to another minister.

When the hon. member for New Westminster was speaking on fisheries, he spoke as if there was only one area of fishing in Canada. We have three great fishing areas, namely the west coast—British Columbia in particular—the inland fisheries and the maritime fisheries. We must all agree on this. The fish products from those three areas are the best in the world. The fish from nowhere else can hold even second place to those taken from the west coast, inland and maritime fisheries. However I think all will agree with me when I say the maritime fish are the best fish. We may not have the quantity, but, of all the fish in the world ours are the de luxe food from the briny seas. We have such fish as lobsters, scallops, oysters and mackerel—

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Suckers.

An hon. MEMBER: That is the taxpayer.

Mr. McLURE: —not to forget, as I did one time before, the New Brunswick salmon.

The hon. member for New Westminster, in congratulating the minister, said this appointment was British Columbia's due. In this I do not disagree with him. But in looking over the past seventeen years' history of appointments of ministers of fisheries, we find some eleven or twelve appointments; and five of those were from the maritimes, four from the inland provinces, and two from British Columbia. As I said, I do not disagree with the hon. member, because those whom he represents have a right to have a minister from the coast at certain times.

I might mention further that we in the maritimes had been promised that in 1945 we would have representation in the cabinet of this government. However, we did not get that. In 1945 I urged upon the Prime Minister the fulfilment of his promise to give us a portfolio for the province, so that we would be represented in the cabinet. Now the best he gives us is a consolation prize, by making one of our members a parliamentary assistant.

Mr. MITCHELL: And he is a good member from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McLURE: Yes, I agree with that. I have already said so. However I should have liked to have the promise fully implemented. As I said a while ago, probably in the next shuffle, which will come sooner or later, we may have representation in the cabinet.

There are many matters that I should like to bring up besides those I have already mentioned, but I shall deal with them as they come up in the estimates from time to time, and probably we can have the questions answered better in that way. I said a moment ago that our fish were excellent. What we are asking for today in our province is fishery inspection. We should have compulsory inspection in the whole of Canada. I know some hon. members agree with me in that, among whom I think would be a first-ranking member, namely the hon. member for New Westminster. I am sure he would also urge this on the Department of Fisheries and on the government. In this connection I placed a question on Hansard at page 5582. When the minister is replying I wish him to pay special attention to this question which is as follows:

Has the request of the Prince Edward Island fish canners and packers for compulsory inspection of all their canned and processed fish products been granted? If not, why not?

When the canners and packers themselves, representing the fishermen and everybody engaged in the industry, come to this department and ask for compulsory inspection, I am of the opinion that it should be granted. I hope that the minister, when he replies, will tell me and this committee that inspection for the province of Prince Edward Island, if not for the whole of Canada, will be granted as has been requested.

I shall not follow all the remarks made by the various speakers, because it would take too much time. As I said, many hon. members are in such a hurry to get away that they would be quite satisfied if I sat down immediately. However, as I said, I do not intend to be brushed aside in that way. I will take my allotted time if I want it, and then deal with some of the other matters as they come along.

Another matter to which I wish the minister to pay special attention is another request from the fisheries federation, the packers, the fishermen, and all the different organizations in Prince Edward Island. It is this:

Will the fisheries prices support board or the Department of Fisheries endorse and support a participating advertising sales promotion plan for their canned and processed fish products from the province of Prince Edward Island?

If not the whole of Canada. We are applying for this only for our own province.

If not, why not?

To those two questions I shall await the official answer of the minister when he replies.

Another matter about which I wish to speak is the educational service rendered by the Department of Fisheries. The educational service to our fishermen and to our fisheries should be, and it is, a matter of the greatest importance. That education should begin at the fisherman's equipment and should be carried on through all these stages of fishing, no matter of what kind, until the product is ready to go to the market. Then, when our fish start for the market we should have proper advertising; we should have proper salesmen, men who can go out and talk fish, who know the food value of fish, who can thus bring it before the people of Canada and find out if the consumers of Canada can be persuaded to eat, as some hon. members said when speaking this afternoon, the finest food they can eat. If they had the proper education, I believe they would start in to eat more fish. If a few pounds more were eaten by each of the inhabitants of this dominion we would find a ready market for everything our fishermen could catch.

I want to mention a matter that has to do with the Minister of Public Works. We know the best quality of fish are caught in the colder waters, the stormier seas. Consequently on the north side of our province, or any other province, where the waters are cold and the storms severe, we must have protected harbours. On the north side of Prince Edward Island we have few harbours, and we do not have the protection we should. In my constituency there is a harbour known as North Rustico, one of the best fishing grounds in the maritime provinces. I do not say it is one of the largest, but there the people really are fishermen, doing nothing else for a livelihood. On several occasions I have appealed to the Minister of Public Works for a wharf or breakwater to protect the houses, shanties and other buildings of the fishermen along that harbour. I am sure that if the matter had been presented to the minister by his engineers in a proper way, he would have seen that the work done so far is absolutely useless. The department should put on an engineer who will take the opinions of the fishermen and build something that will not be washed away by the first storm. During the past two years some $10,000 has been spent on this protection, but what have we today? We have not had any severe storms, but the work is practically all washed away. A few days ago I recevied a suggestion that the engineers should undertake a survey of that harbour before the fall storms begin; otherwise government property, including the lighthouse, and the buildings of the fishermen will all be washed away.

I have also been advocating the dredging of the bay so that the fishermen can bring their boats up to their own stages. Today they have to leave them a mile and a half away. In 1932 or 1933 this bay was dredged, but since then it has filled up with silt from the land, so that now we have only a narrow channel requiring a fishermen, even at high tide, to anchor his boat away down at the mouth of the harbour and carry his fish ashore. Last year the minister promised that this dredging would be done; but as yet, so far as any benefit to the fishermen goes, it is still only a promise. When we reach the public works estimates I shall forget about fisheries for a moment and take up that matter with the minister.

As I said, I am going to take up a few other matters as we come to them, and this is all I have to say in a general way. I shall now await the reply of the minister to the two questions I asked, which are found on page 5582 of Hansard.

Mr. GREEN: The May issue of The Bulletin, issued by the fisheries council of Canada, has a leading article entitled, "Right Hon. C. D. Howe says fish will be low on priority lists of goods for ERP," meaning, of course, the European recovery plan. The article points out that there is great uncertainty as to what will be the requirements for fisheries products under that plan, and I wonder if the minister could give us some light on that situation. In an address at Winnipeg on May 31 the Minister of Trade and Commerce apparently said it was unlikely that there would be much call for fisheries products, and of course that might affect us seriously on the Pacific coast particularly in connection with our canned salmon.

Mr. MAYHEW: Each country getting support from the Marshall plan decides for itself what products it wants. Our difficulty is to get the various countries to specify fish. In an attempt to have our quota established, we have been in contact with the Department of Trade and Commerce, and that is about all we can do about the matter. If these countries say they would prefer some other type of food there is nothing we can do about that. We have recognized that this is a possible outlet for some of our fish, and we have done what we could ourselves and have also pressed the matter through the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. GREEN: The decision is made by the country getting the commodities. Is that right?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is right.

Mr. GREEN: What are the prospects, for example, with respect to the United Kingdom?

Mr. MAYHEW: I think the hon. member is pretty well acquainted with the situation. Our prospects are not very bright because of the dollar shortage in the United Kingdom. I am afraid that the situation is not as good as we should like to see it.

Mr. GREEN: But I mean under the Marshall plan. Have the British asked for canned salmon or other fisheries products under that plan?

Mr. MAYHEW: No. The hon. member for Queens asked with respect to the extension of fish inspection. On the east coast we are going just about as quickly as we possibly can with the number of men available. There has been inspection of pickled fish, and recently the department instituted a compulsory inspection of salted fish. The department has already announced its intention to carry out compulsory inspection of canned fish as part of the long-term program to improve quality. On the east coast there are several hundred canneries, however, and as yet the department has not available men with the training necessary to carry on that inspection. Steps are being taken to add to the inspection staff for Prince Edward Island and elsewhere. This new staff, along with the official inspectors and officials of the canned fish laboratories, will work with the cannery operators in giving advice and guidance as to quality control. Meanwhile the Fish Inspection Act is being revised, with a view to giving the department proper authority for compulsory inspection and grading.

Mr. PEARKES: The minister referred to these superior types of young men who are entering the outside service of his department in the fish inspection branch. I should like to endorse those sentiments, because a great many of those young men are ex-servicemen.

However, those who are entering in the lowest grade have been discouraged by the wages they are now receiving. Most of them are working for salaries of less than $2,000. Although an increase given earlier this year dated back to October, that increase is not on the same basis as the one which was given to fisheries inspectors grade 2. I would ask the minister to look into this question personally, with respect to salaries paid to the junior officers of his department, namely the grade 1 fisheries inspectors. He will see that the increase made this year for those grade 1 fisheries inspectors was not on the same basis as that made for the grade 2 inspectors. The grade 2 inspectors were given increases based upon their second year of seniority, whereas the grade 1 inspectors received their increases based upon their minimum salary. The young ex-servicemen affected feel that this is not quite fair.

I do not expect the minister to answer this evening, because I realize that in the few minutes now at his disposal he would not be able to look into the situation thoroughly. I am, however, asking him to make a personal investigation into the matter and to find a way in which he can make the salary increases authorized to grade 1 fisheries inspectors comparable with those authorized for grade 2 inspectors.

Mr. HAZEN: I would direct the minister's attention to the details as they appear at page 126 of the estimates. According to those details, in 1947-48 there were seventy fisheries inspectors, grade 2; and eight fisheries inspectors, grade 1, or a total of seventy-eight. In 1948-49 there are only seventy altogether, made up of five senior fisheries inspectors, forty-five fisheries inspectors, grade 2, and three fisheries inspectors, grade 1. There is one other group which I do not see at the moment.

I was under the impression that a number of new inspectors were taken into the service and that the service was to be built up. I believed that there were openings for young men, and that a number had applied. I know that in New Brunswick some were taken on. Why is it there are only seventy this year, while there were seventy-eight last year?

Mr. MAYHEW: This list gives only the permanent inspectors, and does not show the temporaries. Last year the list included temporary as well as permanent employees.

Mr. HAZEN: Why should a different method be adopted this year from that which was used last year? I know these young men in New Brunswick took their examinations and several of them were appointed. I should imagine the same would be true in the other provinces. If the appointments were made I presume they would be permanent. If the temporary ones are shown in 1947-48, why is there this change in policy in the manner of setting them out?

Mr. MAYHEW: The temporary employees are not included in this list. It will be recalled that we took on quite a number of young men last year. They are finding their way from the temporary to the permanent list. In the first year they are on a temporary basis, and when they are placed in the permanent service a reallocation is made.

Mr. HAZEN: Why are there not more shown this year than there were last? What is the explanation?

Mr. MAYHEW: This year there are 143 temporaries and 62 permanents.

Mr. HAZEN: I understood the minister to say they were all permanent in 1948-49. Apparently that is not correct.

Mr. MAYHEW: Seventy permanents were employed last year.

Mr. HAZEN: Can the minister give a breakdown of the inspectors by provinces?

Mr. MAYHEW: It would take a little time, but we can get it for the hon. member. I doubt if I could give it tonight.

Mr. HAZEN: Are there any permanent guardians? There is an item fishery officers and guardians, and I should like to know if any guardians are employed in addition to inspectors?

Mr. MAYHEW: All guardians are temporary.

Mr. HAZEN: In connection with guardians, could I have a breakdown for the three maritime provinces showing the periods they were employed last year; the periods for this year, if it is no too early to do that; what their duties were; the districts in which they were employed, and what they were paid?

Mr. MAYHEW: That will require some little calculation, but I shall get it for the hon. member.

Mr. HAZEN: I should like to have that.

Item agreed to.

97. Building fishways and clearing rivers, $50,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: All British Columbia members have expressed their appreciation at having a British Columbia Minister of Fisheries. I doubt if there is an item in the department's estimates about which we have talked more in the past than this one covering the clearing of streams and the building of fishways. I have talked more and got less understanding about this matter, because the previous minister from the maritimes did not understand this British Columbia problem.

Our chief industry in British Columbia is logging, which has a most detrimental effect upon many of our salmon streams. Logging creates stoppages in a great many of these streams, with the result that sockeye and other salmon cannot get up to the headwaters to spawn. We have always protested that this item was hopelessly inadequate; and it may be a welcome sign that it is increased from $25,000 last year, when the department was under a maritimes minister, to $50,000 this year, when we have a British Columbia Minister of Fisheries. But even that amount is hopelessly inadequate to do the job of clearing many of the smaller salmon streams apart from the Fraser river.

The second matter of building fishways is an old story as far as I am concerned. I have been here eight years and I have seen six different ministers of fisheries. I have in my hand a file which I have built up throughout those years in connection with one little item. The fishermen of Pender Harbour in my riding cannot understand why this bit of work has not been done. Once again I am going to bring forward this little problem at the risk of boring the committee. Perhaps I should not say at the risk of boring the committee, because the hon. member for Queens has quite properly pointed out that this matter of fisheries is of extreme importance to the two maritime coasts of this country. Every session we find that the only opportunity we have to discuss fisheries is on the last night or the second to the last night of the session. Then we are asked, like the hon. member for Timiskaming has just asked me, to hurry up because we want to get through.

We sit here and listen to complaints about wheat and coarse grains, and we never suggest that hon. members talking about those matters should hurry. Therefore I do not feel at all backward about raising problems which are just as important to the fishermen of my riding as are the problems of wheat marketing, coarse grains, fat cows and what have you.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The wheat growers are listening to you now.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is a courtesy we gave to you, and I hope we can convey our story to hon. members as you have conveyed your story. This is a simple story and it has been often told here. The town of Pender Harbour might be referred to as the Lunenburg of the Pacific coast. It has a landlocked harbour and some excellent fishermen live there who range the entire coast. Their fishing area is not at home. However, they have a most unusual geographical arrangement, in that there is a small stream three miles from the entrance to the harbour. At one time sockeye salmon were to be found in that stream. It was logged many years ago, and the loggers built a small dam at the entrance to the creek to hold water in Sakinaw lake. When the dam was there the sockeye salmon were able to spawn.

The loggers left and the dam fell into disrepair. Although at that time it would have cost the fisheries department only $900 to repair it, they did not care to do so. When the dam went out, the level of the lake fell, exposing all around the lake for many miles the gravel bars on which the salmon used to spawn. Without the fishway, the salmon were able to get into the lake only at high tide.

Year after year the fishermen of Pender Harbour have asked the department to build a small wooden dam and a small wooden fishway at costs which ranged anywhere from a low of $2,000 to a high of $5,000. There were years when 10,000, 12,000 and 14,000 sockeye salmon were caught at the mouth of that stream. It is a particularly happy fishery, in that it is used by the young boys who are just learning to fish and old men who are too old to go out along the coast of Vancouver island and the Queen Charlotte islands, to the more remote fisheries.

Minister after minister and deputy after deputy, including the present deputy with whom I spoke in private the other evening, as well as the western director, have all said that they would examine into this. They sent a biologist to examine the salinity of the lake. This year, after a visit by the western director to the fishermen's union last fall, they sent an engineer in. They were getting real good. However, they sent in an eastern engineer who knew nothing at all about salmon fisheries, and all he did was to fall into the lake and lose his notes.

When I spoke to the Minister of Fisheries right after he had been appointed about this matter of Sakinaw lake he said he would go there to meet these fishermen. They will be delighted to meet the new Minister of Fisheries, but I do not think they will be over-impressed if once more there is to be another meeting on Sakinaw lake.

I suppose I could ask for an order for return in connection with this matter, but I am quite sure that the total of the travelling expenses for all these officials who have written reports about this matter would more than equal the $5,000 which would be the maximum cost of replacing this dam. I bring this up, so that I can go back to my fishermen at Pender

Harbour and say, "We have a new minister, and once again I have brought up this question in the House of Commons about the public expenditure necessary to restore this real sockeye salmon fishing". I should like to know from the minister what his plans are for the Sakinaw lake situation and Pender Harbour.

Mr. MAYHEW: I understand that there are four problems in connection with Sakinaw lake. The first was the salinity, but an inspection has taken place and the conclusion arrived at is that that would not interfere with the fisheries. Another problem is what the spawning beds are like in that area, and an inspection in that connection will be carried out this fall when the fish come up the river. The site for a dam has already been chosen and it is estimated that it will cost $2,000. The fourth problem is the acquiring of water rights from the provincial government. I can promise the hon. member for Vancouver North that we will give him a definite answer, either yes or no, before the end of the year.

Mr. SINNOTT: I share the views of the hon. member for Vancouver North. I believe this estimate is very small in comparison with the work there is to be done. I draw the attention of the minister and his parliamentary assistant to conditions on the Red river, where the fish ladders are in very bad shape, and in need of repair. There is not enough water running down the fish ladders for a minnow to climb up, let alone a fish. On the Winnipeg river, one of the largest inland rivers in Canada, which runs from the Lake of the Woods to Lac du Bonnet and empties into lake Winnipeg, where some of the best sturgeon in the country are caught, two big power plants have been established, and there is the immediate prospect of another one being built. The power plants which are there now have no provision for fish ladders, and the consequence is that the fish coming up the river to spawn are stopped and cannot get up. There are no fish above these power plants.

Mr. MAYHEW: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman, he is addressing the wrong department. He should go to the fisheries department at Winnipeg. We have no jurisdiction over the area he speaks of. That is a provincial matter entirely.

Mr. HAZEN: Was a fishway erected near the mouth of the Nashwaak river near Fredericton, and, if so, what have been the results so far as the salmon are concerned?

Mr. MacNAUGHT: Discussions have been going on for a number of years regarding the dam on this river and its effect on the salmon. It is believed that something may come out of these discussions.

Mr. HAZEN: I hope that something will come out of them. I would urge the minister to look into the matter and see if steps cannot be taken, and taken soon, to have a proper fishway put in that dam. There is a beautiful river there.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: Experiments have been carried on, but there is no evidence that the dam prevents the fish from going up the river.

Mr. HAZEN: What is the position of the fishway at the mouth of the Salmon river beyond St. Martin's in Saint John county? There have been many complaints, which I understand have been looked into with a view to improving conditions.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: The officials tell me that plans are in preparation and that the work will be proceeded with this year.

Mr. HERRIDGE: In view of the international treaties in existence, why was no protest made by the Canadian government when the United States built a dam at Grande Coulee on the Columbia river and made no provision for salmon to go up the upper reaches of the Columbia?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is in the United States, but my understanding is that they did build a fishway at great cost when building the Grande Coulee dam. I do not believe it has been a great success, because the fish in the Columbia river are not going down in numbers.

Mr. HAZEN: There is another dam which interferes with the fish getting to their natural spawning grounds. I refer to the dam known as Miller dam at Newcastle Creek, in Queens county, New Brunswick. I have here a letter dated March 15 of this year from Mr. A. J. Hicks, provincial secretary of the New Brunswick fish and game association. He says in this letter:

> One of the most important issues in respect of fisheries during recent years has been the proposed fishway on the Miller dam at Newcastle creek. The Grand Lake branch has been advocating such a move for the last ten or fifteen years, but without avail. It has been suggested that the dam could very well be dispensed with. Repeated requests have brought assurance from at least two of the recent ministers that such action was contemplated, but that was as far as it went. There is a great deal more to the story, but the last experiment will probably be the installation of the fish trap in order to determine whether or not salmon use the stream for spawning.

Has that matter been thoroughly investigated, and has any decision been made about either removing the dam or installing a fishway?

Mr. MacNAUGHT: At the present moment the department are carrying on investigations to find out how many fish go up this stream. The investigation has been going on for some years, dating back to 1938, when the question first arose.

Mr. HAZEN: Was a trap put in for the first time this year?

Mr. MacNAUGHT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

99. Fish culture, $350,000.

Mr. McLURE: There is a small increase in this vote. The government purchased for the Department of Fisheries a number of old mill dams in the different provinces—I am speaking now of my own constituency—for the purposes of fish culture. Work was started at Simpson's dam and at St. Andrew's dam and was supposed to have been completed two years ago. What progress, if any, has been made with this work? I would also ask what success the department has had with lobster culture on the British Columbia coast?

Mr. MacNAUGHT: The hon. member knows a large number of unused mill dams were constructed at various times in the past for mill operations. The matter he speaks of has received a great deal of consideration over the years, and about two years ago it was decided to carry out investigations to indicate whether, by the reforming of the mill ponds through repairing the dams, the trout industry might be rebuilt. There are problems of reproduction, because a large proportion of the trout runs have been sea-running fish. There is also the matter of the fish population that can be supported in a given area, depending upon the supply of food. Arrangement for the investigation has been made with the province, the fisheries research board and this department co-operating.

I believe the hon. gentleman referred to Simpson's pond. That has been repaired and made ready for operation, and materials are now in process of being obtained for rebuilding a dam at what is known as Andrew's pond near New Glasgow, Prince Edward Island. Another site near Pownal known as Jones' or Worth's pond, has been selected, and it is hoped that the necessary work can be completed early in 1948 or 1949.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Can the minister give an over-all picture of his plans for developing the industry? This would be an appropriate opportunity for him to do so. Does he intend to do something to increase the fish population throughout the country? If so, by what device? I am not quite sure what the cost of fish culture is throughout the country, and I should like to hear something about the minister's plans.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps the minister might also answer the second question asked by the hon. member for Queens as to the success of the work on lobsters on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MAYHEW: The lobster experiment on the Pacific coast I would not care to describe as a success. Some of the lobsters that were taken out and set free have been lost; but some that were in crates are still living. It is known they have molted, mated and berried as usual, but we cannot say with what conclusion. This is the fifth experiment with lobsters in British Columbia. In Washington they have had a good many and none of them to date have been successful. However, we have not yet had the final report on the last experiment.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the minister give a general over-all picture of his policy with respect to fish culture? I am considerably interested in this, because our fisheries are running down everywhere in Canada and that is not a satisfactory condition. For the last fifty or sixty years the general attitude of Canadians has been that Canada is something to exploit, something out of which we should make all the money we can, leaving the remains to those who come after us. That is poor management, and I cannot think of any way whereby that tendency will be checked except by a determined attitude on the part of the House of Commons. I for one wish to see that trend reversed. I wish to feel that Canada is improving in every respect, building up its forests, farms, fisheries and all the other things that go to make Canada what it is. Is the minister planning a long-range program which would envisage such a process so far as our fisheries are concerned?

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but the amount of the estimate is $350,000 for fish culture. What the hon. member wishes to know is our general over-all plan for increasing the fishing industry in Canada. Is that it?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I might be more specific. I have heard the hon. member for New Westminster speak eloquently, enthusiastically and earnestly about the deterioration in the salmon industry. I have never heard a minister announce a policy whereby that trend will be arrested and development started in the other direction. I should like to hear a hopeful note. Surely we are not going to allow this industry to deteriorate. The minister speaks of taking up time. Just as the hon. member for Vancouver South has said, every year during the time I have been here it has been my experience that we have never got down to fisheries until the last two or three hours, and then one has almost to apologize for spending some time on the subject. I do not know how we shall develop the fisheries of Canada if we do not take some time in discussing them, to see whether the money we vote for the industry is properly spent. Will the minister give us an assurance that everything is being done to develop the industry.

Mr. MAYHEW: I must reply to the hon. member. In the first place, the halibut fishery on the west coast had been going down nearly to nil. The halibut commission was formed and it has taken charge of rehabilitation of this fishery. We now have in British Columbia the largest halibut fishing industry—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How long did that take?

Mr. MAYHEW: It started in 1927. They are doing exactly the same thing with salmon. We have the international Pacific sockeye salmon commission, one of the members of which is the hon. member for New Westminster. We contributed $1,000,000 as Canada's share in building the Hell's Gate fish ladders to increase the run and conserve the fish population of the Fraser river. We are spending a considerable sum of money, as will be noted in the estimates, on inspection and research. Our fish last year was worth in the neighbourhood of $120 million to Canada, and we are taking every step to build that up to something near what it should be. I do not know how far we can go, but our difficulty is, in part, to get the fish in good shape into central Canada. We are a little differently situated in Canada from most countries so far as our fish is concerned. Where we have our fish we have a fairly small population, and that is one of the reasons why it is more difficult for Canada to develop fisheries than it is for some other countries.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Can the minister report, in regard to the salmon fisheries, a degree of success comparable with that which he has reported in regard to halibut?

Mr. MAYHEW: It has not been going on for as long a time. The Hell's Gate ladders have been in operation for only one year. It is proving a success, and no one denies that it has been a good experiment.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What is the situation on the eastern coast? What is the particular fish about which the people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are concerned?

Mr. MAYHEW: On the Atlantic coast, conservation applies to lobsters and oysters, and work is being done in that direction.

Mr. McKAY: What about mackerel and cod?

Mr. MAYHEW: They are working on lobsters and oysters just as they have done with salmon.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Are they making progress comparable with that which the minister has reported in regard to halibut?

Mr. MAYHEW: They are definitely making progress in lobsters and oysters.

Item agreed to.

100. Oyster culture, $45,700.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Our oysters on the west coast are mainly from Japanese seed brought in from that country, and of course that was cut off during the war. Has the fisheries research board been able to develop a method with respect to oyster seed for the west coast, so that we can develop this industry in Canada instead of having to rely on Japan?

Mr. MAYHEW: Experiments are going on now.

Mr. McLURE: With regard to this item for oyster culture, I see there is a small increase this year in the estimate. It should be much larger, because we are not able to develop nearly the amount of oysters that the trade is demanding. What were the royalties collected in 1947, and what were the rental fees for 1947? Is the department considering doing away with royalties on all these leases in 1948?

Mr. MacNAUGHT: The royalties on the oysters marketed amounted to $510.45. The lease rentals amounted to $3,030.19. Consideration has not been given to the abolition of the royalties.

Mr. McLURE: The amount collected is so small that it is hardly worth having them.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries Research Board of Canada—

101. Operation and maintenance, $894,690.

Mr. BAKER: I do not propose to take up very much time of the committee, but I wish to commend any expenditure the Department of Fisheries has seen fit to put in under this item 101 this year, or may see fit to put in a like item in any other year for the operation and maintenance of the fisheries research board. My wife happened to christen the ship Harengus, which is used by the joint fisheries board of Newfoundland and Canada for research purposes. That ship has been doing a great deal of good work. I consider our knowledge of fisheries is really only in its infancy. We should do anything that can be done along these lines. We shall learn a great deal in time to come. I shall not take any more time of the committee except to say that I am glad to see that this item has been approved.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): This afternoon the hon. member for Nanaimo said something about Canada's giving up her boundaries to the United States. That sounded peculiar to me. If we give up our boundaries to the United States and so on, and if we are getting so close to that country, it seems to me that we should have been represented in Philadelphia in order to have our opportunity to name Dewey as candidate for president of the United States. I am not sure about where we stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HAZEN: I believe that about two years ago lobsters were transported by air from the Atlantic and transplanted in the Pacific ocean. This was an experiment for the purpose of finding out if those fish could be developed there. What is the result of that experiment? Not long ago I read that a most exhaustive hunt for these lobsters had been made in the waters of the Pacific, but that after a thorough search, only one had been found. What is the position?

Mr. MAYHEW: I just finished making a statement on that subject at the request of the hon. member for Queens. It is on the record.

Mr. HAZEN: That is all right, then. I shall not pursue the matter further.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask a few questions, and I do not intend to make any apology for raising them. This idea that we must scurry through at the last moment just because the government has not seen fit to bring these matters on in time is all wrong. I am sorry to hear people apologize for asking questions. It was the hon. member opposite, who, I think, had some interesting things to say, but seemed to feel that he should not say them. We should sit here just as long as there is anything to be said. I object strongly to this hurry and scurry.

I should like to ask a question about this item, which is for nearly $1,000,000. I should like to know something about the fisheries research board. I hope the minister will not feel this atmosphere of hurry, but will rather just take his time. In particular I should like to ask how this money is expended geographically because, though we may forget it, there is quite a considerable fishing industry on the great lakes, and sometimes one is concerned lest it is disappearing. For instance, I discovered that in Georgian bay, around Parry Sound, fishing, which used to be a considerable industry, seems to have perished altogether. I should like the minister to deal with that matter at some length.

Mr. MAYHEW: I will give the hon. member a breakdown by stations of the item for research:

Headquarters	$ 34,582
Nanaimo	261,775
Vancouver	111,266
Central part	35,933
Gaspe	57,117
Halifax	111,367
St. Andrews	222,197
Atlantic salmon	4,030
Atlantic herring	12,000
Toronto	19,423
Northwest Territories	12,000
East Arctic	13,000
Total	$894,690

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My question was not merely as to the amounts, although I wanted them. I should like to know something about what we are doing. We are spending $1,000,000 and that is an important amount. Incidentally, I notice that little is going into the great lakes area. I can speak for one part of that area and say there is every reason why more should be expended there, because the situation is bad indeed. I should like to have this question dealt with.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): While the minister is acquiring from the records the information necessary in order to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, perhaps I might be permitted to say a word. I should not like to have this vote pass without expressing the appreciation that I and all the fishermen on the west coast feel for the new idea the department has brought forward this year, in stationing a fisheries vessel a considerable number of miles off the west coast of Vancouver island, in order to assist in the development of the deep-sea fisheries on the Pacific coast. I do not think many Canadians have been aware of the tremendous wealth of marine life available to our fishermen off the continental shelf; and I am sure that the research to be undertaken by the department under the scheme evolved this year will be of tremendous value in the development of the Pacific coast fisheries. I want to express my keen appreciation of the excellent work being done by the fisheries department in this regard.

Mr. REID: I should like to offer the minister one suggestion in reference to research work. The United States places scientists on its warships when they are at sea. At points twenty, thirty or forty miles off the coast these fisheries biologists and scientists test the water for salinity, temperature and what is known as plankton, the minute particles in the water which the fish obtain as the water goes through their gills. It is expensive to build or buy or hire a large vessel and crew and send it out to do that kind of work; but the United States have found it convenient and much less expensive to place two or three scientists on their off-shore patrol naval vessels and provide them with the necessary equipment for this experimental and investigational work outside the three-mile limit. So I suggest that this idea might be considered by Canada because I think it is high time we followed along the lines of other nations and found out more about the temperature of the water, the salinity, the plankton and so on, with a view to ascertaining where many of the species of fish go and how they travel.

Mr. MAYHEW: I hope I have not given the impression that I want to hurry through with these estimates. As a matter of fact, the very opposite is true.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not think the minister has given that impression.

Mr. MAYHEW: I was hoping that I might get a better grasp of the whole industry, and I rather welcome these questions though I do not like to see the committee delayed. I have here a detailed report of what goes on in the various divisions with respect to this research item, and if there is any particular section the hon. member wishes me to deal with I shall be glad to do so. It would take me perhaps twenty-five or thirty minutes to read all the information I have here.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not suggesting that. I should like to know, first, whether I am correct in understanding that the department is responsible for the fisheries of the great lakes, as it is for the fisheries of all navigable waters. Am I right in that, to begin with?

Mr. MAYHEW: No, we do not administer the great lakes. We do administer Great Slave lake and Northwest Territories and the two coasts. When you look at Canada on a fisheries map it is entirely different from looking at it from an agricultural standpoint. Altogether the coast line is nearly twenty thousand miles long. Therefore a great deal of work has to go on in many different places. This may seem a fairly sizeable amount of money, but when spread over the whole area it really is not so very much. I would offer no apologies for asking that this amount of money be spent on research, a field which is so capable of development and in which so little has been done up to the present time. Rather I would apologize for the smallness of the item.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Still I want to follow this a little. The minister referred to an expenditure of some $20,000 at Toronto. Of course it may be that through some accident you did some work there, even though apparently you are not interested in inland fisheries. If you are not interested and not responsible for the inland fisheries, however, I need not pursue the matter further along that line.

Mr. MAYHEW: That $20,000 was for printing, publications and so on.

Mr. MOORE: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to a problem which confronts the fresh-water fishing industry in the three prairie provinces. I appreciate that the federal department deals mainly with the salt-water fishing industry, but in the prairie provinces we have a problem known as infestation, which has been serious in recent years. It is quite true that the research branch of the department has done a good deal in endeavouring to find a solution of this problem, but up to the present the situation has not been met successfully. I would urge the minister to look into the matter and see that further scientific work is carried out, in the hope of finding a solution of this problem, since the fresh-water fishing industry in the prairie provinces is important to us, and at the present time it is threatened by this infestation.

Mr. MAYHEW: The amount to be spent this year in that area for white fish research is $50,000.

Mr. KNIGHT: In southern central Saskatchewan we do not have much commercial fishing. However, we do have the Winnipeg goldeye, a good, game, valuable little fish, which we can catch in both branches of the Saskatchewan river. There is a mystery in connection with the goldeye, in that it is disappearing and no one seems to know why. I believe the research branch of the fisheries department has carried on some investigation, and I am wondering how they are getting along with it and if they are finding any reason for this disappearance. Not so long ago I heard the sergeant-at-arms of this house ask some of the western members where he could get a supply of goldeye for the parliamentary dining-room, which to me is a sign that the supply is limited.

I believe smoked goldeye is almost internationally known to gourmets as a typical Canadian dish. Next to maple syrup it is perhaps the dish known to most people as most typically Canadian. The industry of catching and smoking goldeye is centred in the city of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and the greatest quantities are caught commercially in lake Winnipeg. The goldeye go up the rivers to spawn, and I am interested, owing to the fact that the southern branch of Saskatchewan goes through my home city of Saskatoon.

Various theories have been advanced as to why the goldeye has disappeared. Some people say it is due to disease. Many others hold that it is by reason of the fact that the rivers have been dammed here and there. About 1932 a dam was built across the river near Saskatoon as a relief project; and while fish ladders were built into the dam it is a fact that if you want to find where the fish are you may do so by watching the small boys who go down to the dam to fish on Sunday mornings. You will find that invariably they fish on the side of the dam toward Hudson bay, if I may put it that way. So, if the goldeye are always more plentiful on that side of the dam that seems to be proof that these dams do interfere with the spawning of these fish.

I should like to see something done in this connection. I know the department has been inquiring into the matter. This is something typically Canadian we should try to preserve, and I wish to know if the minister has any information on the matter.

Mr. MAYHEW: Goldeye investigation started in 1945, and we hope to have it completed by 1949. Up to date $14,000 has been spent, and the amount appropriated for this year is $4,500. The results of the investigation extended to Alberta and revealed a new commercial source of goldeye in lake Claire, a western tributary of lake Athabaska. Information has been obtained on spawning, growth, habits, food, physiological tolerance, net mesh size, and effect of dams. The plan is to obtain more detailed spawning information in lake Claire, continue the goldeye studies and develop management practices tc be made effective by regulation. Full information should be obtained on the life history of the goldeye, spawning areas and general distribution, and studies of the causes of depletion of stocks in lake Winnipeg continued. It has been shown that the results from trapping the young fish in the autumn in marshes and shallow lakes of the Saskatchewan delta by a series of dams constructed for the benefit of muskrats, has been one of the main causes of the depletion of this species, and it has been shown that the young fish can be flooded from these areas to deeper water by judicious operation of the dams. These flooding operations have been started, and a marked improvement in supply is anticipated.

Mr. KNIGHT: I believe that if these fish ladders were made more effective it would have a good effect. There is no doubt that the fish are more plentiful on the north side of the dam than on the south side. One can go there and get a whole bagful of goldeye in a morning on one side of the dam if he knows what bait to use. But on the other side he will get practically nothing. This appears to prove conclusively that these fish dams are not sufficiently easy to get up, if I may put it that way.

How is this appropriation being spent? The minister has told us that some research is going on. What about the actual spending of the money?

Mr. MAYHEW: The money is being spent for payment of the scientists who are doing that work at the present time. We have scientists who are studying the goldeye. We hope they will be able to make a full report in 1949.

Fisheries Research Board of Canada—

102. Construction and improvements, $75,000.

Mr. HAZEN: Is the minister in a position to tell us for how many miles off the shore of Canada the dominion government claims jurisdiction over the fisheries? I do not know if the minister is in a position to answer that question at the present time. I understand, however, that the law says we claim jurisdiction up to what has been called the three-mile limit. But on September 28, 1945, the President of the United States issued a proclamation, in which apparently he extended the limit of the jurisdiction of that country to a very great extent.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: Under what item does that come?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not wish to embarrass the minister by asking the question on this item, if he would have it otherwise. However I would bring the matter to his attention, because it is of some importance.

Mr. MacNAUGHT: It might come more properly under the next item.

Item agreed to.

103. To provide for Canadian share of expenses of the international fisheries commission appointed under treaty dated March 2, 1923, between Canada and the United States for the preservation of the north Pacific halibut fisheries, $31,500.

Mr. HAZEN: I am speaking now without having made any careful study of the matter recently, but I have pointed out what was done by the President of the United States. In part this proclamation stated:

Where such activities have been or shall hereafter be developed and maintained by its nationals alone, the United States regards it as proper to establish explicitly bounded conservation zones in which fishing activities shall be subject to the regulation and control of the United States.

Those concessions were not confined to the three-mile limit. On the same day another proclamation was issued, which dealt with the continental shelf. That proclamation claimed rights for the government of the United States away beyond the three-mile limit, in what was described as the continental shelf.

I believe a resolution was introduced in this house at one time in this connection, but I understand that it was dropped afterwards, and we heard nothing more about it. If the minister is in a position now to answer I would ask him to tell us over how many miles off the shores of this country Canada claims jurisdiction over the fisheries.

Mr. MAYHEW: At the moment the three-mile limit is all over which we can claim jurisdiction. So far as the United States proclamation is concerned, I am informed that they have not taken any action in the matter. The government is dealing with that matter at the present time.

Mr. HAZEN: Has the United States congress ever passed an act confirming the proclamation of the president? Does the minister know if it is necessary for congress to do so before the provision would come into force?

Mr. MAYHEW: They have not passed anything that has been brought to our attention. I do not know what their law would be in that respect or whether they can do this by proclamation. At any rate the matter is now being examined by our government.

Mr. GREEN: By which department?

[Mr. Hazen.]

Mr. MAYHEW: The Department of External Affairs.

Item agreed to.

105. To provide for Canadian share of expenses of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission to overcome obstructions to the ascent of sockeye salmon at Hell's Gate canyon and for investigating and overcoming obstructions to such salmon at other points on the Fraser river watershed, $250,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I notice here an amount for clearing obstructions in the Fraser river, and an amount provided for Canada's share of expenses of the Pacific salmon fisheries commission. This vote has been reduced from $300,000 to $250,000. In view of the undoubted damage by the Fraser river floods this year to both Hell's Gate and the bridge over Hell's Gate, I would have expected that this appropriation would have been larger rather than smaller. Can the minister explain why it is smaller this year than it was last year?

Mr. MAYHEW: This $250,000 is the balance of $1,000,000 on the Hell's Gate canyon project. When these estimates were prepared we had no knowledge of the present floods. If there is any special work to be done—and there will be this year—it will probably be taken out of this vote.

107. To provide for transportation, dressing and dyeing and other expenses incidental to receiving and disposing of fur seal skins accruing to Canada pursuant to provisional fur seal agreement between Canada and the United States by exchange of notes dated December 26, 1947, $550,000.

Mr. McLURE: When the hon. member for New Westminster was speaking this evening I did not know whether he said that part of the seal fisheries up in the Pribilofs belonged to British Columbia or not. I notice that he is in the chamber, and I should like to know what he said in that regard. There is an increase of $80,000 in this vote over last year. Is that because it is expected that there will be a larger catch this year?

Mr. MAYHEW: No, it is because freight and curing costs are expected to be greater.

Mr. PEARKES: I regret that the catch will not be larger, as no doubt the committee will gather from the remarks I made earlier. Could the minister tell us how much we derive from the sale of furs?

Mr. MAYHEW: The total was $469,985.

Mr. PEARKES: It is ridiculous that we should expend $470,000 last year on transportation and get in return only $469,000.

Mr. MAYHEW: That is the net profit.

Item agreed to.

108. To provide for the destruction of harbour seals, $30,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How much was paid out last year in British Columbia?

Mr. MAYHEW: The bounty is $5 per seal, and the amount paid in British Columbia was $13,205.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How much was paid on the eastern coast?

Mr. MAYHEW: Nova Scotia, $5,935; Prince Edward Island, $995; New Brunswick, $2,685.

Mr. HAZEN: Is that a bonus for destruction?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes, $5 per seal.

Item agreed to.

Special—

111. To provide for assistance in the construction of vessels of the dragger and/or longliner type, subject to such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $200,000.

Mr. McLURE: What assistance was given in connection with draggers for scallop fishing?

Mr. MAYHEW: There is no subsidy on that.

Mr. McLURE: What is the item for?

Mr. MAYHEW: This is to provide a subsidy of $165 a ton for the building of small trawlers, and a loan may also be obtained from the provinces joining in the scheme. It is to encourage fishermen to use larger and better boats on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. McLURE: The boats which the ordinary fishermen use are not of the dragger type. A certain amount of money has been voted under research to survey the scallop beds in order to find out where the best are located. This will be a good industry in the maritime provinces. Last year or the year before, support was given to two or three concerns in Nova Scotia. Application was also made from Prince Edward Island for assistance in the construction of draggers. I do not think anyone outside of one firm got any assistance.

Mr. HAZEN: How much was expended last year? How many vessels received assistance? Can the minister give us a breakdown for the maritime provinces?

Mr. MAYHEW: A total of $40,504 was spent last year, all in New Brunswick.

Item agreed to.

Special—

112. To provide for assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities, subject to the approval of the governor in council, $50,000.

Mr. McLURE: I should like to have a breakdown, especially in connection with Prince Edward Island, of the money spent last year.

Mr. MAYHEW: No money was spent last year. The available supply of bait at the various centres has long been one of the difficulties facing the fishing industry, and different plans to overcome it have been tried. While a similar item was included in the estimates last year, the departmental organization had not been developed sufficiently to enable the consideration necessary in order to establish regulations. At the moment new regulations are being placed in final shape, and it is expected that they will be promulgated almost immediately.

The plan in mind contemplates assisting in the cost of bait storage space that would be provided as an adjunct to a fish cold storage plant at present existing or to be built. Consideration would also be given to assisting in the providing of space in a general cold storage plant.

Item agreed to.

709. Fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and protection services—further amount required, $265,700.

Mr. McLURE: The hon. member for Saint John-Albert had a considerable discussion with reference to this item, and I have no doubt he wants to expand his ideas on it and find out how many inspectors we are to have and how many guardians in connection with the patrol service and the general protection services.

Mr. MAYHEW: This amount is to take care of increases in salaries. There is no significant addition to the field staff.

Item agreed to.

711. Oyster culture—further amount required, $5,520.

Mr. SINCLAIR: When this item was before the committee on the main estimates I raised the question of the provision of oyster seed in British Columbia. Up to now we have had to rely on Japan for our seed, and the result is that our oysters do not produce regularly every year. The hon. member for Queens has sent me a note asking why we did not get our seed from Prince Edward Island where oyster seed is produced annually at our biological stations. Prince Edward Island oysters have a great reputation and are superior to the Japanese oysters we grow in British Columbia. Has anything been done in that connection?

Mr. MAYHEW: I have been told that nothing has been done. They are two different types of oysters.

Mr. SINCLAIR: How do they know the Prince Edward Island seed would not be satisfactory if they have not tried it? Olympia oysters in the state of Washington are produced from east coast oysters.

Mr. MAYHEW: The point is well taken. It is no use saying nothing can be done until you try it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has the minister invited the various provincial governments to meet with the federal department with a view to planning a policy of fisheries development and to give leadership to the province?

Mr. MAYHEW: A conference of the provincial fisheries departments with the dominion department is planned for this fall.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Does the minister feel satisfied that he has money enough for the work of his department, or has he difficulty in getting enough?

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not think we have been whittled down much this year. Some items have been cut, but when you can justify an expenditure you can always get the money.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am glad to hear that. I like to see a man have money enough to do the job, and then I like to see him do the job.

Item agreed to.

Special—

715. To authorize and to provide for the fisheries prices support board to reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for administrative expenses in connection with the purchase of 190,000 cases of east coast canned fish on behalf of fisheries prices support board under chapter 42, statutes of 1944 and order in council P.C. 1229 dated March 25, 1948, $7,500.

Mr. McLURE: Can I have an answer now to my second question on page 5582 of Hansard, reading as follows:

Will the fisheries prices support board or the Department of Fisheries endorse and support a participating advertising sales promotion plan for their canned and processed fish products from the province of Prince Edward Island? If not, why not?

Mr. MAYHEW: The department by this vote is requesting an increase for the promotion of sales. The request of the hon. member that special assistance be given to the producers of one province would hardly be feasible for the federal government. Any scheme of sales promotion in which the federal government would join with the fishing industry would have to be a national scheme. There has been no request from the fishing industry as a whole for the government to participate in such a scheme.

Mr. McLURE: There has been a request from the fishermen of Prince Edward Island.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Pensions and other benefits—Militia Pension Act—

242. Government's contribution to the permanent forces pension fund, $4,109,109.

Mr. PEARKES: This amount of money is payable as the government's share toward the pension fund of personnel of the active forces. I should like to bring to the minister's attention the fact that these pensioners are very much in the same position as other pensioners across the country; and while we have seen increases made in the pensions which have been awarded to veterans under the Department of Veterans Affairs, these men I speak of are suffering from the very same handicaps as the veterans under the Department of Veterans Affairs. I realize that there are other groups of personnel, such as the superannuated civil servants, who might be classed in the same category; but I have received representations from a great many men who are under this pension scheme and who have asked whether it is not possible for the government to consider some means of increasing their pension because, when they made their contributions over a period of twenty or more years, the cost of living was very much less then than it is now. If we want to encourage men to go into the regular forces of the armed services we want to be able to offer them a degree of security when their service is passed. I would ask the minister whether he has considered the desirability of increasing these pensions. I realize there are difficulties in the way.

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): That question was raised earlier in the session and I made a reply based on a statement made earlier by the Minister of Finance in connection with civil service superannuation, that these pensions were matters of contract and these pensioners were in exactly the same category as others with regard to pensions. Pensions either from the government or from civil employers could not be altered without changing everything that had happened up to then. It would be difficult to change a particular category. The hon. member who raised the question will appreciate that those who are enjoying pensions on account of their service in the armed forces, and those who may enjoy pensions in the armed forces are in a favourable position compared with either civil servants or other employees in Canada. We feel that the matter is one which must be regarded in its entirety and that it would be impossible to differentiate between one class and the other. But I would point out something which I think the hon. member knows very well, and that is that pensioners who are former members of the armed forces are in a favourable position compared with the others.

Mr. PEARKES: I realize the difficulties that exist in this particular respect, but I cannot agree with the minister that the pensioners under the Militia Pension Act are in more favourable circumstances than personnel who are drawing pensions from other government pension schemes such as the civil service. I would point out that these men have been on service during a large portion of their lives; and, while it may not be possible to increase the pension, I suggest to the minister, in view of the fact that recently the Department of Veterans Affairs have opened hospitals across the country to personnel who are in receipt of war veterans allowance, he should confer with the Minister of Veterans Affairs to see whether it is not possible to enable those old soldiers, sailors and airmen now pensionable to have the advantages of veteran hospitals on the same basis as those recipients of war veterans allowance. Will the minister say that he will take that matter into consideration?

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

243. To provide for the orderly establishment and organization of the defence forces of the army, navy and air services on a peacetime basis, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $255,514,584, including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $227,082,515, and commitments for future years of $28,432,069 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1948-49 will not exceed $207,082,515.

Mr. PEARKES: This is a principal item, and it embraces really all the essential elements of this department's estimates. They deal with the army, the navy and the air force. Has the minister any suggestion as to how he wishes to deal with this question? We cannot pass this important item by just saying, "Carried". I have several questions to ask the minister, and I expect others have, too. We should have some orderly method of dealing with it.

Mr. CLAXTON: I am in the hands of the committee, and anything that hon. members wish to discuss now we might take up. That would be the right way to proceed.

Mr. PEARKES: There are many questions one would like to ask in order to get information which, in my opinion, is necessary in connection with this vote. I will deal, first of all, with the strength of the forces, which would come under the items of pay and allowances. Those items of pay and allowances are grouped under three different services, and therefore I shall have to deal with all three at the same time.

The Minister of National Defence in his statement yesterday gave certain figures as reported at page 5782 of Hansard, and the first question I would ask is this. The figures shown in the columns for navy, army and air force are opposite the heading "Authorized for additional commitments". What are those additional commitments?

Mr. CLAXTON: The cabinet authorized the figures of 7,500 for the navy, 18,750 for the army and 12,075 for the air force, or a total of 38,325. These were the authorized establishments for these three services and the total for the whole. Subsequently to these authorizations having been granted—I should think the date would be January or February, 1947—submissions were made to the cabinet defence committee, and then to the cabinet, for increases in the establishments for certain specific purposes, and they resulted in the additions of 375 for the navy, 1,329 for the army, and 2,121 for the air force; so that the establishments are as set out on page 5782 of Hansard, as stated by the hon. member: 7,875 for the navy; 20,079 for the army; 14,196 for the air force.

Mr. PEARKES: Thank you. When we come to the question of reserves, in 1946, the figure given for the reserve army as being the minimum requirements, during the presentation of his estimates by the then Minister of National Defence, was 187,864. That was not reduced, but the recruitment was authorized in 1947 only up to a strength of 90,000. That figure was given by the present Minister of National Defence in a return which was tabled during this session, to be found on page 2327 of Hansard. Yesterday the minister announced a target figure of 47,102, and when referring to that he took some credit for the fact that the army had recruited up to 76 per cent of that total.

This is the first time I have heard of this target figure, and I must say it is a unique method of bringing units up to strength by cutting the establishment in half and then declaring that the unit is approximately 70 per cent of strength. A somewhat similar case, and I fancy a more serious one too, is that in connection with the Royal Canadian Air Force auxiliary squadrons. In 1946 the figure was set at 4,500. The limitation imposed by the present minister in 1947, which was, I believe, approved by parliament, was 3,121. My authority for that will be found in the figures given by the minister on March 10 of this year, as reported in Hansard at page 2059. And now we have a target figure of 2,632, and we find that the percentage is only 32 per cent recruited. I hope there is not to be any further reduction in order to bring the percentage up. When was the decision made to set this reduced target figure, and has any announcement been made before with regard to that?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes. The first question raised by the hon. member was with regard to the figure set for the establishment of the reserve army, at a total which he gave as 187,864, which I have not had a chance to verify but which I accept. That is the establishment set out by my predecessor for a reserve army of six divisions, which would be the scale of organization for all Canada in the event of an emergency. But I think the hon. member would be the first to admit, on the basis of his own experience, that anything like that figure would be quite out of the possibility of our raising in peacetime. Establishments are set by units and by strengths, and they are intended to be a description of the force that we would have in the event of a total mobilization. When that was set out, I think the minister of defence of the time indicated that the target for that particular year was something a great deal less; and from year to year the defence services set their targets based on what they believe they can train and on what they believe they can get. Both factors are taken into consideration.

The figures for the navy, army and air force for this year were set out by me in my statement yesterday at page 5782 of Hansard. There is no need to repeat them. But the figure set out for an establishment of six divisions remains as it was set out by my predecessor, in 1945, at the figure described by the hon. member. There is a difference between the establishment and what one can do with activated units and their staffs of officers, N.C.O.'s and men.

Mr. PEARKES: Yes, I agree. I think the minister will recall that I referred some years ago to the fact that this original figure was a foolish and boastful statement to make. I am quite certain that it is beyond the realm of possibility. I want to emphasize the fact that here we started out with an organization, as the minister has just said, based on six divisions. He found in 1947 that it was impractical to get anywhere near that number, so he reduced it until we were down to 90,000. Then, because he has found this year that it is impractical to reach that figure, he has cut it in half again. The semblance of six divisions has gone up in air; it has vanished. There is not even the vaguest skeleton. You may have it on paper, but when you have cut so drastically as that, I think you will agree with me that the idea of six divisions is at the moment not within the realm of reality.

I wish to emphasize this point. It is just supporting what I said yesterday that we are trying to build on time-honoured, though time-worn-out formations, and present conditions require an entirely different approach to this subject of national defence. I think this is strong evidence in support of what I said then.

May I ask another question with regard to the strength of the active army, particularly the field force? We have been told the units—or if we have not been told, I think it is generally known—comprising the field force or, as it has sometimes been referred to, the mobile brigade. Will the minister give us the total number of men in the field force, or the mobile brigade as it has been referred to? If he considers it fitting, I should like to have the numbers by units. But he may feel that, for the purposes of security, it is not advisable to give that information. If he will give the total, well and good. But if he can give us the numbers by units, I should like to have that information.

Mr. CLAXTON: With regard to the hon. member's first remarks, there is a great deal in what he said with which I might agree. But the idea of setting out a six divisional set-up is not to provide targets from year to year for us to aim at, but rather to provide the nucleus upon which we could build and organize should a national emergency occur. There was never any intention, as he knows, that we should recruit to anything like the strength of 187,000.

With regard to the mobile group, as he himself suggests there may be some reasons of security why we should not give the actual strength, unit by unit. I can tell him that, of the present total strength of men in the army of Canada, about twenty per cent are in the mobile brigade. Our expectation is that that percentage will increase as recruiting goes on. As I indicated yesterday, the armoured and infantry battalions are undergoing unit training at Petawawa and also at Wainwright, Shilo, Chilliwack and Valcartier; and this will be the first summer in which we will be able to have unit training for that force. As I think the hon. member knows—and I will be frank with him—it will be extremely difficult for us to protect that force from other demands. When, for example, the emergency occurred in the Fraser valley, the training of some units had to be interfered with, when they were sent from as far away as Calgary; and every now and then a demand for an extra commitment is made from here or there. On that account I was very glad indeed to be able to announce yesterday that we are going to recruit over and above our target, so that we hope to build up the force as speedily as possible, and train it as well as that may be done.

Mr. PEARKES: Then I take it that this is the first year in which any grouping of these regiments into a field brigade has taken place?

Mr. CLAXTON: As battalions, that is right.

Mr. PEARKES: This the first time as units?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is right.

Mr. PEARKES: So, that, as a mixed brigade or brigade group they have not yet had any training as such?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is right.

Mr. PEARKES: Then the minister referred to the Fraser valley, where a number of reserve army units have been training. Will the personnel of those units be authorized to carry out their annual thirty days training in addition to the time they have spent in the flooded area?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes, they certainly are authorized, and the army would be very glad to see them do it. But these men have already given from their ordinary civilian occupations periods of time dating from May 23, when the first unit came out on active service in Kimberley. Whether or not they will be able to devote more time to training this year will depend on the individual unit, but we shall be prepared to provide pay and allowances for every officer and man who may be qualified to train, in addition to anything they may have received in respect of the service they rendered in the flooded area.

Mr. PEARKES: Even though that training is done at local headquarters and not in camp?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes.

Mr. PEARKES: Because all these units give additional time?

Mr. CLAXTON: Right.

Mr. PEARKES: I am not going to take up much more time, but I want to ask one question regarding the Royal Canadian Air Cadet Corps. In the past it has been customary to take these lads to some camp adjacent to or right in one of the R.C.A.F. stations and give them certain instruction in regard to the machines generally. In addition, some of the boys are permitted to have flights, in order that they may become air-minded in the early stages. But before they are permitted to go up as passengers, they have to obtain waivers from their parents. That is acting as a deterrent to some of these boys because their parents are not prepared to sign the waiver. They feel that, as long as the boys are in the uniform of the R.C.A.F. and training, perhaps with the idea of ultimately joining the auxiliary service, they should not be required to do so. Surely we have sufficient confidence in the R.C.A.F. to believe that there is the minimum of risk involved when these boys are taken up. If we want to encourage them to take an interest in the air arm, surely this country can afford to accept whatever risk there may be. So I would ask the minister if for the future he will cancel the regulation which makes it necessary for an R.C.A.F. cadet in uniform to obtain from his parents a waiver in favour of the government before he is permitted to go up on a sight-seeing or passenger flight.

Mr. CLAXTON: Royal Canadian Air Force cadets may fly either with R.C.A.F. pilots in R.C.A.F. planes or, as is the case with the great majority, in planes of the royal flying clubs, which are civilian-owned and operated, and work under contract with the Department of National Defence. I am not quite sure whether waivers were required in the first instance; I would rather doubt it. They might have been required in the second case, but certainly I shall look into the whole question. As a matter of fact, this business of waivers with regard to liability in respect of people flying in R.C.A.F. planes has been the subject of active consideration by the department over the last five or six months. It involves difficult legal problems; and the bill I had hoped to introduce in the house to deal with all these matters had a clause with respect to it. We are still looking into the matter, and I shall be glad to take the hon. member's representations into consideration.

Mr. PEARKES: I know that last year cadets flying in R.C.A.F. planes were required to obtain waivers before they went up.

Mr. LENNARD: I want to make a short reference to the sea cadet movement. As I pointed out to the then minister of national defence two years ago, when pay and allowances were brought in for the officers on the training establishment for sea cadets, any remuneration they received should be in the form of allowances, because their pay is subject to tax. That creates a hardship on these men who are training the sea cadets. I have personal knowledge of these matters, because for several years during the war I was active in the sea cadet movement. Hardly a month goes by when these sea cadet officers do not provide out of their own funds something for the boys in their units. That always has been and probably always will be the case, and it is a hardship to put them on pay and then have that pay taxed in some cases up to a considerable percentage of the total. That is not encouraging. I bring this matter to the minister's attention because I consider it to be unfair.

I should like to ask one or two questions with respect to the navy. I am sure the minister is quite conversant with the situation, but I would remind him that a year ago one of the great complaints in Halifax was that the married personnel did not have suitable housing accommodation for their families. I know several chaps who were extremely interested in their work, but who were greatly dissatisfied because their families could not be properly housed in Halifax and, in some cases, had to remain in central Canada. Perhaps the minister would state just what the situation is now.

Mr. CLAXTON: With respect to the men who, as the hon. member quite rightly said, and as I agree, give their time to the work of the sea cadets and then find their pay subject to income tax, I would point out that they are in the same category as all members of the reserves of the three services. That involves a large question which I am afraid I must leave on the lap of my hon. colleague the Minister of National Revenue. I have had some discussions with the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance in this connection, because I feel, with the hon. member for Wentworth, that it is an important consideration. Having been, as I think he was, one who served and gave all his pay for some considerable time to this kind of work, it is hard to pay income tax on it after you have given it away. So I can assure the hon. member I have made representations to my colleague ,and I shall be reinforced in those representations by the remarks he has just made.

I must say, of course, that from their point of view there is the desirability of trying to get everyone in Canada to pay income tax. Those are two factors to be considered. We would like very much to have this pay and allowances for part-time servants of Canada in the reserve forces when they are working in the navy, the army, the air force or the cadets regarded in the same category. But thus far we have not been able to work it out. I shall keep the matter in mind however, and I shall be glad to put forward the hon. member's representation.

With regard to married personnel at Halifax, we have, as he knows, a program for building married quarters which I announced in the house a month ago. The number of units planned for Dartmouth is eighty in the next year, and that will do quite a lot toward relieving the worst of the situation there.

Mr. LENNARD: Have any been completed in the last year?

Mr. CLAXTON: Quite a number of conversions have.

Mr. LENNARD: That is additional accommodation.

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: Another matter I would bring to the minister's attention is a complaint made by many of the naval personnel stationed at, we will say, Halifax, whose homes are in central Canada. They find it difficult to pay their fares on their annual leaves. Has any consideration been given to issuing an annual warrant for annual leave to their home destinations?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is a matter under active consideration. If it were only a question of the navy which, as the hon. member knows, is centred chiefly on the two coasts, at Halifax and Esquimalt, it would not be a very difficult matter. But we have tried to put all three services on an exactly equivalent basis with regard to pay and allowances. Once you step out of that extreme situation of Halifax or Esquimalt, you get into the realm of considering such places as Borden, Shilo, Rivers, Chilliwack, Valcartier and so on, with all the difficulties involved in trying to arrive at some basis of a fair allowance. That is a matter under active consideration.

Mr. LENNARD: I know some months ago there were some complaints about food in the navy, especially when personnel were at sea. Has the allowance for food per day per man been raised in the past twelve months? I believe it was sixty-two cents per man per day a year ago. Is that correct? Has the allowance been advanced since then?

Mr. CLAXTON: The ration has not been increased, but the cost of the ration has increased in accordance with the increase in the cost of living. I might say that, to provide for conditions at sea, the navy receives an extra allowance over and above that received by the army and air force personnel. I believe the amount is five cents a day. I must say my experience, from moving around and eating meals served the men in a great many establishments and ships is that, by and large, the meals are very good. I might not have arrived at the right time, but I have sat down with literally hundreds of men and talked with them and never had complaints about the food. I have had lots of complaints—but never about the food. If there is any complaint about it I would suggest that it is not due either to the amount provided to buy food or to the size of the ration. It might be due to the conditions of service, or the way in which the food is presented. We are trying to improve that steadily in the navy, as in the other two services.

The hon. member, who is very much interested in this, might find some considerable improvement in that respect within the last twelve months.

Mr. LENNARD: I have had some little experience. There is one thing I do know about the navy, and that is that, generally speaking, the officers get the same food as the men. Probably, when the minister was dining he was in the wardroom.

There is another matter I should like to bring to his attention, and this applies to the men at sea. It is not right that they should eat their meals in quarters where their clothing is hanging and where different equipment is scattered about. If a cafeteria system were set up, and it were placed in a location apart from their sleeping quarters, it would be a great improvement.

In this respect I believe the United States navy allows, or some months ago did allow, $1.10 a day per man for food alone. I understand that food in the United States navy is very good. I believe the complaint in the Royal Canadian Navy has not been as to the quality of the food. While it may have the required calories, it does not have the bulk. I believe that if many of these young lads had more bulk it would solve much of the difficulty. If they received more bulk they would be better satisfied. They complain about the small quantity of food. The nutrition may be there, the calories and all that sort of thing which they require for sustenance, but they do not think they receive enough of it. That is something the department should consider.

Mr. CLAXTON: I can assure the hon. member that I am very much interested in this question of food for the troops. One of my sins for a very short period of time was that I was a quartermaster sergeant in world war I. It is a confession I have never made before.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I always thought you were a sergeant major.

Mr. CLAXTON: I graduated from the first post to the second. On that account, as well as others, I have been interested in this subject; and when I have made inspection tours I have found, as have other hon. members who have had the experience of inspecting, that things tend to be a little laid on. I have two or three things that are of particular interest; one is fire protection and prevention; another is food, and another is living accommodation.

Mr. GREEN: Were you ever a cook?

Mr. CLAXTON: No.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth, I did have the good fortune to visit San Francisco last August on my way to Australia. While there, I did a most improper thing. I was being shown over a dockyard by the admiral who was in charge of arranging the tour, and suddenly I said to him, "Do you mind if I see the messing accommodation in one of your destroyers? I have heard that they are better than ours in that respect". He said, "No, not at all; step aboard anyone you see". We went aboard a destroyer in process of refitting, and went over it. It was rather like our Tribal class in size and style. I saw there the messing and bunking accommodation, and also their cooking arrangements. I had just been over one of our Tribal class; in fact I spent a day on her, so I had become familiar with the accommodation. I must say that, in consequence of that, I am not sure which system is the better. If you divide the accommodation available for the men into bunking arrangements and messing accommodation you have very much constricted quarters. I am not too sure that our arrangement is not the better.

With regard to the galley and refrigeration arrangements and all that, ours were just as good as theirs. It was an interesting experience; and it left me, being interested in the subject, with an open mind. Certainly it is a thing that has to be followed up and watched.

With regard to the cafeteria system, we follow that almost entirely throughout the shore establishments and big ships. It is applied in part on the small ships.

Mr. LENNARD: I notice that the amount for the sea cadets is increased this year. Is that because of increased camp accommodation, or has the service grown?

Mr. CLAXTON: The arrangements with regard to the sea cadets provide for the same number, but the cost of accommodation has increased.

Mr. McKAY: In order to preserve a quorum in the chamber, may I suggest that the radio which is being listened to with such rapt attention out in the lobby be moved either into the chamber or into the opposition or government lobby, so that we can all hear it. It seems to me that hon. members are more interested in the Louis-Walcott fight than in transacting business. May I make another suggestion? While the minister is giving full and complete replies to the questions being asked, it seems to me that his replies might be more brief and not take up so much time. We are not going to finish much business tonight.

Mr. GREEN: There are four or five questions I should like to ask, the first having to do with the reserve army. In other days it was recognized that if Canadian troops had to fight they would be fighting abroad, and that gave a longer time in which to train our forces. Now we hear that any war which may occur may be fought, at least partly, in Canada. When the minister and his predecessors have spoken of the armed forces they have always emphasized that fact.

As we all know, we are to have a small active army. There is to be only one mobile force, which at the moment is not recruited up to strength. The main force is to consist of the reserve army. It was pointed out back in 1945 that the policy was to have six divisions and, I think, two corps staffs. I have the Hansard here, and the minister's predecessor stated at that time that the total number would be between 135,000 and 150,000. It is now evident that we are not going as far as he had planned in making preparations for the building up of that force.

How long does the department consider it will take to put that reserve army into the field as a fighting force? I think we are entitled to have that information. It may very well be that the plans are such that the force could not be put into the field for a long time. If the job is to defend Canada in these days of warfare in the air, in these days of no warning that war is coming, the reserve force may never have a chance to get into action. That is one of the key factors to keep in mind when we are determining what our defence measures should be. Can the minister answer that question?

Mr. CLAXTON: That is one of those questions where one would have to know when the war broke out, who the prospective enemy was and what he was doing. I cannot answer that question. If it is related to invasion of Canada, then by whom—I should like to ask that—and with what force?

Mr. GREEN: I do not think that is a fair question for the minister to put to me. He said yesterday that a certain nation could send over 1,000 planes.

Mr. CLAXTON: I never said anything of the kind; I said exactly the opposite.

Mr. GREEN: That they might send them over.

Mr. CLAXTON: I did not say that.

Mr. GREEN: Then let us forget about that. I think the minister went pretty far yesterday in the statement he did make. But surely the department has in mind how long it would take to put the reserve army into the field. Suppose war were to break out a month from now or in six months from now; how long would it be before we had that reserve army in the field? I point out to the minister that this is vital, because that is the force on which we must depend for our defences. If the department cannot give that information then I think it should be able to.

Mr. CLAXTON: Neither this department nor any other department in any country of the world can give that unless you give the assumptions on which we have to work. You give us those, and I will give you or I will get my experts to give you the answers. I am not going to give any carte blanche answer to that kind of question, because there is no doubt that I would be wrong.

Mr. GREEN: I do not ask for the exact length of time, but surely the department must know approximately how long it would take to field the reserve army.

Mr. CLAXTON: For what purpose, where and when?

Mr. GREEN: In Canada, for the defence of Canada.

Mr. CLAXTON: We can do a certain job tomorrow and a much bigger job next week and so on. It will go on, on that basis.

Mr. GREEN: Of course that is really no answer at all. I take it from the answer the minister has given that he does not know.

Mr. CLAXTON: I know how difficult it is to answer that kind of question unless I have the facts and assumptions on which it can be answered. I have seen enough of staff course problems that are put to staff officers to know they must have the assumptions on which to give answers. You give me the assumptions and I will get the staff officers to give you the answers, but I cannot give answers without the assumptions.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that the minister put his staff to work on that question.

Mr. CLAXTON: They have worked on questions of that kind. If you provide the assumptions they will provide the answers.

Mr. GREEN: When the minister is expecting the citizens of Canada to form an army on a voluntary basis, some guidance should be given to them, more than is being given by these answers this evening. We have to get down to bedrock to a much greater degree than the minister has done.

Just about a month ago there appeared a Canadian Press dispatch in the Vancouver papers, headed and reading as follows:

U.S. still maintains two bases in north.

Canadian landing fields kept up by Americans to prevent disuse, Ottawa, May 25.

Defence department officials have confirmed a Washington report that members of the United States armed forces still are maintaining two Canadian landing bases on Canada's northeastern frontier.

The Washington report said housing facilities were being built by the United States at Frobisher Bay and Fort Chimo.

It was understood the maintenance crew was a carry-over from the second world war, when the then highly-secret "Crimson Route" was established. The route was a series of landing fields established for short-range aircraft being ferried across the Atlantic.

Since the war, rather than have the air fields fall into disuse, Canada had agreed with the United States that the fields be maintained by American personnel, an official said.

Why should Canada not be manning these two posts herself? Why do we have to have the United States manning these two posts in northeastern Canada?

Mr. CLAXTON: In consequence of our arrangements for joint defence, the United States undertakes certain jobs and the Canadian government undertakes certain jobs. The United States asked our agreement to their rebuilding some of the quarters at Chimo and Frobisher Bay which were unfortunately falling into a state of disrepair, and also to building some married quarters. Those married quarters are being built for us at our expense as well as for them. We agreed to that being done. At the same time we are doing joint operations for them in our north. At one place it is convenient for one country to do it, and at another it is convenient for the other country to do it.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any reason why Canada should not be manning her posts herself? It would be perfectly all right to let the United States use them, but why should Canada not man them herself?

Mr. CLAXTON: Why should the Americans not contribute to the cost of manning posts which they themselves are occupying in accordance with our arrangements? I cannot see any objection to that.

Mr. GREEN: It is all right for them to contribute, but why should Canada not be manning these posts rather than the United States?

Mr. CLAXTON: I am not too sure about those two posts. There are three posts, I think, in Canada, and they are rather small ones, in respect of which the number of United States personnel is larger than the Canadian personnel. That is only three out of quite a number. Generally speaking, there is a Canadian in charge and there are more Canadians than Americans in these places. If there are any exceptions it is because the United States has a particular interest in a particular place, but gradually we will take care of that.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest to the minister that these two posts should be manned by Canadians. Let the Americans use them all they wish, but I cannot see any reason why we should not be manning them with our own personnel.

Another question has to do with the Canadians who served at Hong Kong. As the minister knows, these men have not yet been given Pacific pay. The 1,600 odd men who were recruited in 1945 to go to the Pacific did receive Pacific pay; but these other young men who went to Hong Kong in 1941 and suffered hardships and abuse such as no other Canadian troops have ever suffered since confederation, are not paid Pacific pay. The matter has been raised in the house on other occasions, and just this week we find in the report of the special committee on veterans affairs that a brief was heard by the committee which was submitted by the veterans of Hong Kong. The committee forwarded the brief to the Department of National Defence because, of course, the committee had no power to act upon it, since they were dealing only with questions having to do with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

We on the Pacific coast feel deeply about this matter. These young men went out from Vancouver harbour on that ill-fated expedition. Many of them are now in hospital in Vancouver, and we can tell by looking at the men themselves, even though they are fit, what they have been through. On June 21 an editorial appeared in the Vancouver Province, entitled, "Must They Fight Twice for their Pay?" I think that editorial sums up the sentiment of Canadians from coast to coast with regard to these Hong Kong veterans. I do not think any reason can be given for withholding from them that Pacific pay. Certainly paying them the difference between the old rate of pay and the Pacific rate of pay can be no compensation to them for the sufferings they endured in Japanese prison camps, and I hope that the minister can announce to the committee tonight that these men are to receive the Pacific pay. May I have an answer?

Mr. CLAXTON: If pay were any compensation for sufferings—

Mr. GREEN: It would be some.

Mr. CLAXTON: —I would be only too happy to make the announcement my hon. friend wants. This question has been before the government since, I think, late in 1945. It has been considered on a considerable number of occasions. I have had quite a number of communications from the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada, and the matter has been given active consideration. Since then, that association has appeared and made a very good presentation to the committee on veterans affairs. I shall be very glad that the matter be once more brought before the cabinet for consideration.

Mr. GREEN: My final question has to do with the financial assistance given to the reserve units. I have received a submission from a commander of one of the units on the Pacific coast. As the minister knows, I have shown him that communication. This commanding officer suggests that there should be an allowance to each regiment of between $3,000 and $4,000 a year. His particular regiment is now getting $824.18 a year. He is an officer with an excellent fighting record overseas and an excellent record in the non-permanent active militia before the war. He has gone back to the command of his regiment and was out on duty with it for several weeks during the floods in British Columbia. I think his submission is absolutely correct. He points out, if I may quote two paragraphs from his letter:

> To the writer's knowledge, based upon some years of experience in the non-permanent active militia and the reserve army, N.P.A.M. units and reserve army units by and large have never received sufficient military allowances from the government to cover the actual cost of running the units, the operating deficits of these units being made up by donations of pay from serving personnel—

Not only from the officers but also from the men.

> —or by donations from wealthy benefactors, or both.
> It is the writer's strong conviction that reserve army units should receive government allowances in accordance with the type, strength and location of the unit, sufficient in amount to enable the commanding officers to run a successful and aggressive unit without having to depend upon donations from either within or without the unit to cover such expenses.

Our reserve army is serious business. We are expecting it to defend this country, and I think the day has gone by when the officers and men should be compelled to put up their own money or go and find a sugar daddy and make him an honorary lieutenant-colonel or an honorary colonel in order to get the finances with which to run the regiment. I do not think that is in line with the beliefs of the Canadian people. I do hope that at the present time some better arrangement can be made for the financing of these reserve units.

Mr. CLAXTON: This question has been an active one with the department for a number of years, and last year we had a meeting with the council of defence associations, representing the various corps of the Canadian army. The consequence of that was to increase the unit allowances and change the capitation grants in respect of each unit. Since then, we have had two meetings of members of the council representing the reserve associations, and they are giving us figures on how this is working out. I think our feeling is along the lines of those represented by the hon. member for Vancouver South, and that some further adjustment must be made. We are in close touch with the representative of the reserve associations and the matter is receiving active consideration. Our expectation is that some further grant may be made.

Mr. SKEY: I wish to support as strongly as I can the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South in regard to the Hong Kong veterans, and it will not take me more than a few sentences to state my position. I was pleased to hear the minister say that his department was still considering it sympathetically, but I must add that eighteen months constitute quite a long time to have had the matter under consideration, and action is about due. In fact, it is long overdue.

These men are being denied their just rights on the merest of technicalities. There is no need for me to argue their case tonight, their cruel imprisonment and their great courage. I wish the minister had been present when they presented their brief in the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. CLAXTON: I had already received it.

Mr. SKEY: I am glad to hear that. They showed great sportsmanship. They did not come with a grievance but came simply to give us the facts. The Canadian people were, I know, glad to do everything they could to rehabilitate Canada's veterans. That was one thing that went through the house with unanimous consent, if we ever had unanimous consent. The Canadian people do not want this matter left on their doorstep. If they owe a debt to any of the veterans of Canada for their service during the last war they owe it to the Hong Kong veterans, and they do not want it left on their doorstep. I hope the minister will be able to get his department to come to a decision shortly.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I have listened to the debate, and I have done so for quite a while, I confess that a feeling of bewilderment has come over me. I did not know whether I was taking part in a solemn farce. Either we believe that we need some defence, or we do not. One hon. member last night assured us that we did not need any, because he could give us his assurance that no danger would arise. Unfortunately, I cannot say the same. As I say, I have had a feeling of bewilderment; I did not know whether this was a serious discussion or a sort of Gilbert and Sullivan comedy.

Apparently we have a skeleton; not a complete skeleton, I gather. As I listened to the hon. member for Nanaimo describing what was going on, that feeling of bewilderment which I have already suggested came upon me all the more forcibly, coupled with a sense of a farcial element in this whole matter. Take the "target". That struck me as a most diverting idea. You have an establishment which you cannot reach, so you cut it in two, and when you cannot reach it you cut it in two again. It reminds me of the story of the man who came to a banker with a number of worthless stocks on which he wished to borrow money. He valued them high enough to show a surplus, and the banker said, "Mr. Smith, if you only valued all those securities at twice as much, you would have twice as great a surplus." I think we are in very much the same position.

When I heard the minister say, not without some complacency, as I thought, that we were almost as good as we were in 1939 or thereabouts, it struck me that there were farcical elements in that too, because we all remember the position in which we found ourselves in 1939.

I do not wish to stop there and leave the impression that I am blaming the minister or that I think the minister has no answer. In one way, he has a perfect answer, and I think he has given this perfect answer. That answer is that he cannot get people to enlist, that we know there is full employment, and that we know, therefore, that conditions are such that we can have only a skeleton of a skeleton.

But my complaint is this. The people of Canada are not allowed to know that. If the people of Canada knew they had only a skeleton force, a force that could not do anything; if they knew they were defenceless, and if, having that knowledge, they said, "All right", that would be up to them. If they have no patriotism left, or if they accept the view of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that there is no danger facing them, that is their concern. But I suggest that it is the duty of the government to tell us the truth, to let the people of Canada know the truth, and not to let items appear in the press such as I read yesterday. I read an item in the press yesterday to the effect that the Minister of National Defence was quoted as saying we could defend ourselves against 1,000 aeroplanes. I thought he must have been misunderstood. But there, again, I do not blame the minister.

Mr. CLAXTON: You do not blame me for what appears in the press, do you?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, but I am blaming the minister for this, that the impression has been left throughout the whole course of this debate that things are not so bad; that we are doing not so badly; that there is nothing really much to worry about, and so on. My complaint is that the people are not being told the truth. The people should be told the truth; we here should be told the truth, and if the people are told the truth and they accept the situation, that is up to them.

Mr. PEARKES: I can hardly allow the minister's answer to the hon. member for Vancouver South to pass without some challenge, and that is regarding the length of time it would take to put some of our forces in the field. It is inevitable that, in the proposals to which the minister referred yesterday, plans must be drawn up as to when the first division, or the second or the third division, could be mobilized if they were required. Similar plans existed, to my knowledge, in 1939. We had the example of 1939. We know how long it took for the first division to leave these shores. War broke out in the early part of September, and in early December the first division, untrained, left Canada to complete its training in the United Kingdom, where fortunately it had quite an extended period before being required to go into action.

I am not going to press the minister to give an answer. I do not believe it is in the interests of the security of the country that he should give an answer, but I refuse to accept the idea that no plans are made as to when, under certain sets of circumstances, troops can be made readily available. I suggest that it is not in the interests of security to announce those plans, but I wish that we might have a little more honesty in that respect. I have mentioned the time it took for the reserve army as trained in 1939 to be able to leave Canada to go to the war in that year. I do not think there is any need to labour the point. I said yesterday that the reserve army is no more efficient today than it was in 1939. It has not had unit training. The minister admitted, and it is known everywhere, that we have been concentrating on the training of officers and non-commissioned officers. I do not know that anyone will grumble with that policy, but the fact remains that it is highly doubtful whether the first division of the reserve army today could be mobilized any more speedily than was the case in 1939.

Mr. SKEY: I wish to follow up the point made by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario and refer to the situation in connection with enlistment in Canada. I say to the minister it is my sincere belief, though there may have been improvement lately, that his difficulties with proper recruiting stem from one source and one source only, and that is the rates of pay which the armed services are offering. I think he told us in his speech that they had increased by ten per cent. As the minister well knows, the cost of living has gone away beyond that. It has risen 50 per cent. The cost of food is 90 per cent above what it was in 1939.

These rates of pay are quite out of line with present-day living costs. More than that, they are technically out of line, because the soldier, the sailor and the airman of today are quite different fighting men from what they were in 1914-18 or perhaps even in 1939. As the minister said in his speech, the infantry man has at least six different sets of weapons to learn; the sailor must be a specialist in wireless, radar or some other technical side of naval work; and, as we all know, the airman has a tremendous number of technical requirements to fulfil before he is of any use in that sphere.

These men have jobs they can do in industry. If the minister wants them to go into Canada's active service forces, he must offer them a rate of pay that is at least somewhat competitive, and a ten per cent increase over the rates of pay during the war is certainly not enough to attract men with the technical capacity to master the techniques required in the armed forces of 1948.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wish to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver South concerning the Hong Kong men. It makes me feel ashamed to be a Canadian when I learn that the Hong Kong men are still being considered instead of their being rewarded for the kind of experience they went through. It passes my understanding how the officials of the department could disregard in this case the fact that these men went over there untrained, into almost certain calamity—and they went over there under several other circumstances that were altogether undesirable—purely because Canada was not properly prepared. Then they went through probably the most awful experiences that any group of men in the war went through. In many cases their health was permanently destroyed. Their chances for happiness are, in most cases, gone, if I am correctly informed. Now we hear about their being considered, instead of being rewarded as heroes of that kind ought to be rewarded.

I would say in a general way that if the minister wants an explanation of why his recruiting is not progressing as he would like it to progress, he will find one of those reasons in the fact that rumours have gone over this land concerning the way in which we have treated the Hong Kong men. These stories get about. I wonder how many members of this house right now would like to see their boys, if they had any, go into the army when there was probably a fifty per cent chance of such a boy going through the experiences of a Hong Kong man? I wonder how many would vote to see their boys go in there? I will wager that not a single one in this house would do so. That being so, how can one expect other people to want their boys to go into the army when there is a chance that those boys will go through the harrowing experiences these Hong Kong boys went through, and then be simply considered and considered for months and months and years. I hope we never have to hear once more in this house of these Hong Kong boys being neglected. I hope they are rewarded, without delay, well enough so that they feel that they have been in some measure recompensed for the terrible sacrifices they made in this nation's difficulties in an hour of the gravest kind of peril.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to ask one question about the Royal Military College. The college is being reconstituted, as I understand it, and I should like to ask the minister whether it is the aim of the college to follow its former practice? I may think it may be fairly said that at one time it concentrated mainly on regimental officers. I want to know whether the scheme of training now contemplated will take as its aim the training of people who can do the best and most up-to-date military thinking that they can be capable of?

Mr. CLAXTON: I cannot see the difficulty in the remarks of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. The idea back of the institution of the Royal Military College at Kingston is that we shall have for the three services a training institution which will provide the youth of Canada with a training second to none, measured by university standards, during the academic year; then, in the summer months, it will lead to their spending three and a half months on practical work with the service they select in the branch of the armed services for which they are fitted. Our expectation is that we shall establish new standards in this college equivalent to those of the universities throughout Canada, and that the men who graduate from our college will be well qualified to serve their country either on a full-time basis as members of the active forces or on a part-time basis as members of the reserve forces, but, above all, as citizens of Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am afraid I did not make my question plain to the minister. I will state it a little bit differently. What I want to know is whether the military college, in addition to doing those things that I assume it would do—and they are obvious enough—would attempt, as far as possible, to take the place of what we might call post-graduate work and research work in the ordinary civilian university.

Mr. CLAXTON: No, not at all. It is not a post-graduate college. It is a college which will train the men who go through it in work which is equivalent to under-graduate work in the universities. It is equivalent for the first two years, year by year; and then, if carried on to the full four-year course, it will be equivalent to three years of engineering in the university. Post-graduate work in the armed forces will be carried on with the army staff college, the air staff college and the national defence college.

Demobilization and reconversion—

244. Defence research and development, subject to allocation by the treasury board, and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $1,000,000, $15,997,392.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister explain how the plan is working out under which the Canadian Commercial Corporation is doing all the purchasing for the defence forces? As he will remember, there was a good deal of questioning as to whether that was a wise plan. I think he himself had some doubts last year as to how it would work out. I should like to have a report this evening.

Mr. CLAXTON: I remember the hon. member for Vancouver South raised this question in connection with the amendments to the bills brought before the house early in 1947. At that time I think I frankly said we were trying this out. The Department of Munitions and Supply, which had done our purchasing during the war, gradually contracted; but it has preserved its records and some of its key personnel, and they have been incorporated into the Canadian Commercial Corporation, which has been entrusted with the job of acting as agent for the present Minister of Trade and Commerce in doing purchasing for the Department of National Defence. We find that it does not lead to delay; that the corporation uses its resources of information and trained personnel to ascertain from whom we should procure supplies. By and large we are finding that it is working out very well. Also it preserves a nucleus, should it be necessary in some future emergency again to organize a large purchasing agency.

Mr. GREEN: How does it tie in with the industrial defence board?

Mr. CLAXTON: They do not cross at all, except that the industrial defence board, which is an advisory body, has been asked to advise the government on the measures taken in connection with procurement, purchasing and so on. As yet, we have not had a report from the industrial defence board, but no doubt the members of that board will look into the matter and report to the government.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any liaison between the industrial defence board and the Canadian Commercial Corporation?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes. The industrial defence board has among its members a representative of the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

780. To provide for the orderly establishment and organization of the defence forces of the army, navy and air services on a peacetime basis, and to authorize total additional commitments for this purpose of $63,744,537, including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make additional commitments for the current year of $32,238,578 and additional commitments for future years of $31,505,959 against which additional commitments it is estimated that actual additional expenditures in 1948-49 will not exceed a further amount of $15,000,000.

Mr. PEARKES: Is anything included in this vote for plans in connection with civil defence?

Mr. CLAXTON: No. Any expense in connection with civil defence will be paid out of the appropriation for the administration of the department.

Mr. SKEY: Is anything included in this vote to take care of the payment to the Hong Kong veterans, if the department should decide they deserve it?

Mr. CLAXTON: No, nothing is specifically provided. If the government changed its decision with regard to Hong Kong pay that would be met out of the provisions for pay and allowances.

Mr. SKEY: Has the government taken a position yet?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes, back in 1946; and it was reported to the house in a return.

Mr. GREEN: Is the money available if the government should change its mind?

Mr. CLAXTON: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: The men would not have to wait for another session?

Mr. CLAXTON: No, they could be paid. It will be the responsibility of the government; the money is available.

Mr. GREEN: This item provides over $4,000,000 for search and rescue work, including navigational aids. Can the minister tell us the position taken by his department with regard to the suggestion that a Canadian coastguard service should be set up? Time and again on the Pacific coast we have to call on the United States coastguard service to come to the rescue of ships in distress. I do not think anyone from that coast would disagree when I say we believe that a Canadian coastguard service should be established. What is the situation on that point?

Mr. CLAXTON: Whether or not a Canadian coastguard service should be established is a matter of government policy which would have to be decided by the government as a whole.

Mr. GREEN: Has any decision been reached on that point to date? If not, is it under consideration?

Mr. CLAXTON: Offhand I cannot answer my hon. friend. Perhaps he should direct his question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister know whether it is even under consideration?

Mr. CLAXTON: It has been under consideration.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

293. General administration, $1,329,134.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No. I presume the minister is going to say something about his department.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): The estimates for customs and excise consist of three main operating votes: general administration, inspection, and port office operation. There is a further vote of $300,000 for expenses which cover the customs-excise seizures, and the revenue from these seizures for 1948-49 is estimated at about $400,000.

The total expenditure for 1948-49 is estimated at $15,926,000 odd. Of this total, some $13-250,000 represent salaries of our permanent and temporary officers. Salaries represent 83·26 per cent of the total expenditure. Moreover, of the total amount to be expended on salaries, some 78 per cent is chargeable to the various port offices, our district offices which are located throughout Canada and where by far the greatest percentage of our employees are stationed.

I might give a brief statement with reference to the estimates. General administration amounts to $1,329,134; inspection and audit, $1,811,716; port office administration, $12,485,-392, and customs-excise seizures, $300,000, against which there is an offset of revenue of $400,000. This year there is an increase of $2,251,850, which represents an increase of 16·47 per cent over the 1947-48 estimates. That increase is accounted for in this way: general administration, $139,918; inspection and audit, $80,737; administration of the ports, $1,621,815. Of the increase, 81·2 per cent is on salary account.

Mr. FRASER: What was the increase in revenue?

Mr. McCANN: The revenue for 1947-48 was $1,163,743,000, and the cost of collection was 1·22 per cent.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What are the amounts collected under the Excise Act amendment? I want to know the amount collected and what it cost to collect it.

Mr. McCANN: To what amendments is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What we call the 25 per cent excise tax; the amendments passed in March, I think.

Mr. McCANN: We have before us only the figures for the fiscal year. We have a breakdown showing the different items of excise tax collected, but there is no breakdown for the special 25 per cent tax to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am anxious to have that. The minister knows we objected to this tax, and I want to have before the committee evidence as to what it has yielded and what it costs to collect. If the minister cannot get the figure tonight, perhaps it could stand until tomorrow. But I want to have it.

Mr. McCANN: I do not think it would be possible to make an allocation with reference to the particular cost of collecting this 25 per cent excise tax, because it goes into the general cost of the ports at which it is collected.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought perhaps the minister would say that. I would be content with an allocation which the minister would consider fair; I shall not be hard to please in the matter. But I wish to have a figure which the minister would consider fair. The hon. member for Rosedale suggests to me that there may be special people doing it. My interest is to have a figure as to what it costs to collect that tax. As I say, if the minister will give me what was collected, which, I take it, can be ascertained without difficulty, and then will give me what he considers a fair estimate of the cost, I shall not cavil at it.

Mr. McCANN: I can give the amount, but I cannot break down the cost of collecting the tax. From the time it went into effect until March 31, the actual taxes collected were as follows:

Automobiles	$14,195,435.36
Cameras, projectors, slides and films	479,000.00
Electrical appliances	3,215,000.00
Fire arms	117,101.00
Motorcycles and motors	178,800.00
Outboard motors	165,193.00
Phonographs, radios and tubes	3,364,356.00

This makes a total of approximately $22,000,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And the cost of collecting it was what?

Mr. McCANN: As I said, the cost of collection of that particular tax has not been allocated, nor has it been kept separate from the cost in any port of collecting all the taxes which come into that port.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If the minister could take his total cost of collection, he could pro rate the total cost against the total collection and perhaps give a figure in the morning.

Mr. MUTCH: His guess is no better than anybody else's.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think it might be.

Mr. McCANN: I submit that it is not possible to give a figure as to the cost of collection of any particular tax. I might say we have collected taxes amounting to over a billion dollars, and it included taxes on forty-seven different types of items. The cost of any particular item is not segregated from the general costs of the ports. We can give the figures with reference to the total cost of collection over the past year. But here we have collected taxes on cables and telephones, stamps, stock transfers, furs, automobiles, lighters, candy, soft drinks, luggage, tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, sugar, glucose, carbonic acid—all those things. I cannot give any idea of how much it cost to collect the tax on playing cards, for instance; and nobody else can. It would take a Philadelphia lawyer to figure it out.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not asking the minister to do anything impossible. I am asking him to take the figure of the total receipts and costs and from them to take a rough pro rata figure. I am not asking him to go into a multitude of details. His officials have the total figure, and they can work it out in five minutes. That is all I am asking; and I want to have it.

Mr. BAKER: It would add considerable to the cost to figure out what the cost of collection is.

Mr. JACKMAN: Perhaps you can tell us how much it would be.

Mr. FLEMING: There is something wrong with the accounting.

Mr. McCANN: Last year the total cost of collection was 1·22 per cent of the revenue collected. That will not vary much, and I would say the cost of collection in this instance, relative to the amount collected, would be in the neighbourhood of 1·22 per cent, or probably ·5 per cent.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is a fair answer. Will the officials figure it out and give me the figure? I am not good at arithmetic.

Mr. McCANN: That is as near as I can give it to the hon. member.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But give me the actual figure. Let them figure the percentage out and give me the actual figure.

An hon. MEMBER: Get an adding machine.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, it is not carried.

Mr. McCANN: Roughly it comes to $14,000 or $15,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): All right. I will move that that amount be struck out of the estimates—the $14,000. My motion is that the cost of collecting the tax imposed by the Excise Tax Act amendment be reduced to $1.

I wish to say a few words in connection with that. This committee will recall that a considerable fight was put up against the imposition of this tax. The committee will also recall that various reasons were alleged, and that we found great difficulty in making up our minds as to the final reason which prompted the government to put it through. The first idea was that it was not for taxation at all. But eventually it turned out that it was for several reasons, if for any reason.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not making any apology for this. This idea that we are to be hurried into slurring these things over because they are brought up at the last minute does not go down with me. And if people try interrupting they will get more.

Mr. GREEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let me say that this tax has been criticized from coast to coast. It has been criticized now in the report which we got today. There has never been any satisfactory reason alleged for its being imposed. And I think now is the time for members of this House of Commons to make up their minds whether they have the courage of their convictions—which I know many of them have—and vote for this amendment which asks that the cost of collecting the tax be stricken out.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Probably the Chairman has difficulty in reading my writing.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The amendment is out of order. We are dealing with item 293. Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No; just a minute. Will the minister give me the rule under which he is ruling it out of order?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Which of these votes does the hon. member wish to reduce?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Vote number—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The amendment is to strike out $14,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps the minister can tell me whether it is item 293 or item 294.

Mr. McCANN: I do not think the hon. member is right in either of them.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is the hon. member dealing with?

Mr. McCANN: The hon. gentleman is not right in his selection of either item. This is a matter that has to do with the running of the ports of entry throughout the country where the taxes are collected.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps it is item 295.

Mr. McCANN: It would come more properly under item 295.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then we shall wait until we reach item 295.

Mr. McLURE: The total to be voted for this department is $44,994,942; there is $25,323,721, of which 77 per cent or $19,676,221 is for temporary assistance. What is the approximate number of temporary employees?

Mr. McCANN: The hon. gentleman is including in his figure the customs and excise division, the taxation division, the national film board and the government office economies control division, as well as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. If he will let us know just what questions he wishes answered relative to the customs and excise divisions, which we are now dealing with, I shall give him an answer.

Mr. McLURE: The total amount to be voted is almost $45,000,000.

Mr. McCANN: Not for customs and excise.

Mr. McLURE: For national revenue, with which we are now dealing.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The item before the committee is item 293, general administration, $1,329,134.

Mr. McLURE: That is under national revenue.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It is the item of general administration.

Mr. McLURE: Cannot we bring up anything under that item with regard to the administration of the whole department?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We shall have to deal with the item before the committee.

Mr. GREEN: I submit that that ruling is not in accordance with the rules of this house. Under the administration item of any department, an hon. member is entitled to bring up questions which affect the department as a whole. That is exactly what the hon. member for Queens is doing, and I submit that he is entirely in order.

Mr. McCANN: May I clarify the situation? For estimate purposes, national revenue is divided into different divisions which are dealt with separately. Customs and excise is one division, for which we have an administration item. Another division is taxation, for which we have an administration division. As Minister of National Revenue I am responsible for the national film board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the government office economies control division. The last three divisions which I have mentioned have nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue, except that I happen to be the minister in charge of them and, therefore, for the purposes of the estimates they are listed under national revenue.

Mr. GREEN: In each department there is one item on which we can discuss the general affairs of the department.

Mr. McCANN: It is split into two here.

Mr. GREEN: But the minister cannot get away from a general discussion of his departmental affairs because of that.

Mr. McCANN: I am not trying to get away from anything; I am trying to explain.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member will turn to page 202 of the estimates he will find the details of the item we now have before us, which deals with administration. As we come to the other items, we can deal with the matter the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. McLURE: This item is for $1,342,134 and the amount for temporary assistance is $314,076. However, the total for temporary assistance in the Department of National Revenue is $19,676,221. Surely we should have some idea what that total is for.

Mr. McCANN: If the hon. member wants to know the number of employees in the different divisions we can give him the exact number in the customs and excise divisions now under the general administration item, and then we can give him the number of employees in the taxation division.

Mr. GREEN: Why not give him the total number of employees in the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. McCANN: You will have to take into consideration the fact that there are practically five departments with separate heads. There is a deputy minister of customs and excise, and a deputy minister of taxation whose duties are entirely different and separate.

Mr. GREEN: The minister should have a good secretary who could tell him how many employees are under him.

Mr. McCANN: There are approximately 18,000 in my department.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to refer again to a matter which I have brought to the attention of the minister on two previous occasions, because it is of great importance to the people whom I have the honour to represent. I have asked that an office of the Department of National Revenue be established to serve the East and West Kootenays. An office is to be established at Kelowna to serve the Okanagan district.

Mr. McCANN: I think what the hon. member is talking about has to do with income tax offices, which would be under the taxation division.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Yes.

Mr. McCANN: We have not yet come to that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Before this item carries, I should like to talk a matter over with the minister for a few minutes. I have been greatly interested in the McCann commission of which we have heard a lot this year, and I should like to find out where I can discuss it. Those who are best qualified to advise me tell me that it should be discussed under the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue, under either item 293 or item 306 or item 308 of the minister's estimates. If the minister will tell me under which item he will entertain a discussion of this matter, which will probably be a searching one, I shall be glad to wait until the end if he so desires.

Mr. McCANN: The matter referred to has absolutely nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue. The circumstances with which the commission named after me had to do were certain complaints by veterans with reference to treatment and with reference to those who treated them and the institutions in which they were treated. I was chosen to be chairman of that commission because of my profession, not because of my position as minister, and it has absolutely nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue. We made a report to the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the hon. gentleman had an opportunity to discuss it on veterans affairs estimates or in the veterans affairs committee or probably on the budget, if he wanted to. But it has nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue, and I am not in a position to give him any information on it tonight. So far as I am concerned personally, it did not cost the country one five-cent piece.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is an interesting story, all right.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member is completely out of order in discussing that matter on this item. It has nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue. Speeches in committee must be strictly relevant.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I cannot hear you, Mr. Chairman, because of those noisy people over there on the opposite side of the chamber. If you will keep them in order we shall make better progress. If we are being delayed it is because we have to listen to a lot of chirping going on over there. The minister has suggested that this matter could be discussed under veterans affairs estimates, but I challenge the minister to find an item in those estimates where it could be discussed.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask the hon. member not to discuss the matter further under this item.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Chairman, there is no item in veterans affairs estimates under which it can be discussed, so far as I can see.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. This is no place for such a discussion, because it has nothing whatsoever to do with this item.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the commission did not cost anything, it must come under administrative expenses, I should think, of national revenue.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must again ask the hon. member not to discuss the matter further, because it has nothing to do with this item.

Item agreed to.

Customs and excise divisions—

295. Ports, outports and preventive stations, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals, $12,485,392.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to move to reduce this item by $14,000. I shall read from Beauchesne, third edition, citation 484:

> Amendments moved for the reduction of a grant are proceeded with under the general rules governing amendments. For instance, on a resolution granting $10,000 for a certain purpose, a member may move that the amount be reduced by $2,000. This amendment then takes the form of the original motion offering, in lieu of the sum thereby proposed, a reduced sum for the acceptance of the committee.

It goes on to say that if one amendment is rejected another one may be proposed. Pursuant to that rule, I move that item 295 be reduced from $12,485,392 to $12,471,392, and I submit that I am within the terms of the rule I have quoted.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The only reason the hon. member was out of order before was that he was trying to move his amendment to item 293.

Amendment negatived: yeas 16; nays 38.

Item agreed to.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Twelve o'clock.

Mr. McCANN: There are two items, Mr. Chairman, 799 and 800 under the customs and excise divisions, totalling $26,012 and having to do with inspection, overtime pay to officers at ports and so forth which I should like to have called.

Customs and excise divisions—

799. Inspection, investigation and audit services—further amount required, $4,512.

800. Ports, outports and preventive stations, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals—further amount required, $21,500.

Items agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now adjourn. Tomorrow we shall consider the amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 338, respecting income taxes. They are small amendments. Then Bill No. 398 to amend the Manitoba Natural Resources Act. Then we shall take up supply in the remaining departments, the rest of national revenue, public works, legislation, finance, the Prime Minister's office, some supplementary estimates before the house. Then the Minister of National Health and Welfare will move concurrence in the report of the prices committee. There is only one other item that will remain to conclude the business of the session, namely, the resolution in the name of the Prime Minister, and I hope we shall be in a good humour tomorrow to take that on.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask the Minister of Public Works at what time of the day the prices report will be moved?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I wanted to suggest to my hon. friends—I have not discussed it—that tomorrow we sit from eleven to one and adjourn to two, then continue with estimates until three o'clock. I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced that he would move concurrence in the report at three o'clock if that is satisfactory. I think that could easily be followed. I shall see my hon. friends tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at twelve midnight.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

142. Bureau of technical personnel and placement of university graduates, $39,569.

144. Wartime labour relations board, $17,500.

PRIVATE BILLS

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Third report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Maybank.

DIVORCE BILL—MOTION FOR REFERENCE BACK TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. RUSSELL BOUCHER (Carleton): In accordance with standing order 25, Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne, second edition, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Hazen):

That Bill No. 301, an act for the relief of Aldoria Rodier dit St. Martin, referred to in the third report of the standing committee on private bills, presented to this house this day, be referred back to the standing committee for further consideration and report.

This is a bill for divorce which was brought before the senate committee, where evidence was taken therein in full. After the applicant had presented his case, counsel for the respondent stated that they had no evidence to adduce in rebuttal of the allegation made by the applicant. The committee of the other house agreed to the divorce and recommended that it be granted. On presentation of the bill a few days ago to the miscellaneous private bills committee of the House of Commons, there appeared the evidence taken in the senate, the recommendations of the senate committee, and, although the counsel for the respondent had stated before that committee that they had no evidence to offer in rebuttal of the evidence of the applicant, a letter from the respondent herself was, I submit, wrongly admitted into evidence by the committee of this house. By virtue of that letter, objecting to certain procedures and certain evidence given, the committee of the House of Commons I believe rejected the bill.

My point is this. A committee of the upper house sitting as a court, having gone into the evidence in detail, having passed upon it, having had witnesses before it who were examined and cross-examined, and counsel for the respondent having stated that there was no defence to offer, I think it was improper and unjust that a letter should be received from the respondent, taken into consideration and dealt with by the committee of the House of Commons without opportunity of cross-examination, without evidence being given under oath, and in actual repudiation of the findings of the committee of the upper house. The committee of this house saw fit to give a decision contrary to that of the upper house. This is surely a grave miscarriage of justice.

I think any member of this house who has practised in a court of law will realize the great danger there is in accepting evidence by way of letter, after the case has been closed following a full formal hearing, and taking the weight of that evidence into consideration in deciding upon the disposition of any matter previously considered by a court. Any man with legal experience would realize that it is very improper to receive a letter of that kind anywhere, whether it be a committee of inquiry or a court of any kind. I think it is not only a reflection upon the findings of a very able committee of the other place to overrule a considered opinion reached upon evidence properly adduced and subject to examination and cross-examination; it is an aspersion upon the upper house to have a committee of this house take this action in view of the good work being done in the other place in connection with divorce matters. I believe this would be a dangerous precedent for this house to establish, and it would be doing a grave injustice to a citizen of this country who has taken the only legal recourse available.

Therefore I urge the house, though we are practically at the last day of the session, to adopt the motion and give this applicant the right to a proper hearing and a proper disposition of a proper application to these houses of parliament.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (Saint John-Albert): I rise to support the motion that has been moved by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Boucher). I am a member of the committee on miscellaneous private bills which dealt with this matter a day or two ago. Petitions for bills of divorce are heard by a committee of the other place, who sit as a court and hear the evidence of the petitioner and his or her witnesses, and the evidence of the witnesses for the defence, if any. If justice is to be done in these cases—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but if he will look at standing order 38, which sets out the motions which are debatable and those which are not debatable, he will see that a motion of this kind is not subject to debate. I permitted the hon. member for Carleton, the mover of the motion, to make an explanation, but I do not think a debate would be proper. If it is the wish of the house that a representative of the committee should be permitted to give a further explanation, however, I believe that would be proper.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Am I to understand that half an hour of the time of the house is to be taken up on a silly divorce case, when I am not allowed to speak about flood conditions?

Mr. HAZEN: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, you have ruled that I am not to be permitted to say anything on this matter, in which I believe a great injustice has been done?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should realize that I have no choice in the matter; the standing order says a motion of this kind is not debatable. If the hon. gentleman believes he should give some explanation, I will permit him to do so, but I would ask him to be as brief as possible.

Mr. HAZEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I shall endeavour to be brief. I do not wish to make a long speech, but there are certain matters which should be brought to the attention of the members of this house in connection with this case. As I was saying, petitions for divorce come before a committee of the other place. That committee sits as a court. It hears the evidence of the parties, and then arrives at a decision. If justice is to be done in these matters the principles of justice must be observed and the rules of evidence must be followed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry, but the hon. member must realize that he is not giving an explanation. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MAYBANK: I am not sure that I heard your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I understood you to say some explanation could be given by a member of the committee. If that is so, as chairman of the committee I should like an opportunity to speak, but of course without endeavouring to prevent any other member from speaking. I believe there are some things that should be said.

Mr. SPEAKER: I believe it would be only fair to give the hon. member, who is chairman of the committee, an opportunity to explain the matter, but I would ask him to be as brief as possible.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I talk about the floods for the same length of time?

Mr. HAZEN: Surely if the chairman of the committee is to have the right to speak I should have the opportunity to speak first, because I wish to censure the committee—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If the house does not agree, I shall have to apply the rule as it is. Motions of this kind are not debatable. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Boucher) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. GLEASON BELZILE (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday on the orders of the day the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) asked three questions with regard to the telegraph and telephone service. The first question was:

What section of the telephone and telegraph services has been taken over by the Department of Finance from the Department of Public Works?

The answer is the telephone section having to do with the Ottawa area. The second question was:

Will the employees of the Department of Public Works now engaged in this work be transferred to the Department of Finance on the same conditions of employment and salary?

The answer is: Yes; one employee has been transferred. The third question was:

Has the department entered into any negotiations with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada Limited?

According to his notice of the question the hon. member also wished to know whether this company had made a survey of the lines in the building, and, if an agreement had been reached, what were its terms. A preliminary survey is being made by the company in conjunction with the public works department, but no agreement has been entered into.

MANITOBA NATURAL RESOURCES

HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER PLANTS—CONFIRMATION OF AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the first reading of Bill No. 398 (from the senate), to amend the Manitoba Natural Resources Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. MacKINNON: Now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house.

Mr. MacKINNON moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Will the minister explain the bill?

Mr. MacKINNON: Prior to 1930 all ungranted or waste lands in the province of Manitoba were vested in the crown in the right of the Dominion of Canada, and were administered by the government of Canada for the purpose of the dominion, subject to certain conditions and stipulations contained in the agreement for the surrender of Rupert's Land by the Hudson's Bay Company to Her Majesty the Queen.

In August 1928 the present Prime Minister of Canada secured the approval of council to an order which provided that, pursuant to an agreement entered into with the representatives of the government of the province of Manitoba, the province would be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources as from the entrance of the province into confederation in the year 1870.

A commission consisting of three persons was appointed to inquire into and report as to what financial readjustments should be made to effect the desire of the province and the dominion that the province be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces of confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources. As a result of the commission's report, the dominion agreed to transfer to the province for administration and control by the province all the unalienated natural resources within the boundaries of the province, subject to any trust existing in respect thereof and without prejudice to any other interest, other than that of the crown, in the same.

The findings of the commission were agreed to by the government of Canada and the government of the province of Manitoba, and were made the subject matter of an act of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of the province of Manitoba confirming the same. Subsequently the agreement was confirmed by the parliament of the United Kingdom by an act entitled "The British North America Act, 1930", assented to on the 10th day of July of that year and being chapter 26 of the statutes of the United Kingdom for the year 1930.

The agreement provided, inter alia, for the transfer of unalienated public lands in the province of Manitoba from the dominion to the province. Section 2 provides that the province will carry out in accordance with the terms thereof every contract to purchase or lease any crown lands, mines or minerals and every other arrangement whereby any person has become entitled to any interest therein as against the crown, and further agrees not to affect or alter any term of any such contract to purchase, lease or other arrangement by legislation or otherwise except either with the consent of all the parties thereto other than Canada, or in so far as any legislation may apply generally to all similar agreements relating to lands, mines or minerals in the province or to interests therein irrespective of whom the parties thereto may be.

Under this provision the province could by passing a law of general application expropriate every power site in the province of Manitoba. In this respect it would have the same power that is possessed by the original provinces of confederation. For example, the province of Nova Scotia could, by passing an act of the legislature, expropriate every power site in the province of Nova Scotia; or it could by a similar act expropriate any one or more of the power sites in the province. It is doubtful, however, whether Manitoba could, under the provisions of section 2 of the agreement referred to, expropriate one or two of the power sites in the province, as it could be argued that the law would not be of general application, and therefore any rights granted by the dominion prior to the transfer of the resources to the province could not be interfered with other than by consent of the parties to the arrangement other than Canada. If this contention be well founded, the province of Manitoba would not be in a position of equality with the other provinces of confederation, and as that was the intention of the parties when the resources were transferred, the present bill is to remove any doubt as to the power of the province to do that which the original provinces of confederation could do with respect to property and civil rights within their respective jurisdictions.

The effect of the present bill is to put Manitoba in the same position, as, for instance, Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia in respect to their natural resources and to confer upon the legislature of Manitoba the power to deal with civil rights in that province. If the bill is passed it does not confer any power on the government of Manitoba, but it does remove any doubt as to the power of the legislature of the province to deal fully with the property and civil rights of the citizens of Manitoba. Whether or not, in the event of the legislature exercising its power, compensation is to be paid to the owners of property expropriated is a matter for the consideration of the legislature of the province and not for the consideration of parliament.

Mr. CHURCH: The agreement is all right so far as it goes, but I call attention to the fact that in Ontario we had a policy like this to bring the boon of cheap electric light and power to the cities and towns and rural areas of the province as far back as 1907, forty-one years ago. That power is distributed at actual cost, not to make dividends for corporation shareholders.

I would point out that there is a provision in the Navigable Waters Protection Act, which puts all navigable streams in all provinces under the dominion government, represented by the Minister of Public Works. This agreement should have been exempted from the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I have no objection to this bill, but I have one or two questions to ask in view of the fact that the city of Winnipeg will be affected by it. It is well known that in Manitoba there is potentially a serious power situation. The estimates which were made before the war as to the power required by Manitoba after the war have gone sadly awry. In an attempt to meet the situation, the power resources of the province are being pooled under the provincial government, and certain steps are being taken for that purpose. Some of the leases would have expired in 1962, but there is one between the city of Winnipeg and the federal government which runs in perpetuity. That lease covers the plant at Pointe du Bois, where the city of Winnipeg hydro generates its power. The province, by the passing of Bill No. 109, which is concurrent provincial legislation, can expropriate these sites whenever it pleases. I am also led to believe that this bill is in the form requested by the Manitoba government. Have any representations been made by the city of Winnipeg to the minister or the government concerning this legislation?

Mr. MacKINNON: So far as I know, the city of Winnipeg has made no representations to the government. It may have made representations before I came into the department, but I have no knowledge of them. I am informed that the city had promised full co-operation with the province in the pertinent legislation which was passed by the Manitoba legislature.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I thank the minister for that answer. The reason I asked was that in Winnipeg we have a very cheap rate for power. The hydro has a surplus of $1,000,000 a year. Many people in Winnipeg have expressed the fear that once the power sites are expropriated, the rates for heating and lighting may be increased. But in view of what the minister has said I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MUTCH: The evidence that I have as the result of an inquiry from the city of Winnipeg itself is that the management of the city hydro regard alternative "C" of the Hogg report as being the most satisfactory long-term solution with respect to a potential power shortage.

Mr. SINNOTT: I wish to commend the Premier of Manitoba for his foresight in bringing forward this bill. At the present time the rural horsepower in Manitoba is 30,000, which is a good deal short of the amount needed. At the present time there is an attempt to electrify all rural Manitoba. Under this bill the rates of the city of Winnipeg will not be affected. It is the intention of the government of Manitoba to see that all rural Manitoba has power. Under this bill it is intended to assess all rural users at the same rate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order for consideration of a resolution with respect to development of the national capital:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Stand until later this day.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the Prime Minister say whether he intends before prorogation to deal with either of the two resolutions standing in his name?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is under government notices of motion only one other resolution, in the name of the Minister of Finance. I do not think that will be proceeded with.

Mr. GREEN: What about those under government orders?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. My hon. friend is referring to resolutions with respect to the Geneva agreement?

Mr. BRACKEN: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would say that they will not be proceeded with this session.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Will the Prime Minister indicate whether it is the intention of the government to proceed with the adjourned debate on the annuities bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will discover that it is not the intention to proceed with it.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE OF GYPSUM LATH—REQUEST FOR IMPORT PERMITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. TIMMINS (Parkdale): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, or to his parliamentary assistant. Is the minister aware that there is a desperate shortage of gypsum lath for house-building purposes in Ontario? Will he take into consideration the placing of gypsum lath under import permit so as to give immediate relief to the house-building situation? I do not see either the minister or the parliamentary assistant in the house.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): The parliamentary assistant will be in a little later. He has some supplementary estimates to submit to the house, and I hope that he will then answer the hon. member.

SECURITY MEASURES—QUESTION AS TO LOYALTY REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): There are two questions which I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice. Under the civil service loyalty regulations, what provision is there for an appeal where a person is rejected? Do regulations exist in writing governing security tests?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): The answer to the first question of which my hon. friend gave me notice is this: There are no civil service loyalty regulations. As was indicated in the statement made to the house on June 22 (Hansard, page 5629) it is the view of the government that "loyalty to the state of employees in positions of trust is an essential aspect of the efficient conduct of public administration". The civil service commission has to satisfy itself as to the character and habits of persons appointed by it to government employment. Where the Civil Service Act and regulations are not applicable, the sole responsibility in this regard falls upon the departments themselves. This responsibility as to character and habits includes the suitability of individual employees from the point of view of security.

In the opinion of the government it would not be appropriate to provide for anything in the nature of a tribunal of loyalty. The government, and the civil service commission within the provisions of the law which governs it, must accept responsibility for all aspects of administration, including that of adequate security within the government service.

The second question was: "Do regulations exist in writing government security tests?" The answer to that question is that there are no regulations governing security tests. However, in the discharge of the government's administrative responsibility the attention of departments and agencies is drawn to the importance of security measures, and procedures have been approved for determining the suitability of employees from a security standpoint.

As was indicated in my statement of June 22, in the government's view loyalty is not susceptible to any precise series of tests, and the only specific instruction which has been given by the government on this subject is that which I mentioned at that time, namely, the special case of those who are members of or associated with communist and fascist organizations.

WHEAT

WESTERN AND EASTERN DELIVERIES FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A similar question was asked on June 24 and the answer was not very clear. The question which I should like to have cleared up is whether it is now a fact that the prairie wheat producers must deliver their wheat to the Canadian wheat board, while the eastern wheat producer may market his wheat direct and sell it to the United States or to other countries? The answer given the other day was ambiguous. The question was asked whether a permit was required, and the minister said that the wheat could be exported at this time. I should like a clear answer to the question.

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I can take the question as notice and answer it later in the day. I understand the question has to do with soft wheat export.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

CANADIAN MARITIME COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): I desire to ask the Minister of Transport when I may expect a return ordered on June 21 for production of papers with respect to appointments to the Canadian maritime commission. I hope I shall receive it today.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): If not today, I will undertake to see that the hon. gentleman gets it as quickly as possible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEAMEN'S STRIKE—CONGESTION AT TORONTO DOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to ask the government a question based on the congestion on the Toronto docks on account of the seamen's strike. While I appreciate what the government has done about the shipping on the lakes and about the present strike on the lakes, nevertheless the people are afraid to go on the docks to take the steamers, and it is delaying the delivery of fruit, vegetables, coal and oil, and causing serious congestion. I know it is difficult to bring the parties together. Can the minister give some hope of a settlement before the house closes?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday.

LINDSAY, ONT.

INVITATION TO MEMBERS TO ATTEND OLD HOME WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. HODGSON (Victoria, Ont.): I received a telegram this morning from the old home week committee of my home town of Lindsay. I should like to invite you, sir, and all hon. members, to visit us between July 1 and July 10. I send a special invitation to the Minister of Labour, because we have not had any labour troubles, disputes, or anything of the kind in that town since confederation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDITIONS IN BERLIN—QUESTION AS TO CANADIAN OFFICIAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I renew my standing invitation to all to come to Peel at any time during the next year.

I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the disturbing press reports with respect to starvation conditions in Berlin, and the apparent move of the Soviet to drive out the other powers from that part of Germany, will the minister indicate what official Canadian personnel are in Berlin at the present time, and also what steps are being taken to protect the interests of Canadians, official or otherwise, in that city?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member let me know just before the house convened that he would ask that question. I have asked my officials for the information. I went to my office just a moment ago, but found that it was not yet ready. I understand that a part of it has to be obtained from the Department of National Defence. The hon. member had told me that he wished to know those who were there who had dependents with them. That information is being obtained, and I shall give it to the hon. member on my supplementary estimates if there is no opportunity to do it before.

With respect to the food situation, there is very little I can add to what has already been published in the newspapers. Hon. members know that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs at Westminster yesterday made a statement about the situation in Berlin. That is in accordance with the information we have. Of course there is a tense situation there—communications have been interfered with—and it is one that is giving us all concern; but I hope it may be relieved. There have been tense situations there before, and they have been adjusted. I know that every possible effort is being made to adjust this one.

[Later:]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: This morning the hon. member for Peel asked about the number of persons constituting our mission in Berlin. There are four officers and ten additional members of the staff, and they have in Europe seventeen dependents. We do not know whether they are all in Berlin or in the western zone of Germany or elsewhere at the present time. We do know that some of these dependents are still in Berlin.

ISRAEL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister yet in a position to state what the government's policy is concerning the recognition of Israel?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have to give a negative answer to the hon. member's question. As all hon. members know, there is a truce in effect between the contending parties in the Palestine dispute. As I have stated previously in the house, it is the wish of the government to avoid taking any action or making any statement which, rightly or wrongly, might be construed by either party as prejudicial to its position during the period of the truce.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

FLOOD CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO $5,000,000 GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, and he can probably give me an answer later in the day. Has the sum of $5,000,000 or more—and if so, how much—been granted for the relief of the distressed people of any country other than Canada?

Mr. GLEASON BELZILE (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I take notice of this question, and with the kind permission of the hon. member for Fraser Valley I will give an answer later.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I am not sure whether it concerns his department, but I think it does. Is full recompense to be made to the Japanese who were evacuated from British Columbia? If so, what will be the cost? Will it equal $5,000,000?

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, what this has to do with the matter, but I shall be glad to look into it for my hon. friend.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And give me an answer?

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member will get an answer; he need not worry about that. It may not be the kind of answer he wants, but he will get an answer.

[Later:]

Mr. BELZILE: This morning the hon. member for Fraser Valley asked if any moneys, in the amount of $5,000,000 or over, have been granted to any country other than Canada for the relief of distressed people, and if so, how much?

It is not possible to break down by countries the amounts which Canada has contributed to the relief of distressed people, since the contributions were made to international organizations.

Canada's contribution to UNRRA amounted to $154 million. The appropriation for post-UNRRA relief was $20 million, and an appropriation of $5·4 million was made in each of the years 1947-48 and 1948-49 for Canada's contribution to the budget of the international refugee organization.

The contributions made by Canada under the combined United States-United Kingdom-Canada program of military relief totalled $95·6 million, but a portion of the cost of these supplies has been recovered, and additional recoveries may be made.

OATS AND BARLEY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, just to whom to direct this question, but I presume the Prime Minister would be the one. Is it the intention of the government to make its decision known as to whether oats and barley will shortly be brought under the wheat board act?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment, but possibly during the course of the day an answer might be given to my hon. friend.

INCOME TAX ACT

REVISION AND CONSOLIDATION

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 338, respecting income taxes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We could not hear a word. I do not know what the amendments are or what they are about.

Mr. SPEAKER: These are amendments proposed by the senate to Bill No. 338, respecting income taxes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We could not hear at all what was said. We did not even know what was being talked about.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Taxation division—

297. General administration, including authority to create positions and make appointments, within the division, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act, $1,813,574.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This is the administration section of the taxation division, which deals, I take it, mainly with income tax. I should like to have the minister say something about the organization of this department. As we all know, over the years a great deal of complaint has been made about delays which I think were to some extent inevitable; however, a great deal of discussion has taken place about them. What is being done to obviate the delays which have been so inconvenient to the taxpayer?—sometimes a stronger word than inconvenient would not be out of place.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I am glad of the opportunity to say something in reference to the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue. This vote has to do with administration. We at head office are responsible for the administration of the Income War Tax Act, the Excess Profits Tax Act, the Dominion Succession Duty Act, the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act of 1943, the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act of 1944, the United Kingdom income tax agreement of 1946, the Canada-United Kingdom Succession Duty Agreement of 1946, the provincial corporation income tax of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and the war salaries order in respect to cases which are not already settled.

As the hon. gentleman knows, the head office of the division is here in Ottawa, and we maintain offices from coast to coast—from Vancouver, Victoria and Yukon across the continent to Sydney, Nova Scotia. We have in all twenty-four or twenty-five offices. In these offices we have an administrative staff including the head office staff, of approximately twelve thousand people. The district offices are distributed as well as possible, having in mind both the convenience of the public and economy in the administration of the offices.

As the hon. gentleman will understand, returns are made to these several district offices, and cases of assessment where there may be difficulties are referred to head office for adjudication. As to the delay in making assessments, which undoubtedly there has been, I think any fair-minded person will say that is entirely excusable, at least to a point, because of the enormous increase in the amount of work that has to be done. During the war years, as a result of increased taxation and the higher level of earnings of the people generally, the number of returns greatly increased. For 1946 the returns were approximately 3,565,000. The returns for 1947, which came in at the end of May, and the corporation returns which came in at the end of June, will number from 3,800,000 to 4,000,000.

As to the backlog of work to be done to catch up with the assessments, that has been contributed to by several factors. During the war years, for instance, we lost a great number of assessors, auditors and accountants because industry competed with the government for the services of these employees. Industry was able to pay more money to people who could do that work than the government at that time was prepared to pay. That situation has been remedied to a certain extent by a readjustment of salaries throughout the division within the past eighteen months, and also because industry finds that now there is not the need there was during the war years for people who have particular qualifications in the matter of auditing and working out their assessments.

I give this example to the hon. gentleman; I think he can readily understand it, as anyone can—and that is no reflection on my hon. friend. Take a man who has been working in our department. It is the easiest thing in the world for him to go to a firm and say, "I saw your assessment. I had something to do with it in the department, and I believe that if I were in your employ I could show you how to save a considerable sum of money in your taxation." Of course they are glad to pick up that man and pay him perhaps twice what we are able to pay him according to the regulations. That is quite legitimate; it is good business for him to do that. But things of that kind depleted the staff of the taxation division; and for that reason, together with the increased number of returns during the war years, a backlog of work has accumulated.

I am happy to say this condition is being remedied to a great extent. As at June 15 our employees numbered approximately 11,568, which is an increase of about 2,500 over the number we had two years ago. Assessments now are being made at the rate of about 350,000 a month, so we feel that before very long that backlog of work will be cleared away.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would it be convenient at this point for the minister to tell us what the backlog is?

Mr. McCANN: I can give it in terms of months. We are about eighteen months behind in our assessments. We hope within a year or two, when we get our staff sufficiently well organized and have the people we desire to get and who will be competent to do the work, that within twelve months after the returns are received all the assessments will be made, and we shall be able to start the next year with the decks clear. I believe that is a worthy and desirable objective, and that it is good business to shoot at that target. Judging by the reports made to me privately as to the progress of the work, I have great hopes that we shall be able to attain that objective within the next year or eighteen months.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I appreciate the enormous task the department has had to perform, but taking the figures the minister has given, if my arithmetic is correct I find it difficult to see how he can expect to clear up the backlog in anything like the time he has mentioned. Let me see if I have correctly apprehended what the minister said. I understood him to say the backlog was approximately eighteen months. Let us take the returns for a year at 3,700,000, which is just in between the figures for the last two years. If my arithmetic is correct, that would mean a backlog of roughly five and a half million returns. The figure the minister gave as to the rate of progress was 350,000 a month, or 4,200,000 a year, which would be an excess of only about 500,000 over an ordinary year's operations. If my figures are right, unless there is some catch in what I have just said, it would seem more like ten years that will be required.

Mr. McCANN: Oh, no.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then tell me where I am wrong.

Mr. McCANN: The figures I gave the hon. gentleman have to do with the backlog of work, over and above the current work.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the minister said eighteen months I took it to mean eighteen months measured in the number of income tax returns that come in, at the rate of nearly four million a year.

Mr. McCANN: I do not know that I can suggest anything further, except to say we hope that at the end of eighteen months to have the backlog cleared up, and will then be in a position to make assessments of the current year's work.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not wish to be unduly persistent. However I should like to be clear on this: When the minister says there are arrears of eighteen months, is it correct to say that the arrears of eighteen months amount to 5,000,000 returns?

Mr. McCANN: No, that is not correct.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What does it mean, then?

Mr. McCANN: The arrears of which I have spoken are not current returns for this year, which are due only on the 26th, which is today. Last year an extension was made to May 31. Those returns came in only at that time. I said there were approximately 3,800,000 of those returns as a backlog of work, and we expect to have cleaned it up within the next eighteen months. It may be optimistic to think that that can be done, in view of the increasing number of returns being put in.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I shall come back to that point later.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish to refer to a matter which concerns seriously the south-eastern part of British Columbia. I refer to the necessity for the establishment of a district office in that part of the country. I know a committee was appointed—I do not know whether it was an interdepartmental committee or not—to inquire into the matter. I am sure from their point of view they did what they thought was best. It was proposed to establish an office at Kelowna to serve the Okanagan, and rightly so. Here is a huge area of 40,000 square miles, with over 75,000 people. This area had a production which was valued last year at $127,000,000, and it is not served by a district office of the income tax branch.

It is not as though this situation existed on the prairies, where one can take a car and drive a hundred miles in any direction. As a matter of fact we can do business with Vancouver just as conveniently by train or by mail as we can with Kelowna. Therefore the bulk of business from east and west Kootenay is done through the Vancouver office. We have a large mining and smelting industry, a large lumbering industry, and we do considerable farming. These people are anxious to see a district office established in that area so they may have the opportunity for personal contact which we cannot get by writing letters to Vancouver. I would ask the minister to give the matter serious consideration. I represent one of the most productive constituencies in Canada, one which produces immense wealth, and I think some consideration should be given to the establishment of that office. My suggestion is that the city of Nelson would be the most central point from which to serve the area.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has the collection department authority to take wheat cheques from the Canadian wheat board? Is it the practice of the minister's department to get cheques payable to farmers from the Canadian wheat board and to hold them against the arrears of income tax which the department claims those farmers owe?

Mr. McCANN: I have never heard of that being done. If a farmer gets a cheque from the wheat board and wishes to endorse it to pay his tax, that is an ordinary method of doing business.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are any cheques taken by your collection department and held back from the farmer to be applied against his arrears of income tax?

Mr. McCANN: No, unless there is a garnishee.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I have a copy of a letter received from the director of income tax in Regina. It is dated June 5, 1948, and is headed, "Collections, J. R. B. 2139". It is addressed to Mr. William Nikota, of Hamton, Saskatchewan, and states:

> Re 1946 income tax, $261.40.
> In connection with the account outlined above, may the request contained in this office letter of the 19th of May, 1948, be expedited, please, in order that the Canadian wheat board cheque No. 053342 for $442.20 may be forwarded on to you.

I should like to have this matter looked into. If this kind of thing is being done, I hope it will be stopped, because there is no authority, surely, for that kind of action.

Mr. McCANN: We are doing nothing for which we have not the authority. If that has been done without going through the proper channels and the proper legal procedure, it will not be continued. The hon. member will readily understand that if John Jones is in arrears and owes money, after proper notification if he has not complied with it, it may be necessary to issue a garnishee against money coming to him.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This is done only through garnishee?

Mr. McCANN: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would they hold the whole amount of his cheque?

Mr. McCANN: I do not know the circumstances of each case.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There are one or two questions I should like to ask in connection with the collection of income tax. I believe that one of the greatest reasons for the reduction in agricultural production, at a time when food is more necessary than it ever was before, is that the farmers as a whole, while they do not resent the payment of income tax and are willing to do their part in that direction, as they must, do resent what they regard as snooper tactics in the investigation of income tax. I shall give an example of this sort of thing which causes resentment.

First I should like to find out from the minister what authority there is for any departmental official to say to young people who work during their summer vacations in order to make it possible for them to go on to collegiate or university, and who by that method would earn about $400, that whatever they earn immediately becomes part of the father's income. Having earned $400 or more, the father is denied the right to include his son and daughter as dependents. This is carrying bureaucratic tyranny to a limit which parliament ought not to countenance. After all, there are members in all parts of the house who were willing to work during their summer vacations in order to earn sufficient to enable them to continue at school. I have some further questions to ask, but I would like the minister to tell me first under what authority such a ruling has been made.

Mr. McCANN: I have heard a similar criticism from other sources. My personal understanding is that the provision is statutory, and we are only administering the law as we understand it in the statutes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Where is the statutory authority for it? I have not been able to find it. Certainly I do not ask the minister as head of the department to do other than carry out the law, but I should like to know what section authorizes any officials to make a decision which cannot but be detrimental to the opportunity of many young men and women during their vacations to earn something with which to carry on their education. While the minister is having the section looked up I will continue with other questions.

Mr. JACKMAN: There is no section, so the hon. member had better not wait too long.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister is ascertaining how this came about, and I am interested in finding out the justification.

The first question I should like to ask has to do with investigations in general of farmers who are required to make income tax returns. I should like to know how many of the staff the minister has just referred to are engaged as investigators in connection with farmers' income tax returns. How many of those investigators are operating in Canada as a whole, and how many in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

The next question I place before the minister is this: What is the total amount of income tax collected from farmers in Canada as a whole during the current year, and how much of that was payable in the three western provinces? The reason I ask that is that our farmers in the western provinces feel that they are being harassed in connection with the collection of income tax to a greater extent than farmers in other provinces. I ask that question to clarify the situation and to see the actual picture.

About nine months ago an investigation took place in Saskatoon. Certain officials of the income tax department were suspended. It was alleged that they had participated in some kind of arrangement with farmers or taxpayers in general whereby the actual amount to be paid by the individual was concealed in whole or in part. Following the investigation, which the minister told the house about last fall, there were some suspensions. Various investigations took place among farmers, and I am led to believe that several admitted that they had had their income tax returns fixed up in a way that was more generous to them than to the income tax department. Have any prosecutions taken place? Are any being proceeded with? Has the matter been dropped, and if so, is that the end of it?

I should like to ask another question in connection with investigations. On one occasion I asked the minister whether searches were being made of safety deposit boxes in banks without consent of the taxpayer. The answer given was that such was not the fact. I believe every person should discharge his responsibility by paying his income tax, but I do not think anyone can justify an investigator going into a bank and having blanket authority to open up safety deposit boxes. That authority should be given by an order of the court; they should not have that authority on the basis of their own initiative, thereby invading the rights of the individual.

I asked the minister if there had been cases where safety deposit boxes had been opened under ex parte orders issued by a court without the knowledge of the taxpayer. I asked that because while the minister answered me in the negative I have had two or three complaints from farmers in Saskatchewan that they have reason to believe that their safety deposit boxes were entered. The minister said that they would not be without the authority of a court order. Are there cases in which court orders have been issued without the knowledge of the taxpayer?

These are matters which I think our people have a right to know. However commendable may be the efforts of the department—and they are—to assure fairness in the making of returns, parliament must be equally astute in seeing that the rights of the individual shall not unnecessarily be invaded, or invaded at all outside the law.

I was particularly struck by the answer given by the minister to the hon. member for Yorkton with regard to the holding of certain wheat board certificates as security for income tax in arrears. I am glad the minister was able to give the assurance that that was not being done. It would be an interference by a bureaucrat with the rights of an individual, something that should not be countenanced under any circumstances.

Mr. McCANN: As I remember the hon. member's questions, the first had to do with internal inspection. There are 332 inspectors from one end of Canada to the other. I have not the breakdown as to where they are located, but the last figures I had showed that they were fairly well divided among the several provinces. As far as returns or assessments from farmers are concerned, they are not kept in the division under occupational categories. I could not give the percentage of taxation collections made from farmers, any more than I could give them for textile workers or for any other occupation.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Has that been stopped? We did get those figures a couple of years ago.

Mr. McCANN: We have not the information here, but we can get it. It would entail a great deal of work to keep the figures up to date.

My hon. friend referred particularly to a situation in Saskatoon involving a number of employees. I do not intend to name them. After a thorough investigation, both by the officers of the local Saskatoon office and by our office inspectional staff—which is sometimes confused with the inspectional staff which we call the intelligence staff, having to do with matters of evasion—it was found that a number of employees in Saskatoon had been guilty of fraudulent practices and an entire disregard of regulations. They were suspended, and since then some of them have been dismissed. It is not intended to take any legal action against them by way of prosecution.

I regret that such a thing as this should happen, but if you are to run a department efficiently and have honesty among your employees and fair dealing with the public, you cannot condone practices of the kind. I am sure my hon. friend will agree that were he in my position, or some other position of trust, or in business for himself, and found that some of his employees were dishonest and would not obey the regulations, he would not continue to employ them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Quite a number of farmers participated in this fraud to the detriment of the department, by falsifying returns. What happened to them?

Mr. McCANN: Those cases were dealt with like any other taxpayer's and if there were penalties applicable they were put into effect. If it was within the province of the division to impose those penalties they were applied.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Were they applied at all?

Mr. McCANN: I am told they were; and if prosecutions were called for, they were undertaken or will be undertaken.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How many taxpayers were involved in this fraud?

Mr. McCANN: I cannot give the details.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would not the minister's official know? I understand that it runs to about fifty.

Mr. McCANN: I do not know.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Can the minister not find out from his official?

Mr. McCANN: I will try to get that information and give it later in the day.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister also give later in the day the other information I asked for, as to the number of investigating officials in connection with income tax in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta? That should be readily available. I understand the total number is 332. I would also ask the minister to file a statement showing the amount of the assessments of income tax for farmers in the three western provinces, as well as the amount for the dominion. When the minister tells me he has not the figures in that form, all I can say is that I know the department has them; the minister must have been misinformed because the records are there.

Mr. McCANN: Let me correct my hon. friend. I said we had not those figures here. They are on record in the office.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the minister also table that today?

Mr. McCANN: Yes.

Mr. MOORE: Have farmers in Ontario who failed to file their income tax returns within the specified time been visited by income tax officials and had their income arbitrarily assessed? I have heard that certain officials representing the income tax department have gone to farmers and asked them for their bank pass books, and on the basis of the entries therein have arbitrarily assessed the farmers' income; and that in some cases the arbitrary assessment was considerably higher than it should have been.

Mr. McCANN: There has not been any arbitrary assessment. Our inspectors have assisted the farmers in Ontario, as in the other provinces, in making their returns. In Ontario, inspectors both from the district office and from head office, French and English, have attended public meetings which were called in certain districts by the farmers themselves, and have there discussed the problems of the farmers with a view to giving them information which would assist them in making their returns.

I do not want the idea to go out that we are making victims of farmers. Here is the position. Income taxation started in 1917 and a great many of us did not like making out our returns then any better than the farmers do today who have only been making their returns for a year or two. But the law is the law and must be complied with.

What we have done to help the farmers is this. We have put out a book called The Farmer's Guide—one book for eastern farmers and another applicable to the particular type of farming that is done in the western provinces. This was done with a view to educating the farmers to keep records of their business done throughout the year. The farmers throughout Canada asked to be assisted as business people. Business people are compelled to keep records, and farmers should keep records, but the great majority of them keep no records. We are attempting to educate them to keep records. We have had many requests for this booklet, and have distributed 700,000 copies of it among the farmers throughout Canada in the last six or eight months.

I have heard of no great protest from the farmers themselves. On the contrary I have received many letters of commendation and thanks for the assistance that we have been attempting to give the farmers in keeping records of their business. But it is going to take a few years to educate the farmers, just as it did the rest of us, to keep records and play their part as other citizens do who are in business. We are not doing anything arbitrarily. We are handling the matter as tactfully as it can be handled, and I have no doubt that in two or three years we shall have obtained the results we expect.

[Mr. Moore.]

Mr. MOORE: I appreciate the minister's reply. I was not trying to make the point that the farmers should not have to pay taxes. I believe that people in the farming industry ought to pay taxes as do people in other industries. But I do hope that the minister will continue along the line he suggested and make these forms as simple as possible. That is one of the main reasons why they object to filing them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It would take a Philadelphia lawyer to make them out now.

Mr. MOORE: That is it. The present form is more like the Domesday book, which was introduced into England by order of William the Conqueror, than a tax form. I hope that in the next two or three years everything possible will be done to make the form simpler.

Mr. McCANN: Work is progressing actively on the simplification of the forms. It might interest hon. gentlemen to know that the present form, complicated as it looks and is, is a better form than the one submitted by the Canadian federation of agriculture, because it is a more businesslike form.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I want to follow up the answer given by the minister to the hon. member for Lake Centre. He said that 332 inspectors were out. That does not mean farm inspectors alone?

Mr. McCANN: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): We should be given a breakdown, because the minister realizes that as the work is carried on there are different types of inspectors. There are those who deal entirely with farm returns, those who deal with business returns, and so on. Of the 332 inspectors we should be told how many are dealing with farm returns and how many are dealing with business returns.

I should like to endorse what the hon. member for Lake Centre said about the young people. That has been a bone of contention for a long while. These young people are actively assisting in the production of foodstuffs on the farm, and some consideration should be given to them. I hope something satisfactory can be worked out there. The minister was going to get us that information. We should get that information before the item passes.

I should like to deal with the Saskatoon mix-up. Will the minister give us the number of informations which were laid, the prosecutions which were started, the number that were withdrawn and the number that were actually proceeded with?

Mr. HLYNKA: The minister is quite right when he says that until two or three years ago farmers were never asked to pay income tax. This thing is quite new to them. The minister says that as years go by the farmers will become educated. I agree that the farmers are getting real education at the present time. The inspectors come around, compute their taxes for the past few years, and tell them that they have to come through with a payment, regardless of the conditions under which they live.

I should like to deal with two points. No farmer objects to paying a legitimate tax which is levied against him. I have not met a single farmer who objects to paying the same tax and on the same scale as anyone else pays who receives an income. What the farmers do object to is the arbitrary method of sending out inspectors who call at the home of the farmer and ask him what he was worth in 1940 or 1941 and what he is worth today, and then by simple subtraction telling him that he has to pay $1,000 or $2,000, or whatever it may be. In my own constituency farmers have been asked to pay more income taxes for the past three years than they are worth. That is unfair. Why did not the government tell the farmers that they were expected to keep books for 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944? Not a word was said about income tax then. All of a sudden, after the election of 1945, these inspectors were sent out and told the farmer that he would have to produce his account books for 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945. That sort of thing is unreasonable. It is something that should not be permitted to continue.

I appeal to the minister to instruct his officials—and I think it will pay not only the department but the country, and it will be the right thing to do—to forget about these back taxes. It would pay the country, even if we lost a little of the money that could be squeezed out of the farmers, if the income taxes for 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944—that is, until the department actually issued instructions to collect these taxes—were permitted to fall by the wayside. I do not say that we should not collect taxes from farmers who are well off. Certainly if you can prove to the farmers that they did have income, why should they not pay? I am sure that they will not object; but this idea of slapping a few thousand dollars in a lump sum on a farmer is just the thing that is going to be unjust to the farmer. Furthermore—and I do not particularly object to this—it is going to sweep from western Canada the representatives of the minister's party, because the farmers feel that that is unjust, and that it is an unfair way of collecting taxes.

Mr. SINCLAIR: They did not do it last Thursday.

Mr. HLYNKA: I would not be too optimistic about last Thursday if I were my hon. friend.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Your party certainly should not.

Mr. HLYNKA: The fact remains that you cannot continue to enforce something that is unjust. I say to the minister that he is quite right; he is doing his job well. He is quite right in getting the tax that is levied upon the farmers for the years 1945, 1946, and up to the present time and the same would apply to the future. But he is not right when he sends out a bevy of inspectors who are chasing after the farmers from one end of western Canada to the other and telling them that they have to come through with income tax for 1941, 1942 and 1943. It is unfair.

The other day a farmer told me that he went to town to buy certain articles, and when he returned home he found that his wife and children were crying. He asked them what was the matter. His wife said that the income tax inspector was on the premises. She said that he had been terrible. The farmer asked where he was. She said, "If you go out to the pigpen you will find him. He is counting the pigs, but you will recognize him; he is wearing a hat."

Some hon. MEMBERS: One o'clock.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps I was wrong in not seeing every hon. member of the house, but I spoke to the leaders of the three parties, and they agreed that we should sit through until three o'clock. If there is no serious objection—

Mr. SINCLAIR: I object to that, because the arrangement last night was that we would rise at one and sit again at two.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

PRICES

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That the report of the special committee on prices appointed the 10th of February, 1948, presented to the house on Friday, June 25, 1948, be now concurred in.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I ask a question before the debate proceeds? Is it the intention to conclude this debate before proceeding with any other estimates this afternoon?

Mr. MARTIN: That is the intention and the hope.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion? Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BRACKEN: Surely we are to have an explanation of the matter.

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), as chairman on the special committee on prices, has moved that the house concur in the report which was tabled yesterday. It is my intention to review, as briefly as may be, some of the essential features of the report and some of the conclusions that flow from it.

In the first place I do not know how many members of the house have yet had the time or opportunity to read this report; it was distributed in mimeographed form late yesterday. It runs to something over seventy pages, and it may be that at this stage hon. members of the house have not had adequate opportunity to digest it. It is in the hope of assisting members that I desire to make some comments on the highlights of this report.

At the outset I point out that this is a majority report. When it was adopted at 1.30 a.m. yesterday by the committee, the motion for adoption was supported by the Liberal and C.C.F. members present at the time of the vote. It was opposed by the Progressive Conservative and Social Credit members.

The rise in the cost of living is a matter of general concern. Concern over the vaulting cost of living is not the exclusive right of any party or person in this house. It is a matter of the greatest concern to us all, just as it is a matter of lively concern to all Canadians.

The report contains some significant figures. The first appendix gives the figures on the rise in the cost of living in recent months. When the war ended the cost of living index stood between 118 and 120. At the end of May, 1948, the cost of living index was 153·3. The food index has shown an even more amazing climb. When the war ended the index was at a figure of approximately 135. At the end of May it had jumped to 191·2. We have in Canada today a condition of inflation—not of course in the sense of the inflation which Germany experienced after the first war, or the inflation of China today, but nevertheless a condition of inflation. Our Canadian dollar, in terms of purchasing power compared with its purchasing power before the war, is worth just two-thirds of what it was then worth. Today we have a sixty-five cent dollar.

The government of course has misjudged the situation. Last October on his return from Europe, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), at a time when the cost of living index stood at 138, said it was in the process of levelling off, that it would not go much higher, and that it was the expectation of the government that it would level off at not more than 145. I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, that the index has continued to climb, and that at the end of May it had reached the figure of 153·3.

This committee in its majority report has been busy tooting its own horn. You will find in not only one but several places in the report statements by the committee to the effect that it has contributed toward checking rises in the cost of living, that the mere fact that the committee has been sitting and has been conducting inquiries has resulted in people who have goods for sale taking lower prices than they otherwise would have taken. There may be the isolated case where that has happened, but in the approximately 4,000 pages of printed evidence taken by this committee, there just is not evidence that warrants such a finding.

The majority on the committee, the government members, have been busy trying to keep up their courage by whistling. Apparently it was necessary in the government strategy, that any discussion on the question of the cost of living be kept off the floor of the House of Commons. And, of course, the government majority on the committee has sought to justify the existence of the committee on some other basis. In all frankness I think the government majority might have said that was the purpose the committee could best serve.

However, I wish to comment briefly on the evidence as to the alleged usefulness of the committee. The one case to which the committee can point, where an individual said he was reducing the price of his product as the result of a request from the committee, was that of a baker in the city of Montreal, where according to my recollection he has one or two shops. He said he was going to reduce his bread from fourteen to thirteen cents a loaf. That was the only case; and on evidence of this kind the government majority on the committee purports to justify the existence of the committee and these four and a half months of sittings. It was a good advertising stunt on the part of that particular merchant. He obtained national advertising. I think it shows he was a realist and a good businessman, and that he really pulled the leg of my hon. friend the chairman of the committee.

However, the committee has seen fit to do something else. It has tried to justify its existence by the length of its report. So we have a report of almost prodigious length, measured in terms of what the committee has really accomplished; a report padded with repetitions. In other words, having little to show for its efforts, the committee has sought to write a long report to give the impression that the report has value.

Now I have some direct observations to make upon the report itself. The first observation is that the report was steam-rollered through the committee. Bear in mind, sir, that the committee continued its public sittings right up until Thursday noon of this week, and members of the committee saw the draft report for the first time Thursday morning. Several members were appointed a drafting committee and given copies of a draft report late the night before, too late to read it; but the committee sat down with a draft report in front of it for the first time on Thursday morning, a draft which was placed before us by the chairman and vice-chairman. The committee sat through the whole day, and at one-thirty Friday morning purported to adopt that report.

What was done at the meeting? There was discussion, a good deal of it; but in every case it came down to this: the opposition members on the committee were told, not once but repeatedly, that they might make observations, they might discuss the report, they might offer amendments, but unless those amendments were simply matters of dotting the i's and crossing the t's they would not pass. We were told that before we even began to discuss the amendments. You will realize, of course, Mr. Speaker, that as far as any participation by the members of the committee in writing that report went, what went on was little more than an empty formality. The essentials of the report were settled and determined before the committee ever saw it. When the report was submitted the committee was told that no amendment of substance would be tolerated.

Is this kind of procedure likely to elevate parliament, parliamentary institutions and parliamentary procedure in the minds of the public? I say that no tactic will more quickly and effectively undermine the confidence of the people in parliamentary institutions than steam-roller methods of this kind.

But that is not all. For several days past the press has in advance carried portions of the contents of this report. I am sure it must have shocked some members of the committee to find, when the report was finally submitted to them on Thursday, that it tallied verbatim with reports which had been appearing in the press for some days in advance, as to recommendations and statements the report would contain when made public. That is a shocking state of affairs, that the press or others should have access to a draft report, which was railroaded through a committee, before the members of that committee even had an opportunity of seeing it.

We find in this report what purport to be findings of fact. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in the resolution passed by this house last February the committee was given three tasks to perform. First, we were to find out the causes of the recent rise in the cost of living. Second, we were told to examine and report from time to time as to prices which had been raised above levels justified by increased costs. Third, we were to report upon rises in prices due to the acquiring or withholding from sale of goods by persons in excess of their own reasonable requirements.

These were the three tasks the committee was directed to perform. There is not time to review in detail what purport to be the findings of fact in this report. The committee was described by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and others who participated in the debate in the house as a fact-finding body. I cannot go over the findings in detail, but I do wish to comment briefly on them.

In the first place many of them are not according to the evidence. Others represent a lopsided, distorted and unfair presentation of the evidence. In the next place, the government majority on the committee has seen fit to turn this document into a vehicle of Liberal political propaganda. I am obliged to use the mimeographed copy of this report in referring to its contents; and I note on pages 14 and 15, for instance, that the government majority on the committee, the persons who really carried the report, though they were told to inquire into the causes of the recent rises in the cost of living, have seen fit to go back to the first great war, and to conjure up pictures of the relief lines in the days of depression. That is not the only evidence in this report that the government majority on the committee saw fit to turn it into a vehicle for political propaganda. There are many others, and I hope to have an opportunity of briefly indicating some of the more important examples.

Surely in a matter of this kind, where a parliamentary committee is purporting to reach findings of fact, parliament, or the committee in the first place, should make a complete statement of the facts and then reach a considered finding in reference to those facts. What has happened here? It has written page after page after page of general material in which expressions like this frequently occur:

"in certain lines of business" certain individuals and persons did certain things of which the committee does not approve.

Let me make this abundantly clear: wherever there was evidence before the committee that an individual was profiteering, then I say, with emphasis, that the committee should have said so and should have stated the facts on such things in detail, put them on the record, and reached its judgment about the individuals concerned. But that is not the way in which the majority on this committee has gone about its task. All the way through this report, in two-thirds of it, you will find this idea iterated and reiterated: that certain individuals in certain lines of business have done certain things—a general condemnation, without any attempt to separate those who were responsible for such things from those who were in no sense tarred with the brush of such actions.

This is an absolutely improper approach to the task. Where individuals have been responsible for lifting prices unwarrantably, those individuals should have been censured in this report. That is no excuse for a general smearing of all companies in any particular business. In that respect this report is a highly deplorable and incomplete document.

The majority of the committee has been at great pains to find certain causes for the rise in the cost of living. Mr. Speaker, you will search in vain through the pages of this report for references to the extent to which government policies—many of them directly inflationary in their nature—have entered into the rise in the cost of living. Similarly you will search the pages of this report in vain for any reference to the extent to which government taxation has entered into the continually increasing cost of living.

Why is it that this report, which is so voluminous and so generous with its words in so many other respects, has seen fit, in the wisdom of the government majority, to maintain a most discreet and awesome silence on two of the leading causes for the rise in the cost of living—inflationary government policies, and government taxation? It is in those respects and in others a woefully incomplete report of the proceedings of the committee. As a result there are certain aspects of it upon which I shall have to enlarge later, and I only mention that in passing.

When I come to what are called the conclusions in this report, hon. members will see why I say that the whole report bears clear evidence of the fact that on the part of the government majority it was written in a state of panic following three recent by-elections in which the government candidates went down to defeat. It has been coloured for considerations of political expediency, on the part of the government majority.

We find at an early stage in the report what are described as conclusions. I have always thought it was usual to put the conclusions at the end of any document, but the committee has seen fit to put the conclusions at the beginning of the report. Why? Apparently the majority in the committee were very anxious that these conclusions at least should be read, even if people did not have the patience to go further into the report.

These "conclusions", sir, as you will note from reading the report, are recommendations; they are not conclusions at all. They are recommendations because they ask the government to do certain things. Why should these so-called conclusions appear, and by what name shall they be called? I propose to call them recommendations in the report, because that is the name given to them in the further supplementary estimates tabled in the house this morning. As item 934 we find an amount of $50,000 for the following:

> To provide for the expenses of a commission to be appointed under part I of the Inquiries Act, to inquire into prices and related subjects, as recommended by the special committee on prices.

Therefore, with this approval in the government's further supplementary estimates, I choose to call these conclusions "recommendations". How does it come about that these recommendations appear in the report?

May I recall to members of the house the course of the debate which took place in the house early last February. We of the Progressive Conservative party said that the committee should have the power to make recommendations. We urged that. But what were we told? The Prime Minister had something to say about that, and the reasons why in his drafting of the resolution there had been no reference to any power to make recommendations.

At page 749 of Hansard for February 2 the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart) asked: "What about recommendations?" The Prime Minister in his answer said that so far as he was concerned the committee was not being given power to make recommendations, but that if they came back later and thought they should have the power to make recommendations, he would be prepared to treat sympathetically the request of the committee. From time to time in committee the subject of asking for power to make recommendations arose, but the committee did not place any motion of that kind before the house.

Therefore it was with no little surprise that members of this committee found themselves confronted yesterday at 12:45 a.m. with a whole volume of recommendations. Bear this in mind, that everything the committee had done in four and a half months, sitting day in and day out, had been done on the basis that the committee was only a fact-finding committee and had no power to make recommendations. Many of us were surprised, indeed amazed, to find the press carrying a statement a few days before opposition members of the committee saw the draft report —a statement that the committee would make recommendations. We said it could not be so, because the committee had been told it had no such power.

It remained then for the vice-chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) to introduce in the committee this chapter of recommendations. It is worth remembering that it was this same hon. member who, when this matter was under debate in the house on February 3 last, said that Your Honour should rule out of order the Progressive Conservative amendment which sought to give power to the committee to make recommendations. He saw fit to say that the committee was to be a fact-finding committee, and that if it were given the power to make recommendations it would usurp the functions of the cabinet.

Mr. MAYBANK: On a point of order, the hon. member is not quoting me correctly. If he desires to quote what I said in the house, I would request that he do it directly and not by paraphrase.

Mr. FLEMING: It will give me very great pleasure to quote the hon. member's language in the house, as it is found at pages 819 and 820 of Hansard, where he deals with the amendment of my leader. The hon. member states that the effect will be to change the nature of the committee entirely from that of a fact-finding committee, that the committee would then be advising on government policy. Then on page 819 the hon. member is reported as follows:

I submit that that procedure is quite foreign to the parliamentary system of this country.

He is referring to committees recommending matters of policy.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Read the amendment.

Mr. FLEMING: I have been asked to read the amendment of my leader; I shall come back to that. The hon. member went on to say:

Government policy is to be designed by that committee which we commonly call the cabinet, which has that responsibility and which must at all times have the confidence of the House of Commons. That in itself seems to me sufficient to require that a ruling should be given denying the validity of the amendment of the leader of the opposition.

What was that amendment? The amendment recommended that the said resolution be amended by inserting certain things, and then I come to the part that is of practical relevancy, which reads:

2. By adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"That as well as reporting its findings the committee shall from time to time make recommendations to the House of Commons, as in the opinion of the committee may be considered necessary to secure as far as possible fair and just returns to producers, employees and employers and fair and just practices in marketing and distribution that will safeguard the interests of consumers as well as of producers."

Bear in mind that the remark of the Prime Minister which I quoted had reference to recommendations in general. That remark was made in reply to a question which was asked before the amendment of my leader was introduced in the house.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre went on to say—and I ask hon. members to bear his words in mind when reading the recommendations appearing in this report:

In addition to the fact that these amendments would direct the committee to be a policy-making body, thereby usurping the functions of the cabinet, they seek to put the committee in the position of recommending expenditures of public money.

And later on:

—and the advisability of reverting to the payment of subsidies, which, of course would also mean the payment of public money.

The report contains a recommendation for the payment of subsidies, one of the very things on which the hon. member sought to have that amendment ruled out of order. He continues:

A committee making a recommendation of that kind would be a body, not charged with the responsibilities of government, taking on the functions of government even to the extent of dipping into the public purse and directing expenditures therefrom.

And this is his parting shot:

All this, I submit, shows that these amendments are not designed only to give direction to a fact-finding body, but are designed to change the fact-finding body completely, making it a body which would have power to bring in recommendations on all manner of things, many of which could be relatively distant from the actual question of prices themselves, and very far afield from the original motion.

I do not know whether the hon. member regards himself as a prophet, but those words of his are prophetic if you look at the recommendations that this committee has seen fit to bring in. I emphasize that the rules under which it proceeded, the whole basis of this inquiry of four and a half months was that it had no power to bring in recommendations.

These recommendations were submitted at the end of a long day; at exactly 12.45 a.m. they made their first appearance. When the government majority on the committee through the chairman and the vice-chairman saw fit to place in the hands of the members of the committee the draft report upon which the members were to pass, it did not include these recommendations. That part was held back until the conclusion of a long day at 12.45 on Friday morning. The recommendations were read then and put through in the space of minutes. I took objection on a point of order, and the chairman saw fit to overrule the objection. The rest of the committee were playing the game according to the rules that had been laid down by the house, but it remained for the government majority on the committee, backed by the ruling of the chairman, to change the rules in favour of government policy in the last half of the ninth inning of the game. There were two sets of rules, one for the opposition members of the committee, and another set which was brought in during the dying minutes of the committee's sessions to suit the interests of the government.

Not only that; look at these recommendations. Some of them deal with matters that were never before the committee at all. The second one deals with the combines investigation commission, and suggests that the funds placed at its disposal are not sufficient. The commissioner was before the committee, and he did not say that he needed more money. Where that recommendation comes from, one does not know; but I do say that if money is needed to make the combines investigation commission more efficient for the purpose of finding evidence of combines that are inimical to the public interest through profiteering of any kind, then the house would be willing to authorize whatever expenditure might be required for that purpose. As I said, the commissioner said nothing about that, and it does not appear anywhere in the evidence.

Then we are asked to deal with such things as a uniform system of business accounting, which we are told has been advocated by various business associations in Canada. There is no evidence that came before the committee from business associations of Canada asking that a uniform system of business accounting be imposed by force of law on businesses in general. We heard about this for the first time when this recommendation appeared on our desks about one o'clock yesterday morning.

[Mr. Fleming.]

There is reference to rent controls. I am sure hon. members of the committee would have been very glad to consider the question of rent controls, but here we have a recommendation dealing with a matter on which the committee had no evidence. The only thing in regard to rent control that the committee heard about was whether controls on commercial accommodation should be continued or discontinued last March. We had no evidence at any time on the subject of the rent control of housing accommodation. It may be that the recommendation contains the substance of the views of practically all hon. members on this subject, but I am pointing out that this committee has brought in a recommendation on a matter in connection with which it had no evidence whatsoever.

I come to two other recommendations. One recommendation is for the removal of the excise taxes that were imposed as part of the government's restrictive program last November. It is a very sound recommendation; but where were the voices, during those many months from November, 1947, down to the present, of those hon. members who so glibly took up this proposal and hustled it through in the early hours of yesterday morning? They were the ones who stood up and supported the stand of the government in railroading those taxes through and imposing them by radio. At that time they saw fit to approve the principle of the imposition of taxes by radio. In this finding, commendable as it is, we see evidence that at last government members have wakened up, that at last they are beginning to pay some attention to the feelings of the people of this country with regard to these iniquitous taxes.

But that is not the only way in which the government members on this committee have in a practical way, whether they realized it or not, expressed themselves in terms of condemnation of government policy—of a government policy, incidentally, very stubbornly adhered to by this government. They say now that the government ought to give consideration to a relaxation of the import restrictions. It is the same thing again, Mr. Speaker. We of the official opposition—other opposition members can speak for themselves—fought these import restrictions on the basis on which they were imposed—yes, imposed by radio decree by the Minister of Finance. The government members on the prices committee should now be congratulated on having at least recovered a sense of reality, a sense of their obligation to the people.

In a word, sir, these recommendations, smuggled into the report in the dying moments of the session, show quite clearly that they have been written by political hands for a political purpose. This apparently is to be the new Liberal platform. It is hard to conceive of these recommendations being introduced by the chairman of the committee and the vice-chairman, themselves respectively a minister of the crown and his parliamentary assistant, without their having been carefully reviewed in advance and enjoying the doubtful distinction of cabinet approval. Whether that be so directly or not, we may be very sure that apparently here we have, in embryo form, the new platform which the Liberal party proposes to write at its forthcoming convention in August next.

I make this observation. It is quite clear that the person principally responsible for the drafting of the report—and I strongly suspect that it was the Minister of National Health and Welfare—has written it deliberately with a view to nudging over the C.C.F. so that the Liberal party can find a place well to the left of its present position. In many respects it has succeeded in out-C.C.F.'ing the C.C.F. That is no doubt the reason why the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), the C.C.F. member on the committee at the time the report was adopted, endorsed and voted for the report. If the government wants to write that kind of platform with that political view in mind, I suppose it has a right to do it, and the people will have an opportunity to judge just how much weight they should attach to recommendations of this kind, written to temper the winds of political expediency, and also apparently to take refuge from the winds of public disfavour as expressed in three recent by-elections.

I wish to make this general comment on the nature of the inquiry conducted by the committee. As a review of the price structure and as an investigation seeking to ascertain the reasons for the rise in the general price structure, it is woefully incomplete. I draw this to your attention, sir, that the committee dealt with only a few commodities. It investigated bread, butter, meats, fresh fruits and vegetables, and some textiles. In none of these cases did it investigate the commodity from the stage of its primary production until it is sold to the consumer. It took one stage, or at most two stages only. In the first place, I repeatedly asked the committee when it had completed its bread inquiry to bring in its report on bread. But government members said: Oh, no; it is not ready yet, because we shall have to go back and investigate the milling industry before we can complete our report on the bread industry. But the committee saw fit, through its government majority, to bring in its report yesterday without having made any investigation into the milling industry. On butter we heard evidence from co-operatives, traders and storage warehouses, but not from retailers. On meats we heard from the packers, but not from wholesalers or retailers. On fresh fruits and vegetables we heard wholesalers, but nothing from retailers. On textiles we heard from primary manufacturers of three textiles, but we heard nothing about the intermediary stages before the textiles reach the ultimate consumer.

No attempt was made by the committee to seek a pattern of the price structure. These commodities we selected, were chosen largely because their prices were pressing on the consumer. These selections may have been sound, but I draw attention to this, that there is no ground for saying, as the report does say, that the committee has made a representative selection, or that it has found a pattern; for the committee has not touched on other foods, nor has it inquired into clothing, boots and shoes, fuel, and many other commodities.

To illustrate how incomplete an inquiry of this kind was from the point of view of getting at the nub of the problem, which is the price paid by the consumer, I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker: that in our inquiry into the prices of wool—. It has just been intimated to me, sir, that you are about to rule that I am under a time limit. I shall have to argue against it if you make that ruling. I am far from finishing the main portion of my speech, and I consider that on a government motion moved by a minister I am under no time limit.

But I had better put my amendment on record now. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt):

That the said report be not concurred in but that the same be referred back to the special committee on prices for the purpose of amending it by deleting the conclusions therein and substituting therefor the following conclusions:

(a) That the government should give consideration to the immediate removal of all special excise taxes levied and collected as from November 18, 1947;

(b) That the government should give consideration to immediately exempting from sales tax and excise tax all articles that enter into the family budget;

(c) That the government should give consideration for the benefit of those in the lower income groups to immediately reducing the income tax and increasing the exemptions;

(d) That positive and practical steps be taken forthwith to eliminate extravagance and thereby reduce the cost of government;

(e) That in the opinion of the committee the continuing increased cost of living and rising prices are substantially attributable to the government's inflationary policies.

It is my purpose now to review the reasons for this amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I have to draw his attention to the fact that he has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to that ruling? I have already stated in substance my view on the point. I am speaking to a government motion, moved by a government minister, and under the rule there is no time limit applied to the speech of the first speaker of the opposition. I have material here that I should like to lay before the house as to why these inflationary policies of the government have been responsible to a substantial extent for the increase in the cost of living. Unless you stop me, sir, I propose to assert my rights to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member will realize that I have no option but to draw his attention to the fact that he has exceeded his forty minutes. I would also call his attention to standing order 37, which reads:

> No member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, or a minister moving a government order and the member speaking in reply immediately after such minister, or a member making a motion of "no confidence" in the government and a minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than forty minutes at a time in any debate.

Since this is not a government order, I am bound to call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that he has spoken for over forty-five minutes.

Mr. FLEMING: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have to appeal your ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER: You can't take it.

Mr. LESAGE: I never heard such a weak speech.

Mr. LANGLOIS: It is not a ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member that I did not make a ruling; I called his attention to the standing order. One of the duties of the Speaker is to keep order in the house. Standing order 12 says:

> Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order, subject to an appeal to the house without debate.

I did not decide a question of order. In calling the attention of the hon. member to the fact that he is not allowed to speak more than forty minutes, I was just keeping order.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This is probably the first time that unanimous consent has not been given.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. MARTIN: I am sure my hon. friend does not intend to keep the house very long. I think I would be expressing the views of most hon. members if I said that the hon. gentleman should be allowed to continue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the house, he may proceed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. FLEMING: May I thank the house for its courtesy. I assure you, sir, that I shall endeavour to conclude my remarks as quickly as I can.

I was dealing with the point that the committee had touched only part of the problem of the rise in prices. The thing that we are concerned with is the rise in prices to the consumer. To show how incomplete has been an inquiry of this kind from the point of view of arriving at conclusions as to the reasons for the rise in general price structure, I mention these facts brought out in evidence.

Our inquiry into the price of wool showed that the amount to which the increase in the price at the manufacturing level, the primary producer's level, contributed to the cost to the consumer is only fractional; but the clothing cost index shows this, and these are government figures: in March, 1947 the level was 133·1. In March, 1948 it was 169·9, a rise in that year, sir, of 36·8 points. But look at what has been contributed by the primary producer toward this price rise. The amount that would be contributed by the manufacturer to the cost of a man's suit of clothes would be just $3 in that year. Everybody knows how much the price of men's clothes has gone up in that period. But at the manufacturer's level, which is the only one the committee dealt with, the rise would amount to only $3 in the price of the suit. On an overcoat, only $3 of the total rise was accounted for in that way. According to my recollection the figure was $1.40 on a topcoat. If you will pardon this illustration, in the case of ladies' hosiery we were told that the proportion of increase in cost that could be attributed to the primary manufacture level, with which we were dealing, was sixteen cents a pair. Where do we find the reasons for the rise in the cost to the consumer of the remainder which is the great bulk of the rise in the cost to the consumer, which has, so far as the committee's study is concerned in its report, remained an unanswered question, an unfathomed problem? In the result, sir, I have to say this, that the committee, based on a partial survey of some aspects of half a dozen commodities in the country, has seen fit to try to exempt the government from blame that properly attaches to government policy for much of the rise in the cost of living.

The government, sir, had the powers to deal with this problem. It had the law at its back, because the wartime prices and trade board general order, to which the house gave the force of a statute a year ago last March, specifically makes it an offence under the law of this country to charge for any commodity a price that is higher than just and reasonable; or to accumulate goods in excess of those required by the individual responsible for his own reasonable purposes. The Bank of Canada was available to the government, and according to the stated purpose in the preamble to the act, it was to be available to eliminate the humps and hollows in general business conditions. The powers of the Bank of Canada were available to try to prevent runaway prices. Then, there is the combines investigation commission with very wide powers. And lastly, but by no means least, there is the power of the government to use the taxing power either for the purpose of taxation or for the purpose of exempting from taxes as the case may be. In every one of those cases the use made by the government of its powers has not been, in my submission, to contribute to a reduction in the runaway cost of living.

May I just mention quickly one or two examples?—because I am trying to hurry along. Take fresh fruits and vegetables. Until the government on November 17 last imposed an embargo on the importation of certain vegetables and restricted the import of certain fruits and put a complete embargo on others, their prices had not soared, but then overnight there grew up a consumer's panic, and prices soared. At or about the end of February or the first of March the government saw fit to impose a price ceiling on these vegetables which were in such short supply, a situation which the Canadian producer was in no position to meet at that time of the year; and the committee, sir, has the audacity to commend the government for acting promptly in that situation, after they had sat back, after creating the condition on November 17 in which these prices soared almost overnight, sat back for three months before they moved to check the runaway prices of those commodities.

As to the Bank of Canada, the evidence given before the committee by Mr. Towers did not leave very much hope that the powers assigned by statute to the Bank of Canada will be used to check this runaway cost of living. Mr. Towers said in effect that, apart from drastic action of the kind that he apparently was not prepared to contemplate, the only thing that the Bank of Canada could do to end it was done, namely, to ask the chartered banks in March of this year to tighten up on loans to commercial enterprises. That is all. In the light of the evidence, it would appear that the powers of the Bank of Canada are not available to be used to check the things that have contributed, within bank policy and government policy with which it is allied, to the increase in the cost of living and the increase in the price level.

In the light of the amendment—and I am trying to hurry now—I shall touch on this question of taxation as it enters into the cost of commodities. In this respect the committee had some evidence before it. But the majority on the committee in this case has seen fit to ignore completely the evidence on this point, has seen fit to ignore completely this entire subject and to write a report that is silent as to the place of taxation; although, may I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that they slipped into the body of recommendations a recommendation for which you will find no counterpart in the pages and pages of narrative in the report.

On the subject of taxation we of the Progressive Conservative party hold the view, as to indirect taxes, that because they are passed on to the consumer, they contribute to increasing the cost to the consumer. That is the nature of the tax. An indirect tax is one that is passed on, by the person on whom it is imposed in the first instance, to the ultimate consumer. You see that in the case of the sales tax and the excise tax. They are passed on and they pyramid as they go on. A year ago I gave the house the instance of stockings that started out at a price of $1 a pair when produced by the manufacturer, bearing an eight per cent sales tax at that point but which had pyramided, by the time the stockings had passed through the hands of the wholesaler, the jobber and the retailer and reached the consumer, to a tax of not eight per cent but 14·8 per cent. All kinds of instances of that sort can be found in which the tax pyramids to a greater height than that.

Then I wish to refer to the subject of direct taxation, and when I do so I am thinking of taxes like the income tax. We say that is a tax which bears heavily on the individual pocketbook and is one that cries for remedial action in times like these; because taxes of that kind should be reduced in times like these in order to come to the rescue of the man who is caught between the upper and nether millstones of limited income and this rising cost of living.

The government had a great opportunity to use its direct tax policies in a remedial way to meet the exigencies of the hard-pressed taxpayer, above all, those in the lower income brackets, by reducing the tax and by increasing exemptions. In saying that I wish to be quite clear. We of this party have supported the principle of reasonable budget surpluses in good times, but we have said that surpluses of the kind budgeted for this year bear no resemblance to reasonableness under conditions like these, where so many people with small incomes are having such a desperate time today to meet the cost of living.

What has been the government's tax policy? Let me say just a word first as to the excise taxes imposed last November. They were imposed in many cases on the necessities of life; and now, after we heard last Tuesday from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) a statement that there is no truth in the newspaper reports that the government was proposing to lift the excise taxes which were imposed last November, we find this committee bringing in by a side wind a recommendation directly on that point.

Let no one think the removal of the excise taxes or the other indirect taxes like the sales tax, which applies still to too many items that enter into the cost of living of the average Canadian family, would not reflect itself in a reduced cost of living. Let me just remind you, Mr. Speaker, and the house of what happened last November when the government brought in these increases in taxes. It added for a little sugar-coating a couple of reductions in taxation, one of them being the reduction in the tax on electricity. What happened? The dominion bureau of statistics reflects the fact that, in the month following the removal of that electricity tax, there was an astonishing effect on the cost of electricity to the consumer, the Canadian family. According to the statistics reported by the dominion bureau of statistics, fuel and light for the month—that is, the month following November 18—showed an actual drop of 2·3 points. Is there any reason to doubt that, if the government would remove other indirect taxes, the consumer would enjoy a similar reduction in the cost of living?

If it is the intention of the government really to take seriously the recommendation of the committee in this respect, then let them not boggle about it; let them not try to preserve face by purporting to adopt a recommendation from a committee. Let them boldly take action now and remove these taxes while parliament is in session. Let them bring in their bills now for the removal of these taxes. Away with the excise tax imposed last November! Away with the sales tax as far as it applies to all the commodities that enter into the family budget of the Canadian family! Away with all the other excise taxes that apply to many of these necessities of life which have a direct bearing on the cost of living to the Canadian family!

On the subject of taxes, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that the committee had some evidence on this point. Here is the evidence given by one of the textile manufacturers who was before the committee. This presentation was filed with the committee just within recent days. This company, Canadian Celanese Limited, shows in its breakdown of taxes that no less than 15·9 per cent of its total dollar volume of sales goes to pay taxes; and of that, 12·8 per cent goes to pay dominion taxes. If we are looking for some opportunity to bring the cost of living down closer to the capacity of the Canadian people to pay, let the government take immediate action to reduce these taxes the Canadian consumers are paying, because they are being paid by the Canadian consumer. I refer to these indirect taxes; and I ask the government also, even at this late date in the session, to deal with the question of trying to preserve to the Canadian of small income the proportion of his income which they are taking now in income taxes and which he badly needs to meet the increases in the cost of living.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to controls; and I do not intend to take time to go into the whole subject. I should have liked to have time to deal with them and to read extracts from the evidence on the matter. We had much evidence on the subject of controls, and we had from Mr. Graham Towers the statement that the country cannot expect to use controls to cope with the general rise in the price level unless it is prepared to apply a general over-all price control policy. He said that control would have to include wages and salaries, and would have to be a far more rigid over-all control than existed in time of war. He also recognized that it would have to be generally acceptable to the Canadian people and have their strong support. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, as you know, you would have the black market running wild.

Similar things were said by Mr. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, the man closer to the enforcement of controls than any other person in Canada, as to the impossibility of maintaining a general over-all price control or of reimposing such controls today. I asked what would happen if today the government sought to push back prices, as parliament is sometimes invited to do, to the 1946 level. His reply was, "Complete chaos." I asked why, and his answer was simply that the primary producer just would not produce, because he will not produce unless there is a profit incentive for him. If you are going to talk about pushing back prices and enforcing a rigid over-all price control policy, then, according to Mr. Kenneth Taylor, you will just not get production.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say the problem, in the last analysis being one of scarcity, will be solved only by greater production. That will be the only final solution. Anything that stands in the way of production; anything that results in production being curbed or discouraged, is directly contributing to inflation in Canada. Among those things which are causing inflation are these government policies which are having the effect of discouraging production.

The Progressive Conservative party does not believe that the way out of the problem of a rising level of prices is to grind down the farmer. Today the farmer is simply enjoying rights which he has been denied for a long time. He has not hitherto been receiving fair play, and we of the Progressive Conservative party will oppose any policy that denies the primary producer the fair fruits of his labours.

Nor are we prepared to support any government policy that will have the effect of increasing bureaucracy in Canada and of imposing controls that have as their ultimate effect a restriction of production. If we follow policies that restrict, policies that control, which will have the effect of discouraging production, then our last state will be worse than our first.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the course which ought to be followed right now by this government is to do away with these taxes which have done so much to raise the cost of living, taxes which, with the increased prices, have themselves risen in amount because they are percentage taxes, and these income taxes that are taken from the pockets of the people, money they badly need to meet this increased cost of living. And, sir, this government should abandon the policies I have referred to, which have had the effect of restricting production and discouraging the producer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to raise a point of order in regard to the amendment. The house may direct a committee as to what it is to inquire into. It may enlarge the order of reference by means of an instruction, but it cannot tell a committee in advance what it must find. That is what this amendment seeks to do. It states:

> That the said report be not concurred in but that the same be referred back to the special committee on prices for the purpose of amending it by deleting the conclusions therein and substituting therefor the following conclusions. . .

In other words, by this amendment the house would be telling a committee which it had appointed to inquire into a matter what its conclusions must be. Here are five findings that are to be made by the committee. Surely a motion to that effect is entirely out of order.

I would refer as well to standing order 65, section 2:

> (2) It shall always be understood that no member who declares or decides against the principle of a bill, resolution, or matter to be committed, can be nominated of such committee.

Here my hon. friend has already decided against the matters that are to be referred to the committee, and has indicated what the committee is to find. According to the rules governing the setting up of a committee, he could not even be a member of it. Obviously the amendment is out of order.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have no particular reason for wishing the motion to be declared in order, but I would refer to Beauchesne, third edition, page 204, citation 570, where I find these words:

> When the motion to concur is proposed the report may be referred back to the committee for further consideration or with instruction to amend it in any respect. It is not competent for a committee to reconsider and reverse its own decision, but if the house resolves that such reconsideration is necessary, the correct procedure is for the house to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

The committee is not dealing with this matter; it is being dealt with by the house at the moment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I shall take the representations that have been made into consideration and give a ruling in due course.

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I had not thought I would be speaking at this juncture, after the compelling criticism that has been leveled at the government in connection with this report. I should have expected them to make some attempt to defend themselves following the brilliant speech by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) to which we have just listened. From the unwillingness of any hon. member on the other side of the house to make an attempt at least to justify what the government and the majority on this committee have done, I feel one is led to the conclusion that they cannot make any defence, that they have none to offer.

In view of that fact, and in view of the lateness of the session I hope I shall not speak at any great length. However, as seconder of the amendment whose fate you have just taken under consideration, Mr. Speaker, I think I should address a few remarks to the house. I sat as a member of this committee since its inception in February, and during the course of such lengthy hearings one cannot help but form some conclusions.

I do not want to repeat anything that has been so ably said by the hon. member for Eglinton with regard to the way in which the deliberations of the committee were conducted, but I must make a few remarks with respect to the fourteen recommendations brought before the committee about one o'clock yesterday morning. The hon. member for Eglinton has pointed out how some of them are critical of the government and critical of the government's policies. Six of them are directly critical of the government. Four more are innocuous enough as recommendations, and will have no effect at all in reducing prices. There is another series of four which I think one could describe as the ash-can sections, because each one of them has in its wording the obvious way in which it can be thrown into the ash-can as soon as the house rises.

I wish to protest against any idea that I was a party to any of those recommendations. I was a member of the committee, so far as the rest of the report was concerned. Although I did not concur in it, and was opposed to it, nevertheless the rest of the report refers to the work of the committee. But this part II of the report, as I call it, the conclusions or recommendations, is not even the recommendations of the majority of the committee. They are the recommendations of a group of Liberal members on the committee, headed by one of the cabinet ministers. They are inspired, not so much from the evidence adduced before the committee, but from the dissatisfaction of those members with the policies of the government. While the main part of the report can be called the report of the committee on prices, I can only call these fourteen conclusions or recommendations the second Breithaupt report. If they are not that, then, as the hon. member for Eglinton says, they are a preview of a Lansdowne park platform in August.

I wish to make it perfectly clear and plain that, as a member of the committee, I resented the attempt to make me a party to the washing of dirty cabinet linen in public; because when we consider that the recommendations —of which the six most important are directly critical of the policies followed by the government—were brought in at this last moment by a member of the cabinet, we can only reach the conclusion that there is a split in the cabinet, and that that split in the cabinet is having a lot to do with the difficulties of this country in facing our present problems, particularly the problem of the rising cost of living.

It is interesting to see what those six recommendations are. There is the recommendation that the import restrictions be relieved. There is the recommendation that the excise tax be removed. There is the recommendation for a change in rental controls, and then there is the recommendation which is perhaps more important than all the others in its application to the great clambake which will take place in August, namely recommendation No. 12, which contains the veiled suggestion that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) should not be allowed to proceed with his announced policy with regard to the export embargo on cattle.

Some of these are proper recommendations to make. I believe we have advocated all of them but the last from this side of the house right through the session. Furthermore we voted against the introduction of the policies about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is now complaining. But there is just one thing I would say to him, and that is that he should fix up those things on his own side of the house, and not try to use a committee—at least not one of which I am a member—to fry his fish.

With regard to the rest of the report let me point out that this is a political document entirely; it is not a contribution to the understanding by the Canadian people of the causes of price increases in this country. It could not be considered an attempt at enlightenment of the public. It is a verbose document, and it is inconclusive because it was insufficiently considered.

Right through the course of the investigation, as a member of the committee I have taken the position that we should not load ourselves with so much work that we could not bring in some useful findings with respect to matters which we were investigating. And when we come up to just the day before yesterday—almost the last day of the session—and have thrust before us this long sixty-page report, which took all day to read, let alone to consider, one can see what very little consideration was given to the report by the committee.

I have no doubt that a great deal was thought of it by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or whoever was its author. But the committee itself had practically no chance to consider it at all. It does not represent a serious attempt to convey to the Canadian people the reasons for the rising cost of living.

I should like to make another general observation about the report and about the work of the committee. I was greatly impressed by the fact, which was brought out time and again in evidence, that the government had, without the committee, all the means at its disposal whereby it could get the information it wanted and could take the action it wanted.

We had before us some of the senior officers of the government—some very able men, indeed. We had before us Mr. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board; Mr. Graham Towers, and many other officers in government departments. Their evidence was most helpful. Indeed I believe it was the most important evidence we heard, because they knew, and they told us, why the cost of living had been going up—and they had certainly long before told the government the same things as they told us.

I was greatly interested in one bit of evidence given by Mr. Taylor. The press of this country during the sittings of the committee had a lot to say about the high profits made by companies engaged in the selling of butter. It came like a bolt from the blue. The evidence of Mr. Taylor was that he knew of these butter profits long before the committee was set up, away back at the beginning of December when he was having one of his periodic conferences with the dairy industry. Information about the rise in the price of butter during the fall was known to the government, and yet no action was taken by the government upon that information. It did not need this committee to bring out information with respect to the butter situation; the government knew of it all the time.

It is interesting to note that there were officials of the government very close to the meat situation. They had to be, because the government is in the meat business. There was nothing discovered by this committee that those officials did not know. There was not one bit of that evidence that required the actions of this committee to elicit. I have no doubt that the purpose of setting up the committee was simply to turn pressure away from the government in the house.

When we turn to the report we find that it is completely unbalanced. It is so unbalanced that it is clear it is designed only as an attempt to exonerate the government from responsibility for rising prices. This was a serious committee set up to find out why these prices were rising. We spent ninety-five per cent of our time in investigating the activities of firms in a few lines of business. We spent very little time and gave very little consideration to the much more important problems that are behind the activities of those firms in their various fields.

I suggest that the kind of problem we should have been studying was the relative positions of production and consumption of the goods in Canada which enter into the cost of living. We should have been finding out whether we had enough production and, if not, why not. We should have been trying to see that production was increased. We should have been examining into the question of consumption, and we should have brought in a report to the house showing how these two vital problems contribute to a rise in the cost of living. The fact that we did not go into those fundamental things; the fact that we dismissed them with a few hours of evidence and with a few words in the report shows how political a document this is and how it was not really an attempt to grapple with the problem.

I should like to speak for a few minutes with reference to the last paragraph of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Eglinton, which reads:

> That in the opinion of the committee the continuing increased cost of living and rising prices are substantially attributable to the government's inflationary policies.

There is no direct reference in the report to the influence of government policy on the price level, but in the recommendations of the Minister of National Health and Welfare government policies are inferentially deemed to have made such a contribution to the cost of living. After hearing evidence on the prevailing price levels of a number of commodities, I am of the opinion that those levels were the direct result, or one might even say the considered aim, of government policies.

Mention has been made of the high rate of taxation, of the twenty-three cents in the dollar which goes to the dominion government in taxes these days. Mention has been made of the sales tax and of the easy-money policy of this government which contributed to the increase of purchasing power in Canada, one of the causes of rising prices as found by the committee.

When you come to examine the various commodities dealt with you find a most extraordinary thing. In some cases the domestic wholesale price was fixed by the government, either directly or indirectly, and in other cases there was a direct connection between government policy and the increase in the price. Let me just deal with the commodities we did examine.

In the case of butter we had evidence that the wholesale price had gone up to between sixty-nine and seventy cents at the time the ceilings were put on. We had evidence that the wartime prices and trade board were instructed early in December to consider the price at which they would reimpose the ceiling. We had evidence from Mr. Taylor that they could not make that decision until they knew what price would be fixed by the government for the export of cheese to Great Britain. When they knew that price at the end of December they were able to put on the ceiling of sixty-seven cents.

We had evidence that the price of butter is directly related to the export price of cheese and that if the prices board had fixed the ceiling price of butter below two and one-eighth times the export price of cheese there would have been no butter production in Canada. In effect, the government put a floor price of sixty-seven cents under butter, and the price we are now paying in Canada is a direct result of government policy.

Similarly with meat. We had evidence which showed that by far the largest rise in the price of pork, namely, four cents from seventeen to twenty-one cents a pound, occurred on January 1, 1947. That price rise immediately followed the negotiation of the new export bacon contract. We had evidence at the same time that the increase in the price of pork caused buyers to increase their consumption of beef, thereby sending beef prices upward. There again a floor price was put under these commodities by the government, and the price of meat as it is today is the direct result of government policy. If the people of Canada are complaining about those prices, they know precisely where to place the responsibility.

With regard to fruits and vegetables, it was only too clear that prices rose as they must when you cause a scarcity condition in any commodity. It was inevitable that the import restrictions on fruits and vegetables would bring about exactly what happened. Although there were cases of high prices and very large profits among fruit and vegetable dealers which should be condemned, the fact remains that it was the policy and the action of this government in imposing import restrictions which made it possible for these things to be done, and it is idle to criticize a few individuals for what they did when the certain result of their policies could easily have been foreseen by the government.

[Mr. Merritt.]

I conclude my remarks by referring to the last recommendation of the committee, No. 14, which reads as follows:

> The committee wishes to emphasize the fact that increased production at home and abroad is the only permanent solution to the problem of high prices. The present shortage of commodities is world-wide, forcing world prices to high levels, which in turn are forcing Canadian prices upward.

There it is pointed out, and of course it is true, and we did not need a committee to tell us, that it is production and production alone which can bring prices down. When considering how far the government is responsible for rising prices I think it is a fair question to ask, what is their record in the stimulation of production? I think we shall find that, far from having any clear policy designed to increase the production of goods in Canada, the government have taken every step they could to restrict production and dam it back and to interfere with the abundant flow of goods in Canada. It is those restrictive policies, which I know the government say have been forced upon them by events, which day by day are becoming more and more responsible for rising prices in Canada.

We shall never have increased production if we maintain the present rate of taxation. Everyone knows that. The government know it just as well as I do, but they have not been able to stop their extravagance and get our taxes down. In the committee we saw the direct relationship between import restrictions and prices. That was evident in the fruit and vegetables field. There is no doubt in my mind that the government's import restrictions are contributing greatly to increased prices in Canada today. At the same time, under the policies of the foreign exchange control board we are stifling the entry of capital into Canada and making it more difficult than ever to import goods and to increase the supply of goods in this country. We have heard in recent months in this house the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) say over and over again that Canada's capital goods development is placing so great a strain upon our supply of manpower and materials that it is necessary to cut it back and not to spend so much money on capital development. We have the Canadian dollar maintained at par under the foreign exchange control board. The import restrictions on goods and the maintenance of the Canadian dollar at an unreal figure are two ways of creating scarcity in Canada and consequent rising prices. Rising prices must be the inevitable result of the continuation of these policies, and we shall never get out of our present situation unless those policies are reversed.

I was most interested to read in the press the other day that the president of the New York curb exchange had visited western Canada and looked over various opportunities there. He was quoted as saying: "You have plenty of opportunities in this part of the country, and we have plenty of capital in the United States seeking a profitable outlet, but you cannot expect capital to walk into a trap." That is the situation brought about by the government's exchange policy. It has stopped the influx of capital which in turn would have enabled us to increase our importation of capital goods and would have lessened the pressure of purchasing power on the price of all other goods that we have in the country or that we wish to import. If, Mr. Speaker, the government should find some way of attracting capital into Canada the import restrictions could be taken off in a moment.

I point out to the government, who are so fearful of an adverse balance of trade with the United States that we must restrict everything we do, that until 1920, for the first fifty years in the life of Canada we had in almost every year, not only an adverse balance of trade with the United States but an over-all adverse balance of trade.

We were always importing more than we exported of our own production. In none of those years was it necessary to put on import restrictions to create scarcities in Canada and to cause our prices to rise in a way to distress our people. In each of those years people abroad, having confidence in Canada and realizing that it was a country in which it was safe and wise and profitable to invest their money, came in here and added to our store of foreign exchange with their own savings. By that action we were enabled to build up the productive forces which we have in Canada today and of which we are so proud.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have complained about our tight manpower situation. They have suggested that, since we have full employment, the only way to improve our present difficulties is to put on excise taxes and to cut back consumption and production. Why should we cut back production and consumption because we have full employment? Why should we not go after the manpower bottleneck, step up our immigration program and, alongside of new capital, bring in the new people to work in Canada to enable us to get after this production which the minister recommends so strongly?

In the first four months of this year, according to figures given in the house the other day, only 32,500 people came into Canada; I do not know how many left. That is at the gross rate of 100,000 a year. Well, Mr. Speaker, in the great days of this country when we were trying to go ahead instead of to cut back, when we thought a rise in prices was a sign of prosperity instead of a thing we should shrink from, we had 200,000, 300,000 and 400,000 people coming to Canada every year. We had the money coming in with them to assist us in putting these new Canadians to work. We had prosperity all round and a happy and contented people, not a people worrying as to where they would get their next day's supply of bread and butter.

What I dislike particularly about the restrictionist policy of the government is this. If ever I learned anything while sitting on the committee on prices I learned that the policies of this government in cutting off the flow of goods in Canada, in cutting back production and in attempting at the same time to reduce our consumption by these various control measures which we all know so much about this session, are bound to lead to further reduction in production and further rises in prices. So long as you stop goods coming in; so long as you stop the increase of our production facilities; so long as you keep this country with a manpower shortage and allow in only a trickle of people every year, so long will you keep your high prices. It is time that the government completely swallowed themselves and reversed their policies. It is time they stopped excessive taxation; it is time they stopped restricting trade; it is time they stopped stifling capital development, and it is time they went after the manpower shortage instead of sitting back and saying that because we have not the people we cannot do anything in this country.

In spite of the recommendations and conclusions in this report, I suggest that we pay no attention to it. I suggest that we set the dollar free, that we set trade free, that we set the Canadian people free to go about production in Canada in their own way and as they see fit. I suggest that we make this country a mecca for all free people who are vigorous and want to work, who want to have opportunity. Then we shall have production, and when we have production we shall have reduction in prices.

In these days we have an opportunity of gathering our forces together to go on to be a great nation. The test of whether we have a good government in Canada is whether people outside our borders who have money to invest, or who want a future in a country of opportunity, are looking to Canada as a place where they want to invest their money or to make that future. If you have an inflow of capital and people, then you have a good government. If you do not have these two things; if you dry them up, you have a bad government. Anyone who knows about the figures of immigration of people or capital today knows we have a bad government now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt) spoke, I informed the house that I would consider the representations which were made with respect to the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). Since then, I have had an opportunity of doing so. If the amendment is an instruction to the committee to do certain things, I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne, third edition, citation 407, which reads:

> An instruction is a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might not otherwise do.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Are you going to allow any discussion before you make your ruling, Mr. Speaker? You retired for the purpose of considering some representations; but, as I understood it, with great respect, you gave no indication that you would make a decision without having further representations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) raised the point of order. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) discussed the subject. I am not going to shut off discussion immediately, but I should point out to the house that discussion on a point of order should be limited. The Speaker must decide when he feels that he has heard enough representations. I shall be glad to hear any representation from the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) which he wishes to make.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I refer you again, sir, to citation 570 to which reference was made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I shall read it and then I shall endeavour to apply this amendment and bring it within the ambit of this particular reference. The citation reads:

> When the motion to concur is proposed the report may be referred back to the committee for further consideration or with instruction to amend it in any respect. It is not competent for a committee to reconsider and reverse its own decision, but if the house resolves that such reconsideration is necessary, the correct procedure is for the house to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

The report that has been moved for concurrence sets out fourteen recommendations made by the committee. I might just mention one as an indication of the type. Paragraph 9 reads:

> The committee is of the opinion that the government should consider whether the time has not come to remove the special excise taxes on commodities in common use in Canada.

As I see it, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Eglinton follows that paragraph so directly that it is inconceivable on the authorities, I submit, that Your Honour can come to any other conclusion than that it falls directly within the provisions of the citation to which I have referred. I would point out that the amendment reads as follows:

> That the said report be not concurred in but that the same be referred back to the special committee on prices for the purpose of amending it by deleting the conclusions therein and substituting therefor the following conclusions. . .

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is actually what citation 570 says:

> . . . be referred back to the committee for further consideration or with instruction to amend it in any respect.

The amendment consists of the deletion of twelve recommendations and the substitution of five recommendations particularly set out in it. I submit that it comes entirely and completely within the purview of the citation that has been brought to your attention.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: May I say a word in answer to the hon. member? Will he look at paragraph (e) of the proposed amendment, and will he undertake to say that it is competent to this house to say to members of the committee:

> That in the opinion of the committee the continuing increased cost of living and rising prices are substantially attributable to the government's inflationary policies.

As is stated in paragraph (e).

The matter can be referred back to the committee for consideration, but the house cannot say to the committee that the committee shall have such and such an opinion. That is something which the committee can adopt or not after it has considered the matter. But it would be a queer system of democratic government if it were competent for this house to say to the committee what opinion it should have on a certain matter. The house can say to the committee members, "Reconsider and express your conclusions"; but the house cannot say to them, "You shall reconsider and it shall be your opinion" that such and such is so.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: May I ask the minister just one question? Is his objection to the amendment directed entirely against paragraph (e)?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. My objection to the amendment is to the form in which it is drawn, because the amendment purports, not to send the matter back to the committee for reconsideration but to send it back to the committee saying to the committee what judgment it shall express; and that is something which it is not in the power of the house to do. I cannot dictate to my hon. friend what his opinion or his judgment shall be. I can ask him to reconsider a matter, but I cannot dictate to him what his judgment or his opinion shall be.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I wish to thank hon. members for assisting the Speaker to come to a conclusion. Apparently both members who have spoken are agreed that this is an instruction. The question arises as to whether it is mandatory; and if it is mandatory, is it beyond the powers of this house? I refer hon. members to Beauchesne, third edition, the first part of citation 409, which reads as follows:

> An instruction which is generally made when a bill is committed, is not mandatory, and it is therefore customary to state explicitly in the motion that the committee "have power" to make the provision required. The intention is to give a committee power to do a certain thing if they think proper, not to command them to do it.

This amendment gives no discretion to the committee. It is required to do the things which are set forth in the amendment.

I note that paragraphs (b) and (c) in the amendment deal with a matter that has been voted on by the house. On May 27 the house voted against the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), which was to the effect that the government had failed to remove or substantially reduce the burden of sales and excise taxes which bore most heavily on those suffering from low income and the high cost of living.

It is a well-known principle, as stated in May, thirteenth and fourteenth editions, that no question shall be offered to the house which is substantially the same as one on which their judgment has already been expressed during the current session.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about the committee report?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would also refer to the point raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). I would point out that the last paragraph of the amendment purports to dictate an opinion to the committee, which procedure is against all rules of parliamentary practice. For these reasons I declare the amendment out of order; and I believe the last one in itself is sufficient to justify me in doing so.

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BRACKEN: Did you rule this amendment out of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then, with all respect, Mr. Speaker, I must appeal against your ruling.

Mr. LESAGE: You are too late.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is too late around here?

Some hon. MEMBERS: You are.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BRACKEN: Hon. members may take the position that it is too late, but the country will not take that position.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I understand that the leader of the opposition appeals against the Speaker's ruling with respect to the amendment.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER put the question as follows:

> On motion of Mr. Martin, seconded by Mr. Mitchell, that the report of the special committee on prices be concurred in, the hon. member for Eglinton moved in amendment that the said report be not concurred in but that the same be referred back to the special committee on prices for the purpose of amending it by deleting the conclusions therein and substituting therefor other conclusions.
> I ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it was mandatory and contrary to citation 409 of Beauchesne, third edition. I also ruled it out of order on the ground that at a previous sitting of the house the matter had been voted upon, and that it was a well known principle that no question should be offered which is substantially the same as one on which judgment has already been expressed at the current session. Finally I ruled the amendment out of order because it purported to dictate an opinion to the committee, which is against the rules of parliamentary practice.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was paired with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Mr. Speaker's ruling.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. ISNOR: I was paired with the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Stanfield). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. LENNARD: I was paired with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Had I voted I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. JACKMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Marier). Had I voted I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. CARDIFF: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against Mr. Speaker's ruling.

Mr. HODGSON: I was paired with the hon. member for York North (Mr. Smith). Had I voted I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. COYLE: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Healy). Had I voted I would have voted against Mr. Speaker's ruling.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I think I had better begin my remarks on this motion for concurrence by moving another amendment. I do so now, instead of at the conclusion of my speech, for two reasons. The first is that I might speak so long I might forget to move it, and in the second place if I move it now Your Honour will have plenty of time to have it ruled out of order without holding up the house. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis):

That the report be not now concurred in, but that it be recommitted to the select special committee on prices, with instructions that they have power to amend the same so as to revise sections 4 and 7, respectively, of the chapter of the report entitled "conclusions", in order to propose for the consideration of this house:

(1) Immediate imposition of a substantial tax on excess profits, to curb inflation and to provide money for necessary subsidies.

(2) (a) immediate restoration of a comprehensive system of price controls and of the machinery necessary to make them effective.

(b) Restoration of the policy of subsidy payments wherever they may be necessary to bring down prices of foods, feed grains and other necessities.

And that the committee for such purpose be revived.

I suppose it is only natural that the representatives of the various parties coming back to the house from a committee such as the prices committee would hold sharp differences in their viewpoints on matters of political significance. I listened to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) with a good deal of interest, and noted that he held the opinion that the report, especially that part of it which is referred to as conclusions or recommendations to the house, had been brought about as a result of or because of certain influences which have developed of late. He charged the government with having come toward the C.C.F. some distance, and probably implied that the C.C.F. would go toward the government if it supported the government.

I do not wish to follow that line very far. The amendment I have already moved will speak for the C.C.F., because it contains our point of view. But I was surprised, in listening to the hon. member for Eglinton, to discover that his party, including the hon. member himself, had changed its mind so quickly on matters of importance.

For example, in the amendment which he moved and which was ruled out of order, reference was made to the sales tax, and the increasing of exemptions for income tax. It will be recalled that the C.C.F. included both those principles in its amendment to the budget moved only a short time ago, and that at that time members of the official opposition sitting to my right voted against it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Coupled with what else?

Mr. IRVINE: They voted against it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But coupled with what else?

Mr. IRVINE: Hon. members can tell us what else.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You have misinterpreted the whole thing.

Mr. GRAYDON: You put a brick in the bouquet.

Mr. IRVINE: The fact is that that is what happened. I am not saying anything against hon. members; I am just trying to state the facts.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And you are just missing it.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not wish to get into any political argument. I do not mind doing so, but I do not wish to do so.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Give the house the whole of the facts.

Mr. IRVINE: I am making a very gentle answer—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And very misleading.

Mr. IRVINE: — to a very pointed innuendo in my hon. friend's remarks. If hon. members desire it, I shall have to go further than that, although I do not wish to do so.

This was a good committee in many ways. I want to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Eglinton and his associates as well as to all the members of that committee. Although we fought as we are doing here, it was really a pleasure to work with them. I certainly learned to appreciate all of them more than I ever did before, and I hope that they did not learn to appreciate me less.

I wish to pay a tribute to the able counsel. If it had not been for the splendid work which they did we would not have accomplished what we did in the time at our disposal. A similar tribute should be paid to the secretarial staff and the committee clerks who worked so assiduously.

I am also going to compliment the chairman. I think when we have said some nice things about a person we can always hit a harder blow and he may not feel it so badly. I want to compliment the chairman upon his fairness and his efficiency throughout the entire proceedings. I congratulate him upon having any recommendations at all in the report.

As the committee knows, we had no authority to bring in recommendations. As the hon. member for Eglinton says, we tried to get that authority but failed. I think the committee would have been much more effective if we had had the right to make recommendations. But when the chairman has the vision and courage to go beyond what is expected and to take the consequences I think he should have a word of appreciation.

Speaking about the recommendations, I think we can say, first, the very fact that they are there means that it has been recognized that it was necessary to do something. Second, it means that the government and parliament are expected to do what has to be done. Third, the recommendations state what, in the opinion of the committee, should be done.

I shall have something to say about how I disagree with some of these, although there are some with which I agree. I cannot understand the objections of my hon. friends to the right to these recommendations. I recall that they were most anxious when the setting up of the committee was proposed that it should have power to make recommendations and, now the committee has made recommendations, my hon. friends are the first to take objection.

Mr. FLEMING: They are the wrong kind of recommendations.

Mr. IRVINE: They are probably the wrong kind for my hon. friend, but they have afforded him an opportunity to say what he has said and for me to say what I am saying. They afforded him an opportunity to move an amendment which was ruled out of order, and they afforded me an opportunity to move an amendment which I hope will not be ruled out of order. At any rate, we have an opportunity to discuss the committee and the issues with which it dealt, which are still of great importance to the Canadian people.

I am not so much concerned about the right of the committee to bring in recommendations as I am about what the government intends to do with those recommendations now that they have been made and, secondly, about how far those recommendations go in the direction that we want them to go to meet the situation. Those are things which are of importance to me.

I think the fact that some of the things which I have mentioned in the amendment, and which were mentioned in the original motion but in far less specific language, are in a sense a tribute to the position taken by this party from the very beginning. It will be remembered that we did not want this committee. It was not that we were opposed to finding facts; it was not that we thought there was not a good deal that might be learned; it was simply that we took the attitude at that time that the situation was so pressing that immediate action was required on the part of the government. If that had been forthcoming I am quite sure that we would have supported a committee like this, because of the information which such a committee could provide.

The whole tenor of the suggestions of the committee is in the direction of the proposals which we made earlier in the session with respect to prices and cost of living. As I say, the recommendations do not go as far as I want to see them go; otherwise I would not have moved the amendment that I have moved.

[Mr. Irvine.]

As hon. members all know, the committee was investigating high prices. I want to take this opportunity to say it is likely that in a few years we shall have another committee investigating low prices, which will be just as difficult a thing to investigate and to solve. We shall have that because of the system under which we are living, the fact that it is up today and down tomorrow.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend laughs because apparently he does not understand it. He takes it out in humour. I like humour. If the hon. gentleman will tell me the joke, unless it is himself, I will laugh with him. I should not like to laugh at him. As I say, the committee was investigating high prices. The Stevens committee was investigating low prices. In a catch-as-catch-can, free enterprise, competitive system there is no power on earth that we know of that will keep things on an even keel. There is no means of controlling things except the desire for greater profits, which leads both to low prices and high prices, depending upon how the pendulum is swinging.

The committee began at the points where increases in prices were most pronounced which, as we discovered, were in matters of food and clothing. We investigated butter, bread, meat, vegetables, fruits and eventually textiles. I agree with the hon. member for Eglinton that perhaps we did not proceed in an efficient way by taking up those prices which happened to be most pressing, nor did we deal with things in a logical way. I agree also with him when he says we did not get very far. We concluded just about the time we should have been beginning. We have not even scratched the surface of the job that was given to us. So we can only speak of the very limited field which we have covered.

The point I would make in that connection is that the basic industries were never touched at all, even though they have both a direct and an indirect effect upon all the commodities that we were trying to study. The price of steel, the price of gasoline and of other commodities all have their effect on the price of bread, and even on the price of butter. But we made no examination into that. We plunged right into butter and pretty nearly stayed there most of the time. The investigation was lacking in thoroughness there, but that was not the fault of the committee. I think it will be agreed that we did all that any committee could have done with such a subject in the time we had at our disposal.

One of the industries which I think should have been investigated, and the committee should have stayed here all summer and done it, was the steel industry, also fuel, farm machinery, binder twine, boots and shoes—

An hon. MEMBER: Hardware.

Mr. IRVINE: Hardware, if you like; commercial rents, freight rates, the manufacture of construction materials and other important industries of that type.

I want to make a comment or two on the findings of the committee with respect to the causes of higher prices. The factors of significance which were regarded as being causal of high prices, in the findings of the committee, were: first, the rise in external prices, that is to say, prices in countries other than Canada with which we must deal; second, the increase in costs of production; and third, the expansion of purchasing power in relation to the goods and services available. I want to make a comment on each of these alleged causes.

With regard to external prices, it is clear that Canada's prices have been rising for some time. Our price rises in Canada become external prices to other countries, causing them in turn to raise their prices still higher because our prices went up. Our relationship in that respect to other nations is pretty much that of an industry in Canada to inter-related industry, and so the spiral will continue just because we have allowed our prices to rise higher and become external prices to other countries.

As to the increase in production costs, I think we begged the question there, because it is more than likely that any increase in production costs must have been caused by the increased prices of certain materials which enter into costs, and not having found what made those prices rise, we should not just assume that there was an increase in costs of production which caused the recent price increases. I think that is begging the question.

As to the third factor, the expansion of purchasing power, I am hoping that the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) or some of his associates will enlighten us on that. The purchasing power abroad in this country today is alleged to be more than is necessary to purchase the goods that are available on the market. I believe that the hon. member for Lethbridge and his associates would like to have still more purchasing power distributed. However, they will be able to deal with that point. Of course there can be no doubt that the expansion of purchasing power is a vital factor, and we cannot afford to ignore it, whether it is raised by the hon. member for Lethbridge or in the report of the prices committee. There is a vital connection between the amount of money in circulation at any time and the amount of goods on the market to be bought, and these factors in a society such as ours must have a direct bearing on prices and cause them to go higher or lower as the case may be.

Having found these causes, the committee should, I suggest, have been vested with sufficient power to make recommendations on how to cope with the effects which we have noted until the causes could be removed, and secondly, to advise how this parliament should proceed to remove the causes of high prices.

I think it will be agreed that the most important point in the causes is the implied shortages in relation to effective demand. I am almost afraid to use the words "supply and demand"; we heard so much of them in the committee. There supply and demand were more or less represented by those who talk so much of it as a law of peerless perfection, which works in such a way that supply is always demanded and demand is always supplied. But that just does not happen, or there would have been no need for the committee.

The question is this, as I see it: Shall we use wisely the principle of supply and demand, or shall we allow the undirected principle of supply and demand to use us? Demand, properly understood, is the measure of a nation's capacity to consume goods; that is the sum total of any rational demand. Supply is the measure of a nation's capacity to produce the goods demanded. These two factors, if used wisely in a planned economy, would be safe guides to our economic policy. But demand in a private enterprise economy means the measure of the total monetary income of would-be consumers, and supply means the measure of what it is profitable to produce. Both supply and demand are hampered by a private enterprise economy. I must not stop to develop that because I see my time is running out.

Everyone knows that shortages in essentials such as food, clothing, homes, and the like will mean higher prices in a competitive market under our present system of private enterprise. That is precisely the first problem with which we have to deal. That was the problem to which the committee had to address itself; for, even if a fuller production were achieved so that shortages were in part at least abolished, the best way of reducing prices would still have to be given consideration, because the need for price controls continues to exist up to the point where shortages cease. Shortages will unquestionably send prices up until only those who have the money can buy, and those who have not the money will not be able to buy. That will, of course, shorten the demand and start us down the hill, and that is where you begin to move on toward the next committee which will be dealing with how to raise prices.

We had similar shortages during the war and we dealt with them. This government dealt with them in a manner which I think met with the general approval of the people of Canada, to a great extent at least. We found, during the war, that prices would not go down voluntarily; that nobody intended to bring them down voluntarily. The fact is that prices rose during the war in spite of patriotic fervour, and, but for controls, would have skyrocketed. So that if prices were not reduced voluntarily in time of war, we may be sure that will not happen in time of peace. I want to quote in that regard Mr. F. A. McGregor, combines investigation commissioner, who said this at page 157 of the report:

> Under our wartime price legislation the freedom of individual sellers to decide their own prices was sharply curtailed. It had to be, because we were living in a period of serious shortages. Under such conditions competition was not the appropriate public safeguard.

There is also the observation of Mr. K. W. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, who said at page 58 of the evidence:

> Shortages . . . are numerous and widespread and some of them are severe . . . A 5 or 10 per cent shortage can drive prices up rapidly.

In that connection also let me emphasize again that there is no hope of bringing prices down voluntarily. I, and other hon. members, asked witnesses time and time again whether they wanted to bring the prices down voluntarily, and they laughed at the question instead of taking it seriously, and humorously said that they were in a system in which it was necessary for them to make good while making good was possible; that if they did not make good then, they would go to the bad at some other time, and that, therefore, they were taking all the slack in that they possibly could whenever it slackened up, so that they could take it in. That was the attitude of all the witnesses.

I want to quote next Mr. Graham F. Towers, governor of the Bank of Canada. He was questioned at pages 3361 and 3369 of the evidence as follows:

> Q. Have you any suggestions to this committee how prices can be brought down by voluntary methods?
>
> A. No, sir.
> Q. That being the case would you say there is practically no chance of prices going down throughout the world as a whole, and particularly here in Canada where of course we are most interested, as long as the world scarcity of food continues?

[Mr. Irvine.]

> A. I think that is probably the case.
>
> Mr. Thatcher: Unless controls come back?
>
> The Witness: Unless prices are forced down by controls.

At page 10 of the committee report the following appears:

> The committee does not feel that the interests of Canadian consumers would be safeguarded by a system of over-all price and related controls.

Then it goes on to make a suggestion that a measure of price controls might be advisable here and there. I want to emphasize strongly my view that it is not possible to control prices effectively in spots. I think the criticism which has been made in this house and elsewhere about price controls is that you must make it comprehensive and you must have the weight of public opinion behind you. I think that is a fair statement. I do not believe that we can effectively control prices by just having one item here and another item there under control. In that connection I want to quote again Mr. K. W. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, who was perhaps the most authoritative witness whom we had before the committee on matters of this kind. He said:

> As I said before, efficient price control, the fixing of prices, is just the beginning of your problem; that the fixing of prices is just the first step. You have got to have a great range of controls which must buttress and support your fixed prices.
> None of this is an argument against price controls in emergencies, when prolonged physical shortages of goods are inescapable.

Mr. Graham Towers had this to say under questioning:

> Q. Would you need to have an over-all control?
>
> A. Yes. If you didn't start off that way it would very soon become that.
> Q. You could not apply it to just some commodities?
>
> A. I hesitate to say you could not apply it to Yo-Yo's without going beyond that; if you see what I mean.
> Q. I mean that is an extreme case? A. Yes.
>
> Q. We are speaking now of action to reduce the general price level.
> A. Then I think it would have to be an over-all affair.

Why then could we not suggest over-all control at least until such time as we have got over these shortages? The answer is given again by Mr. K. W. Taylor, chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, who said:

> Under the Canadian price ceiling policy the general level of retail prices, or the cost of living, was kept almost completely stable for more than four years. This was achieved by a vigorous combination of supply controls, production directives, export controls, bulk purchasing, subsidies and rationing. It was a tough and realistic policy, very ably administered and firmly enforced; but its success was predicated on the whole-hearted acceptance of the policy and the procedures by practically all industries, groups, sections and classes.

That is another very fair statement that we shall have to accept, but I do not think we are right if we leap to the conclusion that there is no popular support for this today.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): That includes labour controls.

Mr. IRVINE: Don't worry about that, my hon. friend. I am not asking for controls for anybody that I am not willing to impose on myself; nor do I ask it for one class that I am not willing to impose on some other class.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You are on a fixed salary.

Mr. HARTT: That is right.

An hon. MEMBER: Six o'clock.

Mr. IRVINE: I have at least twenty minutes left.

Mr. HARTT: I do not mind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am rising merely to ask if there is not a desire on the part of the house to sit an hour later at this time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I gather that most hon. members are in favour of so doing. Unless there is objection it might be agreed that we shall sit until seven.

Mr. BRACKEN: At noon we were willing to give every opportunity to try to finish the work today, but hon. members opposite did not seem to accept that, and an hour was lost. I respectfully suggest that we should not try to finish in a few hours all the work that is before us tonight. It must be quite evident that it is too much work to attempt to complete tonight. We should not be asked to vote the millions of dollars that remain to be voted in the few hours that are remaining. I am not now criticizing anybody. But I do suggest that it is too much to expect that all these estimates will go through in three hours tonight. We might as well accept that as a fact and guide ourselves accordingly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend I am not suggesting that for a moment. I am not suggesting, nor would I suggest that we should try to get through everything tonight. I heartily agree as to that. I think, however, it is the desire of hon. members to make as much progress as they can today so that so far as next week's proceedings are concerned, we shall be able to conclude the session earlier in the week than might otherwise be possible. Since an objection is made to our continuing longer at present, I will not ask the house to sit beyond six o'clock. We shall resume the sitting at eight.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. IRVINE: When the house rose at six o'clock I had been pointing out that the recommendations made by the committee with respect to price controls were half-hearted and that the committee proposes to deal only partly with controls. I had quoted Mr. Taylor and the prices board to the effect that price control must be a comprehensive undertaking if it is to be successful. I had also indicated that there were some people who thought that popular support, which was one of the reasons why price controls during the war were so successful, could hardly be expected from people during times of peace. It is claimed today that public opinion would not support a policy of price controls sufficiently to make it work. That is an assumption.

It has been said that these controls were supported by all sections of the Canadian people during the war because of the great need for winning, and because of the danger in which the nation found itself, but that such support would not be available once the war ended. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that all the evidence is to the contrary. I believe that the people of Canada would be glad voluntarily to support a system of proper controls in peacetime as in war, provided that the same need is there and that they have a proper objective for so doing. I would support that opinion by referring to the last Gallup poll on controls a few months ago, which showed that more than seventy-five per cent of the people favoured the reimposition of controls.

I now wish to turn for a moment to high profits and their relation to prices. I do not hold the view—nor do I think any member of my group does—that high profit which may be made by any individual concern is in itself of great importance in affecting the price level. But we say that a profit system which goes all the way down the lines does have a tremendous effect on the price level. In our inquiry we have found that high profits in some instances were made by individual corporations. As a matter of fact, that was well established by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) himself, as will be confirmed if members will look at table No. 7 of the appendix to the last budget. In 1947 corporate profits after taxes were over $1,000,000,000 for the first time; they were $1,017,000,000, to be exact. If that figure is compared with those of previous years, it will be seen how profits are still rising. In 1939 corporate profits amounted to $486 million; in 1944, to $618 million, and in 1946 to $751 million. In 1947, net profits after taxes were thus 35·4 per cent higher than in 1946.

I am not surprised that profits are being made. No one should be surprised that people make profits in a profit system; that is what they do. I noticed the surprises on the faces of some of our witnesses when we badgered them for having made high profits. They seemed to think, and I believe properly so, that they had been successful in achieving that for which the system stands, namely, the making of profits. I consider it is illogical for those who accept the profit system to reprimand people almost as criminals for having been successful in achieving the motive of the profit system. But there is no norm, no set figure, that will indicate what profits should be made, even under a profit system. The ethics of the profit system, or the free enterprise system, as it is called, is to make as much profit as possible. That principle has been well put by Mr. J. S. McLean, as reported at page 2641 of the evidence of the prices committee:

> . . . We buy as cheaply as we can and sell our meat for as much as we can get for it.

That is the ethics of private enterprise. We are therefore asking in our amendment for a tax on excess profits. Such a tax would, in the first place, have a tendency to check rising prices. In the second place, it would be a source of money with which to help pay subsidies where subsidies might require to be imposed. Particularly in checking the influence of external prices I believe the granting of subsidies is the most effective method that could be used. Britain has perhaps suffered a great deal more from the effects of external prices than has Canada, because she has had to import to a much larger degree than have we. But still she has been able to maintain fairly well her level of prices.

I am concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because I see that my time is up. The C.C.F., in moving the amendment which is before you, does so as a means of patching up some weak spots in the free enterprise system. We realize that tinkering with prices and tinkering with subsidies are merely emergency methods, and that these are not the means by which a proper society should be run. I have offered the amendment as a patch for the hole in the pants of our economic system. As you will see, our amendment asks for a tax on excess profits, the restoration of price control and the payment of subsidies wherever essential.

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish to give a ruling on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). The amendment proposed for the consideration of the house is for the restoration of price controls and of the machinery necessary to make them effective. I would call the attention of the house to section 2 (a) of the amendment, which reads as follows:

> Immediate restoration of a comprehensive system of price controls and of the machinery necessary to make them effective.

This is substantially the same question that was negatived by the house when it divided on an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). If hon. members will look at Votes and Proceedings No. 3 for December 9, 1947, at page 45, they will see that amendment, which was in these words:

> This house regrets that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to use the powers provided by parliament to control prices—

In view of the decision given this afternoon by the Deputy Speaker I feel bound to rule this amendment out of order.

Mr. W. F. KUHL (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, without wishing to give offence to any of the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, I wish to say that at no time have I been adept in the art of making a hogshead of lather out of an ounce of soap; so I shall make my remarks as brief and to the point as I can, in view of the general desire to terminate this session as quickly as possible.

It was my pleasure and privilege to be a member of the prices committee, though not from its inception. I commenced my service with it at the end of April, in the position previously occupied by my colleague the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston).

First I should like to endorse the compliments which have been paid by previous speakers to the chairman of the committee, the counsel and the members as a whole, but in endorsing their remarks, I must say there was a notable omission from the compliments that were extended. I believe the witnesses who appeared before the committee, representing various businesses, also deserve a compliment for the contribution they made to the work of that committee, and I wish them to know that, as a member, I certainly appreciate the information I obtained. I believe they should be complimented, not only for the information they gave and the patience with which they submitted to cross-examination, but also for the manner in which they overlooked what in some instances I consider were positive insults. Perhaps that language is somewhat strong, but sometimes I felt that if I had been in the place of the witness I would have been tempted to make much stronger replies to the questions asked.

I voted for the setting up of this committee in the first place; not because I felt that anything startling or unusual would be revealed, but because I felt that information might be brought forward which would dispel some of the false impressions abroad in the country, and also that, as a result of the work of the committee, we might be better able to determine what should be done in the circumstances. I believe a good deal of information was placed on the record which, if the public could become aware of it, would dispel certain false impressions which are abroad.

As has been indicated already by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), I opposed the adoption of the report by the committee. Many of the reasons for which I felt I was justified in opposing it were advanced by the hon. member for Eglinton. In the main I believe the criticisms he offered were quite justified and I endorse most of them.

But I had an additional reason for opposing adoption of the report. I think my chief reason was the attitude adopted by the government members, which I resented very much. When I spoke on the motion to set up this committee I said I thought one reason the government was glad to take that action was that for the time being it would silence the wrath of the people with respect to the high cost of living. It would enable the government to offer the excuse that a parliamentary committee was investigating the matter, and as long as that committee sat they could transfer the responsibility from themselves to the committee. The committee has now finished its work; certain recommendations have been made, but I agree with those who have suggested that it still remains to be seen how effective those recommendations will be if carried out. Personally I consider them woefully inadequate to meet the situation.

The attitude on the part of the government members of the committee which I resented so much was expressed in the manner in which many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee were dealt with. I resented the suggestion that, instead of being regarded as public benefactors, most of the witnesses who appeared there seemed to find the atmosphere like that of a sort of inquisition. They were looked upon as public enemies, who had to account for some wrongdoing. That was the impression I received from the manner in which many of the questions were asked; and I am going to read a few excerpts from the records of the committee to substantiate what I have said. I would not say that applied in every instance; nevertheless in many cases it was true.

Naturally I tried to discover a motive, and the only motive I could arrive at was that up to that time—and it is still the case—the government were not prepared to meet their responsibility in the way I at least think they should. The government have not met their responsibility because they have not done those things I believe they should do for the people of Canada, and therefore the government must look for a scapegoat. I considered the attitude they took toward many of these businessmen was because they were looking for a scapegoat for their own sins. They were attempting to make private business the scapegoat for their sins. In my view it was most unfair for the committee, and furthermore I believe it is a dangerous attitude to take.

From all sides of the house we have heard expressions of fear of the communist menace with its danger to the private enterprise system and freedom in general. The government, the Liberal party and the Progressive Conservative party nominally at least represent themselves as being the champions of the private enterprise system. Yet if one goes over the evidence somewhat carefully he will find that a concerted effort was made in the committee to discredit private business—or at least it had that effect. I am satisfied, from the newspaper reports which went out in consequence of some of the questions asked in committee, that many of the public are under the impression that a large number of businessmen are just a lot of bloated profiteers and chiselers. I believe there is too much of that impression abroad. There has been too much of it abroad for too long a time, without those who claim to be the champions of private enterprise lending any more emphasis to it.

Just to indicate a little more specifically what I mean, I should like to refer to one instance of this. While I think of it, perhaps I should say at this juncture that I can understand hon. members of the C.C.F. party doing that, because they have come out flat-footed and have said they are opposed to the private enterprise system and opposed to profit. Therefore it is in their political interest to discredit private business as much as they can so as to give them an excuse for nationalizing industry.

However I cannot understand that attitude on the part of those who pretend to be the champions of private enterprise. Therefore I resented the attitude taken by some of the Liberal members on the committee when dealing with some of these matters. The case to which I shall refer is one where possibly we cannot altogether excuse the people involved. But again, as has already been pointed out, I think the circumstances are attributable to government policy. It was the government which was really responsible. They made possible the circumstances under which these things could happen. Then government members have the gall to turn around and blame someone for taking advantage of those circumstances.

Here is one instance of it—and in this particular instance I think the general public would get the impression that most of the fruit and vegetable business was carried on in this manner, and that profits of this kind were made regularly in that business. This is the case of Mr. Ruben Marlow, general manager of Marlow and Company Limited of Toronto. It is the case of the famous four carloads of potatoes. I should like to indicate here the way in which this man was spoken to and in which he was treated, which I thought was unfair and uncalled for, in view of the conditions for which the government itself was responsible.

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Mayhew) was in the chair at the time, and it is his remarks I am going to quote. This is what he said to Mr. Marlow:

> I want to say this; it is my opinion, and it is a little more than an opinion that, in this particular transaction, both the government and its departments were trying to see that there was a supply of new potatoes on the market. The foreign exchange control board released American funds for this purpose. It would appear to me you took advantage of the situation and you prevented potatoes from getting to the public at a reasonable price. In other words, you did not live up to the spirit of the regulations which existed at that time. You took an exceedingly high mark-up. I certainly will draw this to the attention of those writing the report because I think you are doing a disservice, not only to yourself and to the people of Canada, but to the other people in your own business.

Then, when I myself pressed the witness to make a comment upon that statement, the acting chairman said this further:

> I fully understand the explanation you make. As far as I am concerned there is no explanation at all, there is no justification for it. There is no justification in your having taken the mark-up on the potatoes which you did at that time. That is my opinion. Those who are writing the report will have to deal with it in their own way. I feel it is my duty to make that quite plain. As I see it, I consider it one of the most outstanding cases of its kind that has yet been brought to the attention of this committee.

[Mr. Kuhl.]

So far as I recall, it was shown that this particular wholesaler had made 43 per cent on the sales of two carloads of potatoes. That is undoubtedly a very high profit. He justified it himself. He considered that it was fair, in the light of prices of vegetables at that time. I considered these statements of the vice-chairman a most unwarranted censure of a businessman. In any event, I think the committee could have made statements of that kind among themselves, without saying it to the man personally.

Mr. MAYHEW: I should like to put the hon. member right, if he will permit me to do so. This gentleman had been buying potatoes for $6.25 a sack and had been selling them at $12 a sack in Montreal and Toronto. So that is 43 per cent on his sales, and I think I was quite right in bringing the matter to the attention of the public.

Mr. KUHL: I am not saying there should not be some censure in the matter. I have not the actual figures here, but the report of the committee says it was 43 per cent on sales. In any event, it affected only four carloads of potatoes and, as I say, the circumstances were precipitated by the government itself. They put the ban on overnight, and they made it possible for this man to make that money. Then they proceed to blame him for making it.

If that were typical of the whole of the vegetable industry I might understand a censure of that kind being made in this instance. But when it is a mere drop in the bucket—

An hon. MEMBER: How do you know?

Mr. KUHL: There was no evidence in the committee that it was a common condition.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to ask the hon. member a question with respect to potatoes. I understand he implies that the government had interfered at that time with the marketing of potatoes. I am not quite clear on the point he makes, and I would ask him to state clearly if he did make that statement.

Mr. KUHL: No, I did not say that the government interfered. I was criticizing the attitude taken by the acting chairman at that time in speaking about the witness in the fashion I have indicated, when in fact the responsibility for the circumstances was that of the government. They placed the ban on potatoes and created the scarcity.

Mr. MICHAUD: What ban?

Mr. KUHL: I could understand that attitude on the part of members of the C.C.F. party, because at all times they are attempting to show up business in the most unfavourable light possible. That was possibly one of the strongest remarks made by the C.C.F. members on the committee, and it was quite unwarranted considering the evidence that was given later. Here are the words of the hon. member for Moose Jaw in addressing one of the witnesses, as reported on page 3713 of the proceedings:

Would it not look to this committee that this is one of the most shocking examples of a company not showing their strength in order to keep these prices down? There is no sense of public responsibility there because if every company in Canada took the view that you have been taking we would have uncontrolled inflation in this country and an inevitable depression. I do not know what your justification is for that time taking such a terrific and abnormal profit.

That is typical of the questions asked and the inferences drawn by the C.C.F. members of the committee. I can well expect that, because it is their ambition and objective to substitute nationalized industry for private industry and they will do anything they can to discredit private industry.

I should like to make one more reference to the criticisms of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I have often said that if the truth were known members of the C.C.F., socialists and others who subscribe to a like philosophy are not as much opposed to profit as they are envious because they are not making the profits themselves. Actually I think they believe in the profit motive for themselves, and I have a little quotation which will substantiate that. This is our good friend, the hon. member for Moose Jaw, speaking to Mr. Wolfe, general manager of the Ontario Produce Company. Mr. Wolfe said:

Let me put it this way. If we were able to get the Toronto trade together to maintain a lower level on the price of our produce could we not likewise get them together to hold prices up at some time when supply and demand could bring lower prices?

Mr. Thatcher: I am not suggesting you should have got together, but I think possibly you could have set an example. It looks like the example you set was a bad one. You took all you could get. Maybe I would do the same thing if I were in your spot.

When C.C.F. members are off-guard they really reveal what they feel inside. As I say, I can understand that type of criticism emanating from C.C.F. members, because they claim they are opposed to the private enterprise system. It seems to make no difference what is discussed in this house or in the committees, the discussion always resolves itself eventually into a debate on the principles espoused by the various political parties. The questions asked in the committee were coloured by the particular philosophy subscribed to by the hon. member asking them. That is quite natural.

As I said in the beginning, innuendoes that the private enterprise system is responsible for the high cost of living should not emanate from members on the government side. They represent themselves as being the champions of private enterprise and they should so conduct themselves. There was altogether too much time taken up in the committee in an effort to blame private business for the high cost of living.

The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), who just preceded me, made some statement about profits being high. I think I followed fairly closely all the evidence that was given and outside of the potato case and one or two others there were few instances where there were what one could call high profits. In most instances the profits were quite modest and in some cases there were none at all. There were times when the profits were less than they were under controls.

I should like to refer to a statement with regard to mark-up and controls by Mr. Steinberg of the Steinberg groceterias. He was being questioned by the hon. member for Moose Jaw as follows:

Q. You are telling us the retailer has not benefited particularly or has not made any greater profits with controls off than he did when they were on?

A. No, I would think the retailer has made less.

Q. Has made less?

A. Yes.

Q. Then he has not benefited by the fact controls were removed?

By Mr. Kuhl:

Q. Therefore the consumer has benefited as a consequence of the controls coming off?

A. I would say yes.

Mr. THATCHER: Prices went up 25 per cent notwithstanding.

Mr. KUHL: We are talking about profits, not prices. The hon. member for Cariboo stated that profits were greater, and I am just giving an instance where a retailer said his profits were less after the controls had been taken off. The hon. member for Cariboo said that profits have increased since 1939, but that is only part of the picture. As production increases, it is only natural that profits will increase correspondingly, even though the profit rate is no higher. I have not any figures before me, but I think that is the case. While profits have increased since 1939, I think it is taken for granted that the rate of profit is in conformity with that increase and is certainly no higher.

I have here another statement which I think will be of interest to the consumers of Canada. I know that when I or anyone else makes statements of this kind those who are not actuated by the best of motives may say I am trying to defend big business.

I do not want to see anyone taken advantage of, no matter who he is. The truth and the whole truth should be known about the situation. I think the general public has had the impression that tremendous profits are being made by the packing plants. I have heard that all over the country.

Here is an interesting statement in connection with the profits on meat by Mr. Millard, president and general manager of Swift Canadian Company. He was being questioned by the chairman of the committee, as follows:

The Chairman: I wonder if I could ask a question. If you take schedule 4 for 1946 and 1947 you will see that for most of those months in those two years—

That is 1946 and 1947.

—you show a loss on meat operations, or operations of your meat department, yet your general net or profit and loss position as contained in schedule 3 shows that for most of the years from 1936 to 1947 you have made substantial profits. Now where do you make profits if you do not make them in the meat department?

There was one packer who showed that he had not made any profits in the meat department.

Mr. THATCHER: He made his profits in by-products.

Mr. KUHL: Quite true. Mr. Millard replied:

Well, perhaps in by-products, glue, tankage, the shortening department, butter, poultry, eggs and cheese.

The point I am replying to is the general impression that there is profiteering in meats, that meats have been sold at colossal profits.

Mr. THATCHER: That is only their accounting methods.

Mr. KUHL: I have quoted the statement of the manager of the company and if the hon. gentleman could have shown otherwise he should have done so at that time.

Mr. THATCHER: He did.

[Mr. Kuhl.]

Mr. HARTT: Have him arrested for perjury if he did not tell the truth.

Mr. KUHL: I could continue to quote evidence from the report itself to show that the colossal profits alleged by many are not being made, but, on the contrary, that profits all the way through are very modest and that the high cost of living is not attributable to exorbitant profits.

I endorse wholeheartedly the suggestion made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) that government policy is largely responsible for the high level of prices.

Mr. HARTT: That is not the case.

Mr. KUHL: It is a question of whether it is a fact or not, and the sooner the hon. gentleman recognizes some of these facts, the better it will be for him and all the rest of us. While on that point, may I say that some of our Liberal friends should be clothing themselves in sackcloth and ashes for attempting to place the blame for high prices on private business when they themselves are responsible for those high prices, and if they continue in their present course they will find that they are driving this country right into the arms of socialism and communism.

Mr. HARTT: Why?

Mr. KUHL: I think I have given the hon. gentleman sufficient information on that point. By their attitude in the committee, the government members have done a great deal to discredit private business in the eyes of the public, and those who are gullible will be driven to say: If that is what private enterprise is and does, let us do away with it, and let us have instead C.C.F. and communism. There is too much of that attitude abroad already without so-called supporters of private enterprise lending any more emphasis to it. It is time that the members of the Liberal party did a little soul-searching and discovered what the real facts are which contribute to the high cost of living.

I endorse wholeheartedly the suggestions which have been made that the government do much more with respect to the taxation angle. That particular aspect interested me most in examining the witnesses. I attempted on most occasions to get a statement from the various witnesses as to the proportion of their costs represented by taxation but not many of them were very definite until on the last day we received a statement which the hon. member for Eglinton has put on the record indicating that around fourteen per cent of the cost of commodities was represented by dominion taxation.

I know that the opinion is held by both orthodox economists and socialists that there must be taxation. I grant that at the moment when we have well-nigh full employment a certain amount of taxation is necessary, but certainly taxation on the lower incomes could be completely eliminated. In regard to the questions I put to the witnesses, it was suggested both by the chairman and by some of the witnesses that it was ridiculous to think of eliminating taxation. Those who hold that view hold it purely because they have not yet had their eyes opened with respect to the relationship of money to wealth. They still have much to learn.

In conclusion, I quote the last recommendation of the committee, which states:

> The committee wishes to emphasize the fact that increased production at home and abroad is the only permanent solution to the problem of high prices.

I think that is one of the most important statements made by the committee. It is, of course, obvious and self-evident that increased production is the only solution, but the question which arises is, how are we to bring about that increased production? The recommendations which the government has included in this report are woefully short of any methods of stimulating production to the levels necessary to produce prices. Consequently I urge that the government members consider the taxation angle, for their own sake. There is no particular reason why I should be concerned about them personally; but, after all, we are all Canadians; we all want the highest standard of living which this country is capable of producing, and we all desire to retain our freedom. As I have already suggested, unless some appropriate action is taken in the near future to stimulate production to higher levels, and particularly to enable the people in the lower income brackets to acquire more of this production then I fear that we may be driven into the arms of totalitarianism. I think the circumstances at the moment are that serious, and therefore I urge that the members of the government consider this taxation angle seriously before it is too late.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Shortly after we reconvened here early in the year we had to deal with this question of prices and the high cost of living. Today in the closing hours of the session we are again dealing with the question of prices and the high cost of living. That is wise and proper because, of all the questions that are troubling the minds of the people of Canada today, the most pressing is that of the high cost of living. The problem is important and impelling because it affects the people so intimately and so many of them. Perhaps seventy-five per cent of the people of Canada today find difficulty in making ends meet, in keeping their families properly fed and clothed, in keeping out of debt and that sort of thing, on account of continually rising prices.

To make ends meet has always been a struggle for the great majority of the people of every country, but since the end of the war it has been next to impossible in Canada. Since the beginning of 1946 the rise in prices has been crushing living standards like a steam-roller.

When we were discussing the setting up of the committee in February last, I said I did not consider it necessary for the government to appoint a committee to find out what was causing prices to rise. Further, I said the government had abundant information on the question. I pointed out that the same factors were operating to raise prices in 1948 as operated to raise prices in 1941. The government knew what the underlying factors were in 1941 and applied the remedy, and if they were prepared to apply the remedy, and convince the people of Canada that it was the remedy, then there was no use in having an investigation. The investigation was being instituted, I said, solely to prevent embarrassment to the government in the house.

I pointed out that the cause of rising prices was not necessarily the profiteering of private corporations or private individuals; that such profiteering where it existed was merely incidental; that the cause of rising prices was short supply and heavy effective demand. To the extent that there was profiteering, it was the inevitable consequence of the operation of the system under which we are living. There is no use in complaining about it or in thinking we will get away from it.

When the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) spoke this afternoon he said that in a few years from now we would likely be investigating, not high prices but low prices. We had an investigation into low prices not so very long ago. I am afraid that many hon. members have either not read the report of the price spreads commission, or, if they have read it, they have forgotten about it. In order to refresh their memories and perhaps stimulate their curiosity so that they will take a little time off and look into the report, I am going to read two or three short paragraphs from it. May I say the report was signed by five or six Conservative members who are not now members of the house and three Liberal members, only one of whom is here at the present time, namely the Minister of Justice. A report that the Minister of Justice signs is not to be thrown aside without consideration. On page 5 of the report I find the following:

> The depression has, furthermore, demonstrated that the strong and the organized are attaining an ever-increasing position of dominance in our economic life; that economic power is becoming concentrated. With this concentration, old theories of economic control are proving inadequate.

If that was true in 1934, and it was, how much more true is it today because of the development and concentration of economic powers in the last fourteen years?

Then, on the next page I find this:

> Fundamentally, the problems which confronted the commission are those of a transitional economy, in which simple competition still prevailed in some parts, monopoly had succeeded it in others, and monopolistic or imperfect competition characterized the rest.

That again is the situation today, as was very well indicated by the committee on cartels a few years ago, and by the evidence given by the commissioner of the Combines Investigation Act when he appeared before the prices committee. It seems to me amazing that even the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl) can not be convinced by the evidence of economic exploitation that is coming to light every day.

About five or six months ago the combines investigation commissioner held an investigation into the combine in dental supplies. Broadly speaking, he found that they were making us pay through the nose for our false teeth. And the evidence brought out by the prices committee showed that when we had paid for these teeth the price of food went up so high that we did not have anything to chew. Just a few weeks ago we had another report from the commissioner, this time on eyeglasses. Surely to goodness we should awake to the fact that these things do not arise from the innate depravity of human beings. They arise because of the competitive struggle of making an existence, as the committee of 1934 said in its report on page 7:

> It is the fierceness of the struggle, not any unusual depravity in the men concerned, which leads to the adoption of such practices. No one businessman can afford to follow the dictates of his conscience and refuse to conform. If he did, he would be eliminated.

In the economic world in which we are living today, to be eliminated in the struggle for existence is not a thing to contemplate with any degree of complacency. Tomorrow most hon. members will go to church and will hear sermons on the golden rule, to do unto others as you would have them do unto you. But on Monday morning we have another golden rule—there is one for Sunday and another for the rest of the week—which is, "Do others before they do you." That is the system under which we are living, and that is why we have the conditions which are complained of at the present time. I am not complaining about people doing things that circumstances compel them to do in order to survive in the business world. My complaint is that the representatives of the people should allow such things to be done.

The committee's report is, to say the least, disappointing. In one of the paragraphs in the conclusion, I believe it is stated that the mere fact that the committee was sitting, if it did not prevent prices from rising, at least prevented them from going up as much as they might have done if the committee had not been sitting at all. Perhaps that is true. Perhaps the words of Longfellow—

> Nothing useless is, or low;
> Each thing in its place is best.

—would apply in this instance, and perhaps some good was done. But when you come to the cost of living index and see how it has gone up since this committee was organized, you will see that the committee has not done so much after all. At page 14 of the report I find this:

> In 1946, prices began to rise more quickly and then accelerated rapidly under the pressure of factors that are examined. By April of 1948, the index had risen to 151·6, while on the first of January, 1946, it stood at 119·9. This was an increase of 26 per cent or twice the increase which had occurred during the war years.

Hon. members will note that the paragraph begins by saying that in 1946 prices began to rise rapidly and became accelerated under the pressure of the factors that they were investigating. As a matter of fact, prices went up in every instance as soon as controls were removed. I am not saying it would be an easy matter to maintain controls. My hon. friends to my right must accept a large share of the blame—and there is no use in their blaming the government—for the removal of these controls by the government. They are both competing for the favour of the same people; and the government undoubtedly was afraid that if they did not remove controls, the official opposition might make capital out of that fact.

The report gives only the index figures for April. The cost of living index for May is still higher. I do not know why it was not given here. In May it was up to 153·3. That is a rise of 33·4 points since January 1, 1946. When we come to food, the index is up a great deal more. In January 1, 1946, it stood at 132·8; in May, 1948, it stood at 191·2; or, in other words, it was up in that period of about seventeen months by 58·4 points, or almost 44 per cent.

Did hon. members ever contemplate or ever try to analyse the way in which this rising cost of living affects the various sections of the community? For those in the upper and middle income brackets it is not particularly important. They do either one of two things: they save less, or they buy fewer luxuries. Their standard of living does not suffer. But when you come down to the lower income brackets, and that includes at least sixty-five per cent or seventy-five per cent of the people of Canada, the situation is different. Among that number there are a relatively small number who can, through economic pressure, do something to raise their income as the cost of living goes up. But the great mass—that is, the unorganized worker, the small farmer, the small businessman, the person on superannuation, the person on a small pension such as old age pensioners and the like—cannot do anything to raise their income, and they get the full force and effect of the rising cost of living.

When this matter was discussed in the prices committee—I was not there at the time, having left the committee to go to another one—Mr. J. S. McLean, president of Canada Packers, said, in reference to rising prices, as reported at page 2201 of the evidence and proceedings:

> When prices get too high people stop buying. Now, in so far as it is an exemplification of that, it is not only desirable, it is inevitable. When housewives make up their minds they can't afford to buy any food at the current price they stop buying.

When housewives decide that they cannot buy food, they do something else besides stopping to buy food. They get mad. The housewives of Canada today are mad—

Mr. KUHL: At whom?

Mr. MacINNIS: I will leave that for my hon. friend to answer.

Mr. KUHL: What is your answer?

Mr. MacINNIS: They find that they cannot buy the food, the clothing and the other things their families need.

Mr. KUHL: Whom do they blame?

Mr. MacINNIS: They blame the government and perhaps their blame is well placed. I believe they blame my hon. friends to the right, too, considering the results of recent elections. However, it is not necessary to go into that now; we can go into it at some other time. Perhaps anything we might say would be only a guess anyway. The fact of the matter is that, as the supply of goods on the consumer market is increasing, prices are not going down but are going up. If you looked for a suit of clothes two years ago every suit you saw in a store window bore the words "with priority only". You could not buy a shirt or a pair of pyjamas or a score of things now in plentiful supply in the stores; but in 1946 prices were lower than they are today. I direct attention to what the dominion bureau of statistics has to say on this matter, and I should like hon. members to understand that this situation is dangerous. It is the prelude to a depression; and you cannot just leave it alone unless you are convinced the government can do nothing; that we are the playthings of fate; that when a depression comes you take it and that when war brings a boom you take that also. Surely no self-respecting people should take an attitude like that. I have before me the Canadian Statistical Review for April, 1948, issued by the dominion bureau of statistics. The portion preceding what I am about to read contained a summary of the improvement in production and referred to the government surplus and things of that kind. Then it went on to say:

> In contrast to the strength shown by data on production and employment there has been some evidence that the volume of goods moving through retail channels is smaller than it was a year ago. Retail sales during the first quarter of 1948 were up only 11·4 per cent over the first quarter of 1947, even though Easter sales fell entirely in March this year. But the index of retail commodity prices was up almost double this amount, about 22 per cent, an indication that the physical volume of goods sold is down.

The evidence is that, as our ability to produce goods increases, the ability of the people to buy and consume those goods decreases. Some hon. members may remember that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) referred to this matter in his budget speech. In this debate I suppose I am not allowed to quote him; but he pointed out that people were using up not only their current income but also the savings they accumulated during the war. It is even worse than that. They are not only consuming all their current income; they have not only consumed their savings; but they are now buying on credit, paying in instalments, and that cannot continue for very long. When they have reached their limit in instalment buying they will have only their current income, less what is required to pay the instalment purchases, and then sales will decline faster than they declined in the period referred to by the bureau of statistics.

This is the situation facing the country. Surely we should be able to do something about it, but in my opinion there is nothing in the report of the committee that will help in a material way to remedy this situation.

Before resuming my seat, since I do not want to prolong this debate unduly, I should like to refer to just one other matter. As I said earlier, the committee was appointed in order to avoid embarrassment to the government. The report is made in order to avoid the same embarrassment; and the inquiry recommended is intended to keep people quiet, in the hope that something will happen between now and when the house meets next winter. One of the very few submissions made to the committee by organizations came from the Canadian association of consumers. The brief was read and spoken to by the president, Mrs. R. J. Marshall, and the secretary, Mrs. F. E. Wright. In my opinion they presented an excellent brief, for which they are to be highly commended. They gave some information as to the effect of high prices on family life. What I am about to read appears on pages 1076 and 1077 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee. They refer to a study of the effect of the increased cost of living on family life, made by the Hamilton family service bureau in November and December, 1947. This survey covered seventy families, averaging 5·8 persons, with an average income in 1947 of $1,820. The survey showed that most families spent from 24 to 39 per cent of their income, or amounts ranging from $24 to $45 a month per family for food in 1939, but that in 1947 they had to spend from 40 to 80 per cent of their income, or from $50 to $100 a month to buy the same quantity of food. The wages of ordinary workers have not gone up by anything like that amount. Then they say:

> These surveys and widespread reports which we have had from consumers lead us to believe:
> (a) Family living costs have increased to a much greater extent than wages and family income;
> (b) The standard of living is being lowered;
> (c) Many families are reducing the quantities of their food purchases below an adequacy for nutritional health;
> (d) Excessively high prices, particularly of essential commodities, are likely to result in many families exhausting their savings, going into debt or over-extending themselves in instalment buying.

That is exactly what I have said is already being done. That statement is supported, not only by the evidence brought forward in this brief, but by reports coming from various parts of Canada and also the United States.

I suggest to the government that it should do more than what is contained in this milk and water report—more water than milk. Something more is required. But before we leave here, and after this report is endorsed—and I suppose we have to endorse it, because it is the best we can get—we should have some assurance from the government that it will pay some attention to the report; because, unless we have that assurance, we are not doing anything to ease the misery of the people, and to stave off the catastrophe which will overtake us unless we change our methods.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, since the amendment moved by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has been ruled out of order, and since the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) met the same fate, what is before the house at the present is a motion for concurrence in the report of the prices committee. Since I do not think any members of the official opposition have yet spoken directly to that report, but rather have discussed our own amendment, I should like to say at the outset that we are totally unable to accept the report, and that we find it a mere vague collection of words designed, as has been said and has been proven, to divert the attention of the people, and particularly of the housewives, from the object of what should be their real censure, namely the government's policies in their effect on prices; and to try to divert some of their attention to prices outside Canada—anywhere but where it should be directed, and that is on the shoulders of the government.

It is for this reason mainly that we cannot support the report or vote for its adoption. The hon. member for Eglinton, in his extremely able and telling speech of this afternoon, has analysed most of the deficiencies in the report. Its conclusions are wrong. The committee has not served its purpose, because it did not report on the real causes of the increases in prices. It did not actually say what the actual evidence proves, and indeed what some parts of its own report lead to as the only obvious conclusion, namely, that the government's policies almost exclusively have been responsible for the increased cost of living in Canada.

Speeches of hon. members in the C.C.F. party in this debate have imported a certain air of unrealism. They have introduced into the debate the theory of over-all controls and the theory of a planned economy as against the free enterprise system. In their usual fashion they have sought to leave the impression that anyone who takes part in free enterprise is out to do his neighbour—in fact that was the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). He stated that the philosophy of the free enterprise system is "to do others before they do you."

They are welcome to that point of view. It indicates the unreal world in which they live. The fact that they have that point of view, and put it forward with obvious sincerity, makes it impossible to believe that they are putting it forward merely for political purposes. It is impossible to believe that that is their only reason. It is certainly one of their reasons; but if that were the only reason one might say, "Well, at least they are realists so far as their own interests are concerned; at least they are trying to get into power by painting a picture which they know to be untrue." But unfortunately—or perhaps fortunately—that is not the whole situation. I am beginning to think they really do believe it.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Oh, they can't be that stupid! I don't believe that!

Mr. FULTON: It would appear that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) gives them credit for even greater subtlety than I do. However I am glad to have the reassurance he gives me, because I was beginning to think that the C.C.F. really thought that what they say about free enterprise is actually true. I am glad to know they do not, and I am glad also to have the confirmation of an independent member, free from political bias.

In any event, that is what they say they believe about the free enterprise system, that it has a social philosophy based upon the principle of doing others before they do you. In any event, that is the basis of their approach to this whole situation. Consequently they have introduced a note of unreality into the debate.

Let me say, before going on, that there is one part of their argument which should be answered clearly and in such a way as to leave no doubt in the minds of hon. members, the C.C.F. party, or the people of Canada, and that is for me to say that they are not the only party which has at heart the welfare of the average man and woman in Canada. That, of course, is the impression they have been seeking to leave in the country for many years.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is scarcely peculiar to the C.C.F.

Mr. FULTON: It is with a spirit of self-righteousness that they have introduced into this debate the suggestion that they are the only ones who have at heart the interests of the common people of Canada. That, of course, is not a fact. The fact is that I believe everyone in the House of Commons, every party in the country, has at heart the interests of the people of Canada. We criticize the government, yes; we say their policies are not working in the best interests of the people of Canada. But we do not say they are doing this deliberately. The only people who say that about the government, about the official opposition and about anyone else who disagrees with them, is the C.C.F. That, I suggest, proves clearly again the world of unreality in which they live.

It is not possible to look into people's minds and to know what goes on in those minds. But I would tell my hon. friends that I do not think those tactics work with the people. I tell my hon. friends that this party certainly has at heart the interests of every man and woman in Canada as much as they have. Indeed I believe it could be said that we have more at heart the interests of the people in Canada, because we do not live in that unreal world in which my hon. friends the socialists live.

We do not want to introduce into this debate or into the debate on every problem which comes up in the House of Commons this theoretical question of the substitution of a planned economy for our present system. We do not want to conduct our debates on that basis, because we prefer to advocate things which can be and should be done now to relieve the Canadian people from the increasing burden of the cost of living in Canada today. That is where our approach to the matter is a great deal more realistic than theirs because, as the hon. member for Eglinton said this afternoon, we have suggested and will continue to suggest things which should be and can be done to relieve that burden and to check the increasing cost of living.

Before I proceed further to analyse the things which should be done, I should like to deal with some of the points raised by hon. members of the C.C.F. who have taken part in the debate this evening. In the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cariboo, there was a great similarity to certain recommendations in the report of the prices committee, and particularly in the first paragraph of the amendment where there is a recommendation for the reimposition of the excess profits tax and a reversal to a policy of subsidies. Those are the recommendations contained in paragraphs 5 and 8 of the recommendations of the prices committee. It shows how closely the minds of the government—those who drew up the report anyway—and the C.C.F. run together on this and other related matters. We find the C.C.F. party strongly criticizing the report and some of its recommendations; yet we find here, as in so many other matters, they are at one as to the solution which should be adopted. They are also similar in this respect, that in the same way in which the government has failed to find or put forward a solution of the problem, I am sure that the recommendations of the C.C.F. would have equally little chance of success.

One fact emerges from the remarks of the hon. member for Cariboo and the hon. member for Vancouver East, namely, that the C.C.F. solution of this problem is in a reversal to a system of over-all price control. The hon. member for Cariboo devoted almost all his remarks to that idea. He quoted certain evidence given before the committee by Mr. K. W. Taylor, president of the wartime prices and trade board. The whole tenor of the portions of the evidence which the hon. member quoted was to the effect that, under the present stresses and strains, the free enterprise system would result in a certain upward pressure on prices. The hon. member quoted with approval those portions of the remarks of the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, and he referred to him as being a highly qualified witness in this and other related matters.

That being the case, I am sure the hon. member will give equal credence to other passages of the evidence of the same witness, because those passages are important in connection with this particular matter. In the early stages of the committee meetings, Mr. Taylor was discussing the question of the reversion to over-all price control, the very matter the hon. member for Cariboo was discussing this afternoon. The relevant portion of the witness' remarks in that particular connection is to be found on page 61 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee. Mr. Taylor said this:

> A "free economy" is predominantly based upon and organized by a system of free prices—free, that is, within the general framework of the law. In a free economy, prices constitute the main guide to production, and are at the same time the balance-wheel of supply and demand. Rising prices for one commodity indicate relative shortage and invite both increased production and economy in consumption; falling prices, in turn, indicate relative surplus and produce a tendency to ease up on production and to increase consumption. In other words, it is this constant flexibility of prices that helps to keep production and consumption in reasonable balance and harmony.

I do not think even the hon. member for Cariboo in any of his remarks this afternoon disagreed with that portion of Mr. Taylor's evidence. The witness went on to say this with respect to an over-all system of price control:

> If a community embarks upon a system of fixed or administered prices, it must invent some substitute for the flexible price system as a means of finding out what people really want, and what they want more of, and what they want less of. Failing such a substitute, the principle of freedom tends to disappear, and the government has to decide what will be produced and in what quantities. The free price system has many imperfections, but there has not yet been developed any other system that will preserve in essence what I call a "free economy."
> Administered or government-determined prices inevitably entail considerable government control over the details of production and distribution. And the wider the range, and the longer the duration of administered prices the more detailed must these controls become.
>
> I think I should emphasize, out of a considerable background of experience, that the fixing of a price is only the beginning of price control. During the war years we found that the making of actual price decisions was not too difficult, and formed only a minor part of our work. It was the efforts to assure supply, to estimate what was needed, to see that things were fairly distributed, to protect the consumer against upgrading or degradation of quality, it was the interminable investigating, checking and blocking of loop-holes for evasion that made up by far the larger part of each month's work.
> None of this is an argument against price controls in emergencies, when prolonged physical shortages of goods are inescapable. But I do suggest that these considerations should be carefully weighed whenever any broad extension of continuing government price fixing is proposed.

We have already heard of how in another portion of his remarks the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board spoke of the chaos that would result from a roll-back and the imposition of over-all controls. Those two portions of his evidence go together. The portion with which I am concerned and the point I want to make here is that the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board admits that if you start control you have to go the whole way. You cannot have partial control and partial freedom in our economy.

The hon. member for Cariboo dealt with another portion of Mr. Taylor's statement in his remarks this afternoon, when he admitted that shortages exist. In fact I think he went so far as to admit that shortages are the main cause of the present increases in prices under the present system. I suggest that if he believes that he will agree that at present there is only one solution consistent with the maintenance of our free system, and that is increased production. Greater production, greater abundance is the solution. That is the main solution, the main requirements for a restoration of balance in our economy and for lower prices. And in order to achieve more production we need, not more taxation but less taxation. That is the inconsistency in the hon. gentleman's proposal which he made this afternoon, because there he advocated more taxation.

I think the hon. gentleman's party, that is, the C.C.F., as a whole agrees with the position he took this afternoon when he said it was not possible to control prices in spots. We all agree with that. If he will admit that it is impossible to control prices only in spots, why will he not take the other logical step and admit that it is not possible to control our economy only in spots, that you cannot have control of prices unless you have control over all the costs entering into production. There must then be control of raw materials, wages, prices of farm products; control of the whole economy.

Based upon the remarks of the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, that conclusion is inescapable. As he said, if you remove the incentive from the price system you have to substitute something in its place. Under the system of our hon. friends the socialists, that substitute would be compulsion. If you stop the working of the free enterprise system you must use force, or you will have complete stagnation. Take away the incentive to production and you will not get production. Therefore you will have to resort to something else, and the only possible thing you can resort to is force—it is force or famine. Compulsion is what it comes to under their system.

Take the case of butter. There you have a prime example of what we have been talking about. Price control of butter was re-introduced last January. I want to refer to some of the discussion which took place in this house recently. I do not agree with the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin), the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), when he says we need not be concerned about a butter shortage next fall. I think we shall probably have one. If you compare the export figures of dairy cattle to the United States this year and last you will find that exports are running about double last year's volume. I have here the latest Department of Agriculture Live Stock Market Review of June 24, and on the first page it gives the exports of dairy cattle to the south, totalling for the week 4,761 head, making a total to date this year of 46,417. For the same week last year the exports were 884 head and, from the first of last year to June 26, 22,338; so that exports for the week were five times greater this year than last, and the figures for the year to date are twice as high this year as last. This export of dairy cattle to the United States is, of course, accompanied by a reduction in the production of butter in this country—and again is caused by the removal of incentive to produce butter, resulting from control without compulsion.

The logical conclusion of the solution advocated by the C.C.F., namely, the restoration of over-all controls in peacetime, is the use of force to secure production. That can be made as a statement of fact, because we can see in the words of C.C.F. speakers, themselves, that that is what they want. We know, from listening to their remarks in this country, that is what they want and what they are prepared to contemplate. To substantiate the statement I have made, I remind the house that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), when speaking on the labour estimates on June 24, said we would have to revert eventually in this country to a system of directed labour. His words can be found at page 5822 of Hansard. That was the system he wanted. That is the system they contemplate and would like to see in effect in this country—control of prices, direction of labour, the complete abolition of freedom. We surely can accept their own words for that. They are not in power in this country; but let us look at what is happening in the United Kingdom. There they have just that. They have to have it. I do not think the majority of the people there want it; I do not know if even the labour government wanted to bring it in; but in order to implement their plan, they had to have it—and they have it—control of prices and compulsion of labour. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, a fact which my socialist friends of the C.C.F. overlook when they talk about controls is that the price level in the United Kingdom, where they have complete controls, has risen more rapidly and to a higher level than the price level in Canada or in the United States.

This is what the system of controls imposed in wartime and maintained in peacetime has done to the wholesale price level in the United Kingdom. I am quoting from the Statistical Summary of the Bank of Canada for April, 1948. In 1937 the wholesale price level in the United Kingdom stood at 109·5, and it rose by 1945 to 170·2. By March, 1948, it had risen to 218·7, or a rise between 1937 and March, 1948, of 109·2 points.

Mr. HARTT: Where was that?

Mr. FULTON: In the United Kingdom. The wholesale price level in Canada in 1937 stood at approximately the same level as in the United Kingdom, 109·7 in Canada as against 109·5 in the United Kingdom. In Canada it had risen by 1945 to 134·4 and by March, 1948, to 190·5, or 28 points below the level in the United Kingdom at the same date. In the United States, that great free enterprise country living under a system which my socialist friends to my left condemned, the wholesale price level in 1937 stood at 107·1. By 1945 it had risen to 131·3 and, by March, 1948, to 200·2, or 10 points above ours and 18 points below the level in the United Kingdom. So there you can see what happens when you get the facts and figures under a controlled economy—control of prices, control of farm products, control of what people shall produce and when and where, and direction of labour; compulsion right across the board—and with all that you have a higher price level and a greater increase in the price level than you have in the United States, where you have free enterprise, and greater than in Canada where we are beginning to get back to free enterprise and where we have relatively a measure of abundance and could have more if the government would do those things we advocate that it should do.

Coming to the report itself, I find many reasons why one cannot concur in it. Not only does it fail, as I said at the outset, to attribute the real reasons for the increase in prices in Canada, but it contains a number of inaccuracies. On page 5, for instance under the heading of "Summary of Findings", the report says:

> The committee is convinced that its action in conducting spot examinations in those commodities that are particularly vulnerable to price increases at the present time has had a deterrent effect on individuals and firms engaged in processing, handling or selling these and related commodities.

I wonder whether the committee is really convinced; I wonder whether the people who drew up this report are convinced, which I doubt. While they may be convinced that what they say is correct, the outstanding fact in the minds of the people of Canada is that the longer the prices committee has sat, the higher prices have gone. So I say there is no ground whatsoever in fact for the statement made there, and no ground for the drafters of the report to have that conviction to which they refer.

On page 48 of the report I find a substantial error in the compiling of the figures. This is perhaps a relatively small matter, but I think it should be set right immediately, because it gives an entirely wrong impression of what the committee found. A comparison is given of the gross profits earned by some firms in the fruit and vegetable industry, covering five months from November to March in 1946-47 and 1947-48. In the first column the total in dollars is given as $80,904; in the second column, $165,539. Therefore the committee feels it is justified in saying that the net operating profit more than doubled. If you will add up the figures in the first column you will find that there is an error of $30,000 in addition. The total is just all wrong. The total should be $110,188, which means that the profits in the second period were a great deal less than double the total in the first period. Actually when one analyses it further he finds that the error is that they failed to show that one of the figures in the first column was an operating loss of $29,284 which, when subtracted from the total, leaves the total of the first column of figures correct, but gives an entirely erroneous impression. It fails to show that the profit system is what we have always said it is, namely, not only a profit system but a profit and loss system; but the assumption which the committee makes, based on that as to the reason for the increase in the cost of living, is entirely erroneous, and gives a wrong impression about how business is carried on. I think the chairman should see to it that the report is corrected in that particular and that any harm done is remedied.

I think what was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt) sufficiently analysed the main weaknesses in this report and sufficiently showed the true situation and the true cause of the rise in prices. Therefore I will not attempt to duplicate the presentations which they have made; but in summary form I do want to indicate, first, wherein government policies have been responsible for the increase and what steps we would take, what steps we urge the government to take, to meet the situation and to relieve the people of Canada of the increase and to get living costs down again.

First, rising prices have come about because of shortages in essential commodities. That initial shortage situation can hardly be blamed on the government. It was caused by the war. But it was aggravated by our decision, properly taken and agreed to by all, to extend relief and rehabilitation to the United Kingdom and to Europe. The point I make there is that the government knew about that shortage. It knew that its program of relief and rehabilitation would aggravate these shortages, yet it took no adequate steps to ensure that our production of these essential commodities would be increased to meet those commitments which we have to fulfil.

The second cause of increase in prices is, of course, inflation, increase of the amount of money in circulation in proportion to the goods available for sale. In that connection the government's policies are directly responsible for the increase in the cost of living. As an illustration of what I have in mind, I want to refer to the last budget. Although we had a surplus of $700 million as a result of high taxation, we were told that if we left the money in the taxpayers' pockets we would increase inflation. We were told that they did not know how to spend their own money, and that the government would have to spend it for them. We were told that it will be spent on debt reduction. Therefore, instead of being a taxpayer's budget, instead of being a people's budget, it became a bondholder's budget; that is all. What is the difference? If you retire bonds and put $100 for that bond back into circulation, back into the taxpayer's pocket, he has it to take out and spend. Therefore you are not preventing inflation, because just as much money is going back into circulation. But instead of the taxpayer having more of his income in his pocket and getting relief in that way, by a lowering of the tax rates, now he has to take this little capital, which he saved before, and spend it to meet the increase in the cost of living.

The third reason is, of course, the embargoes on imports from the United States, which immediately created a series of serious shortages in Canada and set the stage for speculation. The government, having invited speculation, now seeks to pass all the blame for the situation off on to the comparatively few who indulged in speculation.

The fourth is the procedure with relation to food prices. We remember what happened last November when, well in advance, the government announced that contracts with the United Kingdom were to be re-negotiated at increased prices. Food prices immediately went up in anticipation of that re-negotiation. The same thing is happening now with relation to the price of beef. In an effort to win the election in Saskatchewan the Minister of Agriculture has been forecasting for a month the lifting of the embargo against the export of beef cattle. What could happen as a result? What the government invited happened. The farmers have held off their beef in anticipation of the lifting of the embargo, with two results: first, a growing shortage of beef on the market, and second, an increase in the price of that which remained. That is another instance of a direct, almost a deliberate, invitation to a price rise. And yet the embargo has not been removed.

Finally, we have the excise taxes which increased by 25 per cent the cost of many commodities basic in our cost of living.

Mr. ABBOTT: Such as?

Mr. FULTON: These taxes, which have done more than anything else in recent years to increase the cost of living are, we hope, to be removed in the near future. Certainly the committee's report recommends it.

I wish the government would not be so sensitive to the criticism of its own members because, from authoritative statements reported in the press, one understands that, had this criticism not been made, the government might have already removed some of those taxes. One can only hope that either the government will become a little less sensitive to criticism by its own members, or that its own members will develop a better sense of timing in their approaches to the government.

In conclusion, I should like to list briefly the five measures that we would put into effect, and which should be put into effect now, to deal with the situation. First, we should free the dollar to encourage imports and thus relieve shortages and give increased production. Second, we should remove the embargoes which keep out the goods we require, thus cutting down the shortages. Third, we should remove the 25 per cent excise tax, and the sales tax from basic commodities, thus reducing the price of many essentials. Fourth, we should lower taxes and increase exemptions, thus leaving people more money in the lower income brackets, and family groups more money in their pockets to meet the increased costs, and leave more money free for investment and expansion. Fifth, we should immediately institute a large-scale natural resources development program to produce more at home and to increase the wealth and prosperity of this country.

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I believe certain remarks should be made by me with reference to something which was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). He made what I should think it would be fair to say was an attack on the very idea of this committee making recommendations.

Mr. FLEMING: In the circumstances.

Mr. MAYBANK: In the circumstances, as he desires to interject. I am quite agreeable to put that in because, in keeping with my attitude all through my work on the committee, I desire to please him as much as possible.

He said in effect that we were shorn of the right to make recommendations. He further said in effect that we were thus shorn of the right to make recommendations by reason of an amendment from his side of the house which was ruled out of order, and ruled out of order on my motion. Well, I suppose with respect to the last part of his statement he is substantially correct. I did move that the amendment made by his leader, I believe, was out of order. But of course there are few people besides himself who would come to the conclusion that, because an amendment moved by his leader was out of order, the committee itself had tape pasted across its mouth and could not make recommendations if it saw fit to do so.

If he desires so particularly and so vehemently to parade his own obtuseness he should blame himself and not the Liberal members of the committee. If he did not know he had the same rights to express his opinion as to what should be done, surely he cannot blame me. He cannot blame anyone but himself. The simple truth of the matter is, as the house will recall, than an amendment was moved directing the committee to act in a certain way. I took the position, at the time I contended that the amendment was out of order, that the house was directing into the hands of the committee—and the word "directing" is the one I wish to underline—the work which is usually that of the cabinet. That was the whole point. It was the directing of the committee to act in a certain fashion; and it seemed to me that an amendment of that sort, particularly coming from the non-responsible section of the house—and it will be noted that I did not say the irresponsible section of the house—

An hon. MEMBER: A distinction without a difference.

Mr. MAYBANK: —was, by its very nature, out of order. It is true that I have used the words "irresponsible" and "non-responsible". It may seem to some hon. members that it is a distinction without a difference. However, if they think that—and perhaps there is some truth in it—it is their privilege to do so.

Mr. JACKMAN: The hon. member's sense of humour is not as good as that of the house.

Mr. MAYBANK: But that does not say at all that these members of the committee, sitting down to consider the evidence, were precluded from saying that, upon a review of the evidence, they had found certain things. Over and over again the hon. member for Eglinton made the statement that we were thus shorn, and when I heard it I considered that it was not worth answering. I did not really think he believed that his liberties had been so greatly curtailed. I felt that he was just complaining from time to time for the purpose of complaining.

An hon. MEMBER: That is because the hon. member is so obtuse.

Mr. MAYBANK: I listened to his remarks in his customary querulous accents, took a firm grip on myself, remained patient and said nothing. It was not until he came to us this afternoon making confession of his lack of acumen and lack of wit that I realized that such was not the reason. All the time I thought he was simply saying these things for the purpose of satisfying a spleen against the government or something of that sort. It was not until then that I realized that such was not the reason at all. I then came to find out that indeed he had been blind to the fact that he had had no liberties shorn from him at all. Had I realized the tenderness of his intellect at the time he was making these complaints, I would have then endeavoured to correct his error; but I felt that it would be presumptuous of me to talk to him at that time and explain his error. I thought I would be told that I was trying to teach my grandmother to suck eggs or something like that.

There is one other point to which the hon. member has adverted on which I think I have a right to make some comments. He asserted that these conclusions were not brought in until a certain hour in the morning; I think it was 12.30.

Mr. FLEMING: 12.45 a.m.

Mr. MAYBANK: All right, 12.45 a.m. It does not make much difference. I am not concerned with the exact hour and minute. The point is that he says he received this information too late. I would call to his attention, and assert for the benefit of the house, the fact that he was not taken by surprise at that time, that conclusions or recommendations were possible for us to make or that it was within our capabilities to make them; because a drafting committee was struck. He was on the drafting committee. The drafting committee met several days before the time these recommendations were brought before the main committee, and it was then asserted that the right to make recommendations naturally existed. So he was not taken by surprise.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will not wish to leave a remark like that on the record if its accuracy is not supportable. I attended a meeting of the drafting committee, but at no time in my hearing was any such statement made about recommendations. I never heard any suggestion that recommendations were coming until the dying moments of that all-day session.

Mr. MAYBANK: I am sorry to be obliged to take issue with the hon. gentleman in such direct fashion. Others were present at the time. The fact that it was open to us to make recommendations was stated. Whether the hon. member heard that statement or whether he did not hear it, I do not know. But of the fact that the statement was made, I am quite certain.

Mr. FLEMING: It certainly was not stated while I was present.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MAYBANK: I do not think I should follow that matter up any further. Other members of the drafting committee were there, and they know what happened. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman could so misunderstand his powers as a member of the committee, as I have already delineated, it will not be difficult for this house to understand that matters can be stated in front of the hon. gentleman and he will not even know they are being stated.

The hon. member has also objected—and I cannot help thinking there is in a way some justification for the complaint—that he did not even see the recommendations that some of us intended to bring in until quite late, although he would have seen them earlier if he had not attempted all throughout the proceedings to delay matters as much as possible. But that is just by the way.

Mr. FLEMING: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MAYBANK: I assume there is justification for that sort of thing.

Mr. FLEMING: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has just asserted that I attempted to delay the proceedings as much as possible. That is entirely at variance with the facts. I sought to make the proceedings in that committee something of a reality in a discussion of the contents of this draft report, and not to swallow something that the chairman or the vice-chairman attempted to stuff down the throats of the committee.

Mr. MAYBANK: Now that the hon. gentleman has again interrupted, now that he has made another speech—

Mr. FLEMING: Stick to the facts.

Mr. MAYBANK: —now that he has finally come to the end, and his clack, too, has subsided, may I remark that it would be well for him to raise points of order that are points of order, and not merely to endeavour to inflict upon the house, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten speeches. There is no point of order in that. I am describing what I believe was his attitude in the committee, and I have a right to describe it as it appeared to me. He has a right to deny it at the appropriate time, and to describe his attitude or that of anybody else. But to be continually getting up and making more speeches is an abuse of the privileges of the house. I do not object to points of order or points of privilege being taken. But that sort of thing, just making another speech, is an abuse of the privileges of the house. It is patent that it is taking advantage of this House of Commons.

Since I have made reference to these recommendations, if they may be so called—I do not care what you call them—being brought in so late; if there is objection to that, the hon. member supplied the reason they should not have been brought in earlier. He complained that there were leaks here and there; that this thing and that were in the newspapers before we ever brought in the report. That was the statement the hon. gentleman made. I do not know whether it is right, but that is his own complaint. Incidentally, since he knew all about it from what was in the newspapers, it is remarkable that he should be so greatly taken by surprise when the report was actually brought in.

I want to point out that members of that committee had no power to impose secrecy upon other members. Some people say that when matters are laid before a committee they should be kept secret until they are formally made public. I do not know whether or not that is right, but the fact is that we had no power to impose secrecy upon any member of the committee. So it seems to me that when you do not want matters to be made public before they are what one might call complete, the best thing to do is wait for the proper time to bring them in. I admit that imposes a bit of strain upon people when they see recommendations, perhaps surprising recommendations, at a late stage; but those are the facts. There had been leaks. Why invite more? This is not intended as any reflection upon the hon. member for Eglinton. I am not even suggesting that if the recommendations had been placed in his hands sooner he would have handed them to the press. That is not the suggestion at all. It is simply, as he points out, that persons were discussing the report before it was presented; articles were appearing in the press, and that in itself would be reason for delay in presenting some portions of the report.

Having said so much by way of discussion of some of the points raised by the hon. member for Eglinton, may I make a general observation with regard to the report and its nature. Hon. members on the one side take the position that it is a sort of all-out attack on business. Other hon. members seem to think we have not gone far enough in that regard. That is an entirely wrong view to take of it. All through the report—and it is replete with references of this sort—it is indicated that there is no attack on business in general. There is no belief on the part of the committee that business has been acting badly or improperly, that it has been gouging extra profits or anything like that. It is suggested that in some cases there may have been improprieties or a departure from good, ethical practices, and that if this is the case the government should endeavour to find a way of curbing that sort of thing. The intention of the committee, as expressed in the report, is no more than that. A fair reading of the report will bring that out clearly. I emphasize the words "a fair reading of the report", because it is quite obvious that the Tories are not giving it a fair reading, nor have they any desire to do so. I am quite content that their only desire is the desire they indicated when the committee was set up. They made up their minds then that the committee would not function; and it is my opinion that they did their best to make their prophecy come true. But if others will read the report fairly they will realize that there is no general attack on business. This is neither a whitewashing nor a smearing report. I think some hon. gentlemen on that side of the house would like to have made it a complete whitewash, but that cannot be done.

Mr. FLEMING: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just now imputed motives. He just stated in terms that the members of the official opposition did not want findings that would be anything but a whitewash. That is most improper, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman should realize that this afternoon I was very generous with him. I had some reason to believe that he himself was imputing motives, but I did not intervene. So I do not think the hon. gentleman should interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. FLEMING: Do you rule that there is no imputation of motives in what the hon. member has said? I say he is quite improperly imputing motives.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MAYBANK: Well, Mr. Speaker, this additional interruption is characteristic of the attitude of the hon. member throughout, from the time this committee was proposed up to the present moment. I might as well warn the house now that probably we shall have a great many more puerile interjections of this kind. It is a Tory complex, I have been told. So that you may have some idea of the further puerilities that will stem from that source, I call attention to the length of time taken by the hon. member in discussing such things as where the conclusions should occur in the report, the pagination of the report, and so on. These are matters of vast consequence to the hon. member. It might interest the hon. gentleman and others to know that this way of publishing conclusions, at the beginning of a report, seems to be sanctioned by practice. Whether or not it is the most logical way, it is often done. The last report I happened to see in which this practice was followed was the report by the famous price spreads committee, which was recommended and piloted through by Mr. Stevens, a member of the then Tory government. Surely, after pointing out that this was the way it was done then, these Tories, who naturally worship everything in the past, falling down before their gods four, five and six times a day, will no longer question the fact that this committee placed these recommendations at the beginning of the report. As far as I know, no point of order has yet been taken in connection with that statement.

Further puerilities to which I might direct attention—

Mr. HODGSON: Well, it is still eighteen months from an election.

Mr. MAYBANK: Now the interjections are coming from another part of the Tory phalanx. Evidently the signal has gone from one part of the chamber to another, to have some person in another area take up the attack and make as many interjections as possible. They might just as well not waste their time with that sort of thing.

Mr. HODGSON: Do not waste your time in my riding either.

Mr. MAYBANK: They will not have any effect upon me, in my delineation of them. There is one feature about the Tory speeches which have thus far been made, which is quite revealing. That came from the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes). It showed, possibly without thinking, the whole attitude of his party with reference to this problem or any other, when he attacked the government policy by saying—I should have said that it was the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt)—

Mr. MERRITT: Another mistake.

Mr. MAYBANK: I apologize to the hon. member for Nanaimo, wherever he may be. And I have no desire to misname the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, either. It was he who unwittingly showed their whole policy with respect to everything when he declaimed so emphatically that the real problem is a tight labour market—and those are my words, not his; I have paraphrased slightly. It was the labour market, according to him, that was the cause of everything.

That just illustrates what they want. They want to have a labour pool. If they can get a labour pool they can get labour cheaper. If they can get labour cheaper they can have lower prices; and that is their solution of all the ills in the world.

Mr. MERRITT: I was just quoting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott).

Mr. MAYBANK: I see that was not a point of order, after all. In those words the hon. member epitomized the attitude of the Tory party and the Tory mind all over the world.

Mr. FULTON: And the minister epitomized it in the same words.

Mr. GRANT: Another lightweight.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Have you nothing to say in favour of this report?

Mr. MAYBANK: Various references were made by the hon. member for Eglinton and others about some of the recommendations. As I recall it, scorn was poured upon the recommendations respecting the reduction of the excise tax.

Mr. MERRITT: Just the way it was brought in.

Mr. MAYBANK: Oh, yes, yes, yes. I will say this for the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard: He did not vote against it at any rate. He went home. He did not vote.

Mr. MERRITT: At one o'clock in the morning.

Mr. MAYBANK: The hon. member for Eglinton, however, who has declaimed so vigorously this afternoon about the reduction of the tax, and how it should have been reduced long ago—in fact, reduced before it was ever put on—did vote against it. He voted against the proposition that consideration should be given to the practicability of cutting out that tax now. Despite all his oratory this afternoon, the facts are that he voted against that recommendation; and he voted against every other recommendation, too. I suppose it would be trite to observe that actions speak louder than words. But it is true, is it not?

Mr. MERRITT: You voted both ways on that.

Mr. PARENT: No; that was Hackett.

Mr. MAYBANK: I wish also to call this to the attention of the house: the hon. member for Eglinton, and others, have inveighed against what they have called the incompleteness of the report, and have inveighed against what they call its too great voluminousness. I wish to remind them and to tell the house that there is no record of any proposal of any kind by them as to what evidence should be reviewed, as to what recommendations might be made or as to what recommendations might not be made. There just is not any positive contribution on the part of those gentlemen to be found in the records at any stage of the consideration of this report. And it is not as though they had not apparently been giving thought to it because, as a matter of fact, they were continually talking about stopping the committee work and making an interim report about something or another.

Mr. MERRITT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. MERRITT: Is it not a fact that the hon. member, while chairman of the committee, told me that if I had any suggestions to make I was to put them into the form of a motion and he would have them voted down? Will the hon. member tell me whether it was worthwhile to put forward any recommendation after his statement?

Mr. MAYBANK: This last speech hardly requires any reply. The hon. member seems to complain that he was admonished—not once; he is quite right about that, but many times—to put proposals into the form of a motion. Over and over and over again they were admonished, exhorted, urged to do something. But they could not do anything except captiously to criticize. Why should he, a parliamentarian, object when he was requested to put a proposition into the form of a motion? Why should he object to that? Is that not a proper thing to do? And from what he now says, the house will recognize the truth of what I am saying, that there was no contribution at any time by any of those members in the committee. They were trying captiously to criticize and, if possible, to hold back; and if that statement is not true, they acted as if it were true.

Mr. MERRITT: You have not answered my question yet.

Mr. REID: It is not unusual for them.

Mr. MAYBANK: No, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) points out, it is not. It is not unusual to have such an attitude as that from them.

Some consideration has been given to the pages of this report. It has not been pointed out that, in the main, the report is a digest of evidence. That is what takes up most of the large volume we have before us. No one has suggested that it is an unfair digest of the evidence. I think such a digest of evidence is bound to be inadequate. I feel that when you have so great a volume of evidence to review you are almost certain to do an inadequate job of pressing that into a relatively small number of pages.

At any rate, however, the best that could be done was done; and I conceive that it is a very good job, although I feel there must be some inaccuracies. I consider that it must be inadequate in some respects; but, all things considered, I believe it is a fair digest. It is never consciously unfair, and there is no singling out of evidence one way to the detriment of a case which might have been presented the other way.

Let me call to the attention of the house the fact that those hon. members who have criticized the report never made any reference to the fact that the evidence was presented there in digest form to the house. As a matter of fact, they talked as though they did not want the house to know it. It is there for any person to read and determine whether, in that light, the conclusions are reasonable.

The conclusions and recommendations are not put forth dogmatically. Everyone, except the hon. members who offer no assistance, admits that the problem of high prices is a most difficult one. In general that problem in Canada has been seriously affected by external prices. I do not know whether they would deny that, but they probably will. Take zinc for example, which is exported in part. The high price of that commodity in Canada is bound to be affected by what is obtainable for it in the foreign markets. So with hundreds and hundreds of the articles which we have for sale in Canada; they are affected by export prices.

So far as import prices are concerned, it is also patent that we are buying in markets where prices are high and that high-priced articles enter into production in this country and are bound to affect prices here. But my hon. friends do not wish to admit that; they do not wish to say anything about that, and they do not wish to let anybody else say anything about it either.

That is the reason for this dissertation before the evidence is digested. That is the reason for these conclusions being arrived at. I ask that some of the conclusions be looked at shortly. In effect the first one says it probably would be good business to have continued the scrutiny of prices. That is all it says, that it probably would be of value. The hon. member for Eglinton voted against that.

It is suggested there as well as elsewhere—the hon. member took exception to this—that there is some reason for thinking that the committee sittings had had a salutary effect upon the price structure or the price level. I must admit that that is an imponderable; you cannot be sure that that is so. However, the capable women who came before the committee representing the Canadian association of consumers, a large association of keen-eyed students, asserted that they believed such to be the case. One large manufacturer stated recently that if it were not for the sittings here he would raise his prices, that he would raise them as soon as the committee rose. He was cross-examined at some length to make sure that he had not been misheard, but he was positive about it. I happen to recall it quite definitely. There were other statements of the same sort.

The hon. member for Eglinton went on to say that you should not make too much out of that. I subscribe to the idea that one swallow does not make a summer, but I think there is some reason for believing that if there is a continued possibility of your being called up before an organization to explain why you are doing certain things, there will be salutary results. As I say, the hon. member for Eglinton voted against that. I do not know whether the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard did or not.

Mr. MERRITT: Do not worry; I would have voted against it.

Mr. MAYBANK: The second recommendation is in connection with an important arm in the administration of the government, namely, the combines investigation commission. We feel that it would be well to strengthen that. Surely there cannot be any objection to that. Surely every person here who is interested in doing what can be done to keep down prices, to see that prices are not fixed improperly, would be in favour of that. But, as I say, they are against that.

Then I come to the word "profiteer." The third recommendation is that flagrant cases of profiteering should be prosecuted. The hon. member is against that; the Tories are against that. It might very well be that the law under which such prosecution would take place might be sfrengthened. I think it should be. I feel that it would be much easier to discharge duties under a brief for the defence than under a brief for the prosecution, with the law as it is. Without attempting anything in the nature of persecution, I think good purposes would be served by making that law stronger in order to hit out at plainly flagrant cases of profiteering.

During his speech the hon. member said that we have been indefinite in our report, that we have said that certain people seem to have done so-and-so and that something else had happened, that nobody has been named. Surely that was the fair way to report. What would he have said if this committee had asserted that John Doe was guilty of an offence? What would he have said if the committee in an ex parte examination of the matter decided that certain people were guilty and should be prosecuted?

Mr. FLEMING: You preferred a general smear.

Mr. MAYBANK: That is the sort of thing he would like this committee to do but he did not have the temerity to make a motion to that effect, although today he says this committee should have reported that certain people were guilty. The evidence was not sufficient for that and the committee wanted to be fair. It is now that the hon. member discloses himself as desiring to be unfair, although I am quite sure he will be the first one to deny that he has any such intention.

I observe that you are becoming rather restive, Mr. Speaker, because it would seem that I have come to the end of my forty minutes. I would suggest that I be allowed to continue for a minute or two, more particularly since I have been interrupted a few times. But if there should be any person who desires not to grant that to me, naturally I shall be content, because the house has been most patient in listening to me thus far.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to proceed?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

An hon. MEMBER: Not past eleven o'clock.

Mr. FRASER: We get Charlie McCarthy tomorrow night.

Mr. MAYBANK: I am quite sure the hon. member will be much better entertained. Of course I would not suggest that that probably is the proper mental level for him.

The next paragraph requires no particular comment. The committee felt that if it was possible, having conserved the United States dollars necessary for the time being, to get away from these bothersome and nuisance-like importation controls on fresh vegetables and fruits, that should be done. Of course the committee has to make a recommendation of that sort with some care. We must consider the labour which the people of Canada have put into the business of producing these vegetables. My own thought is that to remove prohibitions of that sort at the present time when the farmer's labour is done would not be the right and fair thing to do. It is worded deliberately in a careful manner because there are both consumers and producers to take into consideration.

I pass over with only a word the recommendation with reference to the taxing of profits. Again every person must agree that that is a difficult sort of law to work out. But if improper profits are being made, if profits rise so high that they are clearly beyond what is reasonable, then indeed it does not seem unfair to tax them, because that is where the wealth is. That is a carefully worded section. There is no general attack on business in it.

As to the remaining subjects respecting accounting and inventory reserves, I would point out that many companies, by declaring inventory reserves, have hidden, both from their shareholders and from those who work for them and from the general public, some of the wealth they have made. With many that is not so. It was shown that one company instituted a reserve policy and followed it automatically through all the years. But with other companies one could not tell without considerable search what their profits were, and it does not seem to me that there should be any objection to a complete revelation of what their profits are. Remember this, that these companies operate by virtue of a charter which has been granted to them by the legislature, and they are given a limited liability. There should not be anything objectionable in requiring a full disclosure, because they are selling their goods to the public as a whole; they are dealing with citizens of the country as labour, and they are selling their securities on the market by virtue of the sort of annual financial statement they make. Surely, then, it is not unreasonable, when we have granted a limited liability to that kind of artificial person, to require them to disclose what the truth is respecting their business.

I could go on and speak of each one of the recommendations which have been made, but I shall not take up the time of the house to do so at any greater length. As usual, I wish to say I am grateful to hon. members for having listened to me and for having given me extra time to finish up on one or two subjects on which I wanted to speak.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend speaks, I should like to ascertain the wishes of the house about sitting after eleven o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That settles it.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): The address to which we have just listened indicates beyond words the close relationship which those on the government side of the house bear to those in the socialist party, for you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that not one word of criticism passed the lips of my hon. friend in regard to those sitting to our left.

Mr. KNOWLES: He did not have time.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Here is a most interesting situation. On this which was supposed to be the last day of the session, a motion was made by my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) in his dual capacity as minister and as chairman of this committee, and not one word passed his lips. For the first time in this house, on a motion as important as this, the chairman of a committee saw fit to throw the report into the house, say nothing about the attitude of the government with regard to it, and allow a discussion, on a matter as important as this, to continue all day without any suggestion on the part of any minister of the crown as to what the government intends to do with regard to this problem.

It is most interesting to discuss, even in the few minutes at my disposal, the series of events which impelled the committee, without power to report—indeed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself said that this committee should not have that power, because he pointed out that it would cause political arguments if it had that power—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that when he says "power" he is using the wrong word. I said the committee should not be instructed to bring in recommendations, because they might take their time in debating political policies. I never said the committee had not power.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will refer my right hon. friend to the page. I shall not quote his remarks, because the hon. gentleman who preceded me succeeded in speaking sufficiently long to deny to us any discussion at length of what he said here this evening. The Prime Minister's remarks will be found at pages 749 and 750 of Hansard, and when this debate is adjourned and the next opportunity comes I shall quote them.

I was dealing with the series of events. There were by-elections and there were pilgrimages. My hon. friends opposite, who for four long years sat silent in regard to this problem, and who during the last two years never opened their mouths with regard to it, suddenly developed courage. My hon. friend the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Breithaupt) led this valiant band of six to the Prime Minister, according to press reports of the highest authority, and there and then the Prime Minister found himself in a position where he had to take the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to task because the Minister of Finance had been faithful in carrying out government policy during the last several months.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that is absolute nonsense. I never took the Minister of Finance to task in my life, nor did he ever take me to task.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My right hon. friend speaks but the truth, because so often infallibility has been his belief in his own decisions. There is no doubt about the truth of what I was saying, and the press must have been prescient, because its prophecies indeed came true. Last Saturday, a week ago today, information passed along the corridors of this house to the effect that, as a result of this meeting, the six members had convinced the Prime Minister that all was not as well as he said it was, following the results of the by-elections. I am going to read what he said then. There was no suggestion then that inflation was not being controlled. There was no suggestion then that high prices were prevailing in this country, because the Prime Minister said, and I quote from the press statement:

> While inflation may be bad, and takes time to control, it should never be forgotten that there is one thing worse than inflation and that is depression.

These are the words that indicate the change of mind between June 9 and June 19, one week ago today. The Prime Minister said:

The federal government, at the risk of its own immediate popularity, has so shaped its policies as to restrict further inflation in the present, and to lessen the possibilities of depression later on. This, too, is a course of action not too readily understood.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What did my hon. friend say after the by-election?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was not in power. The Prime Minister was giving alibis.

Mr. KNOWLES: Farther away from it than ever.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, of course, again the interruption of my hon. friend to the left indicates the close relationship between these two parties in the house.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What happened in Saskatchewan?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I listened to my hon. friends. I have not been dealing with my hon. friends to the left, but they find it necessary to interrupt.

Within ten days a report was handed to certain members of this committee on prices. I say that one week ago today certain members of this committee, the government members, had the eight recommendations or so in their possession. Who gave them the recommendations? Will the Prime Minister answer who gave them the recommendations? Was it he, or the members of the cabinet who gave them to that committee that was to find facts on evidence? On the 9th of June the Prime Minister said, all is well.

The federal government, at the risk of its own immediate popularity, has so shaped its policies as to restrict further inflation.

And a few days later a report is handed to the members of the committee with the attitude, according to the hon. member for Eglinton, You take it, and if amendments are suggested they will be voted down. That, Mr. Speaker, is the attitude that should be taken by any committee chairman, by any vice-chairman, or by anyone connected with the committee.

Mr. MARTIN: I am sure the hon. member will permit me to say that I was in the chair when the resolutions were discussed, and I am sure the hon. member for Eglinton and every other hon. member of the committee will recall that I made no such remark.

Mr. FLEMING: It was made repeatedly by the vice-chairman.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We are at least succeeding in getting a word from the hon. gentleman who has interrupted.

Mr. WARREN: He can look after himself.

Mr. KNOWLES: Go build a house.

An hon. MEMBER: Mortimer Snerd.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not going to make any observation about that. Then, within a few days these recommendations are handed out. Again I ask the Prime Minister, who was it that one week ago today drafted or handed certain members of the committee, certain government members of the committee, the recommendations that it was desired the committee should give? Surely we have the right to hear from the Prime Minister. Surely this country had the right to hear from the Prime Minister today. What is the government going to do about it?

According to the press of a week ago, and again it was prescient, as soon as the recommendations come before the house—possibly the Minister of National Defence is not following this—

An hon. MEMBER: He lives in Montreal.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Has he anything to say about it? What is the attitude of the government? I ask, why have they not given the necessary moneys to the combines investigator, as provided in recommendation No. 2? Two years ago they said, "Put teeth in the law and we will prosecute combines and monopolies." Now they say it was lack of money.

What is the next one? Recommendation No. 3 reads:

That the government amend the regulations of the appropriate legislation, if that be found necessary, so that immediate specific action can be taken wherever the evidence discloses flagrant cases of profiteering at the consumer's expense.

What do they want that for? They have the powers already under the Combines Investigation Act. They have it already in the Wartime Prices and Trade Board Act. They say again, as a stall, that, if necessary, further change be made. What is the government going to do about this recommendation, because did the recommendations not originate with the government? What is the government going to do about this?

That the government consider the removal of import restrictions now in effect on certain fruits and vegetables.

Surely this country has had the right today to learn what the government will do on this report, not next year, not next session, but before this session closes. Let us do something in this house in regard to prices, whether along the lines here suggested or along whatever lines may be necessary for the purpose.

Since it is eleven o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KNOWLES: What will be the business on Monday?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On Monday the house ought to be prepared to take up anything that is left on the order paper in any order.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

DEVELOPMENT UNDER APPROVED PLAN—PROVISION FOR ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That whereas the requirements of a national capital involve, from time to time, developments of a character beyond the municipal improvements ordinarily required in other cities;

And whereas the development of a national capital is at least in part a national responsibility;

And whereas the capital of Canada is designated by the British North America Act to be Ottawa;

And whereas the carrying out of planned improvements requires a clear expression of intention to proceed with necessary developments in a manner which will ensure continuity;

Therefore this house is of opinion:

1. That it is desirable that all developments of the capital should be in accordance with an approved plan which has regard to the position of the city of Ottawa as a national capital in the present, and to its probable needs as the capital of Canada in years to come.

2. That a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the national capital fund, should be created to which appropriation may be made annually by parliament over a period of years of the amounts required from time to time to meet the costs of such projects as may be recommended by the federal district commission and approved by the governor in council for the development of the national capital and the surrounding area, in accordance with the plan;

3. That it is desirable that the work necessary to this end be under the supervision of the federal district commission, distinct from its ordinary operations;

4. That the expenditure of moneys for these purposes should be conditional on the effective co-operation of the city of Ottawa and other municipalities within the national capital district.

He said: I know hon. members are anxious that the session should be concluded with as little delay as possible; therefore I promise I shall not take up much time with this resolution. I believe the resolution in the form in which it appears on the order paper will commend itself to hon. members without extended discussion. Most of the objectives set forth have been approved in past years, and the general conception I believe has met with acceptance not only in parliament but throughout the country.

As hon. members know, there are items in the estimates in relation to the work of the federal district commission. For that reason I shall not in my present remarks go into detail about specific projects. Questions on that particular phase of the matter may be asked when we reach those estimates.

The resolution, in a word, seeks to ensure the continuous development of Ottawa and surrounding areas in a manner which will help to meet its needs as the capital of Canada both at the present time and in years to come. I would link together, as setting forth the essentials of the resolution, certain clauses which appear in it. For this purpose I shall quote from the resolution, but in an order different from that in which these clauses appear.

The resolution states:

That it is desirable that all developments of the capital should be in accordance with an approved plan which has regard to the position of the city of Ottawa as a national capital in the present, and to its probable needs as the capital of Canada in years to come.

The requirements of a national capital involve from time to time developments of a character beyond the municipal improvements ordinarily required in other cities.

The carrying out of planned improvements requires a clear expression of intention to proceed with necessary developments in a manner which will ensure continuity.

A special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the national capital fund, should be created, to which appropriation may be made annually by parliament over a period of years of the amounts required from time to time to meet the costs of such projects as may be recommended by the federal district commission and approved by the governor in council for the development of the national capital and the surrounding area, in accordance with the plan.

I believe those four paragraphs, which I have rearranged in this order, will give to hon. members the essentials of the resolution.

May I now for a moment enlarge upon the statements therein set forth. It is stated first that—

It is desirable that all developments of the capital should be in accordance with an approved plan which has regard to the position of the city of Ottawa as a national capital in the present, and to its probable needs as the capital of Canada in years to come.

What was known as the Ottawa improvement commission was appointed during the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier within one year of fifty years ago in order, as a federal government responsibility, to assist in making in this city such necessary improvements as at that time seemed advisable, having regard to the fact that Ottawa was the capital of Canada. Those improvements have continued over the years, and hon. members now know the effect they have had upon Ottawa as the capital city of our country.

I need not go into details as to what has been accomplished over those years; the vast improvements, so apparent on all sides, speak for themselves. I would ask hon. members, however, to ask themselves what would have been the position in this capital today if those improvements had not been made during the last fifty years. It is in this light that I now present to the house this resolution, one which I hope will lead to essential developments which the city of Ottawa could not be expected to undertake as a municipal obligation, if the capital is to meet the needs which will be expected of it in the course of another fifty years, to say nothing of the years which will follow thereafter.

Unless these essential developments are made at the present time they will be extremely costly to make within another few years, if indeed it might not become next to impossible to make them later on. It is to anticipate a situation of that kind that I am bringing forward this resolution today.

As hon. members are aware, for some years past members of the federal district commission and others who are members of the capital planning committee, including several experts, have been working on a plan for the development of the capital. A master plan is being prepared setting out on broad lines the developments which should be followed from year to year by the different authorities and organizations having to do with the development of the capital. Here may I point out that the municipality of Ottawa has its obligagations; the provinces of Ontario and Quebec each have also to do with matters which pertain to Ottawa and Hull and which affect the development of the capital. Adjoining municipalities have to be brought into consideration in connection with developments affecting their areas. Finally in association with these authorities there are developments which the government itself, which has a special responsibility for the development of the national capital, will wish to make.

These several bodies cannot be brought together in harmonious relationship unless there is some broad and general plan to be followed. For that reason, for some years past the government, as I have said, has had experts at work under the direction of the federal district commission, preparing a master plan; in that work it has had the benefit of the best advice obtainable.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, if my hon. friend wishes to ask it now—

Mr. FLEMING: Would he elucidate the meaning of the expression "approved plan" in the first paragraph of the resolution? Does that refer to a plan which has been approved by the government, or one which has yet to be approved and which can be submitted to parliament for approval?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask that I be permitted to continue my general statement? If there are details which I have not covered, they might be brought up for discussion on the estimates relating to the commission. At that time I would be happy so far as possible to answer any questions which may be asked.

The question the hon. member has just asked respecting an approved plan is one which I was about immediately to anticipate. I do not think the words "approved plan" should be taken as meaning that any plan prepared at the moment is to be followed in all details over the next twenty, forty, fifty or a hundred years or that any plan should be approved as a whole by the government or by parliament; but rather that developments should be made in stages in accordance with general ideas which seem to meet with general acceptance and which are in the nature of guides to the future.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

A tentative plan is in the making, but it is not completed. As prepared, it deals with general features of the development of the city, including, for example, the main thoroughfares which should be developed; what should be done with railway tracks which intersect different parts of the city; where certain public buildings may be best located, and the like. That plan has already reached the stage which I believe would enable anyone looking at it to see exactly the lines of contemplated future developments. As agreement is reached among the different agencies or governments affected, it would be possible to have developments arranged upon those lines. I do not think however that too much significance should be attached to the word "approved" before the word "plan," as related to the plan as a whole, or as to finality in its details. This is true particularly in view of the fact that no further stage in the development planned on a large scale can take place without parliament approving in the first instance the essential projects being proposed.

The conception of following a master plan is I think imperative if development is to take place in an orderly way, and in a manner which will admit of projects once begun being carried out with a degree of certainty from year to year, different stages, as I have said, being approved by parliament from year to year as the years go by.

I attach great importance to the following statement:

> The requirements of a national capital involve, from time to time, developments of a character beyond the municipal improvements ordinarily required in other cities.

That is why the government is asking today that this House of Commons declare its readiness to support the progress toward completion of certain developments which, once approved by parliament, may in the very nature of things not be possible of completion all at once and which may require appropriations from time to time over a series of years. Already the city of Ottawa, the government of Ontario, the government of Quebec, some of the municipalities adjoining Ottawa, and the federal district commission, have been in communication with each other with respect to certain developments which they all feel to be more or less essential and which they would like to see commenced at once. These are developments that could not be expected from the municipality itself; they are developments that might not be made if Ottawa were not the capital of our country and there were not necessarily regard for the future development of the country as well as of the municipality.

These various authorities wish to have some assurance that if a certain development is undertaken it will be proceeded with, that it will not be started this year by an appropriation by parliament of a certain amount and then dropped in the year following. They are asking that this parliament indicate, first, its belief in following a plan, and, second, its intention to see that essential developments under that plan are presented to parliament from time to time and developed along lines which may continue to receive the approval of parliament.

Perhaps I could not do better at the moment than to anticipate what might be asked with respect to the immediate developments the federal district commission have in mind and that the government is recommending in connection with an item that appears in the supplementary estimates at this time. Before giving that in detail it might help to disclose the importance of the proposed developments were I to say a word about the appearance of this capital as I recall it before some of the major developments in the capital, because of its being the capital, were made at the instance of the government.

We hear a great deal of complaint about traffic congestion and confusion in the centre of the city, between the houses of parliament, the Chateau Laurier and the station, and particularly around the national war memorial. I remember well what the city was like before the changes were made that have since produced such a splendid effect.

When a Liberal administration came into office in the early twenties the space now occupied by the national war memorial and the open spaces immediately adjoining were occupied by a block of buildings, including a hotel; by a second hotel, a post office, a theatre, a city hall and a church—all in that limited space. In the space which the national war memorial now occupies there was a mass of buildings between Elgin street and a point close to the approaches to the Chateau Laurier, and again between Wellington and Sparks streets. There was one side of a hotel on the corner opposite the Langevin block; there were other shops and stores that ran on down Elgin street from Wellington to Sparks street; there was a series of shops and stores along Sparks street; on Wellington street, there were offices and shops and another side of the hotel. Behind that block was the Ottawa post office, which occupied a considerable space. Today it is located on the corner of Elgin and Sparks street.

On the far side of Sparks street opposite this commercial block was the largest hotel in the city, the Russell hotel, with shops and stores adjoining. Behind and adjoining the Russell hotel was a large theatre. Beyond the Russell hotel and the theatre was the city hall and Knox church. Along Elgin street there was a row of dwellings which, had they not been removed, would now be standing on the east side, making that street half the width it is at the present time.

All the improvements I have mentioned have been made within the last fifteen or twenty years, and in accordance with a plan agreed to by the government and the municipality, each sharing in the cost. They have changed entirely the appearance of the city and have given some breathing space in this central part of the capital.

Congestion due to the growth of the city and from other causes is again taking place in this area. Traffic of larger proportions and of a different kind is now being found on the streets in the very heart of the city. Twenty years ago we had not the enormous trucks and vans which are now making use of any thoroughfare they find most convenient. They are making their presence all too greatly felt in this area, an area in which they would scarcely have been able to operate had it not undergone so much in the way of improvement. The commission, the city authorities and others have come to the conclusion that a major development is necessary if this congestion is to be relieved. The traffic of heavier vehicles must be directed away from in front of the parliament buildings and the centre of the city to some other portion.

It is proposed that a bridge should be thrown across the canal south of the station to run from Elgin street to Waller street. It would cross at a point half way between Sparks street, where the monument is situated, and the Laurier avenue bridge. Last year the house approved appropriations which enabled soundings and other investigations to be made respecting the feasibility of constructing a bridge there. The reports are favourable, and the commission is asking, in the appropriation which parliament will be requested to vote later, for money to enable it to proceed with the immediate construction of that bridge. It may take considerable time to complete, but when completed it will have the effect of removing heavy truck and other traffic from this part of the city to another more suitable part.

Another major improvement that is desired is in relation to the location of railroad tracks and freight terminals. I ask hon. members to contemplate what the situation will be like twenty or fifty years hence if the freight terminals which are now located where they are in this capital are allowed to remain without any anticipation of the growth of traffic, on the one hand, and the growth of the city and its needs, to say nothing of the country, on the other. Within a quarter mile of these houses of parliament one can see, from the very windows of this building, freight terminals in the immediate vicinity of the Union station. Going toward government house in the near vicinity of the research council building and Earnscliffe one can see on the other side of the street, facing the Ottawa river, freight terminals which are occupying space which should be reserved for public buildings of first importance to the country.

The commission and the city both feel that some arrangements should be made with the railroad companies to have these freight terminals placed in another part of the city. That will not be accomplished in a day, and it will not be accomplished by any one authority. It can only be brought about by the co-operation of the different interests concerned, but a beginning is necessary if the change is ever to be made. What the government has already done to anticipate that end has been to ask parliament to approve first the expenditure of a certain amount of money for the acquisition of lands in those parts of the city which appear likely, in accordance with the general plan, to provide suitable locations, and to appropriate money for the approaches in order that the terminals may be placed in parts that would be appropriate. In other words, what the commission has had in mind is providing zoning areas, which will have regard to what should be reserved for governmental purposes, for commercial purposes, and for residential purposes, and to enter on this task at once while there is opportunity, to have these needs planned and that without too much in the way of expense.

The commission have asked that they should have the right to take up with the railway companies some of the major changes to which I have referred. I have had conversations with the president and chairman of the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the president of the Canadian National Railways, and these gentlemen have expressed their entire sympathy with the development of the capital of Canada in accordance with a general plan. They would wish however to have considered very carefully any change that would have to be made and the time at which it is to be made. They recognize that some changes will be necessary in the course of time, and they are prepared to co-operate with the commission in seeking to work out a plan which will permit of that development in the most satisfactory way.

I should like to mention one or two other contemplated developments, but that would take up time that cannot be spared at the moment. What I have sought to do today is to make clear to the house the main purpose of the resolution: first, to have it known as the desire of the house that in necessary developments in the capital we should follow a plan; and second, to have the assurance from parliament that when these developments are begun the authorities may have reason to feel that they will be continued in accordance with provision made by parliament from year to year in such amounts as it may deem appropriate. Here let me again make clear that there is no likelihood of a major development taking place which will not be fully under the control of parliament. In the first instance recommendations will be made by the federal district commission in accordance with the advice of their experts and after consultation with the other interests affected. The projects recommended will then have to be approved, first, by order in council of the government so that great care may be taken at that stage, and in the second place by the appropriation of the necessary moneys for these projects by parliament. Lastly, appropriations will be made from year to year, so that parliament may have very full control where federal expenditures are involved.

Another way to have proceeded might have been to ask parliament to vote a large amount of money as was done in the case of the development of Washington, the development of Paris, and other cities, so that the commission, with that guarantee, could have looked forward to a series of developments being effected without interruption over the years. The government felt, however, it would be preferable, while having an assurance from parliament of its intention to have the developments proceeded with continuously, to reserve to parliament the control which it would have from year to year of the necessary outlays for all these developments.

I should like to emphasize to hon. members how the whole position of the capital has altered within very recent years. I remember when I first came into office there was not a foreign mission in this country, nor did we have a single mission representing Canada in a foreign country. We had no representatives in Canada from any of the other dominions, nor from the United Kingdom. We had one representative of our own in the person of the high commissioner in London, and we had a representative of Canada in Paris, but apart from those two representatives of the government there were no representatives here from the governments of the United Kingdom or the other dominions and none from the heads of foreign states. There were no legations and no embassies. There are now something like twenty-five different missions established right here in this capital. The representatives of various countries require accommodation in the city, and more will be coming.

Further may I point out how the capital has increasingly become the centre for important conventions, of conferences, dominion conferences, commonwealth conferences, international conferences, and the like. We have had one visit to our capital from Their Majesties the King and Queen. I think we may look forward to the day when the king and queen will reside for part of the year in the capital of Canada. I am saying nothing at the moment about such matters as tourist traffic, and the importance to Canada of what has been done by its capital to attract visitors to our country. As all hon. members know, the capital of a country is a centre of attraction, and we must look forward to the development of Ottawa in the light of that larger vision. Moreover, the public buildings and public thoroughfares of a capital should lend inspiration to its position as a centre of the culture of the nation, its arts, letters, science and government. Countries are more or less known by their capitals.

When one speaks of other countries, of France, for instance, one thinks of Paris and how beautifully it is laid out; when we speak of Italy, we think of Rome; when we speak of the United Kingdom, we think of London; when we speak of the United States, we think of Washington; indeed, when we think of Greece and Italy, even as they were in ancient times, we are still able to see how Athens and Rome were planned centuries ago.

I believe, as I think all hon. members of this house believe, that Canada may have a future greater than that of almost any of the countries I have mentioned. The day will come, I believe, when this dominion will hold first place among the nations of the British commonwealth. The United Kingdom will always be its spiritual centre, if you wish to use that expression, but even today this Dominion of Canada is the most fortunate country in the world. It has possibilities of development which no other country begins to possess. The proposal which the government is bringing forward today in the form of a resolution has been framed with a view to helping to meet the needs of Canada's capital in the present. It also, and even more, seeks to anticipate the needs of Canada's capital in the future as we believe that future will shape our country. We desire a capital adequate at all times to the country's needs. We desire, above all else, a capital worthy of the high place that Canada holds in the world today and of the Canada that is yet to be.

Mr. G. RUSSELL BOUCHER (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the members of this house agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in what he has said as to the development of Ottawa as the national capital. I was pleased to hear him emphasize in his closing words that Ottawa, as the capital of Canada, is becoming more and more a mecca for important conventions and conferences and a host of tourists. His suggestion that at some future time royalty itself may spend considerable time in Ottawa will have a bearing on the way in which the Canadian people and members of the House of Commons look on this resolution.

I had hoped that time would have permitted the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to give more details on the development of the capital so far. We know that for approximately fifty years the House of Commons has considered the development of a national capital area. Many attempts, plans and projects have been put before the people of the dominion and of the city in regard to the development of the national capital. As the representative of an area within the city of Ottawa, I think it is proper that I should draw the attention of the house to the fact that Ottawa is faced with a problem in her desire to co-operate with the dominion in forming a national capital worthy of the great nation that we believe Canada will be. She has also had grave difficulties in the development of her own internal management because of her desire to work on a general master plan and co-operate in every way she can in the development of a capital area.

I emphasize the Prime Minister's statement that everything cannot be shown on a master plan; but it is important that the people of this area, and the people of Canada as a whole, should have some assurance that many projects will be proceeded with which are necessary to the economy of Ottawa. Because of Ottawa's beautiful location she has an industrial potentiality which would be an important factor if Ottawa were developed as an industrial city rather than a capital area. Because Ottawa has given up her opportunities of developing as an industrial city in favour of a federal area, hon. members should appreciate the difficulties which confront the people of Ottawa in planning their future development. Because of that I should like to see this resolution go much further than it does.

The Prime Minister mentioned the development around confederation square which has taken place within the last twenty years. I need not remind hon. members or anybody else of the beauty of Elgin street and confederation square. That is obvious to anybody who visits Ottawa. But also obvious to those who appreciate the beauty of it is the adverse effect it has on traffic. I emphasize the necessity of keeping that point in mind. I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister say that the immediate project he had in mind was the construction of a bridge from Elgin street to Waller street, which will relieve traffic congestion in the bottleneck around confederation square. Hon. members will find that everybody in Ottawa, and everybody having anything to do with Ottawa, realizes that that is one of the most important projects that could be undertaken at the earliest opportunity. To undertake that requires not only federal government assistance in the way of the use of federal property in the development of the national capital, but also the co-operation of the railways, transportation facilities and various services in the city itself. Coupled with that is the cross-town track situation which I am sure every hon. member knows has had a detrimental effect on the development of Ottawa. Therefore these two projects need immediate attention.

A number of reports have been made on future projects for the development of the national capital. All have had a bearing on the development of Ottawa. The Prime Minister mentioned the expropriation of land which is taking place under the aegis of the federal district commission. These reports visualize removing our terminals and establishing manufacturing and commercial areas or industrial areas. The development of Ottawa from the point of view of expansion is in a critical stage because the city has not expanded her boundaries. Municipalities adjacent to the city have become inundated with new developments. That situation also has some bearing on how Ottawa will develop in the future, whether it will be through the borough system, government services, or through some other system.

I think the city will willingly accept a certain degree of leadership from the dominion government in the development of the capital area. The city of Ottawa would appreciate a lead from hon. members and parliament as a whole in the development of the capital area before the city undertakes the immediately urgent problems confronting it within its own economy. The city of Ottawa cannot proceed with the necessary and immediate developments without giving every regard possible to the capital area development and without co-operating with the federal district commission.

I had hoped that in introducing this resolution the Prime Minister would take the House of Commons more into his confidence and give us more details. I was particularly anxious to see him ask for the co-operation of hon. members outside of Ottawa and of the provinces in developing the capital area.

On a previous occasion I recommended that within the federal area certain areas should be set aside for provincial show rooms or show places. I believe that the large acreage which is being set aside or designated as a capital area could very well be used to the advantage of this nation and to the interest of the provinces. Within that area certain areas should be set aside to be developed by the provinces and administered to their own advantage. Each province could use these sites to show its own industries and its own beauty. On that occasion I suggested that the federal district commission driveway should be extended from the city in a northwesterly direction to Fitzroy Harbour, in Ontario, and thence on the Quebec side of the river back to Ottawa. Along this highway certain acreages of land could be set aside for each of the provinces to develop as provincial showrooms, thus making the whole capital area scheme a truly national scheme in which every province would feel it had a little bit of home to develop in the federal area.

I do hope that the Prime Minister and the federal district commission will develop this idea, because one of the greatest detriments to the development of the capital area is the feeling that it is a development purely for the city of Ottawa. That feeling is not in accordance with the facts. While Ottawa will benefit because of her strategic location and because the capital of the country is located within her boundaries, she has something to offer to the federal area which no other place in Canada has. But she has also to develop her own economy commensurate with the wishes of the nation at large. If you go to Montreal, Toronto or any other large Canadian city you will see that the dominion government and the railways have established government buildings, postal terminals, railway centres, union terminals and so on. When you see that you realize the amount of money that has been spent in each of these cities purely for railway and transportation facilities, for the city itself. Ottawa has had that for some years. But this city, from the standpoint of railways, has much more to consider, because of the presence here of the parliament buildings, than any other city in Canada. I feel therefore that in supporting this resolution hon. members should take the view that in establishing a capital area in this city and its environs they are establishing a little bit of their own home and advertising their own nation in a special way.

I do not quite know what the resolution means when it predicates this scheme upon the co-operation of the municipalities with the dominion. I do not understand why the resolution fails to make any reference to co-operation on the part of the two provinces concerned. I do not see in the resolution anything pointing to the expectation of co-operation from the provinces. I would point out that the federal area extends into the province of Quebec. Each of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec has of course its own legislature, and the respective municipalities are jealous of their own authority. The municipalities themselves feel that they should have some say, some interest, in the development of the capital area to the extent that such development affects their communities. I hope therefore that the omission from the resolution of any reference to co-operation on the part of the provinces is purely an oversight and is not to be taken as implying that the dominion government will proceed without the utmost co-operation from these provinces.

I shall not go into the matter at any great length now. I think it would be better to wait until the estimates are before us. I thought it might be well, however, to mention these few points at this stage in the hope that the Prime Minister, when the estimates are under consideration, will be prepared to give to the house such information as is necessary to a proper understanding of the proposal we have before us.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words on this subject, both as one who is now living in Ottawa and as one who is interested in Canada's capital apart from the fact of his residence here.

Ottawa is probably one of the most beautiful sites that any capital in the world enjoys. With the background of the river and the Gatineau hills, with the beautiful countryside surrounding the city, it is indeed a fine setting for a capital, and I have often regretted that the plans which have now been formulated and are now before us for discussion—the plans formulated during the prime ministership of my right hon. friend—were not thought of many years ago. The city itself is not well laid out. There is congestion in the narrow streets, and if streetcars are not replaced by a more modern transportation system such as buses or trolley buses, the congestion will continue and the city will be cluttered up with the present antiquated conveyances.

I hope the municipality will realize that it too has an obligation in connection with the beautification of this most attractive city. I may add, however, that before we spend very large sums of money on the beautification of the capital, seeing that it has been neglected for so many years and was not conceived in the manner in which I think it should have been conceived, we should bear in mind the importance of putting first things first.

If I may use the slang expression, we do not want a country or a capital with a Queen Anne front and a Mary Anne back. We should try to avoid any suggestion of that sort in connection with our capital or with the country as a whole. When we are talking about the beautification of Ottawa we should remember that there are certain projects, apart from the beautification of the capital, that ought to be kept clearly in our minds.

I am thinking of a trans-Canada highway that would be a credit to this country and to our people, a highway that would attract visitors to our beautiful countryside. Our roads across Canada are to a large extent disgraceful and impassable, and no province can undertake the building of the kind of trans-Canada highway which is needed. Someone says, come to Saskatchewan and travel on the trans-Canada highway. Yes. I agree that a province which has thirty-eight per cent of the roads in the dominion cannot possibly undertake the building of the kind of trans-Canada highway which is necessary in order to give proper service. Thirty-eight per cent of the roads in Canada are located in Saskatchewan—and I am using this government's statistics, not those of the provincial government.

There is at the present time in western Canada the possibility of a serious crop failure in many parts of the prairies owing to the drought. Again, we have to consider the economy of the country, upon which expenditures for the beautification of the capital must rest.

Mr. ISNOR: May I ask the hon. member a question for information?

Mr. COLDWELL: No. I should prefer to finish my remarks.

Mr. ISNOR: I was going to ask the hon. member—

Mr. COLDWELL: May I finish my remarks?

Mr. ISNOR: —a question in reference to his statement that thirty-eight per cent of the trans-Canada highway—

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not say that. If the hon. gentleman would listen to me he would hear what I am saying. I said thirty-eight per cent of the roads in Canada, not thirty-eight per cent of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. GARDINER: It was always that way.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Minister of Agriculture is interrupting me. When he left the highways department there were not fifty miles of all-weather roads in that province.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the fact that I have been mentioned, I will tell my hon. friend—

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARDINER: —that I have just completed—

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman can make his own speech when I am through.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman has referred to the time that I left the department of highways in Saskatchewan, which is now twenty-one years ago, and he says that there were not more than fifty miles of hard-surfaced roads in Saskatchewan at that time.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not say that. I went much further than that. I said there were not fifty miles of all-weather road—that is, gravel as well as hard surface.

Mr. GARDINER: Now there are a little over two hundred miles of hard-surfaced road—

Mr. COLDWELL: Just a minute—

Mr. GARDINER: —and it is a long time ago that I left.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. gentleman quotes me and then proceeds to talk about hard-surfaced roads. I spoke of all-weather roads. He knows there are thousands of miles of gravel all-weather roads in that province now.

Mr. GARDINER: That is what I was going to deal with. I have just completed driving over three-quarters of the gravel roads in Saskatchewan. I scarcely drove on a single mile that was not built when I left the Saskatchewan government, and the greater part of it was gravelled.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not going to argue about the roads in Saskatchewan except to say that when the hon. gentleman speaks of roads that were built, that is a very different matter from all-weather roads. I have travelled over the roads in Saskatchewan in the last several weeks.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. COLDWELL: We have to consider other matters besides the expenditure of millions of dollars in the city of Ottawa. We have to consider the matter of proper roads across this country; and then we have the great problem of housing, about which we should be showing much more concern than we are at the present time. Even in the city of Ottawa, if I may say so, there are some pretty bad spots with respect to housing. There are areas which might be described almost as slum areas—

Mr. BOUCHER: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: —using the term in the modern sense. My hon. friend says "order". If we are to have a beautiful capital, we must have a healthy capital, and the condition of overcrowding that exists in many parts of this city is a disgrace to the country and to the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BOUCHER: What has that to do with this resolution?

Mr. COLDWELL: It has everything to do with it. We want to put first things first.

An hon. MEMBER: More propaganda.

Mr. COLDWELL: It may be propaganda from my hon. friend's point of view, to help him get elected in the city of Ottawa, for him to get up here and make a fine speech about beautifying this city. I am not indulging in that kind of propaganda.

Mr. BOUCHER: You are desecrating Ottawa by talking about poor housing. You are staying in the gutter.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is exactly where my hon. friend wants many of the people of Ottawa to stay.

I am trying to point out that while I believe we should have a beautiful capital, I am not in favour of spending millions of dollars on any city in Canada and at the same time leaving housing and other conditions in this country as they are today. I believe the city of Ottawa has some obligation itself in this regard. It is a disgrace to the citizens and the city of Ottawa that there is no cultural centre in this city. As far as I know this is the only capital in the world in which there is no appropriate national library, no appropriate national theatre. Why, there is not a single theatre in this city in which first-class drama may be seen and heard. There is no building in this city in which a first-class opera company can put on a performance, or a first-class symphony orchestra may be heard; and it is not the responsibility of the federal government. It is the responsibility of the people who live in Ottawa. For a city to be without these amenities and these cultural facilities after eighty years or more as the capital of this country I say is a disgrace to the people who live here.

Mr. BOUCHER: Do you think they should build a national theatre or a national cultural centre?

Mr. COLDWELL: No, I do not say they should build a national theatre.

Mr. BOUCHER: That is what the hon. member said.

Mr. COLDWELL: I said a theatre. I could name cities with populations no larger than that of Ottawa, in countries with populations no larger than that of Canada, where they have a national theatre, a provincial theatre, and a municipal theatre. We have nothing of the kind in this capital, and until we have these things I do not believe we shall have an appropriate capital.

Mr. FULTON: I thought the hon. member said that houses should be built first.

Mr. COLDWELL: So I did.

Mr. FULTON: Then how can they build a theatre and library?

Mr. COLDWELL: As my hon. friend knows, this has been the capital of the country for eighty years. Under the free-enterprise system many of the people who live here do not have houses; they do not have a theatre or these other things I have mentioned. It is about time these matters were considered as part of the general plan for the beautification of Ottawa and the making of this city a worthy capital of a country which today is in the forefront of the nations of the world.

I place these matters before the house because I think they are things which cannot be laughed off, because they are things which should be said. I know it is unpopular in Ottawa to say them; it may be unpopular to say them in this house. But let us fact the facts; because they are facts. If we all face them perhaps we can arouse public opinion, and opinion among the members of this house, so that we shall not only consider the development of this very beautiful site but remember also that man does not live by bread alone. We may arouse the citizens of Ottawa themselves so that they will try to do something to remove the blot, as I think it is, upon the capital city of this country.

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe anyone could speak on this resolution without first paying tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for having given so much of his time, energy and ability to the formulation of plans, with the assistance of experts, which will make Ottawa and the area surrounding it a national capital worthy of this country.

I am sure all hon. members will agree that any request for money for the implementation of the plans for a national capital area should be approved. But we should understand also that any criticism offered in this regard is brought forward in order to assist, and to express the honest point of view of members from different parts of the country. I believe we all agree on the general plan for the improvement of the city of Ottawa. I do regret, however, as I have said on other occasions, that members of this house—including myself, and I was born here and have lived in Ottawa all my life—do not know enough about that general plan or the details concerning the improvement of the capital area. I suggest that at the next session we set up a committee of this house, or perhaps a joint committee of this house and the senate, which could be apprised of the specific details the federal district commission has in mind for the improvement of this area. If hon. members knew a little more about these matters I believe it would be much easier to get approval of the necessary expenditures, and in addition those who are formulating the plans would have the benefit of the viewpoint of those coming from other parts of the country, so that this could be made a truly national plan.

Speaking as a citizen of Ottawa, and representing one of its constituencies, while criticism is sometimes levelled at the city itself I must remind hon. members that at times it is not very pleasant for the people of this city to find that they do not know exactly where they are going or what they are to do. In this connection I would mention the matter of expropriation. Perhaps very few hon. members realize that the federal district commission suddenly files a plan in the registry office under which a certain area, which has been a residential area, at once becomes the property of the crown. A good deal of property has been expropriated in this way, and no doubt more will be expropriated; and the people living in these houses want to know where they are to go. All along the Rideau and Ottawa rivers new houses have been expropriated. The people will not receive their money for perhaps five years. In the meantime they have been told that they may remain for perhaps two years, but that then they must find somewhere else to live. They have no place to go. Under the general plan it is true that certain areas have been set aside as residential areas, but they do not have the necessary services; and the city of Ottawa cannot even furnish services for the municipalities which may be annexed in the near future. Much less are we able to provide the water and other necessary services which will be required if all these people are to be moved within the next few years. That is why I should like some assurance that these people will not be required to leave their present homes until the federal district commission has provided other areas within the city where houses can be built and where they will have the transportation, water, and other essential services they have enjoyed in the past.

I would remind hon. members that the lot of the Ottawa people is not as easy as they imagine. When people have resided for many years in an area which is close to their work and then they are told that within a few years —we do not know when—they must either build a house or rent one from someone else who will build one, the situation becomes very difficult for them. Perhaps that might answer what is said at times, and I have no doubt honestly, by the leader of the C.C.F., that the municipality might be responsible for certain conditions in housing. We do not know where we are going.

I am not blaming the master plan itself; but I do think that if the federal district commission is going to expropriate property all around Ottawa, I am not blaming them for that, because someone might make money improperly if he knew the exact details—it should tell the owners of that property that they will not be moved unless and until the services of transportation, sewage, water and the like have been provided in their area.

There is another matter in connection with expropriation which I should like to mention. I have had considerable difficulty in explaining to people how hard it is to settle the amounts they are to receive for their houses. I must confess I am not at all pleased with the methods being followed by the federal district commission in settling the amounts to be paid to residential owners around this city. I must say it is done in an odd fashion. Those who are hired by the federal district commission to set the prices simply bring these people to their offices and say, "Well, you will get so much; if you do not like it you can go to the courts—and it will take five years." That is not the way to deal with these matters. Surely when people are taken from their homes in order to enlarge a capital city they should be given every benefit and the prices should be such as to compensate them for the building of new houses, for the trouble of being displaced.

I wish to bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister. I believe if we are to displace people from the capital city, they should be treated as fairly and as well as possible. I may have some further remarks to make when we are considering the estimates.

I should like to add that in addition to the physical development of the capital city we should think of its cultural and spiritual values. I should like the capital city of Canada to be an example of national unity and of Canadian citizenship. Surely this is the place where one should not find those narrow ideas, those narrow differences between factions. Because people who will come here in the future, after so much money has been spent on this beautiful city, and after so much has been spent in the development of the capital area, whether they come from elsewhere in Canada or from other parts of the world, will expect to find at least within this area a true picture of healthy Canadian citizenship.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I hope in the few remarks I shall make I shall be able to remain strictly non-partisan, and that I shall speak on a plane befitting the subject matter of the resolution —the building of a capital for a great nation of the future.

In the first place I believe an unfair reflection has been cast upon the city of Ottawa. True, there are defects in Ottawa as a city. People have not got things quite the way they would like to have them; on that we can agree. None of us has. But, all things being considered, I suggest the people of Ottawa have done admirably well. When one recalls that Ottawa began as Bytown only eighty years ago, and when by looking at some of the relics of those days he acquires some idea of what Bytown must have been like, he must conclude that the city of Ottawa is worthy of the highest praise.

I should like to congratulate the people of this city upon their superb good sense in planting and retaining beautiful trees throughout the city, so that one who walks through the city may walk through one magnificent park, as it were. The city has not yielded to some of the silly fads which have nowadays become the vogue in some parts, one of which has been to cut down trees. On the contrary the people of this city have kept its trees, wherever they could keep them—trees which anyone must admire, even if in some instances the houses are second or third rate. In making these observations I have been no more than fair to the city of Ottawa.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is to be congratulated upon his part in Ottawa's development, and I should like also to congratulate him upon the speech he made today. It was on a high plane, and, I thought, in all respects admirable. I enjoyed listening to it; I thought it was as a speech of that kind should have been. Indeed I felt several times that if the speech is read by our descendants a hundred years from today they will view with pleasure and satisfaction his treatment of the matter in this year 1948.

Canada is not a populous country. When we undertake to appraise what has been achieved in this capital city we must remember that Canada has plenty of drawbacks. She has had them, nationally, ever since she started to keep house. She has not really learned yet how to manage her own house. There is still a tremendous amount of disagreement as to how it should be done. No wonder she does not yet know exactly how to do it. But we are learning, and we shall learn, if it please the Lord, until some of these days we shall run this glorious country the way we want to see it run, and believe it should be run.

Perhaps we can be expected to do a little more, and do it faster, than we have done it up to the present time. Let us not forget, however, that since the turn of the century we have been through two terrible wars. During fifty years of the time this has been the capital city we have experienced wars, depressions, crop failures, and the like. In estimating what has been achieved, these facts must not be forgotten.

It is well to plan our national capital with an eye to the year 2048, as the Prime Minister suggested. It is well to remember, as he stated, that Canada is to continue free and independent as a member of the British empire. There are some who are looking forward eagerly and almost with watering mouths to a time when we shall be gobbled up by the United States. The Prime Minister expressed no such anxiety, no such pessimism.

This nation shall continue great and free. We can be proud and thankful to live in Canada. Canada will become populous, powerful, self-sufficient, wealthy, generous, respected, beloved by all nations, and a great and good neighbour. All these characteristics she has shown during the last fifty years. God blessed us with the natural resources to enable us to do these things, and has placed us in a combination of nations, the British commonwealth and empire, which if we know how to use our opportunities will enable us to accomplish great things, using the resources that God gave us as we desire to use them.

I think all of this was hinted, and appropriately so, in the speech of the Prime Minister. Although he did not indicate it specifically, I think I glimpsed the vision that the British commonwealth is not something that is finished. When he spoke of the little land of England as being the spiritual mother of those people called British, for hundreds, if not thousands of years—he did not mention the years, but I do—I think he was simply expressing justifiable faith in the future of those people, in the future of the combination of people known as the British commonwealth, which has continued as a force for general good and which merits therefore the blessings of Almighty God to the extent that it shall prevail over its enemies and become the blessing to all men in future centuries that it has been during the last two centuries.

All this should be borne in mind when we plan our capital city, the capital which perhaps is to be the national centre of the foremost member of that glorious galaxy of nations, the British empire.

All that is necessary is intelligence and good will in co-operating with men of good will in other parts of the empire. All we need, coupled with the resources, rich and varied, of this and other British countries, is the courage to stand up for the things we believe in, and to insist that other peoples shall not "shoulder us around". Then we shall achieve superb and magnificent realities.

It is well that we bear all these things in mind when we plan for the city of Ottawa. I do not advocate too rapid expenditure. It is wise to look far ahead and to spend only as we feel we can afford to spend. We should spend wisely, building soundly and well, so that people looking back on our works two hundred years from now may be glad that we at this particular time in history were here as members of parliament in Ottawa.

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): Mr. Speaker, I have to follow the eloquence of the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), and I am quite diffident about mentioning the subject that I want to bring up at this time, because it throws a discordant touch of colour into the fine picture which has been painted for us by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King).

We notice that in the beautification of cities an effort is generally made to let nature have some hand in the business. We attempt to decentralize our cities and the works of man. We first crowd into places and they are developed on the basis of real estate sold at so much per square foot. Later on we sometimes repent our labours, or perhaps our sins, and proceed to change the whole business and let nature come in with some of that healing which she is ever ready to operate to overcome the mistakes of man.

The house may be wondering what I am leading up to. I am referring to certain things that have been done to make this fine city ugly in appearance. Perhaps I shall shock members of this house, particularly those representing Ottawa, when I say that when I close my eyes and think of this city I can see only the great signs that appear here and there in the area contiguous to the city, particularly among the fields and woods where they are so incongruous.

Then when I go out Bank street, I see many of these little juke-box joints. It seems to me that in these days of building material shortages they do not need building materials to put up these places, because they are literally covered with advertisements for various kinds of soft drinks. If they would advertise with quiet colours, or try to follow some natural scheme, perhaps I would not find such great fault; but for some reason commercialism believes in sensationalism, in the use of glaring and horrible colours. I never could understand why a farmer living among the beauties of nature with a fine orchard at his back door and stream at the front would allow someone to cover his barn with signs advertising chewing tobacco or laxatives. Either article may be estimable and necessary for the adult and baby population of the country, but personally I cannot understand why advertising of it in this way is encouraged.

May I say a word to these gentlemen who so advertise their wares? I drive a car but I avoid buying gasoline which is advertised by this particular method. One of the several reasons why I purchase nothing from a certain great commercial firm in Toronto, not unconnected with the business of mail order, is that they persist in making the country ugly, particularly the vicinity of Toronto, with great signs advertising their wares.

Perhaps we can do nothing about this thing in the city, but I think any commission or other body having the responsibility for the general beautification of Ottawa should start a campaign to get rid of these things in its vicinity. Having got rid of them they should proceed to beautify according to their plan. The use of glaring and screaming colours by crude and vulgar commercialism should be done away with.

Tourists come here and they judge us largely by what they see. That is fair enough. There is every justification for so doing. But personally I do not care to be judged by the type of thing that one sees in our valleys and along our wooded areas. Incidentally many people from outside our country come here to get away from that sort of thing—the glaring signs in their own cities and juke-box joints which unfortunately are also becoming a part of our national life. My plea would be for a return to plain and decent things, the things of nature which can be used to beautify our cities.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the house attempts to set out the attitude that this and later parliaments should take with respect to future support of the national capital. This is a resolution which I think should be approached in a non-partisan way. I should hate to think that it would ever be made a partisan issue, because I think every member of this house and every political party wants to do what it is proper the Canadian nation should do for its capital—that much, neither more nor less.

This resolution having to do with the development of the capital of Canada, and having been put in this form in our records, I think we should examine in detail what its passage means and how it will be interpreted later on by the Canadian people and by the city of Ottawa.

I want to commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for his interest in this project; but when I say that I want also to say that I would not like to think that any man in Canada has a monopoly of interest in the development of this capital. I think every member desires parliament to do what is appropriate for the development of Ottawa as the national capital.

The resolution consists of a preamble of four clauses, and four clauses in the main body of the resolution. The first clause of the preamble recites:

That whereas the requirements of a national capital involve, from time to time, developments of a character beyond the municipal improvements ordinarily required in other cities . . .

I think that proposition is obviously one which parliament can accept and approve.

The second clause of the preamble reads:

And whereas the development of a national capital is at least in part a national responsibility . . .

That, too, I think is obvious to every member of the house and to every Canadian.

The third clause reads:

And whereas the capital of Canada is designated by the British North America Act to be Ottawa . . .

Even the most partisan among us can find no objection to that simple statement of fact.

The last clause of the preamble reads:

And whereas the carrying out of planned improvements requires a clear expression of intention to proceed with necessary developments in a manner which will ensure continuity . . .

That clause I think requires a little more critical examination, so that we may understand what it means and so that the Canadian people will understand what we are doing if and when we pass this resolution. It calls for a clear expression of intention to proceed with necessary developments in a manner which will ensure continuity. I suggest that the only intention which this house can express is the intention of the present house. We may express the hope that those who may follow us in this parliament five, ten, fifteen, twenty or a hundred years from now will have the same view; and I am optimistic enough to believe they will have. But in any event nothing we can say in this house today can commit parliament five or ten or twenty or fifty years from now to doing something it does not want to do.

We can only have faith that those who will succeed us in this parliament will approach this problem just as sensibly as we do. Speaking for myself and those associated with me, we are willing now to express our intention to do what is proper in connection with the development of the national capital. From time to time there will be differences of opinion as to just what should be done, and how much should be done, and how much should be spent. But nothing we may say here now will prevent questions of that kind from arising in the future.

The preamble ends with these words:

—to proceed with necessary developments in a manner which will ensure continuity.

We may hope that the passage of this resolution will ensure some continuity, and I fully expect it will, but there may be differences of opinion as to just what the words "will ensure continuity" mean. If we start out on a reasonable plan now, I am sure that it will be accepted in principle by any parliament which may follow us; but with respect to details, or with respect to the generosity of future parliaments as regards certain aspects of any plan we might approve now, we cannot speak for them.

I come now to the main body of the resolution, the first clause of which reads:

That it is desirable that all developments of the capital should be in accordance with an approved plan . . .

Some question was raised about that, and the Prime Minister indicated that he would give further information when his estimates are under consideration. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that before this resolution is passed we ought to give a little more consideration to just what those words mean. I ask myself: Where is this approved plan, and what is it? We here now may say that we think such-and-such a plan is a good one, and that we approve the appropriation of a certain amount of money for the purpose of carrying it out; but I suggest that we cannot tie ourselves now to some "approved plan", the details of which we do not know. We can approve the principle, and say that the general attitude of parliament ought to be such-and-such towards this project, but I do not think we should be asked to tie ourselves now to some approved plan the details of which we have not seen, and which in any case in the very nature of things must change from time to time.

For example, I pass by Confederation square every morning. At some time in the past somebody thought that was a good plan for Ottawa. I wonder whether everybody thinks so today. I wonder whether that is the final plan for that section of the city of Ottawa. It must be clear that we cannot make any plan now which will be good for all time to come, in a nation which in twenty-five or fifty or a hundred years we hope will be vastly greater than Canada is today, and with a capital which will grow as the nation grows.

The second clause in the main body of the resolution reads:

That a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the national capital fund, should be created, to which appropriation may be made annually by parliament over a period of years.

That is simply a matter of bookkeeping which we need not take time to debate. It is a clause we can all accept.

The next clause reads:

That it is desirable that the work necessary to this end be under the supervision of the federal district commission, distinct from its ordinary operations . . .

Some body must be given charge of the administration of this project, and I imagine that the federal district commission is as well fitted for the purpose as any other, if not better. I see no need for any other special body being created for this purpose.

The fourth and last clause of the resolution reads:

That the expenditure of moneys for these purposes should be conditional on the effective co-operation of the city of Ottawa and other municipalities within the national capital district.

The intent of that clause is I think reasonable and desirable, but I question whether it is essential. Are we to be tied up in the development of the national capital because there might be some disputes between the municipalities affected? Surely not. Surely means could be found through which these institutions, these municipalities—which are all interested, as we are, in the wisest plans to follow—could be brought together without tying our hands here as to what we shall do in case there may be dissension between certain of them.

A question has arisen in this debate as to the relative importance of expenditures on a national capital—as to whether we should commit ourselves now to support plans for a national capital, while certain other projects, such as highways, housing, national security measures, and so on, require additional support. Questions such as these are questions which every parliament must face. I would be disappointed if, when this resolution passes, either in its exact form or in some modified form, the Canadian people interpret it to mean that the parliament of Canada is undertaking to enter upon an extravagant plan for the development of this city. I would be disappointed if they take it to mean that we are to take off the city of Ottawa its proper share of the development of the city. I would be disappointed if they take it to mean that we are going to do something here, and leave something else that is more important uncompleted or only partly done.

If this resolution passes I will not put that interpretation on it. If this resolution passes what it will mean is that I, as one member of the parliament of Canada, am saying that in the development of a national capital we should have some idea where we are going. We should lay plans that will prevent waste in the future. We should try to look ahead and lay plans that those who follow us will be proud of; and that we should help—no more and no less than to the extent that in a national capital the nation itself should contribute; that much, and no more.

I would not like to think that anybody in the city of Ottawa wants to draw from the parliament of Canada more than should be given to the city. On the other hand, I would hate to think that the parliament of Canada wants to lean on the people of the municipality in which the national capital happens to be. We must have some faith in one another, and some faith in the future. If I were to express the wishes of the Canadian people as I learn them from one end of Canada to the other, it is that we expect the parliament of Canada to bear its full share of the development of the national capital. The people want to see here a capital of which they will be proud. But they do not want to see us enter upon wildly extravagant plans while there are many other necessary things to do in every part of the country.

I would not support this resolution if extravagant expenditure around this city is what the resolution is to be interpreted as meaning; and the Canadian people would not support it. If we proceed with a cautious plan, one that is not extravagant, one that is carefully thought out, it will appeal to the Canadian people, and they will want to support it. But to the extent that we go beyond that, there will be resistance to appropriations from year to year. I should not like to think that any more is read into this resolution than that the parliament of Canada will be fair to the constituency in which the capital finds itself, and will be fair to its own future in having as its capital a capital of which the Canadian people would be proud.

I have just one practical suggestion to make. The resolution refers to an approved plan. I doubt whether hon. members are familiar with the details of even the plans that are now said to be in existence. I would point out that we are putting on the permanent record a resolution which has to do with the development of Canada's capital now and for the long future, and it is only an hour and a half since it was introduced. I suggest that the passage of this resolution would mean more and would be accepted more generally—not that anybody is going to oppose its passage—if, when the Prime Minister's estimates come up, we could have a full discussion of the details with respect to the present plans that have been spoken of as the master plan. Let us hope that whatever plan there is, it is in fact a master plan, and that everything that we can see from this vantage point is considered. But I suggest that the resolution would mean much more to Canada if its final passage were left until after the discussion takes place on the details when the Prime Minister's estimates are up for discussion.

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Ottawa West): As the member of the Canadian House of Commons for the electoral district in which the parliament buildings are situated, I should like at the very outset to say to hon. members how pleased I am that this resolution is now being dealt with. To me it represents a most important further milestone along the way of developing our national capital, a subject in which I have taken deep interest, not only before I was a member of the House of Commons, but also in the eight years since I was first elected as a member of this house.

I should like to think that the development of the national capital is something of great interest to all Canadian citizens. I should also like to think that as it is developed it will be developed in such a way as to epitomize the legitimate expression of the ambitions of all Canadian citizens.

At the outset perhaps I should say a word about the form of the resolution. I am particularly pleased to notice that it is presented for the consideration of parliament in the form of a resolution rather than as a rigid bill, with a grant of money to be spent over a certain number of years. It seems to me that the present method provides for that important element of control by parliament over the expenditures from year to year. By this method now adopted, parliament can examine into the particular circumstances as they exist from year to year. Parliament can examine the expenditures with relation to other items of public expenditures that may be made or that may be of lesser or more importance as circumstances exist at the time. Perhaps this is an effective answer to the questions raised by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) when he spoke of certain other matters that require consideration and expenditure of public funds. The present method leaves control in parliament and also provides the opportunity for annual discussion and examination.

One point was made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Boucher) with which I think I ought to deal. With his remarks I was, in the main, quite in accord, but he referred to the development of certain parts by the provinces or for the provinces. I have no quarrel with that idea, except to say that it is the national capital that we are seeking to develop. It is fortunate that it is located on the edge of a great river forming the interprovincial boundary between two large and important provinces, certainly two of the most populous, which have attained a high degree of development. It is the conception of the capital as representing all the people of Canada, the nation's capital, that I would like to see emphasized, rather than something representing each province separately.

In other words, while I am strongly for provincial rights in their own field, I do not think this is the place to bring them forward and to emphasize divisions with respect to them. After all, our great political problem in Canada is the problem of geography. Surely, in the development of the plan for our national capital, we should refrain from over-emphasizing the difficulties of the problem of geography.

One other thing is this. I would be sorry to see a certain area allocated to each province, for the reason that there might develop a situation wherein one province, because of financial difficulties—and provinces occasionally do have financial difficulties—owing to its lack of ability to spend money as generously as other provinces, would have a poorer development. I do not think we should permit that to happen. If we did permit that sort of thing it would tend to emphasize differences between provinces, and it would give rise to a feeling the opposite of pride on the part of this or that province in what it had been able to accomplish. I do not think any of us would want that to happen.

The northern half of this continent is now a great nation, and our development should be such as to bring the position of that nation to the forefront in the world today. We should not do anything that would tend to divide the nation or make it appear as if it were a collection of little Balkan-like states. So far as the other parts of the remarks made by the hon. member for Carleton are concerned, I am in complete accord.

I was disappointed in the attitude taken by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, the leader of the C.C.F. party. I must say frankly I had hoped that over the years we had developed to the point where hon. members in all parts of the house were interested in the national capital as such, and I can only say to the hon. member—I regret he is not in his seat at the moment—that I was disappointed when he sought to treat this as a small matter of partisan advantage one way or the other.

That is not good enough. It is not good enough to raise questions about the difficulties that provinces are having in the matter of road building, comparing the number of miles of road in Saskatchewan with the number in other provinces.

Mr. GILLIS: That was interjected by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McILRAITH: No. He interjected something on that before the Minister of Agriculture interjected. I am sorry that sort of thing should happen.

Mr. GILLIS: He was talking about the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. McILRAITH: I was here, listening intently to the debate, and I heard it all. I was disappointed that the leader of the hon. gentleman's party should have seen fit to go into such side issues as the matter of highway construction. That is another matter altogether, and I certainly do not wish to discuss it now. Surely, in the development of the nation's capital, we can take a position that will preclude this constant attempt to go into by-paths and to raise questions of partisan advantage, claiming that this or that party has been more interested in certain social welfare matters, such as the development of housing in Ottawa. That is not good enough. It is not relevant to this question, so far as the development of housing is concerned, I do not take second place to the hon. gentleman or any of his party in my interest in it. I do not see why that question cannot be discussed in its proper place. I for one am frank to admit that things in the city of Ottawa are not all as they should be. Of course they are not. There are a great many things which I should like to see done to improve conditions for our people; but we can deal with these things each in its proper place, instead of seeking to prejudice a great cause like this in the minds of one segment or another of the population for the purpose of gaining party advantage at the moment. Surely the conception can be a little broader than that, and I hope it will be.

As to the resolution itself, it is also pleasing to me to note that the Prime Minister of Canada has brought it forward. Over the years I have come to know and to appreciate the great part which the Prime Minister has played in advancing this country, as a nation, to the high position which it now holds among the nations. I recognize the great conception he has had for the development of the national capital, and it is for that reason I now express gratitude that circumstances are such that the present Prime Minister has introduced this resolution.

There are two more points I wish to discuss. Reference has been made from time to time to certain constituencies, or to certain municipal corporations. The whole scheme of the development of the capital involves a great many municipal corporations. The constant reference seems to be to Ottawa—Ottawa—Ottawa. I do not know whether it is less or more than half, but a relatively large part of the development is outside Ottawa altogether. I do not know whether more than half of it is outside Ottawa in terms of dollars, but certainly much more than half of it is outside the city in terms of area and of developmental work to be done. It is therefore not simply a matter of one municipality.

Different municipalities have their problems as related to this one. They are acute problems, and it is a mistake to minimize them. But they have come forward with a degree of co-operation that promises well for the future development of the scheme. The question whether this municipality or that should do this thing or that is not something that can be dealt with here on a general resolution. Rather it is a question of deciding with the working staff such details as supplies, services and so on. In that connection, however, I should like to point out one thing. When this scheme was first being talked about, some of the municipalities seemed to feel that their own rights in local municipal matters were being interfered with. That fear has pretty well disappeared since it has come to be realized that it is not a matter of taking away any municipal rights at all. Rather it is a matter of leaving the municipalities all their rights in local matters, but trying to co-ordinate such matters to fit into the great national scheme, so that they will be part of a general pattern, as opposed to individual local questions not related one to the other.

It is perhaps well to realize, Mr. Speaker, that the status Canada has achieved as a nation in the world today has been won by the sacrifices of her soldiers in two world wars. I hope the future development of this capital will be such as to please, in particular, those of our soldiers who have returned, and to express the feelings and ambitions, with respect to their country, of those who served their nation in the armed forces in two world wars.

Mr. BRACKEN: Before the house rises, can the Prime Minister tell us what will be the order of business this afternoon?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If this resolution carries before we rise, the first order after three o'clock will be resuming the debate on the motion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) respecting concurrence in the report of the prices committee. After that, I think, there are only the remaining estimates to be considered.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then does the Prime Minister wish to have this motion pass now, rather than to have his estimates dealt with first?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it might be well to have it passed now.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to say just one word, if I may be permitted to do so. If it is the wish that this resolution should pass now, I have no objection; but I do want you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this house and the public to know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King)—to whom I extend congratulations on the work he has done—is not alone in this proposition. All of us, from all parts of Canada, are anxious to be associated with this work. It is not to be a monument only to the Prime Minister and his deputies here in Ottawa.

With that one sentence, Mr. Speaker, if it is the desire to deal with this resolution now, I am ready to vote for it.

Motion agreed to.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

PRICES

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed from Saturday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin for concurrence in the report of the special committee on prices, appointed February 10, 1948, and presented to the house on Friday, June 25.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening at the time of the adjournment I had begun to refer to the various recommendations, and to the circumstances that it was peculiar that the recommendations contained in the report were first brought to the attention of the government members of the committee—some of them, rather—almost one week before they were brought to the attention of the Progressive Conservative members of that committee. I referred among other things to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his opposition to the committee's making recommendations; to this he took some objection. I referred to the pages in Hansard, and I shall now read what the Prime Minister said in that regard. On page 749 of Hansard we find this:

> Mr. Lockhart: What about recommendations?
> Mr. Mackenzie King: My hon. friend asks about recommendations. I am glad he mentioned that, because that was the next criticism I was going to refer to. May I say that hon. gentlemen opposite have taken exception to the resolution not specifying that the committee should bring in recommendations. May I say that at this stage the obligation was left out deliberately by the government, and for this reason. If it had been added that the committee were to make recommendations we would now be hearing from hon. gentlemen opposite, and they would have been speaking correctly, that the minute you give to a committee of this kind the business of making recommendations, that minute you are certain to start all kinds of political controversy.

I pause here to ask: what difference did it make whether that power was granted at the time the Prime Minister spoke, or later?

> You start issues of policy making. You would start pros and cons between members of the committee as to whether this recommendation should be made or that, and the time of the committee instead of being used for the purpose of getting at the facts would be used for the purpose of trying to bring forward one particular policy or another. I say this, that if the committee, after they have been at work for some time and have the facts before them, feel that they would like to have their powers enlarged and be given the opportunity to bring in recommendations, I for one shall be very happy to further a purpose of the kind.

The recommendations were made, regardless of whether power was granted or not. I again ask the Prime Minister when he speaks, as the press report says he will: why did those recommendations have their origin outside the committee?

I come now to what I was dealing with the other evening. What is the government going to do about these recommendations? It should not wait until next year or next session, but should act in the present session; because the prices situation is accelerating month by month—accelerating at a rate that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) indicated last November would not be arrived at at any time. I ask the Prime Minister this—for, after all, it is the government which must take the responsibility—why is it that some action has not been taken with respect to prices? Is it because the government of Canada is afraid of what the United States might say about prices in this country? I shall not quote the exact words in another debate, because to do so is not in accordance with the rules; I refer to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) said on May 26, 1948, as reported at pages 4396 and 4397 of Hansard, wherein he indicated that if Canada were to act, it might be taken in the United States as action that would not contribute to international good relationships.

I cannot understand why Canada should allow the determination of what our price levels should be, or what the action taken by the government should be, to be controlled by what another nation might wish or desire. But it does indicate this, that again we have the same old story of the top bureaucracy of this country—I might call it the gilt top bureaucracy—over and over again following a policy made in Washington, and making it applicable to Canada.

Here is what the Minister of Finance said, speaking in New York in January last, when he was questioned as to what the government was going to do about prices:

> It is possible that there might be selective reimposition of price control, but that will depend on what parliament decides and what may happen down here.

Surely parliament should determine in Canada what the needs of Canadians should be, and what should be done in regard to this matter, instead of abdicating in favour of another country the right to determine for Canada what is good for Canadians.

Sometimes I wonder what the government's policy is. On November 17 last the Prime Minister spoke in a radio broadcast, and told of the new world that had arrived. You could just see the trade barriers falling down. You could see 400,000 Canadian cattle marching across the line into the United States. But hardly had he concluded his broadcast when the Minister of Finance went on the air and said, in effect, "Not yet; not yet; not yet!" The Prime Minister with one policy; one of his ministers with another.

In February last the Minister of Finance, apparently believing the difficulties were solved, speaking in the city of Brantford said this:

> It is too early yet to start throwing our hats in the air, but it looks as if the downward price trend this week in the United States might mark the turning point.

Again, Canada depending for a solution of her policies upon what is occurring in the United States. The report continues:

> He said the Canadian price trend would follow that of the United States in any long-term movement because the economies of the two countries were so closely linked.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Over and over again the government expressed the hope for, but did not act to achieve, some measure of increase in production in this country to the end that a reasonable price level would thereby be attained.

What is the government's policy on this subject? If I quoted someone other than a supporter of the government, it might be argued that I was giving prejudiced evidence. I shall refer to a speech made the other day by one who is often spoken of as another heir apparent, Mr. Stuart Garson, Premier of Manitoba. What he said represents the criticism of the leader of the opposition and of this party regarding the prices of agricultural products. He attacked the federal government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) for treating the provincial governments like a "lot of robots." Premier Drew has said that on occasions; Premier Duplessis on occasions; and now the Premier of Manitoba, a supporter of this government, says that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the federal government have endeavoured to treat the provincial governments like a lot of robots.

I quote from a summary of a report of Mr. Garson's speech and bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister. Mr. Garson emphasized that the farmers could no longer be asked to continue as the only large economic unit whose prices are under government control. He declared that the wheat board as now constituted was another instrument of the government which was acting contrary to the farmer's interest in their policy of closing off the markets of the United States to Canadian farmers and offering farm products to Great Britain at low prices and then requiring the farmer to bear the burden of those lower prices.

The Premier of Manitoba took the same view that this party takes, that there can be no objection to assistance being given to Great Britain, provided that it is given by the people as a whole and not placed as a responsibility upon the farmers of this country.

I should like now to refer to a few of these recommendations. There is a vote of $50,000 in the supplementary estimates to cover the cost of a royal commission on prices. A committee of parliament has sat for four months and has made recommendations that somebody else prepared for them. Why the necessity, why the need for a royal commission, except that the government again wants to postpone action on this matter? These delaying tactics can have but one result; they place parliament in contempt of the people of this country.

Let us act; let us stay here until something is done. The responsibility rests primarily upon the Prime Minister and the government. I say it rests upon the Prime Minister, because in today's issue of the Financial Post there is an article by Kenneth Wilson in which it is stated that nothing is being done, that the government is not showing any leadership because of the divergent viewpoints among those who would be heirs apparent. The Prime Minister, having only two or three months, or whatever the length of time may be, to lead the government, is not giving to those who support him in this house the leadership in this matter that he is capable of. Recommendation No. 3 reads:

That the government amend the regulations of the appropriate legislation, if that be found necessary, so that immediate specific action can be taken wherever the evidence discloses flagrant cases of profiteering at the consumer's expense.

Why has not the government acted up to now? It has the wartime prices and trade board. I am not going to refer in detail to the regulations of that board, except to say that sections 3 and 8 give the board absolute power. All that has been done about this challenge of profiteering since the committee was set up is to be found in recommendation No. 3, where it says:

The work of investigation and fact-finding—

I would almost say fault-finding.

—already undertaken by the committee has resulted in twelve prosecutions of those profiteering in butter, with three convictions already registered.

Then it goes on:

In addition, proceedings have been instituted in five cases of profiteering in the fruit and vegetable industry.

Does that look like a serious endeavour to prosecute exploitation? Does that look as if the government or this board wants to act? The report indicates that there is evidence of profiteering in some cases, but it does not name the wrongdoers. I remember that when the Prime Minister spoke in February he said that if there was one thing that would prevent a rise in the cost of living—I am merely generalizing—it was fear of exposure of profiteering interests. Where is there fear of exposure in saying that there were some cases, somewhere, some place, and then leaving it to each of us to look through 3,000 pages of evidence in order to ascertain where they were.

The next recommendation reads:

That the government consider the removal of import restrictions now in effect on certain fruits and vegetables . . .

I ask the Prime Minister: Did the United States department of state make representations to the government of Canada that the embargo on fruits and vegetables should be removed? That is what the United States press says the government of the United States did recently.

Another recommendation reads:

The government should give consideration to the desirability and practicability of restricting price rises by special taxation of unreasonable profits.

Is that going to frighten anybody unless it is acted upon? If that is the solution, does the government intend to introduce measures at this session, or does it intend to wait six or eight months longer, while prices pyramid, before taking any action? It must be remembered that the government cannot say that it has not a solution, because one of the policies laid down at the Liberal convention of 1919 was this: Give us a chance and we will show you how to control high prices. Now prices are higher than they ever were during or after the first world war, at a time when there were no such controls as existed during the last war.

There cannot be any dispute about the recommendation in connection with business accounting, but it is a strange thing that it took three long years to find that out. The next recommendation reads:

That the government give immediate consideration to amending the Companies Act to provide for a more complete disclosure of information about inventory reserves deducted in determining profits.

"Give immediate consideration" does not mean after the convention is over; it means now, in this parliament, before it adjourns.

My friends to my left strongly support this report; they say it is a simple thing to solve the price situation. Keep wages going up, keep farm prices going up, put a ceiling on, and everything is solved. But they did not do it in Saskatchewan, and they had the law on the statute books there.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): They did not do it in Ontario, either.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Saskatchewan is the experimental ground where you can try out your policies. It is interesting to note that the act was assented to by the lieutenant governor on April 1, 1947, and it ended on April 1, 1948.

An hon. MEMBER: April fool's day!

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes. They never acted on that law, though they speak with such glibness of what could be done in their own experimental station. With all the power to control prices at their command under that act, they let that act dissolve itself into nothingness. They are in favour of this report, although the committee report says that it does not believe in price control in general. The report reads:

> The committee does not feel that the interests of Canadian consumers would be safeguarded by a system of over-all price and related controls.

When they support this report, will they support that section, which is the essence of it? How well the recommendations are worded, sir. If you believe in some of these things, you are required to vote for all of them whether you like them or not. You are required to approve the whole report, and thereby allow the government to exculpate itself through a report which says: Well, we have not done it, but if it is done now, all will be well.

I proceed to the next recommendation:

> The committee is of the opinion that the government should consider whether the time has not come to remove the special excise taxes on commodities in common use in Canada.

When? Four months ago when the committee was set up? Four days ago when the committee ceased to exist? Why did not my friends on the other side of the house act when the excise act amendment bill was before the house, and when we on this side of the house asked that that very thing be done, and supported the doing of it?

Mr. KNOWLES: We voted it down in committee.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Who are "we"?

Mr. KNOWLES: The committee, including yourself.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My hon. friend is pluralizing himself again. We voted it down, he says. They apparently disagreed then as to the necessity of reducing the excise tax. That is typical of the attitude of my friends to my left. On the one hand they say: Support the excise tax, which inevitably finds its way into the cost of living. In the next breath, they condemn the government for not doing something in regard to controls.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a question of privilege—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am making my speech now.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend misunderstood me. I was referring to the time when this house was in committee of the whole and by a majority voted down the taxes the government was seeking to impose.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. GILLIS: When the hon. member for Lake Centre was absent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My hon. friend need not talk about absences. I was not absent.

Mr. GILLIS: When the vote was taken, you were.

An hon. MEMBER: Conveniently absent.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is indicative of the C.C.F. mind, which always ascribes to others that which they do themselves. I was not absent then, and have not been absent when any vote was taken at any time in this house, except when away on business.

Mr. GILLIS: The record speaks for itself.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: With my hon. friend's interruption I agree.

I referred to the statute passed in Saskatchewan, "An act to confer certain powers upon the lieutenant governor in council", by which the lieutenant governor in council was empowered to make orders and regulations for—> —controlling and regulating the prices at which goods, wares or merchandise or any class or classes thereof shall be purchased or sold by retail within the province or any part or parts of the province for use in the province;

The C.C.F. placed that act on the statute books of Saskatchewan, and did nothing about it. The record indeed speaks for itself.

I pass to the next recommendation of the prices committee:

> That the government give close consideration to the question of revising the present rent controls with a view to removing the causes of individual cases of hardship.

Why should the government give consideration to that question? It is a power which the wartime prices and trade board already has and exercises through its rental regulations. It is a power which is being exercised regularly, with appearances of landlords and tenants before judges throughout this country. Was that recommendation just so much verbiage, to lead the people to believe that something more was to be done? Are we to wait six months before anything is done? Are you going to act upon it in this parliament, or are you going to act again by order in council?

Then after recommending what should be done, the committee finds another loophole, for section 11 of the report says:

> The committee realizes that in the long run the federal government may be faced with constitutional difficulties in regard to its operations in the field of prices.

You see, Mr. Speaker, how it goes. They take a line, and then deviate a little from it.

They say what should be done immediately. They say that consideration should be given, but add, in effect: Remember that if we do not act, in the long run it will be because we cannot act on account of constitutional difficulties. It is interesting to note that the government are starting to abandon the doctrine of emergency, on which they placed so much reliance. Will the Prime Minister say whether the provinces are being consulted? Will he say whether, if prices can be controlled, it requires the assistance of the provinces? If so, why does not the government bring in a measure such as it did on barley and oats, which required correlative legislation by the provinces to make the federal legislation effective? What has the government done about communicating with the provinces? While Manitoba was not very anxious to co-operate on oats and barley because the premier of the province saw through the sham, I am sure that every province would join and give assistance in solving the problem of the high price level which bears down on all our people.

Here is the next recommendation:

That the government, in considering the removal of existing embargoes on the exportation of food products from Canada, give careful study to the supply situation here, and the proper balance to be maintained between the interests of both producers and consumers.

I do not know whether this has anything to do with the 400,000 head of cattle for which entry is promised under the Geneva agreements, or whether it has reference to some qualified promises which have been made lately that the embargo on cattle is to be lifted. While some government supporters say the embargo is to be lifted, the committee says to the government: Watch out; give it further consideration. That is just another example, sir, of that diversity in a disunited cabinet of which we have seen so much evidence during the last three or four months.

The next recommendation is this:

That the government instruct the dominion bureau of statistics to publish periodically an analysis showing the way in which the consumer's dollar is divided among the various elements which enter into the price of basic commodities.

Another good recommendation. Why has it not been done? If it is done, it will be the best answer to my hon. friends to the left who spend their time preaching about how much of the dollar actually consists of profits to those who place their capital in industry.

The record in the United States clearly indicated in a recent survey that the statements made by my hon. friends of the C.C.F. have no justification there, and I say, according to the evidence placed before the committee, that, excepting those nameless corporations who stand condemned in the report, industry as a whole in this country today is receiving but a fair share of the total consumer dollar. What is our recommendation? First, remove the excise tax. One of the reasons why the standard of living of the people in the lower income brackets is going down is that they are caught in a squeeze between taxation, which is taking 23 cents out of every dollar of the total income in the country, and rising prices, from which no relief to speak of was given this year. Second, the time has come for action, before the present session is concluded, to give relief in the matter of income taxes so that our people may be able to spend the largest possible portion of their income rather than have the government spend it for them.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but he has spoken for more than forty minutes.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I do not intend to take too much of the time of the house this afternoon, but I do think that I should place on record a few things which are pertinent to this whole question of prices, and particularly place before the house a picture of the situation as it exists in Canada owing to the things governments have been doing.

I believe that the government itself feels that it is now stewing in the hellbroth which it has created for itself as the result of its own policies. Prices are still running wild in this country, in spite of the months of investigation by the committee on prices into the cause of prices rises. As a result of the prices situation a good many Canadians are suffering from lower standards of living. I refer now more particularly to pensioners, and to persons in receipt of small salaries. As I go about amongst people I find a widespread fear of the future, a fear which I believe has been induced by their past experience. A type of clever propaganda has been playing on this fear and trying to make the people move in a certain direction politically.

Altogether too many people in Canada have come to the conclusion that the government flatly refuses to give them the results that they want in the management of their affairs. There is evident on the government benches, to anyone who takes the trouble to listen and to watch, a callousness and indifference to the wishes of the people, and an attitude that can only be interpreted to mean that the government thinks it is not the will of the people that should be used as the foundation for government policy but rather that it should be what a bevy of experts think is good for the people of Canada. That is obvious to anyone who studies the situation at all carefully. This being true, I ask, where is democracy in this country?

I will guarantee, Mr. Speaker, that ninety per cent of the Canadian people want, and have wanted, lower consumer prices for the things that they have had to buy. The people have been completely justified in their belief that this result, lower consumer prices, could have been achieved, in some degree at least, without destroying incentives or without dictatorship methods of any kind; but the government ignores what the people want. Instead they have substituted the recommendations of a horde of intellectuals who think that they know what is good for the people.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Is that the prices committee?

Mr. LOW: I did not have them in mind especially, but they can be included, yes. One result of this frustration on the part of the people has been to drive thousands of Canadians into the camp of the socialists, in whose propaganda and irresponsible promises they seem to find some hope for the future. The people are not socialists. I do not believe for one second that they are socialists. Furthermore, they do not really want socialism. I have just returned from Saskatchewan, where I was in conversation with a good many hundreds of people. They do not want socialism.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: They do not seem to want Social Credit, either.

Mr. LOW: Social Credit is on the way up, and my hon. friend will find that in his own constituency he needs to look to his guns, to mend his fences.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There are a lot of dead ducks over there now.

Mr. LOW: That is right. They think that what they are going to get is a milk-and-water type of socialism that just sort of dabbles its toes in; but, Mr. Speaker, once they get their eyes opened they will find that it is not a milk-and-water type that they will get. They think that this promises heaven and earth, and all because they have been led to believe that the thing they should seek first, last and all the time is social security.

It appears to me, too, that there is an ominous note in this whole situation across the country. Thousands of frustrated, freedom-loving Canadians have been persuaded that it is in their interest to surrender some of their freedom in return for this social security. They have been led to believe they cannot have social security without the surrender of some of their freedoms. That is entirely false propaganda. But if those who agree with me that it is false propaganda continue to preach the virtues of private enterprise and at the same time practice the type of government which utterly destroys the possibility of private enterprise delivering the good results which it is capable of delivering, then, Mr. Speaker, it is only common sense to expect the people to turn to socialism or communism with their false hopes of planned economies, their regimentation, their restrictions, and the abnegation of the free agency of the people. People naturally will turn to anything which holds out to them any hope of getting relief from a situation that has rendered them almost hopeless in many areas of the country.

Let us not make the mistake of thinking that the government's policy alone is responsible for high prices. I think the evidence brought out by the committee indicates that there are many businesses in Canada which have disregarded the best interests of the Canadian people, including themselves as businesses or as industries, by taking a profit which is out of all proportion to what they should be taking under the circumstances. This does not apply to all businesses, by any means; let me make that abundantly clear. But it does seem that certain key businessmen —and when I say "key businessmen" I mean those who by their organization and position have been placed in a position where they can control the major portion of any commodity that might be distributed in the country to other outlets—I say it does seem true that certain of these key businessmen must bear some of the responsibility for the unusually high prices that do prevail in Canada, and have prevailed for some time.

We condemn the practices of that type of businessmen, wherever they may be. We think they have brought suffering to a good many people, and we believe they have brought discredit upon the many thousands of decent Canadian businessmen who have tried to play the game all along. Not only that, but they have also served, by their unwarranted actions, to bring discredit upon the system of private enterprise which has given them their own opportunities and their own security in the businesses they carry on. Why these miscreants—I might call them that, Mr. Speaker—have conducted their affairs in such a manner as to play right into the hands of those forces in our land who would destroy the right of men to choose their own way of life, and decide whether they will go into business or not, is more than I can possibly understand.

I believe it is the duty of the people of this country to hunt out and hold up, so that all can see, those businesses and industries that are showing callous indifference to the welfare of the nation. They are a menace to the nation; they are a menace to our way of life. But, thank God, the great majority of businessmen and industrialists are not taking advantage, and have not taken advantage of opportunities that might have been theirs to exploit the people in prices and profits.

I should like to refer for a moment to something which my colleague the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl) said the other day. Speaking of unwarranted profit taking, he mentioned a case which is referred to on page 47 of the report, to which I should like to refer for a moment. I quote:

> The committee took special notice of the transactions of two Toronto firms involving an importation of California potatoes, which were ordered just before the import restrictions were imposed on September 21, 1947. As a result of this ban on imports, these potatoes represented the only supply of new potatoes in Toronto at that time.
> On the four cars the cost was submitted to have been $9,579.69 and the selling price was $16,822.50, leaving a gross profit of $7,242.68. This was a gross profit of 75·6 per cent on cost and 43 per cent on sales.

I do not wish to labour the case. I simply wish to put straight to the house this important admission on the part of the committee. They did take special notice of this case; they admit that the potatoes did come in just before the government's restriction on the importation of potatoes was put on, and they also say that this was the only supply of new potatoes in Toronto at the time. People could not get any more, and therefore there was a rush, as naturally there would be among human beings, to get such potatoes as could be had, and people having money would pay any price to get them. Under the circumstances, it is not a question of condemning people who do that, although I abhor that sort of thing. It was not in their best interests, it was not in the best interests of businessmen generally—

Mr. HARTT: Why not? Why was it not in their best interests?

Mr. LOW: Simply because they must know, as the hon. member for Cartier knows, that anyone who takes advantage of a situation such as that, no matter how it is brought about, no matter who is responsible is bringing discredit on businessmen generally. There has to be some sort of responsibility on the part of businessmen; and, as I have said, there has been, in the main, evidence of that sense of responsibility.

But let us not overlook the fact that the situation itself was created by government policy, as admitted in the report. The report appears to be a grudging type of death-bed repentance. I do not know whether it was dictated to the committee or imposed upon the committee. Some say it was; some say it was prefabricated. I cannot say that, but at any rate it certainly is a grudging type of death-bed repentance and it just does not ring true—that whole report.

The report seems to me to be an innocuous thing, a thing almost of pure expediency, which was designed by the government and perhaps foisted upon the committee to bolster the failing fortunes of a party that has become bankrupt of ideas, and certainly bankrupt in the courage necessary to meet a situation that has become nothing short of a crisis in this country. As a result of that lack of constructive ideas and of courage the people are drifting into a feeling of frustration, in which condition they fall prey to socialists and communists, with all their cunning and all their fanatical energy. The country is seriously endangered thereby. The signs are there, and I challenge the government to warn the people and to take heed themselves before it is too late.

Now a word about taxes and how they affect the whole price situation. I am told that on a number of occasions in the committee, though I was not a member of it, companies coming before the committee to give evidence were asked to make submissions on the taxes they were required to pay to the various governments. I have one such statement supplied by a Canadian company to which I shall refer later.

In the main, one of the greatest reasons for the high cost of living is and has been taxation. That is a matter about which the government can do something. It is a matter about which the government has been warned time and time again, but regarding which it has done nothing. High onerous taxation goes on, and as a result of that high onerous taxation, if anyone will take the trouble to investigate the selling price of a single one of the hundreds of articles in common daily use, he will find that the taxes imposed by the various governments in Canada make up from 80 to 90 per cent of the total price paid by consumers. That seems a very high percentage, but it has been proved to be true on a number of occasions.

It is true with regard, let us say, to gasoline and oils that are used by farmers and industrialists and people generally in the course of production. I am not referring entirely to gasoline and oil used by pleasure travellers. It has been shown by expert investigators that fully 80 per cent of the total consumer price of a gallon of gasoline goes to the various governments in taxes. It can be shown that up to 95 per cent of the total consumer price of a good many articles that Canadians use from day to day, which enter into their overall cost of living, is taken in taxes by the various governments. That makes it obvious that if you are going to do anything worthwhile about the cost of living, the place to start is in the direction of taxation.

Let me refer for a moment to a return which was made to the prices committee on June 21 in relation to this very question of taxation. Here is a letter from Canadian Celanese Company Limited, signed by A. G. Allen, treasurer:

June 21, 1948.

Mr. Fabio Monet, K.C.,
Counsel to the Special Committee on Prices,
House of Commons, Ottawa
Dear Sir,

In reply to the request made by Mr. Kuhl, we are pleased to list below the details of taxes charged against income for the year 1947, totalling $2,794,460.95.

And here is the breakdown:

Dominion of Canada income and excess profits taxes	$2,167,000.00
Dominion sales and excise taxes	89,447.22
Provincial taxes on income and capital	397,078.44
Provincial tax on purchases	41,771.63
Municipal taxes	98,770.11
Miscellaneous	393.55

Of course that represents only taxes paid directly by the company to these various collecting agencies. It does not take into consideration at all the percentage of payments eventually appearing as taxes which the company makes directly to railways and other transportation companies and those giving service in the production and distribution to the consumer of the goods the company produces; a percentage of tax content which often runs to fifty and sixty per cent of the total consumer price of the goods. Every railway carrying this company's goods pays a large amount of taxes to these three taxing authorities, municipal, provincial and dominion, and such taxes are not included at all in this statement. The letter goes on:

As the total sales for 1947 were $17,531,957, we calculate that if we had paid no taxes in this year a reduction in the sales price of our products of 15·9 per cent would have yielded the same net profit which we obtained in 1947.

[Mr. Low.]

That is a pertinent statement, and is the best evidence I could possibly give of the pyramiding effect of taxation such as we have in this country. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of living in Canada could be reduced fully twenty per cent within a period of months through a wise and carefully planned reduction in taxation. That fact ought to be driven home with all the force we can muster; and the people should unite in their demand for an immediate beginning in tax reduction.

In the press I have noticed that considerable emphasis has been placed on the representations made by Ontario Liberals to the Prime Minister to drop the 25 per cent excise tax. More than two months ago the Social Credit League of Ontario sent a letter to every member of this parliament demanding the removal of that excise tax, and further asking for an immediate start in the reduction of taxation of all kinds which tends to push up prices and causes the cost of living to get out of control. Again I point out that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) moved an amendment to the speech from the throne in which he advocated substantial tax reduction as a means of bringing down living costs. Moreover, on May 21 of this year I presented to the house a social credit budget in contrast to the one brought down by the Minister of Finance. In it I emphasized proposals which would lead to tax reduction as a means of price reduction. In that speech, and in those given in support of my budget, proposals by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), we showed in detail how the reductions could be made without in any way affecting the services given the people of Canada. We did not suggest particularly at that time the introduction of anything that could not be introduced in this country with safety; and we are not now suggesting that the cure-all for the price situation is the introduction of more money. We realize that we must hold the money stream in control until such time as excess production in this country, which otherwise would be wasted, requires a further supply of money. We say the line has to be held, however, and held scientifically until such time as that condition comes about wherein more purchasing power is needed.

One of the great weaknesses of the report brought in by the committee, as I read it, is its failure to divulge just what has been the effect of taxes upon prices. This matter of taxes has been engaging the attention of thinking men everywhere. Men are beginning now to pay much more attention to it than ever before. I have been interested in following what has been done by one of the great advocates of an incentive system, supplying incentive by decent management-labour conditions, not only in order to increase the amount of production the people of the country have to enjoy, but also to help bring down prices. I have in my hand a copy of a book called "Lincoln's Incentive System", by James F. Lincoln, president of a great electrical corporation in the United States. In this book the writer outlines the details of a system his company has used, and indicates that he has no labour-management troubles at all. Labour is satisfied; they have never had a strike. Year after year, with the help of his employees Mr. Lincoln and his management have been able to effect new methods and procedures in manufacture that have resulted in lower prices to the consumers. But, as he points out, as these new methods have effected savings in costs that otherwise would be passed on to the consumers, governments have come along and introduced taxation which more than made up for the savings effected by the new procedures and greater efficiency. Prices therefore were not reduced, but rather went up.

I want to read just one or two short extracts to show what Mr. Lincoln thinks about this matter of taxation and how it affects prices. First I refer to page 69:

> It is safe to say that the present tax laws will be changed to encourage efficiency or we shall disappear as a great industrial nation.

That is the warning of a man who knows something about the effect of taxation upon production and prices. Again, at page 71 he says:

> There must be a new approach to this matter of taxation. We must see it in its true relationship. Taxes are the greatest of all reducers of purchasing power. As a matter of fact, at this time taxes are largely the reason for much of the misunderstanding on wages between the industrial worker and his employer. The worker sees his standard of living going down. His only reaction is that his employer is not paying him enough since he cannot live as he did before. He is working as hard but is not enjoying the same kind of living.

Then to conclude this portion, at page 73 Mr. Lincoln says:

> Perhaps the reader may feel that I am labouring this point of taxes and its relationship to the standard of living. I am not. The whole question of jobs, standard of living, industrial and human development, depends on our handling of this problem of the individual's relationship to his government. The answer that the American people give to this problem will determine not only the fate of incentive management but also their own. Serfdom and slavery we feel cannot happen here. However, taxation will accomplish the result as completely here as it has in countless cases in all history.

That ought to be a warning, it seems to me, to thinking people everywhere. If taxation is pushing up costs and is ruining the chances of the people to catch up with rising prices, then it seems to me that we ought to be doing something about it.

I should like to say a word or two in conclusion about incentive. If the cost of living is to be brought down to a reasonable level there must be high production and plenty of competition. Social Crediters believe in these two things, and in their effectiveness in stabilizing any economy. It stands to reason that if we are to have high production and plenty of competition, then there must be incentive to produce. Anything that will kill or destroy incentive has the effect of removing from the use of the people production which could be brought into being.

There are some in our country who advocate that the only way to deal with the present situation is through government ownership of the means of production and distribution. But the thing which always interests me about the claims of these people is that they never tell us what they will use for incentive. That is the dangerous part of the matter. You cannot get people to make an effort unless there is incentive, unless they think there is some personal reason why they should make an effort. And that reason is always associated with themselves and their own individual betterment.

Again I say, I should like to hear, just for once, what these people who advocate government ownership have to offer by way of incentive. We feel that there must be incentive, and one of the best ways to get incentive in production is to make government policies such that a larger percentage of the production of a man's own labour remains in his own hands for his own use or his own distribution. Where do profits stand in this incentive scheme of things? Let me make clear that we as Social Crediters have never made the claim that the sole aim and objective of the production effort should be profits. We recognize, however, that profits have their place in the scheme of incentive production. They do provide an incentive. But any time that we begin to make profits the sole aim and end of production, instead of the satisfactory use and distribution of the goods we produce, we begin to get ourselves into serious trouble.

However, Social Crediters do say that profits are an incentive and that, as such, in any free and responsible enterprise economy, profits must remain. We have no objection whatever to reasonable profits being used as an incentive to all-out production.

Mr. WRIGHT: How do you determine a reasonable profit?

Mr. LOW: The people, if they are in a position of having sufficient purchasing power to buy the goods in existence, will soon indicate what they consider reasonable profit. They will soon tell industry and management what prices they will pay for goods.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is to say, industry is entitled to all that the traffic will bear?

Mr. LOW: No; industry is not entitled to all the traffic will bear, especially when government dabbles in restrictions which throw our economy out of gear. It is entitled to all the people think it should have.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is all the traffic will bear.

Mr. LOW: It is what the people with purchasing power in their hands will tell you.

Mr. WRIGHT: All the traffic will bear.

Mr. LOW: No. The way you interpret "all the traffic will bear" is another thing. The exaggerated and stupid nonsense I have heard this last while about "what the traffic will bear", and the tremendously exaggerated statements which have been made about the terrible depredations of profiteers tends to undermine the confidence of the people in the free way of life.

Mr. WRIGHT: What about the report concerning the optical people?

Mr. LOW: I should like to make one further reference to Mr. Lincoln. I shall quote briefly from page 39 of his book, where he says:

> The attitude of our own government has been largely the regimentation of its people in all matters in which it took action. It has also more recently by taxation, which is steeply punitive to effort and ability, not only removed the incentive to develop but made the penalty so great that no one would dare develop to his limit.

That is an admission that one of the grievous problems we have, not only in the United States but in Canada, is that people who operate business enterprise are afraid to go all-out in their production effort for fear of heavy penalties as a result of government policies of taxation. They are afraid to develop. They are afraid to expand as they should, to give us the goods which Canadian people want.

The committee's report is, in my judgment, most disappointing in that it indicates that the government have not yet begun to realize what is required if we in Canada are to enjoy an all-out productive effort. And certainly because of their failure to realize what is necessary in the way of incentive, then surely they have not begun really to show the extent to which Canadian people can produce if the ball and chain is taken off their feet and the manacles off their hands, so that they can launch out and swim for themselves without fear of penalty.

The most effective way now to meet living costs is to get production. We must have higher production. But that requires incentive; it requires lower taxation and, above all, it seems to me that it requires action. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country are demanding action from the government, not deferred promises and excuses.

Mr. RODNEY YOUNG (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am interested, naturally, in the subject which has been under debate in the house these many hours; more interested than I would be probably in any other subject. I am a new member, having been here for only about a week. I have listened to hon. members. I have been awed by their oratory and impressed by their ability in debate.

When I listened to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), heard his mellifluous phrases, observed the sounding periods, the delicate motions of his hands, the shaking of his grey and curly head, I found myself believing that the house was not debating prices, but philosophy.

At the present time we, the representatives of the people, are engaged in examining a crucial problem, one which affects the bread and butter of those among our people who are least able to have their standards reduced. I come from a constituency in which the majority of the people, just as the majority of people across Canada, work for wages. When prices rise, if wages do not rise, they are robbed of the fruits of their toil.

At the present time on Vancouver island, a few miles from my constituency, the provincial health authorities have been examining the conditions among six thousand school children. That is in one of the richest agricultural districts in the country. Those school children were found to be suffering from malnutrition.

Our people are not starving to death, but they are suffering from a lack which, in a country such as ours, calls for immediate action on the part of the elected representatives of the people. I have listened to this oratory on the part of my hon. friends to the right, and it seems to me that those hon. members, like the elder Cato, end all their speeches with the same statement, "Carthage must be destroyed"; with them it is, "The government must be destroyed". Some other hon. members on this side of the house have the same habit. I would say to those hon. members that possibly I feel much as they do. I like the members of the government party individually quite well, but I detest them collectively. At the present time I am not interested in defeating the government or in using prices, the most important thing to the people of Canada, as a club with which to beat the government over the head. I say that if ever there were a time when party should be laid aside and the interests of the people considered to be first and foremost, that time is when there is a discussion on the findings of the committee on prices. I have looked over the recommendations of the committee, and I have tried to see them as people who have never entered this house or who never expect to enter this house will see those recommendations when they are published. Will those people find in this document some hope for the future? Will they find that their wages will not have to be stretched as they have been stretched to the point where they have to do without the things that they have learned to consider necessary, the things needed to maintain health? Will they find that the appetites of growing children which are so much greater than those of adults will not have to be cramped, because government members of parliament at last have decided that they will do something to cure the critical conditions of the wage worker?

I turn to the first recommendation. What does it mean? The people who will read this do not speak the officialese in which this and the succeeding recommendations are written. They do not use what the British call gobbledy-gook; all they use is plain English. They will want to know what this particular recommendation means. It means that this house is asked to say it is in favour of more investigation. That is the first recommendation, or rather the first proposal. Pardon me, Mr. Speaker; these are proposals, not recommendations. The first proposal recommends or proposes more investigation. We are all in favour of more investigations. Investigation is a very fine thing, but it does not bring down the prices of bread and butter, and that is what the people are interested in.

The second proposal is that more funds be provided for the commissioner who is investigating combines. That is also a splendid thing; but when I return to Vancouver Centre, my friends will say to me, "Well, Rod Young, you have been to the House of Commons; what did you fellows down there do about prices?" I shall have to say to them, "We approved or we recommended or we proposed more funds for the commissioner of combines investigation."

Section 3 states that it is difficult to apply formal action against profiteers, but we will consider doing something about it. Section 4 simply contradicts section 3. It states that the scarcities have been exploited by certain handlers and that if they are not punished—presumably section 3 is not going to work—the program of import restrictions, which we know as the Abbott austerity policy, must be relaxed.

Section 5 is a good section, because it suggests taxes on unreasonable profits. As I said at the commencement of my remarks, I am unversed in parliamentary procedure and in officialese. What are unreasonable profits? According to the evidence given before the committee, which I have read, a businessman is in business to make profits. He is in business to buy cheaply and sell dearly. His prices are determined largely by supply and demand. He is never told that a certain profit is unreasonable while another profit is reasonable. There has never been such a definition. Now comes this proposal which is also gobbledy-gook.

Section 6 calls for a better accounting system, so that it will be easier for committees such as this to investigate conditions such as this, but it provides absolutely nothing for the man who must consider how far his wages must be stretched to meet rising prices and a reduction in his standard of living which comes as a consequence.

Section 7 provides another method for making investigations easier. I am hurrying because I do not want to delay the house.

Section 8 states that some controls are bad but that others are not bad. That leaves us exactly where we were before.

Section 9 refers to the government removing the special excise taxes, especially those that affect the housewife's kitchen. We hope; we expect; we recommend; the government may take into consideration, and so forth, but nothing is left after all the verbiage is taken out, except the vague idea that there is a possible effort to deceive the public.

Section 10 says, We are opposed to the removal of rent controls, except some; some rent controls, but not all rent controls. What rent controls? How many rent controls? Where are they to be applied? Hon. members have imagination, as has been shown by the oratory, and they will have to use it when they peruse this item.

Section 11 makes some attempt to pass the buck of price controls in the future to the provinces.

Section 12 refers to a possible meat shortage. It is recommended that the government should not take off controls on exports of food to other countries. That is very good. We can hope that the present high prices will not be further aggravated by unrestricted exports of commodities now in short supply in the country. But it goes no farther than that. It is another "whereas", "we recommend", "we hope", "the government may possibly consider" phrase.

Section 13 proposes that the bureau of statistics join in the hunt which may be made for the cause of high prices. In other words, every effort is to be made by the government to find out something which everybody else in the country has long since found out, namely that prices are too high. The bureau of statistics, probably the army, the navy, the air force and everything we have will undoubtedly wind up eventually in this crazy hunt to find out why prices are going up, if they are going up, and who is responsible for it.

I am going to be as brief as I can, because I believe that one of the things that should be done when the C.C.F. becomes the government of Canada—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. YOUNG: Do I hear some laughter?—is to inscribe across the Speaker's chair that there are few subjects which require more than twenty minutes of conversation on the part of anyone to cover. I think if the orators in this house had such an inscription facing them it would be much better for them and the country would gain greatly thereby.

An hon. MEMBER: The C.C.F. have no orators.

Mr. YOUNG: It is suggested that the C.C.F. have no orators. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members, that the C.C.F. orators have been speaking to such empty seats as I see around me for twenty, thirty, and forty years and, therefore, as orators they are not unnecessarily verbose. Certainly they cannot be compared with the orators that I see around me on the benches of the other parties.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You have not heard your colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. KNOWLES: Are you inviting me to make a speech?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Any place, any time.

Mr. YOUNG: I have promised to be brief, and I conclude on this note. Let me say this to hon. members. For once, take a humanitarian view of the situation and consider the people you represent. I would remind them that, while they may represent people who are in excellent circumstances economically, who receive salaries sufficient to take in the high prices of today, by far the majority of those whom they represent are the fathers and mothers of future Canadians, of the boys and girls who will make this country great and whose standard of living is suffering because of the high prices today. We have our duty to perform, and we should not be content, despite the weather, to go home until we have finished our job.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when this debate commenced it was not my intention to speak, for I understood that two or three speakers were to present the views of the various parties and the debate would then conclude; but since it has continued at some length, and in view of some of the remarks which have been made, I have a few words to say.

When the appointment of the committee was being debated early in the session I expressed the opinion that such a committee was unnecessary, because the government had in the wartime prices and trade board and in the Combines Investigation Act all the machinery required to do the work the committee was being asked to do. I still hold that view. But now that the committee has sat, and I know its members have worked hard, although in the first instance it was not supposed to make recommendations, I am pleased to note that some recommendations have been brought before the house by the committee. That is something concrete at least for this house to discuss and to accept or reject.

I am not going to deal with the recommendations in detail. It is sufficient to say that, while they do not bring forward the ideas which many of us in this house have advocated in regard to over-all price control and subsidies, the recommendations, if given effect, will be of some benefit to the Canadian people. The very fact that these recommendations have been brought before the house by the committee is an indication that the government has its ear to the ground and is listening to some extent to the opinions of the Canadian people as expressed through many organizations, and as emphatically expressed during the recent by-elections. That is more than I can say for the Progressive Conservative party, which apparently never has its ear to the ground.

The recommendation concerning the taxation of unreasonable profits is a step in the right direction. The recommendation for more flexible rental control regulations is also a step in the right direction. While I am a supporter of rental controls, I do think, because of the inflexible nature of rent controls, many home owners are today suffering an injustice. Therefore, while the report is not all I could wish it to be, I intend to support it, because I believe it holds some germ of good which may bring forth fruit satisfactory to the Canadian people if the government takes immediate action—and that is the important point.

I wish to refer to the remark made by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) that the C.C.F. was not the only party which had the welfare of the Canadian people at heart. He suggested that other parties had the people's welfare just as much at heart. In reply I would say that the C.C.F., in advocating price controls and subsidies, at least recognizes and attempts to reflect in this house the opinions of the Canadian people; for, as indicated by a recent Gallup poll, over seventy-four per cent of the Canadian people expressed a desire for the reimposition of price controls and certain subsidies on essential commodities. All the trade unions in Canada—all of them—have expressed a desire for the same thing. So have the co-operative organizations; so have women's organizations in large numbers. The Canadian Legion also, at its last annual convention, unanimously supported the resolution urging a rolling back of prices to the 1946 level, which would mean a restoration of price control.

Therefore I think the hon. member for Kamloops, in ignoring the wishes of the labour unions in his riding and of the co-operatives in his riding and of the women's organizations in his riding and of the branches of the Canadian Legion in his riding, all of whom have demanded the reimposition of price controls and subsidies on certain essential commodities, is the member who is living in a world of unreality, which I suggest, Mr. Speaker, will be dissolved in the next general election.

I say, too, that the party to which he belongs is living in a world of unreality. At this stage in the development of our social order, when people are looking forward to reforms and doing away with the iniquities of the past I say, and I say it in all kindliness because I believe they are sincere and fair in expressing their views, it is the party to which the hon. member for Kamloops belongs which is living in a world of unreality when it ignores the will of the people expressed so unanimously in favour of price controls and subsidies.

Similarly, when his party will also continue to oppose the imposition of the excess profits tax, will urge higher interest rates in this country, and will defend the interests of the grain exchange as against the interests of the Canadian wheat grower, it lives in a world of unreality. I admit the difficulties in regard to price control in peacetime because of constitutional jurisdictions; but at least this report, with all its deficiencies, has attempted to make an approach to solving the problem, an approach which I think should be acceptable to all democratic interests concerned. It is not a negative report. It is a positive report, having in view the welfare of the Canadian people.

We are living in a changing world. I am one of those who believe that we are living in a world in which either we must have a measure of regulation and planning under capitalism, or we shall have chaos, and I am glad to note that this committee, and the government to the extent that they support the recommendations of the committee, recognize that either we must have some regulation of capitalism and some control of its worst features, or we shall have chaos. The report with all its limitations recognizes to some extent that fact. For the hon. member for Kamloops to talk of loss of freedom should this freely elected parliament act in the interests of the people in this direction is absurd in the extreme.

Mr. FULTON: I never said any such thing. I am sure the hon. member does not want to leave a wrong impression.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I thought the hon. member definitely implied in his speech that the C.C.F. would work toward a loss of freedom.

Mr. FULTON: What I did say was that the policy of over-all control advocated by the C.C.F. would result in a loss of freedom.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Quite correct. That is the very point. I say that a policy of over-all control effected through action by a freely elected parliament will never imperil the freedoms of the Canadian people. I mean to say that regulations which spring from a freely elected parliament of men and women, who have to return to the people for endorsation of their actions, can never result in a loss of freedom. Some measure of control, if given effect, will result from these limited recommendations. These limited recommendations are made in response to the demands of the Canadian people and a large number of organizations in the country. Therefore I repeat again, to consider action such as that as a loss of freedom is definitely absurd. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I say I will support the committee's recommendations and hope that even this limited approach to the problem will result in some measure of immediate relief for the Canadian people.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, like some others here present, I was uncertain whether I should speak on this; but, as the Irishman said to two people who were fighting, "Is this a private fight or can anyone join in?" It seems to me that this has gone to the stage where one can feel free to join, and I should like to say a word or two. I see that my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) is looking at me with a pained expression.

Mr. MARTIN: No; joyful.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I will assure him that I shall be as reasonably brief as the circumstances warrant. First of all, I should like to say a word or two about the rather odd occurrence of last week which I do not think contributed to the dignity of this house or to the dignity of some of the people in it. A week ago tonight, I think it was, we had this press report, this government by press release, if one may call it that. It prompted me to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) a question, and it prompted him the following day to make this answer, which I think he must have given with some pain. He said as reported at page 5627 of Hansard:

> It is most unusual for a minister of finance or any other minister either to confirm or to deny rumours of this kind. But in view of the widespread publicity which has been given to this rumour and the statement of my hon. friend I have no alternative but to say that the rumour is without foundation.

That was a nice position to put the Minister of Finance in, was it not? He had to say in this house last Tuesday that this rumour, which we now find out is perfectly true down to the last "i" and the crossing of the "t", was without foundation. That seems to me one of the extraneous and quite unnecessary circumstances which result from this way of doing business.

I also want to associate myself fully with what was said by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), who said to the government that if things are to be done before the next parliament assembles the time to do them is now, and not after parliament prorogues. We in this part of the house still believe in the old-fashioned idea that parliament is the proper place in which to do the business of the country, not after parliament has prorogued when the government can do as it likes.

We remember the radio legislation of last November. It was said that it was not legislation. We were told that there was no tax. The only thing that happened was that they withheld your goods so that you could not get them until you paid the tax which was not a tax. One fears inevitably that if people find it easy to put on a tax without parliament, they will find it even easier to take off the tax and do all the other things; because, after all, putting on a tax is the most serious thing that governments do. The government having done it by radio, we hardly know where they may stop. Therefore we are naturally suspicious of this report, which is not a report of the committee at all, but is a kind of indirect way of announcing government policy.

I suggest also that the way in which this has been done will really make serious people wonder whether it is worthwhile sitting on committees again at all if they are to be treated in this manner. I suggest for a comparison the labour committee which met two years ago. Let us remember that this prices committee has met scores of times. People have done enormous amounts of work. The labour committee met two years ago. As I recall it, that committee was allowed to work out its own recommendation. I would also refer to the banking and commerce committee, of which I am a member. True, the matters that came before that committee are largely uncontroversial; but we did meet; we did discuss things; we did have chances to express views, and our views carried weight.

I wonder also whether the Minister of Finance, when he saw this press report, remembered what he had said in this house on May 18 last. I quote his words, which appear at page 4056 of Hansard:

> Neither this government nor this parliament has either the political mandate or the constitutional power to maintain indefinitely in peacetime a strait-jacket of controls over prices, production and distribution. Our whole economy has been organized to operate on a price basis by private incentives and private initiatives, not by centralized direction.

I wonder also whether he might have remembered what the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), then Minister of Finance, said in this house in April, 1946. I quote his words:

> It is utterly impossible to maintain indefinitely real price controls. To begin with, we have got to get out of this field constitutionally some time. We have not the power to stay in this field indefinitely, and there must be a certain measure of decontrol.

I want to say that, as to the tenor of the report, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) spoke at considerable length. The first twenty-five or thirty minutes of that time consisted in an attempt to arraign the actions of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), who is well capable of looking after himself, and the last few minutes consisted of some general remarks about the report. It seemed to me a kind of apology. He seemed to be saying that the report was a little dab of this and a little dab of that and did not really amount to anything. It reminded me of the story of the lady who had an unauthorized baby and said, "It was just a tiny little one." It seemed to me that he was doing nothing—

Mr. MARTIN: But it was a baby.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): He seemed to be doing nothing except saying, "We would have a little control here and a little control there, a little subsidy here and a little subsidy there. I thought I detected the fine hand of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) there. I remembered the advice that he gave some little time ago to my leader when he said, at page 3939 of Hansard:

> I give my hon. friend a word of counsel. It is always wise to try to anticipate all possibilities before they arise.

I would have thought that this report was in the Prime Minister's best style, ear to the ground, ready to move any way, making the best of all worlds, facing both ways, the little brother of the rich and the big brother of the poor. If there is one thing that the Prime Minister has succeeded in doing it is to create the impression somehow or another that he has been championing the poor against the rich. How he has done it I do not know. It is one of the things for which we all give him credit, at any rate for his dexterity.

But, now, in spite of these ambiguities, do not let us be uncertain about what happened. This is a move on the part of the government, or, at any rate, an attempt to create the appearance of a great move to the left. They have climbed into bed with the C.C.F. I do not know what kind of marriage it is, a marriage of convenience or perhaps even a companionate marriage. What will come of this unholy alliance I do not know; but it is interesting, at any rate, to consider its progress to date. It appears that at the witching hour, between midnight and one o'clock on Friday morning, the C.C.F. accepted the proposal. They signed up the marriage contract, but by Saturday apparently the bonds of wedlock were chafing. It might almost appear to be A. P. Herbert's "deadlock", because on Saturday we find that the C.C.F. were backing away from this; and what they will eventually do I do not know, whether they will say that half a loaf is better than no bread, but at any rate the marriage does not seem to be progressing very happily so far. I imagine we can take it that, on balance, the C.C.F. will take what is given on account.

I want to take a very few minutes on this question of prices. It is so easy to allow our hearts to run away with our heads, and to refuse to think about this at all. It is easy to say that a lot of people want it and that, therefore, we must have it. I know a lot of people want it; but the question is whether the people who have been closest to it, tried to study it and know the most about it, think it will work. We would all like it. I would love to think we could have price control, and get everything down to the price where I could buy it and it would not do any harm. Of course I would like it, and I suggest that a great many of the seventy-four per cent, or whatever the figure was, of the people were really saying, "We want the prices down". Of course they want them down.

I want to look in a detached way if I can at the causes of high prices. There is no mystery about it. Some of them are the faults of the government and some are not. I shall try not to pretend that I think the government is at fault where I do not believe it is.

First of all, there are the gifts to Britain, which every man in this house approved. We gave hundreds of millions away because we thought our honour and interest demanded it, but we gave this money away and got nothing in return. That meant less goods for us, and in the meantime purchasing power was created. That is a cause.

Then, of course, the second cause is the enormous increase in the money supply, which has multiplied three times since 1939. Vast amounts of it went into goods that were destroyed during the war. We have three times as much money and nothing like three times as much goods. I will not take time to give the figures, but we have vastly less than three times as much goods and, I suspect, less than twice as much. And do not forget that the money is being freely spent.

Then we have the inflationary policy of the government, of which I have spoken in the house. I do not propose to take any more time in discussing that now. I wish, however, to mention particularly a matter that I have brought up before, and that is the colossal mistake made in the exaggerated, accelerated and, indeed, almost fantastic depreciation policy which was followed by the government, whereby in the last several years we have increased our productive capacity at a rate seven times as fast as they have been doing in the United States.

I come to another thing which is tremendously important and which I think we are inclined to overlook, and that is the desire for leisure. We all want leisure. I find to my amazement that city offices are closed on Saturday to a considerable extent. More and more leisure may be a good thing, though it would not do for me, because I am afraid I should get into mischief, as I have no doubt that some of my friends would, with too much leisure. Nevertheless we seem to have gone all-out for leisure. I am not saying whether it is a good thing or a bad thing; but it costs money; and if we want as much money or more, as we do, for doing much less work than before, then, as I say, it costs money and raises prices. The only people who have not so far been affected by that are the farmers, and in that connection I would say that we in the cities have been getting from the farmers, for a long time, too much for too little. We have been getting too much for too little for too long.

The farmers have not been getting proper prices and, now that their prices are more in line, we think it is an outrage. I believe this is a matter of tremendous importance. I have for long felt that if the farmers suddenly decided some fine day not to work any harder than we in the cities work, we would all starve. In this connection I have an interesting letter and I believe it will appeal to hon. members generally, regardless of party. It is from an intelligent farmer—

Mr. BRYCE: They all are.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I would go a long way with my hon. friend in that observation. One of the reasons the farmers work and do not hold back is the fact that they are working for themselves. They are capitalists. I have here a pamphlet called "The Scene", written by a man named Atkins, an intelligent man, because he is in my constituency and I have an idea that he will vote for me, though I believe he is a Liberal with a small "l", a tiny, microscopic "l". I should like to read a part of what he says; I suggest that it goes to the very root of the whole matter, and all hon. members, particularly those representing farmers, might well listen. I quote:

> There will be no milk, no eggs, no pork, no grain, no vegetables, no mutton or lamb, and only half as much beef as formerly, for sale from Shingwauk farm in the 1948-49 crop year; but Shingwauk farm will be on the 40-hour week. Although there will be no profit, there will be less loss; and we are now privileged to glow with that false sense of social virtue which possesses those who reduce their hours of work.

Further on, he says, and I suggest that this is a matter for all of us to think about carefully:

> All the groups which banded together to get more for less—

That is what we have all done; do not let us forget that. All we city people are getting as much or probably more for less. We are getting as much money as we got before for less work. But to continue the quotation:

> All the groups which banded together to get more for less have placed an unbearable burden of long hours and unprofitable work upon most of the farm people. The load placed upon Canadian farmers, whose average age is far above their physical prime, cannot long continue to be borne by the present producers of the food that Canada needs for domestic consumption and for exchange for the products of Canada's food customers. Before long the problems of food supply will be the most important political issues domestically and internationally.

I believe everyone within the sound of my voice will agree with that.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the hon. member say whether there is any way he knows of by which profits can be made unless somebody gets more for less?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes. I would answer that by saying that under a free system you do not get more for less but you get more when you produce more, and a great deal more. I do not think profits mean getting more for less; they mean getting more for more of what is produced.

An hon. MEMBER: What did Canada Packers get?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not offering any comments on leisure, whether it is good or bad, but I am repeating that it costs money and this finds its way into the cost of living. We need not pretend that it does not. I have outlined the farmers' position and, I repeat, they have been getting too little for too long.

The next reason I should like to mention is taxation, and reference has already been made to that. I will not do more than refer to it casually. We all know the enormous amounts of taxation that we pay, and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) spoke very well on that point this afternoon.

There is another thing I would mention. It is rather delicate to mention it, but I will do so just the same. We do not work as hard as we used to, even when we do work. That, I believe, is true of a great many people. From the huge amounts of money created during the war we have got the idea that money and value do not depend directly upon work, that you can escape work and still get money in some way. That this feeling prevails is true, I believe, and I am not going to discriminate as between this one and the other. It is not confined to any section of the community. A young man goes into an office, a vigorous young man, and he hears, "Don't work too hard".

The next point I would touch upon is profiteering. I expect there is profiteering, though not nearly as much as some people believe; that is, people who are too fond of witch hunting. I believe that if the most extravagant critic of the capitalistic system in this house, provided that he were a reasonable man—and there are such men in this house—were to total up all the profits he considered excessive and to divide them over the cost of living he would find that it was but a fleabite, something infinitesimal. I believe that with all my heart.

Then, of course, there is the thing that has been mentioned here, reduction of supply, particularly of food, because of controls. I do not need to tell the farmers about that. They know all about it.

I am not suggesting that this can all be put upon the government. Quite a lot of it can, and the government should act. My hon. friend the member for Eglinton has pointed out how they should act. But a great deal of it does not depend upon them; it depends upon ourselves.

Let me reiterate for a moment what in my opinion the government can do. It can do, months late, what we on this side of the house—I believe, all on this side of the house—told them last December and January that they should do, when we pointed out to them that they ought not have put on these taxes. In their hearts they did not like them, but they got involved and they just put on the taxes. Then the hon. member for Eglinton pointed out again what we said at the time of the budget, that some relief should be given to people in the low-income group.

But I do not want to leave it there entirely; I want to come back to remedies which are in our own hands, because I do not think we want to leave it all to the government. We can do a great deal ourselves with a measure of self-discipline. Consumers can do a great deal by themselves. I do not want to be personal, but in my own family we do not buy nearly as much high-priced meat as we used to. Some hon. members may say I am not a very good advertisement for the result; but, believe it or not, I have put on a pound or two.

There is another thing we people in the cities can do; I do not apply this to farm people at all. We can work harder; and if we work harder we shall have more goods and prices will come down. There is no mystery about prices.

But these remedies I have given, which we may apply ourselves, are awfully unattractive. No one wants to believe that a thing is his own fault, or that there is anything he can do about it. He wants to have some outside mechanism come in and do it all for him; and that is why controls are so popular. People think it can be all done by controls; and my hon. friend to the left, who spoke so well, pleaded that we should take a humanitarian view. I do not think it is taking a humanitarian view to refuse to think, or to suggest to people remedies you know will never work. I believe that is a cruel thing. I think it is cruel to suggest to the people remedies which will turn out to be no remedies at all.

Controls are terribly attractive. In the first place, they relieve us from doing anything ourselves. In the second place, and this is important, they make us feel that we are going to punish somebody. We feel that someone else is being naughty, and we are going to punish him. That is why people stumble into this sort of thing. Have they ever had this view from anyone who has had experience in controls and their exercise? I shall, however, come to that later.

Of course we are all tired to death of hearing the record of controls during the war. On the whole it is a good record, though we must remember that part of it was quite illusory, because the low prices were supported by subsidies amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. So we were paying out of one pocket what we saved for the other. Nevertheless I must admit that, in wartime, controls worked pretty well, and the government did a pretty good job. But can anyone point to any democratic country where, except under war emergency or its equivalent, that "comprehensive system of controls" advocated the other day by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) has ever worked in peacetime? In England they have an emergency now far greater than in wartime; but even there the controls are creaking and crumbling; and the desperate difficulty they are in, in my opinion and in the opinion of the people much wiser than I, is at least partly due to the unwise application of controls. The newspaper I often quote, The Economist, is very wise, I think, in not putting all the blame on labour. If I remember rightly, the other day it said one of the difficulties in England was that capital and labour are both doing themselves pretty well, by which it meant that neither was stretching itself as much as it might.

My next point is this. I can understand people asking for controls; but I cannot understand people asking for controls and at the same time saying they will not have wage controls. To me that just does not click; it does not make sense. I do not understand how any reasonable man can say that; yet it is my understanding that this is just what many people who are advocating controls do say.

Now we come along to this wonderful phrase, "rolling back prices," which has a kind of biblical sound, like rolling back the scroll of the heavens, like Joshua making the sun stand still, though it was only for an hour. We have the demand to roll back prices. It sounds grand. "Roll the old chariot along"; I think there is an old song to that effect. Let us have a look at this rolling back of prices. Let us hear the word of a man who knows something about it, a man who had the job and did it well, Mr. K. W. Taylor. At page 87 of the proceedings of the prices committee he was asked, "How about rolling back butter prices to the level of 1946? In your opinion what would be the result?" And his reply was: "Complete chaos." Those were the words of Mr. Taylor, who was head of the prices board and who now is one of the assistant deputy ministers of finance. So there is the opinion of a man who has been working on this very thing. He has seen both sides. He is a sensible man. He knows more about it than any of the rest of us, and that is what he says. I think it is reasonable to ask the opinion of men of that kind.

I go further and say I do not think it is possible to adduce evidence of a single country which has had experience in the administration of these controls to show that we should have a comprehensive system of controls reimposed, which is what is being asked. I repeat that they have never worked in a democratic country in peacetime. It is a matter of common knowledge that when they were taken off officially in the United States, actually they were off already. The thing had become a joke; people just would not accept it, and partly at any rate they took off controls because they were practically off already. For us to suggest now that we are going to retrace our steps and impose over-all controls is just not reasonable. "Hypocrisy" is a nasty word and I shall not use it, but I just say that is a bit of the most utter unrealism I could possibly think of.

But do not take my view; do not even take the view of anyone who shares my opinions. Let us come to a witness who, I think, will be accepted by hon. gentlemen to the left. This instance has been mentioned already by the hon. member for Lake Centre; therefore I can pass over it quickly. Let us come to the government of Saskatchewan and the instance we were given this afternoon of the fact that they had an act to enable them to control prices, which act they did not use. It was on the statute books for a year. That is where it should be; because after all, it is a purely provincial matter; but the act was allowed to lapse. Why did they not use it out there? The reason is simple. That is a province of farmers, people who are interested in getting good prices for their food products. But it was food prices that caused much of the trouble in Vancouver Centre, in Oshawa and elsewhere. So there you have a case of making the best of both worlds. We had the C.C.F. profiting—and I am not going to be too critical of them—from stressing inflated food prices in the industrial constituencies, and at the same time refraining from price control in Saskatchewan itself, for the obvious reason I have given. So I say it is a travesty to have a political party demanding in Ottawa, where they have no power, what they will not do in Saskatchewan, where they have the power.

I say that controls are not the answer, that controls will make confusion worse confounded. If I believed controls would do the job I would try to bring myself to accept them, even believing as I do that they would grievously hamper our freedom. But I am saved that, because I am perfectly satisfied that they will not work.

What is the answer, then? Well, I have really covered most of the things I wanted to say. The answer is to remove these absurd austerity taxes which never should have been imposed; which, as we have been reminded, we actually defeated in committee at one stage, though the defeat did not stick. Halt the various inflationary measures. These are the things government can do; but, as I said before, I am not going to put it all on the government, though there is a great deal the government should do now, without waiting for it to be done as a Christmas present after the convention in August, which I am very much afraid will be the case.

On the other hand, there should be harder work and more self-discipline on the part of people individually. If it would not sound like introducing sentiment at the end of a speech which certainly has not had much sentiment in it, I would say this. There was running through my mind this morning a jingle I remember seeing once in the army, where, as a matter of fact, many of us learned to work together in a way we have sometimes forgotten since. I am not sure that the idea expressed in this jingle has not a great deal to do with it. I thought it was by Kipling, but today I find it is not. I want to close with these words, because they indicate the kind of co-operation and working together which is necessary, along with all the things the government can do, instead of these precious controls which will not work:

It ain't the individual, nor the army as a whole;
But the everlastin' teamwork of every bloomin' soul.

I suggest that is what we want, rather than witch hunts, together with the measures the government can take.

Mr. IRVINE: Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat, I should like to ask him one question. I asked a minute ago if there was any possibility of making profit unless one got more for less. The hon. member replied that he believed profit could be made by making more for more. I do not wish to interrupt him in his remarks, because I have no desire to put him off his train of thought; but I ask him this question now: If more for less does not balance, and if more for more balances, how can you make a profit?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The hon. member for Vancouver Centre spoke about abstruse calculations and abstruse statements. I am not sure I quite followed the way in which the hon. member for Cariboo has asked his question. However I shall try to answer it. I think it is perfectly clear; but in the first place I have to go back and say this, that I think the hon. member for Cariboo has a feeling that profit, in itself, is a bad thing. I would recommend to him a little book written by Mr. A. D. Lindsay, a man far to the left in politics, called "Christianity and Economics" in which he points out that the idea, that profit somehow is immoral, is bunk. He asks this: Why should a man be criticized for seeking an uncertain profit, when at the same time the man is not criticized who seeks quite properly to increase his certain wages? He asks why one man should be criticized and the other applauded.

I now come back to the question. My point is this, that to have anything approaching a free system the person who makes money does so only because he manufactures the goods that the public wishes to buy at prices which they can pay; and that he can make a profit only if he has a large operation; because the hon. member, having been in the prices committee will know much better than I do the very large and inescapable overhead which permits anyone to operate a business. That is what I mean by saying that he can only get more for more, and not more for less.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, this will probably be the last opportunity we shall have this session to speak of this all-important question of prices. I wish to take a few minutes to try to trace clearly what happened in the house, so far as prices are concerned, and the legislation dealing with prices in the past few sessions.

In order not to go through the welter of words we have heard recently, particularly from hon. members to my right, including the hon. member who has just spoken—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Those are harsh words.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: —I wish to refer, first of all, to the two hon. members who mentioned Saskatchewan, and who seemed to try to make quite a bit of the fact that in that province there was certain legislation passed, authorizing the government to impose certain controls, but which legislation was not used.

I believe they will understand, if they will think for one moment, that in a country like ours, or indeed in any country, it is not possible for one province in the whole economy to control prices within that province. I need hardly explain to hon. members that there are no customs duties from province to province, and no boundary lines so far as trade is concerned. Trade freely crosses provincial boundaries. You cannot control the prices of one province in the country. The hon. member knows that as well as I do.

I wish to refer to page 689 of Votes and Proceedings, for Friday, June 25, in which the committee says:

> The committee is therefore forced to the conclusion that the solution of the problem of the adequate protection of the Canadian consumer will require the co-operation of the provincial governments with the federal government by taking the measures required in meeting their responsibilities.

What does that mean? It means that if any doubt arises as to whether the federal government alone has the constitutional power to continue to impose price controls—

Mr. LESAGE: The hon. member says he does not understand the clause. May I ask him if he ever read the Canadian constitution?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What clause?

Mr. LESAGE: The clause he mentions. He says he does not understand one of the resolutions about the rights of the provinces.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I did not say that at all.

Mr. LESAGE: Did he ever read the constitution?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I have read the constitution. The hon. member was not listening to what I said. I have quoted the recommendation of the committee. If the hon. member will refer to page 687 of the committee's report he will find in paragraph 11 the part I have read, and that it is exactly what I quoted.

Let me continue to say that the reason for that recommendation is that if doubt should arise as to whether the federal government has the power constitutionally to impose or to continue price controls by itself, it is asking the co-operation of the various provincial governments in carrying out that objective.

The province of Saskatchewan, being aware of that situation, showed its willingness to co-operate by placing on its statute books enabling legislation making it possible for that province to co-operate with the federal government, if the government were to continue its policy of price controls. That legislation remained there for a year, as the hon. member has said, giving other provincial governments the opportunity to pass similar legislation to show their willingness to co-operate with the federal government in carrying out the further system of price control, should the constitutional issue be raised.

But what did the other provinces do? In spite of the cynicism expressed by some hon. members to my right about Saskatchewan, why did they not tell us what the other provinces did? Did Ontario pass similar legislation? Did Quebec pass similar legislation? Did any other province pass it? I should like to tell the house what Premier Garson had to say on January 24, when he spoke to the Liberal association in Winnipeg. His contribution to this end was in these words:

> In a free country, to impose wartime controls tage of the special conditions existing, made unprecedented profits.

You can take whatever meaning you wish out of that. That was his total contribution to the question of price controls.

I wish to turn now to the remarks of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) in connection with farming. I am glad to hear that he has had some kind things to say about the farmers. As one who represents a rural constituency, I am always happy to hear anyone say something in defence of the farmers, because I know they have often been the greatest victims of profiteering in the past. But I would remind the hon. member that he is the one who, on two occasions in the house, has proposed a solution of our inflationary problems in terms of higher interest rates. I wish to inform him, in case he does not know it, that if there ever were a curse upon the heads of farmers in western Canada particularly, it has been high interest rates. Very few members will thank him for that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member knows that I have not advocated high interest rates; but that I made the statement, which I repeat, that artificially low interest rates produce artificially high prices. And I ask him this question: Would a farmer prefer to pay one half of one per cent a year on a loan of $1,000, which would cost him $5, or would he prefer to pay $5 a week in extra living costs, due to an inflationary policy?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Of course that is beside the point.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Well, hon. members may laugh if they wish. But if any of them can interpret what the hon. member has just said, then I should like to hear it. It does not answer the statement I have made.

I have said that the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario proposed in the house on two occasions that higher interest rates would be a solution of the problem of inflation. He has not denied that; he has only qualified it by giving his reasons for making that proposal. Nevertheless the proposal was made. I do not know if it was made on behalf of the party for which he is the financial critic, but I do know he made the proposal.

I wish to inform him that the farmers of Canada have suffered more from high interest rates, and particularly during the years of depression, than from any other single factor in our economy. If he is to come to the defence of the farmers, then he had better revise his opinions about interest rates.

The hon. member went on to say that to talk about profiteering was ridiculous. He intimated that there might be a little profiteering, but that it was a mere fleabite—I think that was his expression.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I said I would be prepared to take your opinion—

Mr. ZAPLITNY: He may take not only my opinion—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): —after investigating the facts.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: —but I will back it up. He described the profiteering as a fleabite.

I wish to quote from a labour report published not long ago, in which it is said that Canadian corporations made a net profit of $61 out of every man, woman and child in the country during 1946, as compared with $31 per capita for 1938. That is quite a substantial fleabite. Further on, it says that the increase in gross profits in this country was $3,059 million in that same year. During the same period the real wages of the workers and farmers and the salaried people of Canada dropped by eight per cent. If that is a fleabite, I should like to know what would have happened if—

Mr. FLEMING: Who wrote that?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That was a labour report to be found in the Labour Gazette of recent date. I am sorry that I have not the exact date.

Mr. MERRITT: An official or private report?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I believe it comes from the Labour Gazette.

Mr. HARTT: If it comes from the Labour Gazette, they made a terrible mistake.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: There have been worse mistakes made by the government.

Mr. HARTT: That is all right, but Canada is still prosperous.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Coming back to this question of profiteering—

Mr. FLEMING: Will the hon. member be good enough to give us that reference when he has it?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I shall be glad to give the reference. Coming back to the report of the prices committee on profiteering, we find on page 686 the following words:

> In its investigations the committee found that, in certain instances, opportunists, taking advantage of the special conditions existing, made unprecedented profits.

Unprecedented profits in these years must be high profits, because profits have been high for a considerable period of time. The report goes on to say:

> There is no doubt that the high prices tnat produced these profits did raise the cost of living at that time.

In many cases those profits are still going up and the cost of living is still going up, so to say that profiteering does not exist or that it exists only to the extent of a fleabite, is, I think, understating the case to the nth degree.

Listening to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), I must confess that I was unable to decide just where he stood on the question of price control. He was castigating the government, and effectively, for their lack of action, but what that action was to be was hard to understand. I think there is good reason why he did not state clearly what the government should do. The official stand of the Progressive Conservative party on inflation and prices is exactly that of the Liberal government which is in power.

Mr. FLEMING: Nonsense.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The hon. member for Eglinton says "nonsense", and he is an authority on that subject. On October 9, 1946, the following item appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune, reporting a speech by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). The hon. gentleman is now in the house, and he may correct me if what I say is wrong. This item reads:

> . . . Mr. Miller's election will have no effect whatever on government controls because his views, stated on every platform, are in entire accord with the government's stated plan.

The hon. member said that the election of a Conservative candidate would not alter in any way the government's price control policy. Then later, in the October 18, 1946, issue of the Portage la Prairie Graphic—

Mr. BRACKEN: If the hon. member is going to quote my words, he should not put on them an interpretation that they do not bear. His first statement was correct, but his interpretation of that statement was wrong.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I shall now read the words of the candidate himself, which might be a more accurate interpretation of the opinion of the leader of the opposition. This is what the candidate himself had to say, as quoted in the paper I have just mentioned:

> Mr. Miller emphasized there was no difference between the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives on price control and inflation.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the hon. member state why it was that this report had the concurring support of the C.C.F. members of the prices committee as well as of the government members, but was voted against by the Progressive Conservative members of the committee?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Probably the reason is that the report suggested a cut in taxation.

Mr. FLEMING: No. Give us an answer.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: You asked for it and you must be satisfied. The point I want to emphasize is that, while the hon. member for Lake Centre was most sharp-tongued in his castigation of the government; while he was shooting darts across to his left about the stand taken by this party, he did not propose anything that would be a solution of the present cost of living. We have yet to hear from the official opposition in this house what they would propose in the place of this report or in place of what the C.C.F. proposes in order to solve the high cost of living.

Mr. FLEMING: Read our amendment.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I suggest to the hon. member that he make his own speech.

Mr. FLEMING: Was the hon. member in the house on Saturday?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I have heard a lot of speeches by the hon. member for Eglinton, and if he can make another one explaining all those he has made he will not need to ask all these questions. I said a moment ago that one reason why the Progressive Conservatives may have opposed the adoption of this report is that it suggests a cut in taxation. They groaned when I said that, as though to indicate that I was being unfair. What happened in this house just a month or so ago? When this group moved an amendment to the budget asking that the excise tax be abolished, that the exemptions on income tax be raised, the Progressive Conservative party joined the government in voting it down. That was one time when they were in the same boat.

Mr. FLEMING: Surely the hon. member is not going to make that statement in the house when he knows it is not correct. He knows that amendment also contained a proposal that all investment in Canada be socialized. He did not state that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The amendment to which the hon. member refers did not contain the word "socialization" in any way. It is too late now for a death-bed repentance. The hon. member voted against a reduction in taxation and he cannot talk himself out of it. I would point out to him that he does not have to take my opinion on this. He should remember that when the by-election in Portage la Prairie took place it was won by the Progressive Conservative party under false pretences. They stated that their stand on price control was exactly the same as that of the government, and then a few weeks afterwards they got on the radio and stated that they were opposing price control.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Whom do you mean by "they"?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The Progressive Conservative party. We certainly heard plenty about it this afternoon. Hon. members know what happened later on when the public finally caught on to the stand taken by the Progressive Conservative party. Recent by-elections came along and they were not able to put over the double role they had been playing. They found that they were not able to live up to it. They could not in one breath be for price control and in the next breath be against it. In one breath they are for a reduction of taxation in this house and then they vote against a reduction of taxation.

Mr. FLEMING: That is untrue and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If the hon. member will look at the record he will see that he was one of those who voted against a reduction in taxation.

Mr. FLEMING: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Hon. members should not continually interrupt the speaker. They should permit him to make his speech, as is his right and privilege.

Mr. FLEMING: On a question of privilege, the hon. member has made a statement that I voted against a reduction of taxation. That is utterly untrue; it is just as untrue as it possibly can be.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The hon. member can say what he likes, but if he looks at the record he will find his name among those who voted against our amendment.

Mr. FLEMING: Your amendment dealt with matters outside of taxation.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It had the reduction of taxation in it, and the hon. member voted against it. I am not talking politics. I was referring to the record and making certain statements which are absolutely correct, but which perhaps hurt the conscience, if nothing else, of hon. members to my right.

In 1946 the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mrs. Strum) moved the following amendment in this house:

> This house is of the opinion that the government's policies of permitting recent unjustifiable increases in the prices of farm machinery and of steel have resulted in imposing on food producers and workers of Canada an unfair share of the burden of maintaining the government's price stabilization policies.

That is clear-cut enough. But what did our so-called champions to my right, who shed crocodile tears for agriculture, do? Every member of the Progressive Conservative party voted against that amendment. Let them deny it. I do not hear a single voice. Try to wiggle your way out of that. You cannot do so.

In this group during the past three months we have consistently—

Mr. FLEMING: Talked nonsense.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The hon. member for Eglinton is confining his remarks to "nonsense". If he stays on that subject, he will be consistent. We have consistently urged price controls and subsidies in order to give the workers and farmers and the people of this country generally a fair break in the way of prices. We have also asked the government to impose mark-up controls in fields where it is impossible to have an over-all system of control, so that there will be at least control of profits in certain fields where they are definitely excessive. That is not too much to ask for.

To those who say the C.C.F. want over-all control of everything, let me say that was never the suggestion of this group, for we realize that price controls are only a palliative to bolster up an economic system which does not function. If we are to continue to have a capitalistic system of distribution in this country it will become increasingly necessary to have controls to give a fair break to the workingman. But that is not a permanent solution, and we have never said it was. We have always said that the government of this country, regardless of which party is in power —this is not an ideological argument but an argument looking to the future—will have to go farther and farther into the field of public enterprise to create a balance wheel by providing competition to private industry where monopolies and cartels have destroyed it altogether. Many cartels and monopolies have effectually squashed all competition in certain lines. The reports of the registrar of combines establish that fact.

Let me give a concrete illustration of what can be accomplished. I have a clipping here from today's Ottawa Citizen which, under the heading of "Crown Companies Pay", says that certain crown companies of this country have earned an operating profit of more than one million dollars in the last fiscal year, and among those mentioned is Polymer Corporation. Quite apart from the surplus which goes into the public treasury from the operation of these crown companies, desirable as that is, more important still is the fact that they play a part in keeping the prices of private industry at a reasonable level. The price of Polymer rubber in 1943 was 39·96 cents a pound; by 1946 the price had dropped to 20·35 cents a pound, and by November 1, 1946, it had dropped still further to 18·5 cents a pound, which was two cents less per pound than the price of natural rubber at Singapore. With the exception of the last two years, the period from 1943 to 1946 was when we had our greatest inflation. It was a time of rising prices; but here was Polymer producing rubber, and incidentally supplying private firms, at reasonable prices and cutting its prices year by year. It is quite clear, then, what would happen in other fields if we had government-owned enterprise which would produce and sell at cost and give the consumer the benefit of low prices, instead of production being left to private industry which shoots prices as high as the market will bear, in order to make a profit.

The permanent solution in this country is to have more crown companies, more public enterprise and public ownership in order to create a balance wheel and to provide a safeguard against the profiteering carried on at the present time. Until we can persuade some government in this country to take steps in that direction it will become increasingly necessary to have price control.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the measure before the house is a government resolution to concur in the report of the prices committee. The purpose of that committee, as set out in the resolution moved by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) some four months ago, was to consider and report upon three things: the causes of the rapid rise in prices, the commodities upon which prices had risen unduly, and to what extent hoarding and related practices had been responsible for rising prices.

We moved an amendment to that resolution, asking that the committee should also be required to consider the effect of government policies on rising prices, and further, that it should be empowered to bring in recommendations. The amendment was ruled out of order. The resolution as introduced by the Prime Minister was passed and the committee was appointed.

The committee sat pretty regularly throughout the whole of the latter part of the session and now its report is before us. It is in three divisions. In one division certain comments are made on the evidence presented before the committee; another division contains certain findings, four in particular; and the third division contains the conclusions of the committee under fourteen heads.

As to the evidence dealt with in one section of the report, it is generally accepted, I think, that the evidence is not conclusive, nor are the comments of the committee upon it conclusive with respect to the causes of and the remedies for rising prices. It is only fair to say that one interpretation of this report of the evidence is that it is apt to leave the impression that business all over this country should be generally condemned when, as a matter of fact, only certain small sections of business have been proved to be guilty of so-called profiteering, if I may use the word, which would stand a lot of definition. One other observation with respect to these comments. One section of the report deals with matters which I understand were never before the committee at all.

We have this statement in the findings, if I may summarize it. It says that the significant causes of the rise in prices are four: first, the rise in external prices, the rise in prices outside this country; second, increases in the cost of producing certain goods; third, the expansion of purchasing power, and fourth, certain supplementary factors, which I presume include so-called profiteering. I shall touch briefly on these findings in a minute or two.

Nearly half of the so-called conclusions published in the report under fourteen different headings are criticisms of government policy in which many sections of this house have taken part and are in substantial agreement, and in which I am sure many of those sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker, are in agreement as well. One-quarter of these findings are vague and, to some extent, meaningless. They have been gone over by others. Several speakers have taken them one after the other and discussed them. I therefore do not propose to do that.

The third group of conclusions was referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt) as being the ash-can group of conclusion—recommendations which leave loopholes and possible delays for the government to follow or not to follow in dealing with this important matter.

With respect to the report itself, my first observation is that it is a most inadequate document, presuming to deal with what is perhaps the major economic question facing this country today. The committee was appointed to find the causes of these rising prices, and yet not the slightest attempt was made to examine the effect of the government's policies on these rising prices. We tried to have that as a requirement of the committee. By your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that was not allowed. In dealing with this problem, the effect of government policies during recent months and years was practically left out of consideration by the committee; government policies relating to taxation, to expenditures, to trade, to currency and credit were practically not considered at all. The objectives of the committee, and I think many of us think the objectives of the government, seem to be to find some whipping-boy, some scapegoat on whom they can lay the blame for these unfortunate conditions in our economy.

Before I sit down I propose to show that the major blame for this price condition rests on government policies chiefly. The effort has seemed to be to leave the impression that somebody else was to blame for this condition. When we have a situation of this kind, such effects as these have some causes. Providence did not give us this price situation. In their individual or in their collective capacities, man gave it to us—perhaps nations helped. As I said, wherever there is such an effect there is a cause.

What is the cause of rising prices? It is the situation where the supply of goods is out of relationship to the supply of credit or currency. One can say that the remedy is to increase the supply of goods or to reduce credit or currency. I suggest that under these conditions our hands are tied. If we start out to try to reduce the credit or currency available here, what will happen to our national income? What will happen to our wage level? What will happen to our capacity to pay our debts? Nothing but harm. Therefore it leaves us with the other alternative of finding a way to increase production. I propose to deal with these matters in a little more detail later on.

But what I want to say now is this. This high price situation did not come about by accident; it had causes. What are these causes? That is what the people of Canada want to know, and how the condition can be remedied, nothing else. It is natural that those who are in positions of responsibility should try to leave the impression that others are to blame. But what we have to try to do is to find out what are the real causes and what are the best remedies that we can follow from now on.

In the report, four or five things are mentioned as being the chief contributing causes to this condition. One of them is foreign prices. No doubt the rise in prices elsewhere has been a factor; but I suggest, with all respect, that it has not been a major factor in the rise of prices in Canada. Another suggestion is that certain companies have sold their goods for what somebody was willing to pay; that the prices they received were considerably more than what they had paid and that profits were made. No doubt that has been true. Whether that is to be regarded as profiteering is a matter for examination.

I want to ask the house, is the man who today has some cattle on his farm to be regarded as a profiteer if he holds them off for a few weeks, in view of the fact that the government of Canada is reported as likely to remove the embargo on cattle going to the United States? Is the man who grew oats and barley a year or two ago, and, on learning that the government was likely to remove the price ceiling on these commodities, to be regarded as a profiteer if he held his oats and barley until the government made its move and the price went up 50 per cent? Is he to be regarded as a profiteer who, under conditions where dominion policies increased the supply of currency and credit far beyond the supply of goods, thus ensuring a rise in prices, takes advantage of that situation? I am not answering that question; I am just raising it. If every such man is to be regarded as a profiteer I ask, who in Canada is innocent?

No doubt, profits have been made. Profits could not help but be made under conditions of inflation, where prices were sure to rise. The government had the alternative of trying to see that commodities equalled the amount of currency and credit or of bringing in and maintaining, if it could, an over-all policy of control.

The government has stated its position and we have stated ours. There is the constitutional aspect. There is also an economic aspect. Practically everyone today thinks that, under these conditions, that over-all kind of control policy could not be carried out, and would not produce results if it were, without wage controls. And if we have price controls and wage controls we must tell every worker where he has to work and how much he can get for what he does, as well as what will happen if he does not do what he is told. It is generally recognized now that such an over-all system would lead to communism, the one thing that nearly everyone in Canada is afraid of.

Certain evidence is brought forward to leave the impression that great profits were made. No one denies that profits were made. Everyone who had any physical goods found that their value went up, just as if prices were to go down they would lose. Prices went up and many made profits, and if prices went down they would lose. But certain evidence was brought forward, and I will give one item as an illustration. It is said that cocoa beans increased in price 283 per cent. I have not checked it, but I have no doubt that is the fact. But what is the bearing of that on the cost of living? I am told only that 1·6 ounces of this commodity is used by the average family in Canada each week, so that even if that statement represents a fact, which I do not question, it has little bearing on the practical question of how to control prices that are 50 per cent higher than they were before the war; wholesale prices double what they were before the war.

The question of butter has been raised. Does anybody here question that, so far as butter is concerned, its costs have risen rapidly under recent conditions? If anyone doubts that suggestion, then I think he should look at the situation today. We have a price ceiling on butter and I suggest that we ask ourselves this question. With that price ceiling, is anybody in Canada at this time of the year, when production is high, going to buy butter at a fixed price and pay the storage and then be subject to a fixed price later on? That has been the common practice in normal times, because butter is produced in the summertime in larger quantities than in the winter. It looks as though now, under existing circumstances, there will be less butter next winter than there was last.

That, I suggest, will be a most unfortunate situation in view of the controversy between butter producers and those who would bring oleomargarine into the country. If we run into a further difficult situation in regard to butter next winter, part of the blame will lie on those who have put butter in the position it occupies today.

Two or three other things were said by the committee, one of which was that increases in cost of production were a cause of rising prices. Certainly they were; but what we want to know is, what contributed to the increased cost of production? We know some things that did so contribute; but what we do not know, and what the committee has not examined, is the result of government policies on the increasing costs of production. That, the committee has not reported upon, and that, the committee should have reported upon.

The report suggested that another cause of rising prices is increased purchasing power. That, too, is correct, but what contributed to the increased purchasing power? Some factors that contributed to it were laudable, things that we all want. Some other factors may not have been so laudable. What part had government policy in increasing purchasing power, and to what extent can it be justified? That, the committee did not answer; that, the committee should have answered.

Then the impression is left that the work of the committee, the examinations that took place under it, have struck terror into the hearts of businessmen, and that, because of that, good has been done and will continue to be done. That self-praise, in the face of the facts, is a poor recommendation for the committee.

What has been happening since the committee has been at work? The cost of living has gone up, and I venture the prediction that it has not stopped going up. Today, it is at 153·3, higher than we have ever before known it, higher than it was after the first war, during which, as someone said this afternoon, we did not have the controls we had in this second war, and certainly did not have the experience of a previous war, as we had in the last war.

What I wish to do today is to examine the effect of government policy on rising prices and to assess the degree of that effect; because frankly, in my judgment, government policy has had more to do with rising prices than all other factors put together, and yet it has not been examined by this committee.

On February 2 last I warned the government that Canada was facing the greatest economic problems the country had ever before been called upon to face. I predicted then that, because of the government's refusal to take effective action, the cost of living would increase beyond levels reached in the disastrous inflation of the nineteen-twenties. Events have now justified these warnings.

Prices in Canada now stand at by far the highest level in our history. The general cost of living index stands at 153·3, the clothing index at 173·6 and the food index at 191·6, nearly double pre-war, and still rising. And even these official indices, which are based on a subsistence standard of living and in many respects are not fair, do not reflect the actual burden borne by the average Canadian family.

The true position is more nearly reflected in the wholesale price index which, when computed on the same basis as the cost of living index, now stands, not at 153 but at 220. On this basis the average price of all commodities is well over twice the pre-war figure.

People are facing a situation in which it is becoming increasingly difficult to provide for themselves the necessities of life. I mentioned the wholesale price index, because we commonly quote the other figure. One is 153 and the other is 220. For this rise in prices the blame lies largely at the door of the government.

The government cannot excuse itself by saying that we are suffering from the aftermath of war. Of course the war created problems; but the people of Canada pay, in their heavy taxes, the expensive price of government in order to have these problems faced and overcome. Yet at almost every stage the policies of the government have heightened inflation and increased the burdens of the people.

[Mr. Bracken.]

The sole action taken by the government has been to appoint a committee of parliament to inquire into the cause of the rise in prices. This was sheer evasion and subterfuge. Everyone in Canada who had studied the matter knew why prices were rising. We had too little consumer goods. Why? Because the government encouraged reckless capital goods purchases in the United States; because they needlessly imposed embargoes on foods and goods from sterling area countries; and because they maintained at a high level a most regressive system of indirect taxes, such as the excise tax and the sales tax. Our dollar is worth only sixty cents, or perhaps only fifty cents, because the government doubled the money supply in comparison with the goods the nation produced, and because so much government expenditure was made on borrowed money, money borrowed by the government from the banks and not wholly from the public.

These are among the real causes of our inflation. The government alone is responsible for them and their ill consequences upon the people; and it has done its discreditable best to conceal what it did. Vagueness and confusion exist all through this country. There has not been the frank analysis of this situation that there should have been.

Let us look at the government's taxation system. What is the position? Before the war we spent $500 million a year. In the middle of the war we spent six times that, or around $3,000 million a year. What has happened since the war? Even in the present budget we are spending $2,700 million. The government increased our taxes by 500 per cent; then they reduced them by ten per cent. That is not the worst of it; there are two features which are particularly bad, not only the heavy burden but the proportion the government takes of all we make. Before the war this government took from the people of Canada ten per cent of all that everybody made. That is what the cost of government took from the pockets of the people. Now they are taking over twenty per cent of all everyone makes. If this keeps on in this country we shall be in the position of trying to bring prosperity by each taking in the other's washing; when what we need is more instead of fewer people at productive work.

Canadian taxation is characterized by two features: taxation which bears unequally upon the poor, and taxation which taxes people when they do not know it. I refer to such indirect taxes as the excise and sales taxes. I am not suggesting that they could all be taken off. But those hidden taxes take out of the pockets of the people of Canada $1,000 million that they do not know about. These taxes fall directly upon production, unlike other taxes which are imposed after the money is made. They increase the cost of living. They force down living standards. They hamper enterprise and restrict income and employment. It is true that last December, following criticism by myself and others, the government removed the sales tax on certain articles of food; but that is only a single step forward on a very long road. The sales tax remains on many materials and much equipment going into the production of food and on all other consumer goods, as well as upon the instruments of their production.

The burden of these taxes has been great for many years, but last November the government added a special excise tax of 25 per cent to all the other indirect taxes. This additional tax applies to a long list of miscellaneous articles, such as automobiles, refrigerators, brushes, mirrors, cosmetics, combs, cameras and film, radios, toasters, food choppers, electric kettles, irons, vacuum cleaners and so on. Most of these and many more are rightfully regarded by the average Canadian family as part of the necessary equipment for living; yet the government imposed this special tax which increased costs, increased prices and further stimulated inflation.

I shall touch upon some half dozen other government policies and try to show how they have made this price situation worse. The second factor in creating inflation was the process of decontrol. The way these things were done almost looked as though their very purpose was to produce inflation. Of course that was not the intention, but we can see now what the consequences have been.

The first step, away back in 1943, was the removal of subsidies on the production of certain essential goods. As the subsidies were removed, the marginal producers of essential goods, caught as they were between rising costs on the one hand and price controls on the other, were forced out of production, or compelled to concentrate on the most expensive lines.

The second major move along the line of decontrol was when the government, after two or more years of subsidy removal, in 1945 began to remove price controls. All too often they began at the wrong end. By removing price controls from non-essential, capital and luxury goods first of all, they directed the nation's productive capacity into those lines, to the detriment and reduction of essential production. So by the end of the program the government had achieved the maximum possible reduction of goods which are the essentials of life; and now have the effrontery to ask a committee of parliament to find out why the cost of living has gone up.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the report of the committee with reference to the rise in the cost of living and prices generally. I had touched briefly upon the history of this matter from the time when the resolution providing for the setting up of the committee was passed, and I had dealt briefly with some of the findings of the committee. At that moment I was engaged in a discussion of certain of the government's policies, and their effect upon rising prices. And in this last respect I had dealt with two of those policies, namely taxation, and the manner in which the government had taken off certain of the controls.

I was about to deal with a third question of government policy, namely the expansion of credit. Apparently the government felt that inflation was not moving rapidly enough, so they helped in worsening the situation by increasing the bank-note issue to the extent of $25,000,000. Then they allowed credit expansion to proceed almost unchecked. Bank loans and investments increased by $777 million over a short period. The net increase in capital stock issue was $236 million in the same period, and corporate bonded debt increased by $81,000,000. The net result has been that the government's policies have given us less than half as much increase in production as they have given in expanded credit and currency. That is one of the chief causes of rising prices; and for it the government is wholly responsible.

Then, as if this were not enough, the government undertook a fourth measure, the most inflationary measure possible for any government to take, the heavy cash subsidization of new capital investment. Between November 10, 1944, and March 31, 1947, the government, through the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, extended special facilities to industrial investment through the allowance of double depreciation against income tax. This resulted in new investments totalling $1,200 million, against which tax abatements are estimated to have amounted to $220 million in 1947. This is the equivalent of a cash subsidy of $220 million in rebates in taxation to encourage commercial investment. It thereby took from those who would use certain of these commodities, lumber, cement and other things, goods to the value of $1,200 million. It thus lessened the amount of these goods available for other purposes, thereby permitting or encouraging increases in cost.

This subsidizing of commercial construction and investment, in a time of acute shortage of consumer goods, greatly intensified the general inflation. This increased the cost of housing immediately; it increased the price of commodities beyond the reach of the average individual, and these increases extended all through the entire range of goods and services in current use. The view of the Progressive Conservative party is that, although capital investment is most desirable and quite essential to our long-term welfare, the government was paying subsidies to this extent out of public funds at a time when it would cause great hardship to the people at large.

We now come to the fifth of the government's policies, their trade policy. After having imposed unparalleled pressure on the limited supply of goods available, supplies which were limited largely as a result of government policy, they proposed to shut off a wide range of these supplies for the purpose of saving dollars. But many imports required not a single United States dollar in connection with their purchase from sterling area countries. Some of these embargoes were totally unnecessary, but they are the reason why such articles as tomatoes—I give that as one example—have been sold in Ottawa for as high as eighty-four cents a pound.

But the government, apparently not being satisfied with the mischief they had already wrought, undertook yet another measure, the reimposition, on January 1 last, of a long schedule of customs duties against the remaining imports which they permitted the citizens of Canada to obtain in the sterling area. As a result, prices once more marched upward toward infinity. I wish to make it quite clear that all these restraints on our trade with the British commonwealth had nothing to do with the dollar crisis, but they had much to do with aggravating the living crisis of Canadians.

In the face of these numerous actions by the government, all of which have increased inflationary pressures, the remarkable fact concerning prices is that they are not twice as high as they are, that the wholesale price index does not stand twice as high as it is—at 440 instead of 220. That the situation is not worse is a tribute to the patriotism, good sense and self-restraint of all sections of our economy—of business people, of labour, and, above all, of the average Canadian. Had it not been for this, the ill results of these government policies would have been much greater than they are.

In distressing and perplexing times such as these, it is the tendency of all of us to seek a panacea—some one, simple solution of all our troubles. Many have been led to believe that in the price control such a panacea was to be found. Our experience in the war, under the dictatorial powers given the government over prices and wages, laid the basis of that idea. For this false conception, as applied in peacetime, the government is alone to blame; because all during the war it constantly led the people to believe that price controls were, in fact, such a panacea; that price controls were the simple answer to the problem of how to fight a world war without any inconvenience at home. As usual, this kind of government propaganda misled if it did not deceive the people.

The government, by such politically conceived propaganda—I use that term in no ulterior sense, because it was their privilege to sell the idea of price control in wartime; my criticism is that it was overdone and the impression left with everybody in Canada that the same kind of thing could be carried on in peacetime, with equally good results, and when it was not carried on and prices did go up as they have gone up, then came the public reaction and the people said, "You did it before; you said you would do it again; you have not done it; therefore we will spank you"—created the illusion which for a while concealed the true nature and effect of the government's wartime policy. Now that illusion has been cruelly shattered. Not even the socialists and communists are sufficiently naive to believe that price control without wage control can ever counteract the effect of the multitude of inflationary measures which have been put to work by the government.

A little before six o'clock the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) mentioned two things. He referred to something I was reported as having said about the attitude of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) toward price control. I think what was said was that his views with respect to the price controls were not different from those of the government. I think he said that and I may have repeated what he said. What the hon. member for Dauphin also said was that price controls were only a palliative, that they were not a permanent long-term remedy for this situation. With that we all agree.

What, then, is the situation now? A frustrated public now asks, what are we to do? The first thing we must do is to put an end to this business of skidding from crisis to crisis, snatching first at one expedient and then at another. Palliatives will not and cannot remove the causes of the present inflation. We must find ways to prevent the present so-called crisis from becoming a permanent condition of our economic life. We must find ways to prevent the minister's austerity program from becoming the permanent pattern for the life of Canada. Only positive remedial action will do that.

We must, first of all, set out to get rid of much of the welter of indirect taxes which are everywhere increasing the cost of production, and the cost of living, as well as restricting income and employment. The first to go must be the long list of 25 per cent excise taxes which were imposed by radio broadcast on November 18 last. The next to go must be the sales tax, in so far at least as that item enters into the cost of living. There must be reductions in the income taxes paid by people who do not make enough on which to live.

Perhaps I might be permitted to intrude another thought here. I sometimes wonder how we get in a state of mind that under post-war conditions like this we can all expect to have higher incomes, higher wages, help rebuild other nations and provide more generously for social security; how we expect to do all that and at the same time pay $2,700 million in taxes and still not have higher prices, is hard to understand. There has been something wrong with our thinking somewhere. We cannot rehabilitate Europe; we cannot add to our own well-being; we cannot pay higher taxes without either increasing production or doing with less. That is basic in our approach to this problem.

If we are to help over there, it is not bookkeeping; it is not dollars; it is not a manipulation of our currency—it is goods that will help. If we are to send them more than we have sent in the past we shall have to produce more than we have produced in the past or do with less ourselves. But there seems to be an inclination to produce less, and there is not much inclination to do with less.

Next, we must consider seriously the removal of many of the embargoes, quotas and tariffs which are shutting off our imports from the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area. We have been sending goods over there; they are unable to pay for them all, and in some respects we have been making it difficult or impossible for them to pay for them by shutting out more than we did during the war the goods that they could send in here. These restrictions have been creating artificial scarcities and forcing up consumer prices here in Canada.

It is time that everyone in Canada realized that if these artificial restrictions could be removed we could get ourselves in due course into a much more fortunate position in the world as far as helping forward both ourselves and our less fortunate brethren in Europe are concerned.

Finally, we must overtake the government's inflation of our currency by greater productions. As a distinguished United States scholar and statesman, Bernard M. Baruch, said recently, "Production, production, production —that is the law and the prophets." We here in Canada also must realize the importance of production. To that end the government must get off the taxpayer's back by lessening taxes; business must set out to produce more without an increase in profit; labour must increase its productivity without an increase in wages; and, finally, farmers must plan to produce more without increased income. In addition, all of us, including the government, must learn that wars once fought have to be paid for, and that they can be paid for, destroyed nations rehabilitated, and high standards of living maintained, only if, by the partnership of us all, we produce more of the essential goods needed for the human family to live on.

If the government fails in its task, as it is doing, and if the rest of us prove to be unwilling to make these comparatively minor sacrifices we shall deserve our fate, another depression. But the government must give the lead. It must get off the backs of the people, instead of putting heavier burdens upon them.

If, then, we have the courage, the vision and the tenacity to face our problems, and then to work with a will to carry them out, we shall find that our price troubles will commence to disappear. But they will vanish only when we do two things: first, when we all learn that production is the only thing that will save us and that production means work by us all and, second, when the government refrains from its customary practice and puts economically sound instead of political expedient policies into effect. As I have tried to point out, the government has gone the wrong way about some of these matters. A reversal of its taxation and production plans is long overdue.

With many of the sections of this report we are in agreement; but, as a means of meeting the problem of rising prices, we consider that it is evasive, incomplete and less than frank with the Canadian people. We are not opposed, as I said, to many of the so-called recommendations or conclusions in this report. What we are opposed to is what has been left out of the report, namely, a consideration of the effect upon prices of the government's own inflationary policies. We are opposed to what the government has left out of the report more than we are to what it contains.

Some of our suggestions were outlined in our amendment, and I have tried to make a fuller statement upon them in my remarks tonight. Because of the inadequacy of the report for the purpose intended, we shall vote against it.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended taking part in this debate; but, after listening to some of the statements recently made, it is necessary, even at the risk of keeping the house here for a day or so longer, that the house and the country should have a clear understanding of the basis of the present debate.

The question before us is, in my opinion, the one that is uppermost in the minds of the Canadian people, namely, why there has been such a shrinkage since 1945 in their purchasing power or real wages. While the reason may be clear to many of us in this house, I am fairly sure that it is not clear to some of the speakers this afternoon and this evening, whose remarks may tend to confuse some people in this country.

What is the issue? The issue is that the government and the official opposition, by the removal of the controls which protected the consuming public of Canada during the war period, initiated a movement which in effect has robbed the people of from 30 to 40 per cent of their real income since 1945. Has that actually happened? The answer is yes, and the proof of the fact that there is something wrong with our price structure is that the government of Canada and the House of Commons saw fit to appoint a special committee which has spent several months in taking evidence to determine what is wrong in our economy. The report of that committee is now before us.

The first fact to be established is that there is something wrong with our economy. The committee's report is proof positive of that. But before going into the subject matter of the report, just to set the record straight I understood the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) to state this afternoon that the C.C.F. group in this house had supported amendments to the 25 per cent excise tax. I stated that he was not present when this group forced the vote on the abolition of the 25 per cent excise tax. To be fair to the hon. member, on the assumption that he wants to be fair to us, I wish to say that the hon. member for Lake Centre was present in the house.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend and assure him that there was a little misunderstanding on both sides.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Damon and Pythias.

Mr. GILLIS: Coming to the question before us, I assume that every member of the house honestly wants to do something about high prices. No one is sparring for political advantage on this question because, remember this, no one can get any political advantage out of it. Either we settle the question before us on a reasonable and sensible basis, or something else will clean the whole works out, because you cannot play with this kind of thing for very long without wrecking the whole structure of society.

What caused present conditions? I should like to recall to the memory of the Conservative party that from before the 1930's until 1939 we had in this country what could have developed into revolutionary conditions—unemployment, malnutrition, frustration, jobless youth with no hope and no future. That was the position which faced us in 1939. The youth of this country were ripe for any ism that wanted to use them, and neither the Liberal party nor the Conservative party had any policy to offset those conditions. It is true that Bennett set up slave camps where the jobless youth of this country worked for twenty cents a day; and both Liberals and Conservatives had trouble with the unemployed, first, in the Vancouver post office building and again in Regina. But neither one of the old parties had any policy to offset what in effect could have developed into revolutionary conditions in this country.

Then the war broke out, and the government very sensibly, and the opposition with a lot of reluctance as I remember it, decided that this system of free enterprise could not fight a war. Accordingly the government began to plan the economy of this country. They laid down certain control measures. They took control over basic materials and fixed prices for them, and decided upon the essentials that should be produced in this country. While we were doing that, and incidentally throwing away approximately 50 per cent of the national income in war materials, we raised the standard of living in Canada to about 50 per cent higher than it had ever been before, despite the fact that about one million of the youth of this country were out of production and into war, where Canada made a wonderful contribution.

Then, as soon as the war was over, Liberals and Conservatives began to vie with each other as to who were the greatest free enterprisers. Neither party believed in controls any longer. Controls must be taken off and the machinery of production must be handed back from responsible control to what I would call irresponsible control; because, make no mistake about it, you have controls in this country today exercised by controllers who are responsible to nobody except themselves. What amazed me in the house today was to hear the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and his lieutenants condemn the government for this report, because, as I remember it, ever since the war was over, they have been urging the government to remove this control and that control and to get away from subsidies and hand the machinery of production back to private enterprise. In their view, private enterprise will run the thing and the law of supply and demand will regulate prices. This group took the stand that if there was any time in the history of this country when we needed controls it was in the transition from war to peace. During the war it was relatively simple to handle controls. There was a national objective, a united people. The housewife was policing the stores. Controls were simple to administer. When the war was over and there was a backlog of savings and employment was high, the tendency was for those who were greedy and unscrupulous to siphon back the war savings and get everything they could out of the economy. That was when we needed rigid controls.

Who broke these controls? Who set off the spiral of inflation in this country? I say the government did. The government did that by acquiescing in the suggestion of the Conservatives who, from this side of the house, without any exceptions, urged them to discontinue controls. At that time we said in the house that the first increase in the price of a basic commodity was made when the government permitted a $12.50 a ton over-all increase in the price of basic steel. We said at that time the steel industry affected our whole economy. We said that price increase would be reflected in an increase in the price of farm commodities. We said it would cause an increase in the price of foodstuffs. Nevertheless, without any examination of the books of the Steel Company of Canada, that increase was permitted. In my opinion it broke the price ceilings in the country and made it impossible to administer controls any longer, because the government did not want them. The government must take responsibility for that, and the official opposition must take equal responsibility because they urged the government into it. The only thing I am sorry for is that the government was so short-sighted as to fall in line with the suggestions and the urgings of the Conservative party.

Well, that is finished. One control after another came off. The government now has to admit, and I think the official opposition, if they are honest about the thing and wish to do something for the Canadian people, must admit also that the machine of private enterprise which they advocated, the law of supply and demand, the dependence on the honesty of the other fellow to do what is right by his fellow man, have gone by the board. The evidence today, as indicated by the record of the price levels, shows that it cannot be done. Evidence was given before the prices committee that Canada Packers, for example, held back butter, created a shortage and got eleven cents a pound additional when they were prepared to release it and made themselves a couple of million dollars. That is business. There is no law against it. Nevertheless it created a hardship on the Canadian people.

I listened all afternoon to my hon. friends to my right criticizing the government. I have not yet heard them make any proposal as to what they would do. I challenge any one of them. I should not say that, because one is not permitted to challenge an hon. gentleman in the house.

Mr. HARTT: Not to a duel.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to hear one of them tell us what they would do if they were sitting over on that side of the house. While they have said the government has done this and that which have created hardships for the Canadian people they have not told us what they would do. They have no proposal. The fact of the matter is that they would have to do exactly what the government is doing, in order to maintain our economy as it is, because they believe in the system of free enterprise.

They talked about the C.C.F. They said the C.C.F. were visionary; they were this and that. I was surprised that the hon. member for Lake Centre had something to say about Saskatchewan.

Mr. MITCHELL: What about New Brunswick?

Mr. SINCLAIR: What about New Brunswick?

Mr. GILLIS: New Brunswick did exactly what I expected.

Mr. CASSELMAN, What about Ontario?

Mr. GILLIS: I do not want to waste the time of the house in talking about New Brunswick.

Mr. SINCLAIR: We would like to hear about it.

Mr. GILLIS: They did what I expected them to do; the poor, the uneducated, on relief, kept that way deliberately, subservient to the machine in power. That is the answer. They will wake up some time. We are not anxious about New Brunswick.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SINCLAIR: No wonder you lost if that is the language which you used there.

Mr. GILLIS: We did not lose a thing. We increased our popular vote by about 200 per cent. We are sneaking up on you, my hon. friend.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You had better get back to your text.

Mr. GILLIS: I had referred to the hon. member for Lake Centre. I have a lot of regard for him. I like to hear him talk. He gestures nicely. If I was ever tried for any criminal offence I think I would send all the way to Saskatchewan and bring him down if I was guilty. Of course, if I was being prosecuted and I was innocent I would get the Minister of Justice. I know the hon. member for Lake Centre would free me if I was guilty.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Go on.

Mr. GILLIS: As I was saying, I was surprised this afternoon to hear him make a case against Saskatchewan. In his dramatic way he said that in the province of Saskatchewan where they had the power they passed an act and allowed it to remain dormant for a year; they never put it into operation. The hon. member gave that answer in the house. I sat here a couple of months ago and I listened to the hon. member for Lake Centre make a speech. Of course it served its purpose at that time. He said the Saskatchewan provincial government had passed a price control act, but they knew they had no authority or no power to enforce it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, no such statement was made that they had no authority or power.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You had better get the gesture.

Mr. GILLIS: They had no power and they had no authority; it was a national matter; it was a matter that came within the purview of the federal government, and the Saskatchewan government were only kidding the people when they said they could enforce price control.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is what I said.

Mr. GILLIS: The hon. member was right.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That they were only kidding the people.

Mr. GILLIS: He was right at that time. They had no power to enforce that act. They tried to do something, though. They are pioneers.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: When did they bring it into effect?

Mr. GILLIS: They at least have the courage of their convictions. They passed the act. Then they went to the legal fraternity across the country and inquired into the validity of the act and the possibility of putting it into operation. The legal fraternity told them that they could not work it that way, that they could not fix prices in Saskatchewan.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the hon. member allow a question? Would he name one of the legal fraternity across the country who was consulted, because Mr. Douglas said just the opposite, that they would not bring it in?

Mr. SINCLAIR: And blame the federal government.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Who was consulted?

Mr. GILLIS: I do not want to give away state secrets in the house. It might embarrass my hon. friend if I were to name names, and therefore I am not going to do so. I know he would be the last one to expect me to do that. It would not be ethical professionally. What I am attempting to do, Mr. Speaker, is to show the house that rather than argue from their heart the necessity of getting something done with regard to the problems which are before the house, most of them are engaging in weasel words for the purpose of fooling the people in the country from whom they may be seeking votes. We in this group are not doing that.

Mr. HARTT: Tell us about the Tories.

Mr. GILLIS: If you will examine the record back to the inception of this party, you will find that the formula and the principles for which we stand today in this house are the principles that we stood for back in 1932 when the manifesto was first written.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. GILLIS: I like the hon. member for Kamloops. He is a young fellow with learning, but like the baby you are bringing up and trying to lead in the ways of life, he has to be spanked once in a while so that he may understand what you mean. The hon. member spoke in this debate and he read into the record what I regarded as a pipe-dream of his, because I believe the boy has too much intelligence to believe what he said.

Mr. FULTON: I thought that about you at one time.

Mr. GILLIS: I did not hear what he said.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, yes, you did.

Mr. GILLIS: I shall have to read it in Hansard tomorrow. What did he say?

An hon. MEMBER: Shout it out.

Mr. GILLIS: Did the hon. member for Kamloops say something?

Mr. FULTON: Yes, I said I thought that about you at one time.

Mr. GILLIS: There is nothing so funny about that. At that time you were able to think; apparently you have lost that ability. The thing that scares me about this party, and I mean it—

An hon. MEMBER: Which party?

Mr. GILLIS: The Tory party. They see a communist behind every bush. But let them not forget the lesson of George Drew. He, too, saw one behind every bush, with the result that today he is looking around for a seat. The people have smartened up to that kind of thing. My hon. friend says that the C.C.F. advocate the regimentation of labour.

An hon. MEMBER: You did that the other night.

Mr. GILLIS: Just a minute, my legalistic friend. Let me explain that to you. That matter has been put on the record of the house time and again. We are not afraid to say what we mean, but we refuse to allow you to put your interpretation on what we say.

Mr. TIMMINS: You answered the minister.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes. I have answered the minister a dozen times, and there is no misunderstanding between the minister and me on it. I have said this in the house a good many times for the benefit of my hon. and young friend the member for Kamloops, that organized labour in this country have no objection to wage controls if they are part of an over-all control system. The only thing they object to is the fixing of wages at sub-standard levels. That has been said in this house time and time again. For example, we would not allow you to fix in the hosiery business a wage rate of seventeen and a half cents an hour, as you have done under free enterprise. We would not allow you to draw zones, as you do in certain sections of the country, where there is a basic rate of twenty-five cents an hour or twenty-six cents an hour. We would not allow you to freeze wages at those levels.

An hon. MEMBER: Where are these places?

Mr. GILLIS: In parts of Quebec and in parts of Ontario.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Where in Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. GILLIS: Oh, definitely that is so, I do not want to start arguing with you—

Mr. HARTT: Not twenty-five cents, but zones exist in Quebec.

Mr. GILLIS: Take the hon. member who brought the girls over here from Europe, the hon. member for Beauce. That was put on the record. The trouble with most of you members is that you do not read Hansard.

Mr. LENNARD: Where in Ontario do those conditions exist?

Mr. GILLIS: I would refer you to the hon. member for Ontario who has just come in. He is a union organizer and he will give it to you section by section.

Mr. CHARLTON: You give it to us now; you are making the speech.

Mr. GILLIS: Of course I am. I am making the speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. GILLIS: I refuse to become school-teacher to a lot of members who do not read something for themselves.

Mr. HARTT: Do not be so modest.

Mr. GILLIS: I mean in the Conservative party.

Mr. HARTT: Now you can go on.

Mr. GILLIS: As I was pointing out to the hon. member for Kamloops, that is the position we have always taken in the matter of controls, and he speaks of "directed labour". I said to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) on his estimates, just as I said it in 1940, 1941 and 1942, since I have given considerable thought to the subject, it is much better for the employment services of the country to have a placement service whereby the unemployed in any given section of the country may be able to go in and check with the placement officers in connection with unemployment insurance as to where jobs may be available in the country.

Mr. FULTON: Will you not admit that that is different from directed labour in the sense in which that term is generally accepted?

Mr. GILLIS: That is exactly what I said the other night, but you interpreted that to mean directed labour.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not what you said the other night.

Mr. GILLIS: I am saying now what I said then, but you quote a couple of sentences out of their context when they serve your purpose.

Mr. FULTON: Quote the whole thing.

Mr. GILLIS: I have Hansard on my desk, but one is not allowed to quote from a debate in the same session. I also said that employers needing certain types of workers should put their requirements before those officers. Do hon. members know there are hundreds of young men today running from one part of the country to the other looking for work? There is work available for them in some sections, but they cannot find it. They do not know how to get it. Many young fellows have visited me in Ottawa in the last month, and I could dig up information as to where they might go and obtain employment.

Mr. FULTON: There is no objection to that.

Mr. GILLIS: You objected to it this afternoon and tried to imply that, as far as the C.C.F. are concerned, they were advocating directed labour and all that kind of nonsense.

With regard to the report itself, when the proposal was made to set up a committee the C.C.F. took the position that it should not be set up, that it was the responsibility of parliament to do something about price levels. Our view was that this was our job in the House of Commons, and we voted against the setting up of a committee. Nevertheless we bowed to the will of the majority, and when the House of Commons decided that a committee would be set up we appointed members to serve on it. Those members took their place in the committee and discussed the question during the deliberations of the committee. The report of the committee was brought into the house and our assumption is that it is merely another report. We believe the report will be tabled in the House of Commons and relegated to the archives. I hope it will not be, but that has been the history of past reports.

[Mr. Gillis.]

We have tried to amend the report, asking the house to refer it back to the committee. We have sought to have the committee revived for the purpose of amending the report by doing certain specific things immediately, such as the reimposition of the excess profits tax and some measure of controls and the establishing of subsidies. Our proposal was ruled out of order. We are in a position now where we are faced with a vote on this report, and I will say this about it. I have read the report and, if it means what it says, there is a certain amount of meat in it. If the tabling of the report means that the government will take this report and do something about the fourteen recommendations made by the committee, all of which are good if they are acted upon—though we are still suspicious that they will not be acted upon—and if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the other ministers charged with the responsibility for government policy intend to do these three things, as far as this group is concerned we will vote for the report. There is something in it; it is a step in the right direction. We are assuming that the government will do something about it, and on those grounds we are quite prepared to support the recommendations of the committee.

I want to conclude by making an appeal to the official opposition. I do not know whether they mean what they say; but this afternoon, for example, the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell)—another man for whom I have a great deal of respect, and of whom I knew something a good many years ago, when he did not know anything about me, back when he was with the Eastern Trust Company—made a statement in reply to a question by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine). He said that profits were legitimate, that there was nothing wrong with them; and he quoted a book he had read, the author of which I know. The hon. member said if it is fair for labour to ask for certain increased wage rates, which is profit, then it is as reasonable for capital to have a profit on its investment.

The two points are entirely separate and distinct. Invested capital has no right to earn profit. Wages is something that accrues from the sweat and labour of a human being who stands for eight or ten hours a day wrestling with the soil or with the tools of production. That person requires at least sufficient to maintain a home and provide for a family. At no time in the history of this world has that labourer, who wrings a living either from the soil or from the machinery of production, been overpaid. He has never been in the position where he could maintain his family in decency and comfort, let alone save something. To compare him with the man who has a million or two million dollars to invest, and who can sit back in comfort in a luxurious home and draw from investments the equivalent of the wages paid that labourer, is simply not a fair comparison. That is unearned increment.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does my hon. friend realize that all I was doing was quoting to the best of my recollection—and I think I was accurate—from this book what one might call a philosophical comparison of profit and wages? I might add, though I did not say so this afternoon, that the author is now a labour peer. I imagine he is an out-and-out socialist.

Mr. GILLIS: That is quite all right; very likely he has revised his views. I could name you fellows who wrote books on communism ten years ago, and who today are Conservatives. No doubt the person who wrote that book honestly believed he was making a fair comparison; but tonight I am talking about the answer my hon. friend gave to the question asked by the hon. member for Cariboo. There is nothing philosophical about it; this business of wages versus profits is a straight material question.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me tell the government that if they were prepared to do three things I am sure all the members of this group would be prepared to go out and fight with them, and help them to get the public to understand. First, I think they have to re-establish the excess profits tax. The profits of practically every corporation in Canada today indicate that they have more than they are entitled to. Then, if you took the money you extracted by means of the excess profits tax—and mind you, no one would go on relief because you took it; no one would be hurt as a result—you could apply it to subsidies on essential commodities such as foodstuffs, on which ninety per cent of the income of the workers is spent today, with prices at present levels. Then you should revise the policy announced by the government, and re-establish the machinery of the wartime prices and trade board. You could call it what you like. You need not call it the wartime prices and trade board; you might call it a stabilization organization, or anything else. Do these three things and, in my opinion, within the next six or eight months—it will not happen overnight—the government will be able to get this country on some kind of even keel.

You will have opposition from over here among the Tory party; make no mistake about that. There will be plenty of opposition from them, because in my opinion—and I do not mean any disrespect to hon. members, because I think they are all pretty good fellows—they are managed from the outside by those who want a continuation of the machine that exploits the people of this country. That machine is gone, and the government should recognize it. We will support this report, and we expect the government to do something about it. Then, when you get in hot water with the Tories and big business on the outside, I think we shall be able to explain to the Canadian people the necessity for the action you have taken, whether or not it means anything to us politically.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I consider it perfectly fair for the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) to express any criticism he wishes of those in this party, of our mentality or anything of that kind; but I think he should stop short of accusing us of virtual dishonesty, as he has accused us. I would regard it as dishonest to be in this house representing a constituency, and to be managed by anyone. I should think he would be man enough to withdraw a charge of dishonesty.

Mr. GILLIS: When I made the remarks I did—

Mr. GREEN: You went too far.

Mr. GILLIS: No. I said there was no disrespect meant to any hon. members in this house. What I meant was that the machine of free enterprise—

Mr. BOUCHER: You did not mean a word of what you said.

Mr. GILLIS: This morning, when you were trying to talk about the capital of Ottawa, I thought it would get through a lot quicker if you sat down and kept your mouth shut. This is what I meant. Hon. members in this house who represent the system of free enterprise know they are the advocates in this house of every corporation, every trust company and every bank in this country which also believe in that system. So you have no alternative, if you believe in it, but to go through with that philosophy; just as we believe in another philosophy and bring the dictates of our convention into this house and try to put them across. That is what I meant.

Mr. FULTON: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in the course of his remarks the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) accused me of distorting a statement he made on an earlier occasion. Since he has made that accusation, I think I should have the privilege of reading his words, so that the house may see whether or not I distorted them. I refer to pages 5821 and 5822 of Hansard, where the hon. member was talking about the unemployment service offices during the war.

Mr. GILLIS: On a point of order—

Mr. FULTON: I do not think there can be a point of order on a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member wishes to raise a point of order.

Mr. FULTON: My understanding is that a point of order cannot be raised during a question of privilege.

Mr. GILLIS: I am raising a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Cape Breton South to wait until the hon. member for Kamloops has completed his question of privilege.

Mr. GILLIS: With all due respect, if the hon. member is permitted to quote from this debate, according to the rules of the house, then I reserve the right to read what he does not read in connection with that statement. He is not in order to quote from that debate.

Mr. FULTON: I shall be very happy to have the hon. member do so. My question of privilege, which is not part of the debate at the present time, is that the hon. member has said that on a previous occasion I distorted his words. I said I thought I should have the right to read those words, so that the house may have an opportunity to judge whether I am correct or not.

As I say, the words are found at pages 5821 and 5822 of Hansard. The words to which I refer are at a point where the hon. member, having described the useful functions of the employment service in wartime, said:

> The office performed a useful function, because employers were obligated to register their requirements, and selective service had the right to direct employees to employment. This condition no longer obtains. I think it is a function in the unemployment set-up which at some time in the future will have to be restored.

Then the Minister of Labour asked the hon. member this question:

> Do I understand the hon. member correctly, that he believes there will have to be a restoration of direction of labour?

And the hon. member replied:

> Absolutely. If that is not done, the minister cannot stand in the house and tell me or other hon. members that he has a placement branch in his unemployment insurance set-up. He has no such thing.

If the hon. member wishes, I would be perfectly willing to quote the rest of the passage. But I say that on that direct answer to a direct question which the Minister of Labour asked him if he understood correctly, the hon. member said, "Absolutely"—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FULTON: There was no distortion in my remark.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member cannot debate the point.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to say this, that so far as I am concerned what he read is exactly what I said tonight; and I stand by it.

Mr. SPEAKER: When the minister speaks he will close the debate.

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is only appropriate that, as chairman of this committee, I should conclude the debate and try to meet as many as possible of the points which seem to me to be of special significance and which have been raised by those who have participated in the debate thus far.

I am sure the house would think I was only doing my duty if I were to pay tribute to all the members of the prices committee, regardless of party, for the great industry and diligence they have manifested since they were assigned the task given them in the middle of February last. Every member of the committee is deserving of the thanks of the House of Commons and of the people of Canada for the work they have tried to do in connection with this extremely difficult problem. And in paying tribute to them, I think it is only fair to include those agencies, such as press and radio, which have made known to the public the character and nature of the evidence being adduced by the committee through the interrogation carried out by two counsel who, as the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) said, have rendered distinguished service to the committee.

In assessing the merits of the committee, I think it is important to bear in mind why it was set up. It was set up primarily for the purpose of enabling members of the House of Commons to examine government officers, trade witnesses, and others, in order to see what light could be obtained in regard to this very difficult problem. It was basically a fact-finding committee and anyone who suggests, as did the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), that while this committee sat there was a rise in prices, and that the committee failed to do its job because it did not check inflationary tendencies, certainly is attributing to a parliamentary committee a power which any reasonable man in good judgment knows lies outside the scope and reach of a parliamentary committee. No one for a moment attempted to use this committee as a means of reducing the cost of living.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. MARTIN: The committee was used as a basis for determining what were the facts and to suggest remedial measures. Hon. gentlemen and others in the country said that there were profiteers in the country, that there were people who were hoarding, that there were people who were making profits away beyond any reasonable level; and it was because of the temper of the public mind and of parliament at that time that this committee was set up to try objectively to ascertain exactly what the situation was and what suggested steps the house and the government could take.

Having said that, I believe the fact is that the committee has had, as the hon. member for Cariboo said, a salutary effect. Among those witnesses called before the committee was Mrs. Marshall, head of the Canadian association of consumers. Speaking for thousands of women throughout this country, what was the nature of her evidence? She said that she looked upon this committee and, indeed, so did the members of her organization, as a fact-finding body that could, independent of that purpose, have a salutary effect. Indeed she said that at the time, when we were examining the cost of bread, it did have a salutary effect; for, while we were examining the question of the rise in bread prices, the evidence with regard to the ten-cent loaf of bread did have the effect of encouraging throughout the country a wider interest in and a greater amount of purchases of the lower-priced bread than of the higher-priced. This, together with the evidence of Doctor Pett of the Departmental of National Health and Welfare, as to the equivalent or better value from a nutritional standpoint of the ten-cent bread—again using the language of Mrs. Marshall—has had a salutary effect.

While the committee was still sitting, we had one gentlemen who has a series of stores in the city of Montreal announce to the committee that, because of its request, and because of the disclosure of his profit and loss figures, he proposed to reduce the cost of bread.

Then there was the evidence of the gentleman who said that if the committee were not sitting he would raise the price of bread; and there was another witness, during the later stages of the sittings of the committee who said, with regard to textile goods, that if the committee were not sitting he would raise the prices of some of the articles manufactured by his company.

And so one could go on to indicate that there were salutary effects which emanated from the kind of information disclosed and the realization that corporations and others would be brought before the committee to give an account of the price situation as it applied to their particular business. But it is not fair to suggest, as did the leader of the opposition, that this report brands industry as a whole. I call the attention of the leader of the opposition to conclusion 14 of the report, in which the committee says:

> Since the war, industry in Canada has been making commendable efforts to relieve these shortages.

Where industry had done its job, we were not hesitant to say it had done its job. There is no judgment on industry as a whole which would justify the leader of the opposition, or anyone else, in saying that this committee conceived of industry in its entirety as acting contrary to the public interest.

We approached our task, and it was a difficult one, as men who, regardless of political affiliations, were anxious to know the facts of the case, in the knowledge that the possession of such information would be of great value. The house will recall that the committee did not delay in beginning its sittings because, no sooner had the house passed the resolution authorizing its establishment, than within a few hours the committee held its first session. I said to the committee at our first meeting:

> The character of this committee will be determined by the members of this committee, and I am sure that they will not permit it to be used as a smoke-screen. They will not permit it to be a means of delaying action. In saying that the facts must be exposed, we should bear in mind that we are not a white-washing committee; nor, on the other hand, should this committee be used to "smear" anyone. This is a fact-finding committee. Our findings will, we trust, have a salutary effect, but no one who has acted fairly in setting prices need fear this investigation. But we should act without fear or favour, and I know that we will.

I know every hon. member of this committee will agree that, after allowance is made for the odd exception here and there, exceptions to which we all in some way or another contributed, that was the underlying principle by which, for the most part and generally speaking, every member of the committee sought to meet the assignment that had been given.

I can only say that perhaps the best judges of the work of the committee are the members of the committee themselves. While the hon. member for Cariboo does not think we have gone far enough in the conclusions, he said in this house the other night—I compare his words with those of some others in his group—that this committee was a good committee; that it did the job assigned to it and, in so far as the conclusions met in part his point of view, he could not help but give it his support. I am not using any part of the tributes or estimates made by any hon. member on this side of the house; I am taking the comments of the hon. member for Cariboo, who, I think everyone on the committee will agree, was an extremely diligent member.

What did the committee basically conclude? The committee had a whole series of witnesses before it. We had the evidence of the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board, of the governor of the Bank of Canada, of the head of the bureau of statistics, of the commissioner of the Combines Investigation Act; we had a series of other officials of the government, and I could not help but think, as those gentlemen were giving their evidence, of the plea made by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) in this house a year ago when he asked the government to set up a committee to investigate and interrogate officers of the public service on this and related questions. This government and this house gave the very thing the hon. gentleman asked for, and it is as a result, in part, of what officers of the crown testified, that we are reporting to this House of Commons.

After the evidence was taken, we met and drew up our report and tried to arrive at what we thought would be the kind of commentary we should make about the problem generally and what we as a committee thought might be done to alleviate the severity of the problem.

I think the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has taken a most unusual position in this debate. All through its deliberations he said that the committee was futile, that it was a waste of time, although I must say that he attended regularly and made valuable contributions toward some of its results. But I do not think I overstate the case when I say that he and his colleagues repeatedly took the position that the whole thing was a waste of time.

Yet when we came to the point in the final hours of the last meetings of the committee to try to see what we could recommend to our colleagues in this House of Commons and to the government of this country, what did we find? We found that not only was the hon. gentleman the only member of his party present when the conclusions were discussed and decided upon—

Mr. FLEMING: That was just at the last of the proceedings, remember.

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. MARTIN: I shall come to that in a moment. We found that the hon. member was the only member of his party present, and he voted in a wholesale way against every recommendation made, many of which he himself has espoused in this debate and many of which he himself urged in this house last February when the resolution to set up the committee was being discussed.

That cannot be said of all hon. members of the committee. The hon. member for Cariboo was the only member of his party who was present during the discussion of the report and its conclusions. The report was read carefully, various members taking part in the reading, and afterwards there was much discussion about it. When we came to the conclusions, the hon. member for Cariboo joined with other members of the committee on the government side and voted in favour of the conclusions and of the report. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl) and the hon. member for Eglinton voted against the report and its conclusions.

I propose tonight to analyse these conclusions in order to see what the opposition to them means and how that opposition may be interpreted, so that the party to which my hon. friend belongs can be placed in a proper light in the judgment of the people of this country. I must now come to the speech of the leader of the opposition. He said that some of the conclusions were good, but he implied that he proposes to vote against the report.

I do not want to do injustice to the speech of the leader of the opposition. When he speaks he speaks for a political party, and I think it is only fair that I should pay particular attention to what he says, even at the expense of overlooking what the hon. member for Eglinton said in his speech. First of all, the leader of the opposition referred to some of the conclusions as an ash-can group of conclusions. I wonder what conclusions he refers to as ash-can? The public of this country will want to know from the hon. gentleman who has criticized the government for its price policy what conclusions he regards as being so unimportant as to term them ash-can conclusions.

What disturbs my hon. friends immediately opposite are not the conclusions themselves, but that they were brought in by the members on the government side of the committee and not by the members of their own party on the committee. There was nothing that surprised the hon. member for Eglinton more than to learn that the government members had set out conclusions which it wanted the committee to consider.

Mr. FLEMING: They were all out of order.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend says they were all out of order.

Mr. FLEMING: Of course they were.

Mr. MARTIN: If that is the only basis upon which he opposes them and if he wants to put them in order so that he can vote on them, that is a consideration which I would certainly want to entertain.

The leader of the opposition calls this a most inadequate document. In what respect is it inadequate? Are the conclusions inadequate? Are they correct? Do they offer suggestions that might help to alleviate the situation? The only contribution the leader of the opposition has made is that he has found some economic theory which he thinks will give some alleviation with regard to the present rise in prices. What is that theory? He suggests that budgeting for a surplus is an anti-inflationary policy. He suggests that the purchasing power of the nation, without any relation to the availability of goods and services, is something which, if expanded without any thought of external conditions, will have the effect of causing a drop in prices. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition ignores completely the findings made by the committee based upon evidence given to it by those who, by training and knowledge, are in a special position to point the way; he pays no attention to them at all.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the expansion of credit would reduce prices. I said exactly the opposite.

Mr. MARTIN: What I said was that my hon. friend said that if you simply expanded the purchasing power of the nation without any relation to the availability of goods and services prices would go down.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not say anything of the kind. I said exactly the opposite.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend said so many opposite things it is hard to know exactly what he did say.

Then he spoke of the cost of living rising in this country. No one denies that. But he has failed to recognize that it is due basically and significantly, as I am sure on reflection he will now agree, to the rise of external prices, the increase in the costs of production, the expansion of purchasing power in relation to goods and services available, and to a number of other supplementary factors—

Mr. BRACKEN: Including government policies.

Mr. MARTIN: —whose effect is only to a certain extent appreciable. He repeats his statement about taxes and so on. He is again saying, in a way that perhaps he does not realize, that if you expand the purchasing power of the nation without any regard to the availability of goods and services, you will cause a reduction in the level of prices.

Mr. BRACKEN: I said exactly the opposite.

Mr. MARTIN: I am not talking now about the general price level. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the relationship between a high tax level and purchasing power is such as not to require further comment from me.

An hon. MEMBER: You have made that as clear as mud.

Mr. MARTIN: I cannot furnish the hon. gentleman with understanding. The whole argument of the leader of the opposition tonight was based upon the supposed fact that we were perhaps the only country in the world with no trading relationships with other countries. He forgets that the national income of Canada is to the extent of thirty-five per cent dependent upon our ability to sell goods to other countries. He neglected to make any reference to our economic interdependence with other countries. He might have compared us with countries with an economy comparable to our own, such as the United States, for example. He might have given to this house the cost of living in the United States as compared with Canada; but, since he has not done so, I will give him figures which I believe are revealing, because the United States economy and our own lend themselves to a comparison.

The total cost of living index from April 1 to May 1 in Canada was 152·5 and in the United States 169·3. Let us analyse those figures in terms of those factors which contribute to the cost of living.

The index for foods in Canada stood at 189·0, and in the United States, 207·9; rentals in Canada, 120·4, and in the United States, 116·3; fuel and light in Canada, 122·0; and in the United States, 130·7; clothing in Canada, 173·3, and in the United States, 196·4; home furnishings in Canada, 161·9, and in the United States, 194·7; miscellaneous in Canada, 122·9, and in the United States, 147·8. Let me repeat that the total cost of living index in Canada for the period mentioned is 152·5 and, in the United States, 169·3.

Mr. HOMUTH: Now compare the taxation in the two countries.

Mr. MARTIN: Assuming that the taxes in Canada were higher, and that is not the case—

Mr. HOMUTH: It is the case.

Mr. MARTIN: —on the basis of the argument of the leader of the opposition, our cost of living figures are low. Surely that, put alongside the main part of his argument tonight, reveals its inadequacy and how little it contributes to a solution of this problem.

My hon. friend likewise forgot that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) did take certain steps to reduce taxation. He took the sales tax off electricity used for domestic purposes; the duty was taken off tea and coffee, and recently the sales tax was removed from canned foods.

Mr. HOMUTH: What a tremendous concession to give to the people of this country!

Mr. MARTIN: He forgot to mention that.

Mr. BRACKEN: I stated that in my remarks.

Mr. MARTIN: Then I did not get it. If the hon. member did state it I am emphasizing it once more. What my hon. friend did not do, however, was to mention something that he continually forgets, for I have noted some of the speeches he has made in advocating social security measures. In one breath he will say that we must cut taxes, and in the next he outlines a program of promises that is exceeded by no other politician in this country. He has neglected to indicate that one of the reasons for the high tax level in this country is the social services that are being given to our people. He forgets to mention the sums of money spent on old age pensions. He forgets to mention the amount of money spent, and properly so, in connection with the veterans charter. He forgets to mention the $267 million that we are spending on family allowances this year alone, bringing assistance each month to three and a half million children, representing one and a half million families. He forgets to mention that the government is bringing in a program of national health that will cost this country in one year a sum of money greater than what has been spent on health by the federal government in the past twenty-seven years.

Mr. FLEMING: Shame on this government which has been in power all that time.

Mr. MARTIN: That surely puts in proper perspective the argument offered by the leader of the opposition tonight. But assuming that he was right; does he still believe that the conclusions put forward by the committee are conclusions which, while their generality is admitted, should not be supported?

[Mr. Homuth.]

Mr. HOMUTH: The committee's conclusions—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. If hon. members desire to put questions and the minister is agreeable to answering them, they may be put, but other interruptions are out of order.

Mr. HOMUTH: The minister should not be allowed to get away with assertions which are not in accordance with the facts. He said the conclusions put forward by the committee—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MARTIN: Two hon. gentlemen spoke from the C.C.F. group this afternoon, and one of them gave me the impression that he was not going to share the view which had been given to the house by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and others. Because he is not in the house tonight, I want to quote a statement which appears in Saturday's Windsor Star, attributed to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), to indicate how I think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Young) should unhesitatingly vote on this resolution. I refer to the hon. member for Moose Jaw, who is not in his seat. He had to be out of town tonight, and on that account could not, as a member of the committee, give his view with regard to the committee's deliberations, and I read to the house a statement of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, as follows:

W. Ross Thatcher, C.C.F., Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, found himself in a position yesterday in which he felt it necessary to make a statement with regard to the prices committee report.

A member of the Martin committee on prices, Mr. Thatcher was one of many who thought the committee report would be a device to whitewash the government. For the past four days he had been preparing a minority report against what he thought would be the findings and recommendations. Then he found out he wouldn't have an opportunity to present his minority report in the Commons, so he re-wrote it as a speech.

When the prices committee was going over the final draft of the report tabled yesterday in the house by the chairman, Hon. Paul Martin, Mr. Thatcher remained in his own office to put the finishing touches on the speech he intended to deliver in the Commons today.

Then word came to him of the 14 recommendations. His C.C.F. colleague on the committee, William Irvine, Cariboo, B.C., told him he had voted for the report.

"So would I if I had been there", Mr. Thatcher told the Star. It's a good report, and immediately I telephoned Paul Martin to tell him so. Moreover, I pitched my speech manuscript into the wastepaper basket.

That was a frank statement from a member of the committee who had sat throughout its deliberations and who had made a contribution to the committee's work. Looking at the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt), who sat on that committee for four months, and who know of the evidence, I ask them to reconsider their position in the light of these conclusions. What are these conclusions? The first one recommends something which the hon. member for Eglinton recommended in this house last February. He said we should not have a parliamentary committee; what we should have is a commission of inquiry established, and let it do the job. Here we come along and recommend in conclusion 1:

That the government consider the immediate appointment of a commission under the Public Inquiries Act.

Did the hon. member for Eglinton support that conclusion in the committee? No. As the only member of his party present, he voted against the conclusion.

Take the second conclusion: the committee felt that while the combines investigation commission is doing a great job, his work could be accelerated and extended. Does the hon. member for Eglinton, does the leader of the opposition, sitting in this house, not agree with that conclusion? Does he think the combines commissioner should carry on just in the efficient way in which he is doing now and not have his work extended?

With regard to conclusion 3:

That the government amend the regulations of the appropriate legislation, if that be found necessary, so that immediate specific action can be taken where the evidence discloses flagrant cases of profiteering at the consumer's expense.

Does the leader of the opposition think that should not be done? In these cases where we know of unreasonable and excessive profit having an effect on price reduction, does he think we should do nothing about it? If my hon. friend refuses to vote for that conclusion there is no interpretation that we can place upon his act other than that he is against this recommendation.

Mr. FLEMING: Why did you not prosecute before now?

Mr. MARTIN: Take conclusion No. 5:

The government should give consideration to the desirability and practicability of restricting price rises by special taxation of unreasonable profits.

Do my hon. friends want the country to know they are opposed to that kind of resolution? Are they going to sit in their places and say that where we have evidence of unreasonable profits in relation to prices nothing should be done about it?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Why has no action been taken?

Mr. MARTIN: I ask him what he is going to do about it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Why have you not done something?

Mr. MARTIN: I will deal with that in a moment. I was referring to the leader of the opposition and not to the man who aspires to be leader of the opposition. I ask the leader of the opposition, does he say that the government should not give consideration to the desirability and the practicability of restricting price rises by special taxation of unreasonable profits?

Mr. FULTON: What does it mean?

Mr. MARTIN: With regard to conclusion 6, does he say that the federal government should not encourage a uniform system of business accounting, something recommended by the Canadian chamber of commerce? Does he recommend that we should not try to adopt measures that will give the public a better picture of what the profit and loss statement of companies is?

With regard to conclusion 7, does he say that nothing should be attempted with regard to the disclosure of inventory reserves?

Mr. HOMUTH: They are all futile.

Mr. MARTIN: Under the present tax structure, inventory reserves are properly dealt with by income tax, but the purposes of this conclusion is to give the public a better opportunity of knowing a company's true position. The hon. member for Eglinton will recall that in the committee we discovered inventory reserves of over $9,000,000 of one company, a fact that had never been known before to the public. Does the leader of the opposition say that the people of this country should not be given these facts? If he votes against conclusion 7, that is the interpretation which the country will take with regard to his vote.

Mr. FLEMING: A crazy interpretation.

Mr. MARTIN: My hon. friend says it is a crazy interpretation. That is the kind of contribution he has made throughout this debate.

The leader of the opposition has been arguing that the government should remove certain excise taxes. He has gone up and down the length and breadth of this country, failing to mention why the Minister of Finance imposed these taxes. The committee has considered this measure.

Mr. HOMUTH: And so has Louis Breithaupt of Waterloo North.

Mr. MARTIN: Here is what the committee says:

> The committee is of the opinion that the government should consider whether the time has not come to remove the special excise taxes on commodities in common use in Canada.

The committee says that the government should consider this conclusion. In the face of what he has said in this house and tonight and earlier in the country, is the leader of the opposition going to sit mute with regard to conclusion 9?

With regard to conclusion 10, is my hon. friend going to say that the government should not give close consideration to the question of rent controls? Is my hon. friend going to say that if certain modifications in this control can be made to meet individual hardship it should not be studied and considered? Let me repeat again that, by refusing to vote, the leader of the opposition and all the gang behind him will be—

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Prime Minister would not use a term such as that. We will not vote for it now.

Mr. MARTIN: I will not use the word "gang"; I will use the words "small group".

In his speech the leader of the opposition quite properly dealt with the question of production. He said the basic answer to the problem which faced the committee and which faces the house in this resolution is the question of trying to stimulate production. What does the committee's report say about that? This is what it says:

> The committee wishes to emphasize the fact that increased production at home and abroad is the only permanent solution to the problem of high prices. The present shortage of commodities is world wide, forcing world prices to high levels, which in turn are forcing Canadian prices upward.
> Since the war, industry in Canada has been making commendable efforts to relieve these shortages. The great amount of goods that Canada is contributing to the total world supply will aid substantially in relieving the present pressure on world prices, and in turn, will ease inflationary pressures in Canada.

Surely the hon. gentleman believes that, and, if he does, his responsibility is to give support to his belief.

The last thing I have to say, Mr. Speaker, is this. Hon. gentlemen opposite had an opportunity in the committee of disagreeing with these resolutions. They had an opportunity of amending these resolutions. They had an opportunity of offering alternative resolutions. All they did was to oppose the resolutions, proposing nothing in return. One hon. member said, "I haven't got time to deal with these resolutions; I am going to bed". That is exactly what happened.

Mr. MERRITT: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MARTIN: I did not name the hon. gentleman, but he identifies himself.

Mr. MERRITT: Mr. Speaker, I was the member of the committee who went to bed at one o'clock. The minister would not wish to leave the impression with the house, which he knows is not so, that I said I had not time to deal with it.

Mr. MARTIN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not go to bed after all. This committee, Mr. Speaker, has seriously met the task which was assigned to it. It has made a serious study of the problem, and I commend its terms and purposes to this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: On division.

Motion (Mr. Martin) agreed to on division.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The item before the committee is 298, national revenue.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): The item, Mr. Chairman, is 297, taxation division, general administration. When we were last discussing questions under item 297, a number of inquiries were made to which I promised a reply. During the discussion of farmers' returns, some hon. members asked about the number of inspection officials in the prairie provinces. This information, which is now available, indicates that there are eighty assessors operating in Alberta, seventy-nine in Saskatchewan and fifty in Manitoba. The number of assessors of all kinds operating in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba is: Alberta, 266; Saskatchewan, 213; Manitoba, 201. The total number of assessors employed by the department throughout Canada is 2,200.

A second question had to do with returns filed by farmers. In connection with returns by farmers, information was asked as to the number of returns filed in the three prairie provinces as well as the amount of taxes assessed farmers in those provinces. As of June 16, 1948, the number of farmers who filed returns was: Manitoba, 26,278; Saskatchewan, 49,490;

Alberta, 42,075. The total number of farmers who filed returns throughout Canada was 190,858.

The latest tabulation of tax assessment is for the year 1946 and is as follows: Manitoba, taxable 6,780, tax paid $1,265,000; Saskatchewan, taxable 13,890, tax paid, $3,299,000; Alberta, taxable 10,731, tax paid $2,570,000. For the whole of Canada, 40,387 farmers were taxable and paid a gross amount of $9,843,000.

In connection with another inquiry with reference to the opening of safety boxes for the purpose of investigation, I wish to inform the house that the department is without authority to examine a taxpayer's safety deposit box without a search warrant or a court order, and as a matter of practice the department also asks the taxpayer or his representative to be present at the time the safety deposit box is opened.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Were any opened without search warrants? That is the question.

Mr. McCANN: The answer is no.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is not the information I have.

Mr. McCANN: The hon. member for Lake Centre also asked a question with reference to the limit of $400 which the dependent could earn without affecting the exemption of the taxpayer. On March 18, 1942, this limit was established under authority of section 75, subsection 2, of the Income War Tax Act, and all officers were advised accordingly. That is the section which gives the minister power to fix the amount.

The next question was by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, and had to do with assessments. I indicated that it was the hope of the department that eighteen months would see us on a current basis of assessment. This conclusion was based upon the fact that we now have on hand approximately 1,500,000 unassessed returns which were filed prior to April 30, 1947, as well as an estimated number of 3,800,000 returns for the last fiscal year, referred to as current. On the basis of maintaining the present rate of assessment of 350,000 returns a month, it is expected that at the end of eighteen months some 6,300,000 returns will have been assessed, which would place the department upon a current basis.

Another question was in connection with the dismissal of a certain number of employees of the Saskatoon office. The question was as to how many taxpayers' returns were involved in the case. Of some fifty returns investigated in this connection, approximately twelve were found to be implicated.

Mr. HLYNKA: When the minister's estimates were under consideration last Saturday I asked him in regard to the years 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944, as applied to farmers in connection with income tax. From 1930 to 1939 the farmers of western Canada were selling their products at below the cost of production. The government did not advise the farmers that they would be expected to file returns for 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944; and for that reason the farmers did not keep their books and accounts. Now that they are being asked to file these returns, they are not in a position to know what their expenditures were. In view of these facts, would the minister give favourable consideration to waiving the income tax for those years in connection with farmers who obviously are not in any position to pay the taxes which have been levied upon them under this net worth system which has been applied by the government?

As I said last Saturday, I believe the minister would do a good stroke of business if he did not require these farmers to file net worth returns for those years. I pointed out also that it was unfair, after the government had allowed this matter to slide for so long, to come along a few years later and ask the farmers to produce their books and accounts and, if they failed to do so, to apply this unjust net worth system. I feel that the minister, the department and the government are making a mistake and are really treating the farmers unjustly in adopting this method of collecting taxes for the years I have mentioned. Will the minister give consideration to my request?

Mr. McCANN: We have no authority to take such action as the hon gentleman has suggested, nor has the minister any discretion in the matter. If there are cases where undue hardship would result, action could be taken by the governor in council.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to ask the minister another question in reference to the refundable portion of the tax. He has already stated that the total refundable portion will be paid next year. Has the department given any consideration to cases of taxpayers who are indebted to the government for income tax, perhaps as far back as 1945? They still have coming the refundable portion of their tax, which is more than sufficient to meet their indebtedness. The department is holding that refundable portion at two per cent interest. When that portion is repaid, according to the minister, it is applied to the indebtedness of the taxpayer, but interest at eight per cent is charged on arrears of taxes.

Has the minister considered, first, making the refundable portion payable at once where there are extenuating circumstances, for example where a person may have to go into hospital for a major operation? Could that be done? In the second place, could the minister not apply the refundable portion of the taxes to the arrears now? You have had it all the time; and could it not be applied to the arrears, so that interest would not accumulate and eat up most of the portion which otherwise would be refunded?

Mr. McCANN: Again that is a question of authority, and there is no authority for it.

Mr. GILLIS: By regulation?

Mr. McCANN: No, there is no regulation.

Mr. GILLIS: Could you not make one?

Mr. McCANN: It is set out in the statute. The refundable portion of the 1943 tax is payable in 1949. The refundable portion was collected for only half the year 1944. Ordinarily that would be payable in 1950, but in order to save work and expense it has been announced that the refundable portion of the 1943 tax and the refundable portion for the half year 1944 will be payable together in March, 1949. There are two exceptions: people who are sixty-five years of age, who have an income of less than $5,000 a year, and to wind up an estate. These are two separate items. We have the amount owing, the amount of tax unpaid, and the interest charged. The other item has to do with the refundable portion. We will keep our obligation to the taxpayer and see that he gets his money back on the date we promise; and, as far as 1944 is concerned, he will get it back a year earlier than was previously expected.

Mr. GILLIS: The minister did not answer my first question. I asked if the refundable portion of the tax could not be made available where there were extenuating circumstances. I mentioned the case where a major operation might be necessary, where it is delayed because the money is not available.

Mr. McCANN: I am afraid if that were done the hospitals would be full in a very short time.

Mr. GILLIS: That would indicate that the people are sick.

Mr. McCANN: We have had all kinds of requests of this kind on compassionate grounds. Some are very appealing, and in some cases if it were possible I feel that I should like to do something. But it would upset the operation of the plans we have made. This refunding of 1,400,000 cheques is an enormous problem. We are still looking for fifty thousand of those people. We have used every means, but have been unable to locate them. We have used credit associations, who are accustomed to this business; we sent out postcards and advertised in the newspapers, just to have them tell us where they live, that there was money waiting for them. Fifty thousand people have not claimed their money; and from 1943 to 1948 over four hundred thousand had changed either their name or address or both. I can go this much farther, however, and say that my hon. friend's representations will be brought before the government. If the regulations are changed we shall certainly administer them.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask the minister the reason for one regulation, as it affects a farmer who, because of age, has retired and leased his land. The man who operates the farm is allowed to average his income over three years, while the farmer who has retired is not allowed to do that, despite the fact that his income is just as variable as that of the operator of the farm. The retired man is dependent upon that income. I understand that he is not allowed to average it over the period allowed to the operator. What is the reasoning behind that?

Mr. McCANN: The reason is simple. He is a retired farmer, one who has given up that occupation. He is living on income.

Mr. WRIGHT: But his income is just as uncertain as that of the operator of the farm. His income is dependent upon production and prices, and it should be given the same treatment by way of averaging. It is income derived from the farm and is just as variable. In one year he may receive a good income, in the year of a good crop and a good price; but in the next year, with no crop, he has no income. His position is just as serious as that of the operator, in those circumstances.

Mr. McCANN: Hon. members should keep in mind that our department is entirely administrative. The question the hon. member has just brought up might well have been discussed in the debate on the budget or in the debate on the Income Tax Act. As it is in the statute, we administer it. There is no discretion given.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would the minister bring the matter to the attention of the proper government department, because it is working a hardship in western Canada where men who are retired depend upon the incomes from their farms? Because of our variations in weather and crop conditions, this works a hardship upon such men in some instances.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am not concerned about this year's income in the Fraser valley. We have none. I should like to know from the minister what steps are being taken by the government to write off or to delay collections for arrears which, in the opinion of the department, may be due from farmers in the Fraser valley. They have no income this year, and apparently they will have no revenue coming from the government. What steps are being taken, either to write off or to delay the collections of arrears which may be due?

Mr. McCANN: We did make the concession—I will not claim it is very much—of extending the time for making returns. But no consideration has yet been given to the matter of writing off the taxes of the residents of that region.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask the minister whether, prior to dissolution, or whatever you call it, in a day or two, his department will give consideration to writing those taxes off, without interest? If not, why not?

Mr. McCANN: The department of itself has no power to do so. I shall bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the government.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Thank you. I presume along with it will be the minister's recommendation that it be granted?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Have any members of the inspection staff used in Saskatchewan last year been replaced?

Mr. McCANN: As the hon. member knows, in connection with the Saskatoon incident some of them in Saskatchewan were discharged. Those people have been replaced, and we are continually adding to our staff when we get qualified people.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What about the Regina office? Has there been a replacement there?

Mr. McCANN: The same applies to Regina. There have been no dismissals there, but we are continually adding to our staff at that point. Men are being promoted to that type of work as they are required.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister give the committee any figure as to the cost of collecting this income tax? He gave the figures for the various provinces. One figure of $21,000,000 was given. What is the cost of collecting that $9,843,000?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I should think that question might more properly be asked under item 299. We are now on item 297.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The minister did give figures with respect to the cost of collecting farm income tax in three provinces. I should like to have the corresponding cost of collection. If the question is answered on this item it need not be asked on the next one.

Mr. McCANN: We do not segregate the cost of collection from people in different occupations. I can give the general cost of collecting a dollar. But that is an average figure. Statistics are not kept of how much it costs to collect farmers' taxes, or doctors' taxes or lawyers' taxes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But you have the average?

Mr. McCANN: The cost of collection in the prairie provinces is 1·87 per cent of the amount collected.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask a general question with regard to organization. May I say in advance that I do not speak critically; I am just asking for information. I believe the minister said there were 18,000 employed by his department.

Mr. McCANN: Yes; in customs and excise there are about 6,000, and in the other branch, 12,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The problem of organizing 18,000 people is a formidable one. I once had something to do with organizing five or six hundred, and I thought that was heavy enough. It seems to me that, with an organization as big as that, it is humanly impossible to be sure of having a continuous scrutiny which will bring efficiency, unless somehow or another you are able to get minds from outside to survey it. In business we were able to compare things with people from the United States, and we received many useful suggestions from different practices followed there.

Is there any way, through correspondence with other schemes in the United States or the United Kingdom, or wherever you like, whereby the department is able to get fresh minds looking in from the outside? I do not care if you have supermen; they will not jump out of their skins in critical judgment of what they themselves are doing. Another man from outside could criticize.

Mr. McCANN: The matter referred to is continually under review. We made comparisons with the United States and Great Britain. In connection with tax agreements, we hear from Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and from the United States, and get information from high-ranking officials. The whole thing has been the matter of discussion between top-ranking officials in the departments in those places, and myself.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is that a matter of making tax conventions or of discussing principles of organization within your department?

Mr. McCANN: Both. We compare notes and we do keep very much in touch with the system and organization in the United States. For instance, from the 12th to the 15th of next month there is to be a convention in Toronto, consisting of persons employed in the revenue branch of the United States administration, and in our own. At this conference matters of this kind will be discussed. Each year, representatives from each district in Canada come to Ottawa in the fall of the year for a conference which lasts about a week. They have with them the directors of district offices. And those directors bring with them members of their staff. These conferences mean that about 150 people would be called together to discuss administration and other matters.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Have you any officer or group of officers in your department whose business it is to try to detach themselves as far as they can from the work of the department, so that they can render critical judgment on what is being done? It seems to me that when you have 18,000 people at work there ought to be constant supervision of that kind.

Mr. McCANN: Members of the inspection branch of the head office visit all these different offices. The term "inspection branch" does not mean the inspecting of returns; it means the inspecting of district offices.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am afraid of the word "expert"; because sometimes they are not as expert as they pretend to be; but are there people in other ranks of business, leading accountants and so on, to whom you go for assistance?

Mr. McCANN: We use all the other departments. For instance, we use treasury on equipment, and other departments are used in connection with efficient office management, the introduction of new types of business machines and that sort of thing. Anything that will lead to the efficiency of the offices, to complete inspection of the offices, to better dispatch of business, is looked into and carried out.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Has the department the authority to waive or delay the collection of past due income tax from a farmer who may have been affected by what the Prime Minister called a national calamity? It has been brought to my attention that certain farmers in my riding have been billed and threatened with court if they do not pay their income taxes within fifteen days, and yet at the present moment their farms are under eight feet of water. If there is no discretionary power in the department I think every hon. member would agree that such powers should be given to the department to waive any such nonsense as penalties and the threat of court proceedings when farmers' homes are under water, even supposing they do owe taxes, and personally I dispute it. If the department has not that authority I think it should be given under the $17,240,000 order in council that has been passed.

Mr. McCANN: We have authority to delay collection, although there are certain penalties in the way of interest, but we have no authority to waive income tax. The problem referred to by the hon. member is being given serious consideration, and I think he can take it for granted that people who have suffered great loss will be dealt with on the most humane basis.

Mr. FLEMING: Last year, on the minister's estimates I asked about salary scales that were created when the taxation division had absorbed a number of accountants who had been in the employ of the wartime prices and trade board at salaries higher than those obtaining in the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue. The minister indicated at that time that steps were being taken to adjust upward the salary scales in the taxation division, so that there would not be this discrepancy between new and old employees. I was informed at that time that members of the staff who were senior by some years to those brought in from the wartime prices and trade board were actually receiving lower salaries.

Mr. McCANN: There has been a revision and readjustment of salaries, and the whole reviewed by the civil service commission.

Mr. FLEMING: My information is that in the Toronto office there is a substantial number of accountants who were formerly with the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. McCANN: Our salary scale was perhaps not up to what they had been getting during the war, and if they accepted employment with us they had to do so at the levels we were authorized to pay.

Mr. FLEMING: That is not my information, which I believe is correct. I am told that when they were taken into the division, of course not as permanent personnel, they were paid the salaries which they had received when employed by the wartime prices and trade board, and which were much higher than those being paid in the taxation division. The result was that men who were senior were actually receiving smaller salaries.

Mr. McCANN: I think almost every one of those cases has been looked into and satisfactorily adjusted.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister says "almost every one"; when will the remainder be adjusted?

Mr. McCANN: I will say all, without any qualification.

Item agreed to.

Taxation division—
803. District offices—further amount required, $4,510,372.

Mr. LENNARD: This vote, along with the regular estimate, is nearly double the vote of last year.

Mr. McCANN: The ordinary estimates are based upon figures which were submitted last September.

Mr. LENNARD: The regular item shows an increase of $7,000,000.

Mr. McCANN: That is my point. The regular estimates were made up in September, and we had to take into account what the establishment was at that time and what we contemplated it would be. Since that time, there has been a great expansion of work, with many more returns for 1947 being sent in than was anticipated. An extra number of people are employed in our district offices, and new offices have been opened up in North Sydney, Cape Breton island, and in the city of Sherbrooke. All these factors cause us to ask for the additional amount indicated in the supplementary estimates. The great part of our expenditure is for office administration and salaries.

Item agreed to.

General—
National film board, including the motion picture bureau—
801. General administration, $181,443.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister say something in a general way about the administration of the film board and cover perhaps the substantial items of expenditure?

Mr. McCANN: The estimates for the national film board come under three headings: general administration; technical services administration; production, distribution of films, and the production of other visual material. The total amount asked for this year is $1,905,910. The national film board is a government agency which was formed back in 1939, prior to the war, for the purpose of co-ordinating the services for the production of films which were required by the various departments of government. That is what we call sponsored work. That is in addition to the appropriation which is asked for here for the national film board itself. For instance, National Health and Welfare, Trade and Commerce, National Defence or any other department, makes a contract with the national film board for the production of a film and pays for it out of moneys appropriated for that department. The national film board, in addition, is active in the production and distribution, not only of films but of what is called visual material. Just as a record may be kept in a book of great events, it has been found advisable that certain events should be recorded in what are known as documentary films. That, of course, requires the employment of many technical people. These films, once they are produced, are distributed. The purpose of making and distributing these films is to record great events which may take place in this country, and which should be put on record so that they can be used in the audio-visual sphere at some later date.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Can the minister give an illustration of one such film that has been made, and state where it has been sent?

Mr. McCANN: Any great national event like the visit of the king and queen to this country, or some great sporting event, such as the world's figure skating championship by Barbara Ann Scott. We have also made a complete record of the atomic energy project, which may be of great use at some future date. Events like that are made into documentary films, which are kept in libraries if they are in the category of the atomic energy film, but if they are to be distributed throughout the country they are distributed through the film council.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What about distribution in general for schools and so on?

Mr. McCANN: The distribution is nationwide, and it is done by stocking film libraries in various parts of the country with films which can be used by various organizations in the different communities. Normally an audience of approximately 250,000 persons is reached in the rural circuits with about 3,000 showings. In addition, certain films made are sold for distribution here in Canada and other countries, and that brings in a certain amount of revenue. One of the purposes of the film itself is to interpret one part of Canada to another, to let the people of Nova Scotia, for example, through a film know what goes on in the prairie provinces and British Columbia, and vice versa. The films are used for education and for entertainment. They are also used in foreign countries, such as the United States, Latin America, Australia, New Zealand and European countries to show the people there just what kind of country this Canada of ours is. When one gets to the genesis of film production in this country, it started first as the motion-picture bureau in the Department of Trade and Commerce. The objective was by means of films to show to other peoples of the world what we produce in Canada and what we have for sale. That work is still being carried on. We feel that the national film board is a very useful agency of the government.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): There is a revenue from some of the commercial films, is there not?

Mr. McCANN: Yes, some revenue, but not very great. It amounts to about $120,000 this year.

Mr. LENNARD: I wish to draw to the minister's attention one point which I have no doubt has been brought to his attention before, and that is that the district offices or centres which lend out these machines should exercise more care, because I know of certain societies, which one might say are not acting in the best interests of Canada, borrowing these machines. I admit that the films were of a high order and they did no damage; but, after the film was shown for about half an hour, a two-hour meeting of a subversive nature was carried on. That is one thing I think the department should guard against. I mention it, because I know it actually happened, and if I hear of its happening again I will communicate with the minister and give him the details. I shall not wait for parliament to meet to do it.

Mr. McCANN: That is a hard matter to control. This is what actually happens. In a community, probably they have a community get-together or an evening. The showing of a film is only part of that program.

Mr. LENNARD: I know, but it should not be an inducement to encourage people to gather together to sow sedition and subversive material in the country, and that is being done. I will admit that it may be a hard matter for the department to control, but I think I could clean up a bit in the Hamilton district.

Mr. McCANN: I quite agree with the hon. member that these films, which are made at government expense out of the taxpayers' money, should not be used either for subversive purposes or for political purposes by any party; and, so long as I am connected with the film bureau, I shall try to see that that policy is carried out.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I think they are used, as the minister says, for commercial purposes so far as Canada is concerned. I have only one or two things to say. First of all, I have used these films and I have found them excellent. There is one thing about which I have received complaints, and we ought to be pretty careful about it. I have had a good many letters from photographers complaining of the competition in still photographs with the regular professional photographers. They are getting competition from the national film board, and they do not think this is right. I do not know how it can be settled or what can be done about it. Certainly I have had a good many letters about it. We want to encourage individuals in this country who are in that business. We do not want competition from the government to take away their livelihood. It is unfair competition. Perhaps the minister can say a word or two about it. Probably he himself has had letters from these private photographers and can tell us something about it.

Mr. McCANN: What are called stills, the ordinary photographs, are sold at commercial rates, at rates which are agreed upon by the trade, and by the way, it is not a combine.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): These lads are in this business to make a livelihood. They are good photographers. They cannot get their supplies as cheaply as the government can. As a general rule, they have to pay more for them. If they are complaining, as they are, there must be some reason for it. I do not think the minister has given a complete answer to the question. Perhaps he will look into the matter a little more fully.

Mr. McCANN: This is a matter which has been pretty well settled, because within the past month representatives of the film board have met with these people and there has been an agreement. The rates that are being charged by the film board are comparable with those that are being charged by the trade.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to express a word of appreciation to the film board for the assistance they have given me on several occasions to present pictures about the natural resources of the country. I wish particularly to refer to the office near the corner of Bank and Sparks streets. I believe the branch is presided over by Miss Greenwood. I am happy to say that she has always been very helpful in sending operators and machines to the House of Commons, either to the railway committee room or to some other committee room, to assist in presenting some feature about our natural resources. I am glad to say that I find the board very co-operative.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I just wanted to say a word or two to express the appreciation of the people I represent with regard to the work of the national film board in my constituency. I have received letters from women's institutes, farmers' institutes, trade unions, business organizations and all types of organizations wihch appreciate very much the services that the national film board is rendering in the district. I am quite sure that if even some of the city members, who possibly would not realize it to the same extent, could visit some of the smaller isolated points that exist in quite large numbers in the constituency I represent, see the eagerness with which the periodical visit of the representative of the film board is looked forward to, and experience the satisfaction that these people get from the services of the film board, some of them would be more enthusiastic in their support.

Before I take my seat I wish to make a suggestion to the board in regard to production, one that would be of particular use to children and, in many cases, to adults as well. I find an appalling lack of understanding of departments of government, what the various departments of government do, their functions, how they are administered and how they carry on. I would suggest that it would be a good thing for the national film board to produce a series that would bring before the younger people particularly, and the public in general, in the usually graphic manner, the function and operation of government departments. I am a firm believer that the more the people understand of democratic government and its functions, and see that it is functioning as it is intended to function on their behalf, the better citizens we shall develop and the better appreciation of our Canadian democracy will be engendered.

Mr. McCANN: The hon. gentleman's suggestion will be taken note of, and probably within the next year we shall do something in that regard.

Item agreed to.

General—
National film board, including the motion picture bureau—
304. Distribution of films, $772,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There is a reduction of $120,000 in distribution. Does that indicate change of policy, or is there some incidental reason for it?

Mr. McCANN: Yes, it does indicate a change of policy to this effect. In an attempt to get a general reduction of government expenditures, the appropriation this year is not as much as it has been in former years. It reached a peak during the war years. That was because films were used as war propaganda to a great extent; but the government felt that in peacetime the national film board should discharge the function for which it was originally founded by cutting down some of that wartime expenditure. I may say that, in addition to this expenditure of $1,905,910, we shall have another $500,000 or $600,000 for different departments. That makes a total of approximately $2,500,000. That is sufficient work for the facilities which we have and for the people whom we employ, and we believe that it is a fair amount to be expended by this particular arm of government.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the department have equipment for television as well?

Mr. McCANN: No; television would more properly come under broadcasting.

Item agreed to.

General—
306. Government office economies control division—administration, $10,678.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): We ought to have a word from the minister on this item. I think we could take this item and item 805 together.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for St. Paul's has suggested that items 805 and 306 should be taken together.

Mr. GREEN: No; they have nothing to do with each other.

Mr. McCANN: Item 306 is an entirely different division which comes under my jurisdiction. The expenditure here is very small. It is called, "Government office economies control division—administration, $10,678."

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What economies has it made?

Mr. McCANN: This government office economies control division was established in 1942 to examine and review all requests in public service for printing, stationery, office equipment and furniture before purchases are made. In general the terms and regulations embodied in P.C. 4428 and amendments thereto are applied. Administration is centred in the director, whose duty it is to determine the necessity for the articles requisitioned, as also the quantity involved.

While records are maintained showing the number of requisitions dealt with and the estimated saving in each instance as a result of revision, any attempt to show by figures the economies effected in monetary value would not give the full amount, as no indication could be given recurrent savings.

In addition to screening requisitions received each day, a careful review has been made of over 12,000 printed forms in use in the departments of the public service, and through substitution, lower grade quality of papers, standard size cut of forms, considerable initial and recurrent savings have been effected.

All free mailing lists in the departments of government have been curtailed to a minimum. Standardization of qualities of paper in public printing and re-use of envelopes many times over have been effected, as well as reduction in qualities of binding of periodicals, publications, et cetera.

Careful review is made of all requisitions for publications, journals and other printed periodicals required for use of departments and approval confined to periodicals and scientific journals of use only to departments and libraries of government.

Periodic inspection is made of all government stores at Ottawa to ensure that stock is properly shelved and kept in clean and good condition. Inspection is also made of duplicating sections of departments of government and examination made of qualities of papers used on duplicating machines; furtherance of single space and narrow margin on copy and elimination of waste of paper and inks, et cetera, maintained.

Considerable study has been given by the director to the advisability of having dormant records microfilmed, so as to save the purchase of filing cabinets and space entailed in the filing and storage of dormant and semi-dormant files, and all departments have been advised accordingly. Several departments have adopted this process, and from information and records gathered it is believed that many other departments will follow.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): First of all, with regard to the vexed question of the outrageous waste of paper on divorce bills, could this office on economies do anything about that? As I say, it involves an outrageous waste of paper and is incidentally an awful nuisance to all of us. I do not wish to advocate any extra expenditure; but I wonder whether this organization, which is obviously a small one, can actually exercise any authority and whether it has weight to do the things which the minister says it does, or whether, as a matter of fact, it is simply a conduit pipe. Is the minister satisfied that it is exercising authority and doing the things he indicates are being done?

Mr. McCANN: If I had time I think I could prove conclusively that it has saved a good deal of money. When I look over the record from the time it was established and take into account the number of requisitions that come before it, I can say there has been a definite and positive saving. Going back to 1943, our record shows that we have saved $375,725.40 on this type of material alone, such as ink, stationery and furniture that is moved around from one department to another. There must be some sort of check and this is the only one we have.

With reference to the quantity of paper that is used in divorce proceedings, that is a matter which does not come under the jurisdiction of this department.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Whoever can do it, it should be done. I would suggest to the minister that he satisfy himself that this department is really exercising authority and is not simply acting as a rubber stamp for what it gets from other departments, because that is what I would fear.

Mr. McCANN: It is far from being a rubber stamp. During the past year, 68,951 requisitions came in. There were 1,154 that were amended and a great number that were disallowed, and in connection with furniture, office appliances, printing and binding, stationery and publications, there was an actual saving of $49,262, while the total cost to the department is $10,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That sounds good.

Mr. McCANN: The saving is four times as much as the money it costs to operate the office, and that is worthwhile.

Mr. MacNICOL: Keep it up.

Item agreed to.

International short wave broadcasting station—
307. Maintenance and operation, $1,711,500.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wish to ask the minister a couple of questions. The other day he spoke with reference to this subject. He wishes to maintain the independence of the C.B.C. by continuing to collect the radio licence fee for each radio set. I wonder what difficulty he would have in getting licence fees from all those people throughout the world who listen to our short wave, because he cannot very well collect those. That brings up the question whether it is not better for us to do as we are doing at the present time in connection with the short wave, that is to say, taking money out of the consolidated revenue fund and giving it to the C.B.C. to do a good job. I do not think anyone can say that they are not doing a good job of broadcasting various things for the people of Canada over trans-Canada and dominion networks, and what does seem so strange to me is that we are collecting only half the radio fees that we should collect in this country. I would say that on the average it is less than half. The thing is more or less ridiculous. I urge the government again to give the C.B.C. an allowance on a per capita basis for the population of Canada, which I believe would be about forty cents, instead of having all this nonsense. That would be sufficient. It might be well for the minister to let us know a little about what the $3,066,000 in the supplementary estimates is for. That is capital expenditure. Perhaps he could outline the whole thing. I should like to hear from him with reference to this farcical enforcement of the collection of the $2.50 radio fee in this country.

Mr. McCANN: The estimate submitted shows a slight increase in estimated expenditure for 1948-49 as compared with 1947-48. The amount for 1948-49 is $1,786,500. The increase is caused, first, by proposed staff appointments; second, proposed expansion of service; and third, necessary transcription service. With regard to the proposed increase in staff appointments, this is particularly applicable to the European section, and the need for it can be understood by a reading of the statement included in the appended notes at the end of this budget.

Briefly, the situation is that in some sections of our service we are able to secure to good advantage material for programs from free-lancers. In other sections this is not the case. In the United Kingdom section, for instance, a great deal of free-lance material is available and is used. Such material is not equally available in the European section, since there are not a large number of free-lance writers with the necessary language qualifications available in Canada and, when they can be found, the fees charged for their work are very high. This makes it increasingly necessary to have in our European section staff members who are capable of producing their own material in the languages required.

Regarding the expansion of service, we anticipate that this will take place during the remainder of the period 1947-48 and in 1948-49. When the 1947-48 estimates were prepared, an increase in service was envisaged, namely the opening of a broadcast service to South Africa, Australasia, Belgium, Russia and Latin America. Only part of these plans has to this date been realized. We have established daily service in Spanish to Latin America. A half-hour program weekly is now transmitted to Australasia. We have made some test transmissions to South Africa. At present active consideration is being given to the establishment of a regular service to Russia. Consideration is being given also to the advisability and the feasibility of service to South Africa and to Belgium in both French and Flemish. If these additional services are established—and certainly some of them will be—there will be a considerable increase in staff. This increase has been provided for in the budget estimates presented herewith.

As regards transcription service, it is to be noted that there is an increasing demand for and use of Canadian program material for relay over foreign broadcasting stations. The cost of making transcriptions is high, and therefore a separate amount is included in this budget under the "performers' fees" item to cover the requirements of this important service.

I might give the committee a little information in reference to this international short wave. Our physical plant is in Sackville, New Brunswick. It was built in 1942 and is owned outright by the crown, but is operated for a fee by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. No licence fees are collected from anybody with respect to international short wave; all the expenses come out of the money of the taxpayers. The situation is different in connection with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It was set up by the government, and those persons in Canada who pay for radio receiving licences and commercial firms who pay licence fees may be said to be the owners of that system. They are the sole contributors to it. International short wave, on the contrary, is the property of all the people, all the taxpayers; and out of the appropriation we are asking parliament to vote this year this service will be continued.

The total hours of service are approximately 14½ a day. We have different sections which we call the United Kingdom section, the Caribbean section, Australia, New Zealand and the southern Pacific, Latin America, the French section, and the European section, which takes in Czechoslovakia, Holland, Germany, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. We employ ten languages in the transmission of programs to the different countries, including English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, German, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and Czech. As hon. members can well imagine, if we are to transmit programs or information in ten languages, we must have people who speak those languages. They are people with special qualifications, and their fees are fairly high. Occasionally we broadcast programs in Italian, Greek, Polish and Russian.

From the opening of the international short wave service in 1945—that is when it was opened, though construction was commenced some time before—to the end of 1947, over forty thousand individual messages have been received from listeners all over the globe. In September, October, November and December of 1947 we received 8,357 letters. In January of this year alone we had 3,836 letters. It is notable that, in connection with the programs we were broadcasting to Czechoslovakia at about the time of the uprising there, we received, from September to December, some 2,522 letters. Letters have increased in number since January of this year from all countries except Czechoslovakia, where they are not now allowed to send letters to this country.

The projected expansion we have in mind for the international service is to Italy, Yugoslavia, Poland and Belgium. A careful study is being made of a possible news broadcast to Russia. The problems are, of course, the difficulty of obtaining reliable and competent personnel, and of getting reliable information with respect to listening in Russia and possible response to our service.

It might be well to bear in mind that pressure was brought to bear upon the government to build this station during the war years in order that it might be used to communicate with our men and women in the defence services in Europe. It is credited with being the finest international short-wave station in the world; certainly it is the No. 1 station of the western world. The service is very much appreciated. It is a non-revenue instrument, and on that account we ask parliament to vote this amount of money to carry on the service for another year.

I might give a breakdown of these costs:

Performers' fees	$500,000
Salaries	615,000
News services	47,000
General operating overhead	315,000
Transmission lines	31,000
Tubes and maintenance	30,000
Crescent street-Sackville line	42,000
Improvements to leased properties	10,000
Supervision charges	81,500

[Mr. McCann.]

That makes a total of $1,711,500, and in addition we are asking $75,000 for capital improvements.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Plus $3,000,000; plus $66,000, which I think should be considered also. Those are in the supplementaries, and that is why I say we have to take them all together.

Mr. McCANN: Then, Mr. Chairman, would you please call item 804?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Call them together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Do hon. members wish to deal with all these items? We have items 307, 308, 804 and 805.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): They are together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is item 307 carried? Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, item 307 is not carried.

Mr. McCANN: My officers have been here for almost a week—

An hon. MEMBER: So have we.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We have been here for six months.

Mr. McCANN: An important meeting of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation opened in Montreal today. The general manager and other officers would like to be at that important meeting, at which the monthly business of the corporation is taken up. If we could have another ten or fifteen minutes I think I would be able to give the information in reference to these items. However, I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. HANSELL: I am prepared not to call it eleven o'clock, if it will accommodate the minister and his officials. I have no desire to make a long speech, but only to ask one or two questions.

Mr. MacINNIS: On the point made by the minister, if he can satisfy those members who want to take part in this debate in a space of 15 minutes, I am willing to stay that long. But it does not look to me as if he can.

Mr. McCANN: I might be over-optimistic.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am afraid you are.

Mr. KNOWLES: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. GILLIS: Try it for fifteen minutes.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Go ahead.

Mr. HANSELL: I should like to ask the minister in respect of this item, which I find explained on another page—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Eleven o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Tomorrow we shall continue with the Department of National Revenue, in which there are only four items left. Then we will take Public Works, and the remaining departments.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There are some divorce bills to be considered at some time during the day.

Mr. MacNICOL: I suggest that they be left until the last.

Mr. FLEMING: Is the government not proceeding with the annuities bill?

Mr. KNOWLES: No.

Mr. FULTON: What about the estimates of the Department of Finance.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We shall begin with National Revenue and Public Works, and then the remaining departments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REVISION OF CLASSIFICATION OF COMMITTEE CLERKS —REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION— CONCURRENCE

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission respecting revision of the classification of committee clerks of the House of Commons, presented to the house on Saturday, June 26, 1948, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REFERENCE TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF AUTUMN MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). It was announced over the radio this morning that Mr. Attlee had made a statement to the effect that there will be a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers this autumn. Has the Canadian government been approached in regard to the matter, and if so, can the minister indicate the purpose of the meeting?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should reply to the question. For some little time past the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom has been seeking to arrange a meeting in London of the prime ministers of the British commonwealth during either the summer or the autumn months. My hon. friend will have noticed a statement by Mr. Attlee that he had not found it possible to arrange for the meeting during the summer months on account of inability to get the different prime ministers together at that time, but that he does expect a meeting to be held in October.

I presume the meeting will be similar to the meeting of prime ministers held two years ago, and that it will be one in which matters of general interest to all the nations of the commonwealth will be discussed. I am not aware, however, that any definite agenda has thus far been arranged.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister himself represent Canada at the October meeting?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, that is something I wish I were in a position to answer. I might say that in the correspondence with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom he was kind enough to express the wish that I might personally attend. I explained the position I was in with respect to attending any meeting in August, because of the convention to be held at that time. As to what it may be thought best to do thereafter may best be decided, I should think, after that meeting. I have expressed my desire to be as accommodating as it is possible for me to be in helping to bring about the meeting at a time which would be most convenient for the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the other prime ministers.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister head the Canadian delegation to that conference?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will not be a delegation. What is desired is a meeting of the prime ministers. Whoever is in that office at that time will, I assume, represent Canada.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said about the possibility of the Prime Minister himself attending the conference of prime ministers in the fall in his capacity as prime minister, would it not be just as well to cancel the Liberal convention at Ottawa, which would serve no purpose?

COARSE GRAINS

ADJUSTMENT PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or, in his absence, his parliamentary assistant. The minister promised a reply last week. What government action has been authorized to compensate coarse grain growers in western Canada for losses they suffered on account of early delivery of their coarse grains last fall?

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not know that there is much

I can usefully add. If I recall aright, the minister stated that an announcement in the matter would be made, and that the subject was under consideration. It will be a matter of policy.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has a payment been authorized?

Mr. McILRAITH: It is a matter of policy. When a payment is authorized I presume that it will be announced by the responsible minister.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I take it that a payment has not been authorized?

Mr. McILRAITH: That does not follow from my remarks.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Will the parliamentary assistant answer this simple question: Has a payment been authorized? The answer is no?

Mr. McILRAITH: The answer is that the decision is a matter of policy which will be announced at the proper time by the appropriate minister.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Surely I can find out whether a payment has been authorized.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SEAMEN'S STRIKE—WITHDRAWAL OF COURT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has been advised that the Canadian seamen's union dispute with the shipping companies has been withdrawn from the courts. If so, is action along the lines of conciliation contemplated by his department, and if necessary will he consider the appointment of a controller for the industry?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Speaking now as an individual so far as I am concerned there will be no controller. I read in the newspapers that the case had been withdrawn. This is a free country, and you can always withdraw a case. It is simply an indication of freedom. I do not know why it was withdrawn, but it has been suggested that it was that they did not want Sullivan in the witness box. That is merely a conjecture. My hon. friend can rest assured that the services of my department are ever ready in connection with any dispute under federal jurisdiction.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

FLOOD CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—USE OF ROAD THROUGH NATIONAL PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources. As a result of the floods, the only Canadian highway leading into British Columbia which can be used—the only road now open—is one passing through a national park. Under the circumstances will the minister make a temporary change in the regulations to permit through trucking over the road through the national park?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources): The arrangement suggested by the hon. member was made about ten days or two weeks ago, and will be in effect for a week at a time as long as the emergency lasts.

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): As I understand it, the relaxation of the regulations in connection with truck traffic through a national park applies only to the movement of perishable commodities, not to general trucking which has been carried on over the southern trans-Canada highway. That road is out at Michel.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest that the hon. member put his question.

Mr. MERRITT: Will the minister extend the relaxation of the regulations so that the business of these trucking companies can be kept in being while flood conditions prevail?

Mr. MacKINNON: I took this matter up some little time ago when it was first brought to our attention. A general relaxation of all restrictions on trucking through the national park will be in effect until the emergency is over. We are having some trouble with our own roads, but they are being maintained and kept in shape. As long as they are in shape, and they are at the present time, trucks will be allowed to pass over that highway through the park until the emergency is over. The permission is granted a week at a time, as I have said.

Mr. MERRITT: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Speaking to the minister's department only yesterday I was told that this relaxation applies only to the movement of perishable commodities. I would ask the minister to look into it again to make sure this is not right.

Mr. MacKINNON: I can only say that the arrangement was made through the director of national parks, the senior official in the department. He gave me the information, and he made the arrangements. However, I shall check further.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONS TO DEPENDENTS OF PERSONNEL KILLED IN ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I have asked his parliamentary assistant to reply to it. What limitations are in effect with regard to the payment of the full 25 per cent increase in pensions to dependents of Canadian personnel killed in action and under what authority are those limitations applied?

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have just had the hon. member's question handed to me. The limitations in effect are those which are in the act itself. The increase was a flat increase of 25 per cent to all those who are pensioned as of right. The limitation applies to dependent parents, in connection with which awards there has been discretionary power in the commission. In the case of a veteran himself, his wife or children, the increase is automatic.

NAILS

FEDERATED CO-OPERATIVES OF SASKATCHEWAN—SUPPLY OF STEEL RODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I was going to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I shall direct it to his parliamentary assistant. In view of the anxiety of the Federated Co-operatives of Saskatchewan to supply their members with nails, can arrangements be made to supply steel rods for this purpose to the manufacturers with whom the federation is doing or expects to do business?

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I should say that the federation has been seeking to get an allocation of wire rods for nail cutting. The nail cutting capacity of the existing firms is not being used to capacity. As hon. members have noticed. there has been a sharp increase in the allocation of wire rods since June 1, but to take them away from existing firms and give them to the federation in order to start it in a new business would not seem to be a way of solving the problem, and it certainly would not provide any more nails. I shall draw the remarks of the hon. member to the attention of the minister and see that they have further consideration.

Mr. COLDWELL: Can the parliamentary assistant tell me how that fits into the free enterprise system?

Mr. McILRAITH: I would be delighted to go into that subject, but this is neither the time nor place. I think hon. members should realize that what is being done here is to attempt to have a certain provincial organization get hold of a basic raw material which is in short supply. They want to get it in their hands away from the regular channels of trade. It is a matter of seeking to destroy the existing system rather than contributing to a solution of the problem of shortage of nails.

Mr. COLDWELL: A policy of protection.

PRICES

QUESTION AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if the government is giving consideration to the immediate implementation of at least some of the recommendations of the prices committee which were approved by this house last night, particularly with respect to some controls, some subsidies and some changes in taxation.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The report is so recent that the government has not yet had time to give consideration to its recommendations.

CATTLE

EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): I believe the matter of lifting the embargo on the export of beef is under the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him if he will be prepared to make an announcement before the house closes as to just what the situation is and when we may expect some relaxation on the embargo on exports of beef to the United States.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to what I said on May 7 last, namely, that the recommendation which was made to the government now rests with the Department of Agriculture. It must be evident that it would be impossible to make any announcement in advance with regard to a question of this kind.

Mr. COLDWELL: What about the Saskatchewan election?

Mr. GARDINER: I scarcely discussed it in Saskatchewan, and if my hon. friend will look at the map he will find that the only constituency in Saskatchewan in which there are a considerable number of ranches went Liberal.

Mr. COLDWELL: In consequence of the minister's announcement.

Mr. GARDINER: In other words, they show they are very well satisfied with the present policy.

The fact is that no one can make an announcement in advance about taking an embargo off cattle; otherwise there would not be any cattle delivered until the date announced. But in view of the fact that information is wanted, I call attention to the fact that in January 1947 the hog-barley ratio in Winnipeg was 19·5 and the hog-corn ratio in Chicago was 17·1. In May, 1948, the hog-barley ratio in Winnipeg was 19, and the hog-corn ratio in Chicago was 8·7. In other words, those who have now great numbers of cattle still feeding in their stalls would find that if the controls were removed immediately, the cost of grain to feed livestock would be just double what it is now.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Is it the government's intention to take any action this session in connection with the report on procedure which was tabled on Friday last by His Honour the Speaker?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend will have to wait and see. So far as I am aware, we have covered all the reports the government intends to bring forward at this time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

International short wave broadcasting station—

307. Maintenance and operation, $1,711,500.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman, are you taking votes 307, 308, 804 and 805 together?

The CHAIRMAN: It has been suggested by the hon. member for St. Paul's that we consider votes 307, 308, 804 and 805 together. Is that agreed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

308. Capital costs, $75,000.

804. Maintenance and operation—further amount required, $116,591.89.

805. Capital costs—further amount required, $3,066,400.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Perhaps the minister would give us a few details of the capital cost of $3,000,000 odd in vote 805. I think I know what it is for, probably for the purchase of the Ford hotel building in Montreal. Why does the C.B.C. want that building? I just cannot see why a building costing over three million dollars is needed in connection with this international short wave. Has this anything to do with the ordinary expenditures of C.B.C., or what is the explanation?

Mr. McCANN: Votes 307, 308, 804 and 805 have to do with the international short-wave service of the broadcasting system. Last night I think I explained pretty well what the functions of the international short wave were, and the work that was being done by that organization in broadcasting programs from Canada to different parts of the world. I explained that the money that was spent prior to 1945, when the international short-wave was opened, was money which had been voted by parliament for the original construction, and arrangements were made that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should operate the service for a reasonable fee percentage of the amount of money spent on the system.

That is as far as that particular development went, inasmuch as no provision was made at that time for offices, either engineering or administrative, or for studios for those who were to take part in broadcasting the programs. It was necessary to use the facilities of the C.B.C. in the city of Montreal, which is the headquarters for the broadcasting, and that was done. Our arrangements in that city have not been of the best, since we have had to have seven different locations in Montreal for C.B.C. and the international short wave. Unfortunately last January there was a fire and an explosion at one of these locations, in King's Hall on St. Catherine street, involving loss of life and great destruction of property. It immediately became necessary to find other quarters to take the place of those destroyed. We have also run into difficulties in that our leases were expiring this year and it became necessary to look for new quarters or to renew the present leases. When it came to renewing leases we found that in Montreal as in many other cities the rates had almost doubled. It was thought that it would be a matter of good policy if the facilities of both the international short wave and the C.B.C. could be brought together in one public building. With that in mind arrangements have been made, but have not been fully completed, under which the crown is buying what is known as the Ford hotel on Dorchester street for headquarters of the international short-wave system. In the building will be housed those offices which are necessary to carry on the system. There will be administrative offices and engineering offices. The interior of the building will be converted into up-to-date studios. The C.B.C. will become tenants of the building. When the C.B.C. become tenants of the building owned by the crown in the name of the international short wave we shall have reached what we have had in mind for years, namely, the idea of having concentrated in one quarter the facilities of both the international short wave and the C.B.C.

As I said, the cost of the building is $2,000,000. In addition to that, to provide for expansion in years to come, if it is necessary, we have also purchased a building from the same people next to the Ford hotel on Dorchester street for the sum of $50,000. In order to take care of the leases which are held by tenants at the present time the Ford hotel people are looking after them and we are compensating them to the extent of $150,000. The cost of the Ford hotel, the cost of the building next to it, and the amount necessary to take care of the leases, bring the total up to $2,200,000. We are asking for an appropriation of $3,000,000 because it will take the remaining $800,000 to reconstruct and transform the building into offices and suitable studios.

I do not know that I can give any more information with reference to the matter, but I shall be glad to answer any questions that have to do with it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not think anybody in Canada begrudges the money to our international short-wave system. It can be one of the greatest things for good that we have ever had in Canada in connection with trade if it is properly carried on and if the broadcasts are properly done. We are a democratic country. We must let the people of the rest of the world know what a fine place Canada is in which to live. When you listen to some of the members of the C.C.F. party to my left talk about Canada you would think that it was an awful place.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is getting better every day.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I find that most people look upon Canada as a good place in which to live. We should be broadcasting to the world what a fine place Canada is. I am all in favour of money being expended in that way.

An hon. MEMBER: And a good government to do it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): You will have a better government when we get into power, which will not be long from now.

Aside from this political stuff, there is one thing we should stop, and that is this farcical method of collecting radio fees. At the present time the broadcasting corporation is purchasing a building for the short-wave system. That is just nonsense because they are going to have the C.B.C. as tenants, and the people of Canada are going to pay for it. They will not get it out of the $2.50 that every radio owner is supposed to pay each year. The system does not get $2.50 from everybody. Let us cut it out. I know that the minister is anxious to cut down expenditures, but how in the world can he justify the expenditure of $571,000 to collect the licence fees? For some unknown reason—I do not know what it is—he says he wants to keep the C.B.C. free of government interference or something like that. The point is, it is not done. A person can have ten radios, and he pays a fee of $2.50. If he gets one more radio in his car he has to pay an additional $2.50.

The Minister of Agriculture probably has three or four radios in his house and one in the hotel. I have two or three around my place as well; I have one in my summer home and on my farm. All I have to pay is $2.50. What a nonsensical situation that is. I cannot understand it. I am all in favour of having a good C.B.C. We should have had a radio committee this year. It should be a standing committee. That committee should meet every session because there are many things that are dependent upon the C.B.C. There is the question of freedom of speech, which is coming up all the time. We have that question before us now.

Mr. CASSELMAN: We are getting it now.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not take up much of the time of the house, and I do not see why my whip should call me to order in the dying days of the session. I am in support of this, but I am referring to the principle. I shall talk on it at some other time, but not this session.

Mr. GILLIS: Is it the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to establish a new outlet in Sydney, Nova Scotia? If so, when does the minister expect to have that station in operation?

Mr. McCANN: The establishment of a new station in Sydney is part of our contemplated program. In our next estimates we shall ask for the money to do the work in Sydney.

Mr. HANSELL: Radio has been an interesting subject to me throughout the past number of years. I rise to make only one observation, and perhaps ask a question. No radio committee was set up this year, in spite of the fact that last year and every year that the radio committee has met it has recommended that the radio committee of parliament be an annual affair. Because that committee was not set up, we have not had an opportunity to go into the receipts and expenditures of the C.B.C. and the general radio policy as it exists in Canada from time to time.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a tremendous institution. While it is in the commercial field, and is reaping revenues by being in that field, it has not yet been able to stand on its own feet. I am not making any harsh criticism, because I recognize that the corporation is doing a job which requires expenditures over and above what a properly operated radio system might require. Nevertheless, with the operation of the short wave station included, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is becoming a tremendous drain upon the taxpayer. I believe that somewhere along the line we have to call a halt.

I am all in favour of making Canada known to the other nations of the world. I am all for the use of the short-wave system to encourage proper trade relations between Canada and the rest of the world. I am all for letting the rest of the world know something about our Canadian culture. Many of us wish it were of a higher order, but perhaps, in a small nation of 12,000,000 people, we cannot expect too much in too short a time. I am all for these things.

When however we begin to look into the amount of money spent on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation I am beginning to think that it is not entirely justified. The C.B.C. and the short-wave station, with its operations, are tied in one with the other. Personally I have not been able to satisfy myself, in reading any of the reports, as to where one ends and the other may begin. There is a general feeling abroad that the short-wave radio station, with its operations, being paid for purely by the taxpayers of Canada, since I understand the short-wave station has no commercial revenues—the minister can correct me on that point—everything the short-wave station does is done at the expense of the people of Canada. Some people who are interested in radio policy in Canada are coming to feel that the short-wave station with its operations is becoming a sort of cow which is fed by the taxpayer but perhaps in the end milked by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

If I am not right on that I would like to be put right, but it will take more than simply an answer of a minute or so to put me right on it, because I do not believe we can get the picture until we are able to go into the entire financial policy, with receipts and expenditures and all that is involved between the C.B.C. on the one hand and the international short wave on the other.

I do not rise to oppose this expenditure, but we have a tremendous capital outlay here, most of which I fancy is for the purchase of the Ford hotel in Montreal. I want to say a word on that—and it is not by way of criticism, because I really do not feel that I am competent to criticize on that particular point. However, I will take it for granted that those who are managing this thing are doing right. I must say that I never did visualize the government taking over the Ford hotel in Montreal. I know that the C.B.C. some years ago had an option to buy a piece of property which at the time they took out the option appeared to be an idle spot. After that there was a readjustment of population, and so on, in Montreal, and they let the option go by the board. This meant that some other arrangement had to be made, but I never expected that what was going to happen would be the purchase of an old hotel. I visualized, and I recommended years ago, that Canada should have somewhere for its radio operations a sort of young radio city. I rather visualized something unique in architecture, situated perhaps in the middle of an elaborate park or other area of the kind in which art in different forms could be exemplified—because after all, radio is to a large extent an art. Instead of that we are getting drab office buildings situated in the midst of a lot of other buildings. Personally I do not like the idea. However, there is nothing I can do about it except to express my thoughts on the subject.

I am surprised at the location of this building, which now I suppose will have to do the corporation for years to come. I do not like that. Pretty soon the building, situated where it is, will be obsolete, or, if not obsolete, not much of an advertisement for radio in Canada. I rather expected that this young radio city which I visualized in a growing nation would be situated in Toronto. Why it was decided to buy the Ford hotel in Montreal I do not know.

Mr. PROBE: Why don't you consider Regina?

Mr. HANSELL: The hon. member for Regina City says Regina might be considered. So it might, just as well as any other point. I should think it would have to be in some city, because—

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, Regina is a city.

Mr. PEARKES: There is a hotel in Victoria. Why not put it there?

Mr. HANSELL: What I mean is, whatever city is selected, it must be in a fairly large centre, a metropolis, for the reason that its operations are dependent largely on the talent that might be concentrated in a metropolitan area. That is why I suggested Toronto. I have no brief for Toronto. It might just as well be out in the glorious Rocky mountains where it would constitute a tourist attraction as well. At any rate I am disappointed that the government is buying the Ford hotel in Montreal for this purpose.

I would ask the minister to say whether I am right in saying that the Ford hotel, while being bought for the short-wave station, is simply a sort of cover. I do not think anyone will say that the short-wave service is so considerable that a hotel building must be provided. I do not think it is. The short-wave station, while serving a useful purpose, is in my opinion but a small part of our entire radio system in Canada, and I am inclined to think that this is one way of giving the C.B.C. something which it could not otherwise get. I am quite sure that if there were an appropriation of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 for the C.B.C., even for a national home, there might at this time be some considerable opposition. I would not oppose that, because I am not one to oppose the spending of money. I think that is what money is for, to be spent. On the other hand, when it is to be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers, they want to know that they are to get something in return. I believe that this is just a suitable way of asking the people of Canada for two or three million dollars, on the basis of a short-wave service, so that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation may come in on the kill. I may not be right, and my language may be over expressive, but I think perhaps that is the situation.

Mr. ISNOR: I shall deal with just one item, namely the international short-wave station. In view of the important events taking place in New Brunswick, particularly in the last twenty-four hours—

An hon. MEMBER: You mean yesterday.

Mr. ISNOR: Yesterday, yes. In view of those events I am interested in the station at Sackville.

An hon. MEMBER: Good broadcasting was done there.

Mr. ISNOR: Good work was done there. During the war, and perhaps for twenty-four months afterwards, a good deal of war news of value was broadcast from that station. In his statement yesterday, the minister said that fourteen and a half hours was the average daily time that station was in use. Now that the facilities are not being used in connection with war, I would like to know what portion of the time is devoted to a function that I believe was felt to be important in the creation of that station, namely, the enlargement and development of our export trade. Has the minister a breakdown of the hours devoted to the various programs and subjects, particularly to news about the development of our export business?

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the minister if consideration has been given to the amalgamation of the C.B.C. with the national film board, or of the film board with the C.B.C., whichever way he wishes to put it. I think a merger at this time could well be considered. Whether it would be feasible in view of the coming into effect of television, and its use to a greater extent than ever before, I do not know. I notice that Hollywood is claiming certain privileges in connection with television, linking up the picture program with that of television. Has the minister given any thought to that?

Mr. COLDWELL: If the minister does not intend to answer now, Mr. Chairman, may I make a brief comment? I do not wish to delay the committee; having been away for some time, I feel that I should not now make long speeches.

I have always been interested in the broadcasting corporation. We have not had a committee on radio this year, and I shall not deal with anything pertaining to the corporation but shall confine myself specifically to international broadcasting. The amount of money appropriated appears to be large, and I believe some other hon. members feel that it is large.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar answered me rather shortly yesterday, Mr. Chairman, and I do not wish to answer him in the same way. But I should like to have an answer to the two questions I asked, because I might wish to pursue them further before the hon. member enters into a general discussion.

Mr. COLDWELL: I prefaced my remarks, Mr. Chairman, by saying that I desired to make a few comments if the minister did not intend to answer immediately. If the minister had indicated his intention to answer immediately, I would have at once resumed my seat. I give the minister my assurance of that. I will do whatever the minister wishes me to do.

Mr. McCANN: I had thought of attempting to answer all the questions after there had been general discussion. If we were to answer them in rotation, then the hon. member for Macleod should have his answered first.

Mr. COLDWELL: Very well; I shall continue. What I started to say was this. While the amount may appear to be large, and it is a large amount, I believe the expenditure on the international broadcasting station is warranted. Those of us who have followed the activities of this station know that it is giving to the people of the world an idea of Canadian life and culture; but I feel that it has rendered a more valuable service even than that during the last couple of years.

Our international radio station is one which is heard over a larger part of Europe than any other station in North America. For instance, I know from evidence that was given before the radio committee last year that in Czechoslovakia we have the largest group of listeners of any radio station that penetrates into eastern Europe. At this time, without indulging in propaganda of the type to which we are sometimes subjected, the fact that we are able to penetrate into countries behind what is sometimes called the iron curtain is all to the good. In doing that I think the station is rendering a useful service, not only to Canada but to the democratic cause throughout the world. To the extent that we are able to do that we are keeping in touch with people behind the iron curtain who are our friends and who feel that they are plowing somewhat of a lonely furrow. Consequently anything we can do, through our culture programs and so on, in eastern Europe, indeed all of Europe, will be a valuable service to democracy the world over.

I am glad that several years ago, after a great deal of discussion in the radio committee, the government built the station and the corporation assumed the responsibility for its programs. I am quite sure that if we had a radio committee this year and the members of the corporation appeared before it, they would be able to tell us again the reaction throughout Europe and the rest of the world where the station is heard, and could give us an impressive list of persons who had been engaged and who, because they are refugees to a large extent, must be remunerated. It is one way of doing what I think we should try to do: we should endeavour to assist people in our country who have suffered for the common cause by enabling them to perform a useful function to Canada and to their native land. For that reason alone, if for no other, we should support the international broadcasting station.

Someone suggests that we might get some commercial revenue. I do not think that is possible with an international station. For one thing, in many countries a good example was set in not permitting commercial advertising over the radio. Those countries would resent it if a North American station advertised for sponsors in their countries. I regret exceedingly that the broadcasting corporation this year has changed its policy in that respect, by allowing prices to be mentioned under certain circumstances. I think that is a backward step; had there been a radio committee this year we should have reported adversely upon it. It is unfair to the small merchants, because it places them more and more in the hands of the big companies which can buy advertising in considerable quantities.

So far as short wave is concerned, from what I know and what I have learned from persons who have spoken to their own countries after certain things have happened there, I am convinced that this radio station is rendering a valuable service and that we should support it—if we are anxious, as I am sure hon. members are, to do all we can to encourage and to support the friends of democracy who today are under dictatorships in various parts of the world.

Mr. FLEMING: If we had known earlier in the session that this program of expansion in connection with short-wave facilities was contemplated, we would certainly have pressed for the setting up of the committee on radio broadcasting. But we did not know about it. The matter has come to the attention of the house only in recent days. The question of the purchase of the Ford hotel in Montreal was scouted in this chamber only about two weeks ago. I asked a question about it, based upon some information which had appeared in the press, and I was told that the information was not correct. Further information has appeared subsequently in driblets, and it is only now, within the last several days, that we have had a statement as to the details of the purchase.

A matter of this magnitude, involving the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and of the government with respect to short-wave broadcasting, warranted the setting up of the radio committee. Certainly many of the members who had been on radio committees in previous sessions, were pressed with a multitude of other duties, and were not aware of any extensive change in policy on the part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Under these circumstances it perhaps did not seem necessary that the committee be convened to meet again this year. Had we been told at an earlier stage of the session that expenditures of this magnitude were contemplated, that changes in policy were involved, or that an expensive building in Montreal was to be purchased, certainly it would have been the duty of the house to press the government to set up the radio committee.

I am not commenting in detail upon the terms of the purchase. Without more information I would not feel competent to express an opinion, although I am inclined to share many of the views expressed this morning by the hon. member for Macleod. But I do say that a transaction of this magnitude should not be permitted without having first a review by the radio committee.

Mr. McCANN: Why did you not have the committee?

Mr. FLEMING: I do not seek necessarily to bring into disrepute the policy embarked upon. But I believe it is the duty of the House of Commons to concern itself in these matters, to know about them, to inquire into them and to satisfy itself as to the necessity of expenditures and the desirability of changes of policy involved.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to underline what has been said by the hon. member for Eglinton, which I think is very true. Here we face another large expenditure which comes to us without any opportunity to discuss even the principle involved. I find myself in agreement with what was said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar with respect to the use of the international radio. The only comment I have to make on that is that in this strange world, where we hardly know who can be disaffected and who can not, the authorities ought to know very well who the foreigners are that they employ to broadcast to the various countries—because we have a lot of wolves in sheep's clothing these days.

What I have to say further has reference to what was said by the hon. member for Macleod. I hope the minister will tell us to what extent this will help indirectly the C.B.C. That aspect is important. Those of us who have regretted, and still regret, the building up of this great monopoly, view with increasing uneasiness the way in which it goes on acquiring more and more properties. This further aspect of it is in one's mind—and for the life of me, I cannot understand what the press is thinking about, because as soon as we get radio newspapers, and they become effective, this great and centralized system of propaganda will have been established.

Let me say quickly that I believe the C.B.C. try to be fair. I am sure they believe they are being as independent as can be. I have no doubt they often think they are leaning over backwards to be fair. But in my opinion it just is not humanly possible for any government controlled corporation to be absolutely independent of government. It just does not happen that way.

Mr. McCANN: I shall try to deal with some of the points raised by hon. members. The hon. member for Macleod and the hon. member for Eglinton have made reference to there not having been a committee on radio broadcasting this year. The blame in that regard cannot be placed upon the government. We had a motion ready and had our own representation named to it. We asked opposition members to name their representation to that committee, and they indicated to us that they did not think it was necessary or desirable to set up a radio committee this year.

Mr. HANSELL: That is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. McCANN: It is a fact.

Mr. KNOWLES: It does not apply to this group.

Mr. McCANN: The official opposition.

Mr. KNOWLES: Say "the official opposition", then.

Mr. McCANN: Yes, the official opposition.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Was there any suggestion that there was anything to discuss?

Mr. McCANN: There is always an agenda of business at yearly meetings. I was chairman of the committee on radio broadcasting on a number of occasions, and, I believe, among the first to advocate annual sittings of the committee. I still adhere to that policy, that there should be an investigation each year. But if you cannot get a party to nominate members to take their place on a committee, then you cannot go along without them.

I wish to refer to some of the matters dealt with by the hon. member for Macleod, and I would turn first to the purchasing of a place in Montreal in which to carry on business. I submit that from a business point of view this is an excellent purchase. What the hon. member for Macleod has in mind would, I have no doubt, be pretentious and artistic, and would involve an expenditure of two or three million dollars. Of course I would like to have something like that if it were possible to get sufficient by way of appropriation. I would like to have an elaborate radio centre, and I had in mind in former years that it might well be established in connection with some university. However, that has not come to pass. The fact that we were up against it to such an extent for office quarters in Montreal made us look around for a building which would take the place of the studio from which we were both burned and blown out, and of premises for which our leases had expired.

We are not buying an old hotel. We are buying a good structure, built of steel and cement. It is fireproof, and lends itself to reconstruction to the point where it will meet the needs of broadcasting for many years to come. I submit that the price we are paying is fair. I had an examination and appraisal of the building made by our own and independent officers. I know the amount of the mortgage that was on the building and by whom it was held. Their appraisal of the value of the building is exactly what we have paid for it. We are paying $2,000,000 and we were first asked $2,800,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: You could not build it for $2,000,000.

Mr. McCANN: That is just the point I am making. That works out at about 99 cents per cubic foot, and you could not replace a building of that type in Montreal for less than $1.55 a cubic foot. In the case of a new building we would not have occupancy much before two years, whereas in this case we will have occupancy on September 15.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. FLEMING: Do you not have to make alterations?

Mr. McCANN: I said we would have occupancy on September 15, but that is the date we will begin our operations, and we should have occupancy about the first of the new year, 1949.

Mr. FULTON: I bet you will not.

Mr. McCANN: Those figures and dates have been given to me by competent people. Some suggestion has been made here that the C.B.C. are using this as a sort of underhand method in order to benefit their own case. That is not in accordance with the facts. If there has been a milch cow in this whole proposition, it is the C.B.C. They had the facilities, they had the people, they had the offices, they had everything that goes with radio broadcasting, and all these facilities have been given to the international short wave without any cost. The boot was on the other foot.

We propose that the crown in the name of the international short wave will become the owners and the C.B.C. will continue to be paid for the services they render to the international short wave. They will become tenants of the building, and along with other people who rent concessions and the like they will provide revenue which will be offset against this expenditure.

With reference to the matter brought up by the hon. member for Halifax, I may say that news is part of all the services and occupies about half the time in each language. A great deal of our time is given to programming and dealing with matters affecting trade and commerce. We are in direct connection with the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Trade and Commerce in the matter of broadcasting anything which they might want to have broadcast.

Mr. ISNOR: Can the minister give a breakdown of the number of hours?

Mr. McCANN: No, I have not that information available at the moment. We broadcast for the united nations for two hours every day through the week except on Sundays. What goes on at the meetings of the united nations in New York is transcribed and transmitted to eight or ten countries of the world.

Perhaps I should deal briefly with the matter raised by the hon. member for St. Paul's. He wanted to know why this could not be done without the collection of fees. Certainly it could be done without a fee if this or any other government or parliament would be ready to appropriate millions of dollars, as they do in the United Kingdom, to carry on the B.B.C. The B.B.C. charge a fee of £1 and they have 11,000,000 listeners. They get $44,000,000 from the public through licence fees. In addition the British parliament appropriates $18,000,000, so that they have $62,000,000 or its equivalent with which to do their broadcasting. They do no commercial work whatever, but they do a lot of international broadcasting in order to keep people in the democratically inclined countries of Europe and Asia in touch with what is going on in the democratic world. We could adopt a policy of that kind, but from what I know about parliaments I think it would be pretty hard to change to a policy where you would need appropriations of millions of dollars each year in order to carry on broadcasting.

I am going to say just one more word. I outlined the program two years ago when we asked for a loan of $2,000,000. I said at that time that we contemplated spending about $9,000,000 or $10,000,000 in order to establish facilities from one end of the country to the other and in order to take up frequency channels which had been allotted to Canada for high power development, and also in order to establish radio centres. So far as Toronto is concerned, may I say that it is contemplated that a radio centre will be established there later. We started off with Montreal because that is a metropolitan centre and the largest city in Canada. It more nearly meets the requirements we have because it is closer to the Sackville international short-wave station.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to make one comment with respect to the setting-up of the radio committee, and then ask some questions. First, may I make it quite clear that I accept no part of the responsibility for having said that we did not want a committee set up. But I would point out to the minister that there were a large number of committees this session, and for some reason they seemed to have more work referred to them than has been the case in past years. Unless there was an announcement of some major change in policy it was therefore natural to feel that perhaps there would be no need for the usual C.B.C. committee to be appointed. Certainly the impression we had was that the C.B.C. was carrying on under settled policy which had been fully discussed by the past committees, and it was not until the last three weeks of the session that we found out about this purchase of a building for the international short-wave station, and also the intention to co-ordinate the various offices in Montreal. That is an entirely new departure, so far as we were aware. It is not logical to say that had we known that anything of that sort was contemplated we would not have insisted on the radio committee being set up. It was because we did not know that until the last three weeks of the session that we did not ask that the committee be set up.

Perhaps the minister has given the information I am about to ask for. What amounts are being paid for leases in Montreal?

Mr. McCANN: Yes, I gave that.

Mr. FULTON: Who will be the chief tenant of the building? I understood the minister to say that the crown will own the building and the C.B.C. and the international short wave will both occupy it. Who will administer the building? Will the C.B.C. be in charge of and administer any part of it and rent to the short-wave station, or vice versa?

Mr. McCANN: It will be administered by the C.B.C. The occupants will be those people who are connected with the short-wave system and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The engineering requirements in Montreal are considerable because they have to do with developments all over Canada. The C.B.C. engineers have built all the equipment which was necessary in the development of these high-powered stations. Considerable space will be taken up by studios which will be used jointly by artists of the international short wave and the C.B.C.

Mr. FULTON: The point is that the building is definitely going to be used by both the C.B.C. and the international short wave?

Mr. McCANN: Yes. They are to be brought together and centralized in the one building.

Mr. FULTON: In addition to the capital expenditure that is being made there is a considerable increase over last year in the operating cost. It works out to an increase of $259,831. Can the minister explain how operating costs have gone up, in view of his statement that C.B.C. were cramped for space? I find, for example, $90,000 for postage, printing and stationery, which seems a tremendous amount under that one head.

Mr. McCANN: One of the reasons for the increase in operating costs is that, despite the fact that we were overcrowded, we added three new services in international broadcasting, using three more languages. You have to have people who can speak Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Italian, French, English and all the rest, and they charge pretty good fees.

Mr. FULTON: Why do we not get any compensation from the united nations when we broadcast for them?

Mr. McCANN: That has never been considered a commercial proposition. We regard it as Canada's contribution to the united nations to let them have the use of our facilities without charge.

Mr. FULTON: Do we get credit for that fact when the program is put on the air?

Mr. McCANN: Absolutely; that is announced. Within the last few months we have received over 40,000 communications from various countries telling us how much they appreciated the service that was given.

Mr. ISNOR: Is it the intention of the minister to reply to the inquiry I made about the amalgamation or merging of C.B.C. with the national film board?

Mr. McCANN: I do not think the government has given consideration to amalgamating the C.B.C. with the national film board. They are two entirely different set-ups. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is the property of those who pay licence fees for receiving sets and of commercial firms who pay licences. That includes about 95 per cent of the people of Canada, because our coverage is between 95 and 97 per cent of the homes of Canada. That is in an entirely different position from the film board, which is maintained out of the taxes of all the people of Canada. It was an agency set up to create and distribute films. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, according to the broadcasting act of 1936, is an entirely separate corporation responsible not to the government but to parliament. They operate wholly-owned and wholly-controlled public systems of broadcasting. The national film board was set up under the National Film Board Act, and it is there to do sponsored work for different departments of government and such other work as the board, which is representative of all parts of the country and of all the services within the government, may be directed to do.

Mr. ISNOR: My impression was that the same principle applied to the international short wave system, which is paid for by this country at large, as applies to the national film board. But I do not wish to pursue the matter further at this time.

Mr. HANSELL: When I spoke before I mentioned, just in a casual way, that the radio committee had not been set up this year, and that because no committee had been set up there were perhaps many things upon which we were not sufficiently informed. The minister, when he replied, seemed to indicate by what he said, and perhaps also by the inflection of his voice, that it had been the government's desire to have this committee set up, that it had the motion all ready and its own members allocated to the committee, and that then, just as they were about to ask for its appointment, those on the opposition side expressed themselves as against setting up the committee this year. That is the impression the minister left upon the house. I consulted with the leader of this party, the hon. member for Peace River, and he says he knows nothing about that.

Mr. McCANN: The official opposition.

Mr. HANSELL: The whip of the C.C.F. also knew nothing about it. So the Conservative party may have to take the responsibility for there not being a radio committee this year. Maybe we did not need one. But that is not the point. The impression has gone out across this country: Oh yes, the government wanted a radio committee set up, but nobody else wanted it. That is not so. If the truth were known—and the official opposition can speak for themselves—perhaps the government came along in the dying hours of the session when there was no proper opportunity for a fair inquiry, and the official opposition may have said so.

I want to ask a question about the building the government have purchased for the short-wave service. It is a crown corporation. The C.B.C. are going to pay rent for the use of it. Did the government consider the advisability of asking for this appropriation for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation so that they would own the building and it would be an asset of the C.B.C.? They could then charge rent for the operation of the short-wave system.

I believe that the national film board and the C.B.C. are big enough to require the attention of a separate minister. In saying that I have no desire to reflect on the Minister of National Revenue, who is a good minister and has done a good job, but I believe that these two branches of government, the C.B.C., which is a crown corporation—there is no disputing that, although there may be some legal technicalities about it—and the national film board; these two branches of our Canadian life—let me put it that way—have grown big enough to require the attention of a separate minister. I think that would make it a stronger department. As it is now, the Minister of National Revenue, whoever he may be at the time, is a mere figurehead, a sort of connecting link between the government and these two institutions, the national film board and the C.B.C. They run themselves and perhaps run the minister, rather than the minister giving them instructions. That may be a good thing; I do not know. I should think it would be better to have our government organized in that way. Perhaps the minister will comment on my second point.

Mr. PEARKES: I have a brief question to ask which I think could properly be asked under one of these items. During the war the C.B.C. rented a private station in Prince Rupert known as CFPR, and were able to broadcast to that locality the various programs of C.B.C. These programs were carried by a communication system which was provided by the government during the war. I understand that the C.B.C. still leases CFPR in Prince Rupert, but the citizens of that locality get a very modified C.B.C. program. There is some difficulty in getting the programs broadcast although they are taken to the Prince Rupert station. I am told that it is because it has been necessary to lease the lines which were constructed during the war.

A year ago when consideration was being given to the disposal of these lines I asked whether the service would be made available to the people of northern British Columbia, so that they would not lose anything that they had gained during the war. I have a letter from the radio committee of the chamber of commerce of Prince Rupert in which they inform me that while the programs actually reach the station, they are not broadcast. I refer to programs such as the Imperial Oil hockey broadcast. These programs are not broadcast to the people of Prince Rupert although they are actually in the station. Will the minister tell me why these programs cannot be broadcast, or will he take steps to see that they are broadcast in the future?

Mr. McCANN: The answer to that question is entirely a matter of costs. To hire the transmission lines to put the programs from Prince George to Prince Rupert would cost $30,000 or $35,000 a year. That has not been worked out, although they get some of the programs because the Canadian National Railways transmit them over their lines to their own employees who are listening.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The item before the committee has to do with international short-wave broadcasting, maintenance and operation. A general discussion has taken place under the general administration item. We do not want to go over that again. We should confine our remarks to the items under discussion.

Mr. PEARKES: I submit that this is in order because it is an international broadcast. We are right on the frontier of Canada between British Columbia and Alaska.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has it to do with the international short-wave broadcasting station?

Mr. PEARKES: I think so. It is heard in Alaska. Both the citizens of the United States and the people of Prince Rupert are interested in these hockey broadcasts; therefore the matter is distinctly international.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are hockey games broadcast over the short-wave station?

Mr. ADAMSON: I do not know whether these two questions were covered last night. In view of the cramped hotel space in Montreal was it necessary to have the international broadcasts concentrated in one centre rather than build part of the engineering and other facilities outside of the city?

I should like to have some idea of the pattern of the short-wave programs which are broadcast from Sackville. I have heard them in the West Indies. There are two or three services and a special beam to the West Indies and South America. There is another beam to the continent of Europe. I have not been able to find out whether a statement has been made on that to the committee. The committee would be interested in knowing, not just the countries to which we broadcast, but the flexibility of the station. How far are the broadcasts beamed, and what countries receive them? What reaction has the government received from the countries to which these broadcasts are beamed? I know that the United States station "Voice of America", which is a station similar to ours, although they have one in San Francisco and another on the Atlantic seaboard, receive favourable reports on their broadcasting. As a matter of fact they are so favourable that I understand the Soviet union has taken steps to jam their signals as they come through the iron curtain or the dividing line between the east and west of Europe. Some statement on that should be given to the committee at this stage.

Mr. McCANN: Most of the information along that line was given last night. I may say that we can broadcast to any part of the world. The united nations have asked particularly that our service be used because they get a clearer signal throughout the world from the station at Sackville than they do from any other.

Mr. ADAMSON: The Sackville station can be heard anywhere in the world?

Mr. McCANN: Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON: Has the minister reports?

Mr. McCANN: That is what is reported to us.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister has not answered my first question, with regard to the situation in the city of Montreal.

Mr. McCANN: The first question had to do with the hotel situation in Montreal. There is plenty of that type of hotel service in Montreal, so that our taking over of the Ford hotel does not increase any shortage that there is in that regard.

The second question was whether it was necessary that they should be together. No, it is not altogether necessary that all the facilities be together, but it is much more convenient and much more economical than having them spread over different parts of the country.

Items agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

327. Departmental administration, $246,607.

Mr. MacNICOL: There is nothing in the estimates of the public works department pertaining to great lakes levels, particularly lakes Ontario, Erie and Huron. Since the high water levels of these three lakes, and particularly lake Ontario at the moment, are a matter of major importance, I felt I should raise the question at this time.

Across the front of the great city of Toronto lies what was in my day, when I used to visit it, as I did many hundreds of times, a most beautiful island. No finer public park existed in Canada than Toronto island as it was some years ago. When one recalls seeing over there thousands upon thousands of mothers, scores of thousands of children, all gathered there for the good of their health; when one remembers the thousands of picnics that were held on the island by residents of Toronto many years ago, one wonders why it is that today the island is in such a deplorable condition.

I was over there a few days ago to check up on my past observations, and I am exceedingly sorry to say that the high water level of lake Ontario is now ruining that beautiful island, so that unless some major reclamation program is initiated it will be washed away. At the moment the latest report for the month of June indicates that the water level of lake Ontario, that is to say, Toronto harbour, is at the almost unprecedented height of 248·15 feet above sea level, the highest level in the history of the lake since 1860, except in July 1947 when it averaged 248·81.

What can be done I am not going to say. I may offer suggestions, but I am quite aware that the problem is a great one. On the island itself, comprising about 800 acres, there were many years ago beautiful lagoons on which the residents of Toronto used to pass their time in pleasure boats, and in my time many thousands of people spent the summer in cottages on the island. Unless some change takes place in the Ontario lake level, all that will be a thing of the past, and it will be a serious matter for the great city of Toronto.

Not only does this apply to Toronto island; the same is true all along the three lakes. Look at Burlington beach, where many hundreds of houses were built; today they are more or less under water. One sees the same thing all along lake Erie up around Erieau, where I went recently to see the effect of the high water level. But the damage is not confined to the Canadian side; one can see the same thing on the United States side. I am afraid there will be a great deal of trouble.

In 1941, if I remember rightly, I brought up the question of lake levels in the House of Commons, and I predicted then what would happen as one of the results of the diversion of a very large volume of water from the Albany river watershed into the St. Lawrence river watershed. I predicted then that not only this government but the government of the United States would face thousands of legal actions for the destruction of private property, and that is what is coming to pass.

On March 10 of this year an organization known as the Lake Shore Erosion Association held a conference in Toronto. So far as I can estimate from the report, which I have in my hand, between sixty and seventy-five municipalities along the shores of lake Ontario, lake Erie and lake Huron, attended to lay before the conference the troubles which each was having from the constantly rising lake levels. Many resolutions were passed, one of which I will read, No. 7:

> Resolved that this organization ask the provincial and federal governments to instruct their engineers to make a survey of erosion on the great lakes and report with a recommendation for remedy; and that in this report be included a report on the effects of the Ogoki and Albany river diversions on the level of the great lakes.

It was about the probable effect of the diversion of waters from the Albany river watershed into the St. Lawrence river watershed that I spoke in 1941 when I predicted that precisely what is happening now would take place. The delegates who framed this resolution probably had before them a pamphlet

I wrote in 1939; for I sent copies of it to many of the municipalities along the great lakes who have written to me on the subject. The pamphlet is called "Water". I gave a copy of it to the minister this morning and I shall be glad to give copies to other members. This pamphlet is a treatise on lake levels. I have travelled over these lakes from one end to the other, as well as to their sources and to the sources of the rivers that flow into them; I know therefore what I speak about. In the pamphlet I discuss the lake levels and the flow of water into these lakes.

This report mentions the Ogoki and Albany rivers. The Albany river watershed is in northern Ontario, flowing from west to east. It is a big river, between 500 and 600 miles long. In some places it is a mile wide. Its principal tributary is the Ogoki river which is about 500 miles in length. I have been on that river from one end to the other. The Ogoki river has an average flow of 4,000 cubic feet per second throughout the year, which means that in the spring the flow goes up to anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 cubic feet per second, while in the summer it goes down to perhaps 1,000.

Some years ago I took a trip to Chicago, and engineers of the United States government whom I visited said some things that surprised me. At that time I was fighting against the diversion of water from lake Michigan out of the St. Lawrence river watershed into the Mississippi river watershed. Chicago wanted more and more water. At that time they were taking about 12,000 cubic feet per second out of the St. Lawrence river watershed and pouring it into the Mississippi river watershed.

I had gone there to discuss the problem with them and they told me that we would not have to worry very long because they would get all the water they wanted from northern Ontario. That was something utterly new to me and I asked, quite innocently, where they would get it from in northern Ontario. They replied that they expected to divert the waters of the Ogoki river. I hurried back to Toronto and later arranged a trip to the Ogoki river with Mr. Roy Snider of the Toronto Telegram, a wizard in this line of business. We found the place on the Ogoki where the dam was to be located.

Later the question came up in the House of Commons of the Ontario government's proposal to pour more water down the Nipigon river, and I fought that like a tiger. I fought as hard as I could, and for a considerable time I was instrumental, I believe, in preventing the passage of that proposal through this house. Finally, however, this government allowed the Ontario government to do what I argued was an act against the laws of God, in the diversion of water from one large watershed into another watershed; because in my opinion the waters of the Albany river should not find their way into the St. Lawrence river watershed. But the government finally did agree to the diversion of water from the Albany river watershed into the great lakes, the argument being that it would allow them to develop much more power. I often think of the engineers with whom I was associated at the time we were fighting the diversion of water at Chicago, and of their strong argument that the diversion of that water lowered the levels of lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and Michigan. I agree with them; they were absolutely right. It amuses me now to hear what some of these same engineers say today. In fact it passes my comprehension how they can say that the pouring of water into the great lakes watershed does not raise the lake levels.

What has happened? At that time, and for quite a length of time before, those who were fighting the Chicago diversion put up a strong battle. They had associated with them all the states along the United States border, including Wisconsin, whose engineers were most vigorous fighters and whom I visited on several occasions at their capital, Madison. Their arguments were strong that the diversion of water at Chicago, which at that time was at the rate of 12,000 cubic feet per second, seriously lowered the levels of the great lakes, and they were right.

Some hon. members will recall the story of that battle, and how it resulted in the United States government agreeing, in order to appease Chicago, to build under the city of Chicago a tunnel perhaps twenty-five miles in length and twenty-four feet in diameter, from the sewage disposal works in the north part of Chicago. The result was that the effluent of the sewage disposal works would pour into the Des Plaines river and go on into the Illinois and down into the Mississippi. That tunnel cost perhaps $150 million. The United States did that so that Chicago would permit them to agree with Canada not to take so much water out of the great lakes watershed; and the United States supreme court issued an order that Chicago should reduce its takings to 1,500 cubic feet per second for dilution purposes. But the city itself was allowed to take for domestic purposes from lake Michigan an additional 2,000 cubic feet per second, or rather the city is now allowed to take a total for dilution and domestic purposes of 3,500 cubic feet per second instead of what they had been taking, 12,000 cubic feet per second.

From the Canadian side, from the immediate watershed of the Nipigon river, which includes Nipigon lake and a string of lakes up north over the height of land, and from the Kenogami watershed, the Kenogami being a tributary of the Ogoki, we are now pouring into the great lakes watershed 5,200 cubic feet per second, 1,200 cubic feet per second from the Kenogami and 4,000 cubic feet from the Ogoki. Chicago, as I said a moment ago, is allowed to take out at the moment at the rate of 3,500 cubic feet per second, which makes a net increase in the water flowing into the great lakes watershed of 1,700 cubic feet per second. Some hon. members will say that does not amount to a great deal of water, but I say it does. It amounts to a vast volume of water when you realize that it goes on every second of every minute of every hour for 365 days in the year. Actually it amounts to 164 billion cubic feet of water per year. I will not listen to any engineer who says that the flowing into the great lakes watershed of even an additional 50 billion cubic feet of water per year does not mean anything. It does. All these municipalities along the great lakes are alive to that fact.

I read a moment ago resolution No. 7, in which the reference to the Albany and the Ogoki impelled me to show that from these two rivers we are pouring into the great lakes watershed an additional 1,700 cubic feet per second.

Resolution No. 8 reads as follows:

Whereas it is the opinion of this association that the removal of sand from the beds of the great lakes system contributes to and aggravates the erosion taking place on the shores of the said great lakes and whereas the control of the beds of the lakes is within the province of Ontario.

Mention is made of the question of sand removal, because everyone knows that at east Toronto we have those magnificent Scarboro Bluffs which are being ruined by erosion. West of Toronto all the way to Hamilton, including such places as Port Credit, Long Branch and all along the northern shore of lake Ontario, the shores are being ruined by erosion. The problem of sand is mentioned there because the city of Toronto at the moment is considering this gigantic problem in connection with the destruction of its own beautiful island. The last day I was there I had to walk on planks where we used to have all sorts of ball games and all sorts of parties. Sand is mentioned because the city of Toronto has under consideration—I do not know who is fathering it—the raising of the level of Toronto island by two feet. It is a big problem. Toronto island consists of 800 acres. To raise that 800 acres by two feet would require about 80 million cubic feet of sand.

This association is fearful of the pumping of the sand from the lake into the area to build up Toronto island. I shall not make any comment on whether that would mean trouble or not, but I mention it because the Department of Public Works has control over all that area, and it is a problem. Certainly the island must be raised two feet to make it serviceable at all, or else some other major action must be taken.

I want to give some idea of the effect of this diversion. I do not say for one moment that the diversion is the whole cause. Someone will tell of other causes. But to me it is one of the major causes, because I have been at it a long time; I know that the pouring into the great lakes watershed of a net of 1,700 cubic feet per second is bound to have an effect. It may not happen all at once. It took a long time coming up, and it will be just as long going down. I believe that the present water level of lake Ontario is not going down very rapidly. As a matter of fact, with the exception of July 1947, it is higher this year than it has been in any previous year since 1860, when the records were first kept. For instance, according to the topographical report I have in my hand, in May 1948 the height of water was 0·37 feet higher than it was in April 1948. It was 0·45 feet higher than May 1947. That is about half a foot higher. It was 0·79 feet lower than the highest May—that of 1870—since 1860. In July 1947 it reached 248·83, and today it is 248·15. It was 4·27 feet higher than the lowest May since 1860, which was in 1935. In other words, the water level of lake Ontario today is five feet higher than the lowest record. That is a gigantic volume of water. I am particularly interested in the preservation of the beautiful island at Toronto, in my judgment one of the finest parks in the world. But today it is being ruined by these high water levels.

These figures are obtainable from the hydrographic service, and they must be correct or they would not send them out. In May of this year in lake Ontario it was 1·54 feet higher than the average stage of May for the last eighty-eight years. That is a pretty high record. It is stated that the cost of raising the island two feet would be $3,000,000. Who will pay for it? Certainly the city of Toronto should not have to pay for it. Why should Toronto have to pay for it? The city is not responsible for the pouring of water into the St. Lawrence watershed from the Albany river watershed.

Let me repeat that for years I fought against the Chicago drainage canal diversion being allowed to take out as much water as it did, and these engineers were fighting the Chicago diversion when I argued that taking that water out lowered the lake level. If those engineers were right then, certainly they are wrong today if they say that the pouring of 5,200 cubic feet per second into the great lakes watershed does not affect the water levels of the great lakes. I know that the level of lake Superior is controlled, and I am not speaking about lake Superior. But in respect of the three lower lakes, I maintain that there is no other argument than that the pouring in of that big volume of water has had a bad effect. The fact that Chicago does take out 3,500 cubic feet per second means a net increase in the water of the lower great lakes of 1,700 cubic feet per second.

The fact that these levels are so high is clear evidence that they are affected. Other engineers say that the general tendency will be up. What is to be done about it? What can the department do? I do not know; but I would ask the minister between now and the next session to look into the question, through his engineers. Someone will say it is only half an inch or an inch. But it is always going up. It cannot be allowed to continue. What is the use of Toronto paying moneys out this year to raise the level of the island in front of the city—and no doubt the city will expect the federal government to pay for it—if in another ten years, owing to the continual ingress of water from the Albany river watershed into the great lakes watershed, you have to add another two feet to the top of it?

It is a big problem. I appreciate the minister's allowing me to bring it up at this time; I do not wish to continue any longer, because I want him to finish his estimates. I would however ask him to consider carefully what I have placed on the record, and I would ask that he be not led astray. Let no one tell the minister that the pouring in of that amount of water does not have any effect upon these levels. It has. All he has to do is to check back to the reports submitted by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, by the city engineering department in Toronto, and by other engineering bodies, at the time of the fight against the Chicago drainage canal, and he will see that the engineers argued that the taking out of the water at Chicago did lower the lake levels. I shall be amused if they try now to say that the pouring in of additional water does not affect the lake levels. The report showed that the levels are higher today than they have been in the past eighty-eight years.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Had I the experience of the hon. member, and had I visited all the rivers he speaks about, perhaps I could put aside the reports I receive from engineers and take the same stand as he does. But I have to admit my lack of knowledge in these matters, and have to rely upon the reports given to me by the engineers in my department.

If I followed well the hon. member's argument, he has said that the diversion of the natural flow of water into the great lakes has brought the levels of those lakes up to an extent that damage is caused to the shoreline and to the island at Toronto. Having explained this to the officials of my department, I received the following answer this morning:

It has been claimed that the high water on lake Ontario is caused partially through a diversion of water from the Little Long Lac watershed and the Lake Nipigon watershed. It is true that water is diverted on to the great lakes system from these two watersheds in the amount of approximately 5,200 cubic feet per second; i.e., 1,200 cubic feet per second in the case of the former and 4,000 cubic feet in the case of the latter. This diversion has been going on for approximately four years and it was legalized through an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States, wherein it is admitted that the use of this water for power is solely the property of the Canadian government and is not to be divided equally as is the case with the rest of the water in the great lakes.

In 1941 when these notes were exchanged it was computed that the diversion would never raise lake Ontario more than three inches, and in order to arrive at this point it would take approximately twelve years. In order to arrive at this figure it must be noted that the small diversion, which is only three per cent of the total flow, will have to assert its influence on each of the lakes in advance of lake Ontario, and it must also be noted that once it has arrived at this predetermined figure of three inches the flow through the St. Lawrence will have been increased to a point that this extra water will not raise the level of the lake any further.

These figures have been checked by the dominion, the province and the United States authorities and, while there are some discrepancies, they all arrive at the same point of a variation of an inch only.

They were checked this morning as to accuracy with the Ontario hydro.

The water level for lake Ontario during 1947 was extremely high, the July average being 248·8, which is the highest it has been since records have been kept. The average for June this year, to date, is nine inches lower than that of last year.

I am told that this increase in the water level would depend more upon natural causes than the diversion of water. Not being an expert I have to give this answer to the hon. member. I do not ask him to agree with it because I know he has a lot of experience. However, I think he will understand my position when we are discussing the level of the waters in these lakes.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, I represent a constituency that is west of Toronto. It is keenly interested in the problem of erosion of the shores of lake Ontario. The hon. member for Davenport has made a long, careful and diligent study of matters relating to erosion and like things, but I feel that perhaps I am in a similar position to the minister in that I have to rely upon reports that come to me from outside sources. I am neither an engineer nor an expert on a matter of this kind, nor are my constituents. Perhaps because of that I can better represent them in discussing it.

At Port Credit the erosion is creating a real danger. It was because of that that the municipality of Port Credit and the township of Toronto, which forms part of the shoreline of lake Ontario and which surrounds Port Credit, joined with other municipalities to see if something could not be done during the fall of last year. I attended two erosion conferences held in the city hall, Toronto, and a further conference which was held at Port Credit in December, at which a large number of municipalities along the lake Erie shore and the lake Ontario shore were represented. As the hon. member for Davenport properly pointed out, it was on that basis that the foundation was laid for the lake shore erosion conference which was held in Toronto on March 10.

During all these meetings keen interest was shown by every delegate from the different municipal bodies. I should also note the fact that the name of the hon. member for Davenport came up quite regularly during the discussions, as one who had given a great deal of his time and who had provided much support to the organization which was set up to attempt to relieve the anxious situation facing the municipalities along these shorelines.

If the minister could only see the situation at Port Credit he would realize that such large portions of the shoreline are being torn away that houses and other permanent structures will fall right into Lake Ontario unless they are reinforced. The situation is causing concern to everyone. In many respects it is quite beyond the municipality's capacity to take care of it, although Port Credit municipality has attempted to put up rubble walls in an effort to stop further erosion.

If we were not near the end of the session I am sure that this matter would provoke a lengthy debate, but at this stage we must not do anything of that kind. The movement toward solving the problem of lake shore erosion has now reached the point where this conference has put out, as the hon. member for Davenport mentioned a moment ago, this interesting booklet containing the proceedings of the conference of March 10 last.

I understand that the Ontario department of planning and development has started to make surveys. My main desire this afternoon is simply to ask the minister if he does not think that one of these days the dominion government will have to take into consideration its part with respect to the question of flood control, of lake shore erosion and of all these matters which now seem to be quite beyond the power of the local municipalities to handle. It seems to me that the dominion government must soon announce some kind of policy with respect to giving some help to these places.

The position of the dominion in relation to the Ontario conservation authorities came up on a previous occasion when a grant of 37½ per cent by the dominion government toward these necessitous and desirable works was under consideration. I think this is a matter in which the dominion government ought to go along with the provincial government and lend its facilities and engineers to the end that some co-operative measure may be carried out by the dominion, the province and the municipalities. Wherever that combination can properly be worked out we should have all three jurisdictions taking their part; and this is a matter of great urgency to the people who are on the shoreline of these lakes.

It is all very well to have an argument among the engineers, the hon. member for Davenport and other people about what the cause is. Our people know that they are not engineers and they are not much interested in arguments about the cause. They are interested in the effect, and that effect cannot be overlooked or cannot be lightly dealt with. As the hon. member for Davenport so very properly asked a few minutes ago, I am going to ask the minister if he will give consideration to the matter during the recess, with a view to getting some really worthwhile remedy for the problem before the damage becomes worse than it has been up to the present.

That leads me to this one other point, which I want to combine with my remarks with respect to erosion. In Port Credit harbour—or really in what cannot be regarded as anything like a harbour at the moment—there is considerable dominion government land. The dominion government with respect to its own land in the harbour has not up to the present time taken any effective steps to see that the shore is not to be washed away by the erosion.

I would ask the minister to give consideration as well to implementing the report of the chief engineer, backed by the resident engineer in that district, putting into effect their recommendations for the construction of a permanent harbour at Port Credit. I do not ask this just as a constituency proposition; but the situation there is such that I think it is perfectly proper for the federal government to make the necessary financial outlay. I know that the outlay will be considerable, but, as it is now, from time to time we are pouring in there considerable amounts of public money without getting any value for the expenditure. Dredging is done; the dredges throw up the sand, and then it is washed back in again. The situation there is looked upon by the public generally as nothing short of a mess. Conditions at Port Credit harbour have become scandalous, and that situation has been allowed to exist for many years.

I appreciate what the minister and his department have done with respect to soundings and plans for that harbour. That at least has given some hope and encouragement to us in that part of Ontario that that harbour work will finally be undertaken. There are many reasons for proceeding with it, as the minister knows; because last winter he received a strong and representative delegation from that part of Ontario, to which he listened with kindness and with appreciation, and certainly with courtesy. I would point out to the minister that as time goes on, the remarkable development that is taking place in that area calls more and more loudly for proper port facilities. At this stage of the session I shall not discuss at length the industrial development in that area, except to say that the greatest industrial development that has taken place in Canada since the close of the war has been along the lake shore from Toronto to Port Credit. That is not simply my own idea; it is contained in the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as minister of reconstruction. More new industries have been located in that section of Ontario since the war than in any other part of this dominion. Facilities therefore should be provided so that all that traffic shall not have to pass through congested avenues of the city of Toronto.

The whole district requires and is calling for proper facilities at Port Credit. The development which has taken place in that area is a strong argument added to former arguments which were brought before the minister and parliament. Having in mind also the erosion difficulties, and the necessity of protecting dominion government land, it seems to me that now is the time for the minister to give immediate consideration to putting in a harbour of the type which his engineers have already considered. I am hopeful that the minister's good judgment, which has been so evident on so many other occasions, will again prevail, and that we shall have harbour facilities constructed at Port Credit which will serve a rapidly growing industrial area and be a credit to our own part of the country as well as to the government and parliament of Canada.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is the second time within the last two months that I have been impressed by arguments in favour of the development of the harbour at Port Credit. Some two months ago I received a delegation in my office, and on that occasion the hon. member for Peel was present. They gave me many arguments to justify the expenditure of money to help stop erosion and develop the port. Since that time I have had the engineers of my department undertake a thorough survey to verify the facts presented by the delegation as to the expansion of industry in that area, and I can assure my hon. friend that in the recess I shall certainly give a lot of thought to this problem.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, I presume you do not want me to speak on floods on this item, so I shall confine myself to river bank erosion, hoping to have the opportunity to discuss floods some time this afternoon.

I was much interested in what previous speakers have said, and I join with them in impressing on the government that while under the act set up forty years ago the federal authorities may have no responsibility for river bank erosion, conditions have entirely changed since that time and must be met accordingly. I am not blaming the government for administering the act as is, but I say it is up to parliament to amend the act. I am confining my remarks to conditions in my own riding, but I am sure that many other ridings are similarly situated.

Year after year since 1912, although I did not actively participate at that time, we had been petitioning the federal government and the government of British Columbia about river bank erosion. If I remember correctly, although I had nothing to do with it then, the first action taken in connection with river bank erosion on the Fraser river was in 1912 or 1913. Every year since then, ever since I have been active in political life or have been a member I have been urging the government to accept responsibility in this matter. I have lost many acres of my own land, on which I paid good taxes, through its floating away down the Fraser river. In the last few years I have seen acre after acre and buildings on the bank of the Fraser river, particularly in Chilliwack and in Kent, float away. The only reply I can get from the department is that the federal government is responsible only for channel clearance and navigation. As I stated the other day, years ago, when the Fraser river was navigable as far as Hope, and before that as far as Yale—that was before my time —we did not have these great sandbars which caused river bank erosion, which is not taken care of by federal government engineers and certainly not by the provincial government engineers.

I should like every member of the house to see pictures taken in 1939. I am not speaking of the floods this year; I shall have plenty to say about them this afternoon. I am talking now about river bank erosion, which has cut right into the dike near the main bridge. I have pictures of the piling put up by the C.P.R. in 1894 and 1896 when they realized that the end of their bridge would go out. I would like members to see a picture taken in 1939 of one span of the C.P.R. bridge.

Another cut was made half way in the farmers' dike through erosion caused by the action of the C.P.R., in spite of the protests of the reeve of the municipality and my representations to the federal Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works. The Department of Public Works replied, up until November of last year, that they had no control over the matter, but in November last they admitted that they had responsibility for the Fraser river causing erosion. I would like to show the minister a picture of the span that went out this year, taking with it one hundred feet of the dike, through the erosion caused by the action of the C.P.R. over a number of years.

I was not in the house on June 9—and a lot of damage was done after that by erosion—but according to Hansard the Minister of Transport said that the railways estimated that already a million dollars' worth of damage had been done to their lines, not to the farms. I do not want to be critical; I do not want to indulge in recriminations, but I believe it is up to parliament, not government, to realize that a lot of changes have taken place since the act was passed. Among other things, the watershed in British Columbia has changed. I do not know so much about other parts of Canada, but I do know that in British Columbia the watershed has changed. When the watershed changes, even the greatest engineers will admit that the flow of water, through navigable waters or through any other system, adversely affects river bank erosion.

This job is too big for any government or any party. It is up to parliament to deal with it. I should like to point out to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, who represent the government and the people of Canada, that we have many millions of dollars at stake. Both our trans-Canada railways, one publicly-owned and the other privately-owned, have a lot at stake. We have a big stake in the privately-owned railway, although we do not own it. The whole of Canada has a stake in these railways. The trans-Canada highway and the transcontinental telegraph lines are affected by these floods. The whole economy and the whole outlook have changed since the act was brought into being. Surely it should be apparent to everyone that no municipality or municipal government is in a financial position to guard against and prevent river bank erosion.

I am not an engineer, but I personally believe that the answer to erosion on the Fraser river bank is dredging. Ever since I have been a member of the house I have urged upon the minister the necessity of acquiring adequate dredging equipment. The only equipment we have now to prevent river bank erosion is one obsolete dredge which is forty years old. Its entire time is taken up in the port of Westminster and at the mouth of the Fraser valley. That is the only dredging equipment we have available.

I must admit that we have had certain small grants of $3,000, $5,000, and $8,000 in this connection, but it is a mere pittance. The work that it could do could be washed away in twenty minutes. It is time that the parliament of Canada looked at river bank erosion in the Fraser valley. It is a national problem and one that must be worked out. Some system of engineering should be worked out, not locally, so far as the Fraser river is concerned. A commission should be set up at once with complete authority as to diking, channeling, clearing and preventing river bank erosion on the Fraser river.

I urge the minister to take steps tonight. I hope that this session of parliament will be concluded by midnight. Before prorogation adequate funds should be voted to provide for ample dredging. A country with the wealth of Canada, and with what we have at stake, should be able to secure adequate dredging equipment to do the work. Any country that can spend $10,000,000 a day on destruction can surely find a few million dollars to prevent river bank erosion.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In all fairness I should say a word in answer to the hon. member for Fraser Valley. I may tell him that the department has sent out to British Columbia, to the Fraser valley, one of its outstanding engineers, Mr. Goodspeed, who, along with Mr. Morton, is most familiar with conditions in that province.

Mr. GRAYDON: Judging by his name he ought to give fast service.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): His name is Goodspeed. He is out there. He was instructed to make a complete report on the conditions, and wherever dredging is necessary to try to avoid these conditions in the future, if dredging is one of the ways to avoid them, we shall instruct the department officials to proceed immediately with these works. That is why we have an estimate of $500,000, for repairing the damages to our own works and do some dredging. The hon. gentleman may rest assured that these instructions will be given immediately.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter of serious concern to some 20,000 of my constituents living along the banks of the Columbia river or the Arrow lakes. It is of particularly serious concern at this time because of the damage occasioned by the recent floods, and the hope that something of a permanent nature will be done to prevent the recurrence of such damage.

A great part of the damage done in my constituency was done near the city of Trail, one of the greatest industrial communities in Canada. In addition to that, all the scattered communities and scattered farms along the shores of the Arrow lakes suffered damage to a greater or lesser extent. I am fully aware of the terms of the agreement between the dominion government and the provincial government with reference to assistance to the Fraser valley area, and that that area has been termed an area of national disaster, and that so far as rehabilitation is concerned the province has agreed to look after any difficulties in other parts of the province. That is not the aspect of the question that I wish to deal with. I wish to deal with the long-term approach to the regulation and control of these large rivers to prevent future flooding.

I am well acquainted with the Columbia river, which is the greatest river in British Columbia, because I have lived on its shores for forty-three years. My property is on its shores. In order to give the minister a fair picture—and I want to be as brief as possible —I shall deal with a report I have here from the city engineer of Trail, a report which outlines the damage and makes certain proposals. I have no exact knowledge of the damage in the upper parts of the river or in the Arrow lakes, but I stress this because it has a particular significance for the city of Trail, and I think the recommendation is an excellent one, certainly, which if acted upon, will protect a very important industrial community in Canada either in peace or war.

Prompt and aggressive measures were taken by the city of Trail and the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada Limited to combat and control Columbia river flood and overflow of its banks into the city from the period May 31 to June 15.

Emergency building of temporary dikes and fills was continually maintained twenty-four hours a day, bringing to bear every available resource of men and equipment to protect life and property. In that respect I want to say that the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada Limited was most generous in placing at the disposal of the committee its crews, equipment and engineering staff. Approximately a mile and a half of dikes and protective work were built in this time, including hauling and dumping at least 100,000 cubic yards of sand and gravel for fills and support of temporary dikes, including hauling and constructing timber work, using 60,000 board feet of material. Installation of relief sewers including seven pumping stations, pumping sewage through steel mains on surface to river by this method. The total joint expenditure incurred to date by the city of Trail and the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada Limited is $125,000. Of this sum the city's share has been agreed on as $50,000. That figure of costs does not include the voluntary work.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. HERRIDGE: Pardon me. I am not in the habit of reading in this house. I am simply reading excerpts from the engineer's report for the sake of greater accuracy and the saving of time.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I would like to know what is the report.

Mr. HERRIDGE: "The Corporation of the City of Trail, British Columbia", a brief report on the damage and proposals to prevent a similar situation in the future. That does not include, Mr. Chairman, the volunteer work of hundreds of men who really gave their time during the period of this difficulty. As the result of the flood the city is faced with certain expenses to restore the normal operations and functions of the city's activities. They will require to remove auxiliary dikes and fills from city streets; they will have to repair pavements, roads and streets, sewers and water systems. They will have to pump, clean and disinfect the basements and flood areas where required, as the water recedes. There will have to be continued operation of the auxiliary sewage pumping system to ensure and maintain health and prevent epidemic and nuisance, until the water reaches normal level.

There will of course be no volunteer labour available for this restoration work, and therefore no correct estimate of the cost can be made until the water recedes, but it is obvious that the cost will be very heavy to the city of Trail.

I am speaking now on behalf of the city of Trail, and I wish to bring to the attention of the minister the following factors. The fill material now in place on the ground could be used to very great economic advantage if joint government action were taken immediately to provide protective measures for the future, to forestall and prevent a recurrence of this ruinous condition.

It is believed that in the memory of present inhabitants of the area floods run in cycles. That is to say, there was in past years a series of successive very high water conditions; this may very well happen again, possibly next year, and the people of that district and those engaged in the industry—very important industry too, producing as it did last year nearly $100 million worth of industrial products—believe that this is the opportune time to start preventive action in order to obviate a recurrence of the difficulty. The suggestion is made that 100,000 cubic yards of fill material now in place could be used by the dominion government in the permanent work to prevent a recurrence of floods, particularly along the waterfront, on both banks of the river at Trail.

Therefore I urge upon the minister, particularly having heard that he sent one of his best engineers to British Columbia, to ask that engineer to visit Trail to see what can be done to use this 100,000 yards of material for permanent improvement with a view to preventing a recurrence of the difficulties that we have had in the last year.

In addition I would suggest that the department make a survey of the Columbia river from the international boundary to its source in order to see what should be done to prevent a recurrence of flood damage at various points.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I should like to express my support of the hon. member for Fraser Valley regarding the question of the prevention of erosion. The dominion government has for years dredged the Columbia river.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman, could not the hon. member get the report from the engineer and put it on the record, thus saving time?

Mr. HERRIDGE: Pardon me; I am not reading from the report. To conclude what I was going to say, the dominion government should in various places prevent erosion with rock cribbing or mattress work. They have done dredging for many years, but in several places in the narrows, between the upper and lower lakes, a considerable loss of land is caused by the increasing rapidity of erosion, and this creates still greater difficulty in keeping the river open for dredging. I support the hon. member for Fraser Valley in his suggestion with respect to these large navigable rivers. Everything should be done to keep them in a navigable condition by the prevention of erosion. I urge the minister to send the particular engineer to whom he referred into Trail to see the officials of the city of Trail, to see the situation as it now exists, with a view to carrying out permanent improvements that will prevent a similar occurrence in this important community in the future.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): In the Department of Public Works there is a gentleman whom I know quite well—I believe he is the chief engineer of the department—and I do not mind saying that there is no one who is better than he. I refer to Mr. Murphy. I have known him for a good many years, and I know he will do whatever is best.

A good deal has been said this morning about water in the great lakes. We have heard about the diversion of water. Well, let us find out exactly what is happening and what the solution is. Let us find out all about this cycle about which we have heard. I might mention Presqu'Ile by way of illustration. There are times when I can drive a motor car across the island, but today I could not swim across it, it is so deep. We know that these things happen, but what do we want on the great lakes? If Toronto island is being damaged, it is for the Department of Public Works to repair the damage. But we need all the water we can possibly get in the great lakes, for two reasons, one being the development of power, and the other to facilitate navigation. If we could divert more water into the great lakes it would be far better for us in Ontario. The more water we can get, the better. If there is difficulty in connection with Toronto island or along the shores of lake Ontario it is up to the government of Canada to prevent these things. The water that we can get there is of great benefit to us in our province. Last year we had to go short of power because we did not have enough water in the right places. What we need is water to give us that power, and no one should complain about getting water there.

I know the little Napoleon of public works—and he does look very much like Napoleon, doesn't he?

Mr. BRYCE: Can we get in on this whispering campaign?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): He has told us that he will do all he can for the city of Toronto, and I am sure he will keep his word. And there is a lot he can do. He had better get his engineer, Mr. Wilson, whom I know very well, to advise him, in consultation with Mr. Murphy. If he did that, perhaps we would get a lot more done for Toronto and all these other places where the people are having trouble. At any rate, we need all the water we have for the benefit of the country.

Mr. LENNARD: I associate myself with what was said by the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member for Peel, because I represent a section of Ontario which is a part of the Niagara fruit belt, and a great many people in that area are vitally concerned about what is happening along the shores of lake Ontario between Hamilton and Niagara. Stretches of that fruit belt are being eaten into by the lake shore erosion every year. I urge the Department of Public Works to do all that is necessary to prevent this condition —in fact, I would say, not only the Department of Public Works, but both governments. Both the Ontario government and the dominion government are interested in this. If my memory serves me, it was the Ontario government that changed the course of some of these waterways, and it is only right that they should assume their proper share of the responsibility. The present Ontario government should take its full share of responsibility, and so should the dominion government.

Mr. PROBE: Going through the estimates of the Department of Public Works for 1948-49 and the supplementaries, I find that the minister is asking the house for some $84,000,000 for his department, which is about $7 per capita for the people of Canada. Because I am concerned with the distribution of these funds across Canada, I was especially interested in the extent to which money was to be spent in my own province. I notice that, including the supplementaries, the Department of Public Works is spending there some $620,000 this year. That works out to about 70 cents per capita in Saskatchewan or one tenth of the amount that is being expended on the average across the dominion. I do not want the minister to run away with the idea that we have no problems that cannot usefully be the duty of the public works department of Canada to do something about. It is for that reason that I wish to speak for a few minutes about problems that should be the concern of his department, some of which I have from time to time casually discussed with the minister. I want to mention two with regard to the southern part of Saskatchewan and Regina specifically.

We have in the city of Regina, for example, a number of buildings owned by the government of Canada, one of which is particularly attractive and ornate, and is called the federal building. But the departments of the Canadian government are housed and scattered in many privately-owned buildings throughout the city. I think possibly that condition applies to governments generally. They seem to have no particular scheme whereby they concentrate public buildings, either for efficient administration or for their more facile use by the public which has business with the government. It would seem to me that in the public works department, in all major centres where it is necessary to occupy extensive floor space, some sort of over-all planning might be adopted to house government departments either in a single building, or in a group of buildings convenient to traffic but forming a unit apart from the rest of the business district of the city concerned. Unfortunately, all our chambers of commerce lobby all senior governments. When there is a likelihood of a public building making its appearance in some portion of the country, they lobby for it in their particular city. I realize that situation applies, and I sympathize with the minister and the department for sometimes being put under a form of local patriotic pressure which is not always in keeping with the best distribution of the public services. However, that has gone on for decades and undoubtedly it will continue to do so. But I believe that functional planning of the buildings that will house the ever-increasing number of public services is necessary in all cities. Certainly that statement applies in special measure to my city of Regina. Last year, for example, a number of us went to the minister with respect to the taking over of a building that housed the Department of Commerce offices. While we were negotiating with the government to do something about acquiring the building, it was old under their noses. There is the factor of delay in all these matters. I trust the government or the minister will take cognizance of representations to plan the future development of public buildings.

I have another instance that concerns us in the southern part of Saskatchewan. It is interlocked with the fact that governments, both provincial and federal, make use of the services of urban municipalities. I refer to the matter of water supply for cities in drought areas or in dry farming areas. Regina is vitally concerned about this matter because, in our system of deep wells to supply water to the city of Regina, we have reached the ultimate. We have passed the point of being able to supply water for all the services in that city. This should concern our senior governments, because the senior governments in their buildings also use the services such as that of water. P.F.R.A. of course has been dallying—and I use that word advisedly—with the idea of drawing water from the Saskatchewan river with the object of supplying Moose Jaw, Regina and other southern centres. Unfortunately—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member does not mean that what he is explaining about water would come under my department?

Mr. PROBE: That is right. I hope I will make myself clear in a moment. I will not take long. The point is that, under P.F.R.A., irrigation projects were envisaged that might ultimately supply water to the urban centres of Moose Jaw, Regina and other places, as well as forming an irrigation project. Those projects have proceeded at such a snail's pace that I do not think we can get much relief from the P.F.R.A. projects, say, for ten years or so. However, here is the connection with the Department of Public Works, and this is what interests the minister and us; in all urban centres the government departments make use of what facilities or what utilities are provided by municipal authorities, water being one of them. Water is a major utility in a dry district.

The Department of Public Works or other government departments spend money on the Rideau canal. I have not objected to the expenditure of money running into perhaps half a million or three-quarters of a million dollars annually on the Rideau canal, even though the strictly utilitarian reason for the expenditure is overweighted by the effect it may have on the tourist business. The Rideau canal serves a national purpose; therefore we concur in the expenditure. But in our request for water services, particularly in southern Saskatchewan, we have hit a delayed acquiescence from government departments. Now I am trying to put across to the minister the point that water supplies are needed for the large numbers of offices used by the government of Canada, through the Department of Public Works. In view of the shortage of water in our cities, the supplying of water to those buildings—and through that means, of course, the supplying of more water to the residents of my city generally—is a proper function of the Department of Public Works or could be considered as such. I do hope that when delegations from my city come to the government asking, as they are going to do, for sympathetic consideration in respect of increased water reservoirs to help that city the Minister of Public Works, partly because the servicing of government buildings is involved, will give sympathetic consideration to the representations made. I think such a request is all the more valid and reasonable because his department, on a per capita basis does not spend any more than one-tenth as much in my province as it does on an average across the country.

For these reasons the minister should stretch a point in this instance by giving favourable consideration to my request. Indirectly it affects government buildings, but directly it affects the citizens of my district to a great extent. They cannot do it themselves, and I say the minister's department should do it.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Two o'clock.

At two o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Architectural branch—

328. Branch administration, $412,001.

Mr. BRYCE: I have received an answer from the minister to most of the problems I have brought before him during the session, but there are two still outstanding. The first refers to the recommendations that have been made by the board of trade and the municipality of Riverton with regard to dredging the Icelandic river. It is some number of years since anything was done there, and these people are anxious that something should be done. I do not know whether the minister has had a report on this matter.

Yesterday I took up with one of the officers of his department the matter of the erosion that is taking place at Gimli on lake Winnipeg and I understood that a further report was to be made. The original breakwater there has fallen into disrepair and the erosion is quite serious. This is much too large a thing for a town like Gimli to undertake, and there should be co-operation between the provincial and federal authorities in this matter.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not yet received a report with regard to the dredging of the Icelandic river. After discussing the protection works at Gimli with the hon. member, I requested a further report from my officials to see if, with the new facts before them, they might change their minds as to the amount that should be expended. I understand that this is quite a difficult problem, because they are having trouble in connecting it with navigation. I am sympathetic toward the request, because I believe it is to protect some old folks' home.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to ask the minister to say a word with regard to the wages paid to women cleaners, particularly in Winnipeg. As the minister knows, I have drawn this matter to his attention a number of times during the past few years. I want to thank him once again for the attention that he has given to my requests and for the successful representations that he has made in times past on behalf of these women. The points that I have drawn to his attention at times have been of an administrative nature, while on other occasions I have raised the question of holidays with pay and the important question of wage rates.

Some two or three years ago the minister was successful in persuading the proper authorities to agree to allow one week's holidays with pay for these women. They now receive six days' sick leave in a year, and this is not deducted from their holidays as was the case a few years ago. In years gone by there have been acceptable increases in the wages paid to these women, but I believe it is nearly two years since they have received any increase. In the meantime the cost of living has been going up and is bearing heavily upon them. They have also been conscious of the fact that other government employees in Winnipeg and throughout the country have received increases, and they have dared to hope that, through the months when increases were being announced, there would soon be an increase for them. But, as I said a moment ago, no increase has come through, their last increase being nearly two years ago. I ask the minister to give the same serious and sympathetic consideration to this matter that he has given in the past to the other matters I have brought before him concerning this group of women.

I do not wish to speak to the exclusion of women working in public buildings in other cities. Local conditions vary as between city and city and as to the hours that these women have to put in. I know the situation in Winnipeg and the women involved, and I submit to the minister that their case is deserving. These women do not work just two or three hours in the morning. I think they work seven hours a day for five, five and a half or perhaps six days a week. In other words, they have a full-time job. I think the time has come when they should be considered as being on a par with other government employees and given an increase in wages to meet the increased cost of living.

I do not think it is out of the way to suggest that they should also be given two weeks holidays with pay. I would agree that those two weeks might apply only to those who have served for a couple of years or so, but that is a matter of detail. I know the minister shares my views in connection with this matter, and I hope he will press them upon whatever authority has to make the decision. I should be glad if the minister could comment at this time.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before the minister rises to make a comment, I should like to say that I represent a city which is somewhat larger than Winnipeg. There are quite a number of government buildings there and, I imagine, quite a number of government services of the same class with regard to which my hon. friend has been pleading. I hope that the minister will do what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested and that he will at the same time treat Vancouver and all other large cities on a fair and equal basis.

Mr. COLDWELL: I represent some places that are smaller than Winnipeg and Vancouver, but to the people who live there they are certainly not less important. Lest I should not be in the house when the supplementaries are reached, and since this is an architectural item, I should like to express now my appreciation to the minister for including in item 826 in the supplementaries an initial amount for a public building at Rosetown, Saskatchewan. I know that for a number of years that well-to-do and productive community has felt that the quarters, particularly in the post office, were entirely inadequate to meet the community's needs. The minister may have seen some plans—I have mentioned this before on other occasions here—of a tiny building at which an attempt was made to conduct the important public service of the post office, and I am very glad to see this initial appropriation. I want to express to the minister the thanks, not of myself, but of the community.

I never believe that these things should be considered from any political angle. I have never believed that the local member should take credit for work being proceeded with on a necessary public facility, and I am not taking credit for it. I have made representations on behalf of both Rosetown and another town in my constituency, Biggar, where a site was purchased some ten years ago for a public building, and I hope that that, too, will be undertaken. I am speaking on behalf of the community. I was spoken to when I was there the other day. I knew that the minister had this under consideration and that the architectural branch had been or were going to the town in order to make an investigation, but I told my friends who approached me at that time that I was quite sure that the minister would view this public building from the point of view of public interest and necessity. May I express again the gratitude which the people of that community will feel and which I myself feel for this item in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to say one or two words in connection with public buildings. I think it is true to say that the major portion of the sums of money expended by the public on public buildings goes to the larger centres. For some time I have been urging upon the minister the necessity of building a post office at Quesnel and a public building at Vanderhoof. I agree with my leader that no member should take any credit to himself for public works undertaken in his riding, but unfortunately I must take credit when it is not done, and so I would ask the minister to do something about it now. Without making any extended remarks because I know he wants to get his estimates through quickly, I ask him to be good enough to give some consideration to the claim of these two communities, whose claims, which I have set out in black and white before the minister during the year, I think are very strong.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): I wish to refer to the char staff in the city of Ottawa and to ask the minister whether he has given any more consideration to representations which have been made in the past two years to allow more of these women to do their char work in the evening instead of in the morning. At present I understand that the only place where the charwomen can work in the evening is the printing bureau. Now that the war is over, surely we could allocate a few more buildings where some of these widows, who have young children, and who cannot very well work in the morning, could work in the evening.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Prevailing rate men are now given two weeks' holidays. One of these weeks is really a holiday with pay and the other week is not paid for by the government but, under an order in council passed in 1923 or 1925, represents the overtime a man would usually work. While the salaries of these men are calculated on a prevailing rate basis, the men are really paid on a yearly rate divided by fifty-two, estimated on their working so many hours a year. I think they should get the same consideration as other civil servants in the matter of holidays and certainly some sick leave. While I would not ask for three weeks' holidays and three weeks' sick leave, I think they should get three weeks' holidays and two weeks' sick leave as other civil servants get.

Another question. Does the minister believe that the prevailing rate men in the public works department are getting the prevailing rates in the trades in this district? As I understand it, adjustments were to be made to equalize these rates, but I do not think that process has been completed.

Item agreed to.

Architectural branch—

329. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., $7,548,875.

Mr. GREEN: There is an increase of approximately $1,800,000 in this item. Would the minister explain it?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If hon. members will look at the whole of the estimates they will find that there are no more votes under demobilization and reconversion, and the increase is due in part to the provision of funds formerly voted under demobilization and reconversion. Secondly there is an increase in the allotment for materials and supplies because of increased cost of materials and labour, and due to the provision now being made in this allotment for alterations, partitions, improvement to lighting, et cetera, required in connection with the allocation of accommodation for all the departments in the various buildings in Ottawa. The net increase is $1,795,493.

Mr. GREEN: An increase of more than 25 per cent. What is the reason for that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There are two reasons. First of all, we are making more repairs to our buildings, which were sorely neglected in the war years; secondly, there has been an increase in the price of the materials themselves.

Mr. McLURE: With reference to many of these items, I feel myself in the position of a school boy returning home from school and telling his parents that he has forgotten to bring home his report. I have to ask some questions on these estimates, so that I can answer my electors when they call upon me and ask me about them. Item 330 amounts to $8,612,478 for maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa. I notice that for 25 per cent of this item, amounting to $2,109,944, there are no details. That seems to be customary in all the estimates that come before us, but this is quite a large amount.

Another matter I wish to refer to is the rental of public buildings by Ottawa departments in the city of Charlottetown. May I have a breakdown of that? How many buildings are rented? Has the department decided to erect a large building of their own in Charlottetown to take care of the different departments that are now occupying rented buildings?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The only building rented in Charlottetown is for the wartime prices and trade board. It is rented from a Mr. Chapel at an annual rental of $1,500. All the other offices are located in buildings belonging to the federal government.

The second question was as to whether there was an estimate for the erection of a public building in Charlottetown. A site has not been purchased. We are inquiring into the best site. Probably the hon. member for Queens will be consulted. When we have the site we shall prepare the plans for that building.

Mr. McLURE: You have agreed on a location and site?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The last report that I had indicated that a site for this building had not been agreed on.

Mr. McLURE: Is that site to be purchased by the federal government, by the provincial government, or by the city of Charlottetown?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If it is to be a federal building it will be purchased by the federal government.

Mr. KNOWLES: I believe the minister was ready to make a statement in reply to my representation on item 328. We are still in the same general field. Perhaps he might say something now.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes. I shall explain to the hon. member the procedure with reference to revisions of salaries or wages of charwomen. A survey is made in every part of the country, and we try to meet the prices in the locality which are paid by private industry. Then we make a recommendation to the labour department. They themselves, with the officials in the different departments, make a report and approve or disapprove our recommendation or modify it. When the hon. gentleman brought the Winnipeg case to my attention I asked for a report and found that about two weeks before that we had asked the labour department for an increase for the charwomen working all day. I believe it is six hours a day. I have not yet had a report from the labour department. When it comes in, it is submitted to treasury which passes final judgment on the matter.

Mr. KNOWLES: Did I understand the minister to say that his department asked the labour department for an increase?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We recommended an increase in this case to meet the wages paid locally to that class of employees in Winnipeg.

Mr. KNOWLES: Was consideration given to the matter of lengthening the holiday period?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That has not been studied lately. As the hon. member mentioned, we did give holidays and sick leave, but I have not heard that it has been reconsidered lately.

Mr. KNOWLES: I would hope that the department would reconsider it. May I refer to one minor point, and I am not quarreling with the language used either by the hon. member for Ottawa East or by the minister. I do happen to know that these women do not particularly like the use of the word "char". It would seem to me that, since men doing comparable work are called cleaners, or sometimes men cleaners, we might meet the point and actually change the name of the women to women cleaners. It is perfectly honourable work. My own mother was a domestic servant, and I am not ashamed—indeed I am proud—of people who do this kind of work, but they do have some feeling about it. Perhaps one way to achieve the object would be for those of us who talk about it to use the name they themselves suggest, and perhaps the change might even be made officially.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In the documents which come before me the two words are used interchangeably. Sometimes it is charwomen and at other times it is women cleaners, male cleaners or female cleaners. I do not think the word "charwomen" is used all through the proceedings which come before me. If that is the wish we can ask the department to have it changed to male or female cleaners or women cleaners.

Mr. KNOWLES: Men cleaners and women cleaners.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In answer to the question of working in the morning or at night, may I say we did have a survey made, and I was informed by the superintendent that a very small minority requested to work at night instead of in the morning. We shall look into that matter.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Will the minister answer the question as to the prevailing rates?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The rates in the department are based absolutely on the prevailing rates in the district. As I said to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the labour department passes on these rates and they are submitted to treasury board. Generally they compare the rates we pay in our department with the rates paid outside.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): What about holidays and sick leave?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As to holidays, a carpenter working for a contractor generally does not get any holidays. Carpenters are paid for the time they work. In public works they do have holidays. That is one reason why they would rather work for the department than for a contractor.

Mr. KNOWLES: Saskatchewan and Manitoba both have holidays with pay acts.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In the scale of wages paid, compensation for holidays and other advantages are given to our employees.

Mr. McLURE: Will the minister give me an idea of what the item of $2,109,944 consists of?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is the salary of the temporary staff in the department.

Mr. McLURE: How many?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That comprises all the prevailing rate employees that are working all across Canada in the maintenance of our works, from Halifax to Victoria.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Has any provision been made for renovating and decorating the post office building at Port Hope, especially the customs office?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This would not be the item.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Maintenance and repairs of public buildings?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Unless it is a very small amount of work that has to be done. If it is a specific amount we would have a specific item in the estimates for that work.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I do not think anything appears in the estimates for that. Is anything being done?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If there is no specific estimate it means that the amount of the alterations would not be very great, and it would be taken out of the general vote.

Mr. GREEN: May I point out to the minister that a serious accommodation problem is looming up in my own city of Vancouver in connection with the closing of the old Vancouver hotel which is being taken over by the T. Eaton Company, Limited, on July 31. For some time the unemployment insurance commission and the national selective service have had—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is a special item for that.

Mr. GREEN: — their offices in the hotel. During 1947 about 675,000 people called at that office during the period of one year. They have a staff of about 350 people, and I believe they occupied 44,000 square feet of floor space. That office, of necessity, must be in the downtown area of the city, because there are so many people calling there. As I said, in 1947 there were 675,000 callers. When the office is moved at the end of July where is that staff to go? I believe there is some provision for a new building, but it will take many months to complete it and I should like to know what provision will be made for the intervening period and how long it will be before the new building is completed.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There are two items in the supplementary estimates, one for $1,060,000, for the Begg building which we have purchased, and to which alterations are being made. That building will be ready for occupancy at the end of this year. We have also purchased the Alvin estates building. Construction is going on, and my information is that we shall take over the building on the first of January. Pending that time, we have transferred some of the employees who were in the old Vancouver hotel to the Beattie street armouries.

Mr. GREEN: Has that been done? I understand that there is only some talk of doing it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The moment we have to get out of the old Vancouver hotel we shall transfer the employees temporarily to the armouries, and we hope to have them in these two buildings at the end of the year.

Mr. GREEN: The whole staff of the unemployment insurance commission and the national selective service will be put in the Beattie street armouries where they will stay from the end of July to the end of December when the new buildings are to be ready?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is right.

Mr. GREEN: Which are these two other votes to which the minister refers?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am referring to vote 828 in the supplementary estimates. The hon. member will see there provision for $800,000 for the Alvin estates building and $1,060,000 for the Begg building, alterations and extensions.

Mr. BLAIR: Do hospitals built under the direction of the Department of National Health and Welfare come under the supervision of the Department of Public Works, and are estimates called for under this department?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In national health there is a hospital design branch with an architect experienced in the construction of such buildings. The votes are not under public works, but we act as their agents, lending the help of our architects and technicians. We call for tenders and let the contract.

Mr. BLAIR: And tenders are called for in each case?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If we were building away up north for Indians I do not think that in all circumstances we would ask for tenders.

Mr. BLAIR: What difference would it make doing the work up there?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In certain parts of the country you cannot get people to take contracts on a firm price basis. We cannot get people to compete on certain buildings owing to transportation, and therefore we make an arrangement to meet the situation.

Mr. BLAIR: How can you be sure that there is not someone else who would be more satisfactory?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We try, and if we cannot get tenders we make an arrangement with some firm.

Mr. McLURE: I presume this item is for the construction of a new building, even if it is in part a revote from last year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is right.

Mr. McLURE: The estimated cost, then, would be around $100,000?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, no. This is the initial cost, the purchasing of the site, preparation of plans and so forth.

Mr. McLURE: I saw in the press a report —whether it emanated from the department I do not know—to the effect that the estimated cost of the building would be in the vicinity of $1,000,000.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know what is in the press.

Mr. McLURE: I hope the amount is greater than is shown here.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know what appeared in the press, but we do not give releases to the press on future works without knowing exactly what the cost will be.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If the hon. member will look at the supplementaries he will get a complete picture there.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: This item covers repairs and improvements of public buildings. I assume that the building of new post offices would come under this vote.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is looking at item 337, which does not include new buildings unless they are specifically mentioned. In the supplementaries he will find that there is provision for a post office in his riding.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. GREEN: In this item there is a vote of $250,000 for Vancouver post office building site and a vote of $100,000 for a site for a building for customs. How much has now been voted for these two buildings, including the present vote, and where are the buildings to be located? There has been a great deal of discussion on the sites to be chosen, and I should like to know what decision has been reached.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The site which it is proposed to acquire is the city block bounded by Georgia, Howard, Dunsmuir and Hamilton streets. It was selected after consultation with the post office department, the Vancouver city council, the town planning commission and various business interests. Practically the whole site is occupied. The total assessed value is $213,000 and the appropriation is $250,000.

Mr. GREEN: How much is it to cost altogether?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The assessment is $213,000. That is the best estimate we have now. If we have to expropriate, I do not know what the exact amount will be.

Mr. GREEN: That figure includes only a portion of the site?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, that is for the whole site. This is an estimate of $250,000, based on the assessment of $213,000. If we go into court and the judgment is higher, we shall have to come back.

Mr. GREEN: You have not acquired the site? You have not actually acquired any portion of the site?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have filed expropriation proceedings, I understand.

Mr. GREEN: What about the customs building?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The site proposed to be acquired is situated on the corners of Burrard, Pender and West Hastings streets, and consists of lots 18, 19 and 20. It has frontages of 140 feet on Burrard street, 156 feet on Pender street and 206 feet on West Hastings street. The property is owned by four separate owners, namely, the Nelson, Christie Building Company, R. F. Bovey Limited, B.C. Holdings Limited, and the Burrard Holdings Limited.

Mr. GREEN: Is this figure of $100,000 only a portion of the purchase price?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The item is toward the acquisition of a site. I do not think this would be the price. We are waiting for the valuation of our people there, to see exactly the amount involved.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister give us any idea of what the total price will be?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not the city assessment, and I have not received as yet the report of the valuators who were appointed. When we have this valuation, generally we try to make a deal with the owners, or we put on expropriation proceedings.

Mr. GREEN: You have not yet arrived at that stage?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This would be just an initial vote.

Mr. GREEN: You have not arrived at the stage of expropriating in this case?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know. It has been suggested that this may be close to the assessment value, but I would not want to say because I have not that figure.

Mr. HERRIDGE: When this item was under discussion last year I had occasion to make some quite caustic comments concerning the efficiency of the department's chief architect in British Columbia. I based those comments on what I considered to be sound information from a responsible source. Since that time I have gone farther into the matter and I find that I was incompletely and incorrectly informed. Therefore I wish most sincerely to apologize for any embarrassment I have caused this estimable public servant and gentleman.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I thank the hon. gentleman for what he has said.

344. Building for national film board (revote), $25,000.

Mr. LENNARD: Is that amount for a building or putting up a building? Is that for a new building?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is a revote.

Mr. LENNARD: For what?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I see here that at one time, two years ago, it was to provide for the purchase of a site and the construction of a building for the national film board at Ottawa.

Mr. LENNARD: It is for the purchase of a site?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is right.

Mr. LENNARD: They are in several buildings now, are they not?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: I would suggest that the sooner you get them all under one roof, the better.

Item agreed to.

Generally—
345. National capital planning service, $135,000.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Will the minister give us a few details with regard to this expenditure of $135,000? Will he give us a short statement?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes. Salaries, $76,696; topographic model of national capital area, national film board, $2,500; subscription to technical publications and purchase of technical books, $500; surveys of adjoining municipalities and strategic points within the national capital region, $10,000; transportation of staff and technical officers within the region for reconnaissance and establishing necessary contacts, $1,000; outside trips for gathering of information to be undertaken by Mr. Greber and assistants, $1,000; registry office fees covering searching of plans and deeds, $100; standing order for current printing, blue prints and photos by Department of Public Works photographic service, $1,000; standing order with national film board for photographic work, coloured reproductions, lantern slides, $2,500; standing order with mines and resources for printing, reductions, et cetera, $1,000; work of printing necessitating technical processes not available in government departments, $1,000; expenses incurred in printing, binding and publishing final report, $10,000; expenses incurred in publishing a popular condensed report, $1,500; preliminary engineering services on proposed construction (bridges, viaducts, tunnels, et cetera), $5,000; publicity, public information, films, $10,000; work to be performed in Paris by Mr. Greber, $2,000; contingencies, $9,204.

Item agreed to.

Generally—
346. National printing bureau (revote), $200,000.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): I have been one of those who have been critical of the location of the printing bureau. Is the minister at this time ready to tell us if any site has been chosen, if it has been purchased and if any progress has been made as to plans?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The site is on boulevard Sacre Coeur, Hull. Part of it has been purchased and we have the other part under expropriation. An engineer from Chicago, Mr. Powers, one of the outstanding engineers in this specialized work of constructing printing institutions, has been brought here to prepare the engineering part of the plans. Mr. Cormier, an architect from Montreal, has been retained as architect for preparation of the plans.

Mr. BOUCHER: When is it expected that the plans will be finished?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Some time next year.

Mr. BOUCHER: And will the building be proceeded with promptly?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I would not know.

Mr. WRIGHT: Where are these research projects being carried out for the utilization of farm products, and what projects are under consideration at the present time?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What is this? There is nothing in my estimates for that.

Mr. WRIGHT: I beg the minister's pardon. I am looking at the wrong item.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—

351. Branch administration, $296,009.

Mr. GREEN: What is the position now with regard to the removal of Ripple Rock?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It is still rippling.

Mr. BOUCHER: And still rocking.

Mr. GREEN: Has the department made any progress since last year? And if not, why not?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I must candidly admit that I know of no progress made in this matter since the last estimates were up. I have not as yet found the man or the engineer who can convince my own engineers that he has the right method to proceed. The moment we find a man who can convince my officials, I shall be ready to make my recommendations to the government. But, to date, really I am no more advanced than I was last year.

Mr. GREEN: Is anyone in the department doing any work on the plans?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not at the present time.

Mr. GREEN: In effect, the department has given up hope?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, we never lose hope.

Engineering branch—

352. Engineering, including salaries of engineers, clerks, etc., $1,164,243.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Do salaries of the minister's officials in British Columbia come under this vote?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, the engineers.

Mr. MacNICOL: Some few weeks ago I brought up in the house a question with respect to the erosion at the east shore of Point Pelee through the action of waves and high water. If I remember correctly I suggested at that time that a report be obtained. Have the engineers with the minister any further information with respect to the preservation of the east side of Point Pelee, the whole end of which has been washed away?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My deputy minister tells me we have not received that report. However, he will look into the matter, and instruct that the report be prepared as soon as possible.

Mr. MacNICOL: The people in that vicinity are most appreciative of anything that can be done. I have just received a long wire from Mr. Morgan Brown, president of the Leamington chamber of commerce, expressing appreciation of what was done previously. I feel obligated to mention this again to the minister.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We shall certainly get a report in the matter. I am informed that there is a lighthouse at that point, and that we shall have a report in the near future.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understand that someone has been sent there to make an investigation, and to decide whether groins should be erected, or what should be done. Something must be done to preserve that part of Point Pelee park. If the minister were to go there he would see that the erosion goes back for about a quarter of a mile.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am one who believes that we have a most excellent staff of engineering officials in the British Columbia section of his department, including the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. They are underpaid. It is my information that the department is not able to secure a sufficient number of capable engineers, because they are attracted to private concerns. I have no desire to pick out individuals. It seems strange to me that a man entrusted with the expenditure of millions of dollars, possibly for flood control, will receive about $2,400 or $3,000 a year, while the House of Commons sees fit—and I am not singling out any individuals—to pay $3,600 for a man who, during six months of the year, supervises the dishwashing in the restaurant.

We are losing our best brains to the United States and other countries—and naturally so. Hon. members opposite have often spoken in the same way. It seems to me it is time that the minister looked into this matter. I am not speaking particularly about those in Ottawa; I refer to those in British Columbia. He has an excellent staff out there; but the branch is very much understaffed. And that condition has arisen because the federal government is not setting the example it should set to private industry by paying proper and decent salaries to experienced and qualified men.

It is time the minister told the civil service commission that he is going to pay qualified university graduates, and other technical staff, suitable salaries. He should start in British Columbia where he has already some highly qualified men.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the conditions are as stated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley they should certainly be changed. The minister ought not to let that statement go without either verifying or denying it. He should now place on record the number of engineers, their grades and salaries.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The details of engineering staff by districts in the New Westminster district is as follows:

Class title—Name—Salary
District engineer, grade 3, Morton, K. W.	$ 5,775
Engineer, grade 6, Elliott, L. B.	4,425

Mechanic—stores, McMillan, W. T.	1,764
Assistant engineer, Paget, A.	2,880
Assistant engineer, Feeney, J.	2,880

We have vacancies; I admit we are understaffed at the present time, but we are trying to fill the vacancies as quickly as possible.

Mr. MacINNIS: How do those salaries correspond or compare with salaries of engineers in private employment, other conditions being considered?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am informed that the salaries paid to engineers by the Department of Public Works throughout the country are uniform. Those salaries are inferior to salaries paid in private industry.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We are understaffed in British Columbia, and the officials have a tremendous responsibility in connection with both expenditures and the control over those expenditures. I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre refer to some salaries he wanted to have paid—and I have every sympathy with him. But the men about whom we are now speaking are highly skilled and they are entrusted with the expenditure of millions of dollars. I say this and other departments are derelict in their duty in not seeing that higher salaries are paid, salaries which will be more in line with those paid in civilian life.

Engineering branch—dredging—

354. Maritime provinces, $1,252,600.

Mr. McLURE: I have mentioned in the last three sessions the matter of dredging at Rustico bay for the benefit of the fishermen. I understood from the minister that the money was voted last year, but nothing further has been done. It is eighteen years since the bay was dredged and it has filled up with silt and soil. At low tide it is impossible for the fishing boats to get up to their stages when they come into the harbour. It should be dredged up to the creek which is about three-quarters of a mile away. At the present time these men must pull in their boats at the harbour at low tide and then wait until the tide rises to get to their stages. I should like to know whether this work will be undertaken this summer, and I want a definite answer.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Two thousand square yards of dredging is to be done there, but I cannot give a definite date.

Mr. McLURE: There is still nothing definite.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is on our list of dredging to be done by dredge No. 17.

Mr. McLURE: It is time it was done.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—dredging—

357. British Columbia and Yukon, $569,000.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Would this item cover dredging made necessary by the present flood conditions?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, there is a special item for that.

Mr. PEARKES: It should be borne in mind that the silt is carried far out into the Pacific ocean. For years the harbours on the gulf islands and on Vancouver island have been silting up as a result of the debris and silt brought down by the Fraser river, and it is worse than ever this year. I hope the minister will arrange for adequate dredging to be done there.

Engineering branch—Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—

365. Burlington channel bridge, $49,930.

Mr. LENNARD: What portion of this amount is for maintenance and what is normally required for operation?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The figures are:

Staff, permanent and temporary..	$18,730
Operation, maintenance and supplies	31,000
Sundries	200

Mr. LENNARD: I wanted the cost of normal operation.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Last year the figure was $46,888 and this year it is $49,930.

Mr. LENNARD: That is for everything?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Repainting the bridge and so forth.

Mr. LENNARD: Does the Ontario government contribute toward the maintenance of this bridge?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. LENNARD: Why?

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It belongs to the federal government.

Mr. LENNARD: It is a highway bridge.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is one favour we are doing the province.

Mr. LENNARD: It is part of their highway system.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that the bridge is over a canal, a work belonging to the federal government.

Mr. LENNARD: I am an Ontario member and I am not protecting that province. I think they should pay something, and probably they should do the same thing in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. I understand that a new super-highway is to be built to cross the canal either by an elevated bridge or by a tunnel.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have no report on that. The present bridge is sufficient for our needs, but if the Ontario government want to put in another bridge they would have to make some contribution.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to support the hon. member for Wentworth who is thoroughly familiar with the situation. He is quite right in suggesting that a tunnel should be there rather than a bridge. The government must keep up the bridge for the passage of boats, but quite often when it is open cars will line up for half a mile back. As the minister knows, recently when the bridge was open a car ran off the end and one or two occupants were drowned.

Engineering branch—Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—

367. Kingston, LaSalle causeway, $128,498.

Mr. MacNICOL: As the minister knows, this is on No. 2 highway, and is located in a historic part of the province. On the left is old Fort Henry and on the right is old Fort Frontenac. When the department has some money to spare the minister should consider making a memorial bridge at this point because of its historic associations. I am not finding any fault with the causeway that is there, but it really is not very presentable. Next time the minister passes there, I wish he would look at it with a view to putting up some sort of memorial entrance.

Engineering branch—Construction, repairs and improvements — harbours and rivers — Prince Edward Island—

372. Canoe Cove—breakwater, repairs, $22,000.
Charlottetown—towards wharf reconstruction and improvements, $250,000.

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $35,000, $90,000.
Launching pond—boat harbour (revote $50,000), $74,000.
Little Sands—wharf reconstruction, $70,000.
Montague—wharf reconstruction (revote), $26,000.
North Lake—reconstruction of breakwaters, $73,000.
Red Head—harbour improvements, $7,000.
Souris—breakwater repairs, $50,000.
Summerside—railway wharf—repairs to wharf and reconstruction of shed (revote $7,000), $90,000.
Summerside—to take over and reconstruct Holman's wharf, $35,000.
Tignish—repairs to breakwaters (revote $63,400), $90,000.
Wood Islands—wharf improvements (revote $67,000), $192,000.

Mr. McLURE: One item here covers harbours and rivers generally, and I think I should refer again to Rustico harbour where protection is needed for the lighthouse property, the fishermen's houses and their equipment, such as boats and stages. This whole harbour is now threatened whenever a heavy storm comes up. Representations have been made to the minister from time to time and at least twice efforts have been made to put up a jigsaw breastwork as a protection. When the seas are very heavy the expenditure is just a waste of money. Ten or twelve thousand dollars have been spent there within the last two years and this amount is not worth ten cents as a protection for that beach. Some piles should be driven in there and a strong wall built. That work would have to be done only once. The sand would then collect inside of it and form a breastwork itself.

If the engineers were instructed to look into this matter carefully you would not be wasting $5,000 or $10,000 annually putting in the jigsaw affairs you put in there, which provide in a storm no more protection than a ten-cent article. Just an ordinary storm would wash the whole thing away. It would throw it up on the bank and, if the storm continued, the whole beach and all the dwelling houses would be swept away. This is a serious enough matter for some good engineers to look into it.

I sent the minister a copy of the plan of how the work should be done. That plan originated from fishermen who had lived there all their lives. One more storm like the one we had last fall—and it was not particularly severe—and you can say good-bye to your lighthouses as well as to the dwellings there. I serve notice on the government that they will be responsible to the fishermen for the loss of their property, because representations have been made to the government.

I notice that most of this vote is a revote, except $250,000 toward wharf reconstruction and improvements at Charlottetown. Is this amount required for building a new warehouse, or is it for an extension to the wharf?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The Rustico problem has given me many a headache. Our engineers did try out some works there, I do not know with what success, but the report which the hon. member makes is not a very good one. At one time I sent down the assistant chief engineer, and his report was that these works were of an experimental nature, and that if they did not answer the purpose a change of plans would be necessary. The department is looking seriously into the situation at Rustico.

The $250,000 for Charlottetown is required toward reconstructing the east side of the railway wharf, widening the wharf, dredging in the east berth and replacing the present frost-proof warehouse; total estimated cost, $634,000.

Mr. HAZEN: This morning the Minister of Public Works was furnished with valuable information about the waters of our lakes and rivers from some members who reside inland in this dominion. While I listened to them, I thought of the words of a maritime poet:

Smile, ye inland lakes and rivers;
Flush, ye mountains in the dawn;
But my roving heart is ever
With the ships of grey Saint John.

Now that we have returned in these estimates to the lonely sea and sky, I should like to say a word or two on behalf of some fishermen in the constituency I have the honour to represent. I wish to direct the minister's attention to one matter, and one matter only, and that is the condition of the wharf at Lorneville in the county of Saint John. A year or so ago, one summer day I sat on the beach at that village talking with a fisherman who was repairing his boat, and in the course of the conversation he said to me, "You know, I feel more at home on the water than I do on the land." I had never heard a man express that point of view before; afterwards I asked one or two men in the village who go out fishing what they thought about it, and they said: "Most of us fish, two men in a boat. We start off in the late afternoon, drift all night, and come back in the morning. Some days when it is foggy and rough many of the boys say, we are not going out tonight, but this man always went out in his boat alone, no matter how dirty the weather". He felt more at home on the water than on the land.

The condition of the wharf in that fishing village is deplorable. There is no wharf left. I received a letter from the minister of the main church in that village a year or so ago, asking if something could not be done about the wharf, and I have had other applications about it. I have taken this matter up with the minister and his department at different times, and in January, 1946, I received a letter from the acting minister, notifying me that consideration was being given to this wharf and that the possibility of a new wharf being constructed was under study. The wharf is all gone now, and that is a great handicap to the fishermen. I again bring the condition of that wharf to the attention of the minister and trust that he will give it his further consideration.

I should like to know just what is the present position with respect to the wharf and breakwater at Chance Harbour, a small fishing village. The wharf was badly in need of repairs, and a year or so ago some money was voted to restore the wharf and breakwater. What is the position at Chance Harbour now?

In conclusion, I want to thank the minister for the dredging done at Dipper Harbour. Dredging was badly needed there. It has been done and it has proved of great service to the fishermen in taking their boats in and out and in moving what they call their cars, which are large wooden boxes which float in the water and in which they keep their lobsters.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I cannot make any promise, but I have told my officials that I should like to have these two projects studied. I should like to see a report on the conditions at Lorneville and Chance Harbour, and if they are as described by the hon. member he may be sure that I personally will see that something is done.

Mr. BARRETT: I should like to inquire what is to be done at Port Dover and Port Rowan. The wharf at Port Dover is in a dangerous condition due to lack of repairs. What is the extent of the repairs that are to be made at Port Dover for $8,000, which seems to me inadequate for the work that is absolutely necessary there? What does the government propose to do in the way of dredging at Port Dover? This is not a problem that concerns my constituency alone. I think the chairman will bear me out that the opening of Port Dover to make it possible to have a ferry service across the lake would be of great interest to quite a large territory north of that port. The cities of Brantford, Paris, Galt, Kitchener, and even Guelph are particularly anxious to have this port opened. A deputation was here last winter and brought this matter to the attention of the department. The opening of the port would enable cross-lake traffic to reach a densely populated section of the United States, eastern Ohio and Pennsylvania. If that harbour could be opened up by dredging so that a ferry could get in, it would be of great benefit, not only to the port itself but, as I have said, to this territory in Ontario north of Port Dover.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The expenditure of $8,000 on Port Dover is detailed in this way: raising the height of and extending the crib work checkwater by providing 1,200 tons of rubble stone at a cost of $7,200. Inspection and contingencies amount to $800. Dredging was carried on by local agreement with Mr. George Gamble in 1946. The removal of 6,000 cubic yards of class B material at eighty cents a cubic yard; probable expenditure in 1947-48, $3,840.

Mr. BARRETT: That has already been done.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member wants the large project of $500,000?

Mr. BARRETT: No, I was not suggesting that. Has any consideration been given to the dredging of sand out of the harbour? In years gone by, this harbour could accommodate ferry boats. I remember in my youth that a large car ferry used to come in there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We are considering this matter. I note that there is a study here. An estimate has been made of the dredging, but it has not been presented. It was made up for my information. I shall look further into it.

Mr. BARRETT: What is proposed to be done at Port Rowan? There is a fairly large vote for that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Work is under contract at that place.

Mr. BARRETT: Is it for dredging?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. It is for rebuilding the inner seventy-one feet, spans 1 to 5 inclusive, repairing balance of wharf, repairing head lock by driving steel sheet piling, filling with stone and gravel with a concrete deck slab; and construction of a steel sheet pile wall on the west side of the dredged slip. Amount of contract, $29,692; inspection and contingencies, $3,308. There is an estimate of $6,300 toward dredging at that place. We are making a survey.

Mr. BARRETT: The wharf at Port Dover is in an equally dilapidated condition. I was wondering why there was not a larger vote for that. I presume it has been studied by the engineers. It is in really a dangerous condition at the present time. I notice that the wharf at St. Williams is not included in the item. Has that work been done? I spoke to the minister on that a year ago. I understood a vote was to be put in the estimates for repairing the wharf at St. Williams. The last information I had was that no wharf had been started there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If work is to be done there it will be taken out of the general vote.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to ask one question on item 375. The Pelee island wharf amounts to $28,000. I am glad to see that. In vote 844 of the supplementaries an amount of $50,000 appears for the same thing. Is that the same wharf, or are there several wharves?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The work under contract at Pelee island is as follows: removal of cribwork protection pier, 14 feet by 164 feet, from the east to the west side of the north wharf, and extension of the newly placed pier a distance of 83 feet. The estimated cost is given as $28,000. That is in the main estimates. In the supplementary estimates there is an amount of $50,000 for demolition of the cribwork superstructure and reconstruction in steel and concrete of the inner portion of the north wharf, for a length of 373 feet.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to see that. It is a beautiful island. There is quite a lot of transportation between the island and the mainland. Anything that makes shipment easier is better for the island.

Mr. WEBB: There are a couple of items in which I am particularly interested. They are the breakwater at Brockville and the wharf extension at Gananoque. Is it the intention of the department to have this work done this year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, it is the intention to have the work done this year.

Mr. WEBB: I come to the item "harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, and to authorize commitments against future years", and so on. What does that item mean?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It covers all repairs to existing structures, but no new projects.

Mr. WEBB: It does not take in all of the wharves and so on going up the river.

Item agreed to.

Waterways, Alberta—reconstruction of wing dams, $23,000.
Yellowknife, Northwest Territories—wharf (revote), $23,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: The first item is "Bell Rock (Fort Smith)". Is "Fort Smith" correct? Should it not be Fort Fitzgerald?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is Bell Rock. There is no mistake about that. This vote is to provide wharfage facilities at Bell Rock urgently required in connection with transshipment of freight going north. A wharf built by the Northern Transportation Company Limited in 1945 and formerly used for this purpose has been practically destroyed since that time.

Bell Rock is the northern terminus of the twenty-one mile portage to Fort Fitzgerald, and all water-borne freight for points north of Fort Smith carried by the Northern Transportation Company Limited is shipped from Bell Rock.

Mr. GREEN: This includes an item as follows: "Fraser river, reconstruction of North Arm jetty." Will that figure complete the repairs to the jetty, or is it only taking one more bite out of the job?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This amount of $40,000 is to provide for the reconstruction of the portion of the north arm jetty between the shore of Ione island and the inner end of the completed rock mound.

Mr. GREEN: Will that complete the repairs to the jetty?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, I do not think so.

Mr. GREEN: How much more will be required to complete these repairs?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is another vote in the supplementary estimates for the Fraser river, towards improvements, the further amount required being $350,000.

Mr. GREEN: I cannot understand why the repairs are not being completed this year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If the hon. member will look at the vote he will see that there is a sum of $300,000 under the heading, "Fraser river, towards improvements". These improvements are a part of the different works that are to be done there. The object is to raise the north arm jetty to an elevation above high water level by the construction of a rock mound eight feet wide at the top, seven feet wide at the centre, over a brush mattress sixty feet wide by 8,775 feet long, with three pile marker dolphins at 200-foot intervals where required from station 208 to station 295, at an estimated cost of $800,000.

Mr. GREEN: Is the $300,000 to be applied on the north arm jetty?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It will be applied on three different works. There is a contract with Gilley brothers for strengthening protection work along the Lulu island bank of the Fraser river between Canada Rice mills and No. 9 highway.

Mr. GREEN: That is a long way from the jetty.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is another project, namely, training walls or dikes. In the Sapperton bay area the construction of two open pile dikes, upstream dike 800 feet long, downstream 733 feet with a 200 foot wing, protected at ground level with rock mound with height one-third the depth of the water, at an estimated cost of $95,000.

Mr. GREEN: The jetty is built of rock and runs out into the water, and what I want to find out is how much it will cost to complete the jetty.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told, $800,000.

Mr. GREEN: Over what period will that be done? Apparently it is not to be finished this year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told, about three years.

Mr. GREEN: Is there to be any dredging in the north arm of the Fraser?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We are dredging the year around there.

Mr. GREEN: The minister will recall that representations were made here by the parties using the north arm of the Fraser river. Those representations were submitted some months ago, and I have the resolution that was passed by the Vancouver board of trade on March 4 of this year. It reads:

> That suitable added dredging equipment be made available to provide:
> 1. The maintenance of a deep sea channel of thirty feet in depth on the Fraser river from Port Mann on the main river to the gulf of Georgia and of sufficient width for the safe movement of 10,000-ton freighters.
> 2. On the north arm Fraser a channel of not less than ten feet at low tide and 150 feet wide from New Westminster to Marpole and from Marpole to the gulf of Georgia a channel of fifteen feet at low tide and 300 feet wide.

Has the department accepted that plan and are steps being taken to dredge these channels as requested?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I received a delegation some months ago and I believe I have on file a copy of the resolution to which the hon. member refers. When the request was made I was not convinced that everything in the resolution was justified, and I had my deputy go there about a month ago. He has met these people and investigated the request. At the time these estimates had been prepared and we did not add to them; but during the year, on the report of the deputy minister, we shall certainly make a further serious study of the request for that dredging.

Mr. GREEN: None of this dredging is to be done during the coming year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Some dredging is being constantly done, but not on the scale on which these people would have us do it. Two courses might be followed, having another new dredge or giving contracts. The deputy minister was out there for the special purpose of studying the situation, in the supplementary estimates we have estimated $800,000, and this year the sum of $350,000 is to be spent, so that in three years we shall finish it.

Telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance—

386. British Columbia and Yukon, $730,000.

Mr. IRVINE: Is there included in this vote a sum sufficient to recondition the entire telephone system in the Peace River block, and, secondly, does the vote include money to recondition the line between Clayhurst and Dawson Creek? A third question is whether the work will be done forthwith. I should like to have the answers to these questions. If the minister will answer them I will shut up; if he does not, I will make a speech.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The special projects referred to by the hon. member are not included in this vote.

Mr. IRVINE: But it is a general vote for the whole of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is administration and everything, but it does not embrace the specific projects mentioned.

Mr. IRVINE: If this does not, is there any other vote that does?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is one project in connection with Dawson Creek. We have an item of $96,500 for that in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. IRVINE: Exactly what is proposed to be done along that line? I want to know whether that $96,000 will include repairing the line?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If the hon. gentleman will wait until we get to the item, I will have the information.

Mr. IRVINE: I will do that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: This is the item on which I wished to speak before. The minister is away ahead of me, because we have carried on negotiations on this for about three years. I want to know whether that means a post office. Will the minister throw some light on that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is proposed to erect a one storey structure, thirty-two feet by fifty-two feet, with basement, concrete foundations, wood framing, brick facing, stone trim and felt and gravel roof. The estimated cost is as follows: site, $2,000; building, $38,000; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; fittings and boxes, $2,000; supervision, $1,200; contingencies, $4,800; a total of $49,000.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I thank the minister for that information, but my question was whether this was for the purpose of a post office.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes. That is what the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I just wanted to make sure this was a post office. It says here "public building".

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Public building for postal services, I suppose.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Yes. I merely want to say this. The people of Grandview and district will be happy to see this item in the estimates. On their behalf and on behalf of the Grandview board of trade and the town council, I wish to say that they will appreciate this coming through after the many years they have had to wait. The only other question I wish to ask is whether the construction on this building will begin this summer.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As soon as the plans and specifications are ready we will ask for tenders.

Mr. MOORE: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the public building being constructed at Flin Flon, which I presume will be a federal building. When will that be proceeded with?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will give the hon. member the same answer as I gave the hon. member for Dauphin. As soon as plans and specifications are ready, we will ask for tenders.

Red Deer—public building, $50,000.

Mr. SHAW: I should like to ask if this appropriation for a public building in Red Deer is for postal purposes?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. SHAW: If so, what is contemplated that this appropriation shall cover?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The proposed building will be a two-storey brick faced structure forty-eight feet by seventy-four feet, with a two-storey annex at the rear forty feet by fifty feet. It will have concrete foundations, masonry walls and stone trim. It is for the use of the post office, unemployment insurance commission and soldier settlement board at Red Deer.

Mr. SHAW: It is indeed gratifying for us to realize that finally concrete action is being taken to solve the postal problem in the city of Red Deer. However I must confess that I am not too happy about the information the minister gave just at the conclusion of his remarks. Experience in other quarters, notably in Calgary, has proved that where a building has been constructed to be utilized for postal services, and where other branches of government have been permitted to move in, it has always been at the expense of the postal services. While I am most grateful that action is being taken in this connection, I fear that eventually we shall continue to be confronted by a problem in connection with the post office. I urge the minister to give some consideration to the prevention of other departments from moving in and simply squeezing the postal services out. I think the minister realizes that is something which has been done. I am advised that in Calgary we have an excellent example of what occurred where other branches of government have moved in. I know the people of Red Deer would have me express appreciation that something is being done, but I certainly hope the minister will concentrate on the requirements of the postal service and see that they do not suffer because other branches of government move into the same building.

832. Accommodation for the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue, $2,000,000.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The explanation is that I have had repeated requests from the national revenue department, saying that all over the country they lack space for their offices, that they have increased the number of their staff, and that they are in arrears in assessments and so forth. They have asked for a general vote, so that if we find space in Toronto, or Montreal or Vancouver, that could usefully serve the purpose of the taxation branch, we would have it, and I would not be in the position of having to say to the department, no, I have not the funds, but we may deal about it and try to purchase the buildings. This is a request from that department.

Mr. GREEN: In other words, it is a blanket request for $2,000,000?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Absolutely.

Mr. GREEN: To be spent, if, as and when quarters can be found?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is the position.

Mr. GREEN: What cities does that apply to?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): From Halifax to Vancouver. The last case I have had, and I have had a special item, was to buy the Begg building.

Mr. GREEN: That was under a different item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, because we have completed that deal. But that has been going on for quite a while. I have no estimate, no appropriation; I am only serving that other department. They know their needs better than I do as to space and number of employees. This was thought to be the only way, because I cannot specify one building right now in Halifax, Moncton, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or anywhere all over the country.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that this is an unusual way to deal with the matter.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is.

Mr. GREEN: An unusual way to appropriate funds. I do not understand how the Minister of Finance could let this get by. Here is a vote for $2,000,000 to buy buildings for the income tax division. There are no buildings to be purchased at the present time. It is just a blanket vote for $2,000,000 to acquire properties if, as and when such become available. It is not known in what centres they will be acquired. The minister said it might be anywhere from Halifax to Victoria. There should be some more definite allotment.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a matter which would come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue, but it would be handled by the Department of Public Works. As the minister has explained, the Department of National Revenue is short of space. This is somewhat in the nature of a token vote.

Mr. GILLIS: There seems to be a tendency on the part of government officials to conclude that Canada ends at Halifax. I notice the minister referred to something extending from Victoria to Halifax. I would point out to him that there are 360 more miles of Canada east of Halifax.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have good reason to know that. If I had not, the hon. member would not have got the post office at Dominion.

Mr. LENNARD: I notice an item for a wharf at Loon Lake. There are about thirteen Loon Lakes in Ontario. Which one is it?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In the constituency of Fort William.

Mr. LENNARD: I have an article here from the St. Thomas Times-Journal, which states:

Port Stanley improvements in supplementary estimates

Word has been received by local municipal officials through Gordon Newell of Springfield that an amount has been placed in the supplementary estimates for 1948 for the extension of the west pier to the south and east to provide the much-needed protection for the harbour.
Mr. Newell was informed through the Department of Public Works at Ottawa that the sum had been placed in the supplementary estimates. He notified deputy reeve W. C. Wheaton.

In the regular estimates there are votes for Port Bruce, Port Burwell, Port Colborne, Port Dover, Port Elgin, Port Rowan, Kingsville, Pelee Island and Morson. I think nearly every port and sandbar on the Canadian shore of lake Erie is mentioned, or some amount is allotted to it. But for some reason or another Port Stanley has been left out of the picture. Was Mr. Gordon Newell correct in saying he had received this word from the Department of Public Works, or where was the slip-up?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not meet everyone who comes to the Department of Public Works to get a wharf, jetty or breakwater. These people may have come to the department. I have seen the file with respect to Port Stanley; it is being studied. We have not yet all the data. Further estimates will be up next year, and we hope we shall have some decision at that time.

Mr. LENNARD: Apparently Mr. Newell did not receive word from the department.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I cannot recall having seen him.

Mr. LENNARD: The article states that Mr. Newell was informed through the Department of Public Works at Ottawa that the sum had been placed in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have the story now. There is a list of projects standing in the department, and this is one of them. Probably he was told from my office that the item is being considered.

Mr. LENNARD: He says he was informed by the department.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That we would recommend it; but that does not necessarily mean that it would receive approval.

Mr. CARDIFF: I notice here a vote of $228,000 for redredging and repairs to the harbour at Goderich. Has that anything to do with the extension work in the harbour? If so, I have not much to say.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is to repair the damage done by spring floods, and to do some dredging and filling in caused by the floods.

Mr. CARDIFF: For some years we have been trying to have some work done in the harbour. It is a dangerous channel, because of its being so narrow. It is one of the most important harbours in western Ontario. More grain passes through that point than perhaps any other port on the lake. For that reason we feel that the department is justified in spending some money on it. We do have some large steamers come in there heavily loaded with grain and, depending upon the wind, at times they have to anchor outside the harbour for days before they can venture in.

I believe the work has been in progress for some time. I should like to know how much has been accomplished. I dare say the work is going ahead favourably, but I wonder if the minister would not take steps to have this channel widened so as to make it safe for large boats entering that port.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is all we can do in the present year, but it is not final by any means. We still have Goderich on our list, and we are considering doing further work there.

Mr. MacNICOL: I wish to support the hon. member's request in connection with Goderich harbour. The problem of lake transport has long been a study of mine, and last fall I made several trips to Goderich harbour. What the hon. member has said is correct. The channel is narrow and requires deepening, and furthermore there is an island almost in the middle of the harbour which, in my judgment, is one of the best harbours on the east coast of the great lakes. I know representations were made to the minister by the chamber of commerce, and I should like to know if anything is to be done toward the removal of that island?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is part of the whole project for the improvement of Goderich harbour which will cost something over $1,000,000. We do not feel that we can spend more this year than is mentioned here, but this is not the end of all the works.

Mr. MacNICOL: When ships line up beside the elevators they have to back out to get into the lake, and because of this island they can hardly get out. I imagine if you went there in November you would see possibly ten to a dozen ships in the harbour, but if the island were not there there would possibly be three or four more.

Mr. CARDIFF: May I have the assurance of the minister that the amount of money in this item will be spent while the dredges are working there, and if this amount is not sufficient to cover all the work needed perhaps an additional amount can be voted next year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I cannot add to what I have already said about Goderich.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to compliment the minister upon what is to be done at Collingwood harbour. I am glad to see that the department is going to reconstruct that harbour, because ships do have a difficult time to get in and out. I want also to thank the minister for the vote pertaining to the Grand river conservation scheme. I may say that scheme was first mentioned by myself a few years ago when I promoted a scheme in this house for a program of flood control. At that time I recommended a dam on the Conestoga river and one on the Grand river about three miles north of Fergus. The dam was not constructed on the Conestoga, and I am glad to observe that provision is being made to build that dam.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I think the minister has done very well by Canada generally. Votes are provided for Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces, and provision is made in this vote for diking on the Assiniboine river. The Assiniboine river flooded its banks at Kamsack this spring and serious damage resulted to residential and farm property. I realize that this circumstance was unusual, but I should like to have the minister survey the situation to see if a little diking would not prevent a recurrence of such flooding.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall certainly have my engineers look into that and let my hon. friend have a report.

Port Alberni—harbour improvements—further amount required, $34,000.
Prince Rupert (Fairview Bay)—towards breakwater, $75,000.
Roberts' Creek—wharf repairs and improvements—(revote $20,400), $100,000.
Squamish—towards wharf repairs and improvements, $50,000.
Tofino—harbour repairs and improvements, $20,000.
Trail—landing, $8,000.
Ucluelet West—floats, $7,500.
Victoria—dredging—further amount required, $30,000.

Mr. GREEN: This vote has to do with British Columbia and the Yukon, and I notice that there are some items covering the Fraser river.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I explained to the hon. gentleman that the total work would cost $800,000, to be spent in three years. This year we have a vote for $350,000.

Mr. GREEN: That item is for the north arm jetty?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: None of these items is for flood control work?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. When we get to that item I will let the hon. member know.

Mr. FULTON: What is the situation with regard to dredging at Shuswap lake? We have been having correspondence about this matter, and I should like to know whether the dredging will be finished in time to have the improvement work done?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told it is expected that the dredging will be ready by the middle of July.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Could the minister tell me what item would cover the construction of wharves in Kootenay West?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would be under the general vote, and I have not the list before me.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—Construction, repairs and improvements — harbours and rivers — Yukon—

848. Lewes river—toward taking over, reconstructing and maintaining dam, $40,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is the dam referred to here to be constructed upriver or downriver from Whitehorse?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This item is to provide for taking over the Lewes river dam from the White Pass and Yukon route without cost to the crown and reconstructing a section of the dam; also maintaining and operating costs for 1948-49. The total estimated cost of reconstructing the dam is $125,000.

Proposed action is strictly in the interest of navigation as, by the filling of a considerable storage area above the dam in the fall and winter and by releasing the water in the spring to break up the ice in the Yukon river below, navigation is advanced some three to four weeks each spring.

The Yukon river system is the main highway of that country and maximum operation is essential for transport in of supplies and for shipping. During the 1947 season, 14,000 tons of freight and 4,000 passengers were transported over this waterway.

This vote is made up as follows:

Grouting of one section of crib..	$11,500
Grout machinery	7,500
Seven buttresses at $1,300 each..	9,100
Maintenance and operation	10,000
Contingencies	1,900
Total	$40,000

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not believe there is a dam downriver from Whitehorse, so that it must be upriver.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is above.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—Generally—

849. Protection works generally—to provide for remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. GILLIS: Would this appropriation cover the construction of a breakwater at Port Morien, Nova Scotia? I inquired last year how this work was progressing. The breakwater is a protection for that particular harbour, and I ask the minister, have tenders been called for, and is the work going ahead, or is the minister still trying to let the contract?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have an estimate of $360,000.

Mr. GILLIS: You had that last year. When are you going to spend it? There is no use in voting the money if you do not let the contract.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The work is under contract to J. P. Porter Company, Limited, for $342,360. If the work is not started I will get in touch with the contractor. He should be carrying on the work right now.

Mr. GILLIS: That is all I wanted to know.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph branch—Telegraph and telephone services, construction and improvements—

858. Dawson Creek—Pouce Coupe, B.C.—telephone lines—improvements, $96,500.

Mr. IRVINE: May I have the information now that I asked for a little while ago?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This amount is to provide for the modernization and expansion of the existing government telephone system in the towns of Dawson Creek and Pouce Coupe, British Columbia, as well as the surrounding rural areas. The total cost of this work is estimated at $96,500.

Transmission over the various circuits of the existing system has in many cases become almost impossible, due to the continued construction of power lines paralleling the government lines. In addition, the exchange system and local lines in Dawson Creek itself are no longer adequate to serve the increased requirements of the town and will have to be almost completely re-organized.

This item is to repair and extend the line between Dawson Creek and Pouce Coupe.

Mr. IRVINE: A general reconditioning of the line, I presume. That is part of what I am interested in.

Another thing I want to be sure about is telephone service for a little district called Clayhurst, which is completely isolated in the spring when the river breaks up, and again in the fall.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If it is not included it can be taken care of under the general estimates if it does not cost too much money.

Mr. IRVINE: It would take only a few hundred dollars.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We will do it if it costs only that much.

Mr. IRVINE: I want to thank the minister.

Mr. HERRIDGE: This is a considerable sum, $96,500, for improvements to telephone lines. This and other items would lead me to believe that the department uses a lot of poles. What species of timber is used and where is it procured?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We use British Columbia cedar, the best we can find.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph branch—Telegraph and telephone services, construction and improvements—

853. Ashcroft—150 Mile House, British Columbia—improvements to telephone line, $23,000.

Mr. FULTON: What alterations or improvements are being made under this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This amount of $23,000 is required for the purchase of carrier and terminal equipment to provide additional telephone circuits between Ashcroft and Prince George, British Columbia. The new equipment is to be installed in the department's 150 Mile House repeater station. The existing telephone circuits between Vancouver and the Cariboo in British Columbia as far north as Prince George are inadequate to handle the present volume of traffic and, with the increase which may reasonably be expected to develop in the next year, serious delays in the clearing of traffic would be encountered. In order further to relieve the existing overloaded single Vancouver-Prince George circuit, it is also proposed to provide a high level circuit between Ashcroft and Prince George by the installation of one repeater, two terminal and the necessary filter equipment.

Mr. FULTON: There is nothing there for the telephone exchange at Williams lake. Is that expenditure contemplated next year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will look into that.

Item agreed to.

935. To provide for repair of flood damage to federal government structures and telegraph and telephone lines and for redredging of filled-in channels, $550,000.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This item is to provide for repairing the damages caused to federal government works by the disastrous floods in British Columbia.

When this estimate was prepared the waters were still too high to make surveys in order to ascertain accurate estimates of the damages. However, from telephone reports from our district officers it is obvious that considerable repair work and re-dredging filled-in channels will have to be undertaken as soon as the water level recedes sufficiently.

In view of the above, it is proposed to use this $550,000 wherever it is most urgently required. In the meantime, however, a rough estimate of the requirements is as follows:

(a) Telegraph and telephone lines—
1. To repair and replace cross arms, poles and wire in the Fraser river valley on government lines	$ 54,000
2. In the Skeena valley from Prince Rupert to Prince George	50,000
3. Contingencies	21,000
	$125,000
(b) Harbours and rivers—
1. Urgent repairs to diking at Lulu island to protect the main channel of the Fraser river	50,000
2. Redredging filled-in channel through Annieville Bar (main channel approach to New Westminster)	350,000
(c) Contingencies	25,000
Total	$550,000

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: How much of that is for re-dredging?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): For re-dredging, $350,000.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Am I to understand that it is contemplated to spend only $350,000 for re-dredging the Fraser river?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No, this is to take care of the siltation after the flood waters have receded. The $350,000 is for re-dredging the filled-in channel through Annieville Bar, which is the main channel approach to New Westminster.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is merely the mouth of the Fraser river. I should like the minister to check with his officials and tell me whether any items have been provided for dredging the upper reaches of the Fraser river from New Westminster to Hope.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not in this one.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Has it been provided in any other item?

Mr. GREEN: No, it has not.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall have to get a report from my officials. As I told the hon. member, Mr. Goodspeed is out there. If he reports that we have to do some work of one kind and another we shall follow his technical advice on that. If it is found out that it is necessary his report will be considered in Ottawa.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Am I to understand from the minister that if Mr. Goodspeed recommends that further dredging is required at the port of New Westminster or at Hope—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know the location well enough.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The minister's officials know the location or should know it. What I want to be clear on is the amount to be provided other than the ordinary estimates to do the dredging recommended by the engineers.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps I am a little tired, because I do not get the import of the hon. gentleman's remarks. We have sent out one of our best engineers to survey and report, in co-operation with an engineer appointed by the province of British Columbia, as to repair of the works and what we can do on the Fraser river following the flood. We shall do our utmost to repair the damage done there. Anything further than that I do not know.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I think I have been fair about it. I have not mentioned floods this afternoon. I am speaking of the normal dredging conditions on the Fraser river. I certainly intend to speak on floods when the special supplementary estimate is before the committee. What I am trying to ascertain from the minister is this. I have stated repeatedly, since I have been in the house, that the present dredge cannot adequately care for the dredging of the Fraser river. It is a forty-year-old dredge, and can only take care of the mouth of the Fraser river. I am not talking about flood repairs or damage. Do the estimates to which the minister has referred apply to dredging out the Fraser river above New Westminster to Chilliwack? If the minister has not that information he should get it for me before the house rises, because I think I am entitled to it. Surely his officials must know whether they have made any recommendation for adequate dredging of the Fraser river from McDonald bar to Matsqui island bar. Surely his officials must have that information. If not, the other officials must have it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): After the floods, we felt that we needed this amount over and above our ordinary estimates to keep the Fraser river channel in as good condition as possible. This is a supplementary vote to our ordinary vote. As to the conditions on the Fraser river, this amount will not be included in any agreement with the province. That estimate will come under another department.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Then I am to understand from the minister that this vote has nothing to do with the ordinary dredging in the Fraser river. This vote has nothing to do with the repair or replacement of dikes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: This is an additional vote. As I understand the minister, with his usual caution, and if I might put it that way I would say extreme caution because he comes from central Canada, he is prepared to state that $550,000 is not sufficient to reopen the channel and keep it in the condition it should have been. He is prepared to recommend to the government that sufficient funds will be voted, on the advice of his officials, to see that that is done.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What the hon. gentleman is discussing would come under a special vote.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: No. That is the point I am trying to get away from.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): At this stage we think $350,000 will be sufficient to reopen the channel and put it in good condition. If we have not enough money to do that I shall see that we try to find some more.

Mr. GREEN: The weakness of the minister's position is this. There should be some money voted for additional work on the Fraser river. This vote is only to make good the damage that has been done.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is right.

Mr. GREEN: Some hon. members, notably the hon. member for Fraser Valley, have asked that there be more extensive dredging done, particularly in the portion of the river above New Westminster. No money is being voted for that purpose today. If the minister's engineer reports back that additional dredging should be undertaken in the upper part of the river no money is voted for that purpose. This figure of $550,000 contains only $350,000 for dredging. The rest of it is for telephone and telegraph lines and other items of that type. Only $350,000 is being voted for re-dredging the filled-in channels. What we are asking is that, in addition to the dredging of the present channel, deeper channels be dug. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley says, that means more dredges, and it means more expenditure. No money whatever is voted for that purpose. The minister says he will fill in with whatever added amount may be needed, but my submission is that that is not sufficient. There should be a vote for this new kind of dredging in the Fraser river.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps I have not made myself clear. This estimate has nothing to do with any agreement on the Fraser valley flood conditions. That is under other items. My department is responsible for navigation and has to do dredging and maintenance works. That comes under my department. This amount will do the dredging necessary to keep navigation where it was before the floods, or even make it better.

Mr. GREEN: The hon. member for Fraser Valley was not in the house when the minister gave the details. The minister said that dredging was all to be done below New Westminster.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If some was recommended by my engineer we would do it.

Mr. GREEN: No. The figure of $350,000 is for work below New Westminster. What I am suggesting is that if the government is to do any new dredging, or any new type of dredging, above New Westminster there should be some money for that purpose in the supplementary estimates, but there is no such vote.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is the point I am trying to follow through. I am not worrying about the amount that has been voted for dredging below New Westminster bridge. I am not talking about the flood conditions. That will be taken up under the vote in the name of the Minister of Finance. When we reach that I shall discuss flood conditions. So far as I can see, no item is provided for dredging the Fraser river from the New Westminster bridge eastward as far as you want to go. One may say the Mission bridge or above Hope or Rosedale. The minister talked about keeping the navigable part of the river in the condition it was before the floods. That is entirely out. I informed the minister, and am prepared to prove it by pictures, by affidavits or by anything else he wishes, that that is not good enough.

I shall mention two districts, Matsqui island and McDonald bar. You can practically wade across the famous Fraser river. I maintain that no item has been provided in either the main estimates or the supplementary estimates for the dredging of that channel. No provision has been made, so far as I can find, in the main estimates, the supplementary estimates or the further supplementary estimates, to provide equipment for that service. I am asking the minister to give me an assurance that he will make a proper recommendation to the government in this matter.

I frankly admit that neither the minister nor anyone else can state now what amount will be required; but on behalf of the people whom I represent, the people who are most affected, I ask the minister to give me an assurance that a recommendation will be made to the government that McDonald bar, Calamity Point and the Matsqui island bar will be dredged out; and not merely for the purpose of providing navigation, because no navigation has been possible for the past fifteen years, owing to neglect on the part of the Department of Public Works, both federal and provincial. I would ask the minister to give me the assurance that further sums will be recommended. I cannot say how much will be required, and I do not think the minister can say at this moment what will be required, but I submit that he should tell this committee and assure me, as representing the people of that riding, that, by order in council if necessary, funds sufficient will be found to dredge this channel, in order to make it safe, not only for navigation but for the safety of the two trans-Canada railways, the trans-Canada highway and the whole economy of Canada. I think the minister should be in a position to give that assurance.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What I say to the hon. gentleman is that, relying on the knowledge of my assistant chief engineer, Mr. Goodspeed, of conditions out there, if he recommends to the department that these works are necessary in the public interest I will recommend them to the government.

Mr. GREEN: But we do not want the work to be held up for another year. I would point out to the committee that in item 832 the minister brought down—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We do not know whether we are going to dredge or raise the banks. We are waiting for the report of the engineers.

Mr. GREEN: In item 832 the minister brought down an estimate for $2,000,000 which was to be spent for purchasing buildings for the taxation division if, as and when such buildings can be located. He did not even know in what towns or cities they were to be. Now we are asking that there be a vote for the Fraser river for necessary work to be done there. We are asking that some money be allotted for this work at this session, so that when the engineer's report comes in some work can be done this year without having to wait until another year or eighteen months from now. This is the point I make.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Tell me the amount—$350,000.

Mr. GREEN: That is not so. That $350,000 is for dredging work below New Westminster.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If recommended.

Mr. GREEN: According to the minister's own statement, there is not one cent for dredging work above New Westminster, and we are asking that a sum be provided so that work can be done above New Westminster.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am not talking about flood damage or anything else of that description, but about dredging. Surely the minister can tell me this. What provision has been made to date to acquire suitable dredging equipment? You cannot acquire a dredge overnight. When we built the famous Sumas dike, which held, thanks to its erection under Dudley Barrow, who built it, we brought a dredge from the Panama canal. In the province of British Columbia, ever since 1940, the federal government has had one two-by-four dredge—I have forgotten the name; it is either the Samson or the King Edward—which is forty years old, which could only keep the port of New Westminster open. I have no objection to keeping that port open. I see a vote for dredging in the port of Victoria. I have no objection to that, but what is the reason? It is for the great commercial interests. I can tell you that we had to rush dredges over from the Fraser river there during the war. The war is over and we can say these things now. The fact is that we had to rush dredges there in order to get into that dry dock. Those dredges were taken off the Fraser river.

I am surprised that the British Columbia members have not got up and demanded—not requested but demanded—that suitable dredging facilities be procured immediately for the great Fraser river from one end to the other.

Mr. YOUNG: I should like to raise a point with the minister. He can correct me if I am wrong, but I believe he said the idea was to restore the channel of the Fraser river to the condition it was in before the flood.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: God help us.

Mr. YOUNG: If that is the statement, it is necessary to draw to the attention of the department the fact that, in the opinion of the majority of the people on the spot, that will not be sufficient. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for Fraser Valley that at one time the waters of the Fraser were navigable at a much higher position than they are today. That river is in a condition of geological maturity and it is silting up in all its upper reaches. As a consequence of that fact, the dangers of the flood menace, of which we have had experience recently, are due largely, or in part at any rate, to the failure to retain the condition of the river, from the navigable point of view, as it was fifteen or twenty years ago.

If the policy of the department is merely to restore the condition of the river as it was before the floods, I suggest that that policy is short-sighted, and the ministry would do well to take into consideration the condition of the river as it was fifteen or twenty years ago and attempt, by dredging the upper reaches, to restore it to that position.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. GREEN: Has the minister no answer to give?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I was wondering whether the hon. gentleman meant that the fact that we had not dredged certain parts of the river was the reason for the flood, because the hon. member for Vancouver North made quite a speech the other night, stating the causes, in his opinion, of the flood, and he never referred to the fact that we had not dredged the river.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Yes, he did, definitely.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What part of the river would have been responsible for it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have discussed the matter ever since 1940, and the hon. member for Vancouver South will bear me out in this. I am not an engineering authority, but I do not believe the officials of the department have complete knowledge in the matter. I gave it as my opinion however, and an opinion which I believe will be borne out by any engineering authority in Canada, that if you obstruct the flow of the great Pacific ocean and the water from the Rocky mountains the effect will be an adverse one. The hon. member for Vancouver North spoke on my behalf in my absence, and I have pointed out to the minister that if the federal and provincial governments had done their duty in keeping the channel clear, at least one district, the Matsqui, would not be today in the position of having 10,554 acres under water.

Mr. GREEN: As I understood the hon. member for Vancouver North, he said that the dikes were being made by using material from the farm land and at the same time the river bottom was gradually filling up and getting higher until the river was rising above the surrounding land. He suggested that the river bottom should be dredged out and the silt taken from it used to build up the dikes, instead of using material from the farm land. We suggest that there be dredging planned and undertaken by the dominion.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will follow the engineer's report. We asked for an estimate of $350,000 because the session is at its close. We have not received the report, but my officials think that, with this $350,000, they can do the work they believe our engineers and the British Columbia engineers will recommend right now. Perhaps I am wrong and perhaps they are wrong, and perhaps my hon. friends are all right. I do not know.

Mr. GREEN: How much would a new dredge cost?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Between $800,000 and $1,000,000.

Mr. GREEN: How long would it take to get it?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: No.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): You would not get that dredge for two and a half years.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have been hoping the minister would say that. Since 1940 I have asked that question. I have asked it ever since I made my first speech on May 28 in connection with the flood. I asked if any equipment had been ordered or if any had been provided. Now I am told by the minister that it will take two and a half years to get it. I would point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that I am still not talking about floods. If we get the dredge there, and we pump this material out, it must settle; it must be dredged before it is put in effect; and no engineer dares to deny that fact. To tell me that it will take two and a half years—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: This is an item—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, this is on dredging. I listened to one hour of nonsense on a discussion on divorce the other day; surely we can have half an hour on flood conditions which, after the member for Fraser Valley's speech on May 28, the Prime Minister admitted were a national calamity. Surely we can have one hour on this subject; and I am still not talking about flood conditions. With regard to dredging this Fraser river, to the best of my knowledge there are only two dredges available. One is owned by the dominion government, and is used entirely at the mouth of the Fraser river; the other one is privately owned.

Now I am asking—and I repeat that I am asking—the Minister of Public Works to tell me what provision has been made. Never mind what the ultimate cost will be or who will pay for it. I want to know what provision has been made or what attempts have been made to date to secure adequate provision for dredging equipment. Just today I received a letter by air mail from a friend of mine, asking if we had as yet attempted to bring in a Dutch engineer, a man from a country in which they make real dikes. I do not know whether we need a Dutch engineer. I think the Canadian engineers are competent, but I do not think the equipment at their disposal is capable of doing the job.

I am asking my question again. The minister has admitted to me that it will take two and a half years to get this equipment. Surely to goodness, if it takes two and a half years to get the equipment to provide adequate dredging, the sum of $350,000 to dredge the great Fraser river from Hope to the mouth at Steveston is entirely inadequate. As the hon. member for Vancouver South said—and I have no dispute over the amount that was voted for this particular item—

Mr. GREEN: $2,000,000.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: —if you can vote that amount for one item without knowing the ultimate cost, you can vote far more than $350,000 for dredging, not to protect the farmers of the Fraser valley whom I represent, but to protect the great Pacific coast. If you have any trouble with Russia, God help you if you have no defences on the Pacific coast. Yesterday Mr. Churchill, who is one of the greatest statesmen of all time, said that we do not know what will be around the corner tomorrow; yet here we are twiddling around with $350,000 for dredging at a time when our two transcontinental railways are out of action. The Canadian National, which we, the people of Canada, own, is still out of action and is still unable to operate to the Pacific coast. Any arsenal that you may have at Kamloops is subject to flood, and you could not get at it if it was not subject to flood because you have no railway or road to it. Yet we are twiddling around here with $350,000 for dredging.

I would say to the minister that I should like to go home just as much as anybody else. I have a longer distance to go than have most hon. members, and I have been here longer than most hon. members—I do not mean in years, but in actual attendance in this house. I think hon. members will bear me out in that statement.

If we are to twiddle around and talk about these other matters, when I am told that a vote of $350,000 is sufficient for dredging and am then told that it will take two and a half years even to get dredges—

Mr. GREEN: And none have been ordered yet.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And none have been ordered yet—that is the point. I think every hon. member will bear me out that on May 28, the first time I spoke, I asked if any equipment had been ordered, and I find that none has been ordered yet.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Does my hon. friend know that dredging is done by the government and under contract? There are two ways of proceeding with this. Actually does my hon. friend know that we have a new dredge under contract, working right now with —and I have forgotten the name. We are dredging all the time and there are dredges out there. When we cannot use our own dredge we give contracts. This amount of $350,000 is to do that.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister not think an additional dredge is required on the Pacific coast?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There may be a need for it, but I am told that we can give contracts for the dredging we need; the equipment is available. We need not have the equipment. We can give it to private companies as we do on the Atlantic coast or on the Pacific coast. The way some hon. members are arguing you would think the dredging is done only by government dredges. But that is not the case.

Mr. GREEN: We do not think any such thing.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Hon. members have pointed out what it would cost the department to get a new dredge and the time it would take; and somebody says there is only $350,000 for that purpose; that we shall have to wait for two and a half years for this dredge. This is all nonsense. The $350,000 is for dredging and not for the purchase of a dredge.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I intend to follow this through right now, because it is a matter of record. On file in my office is the record with regard to Nicomen Slough. I am proud of the fact that the minister and his officials saw fit two years ago to do some $58,000 worth of dredging in Nicomen Slough, which happens to be in my riding. As I say, I am proud of that fact. I will tell you why they did not do it last year. After awarding the contract, the one and only available dredge, while coming from Vancouver island was upset and sunk and could not come in to complete the job. Then, in the face of that, I am told about private dredges being available. The one and only dredge was sunk on its way from Vancouver island, and could not come in to do the job.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Where does the under-contract one come from?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: But you could not complete the job last year because you did not have the dredge. I have the correspondence up in my office stating that. I am sorry that the minister and his officials at Ottawa do not realize that this is not a penny ante thing like Nicomen Slough; it is an immense project. According to their estimates—and I admire and approve what the government has done for us—it will cost millions of dollars. And they talk about having equipment for a $58,000 contract which they did not have last year. But I still have not talked about floods, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. POULIOT: I am glad to support the hon. member for Fraser Valley, who has spoken on behalf of his constituents and on behalf of the region of Fraser valley for years. I give credit also to my good friend the hon. member for Vancouver South, the hon. member for Kamloops and the new member for Yale. Everyone is well disposed, and the minister is the first one to be well disposed in this regard. I do not see why the hon. member for Fraser Valley should consider the minister is opposed to his views. He is ready to accept them to the extent to which he has facilities to go on with the work that he requests should be done now. I understand that when the people of Chilliwack and other places in the Fraser valley such as Kamloops, Vancouver and Yale read the report of what has happened this afternoon, they will say, We have champions in the house. On the other hand, those who will be in the limelight will be champions of their part of the country, and quite legitimately so. I congratulate them; I would do the same, to a certain extent. However I would be fair to the minister. I have been told so often that civil servants were infallible, when it was not true; now I shall protest when it is said they are fallible, when it is untrue.

I have great respect for the headquarters of the Department of Public Works. They are men of experience. I see here the deputy minister. I know personally the chief engineer, having gone to college with him. He was first in his class, and is a remarkable man. I knew Mr. Cameron and Mr. Hunter. The staff in the Department of Public Works is one of the best of all government departments, because they are trained to be precise. They have studied mathematics and engineering; and in that department are some of the very few civil servants who know that two and two make four.

Those men are familiar with conditions. There is a district engineer in British Columbia. The only trouble was that perhaps the Prime Minister was too late in admitting that there was a national emergency and in subscribing to the urgent request made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to send help at once. Why did the Prime Minister wait to see that it was a national disaster? The dominion government is going to help these people, just the same as I would save my neighbour's furniture if his house took fire. I would not be afraid of being arrested for trespass. This was a condition of national emergency, and it was the duty of the federal government to be there, just as the Minister of Trade and Commerce was there. If the Prime Minister had used that language the hon. member for Yale would not have been elected; there would have been a Liberal elected in that constituency.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not wish hon. members to laugh, because I am serious. It was an error in tactics.

Mr. GREEN: You mean the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, not Yale.

Mr. POULIOT: I was speaking of the hon. member for Yale. I know these hon. members, and they are all good looking. But, sir, here we are, with the Minister of Public Works being made the goat for the disaster which has occurred. It was a case of force majeure; it is sinister, and it is a calamity. We are doing our best. Perhaps the Premier of British Columbia was too late in asking for help from the dominion government. But we will recall that the army was there, and that men from the engineering staff were there, right on the spot, to help those who were the victims of this national calamity.

When I think of the provisions made by the Minister of Public Works to come to the assistance of our fellow citizens who have suffered to such an extent in British Columbia, particularly in the Fraser valley, one of the richest parts of this marvellous country, I am ready to give them credit. Although I admire the hon. member for Fraser Valley, who has been fighting this case with such eloquence and such vigour for such a long time, and although I admire hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party and of the C.C.F. party, and even probably the Social Credit party—I am not sure about that, because they have no representatives in that part of the country—let me say we are one in saying that something should be done at once for the relief of these people and for their security, so that in the future they will not have to fear the elements.

I am ready to place confidence in the Minister of Public Works, whose heart beats with that of the hon. member for Fraser Valley—and for that I give him credit. I am suggesting that the hon. member for Fraser Valley see the Minister of Public Works, his deputy and his chief engineer and discuss the problem quietly with them. If he does, his electors will see nothing in the press until the great help comes; then they will be even more proud of their member.

Mr. GREEN: May I suggest that the minister follow this course; that he bring in a further supplementary estimate which will provide funds from which he can at least start his work in the upper Fraser valley, and order a dredge. He has no vote at the present time from which he can do either of those things. I do not think there is any doubt that the committee would pass such a further supplementary, and there is still time to do it. That would get around our complaint. We are complaining that no provision is being made in the estimates so that the work we want done can be proceeded with, if it should be found necessary. I implore the minister to follow that course and to bring down a further supplementary estimate.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. GREEN: No. I want an answer.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I hope we can come to some understanding. You are giving me advice as to what we should do. The hon. member is giving me advice as to what we in the public works department should do in this instance. Will he tell me what amount he wants? Will he tell me what it will cost? That is the first question I want answered.

Mr. GREEN: The minister said a dredge would cost—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I want to know from the hon. member who is going to run this item exactly what he would place in the estimate he wants introduced.

Mr. GREEN: I would suggest that the minister bring down a further supplementary estimate for, let us say, $500,000.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): On what would you base that?

Mr. GREEN: On exactly the same basis that the minister brought down an estimate for $2,000,000 to buy office space for the income tax division across Canada—not even knowing what it will cost or in what cities it will be. He brought in that $2,000,000 item, and the Minister of Finance got up and said it was all right to pass, although he admitted that it was an unusual procedure to follow. Today we have a national emergency about which we on the Pacific coast are greatly concerned. We are only asking the minister to bring in a similar vote for $500,000. Then the money would be there with which at least to start doing some of the work the hon. member for Fraser Valley wants done.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Would you just give me time to explain to you my predicament? Am I to follow your advice as to the amount of an estimate, or am I to rely upon the advice of my advisers in the department, men who are engineers and who know the district as well as anyone in the house? Mr. Goodspeed and Mr. Morton are the two engineers who are handling our part of the work. They have the confidence of the hon. member for Vancouver South and of the hon. member for Fraser Valley. They know him. Those men say to the minister, "In our opinion with the knowledge we have of conditions out there, and our technical knowledge, we believe the estimate required to do the necessary work is this estimate of $550,000". That is one side of the matter. I have been here for an hour listening to the hon. member from Vancouver South—well, the hon. member for Fraser Valley did not go quite that far; he did not mention an amount. These three hon. gentlemen ask for a million dollars instead of the $550,000. They do not give the basis of their estimate. They simply say, "Put in a new dredge". Well, that is easily said.

If the hon. member was an expert in dredging and dredges I would follow his advice. But I am satisfied I have the advice of about the best men in this country in the matter of dredging and dredges. If I do not follow their advice, I believe I will make a mistake. This afternoon I ask hon. members to think of my position, and whether I should take the advice of these officials. I ask the hon. member to think of the position I am in and to decide if I am to take his advice—which I do not believe is serious—or that of my engineers.

Mr. GREEN: What do you mean by that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): You are advising a larger estimate, but my officers tell me that this is sufficient.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister mean that I was not in earnest when I made my suggestion?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, you are in earnest; but you do not know how to prepare an estimate for dredging. There are in the department people who know how to prepare these estimates. Do you not think I would be wiser to follow the advice of those gentlemen in a case like that than to say, after listening to the speeches I have heard, to the Minister of Finance, "It is not sufficient; we want a million or a million and a half"?

Mr. GREEN: There is one fact the minister completely overlooked. He has not yet received the report from his engineer, Mr. Goodspeed. When he does get that report he will have no money with which to carry out the additional work.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Wait until you see the estimates of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. GREEN: We have the estimates of the Minister of Finance before us and they have nothing to do with dredging. All we are asking is that the minister bring in an estimate so that he will be in funds to carry out the recommendations of the report by Mr. Goodspeed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I ask the minister to give us assurance—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I did.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have no intention of criticizing the Minister of Public Works, because in some ways he has been fairly generous with me since I have been a member. He has even spent three or four thousand dollars in my riding in the last few years. I have every personal admiration for him, but I am entitled to criticize the actions of his department as they concern my riding. I am the member who is most directly concerned with this matter. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South that when you can vote $2,000,000 for something unknown like playing chess with your wife's brother-in-law, surely you can vote $2,000,000 to provide something that is really required. Can the minister give me, the member most directly concerned, the assurance that if his engineers, in whom I have every confidence, as I have expressed this afternoon, recommend that not $550,000 but $5,000,000 is required he will recommend that an order in council be passed providing that sum? That is all I ask. God knows it is hard enough to get $50 from the treasury board, but I think he should give assurance that sufficient funds will be provided to take care of what the Prime Minister has referred to as a national calamity.

Mr. YOUNG: I would point out to the minister that the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver North, as reported on page 5204 of Hansard, reads as follows:

> The river in the olden days was navigable as far as Yale, but in recent years what little dredging has been done by the federal government has been done only in the lower stretch between the sea and the city of New Westminster. The upper fifty miles, where the flooding is so bad, has been almost untouched by dredges.

The minister says it is the policy of the department to put the river in the condition it was in before the flood, but the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver North has been completely lost sight of. His suggestion was that some effort be made to estimate the cost of re-dredging the river to the depth where it was fifteen or twenty years ago. If that were to be done, then the minister could come to us with an estimate which would be of some value to the Fraser river area as a whole, as well as to the people throughout British Columbia.

The present condition of the Fraser river is of such utmost importance that it should be investigated completely. I ask the minister if he is willing to recommend to his engineers, the men in whom he has confidence, that an attempt be made to estimate the cost of dredging the fifty miles of the river above New Westminster.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The engineers were sent out there to do what the hon. member is asking should be done, to make a survey and to report. I am ready to recommend to the government that that report be carried out.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

68. Departmental administration, $997,990.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, under this item may I respectfully ask the Minister of Finance to make a further statement on the matter about which I questioned him briefly on the orders of the day this morning. I think my question properly comes under the departmental administration item of this department.

As the minister knows, there has recently been tabled the report of the prices committee. Just where that report emanated from is a matter of interesting discussion and speculation. At any rate concurrence in he report was moved in this house by a colleague of the Minister of Finance, and although there was no recorded vote last night I believe that the Minister of Finance was in favour of the adoption of the report. Some recommendations in the report would have to be referred to other departments for consideration, but the important one certainly would come under the consideration of the Minister of Finance.

In the report there is a qualified recommendation—I admit it is qualified, but at least it goes part of the way—in favour of the reimposition of some price controls and certain subsidies. There is also a recommendation that the excise tax should be reduced or eliminated. There is a recommendation regarding unreasonable profits being taxed, and two or three other matters of a financial character. I realize that the incipient rebellions on the other side of the house, and the necessity of denying those rebellions, and so on, are becoming a little embarrassing, and no doubt the government feels that the situation has to be handled in such a way as to save face. But surely that has all been done now. Surely the presentation of that report and its adoption by this house clears the way for the Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister with him to make the kind of changes suggested in that report.

The minister could not but note this morning that there was a general feeling of humour in the house when he said that the government had not had time to consider the report. Most of us feel that the government has been considering what was in that report for a long time, even before the members of the committee had it.

I do feel that before this session comes to an end, whether it be tonight, tomorrow night or at some future sitting, the minister should make a statement about these matters. I hope he will not be worried over the way in which we have poked at the government because of divisions in its ranks and the difficulties they have had in changing policies without losing face, but that he will tell the house and the country what the government of Canada intends to do on the basis of the financial recommendations contained in the report of the prices committee, which as I have said has already been approved by the house.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): As I said this morning, the report has been tabled only recently, and with the pressure of work in trying to bring the session to a close I was correct when I stated that the government has not yet had an opportunity to give full and careful consideration to the recommendations of the committee. I myself have not been able to do so. I know from a quick reading that the report recommended that the government should give consideration to certain important matters, and I can assure this committee that that consideration will be given, and given promptly, and the government's decision as to the policy which will be followed will be announced at the proper time. I do not intend to make any such announcement this evening.

I have only one word to add. My hon. friend in his usual genial way has referred to divisions among the government supporters, saving face, and so on. But may I say that this is not the first time that members of the opposition have made unwarranted assumptions as to the attitude of the government, and possibly this is another of those cases.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I am surprised that the minister is not ready to tell us tonight everything he is prepared to do, but I suppose that is a way that ministers have. We have before us a large item for departmental administration, involving substantial increases. The Department of Finance has now become far more than it used to be. It used to be merely a means of raising money for the expenses of the various departments of government, but now it is far more than that. Now it goes very far into our ordinary lives in its efforts to control the economy of the country.

There has been a measure of reorganization in the department this year, I understand, a sort of splitting up of functions. Would the minister give us a brief statement on that, and lay some stress on what we call the regulatory side and the extent to which the department steps into the economy of the country. I would ask the minister to say something in particular as to the relations of this department with the Bank of Canada and other important bodies in the nation, but banks chiefly.

Mr. ABBOTT: There has been no reorganization of the department this year. Last year there was some reorganization involving what I might call the top executive branch. Three assistant deputy ministers were appointed last year, and there was a rearrangement of the branches, the directorates and so on. But all that was done last year, and there has been no change made this year. The estimate for this year shows an increase of $65,901 over last year.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It was the reorganization made last year that I thought the minister might speak about.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was actually made before I brought in my main estimate last year. The reorganization consisted of Mr. Kenneth W. Taylor being appointed, if I might say so, senior assistant deputy minister, but because of the fact that Mr. Taylor is still continuing to serve as chairman of the wartime prices and trade board he has been able to devote only a portion of his time to the duties of assistant deputy minister of finance. Of course, as the committee is aware, he is also head of the emergency import control division, which is under the direction of the Minister of Finance. One other assistant deputy minister who was appointed last year was Doctor Eaton, who for some time had been head of the taxation branch of the department. He also was given the status of a deputy minister, but is still continuing to perform the duties of head of the taxation branch. Mr. R. B. Bryce, who had been one of the senior officers of the department, was made assistant deputy minister. Mr. W. C. Ronson was made master of the mint. Since that time Mr. Bryce has been assistant deputy minister with particular responsibility for the treasury board side of the department. Mr. M. W. Sharp, who had been in the department for many years, is director of the economic policy division. Mr. Deutsch, who is known to a good many members of the committee, is head of the commercial branch. These were the principal—well, they were not changes, they were actually giving to these very valuable officers of the department a status which I think was well merited as a result of the work which they had been performing during the war years. There has been no fundamental change in the organization of the department, except, as I say, to recognize the particular responsibilities of those who were in it.

There has been no substantial increase in the administrative cost. The increase is $65,000 odd. All of that is substantially to provide for various salary and statutory increases. As the committee is aware, there has been a general increase in civil service salaries throughout the last year, as there has been in other fields. The increase in the administrative item of the amount I mention reflects that increase in the administrative section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister say a word more about the various boards, or would that come more properly under a subsequent item?

Mr. ABBOTT: So far as the wartime prices and trade board is concerned, that is under a separate item. Perhaps it might be better to deal with it there, because I shall have the officers of the board here with the relevant data.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I take just a moment longer to get clear, if I can, the significance of the minister's answers to my questions a moment ago. On all previous occasions during the past number of months when any of us have asked whether consideration was being given to the reimposition of any price controls or subsidies, the minister, although perhaps in a roundabout and polite way, always said no. He always made it clear that he had nothing to add to the position already taken by the government. Do I understand from what he said tonight that, in view of the recommendations of the prices committee report that some controls and some subsidies be restored, this matter will now be considered by the government?

Mr. ABBOTT: The position is this. As my hon. friend knows very well, the government has power under the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act to impose any price controls it wishes to up to March 31 next. Certain price controls are still in effect. There are certain articles which are still subject to price ceilings. There are one or two subsidies still in effect. The power is there to extend them, if that is desired. The committee—I have not the report before me—recommended that the government should consider the retention of price controls in selected cases where extreme hardship would result if they were not continued. I think it is recommended that the government should consider the continuation of subsidies under similar circumstances where hardship might result. These recommendations will be considered. As I say, there are some commodities which are still under price ceiling, and there are some subsidies which are still being paid; but whether that policy will be extended or not, I am not in a position to say this evening. I therefore can make no statement on that.

Mr. GREEN: I do suggest to the minister that there is a great need for clarification on the subject of excise taxes. I hold in my hand the last Vancouver News-Herald in the reading room, issued on June 23, in which the following three-column advertisement appears:

Re Excise Tax.

Pending exact date of removal of the excise tax inaugurated last November 17 or clarification by the government as to their policies, all merchandise sold by us which includes this tax as of this date will be subject to price adjustment . . .

This means . . .

Immediate delivery to you from our large stock of radio and and electric appliances at . . . The new lower prices.

The day before there was an editorial in the News-Herald dealing with the removal of the excise tax, saying what a wonderful thing it was that at last this iniquitous tax had been discarded. As we know, the tax is still there. But this editorial and the advertisement give a clear indication of the confusion of mind that exists at least in British Columbia, and I do think it is of great importance that the minister should clear up that situation as soon as possible.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am quite aware, as are hon. members of this house, that there is a great state of confusion and uncertainty as to what is going to happen in connection with this excise tax. But may I say with all due modesty, that that state of confusion is not due to the Minister of Finance. If I may again express a personal opinion, I think it is extremely unfortunate that rumours of this kind have been circulated. There is nothing I can do about it. I made a statement in the house the other day in reply to the request of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, and I have nothing to add to or to subtract from it. I said at that time that it is most unusual for the Minister of Finance either to confirm or to deny the proposed imposition or removal of the taxes. The only reason which compelled me to do so was the wide publicity which had been given to these rumours by the press, and by the request—a perfectly proper request—of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. Let me say as firmly as I possibly can that I have nothing to add this evening to the statement which I made the other day in reply to his request.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister will agree that the other circumstances were unusual too.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may or may not be so, but the Minister of Finance is not responsible for these statements.

Mr. FULTON: It is most unusual for such rumours to come from such high and well-informed sources.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have never ascertained who they were.

Mr. FULTON: The well-informed sources were substantiated afterwards in the report of the prices committee. There are certainly well-founded reasons for supposing that these rumours came by a deliberate if not a guided leak from that committee which had the sanction and perhaps lack of punishment, anyway, from the government. But I rose to ask the minister if he would report to us on another matter. It is stated again in a Canadian Press dispatch—the Canadian Press generally is close to the government sources—and the Canadian Press dispatch is reprinted in good faith by the Montreal Gazette of Monday, June 28, as follows:

> The government started the new fiscal year with a bang, piling up a surplus of $255,261,473 in the first two months of operations.

The article goes on:

> At the corresponding date last year the government had a surplus of $202,195,966.
> (The Canadian Press erroneously reported Friday that the government had started this year with a deficit.)
>
> Finance Minister Abbott said in his budget speech that he hopes to conclude the present fiscal year, which ends March 31, with a surplus of $490 million.
> The 1947-48 fiscal year ended with a surplus of $670 million.

The information which we have been able to obtain is to the effect that this revenue total includes $288 million in income and excess profits tax, compared with $306 million for the same two months of last year. Excise tax of $76,000,000 for these two months is much greater than last year.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is $2,000,000 greater.

Mr. FULTON: What follows from this is that over half the surplus estimated for this fiscal year has already been collected, and the total revenue for the year is $53,000,000 higher than the total revenue for the corresponding period of last year. I think that that state of affairs definitely indicates this year what we found last year, namely, bad or poor or inaccurate budgeting, because the minister has indicated that he expected to budget for a surplus of $450 million.

Mr. ABBOTT: The revenues this year are $3,000,000 lower than last year.

Mr. FULTON: He has a surplus already of over $255 million, and if things go on at this rate he will end up with a surplus of approximately $1 billion. Certainly on the basis of last year, that surplus seems well on the way to realization. Will the minister explain how it occurs, and what he will do about it by way of readjustment of taxes and particularly the removal of the special excise tax, to see that he does not take from the taxpayer far more than he needs, far more than he budgeted for, and far more than is justified by the high cost of living?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not indulge in prophecy, and the estimates of this year were prepared on the most careful and honest basis possible. It will I hope be found when the year is ended that they have been fairly close to the mark. The early months of the year are those in which we get our large revenues, particularly so far as income tax is concerned. What has been overlooked in all this talk about extra excise taxes that were put on is the fact that the excise taxes put on consisted of an additional tax on automobiles, radios and certain household appliances such as curling irons and toasters.

Mr. HACKETT: Washing machines.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; it was not imposed on those.

Mr. HACKETT: When was it taken off?

Mr. ABBOTT: It was never put on. It was announced at first but never imposed. The tax was imposed on miscellaneous electrical appliances and refrigerators. At the same time, a fact that has never been emphasized in this house, we removed the tax from the domestic use of electricity, which affects every household, and we took off the duties that had been levied on tea and coffee, and the revenue equivalents of these taxes were very close to the estimated yield from the taxes imposed.

There has been a good deal of talk about the imposition of taxes on the necessities of life. With all due deference to those who say that sort of thing, that talk is all bunk, because there has not been any extensive taxation on the necessities of life. If anyone will tell me that a set of curling irons, or toasters, enter appreciably into the cost of living, I will tell him he is talking nonsense. If I had thought of it in time, I would have got an estimate from the bureau of statistics as to the extent to which the added excise tax on the range of electrical appliances, automobiles and so on, on which the tax was imposed, would enter into the cost of living. I venture, however, to prophesy here that it would not be one-two-three with the increase in the price of beef.

Mr. FULTON: The minister may venture to prophesy, but will he tell us why the surplus is $53,000,000 higher than it was at this time last year?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is because we reduced expenditures. May I say to my able young friend that two months of the fiscal year do not make the full fiscal year, and I would ask him to possess his soul in patience until the end of this fiscal year. If he is here then, as I am sure he will be, he can at that time make an informed criticism with knowledge of the facts.

Mr. FULTON: The criticism I make now is based upon last year's experience.

Mr. ABBOTT: It amazes me to find that people are appalled at the fact that our revenues hold up, that we have an apparent surplus of revenues over expenditures, and that it is higher than it was last year. I am delighted to see it, with a debt of fourteen, fifteen, or sixteen billions. Others, however, may not be pleased at that.

Mr. FULTON: We are certainly not, for the reason that we are wondering whether the minister is able to forecast his requirements accurately. On the basis of a comparison of the same two months this year with those of last year—and the minister has not told us what extraordinary factors enter into those two months—we find that our surplus is running $50,000,000 more than it did last year. On that basis, unless there are extraordinary factors which were not present last year, should we not assume that the trend will be continued in the remainder of the year? Can the minister tell us anything that will make us assume that it will not continue?

Mr. ABBOTT: Income tax collections are down and expenditures are down.

Mr. FULTON: Is that the minister's only explanation, or was it an interjection?

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to touch upon the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not think the people of Canada are worrying so much about the extent of the surplus, although there may be some reason for worrying about it. I have never worried about my surplus. The people, however, are worrying about the cost of living. That is the question that is worrying them and they cannot get very much satisfaction from the answer which the Minister of Finance gave the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I would point out to the minister, if it needs pointing out to him, that this question of the cost of living is important, and the people are expecting some assurance that the report which was approved here yesterday, and the recommendations or proposals that were made, mean something, that they mean that something will be done about them apart from the stock-in-trade reply that they will receive consideration.

That word "consideration" has so many barnacles on it that you cannot see the word, and that kind of thing is mighty dangerous at this time. If you are going to add to the cynicism of the people of Canada towards the sincerity of the government in dealing with the question, I say that you are treading on pretty dangerous ground and some statement ought to be made. I appreciate that, as regards some of the recommendations or proposals made by the committee, the Minister of Finance cannot very well make announcements beforehand. But I would urge the minister and the government not to let this matter go by with the bare assertion that it is going to receive consideration.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said immediate consideration.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not hear the word "immediate", but I do not doubt the minister said it. Even if the consideration is immediate, unless it is given with the view of taking action, then the consideration does not amount to anything.

Mr. QUELCH: Will the minister give a brief explanation of the regulations under which Canadian securities owned in Britain can be purchased in Britain for the purpose of obtaining Canadian currency to invest in industry in this country? Under what conditions can that be done, what type of securities must be purchased, and to what use can the money be put in this country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I take it my hon. friend is referring to the use of the proceeds of sale of Canadian securities owned by British residents for the purpose of investment in Canada. The situation there is this. As the committee is aware, under the agreement which was entered into with the United Kingdom government, and confirmed by an act of this house, relating to the non-interest bearing loan from Canada to the United Kingdom, it was provided that when dollar securities held by residents of the United Kingdom were sold or redeemed, the proceeds of sale or redemption would be used to reduce the amount of the non-interest bearing loan. That was the general provision in the agreement. In December 1946 it was agreed between the two governments that the proceeds of such sales could be used for direct investment in Canada. That is to say, if United Kingdom residents were anxious to establish plants in Canada to manufacture some commodity here, the proceeds of sale of Canadian securities held by residents of the United Kingdom—sale or redemption—instead of being used to pay on the loan immediately, could be used in direct investment in Canada. In other words, the practical effect of that was that a negotiable security, if I might put it that way, could be converted into plant in Canada. The asset would still be in Canada, but it would take the form of some productive asset here. That arrangement has been in effect since December, 1946, I think, and that is the position today. There is no change from that position. There has not been a great deal of investment so far in virtue of that provision, but it is available for those who wish to make use of it.

Mr. QUELCH: Does that apply only to British residents, or does it apply to other people as well? That is, can people other than British residents buy these Canadian securities?

Mr. ABBOTT: That applies only to British residents, because those securities are those which have been registered by British residents with the Bank of England in London, and are under the control of the British treasury. It is perfectly true, of course, that anybody can purchase those securities; but the proceeds of the sale of the securities owned by residents of the United Kingdom must either be used to pay off the non-interest bearing loan or be re-invested in various investments in Canada, as I have indicated.

Mr. QUELCH: Are the proceeds being used for the purpose of building plants in this country, or is it not a fact that in some cases they are being used for the purchase of existing plants which, of course, would be far more inflationary?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are supposed to be used only for the actual building of plants or the extension of existing plants.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister state if the government exercises some control in the matter? Let us assume that the British owner of the security wished to build a plant to make a commodity which is in surplus production and which would be doomed to failure. Would the government exercise any control in a situation of that kind?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. We do not attempt to exercise control over the nature of the enterprise that the British manufacturer or industrialist wants to establish in Canada. We believe in free enterprise, of course; and if he wants to switch from a negotiable security, such as the bonds of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power or Canadian Pacific, or something like that, to a plant in Ottawa, Toronto or somewhere else, we are glad to have him do so, because that increases the productive facilities of Canada. The security must be sold or must be redeemed; that is what I meant when I said "switched."

Mr. HACKETT: I never heard of that agreement until about a month ago. Was the negotiation made public before then?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot say.

Mr. HACKETT: It was known to the minister, of course.

Mr. ABBOTT: We did not put any advertisements about it in the paper, but I think it has been known since early in the spring of 1947. Obviously the persons who are entitled to avail themselves of it are residents of the United Kingdom who want to establish plants here in Canada. Canadians have no control over that.

Mr. HACKETT: It is in the nature of a concession to them, is it not? Until this agreement was entered into, of which I in my ignorance had no knowledge until the other day, the proceeds from the sale of that type of security which the minister has mentioned were applied, automatically almost, against the non-interest bearing loan. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. HACKETT: And now they may be diverted to other uses?

Mr. ABBOTT: They may be converted into another type of investment, yes. We still have the asset here in Canada as a security against our loan.

Mr. HACKETT: That is true; but it is not a realization upon the security which you hold, or it is not a payment on account of the obligation.

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course, as my hon. friend knows, the value of the securities held by residents of the United Kingdom in dollar securities is substantially in excess of the non-interest bearing loan.

Mr. QUELCH: I think the reason this matter has come up is the fact that the Financial Post gave it a great deal of publicity about a month or two ago. I was wondering what about Canadians who had capital in England or funds in England. Could those funds not be used for the purchase of Canadian securities in order to expand industry in this country?

Mr. ABBOTT: In the case of Canadians who have securities in England they own sterling securities. If those were to be sold, they would realize sterling. In order to make those available for investment in Canada, the British treasury would have to provide Canadian dollars; and I doubt very much if they would be willing to do that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to ask one question of the minister. I understood him to say that these funds produced in the manner indicated were to be invested in Canada only in new buildings, not in existing enterprises.

Mr. ABBOTT: Or in the extension of existing ones.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That struck me as odd, because I thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce was now playing down new construction, and it seems to me he should have done that long ago. If I am correct in thinking that, why would the policy be to insist that these funds should go into new construction?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is a good deal of expansion going on here. As I say, the amount which has been availed of is small compared with the increased investments here. There is some advantage to Canada in getting the technical know-how of these foreign manufacturers who can come here, and produce these things in our own country.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Shoving up the cost of living.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister state the amount of the non-interest bearing loan? Then, will he tell us the amount of Canadian investments held by residents—that is probably the better term—of the British isles?

Mr. ABBOTT: I will get that in a moment. The non-interest bearing loan is down now to $331 million, in round figures.

Mr. HACKETT: What is the value of the British held securities?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have not the figure here now. It would involve quite an extensive calculation. It is greatly in excess of $331 million, of course.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to refer for a moment to the question asked by the hon. member for Kamloops. While I fully recognize the force of what the minister said about the income being large in these months, the minister said a good deal of the reason was lessened expenditures. I think we ought to know a little bit more about that, because the question naturally arises in my mind: if the expenditures are less, are they less than these estimates we are now passing?

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: In the period to which the hon. member refers, the short period of two months, expenditures are down substantially. Ordinary expenditures are down.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is that down from the estimates?

Mr. FULTON: From last year.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is down from last year. The estimates are on a yearly basis. We are comparing a surplus. Apparently my hon. friend is taking the apparent surplus for two months of last year and the apparent surplus for two months of this fiscal year. I am talking about the expenditures for the first two months of this year. I am referring only to the same two months. These are actual figures, not estimates. We are not talking about estimates. We are talking about actual figures. The ordinary expenditures from April 1, 1947, to May 31, 1947, were $222,727,446.33. For the same period of this year they were—the figures are unrevised for May, of course—$173,158,266.75. They are down almost $50,000,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Before this item is carried, I should like to ask the minister a question which was put to me yesterday by a friend of mine. He wanted to know the powers of the deputy minister of finance, in addition to his powers as deputy minister. I should like to know the ramifications of his authority, and the orders in council passed to give him more power. I should also like to ask the minister who is the good looking gentleman who sits opposite the deputy minister, in front of the minister.

Mr. HACKETT: The other good looking gentleman.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is Mr. George Lowe of the Department of Finance.

Mr. POULIOT: Is that L-O-W?

Mr. ABBOTT: No, L-O-W-E.

Mr. POULIOT: There are two ways of spelling that name. I wanted to be sure about it; to make no mistake. We are here in the midst of these wizards of the Department of Finance, these gifted gentlemen. I am in a happy mood tonight, and I shall not use the choicest terms in describing these gentlemen who adorn the floor of the house on periodical occasions.

I understand that the deputy minister of finance was appointed fifteen years ago by a different government. He was chosen, apparently, for his exceptional ability, and he has been confirmed in office by ministers of finance since that time.

I shall not go farther into the matter, but I would ask the minister if he would be kind enough to tell us the ramifications of the jurisdiction, power, authority, and so on, of his deputy minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: The powers and responsibilities of the deputy minister of finance are substantially those of any other deputy minister. They are defined, of course, in the Department of Finance and Treasury Board Act, and other acts relating to the Department of Finance. But the Department of Finance and Treasury Board Act and the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act are perhaps the two most important. He is, by statute, secretary of the treasury board, of which I, as Minister of Finance, am chairman. In addition to his ordinary functions as deputy minister of finance, the deputy minister is a member of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada, and represents the minister on that board; he is a member of the board of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and a member of the Canadian farm loan board. He is a member of the board of directors of the Industrial Development bank. All of these are government organizations. I do not know that I can elaborate any further upon his duties and responsibilities which, as I say, are defined by the acts to which I have made reference.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister; but to put it in a nutshell, he is a government tycoon.

Mr. ABBOTT: And a good one.

Mr. POULIOT: Don't say that; don't go too far in praising him, because it may arouse my feelings.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is that a promise or a threat?

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to change the subject. Perhaps this is hardly an understandable subject to a minister of the crown, because it deals with such a small amount of money. But I wish to try to find out, if I can, the answer to a question which is disturbing a good many people in the rural parts of Canada. My question is in connection with the sale of livestock which goes through the ordinary channels of a livestock commission merchant operating in a stockyard at any point throughout the dominion.

In deductions from farmers' returns for their stock, a common usage or practice is followed, whereby the revenue stamps on the cheques issued to the farmers are charged up against the farmers receiving the cheques. I happen to have in my hand a copy of one of those, because I thought I had better be fortified with something of that kind before making this assertion in the house.

I was wondering if the minister could tell us whether there is any legal justification for anyone taking off a farmer's cheque the value of the stamp which goes on it. I know this is a small amount of money, but there is a principle involved. Small as it may be, a good many farmers through the years have felt concerned about it. This one farmer I have in mind has been agitated about it recently and has brought it to my attention again. I thought it was worthwhile to bring it before parliament because, if this is an improper practice, we should know about it and, if it is proper, an explanation ought to be made to the farmers concerned.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall bring the matter to the attention of my colleague the Minister of National Revenue. My understanding of the excise tax on a cheque is that it is payable by the drawer of the cheque. I imagine all hon. members who issue cheques have to put the stamps on, themselves. I cannot think by virtue of what law the issuer of a cheque would have the right to charge the payee the amount of the stamp tax.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am not singling out any particular livestock commission merchant, because I understand that it is being done by all of them. Perhaps the minister could take this matter up. The evidence is in his hands. I should like at some stage to be able to give an answer to the farmers who are greatly disturbed about it, because they think the last cent has been taken from them. If that is so, the condition ought to be remedied.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to have the matter looked into.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In support of what has been said this evening with regard to the report of the committee on prices, I think it is a sad reflection on parliament if we prorogue at this time without solving the most vital problem facing 95 per cent of the householders of this country.

The minister's answer leaves one thing certain, that if any solution is to be found for the present problem of living costs in Canada, it will be government by order in council. People in all walks of life are deeply interested in this matter of the cost of living. And, irrespective of whatever personal, private or selfish interest they may have, we must face the fact that inflation is a dangerous thing facing the Canadian people at this time. We cannot continue along the path of procrastination, without incurring the rightful and, I think the deserving wrath of the people of Canada as a whole.

In the opposition we can do little more than plead, object and protest. But I wish to assure the minister that it must be evident to him that the Canadian people are intensely dissatisfied and that they will vent their ire against those who are responsible. I cannot blame them, because they have been patient. They know the government knows how to control the cost of living, because they know the government has done so. They know the government could do so; and if it fails to do so, the people can come to one of two conclusions, either that the government is impotent and does not intend or cannot take action because of some weakness within itself, or that it supports the continuation of the injustices revealed in the report. I can assure the government that if it fails to act, the people will not.

Mr. POULIOT: I agree for the most part with what has been said in that regard. It seems that it should be easy for the minister to lighten the burden of people in the lower income brackets by providing greater exemptions. That would give a chance to those receiving small salaries to make ends meet. This type of people deserve special consideration. I have not taken much of the time of this committee, but I want to emphasize the necessity of looking after people with small salaries who are finding it so difficult to get along.

Mr. ADAMSON: Can the minister give an estimate of the decrease in the funded debt for the current fiscal year and the projected decrease in the funded debt for 1949? He budgeted for a tremendous surplus, and apparently is getting one much larger than he expected, and the one point in budgeting for a surplus is to pay off back debts. It is important that we should know the estimated retirement of the funded debt of the country this year and what the minister hopes to pay off next year.

Mr. ABBOTT: The relevant information asked for by the hon. member for York West with respect to last year appears in the white paper which was attached to the budget speech. I do not suppose he wants me to go into details, but perhaps I could read paragraph 70 on page 37 of the white paper, which reads:

> The decrease in the net debt for the year is estimated at $669,958,000. This, of course, is the amount already reported as the over-all estimated surplus for the fiscal year 1947-48.

[Mr. Castleden.]

In the current fiscal year we have estimated a surplus of $489 million and, if that is realized, the net debt of the dominion will be reduced by that amount. I do not know that I am in position to give my hon. friend any more particularized information than that at this time. That is the surplus, and I have indicated that that surplus will be used to reduce our debt. Any surplus that will be realized this year will be used for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMSON: The surplus last year in its entirety was in the neighbourhood of $1,000 million when it was all added up.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the cash surplus.

Mr. ADAMSON: And we reduced our funded debt by $669 million. This year apparently we budgeted for a greater cash surplus, or it would seem that way according to the first two months of the year.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may be so for the first of the year. To prophesy is always a little dangerous, but I would think our cash surplus available for debt reduction this year will be considerably less. Last year we had substantial repayments from the foreign exchange control board of advances previously made by the Minister of Finance to the board, and we shall not have items of that kind this year.

Mr. ADAMSON: The estimated reduction of the funded debt in the two years is about $1,200 million, which I think is the main point of the austerity program and the present high taxation. If we are paying these high taxes to get out of debt, that is something, but we had a cash surplus of $1,100 million last year, and apparently it is difficult to estimate what we shall have as a cash surplus this year. I should like to have the assurance of the minister that every available dollar under these very high schedules of taxation will be used for the retirement of the funded debt. I do not think there is anything more important than the retirement of funded debt when times are good. What worries me and what I think worries great sections of the country is that we are being taxed and taxed and that the taxation is not going toward the retirement of the mortgage on the plant, the mortgage on the house, the mortgage on our lives, which is the funded debt of the country.

In these times of buoyant revenue, one thing we should endeavour to do is to reduce the funded debt, so that if, as and when revenues decrease, as we expect they will, and taxation must, of course, decrease and income may decrease—if those things happen, then we should find ourselves partly out of the debt which was necessarily incurred during the war.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that, because he is voicing pretty much what was said in the white paper on employment and income which was issued in 1945. I am in complete accord with the view which he has expressed, that in times of buoyant income and prosperity, when we have a heavy debt, that is the time to reduce that debt. That is the thinking which was behind the budget presented this year. As to the assurance which he is asking for, I give it to him without any hesitation. Of course, as he knows, the government is required to make certain investments in housing in the way of loans under the National Housing Act, investments in the Canadian National Railways and the like. Except to the extent that the government is required to use a prospective surplus for this type of purpose, it will be used in the reduction of the funded debt. I gladly give that assurance.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am glad to hear the minister say that, because it seems to me that the one point in paying these excessive income taxes and these excessive corporation taxes is in order to pay off the debt which we incurred. I hope that when the budget is presented next year we shall not find some strange scheme of increased expenditures and that the taxes which the country is paying this year, particularly the people with low incomes, will be used to pay off the debt that is on the backs of the Canadian people. I certainly will look carefully at the next budget statement, and I know the country will hold this government to a strict accounting for that one tangible thing, a reduction of debt. I want to ask the minister certain questions about the transfer of funds. I understand that certain British concerns are coming here—

Mr. ABBOTT: I think my hon. friend was not in his seat a moment ago, was he?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave quite an explanation of that.

Mr. ADAMSON: I saw articles in the newspapers quite recently, showing the manner in which insurance companies doing an international business transferred funds from one country to another, and British companies transferred funds to be invested in plants here. What are the regulations regarding that?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a matter that is within the control and discretion of the British treasury. If a Canadian insurance company is willing to advance to a resident of the United Kingdom Canadian dollars against the security of sterling assets which that resident of the United Kingdom has in Great Britain, the transaction requires the consent of the British treasury, because the British resident is in effect undertaking at some future date to pay off the loan in Canadian dollars and is putting up as security sterling assets. If the British treasury is willing to agree to such a transaction we in Canada, broadly speaking, would welcome it.

The reason why it can be done is this. Insurance companies which have liabilities to meet in the United Kingdom in sterling are obliged to have sterling assets in order to meet them, and they may be quite ready to advance funds to a resident of the United Kingdom in Canada and take, as collateral, securities which are payable in sterling. That is the type of transaction, but it requires the consent of the British treasury, not the Canadian treasury, because Canadian dollars are not being put up by the Canadian exchange control. They are in effect being provided by the British exchange control. The Bank of England says in effect: We will allow you to assume an obligation payable in Canadian dollars and you pledge sterling securities to guarantee repayment. The consent of the British treasury is required because, if there were default, the British treasury would have to provide the Canadian dollars to meet the obligation.

Mr. ADAMSON: A Canadian company with a surplus of sterling, which many of them have, in view of the British exchange restrictions, will advance money to a British concern to erect a plant in Canada, which is a way of transferring a loan in sterling from the United Kingdom to Canada in Canadian dollars, and the debt is owed at all times to the insurance company. It is merely a means of transferring the debt from the sterling area to the Canadian area. The Canadian government has no objection to that, and in fact would welcome it. Is that it?

Mr. ABBOTT: The situation is exactly as I have explained it. A resident in Canada puts up Canadian dollars for a British resident. It does not matter where he gets them. He provides the resident of the United Kingdom with a credit in a Canadian bank, upon which he can draw to pay for that plant. Of course he does not do that for fun, but takes some type of security, usually an assignment or a pledge of securities or cash. If he can use the sterling in the United Kingdom, so much the better. If the British exchange control, the Bank of England, is willing to allow the British treasury to convert sterling in the United Kingdom into Canadian dollars we are delighted. Most of these transactions take the form, as my hon. friend indicated, of a long-term obligation. A Canadian insurance company puts up Canadian dollars and takes sterling securities as security, and the loan is payable over a long term of years. They can nearly always find a person who wishes to use sterling. That is how these transactions can be arranged with the consent of the British treasury, if they are satisfied that it is advantageous to both parties, and apparently there is some indication that they are prepared to do so.

Mr. ADAMSON: There is actually no transfer of cash in sterling, but merely the transferring of an obligation by using a credit of the Canadian concern. In other words, the Canadian concern is putting up funds for a British concern to erect a plant here.

Mr. ABBOTT: The Canadian concern is lending Canadian dollars to the British concern and taking sterling securities in satisfaction or as security.

Mr. LENNARD: I want to bring to the minister's attention one point which is causing confusion and, I think, should be cleared up. The minister is probably conversant with it. A few weeks ago the eight per cent sales tax was removed from processed foods, and the public naturally felt that they would get immediate relief in the form of a lower price for these foods. But apparently that has not taken place because, when the eight per cent sales tax was on the processed product, the ingredients were not taxed, but now the reverse is the case. Fruit pectin, spices and other ingredients all now pay the eight per cent sales tax, and the result is that no reduction had been made in the price of processed foods. There is only one way to relieve the consumer of processed foods, and that is to remove the sales tax immediately from that industry.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will look into the situation to which my hon. friend refers. I think he may be mistaken in some details. I know that question arose in connection with canned soups, and we straightened it out. Primarily the matter comes under the administration of the excise division of national revenue, but I will take a note of what my hon. friend has said and see what should be done.

Mr. ADAMSON: I do not think the soup situation has been straightened out yet, because I have a letter from a large soup company in my constituency, the purport of which letter is that the department send an auditor to investigate the plant of the soup company, of whose bona fides I can assure the minister, and that any substantial reduction to the ultimate consumer of soups is almost prohibited by the sales tax on the ingredients. I was amazed at the number of items that go into a can, tin plate and all the other things which add to the cost.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not my tax officials with me tonight; but if the sales tax on these things, through some quirk in the law, is having the effect my hon. friends describe, we shall see that the matter is straightened out. I shall look into it at once.

Mr. KNOWLES: If I might support the point raised by the last two speakers, I have a complaint in regard to the price of beef in tins for babies. Today an Ottawa housewife called my attention to the fact that on June 1 she was able to purchase these tins in an Ottawa store, the name of which she gave me, at the rate of two for twenty-nine cents. At the same store she is now paying twenty-one cents a tin. The same question arises. I am confused myself by the details to which the hon. member for Wentworth and the hon. member for York West referred.

Mr. ABBOTT: That does not sound like sales tax.

Mr. KNOWLES: It may be something else, or it may be that, but the net result is this sort of experience to the housewife who is trying to balance a budget, and it certainly calls for more action than just passing a report.

Item agreed to.

932. To authorize and to provide for payment of a portion of the costs incurred on or after May 15, 1948, by the government of British Columbia, by the municipal authorities in the Fraser valley and by the departments and agencies of the government of Canada in repairing, strengthening, constructing and reconstructing dikes in the Fraser valley and removing water and debris from the flooded lands in that valley in accordance with an agreement which the government of Canada is hereby authorized to enter into with the government of British Columbia for the purpose of establishing a division of such costs on the basis of the government of Canada bearing seventy-five per cent thereof (treasury board is hereby authorized to direct that there be credited to other appropriations of the government of Canada to which any of such costs have been originally charged any amount that would otherwise have been payable by either of the said governments in accordance with such agreement); and to authorize and provide for payment of seventy-five per cent of the total costs incurred by a board to be known as the "Fraser Valley Diking Board" (such board to be constituted pursuant to an agreement which the government of Canada is hereby authorized to enter into with the government of British Columbia and, when so constituted, to be a body corporate and to have, subject to the joint direction of the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia, the powers, duties and responsibilities provided in such agreement) in carrying on the work of repairing, strengthening, constructing and reconstructing dikes in the Fraser valley and removing water and debris from the flooded lands in that valley, $4,500,000.

933. To authorize and to provide for payment of an emergency unconditional grant to the government of British Columbia to assist that government in meeting costs incurred in providing emergency relief to the residents of the Fraser valley and in rehabilitating the areas damaged by the floods which were declared by order in council dated June 10, 1948 (P.C. 2644) to have created a national disaster, $5,000,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: These are the two votes which relate to the proposed appropriation to assist in the relief and rehabilitation of the devastation caused by the floods in the Fraser valley and the restoration of the dikes. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, who is the minister from British Columbia, has been in constant touch with the Premier of British Columbia in connection with this matter. Although the commission, composed of General Hoffmeister and the Hon. Mr. Hamber, nominally reported to me, may I say that the Minister of Fisheries assumed the major share of the responsibility in connection with working out these arrangements. Therefore I am going to ask him if he will give to the committee an explanation of the steps which were taken and of the votes which are before the house.

Hon. R. W. MAYHEW (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, I think it would be wise on this occasion to give the events as they occurred. Some people seem to think we moved rather slowly. If we go over just as hurriedly as possible the events, the committee will be able to follow it more closely. On May 24 and 25 flood damages became serious. The water level at Mission rose to 18·82 feet. On May 26 the banks of Agassiz broke and flooded about a thousand acres of land. The water level at Mission rose to 21·6 feet. On May 27 Dewdney dike breaks. On May 28 Canadian Pacific railway main line washed out. First army troops called out. Messrs. Cruickshank. Fulton and Matthews draw attention of House of Commons to gravity of situation. Mr. Claxton outlines steps being taken by Department of National Defence.

On May 29 last rail connection with east severed. Mr. E. R. Gillie, Red Cross chairman, is named as supreme commander of all flood disaster relief and aid. Three armed services set up a province-wide communications system with headquarters at Red Cross House, where all requests for aid will be cleared. Right Hon. C. D. Howe, visiting British Columbia, is reported to have stated that British Columbia floods had reached the proportions of a national disaster and that the federal government was prepared to give all assistance possible.

On May 30 Fraser river reaches highest point since 1894 at Hell's Gate, 107 feet.

On May 31 Premier Johnson proclaims a state of emergency with Colonel Snow, area commander of the Canadian army, being authorized to co-ordinate all flood control and relief activities. Flood relief fund started with $1,000,000 as objective. Prime Minister Mackenzie King states in the House of Commons that the responsibility for financial assistance to those suffering from floods and similar disasters of nature lies with provincial governments and local communities as well as with non-governmental organizations such as the Red Cross. Mr. King pointed out that any federal government financial assistance would only be made in the light of representations by the provincial governments concerned.

On June 1 Sumas prairie dike breaks at Connor. Mission gauge rises to 24·45 feet. Prime Minister Mackenzie King informs the House of Commons that his statement of the previous day referred only to the question of direct financial assistance. He pointed out that from the beginning of the floods the dominion government had been rendering assistance on a considerable scale in other ways, such as army, et cetera. Mr. Claxton advises the house further measures being taken by the Royal Canadian Navy, Canadian Army and Royal Canadian Air Force.

On June 3 Prime Minister King announces that the federal government is prepared to assist the province financially, not only in meeting the expenditures required for immediate relief but also in meeting the costs of rehabilitation and restoration. Mr. King also announces the formation of the Fraser river relief and rehabilitation commission to have general supervision over the entire situation. Mr. Claxton advises the house that army personnel actively participating in disaster work total 1,482.

On June 4 the Prime Minister announced that Major General B. M. Hoffmeister will be dominion government's representative on Fraser valley relief and rehabilitation commission. Finance Minister Abbott advises the house that prices board has been authorized to pay a subsidy of up to six cents a pound on butter flown into the flood areas from Calgary and Edmonton.

On June 6 Mr. St. Laurent, while visiting British Columbia, is reported to have stated that the relief for British Columbia flood victims would not be delayed by waiting to determine the extent of the flood damage. He said that the people were entitled to know that everything reasonable would be done and would be done expeditiously. Record June temperatures continue to melt snow and hasten run-off.

On June 9 Prime Minister Mackenzie King announces the basis on which the dominion government will share the costs of relief and rehabilitation in the Fraser valley. Mr. Claxton advises the house that in addition to naval and air force personnel engaged in the flood area there are also 1,225 active and 1,359 reserve army personnel, with another 500 members active force on the way from the prairie command.

On June 10 flood level at Mission reaches a new high of 24·62 feet.

On June 11 evacuation of Sumas prairie region nears completion.

On June 14 Mr. Sinclair requests details on government's program for rehabilitation.

On June 17 Premier Johnson announces that homes and farms in Fraser valley flood regions will be restored. Work to be carried out by four departments of the provincial government.

On June 18 first transcontinental train in eighteen days arrives in Vancouver from the east.

On June 25 Prime Minister Mackenzie King advises the House of Commons that the dominion government's financial contribution in respect of the Fraser valley disaster would consist of a grant to the province of $5,000,000 for relief and rehabilitation, and the sharing, to the extent of 75 per cent, in the cost of repairing, strengthening and reconstructing the dikes and removing water and debris from flooded land. The Prime Minister also announced the formation of the Fraser valley diking board to carry out this work. That brings us up to June 25, and I have here a statement that came in today with regard to the condition.

The information that we have received here today indicates that the flood waters are now dropping about six inches in each twenty-four hour period, and that by tomorrow morning the level of the water at the gauge at Mission will be down to the 18-foot mark, which has been taken as terminating the emergency period. As a consequence, the attorney general of the province last night, after consulting Mr. Dixon, who is the provincial government engineer on dikes, and Mr. Goodspeed, the dominion government engineer, who went to that area about the 19th of the month, who are now to be responsible for the operation on dikes, and the flood control committee, signed a declaration stating that the emergency is now ended and that the services of the active militia are no longer required in aid of the civilian power.

Following the declaration, the national defence authorities have arranged for the responsibility of the military authorities to be handed over entirely to the existing civilian authorities, or those which have been set up for the purpose of relief and rehabilitation on the one hand by the province, and for the work on dikes by the dominion and the provincial government jointly.

The military forces are to be withdrawn from the area this week, commencing tomorrow, and it is expected that the movement will be completed as soon as the transportation companies can provide the necessary facilities.

With the ending of the emergency, the flood control committee originally set up by the province held its final meeting, but will remain available for consultation. The active direction of the continuing work on relief and rehabilitation will be carried out by the provincial authorities, who have taken over the work by agreement, as explained in the announcements in the past ten days.

This work is under the immediate direction of Mr. W. L. Macken and Colonel D'Arcy Baldwin. These men are appointed by the provincial government to work on repairs and reconstruction of dikes, and the removing of water from the flooded lands is now being carried on under the immediate direction of Mr. Bruce Dixon and Mr. Goodspeed, pending the establishment of the proposed Fraser valley diking board. Work is at present going forward on the agreement under which the board will be established. The personnel has been agreed upon and, I understand, will be announced later this evening. This review makes it evident that the emergency is now over and that the arrangements which have been worked out between the provincial government and this government have taken effect quickly and smoothly. It is a matter for gratification that the province and the dominion have been able to reach agreement so quickly in this urgent matter.

I cannot let this opportunity pass, however, without drawing to the attention of the committee the vital role which the defence forces of this country have played in dealing with this emergency. All three services provided help quickly and effectively. At one time as many as 3,000 members of the active and reserve army forces were engaged in evacuation, relief, protection of dikes and flood control. From all sides and all sources, there has been a general appreciation of the excellent work which the services have done in this emergency.

That brings us up to the present time. So far as the work is going, apparently the emergency is pretty well over. This does not mean that the work is by any means over. It is really just beginning. The Prime Minister, on June 26, gave a statement to the house on the general agreement. At the same time the Premier of British Columbia made a statement in Victoria. I have received this wire from Premier Johnson, dated June 25:

Apart from press statement issued on dominion provincial arrangements on Fraser valley flood separate statement was given out today stating that the province was assuming full responsibility for flood damage elsewhere in the province outside of the Fraser valley area and that Honourable E. T. Kenney was making a tour of these areas with a view to reporting his recommendations to the government so that action can be taken in connection therewith.

Byron I. Johnson,
Premier of British Columbia.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that you will allow the release to the press, which has now appeared in the newspapers, to go on the record. It is lengthy, but it has already been reported and I should like to have it on Hansard, because it is complementary to the statement made by the Prime Minister in this house, and the two together form the agreement. With the permission of the committee, I would ask that it be put on the record without being read.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. MAYHEW: I will hand it to Hansard.

Hon. R. W. Mayhew
Minister of Fisheries, Ottawa.

Following is text of press statement issued by me today:

"Premier Byron Johnson today confirmed the conclusion of his negotiations with the federal authorities for their participation in sharing responsibilities in connection with the Fraser valley flood, which was proclaimed a national disaster. The arrangement, Premier Johnson stated, is as follows:

1. The dominion government will make an outright grant of $5,000,000 to the provincial government to cover the dominion's share of temporary emergency relief as well as the financial liability for measures of rehabilitation which the government of Canada agreed to accept as announced by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on June 9.

2. The provincial government will assume full responsibility for immediate relief and assisting in the general rehabilitation of homes, farm buildings and damage sustained by provincial and municipal property.

3. The dominion government will set up a Fraser valley diking authority for the purpose of repairing the dikes, removing water from inundated areas, removing debris and for the purpose of completely reconstructing the entire diking system so that wherever it is humanly possible a recurrence of the disastrous floods may be avoided. The cost of this work will be shared on the basis of 75 per cent by the dominion government and 25 per cent by the provincial government.

4. Cost of protecting the dikes and combating the flood will be shared on the following basis: 75 per cent by the dominion government and 25 per cent by the provincial government.

The fund being raised by the B.C. flood relief fund committee is rapidly approaching the $2,000,000 mark. This fund is under the complete control of the committee which has organized it. It is understood that they have asked the Canadian Red Cross Society to administer the proceeds of public subscriptions for them for the purpose of providing personal belongings lost in the flood, the replacement or repair of essential household furnishings, food and other necessities which may be urgently needed.

In connection with the diking work the federal government will appoint a top-ranking administrator to head the diking authority. Working with this authority will be Mr. Bruce Dixon, provincial diking commissioner who has been appointed by the provincial government as its representative. F. G. Goodspeed, chief engineer of the dominion public works department, will be the federal representative.

"Mr. Dixon," the premier stated, "has a thorough knowledge of the Fraser valley diking system and has carried out excellent work in connection with the combating of the flood during the present crisis. His knowledge in this respect should be of inestimable value to the Fraser valley diking authority."

The rehabilitation work will be undertaken by a provincial commission comprising two members, namely, Mr. W. L. Macken and Colonel D'Arcy Baldwin, both of whom have done outstanding work during the past five weeks in connection with fighting the flood in the Chilliwack area.

"The government, in appointing Mr. Macken and Colonel Baldwin to the provincial commission on Fraser valley rehabilitation, did so because of tehir administrative and organizing ability," the premier stated.

"Mr. Macken and Colonel Baldwin will supervise the work of the entire valley and will have authority to expend such sums as are required to assist owners of property in their efforts to rehabilitate their homes and farm buildings," the premier stated.

"It is the government's desire that every assistance shall be given, but it is expected that every initiative will be shown by the owners in recovering and restoring their damaged property," the premier continued.

The municipal authorities have been asked by Honourable R. C. MacDonald, minister of municipal affairs, to render the fullest co-operation and assistance to the commission in this work.

In commenting upon the final arrangements that have been made between the dominion and the province, Premier Johnson stated that he was most gratified with the wholehearted co-operation and sympathetic consideration he had received from the federal authorities in arriving at the arrangements already outlined.

He pointed out that the major task was that of reconstructing the dikes on a basis that would give the utmost sense of security to the people as far as human effort can go.

"No one can tell just what a river will do when it is on the rampage, but I can assure the citizens of British Columbia that, having discussed this work with the federal authorities, it is their clear understanding, even as it is mine, that the reconstruction work will be of such a character that the people's confidence in the protection of their property will be maintained and a sense of security established beyond that which they have enjoyed before," the premier asserted.

"I would also like to take this opportunity of expressing the very deep gratitude of the government for the splendid volunteer service rendered by our provincial representative, the Honourable Eric W. Hamber, C.M.G., who worked so harmoniously and untiringly with Major General B. M. Hoffmeister, C.B., C.B.E., D.S.O., E.D., the dominion representative on the Fraser river relief and rehabilitation commission, which was established jointly by the dominion and provincial authorities in the early stages of the flood so that they could guide the two governments in taking such measures as were deemed necessary to meet the changing conditions of the time and to set up the necessary organization to undertake the work which was bound to follow the recession of the water. The work of Major General Hoffmeister and the Honourable Eric Hamber has come to a close and I think that I would be failing in my duty if I did not express on behalf of the government and people of British Columbia our warmest thanks for their endeavours," the premier stated.

Premier Johnson likewise expressed his sincere appreciation to Prime Minister Mackenzie King and the federal government for the splendid spirit of co-operation and sympathetic understanding that has actuated the federal authorities in all their negotiations with the province in reaching a basis upon which to share financial responsibility in the costly undertakings imposed by the Fraser river calamity.

"In particular, I would like to mention the names of the Hon. R. W. Mayhew, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, the Hon. Douglas Abbott and the Hon. Brooke Claxton, all of whom were ever willing to be of assistance and to relieve us of our great anxieties. My thanks go out alike to all those federal members who have been of assistance in this regard."

"Further I think the time has come, now that the waters are gradually receding, to express my heartfelt thanks to all of those persons who worked along the dikes and in organizing evacuation, emergency shelter, etc. Very many names and organizations come to my mind but it would be unfair to those who worked silently and courageously without thought of public recognition if I singled out any particular one. It was a great experience for me to witness the wonderful spirit of the people, the courage in the face of calamity and their indomitable will to overcome the frightful disaster which wreaked so much damage and caused so much distress," the premier continued.

"I wish also to express the thanks of the citizens and the government for the very splendid work carried out by the Canadian Red Cross Society, the B.C. flood relief committee and the personnel of the three armed services," the premier concluded.

Byron Johnson.

A good deal of work had to be done, and these estimates are before the committee. No one can say they are accurate. In connection with them, a certain amount of common sense had to be exercised, and certainly no one was trying merely to get by with the least amount of money possible. The Canadian people demonstrated clearly, in their donations to the relief fund, which is now some $2,000,000, that they want a fairly reasonable agreement between the two governments. However I wish to make it clear that some of our own people had seen this area and realized that there had been a national disaster.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) visited the area himself and with him was the deputy minister of public works, Mr. Murphy. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) also visited the Fraser valley area, and so did the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg), and latterly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). All these gentlemen visited the area, and others who did so were the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) and myself. We made four separate trips over that area.

On one occasion I flew in a small plane, and we were able to fly at tree-top level so that we got a good view of the situation. I had never thought I would be guilty of so many stunts in the air as I performed on that occasion, but I did get a good view of what was happening and I can assure the committee that we were all agreed that it was a national disaster of the first order.

Perhaps another statement I should make here is with reference to a telegram which was received by the Minister of Finance from General Hoffmeister. It is the final telegram in this series.

Mr. FULTON: What is the date?

Mr. MAYHEW: It is dated the 25th of June and reads:

The statement made in the House of Commons today concerning the Fraser valley flood is very satisfactory and agrees in detail with the understanding here. It is the view of the commission that the statement finalizes the work of the commission particularly in view of the provincial government having already assumed full responsibility for rehabilitation of public and private property. In view of the foregoing it is therefore respectfully recommended that the commission be dissolved forthwith; however if desirable to be available in an advisory capacity. There will not be any expenses submitted in connection with the administration of or in any other respect of the commission. The utmost co-operation has been extended by the provincial government representatives of the dominion government B.C. area headquarters (army), the R.C.A.F. and members of the flood control organizations all of which is gratefully acknowledged. E. W. Hamber concurs with all of the foregoing.

I think that concludes those statements. The first item in the supplementary estimates is 932, for $4,500,000. That item is the amount which we believe can be spent this year before March 31; that is the fiscal year of this government. It does not indicate that this is the total cost or our total participation in the diking to be done in that area.

The other item is 933, for $5,000,000. I will deal with it in only a few words. We had two choices. We had the choice of setting up several committees, all doing some part of the work within the area and working jointly with a similar number from the province. In the opinion of the committee and in the opinion of the subcommittee of the cabinet that was dealing with this matter, it would be much better if we could arrive at a lump sum and leave the entire obligation and opportunity of doing this job to the provincial government. It was difficult to set up a committee without losing time in the doing of it and without involving a great deal of expense. So far as the dominion government were concerned, we would have had to send people out from Ottawa. We would have had to send out representatives from the treasury board, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Public Works and nearly every department of the government would have had to be represented in this. By doing it in this way, we were able to get action much quicker than would otherwies have been possible; and I am sure that it is a much tidier job all the way through than it would have been if we had tried to be in on every piece of work that was to be done. I think that probably explains the matter about as fully as I can at the present time.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I listened with a great deal of interest to the British Columbia minister's explanation of the flood situation, past and present, in that province, 99 per cent of the effects of which flood happen to be in my riding. I appreciate his explanation. I only want to say to the government that possibly if some of the statements he has made tonight had been made two or three weeks ago, you would not have the unfortunate feeling you have in all parts of Canada, particularly in British Columbia, and especially in the Fraser Valley riding which I have the honour to represent. In the dates the minister quoted, he did not mention that of May 28, about four o'clock in the afternoon when the member for Fraser Valley in this house said the flood situation was no longer a Fraser valley matter. I am sorry he did not mention that. I think he, as the minister from British Columbia, might have done so. About four o'clock on May 28, last, I said it was no longer a Fraser valley matter, but was a national matter. At that time I said that within twenty-four hours the trans-Canada railways would be out of action. I erred in that. Within ten hours they were out of action.

The Canadian National Railways, which the people of Canada, the taxpayers, own, is still out of action and will be out of action for some time to come. I am sorry the minister neglected to mention that fact. This flood situation has become such a national affair that even Pravda mentions it. We have heard a great deal of blame placed on the communists. I am surprised that even these floods were not blamed on them. I cannot read this in Russian, but I shall read a translation of what Pravda said. The minister, in his statement, apparently overlooked this. This is a news item from Pravda:

> Canadian newspaper report that as a result of hot weather which caused intensive melting of snow in the mountains of British Columbia (Canada) over a period of two weeks, large floods have resulted. The rivers overflowed their shores and flooded many communities.

An hon. MEMBER: Are you reading in Russian?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: If I could read it in Russian, possibly the same people from Ontario could not even understand it in that language, when it concerned all Canada. To continue:

> Fifty thousand acres of farm land were covered and over 9,000 population lost their homes. The railway lines between British Columbia and the rest of Canada were washed away, as well as the rail connections with the United States. The flood is continuing.

And the note I have says:

> Date not known exactly, but two weeks after flood had reached a high point.

The reason I am mentioning this to you and through you, Mr. Chairman, to the committee, is that I said on May 28 that this was not a Fraser valley matter but was a national matter, as was recognized ten days later by the Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada when he stated that it was a national matter.

What would have happened if we had had an international incident during the interval? According to the press of yesterday, that great leader—a Conservative, if you like, but the greatest leader the British empire ever knew—Winston Churchill, said that nobody knew what might happen in the next two weeks. I want to ask the minister and through him, the government, what would have happened if that incident had happened during the past two or three weeks when the Pacific coast, the direct route to Russia, was cut off from the rest of Canada? I hope I am not a warmonger, but I believe in facing realities; and I resent the fact that the minister from British Columbia overlooked what the member for Fraser Valley said on May 28, but quoted everybody else.

I want to go home like everyone. I do not believe in recriminations. What has happened, has happened. I firmly believe that this government has every intention of doing the right thing for the people of the Fraser valley and the people of British Columbia in all the flooded districts. I will tell you the reason why I believe they have that intention. It is that I believe the people of Canada as a whole would demand that any government do the right thing for their fellow citizens, who are victims of circumstances beyond their control.

The only thing is that I wish this cabinet, this government or the members of parliament had the time to observe some of the pictures I have. I should like to show the minister who introduced this estimate the house that I lived in, and I am not appealing for sympathy personally. I did not own the house. Though the farm land happens to be flooded, my house and barn are above high water. I should like to show the minister a picture of the house in which I spent the happiest years of my life. I spent the first three years of my married life in a house now flooded to the eaves. Yet the minister tells me that this token payment is representative of what the people of Canada want to do. The deputy minister tells me the record of assistance to the distressed countries of Europe; and I have no condemnation of that; I believe the people of my riding and I believe the people in my province agree with that. Speaking from memory, I believe we gave $124 million to the distressed people of Europe. In one vote alone we gave $5,000,000. Yet I am told that this is the best we can do to rehabilitate some 2,500 farms that are flooded out right up to the eaves, when many of the buildings have floated away, as well as every bit of the people's furniture.

This represents the lifelong savings of people, many of whom are sixty-five or seventy years of age. These people are flooded out, ruined. But, in the great generosity of the people of Canada we can find for them $5,000,000, less, of course, what we have advanced to the army, as has been brought out by the hon. member for Vancouver South! Why, in one vote alone —and I do not begrudge it at all—in one vote alone for the distressed peoples in Europe we can vote $5,000,000. But does anyone tell me that the people of Canada in their generosity can vote only $5,000,000 to rehabilitate some 2,500 homes, homes which are completely ruined, completely lost, homes where there will be no crops for one, two or three years, homes where the life savings will be gone? That the generosity of the people of Canada goes only to the extent of $5,000,000 does not make any sense to me; and I do not think it makes any sense to the people of Canada either.

In a country which boasted of the magnificent work accomplished, the work done through the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, a country which could find $10,000,000 a day to save ourselves in Europe, a country which can boast of that fact—perhaps I should not say "boast", but is certainly proud of it —can we find only $5,000,000 to rehabilitate 2,500 homes, many of which are under ten feet of water today, their entire life savings gone, not a particle of crop for one, two or three years, not a bit of feed for their cattle for at least a year or two? Do you tell me we can find only $5,000,000 today, and that out of that there must be deducted amounts paid to the army? I want to pay my compliments—

Mr. MAYHEW: That is not a correct statement. We want at least to be accurate. We are not deducting the expenses of the army when they were in there doing relief work. The pay and allowances of the men in the armed forces are paid out of the army vote. They are not charged up to this fund. Any extra expenses will be, but not those charges.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have not time to check it, so I shall take the correction of the minister from British Columbia. Unfortunately, however, he is not yet in charge of the government. The Prime Minister said in the house—and I leave it to my hon. member to check it in Hansard; I have not the exact page, but I believe it was June 25—"except pay and allowances".

Mr. FULTON: It is page 5833.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am glad pay and allowances are not included, because I wish to tell the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that I had the privilege of escorting the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it was not on one of these conducted tours. I conducted him personally around where the houses were floating and where only small portions of telegraph poles were showing. There were enough brass hats around there to sink a ship, and if we had to pay them, God help us. I know what I am talking about. I did not take any conducted tour around there. I went around in a small boat, in row boats and "ducks". I know what I am talking about, irrespective of what anyone may say.

Maybe I am bitter; I know I am bitter. I saw there people I have known all my lifetime. My father sold them their farms forty years ago. They were the people who pioneered, and who by their hard work brought up their families—families who enlisted—did it voluntarily, and fought for their country. Many of them did not come back. They built that country. And now to see these pioneers lose their all, with not one word being mentioned by this government to date, except the responsibility they have to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is not easy to take. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not assume its fair responsibilities. Not one acre of that land would be under water today if the president of the Canadian Pacific and his fellow directors had done the decent and the honest thing as Canadian citizens, and had not deliberately lied as they did in the letter referred to by the Minister of Transport.

Of course I am bitter. I would like the minister and some of his colleagues to look at some of these pictures. They would see barns floating down the river, out to the Pacific, I suppose, on their way to my good friend's own riding.

Mr. MAYHEW: I was there.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Oh, the minister may have been there; but I lived there all my life. I did not just tour over it. I went through it in a row boat, in a small boat, and I know what I am talking about. I do not want any corrections from him in that matter.

I know the government will do the right thing, at least I believe it will. I honestly believe it will, because I believe that the present Prime Minister and his successor, whoever he may be, are good men. They will be good Canadian citizens and want to do the right thing for their fellow Canadians, irrespective of party. I believe that no matter what party he belongs to, the leader of that party wants to do the right thing for his fellow citizens.

But I do believe this, that no man has any justification for standing up in front of me and telling me that we can find $10,000,000 a day for destruction in wartime, and then try to justify an estimate of only $5,000,000 for the rehabilitation of this area. I do not believe that is the wish of the Canadian people. I do not believe it is the desire of the Canadian people or of the Canadian government. I do not believe it is their intention.

Unfortunately, however, there are statements by people who have not the human touch, who have not had first-hand information—I will not go so far as to say they have not wanted to know—and who have not first-hand knowledge. They cannot tell me that this is a proper amount. I am appealing to the government and, through the government to parliament here in Ottawa, to say to the government that that is not sufficient for the rehabilitation of 2,500 of their fellow citizens, pioneers of this country who did not inherit silver spoons, who did not make their profits in wartime companies. All they have today—the homes they built, and everything they owned—was gained by the sweat of their brows and by their hard work. Surely they are entitled to every consideration.

I believe the people of Canada would endorse any move the government would make to rectify this situation.

Mr. GREEN: I do trust that the government will pay heed to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. As he has said, the Fraser valley has been his home throughout the whole of his lifetime. He knows the conditions there better than anyone in Ottawa, and he is thoroughly qualified to place the facts before the house. I, for one, would not think of questioning his statement. So I do hope that the government will pay heed to his representations.

One thing that worries me greatly about the proposed settlement is that it is a settlement for cash, before anyone knows the extent of the damage. The Prime Minister announced the other day that the dominion government would pay $5,000,000, and that that constituted the full settlement of its liability for rehabilitation and emergency relief.

As the hon. member for Fraser Valley has said, a good deal of the land is still under water. It is impossible to determine at this time what the total damage will be. I suggest that the dominion should not make a final settlement now, but that there should be some provision for further assistance, if it is found that the cost of rehabilitation and of emergency relief exceeds $10,000,000. I presume the idea was that the dominion would pay half and the province half, I hope that the dominion will not insist on this $5,000,000 being a final settlement if it is found that the damage exceeds twice that figure.

There is a further payment to be made in connection with the repairing of dikes. We should have some assurance from the government that when they are built again they will be modern dikes, no matter what the cost. I do not know whether this estimate of $4,500,000 will provide for three-quarters of the cost of modern dikes.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is only what we think it may be possible to spend up to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. GREEN: We should have the assurance that it will be three-quarters of the cost of modern dikes, no matter what that cost may be.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the agreement; that is the intention.

Mr. GREEN: Is it a term of the agreement that these dikes will be of the modern type mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, wide enough at the top to allow for a line of trucks in either direction? Can either of the ministers tell me whether or not that is the agreement?

Mr. ABBOTT: The dike authority which is to be set up will have to advise the respective governments as to what type of dike would be best. Broadly speaking, it should be a modern type, adequate to perform the functions which it is supposed to perform, and if possible to make sure that there will be no recurrence of the disaster which occurred this year. It would be throwing money away if that were not done.

Mr. GREEN: I am glad that is so.

Mr. POULIOT: Can the hon. member tell me the assessed value of the farms that have been flooded?

Mr. GREEN: I am afraid I cannot do that. The hon. member for Fraser Valley has set the number at 2,500. I doubt if he would know the assessed value of those farms, because many municipalities are involved. The actual damage caused by the flood cannot be determined as yet, because the flood is still there. Much of the land is still under water, and that is why I cannot understand the dominion making a final settlement at this time. I think it was premature to set a final figure.

I should like to express a word of appreciation for the way in which the people of the other provinces came to the help of the sufferers in the Fraser valley area. Our province is a long way from eastern Canada; we face the Pacific rather than the Atlantic, and I suppose we sometimes feel that we have been forgotten and are not getting a fair deal. It is easy for us to develop antagonism toward the other parts of Canada. I cannot remember anything in my lifetime that has done more to drive away that feeling than the manner in which the cities and towns and villages in other parts of Canada voluntarily offered help to their fellow citizens in the Fraser valley.

Right from the start, almost before the government in Ottawa realized that this was a national emergency—I am not blaming anyone at the moment—funds were being donated in Montreal and Toronto to help the sufferers, under a lead given by the mayors of those two cities. Similar help has been received from other centres and organizations in eastern Canada and we are all most grateful. It makes us all just that much more proud to be Canadians. I am sure I speak for all the members from British Columbia when I express that word of appreciation to our fellow Canadians in the other eight provinces.

One other fine feature was the spirit shown by these people who had to get out of their homes, leave their furniture behind and, in some cases, lose their stock. They accepted all these hardships with remarkable spirit; very much the spirit that the hon. member for Fraser Valley has shown here, very much the spirit that he showed during the first world war when he had such a wonderful record. The people of his valley have certainly shown themselves to be a grand lot.

I was proud, too, of the help given by my city of Vancouver, by the city of New Westminster and by the adjoining areas. Businessmen, workers in factories and school boys all went out night after night to work on the dikes. They received no pay; it was entirely a voluntary effort and they did a grand job. Many United States citizens voluntarily crossed the line from the neighbouring state of Washington to lend a hand, which was a very fine action. These kindly, helpful acts were the bright spots in this terrible catastrophe, the worst in the history of the province.

Mr. POULIOT: This session should prorogue in glory after the fine speech of my fine friend.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to support everything said by the hon. member for Vancouver South and the tributes he has paid. I also support his remarks as to the undesirability of the dominion making a final settlement of $5,000,000 for relief and rehabilitation. It is estimated that the damage in the Fraser valley alone will amount to $30,000,000, and that does not take into account the damage in other portions of the province. That being the case, I think it is premature for the federal government to say this represents a final settlement with respect to their contribution toward compensation for damages. I consider it desirable that they make a cash contribution now, but I think they should leave the door open for the payment of an increased sum when the amount of actual damage is finally assessed.

I find it difficult to understand why the premier of the province accepted that small payment. We should approach this whole matter in a spirit of co-operation. The hon. member for Vancouver South has mentioned how much we appreciate the co-operation of citizens all over Canada, but I would point out that, according to the figures tabled during this session, it is shown that, under the financial agreement between the dominion and the province of British Columbia, the dominion takes in tax revenue from that province $144,000,000 and returns just over $20,000,000. This means that the tax resources of the provinces are extremely limited.

Mr. ABBOTT: That ridiculous argument always irritates me beyond question. Dominion taxes would have been no lower in British Columbia if we were not paying British Columbia $20,000,000.

Mr. FULTON: What the minister has said has not disproved my argument, because those tax fields are now occupied exclusively by the federal government. This means that the tax resources of the province are that much more limited, that there is that much less in the way of free sources of revenue from which to meet the tremendous burden imposed by the flood disaster. As I say, it is estimated that the damage is $30,000,000, of which the province will evidently have to find $25,000,000, while the dominion finds only $5,000,000. I do not think one is extreme when he says that is ungenerous treatment. I am surprised that the premier of the province would have concluded this agreement and accepted this figure of $5,000,000 as a final payment.

There are one or two other matters which I think should be mentioned. While it is a source of satisfaction to find that money is being provided for the repairing of the dikes in the Fraser valley, it is a source of concern to find that as yet no effort is made to prevent floods at the source. I shall not go into that because we discussed it previously, but if we are to prevent floods in the future it is not enough merely to provide dikes in the Fraser river valley down in the broad flat lands, but care must be taken to prevent a rapid run-off at the head waters.

Finally I think we are entitled to expect to find some item for compensation of the provincial government for the expenses which it incurs in carrying out this program of rehabilitation and the assessment and repairing of damaged lands. The Minister of Fisheries has made it quite clear that the dominion government has handed over the responsibility for the administration to the province, and I think that is proper, because they are close to the spot; they know the needs and they can administer relief more efficiently. But obviously it will be an expensive thing to administer. The province will have to send their own officials and probably will have to employ more experts and so on. While it is proper to leave the detailed administration to the province, the expenses incurred in that administration should be taken into consideration in fixing the amount which the federal government will grant to the province over and above the $5,000,000 as straight compensation, which, as I have said, I do not consider adequate. While some if not most of the things I have said may have been critical, I, like other members, appreciate to the full the generous gestures made by private citizens, the work of the armed forces, and so on, but I do think the rest of the citizens of Canada and the federal government should have all the facts placed before them, so they they may be able to judge whether or not some further compensation should be paid to the province, and whether or not the door should be held open, instead of being closed on this question of the provision of a further cash payment when the amount of damages is finally assessed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to add one word. Perhaps an Ontario man should not step into this, but one or two things can be suggested. First, this is a national emergency. That has been shown by the action of the government. Second, for the moment an agreement has been arrived at, in which the province of British Columbia, in the view of some British Columbia members seems to have made an improvident agreement. But when we talk about things being final, I do not think that in a democracy things are ever final, because public opinion can always assert itself and the public will want the right thing done in the end, once the damages are assessed. The damages may be more, or they may be less. But this is a step forward. The door is not banged and barred and bolted, and I suggest that we might take what has been done as so much gained.

Mr. YOUNG: I have listened with great respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley, who has made himself the voice of his countrymen in that area. While it is pardonable for the hon. member for Fraser Valley to be emotional, since he is deeply affected personally and since he is one of the people, I feel that we, the remaining members of the house and I myself as one coming from the province which is affected, should be strictly practical about what is to be done with the sum allotted by the government. I think we should make certain that what is done with it will result in something of permanent value to the people of the Fraser valley.

It is extremely difficult to assess in dollars and cents what the final results of the flood will be, but it is not difficult to assess the steps that can now be taken with regard to the diking and harnessing of the Fraser river. As I said in an earlier debate, the condition of the Fraser river is and has been changing for some fifty years. That river has reached geological maturity. Its course, if left unregulated, will change and will result in damage to the lands now cultivated on its banks. There is only one possible solution. That solution lies in the report of engineers who are capable of assessing the conditions in that area and of deciding what type of dikes shall be built and how much money should be spent. After that, while we cannot talk in terms of a Canadian T.V.A., nevertheless it will probably be found that if money is wisely spent in that area power from the Fraser can be harnessed, lands irrigated, and secondary industries will flourish at the mouth of the Fraser, and the people of the Fraser river valley will be properly protected. But that will require the employment of sums far in excess of the $10,000,000 proposed. I would ask the minister to take into consideration plans for the future, rather than to regard this as a temporary emergency.

Our geologists and our departments are aware that the flood of 1894 was as great as the flood which has just taken place. There are a great many years between 1894 and 1948; but, since none of us can say what nature will do in any particular year, the flood of this year could be repeated ten years later. It is obvious that it is entirely up to man, with the modern machinery and modern methods at his disposal, to harness these things and to make this valley safe and to turn the present disadvantages into advantages for industry.

I, too, went over the flooded area in an aeroplane. My riding had the honour of entertaining six cabinet ministers at one time who flew over that area, and it was an awe-inspiring sight to see that valley from the air in its flooded condition. But knowledge of the actual situation cannot be gained in that way. The people who live in that area and the people of the province feel that they have been let down, because there has been no planning on the part of government which would have rendered the flood at least less damaging. If there had been large planning much might have been saved that was lost. I think there is a lesson to be found in the Fraser river valley flood if the government and the departments care to learn it, and that is that we must be practical, we must plan, and not just say: We are going to spend $10,000,000, and that relieves us of further responsibility. The government must not wash its hands of the situation once that $10,000,000 has been spent. I urge that the government and the minister make a definite statement that they accept responsibility with regard to the unassessed damages of this flood.

Mr. REID: I was one of the members representing one of the other districts that suffered during the disaster. Perhaps the committee will bear with me while I occupy a few minutes of its time. May I, first of all, join with the hon. member for Vancouver South in his remarks where he gave credit to the wonderful help and assistance rendered by all persons in all walks of life. It is amazing how the Canadian people rise to the occasion when called upon to do so. When the call went forth to men and women for help to man the canteens there was a ready response from one end of the country to the other. I want to take a minute to add my word of praise for the wonderful help and assistance given. Then, of course, there is the great fund of money which is being collected from all over. Other countries as well have contributed.

However I want to pass from that and say a word or two regarding the flood itself. Many statements have been made regarding what it will cost. I am one of those who believe that no one can estimate or tell just what the actual damage will be until the water is actually off the land. It is natural that the hon. member for Fraser Valley should be wondering whether the $5,000,000 allotted is sufficient to take care of rehabilitation. My own view is that it is not. On the other hand, I have a statement made by the government, and I do not think they will deny it, that they are willing to pay 75 per cent of the cost of diking, and that they have also agreed with the province to pay for complete rehabilitation. While it is easy for some of us, including myself, to rise in our places and advocate this or that, yet one cannot overlook the fact that the provincial government whose responsibility it is, and who have assumed the job of rehabilitation—I do not think there is any argument on that—did meet all the reeves of the affected areas, seven in number, including a number of councillors. They met at a place called Murrayville in the constituency of New Westminster. Assurance was given by the provincial minister of municipalities, the Hon. R. C. MacDonald, who is in charge. The following appeared in the British Columbian Weekly of June 21:

Mr. MacDonald told the gathering that the provincial government was prepared for the complete rehabilitation of the flood victims and he was in complete charge. He felt that administration of the assistance could be handled more efficiently through the local flood committees which have been established in each area.

In many cases the farmers themselves will be able to do much of the repair work on their homes and barns and for this the provincial government will pay them.

There you have a meeting of all concerned right on the ground. The hon. member for Fraser Valley may have information that I have not, but the reeves of my own district have not complained about the agreement already entered into by the provincial and dominion governments. They met on the job with the provincial minister there, who has given the assurance that full rehabilitation will be taken care of under the guidance and jurisdiction of the provincial authorities.

With regard to the $4,500,000 for dikes, I doubt whether the provincial grant added to the $4,500,000 for dikes will mean that they will be able to spend more than that until March of next year.

May I say this to the committee. I believe that some good will ultimately come out of the flooded areas, because for the first time the attention of the dominion government has been drawn to the conditions on the Fraser river, and to the lands through which the Fraser river flows. It is true that we have been complaining about the lack of dikes, but diking out there is not a simple matter. I am going to draw to the attention of the committee just one little problem that will arise in regard to diking. Diking on the river is just one aspect of the diking of the Fraser valley. In my riding I have groups of farmers who have diked against the sea, and who are being charged up to $7.50 an acre, and will be for the next fifty years. They come to me and say, "If the dominion and the provincial governments are to build dikes to protect the lands from the waters of the Fraser they had better dike ours against the ravages of the sea." I mention that to show the committee just one of the many problems that will arise. I ask the hon. member for Vancouver South how he would settle that.

Mr. GREEN: You had better settle it yourself.

Mr. REID: I have to give them an answer. I shall be inclined to support them in their view of making representations. That is just an example of what is apt to happen when we start to rehabilitate.

I have every sympathy for the groups flooded out and the residents who will have to be rehabilitated. It will be a stupendous task. It is a task that will require the services of men with sympathy and a little firmness in deciding the cases that will come before them.

In my own district 4,000 acres were under water. It is true that a greater part of the constituency of New Westminster is protected by diking. The dikes helped. Like the dikes in the Fraser Valley riding, these dikes were all built by the farmers themselves. They are apt to say, Now, we want some further protection from the government because if they are going to do 140 miles of diking on the Fraser river, build modern dikes so that you can drive two trucks across it, we had better have the same kind of protection for our land. I thought it my duty to mention that to the committee.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley knows the conditions there perhaps better than anyone else. I do not know whether he has the double trouble of diking from the sea, but I know I have it in my own riding. I thought I should rise at this time, first of all to express my appreciation of the great help that has been given by thousands of volunteer workers. It is true there was a little dispute here and there between the military personnel and the civil population. That was only to be expected, because the civil population thought that many of the army men should take off their army boots and go down in gum-boots and overalls, wade through the water, and start packing sandbags. Apart from that, things were handled remarkably well.

What the dikes will cost, no one can say. What rehabilitation and relief will cost no one can estimate at the present time. Someone has said $30,000,000. My own belief is that, until the water has all subsided and conditions improve, it will be impossible to tell exactly what damage has been done. Some will be greatly damaged; many will be wiped out; others may well be slightly benefited, because much of the land received a coating of silt. Provided that the land does not receive too heavy a coat of silt, it may do the land considerable good in places. I think the hon. member for Fraser Valley would agree with that statement. Those who had strawberries or raspberries and find them buried under the silt will find that they are gone, and they will not have another crop until they replant and wait for two or three years.

But these are all matters which will be gone into by the local committees. I am pleased indeed to note that the provincial government has set these committees in motion, has called all the reeves and councillors together and discussed with them right on the ground where the damage can be seen. They are in the best position to know exactly what should be done. Our position should be to pay them enough money and to leave it to the provincial and municipal authorities to carry out their task. I say that without fear of successful contradiction.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, I think it is established that what happened in the Fraser valley is a national disaster, and that the hon. member for Fraser Valley, in whose district it took place, should feel strongly about it is not to be wondered at. In fact, it would be strange if he did not. But the position in which I find myself is this. In the agreement that has been made there has been not only the dominion government but the provincial government, and I understand that the provincial premier was here. I do not know whether he met or asked to see other members of parliament. Certainly he did not ask to see me. If he is satisfied with the arrangement made with the government it would be presumptuous of me to say that the agreement was not a good one.

But what I am glad to find out tonight is that this amount is not a hard and fast one beyond which the government will not go. If I correctly understood the remarks of those who spoke before me, this is at least the amount that can be properly spent this year in rehabilitation.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. That relates to the diking work; that is the $4,500,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: The other, the rehabilitation, as has been so well pointed out by other hon. members who have spoken, cannot in my opinion be ascertained until the water has receded and the proper investigations have been made and the damage estimated. That will be the proper time to set the figure. As has been pointed out, some people will be put out of production for perhaps a couple of years. Others may not be affected very much.

Perhaps the people in other parts of Canada do not appreciate how important the Fraser valley is to British Columbia. It is important if for no other reason than the fact that it supplies nearly all the fluid milk for a population of over 300,000 in greater Vancouver.

As I said before, I am in a difficult position because I cannot start to criticize the British Columbia government for not safeguarding the interests of the people of the district, since I do not know all the facts.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more words to say, and I admit frankly that possibly I am, not unnecessarily, but excessively bitter. I represent at least ninety-five per cent of the people in the flooded area. During the time the flood was at its height, on one occasion I got in contact with my home by telephone, and my sister informed me that there was an urgent long distance call for me in Vancouver. When the second call came I took it, and the object of the call was for me to attend a by-election meeting in Vancouver. This was at seven o'clock at night. The one reason my telephone has not been taken out is that I have not lost the support of the hon. member for Mackenzie for the language I used.

Five minutes before, I heard a call for 1,000 volunteers for a certain area which I will not name, and then I am asked to leave when I am doing my duty, where the dike is threatened, in order to attend a political by-election. I was not there. If my language could have been heard there it would have flooded any dike.

I was the first one who said—I made the statement before I left Ottawa to return to the district—that no one could estimate the damage. I cannot on my own farm, nor can any member in the Fraser valley, estimate the damage to farm property that is anywhere from four feet to fifteen feet under water. Every newspaper in British Columbia, every radio station called me, and newspapers since I came back to Ottawa got in contact with me asking for my opinion on the damage. Government officials have asked me the same thing, and I replied that no one could estimate the extent of the damage caused by the flood.

As to the question of full rehabilitation, I wish to quote from a certain editorial and then I am through. I believe this editorial will substantiate what other members have said. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this government is sincere in its desire to help, and so is parliament. I know the people of Canada are sincere in wishing to give all the assistance they can. I do not believe that the government, the department or the people of Canada at this stage can estimate the extent of what is required to take care of the damage.

I am firmly of the opinion, however, that what is needed is something considerable. If I suggested a blank cheque I would be going too far, perhaps, but almost a blank cheque such as we had in wartime is necessary. This parliament and the people of Canada should in my opinion give this government the necessary means to re-establish their fellow citizens in the Fraser valley or in any other part of Canada to meet a national disaster such as this.

I should like to quote a front-page editorial from the largest weekly newspaper in the affected district, the Chilliwack Progress. This editorial will give hon. members of this committee a good idea of the situation. I quote:

They're Moving Back

Henry Jensen is tall, blonde, well built and Danish. He likes to wear a red baseball cap. He happens to be a progressive farmer and an aggressive, independent and energetic citizen.

He was forced from his Arnold road farm by the flood waters from the Cannor breakthrough. Friday, Henry Jensen and his friends got his cattle together; piled his possessions on a truck and set off down the Lickman road to home.

The Jensens were luckier than a good many people. He lost his crops but the flood didn't reach the main floor of his home. He's not discouraged and neither is his Vancouver bred wife.

For the last two weeks, he's been hearing government warnings, regulations, vague promises and announcements of plans to help him and others like him. He was anxious, like hundreds of others, to get back. He was one of the few who could go back. He couldn't afford to wait while governments bridged the time gap between when they said they were going to do something and when they actually do it.

Everyone knows machinery for relief and rehabilitation can't be set up overnight, but there has been an unnecessary amount of backing and filling by departments concerned; a reluctance to assume immediate responsibility and to back up announced plans with action.

The shortage of hay, even for temporary feeding of livestock, is for instance, critical. Immediate supplies are needed. People are still vague about who they are to see about health regulations; others are wandering around trying to find someone who is responsible for assessing damages to homes and barns. People have been moving back for a week now. It is later than the government thinks. The Jensens, the Toops have returned.

In none of the government's actions, however, is there evidence of insincerity—

I want the minister to note this.

—or a backing down on its promises. The problem is one of putting words into action.

To make political capital of the flood and its aftermath, as was done in '94, is abhorrent. It is nonsense to say the government is responsible for the flood. They must, however, with all of us, help clean up the aftermath and take steps to see that every possible means is employed to prevent a repetition of breaks in the diking system. They must see—with us—that a fair and equitable system of assessment of damages and payment of claims is worked out.

It is a big job and we should get on with it.

Is there anything unreasonable in that front-page editorial appearing in the largest weekly newspaper in the affected district? The only thing I wish to say in that connection was brought out during my absence at the request of the Canadian Legion of the Fraser valley, and that is the excessive cost of hay. Today hay is $36 a ton.

Chilliwack and the Fraser valley ask for consideration by the government and by parliament, not on party lines but as aid to our fellow Canadians.

Superannuation and retirement benefits—

71. Superannuation and Retirement Acts, administration, $220,091.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wish I knew some new argument or approach to make to the minister in connection with this matter. All sorts of arguments and approaches have been made; and from the letters that have been written and the resolutions that have been forwarded to the minister and the government one would think something would have touched off his heart before this to assist superannuated civil servants. I will not take time to go further into it now, principally because I think I might make more headway with the minister if I did not do so. But I hope that he is giving consideration to the continuing plea of superannuated civil servants, particularly those in the lower income brackets—and there are far too many of them—for some sort of cost of living bonus or other supplement.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend's views on that subject are well known. We have discussed this before. There is nothing that I could add to what I have said on previous occasions with respect to such things as cost of living bonus to superannuated civil servants. That payment is a form of contractual payment, the same as payments made under the pension funds of the railways and other private concerns or pensions which are provided by employers throughout the country. I have never felt, I do not feel at the present time, at any rate, that it would be appropriate.

Mr. KNOWLES: Surely the government should be a model employer.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may or may not be the case; but in any event, the government has not felt that it would be justified in granting such a bonus. I have had occasion to say that before; and, as my hon. friend has indicated, he realizes that this is not the place to discuss that matter this evening.

Mr. KNOWLES: He does not like it at all.

Public debt charges—
(S) Cost of loan flotations, $525,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not understand about this item for the cost of loan flotations, and how the charges are made up. They are marked "statutory" and therefore I take it that they are routine. Will the minister explain this item, because the cost of loan flotations is usually something incurred when the loan is made.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a statutory item under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. I do not think anything was spent for loans under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. This item provides for flotation expenses of new bond issues, including advertising, engraving and travelling expenses, less commissions and remuneration to dealers, et cetera, which are amortized over the life of the loan.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is what I wondered about. Is this the amortized figure?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; that is correct.

Public debt charges—
(S) Interest on public debt—funded debt (including treasury bills)—
Payable in Canada, $415,013,481.33; payable in London, $327,089; payable in New York, $5,587,800; total, $420,928,370.33; other liabilities, $25,534,888; $446,463,258.33.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wish to ask the minister one question on this statutory item of $5,587,800, payable in New York. Does that represent part of the new loan recently incurred, or does that represent old loans?

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not represent any of the interest on the new loan. It represents interest on the approximately $140 million of United States-pay government securities which are at present outstanding.

Mr. ADAMSON: Are those direct obligations of the federal government?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are direct obligations of the federal government. That does not include any obligations of the Canadian National Railways.

General—
80. Tariff board, including the dominion trade and industry commission—payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations, $94,740.
[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister say a word about this item? What is the respective cost of this?

Mr. ABBOTT: For dominion trade and industry commission, there is provision for $1,000. That is for travelling and other expenses incidental to the operation of the commission. No major investigations were held during 1947-48. A number of informal conferences were held respecting complaints of unfair trade practices, and personal visits to Montreal and Toronto were carried out in that regard. Most of the work was conducted by correspondence, and the resulting adjustments were found quite satisfactory.

Item agreed to.

General—
81. To provide for the expenses of the comptroller of the treasury's office, $9,986,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There is a large increase here. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. ABBOTT: The apparent large increase in this item results from the consolidation with it of certain activities formerly provided for under demobilization and reconversion. The only valid comparison of amounts between years, however, is that which takes into account the combined amounts voted in 1947-48 within normal and demobilization and reconversion estimates. From such a comparison, we find that the consolidation has been attended by a decrease in over-all provision for the comptroller's office of $1,149,353, as is apparent from the detail printed on page 124 of the main estimates.

Item agreed to.

General—
82. Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1943, and Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, administration, $63,331.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask the minister in which provinces the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is still applicable and the number of applications for adjustments that have been made during the past year in each one of those provinces.

Mr. ABBOTT: It applies to the three prairie provinces. I am afraid I have not available here at the moment the number of adjustments made in the last year, but I think I can say from general knowledge that it was comparatively small. However I will be glad to get that information for my hon. friend, and see that it is furnished to him.

Item agreed to.

General—

83. Foreign exchange control board—administration, $26,800,000.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wish to move an amendment to item 83. I move:

That item 83 be reduced to one dollar.

I do this with a full realization that it hits at the major problem and one of the major planks of the government's policy of economic control. I feel that at the present time the foreign exchange control board and the artificial restrictions imposed on our trade with the United States are among the major contributory causes to the inflationary pressure which is being built up on the Canadian price structure. To illustrate my contention, I should like to quote from the current issue of the Canadian Statistical Review, just published for the month of May by the dominion bureau of statistics. Discussing the importance or the lessening of our unfavourable balance of trade with the United States, they say this:

Our unfavourable balance of trade with the United States for this period has fallen from $295 million in 1947 to about $156 million in the current year. But this improved trade position has meant that fewer imported goods have been available for the domestic market, while more of our own production has been going abroad. Although our imports from all countries are up by $27 million or by about three per cent, when allowance is made for the rise in prices, the actual volume has probably fallen.

Then it goes on:

With incomes earned in Canada continuing to rise—total labour income for the first quarter of the year was up $194 million over the same period a year ago—the demand for all types of consumer goods has remained high and this has almost inevitably resulted in a further upward pressure on price levels. The one important limiting factor has been the substantial surplus of the Canadian government.

I mentioned that before. Then it goes on to say:

As long as individuals, business firms, governments and foreign buyers try to spend funds in excess of current income the pressure toward higher price levels will continue.

There is one other sentence I should like to read, and I am endeavouring not to remove these extracts from their context. This last sentence is as follows:

As consumer goods accumulate and individuals' most urgent needs are filled, they become more willing to increase their rate of saving. Similarly as new plants are built business requirements for capital become less acute and this decline in the demands for new equipment also helps remove the upward pressure on prices.

I contend that the imposition of exchange restrictions is having the direct effect of pushing up prices, and that, by so restricting our trade with the United States, it is not only causing a certain amount of ill feeling but, further than that, preventing that necessary flow of free trade between our two countries. I feel that at the present time we are losing a tremendous volume of United States funds which would come to Canada for capital investment, come to Canada for the sake of building new plants.

I realize that great strides have been made in the construction of new plants. I feel that we may feel satisfied, in our own Canadian way; but we, on this North American continent, are lagging behind the increased productivity and increased industrial expansion of the country to the south of us. I consider that that is definitely, at least partly, caused by the restrictions on our exchange of currency.

We are in a singularly fortunate position. I believe that our economy, our natural resources, and the development of our potential natural wealth makes our economy free enough and strong enough to withstand the impact of a free exchange. I believe that we have undeveloped in Canada the greatest natural potential, particularly in things of which the United States is short, including base metals, as well as other products. At the present time I am speaking of non-farm products. I believe our economy can complement the United States economy, and that there are literally billions of dollars waiting for investment in Canada from the United States.

I say, further, that the impact of this money upon the development and investment market in Canada would have a tendency to keep our two exchanges in a state of comparative equilibrium. I do not think there is a danger of the Canadian dollar selling at a great discount. I believe that the advantage to the economy of Canada in having a truly international dollar, exchangeable into United States dollars, and exchangeable freely without let or hindrance, anywhere in the world, would be such an advantage to the Canadian economy that it must be seriously considered at the present time.

I realize that the Foreign Exchange Control Act ends on March 31, 1949. I believe that we are in a potentially strong enough position to free our dollar from controls now. I feel that the goods which we have and which the world must have, to exist, would guarantee that the Canadian dollar would become one of the most sought after currencies of the whole world. Furthermore, the freedom of capital to come into and leave Canada without restriction, let or hindrance would, in my opinion, bring in such an influx of development capital that it would greatly solve our present adverse balance of trade with the United States.

For these reasons I have offered my amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not going to attempt tonight to argue the merits of foreign exchange control. It was only a few days ago that we discussed an amendment to the act. The hon. member has repeated his views, which are well known, and therefore I suggest that the vote be called.

Amendment negatived.

Item agreed to.

General—

85. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for salaries, reclassifications and increases, $10,000,000.

Mr. LENNARD: What I have to say deals with the stenographers of members of the House of Commons. From July, 1946, to May, 1948, the cost of living increased by 28 per cent. The stenographers on the House of Commons staff are employed between sessions in other departments of government. Up to a year ago they were given the grade II maximum, and received $143 a month. I understand that a year ago, on instructions of the Department of Finance, they received the grade II minimum, or $120 a month with reductions, which gave them a cheque of $103.

This is a drastic reduction, and these girls find it hard to make ends meet. I might say that, through this reduction, they are being trimmed of about $45 a month. There is the $23 reduction from the higher to the lower grade, and $22 as an allowance for the 28 per cent increase in living costs.

We cannot expect to have expert stenographers on the House of Commons stenographic staff if that is the way in which they are to be treated. It is no encouragement for them. I must say that the permanent civil service is receiving increases and has permanent employment. Apparently this is the only group being discriminated against. By reducing them from the grade II maximum to the minimum, the government is saving only a small amount each year. It is no encouragement to treat these employees in this way.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have been listening to the hon. member's remarks, and I am sure His Honour the Speaker will take note of what has been said.

Mr. LENNARD: It is not his responsibility.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is under Mr. Speaker's estimates.

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. LENNARD: It is after they leave here; it is not the salaries they receive here, it is the salaries they receive between sessions that I am concerned with.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We have here $5,500,000 and another $5,000,000 in the supplementaries.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is $10,000,000 here. This is an annual vote to provide basket or blanket authority for salaries, reclassifications and increases that have to be made during the year.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In all departments?

Mr. ABBOTT: In all departments as and when treasury board approves the reclassifications or increases for which specific provision has not been made in the departmental estimates. This vote varies each year, depending upon the probable extent of the reclassifications. As the committee knows, examination is being made throughout the civil service, and reclassification has been going on rather more this year than would normally be the case.

Mr. PEARKES: Does it provide for additional personnel, or is it only for salary increases for personnel already employed?

Mr. ABBOTT: If additional personnel are authorized and approved by the civil service commission the salaries of those personnel, if not provided for in a departmental estimate, would be charged to this vote.

Mr. PEARKES: How many additional personnel are being provided for?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no specific provision for any number. As I say, this is a basket item put in each year.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—Wartime prices and trade board—

87. Administration, $3,990,040.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to have a few more words with the minister about the wartime prices and trade board and this question of the reimposition of price controls and subsidies. I hope that we are now able to discuss this matter in a little more reasonable atmosphere than was the case for a number of months prior to last night. Until last night any request from this corner of the house for a reimposition of price controls and subsidies was met with a negative reply. The minister has told us on occasion that it could be done only by the restoration of wage controls. He has told us on other occasions that some controls were being maintained in so far as that was permitted by the parliamentary statute, but it was clear that the general approach of the government was negative.

However, we now have the adoption of the prices committee report, which, although it did not go down the line for over-all price controls, suggested that some controls and subsidies should be put back on. Earlier this evening I felt that the minister indicated a slight change of attitude, in that he stated that the recommendations of the committee as approved by the house would be given immediate consideration. I should like the minister to recall a question which was asked him last Thursday by my colleague, the hon. member for Churchill, and which had to do with the minister's promise earlier this year that if prices of meat and butter got out of hand controls would be reimposed. That promise took the form of a statement which the minister made on March 4 of this year, as reported on pages 1864 and 1865 of Hansard in reply to a question by the hon. member for Lethbridge. On that occasion the hon. member asked this same question. I think I should give the committee the text of the minister's answer on that date. This is the Minister of Finance speaking:

> Perhaps I had better answer that question. The situation with respect to ceilings on meat, including beef, is this. The government announced late in January, I think, that it intended to reimpose ceilings on meat and on butter; and it was pointed out at that time that the imposition of retail ceilings on meat involved quite a technical operation in working out what those ceilings should be with respect to, I am told, nearly 200 items. That work has been proceeded with and it is now completed; but in the meantime the retail prices of meats are somewhat below the prices which were prevailing at the time the announcement was made, and therefore there has been no necessity to impose the formal ceilings. As I say, the technical work has been done, and in the event of its being necessary to do so, ceilings can be reimposed promptly.

As long ago as March 4 the minister indicated that the technical work, even though it was complicated and involved nearly 200 meat items, had been completed and that the government was in a position, through the medium of the wartime prices and trade board, to put ceilings back on if the same became necessary. I should like to ask the minister what work has been done in the meantime by the wartime prices and trade board to get ready to put ceilings back on as might now be desirable in view of the approval that this house gave to the report of the prices committee. It seems to me that the argument which the government has used in the past should not now be used because of the action taken last night by this house and because of the at least slight change in attitude shown by the minister earlier this evening when he said that immediate consideration would be given to this report.

I know something of the splendid work the wartime prices and trade board did in the years when the government gave it half a chance, and it would seem to me that that board would now have some machinery ready and some of the technical work done, so that it would be possible for the government to act upon the report of the prices committee. I am not now asking the minister for a restatement of the promise he made at eight o'clock; I am asking him to state what plans have been worked out and what work has been done by the wartime prices and trade board to get ready to carry out an anticipated change in government policy.

Mr. ABBOTT: If it were decided to reimpose ceilings, on meat for instance—I am not prepared to say that would be a desirable thing—it would be necessary for the prices board to do a considerable amount of technical work; it would be necessary to call in the trade and make quite an extensive study. Retail ceilings on meat is a complicated matter. Meat prices have already moved through the ceilings to which I referred last January. This sort of thing works both ways and the producers may have some interest in the matter.

To answer my hon. friend's question directly, it would be necessary for the prices board to do a considerable amount of work in order to be ready to reimpose ceilings on meat. So far that work has not been done.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I point out that on March 4, when the minister was asked a question by the hon. member for Lethbridge, the reply was that the technical work on these 200 items had been done but the prices were below the ceiling—

Mr. ABBOTT: Below the proposed ceiling.

Mr. KNOWLES: And now he tells us that the prices have moved through the ceiling.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. KNOWLES: The housewives of Canada know that, and that is given as an excuse for not going ahead with this matter. It seems to me that this is not good enough, the finding of one excuse after another while the people of Canada suffer from this serious problem. I hope that when we meet tomorrow morning the minister will be able to tell us that he has asked the wartime prices and trade board to do the job which it can do in connection with this matter.

Mr. POULIOT: Some years ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ABBOTT: If the committee desires I am willing to go on and complete my estimates, but I am entirely in the hands of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the committee to sit for a short time after eleven o'clock?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister ought to take time to think this thing over.

Mr. ABBOTT: There will be no different answer to my hon. friend in the morning.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. GREEN: We agreed with the Minister of Public Works that we would sit long enough to enable the house to dispose of certain divorce bills after eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 30, 1948

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

C.C.F. AND NEW BRUNSWICK ELECTION

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, a statement was made in the house during the last forty-eight hours about the increased number of C.C.F. votes received in the recent New Brunswick election. I should like to correct that statement. In 1944 the votes received by the C.C.F candidates totalled 13,934, whereas the total number received by the C.C.F. in the same counties in the recent election was 11,131. I cannot see where there is an increase.

Mr. COLDWELL: Half the number of candidates.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PUBLIC SERVICE—TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Mr. CHURCH:

What are the total travelling expenses of all departments of the government, outside commissions and boards in relation to federal affairs such as hotel bills and all other expenses and incidentals, connected therewith, for the last two years of record?

2. Were tenders called for such purchases?
3. If so, who were the successful tenderers and at what prices?
4. In what offices were these materials installed?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEEDINGS LEADING TO PROROGATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the prorogation proceedings. It is always a difficult matter to wind up the business of a session. As hon. members know prorogation is in the nature of a ceremony and some careful preparation is required before matters can be finally arranged prior to prorogation. The other house has to conclude the business which may come over to it from this house, and the speech from the throne has to have its final printing. The deputy of the governor general will be acting for His Excellency in proroguing parliament, and it is desirable that due notice should be given to him as to the time to be present. These matters are all difficult to arrange unless the business of the house is concluded by a definite time.

Hon. members will recall that early in the session I mentioned that if the house did not conclude its business by June 30 it would be necessary for the government to seek to have the session adjourned until September.

Mr. GREEN: The Prime Minister did not really mean that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, yes; I did. What I am about to say is that I am happy that that step has not been necessary. I should like to congratulate hon. members upon the way they have expedited the business of the house so as to make possible prorogation by June 30. I think splendid progress has been made and, as I say, I am pleased that matters have reached the point where it is not necessary to consider any adjournment of the present session.

I believe it is generally the wish of all hon. members that if possible, and without sacrificing anything in the public interest, we should wind up the business of the session today.

Mr. MacNICOL: Two o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says "two o'clock." That would suit me all right, but I want to make it clear that I should not wish to press the house unduly in the matter of time. I think by mutual arrangement it should be possible to have matters so planned as to permit prorogation at a reasonable hour in the course of the day.

Mr. GREEN: What time has the Prime Minister in mind?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Most hon. members have left already for their homes. Tomorrow is July 1, and I know that several hon. members have obligations in their own constituencies which they assumed in the expectation that the house would be adjourned by June 30 at the latest.

There is one other circumstance I should like to mention. The staffs of both houses of parliament, of the printing bureau and officials of the government generally have had considerable pressure put upon them during the last few weeks of parliament. As hon. members know, we have been sitting, not only in the afternoons and evenings but in the mornings, and on Saturdays as well. On behalf of the house I should like to express to the staffs that have had this extra duty put upon them our appreciation of the exceptionally efficient manner in which they have discharged their duties.

The house can best express its appreciation by making it perfectly apparent to the members of the staff that when July 1, Dominion day, comes, they may expect that the beginning of their summer vacation has been entered upon.

In seeking to arrange matters with a certain definiteness, if there are some questions which are of more importance to hon. members than others, and hon. members will let this side of the house know, we shall try to arrange to bring forward those matters immediately and leave the less contentious matters, if there are any that are still contentious, to the latter part of the proceedings.

That is all I have to say at the moment. It is intended to continue immediately with the estimates of the Minister of Finance. The next item to be taken up, as I was informed last night, is the important health program which has been announced in the house.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Prime Minister that the members of the official opposition will be only too glad to co-operate in bringing about prorogation today. We do not want to abandon our duty to give these estimates some consideration. We would be willing to sit right through without any recess for lunch. I should like to suggest one way of hastening the business of the house. For the last few days we have been working against a frog chorus, if I may use that expression without hurting anybody's feelings, from the government side of the house, sometimes led by one of the ministers, the refrain of which was "Carried, carried, carried." If the government members sitting behind the Prime Minister will allow the chairman to do the shouting of "carried," I am sure we shall get along much faster. After all, it is only human nature that opposition of this kind makes us all want to fight back a bit, and the result is delay; so, in the most kindly way, as the Minister of Labour would say, I suggest to the members on the government side that they keep still today and let us get on with the business of the house.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would be a shame to break a long-established custom of the house in that respect.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I think we might expedite the business of the house by leaving until one o'clock the question of the time of recess for lunch. Secondly, may I join in the expression of appreciation to the staff for the work they have done during the session.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PROCLAMATION OF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Provision is made in Bill No. 195, which provides for the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes, that the act shall come into effect by proclamation. Can the minister state when the act will be proclaimed? It will receive royal assent today.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I could, I suppose, give the stock answer that that is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course. But as a matter of fact I was discussing this very question this morning and my hon. friend can rest assured that we shall move with expedition to comply with all the necessary formalities. Of course the old board has to function until the new board is appointed, but we shall proceed as quickly as possible.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

REQUEST FOR ANNUAL REPORTS OF CERTAIN DEPARTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, several returns and reports which should have been tabled during the session have not yet been brought down. I refer particularly to the annual report of the Department of Mines and Resources. The last report tabled was for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1946. I think an arrangement should be made to table the report for the year ended March 31, 1947, before the house prorogues. Furthermore, I believe no report has been tabled from the Department of Reconstruction and Supply for over two years. I am informed that its last report was for the year 1944-45. Could these reports be tabled, or otherwise made available to members?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Mines and Resources): An inquiry was made before, during the absence I think of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), for the report of my department, and the explanation was given that it is in the hands of the printers. It is unfortunate that it has not been made available earlier, but every effort will be made in future years to table the report as early as possible in the session.

Mr. GREEN: Cannot some arrangements be made to distribute the report to the members after it has been printed?

Mr. MacKINNON: I shall see that the report is mailed to each member of the house.

Mr. GREEN: What about the report of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I regret I am not able to give my hon. friend a definite answer, but I shall speak to the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the report of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply as soon as I see him. I will meanwhile give the same undertaking, should this be found to be necessary, as has just been given by my colleague with respect to having the report sent to the members as soon as possible after prorogation.

BERLIN BLOCKADE

INQUIRY AS TO FLYING IN SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any request has come from the government of the United Kingdom for assistance in flying in supplies to overcome the Berlin blockade?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I do not think it is advisable for me to attempt to answer that question at the moment. I would have to consult with other departments of the government, and I should not like to make a statement with regard to a matter so far-reaching as to the inferences that might be drawn from any reply without first having the opportunity to consult with my colleagues.

Mr. HACKETT: Will a reply be made later in the day?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That will depend entirely upon what it seems most advisable to do, all the circumstances considered.

DOMINION DAY

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF DESIGNATION "INDEPENDENCE OF CANADA DAY"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. PHILEAS COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister of which I did not give him notice because I thought we would sit tomorrow. I would ask whether tomorrow is to be called Dominion day, or Independence of Canada day, as it has been named first in the United States press, and secondly in the Canadian press. Apparently an item was given out by the information service.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think in the circumstances it would perhaps be only proper to allow every member to call it by whatever name he prefers.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

QUESTION AS TO INCREASE OF RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?—although perhaps it is a question for the government as a whole. In view of the fact that the government is not proceeding this session with Bill 343, an act to amend the Government Annuities Act, against which there was opposition on the floor of the house, can the government say whether consideration is being given to restoring the rates on annuities to what they were prior to April 19?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I anticipated this question and have a short statement to make.

The Government Annuities Act was passed by parliament in 1908. Therefore it has been on the statute books for forty years. Its purpose was to encourage habits of thrift and provide a means whereby Canadian citizens could make reasonable provision for their security in advanced years through the purchase of annuities, a purpose which carried the endorsation and support of every citizen of Canada. The act was intended to afford facilities whereby annuities could be purchased on the following financial basis: (a) that the purchaser would pay all the cost except administration; (b) that the government would pay the cost of administration. There is nothing in the act which provides any other basis. I would like to make it doubly plain that parliament in passing the act intended that the purchaser of the annuity would pay all the cost except the cost of administration.

Now let us examine how the cost is estimated. First there is the question of how many years an annuitant will require to be paid the amount stated in the contract—in other words, how long will he live to draw the annuity?

Second there arises the rate of interest which shall be allowed on the premium payments made by the purchaser.

On the question of the interest rate, it is clear from a study of Hansard at the time the annuities act was introduced that it was originally intended that the interest rate should change with changing rates of interest prevailing in the bond market. In the original discussion on the bill, the Hon. W. S. Fielding, then Minister of Finance, stated:

> The rate may be changed from time to time according to monetary conditions.

If it was the intention of the drafters of the bill that any specific rate of interest would be paid, such would have been provided for in the act. However, parliament authorized the government to fix the rate of interest by regulation. It is clear that this was done to permit interest rates to be readily changed from time to time to meet changing conditions. It was never the intention that there should be any substantial public subsidy to the purchasers of government annuities other than that provided by having the government pay the administrative expenses.

When the act was passed, the government had the responsibility of fixing the rate of interest. At that time government bonds were yielding 3·89 per cent and the government, in order to fix an even figure, rounded it off to four per cent. I have explained how the interest rate was fixed and I will now attempt to cover the question of the other item entering into the cost, namely, how many years the annuity will be required to be paid depending on the expectation of life of the annuitant. In fixing the mortality table to be used, the advice of the best known actuaries in Canada was obtained and followed. Life expectancy, as will be appreciated, has lengthened since the act was passed. In fixing the rate which must be charged the purchaser, we have two factors to take into consideration, the life expectancy and the interest rate allowable. From these two factors, tables are prepared and it is on the basis of these tables that the contract rates are set. After twenty-eight years of operation, it became evident in 1936 that there was reason to doubt the soundness of the rate tables because of increased life expectancy.

A senate committee investigated the matter and recommended a further study by Professor M. A. Mackenzie of the university of Toronto and as a result of his report, the rates were substantially increased on February 1, 1938. Not only that but he recommended the transfer of $8,941,195.84 in order to maintain a reserve in the fund because of the sale of annuities at less than cost prior to that date.

Now, what is the situation as at this date? We find that we are selling annuities at less than cost because life expectancy is greater today than it was in 1936. This is particularly important in view of the continuing trend toward longevity especially in view of the fact that many of the contracts will not become payable for ten, fifteen or twenty-five years from this date. Indeed some will not become payable until the year 2000.

In addition to selling annuities on the bargain counter because of the mortality trend, there is the fact that up to April 19, 1948, an interest rate of four per cent compounded yearly was allowed on money paid by the purchasers of annuities; whereas in the case of citizens who sacrificed to buy war bonds and Canada savings bonds, an interest rate of from 3½ per cent to three per cent only was allowed. Such a substantial difference in interest rates is discriminatory and unfair as between different types of people who provide old age security in different ways. One group has been providing old age security by purchasing government annuities but a far larger group has been buying government bonds—victory loan bonds, war savings certificates, and Canada savings bonds.

At the present rate of sales and assuming money to be worth three per cent, if we continue to pay a four per cent interest rate, my actuaries have estimated that there will be a capital deficit of over $100 million incurred from the new business of the next ten years and this does not give any consideration to the fact that sales have been increasing very rapidly. Added to this capital deficit, had we continued on the mortality tables without consideration to the extension of life expectancy, there would have been a substantial additional deficit. Having regard for these facts, I am convinced this parliament would have found me very remiss had I not brought the matter to the attention of the government and recommended suitable adjustments. In arriving at the decisions made and put into effect by order in council, this government has not departed one iota from the basic principles of the 1908 act.

I believe I have answered in my statement all the points raised by hon. members in the several debates on this subject.

Something has been said in regard to the fact that persons purchasing annuities after April 19, 1948 will pay more than those who purchased prior to that date. This, of course, is true, but it is not a new feature and is no different from the situation faced in 1938 when the last adjustment was made, nor is it any different from the situation existing in all kinds of insurance business. I maintain that the investment in government annuities is the best investment any one who is looking for security can make and I assert without fear of successful contradiction that the new rates are the lowest at which annuities can be purchased in Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am not permitted to debate the matter at this time. If I could I would object to many things that the minister has said; but may I ask this question? In view of the representations that have been received from the public and made to the government on the floor of parliament, will the government still give consideration to the matter of annuity rates?

Mr. MITCHELL: It is the intention of the government to submit the whole question of annuities to a special committee at the next session of parliament.

Mr. REID: Will the minister give the house the figures as to the number of people who have paid from $10,000 to $16,000 in a lump sum for the buying of annuities? The information I get in the city from which I come is that there are more applications from people who are in a position to pay $8,000 or more for the purchase of an annuity than there are from those in the lower income brackets. These people surely cannot be considered poor.

Mr. GREEN: In many cases they are widows.

Mr. REID: Large companies are paying up to $10,000 for each employee, the MacMillan company and others.

Mr. MITCHELL: Obviously we cannot debate this matter on the orders of the day. I shall be glad to provide the hon. member for New Westminster, and any other hon. gentleman, with the information asked for.

TARIFFS AND TRADE

STATUS OF ADJUSTMENTS INCLUDED IN SCHEDULE V OF GENERAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): A resolution on the order paper dated December 5, dealing with the Geneva agreements, one of the matters for which the house was called together early last December, has been passed over. What is the position of the tariff adjustments that were included in schedule V of the general agreement? Parliament has not approved the resolution. No bill has been introduced. The announcement was made that this would go into effect. May the position be stated, so that the house may be clear on the matter?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The tariff rates agreed upon in the Geneva agreements have been given provisional application in Canada and in other countries, as is contemplated in the agreements themselves. They have been given provisional application here by order in council. The statutory implementation of the agreements will take two forms. The resolutions, which still stand on the order paper, if adopted, will provide for the formal approval of the agreements entered into at Geneva. When that is done it will require legislative implementation by an amendment of the customs tariff. The resolution which stands in my name under government notices of motion is a formal resolution which must be passed, I am advised by my legal advisers as preceding a money bill. I am advised that an amendment to the customs tariff cannot be introduced unless preceded by a resolution. The amendments to the customs tariff will not be proposed until the resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister, which is a general resolution asking for the approval of the agreements, has been adopted. In the meantime the tariff changes are in effect, and will continue in effect for the time being. The same position applies in the United Kingdom, and I understand the same position exists in the United States.

Mr. COLDWELL: Tariff changes, which are changes in taxation, have been made by order in council, although parliament has been in session since the first of the year. Can this continue indefinitely? Will the government always be able to vary taxes by order in council without the approval of parliament?

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend knows, all the tariff changes are reductions. I cannot say just how long. I had better not give my hon. friend a specific answer, but I have been informed that there will be ample opportunity at the next session of parliament to take the appropriate legislative action before the provincial application expires.

I am informed that no country has yet given legislative approval to the agreements entered into. In some countries it can be done by executive action; in others parliamentary approval is required.

Mr. HACKETT: Is it not a fact that these reductions in tariff duties enacted by order in council prevent Canada from making any further increase in the duty on these items?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is incorrect.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he will agree that while it is not his fault that these rumours are circulated, it is the fault of the government that these things that started as rumours now turn out not to have been rumours at all but to have been true?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am going to answer that. These rumours, as I have said before, were unfounded. I have no idea whence they emanated, and if my hon. friend assumes that the report of the prices committee gives confirmation to the rumours, then I say that assumption is completely unjustified.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does the minister not agree that the rumours turned out to be almost word for word the same as parts of the report of the prices committee, and does he think that is just an accident?

Mr. FULTON: May I ask the Minister of Finance a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Stanstead. Would the Minister of Finance reconsider the answer he gave? Our understanding is that under the protocol, once tariffs are lowered, even though it may be provisional, we cannot raise them without a breach of the protocol.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not correct.

EXCISE TAX

RUMOUR THAT 25 PER CENT IMPOST MAY BE WITHDRAWN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. STEPHENSON (Durham): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I think it is of interest to all the people of Canada. In view of the rumour that the 25 per cent excise tax may be withdrawn, a rumour which is having a serious effect on customer buying and business in general, will the Minister of Finance make a definite statement as to whether the tax will be withdrawn?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend was not in his seat in the house last night when I answered a similar question, but I will repeat substantially what I said then. I have nothing to add to the statement I made in the house the other day. It is extremely unfortunate that these rumours have been circulated, because I am aware of the disturbing effect they have on business. As I said last night, however, that it is not the fault of the Minister of Finance, and it is most unusual for the Minister of Finance either to confirm or to deny rumours of this kind. I felt obliged to do it, for the reasons I gave in the house. I have nothing to add to what I said at that time.

CATTLE

EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. STEPHENSON (Durham): May I ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture? Rumours are abroad that the embargo on cattle may be lifted, and this is having a serious effect on business. Is the minister prepared to indicate whether the embargo will be lifted?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): There is nothing I can add to what I said yesterday.

AGRICULTURE

QUESTION AS TO CONFERENCE ON PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. Is he in a position to report to the house any progress in connection with the proposed conference between the municipalities, provincial officials and his department on the subject of prairie farm assistance?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I discussed the matter when I was in the west recently. Some disturbances had taken place in the west. I have nothing further to report at the moment but I hope there will be something shortly.

FINANCE

PRESS REPORT AS TO FUNDS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM TO CREDIT OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question arising out of an article that appears in today's press with regard to a reported $300 million fund which is lying in the United Kingdom for the use of Canada. Is there truth in that story?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have not the faintest idea. I have never heard of it.

Mr. ADAMSON: It is on the front page of the Gazette today.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Demobilization and reconversion—
Wartime prices and trade board—
87. Administration, $3,990,040.

Mr. KNOWLES: When the house rose last night I was in the process of questioning the minister with regard to the wartime prices and trade board, and specifically I was trying to find out whether the board, in anticipation of the government doing something about the report of the prices committee, had any plans worked out for the reimposition of some price controls and some subsidies.

It does seem to us on this side of the house that it was not an accident that the prices committee recommended the proposal which it brought forward. One of those proposals was for a qualified and selective return to the principle of controls and subsidies, and I would hope that the wartime prices and trade board might already have some of the machinery set up for taking these steps. Can the minister tell us whether that is so?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The existing organization of the wartime prices and trade board is there, but as yet no special instructions have been given in connection with the matters referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. KNOWLES: In other words, the wartime prices and trade board will not act of its own motion, but upon instructions from the government.

Mr. ABBOTT: Quite so.

Mr. KNOWLES: So that the basic question is still whether or not government policy will be changed to meet the recommendations passed by this house the other night. May I ask the minister what has happened to the staff of the wartime prices and trade board in the last number of months, or for such period as he may have the figures? Has the personnel been maintained at the strength of a year ago, or has it been increased or reduced?

Mr. ABBOTT: At April 1, 1947, the staff of the board was 3,920; at May 31, 1948, it was 1,277.

Mr. KNOWLES: Does the minister or the chairman of the board, who is in front of him, feel that the present staff of the board can do an effective job in implementing the recommendations of the prices committee?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, the recommendations of the prices committee were pretty guarded in their terms.

Mr. KNOWLES: No doubt about that.

Mr. ABBOTT: Naturally, the extent to which it may be considered advisable to re-embark on price control will govern the number of employees and the type of organization which the board will have to maintain. I repeat, however, that it is not and never has been the intention of the government to go back into an over-all price control, or wage control, which is a necessary corollary to that. I think it is fair to say that any ceilings which may be reimposed will be very limited, and that is my understanding of the recommendations of the prices committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister said that the recommendations of the prices committee were very guarded. Not half so guarded, may I suggest, as the comments which the minister himself is making on this question. It would seem that the most apt comment on the work of the prices committee was presented to us yesterday in pictorial form in a cartoon in the Globe and Mail. Most hon. members saw it.

Mr. MacNICOL: Which way was the soldier going?

Mr. KNOWLES: The cartoon showed a brigadier in charge, namely the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It was a field marshal.

Mr. KNOWLES: All right—a field marshal. He was standing there giving commands to his three soldiers, labelled "recommendations", to "forward march" and there they stood with their faces up against a brick wall entitled "government policy". That seems to be the position, and the people of Canada have to take the rap.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not seen the cartoon, but I want to look at it; because in my judgment, the cartoonist for the Globe and Mail is one of the best in the country.

While we are on this question of price control I want to bring something to the attention of the committee which I think is important. I refer to the situation which has developed in our fellow commonwealth of Australia with respect to this question of price and rent control. I have had occasion in the past to refer to the constitutional position in Canada and the constitutional power of the dominion government to continue to impose price and rent control. I know that there has been the tendency in some quarters to consider that as a rather legalistic conception and one that does not have very much practical importance. The reason I want to say what I intend to say now is that the committee and the country may appreciate its practical importance; and I want to illustrate that point by outlining to the committee just what has happened in Australia.

As hon. members know, the federal government in Australia has been controlling prices and rent, over a number of years, under wartime constitutional powers which are not unlike those possessed by the federal government in Canada. Some months ago the Australian federal government—which is and has been for some years a socialist government—introduced a law into the commonwealth parliament to amend the commonwealth act, by adding to the constitutional powers of the federal government an additional power to be known as "XIVA". That power was to be inserted in section 51 of the constitution, which reads:

51. The parliament—

That is the Australian parliament.

—shall, subject to this constitution, have power to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of the commonwealth with respect to:

Then there is a long enumeration of the powers, and the power to be inserted was:

(XIVA) Rents and prices (including charges).

The situation in Australia is this. The federal government exercises such powers as are specifically given to it under the constitution, and those which are not mentioned there belong to the state. That is the reverse of our position here in Canada. Nevertheless the situation is analogous in this respect, that since "property and civil rights" is not in the hands of the federal government in Australia any more than it is here, they required this specific power. That law was submitted to a referendum—the government advocated its adoption, of course—and the government put out a pamphlet entitled, "The case for and against." This pamphlet may have been seen by some hon. members; it fully and fairly, I think, states the case for the adoption of the constitutional amendment, and against it. With the indulgence of the committee I should like to read the summary of the case "for". This is the heading: "Keep the protection you have", and it reads as follows:

A "yes" vote for commonwealth legislative power over rents and prices, will permit the continuance of—

Protection against inflation; fair rentals; security against eviction; real benefit from wage and salary increases; fair value for your money; protection of your savings and deferred pay; full value for your life insurance, superannuation and social service benefits.

A "no" vote will expose you to—

Inflation, boom and depression; profiteering, rack-renting and black marketing; eviction from your home; a scramble for houses and goods, with the rich always winning; decrease in the real value of your savings; industrial unrest.

Mr. ADAMSON: Is that a fair presentation?

Mr. ABBOTT: That was the presentation of the case for the affirmative, a vote for this amendment. And quite fairly the pamphlet presents the case for a "no" vote. It is elaborate but I will give the summary which is given in the pamphlet. It is headed "We urge you to vote 'no'." The reasons are given as follows:

We ought not to be devising ways and means of making wartime controls permanent; we ought to be reducing them as normal conditions are restored.

The ordinary citizen will get a better deal when powers of government are divided than when they are centred at Canberra.

After the bank nationalization experience, the Chifley government should not be given another blank cheque.

"Remote control" from Canberra has produced a vast and growing army of officials, a tangle of red tape, inefficiency, black marketing, and injustice.

In normal times, the controls in question can be far more effectively dealt with by the states, who have full power to deal with them, and whose administration would be much closer to the people and their needs.

Centralization of administration at Canberra weakens the authority of public opinion (as the banking business has shown), and produces a spirit of official tyranny which is a sinister enemy to true democracy.

Admittedly it is a full statement of the difficulties. I am not adopting that as my own, I am putting it before the committee as the language used in the official pamphlet put out by the chief electoral officer in Australia. It was sent to me by our high commissioner there. The referendum was held on May 29—which incidentally was my birthday, although that is irrelevant.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is when the prince hid in the oak tree. Perhaps that has something to do with it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The vote was overwhelmingly negative. I have the figures here. I shall not weary the committee with them; they are matters of public record. But as I say, the vote was overwhelmingly against the retention by the central government of these powers.

I am simply pointing that out to the committee for this reason. None of us can say with certainty how the Canadian people would vote if a similar issue were placed before them. In any case, that is not the procedure for making an amendment to the British North America Act. It would require an imperial statute. But it is significant that in Australia—where a labour government has been in power for some years and where presumably the idea of a controlled economy may have gained greater headway than it has here—the people in most decisive fashion declared that they did not wish to endow the federal parliament with jurisdiction over rents and prices.

Fortunately we in this country have followed what I consider to be the wise course of removing these federal controls in a gradual and orderly fashion. It has been a difficult procedure, particularly in these later stages. But I ask those who think we should have retained controls or should now re-establish them over a wide front to ponder well the results of the Australia referendum.

The Australian government now finds itself in this position. It has made no plan for the abandonment of these controls. The reports which I have received from the Australian information service indicate that the government there intend to toss rent controls back into the hands of the states about September 1. They have already abandoned rationing of beef, clothing, and the like, and they have abandoned subsidies on milk, textiles, yarn, raw cottons and so on.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Saskatchewan knows how to deal with the matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: I should like to put this fact before the committee in as objective a fashion as I can, to reinforce the point which I have tried to make from the beginning in connection with this decontrol program: the federal government has not the constitutional power to continue these controls indefinitely. Parliament has given that right to the government until March 31 next. It is open to challenge at any time in the courts. One can appreciate the chaotic condition which might be created in this country if it were held, as it might well be held, that the federal government had no power to continue these controls indefinitely. I think that fact should be appreciated by every hon. member and by every person in this country. I have brought the Australian situation to the attention of the committee because I do not know whether its full implications have been realized in Canada.

Mr. ADAMSON: Just for the record could the minister give the figures of the Australian vote, to the nearest hundred thousand, or as a percentage?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, I can give it very simply. The "yes" vote was 1,645,000, in round figures; the "no" was 2,354,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think it would have been better if the minister had made the other evening, when we were discussing the report of the prices committee, the speech he has just made. It would have given the house a better understanding of the sincerity of that report as far as the government was concerned. The house accepted that report on the assumption that something would be done, and now it is made quite clear that nothing will be done.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister says the report was very guarded but, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says, it was not half as guarded as the minister is. It would have been much better, much more in line with honest dealings, to tell the people of this country, when the report was being discussed, what was to be done.

The minister referred to the Australian referendum. I am glad he did that, and glad also that he read the statements made for and against the question of controls. He pointed out that there is a socialist government in Australia. I am glad he did that, because in my opinion there is no other case on record in which a government, in presenting a referendum, has put the case for both sides as fairly as was done in this case. I hope my hon. friend will take note of that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I readily acknowledge that.

Mr. MacINNIS: We have not a referendum system in this country, and as far as we know the people of Canada have not given any mass expression of opinion in opposition, not to indefinite controls, but to controls as long as the present abnormal situation exists. The committee was appointed in February on the assumption by the government that prices had reached their limit. Early in the year, the minister himself said that the price index would possibly go to 146, and then begin to decline. The assumption was, "We will appoint this committee. By the time the session ends and the committee comes to report, prices will have fallen, and we will be able to tell the people of Canada how successful the committee was." Prices have not fallen, and reports are that they will be much higher a month from now than they are today. And if prices are higher, as they will be, the condition of the people of Canada will be worse than it is today. All we have now is a report from the prices committtee, containing very guarded proposals, together with the assurance from the minister in charge that even those proposals will not be put into effect.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not made any such statement.

Mr. MacINNIS: I know the minister did not use those words.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then do not say you have had an assurance from the minister.

Mr. MacINNIS: But we have to judge the statement in the light of conditions. The minister says we have not the constitutional right to institute price controls. The referendum or Gallup poll taken in Canada some months ago indicated that 76 per cent of the people were in favour of controls. Of course if the government is not going to stabilize prices by government action of some sort the minister might as well tell the people of Canada there is nothing he can do to keep prices more in line with income. And if there is nothing he can do, then the people will have to take the necessary steps to try and keep their income in line with prices. So then where are we?

Mr. BLACKMORE: The discussion that has been going on about price control is exceedingly interesting to me. It is also a matter of vital importance to the Social Credit party, which believes it has the only possible solution to this price situation. Nevertheless I do not propose to follow my hon. friends in a discussion of the matter of prices, except to say briefly that as far as I can judge the high prices we now endure had their fundamental and primary cause in the increase in the price of steel which was permitted back in 1946. That price increase has pyramided into increases in the prices of many commodities which are directly or indirectly dependent on steel.

What can be done at present to revert to the position we occupied at the beginning of 1946 would require some very wise men indeed to determine.

I will say, however, as all hon. members readily recognize, that there is only one sure way to keep down prices. That is to increase production. The big problem we must face, then, is how to increase production, and it is about that aspect of the matter I should like to talk for a short time, concentrating my attention on the beet sugar industry.

I am quite sure the people as a whole, and probably hon. members of this house, are not vividly aware of the degree to which the beet sugar industry could increase production in Canada. In beginning my talk I should like to point out that on February 24 of this year I received a letter from a prominent beet sugar producer, in which he used these unhappy words: "We have been turned down on all counts." He was referring particularly to the response by the Minister of Finance to the representations of a group of men who approached him asking that certain adjustments should be made this year in respect to the beet sugar situation, which adjustments they believed would result in the signing of a great many more contracts for the production of beets this year all through Ontario and Alberta. The minister turned down those people, and for a few moments I should like to talk to the minister about that matter.

I might as well tell the committee what these men asked. They wanted the minister to agree to buy the sugar they would produce in Canada this year at the same price he would have to pay for Santo Domingo raw cane sugar brought to Canada, processed in Montreal and marketed here. They considered that a very fair and moderate request; but whatever his future intentions may be, the minister turned them down completely. They also asked that the fixed valuation of sugar for import should be reimposed. That was refused, too.

Some hon. members will recall that on May 13, 1948, as recorded at page 3911 of Hansard, I spoke on the subject of "Sugar beets and the Soil", a matter of vital importance to Canada at the present time. In the course of that speech I produced evidence to prove that sugar beet culture always improves the soil. I should like to quote a short statement in that connection:

> Statistics show an increase in the yield of crops in every country where the raising of sugar beets has been introduced.

That is taken from "The Sugar Beet in America," at page 257. It is to be found in reference 106, 1939, page 48, tariff board.

It is my purpose today to speak about "Sugar beets and Canada's Food Production", because these matters pertain directly to the question which we are discussing today and which is receiving the attention of the nation from coast to coast. The subject is timely. Everyone is talking and thinking about food. Hundreds of millions of people throughout the world are hungry and undernourished all the time, an experience which perhaps no one of us here has undergone unless it was during the war or some time like that. Scores of millions have not the soil resources from which to produce their required food. The average amount of arable and other cultivated land in all countries is 1·30 acres per capita, while in Canada it is 5·04 acres. Those figures were given in the Royal Bank of Canada monthly letter of June, 1948.

I should like to summarize an article which appeared in the Ottawa Evening Citizen of May 20 entitled, "The world's great need of food." This reads:

> The world's food production must be increased to meet the needs of an additional 20,000,000 people each year, besides keeping pace with current needs, declared Australian director of agriculture Frank W. Bulock, in a review of the work of UN., FAO.
> He said a planned world agriculture called for the opening up of new lands, the application of every possible scientific aid and the prevention of unnecessary loss of cattle and crops.

That is exactly the text from which I propose to speak. If she is wise, Canada will recognize her duty toward the world with regard to food production and she will make broad her shoulders and assume an ample share of the food production burdens of mankind. We should not wait too long, because the need is immediate. People are hungry right now while we sit here in this chamber. They can see nothing but the prospects of being hungry for years to come. That is no small matter.

At the same time we should bear in mind those Canadians yet unborn who should have at their disposal soil as rich and as good as the soil which we possess at this time. If they are to have such soil we must adopt measures in this land that will preserve the fertility of our soil to be passed on to future generations. What shall we do? Let us not forget the beet sugar industry in our planning.

By growing sugar beets our people can produce more food per acre—I want to point this out solemnly to the minister as a statement which he cannot gainsay—than they can by the use of any other crop known to man. So if we want to produce food in Canada let us not coldshoulder the beet sugar industry. By using sugar beets our people can produce such abundance of food as only sugar beets can produce and actually improve their soil, as I have pointed out in previous speeches. From year to year they can improve the fertility, the fibre, the friability, the tilth and the health of their soil. They can increase everything that goes to make good soil.

May I say once more that this is a matter of importance, it is something for responsible men in a government like ours to consider. An acre of good Canadian land can produce food to the extent that I have indicated; and besides sugar beets are the surest crop there is in Canada, particularly in irrigated areas. Already there is beginning to be grave anxiety concerning the crops in western Canada. All over the land we are having drought which may result in almost complete crop failure. But there will be no failure in the irrigated areas where sugar beets are being raised.

An average acre of Canadian sugar beet land will produce ten tons of sugar beets. That in turn will produce 3,000 pounds of sugar at the average extraction rate of 300 pounds per ton. It will produce 2,000 pounds of dried beet tops at the average rate of 200 pounds per ton of beets. It will produce 1,000 pounds of dried beet pulp at the average rate of 100 pounds per ton of beets. It will produce 800 pounds of beet molasses at the average rate of four per cent of the beets, or 80 pounds per ton of beets.

But the production is much greater than that, as I should like to draw to the minister's attention. The 2,000 pounds of dried beet tops would be equivalent to 1,000 pounds of grain feed on the accepted basic formula that a pound of dried beet tops is equal to half a pound of grain. It would be equal to 1,500 pounds of alfalfa hay and 460 pounds of grain as used in a feed ration for cattle, this being worked out on the formula of 200 pounds of dried beet tops replacing 150 pounds of alfalfa and 46 pounds of grain.

The beet pulp would be the equivalent of 139·9 pounds of ground barley, 636 pounds of alfalfa hay and 44·2 pounds of molasses for every ton of siloed beet pulp. These figures are shown in the report of the Alberta beet growers for 1941, page 27.

But I would point out to the minister that an acre can produce much more than ten tons of beets.

Mr. MacNICOL: As high as 18 tons.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I have computed my figures on the basis of 10 tons to the acre, but may I show the minister what is being done in my constituency. As I said, an acre can produce much more than 10 tons. The average yield in Alberta for a given 12 years has ranged from 9·96 tons per acre to 14·10 tons per acre. The average for the 12 years was 12·05 tons per acre, much greater than the 10 tons per acre which I have used. Higher yields are being obtained all the time. In 1947 there were many farmers in Alberta who raised as much as 15 tons per acre on substantial acreages.

I am taking my figures from a little booklet entitled "Silver Sunshine" prepared by the beet sugar manufacturers in Alberta. I hold in my hand the spring edition for 1948. Page 32 gives the details of what Mr. W. E. Bullock of Taber has done, and I quote:

> His contract now centres around the 100-acre mark and has a four year average of 16 tons per acre.

In the light of the figures I have given to the minister, the production from this man's activities are colossal, almost inconceivable. Sixteen tons to the acre and over 100 acres to be taken care of by one man. Then Mr. Jesse H. Wilde of Welling, in my constituency, is referred to on page 28 as follows:

> Since the factory began operations in 1925, he has not only been a consistent grower but has grown an average of over 100 acres of beets a year. During this time his beets have produced 72,000, 100-pound bags of sugar or enough to supply the needs of 3,600 people for the past 23 years.

That is the production of one man in the growing of sugar beets, an industry which the minister has not yet learned to appreciate. The article states further:

> In 1947 from the 110 acres of beets grown, he had an average of 14·98 tons per acre.

Then Ivan Harris of Taber is referred to on page 31 as follows:

> Ivan Harris has again raised the highest tonnage for the year 1947, 22·6 tons per acre on 30·5 acres. This is not an unusual occurrence for Ivan as his seven-year average is over 20 tons per acre.

If the minister would only think about what can be done, if he would only bear in mind that the new Lethbridge southeastern water conservation project, which the minister is providing money to build, will bring 345,000 acres of land under irrigation and be rendered capable of such astounding production of food as I have indicated by the statements concerning these men, I am sure the beet sugar industry would have his support. If this irrigation project is to be made to contribute to the national life and welfare of Canada as it can be, the minister must adopt those national policies which will render it possible for that to be accomplished.

Just think of the food and feed produced by Ivan Harris on an acre of land! Imagine one of Ivan Harris' acres producing sugar beets at the rate of twenty tons to the acre! That would mean, with 300 pounds of sugar produced per ton of sugar beets, there would be 6,000 pounds of sugar.

Mr. IRVINE: We would be overwhelmed in sweetness.

Mr. BLACKMORE: You would have upon an acre of land sixty 100-pound bags of sugar, and that would be only the sugar produced in the crop.

I have to reason with the minister now pointblank. Canada in the year 1948 has definitely lost 25,000 acres of sugar beets in Ontario entirely through federal government blundering and I am sorry to say that the minister will have to take the rap for that blundering because it was his department which caused it. The quotation I made from a letter at the outset was a statement made by one man who was trying to get some positive pronouncement from the government which would justify him in signing up contracts this year, but he did not get that pronouncement until it was too late, and the result was that those who might have grown sugar beets raised tobacco or corn or tomatoes or peas. Valuable as all these crops may be, they do not compare with the value that would have been obtained from producing sugar beets.

Twenty-five thousand acres of sugar beets in 1948, producing ten tons to the acre, would have meant 250,000 tons of sugar beets. Planted with sugar beets that land would have produced in sugar 300 pounds to the ton; 300 multiplied by 250,000, or 75,000,000 pounds of sugar. Of dried beet tops, at 200 pounds of dried beet tops per ton of beets, multiplied by 250,000, it would have produced 50,000,000 pounds. Of dried beet pulp, at 100 pounds of dried beet pulp per ton of beets, multiplied by 250,000, it would have produced 25,000,000 pounds. Of molasses, at 80 pounds of molasses per ton of beets, multiplied by 250,000, it would have produced 20,000,000 pounds. The grain equivalent by reason of the dried beet tops would have amounted to 1,000 pounds per acre, which multiplied by 25,000, would give 25,000,000 pounds of grain. Of alfalfa hay plus grain equivalent, at 1,500 pounds per acre of beets, multiplied by 25,000, it would have produced 37,500,000 pounds of alfalfa hay equivalent plus 460 pounds of grain per acre of beets, multiplied by 25,000, or 11,500,000 pounds of grain equivalent.

That amount of foods and feeds is what the minister and his department deprived the province of Ontario of in 1948. It is not a very pleasant thought. Yet that is what occurred, just because he gave the cold shoulder to a body of sugar beet men when they came to talk with him. I repeat, those 25,000 acres of beets are a serious loss. Let me give a few facts to indicate how serious that loss is.

First we shall take the value of the beets themselves. From sugar beet culture we derive foods such as the beets themselves, sugar, beet tops, beet pulp, beet pulp, dry and fresh, molasses, and a rapid improvement of the soil which over a period of twenty years will be substantially improved in productivity.

May we discuss in further detail the actual meaning of each of these items considered in terms of food. The nourishing power of sugar beets themselves may be judged by the following table, which may be new to the minister:

One acre of sugar beets will nourish 8 people for one year.

One acre of potatoes will nourish 4 people for one year.

One acre of wheat will nourish 2·4 people for one year.

One acre of sugar beet by-products equals 2,962 pounds of nutrients.

One acre of alfalfa hay equals 2,178 pounds of nutrients.

One acre of sugar beets produces 17,337,500 calories of energy.

One acre of alfalfa produces 10,255,400 calories of energy.

One acre of barley produces 8,983,500 calories of energy.

These figures were given by T. George Wood, the superintendent of Canadian Sugar Factories Limited, in the book "Silver Sunshine", volume IV, page 3. The minister will not have time to take all this in at the moment, but he will realize from a careful study of these figures how serious the question is.

Sugar beets, including the leaves, slices and tops, yield a higher percentage of starch and protein than any other crop. In a memorandum prepared for the economic committee of the League of Nations F. O. Licht says:

Sugar beet culture inclusive of leaves, slices and tops, yields on the average a far higher proportion per hectare of starch equivalent and protein (76·70 and 3·51 metric quintals respectively) than any other crop.

That will be found in the brief submitted to the tariff board by the beet sugar industry, at page 25. The reference is 106-1939. The minister will notice that I am endeavouring to quote him authorities on whom he can absolutely rely, so he will know that what I am saying is in accord with the best information available to men.

What is the value of sugar? Sugar is one of the cheapest of foods. At page 23 of the 1944 report of the Alberta sugar beet growers we read:

The cost of 1,000 calories of some essential foods follows: Sugar will give a thousand calories at four cents, bread at 8·5 cents, potatoes at 10·33 cents, butter at 13·70 cents, bacon at 17·38 cents, cheese at 17·45 cents, milk at 44·29 cents, cabbage at 43·33 cents and round steak at 52·31 cents. I submit to the minister that there is some serious material upon which to reflect. Sugar is also cheaply and easily stored. It is probably about the only food that can be stored indefinitely with no danger of loss whatever. All we need to do is to keep it dry. With cement containers we can store sugar indefinitely. In times as uncertain as these how can we afford to permit ourselves to go without the protection derived from storing quantities of sugar? Sugar is cheaply and easily carried. It is imperishable. It can be used in a great variety of forms. It is a great preserving agent, being a powerful disinfectant.

Sugar preserves vitamins in making condensed milk, and in preserving fruits. Lest the minister doubt, let me tell him that he can find this information in "Sugar facts", June 15, 1948. Sugar used in frozen fruits retards development of yeasts and moulds and so reduces danger of fermentation. The use of frozen fruits is becoming very common today. It also preserves colour, flavour and aroma. The minister can confirm what I have said by consulting "Sugar facts", April, 1948.

Sugar goes to war. One of the things which has amazed me is the impunity with which succeeding ministers have disregarded the beet sugar industry, considering what danger we would be in in case of war. I have pointed this danger out since 1936, but apparently my warning has fallen on deaf ears, notwithstanding any experience we may have had in war, or the danger of coming wars.

What does sugar do in war? It is directly used in munitions, in synthetic rubber, as citric acid, as acetone, as industrial alcohol. It is the main emergency ration for fliers. It is used, if necessary, in the welding of sheet plates. The minister can verify that by reference to "Sugar facts", March 15, 1948. There is only one safe source that Canada has for sugar, and that is our beet sugar production.

The by-products of the beet sugar industry are first of all the beet tops. Beet tops are cured in one of three ways: first, by piling in the field in small piles and hauling from field to field; second, by piling in field as topped, hauling and piling in a lot adjacent to the feed yard and feeding from there; third, in siloing the fresh green tops. Beet tops are greatly relished by sheep and cattle. This can be verified by reference to "Silver Sunshine" fall, 1946, page 32. Mr. W. R. Hughes, L.N.I.D., beet growers' secretary, returning from a demonstration of the Keist beet harvester at Pocatello, Idaho, said that in that part of Idaho the growers claimed that when tops were taken fresh and crisp from that harvester they were easily siloed as topped, and that tops so handled and used for feed were just as valuable as the beets sold to the factory. Not only have you the value of the beets, but you have just as great value in the tops. Tops properly siloed are worth just as much as the beets; livestock prefer beet top silage above other feeds. These facts may be found in the booklet "Silver Sunshine", spring of 1948, page 22.

We come now to the by-product, beet pulp. This valuable stock feed is used either moist in the condition it is in right after the sugar is extracted, or dried after the moisture has been processed away. Dried beet pulp is very valuable feed. There is no other product on the market which possesses its virtue. It is both an appetizer and a conditioner. It makes cattle eat more of other food, digest it better and improve themselves in condition. Milk cows fed with it produce more milk per pound of feed consumed. Feeders fed with it gain weight faster and more flesh per pound of feed. Show cattle take on a bloom which cannot be produced as economically in any other way. This can be verified by referring to reference 106-39 at page 51. W. M. Hermis, R. E. Miller and R. D. Jones in Sugar Beet Bulletin, volume 5 (1941), No. 3 at paragraphs 61 to 63 say:

> A ton of siloed pulp replaced 139·9 pounds of ground barley, 636 pounds of alfalfa hay and 44·2 pounds of molasses.

See Alberta Sugar Beet Growers, 1941 report at page 27.

What is the value of the by-product molasses? Beet molasses consists of sucrose, 50 per cent by weight, soluble salts and water. It is rich in potash; it contains some nitrogen. Beet molasses is useful as a stock feed and as a fertilizer. It is useful for yeast making and distilling. It mixes well with dried beet pulp. This has also been discussed in reference 106-39 at page 52.

Molasses is used increasingly in chemical processes, according to Messrs. F. O. Licht in memoranda prepared for the economic committee of the league of nations, 1929, at page 25.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

It is used in connection with yeast. Molasses was declared chemicals by munitions and supply during the war, as is recorded in the 1941 report at page 12.

Let me stop and reason with the minister for just a minute or two. He sees all these tremendously valuable products which would be of outstanding importance in case of war, and yet he ignores the production of them.

A general idea of the value of beet by-products in stock feeding may be gained from the following: experiments at agricultural college at Bozeman, Montana, found that to produce a 300 pound gain on each of twenty-one head of 650-pound yearling cattle required 67·2 tons of wet pulp, 3·4 tons of beet molasses, 16·8 tons of cured dried tops, 8·4 tons of grain and 8·4 tons of alfalfa. That is referred to in the Alberta Co-operative Beet Growers 1938 report, page 10. Notice that every one of these ingredients used in feeding this stock, including the grain, comes directly either from the beets or from the rotation crops used in the production of beets.

The results are equally impressive in feeding dairy cattle. May I stop to comment on the dairy situation. In Canada we are in danger of being short of dairy products. There is no product in the Dominion of Canada that can produce milk to compare with beet pulp and beet tops. If we are to produce milk let us get the facilities with which our farmers can produce it. In Alberta in 1943 29,306 acres, averaging 10·20 tons an acre supported 32,000 cattle and 125,000 sheep and lambs according to C. O. Asplund in the 1943 Beet Growers' report at page 21. An almost incalculable amount of milk can be produced from the use of beet pulp and other by-products, alfalfa hay and sweet clover, together with a portion of grain.

May I summarize? Food and feed products from 25,000 acres: beets, 250,000 tons; sugar, 75,000,000 pounds; dried beet tops, 50,000,000 pounds; dried beet pulp 25,000,000 pounds; molasses, 20,000,000 pounds; grain equivalent of dried beet tops, 25,000,000 pounds; alfalfa hay equivalent and grain equivalent, 37,500,000 pounds of alfalfa hay and 11,500,000 pounds of grain.

A very heavy loss to Canada in one year! What could have motivated the Minister of Finance to inflict upon Canadians a loss as huge as this? Yet that is exactly what he did. Add to that consideration the salutary effect upon Canadian soil which would have resulted from raising these beets. Twenty-five thousand acres of sugar beets would cause a soil improvement crop rotation as follows: 25,000, multiplied by 5, or 125,000 acres of Canadian soil, according to an ordinary minimum crop rotation of five years; or 25,000 multiplied by 8, or 200,000 acres, according to the Lethbridge experimental station, which has a rotation of eight years consisting of two into beets, two into wheat, 3 into alfalfa, one into wheat. Thirty tons of manure would be applied once every eight years. See the 1939 Beet Growers' report, page 17.

Now suppose we produced Canadian beet sugar for 7,500,000 Canadians, which I submit to the minister is the absolute minimum that should be considered—how can we consider this nation safe, so far as sugar supplies are concerned, if we are not producing half enough for our own needs in times as dangerous as these? How is it that no kind of reasoning can get this into the minds of the men in charge of Canada's government? Canada, with her excellent adaptability for beet production, should be producing at least her own beet sugar for 7,500,000 people.

Sugar for 750,000 Canadians can be extracted from beets from 25,000 acres of good land. Sugar for 7,500,000 Canadians could be produced upon 10 times 25,000 or 250,000 acres of good Canadian land.

What would be the food production from such an amount of beet production? An acreage of 250,000 of beets, enough to produce the sugar needs of 7,500,000 people, would produce: beets, 10 multiplied by 250,000, or 2,500,000 tons; of sugar, 10 multiplied by 75,000,000 pounds or 750 million pounds. Dried beet tops, 10 multiplied by 50,000,000 pounds, or 500 million pounds; dried beet pulp, 10 multiplied by 25,000,000 pounds, or 250 million pounds; molasses, 10 multiplied by 20,000,000 pounds, or 200 million pounds; grain equivalent through dried beet tops, 10 multiplied by 25,000,000 pounds or 250 million pounds of grain; alfalfa hay and grain equivalent of dried beet pulp, 10 multiplied by 37,500,000 pounds of hay, 10 multiplied by 11,500,000 pounds of grain, or 375 million pounds of alfalfa hay equivalent and 115 million pounds of grain equivalent.

In addition to all these good things we could thus produce, under soil improvement rotations essential to produce such beets about 250,000 times 5, or 1,250,000 acres of land, would be improved towards the increase of food production for future years.

Canada has neglected the beet sugar industry. May I say to the minister that any minister of finance who cold-shoulders this industry does his country a serious disservice; and any government that tolerates its Minister of Finance cold-shouldering the beet sugar industry is also doing a disservice to Canada for the future as well as at the present time. Let that be borne fully in mind.

Mr. MacNICOL: They should encourage it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Undoubtedly. But all that the beet sugar industry gets from the present Minister of Finance, all that it has ever got from any of his predecessors since I have been a member of this house, is discouragement and apparently an endeavour to put something in the way of production, either to reduce or to discourage it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. JAENICKE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to the question raised by the Minister of Finance before the hon. member who has just resumed his seat spoke, and that is the question of the constitutionality of price control. I presume most hon. members who belong to the legal profession, as I do, will agree with the minister's opinion on the question of the constitutionality of price control, but with great respect to those opinions, and with great respect to the minister, I disagree.

I am not competent at the moment to compare the Australian constitution with our own British North America Act and I shall base my opinion on the British North America Act alone. It is my opinion that this parliament has jurisdiction in respect of anything which by inherent nature is of national importance. I think my learned friends in this house will agree with me that this is the trend of the latest decisions of the privy council, and it is my opinion that the question of price control is a subject which by its inherent nature is of national importance. Therefore it would be competent for this parliament to legisiate upon that subject. I simply rose to put my views on record with regard to this constitutional question of price control.

(Translation):

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): Mr. Chairman, the suggestions made in the house in connection with the prices committee report have on the whole a constructive value which cannot be overlooked.

However, I cannot say the same of certain criticisms made against the report. I do not agree with the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) who contends that the people are starving due to the rise in prices. The people may be worried on account of the present unsettled conditions throughout the world—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would the hon. member please speak a little louder?

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): —but Providence will undoubtedly help us overcome our present difficulties, as at the end of the war. Millions of persons were then working in war industries or serving in the armed forces. How many of them are unemployed today? National production has increased from 6 billions to 13 billions. When will we stop telling our people that they are on the verge of starvation and that they are unhappy, while in fact we are witnessing an era of unprecedented prosperity? Nor do I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who suggests that rigid enforcement of price and wage controls would solve our problems. No supervisory system will increase the worker's output while decreased production is the very cause of higher prices.

Mr. FOURNIER (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Hear, hear.

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): Moreover, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has just pointed out, it seems that these controls are a provincial responsibility. If so, I would suggest that the government hand this task back to the provinces.

Why did the government set up a committee on prices? In an attempt to find means of bringing down the cost of living.

Traders and manufacturers of various commodities were called before the committee so that it might find out whether any of them were exploiting the public.

Though not a member of the committee, I closely followed its proceedings, and my personal opinion is that many of its members honestly tried to do a useful piece of work in the public interest.

Unfortunately, others took advantage of their appointment to the committee to put either themselves or their political creed in the limelight.

If there was a time when the political ideologies of certain members of the house should have been kept completely in the background, it was during the sessions of the prices committee. Unfortunately, that is not what happened.

That was evidenced when the prices committee's report was brought in. Much of the criticism in the house about the report was based on destructive conclusions concerning private enterprise.

I note that such destructive criticism has come mostly from people who would not know the first thing about industrial management.

The sole purpose of many of those speeches —or I should say ravings—was to make out industry as a parasite, a leech feeding on the blood of its people.

To the gentlemen whose philosophy aims solely at establishing a socialist regime in this country, I ask this one question: "What has allowed Canada to develop into one of the most beautiful countries in the world, if not private enterprise?"

Mr. FOURNIER (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Hear, hear.

Mr. DIONNE (Beauce): Why then seek to cast odium on people whose sole ambition is to produce for the benefit of their country?

And those great reformers, who take up more than half the time of the house, why don't they go to the root of the evil?

Working men appeared before the committee. Were they questioned about things they knew? Were they asked why building costs are so high nowadays, when obviously such costs absorb most of the liquid assets of potential owners? Were they asked why they only lay 350 bricks a day at wages ranging from $1.20 to $1.50 an hour, as compared to 1,000 to 1,500 bricks a day at only 60 cents an hour a few years ago?

No such questions were put to them.

It might be told that no building tradesmen appeared before the committee, but I can reply that the example I have just given with respect to bricklayers applies to every field of activity.

If the practised critics we have in the house had had the courage to put such questions, they would have made themselves unpopular, and of course that is what we seek above all to avoid in this house. Some party members in this house have no more concern for the public weal than for the first pair of shoes they ever wore in their native land, beyond the seas.

Does a member believe he is true to his mandate when he adopts such a course of action? Does he believe he is doing a service to the working class, in representing its members as wretched people who are shamefully exploited?

Is that conducive to the resoration of harmony among the Canadian people? Will it bring about the solving of the many problems we are facing in these troubled times, engendered by the most terrible war that has ever devastated the world?

We are often enough taken to task in this house for not reading the debates. I shall answer for the benefit of some among us: let us make the debates less dull if we want them to be read.

(Text):

Mr. NICHOLSON: I cannot consent to the decrease of $2,869,000 in this vote this year without offering a word of protest. I have been among the members of the house who have had words of praise for the work of the wartime prices and trade board since it was originally set up. In reply to the comments made by the minister this morning in connection with the referendum in Australia, I might say that if the people in Australia had had as happy an experience with their wartime prices and trade board as we have had with ours, the results of the referendum might have been different.

I think it would be extremely difficult to convince the majority of the people in Canada that to continue the wartime prices and trade board and subsidies for a longer period is not in the public interest. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre yesterday referred to an item that is of interest in homes where there are infants who cannot be brought up on human milk. He mentioned two cans of beef which were sold at the beginning of June for twenty-nine cents. The price of those two cans now is forty-two cents, an increase of forty-five per cent in this one item from June 1 until the end of June. I know that beef prices have gone up, but I would be surprised if the beef used in the manufacture of this product had been bought since the increase. If you had a wartime prices and trade board functioning as that board functioned during the war, enlisting the co-operation of consumers all across Canada, you would have some protection for the consumer, and you would not have a forty-five per cent increase in this one item in the month of June without action being taken.

The members of this group have spoken about possible action of the government following the report of the prices committee, but I am afraid that few in parliament or out of it will expect any vigorous action as a result of this report. I might remind the committee that two years ago, just in the closing days of the session, on going into supply, I had the privilege of moving an amendment in connection with the milk subsidy. The motion was:

> This house desires to record its opinion that consideration should be given to the continuance of the milk subsidy so as to ensure adequate return to milk producers and make possible the consumption of milk for the nutrition of the Canadian people without any further increase in the price thereof to the consumers.

Hon. members will recall that a majority of the members who were in parliament that day supported this amendment. The government promised to give consideration to the expression of opinion of the house, and consideration was given; but nothing was done to establish subsidies or to ensure that the consumers would be able to consume as much milk as before, without an increase in cost.

It is exceedingly difficult for the average consumer or producer in Canada to understand why the government can end the year with such a large surplus and cannot find ways and means to provide subsidies for essential commodities. During one period in the war, more than a million of our youngest and strongest people were in our war services and war industries, and we were giving large quantities of food as mutual aid. But at that time we were able to consume more milk, butter and eggs in our homes than we did before the war, and more than we are consuming now. With so many of our veterans home, and with no disaster in most parts of Canada, with exception of British Columbia, to interfere with our production, why it should be necessary to cut down our consumption of many of these foodstuffs is surely a matter of concern to the Minister of Finance.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I must register my word of protest. I should like the minister to give the committee some information with regard to the provision that has been made for historical documents to report on the work of the wartime prices and trade board. I might indicate that at some time we hope to form the government in Canada; and I am sure that the experience of the wartime prices and trade board during those years will be most useful. I have been disturbed a number of times when I have tried to get information from the wartime prices and trade board, to find that more consideration has not been given to preparing documentary information that should be available to all members of parliament. Would the minister indicate what staff is now working on the compilation of documentary material which will be available to Canadians now and in years to come, dealing with the work of the board?

Mr. ABBOTT: In direct answer to the last question, I think there are three people devoting full time to the work referred to by my hon. friend, and of course their work is supplemented by that of some other members of the staff. The reports of the board are public documents, but in addition a complete and I think accurate historical record of the work of the board during the war years is being compiled in accordance with privy council instruction. As will be the case with other documents, it is to be deposited in the office of the privy council to form a permanent record in case of future need.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Has the government power to reduce, by order in council, without legislation, the tariff, the excise tax or the sales tax?

Mr. ABBOTT: In connection with the special excise tax put on last fall, as I said in a statement I made here some time ago, it may be removed by proclamation, directed by order in council. That is under section 5 of the act, I think, which I quoted in the house. With respect to certain tariff items I believe specific provision is made to lower the tariffs by executive order. I am not too conversant with the technical provisions of the tariff act. Then of course it is always open to remit duties under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. The general rule with respect to the removal of taxes, of course, is that they are made the subject matter of a budgetary presentation and discussion in the house.

Mr. FULTON: Though we do not all talk about profiteering as much as my hon. friends to the immediate left, and we do not ascribe the whole of the price increase in recent months to that cause, I think we are all as interested as they are in preventing profiteering and in prosecuting those who charge unjust and unreasonable prices. Would the minister give us some account of the working of the just and reasonable clause under the present powers of the wartime prices and trade board. As I understand it they have power to initiate action whenever in their view prices have been fixed which are unreasonable and unjust. What prosecutions have been launched under that provision in the last twelve months, and what steps have been taken to see that full use is made of that clause? I take it the procedure is to bring actions in the courts and leave it to the courts to determine whether the prices really are unjust and unreasonable.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. ABBOTT: The most recent and up to date information on that point is contained in the report of the prices committee, so hon. members have that. Speaking from memory I think about twelve prosecutions have been instituted within the comparatively recent past. There have been two or three convictions so far—

Mr. MARTIN: Three.

Mr. ABBOTT: —and the other cases are sub judice. Some other investigations are proceeding. If my hon. friend would like more up-to-date information I can get it a little later.

While I am on my feet, what is the wish of the committee with respect to sitting from one o'clock until two o'clock, as was done yesterday? I do not make any positive suggestion; I am in the hands of the committee. If the committee would like to do so I am quite prepared to continue.

Mr. GREEN: The official opposition are ready to sit right through.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would meet my own wishes.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think a compromise on one hour might be more acceptable; sit until two and then rise for an hour.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is entirely agreeable so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN: In order to make sure of the procedure, is it unanimously agreed that the committee shall sit until two o'clock?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. FULTON: The report of the prices committee shows that twelve prosecutions have been launched. I understand there have been three convictions and other cases are pending.

Mr. MARTIN: Nine cases pending.

Mr. FULTON: That only covers the period since the committee began its sittings. When the minister gives the further details, will he let us know what investigations the board is undertaking on its own, independently?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have sent out to see if I can get that information. Some investigations are pending, but I am trying to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. FULTON: When the minister does that, will he also cover the procedure followed in bringing these matters before the courts?

Mr. ABBOTT: In the month of May there were 7,319 investigations; and since we have a staff of 175 investigators, that represents an average of 42 investigations per man. This indicates that the staff of the board are constantly checking these matters when complaints are received. The method of initiating prosecutions is the usual method; that is to say, an official of the board makes a complaint in the magistrate's court, a summons is issued and counsel is retained by the board to prosecute the case. Counsel, of course, is appointed by the Minister of Justice. Prosecutions of all types in May totalled 127.

Mr. FULTON: Under the just and reasonable clause?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; that is all kinds of prosecutions, for price infractions or whatever they may be. Whether the twelve mentioned were all in May, I am not in a position to say.

Mr. FULTON: What I had in mind in connection with the procedure followed in bringing these matters before the courts really was this. Does the board, in making its investigations and laying these charges, do so in any sense as a deterrent, where they think there is simply reasonable ground for supposing a price is unjust and unreasonable, with a view to deterring others from charging similar prices? Or do they only prosecute in a bare minimum of cases, where they are certain there are unjust and unreasonable prices?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have discussed the general principles with the officials of the board. Let me say the board is not using these prosecutions as a form of terrorism. I told them prosecutions should be instituted only when they are satisfied that the evidence provides a good prima facie case. They need not have a case which, let us say, is beyond question; not many cases would fall into that category. It is the duty of the courts to determine whether a case is good or bad; but I think there is a duty on the board not to bring a man before the courts on a penal charge of this kind unless there is a good prima facie case. These provisions are not and should not be used as a means of persecution. Is that what my hon. friend had in mind?

Mr. FULTON: Yes; and I entirely agree. Therefore it seems to me one would be justified in saying that, while the board is not too narrowly restricted in the cases it brings forward, that there has been only this comparatively small number of prosecutions under that provision is at least indicative of the fact, and certainly shows the board is satisfied, that the profiteering aspect has not had the effect on the increase in prices that is sometimes made out.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is indicated in the report of the prices committee, which indicated that so-called profiteering was not a significant factor in the increase in prices.

Mr. FULTON: The minister said there were some 7,000 investigations in May. Was that a typical month?

Mr. ABBOTT: There were 7,300 odd in May, and I am told it was fairly typical.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister has not had an opportunity to put his case before the country in connection with the application for consideration this spring of the beet sugar producers. I am going to ask a few questions which will enable him to give the producers the answers to the questions they want to have answered.

The first question is: Did Mr. S. R. Noble recommend on November 2 that the sugar ceiling price be advanced to $1.15 in order to give beet sugar true parity with cane?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course I am not the expert on sugar that the hon. member for Lethbridge is. I listened with interest to his speech and I shall have to study at another time the figures which he gave. I do not suppose there is any hon. member who has a greater knowledge of the beet sugar business than he has. This is a large enterprise in his constituency. The increase in the ceiling price of sugar which took place last November was in line with the increase in world prices. My recollection is that at the same time we restored the normal duties under the tariff which gave some protection to the domestic producer of beet sugar. I do not know whether I can say anything further on the point raised.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am afraid the minister was not able to hear just what I asked. Did Mr. S. R. Noble recommend on November 2 that the ceiling price on sugar be increased to $1.15 in order to give beet sugar parity with cane?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I do not think Mr. Noble recommended that. The recommendation I received was from the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board. The action taken would be the responsibility of the government on the advice of the board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The information which I have, which probably has not come to the minister, is that Mr. S. R. Noble did so recommend. I think he deserves credit for that action, which to some extent makes up for his past misdeeds. I have another question. Did Mr. K. W. Taylor grant an increase of only $1, refusing the $1.15 recommended by Mr. Noble?

Mr. ABBOTT: The increase was one cent a pound. That was the amount recommended to the government by the chairman of the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to know why Mr. Taylor refused to accept the recommendation of Mr. Noble to the extent of 15 cents per hundred. I should like to find out the underlying principle. The beet sugar industry would like to find out what was behind the government's madness. I would not like to say that there was some ulterior motive—

Mr. ABBOTT: Certainly not that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: —but when Mr. Noble recommended $1.15, I should like to know why Mr. Taylor cancelled or refused that and granted only $1.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that there was no formal recommendation from Mr. Noble of $1.15. Mr. Taylor could not overrule a recommendation which he did not receive.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I have given the information I have. I wanted to give Mr. Noble all the credit that was due, because I have said some rather harsh things about him in the past. I still think that he recommended an increase of $1.15, and I still want to know why Mr. Taylor limited the increase to $1, why beet sugar was not brought up to parity.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think Mr. Taylor felt that was the appropriate amount by which the ceiling should be increased. Sugar is a commodity in use in every household in Canada, and it was felt that a one cent per pound increase was appropriate.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What considerations were in the minds of Mr. Taylor and his advisers? I am going to ask a few questions to help the minister to see why our minds are full of questions.

Did S. R. Noble tell a delegation of beet sugar producers on January 19, 1948 that the average f.o.b. island cost of raw cane sugar was $4.81; that the duty was 82 cents; the average freight, 50 cents; the cane refining spread, $1.95, or a total of $8.08?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sorry, I have no information on that matter.

Mr. BLACKMORE: My information is that Mr. Noble did give that information to the beet growers. In fact I have a wire to that effect. A copy of the wire was sent to the minister; and I do not blame the minister for not remembering it. The wire was sent to him on February 11, 1948, and those facts were set out. If the minister looks through his files he will probably find the wire. Did Mr. S. R. Noble tell the same delegation that $8.08 was 19 cents above the current refined selling price? My information is that he did.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have no information as to what Mr. Noble may have told that meeting.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What is the present refined selling price? Is it still $8.08, or is it $7.89?

Mr. ABBOTT: There has been no change since November 18.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then it must be $7.89. Is it not a fact that there is a 19-cent subsidy on cane sugar? The minister says that he is not willing to give a subsidy on beet sugar.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would not think that there would be any subsidy to the cane producers, because the laid-down cost varies from month to month.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the laid-down refined cost of cane sugar should be found to be 19 cents higher than the price being paid for beet sugar in Canada, then in effect the cane sugar producers in Santo Domingo are being given a 19-cent subsidy when Canadian producers of beet sugar were denied a subsidy.

Mr. ABBOTT: There has been no subsidy paid to any cane sugar producer. We have bought our supplies of cane sugar in accordance with international arrangements at the going rate.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If you bought cane sugar for 19 cents more than you could have bought beet sugar, if you had been willing to make an agreement, then in effect you were paying a subsidy.

Mr. ABBOTT: As my hon. friend knows, sugar is bought from different sources. The Santo Domingo sugar to which he has referred is higher than the Cuban sugars.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The astonishing thing to any person who thinks the way I think, and I think I sometimes think straight—the astonishing thing to the people whom I represent is that the minister should be willing to go into the Santo Domingo market and bargain for hundreds of thousands of tons of sugar at a price when he is unwilling to go into the Canadian market and bargain with the beet sugar producers for a similar price. They were left to sell on the world market, but he was quite willing to give a guaranteed price to the Santo Domingo producer. How does the minister work that out to sense?

Mr. ABBOTT: The sugars to which my hon. friend refers were bought through the British ministry of food as an open market operation, just the same as any other commodity would be purchased. Certain quantities would be bought in certain areas. I am not a technical expert on the purchase of sugar, but I am informed that that is the procedure followed. The same procedure was followed in connection with the purchase of sugar right through the war.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I cannot understand why the minister should give a certain price for sugar to the cane producer in a United States dollar area and not be able to give a similar guarantee to the beet sugar producers so that their operations could be made secure.

Mr. POULIOT: May I tell the hon. member for Lethbridge that that is one of the fallacies of imperial trade. My hon. friend knows very well that the cost price of sugar in Havana is much less than it is in any British possession. It is the duties that make the difference in cost. Last year I asked a question in the house which was answered by the then parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, now the Minister of Fisheries. He told me that the price of sugar from British possessions was lower than the price of sugar from Havana, and that was true, not taking the duty into account. It is the duties on empire trade which make us pay much more for sugar. The British preference is a fallacy. I hope my hon. friend will understand that. I am all for the beet sugar industry, but I wonder whether beet sugar can sweeten things just as well as cane sugar does.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Just as well.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not know. I have been to some stores and bought beet sugar and I had to put great tablespoonfuls of it in my coffee to sweeten it.

Mr. LOW: The best chemist in the world cannot tell the difference between them.

Mr. POULIOT: It was not a chemist but my palate that told me. I found that its sweetening properties were just an illusion. Perhaps I am mistaken; I am not an expert like my hon. friend. But I want him to admit that imperial trade is a fallacy. The high duty on foreign sugar is imposed just so that we will pay less for sugar that comes from British possessions. Why should we buy our sugar from the British ministry of food? The government there is making socialist experiments. Why should we buy our sugar from them? They control sugar, they control tea, they control everything, and afterwards they complain of poverty. We should deal, as we did before, with private merchants, and then Canada would be much better off. But as it is now we have to deal in a socialist manner with a socialist government. I am against it, and I trust I shall have the support of the hon. member for Lethbridge, who is so strong against socialism. This is the time to show his sincerity by protesting against the purchase of sugar from the British ministry of food. I hope he will. We know that he is sincere, and now that he has the opportunity to demonstrate his sincerity, let him seize it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is not so much a matter of sincerity as a matter of knowledge and understanding.

Mr. POULIOT: I speak in black and white.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Exactly. But from my knowledge and understanding of this question I could not possibly agree with the hon. member. What I object to is that Canada should buy sugar from Santo Domingo, a United States dollar country, and pay United States dollars for that sugar, and buy it at higher prices than she is willing to pay to our own Canadian producers.

Mr. POULIOT: It is on account of the customs duties.

Mr. BLACKMORE: No, it is not. I shall be glad to discuss that privately with my hon. friend, but just now I want the minister to answer two or three questions.

The Canadian Sugar Factories Limited will go through my constituency at the beginning of the year and say to the farmers: We will pay you a certain price for all the beets you can produce on so many acres. It is definitely agreed before you plant the seed that you are to get a guaranteed minimum price, and then we will allow you to participate in the profits we make as we dispose of the sugar, the beet pulp and other by-products.

What I cannot see is why the government of Canada cannot make a similar agreement with the producers of beet sugar. Why cannot the government say to the Canadian sugar factory in Raymond: If you are going to pay your farmers a certain price for beets, we will pay you a certain price for sugar, which will constitute your cost of production and a fair profit, and you may be positively certain that every pound of sugar you produce you will be able to sell to the government at a certain minimum price. You may get more than that minimum price, but not less; and you will be able to sell all of your sugar.

That is a perfectly sound proposition for the government to make. Can the minister say why the government should not make such an offer today?

Mr. ABBOTT: Last November I stated that the government proposed that sugar should be sold at its average laid-down cost, and that will be carried out. As to the views of the beet sugar producers, it might be well if I were to read to the committee a resolution passed by the association and quoted by me in a letter to the secretary of the association on March 3. Here is what the association resolved:

> And whereas it is the considered opinion of the directors of this association that quick recovery and normal expansion of this important agricultural industry can only be brought about by return to a completely free sugar economy, without any government buying and selling of raw cane sugar and dictating sales prices of refined sugar;
> Now therefore be it resolved to ask the government and all members of parliament to ask the sugar beet districts that the last remnants of sugar control be abolished by March 31, 1948, at the latest, when the emergency powers of the sugar administrator expire;
> And be it further resolved to request, if the government is long on raw cane sugar bought, that these quantities be liquidated by the sugar administrator to the cane sugar refineries according to consumption requirements at prevailing market prices including statutory duties, without any further powers of control as to imports, purchase or sales prices, in the same way as any other importer would do.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member for Lethbridge knows that the price of foreign goods is the cost price plus the customs duty.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Of course I know that.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't take all day.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will withdraw from the field if anyone else wants to take it.

Mr. LENNARD: I do not want to get the same results you do. I want to get out of this house.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I was elected to take care of the country's business, and when the country's business is finished I am glad to go out of the house.

Mr. LENNARD: Then make it snappy.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am trying to make it snappy, but I am calling attention to one of the most difficult problems in Canada and one of the most intricate.

Mr. LENNARD: I know all that, but make it snappy.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. BLACKMORE: Notwithstanding what those people asked for in the resolution the Minister of Finance has read, they did ask for quite another thing at another time. They submitted a letter to the minister in which they asked for specific things, and the minister will bear me out in this. I quote from the "Recommendation for guaranteed price to Canadian sugar beet producers for 1948 crop," a brief submitted January 20, 1948 by the Canadian Sugar Beet Producers Association, of Chatham, Ontario. At the end of that document they make the following request:

Mr. ABBOTT: I know the request was that the imported price of cane sugar—

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is right, but it must be borne in mind that this is just about as it is with other agricultural products. When the farmer gets the chance to make a little money because of the war, the dominion government puts its hand in and says, "No, you cannot take any advantages that derive from the war." Everybody else can, but the farmer cannot. It is the same with the beet sugar producer. Just as soon as prices were good during the war they could not get any more than just a fixed price. The government was able to control prices to prevent their making what they ought to have been able to make. Now, just as soon as prices begin to fall, what beet producers want to know is whether the government is prepared to step into the picture and prevent their receiving possible losses.

Mr. ABBOTT: I made the statement some months ago that the government did not propose to sell any kind of sugar on a subsidized basis.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Chairman, I want to read now the recommendation of this organization. They asked that the government—

> 1. Guarantee the Canadian producer a fixed price for his 1948 crop made up as follows—sugar (at San Domingo guaranteed price) $5 per hundred pounds, freight 40 cents per hundred pounds, duty $1.29 per hundred pounds and refiners spread $1.95 per hundred pounds, a total of $8.64 per hundred pounds at Canadian refining centres. This price to be adjusted at outside points to conform with the seasonal winter or summer freight rates.
> 2. Restore the fixed valuation and at a price of $5.65 per hundred pounds.

They also asked that the minister make an announcement not later than January 31, 1948, so that everybody, producers and farmers as well, would know where they were. If the minister wishes to read one of the resolutions that he has, I shall read another one.

The minister said that he does not favour subsidization. I am not prepared to oppose that principle if everybody is given a fair deal; but to subsidize cane producers in Santo Domingo and pay them good United States dollars when he could buy his sugar from Canada and pay in good Canadian dollars is simply not reasonable from any standard whatsoever.

Mr. POULIOT: I congratulate the hon. member for Lethbridge on his perseverance in advocating assistance to beet growers, and I am sure the minister realizes the importance of his remarks. He has done well. He has the ear of the house. He has made a fine speech, and he deserves congratulations from all for his remarks on the beet sugar industry.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Thank you.

Mr. LOW: I shall see that you get ten pounds of beet sugar for that.

Mr. PROBE: In what fields does the wartime prices and trade board still operate?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is still a ceiling price on sugar which we have just been discussing, also cane molasses, butter, salad and cooking oils other than corn oil and olive oil; copra and palm kernels; cabbages and carrots; new potatoes. These are under markup control; grapes, oranges, grapefruit, lemons, limes and tangarines are also under markup control; canned fruit juices, imported fruit juices are under markup control, the laid down price plus an approved markup. Soap, soap based detergents of all kinds and soap compounds; primary forms of iron and steel; certain grains, flaxseed, rapeseed, sunflower seed, domestic shortening, flax and oils of vegetable and marine origin are under control. These are the main items. There are some others—residential rents, of course, boarding house charges, and so on.

Mr. PROBE: That covers the major field?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. PROBE: Will the minister state the present position in respect to the exceptions in the domestic rental field control?

Mr. ABBOTT: Everything is under control. The general rental ceiling is the ceiling which prevailed in November, 1941. New construction is in this position: Houses built since January 1, 1947 are completely free from control. That was announced some time ago. Other building construction is under control, but there may be varying ceilings, depending on the time of construction—in other words, buildings which were constructed between November, 1941, and January 1, 1947. These new buildings had a rent established by the rental control administration as being the fair and reasonable rental for these premises, and that rent, when established, constituted the ceiling. Then there was the increase in rentals a year ago last May for landlords who were prepared to give a two-year lease. They were authorized to increase their rents by ten per cent.

As the committee is aware, there is a provision where in cases of exceptional hardship those who purchased their properties prior to January 1, 1947—I am speaking from memory—may apply to the rental commissioners who have been set up through the country. If the commissioner is of the opinion that the landlord's need is greater, he can make an order giving the owner possession of the premises. That is a broad outline of the present position of rental controls.

Mr. PROBE: With respect to that portion of it, besides the fixing of the rental itself there is the mobility of the tenant, shall we say, which is the point here under consideration. The wartime prices and trade board, with the help of the court, may decide whether or not the tenant may retain possession of a property or must move within the categories mentioned by the minister. The minister has made no statement recently with respect to the future of this domestic rental control matter. In the meantime many persons who have bought houses, hoping to enjoy possession of them themselves, are being denied that privilege by the wartime prices and trade board. In effect they are subsidizing the tenants without any assistance from the government, because the rental of the property which they bought and which they cannot have is fixed, and almost invariably they are paying rent in an uncontrolled situation or a higher rent. I think there is an element of subsidy there which the government is not meeting, but which the owner who purchased the property for occupancy himself is meeting.

I am in agreement with government policy to control rentals, but the government has not gone far enough in this field. The government has not alleviated the situation of those people who did not have shelter. Does the minister consider that the government, under the prices stabilization corporation or through some other agency, should meet the difference in rental of a bona fide purchaser who cannot get into his own house and the rental which he is receiving from his property? That has been going on for six months or so. He cannot get possession of his property. If he could get possession of his property, perhaps we would not receive the number of letters that we do. This is a problem which to me is the responsibility of the minister to meet in some way. What does the minister propose to do about it?

Mr. ABBOTT: This whole question of rental control has to be pretty carefully considered. It is one of the things to which I have been giving a great deal of thought, for reasons which I think the committee will appreciate. The dominion government cannot indefinitely continue in the field of rental and eviction control. One of the fundamental features of personal and property rights is that a man should be able to get into a house he owns if he wants to. It is an extremely difficult question. The prices committee has recommended that consideration be given to alleviating cases of hardship. That was done in certain cases by the setting up of these commissioners, and they have worked satisfactorily. I think it is possible that that may be somewhat extended, but certainly the dominion government could not consider going into the field of subsidizing individual owners of property because they cannot get into their houses to live in them. That would be an almost impossible task for any central government to assume. All I can say on the question of rent control is that when I have a little more free time, after the termination of the session, it is about No. 1 on my agenda for a little careful thinking as to what can and should be done in this very difficult field.

Mr. PROBE: Is the government definitely opposed to low-rental subsidies in general? Is that the present policy of the government, to oppose subsidies to low rentals?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a completely different question and one on which I am not prepared to make a statement at the moment. It is different from the matter of rent control, which unfortunately is the responsibility of my department as part of the wartime controls. The question of subsidizing low-rental housing is another and very much larger question which does not relate to the emergency situation or the war situation. That is something which, if adopted, would be part of a permanent policy.

Mr. PROBE: In the emergency which still exists, and which is not likely to be eliminated for a long time as far as house rentals are concerned, subsidies are in effect being paid now by small landlords, and the government has recognized its own obligation in other fields of emergency but apparently is neglecting this one. I realize that these commissions are establishing the relative need as far as the bodies of their tenants are concerned; that is, the four-member family has a greater need for certain space than the two member family. That is simple. But where a family has to pay $60 a month for space and is not receiving more than $25 for its own space, that family is in effect losing $35 a month owing to government policy. The government has an obligation to these individuals. I am sympathetic to the minister because of the headaches he will have, but at the same time he also has an obligation to solve this problem. That is why he is a cabinet minister. That is why he gets the salary he does, and that is why all these other things that go to the Hon. Douglas Abbott do go to him—because he has the ability to cope with them.

Mr. ABBOTT: I may assure my hon. friend that while there are many interesting features about being a cabinet minister, in my own case the financial return is not an attraction.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

91. To provide for expenses of the cabinet committee on dominion provincial relations, $30,000.

Mr. FULTON: It is two years since the dominion provincial conference was held. What functions does this committee discharge?

Mr. ABBOTT: The initial or preparatory expenses were somewhat heavier in previous years and were substantially in excess of current requirements because of additional staff and accountants required for the compilation of data and financial statistics. The current requirements relate only to the work of keeping the statistics up to date, and this results in a substantial reduction in the current year's provision. It is a small continuing organization to keep public finance statistics and data in connection with the various governmental bodies in Canada, dominion, provincial and municipal, readily available in the event of discussions with other governmental bodies relating to matters of common interest.

Mr. FULTON: Does it co-ordinate work in regard to the tourist industry?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. It is a purely statistical group, a fact-compiling group.

Mr. FULTON: Can the minister explain why it is that this year to date there have been no payments to provinces under the dominion-provincial taxation agreements? In the statement of the comptroller of the treasury for the first two months of the fiscal year, at this time last year there was $63,000,000 paid under this agreement, whereas this year there has been no payment. Is there any change in the method of payment?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot answer that question offhand. The comptroller is not here. The payments are made quarterly. The explanation must be that the particular payment has not fallen due in these two months. The statutory provision for these payments, as my hon. friend will see, is contained on page 12.

Mr. FULTON: The payments are made quarterly, not monthly?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. It may be that the payment is due at the end of June.

Item agreed to.

General—
934. To provide for the expenses of a commission to be appointed under part I of the Inquiries Act, to inquire into prices and related subjects, as recommended by the special committee on prices, $50,000.

Mr. GREEN: What sort of commission is to be set up to carry on this inquiry into prices?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not in a position to answer that at the moment. The matter is still under consideration by the government. This item was put in in view of the recommendation contained in the prices report, and of the probable adoption of the report. I decided that an item should be included in the supplementaries and this $50,000 appears in consequence. Assuming the committee is set up, these funds will be available for its work.

Mr. GREEN: Committee or commission?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should have said commission. It will be a commission under the Inquiries Act. Whether it will consist of one commissioner or three, I am not yet able to say.

Mr. GREEN: Is it certain there is to be a commission?

Mr. ABBOTT: My understanding is that that is certain, yes. I think I can say that to my hon. friend. The precise way in which it will be established, whether there will be one commissioner or three, I cannot yet say.

Mr. SHAW: Possibly this is an appropriate place for me to make the few remarks I am about to make. Were the member for Peace River here I am sure he would once more register a strenuous objection to the fact that the estimates of the Department of Finance always come before the house in the dying hours of the session. This has happened before and it is happening again. We do not feel that at this late hour we should engage in a prolonged debate on fundamental financial policies. On the other hand, we feel that it is a most important subject. We urge the minister to give consideration at the next session to bringing his estimates before the house at an earlier date, and we also serve notice that when that is done we shall be prepared to engage in an extensive debate on fundamental financial policies which we consider to be so extremely important especially at this time.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to give that consideration. The reason the estimates are brought on towards the end, as a rule, though not always, is that opportunity for discussing financial policy occurs so frequently during the session. The outstanding example is of course in the presentation of the annual budget, when every member of the house is free to discuss such matters. He can voice his views as to government financial policy. During this session there have been many such opportunities. I have been on my feet putting some bill or other through nearly every day. I merely mention that as the reason why other departments are given the right of way.

Mr. SHAW: The only thing I would interject on that point is that on most occasions we are definitely restricted. When the minister finds himself on his feet, as he states, sponsoring a certain measure, it is not always possible for us to engage in debate on fundamental financial policy. I am merely serving notice that another year we will urge upon the government the necessity of bringing these estimates forward early, and will also assure the government that we shall be prepared to deal with that important subject.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to add one word in support of what the last speaker said. I think every word he has said is true. I should like to broaden out the reference to cover not merely finance estimates but those of other departments. This has been said a hundred times and I suppose it has happened a hundred times. I submit that it is an utterly unnecessary and inefficient method to adopt, to leave these things dragging until the last moment and find that everyone feels he has pressure on him not to speak.

Mr. ABBOTT: If hon. members opposite were a little more co-operative in allowing us to get into supply early in the session, it might make for more expeditious handling of the estimates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is not worthy of the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: This complaint is made every year—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Because this happens every year.

Mr. ABBOTT: —or this suggestion which goes out to the public, that the government is deliberately delaying the bringing down of the estimates. That is not so. The estimates are brought down early in the session. It is true that by reason of debate almost every time we go into supply, it takes some time to get the estimates down; and this year because of special legislation we may have been a little later in coming to consideration of the estimates. But I repeat that this impression which is created throughout the country that government expenditures are not carefully scrutinized because members cannot get up on a particular item and make a speech which has little to do with the item, is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I have said before on another occasion, the minister is a good advocate. When he speaks firmly and even a little bit vehemently, I always know he is a little bit dissatisfied about the thing he is advocating.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is only exasperating.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No one is anxious to exaggerate in any way. I shall not spend fifteen seconds of the committee's time. We all know what happens and why it happens. If we are honest, we will all admit that we would be inclined to do the same thing if we ourselves were ministers. But this practice is all wrong and should be changed. I suppose if we keep picking at it long enough, it will be changed.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

782. Departmental administration — further amount required, $67,639.

Mr. BLAIR: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that this matter has come up for consideration on the last day of the session when we are all in a hurry to get away. The increased grants brought in by the government are worthy of more discussion than they can receive in the last few hours of the session. The question of health is much more important than many of the other things we have been discussing and on which we have had prolonged speeches. This is something that vitally affects the people of the country. I think every hon. member will agree that this matter should have been opened for discussion, and that it was worthy of a day or two in comparison with some of the other things we have discussed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Censure the minister.

Mr. BLAIR: The minister promised full discussion on this matter when we should be discussing the items of the Department of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the supplementary estimates were to be brought in, we agreed at that time that there should be full discussion, and even if this is the last afternoon of the session, I feel we should not hurry over this matter. Not only is it something which vitally affects the people of this country; it entails the spending of $30,000,000 a year. Even at this late date we should spend more time on this matter; if some of these other questions were worthy of consideration, this is even more important because it affects every member of parliament and all the people of this country.

In May the Prime Minister announced increased grants for national health. We welcomed the introduction of a plan that would help out national health. The Progressive Conservative party, realizing this need, has long urged a broader program for national health and for increased grants. During the time I have been a member of this house, we have repeatedly drawn the attention of the members of the house to the urgent necessity of action to overcome the deficiencies in our national health services. No later than March of this year I spoke on this matter in the house; I stated that the time had come to enunciate and put into effect a national health program for Canada. I further stated that the objective plan of this party was one which would bring health services to every Canadian citizen regardless of race, economic status or geographical position.

A year ago I drew the attention of the house to the necessity of a national stocktaking with regard to health. There is nothing new in the program that has been introduced. We welcome it and we welcome the increased grants. I believe that every member of this house, regardless of his political affiliation, approves any measure which will cut down mortality rates and relieve human suffering. Consideration of national health measures and anything that will better the condition of the people in regard to national health should be far above any political considerations.

In introducing this policy the Prime Minister stated, as reported at page 3935 of Hansard:

> But what these expenditures may mean in the preservation of health, in the saving of human life, to say nothing of the lessening of human suffering and misery and not infrequently despair, is beyond calculation.

That is quite true, Mr. Chairman. But disease, death and suffering do not wait for a gradual extension of health services; nor have they waited until the government has taken action for the extension of health services. If this matter is so important now, it was important a week ago, a month ago, years ago. While life is within reach, it is cruelty to bar any opportunity to alleviate human suffering or reduce the danger of death.

Modern research is making tremendous progress in every major disease. Not only should we lend our efforts toward the elimination of disease and suffering, but in order to safeguard the state, we should make our people as healthy, physically and mentally, as we possibly can. There should be no geographic or economic boundaries in the opportunity for medical care. In the last hundred years we have made great progress and medical science has gradually brought disease under control. But it is unfortunate that the opportunity for treatment is not equal throughout the whole population. For that reason many people in Canada have not participated in the benefits medical science has provided over that period. In discussing this matter we must consider means by which these people may have the benefit of scientific advancement in the last century.

Today we have under consideration a limited plan; but while this plan is being discussed and put into operation, disease and suffering are still rampant throughout the country. That is going on at the very moment we are discussing these increased grants. Help is afforded by this legislation but during the time we are discussing it and during the time that will be required to bring it into effect, many preventable deaths will occur.

We are faced with two facts as far as health in Canada is concerned. These are facts which cannot be disputed, and I mentioned them at the time of the introduction of the estimates for national health and welfare. The first fact is that when our young men were called up for examination during the recent war some forty-two per cent were found unfit for service. If the proportion in that age group was as high as forty-two per cent at that time, the health conditions of other and older age groups must have been worse. The other fact to which I direct attention is that the infant death rate in Canada is 5·02 per thousand live births, while the comparable figure in the United States is 3·8.

On these and other grounds I am going to criticize the legislation now before us. Surely further active measures are necessary to cut down our mortality rates, beyond the increased grants announced by the Prime Minister. It is admitted that hospital and treatment facilities in Canada are inadequate, and that is borne out by the very fact of these new grants. But there is another fact we should consider, though I am not going to speak at any length on this matter. In connection with the defence of our country we must remember that the picture has changed a great deal as far as warfare is concerned. Civilians are now in the front line. The atom bomb has been discovered, and we have heard stories of germicidal and bacteriological warfare. We must not blind ourselves to the fact that this is a highly important matter in reference to national defence, and I think consideration of national health matters should be joined with that of national defence. In the war of the future these two matters will be joined together, so that the health of our civilians has become of great importance.

The other important matter as far as national defence is concerned is this alarming proportion of unfitness in our young men. If we are to build a strong nation we must have healthy people. While maternal mortality rates, infant mortality rates and mortality rates from various diseases have fallen, there are still many problems that should receive our active attention. I am sorry that today, in discussing what is probably the most important matter as far as our people are concerned, we have only a bare quorum of the house. I am going to cite some of these problems, and then it will become apparent that these health grants only touch their fringe. We are discussing grants involving an expenditure of $30,000,000. That is a great deal of money; yet this is a short-sighted policy, because sickness is costing the people of Canada, in loss of time, loss of production and the cost of treatment, $1 billion a year. So we have a comparison between $30,000,000 spent on this important matter which costs the people of Canada $1 billion a year. In view of that estimated cost, surely this policy is short-sighted.

Much has been overlooked in bringing down these grants, and many matters of vital importance have not been considered. I spoke of the infantile mortality rate in Canada, so let us consider the record in that regard. One would have thought the loss of these young Canadian citizens would be a matter of primary importance, but I fail to see anything in these grants or in any special grants to deal with this problem. In Canada we lose approximately 15,000 infants a year. In the last twenty years—and this is an amazing figure—that is from 1926 to 1945, we lost 345,000 babies. I believe every hon. member should fix that figure in his mind, so that next year, when we consider this question of national health and welfare, every hon. member will be aware of the great loss we have suffered in this way.

An analysis of these deaths shows that many of these young Canadian citizens could have been saved if they had been given an opportunity—and again I use that word "opportunity"—of adequate pre-natal and post-natal care. That is the answer. In previous speeches in this house I have stated the statistics of the various provinces with respect to the causes of death of these infants. The fact remains that we cannot afford to lose them, and we must do something about the matter.

It is now two o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARTIN: I wonder if the committee is not now disposed to sit continuously.

Mr. KNOWLES: We are prepared to agree to carry on if we can have some firm commitment as to the order of business. The point is that hon. members do have to leave the chamber now and then, and they would not like to miss something in which they are particularly interested.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We are ready to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have in mind now that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare is through with his supplementaries we shall take up those of the Secretary of State, which include one item covering the civil service commission, and public printing. Then the two main estimates remaining are legislation and the Prime Minister's office. But if any hon. member is out when a particular item is called, we can proceed with something else.

Mr. LENNARD: When do veterans affairs come in?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have committed myself to wait until the end of the afternoon, because one hon. member who is interested is not here.

Mr. GREEN: Does any item remain under Justice?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes; nine items in the supplementaries.

Mr. KNOWLES: Could it be left in this way, then, since we have found the Minister of Public Works very co-operative in these matters. Perhaps individual members might indicate the items in which they are interested, so that the minister will see that they are not called when such members happen to be out of the chamber.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would be agreeable.

Mr. BLAIR: There is also a grant for tuberculosis and this meets with my entire approval. Tuberculosis ranks high as the cause of death in our nation, it being seventh in the list. Unfortunately it is a disease of early life and sixty per cent of deaths from tuberculosis occur in the most productive age group of from twenty to fifty years. Sixty per cent of all tuberculosis cases entering hospitals are in that age group.

Not only that, it is an expensive disease. There is something in the nature of a new cure for tuberculosis by the use of streptomycin. This is provided for patients in veterans hospitals, but the ordinary civilian must pay for treatment. I had a case some months ago, and I found that it would cost $250 to give the patient a chance to fight this disease. The cost to the taxpayers for assistance to the family of a tuberculosis patient is $2,800. The average cost in loss of wages and hospital care for a wage earner is estimated at $5,000. Those two amounts total $7,800, and this does not take into account the lost production while the patient is in the hospital.

A comparison of the deaths per 100,000 in the dominion as a whole and in the nine provinces for the years 1921 and 1945 may be of interest. These statistics show what can be done in combating this disease. The figures are:

	1921	1945
Dominion of Canada	87·7	45·8
Quebec	123·2	71·7
New Brunswick	106·4	56·8
Nova Scotia	134	54·4
Prince Edward Island	143·8	45·7
British Columbia	77·7	38·6
Alberta	53·2	31·8
Saskatchewan	42·5	26·9
Manitoba	68·9	42·8
Ontario	71	25·3

Those figures clearly indicate that something has been accomplished in the fight against tuberculosis in the last twenty-five years. It is quite clear that more can be done. Given adequate grants, given help, we can fight this disease. We must remember that we are fighting one of the most expensive diseases that exist.

I come now to preventive medicine, especially as it concerns children. Sometimes we fail to recognize that many children die from diseases which could be prevented. Annually we lose 1,000 children from preventable diseases, and no one can estimate the value of 1,000 children. The main diseases in this class are diphtheria, scarlet fever and whooping cough, and they could all be prevented if the proper inoculation was carried out. Much has been done by the provincial health departments working with their own resources to wipe out these diseases, and it will be only a question of time before they are brought fully under control, provided that we have adequate funds. The money being spent is small in comparison with that spent in connection with other diseases.

Apart from the contagious diseases, infantile paralysis still ranks high in the causes of death in spite of all efforts to counteract it. We have no answer to infantile paralysis; but we hope that in the future, given funds for research, given help, many of these children now in hospital may be saved from the crippling effects of this disease.

I come now to diseases affecting adults, and this is of particular interest to hon. members. We are all accustomed to reading in the papers of sudden deaths from coronary and cardio-vascular diseases, which simply means diseases of the heart and blood vessels. These stand high in the causes of death in this country. Comparatively young men, some of whom are making a great contribution to Canadian affairs, are suddenly wiped out by heart attacks. This is a matter that demands scientific investigation because we know little of the causes of these fatal attacks. It may be many years before we find this out and many unnecessary deaths may occur. More money should be spent to provide diagnostic clinics in a fight against these diseases.

I come now to psychiatry. Many people in Canada cannot afford to have psychiatric treatment, and even if they could afford it there are few high-class psychiatrists available. Mental diseases are on the increase. Apart from the mental hospitals in the various provinces, very little has been done to control and check the onrush of these mental diseases. Then we come up against the question of cost. The government has had some experience so far as hospitalization for these diseases is concerned. I shall refer to that later.

The cost of maintaining mental patients in our hospitals is simply enormous. It is interesting to note that in 1931 there were 31,686 patients in mental hospitals, but by 1945 the number had increased to 48,056. It must be noted that the population in our mental hospitals is growing at a faster rate than the general population of Canada. There is a marked shortage of beds for mental cases, and this population would be much larger if the mental hospitals could take all who should be admitted for treatment. There is a shortage of 10,000 mental hospital beds in Canada today.

Mr. ABBOTT: We estimate 24,000.

Mr. BLAIR: I am sorry the figure is so much larger. The figure I had was 10,000. Everyone does not agree as to how urgent the necessity for treatment is; but if the minister says that 24,000 beds should be provided I accept that figure, because there is no dispute so far as the minister and I are concerned as to the necessity for more beds for mental patients.

Let us look at the expenditures in Canada for mental hospitals. In 1945 the total expenditure was $22,950,837. That is the last figure I have. In the matter of costs, to this might be added 14,000,000 man-days lost in production, or an equivalent of $50,000,000. I have mentioned that we had forty-two per cent of our young men unfit, and, Mr. Chairman, of that forty-two per cent, at least one man in ten was rejected from psychiatric causes, and many medical discharges were for the same reason. Many estimates have been made of the number of Canadians who are ill of mental disease, and the cost in loss of production and maintenance would run into a staggering figure. The grant announced by the Prime Minister, while it is a help, does not begin to cover the problem. We can attack mental sickness as we have attacked physical sickness. We need a program of mental hygiene to cut down this terrific human waste. The place for early action is to deal with mental hygiene in children.

I have spoken in this house at different times regrading cancer, and there is no occasion to repeat those figures as we are all conversant with them. Cancer occupies second place in the causes of death. From 14,000 to 15,000 people in Canada die of cancer each year. There are two points I wish to make. First, thousands who would otherwise die of cancer are cured by early treatment. As many as 6,000 lives out of those 15,000 could be saved for this country each year if given an opportunity of early diagnosis and treatment. The question of opportunity is the big thing so far as saving the lives of these people is concerned.

I am going to touch shortly on venereal diseases. There is a grant for that purpose in the minister's increased estimates. The provinces are concerned with the actual treatment, and many of them are doing excellent work in the treatment of venereal disease. It is a hard problem to deal with. But the federal government should give leadership in planning control measures with the provinces and, aided by dominion grants, should co-operate with the provinces in their activities. That has been done, but the grant of $500,000 yearly will not compare with the figures I shall give of the number of cases. These figures are startling, but I feel I should give them here. In 1946 the number of cases of syphilis reported in Canada was 15,217, and the same statistics show 26,286 cases of gonorrhea. Those are reported cases. It would be impossible to give the complete effect of those statistics, but it is sufficient to say that they add to invalidism and institutional care. Money could be saved here.

The other remark I wish to make before I leave the subject is this. I call the attention of the minister to the fact that pre-marital tests for venereal disease should be made compulsory.

Now a word regarding sickness in industry. There again the figures are astounding. It has been estimated that sickness costs the wage earners of Canada $135 million each year, and at the same time it costs the employers $200 million each year. We must consider the health of our industrial workers from the point of view, not only of their own welfare but of the welfare of the state in sustaining production. Many industrial firms in Canada have health programs for their employees and have found the value of health services.

Nutrition—I am not referring to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that it is now twenty minutes past two and we have not had our lunch—must receive consideration if we are to better the physical condition of our children. In that forty-two per cent of our young men who were found unfit we must give consideration to nutrition, to which in the past we have given too little attention. We have not regarded it as important as some other things, but we cannot overcome this percentage of unfitness unless a program is designed to meet this problem.

I have cited conditions in Canada regarding tuberculosis, cancer, infantile mortality, preventable diseases, venereal diseases, industrial health, and nutrition. I could speak of many other diseases and maternal deaths, if time permitted. It is essential in the consideration of treatment that there be hospital facilities and a sufficient number of beds for treatment. The shortage of hospital accommodation has been a problem for years. We require 62,000 hospital beds for immediate use. To build 62,000 hospital beds at the present time would cost half a billion dollars to provide the proper accommodation. The building of new hospitals and the extension of existing hospitals is not progressing in view of the high cost of construction. Many hospitals were constructed as municipal schemes and had to depend for their upkeep on philanthropic donations. We have all been through that. We must have some sort of scheme whereby the government can, by grants, assist in building new hospitals. The government is providing this assistance.

But not only are we short of hospital beds, we are also short of nurses. It is estimated that we require from 9,000 to 10,000 additional nurses in Canada to look after our population. This nursing shortage is a handicap on the hospitals in providing care for their patients. At the present time nurses are overworked and hospitals are short staffed. Not only is there a shortage of hospitals beds, but the cost of sickness and hospital attention has gone beyond the means of people in the lower income tax brackets. We had an example of that the other day. When the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs were before the committee a question was asked of the minister. He said that a veteran going into a hospital for non-pensionable disability, that is, for ordinary care, had to pay at the rate of $9 a day ward rate. That would be the rate in the hospital, but care would have to be provided in addition to that. The government, which is in the hospital business, has found that the cost is $9 a day. What of the poor middle-bracket income tax man such as ourselves? How is he to pay this amount? How is he to pay when it is necessary for him to provide a private room for his wife and special nurses besides? I have seen these cases. I am aware of that, and the trouble which exists. Can one wonder that this is just a paltry donation in comparison with the great need that exists? It is something that touches every citizen in Canada.

There may be new methods of diagnosis and treatment. We are doing much about this in our hospitals, but the cost of hospital care has increased beyond the means of the average citizen. On former occasions I have warned the government of the dangerous situation which will exist if we were to face another influenza epidemic. I hope it does not occur, but the cycle is coming around again. Some time it will occur, and with a shortage of 62,000 beds and 10,000 nurses it cannot be anything but a national calamity. The Prime Minister has said that the proposed grants represent the first stages of the development of a national health program in Canada. Grants for the health survey and the general health grant will give some measure of assistance to the provinces. The grants for tuberculosis control are far below the requirements when we consider the statistics that I have given today. All will agree that the grant for crippled children is an excellent one. It is worthy of praise, but the amount of $500,000 divided among nine provinces on a per capita basis falls far short of the mark. The grant for cancer control cannot be criticized. Any donation that has been given to cut down the ravages of this terrible disease, a disease that cuts down one in eight of our population, is praiseworthy. One could not criticize a grant for that purpose. The grant for hospitals will help, but in view of the fact that we are short 60,000 beds, it is an urgent need. The cost of hospital construction has doubled. Pre-war, one would estimate that the cost of a hospital bed was about $5,000. That was the building cost. We can now calculate the amount at over $9,000.

Mr. MARTIN: For beds for acute cases.

Mr. BLAIR: Yes. To give what the minister's grant is giving, plus the grant given by the province of Ontario, will not give the incentive and impetus to which the minister referred the other day.

Let us assume that pre-war the cost of a bed was $5,000. When the amount that the minister has given is added on we are still about $1,500 short of the mark of pre-war construction. We did not get hospital beds in those days. Although it may be hoped that this will provide the impetus or the incentive for new hospital building, it falls far short of the mark.

Mr. MARTIN: I point this out to the hon. member because it may be of interest to him. I am simply being flooded by requests from hospitals, from hon. members, and quite properly so, and from elsewhere. I think I have had 600 already.

Mr. BLAIR: I know. Desperation has driven them to it; but I know of municipalities which cannot afford to give half a million dollars. That applies to small municipalities. They have to depend on gifts for their hospitals; they have to depend on municipal grants. They simply cannot undertake it. The minister has only to go to the adjoining county, where they are considering the building of a hospital, to find that out. The same problem exists all over. Where are we to get the money? In the meantime, while we are discussing this question of grants, people are dying for the want of hospital care. It is something with which we must deal. We must be realistic about it and get busy at it.

In considering these grants we come back to our friend, arthritis, which was discussed in the house on a previous occasion. I am not going to discuss it at length. I have talked arthritis here for three years. It is true that a small start has been made at Sunnybrook hospital; but in view of the fact that there are 600,000 sufferers, of whom 125,000 are totally incapacitated, it is only a paltry approach to a subject so vast.

In a week or so I shall resume my practice. Possibly I shall get an arthritis patient who will say to me, "Doctor, what is the new program? What are you going to do for me?" What can I say? I will say, "The Minister of National Health and Welfare is running a little affair up at Sunnybrook hospital. I have nothing to offer you. I have no new ideas. I have no new equipment. There is nothing further I can do." That is the position that every general practitioner in Ontario or in any other province will have to take. We have not received any help from this grant.

I might call the minister's attention to the fact that the organization known as the Canadian rheumatic disease people—the name is something like that—did not receive a grant from the government.

Mr. MARTIN: No, but they are going to under this plan.

Mr. BLAIR: I return to some of the figures. We are spending $30,000,000 a year, but sickness is costing the people of this country $1 billion a year. You cannot estimate the value of human lives. We are losing these people. We lost 345,000 babies in twenty years. We are losing these people with cancer; we are losing these people with tuberculosis, and I could go on. I say again, Mr. Chairman, that this is a paltry approach to a subject so vast. But even at that, $30,000,000 will do a lot of good, and it will be a welcome addition to the relief of human suffering. But I still say, it is insufficient when one is dealing with a question which involves human suffering and human lives. They are not to be measured in terms of dollars and cents. When the Prime Minister introduced these estimates he stated:

> But of all a nation's resources, its human resources are most precious.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member has exhausted his time.

Mr. MARTIN: Continue.

Mr. BLAIR: I am going to quote the Prime Minister's statement:

> But of all a nation's resources, its human resources are most precious. The preservation in health and strength of its population is surely the best of all guarantees of a nation's power, of its progress and of its prosperity.

He said our greatest national asset was the health and well-being of our people. In view of the great need, and the statement of the Prime Minister, we have granted $30,000,000, but the Prime Minister still suggests that the health of the people is the greatest asset we have in this country.

Let me make this clear. So far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we have had this problem before us. We have been conversant with it. We endorsed the policy of national health in Winnipeg in 1942. We also endorsed the policy in 1927 when R. B. Bennett was chosen leader, and during the government of R. B. Bennett. I am attempting to show you, sir, that we are conversant with this matter. We have been alive to the situation.

In 1937 the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett introduced the Employment and Social Security Act. That act was very much the same as this and it did attempt to deal with the problem and did give increased grants, but nothing was done from that day on. The act went through the courts to the privy council and was declared ultra vires. Part of that act was later brought in by an amendment to the constitution, and I submit that something further could have been done at that time, when we got the amendment to the constitution, because I feel that the provinces would have agreed.

I have said before that the question of health services should be above any party politics and I believe that in this house it is. I am only sorry that we shall spend but an hour or so on it in the dying day of the session, when everyone is in a hurry to get home. It is not particularly because of my profession that I am interested in the subject, but I am aware of what is happening. I have had over thirty years' practical experience in this, and I did not get it from reading books. I am interested in the subject, and in view of that I think more time should have been spent on these estimates. It is unfortunate that these estimates were not brought down earlier.

So far as our party is concerned, I wish to repeat and to make clear our position in this matter, and I will quote our policy. We are in favour of this, in co-operation with the provinces, and we will bring in a national health program. We will consider the question of nutrition and better health standards, and the question of research in the control of cancer, arthritis and other diseases, and we will provide assistance for the construction of hospitals and health and recreational centres.

There is no doubt about where this party stands on this legislation and this question of grants. We approve them and will vote for them, and we will vote for them even if we do consider the amount entirely inadequate to meet the great need.

Mr. BURTON: If a layman may congratulate a professional man, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) on the excellent way in which he has presented his point of view and that of his party.

Before I go any further, I may say I will not take the length of time he did in going over some of the matters he has discussed before in this house. I will not repeat what I and other members of this group have said on previous occasions in support of a proper and thorough national health program.

May I get to the point at once and say, while we in this group welcome the announcement made by the Prime Minister so far as it goes, we are disappointed in the fact that it does not go far enough. In our opinion the least that the government should do would be to implement the promises it made to the provinces at dominion provincial conferences, with those provinces that have signed the tax agreements. There are some provinces, including the one from which I come, which have signed away their taxation rights in certain fields. So to speak, they have leased them to the dominion government, and yet the dominion government has not come across with its share of the bargain under the circumstances under which these agreements were signed. That is why I say this does not go far enough from the standpoint of the provinces which signed the agreements.

In Saskatchewan we tried to plan our health program along the lines laid down by the dominion government in its proposals to the provinces, so that if and when the federal government gets ready to fulfil its promises that plan will work in, without any undue or unnecessary upsetting of arrangements that have been made and the advancement that we have made.

I would impress upon the minister the necessity of giving favourable consideration to the making of special grants to those provinces which had the wisdom to foresee the importance of doing something before this plan was ever announced. They have made considerable expenditures and have made progress in that line; but now, as I understand, this is apt to discriminate against the provinces that have made headway in providing proper hospitalization and other care for their citizens.

Mr. MARTIN: That is an important statement. May I assure my hon. friend that is not the case, nor will it be done.

Mr. BURTON: I am glad to have the assurance, but until this moment I was at a loss to know how the minister would provide that extra help toward expenses that we in Saskatchewan have incurred during the past several years. I am more than pleased that I have taken the time of the committee if only to get that assurance from the minister, and if that is carried out I wish to thank him on behalf of the people of Saskatchewan. In the province of Saskatchewan—

Mr. MARTIN: And the other provinces, all of which have done wonderful work.

Mr. BURTON: In the province of Saskatchewan during the past several years—I would say the past three years—we have approximately doubled our bed space in hospitals, with the help of those interested in supplying hospital accommodation in the various centres where hospitals had already been set up, and in the more remote areas of the province. The provincial government has helped the local authorities to establish hospital services for the people, with the result that, as I have said, we have practically doubled our bed space in Saskatchewan in the short period of two or three years.

As regards hospitals, while I do not wish to be critical of other provinces, I believe that in Saskatchewan, working along the lines of the proposals submitted to dominion-provincial conferences, we have laid the foundation, the groundwork, so that we can work in with an over-all national health plan. We have instituted in Saskatchewan complete hospital services for the residents of that province.

I have here a card that entitles me to admittance into a hospital on the recommendation of my physician or of any recognized physician in the province of Saskatchewan. If he prescribes hospital care for me I can go into any hospital in that province for proper treatment. I may add that if in the opinion of the doctor, or of any specialists whom he may consult, it is necessary for me to go outside the province of Saskatchewan, this card will enable me to do so. The card cost me a total of $5—

Mr. COLDWELL: For the year.

Mr. BURTON: Five dollars for the year, the maximum being $30 for a family, regardless of the number. Whether eight, ten or twelve members, the maximum is $30 in any case. That is something we have done in Saskatchewan to give the residents of that province an opportunity to be properly taken care of whenever their physicians recommend hospital treatment for them. In doing that we found it necessary to provide that extra hospital space to which I have referred.

May I say with all frankness there are some people who will rise to their feet in this house and say they want to have a national health program, but who in their own provinces have failed to go as far as we have gone in the province of Saskatchewan. While that is their own business, what I object to is the procedure when they or their friends go into the province of Saskatchewan, try to put as many stumbling blocks as they possibly can in our way in carrying out this plan in a proper manner, and endeavour to belittle it.

I say no province in the Dominion of Canada has made as much headway under as many adverse criticisms as has Saskatchewan in this connection. We are far from being satisfied yet, because we still think we have a long way to go. But we would have been able to go farther if the dominion government had lived up to the agreement as it was originally proposed, at least with those of us who signed the tax agreements.

In addition to that, I may say that every old age pensioner in Saskatchewan, whenever his or her doctor recommends hospital care, not only gets hospital care, but gets doctor's care and any other attention which he or she may need in that line. Old age pensioners, blind pensioners, plus those on mothers' allowance and their dependents are given complete health services free in the province of Saskatchewan.

In addition to that, we have free treatment for cancer. In that connection I should like to say that for quite a number of years in the past, even under the previous administration, some attempt was made to give special attention to cancer cases, and considerable progress was made. The present government went a step further and made the necessary provision whereby all cancer cases are treated free.

Just a few weeks ago at the city of Regina, a ceremony was held at the opening of a wing of the Grey Nuns hospital in that city, the construction of which had been made possible by the co-operation of the provincial government and with the understanding that part of the wing is to be entirely devoted for a number of years to cancer treatment and work. The former minister of health, who is now lieutenant governor of Saskatchewan, along with the present minister of health, and premier of the province, and members of the various political parties were present at the opening of that hospital which was a forward step by people who had sunk their party differences and rejoiced that they were able to make that advancement with regard to the cause of health. Just from memory I would recall the words that the Premier of Saskatchewan used. He said that through hard work and sacrifices we had all realized the ambition for which we were working in the cause of health. I would commend those words to those who are prone to rise in the house and ask for an over-all national health program. In fact, I would say, let them in some of these respects follow the example set by the province of Saskatchewan.

In my final word, may I appeal to the minister that as soon as possible—and the sooner the better—we get into a proper working arrangement with the provinces that have signed these agreements. If that is done I can assure him that the health program in those provinces will go on at a speed with which he will be well satisfied.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I wish to add a brief word to what my colleague has already said. I think one thing the members of this house agree upon is that, while in principle we are certainly in support of the sum being voted, it is totally inadequate when compared with the field that is mentioned as national health. This sum of $30,000,000 in a field of that size is, of course, quite inadequate.

I wish to refer directly to figures which appear in the proposals of the government of Canada to the provinces, in August, 1945. For example, under the heading of "initial benefits under health insurance," the total quoted is, roughly speaking, $70,000,000. If you add to that for other benefits under health insurance the figure of $78,000,000, you have already $148 million, which is the share of the dominion government alone. Then $13,000,000 more must be added under planning, organization and health grants, which together with another $13,000,000 estimated hospital assistance, would work out to about $175 million. In other words, roughly speaking, $175 million was proposed as the share of the dominion government to the provinces in the event that they entered into the tax agreements which were mentioned a while ago. The sum of $30,000,000 works out to roughly 18 per cent of that amount. In other words, the present proposal is about 18 per cent effective, having regard to the over-all picture, even so far as the federal government was prepared to go at that time. The minister may have other figures to quote which may alter that figure slightly, but I think I am fairly close to the mark.

I also wish to mention another inadequacy in the present appropriation and that is the conditions which are attached to it. For example, we find in the statement of the Prime Minister on May 14 of this year the following proviso, as reported at page 3933 of Hansard:

> In order to qualify for the grants, the provinces will of course be required to maintain at least their present level of expenditures in this field. This same safeguard will be attached to all the other grants it is proposed to make.

And farther on in the statement the same proviso is made in connection with hospital assistance, in these words as reported at page 3934 of Hansard.

> One condition which it is proposed to attach to hospital construction grants is that the province shall match the dominion contribution or better it, and that the dominion contribution shall not in any case exceed one-third of the total cost per bed in any project.

I think that proviso may have the effect of vitiating all the effectiveness there is in this provision in many respects, because in certain provinces in this dominion, in which assistance in this form is needed most, we may find they will get it least, because the provincial government in that case—and in some cases where the municipalities enter into it—may not be able to match dollar for dollar as the present proviso would ask them to do. We also find that in some provinces, and I mention in particular any one of the three prairie provinces, a complete crop failure in any one year, or a similar disaster, could prevent that province from carrying out its share of the plan. In that way they would lose the benefits to which otherwise they would be entitled. In view of the relatively small amount involved, I think the federal government should at least have made it a flat grant, regardless of what the province or municipality concerned is able to do financially.

I want also to commend the government on having provided assistance in the matter of mental health care. Some time ago there was on this subject a series of articles, which I think most hon. members read, in Liberty magazine. I have no doubt they were correct, since they have not been challenged by anyone; and conditions in our mental hospitals across Canada as described in those articles were deplorable. I am not proud of the fact that the mental hospital at Brandon, Manitoba, was given the doubtful distinction of being called the second worst in Canada.

Mr. MARTIN: The articles were not basically incorrect.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Only yesterday I received a twelve-page letter from one of the patients at the Brandon mental hospital. I am not going to quote him as an authority, of course, nor will I repeat his extravagant language. Suffice it to say that he doubted the mental capacity of those who keep him confined there, and suggested that if the minister and his colleagues were to trade places with him and those confined with him, conditions in this country might be improved.

Mr. MARTIN: Sometimes I think he is right.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Another matter of which I am greatly in favour is the grant being made for assistance to crippled children. I regret, however, that it is confined to crippled children, because in most provinces of Canada—and I can speak of Manitoba in particular—with the exception of unorganized territory there is no assistance whatever from the provincial treasury for crippled adults. That matter is left entirely to the municipalities concerned, and some of our rural municipalities are not in a financial position which would permit them to look after these cases as they should be looked after. I understand that in Saskatchewan the provincial government now pays fifty per cent of the cost of such assistance to crippled persons, but in Manitoba and some other provinces the municipalities are burdened with the whole expenditure.

The last point I wish to mention is the fact that the proviso in connection with hospital grants in particular will work adversely in many rural areas of my province. I know many municipalities and towns in Manitoba have been trying to construct hospitals, and have expected financial assistance from this government. If the grant for that purpose is to be conditional upon an equal grant by the provincial government, and if the province does not see fit to come through with its share, I am afraid another great obstacle will be placed in the path of those municipalities.

In conclusion, I merely wish to add that, as far as I am concerned, I am happy to support this appropriation, but certainly I hope that the next time we speak about national health in this house we shall be able to talk in terms of a little more than $30,000,000 for the whole population of Canada.

Mr. MARTIN: In a matter of such great importance, Mr. Chairman, as Minister of National Health and Welfare I think there are one or two things I should say at this time. I cannot cover everything that has been said in this debate, nor do I intend to attempt to do so, but I do want to outline a few points which I think are of great importance in relation to the program which is being discussed today for the first time.

This program is predicated, as properly and legally it must be, upon co-operation with the provinces. I am happy to say that about three weeks ago I called a conference of all the provincial departments of health, to which all governments sent representatives. I can only say that a spirit of the utmost co-operation prevailed with respect to relations between the federal and provincial governments represented at that conference in the matter of this health program. A second point I should like to make with respect to that meeting is that it was called before the moneys were appropriated for the national health program. I thought the house would sanction that move, so that we would be able to launch this program with a minimum of delay. I am now able to say that within the next three weeks we shall be having ex parte meetings. Next week I shall be meeting with two governments independently, and that procedure will be continued for the next ensuing period, so that this program may be put into operation as quickly as possible.

Let no one minimize the importance of this program; for whatever one may say, it is a program of the greatest significance. My remarks now are made in the knowledge that hon. members are prepared to deal with the steps to be taken by parliament to ease the burden of human suffering caused by disease, and all in this house act in this matter of national health in a spirit of non-political interest. Of that I have no doubt; but this program is so significant in its importance that I would be remiss in my duty if I did not tell the committee exactly what it means in terms of future commitments.

Under our constitution health is a matter for the provinces, and many provinces are very properly concerned about their jurisdictional rights in the matter. Anyone holding the post I hold must keep that concern constantly in mind. This program means that on the federal level, a level not responsible under the constitution for the health of the nation, from now on in one year we shall spend on national health more than we have spent in the past twenty-seven years. That is extremely significant. It means also that in a period of ten years we as a federal government will spend $300,000,000 to assist the provinces in the field of national health.

Let no one say that I think that is fully adequate, or that I am trying to justify what has not been done in the past. I am simply indicating the importance of this new health program. It is a far-reaching program, and perhaps its significance will be better appreciated when we compare our proposals with the federal grant system recently inaugurated in the United States. As hon. members know, that country has the same constitutional relationship and problems that we have in Canada. The administration of health belongs to the individual states, just as in our country health is a matter for the provinces. The comparison I am about to make will clearly indicate, I think, the importance and consequences of the national health program announced by the Prime Minister. Both the United States and the Canadian programs contain many features in common; for example, grants for general public health services, grants for venereal disease and tuberculosis control, grants for cancer, mental health and hospital construction. The United States grant for general public health services for the current fiscal year amounts to ten cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population. The federal grant to our provinces under the program now before us commences at a rate of thirty-five cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population and rises to a level of fifty cents per capita within a four-year period.

Mr. BURTON: Would the minister be able to say how many tax fields the states have surrendered to the federal authority?

Mr. MARTIN: I am not discussing this on that basis at all; I am trying to outline the extent of our program. In the field of tuberculosis control the United States grant amounts to five cents per capita, based on the 1947 figures. The Canadian grant amounts to twenty-four cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population and rises to thirty-two cents per capita as the program develops.

The figures with regard to mental health are even more impressive. The United States grants amount to two cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population figures. The Canadian grant begins at thirty-two cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population figures and rises to fifty-six cents per capita as the program develops.

The United States cancer grant amounts to two cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population figures. The Canadian grant proposed in these estimates amounts to twenty-seven cents per capita on the basis of the 1947 population figures.

Finally, with regard to hospital construction, the United States annual appropriation amounts to fifty-two cents per capita, and the Canadian appropriation amounts to $1.04 per capita on the basis of the 1947 population figures.

Only with regard to the two smallest grants —namely, for venereal disease control and for crippled children—are the United States per capita allocations slightly higher than those proposed in the government's program. The United States venereal disease control grant amounts to six cents per capita, and the grant proposed in this present program amounts to four cents per capita. The crippled children's grant in the United States amounts to five cents per capita, compared with four cents per capita in the Canadian program.

In total, the grants under the United States program for all purposes amount to eighty-two cents per capita of the population. Under the Canadian program the grants, taken altogether, are almost three times as great at the beginning, amounting to $2.32 per capita, and rise, over a period of years, to a maximum of $2.82 per capita of the population.

I mention these figures, because I feel that they will give in brief compass a clearer picture than might otherwise be possible of the comparative magnitude of this program taken in relation to what departmental undertakings in previous years have been, and also in relation to comparative undertakings by the federal government in the United States of America.

I cannot at the moment cover everything that has been mentioned today. I always listen with great interest to the speeches of the hon. member for Lanark because of their source, but I think he will be the first to admit that many of the matters which he discussed do not come directly within the sphere of federal jurisdiction. But with regard to the kind of spirit which he sought to impose on us, namely, that we should not have any limitation in our objectives, I fully agree. We cannot stop our work in trying to improve conditions that affect the health of the people of this country.

What we are doing about arthritis is not by any means, as the hon. member well knows, confined to Sunnybrook hospital. We are making arrangements with the provinces to give them particular health grants in order that there may be set up clinics throughout their jurisdictions on the basis of the Lord Horder treatment centres for arthritis and rheumatism in Great Britain.

At long last we have begun to do something in the field of arthritis, but it will take a relatively long time. These things cannot be done overnight. But finally we are doing something on a co-ordinated scale in an effort to bring about some improvement in this disease, which causes at least severe suffering to about 100,000 of our fellow citizens.

If the provinces are able to use their share of the $3,500,000 grant for cancer I do not think there is any reason why we should not have a complete system of free treatment for cancer for those financially unable to pay for treatment in every province in this country. That is the objective about which there will be more said later after we have had further meetings with the provinces.

The program we are launching today is one of great importance to the people of Canada. We are approaching our role in a spirit of collaboration with those jurisdictions in our country that have direct legal responsibility in the field of health. It is only proper that I should say I have had from the provinces, all of them, the greatest co-operation in the inauguration of a program which I know the whole committee will agree means so much to our people.

Mr. COLDWELL: I had not intended to say anything, but perhaps I might be permitted to say just a word at this time. I know every hon. member is glad to see something being done in this field. The minister made a comparison between the United States and Canada which reflects credit on Canada, but I think we should bear in mind that the states of the union have not surrendered their taxing powers to the central authority. I think that makes quite a difference in that regard.

There is another way to compare this $30,000,000 we are to spend. It is less than we spent in two days in 1944 on war. When one makes that comparison I think it indicates some justification for what I said when the Prime Minister came before the house with this program, that it was pitifully small. Then the minister said we are to spend as much this year as we spent in the previous twenty-seven years. I am glad to know that, but that does not reflect any credit upon the government which was in power during most of those twenty-seven years. We must bear in mind that in 1919 the program of the Liberal party, which was very attractive to many people, foreshadowed this health program, but it is only after twenty-nine years that some steps are taken to carry it out.

But I want to say that we are glad it is being done. I am glad to hear the minister say this will not involve discrimination against those provinces which have tried to build up high standards in this line. I am not singling out my own province, although it has gone farther than any other, but I would point out that the western provinces have gone a long way in promoting health programs for their people. It would be grossly unfair if, after having built up a high standard, they were told that, unless they could go farther and beyond that standard, or even maintain a standard which they had put into effect believing that agreements with the provinces with regard to health would be consummated, they would be penalized.

I am glad to know that something is to be done in connection with mental health. Many of us have read, during the last few years, articles dealing with conditions in our mental hospitals, and we know they are bad. The minister of health of my own province, who happens to be the premier, has taken a great interest in this particular disease, because it was in the field of mental hygiene that he obtained his Master of Arts degree some years ago. A great deal has been done there to segregate the various types of persons suffering from mental illness.

I am glad that something is being done with regard to arthritis, but there are other diseases in connection with which I should like to see the government make some grants. I am thinking particularly of sclerosis.

Mr. MARTIN: That is covered.

Mr. COLDWELL: That disease was hardly known a few years ago, but I have many personal friends who are suffering from it today.

Mr. MARTIN: We are taking a great interest in that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to know that from the minister. May I say, on behalf of the party which I have the honour to lead in this house, that anything the government does to promote the health and welfare of the Canadian people will be supported to the fullest possible extent. We shall be ready to give all credit to the government that does it, whether it is ourselves or some other government.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I have a great interest in this matter, and I know that national health is of great interest to my constituents. My only criticism is that these grants are not larger. I support what has been said by those hon. members who have spoken previously, and I must say I enjoyed very much indeed the speech of the hon. member for Lanark. He never speaks on this subject without making a definite contribution to the knowledge of the members of this house.

I also support the criticisms offered by the hon. member for Dauphin, which I shall not repeat because of lack of time, but I think he made several pointed criticisms with regard to this plan.

I am going to support this vote, because I believe it is a real beginning in the development of a national health plan which the people of this country want. My correspondence indicates that there are two subjects which are always treated on a non-partisan basis by the rank and file in all political parties, and those are veterans affairs and national health problems. Great interest was taken in this plan when it was announced in the house by the Prime Minister, and from the correspondence I have I judge that the rank and file of all political parties are seeking the same objectives in this problem of national health.

Though the amount provided is less than I had hoped, I am glad that the government has made a start in this direction; and I am certain of this, that, because of the interest of the people of Canada in national health problems and because of the demand for a satisfactory solution of those problems, this is only the beginning of a rapid development in a national health program for this country. I believe that the minister has his heart and soul in this work, and I can assure him that he will without question have the support of the great majority of the Canadian people in what he undertakes in this direction.

Item agreed to.

National health branch —

General health grants:

797. To provide for the following grants to the provinces, under terms and conditions to be approved by the governor in council: health survey grant to assist the provinces in surveying present health services and facilities, including hospitals, and in studying ways and means of improving and extending the same; to be distributed on the basis of a flat amount of $5,000 to each province and the balance according to population but the total payment available to any province in no case to be less than $15,000, $625,000.

Hospital construction grant to assist the provinces in the provision of adequate accommodation for hospital and health services; to be distributed on the basis of $1,000 per bed for active treatment beds, $1,500 per bed for chronic or convalescent beds, or in the case of other health facilities on an equivalent basis; provinces to match or exceed dominion contribution which shall in no case exceed one-third of total cost, $13,000,000.

General public health grant to assist the provinces in strengthening general public health services; to be distributed on the basis of 35 cents per capita of population, to provinces which maintain at least their present standard and extent of service in this field, $4,395,000.

Tuberculosis control grant to assist the provinces in an accelerated and intensified effort toward the eradication of tuberculosis and to extend progressively the provision of free treatment: to be distributed on the basis of a flat amount of $25,000 to each province and the balance to be divided 50 per cent on the basis of population and 50 per cent on the basis of the average number of deaths from tuberculosis in each province over the previous five years, $3,000,000.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mental health grant to assist the provinces in the prevention of mental illness and in extending progressively the provision of free treatment; to be distributed on the basis of a flat amount of $25,000 to each province and the balance according to population, $4,000,000.

Venereal disease control grant to assist the provinces in extending and intensifying their present efforts toward the control of venereal disease; to be distributed according to population, $275,000.

Crippled children grant to assist the provinces in an intensive program for the prevention and correction of crippling conditions in children, rehabilitation and training; to be distributed on the basis of a flat amount of $4,000 to each province and the balance according to population, $500,000.

Professional training grant to assist the provinces in the training of personnel for public health and hospital staffs; to be distributed on the basis of a flat amount of $4,000 to each province and the balance according to population, $500,000.

Public health research grant to assist the provinces in stimulating and developing public health research, $100,000.

Cancer control grant to assist the provinces in programs for the control of cancer; to be distributed according to population, with any such programs for cancer control to be approved and the cost thereof to be divided equally between the dominion and the province concerned, $3,500,000.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I am sure that municipalities all over Canada welcomed the announcement that grants were to be made by the federal government for hospital construction. Several municipalities and hospitals throughout the country are asking what is necessary for them to do to get assistance in the construction and extensions contemplated. I have a letter here which illustrates the point. It is from the secretary of the Bowmanville hospital, which is planning to erect a new hospital, and says:

> As you no doubt remember, we are planning on the erection of a new memorial hospital here, and we have secured cash and promises of a little over $200,000 towards this end.
> Can you tell us just where we stand with regard to the promised federal aid towards projects of this kind?

Can the minister state specifically how a hospital or municipality should proceed to get this assistance?

Mr. FULTON: I understand that the general intention is that the grant will be available for the construction of new hospitals and for the payment of hospitals now in the course of construction. I know a line must be drawn somewhere, and I can imagine the difficulties which are met in drawing that line. There are many municipalities which have vastly increased their debt because no such grant was available to them before. Many have just finished the construction of a new hospital or of a new wing. My suggestion would be that within the general limits of the program here laid down the federal government should allow a certain discretion to the province, which, I take it, will have the detailed administration of this program, so that a part of the grant which the province receives may be applied to repay a municipality for debts incurred through the recent construction of a hospital. For example, a province has already contributed something and the municipality has made a contribution toward the construction of a new hospital and has incurred debt to cover the remainder of the construction costs. Where conditions such as these exist, I suggest that the province be allowed discretion to apply a portion of these funds to relieve the municipality which had incurred debt for recent hospital construction.

Mr. WRIGHT: If a province has reached the maximum number of hospital beds required to give complete hospital service to its population, will it be allowed to use this hospital grant to provide other health services in the province, or must the grant be used only for hospital construction?

Mr. MARTIN: I anticipated that there would be wide interest in this hospital construction program, because of the great number of questions put to me privately by various members and also by the correspondence which is coming in, and which I am at the moment simply unable to meet. Therefore, to inform hon. members about the problem and as to what steps should be taken, I propose to make a statement which I hope will be of assistance to them and to the country generally.

The purpose behind this hospital construction program is not to meet situations of the past, but to try to bring about a reduction in the existing hospital bed shortage in this country which, on the basis of Doctor Agnew's report, we estimate to be between 60,000 and 65,000. The program is not to provide relief as such to municipalities or to provincial governments. It is designed for one purpose, and that is to encourage the building of new hospital beds in Canada to take care of our growing needs and demands.

The hospital construction grant program is designed to remove the deficit in hospital accommodation that exists in Canada. At the same time, since adequate hospital facilities are a prime prerequisite for health insurance, and especially for hospital insurance, it will provide a sound basis for a health insurance program.

The grants will place emphasis on proper geographic distribution and proper allocation by type of hospital, thereby correcting to a considerable extent any maldistribution of hospital facilities. Further, by providing a more satisfactory distribution of these facilities, it is hoped that the program will contribute to better distribution of doctors and health personnel.

The demand for hospital accommodation has been rising steadily for many years. The factors which have contributed to this rise in the demand for hospital care include the trend toward obstetrical care in hospital, normal population growth, the great advance in coverage by hospital insurance plans, a greater appreciation of medical services including hospital treatment, and the financial ability of a larger sector of the population to pay for hospital services. While the demand for hospital care has been steadily growing, the increase in the supply of new facilities has been retarded. Since 1940 and 1941 the situation has become acute. During the earlier years of the war a shortage of materials and skilled labour stopped practically all hospital construction except that already under way. In the latter years of the war and the years immediately following, the tremendously increased costs of construction, plus the continued shortage of materials and labour proved discouraging to building committees.

The shortage of hospitals is particularly acute with respect to rural areas. I am saying this because the municipalities are becoming large cities, and I want them to understand that we are going to deal with the provincial governments. That is the exact constitutional position. What we shall have in mind is a proper distribution of hospitals, not simply to give assistance because someone asks for it, but because, in accordance with plans jointly conceived by the provinces and ourselves, it is thought that a particular geographical section or area requires special treatment; consequently we intend to lay emphasis on the shortage of beds in rural areas.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask a question? Who is to make the decision about where the help is to be given? Is the dominion taking that responsibility?

Mr. MARTIN: Oh, no.

Mr. GREEN: Will the provinces assume that responsibility?

Mr. MARTIN: The provinces will come to us with their plans, and our officers and their officers will sit across the table, and in the light of their common knowledge arrive at an agreement. Responsibility will not be taken initially by us.

It is important to keep in mind that any sound plan of hospital construction for the next few years should take into account the various kinds of beds required, and because of the current taking up of space by chronic patients we have given a $500 difference in grant for chronic cases as opposed to acute cases.

With regard to the problem mentioned by the hon. member for Kamloops I want to say this, and this is subject to change. As I said, we have had a conference with the provinces and we did discuss the starting date. It is about the starting date that I think I should say something, because it has interest to so many members. The provinces are now considering what their attitude shall be with regard to this particular proposal and others. Until we have final agreement, it is not possible to say exactly what the situation will be. Tentatively we had agreed on the starting date as of April 1 of this year. I may say that consideration is now being given to putting that date back to January 1. That is a matter that still has to be worked out with the provinces. Therefore, subject to unforeseen contingencies, for the purposes of the hospital construction grant the tentative date will be either April 1, 1948, or January 1, 1948. All hospital construction projects, the work on which was commenced on or after either one of these dates, depending on which one is settled on, will be eligible for assistance on a matching basis with the provinces. In the selection of this date, it must be emphasized that this grant program has been designed to encourage new construction which is urgently needed; therefore there is no justification for including hospital construction that has been completed prior to the starting date to be agreed upon. It is felt that federal funds can be most effectively spent in seeking the erection of new construction units.

However, in introducing this program it was important that current hospital construction should receive some assistance under this scheme. Many hospitals which are under construction at the present time have, because of rapidly rising costs, under-estimated their financial needs and require further assistance to complete their building projects. Accordingly, with respect to hospitals still under construction on April 1, 1948, partial grants will be made available on a pro rata basis representing that portion of the total construction costs of the given project which remains to be completed as of the starting date which, as I say, has yet to be finally decided on. This balance will be determined on the basis of an architect's certificate, certified by the province, showing the amount of construction still remaining to be completed. The federal contribution will bear the same relation to the sum of $1,000 per active treatment bed or $1,500 per chronic or convalescent bed as the portion of construction still to be completed bears relation to the total cost of construction.

Mr. WRIGHT: I appreciate the minister's statement, but he did not answer my question as to whether any province which has reached the maximum number of beds required for the hospitalization of its people will be able to use the grant for some other health purpose.

Mr. MARTIN: No; this grant is intended simply to encourage the building of new beds.

Mr. WRIGHT: Then the minister's statement that it does not include discrimination is hardly correct, because there are provinces which have, or which will reach, they hope, at least the maximum number of hospital beds within the next two or three years. If that number is reached, then they are not entitled to this hospitalization grant. They reached that maximum number of hospital beds required only through special efforts either on their own behalf or on behalf of the municipalities in those provinces. I certainly think they should be allowed to use these grants for other health facilities which they may need within the province.

Mr. MARTIN: I may say to my hon. friend there is no province in that position.

Mr. FULTON: If I may say so, the minister's statement was a sincerely logical one. The deadline had to be set somewhere. Certainly the purpose of it was to provide new accommodation. I am not going to provoke a debate, because we would probably arrive at an impasse in the matter; but I just bring this matter to his attention. If the deadline of January or April is insisted on and no discretion is left it means that the municipalities which have been progressive and courageous in attempting to meet their hospital requirements—I am not speaking only of the cities, but of larger towns which are centres of large country areas—will be penalized in comparison with those which have, for various reasons, sat back and not yet started their construction. Since there is some uncertainty, or some lack of finality, with regard to fixing the deadline, may I request the minister most urgently, while he is considering that point, to consider also the giving of a degree of discretion to the provinces where the construction meets the other requirements outlined in the terms of this grant. I ask him to give some discretion to the provinces to make a portion of the beds available to municipalities in the position which I have mentioned. In other words, it may so happen that they have finished their construction thirty days before the deadline set, because they were progressive and courageous, and went about the job on their own hook. They would be penalized. I am sure the minister will thoroughly sympathize with that position.

Mr. STEPHENSON: As I understand it, the grant will be made by the dominion to the provinces as a lump sum. A municipality desiring assistance will have to make application to the provincial government. The federal government does not intend to allocate any moneys to any particular hospitals. That will be decided by the province. Is that right? In other words, where a particular municipality is asking for some assistance for a particular hospital—

Mr. MARTIN: They should write to the provincial government.

Mr. STEPHENSON: —the minister's position is that they should write to the provincial government?

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mr. GREEN: What is the average cost per bed in Canada for the construction of hospital beds?

Mr. MARTIN: It varies. In acute cases it goes down as low as $6,000 and up as high as $10,000. In chronic cases it varies; it goes down to $5,000 and up to $8,000.

Mr. GREEN: Has the minister not struck an average for the whole of Canada?

Mr. MARTIN: I cannot. It depends on the locality. I do not think I can do any better than that. An average would not help us very much.

Mr. GREEN: That is not the point. I am asking whether the minister has an average figure.

Mr. MARTIN: No. I said that in some cases it was as high as $10,000 and in others as low as $6,000 in acute cases, with variations in between. There are hospitals constructed as low as $3,000 per bed. It depends upon the type of structure, the area and so on. We are building a hospital at James bay, an Indian hospital, that will cost us a great deal of money. The increased cost there will be due to additional transportation problems, lack of labour and so on. Much depends on such circumstances. The cost in my hon. friend's city is high.

Mr. GREEN: Why is this limitation imposed, that the dominion will in any event not pay more than one-third of the total cost?

Mr. MARTIN: What we are doing is to give $13 million for hospital construction. That is a new departure. In the 1945 proposals the offer was to provide loans at low-interest rates; but we felt, in reconsidering the problem at this time, that the inducement of a grant would have the effect of accelerating hospital construction much more than if we lent money. Obviously you must have a stopping point. The grant of $1,000 for acute and $1,500 for chronic cases is by no means an ungenerous one. In fact, the provinces, I can say from the conferences we have had, are grateful indeed for this unique assistance.

Mr. GREEN: The third heading under this item is, "general public health grant to assist the provinces". There are two questions in that regard. At the time the original announcement was made it was stated that the grant was to be increased from thirty-five cents per capita to fifty cents per capita eventually, according to the population of the provinces. There is no mention of such an increase in this amount.

Mr. MARTIN: There is.

Mr. GREEN: Is that still the arrangement?

Mr. MARTIN: Five cents each year until the fifty cents is reached.

Mr. GREEN: The minister said a few moments ago that it was under this item that help would be given in the field of arthritis.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Can he give a more detailed explanation as to how that help is to be given, the nature of it?

Mr. MARTIN: Before these grants were announced, we had had over a period of years, particularly during the last two or three years, opportunity for general discussion with all the provinces through the dominion council of health. I took advantage, during the last few months, of carrying on informal consultations with representatives of the Canadian medical association, through a special committee that had been set up to collaborate with the Department of National Health and Welfare in the discussion of these matters, so that we might get the medical practitioner's point of view. This new national health plan is based on the results of these talks with unofficial and official groups. The purposes behind the public health grant are, first, among others, the creation of additional county or district health units and the expansion of existing health units through added staff and facilities; secondly, the extension and development of the child and maternal hygiene program; thirdly, the development of blindness-prevention and control programs; and fourthly, the development and extension of programs in the field of health education, control of poliomyelitis, arthritis and other diseases not specifically covered by the health grants.

With regard to arthritis, we encouraged the setting up, as a result of a conference held in Ottawa, of the Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society, a national body under the presidency of Doctor Wallace Graham, who is perhaps the leading rheumatologist in the country and a former collaborator of Lord Horder. That body will be given assistance through arrangements already agreed upon with the provinces, and through them and through ourselves, to further desirable remedial arthritis schemes. It is a long-term undertaking.

One of the difficulties will be to have some of this money completely utilized in the current year. Some of the provinces may find it difficult to use the full amounts of money, but our aim is to have the money fully utilized, though wisely expended.

Mr. GREEN: There are special grants for tuberculosis control, mental health, venereal disease control, the crippled children's grant and the cancer control grant. Why is there not one for arthritis?

Mr. MARTIN: Because it was thought that there was not sufficient development at the moment in that field and the money could not be wisely utilized at once. The medical profession and the provinces themselves preferred to have it done that way, to have it under the general public health grant.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister said this money might not all be spent this year because of the inability of the provinces to match grants.

Mr. MARTIN: No, not to match grants. It is all very well to propose that we should spend money in trying to cope with this disease or that, but it is not as easy as all that, unless you want to spend the money unwisely. I can tell my hon. friend, as regards the province from which he comes, that one eminent gentleman from that very province at the recent conference told us that, not only was it perhaps in some cases difficult, but that we ought to be quite careful about spending money simply for the sake of spending it.

[Mr. Martin.]

We have to proceed according to plan. I had some experience in the disposition of some of the cancer grants under the cancer institute, and I know the sort of applications that were put in for grants and the way they were vetoed. Some applications could not possibly, in their very nature, have proved of value in the control of cancer. That is what I mean. We have to make sure that projects are well conceived. If they are they will be assisted.

Mr. WRIGHT: In the matter of cancer research, is consideration being given to having research in one central place?

Mr. MARTIN: That is not thought desirable, because several individuals might be engaged on some particular phase of cancer research in many different parts of the country, or in different parts of the world for that matter. The very nature of research lends itself to duplication, and more than duplication, to repetition in the expectation that, as a result of wide and extensive research in a given field a solution may more readily be found. It is not thought that centralization of research is a guarantee of effective results.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
Miscellaneous grants—

798. Grant to Canadian Paraplegic Association, $15,000.

Mr. FULTON: I appreciate the inclusion of this grant in the supplementaries. I mentioned this two years ago when the association first sent its president down.

Mr. MARTIN: A very estimable gentleman.

Mr. FULTON: Yes, Mr. John Counsel is an estimable gentleman and he has produced extraordinarily fine results. Although it was a veterans' organization and the benefits were confined to veterans, it is now being extended to civilians. It is on that basis that this grant is made, I presume. The minister will correct me.

Mr. MARTIN: That is right.

Mr. FULTON: I am glad to find that it is. I thank the government, and I think the association deserves the highest commendation for the work it has done.

Item agreed to.

Civil service commission—

694. Salaries and contingencies of the commission—further amount required, $29,180.

Mr. GREEN: There is one point I should like to bring up under this item. Who is the minister?

Mr. MARTIN: I am responsible at the moment. I hope you will not test my knowledge too accurately. This is mostly for salaries.

Mr. KNOWLES: And contingencies. You are an expert on contingencies.

Mr. GREEN: I think I will wait until later.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

736. General administration—estimates of the clerk—further amount required, $108,000.

Mr. FULTON: On this general administration item I should like to refer briefly to the changes which were recently made in the categories of those employed in the House of Commons. The Secretary of State introduced a motion providing for a number of changes in the category of employment from temporary to permanent, and also, I believe, a separate order in council was issued providing for a number of appointments to those permanent positions. At that time I made an inquiry of His Honour the Speaker as to the number of employees of the House of Commons generally, and how many were permanent, how many were temporary continuous and how many were temporary sessional; and of those, how many served overseas, how many served in Canada and how many saw no service in either war. Then I asked, with respect to the change from temporary to permanent category, the same questions: how many served overseas, how many served in Canada only and how many did not serve in either war?

It is chiefly with respect to the employment of veterans and the granting of the veterans preference that I want to make some observations this afternoon. May I take one answer as typical. Question 6 was as follows:

Of the positions in the House of Commons staff whose category was changed from temporary to permanent employment by resolution approved by the house on May 3, how many are now filled by those who
(a) saw service overseas?
(b) saw service in Canada?
(c) saw no service?

The answer was:

Of the 135 males on the temporary continuous staff shown in 2 (b), approximately 107 are occupying positions shown as permanent on the new establishment; of this 107, 43 served overseas; 5 served in Canada; 59 had no service in either war.

This means that forty-eight served in Canada or overseas and fifty-nine had no service in either war. Those are the new positions. That means that over half the appointments to the permanent positions are made from those who had no war service. This is an extremely complicated matter, Mr. Chairman. I have been studying this reply to my question for some time, and I do not fully understand all the implications of temporary continuous and permanent employment. But it seems to me that the fact that less than half the appointments to permanent positions on the staff of the House of Commons are made from those with service in Canada or overseas in either war could give rise to some questions to His Honour the Speaker as to the extent to which the veterans preference is being followed in initial appointments to the staff of the house and in confirming those or changing them from temporary to permanent employment. I wonder if His Honour would care to make some comment on that matter?

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say to the hon. gentleman that in all the new appointments which are made, we always insist, before considering any candidate, that he should be a veteran. But you will find, as the hon. member has just mentioned, a few temporary employees who are not veterans. However, those employees have been working in the house for some time. The hon. member will understand that we cannot disorganize the service especially to take on some people who have no experience. We have kept those who are employees of the house. But when we are required to fill a new position, we always insist that the candidate should be a veteran.

Mr. FULTON: I am glad to have that assurance. There is one other point on which I should like to ask His Honour a question. Another question asked was with respect to changes in category from temporary to permanent, because I had in mind the point to which Mr. Speaker has just referred. You cannot ignore employees of long service in making these changes. I asked this question:

Of the positions changed from temporary to permanent, how many are now filled by employees
(a) with less than five years' service on the staff?
(b) with more than five years but less than ten years?
(c) with more than ten, but less than fifteen years?

The answer to that question—and I think I can summarize it without being unfair—was as follows:

The 127 remaining positions—

That is, permanent positions not already filled by permanent appointments.

—are filled by temporary continuous employees as follows:
(a) 43 with less than five years' service.
(b) 57 with more than five but less than ten years' service.

(c) 18 with more than ten but less than fifteen years' service.
(d) 3 with more than fifteen years' service.
(e) 6 new positions, et cetera, not filled by temporary continuous employees.

So that of those who are up-graded, there are forty-three out of a total of 127 with less than five years' service. As I say, this is a complicated matter; but again that might be taken as indicating that a number of these changes from temporary to permanent were made from those who have only short service; and that, coupled with the fact that of those who are now getting permanent appointments, less than half served during the war, was the thing which raised a doubt in my mind. I wonder if His Honour the Speaker would care to make any comment?

Mr. SPEAKER: As hon. members will probably remember, at the end of the last session, in the one previous and in many past sessions representations had been made in the house that employees of the house should be appointed permanently. The question has been considered by the committee on internal economy. We have decided that certain functions in the house should be recognized as permanent. A recommendation has been made, tabled in the house, accepted by the house and sent to the civil service commission. We have not recommended individuals to take such and such a function; we have recommended that such functions should be recognized as permanent. It will be up to the civil service commission to appoint those who are fitted, and who will pass the examination in order to obtain the function.

Mr. FULTON: What principles do the civil service commission follow? Do the same general considerations apply there as in all appointments, in regard to veterans preference? Is Your Honour satisfied that the veterans preference is being followed in these appointments?

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say this to the hon. member, and I believe hon. gentlemen will agree that it is only fair. I did not go to the trouble of having certain positions made permanent in order to bring in outsiders for the jobs, when we have people here who have filled those positions to the satisfaction of the house for several years. Those people were given an opportunity to apply for the positions, and I hope their applications will be accepted. My idea, and I think the idea of hon. members in asking for permanency, was not to bring people from outside when we have filling those positions employees who are devoted to their work and who have given satisfaction.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. KNOWLES: First, I should like to say at least one word of commendation. I may have some complaints and requests later; but, despite the faults we may find, from the attention I have given these matters I feel that His Honour the Speaker and the Clerk deserve commendation for the efforts they have made, which as I understand it, have had two principal aims. On the one hand they have sought to move in the direction of a permanent establishment for the House of Commons employees. That is a far cry from the situation twenty or thirty years ago. I am glad that His Honour the Speaker during his term of office and Doctor Beauchesne, before he retires—if indeed that day is drawing near—should have played a part in having it laid down that House of Commons employees should have some permanency. I shall come back to this in a moment.

The other aim which I understand His Honour the Speaker and the Clerk have sought to achieve is that of keeping the House of Commons staff under the control of the House of Commons. I readily recognize, as has been brought out by the discussion we have had already, that this does create a problem, because we in the House of Commons do not want to see vitiated the principles laid down by parliament for the civil service commission. Yet I think there is something to be said for parliament being in charge of its own employees. If we did not retain that charge, the tendency would be for the House of Commons employees to become government employees. Already we have enough confusion along that line; already there are enough occasions when we ask the government certain things and are told to see His Honour the Speaker. Then, when we try to raise these questions in other ways, by presenting them to His Honour the Speaker, we are informed that these matters involve the expenditure of money and therefore recourse must be had to the government. I quoted that as a bit of digression, just to emphasize the desirability of maintaining control by the House of Commons over its own staff, without vitiating any other principles we have laid down. I am also satisfied that the employees of the House of Commons prefer to have it that way.

I offer that word of commendation to His Honour the Speaker and to Doctor Beauchesne sincerely and without qualification. However—and some hon. members may say, "Here comes the qualification"—I feel they have not gone far enough with the matter of the establishment itself. I may be told that one should be patient and wait for time to achieve these things; but it does seem to me that in the meantime some of our most faithful employees have to continue as temporaries, hired from year to year. I do not think that is fair to them, nor is it fair to us. We simply cannot expect the kind of service we want if we ask the people who work for us to be hired from year to year, with no guarantee of permanency and no security in their later years, after they have given us service for a long period. Therefore I rise to urge again most strongly upon His Honour the Speaker that he press this matter of a proper pension plan for House of Commons stenographers, shall I say. There are others, of course; I do not speak to the exclusion of any other class of employees, but we in this chamber know the situation with respect to our stenographers and can speak about it intelligently.

This very day last session—I refer to the closing day of the third session of the twentieth parliament—when an attempt was made to get through the business so that prorogation could be had, I yielded to the suggestion not to speak on this matter in order to save time. One reason I yielded was that the Prime Minister gave me the assurance that the matter would be considered between the end of the last session and the beginning of this session. I saw to it that I received this assurance later in the form of a letter from the Prime Minister in reply to a letter I wrote him, and in subsequent correspondence even after that, with both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. In that correspondence we got down to details. The sort of suggestion that seemed to evolve was that House of Commons stenographers be put on a basis comparable with that of the Hansard reporters. The Hansard reporters are permanent employees; they are paid a yearly salary. They are required to be here when the house is in session. When the house is not in session they are free to enjoy a well-deserved holiday, after listening to us for all these months, or if they are beggars for punishment they can go off and take shorthand notes somewhere else. It seems to me that that kind of basis would best meet the problem of House of Commons stenographers.

Mr. LENNARD: Apparently your negotiations did not get very far, because conditions are worse now than they were then.

Mr. KNOWLES: I thank my hon. friend for his support. That is exactly why I am not refraining from making a speech today. I refrained a year ago; and, as my hon. friend says, where did it get me, or where did it get the House of Commons stenographers? It produced an interesting file which I have upstairs, but which I did not bother to bring down because I am pretty familiar with the situation.

The suggestion I made was that a figure—I shall be reasonably conservative in this instance—of about $1,800 might be offered, which would be the salary a House of Commons stenographer would get for the year. Let her be required to be here to serve members during the session, and in the intervening period let her have a holiday or do as she wishes. Then, having given these stenographers that kind of permanency, it would not be much of a problem for the superannuation branch of the Department of Finance to work out a pension scheme.

When we have made our representations to the Minister of Finance, although he may show an interest in the matter, in the final analysis he delivers them to His Honour the Speaker. I do not expect his Honour the Speaker to work out a superannuation plan when we have experts in the Department of Finance. But before you can have a superannuation plan for the House of Commons stenographers, you must have some permanency. I am prepared and the stenographers are prepared to accept some alteration in the plan that I have proposed.

I urge His Honour the Speaker to press this matter strongly. As I said a moment ago, it is only fair to the stenographers themselves. Surely this House of Commons should be a model employer. Surely we should not fall behind in the matter of old age security. I suggest that it is only fair to ourselves as well that this matter should be fixed up.

Before I sit down I should like to refer to another matter affecting House of Commons employees. This has to do with wage and salary increases. His Honour will recall that on March 24, before we went home for the Easter recess, he indicated that the internal economy commission was considering salary and wage increases, which would be reported immediately after Easter, all of which would be made retroactive to October 1. Later that same day, when questioned in the house, His Honour the Speaker said, as reported on page 2592 of Hansard:

> The positions of all employees of the house are being considered at the present time by the internal economy commission of the house.

And later:

> I have every reason to believe that all the employees will be perfectly satisfied.

As a result of that statement, all employees felt that increases would be forthcoming and would be retroactive to October 1. No distinction was made in that statement between permanent and temporary employees. Rather than make assertions myself on the basis of information that has been communicated to us, I would prefer Mr. Speaker to tell us the situation.

As I understand it, quite a number of employees have had increases granted to them, some by means of a vote of this house and others without the necessity of a vote. In some cases the increases were made retroactive to October 1. In the case of other employees, notably the men cleaners in this building, increases were granted but were made retroactive only to May. Similarly, I understand that the amanuenses who work with the Hansard reporters received increases, but again they were not made retroactive to October 1 as planned.

I have yet to learn whether the mechanics around the building have had any increases. The stenographers who have been asking for some permanency and for some pension plan have not had increases for a considerable time, and certainly have not had increases since the announcement was made by His Honour the Speaker on March 24.

I have tried to cover this matter in some detail, because we are all interested. I have tried not to speak in complaining tones or to be provocative. I think His Honour will recognize the sincerity of the two points of commendation I made at the outset of my remarks. I feel that not only would the employees be happier, but all hon. members of this House of Commons would be happier if His Honour could give us some assurance on these two points: first, that there will be some kind of permanency and some kind of pension plan for employees like our stenographers and, second, that there will be wage increases or salary increases retroactive to October 1 for all our employees, as indicated by His Honour on March 24.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to say a few words on this matter. I want to start by saying that I do not think His Honour the Speaker or the Clerk of the House has any more responsibility in connection with these estimates than the individual members of this house. The Clerk of the House is an employee of the House of Commons who works for us. The Speaker is an elected member who, because of his good judgment and ability, is permitted to sit up in the chair and be almost put to sleep at times with the speeches to which he must listen. He presides over the house; that is all. I do not think hon. members should take the attitude that those two gentlemen are responsible. I have never taken that attitude. Whatever is wrong with the whole set-up in the House of Commons is the responsibility of every member of the House of Commons.

I look upon the staff of this house as working for the members of this house. We have heard many arguments in the house in favour of setting up collective bargaining machinery, national labour codes, and looking after everybody in the country outside the house, and then we take the attitude that the employees in the house are the responsibility of two people who have no more responsibility in the matter than any one of us.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went into this matter in some detail and I am not going to repeat anything that he has said. However I should like to deal with one branch, the stenographic branch. I think this offers a shining example of the way in which we are out of step with the times. Twenty years ago there were fifty-four stenographers in the pool, working in one room with one telephone and supervised by practically the same administrative staff that they have today when there are 155 stenographers, working in five rooms with six telephones. Incidentally, the rooms leave much to be desired. This indicates the terrific growth of the branch, but the administrative personnel has not increased at all.

The chief of the stenographic pool has had an increase of $400 a year in twenty-one years. That is certainly not keeping pace with the times. That is the only increase which has been given, despite the fact that there is three times as much work to do today. I think everyone will agree that a person who can manage a branch containing 155 stenographers and please the members of this house would need the patience of Job and the judgment of the Speaker. I realize the job he has on his hands and I think his salary is much too low. This matter should be looked into to see if something cannot be done.

This gentleman has one assistant who was recently appointed to that position. That person, too, is on the job all the time. That staff has the administration of the stenographic branch, which works for every department in this house. I think approximately thirty of the personnel work the year round. The three people I speak of, one a principal clerk, and the other two, the chief and his assistant, are on full time throughout the year. We all know what an assistant is. He is like a lance-corporal in the army. All the orders have to be carried out by him. He makes the unpopular decisions. He is running around in all directions. Recently the clerks of committees of this house had their salaries increased. I find that the salary of the assistant to the chief of the stenographic branch is away below that of the clerks of committees.

The members of the house should not plead with the Speaker or blame the Speaker or request the Speaker or the Clerk of the House. I think we, the members, should say that we think the salaries should be brought into line with those of other employees of the House of Commons and with the salaries paid through the civil service commission. There should be no discrimination. That is our job. It is not our job to blame the two men who happen to be unfortunate enough to have to pilot these estimates through the house.

Then there is the question of a retiring allowance. There is a superannuation scheme for the civil service, and it is merely a matter of our determining whether the House of Commons employees should be brought under it or not. Every member of this House of Commons is aware of the fact that employees have been working in this building for twenty-five years who are still temporaries on small salaries, and many of them have about reached the retiring age. When they leave they have no pension, and no recognition is made of the services they have rendered to the members of the house during the many years they have been here. I cannot understand this business of a person working on a job for twenty-five years and still being considered a temporary. Any employee engaged in any capacity, no matter where, will have been able to demonstrate to his employer within a year whether he should be retained or not. If they have proved themselves worthy of being kept on, they should be made permanent, and whatever retiring allowance regulations apply in other departments should apply equally to them. I know a couple of old ladies who had worked in the stenographic pool for thirty years and who took sick and were laid off without half a day's salary and had to leave this building and get along as best they could without any income whatsoever. I do not think that is good enough for the members of the House of Commons, but the idea has grown up in the minds of the members that the Speaker and the Clerk are responsible. The members build a defence mechanism around themselves by blaming these conditions upon others. Actually the responsibility is on each and every member of this house, and not on the two persons we try to blame for not doing this or that or for doing the other.

The administrative staff of the stenographic pool is too small. I know that on paper there are eleven principal clerks who have been made permanent this session, and the assumption is that they are at the disposal of the chief and assistant chief of the pool, but they are not. They work upstairs in somebody else's office and have nothing to do with the administration of the pool itself. So the administrative staff of the pool boils down to two or three people.

The stenographic pool is not merely a stenographic pool for the members of this house. They are cutting stencils for every department in this building. They are working for everybody, and they are on the job night and day just as long as the members of this house are working.

I am not going to tell the Speaker what kind of superannuation scheme should be worked out. All he has to do is to pick up a telephone and get in touch with the civil service commission, which has experts who can work these things out. I believe that any employee of this house who has been working here for five years should now be made permanent, and the superannuation scheme should be made applicable to him. I do not think temporaries who are made permanents and come under the superannuation scheme should have to make up contributions for the last fifteen or twenty years, which some of them otherwise would have to do. The government should make that contribution for them. I think five years would be far enough back to go. We, the members of this House of Commons, should determine here this afternoon that in future no employee who has been here for any length of time should be retired from the service of the members of the house and sent out on the street without some income such as is drawn by retired civil servants generally.

That is all I have to say on the matter, Mr. Speaker. I want you to understand that I am not blaming you or the Clerk of the House. I am blaming ourselves, the members of this house, and I am accepting my full share of the responsibility.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): I am one of those who believe that the members of this house, to whatever party they may belong, are anxious to have efficient service from the employees of the house, and that they are also anxious to see that the rates of pay and conditions of work are the best that can be found in any part of the civil service of Canada.

While some suggestions and criticisms may be made in connection with the plan which has been submitted this year, this, after all, is but the first real forward step which has been taken, and we cannot expect in the first year to find everything we might wish for. As a matter of fact, I have no doubt, that between now and the next session of parliament, the Speaker will have considered the suggestions which have been made as a result of the publication and approval of this plan, and that the lot of the employees of this house will be better for it. If one were to go through the different branches he could find any number of suggestions to make with regard to the employees of this house. Some have been champions of the stenographic staff, others of the messenger staff. I might, for example, say that the head of the maintenance and cleaning staff is probably not receiving anything like the salary he should have as the head of an important service, such as the cleaning and maintenance of this building. That is only a suggestion. I am sure that those who are responsible for establishing the salaries of the employees of this house will, between now and next session, consider readjusting those salaries. I shall not take up time by going into particulars.

I should like to congratulate the staff on the floor of this house. I think the chief of pages, the assistant chief and all the page boys are to be congratulated upon the work they have done and the assistance they have given us during the session. I have one suggestion to make. These young boys have been working in the mornings lately, and I should like to see the Speaker consider giving them one or two weeks' salary, as we did last year, for the extra time they have to spend here at the end of the session.

Mr. LENNARD: I would not be rising to speak at this time if the Minister of Finance had assumed his proper responsibility last evening when I spoke on item 85 in support of the stenographers of the members of the House of Commons. I wish to draw attention to what I said last evening, because the Minister of Finance said he would turn the matter over to the Speaker. I do not think it is any concern of the Speaker. However, in a few words I am going to reiterate what I said last evening, to make doubly sure that the Speaker knows of this sad state of affairs.

My complaint is this. Until a year ago when these stenographers were given temporary positions between sessions in some of the departments of government they were classed as grade 2 maximum. For the first time last year they were classed as grade 2 minimum at a reduction of $23 a month in salary. That is unfair. I heard comments this afternoon on the splendid manner in which increases have come about, and all that sort of thing. Here is an instance of members' stenographers having their salaries reduced in the temporary positions which they are qualified to take when the house is not in session. How can we expect to get good stenographers—and we need first-class stenographers in this house—if that is the way they are to be treated? To the best of my knowledge, House of Commons stenographers have not received an increase in their basic wages for the past twelve years.

Mr. McILRAITH: They have had substantial ones.

Mr. LENNARD: Since when?

Mr. McILRAITH: Each year for the last eight years.

Mr. LENNARD: They have received increases?

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes, definitely.

Mr. LENNARD: That is news to me.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member is sure of that?

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes. It used to be $4 a day.

Mr. LENNARD: At any rate that is the state of affairs that I drew to the attention of the Minister of Finance last night. It is his responsibility. It was the Department of Finance, not the civil service commission, which issued the instructions that these girls should be classified as grade 2 minimum. I see the hon. member for Ottawa East shaking his head. He seems to doubt it.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): Yes, I doubt it. I think it was the civil service commission.

Mr. LENNARD: My information is that the instructions came from the Department of Finance. It does not matter who is responsible; it is wrong and it should be righted.

Mr. GREEN: When His Honour the Speaker is checking up on the different points which have been raised by hon. members who have preceded me, I wish he would check the cases of five or six members of the staff who were formerly on the protective staff. They are all veterans. Some of them were disabled. For one reason or another they were taken off the protective staff some six or seven years ago. Most of them are now messengers. One or two are on the cleaning staff. They were put on these other jobs but continued at the salaries they were receiving as protective officers. I understand that they have had no increases whatever. The salaries of other people about the building have been increased, but these men have not had any increase. They should have increases in the same way as the salaries of other members of the staff have been increased. I would ask His Honour to look into that particular situation.

There is one other matter that I should like to raise on this item. The debates reporting branch comes under His Honour the Speaker. That branch is known to hon. members as the Hansard office. It is a fine office. A wonderful spirit is shown there. It has always been a great help to the members of the house. This year two of the members of the staff are retiring, Mr. Frederic W. S. Galbraith, who is the associate editor, and Miss L. A. Kearns. I am sure that all hon. members will join with me, and will approve of my saying a word in praise of these two officials of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: They have been here for many years. Mr. Galbraith was a parliamentary reporter from 1912 to 1936. Since that time he has been the associate editor of debates. I believe Miss Kearns has been here even longer than Mr. Galbraith. They have always shown the utmost patience in their work. Sometimes I marvel that any individual could have such patience.

Mr. HACKETT: With our speeches.

Mr. GREEN: Yes. They work late hours. They have a very difficult job. They have been very friendly and highly efficient. I am sure that we all wish them good luck in their well-earned retirement. They will not be with us another session.

It seems to me that these two officials of the house exemplify the ideal Canadian civil servant. I do not believe there is a finer civil service in the world than the Canadian civil service. As I have said, these two officials have shown the very finest spirit. We all wish them the very best of luck.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just add a word to what the hon. member for Vancouver South has said? I was going to say something in regard to the retirement of these two officials. I shall be brief, but I do want to associate myself, and the party which I lead in this house, with what has been said. From both Mr. Galbraith and Miss Kearns we have received every courtesy at all times. The efficiency of the debates office is proverbial among members. When you think of the state of the house at times, the interjections and all the rest of it, it is amazing that seldom has an hon. member to rise in his place and make a correction, so seldom that it is unusual to see anyone do such a thing.

Miss Kearns is in charge of the records and the indexing of the topics. After one has searched Hansard oneself to find a reference of years back one can go to that office and get the reference with great efficiency and great speed. We all wish both Mr. Galbraith and Miss Kearns many years of leisure and of happiness in their retirement.

As the hon. member for Vancouver South has said, I believe these two officials, whom we are thus honouring today in these few remarks, are typical of the splendid type of person that we have generally in the civil service of Canada.

Mr. LOW: I am glad that the devoted services of these two officials, Mr. Galbraith and Miss Kearns, is being recognized here this afternoon. I want to join with all the others in expressing the appreciation of our group of the splendid service that we have been given. Sometimes I have wondered how it was that some of the speeches that have been given in this house appeared so good when they came out in Hansard. I suppose it is because of the efficiency of the people in that office. At any rate I have found them at all times very helpful and very efficient, and certainly most devoted in their duties. We all wish them in their retirement long years of happiness.

Mr. POULIOT: As senior member on this side of the house I remember the time when Mr. Galbraith used to be a reporter, and he was doing that job just as well as he does the job of editor. I know Mr. Galbraith well, but I do not call on him every day I speak because I rely on him implicitly. I have given him a blank cheque to correct, but not to add to my speeches. Sometimes I am dumbfounded to see what beautiful English is attributed to me, and it is due to Mr. Galbraith. When I want to know where I can find a statement that interests me, or that I may need, when I want to know on what day I spoke on such and such a matter, I have only to call on Miss Kearns. I believe she has the index at the tip of her fingers. She is always ready to help at any time of the evening we may call on her. I praise Miss Boyce very much also. She has retired. She also was most helpful.

I am sorry that Mr. Galbraith is going. I shall miss him. Sometimes at night, after a hard day's work, I used to go up to Hansard to have a little chat with him and it was quite inspiring. It helped me to forget the vicissitudes of the day.

They are all great people. I have a great admiration also for Mr. Young. He is a former Hansard reporter and he did his job there very well, as he does as editor.

I congratulate them all on what they have done. I express my gratitude for the services they have rendered me, and I want them to know of my admiration for those services both to myself and to my colleagues.

Before I conclude I must say that we have a good service in all the departments. The stenographers have been mentioned. They are first class. There is my friend Cyril Wright, who was forgotten for a long time. He is most helpful. He looks after the mimeographed copies. He deserves something and I am sure he will get it. There are many others that I might mention. They are congenial and helpful. I might say the same about the constables, the same about the post office. The post office is a marvellous organization, when we think of the quantity of mail that passes through it, without a letter being put in the wrong drawer. The employees there are ready to serve, and some times when you have a letter to mail they will run back to get the last mail bag to make sure that it goes. They run as if it were a letter they were personally interested in.

I think the government has done well in all these respects. I congratulate Mr. Speaker and I congratulate the Clerk, the assistant clerk and the sergeant-at-arms. I wonder if it is due to their co-operation that we have now the best House of Commons service that I can recall. You, Mr. Chairman, and the vice-chairman must not forget that you have helped us a good deal at times. Without you life would be miserable.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish to support the remarks that have been made by the previous speakers in their references to Mr. Galbraith on his retirement, and also the remarks that have been made with respect to the civil service as a whole.

I feel it my duty, however, to bring to the attention of the house what I regard as in some respects a gross injustice. I support the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Cape Breton South in reference to employees who have been temporaries for a long period, and the scale of salaries as it applies to the staff of the House of Commons. In order that I may illustrate my point as quickly as possible, I should like to read two short paragraphs from a report submitted to the house on June 23 by the civil service commission with reference to the appointment of Mr. William Jennings as steward of the parliamentary restaurant. I quote:

> It is further recommended under section 59, that this position be exempt from section 13 of the act to permit of such appointment at the maximum of the class, $3,600 per annum, as it is understood that Mr. Jennings is in receipt of this salary at present as a temporary employee.
> The salary range established for the class manager of the joint parliamentary restaurant, by resolution of the House of Commons, was $3,000-$3,600 plus meals during sessions.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

At seventy-five cents a meal that would work out to about $4,000 a year.

> It is customary when an employee in the House of Commons is appointed on a permanent basis that he should not be subject to a reduction in salary.

With reference to that statement, I might say, as a member of the library committee, that we were questioning the librarian and others in regard to the number of temporary employees and we were told that the main reason why there were so many temporary employees was that, in order to become permanent, the majority of them had to accept a reduction in salary and therefore they preferred to remain temporary.

We have in this house many employees who have served the government for a long period of years—and this includes many veterans—who are still temporary and some of whom are being asked recently to take examinations looking to the possibility of appointment on a permanent basis.

Here we have an employee of this parliament who was appointed in 1946. I am not criticizing the employee but using this case as an illustration. He was appointed in 1946 as a temporary employee and in two years he is made permanent at a handsome salary, greater than a good many masters of science and technical men in the Department of Agriculture receive, men who take five years of university training and have ten years or more of field experience in addition.

I call this unfair. Here we have an exemption from examination, the position carrying a salary amounting to some $4,000 a year, for what is in reality six months' employment. I know the job is on a yearly basis, but the steward actually only has to look after the silver between sessions. Recently this position was given a $900 annual increase. Some of these employees have served this parliament for many years and they are now given $3 or $4 a month increase, and at the same time they are required at their age to write examinations in order to become permanent.

I mention these facts because I consider this permanent appointment most unfair in relation to the treatment given certain employees of the House of Commons.

Mr. REID: You are late in raising the point.

Mr. McLURE: I wish to endorse all the good things that have been said with reference to those about whom hon. members have been speaking, and I wish to add one fact for the information of the committee. I am doubly proud of the editor for the reason he is a Prince Edward Islander.

Mr. HANSELL: I do not know that I entirely agree with the hon. member for Kootenay West. I know that there may appear to be discrepancies and I am aware that when you compare a man holding the position of manager of a restaurant with a doctor of philosophy in chemistry in some department there may seem to be a considerable discrepancy. I do not favour discrepancies, but I do not wish to see the salary of a parliamentary restaurant employee brought down; I want to see the others lifted up.

The hon. member mentioned this case by way of illustration. Somehow or other you find that sort of thing all through life and I do not know whether we shall ever get away from it. Take a parliamentary secretary, a stenographer. These people have to take a business course, and yet some slip of a girl may go into a factory as a rivetter and receive more because she is turning nuts in an assembly line. She will get more than a trained stenographer. The same thing is true generally in life and I do not know how we are going to adjust these things. Certainly a parliamentary stenographer is worth more than a girl dressed in overalls working in an assembly plant, but the same is true in life. A college graduate will go out and teach school for anywhere from $125 to $200 a month. Another fellow too lazy to get through high school drives a truck at $6, $7, $8 and $10 a day. As I say, these things happen in life and I do not know that the comparison is an altogether fair one.

I will say this, as far as the parliamentary restaurant is concerned, and I believe I express the view of many members. At least this year, and perhaps for the last couple of years, the parliamentary restaurant and cafeteria have done a much better job than they used to do. That is my own personal opinion. There might be need for a little further investigation of the over-all conditions as to salaries paid to the House of Commons help. I am not now raising one case and pitting it against another, but I believe there are discrepancies. I would urge those in authority to review them again. For instance, I understand that the protective staff who look after the senate door are paid a little more than those who look after the other door. I do not know why that is.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member is suspicious.

Mr. HANSELL: Perhaps the senate door is more dangerous than some other door. But the protective staff have to stand on the same hard floors. One does not have to do more than the other. It seems to be about the same kind of job. I do not know why there should be discrimination there. However, I do not intend seriously to criticize these things except to say that some thought might be given to an adjustment here and there.

Mr. BLAIR: With regard to the assistant chief and the principal clerk of the stenographic pool, I should like to know the dates of their appointments, and whether they are returned soldiers.

Mr. SPEAKER: They have been discharging these duties for three or four years as temporaries. Application has been made to the civil service commission to have permanent appointments made.

Mr. BLAIR: I wanted to know if these men are veterans.

Mr. SPEAKER: No, they are not veterans. It will be up to the civil service commission to accept them or not.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like His Honour the Speaker to answer the main points to which I drew his attention, if he will.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me two questions. The first was as to pensions. As he himself has mentioned, I have nothing to do with that, so he cannot expect to have an answer from me. The second question was with regard to an increase in salaries. I have told the house, as he mentioned a few minutes ago, that I was hoping an increase would be given to all employees of the house. As he knows, nearly all the employees had an increase. If there are any cases which have not yet been covered, I am sure that satisfaction will be given at some time in the future.

Mr. KNOWLES: I appreciate the answer His Honour has made to my second question. It sounded like an assurance that those who have not yet had an increase will have their cases considered even yet. As to my first question with regard to a pension plan for groups such as House of Commons stenographers, it seems to me that we are not even as far ahead as we were on the last day of the last session. On that day I had the assurance of the Prime Minister that the matter would be considered.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member will permit me to interrupt, in order to save time, I should like to say this. He himself said a few minutes ago that he did not believe it was the responsibility of the Speaker. I must say this to him. We have already done a great deal, I believe, during the last year with regard to permanent establishments and increases. I will promise the hon. gentleman to take up that matter of pension with the proper authorities as soon as possible.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am glad to have that promise from His Honour the Speaker, and I accept it. My only reason for taking another moment, despite the opposition to taking any time, is as a result of what happened last year. I should like to clear with His Honour the question of what I said a moment ago. I said, and I stand by it, that I do not think it is the function of His Honour the Speaker to work out the details of a pension plan. He agrees with me that details of the kind should be worked out by the experts in that field. But when we take the matter up with the Minister of Finance, in whose department those experts have been found, he says, "See His Honour the Speaker". The course which must be pursued if action is to be taken seems fairly clear. His Honour the Speaker, on behalf of members of this house who are concerned about the matter, must put the drive behind it. He can go to the Department of Finance to get the work done; but as members we shall have to depend on our first commoner to put the push behind this pension plan. I am glad to have his promise to do all he can; and I hope that when we come back in the fall, or whenever the next session is held, there will be a favourable report ready for implementation.

Mr. REID: Before this item is passed I wish to say one word, and I do so now as a result of statements that have been made to me around here that the only ones who champion the cause of the staff are members of the C.C.F. group. I wish to repudiate that right now, because I am tired of listening to statements that only that group is the voice of humanity. I wish to tell you, Mr. Chairman, and through you, the committee, that many members on this side, including myself, have gone in delegations to the Speaker and to the Clerk, behind the scenes, fighting for the staff. I wish that to be distinctly understood and to be in the record; because I recall a member of this House of Commons exposing in the house some of the things that were going on around here. I may tell you that it was just a well for him, perhaps, that he did not run again, having regard to the black looks he got in some quarters. One could say plenty about what is going on around this house, and it is not said by members; but few have the courage to get up on their feet and say it. I particularly want to say that members on this side of the house, including myself, have been fighting continuously, but of course not openly in the house; we think we can do more behind the scenes. I am putting this on record now so that the staff may understand that members on the Liberal side are thinking of the staff just as much as are members of the C.C.F. I want that made clear.

Mr. GILLIS: There is just one thing I want to say, before this item passes, with regard to what the hon. member for New Westminster has had to say. In my remarks I said that we were all responsible if there was anything wrong around this house, not merely the Speaker or the Clerk. Hon. members should not go to the Speaker or the Clerk and try to dump the responsibility on them. It is our job; and I hope that in future we will view it in that way.

The hon. member for Lanark asked whether the assistant chief and the principal clerk in the stenographic pool were veterans or otherwise. I wish to make my position clear on that point. I believe the veteran should get the preference wherever he is entitled to it, but there are hundreds of people in the employ of the government who served in that employment all during the war, and who were rejected for military service. I think it is a wrong principle to say that men who volunteered or were called up, who were rejected for service and then served for eight or ten years in certain positions, should be replaced because, through no fault of their own, they were not in the service. I want to make that clear, because I know that at least one of the persons the hon. member inquired about—that is, the assistant—is in that category. I believe we should clarify our thinking on the subject; otherwise we can get into a lot of trouble. I want to make my position clear.

Mr. POULIOT: I congratulate the hon. member on his courageous statement.

Item agreed to.

House of Commons—

741. To provide for an annual allowance to the deputy chairman of committees, $2,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: I just want to say "hear, hear" to this. We are all glad to see it in the estimates.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

695. Departmental administration — further amount required, $60,750.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister give us in a word the reasons for these substantial increases? The third item, for instance, entails an increase of over thirty per cent, and the first one practically twenty per cent. Perhaps the minister will make a general statement.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): At the time the general estimates were prepared it was expected that most of the commitments made in the last fiscal year would be paid out of the money appropriated for that year. This amount of $60,750 is required principally for accounts of the king's printer which related to work ordered during the last fiscal year for which the accounts did not come forward in time to be paid out of the appropriations of that year. Therefore this is in the nature of a revote, because the vote having lapsed through the expiry of time, the commitment has to be taken care of out of money that was not provided in the regular estimates. The same is true of the next item for $5,000.

Item agreed to.

697. Representation abroad—further amount required, $233,615.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: A portion of this amount is required for operating expenses, including salaries, of local engaged staff in Belgium, Italy, Russia, United States, Denmark, Poland and New York. Included in the vote is $190,000, which may or may not be expended. This amount is intended to provide for negotiations now being carried on for the acquisition of embassy premises in Rio de Janeiro. Something has been recommended to us as an opportunity to acquire premises that would be suitable for our embassy there. Though the amount appears quite large, we have confirmed from various sources that it is an appropriate price for the premises under consideration. In the long run it would mean an economy in administration expenses if, as I take it to be the case, we are permanently to be represented in the capital of Brazil. I think hon. members will feel that, as long as we do maintain representation in South America, we could not afford not to be represented in Brazil. We are not at all certain that we shall be able to secure this property, but if it can be secured at a price not exceeding $190,000 we think it would be advisable to obtain it.

Mr. HACKETT: That opportunity, if it be considered such, has presented itself since the original estimates were brought down?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes. It is a property that was occupied by a prominent Canadian national who is coming away from Brazil. Our information is that we would be able to get it for a smaller number of Canadian dollars than he would be prepared to take in Brazilian currency, which would have to remain in Brazil.

Item agreed to.

702. World health organization, $200,000.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister explain this item? Is it something that was not foreseen at the time of the preparation of the original estimates?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes. This is an assessment of Canada's contribution to the world health organization, which had not been made at the time the main estimates were prepared.

Item agreed to.

701. International wheat council, $20,000.

Mr. HACKETT: I thought this had been in existence for a long time, and we should be well acquainted with the amount necessary to maintain it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: This amount of $20,000 is required to pay the Canadian government's contribution to the international wheat council for 1947-48. This council was set up in 1942, and consisted originally of only five members. As a result of almost continuous work by government experts since that date, an international wheat agreement has been drawn up which was signed at Washington on March 6, 1948, by the representatives of thirty-six countries. It takes the form of a multilateral bulk contract for five years, under which the three supplying countries undertake to sell and the importing countries undertake to buy 500,000,000 bushels of wheat at prices fixed in the agreement. The new agreement calls for a greatly enlarged secretariat, since it will have the responsibility of working out price equivalents, dealing with disputes and registering sales. It is expected, therefore, that at the first meeting of the new council in July, 1948, a total budget of $85,000 will be set. The share of the participating countries in the budget is to be in direct ratio to their voting power in the council, which in turn is based upon the quantities they have agreed to export or import. Canada has agreed to export 230,000,000 bushels of the total of 500,000,000 bushels, and it is therefore expected that her contribution on that basis, if the budget is $85,000, will amount to $19,550, United States funds.

Mr. HACKETT: Are Russia, Brazil and Australia members of this council?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Australia is a member of this group. Russia and Argentina are not.

Mr. HACKETT: What about the United States?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The United States is the second largest member of the exporting side of the group.

Mr. HATFIELD: Have the agreements been signed?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: By a resolution adopted the other day, the house gave ratification to the signature on the part of Canada.

Mr. HATFIELD: What about the United States?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The United States has not yet dealt with it. As the hon. member knows, congress is now adjourned, and it will not be possible to have this matter dealt with until the next session.

Mr. HATFIELD: Do they all have to sign before the agreement comes into effect?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: A substantial portion is required; and the agreement is not in a position to become operative on August 1 of this year, as had been hoped.

Item agreed to.

International joint commission—

703. To provide for preliminary studies and surveys of the midwestern watershed, $30,000.

Mr. HACKETT: Has any consideration been given to the appointment of a chairman of the international joint commission?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There are two vacancies in the Canadian section of the commission, and the position of secretary also is vacant. It is hoped that when consideration has been completed it will provide for the filling of the three vacancies.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

704. To provide for the Canadian government's contribution to the international refugee organization, $5,415,000.

Mr. LOW: What is the basis upon which Canada's contribution is arrived at?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: As hon. members know, this international refugee organization arises out of a resolution which was adopted by the united nations on December 15, 1946. Canada has already made a contribution covering the first period of its operation. Under the constitution Canada's share in the administrative expenses is 3·2 per cent, which according to the budget would require $153,529 United States funds. Canada's portion of the operational expenses is 3·5 per cent, which according to the budget would amount to $5,258,024.03 United States funds.

Mr. LOW: That is the second period?

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: For the second period. As the hon. member knows, this is for the maintenance of displaced persons in camps and to cover other expenses incurred by the organization which provides the equivalent of steamship transportation to such displaced persons as have come to Canada. Displaced persons are now being transported by air, but the international refugee organization pays only the equivalent of steamship transportation. The resort to air transportation has been due to the insufficiency of steamship accommodation.

Mr. LOW: During the second period how many refugees did Canada receive?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have not that information, but I can get it for the hon. member. It would have to come from the immigration branch and the Department of Labour.

Mr. LOW: Is the number in these camps being whittled down substantially?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Substantial numbers have been relieved from the hardship of merely getting a sustenance in these displaced persons camps.

Mr. ADAMSON: Has the department any record of the number of persons who have been admitted to Canada as compared with the other countries who are members of the international refugee organization? What organizations in Canada are recognized as sponsors of persons in refugee camps in order that they may be admitted to Canada? Does this cover the administration of displaced persons camps on the continent of Europe or wherever they may be?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I shall answer the third question first, if I may take them in that order. This covers all expenditures made by the international refugee organization, which would include expenditures for the maintenance of displaced persons camps on the continent of Europe. I am sorry I have not the information here with which to answer the other two questions, but I can obtain for the hon. gentleman a comparison between the number admitted to Canada and the number admitted to other countries who participate in the organization. I know in a general way that we are in advance of what would be our quota.

The hon. member asks what organizations are recognized as sponsors. I do not know that there are any such organizations. The Department of Labour and the immigration branch control these matters, and arrangements are always made so that there is a place for the displaced person to go to. If a displaced person is admitted under the regulations concerning near relatives of residents of Canada, the Canadian resident would undertake to make proper provision for the displaced person upon arrival.

Those who have come in to augment our labour forces have gone to the mining and forest industries, as well as to the clothing trade. Arrangements are always made so that these persons will have a job on arrival. The same thing is true, as the hon. member knows, of those who come to Canada to engage in domestic service. More requests are received for these people than there are persons to take positions. The lists are prepared and approved by the immigration branch and the Department of Labour.

I assume the hon. member knows that both these departments carefully screen the applications to make sure that a displaced person can be fitted into our community. I think the general impression throughout Canada is that the employment in domestic service of persons from these camps on the continent has been extraordinarily successful. I know a great many families where these persons have taken domestic service, and taking that as a fair cross-section I think I can say that this has been a very successful operation as well as being at the same time a humanitarian one. These persons have rendered real service in Canada.

Mr. ADAMSON: I had a case where displaced persons were examined by a representative of a trade union with regard to their qualifications to fulfil the duties of that particular trade, and they were not let in because they did not come up to the specified requirements, I would like to know what method of screening was used. I happened to hear the deputy minister in charge of immigration say the other day that Canada had far exceeded the United States in this humanitarian work. I am just wondering what the screening machinery is.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The departments have arranged for teams to visit these camps to assure so far as possible that the persons admitted could be fitted into our economy with advantage both to it and to themselves. It was felt that it would not be a humanitarian service to render to anyone to bring him here if it was not likely that he would fit into our economy.

I said a moment ago that we were ahead of any other country. I want to qualify that. The United Kingdom has taken a larger proportion of these displaced persons than we have been able to receive in Canada and I would not want to leave the other impression. It is the United Kingdom, I think, which up to the present time has the most generously provided for the rehabilitation of these poor unfortunates in the displaced persons camps.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was going to make that remark myself. Canada has done pretty well in comparison with all other countries except Great Britain. The money we have expended in connection with I.R.O. has been very much worth while, from the point of view of both Canada and the refugees themselves. I have not the official information at hand, but I have seen the figure of 10,000, which does not include the Polish soldiers, as representing the number who have been moved to Canada. Somebody suggests that it is more than that, but even if it is only 10,000, the cost of transporting that number must account for a fair proportion of the money we have already appropriated.

Surely we have an obligation to the displaced persons in these camps who share the democratic viewpoints—and I use the plural—which we hold; and whatever we can do to relieve their sufferings I think we should do. I know that the number of persons in these camps has been reduced to some extent, but I hope that the definition of a displaced person will be extended beyond that adopted in 1946. Some of those who today are fleeing from Czechoslovakia and other countries which have come under authoritarian or dictatorial rule, should have provision made for them.

But what I rose particularly to say was that there are many desirable people in these camps whom we are overlooking, and I have thought so from the time I was at the united nations meeting in the fall of 1946. I refer to the people of the Balkan countries, Lithuanians, Latvians, and Esthonians. They were at first rather frowned upon because their countries had passed under German domination, and by many they were viewed with suspicion. But many of these people are desirable, and in a higher educational category than those we have been in the habit of taking. I have learned from some of them that there is a disposition to frown upon the better educated groups in the displaced persons camps and to bring those who might do the more menial tasks in Canada. I gave a clipping to the Minister of Labour the other day which had been sent to me by some friends in the country. It indicated that one of the girls who had just come across had said that she had to "act dumb" in order to get accepted. I do not know how true that is, but I had heard it before. I have heard that it was difficult for the better educated girls to be accepted by our authorities on the ground that they might not fit into the position where it was thought they could serve best.

I hope we shall consider this in all quarters of the house not so much as an immigration policy but as a humanitarian policy. Surely the determination of our democratic countries in the past has been that we should give refuge to persons who did not want to live under the regimes that had been established in many countries of Europe and from which they had fled. I like to think that Canada will follow that tradition and bring into this country men and women who will not return to their countries of origin because they believe in democracy and in freedom. I deplore the charge hurled against myself and other members of this group that we stand for something other than democracy. That is a reflection on the political parties in countries such as Norway, Sweden, Denmark and the United Kingdom, who politically share our views.

This group in this house is interested in giving expression to the humanitarian ideal embodied in I.R.O. I know that is true of the Liberal party also, and of our Conservative friends, and I hope that by joining together we may be able to give these people a haven of refuge in their time of need. If we do, I am convinced that just as Great Britain has benefited from peoples who have gone there from Europe and brought with them wonderful skills, we too may receive the same advantages. Do not let Australia, which is very much interested in this particular group of people, get more of them than we do, and do not let these people go to South America if we can find a place for them here in Canada.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There is at the present time a team inquiring into the qualifications and capabilities of people whom we generally describe as of the white-collar class, for the purpose of determining how they could be fitted into our Canadian economy.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: With respect to my hon. friend's other point, that there was a rather narrow definition of those who might be regarded as displaced persons entitled to assistance under I.R.O., when those regulations were drawn and we were trying to get the consent of all, there was a restriction accepted for no other reason than that of trying to get unanimous consent. There were under our regulations persons who were admissible to Canada but were not qualified to get assistance in what is called "processing" for transportation purposes, and a special amount was included in the department of immigration vote to extend to those persons the financial advantages which they would get from I.R.O. if, for instance, they were relatives of a resident of Canada.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would remind the committee that these items were carried, but the hon. member for Stanstead wished to revert to item 703.

Mr. POULIOT: Item 704 is not carried, Mr. Chairman.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: No. I rose to speak, and at the same time the hon. member for Peace River rose, and the minister made a sign for us to sit down while he was replying to other members. I want to speak on that, and it is not adopted, sir, if you will excuse me.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I want to say to the hon. member as plainly as I can that these items are carried and have been sent upstairs. If the hon. member wishes to speak he may do so, but I hope he will not continue to contradict the chairman.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not want to contradict the chairman. The chairman knows that I love him; we are old friends. I would not contradict him for a kingdom.

My remarks will be brief. Here is an item of $5,415,000 to provide for the Canadian government's contribution to the international refugee organization. It is under the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There are other items, some under the Minister of Mines and Resources, and some under the Minister of Labour for precisely the same purpose, immigration. There are items 221, 222 and 223 in the immigration branch amounting to $3,788,000. In the supplementary estimates there are items 774, 775, 776 and 777 amounting to $2,303,137. These are under mines and resources. In the Department of Labour there is item 148, amounting to $700,000, and item 732, amounting to $250,000. Therefore, sir, we have items of $5,400,000 odd under the Secretary of State for External Affairs; items amounting to $6,092,000 under the Minister of Mines and Resources, and items amounting to $950,000 under the Minister of Labour. It is all spread out. I think it would be right to suggest that all the items that concern immigration should be either under the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Mines and Resources, one minister, so that there is one head to direct the immigration policies of the government. I protest strongly against the dissemination of branches of government. We find them under one minister this time, namely, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have to refer to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Mines and Resources. It is complete disorder and anarchy. I do not wish to discredit the director of immigration and his assistants; they are able fellows.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member is right.

Mr. POULIOT: But the rule between them is never to mind their own business. They always look over the shoulder of somebody to read what he is writing, or to see what he is doing, and to report it and to boast that they are better than the other fellow. It is complete anarchy. If we want reform we must start it in a simple manner. We must acknowledge that all of those who are supposed to do the same thing should be together, so that necessary comparisons may be made and so that there may be a united effort in a common policy, whatever it is. If that is done, we shall be in a better position to judge the policy.

With regard to the vote, may I say that we are about to finish the session, and therefore I shall not insist upon it today but I shall have something to say on it next year. I am greatly concerned about the international refugee organization. I do not know these people. They make no report. We should know what they are doing with the money that Canada pays to them. What are the results? Who are the people that are sent here, and so forth?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am afraid it is my fault. Perhaps unwittingly I misled the hon. member. This amount is not an amount that is expended under the direction of external affairs. It is the contribution that the Canadian government has to make to an international organization under a constitution approved by the houses of parliament. The budget is established by the organization itself, and it is assessed against Canada. The amount I mentioned in this vote is to provide for it.

Incidentally, hon. members asked me questions as to what portion of the activities of the I.R.O. was having a direct effect in Canada. The expenditures made under the control of the Canadian government with respect either to immigration or to placement of labour are under these two departments, and this has nothing to do with the activities controlled by officers of the Canadian department.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister. If anything I said did not apply to him, it surely, applies to mines and resources and to labour.

Mr. LOW: There was one word I wanted to say in regard to this $5,450,000 to the I.R.O. There is a feeling in some sections of Canada that the I.R.O. is shifting some of its responsibilities so that in the end result Canadians are paying for the passages. That was the reason I raised the question in the first place. When people properly classified in Europe as refugees try to come under I.R.O., make application to come to Canada where some of their relatives reside, it has been stated to me on a number of occasions that the relatives had to pay to get these refugees out to this country. That should not be. Has the minister any information on that?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have no such information. It has been my understanding, and I think that is in accord with what is taking place, that those in the refugee camps, who come within the definition of the charter, are provided for out of I.R.O. funds. There are persons eligible under our regulations to come to Canada and who happen to be in displaced persons camps who are not recognized as refugees in the definition of the constitution. It is for these persons, and in order to put them in as favoured a position as the recognized refugees, that there was included this year in the estimates of the Department of Immigration sums which could be devoted to this processing purpose by voluntary organizations which have been set up, and which are providing assistance, the know-how, that one has to have in order to get all the papers that are required to be transported.

Mr. POULIOT: I am afraid that the hon. member for Peace River is right.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the cases can be drawn to our attention we shall be most happy to take them up with I.R.O.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not know what is happening over there, but I have had cases brought to my attention. In one case the money was collected. When I took up the complaint with the Department of Immigration they told me that it was collected improperly. Quite recently a domestic in Germany who was coming to this country was asked to give them $300 for passage to Canada. Whether there are some persons over there trying to take advantage of some of these displaced individuals I do not know; but I do know that the two cases I have mentioned are authentic. The hon. member for Peace River is right. I am quite sure that when it is brought to the attention of the department every effort is made to stop that kind of thing, because it is not within the I.R.O.

Mr. HLYNKA: I want to say a word on this.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must remind the hon. member that these items have been passed. What we have before us is the Department of Transport.

Mr. HLYNKA: It is so important that I want to say a word. I will take just half a minute. Perhaps I have had as many immigration cases to handle as any hon. member in the house. From experience I can tell the minister that the individual immigrant must pay for his transportation. That is the way it works out. With respect to the group movements which are brought in by industrialists, the money is refunded to the industrialists who make application for the admission of displaced persons and refugees to Canada. But so far as displaced persons are concerned, money is recovered from their relatives who make application to the immigration branch. That is the way it works in practice, and that is why I drew this fact to the attention of the Minister of Immigration a few days ago, with a view to having the matter looked into so that people who are not too well off financially and who cannot help their relatives may get some assistance.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Canals service—
891. Canals—construction and improvements—further amount required, $1,418,815.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain this?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is for additional requirements which were not contemplated at the time the main estimates were prepared. It represents capital construction and the acquisition of equipment for various canals under the jurisdiction of the department.

Mr. GREEN: All canals?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I did not say all, but various canals.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have had many communications from New York state endorsing the remarks I made some time ago with reference to the completion of the Chambly canal, from six to twelve feet, so that the route of travel from Sorel to New York will be by canal all the way. The minister at that time intimated that he would look into the matter. Has he had time to do so?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have not had time since the main estimates, but I told the hon. gentleman that there was a difficulty in the way, though he did not agree with me at the time. It is a difficulty that has to be faced, and in view of negotiations under way in connection with the other project I had thought that, until that project was disposed of, I would defer looking into the other matter.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I again suggest that the minister consider it? The deepening of the Sorel-New York canal has no more to do with the St. Lawrence than the man in the moon. They are totally different.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
898. To provide towards the construction of a lightship for the port of Saint John, N.B.—capital—further amount required, $450,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister say a word about this? My recollection is that there was something like $1,000,000 for which provision was being made in the main estimates. Would it be for the same purpose?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The sum of $100,000 was voted for this purpose in the main estimates. This is an additional $450,000, because tenders were asked for and we require funds when the contract is given. The total cost will be $850,000.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—
901. Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals—construction and improvement of terminal facilities—capital—further amount required, $600,000.

Mr. McLURE: In the last few days I have received complaints against me personally for not looking after matters on the Tormentine side. I received one letter that criticized me very much for conditions prevailing over there, and I thought that perhaps I might mention it to the Minister of Transport. One of the criticisms which the press got and the department received came from the premier of the province, Mr. Jones. He complained that a week ago last Monday he came down by car from Ottawa and had to wait four hours at Tormentine for a boat to take him over. Then he complained bitterly about there being no rest room accommodations at Tormentine. I explained in answer to communications I received that these were all under construction. The premier went on to say that this was a disgrace, and then he made a further remark regarding the amount that was voted. I quote:

The argument of the dominion authorities with respect to transportation facilities between the island and the mainland, the premier said, was that it had spent $7,000,000 on the terminals at Tormentine and Borden and another

$7,000,000 on the building of the Abegweit. "The dominion government forgets," the premier said, "that the millions of dollars of wealth produced annually by this province is spent mostly for the benefit of the central provinces."

I draw that to the minister's attention in case he has not seen this article. I am sure that when he sees it he will bring about some improvement.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Those representations have been made to me and I am giving them my attention.

Item agreed to.

Air service—
Civil aviation division—

910. Airways and airports—construction and improvements, including radio facilities—capital (revote $317,450)—further amount required, $2,086,667.

Mr. GREEN: On what airports is this money to be spent?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will give the larger amounts. At Malton, $250,000 for the construction of a 2,000-foot extension to the east-west runway; Sydney, $75,000; Saskatoon, $125,000; Calgary, $250,000; Fredericton, $350,000. The rest is divided into small amounts varying from $50,000 down among the secondary airports. It also includes acquisition of equipment and radio services.

Item agreed to.

Air service—
Civil aviation division—

916. To authorize contribution to Trans-Canada Air Lines for improvements to airways facilities at Kinross airport, adjacent to Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, on the great lakes route, not exceeding $19,000.

Mr. GREEN: This money is to be spent on an airport in Michigan. Under what arrangement is Canada spending money on an American airport?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is an airport used in the great lakes route. Very often, because of weather conditions, T.C.A. has to go down on the American side. There is a certain tip of Michigan across which the T.C.A. must fly, and rather than build an airport in American territory we find it cheaper to ask the Americans to spend this money. This is the authorized contribution to Trans-Canada Air Lines for improvements they have made to Kinross airport and the money they have paid to the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, on this route. It is in the amount of $19,000.

Mr. GREEN: Does the T.C.A. pay rental for the use of the field? I have landed there myself, and I am wondering what the arrangement is.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. It is not a rental. The arrangement is one whereby the amount of money that is required to make facilities available to T.C.A. is paid by it and the department reimburses T.C.A.

Mr. GREEN: Is there not some reciprocal arrangement with the United States? American lines use many of our Canadian airports, and it would seem that there should be some arrangement between the two governments whereby Trans-Canada Air Lines could use American airports and the Americans could use ours.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not aware of such an arrangement. In the establishment of the direct air route between Toronto and Winnipeg, via Sault Ste. Marie, there was some question of the construction of an airport at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, but after that had been considered, particularly the high cost of construction of that field in comparison with one already in existence, the latter was adopted. It was thought, with the high cost of construction of the field, as compared with the one already in existence, it would be much more profitable to ask the Michigan authorities to allow T.C.A. to operate on this basis. There was no vote provided in the estimates to cover an arrangement such as this. I am not able to tell the hon. gentleman what other expenditures have been made on this field by Canada. I could get the information if he requires it. But this is unquestionably a small amount that is required, and I would think much more than this has been spent by Canada.

Mr. GREEN: Do the Americans not pay anything at all for the use of the airports? They are running lines into Canada at many centres.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, there is a tariff of fees. Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not here when that discussion took place at some length. I have tabled here the charges that are made in this country to United States lines and other lines at our airports. It is quite a complicated thing. It depends upon the weight of the plane, the load it carries, and the like.

Mr. GREEN: Do they contribute anything for improvements to our airports?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, they do not contribute anything other than by paying this tariff of fees.

Mr. GREEN: I suppose we pay fees at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, as well as pay for improvements, do we not?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think we do. The reason why this and the following item are set up under separate votes is that this is a different arrangement entirely with the United States. It is not one which is included in the general vote for operation of airfields. For that reason it was not lumped with all the other airfields. This is a separate situation, under special circumstances. For that reason I think there is no similar arrangement. But I should not like to be too positive of that.

Mr. MacNICOL: Item 917 covers the same type of circumstances?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: Can the minister indicate the nature of the improvements to Kinross airport? As I understand it, it was built during the war as a defence project; and any who have been there recognize that, with its concrete runways, it is about the best in North America.

Mr. LENNARD: What improvements could be made?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This item is to authorize contribution to Trans-Canada Air Lines for improvements to airways facilities at Kinross airport. It is to provide for payment to T.C.A. of its share of the cost of installing runway lighting to meet T.C.A. operational standards and requirements at Kinross. The total cost of this improvement was $28,891, toward which the state of Michigan contributed $10,000; and the remainder of $19,000 is to cover the agreement made by the airlines.

Item agreed to.

Air service—
Civil aviation division—

917. To authorize contribution of an amount not exceeding $137,490 to the state of Michigan, U.S.A., Department of Aeronautics, towards the cost of operation and maintenance of certain airways facilities at Houghton and Grand Marais, Michigan, U.S.A., for use of Canadian aircraft, as certified to by the controller of civil aviation and approved by the Minister of Transport, $137,490.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What is the nature of these facilities that are being provided under this item of $137,000? I do not understand it. I do not think there is any landing field there, unless it might be an emergency one.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. The position is the same here as at Kinross. It is on the great lakes route and these are facilities for T.C.A. This is a contribution to the state of Michigan for operation and maintenance of certain air facilities for the use of our planes at Houghton and Grand Marais, Michigan. At Houghton the expenditure is broken down as follows: operation of radio range, $21,520; airport operations, $63,000; and at Grand Marais, Michigan, operation of radio range, $22,550; airport operation, $30,420.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What is meant by airport operation? Does that mean maintenance of an emergency flying field?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, that is right. This airfield is operated by the Americans, and we reimburse the Americans for this expenditure.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are there two emergency airfields? Are they constructed at the present time?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. They are in operation.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They are in operation as airfields?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are they emergency landing fields or regular fields?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, they are not emergency landing fields. They are airfields which are used by the T.C.A. on the great lakes air route. They are built by Canadian funds. This work is actually done with Canadian funds and handed over to the state of Michigan. They are on the Toronto-Winnipeg line.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They are not on the schedule. They are not used.

Mr. KNOWLES: They are emergency stops.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They must be emergency stops if they are anything, because there is only one stop between Toronto and Winnipeg on that route, and that is at Sault Ste. Marie.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. GREEN: No. I should like to find out more about this. Were these airports built by Canada?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, they were not built by Canada; but the funds were provided by Canada.

Mr. GREEN: In effect then they were airports installed by the Trans-Canada Air Lines. Is that the position?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I would rather put it in my own words. The position is that these are Canadian funds. This amount of $137,940 consists of Canadian funds that have been paid over to the state of Michigan for the operation and maintenance of these fields. They are built by the Americans in accordance with the terms of the aeronautics act of the United States and they are in use not as regular stops —perhaps I created the impression a moment ago that they were—but as emergency fields.

Mr. GREEN: They are really emergency landing fields for Trans-Canada Air Lines. Is that the position?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Air service—
Meteorological division—

918. Meteorological services—further amount required, $165,980.

Mr. ARGUE: As the minister is well aware, at the present time many areas of western Canada are suffering from drought. I have had a number of farmers ask me recently if there are any regulations to prevent them from hiring people who are in the business of rain making. I know of some areas in which attempts are being made to collect $1,000 to hire somebody to come out and drop a bit of dry ice in the hope that some rain will fall. I should like to know if there are any regulations the farmers must comply with before they can get these people out on a rain making operation, and if the government is giving any assistance toward running an operation of that kind.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is a meteorological service which is operated in connection with the air services. It provides services also for the Department of Transport. But I am afraid that it would not be possible, under this item, to give to my hon. friend the assistance that he would want.

Mr. ARGUE: Can the minister give me any information as to whether there are any regulations that the farmers will have to comply with before they can get rain making operations started in their localities?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not think this vote covers the case that my hon. friend raises. This vote is to provide for the salaries of meteorologists at various weather stations in the northern part of Canada.

Mr. ARGUE: Then would the minister give me the information some other time?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, if I can get it.

Item agreed to.

Air service—
Radio division—

919. Administration of the Radio Act and regulations—further amount required, $163,400.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How much is required for the administration of the Radio Act and regulations? Here we have more than $160,000 additional.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is perhaps misleading, and I do not blame my hon. friend for asking the question. This vote is to provide for the operation and maintenance of four ionospheric stations. An ionospheric station is pretty much the same as a meteorological station but in another field. It measures the electricity in the air in reference to radio transmission, and from it we can tell whether the weather is suitable for radio transmission, just as the meteorological station tells us whether we are to have good or bad weather for flying. This vote provides for the operation and maintenance of four of these stations which will be built at Moosonee, Fort Chimo, Baker lake and Resolute bay. They are to be built for the purpose of supplying information to the defence research board, which is providing the funds. I understand that those funds have been voted already, and this amount is for the maintenance and operation of these stations.

Item agreed to.

Loans and investments—
National harbours board—

931. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1948 on any or all of the following accounts: Reconstruction and capital expenditures—Montreal—further amount required, $500,000.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain this vote?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is for the construction of a portion of the Jacques Cartier pier. One of the portions of the wharf collapsed in 1943, and a small amount of money had to be spent in order to save it from falling entirely. Now the upstream side of the wharf is affected and is in such condition that, unless this work is done immediately, there is danger of the whole wharf collapsing. This amount is to provide for the expenditure this year of sums of money required to put the upstream side of this pier in such condition that it will carry on until we are able to give out a contract.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

718. Remission service—further amount required, $37,360.

Mr. FULTON: Why is there need for further money for the remission service? It seems an odd request.

Hon. JOSEPH JEAN (Solicitor General): This is for an improvement we want to bring about in the remission service. As hon. members know, we have to interview inmates for clemency purposes. Today we have only the Ottawa branch and not enough personnel to go to all the institutions and have personal interviews with the inmates. We intend opening a branch in Vancouver, another in central Canada and another in eastern Canada, so that more frequent interviews may be held with the inmates for these purposes. I believe it will be a great improvement.

Item agreed to.

720. Combines investigation branch—further amount required, $19,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is this the first result of the report of the prices committee? Is this additional amount allocated as a result?

Mr. JEAN: This is for the combines investigation branch. As everyone knows, this office has more work today than it had last year, and it appears necessary to provide this extra amount for fees for legal counsel, special assistants, reporters, special commissioners and witnesses. The investigation into the bread-baking industry which is being carried on involves expenditures which were not considered when recommendations were made for the main estimates.

Mr. GREEN: I take it from the Solicitor General's answer that this has nothing whatever to do with the recommendation made by the prices committee?

Mr. JEAN: No. This work was going on before that report was made.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any item in the supplementary estimates to meet the recommendation of that committee with respect to the combines investigation branch?

Mr. JEAN: No.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I might interrupt for a moment. Not very many items remain. May I ask if it would be agreeable to hon. members to continue sitting without intermission at six o'clock.

Mr. GREEN: That would be satisfactory to the official opposition.

Mr. MacINNIS: I would point out that this is not as convenient to the reporting staff as it is to us. We can leave this building every now and then, and come back again. The reporters have to carry on, and they have been here since eleven o'clock this morning. We should have some regard for their welfare as well as for our own convenience.

[Mr. Jean.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe the official staff will be pleased the more quickly we get through with the proceedings. I understand that they are not objecting.

Mr. KNOWLES: If we could be sure of getting through in an hour I think that would be satisfactory; but there are still items in agriculture, trade and commerce, veterans affairs, justice, post office, reconstruction and supply, and the office of the Prime Minister. I can tell the committee I have nothing more to say, but we do know some hon. members have matters they are going to raise. I do not believe we can get through in an hour, and I do not think it is fair to carry on in this way. I believe we should have an intermission of at least one hour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps we might go on until seven o'clock, and if we do not conclude by that time we could resume at eight.

Mr. KNOWLES: I would agree to that.

723. To provide for expenses of commission of inquiry into Japanese property claims, $150,000.

Mr. GREEN: Can the Solicitor General tell us when the inquiry into the Japanese property claims is expected to conclude?

Mr. JEAN: I cannot say definitely. There is a great deal of work to do. As far as I can see, we may not have a report before next year.

Item agreed to.

724. To provide for the revision, classification and consolidation of the public general statutes of Canada, $50,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Has the commission been appointed for this revision of the statutes?

Mr. JEAN: Besides the commissioners there will be clerical assistance, for which $12,000 is being provided.

Mr. POULIOT: Have the commissioners been appointed?

Mr. JEAN: Item agreed to.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

874. Land services—arising out of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, enforcement of federal statutes generally, and other incidental expenses—further amount required, $1,386,201.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister give us a breakdown of this item?

Mr. JEAN: It is principally increases in salaries. There are increases in rates of seventy-five cents a day for 2,743 members of the force from April 1, 1948 to March 31, 1949, which require $750,896.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would the minister put the new schedules of pay on the record?

Mr. JEAN: I do not know if I have it here.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister get it from the department and place it on the record?

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

806. Post offices, including salaries and other expenses of headquarters and staff post offices and supplies and equipment for revenue post offices—further amount required, $155,660.

Mr. GREEN: Several years ago certain employees were taken on the staff at Vancouver on a temporary basis. I have in mind one man who served in both the first and second great wars who was taken on as a temporary letter carrier in 1945 and who has been doing the job temporarily ever since. Apparently a ruling was made a short time ago that these men would have to pass written examinations in order to hold their jobs. This particular veteran tried twice but was unable to pass the examination, and, as a result, he either has been discharged or is to be discharged. This question was dealt with by the special committee on veterans affairs which recommended as follows:

> Your committee has been informed that there are a number of veterans of world war I in the lower grades of the civil service who have given satisfactory service over a period of years in a temporary capacity, but who might not be able to pass the required qualifying examinations for permanent appointment. Your committee feels that such men should not be deprived of the benefits of permanency and recommends that, if otherwise eligible, they be confirmed in their positions without written examinations.

I suggest that these men should receive the benefit of that recommendation. If they are able to do the job and have served the country they should receive consideration. I think anyone over fifty years of age might have trouble in passing a written examination.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: I hear the Prime Minister agrees with that. I think it is being just a little bit tough with these men simply because they are unable to pass an examination.

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): These examinations for letter carriers are rather easy, and it might be difficult to require that some have to pass the examination while others do not. However, my opinion is not formed on this matter and I shall look into it further. I hope the hon. member will give me the name of this man.

DEPARTMENT OF RECONSTRUCTION AND SUPPLY

Demobilization and reconversion—

869. Housing development, including commitments of previous years—Wartime Housing Limited—further amount required, $15,000,000.

Mr. GREEN: Could we have some explanation of this item?

Mr. McILRAITH: June 1, 1948, was cut-off date for the building program of Wartime Housing Limited for the coming year. At that time negotiations were under way with various municipalities which will probably result in agreements being completed with respect to a further 2,250 units under the 1948 rental housing plan. The 1948 building season got under way quite early, and it is probable that these units can be included in the 1948 program without increasing the carry-over of unfinished houses into the 1949 season, and it is estimated that it will cost this additional amount.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: A Wartime Housing project was started in Yorkton about four or five years ago, the houses being completed about two years ago. The contract for the landscaping work was given to a Winnipeg firm, but up to date this landscaping has not been done. If this contractor is not going to carry out the work I think something should be done about seeing what can be done locally. Will the parliamentary assistant have that looked into?

Mr. McILRAITH: I shall be glad to.

Mr. McLURE: Has the parliamentary assistant any further information with regard to the Maple Hills emergency housing proposition on the airport grounds at Charlottetown? According to the press, the government has sold these buildings to the provincial government, and the Department of Reconstruction and Supply are washing their hands of this proposition in which they had a 50 per cent interest.

Mr. McILRAITH: There is no item in the supplementaries dealing with emergency shelter and I have no information on that with me. This item is limited to Wartime Housing Limited. I will try to let the hon. member have the information he desires.

Item agreed to.

870. To provide for production and transportation subsidies on steel and iron under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council—further amount required, $3,000,000.

Mr. FULTON: We had a discussion here the other day when the production subsidy on steel was removed, and now here we have an item of $3,000,000 in the supplementaries for production and transportation subsidies on steel and iron. Can the parliamentary assistant say how that comes about?

Mr. McILRAITH: There was an item of $5,000,000 in the main estimates which was prepared and brought forward before the new subsidy program was worked out. There is an additional $3,000,000 in the supplementaries, and the combined items represent a reduction of some $7,000,000 from the $15,000,000 voted last year.

Mr. FULTON: Is the reduction caused by cutting off the subsidy approximately half way through the year?

Mr. McILRAITH: No, that is not the explanation. It is the changed way of working out the whole program. The subsidies have to do with two things, production in the different steel mills on different basic products, and then there is the freight subvention to assist in moving one type of basic product to the mill where it can be processed, so that we shall have all the steel mills' producing capacity in use.

Mr. FULTON: I do not quite understand why, when the production subsidy was cancelled, it should be necessary to bring in a supplementary of $3,000,000 for production and transportation subsidies. I do not want the parliamentary assistant to go back over what he said, but can he give a short explanation of why we have this supplementary estimate when actually the subsidy has been cut off?

Mr. McILRAITH: I do not understand the hon. member when he says the subsidy has been cut off.

Mr. FULTON: There was a press release the other day to the effect that the production subsidy on steel was being discontinued. We had a discussion of it in the house the other day on the reconstruction estimates, and the hon. member for Cape Breton South dealt with it at some length and criticized the timing of the removal of the subsidy. I later on asked the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply how much would be saved, and he said, approximately $2,500,000, and that the extra cost to the country as a whole from the increased price of steel would be around $17,000,000. So it was definitely established then that the production subsidy was discontinued, and I do not see why we now need $3,000,000 in the supplementaries for production and transportation subsidies.

Mr. McILRAITH: I do not think the earlier discussion went quite as far as the hon. member suggests. It was not a cutting off at all. The old type of subsidy was dropped; another system of subsidies was set up, and there was a $5,000,000 item in the main estimates which was discussed at some length.

Mr. GILLIS: The hon. member for Kamloops is correct in what he says. The government recently granted an increase in the price of steel, which averaged $8.20 a ton, ranging from $5 on basic steel to $12 on processed steel. The government's excuse for permitting at that time an increase in the price of steel was that they would save $2,500,000 by way of subsidy. I pointed out, when I discussed the matter, that, on the basis of steel production in 1947, the increase in price would mean an additional profit to the operating steel companies—Dosco, Stelco and Algoma—of approximately $9,000,000. I said I thought it was poor timing, because an increase in the price of basic steel would further aggravate the price situation throughout the country. The excuse given, according to the press release I saw, was that the government was saving $2,500,000 by way of subsidy.

Mr. McILRAITH: The saving is more than that.

Mr. GILLIS: But there is $5,000,000 in the main estimates and $3,000,000 in the supplementaries, so that takes away the excuse given that the government was saving $2,500,000.

Mr. McILRAITH: We are saving slightly more.

Mr. GILLIS: You are not saving anything, because you are dumping the load on the back of the consumer and further aggravating a bad price situation. I did not think you could get away from subsidies or pin them down to the $5,000,000 in the main estimates. I am not arguing against the subsidy, because in the part of the country from which I come they need a subsidy to drag their basic steel all the way into central Canada. But this does not make sense and does not follow through with the argument made by the minister in the house when he was justifying the price increase. The thing I am arguing against is that the government permitted the price increase in basic steel at the time they did, an increase averaging about $8.20 a ton, which was dumped on the back of the consumer. I do not think you are saving anything by way of subsidy, and the increase in the price of steel will certainly tend to aggravate the already bad price situation.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

883. Trade publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad—further amount required, $116,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This is another of these publicity items which seem to crop up every time you turn around. What about this $116,000 more which is required?

Mr. McILRAITH: The purpose of this vote is, by means of publicity and advertising, to assist in developing markets abroad for Canadian products and stimulating the interest of foreign producers in the Canadian market; as a means to this end, to arouse the interest of Canadian manufacturers, producers and importers in foreign business and acquaint them with the facilities for trade expansion offered by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The item is broken down as between advertising in Canada and abroad, $100,000, and films, $16,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That does not explain anything. We know in general what it is for. Why do we need $116,000 additional now? What makes this come along at this time? It is very unusual to have these tremendous expenditures, especially at a time when we are told that there is a sellers' market, that there is a shortage of everything.

Mr. McILRAITH: There is also one other thing, apart from its being a sellers' market. There are some additional requirements arising from the E.R.P. program, which puts additional burdens on this. That is one factor entering into it. There is this further explanation. Perhaps I should not have abbreviated my remarks. There were some delays in the receipt of advertising accounts of 1947-48 from overseas. There has been a substantial carryover of such accounts into 1948-49. The amount of the carryover is some $106,000; whereas the total amount in the main estimates for advertising is only $150,000. Therefore we had to carry over this amount of $106,000, and we had only $150,000 in the main estimates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Only $150,000 in the main estimates for what?

Mr. McILRAITH: Advertising.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): According to item 446, there are some $303,000, if that is the right item.

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes, but if the hon. member will take the details of the item he will find that advertising is $150,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will the parliamentary assistant tell the committee what the difference between publicity and advertising is?

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes, I think I can do that in a general way. The whole vote includes such things as salaries, allowances, printing, stationery and office equipment, travelling expenses. Then there is this item: advertising their booklets, films, translation of material, clipping services and subscriptions, and printing Foreign Trade. The supplementary estimate applies only to the one detail of trade publicity and advertising, and that one detail is the advertising item of $100,000, which is added to the $16,000 for the film item.

Mr. MacINNIS: The item does not say that. The item is exactly the same as the one in the main estimates.

Mr. McILRAITH: The details of the item in the general estimates include trade publicity and advertising, but the supplementary includes only advertising and films, just the two parts of the main item.

Mr. HATFIELD: Why increase advertising when goods are in short supply in Canada?

Mr. McILRAITH: The main part of this is not to increase advertising. There is this difficulty about trying to maintain and increase trade. There is considerable dislocation, and we are trying to maintain markets at the present time. The item is not an increase as such; it is partly increased, but there is a substantial carryover.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Just as a protest against this easy granting of money for publicity, I move that the item be struck out. That will bring the matter to a head and we shall have it settled.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. McILRAITH: I did not expect a motion to be pressed at this moment. It is well to remember that about 35 per cent of our production goes into marketing abroad. It is a tremendous thing for this country. To say that we should not advertise and try to establish firmly our markets as one of the great trading nations is a pretty serious thing. The consequences of the external trade of Canada is greater than it is in most other countries. I do not want to get into an argument about it, but in a country like the United States the external trade relative to their total production of business is small. Here it is a very great item. I want to point that out before the hon. member presses his motion to wipe out the item.

Mr. HATFIELD: The parliamentary assistant does not mean to assume that I have that feeling about our foreign trade. What I am complaining about is this large additional inadequately explained item. There is no danger of my motion carrying. It might be a useful gesture when these amounts are being brought in next time.

Mr. ISNOR: I am surprised at the hon. member suggesting that this amount be struck out entirely. I am surprised at his reference in regard to our expanding our business. It is the general practice, not only in a selling market, to continue to seek new markets. During world war I well known firms did that. Take Wolsey's Underwear. They continued to advertise in Canada from 1914 to 1918 without having a dollar's worth of goods to ship to this country. This is a splendid opportunity to expand our export business, particularly when the Department of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. HATFIELD: We have no goods to export.

Mr. ISNOR: For every dollar we spend in Canada we depend upon foreign trade to give us thirty-five cents.

Mr. HATFIELD: Advertise when we have some goods.

Mr. ISNOR: It is all very well for the hon. member to deal with one particular item, namely potatoes, in which he is particularly interested. At times he has welcomed the export market as the only market to take care of his surplus supplies. He knows that as well as the rest of us.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have great respect for the senior hon. member for Halifax, and I shall defer to his wishes. I move that the item be reduced to $20,000, so that I shall get his vote.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry to disagree with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. It is essential to advertise Canadian goods that we have to export. It is so evident that even private firms like the House of Seagram have sent magnificent advertising to be published in periodicals of both the Americas. They described the lumbering industry, the mining industry and the fishing industry, all industries in which they are not interested, but they advertise Canadian produce. If that is done by private firms like the House of Seagram, with beautiful illustrations, I do not see why the Canadian government should not do it in the interest of the whole community.

Mr. MacINNIS: Since the hon. member has mentioned the House of Seagram, may I say that in my opinion it is an outstanding disgrace that labour and materials and human energy should be expended at a time like this in advertising such as Seagram's do.

[Mr. Hatfield.]

Mr. POULIOT: There was no bottle on these advertisements. They were not advertising their own product. They were advertising the lumber industry and the fishing industry. They were doing that because there was not enough publicity by the government. They should be lauded instead of criticized for it. They have been doing very well.

Mr. GREEN: How much of that money is to be spent for publicity in Canada? The vote in the main estimates for advertising in Canada and abroad is $150,000, and there is an amount of $100,000 in the supplementaries.

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: That is $250,000 for advertising in Canada and abroad. How much is spent in Canada?

Mr. McILRAITH: I am sorry I have not the breakdown as between Canada and abroad, but the carryover of grants from abroad is $106,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario) moves that vote 883 be reduced by $20,000. Those in favour of the amendment will say "yea".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

The CHAIRMAN: Those opposed will say "nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the nays have it.

Item agreed to.

885. Canadian international trade fair, 1949, including authority to refund from revenue deposits received for contracts for space, $500,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does this refer to the 1949 international trade fair to be held in Toronto?

Mr. McILRAITH: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Wheat and grain division—

887. To hereby authorize the Canadian wheat board to buy rapeseed and sunflower seed from producers at a price of six cents per pound for the best grade f.o.b. local shipping point and at appropriate prices for other grades during the period commencing on August 1, 1948 and ending on July 31, 1949; to sell rapeseed and sunflower seed so purchased or the oil extracted therefrom as directed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce; to enter into such contracts as the said minister may direct for the carrying out of any of these operations, $1.

Mr. WRIGHT: This is a vote of $1. I presume the money necessary will be obtained from some other source.

Mr. McILRAITH: The fund is set up and this provides the legal authority.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wish to ask the parliamentary assistant some questions with regard to the handling of rapeseed and rapeseed oil. The government purchases it through the wheat board, and it is processed in the plant in Moose Jaw. I believe there is in Canada only one plant processing rapeseed into rapeseed oil. I do not know how much of this is exported. I should like to know the amount of rapeseed oil exported and who is exporting it. When we export coarse grains, equalization certificates are issued by means of which any money made on the export of the grain is returned to the producers. What procedure is followed in the export of rapeseed oil? Is it all consumed in Canada? If not; if it is exported, I would point out that the price of rapeseed oil in the United States is much higher than in Canada, and the same procedure should be followed as with coarse grains. Where the rapeseed or rapeseed oil is exported there should be equalization certificates to enable the producers to get the benefit of the export price.

Mr. McILRAITH: I am sorry I cannot give the information as to what is being exported, if any. I will look into the question and advise the hon. member.

Mr. HATFIELD: What company in Moose Jaw is processing sunflower seed?

Mr. McILRAITH: I am afraid I shall have to ask the hon. member's indulgence. I will get the information for him.

Mr. WRIGHT: When may we expect that information?

Mr. McILRAITH: In about four days.

Mr. WRIGHT: I asked for certain contracts to be tabled. A month ago an order for return was issued, and so far it has not been complied with. I am interested in this because our people are growing rapeseed in western Canada.

Mr. McILRAITH: This morning when the hon. member raised a question about his order for return I did not realize that it was one pertaining to our department. I had been under the impression that all orders for return in our department had been completed and forwarded. I have not had an opportunity to look into the point today, but I will get speedy action on it.

889. To reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence under chapter 51, statutes of 1947, in the amount of $7,779.23, the balance owing for services rendered in the fiscal year 1947-48, and for the fiscal year 1948-49—further amount required, $87,779.23.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the Canadian Commercial Corporation in charge of ERP in Canada?

Mr. McILRAITH: No.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Science service—

678. Plant protection—further amount required, $28,010.

Mr. HATFIELD: What is this extra amount for?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member will find the details on page 32 of the supplementary estimates: salaries, permanent, $210; temporary assistance, $20,800; total salaries, $21,010; printing, stationery and office equipment, $7,000.

Item agreed to.

Special—

689. To provide for assistance to the province of Nova Scotia in the removal of aged apple trees and of least desirable varieties in Nova Scotia under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $500,000.

Mr. WRIGHT: How is this money expended by the dominion government—in co-operation with the department of agriculture of Nova Scotia? Are there any grants by the Nova Scotia government corresponding with this grant by the dominion?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. It is expended through an arrangement we have with the Department of Agriculture in Nova Scotia. They are putting up a comparable amount in the pulling out of trees and regrafting on old trees to get new varieties.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is the supervision carried on by the department of agriculture in the province or by the dominion?

Mr. GARDINER: The work is actually done by the province.

Mr. HATFIELD: How much was spent last year?

Mr. GARDINER: This is a new arrangement entered into this year.

Mr. HATFIELD: It has been going on for two or three years.

Mr. GARDINER: Not this arrangement. This is a new arrangement entered into this year with the government of Nova Scotia, and it is to carry on for four or five years. Under the arrangement that we had for the handling of apples in Nova Scotia during the war period, we have been carrying on, on a smaller scale. I have not the figure spent last year but it was smaller.

Item agreed to.

Special—

690. Amount required to recoup the agricultural prices support account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural prices support board during the fiscal year 1947-48, $1,061,353.30.

Mr. WRIGHT: On what products is this money spent by the agricultural prices support board?

Mr. GARDINER: A considerable amount of it was spent on potatoes and some in connection with apples. Most of it was spent on potatoes.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

691. Freight assistance on western feed grains, including outstanding claims under the feed grain payment policy—further amount required, $13,000,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What amounts have already been passed on with regard to freight assistance to feed grain from the west? A supplementary item of $6,000,000 went through about the time of the easter recess. I think that was to be expended as directed by order in council. Then in the regular estimates something like $7,750,000 went through. I suppose that was an item including freight assistance on western feed grain. How much of this is estimated to be included and required for that purpose?

Mr. GARDINER: The $7,000,000 in the regular estimates took care of the expenditures to August 1. At that time it had not been determined that the freight rate would be paid beyond July 31. The $7,000,000 in the regular estimates would take care of expenditures to August 1. This $13,000,000 is to take care of the remainder of the financial year, which would make a total expenditure of about $20,000,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What portion of this item will be spent now in paying outstanding claims under the feed grain payment policy? This policy has caused considerable loss to the coarse grain growers of the west. They have received some payment back from the pools and from some of the line elevator companies. We have been trying to ascertain here for a couple of weeks whether or not the government intended or had authorized the payment of any sum direct to the farmers from the government. I should like to know how much of this item would be included in that. I should also like to know, if possible, whether any payment has as yet been authorized.

Mr. GARDINER: The amount of payment under the arrangements that have been discussed in connection with oats and barley has not yet been determined. I am not absolutely certain that the payment would come out of this particular vote. I understand that there is the possibility that it may come out of amounts which are under the wheat board. But the present payments up to the moment have amounted to as high as sixteen and a half cents a bushel on barley. I think the highest payment that has been made on oats is thirteen cents a bushel. That has been made by the line elevator companies and pool organizations in the west. I think the pool payment on barley was sixteen cents and thirteen cents on oats. The suggestion is that there should be an adjustment beyond that, which has not yet been determined and which cannot be finally determined until we have all the information before us.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I think the minister will agree that the people who really cleaned up in this item were the feed companies who bought grain at a lower price prior to October 21, and were able to take advantage of the situation and increase prices to those to whom they sold this feed grain. Have the feed companies who made the big clean-up been taxed in any special way in order to reimburse the farmers, or is this to be taken out of the Canadian public?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course most of the feed companies that are concerned are in the eastern part of Canada. I do not know that there is any evidence to indicate that many of them made a big clean-up in connection with the sale of this grain. There may be the occasional feed merchant who was fortunate enough to have some of the grain at the close on October 21 and who sold it afterwards. But I do not think, under the circumstances existing, there would be any considerable number of them, because the grain was being moved just about at the same rate as it was being fed. It was going in and going out day by day to most of these feed merchants. A few of them may have taken advantage of the circumstances, but there is not any evidence that any great number of them did so, or that any considerable amount of grain was involved.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The minister knows that, prior to October 21, in the western provinces the demand at every elevator point was for the farmers to deliver their coarse grain and get it in early, because there was a shortage of feed grain across Canada at that time. Some 39,000,000 bushels were delivered prior to October 21; that is, the statistics would indicate that. It was on that amount that the farmer took a loss.

Mr. GARDINER: No, he has not taken any loss.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: He lost as compared with the farmer who held on and delivered the feed grain at the time when the price had risen, I would say an average of about thirty-five cents on barley and about twenty-eight on oats.

Mr. GARDINER: It averages about nineteen cents on oats, and about twenty-six cents on barley; that is the difference in the price. But he has not yet taken a loss on it; he is being paid.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Who is he being paid by? He is being paid partly by the elevator companies and grain companies and partly by the federal government. It seems to me that this procedure amounts to about the same thing as guaranteeing the profits that were made in the grain trade through a sort of subsidy, which is in this case being paid to the farmer, since the farmer is not to take the loss. I think the farmer should get that payment, but I do not think it should come out of the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. GARDINER: What actually happened was that the grain companies or the elevator companies took delivery of a certain number of bushels of grain before October 21. Up to October 21 they had sold approximately 40 per cent of it at the same price as that at which they had bought it, or on that basis, with a small profit or a reasonable profit. Then the other 60 per cent they sold after March 21 at the higher price level. What the elevator companies have done is to take the unusual profit made on the 60 per cent and spread it over the whole 100 per cent, which means that, out of a difference of nineteen cents in the price before October 21 and the price after, they have been paid thirteen cents. That leaves owing six cents, which is just about the right proportion, about one-third, which it is claimed someone should take care of.

The argument they make is that the government encouraged the farmers to deliver the grain before October 21, knowing there was to be a change; that, as a result of that, the government should make some adjustment, and they claim that adjustment is just as important and just as necessary as the ten cents a bushel which was paid by way of subsidy on the oats which came to the eastern farmer during that period and the fifteen cents a bushel on barley. It is said that, because the shipment was made to the eastern farmer, and a subsidy paid, there should be an adjustment to the amount of six cents on oats and a proportionate amount on barley in order to provide that there is no loss to the farmer or no material loss.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: There was a loss to the person who purchased feed in the east, on that 39,000,000 bushels which were sold, or at least on 40 per cent of it.

Mr. GARDINER: The greater part of it was sold before October 21 at the lower price.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is right. But there was an increase in the cost of feed to the eastern farmer which led to a terrific increase in the cost of living, particularly in milk, cream, eggs, poultry products and meat.

Mr. GARDINER: But there was an adjusted price on these products. The floor prices there were adjusted up to take care of the increase in grain, so that the person who fed in the eastern part of Canada did not lose by it.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister just a moment ago made a point which intrigued me. I do not know just how he gets his figure of the average of the increase in price on oats and barley. I do not know whether he takes that as being the opening price on October 21, the average price over the first month, or the average price over the last six months. I do not know how he gets the particular figure he quoted a few moments ago, and I should like to know.

Mr. GARDINER: I got it by talking to farmers all over Saskatchewan in the last month.

Mr. WRIGHT: Oh, no, you did not.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You gave the figures before you went west.

Mr. GARDINER: I got the figure I am using from farmers in different parts of western Canada. I asked them how much they got for their oats before October 21, and they told me; then I asked how much they got for them after October 21, and they told me. The figure I am using is about the average.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does the minister not think there is a more accurate way of getting these figures than just going around asking farmers? The Winnipeg grain exchange has a record of the everyday prices for which the farmers must sell.

Mr. GARDINER: Fortunately it works out at the same figure.

Mr. WRIGHT: It depends on the period over which you take it. Certainly it does not work out on the average for the month, and I doubt whether the figure quoted by the minister is even the average price for the period from October 21 to the present time, though it may be; I cannot dispute that. However, I was intrigued by the minister's suggestion that funds for any additional payment on oats and barley, for which there is no vote in these estimates, might be obtained from the wheat board. Surely the minister is not suggesting that the farmers will pay themselves out of funds held by the wheat board, in connection with these additional payments on coarse grains. If that is his suggestion I wish he would make it quite clear.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not what I am suggesting at all. I am suggesting that it does not come under this item, that it is under trade and commerce.

Mr. WRIGHT: Then, if it does not come under this item I wish the minister would show me any item in our supplementary estimates which provides for this payment. People in western Canada are interested in whether or not they are to get it. If we have no item providing funds for that payment I do not see where you will get the money.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This very item states, "including outstanding claims under the feed grain payment policy," which would indicate that part of this $13,000,000 is to be used for the purpose of making payments to the farmers under the government's feed grain policy.

Mr. GARDINER: If you are satisfied with that there is no need for questioning.

Mr. WRIGHT: I want to find out under what item in these estimates or any other estimates money is provided for a further payment on coarse grains.

Mr. GARDINER: I am just speaking from information I have been given, and my information is that there is provision under which the money can be paid. It is not a matter to be taken to council by me, however, and this is not the proper place to discuss it.

Mr. WRIGHT: The Minister of Agriculture made a good many statements in western Canada in this connection, and surely he should know the item under which this money is to be made available. He must have that information, or he should have had it before he made his statements.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister tell us if there is still a feeds administrator and, if so, whether it is the same man who wrote his memoirs early this year?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not sure about the memoirs. The feeds administrator, Mr. Davidson, has been transferred from our department to the wheat board and is operating there in connection with the administration or distribution of feed grain.

Mr. POULIOT: It is not Mr. Davidson but the other fellow, who is with the prices board. He was looking after feeds; he was feeds director or feeds supervisor or feeds administrator. When controls went out he stayed in just the same and said he was writing his memoirs. He is a man from Montreal; I do not remember his name.

Mr. GARDINER: He would be under the Department of Finance if he is with the prices board.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister made the statement a while ago that the funds with which to make these payments on coarse grains might be obtained from moneys of the wheat board. I should like him to explain what funds the wheat board have, out of which these payments might be made, or what the minister was suggesting in that connection.

Mr. GARDINER: I repeat that the subject my hon. friend is talking about does not come within my estimates at all and is not before the committee at the present time. I simply suggested it had been indicated to me from the minister in charge that there is a means of making these payments altogether apart from any funds in my estimates, and that is all I have to say. It is not in my estimates at all.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister cannot indicate what item in the estimates provides for this payment?

Mr. GARDINER: No. As far as I know, it is not in my estimates.

Mr. WRIGHT: You have no information on it; you do not know whether or not money is being provided?

Mr. GARDINER: I have good reason for believing it will be provided from some source, but I am not in a position to state what that source is.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister is a member of the cabinet, which is dealing with this question of coarse grains. I want to know what item in these estimates is for the making of that payment. I believe the minister should have that information.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, I submit this is not a subject to be discussed. If the hon. member wanted that information he should have asked for it when the trade and commerce estimates were before the committee a short time ago.

Mr. WRIGHT: There was no item of that department that I saw under which I could discuss this matter. The minister has made the statement in western Canada that these payments are to be made. Surely he must know the authority under which that will be done.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has not made the statement that the payments are to be made. The minister has made the statement that it has been recommended that payments should be made. That is a question which was answered a few moments ago, to the effect that a decision has not yet been reached by the government.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Did the minister not make a suggestion as to the amount that should be paid on oats and barley?

Mr. GARDINER: I made exactly the same suggestion I made a few moments ago, that thirteen cents has been paid on oats and that the average difference would be about nineteen cents. There has been a payment of sixteen cents on barley and the average difference is around twenty-seven. The consideration that still has to be given concerns the differences of six cents and eleven cents.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is a difference between the payments that have been made by different companies. One company, for instance, is prepared to make a payment of only one or two cents a bushel, while other companies are prepared to pay thirteen cents, others fifteen cents, and others, sixteen cents. Is it the intention of the government to average these sums; or if a farmer sold to an elevator company which was unable to make any payment, is he to take that loss? Just what is the answer?

Mr. GARDINER: This does not come under my estimates at all.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

692. Production assistance on agricultural lime for soil amendment purposes, $60,000.

Mr. HATFIELD: Is this assistance to the provincial governments through their own programs, or is this money paid direct?

Mr. GARDINER: This item of $60,000 was not included in the main estimates because, when they were prepared, the provinces had not intimated that they would subsidize the production of agricultural lime in 1948-49. The provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and British Columbia have since advised that they are subsidizing production again this fiscal year and need a continuation of the dominion subsidy for the purpose. The object of promoting the production of agricultural lime is to provide a greater supply for farmers. In some of the provinces demand still exceeds the supply, and many farmers who should be using lime on their land are unable to get it. Subsidies paid on this account last year by provinces were as follows:

Nova Scotia	$25,833.74
New Brunswick	15,744.83
Quebec	7,011.64
British Columbia	8,076.04

The dominion repays the provinces one-half the amount paid by them for this purpose. Last year's payment was $56,000, and we estimate $60,000 will be required this year.

Item agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLES: The understanding was that we would adjourn for supper at seven o'clock. There are three or four hon. gentlemen who want to speak, and it is not fair to the Hansard reporters or to their amanuenses that we should go on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was the understanding, and I think it should be carried out. May I say to hon. members I believe that there are only about a dozen items. I do not mention this with the idea of changing what I have said about the hour's adjournment, but rather in the hope that I may be able to say to the deputy of the governor general that I believe nine o'clock would be a convenient time for hon. members of this house to attend at the other house if requested to do so. I understand that a communication has been received to that effect. If we met at eight o'clock I should hope that, before nine o'clock, we could conclude the few items that are left.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Prime Minister's guess is as good as anyone's.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I suggest to the Prime Minister that he had better not make it as early as nine o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will suggest nine-thirty. Before the committee rises for the hour recess, I should like to reply to a question asked this morning by the hon. member for Stanstead as to whether any request had come from the government of the United Kingdom for assistance in flying supplies to overcome the Berlin blockade. I was not in position to give an answer at that moment, because I had not had an opportunity of conferring with the ministers of other departments and could speak only with respect to my own office. I am now in position to give an answer to the committee.

An inquiry has been received through our high commissioner in London as to what stocks of concentrated dehydrated foodstuffs might be available in Canada to assist in supplying food to Berlin in the present circumstances. A reply has been sent to the effect that there are considerable stocks of such food which would be available for that purpose.

I understand that on Monday last Mr. Bevin, in informal conversation with the high commissioners in London, touched upon the question of the adequacy of present air transport facilities for supplying the civilian population in Berlin. No request has, however, been received from the United Kingdom government either for food stocks or air transport.

Progress reported.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, June 25, 1948

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, 30th June, at 9.30 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dairy products board—

693. Purchase of creamery butter to support the market at minimum prices subject to the approval of the governor in council, $1,000,000.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. HATFIELD: Mr. Chairman, I am in favour of paying a subsidy to help in the movement of agricultural products when the price is low, but I do not know when the price was low on butter. Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. BURTON: Before the minister replies I should like to refer to a question I asked him when his estimates were before the committee some time ago. He was not in a position then to give me the information I asked for. I now want to inform the minister that I personally inspected the Wolverine dam south of Humboldt; there is now water in the enclosure, and I have hopes that a prairie fire will not interfere with the structure in the next few years.

Mr. GARDINER: The item before us has to do with the fact that there is a floor under butter. The floor is 58 cents. If we are required to buy butter at 58 cents, money will be required; that is the reason for this appropriation.

Mr. HATFIELD: When has butter been down to the floor?

Mr. GARDINER: It has not been down yet, but we thought it might be down some time in the year.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): So you have both floors and ceilings to guard against every contingency.

Mr. HATFIELD: Subsidies should be removed when there is a surplus of agricultural products. Butter must be away up near the ceiling now, and I hope it will not go below the ceiling.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): What I have to say, Mr. Chairman, has not altogether to do with the floor on butter, but many dairy farmers are today apprehensive of what may happen next winter. Some of them are afraid there may be another shortage of butter. In view of the fact that attempts were made last winter to have butter substitutes imported, and that we are exporting cheese, another dairy product, without too much hope of its ever being paid for, I am wondering whether it is good business to export cheese on credit and import a butter substitute made from vegetable oils from the United States, to be paid for in United States dollars. Now is the time to do something before we experience another shortage of butter next winter. Let us not wait until next December, when it will be too late. This is the season when butter is produced in quantity, and I hope the minister will assure the dairymen and the consumers that things will be taken care of.

Mr. GARDINER: It is the point that has been raised that makes it advisable to put a floor under butter. The floor of 58 cents will prevail throughout the year. In the past the price of butter has often dropped in the months of June, July and August. This year up until now the price has not dropped below 58 cents, but it was thought wise to put a 58-cent floor under butter in order that the producer would not have to take an unusually low price as compared with what butter has been selling at recently and what it probably will sell at next winter. This enables the government to deal more effectively with the price of butter next winter, by taking action now. This amount of money is made available in order to purchase butter at 58 cents a pound if for any reason it goes down to that price.

Mr. MOORE: Has the dairy products board purchased any butter yet?

Mr. GARDINER: Not this year. Butter has not been down to 58 cents a pound; I have not been following the markets during the past two weeks, but I do not think that butter has been down to 58 cents a pound at any time during this year. If it goes down to 58 cents a pound we undertake here to buy that butter at 58 cents a pound or lower.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): I have been speaking to some of the cheese factory men in my constituency and was informed that they were getting large quantities of milk which, during the winter months and the spring months, had been sent to the creameries. It is now flowing into the cheese factories because cheese pays more money than butter. Will that bring about a shortage of butter?

Mr. GARDINER: No. Our experience up to the moment is that the production of cheese will be quite low, much lower than we had hoped it would be. No cheese has gone to Britain up to the present time; it has all been purchased on this market. We have a contract to ship 50,000,000 pounds of cheese to Britain. If we are to ship it we must ship it from now on, but we have not shipped any up to date.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): Will cheese be requisitioned?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position at the moment to say whether it will or not. It is a matter that will have to be considered.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

532. Departmental administration, $2,253,340.

Mr. GREEN: Several questions were asked when these estimates were last up for discussion. Is the minister in a position to answer them this evening? I would also ask him to deal with the report of the special committee on veterans affairs, and tell us what has been done in respect to the different recommendations made by that committee.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): When the main estimates were before the committee approximately a week ago quite a large number of questions were asked by hon. members and I undertook to bring forward answers as far as possible. These questions have been carefully studied. Since the material in the replies is voluminous I would ask the consent of the committee to place the answers on Hansard:

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Does the committee agree?

Mr. GREGG: They are very long. The hon. member for Nanaimo requested information as to the district offices and the regional offices of the department throughout Canada, and if I may I would place the answers on Hansard.

The hon. member for Trinity asked for information as to the number of student veterans who discontinued their university courses without graduating. The answer is as follows:

Since the inception of the university training program up to March 31, 1948, some 4,000 of the 53,000 university veterans have withdrawn at their own request.

A preliminary survey of the 32,000 who were enrolled in university in September, 1947, indicated that sixty-five would be unable financially to complete the academic year's work.

A further detailed study completed in March, 1948, showed that only twenty-five student veterans had been unable to complete the year's work for purely financial reasons.

On page 5433 of Hansard of June 18, 1948, in column 1, four questions were asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge relating to Mr. F. W. Connorton. In this regard the pension commission advise that no authentic information is available in the department records, but with relation to the approximately fifty remaining questions asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge on the same subject, I have as far as possible had my department work out the answers which I ask permission to place on Hansard.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister permission to place these answers on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. GREGG: The answers are as follows:

Question: 1. Did Connorton undergo an appendix operation in the service in June, 1943?

Answer: Yes, an appendix operation was performed 29th June, 1943.

[Mr. Gregg.]

Q. 2. Was he given a local anaesthetic for the operation?

A. He was given a spinal anaesthetic for this operation.

Q. 3. Was the anaesthetic administered by a departmental medical interne?

A. The anaesthetic was administered by a surgeon lieutenant in the navy.

Q. 4, 5, 6. 4. Was a needle inserted in Connorton's spine eight times before the anaesthetic was effective? 5. Did the man suffer excruciating pain in this anaesthetic operation? 6. Did the medical interne instruct the nursing sister and an orderly to "pin the man down"?

A. There is nothing in the records either to substantiate or refute these questions.

Q. 7. Was the man fourteen days in bed after this appendix operation?

A. The operation was performed 29th June, and the patient discharged to convalescence on the 8th July, 1943. He was not, therefore, kept in bed for fourteen days after the operation. The records show that the patient was admitted to hospital on the 24th June, 1943, but since he had a cold the operation was deferred until the 29th June.

Q. 8, 9, 10. 8. Did he complain of his back being sore all that time, and did the departmental doctors inform him he would experience back trouble for about two months, when the condition would "clear up"? By the way, it is rather unusual after an appendix operation to wait for two months before the condition clears up. 9. Did they say this was the usual experience of men receiving spinal anaesthetics to localize an operation? 10. Was he given pills to relieve the pain in his back?

A. There is no evidence available on which to answer these questions.

Q. 11. Was the man bothered with prostate trouble after this operation, and was he given sulphanilamide drugs, penicillin and electrotherapy treatment for this condition?

A. The first evidence of prostate trouble is in August, 1944, over one year after the appendix operation. He was treated by sulphadiazine and sodium salicylate. Subsequently in January 1947, there was another attack of prostate trouble, at which time electro-therapy treatment was prescribed. At this time he was already getting penicillin as part of the treatment in connection with a recent spinal operation.

Q. 12. Does the man claim that prostate trouble is still with him?

A. The records at Ottawa do not show any complaints about prostate trouble since January, 1947.

B. Second list of questions, page 5431, second column. These questions also refer to a period during which the man was serving with the armed forces. Complete answers in detail are therefore not possible in all cases at this time.

Q. 1. After hospitalization, did Connorton join the minesweeper Outard as stoker, November, 1943?

A. Connorton joined the Outard as a stoker, 2nd December, 1943.

Q. 2. Did he complain that his back was then still bothering him?

A. There is no record of any complaint about his back until the 31st March, 1944.

Q. 3. Did he complain that his left leg also began to bother him when doing heavy lifting, the muscles becoming tired and locked?

A. There is no record of complaints on this subject at this time.

Q. 4. Does he complain that his leg condition is still with him?

A. There is complaint of some weakness of the left leg in January, 1948.

Q. 5. Was he given a one-man board by Dr. Whitelaw in July, 1944, and x-rayed, and subsequently classed as A-1 physically fit?

A. Dr. Whitelaw examined Connorton and made a "consultant's report" on the 10th January, 1945. In this report Connorton was pronounced fit for duty. X-rays were taken about this time.

Q. 6, 7, 8.—

6. Did he subsequently complain to another departmental doctor, a Dr. Prior, that his spine was still bothering him?

7. Did Dr. Prior state that he would charge him with "malingering" if he complained again?

8. Was he also examined by other departmental doctors at the Givenchy barracks, Victoria, B.C., and did they say there was nothing wrong with him?

A. There is no evidence available about these allegations.

C. Third list of questions, page 5432, column 1. These questions refer to a period during which the man was serving with the armed forces. Complete answers in detail are therefore not possible in all cases at this time.

Q. 1. Was Connorton examined by Dr. Ross Robertson, neurosurgeon, Shaughnessy hospital, Vancouver, B.C., and did that physician allege the man had an immature spine?

A. Connorton was examined by Dr. Ross Robertson on the 9th November, 1945. No mention is made of an "immature spine" in this report.

Q. 2. Did Dr. Ross Robertson tell the man he would need as remedial treatment a spinal fusion operation to knit the spine?

A. Dr. Ross Robertson recommended spinal fusion.

Q. 3. (page 5433, first column) Was Connorton given a spinal fusion operation on November 15, 1945?

A. Yes.

Q. 4. Did the man lose the use of his toes in the left leg as a result of this operation?

A. No record.

Q. 5. Has subsequent remedial treatment for the toes proved ineffective?

A. Remedial treatment for weakness of the left leg has proved effective and on discharge from treatment 19th January, 1948, it was reported that there is no restriction of the movements of the left leg. This report states that the man has made good progress.

Q. 6. Was he subsequently examined in the Shaughnessy hospital, Vancouver,B.C., by the neurosurgeons, Doctors Boucher, Naden, Starr, Thompson and Black?

A. He was examined in Shaughnessy hospital by Dr. Black, and was referred to Dr. Stanley, psychiatrist.

Q. 7. Did these neurosurgeons turn him over to Dr. Stanley, departmental psychiatrist, and did Dr. Stanley state that there was nothing wrong with the man except in his imagination?

A. Dr. Stanley examined Connorton on the 21st May, 1946, on reference by Dr. Black. There is no suggestion in Dr. Stanley's report that there was nothing wrong with the man except in his imagination.

Q. 8. Was the man then discharged from the Shaughnessy hospital without pension for his condition, and did he accept employment as a fireman in the engine room of the C.P.R. steamer Princess Elaine?

A. He was discharged from Shaughnessy hospital to Gordon Head convalescent centre on the 18th June, 1946, and discharged from Gordon Head the 18th September, 1946. Pension, awarded 10th May, 1947, was made effective from the 1st June, 1946. Connorton went to work on the C.P.R. Princess Elaine.

Q. 9. Was he compelled to give up this employment after two weeks on account of his back giving out?

A. The records state he worked for two months on the C.P.R. Princess Elaine.

D. List of questions on page 5433, column 1.

Q. 1. Was Connorton again admitted to Shaughnessy hospital on September 18, 1946, and subsequently given an exploratory operation by opening up the spine?

A. According to the records Connorton was admitted not the 18th September, 1946, but the 18th November, 1946. The subsequent operation was a second spinal fusion.

Q. 2. Was he in consequence given a second spinal fusion operation? If so, when?

A. Yes, on the 8th January, 1947.

Q. 3. Has the man stated he cannot face the operating table again because of the suffering he has undergone during these two operations and because his powers of resistance are now undermined?

A. There is no record of such a statement.

In that connection very serious charges were made against the psychiatric service of my department as follows:

1. Question—Has a psychiatrist in such a position as, say psychiatrist to Shaughnessy hospital, power to destroy utterly a veteran's chance for pension by simply reporting "this man is definitely neurotic"?

Answer—No, the psychiatrist is in no position to exert any such power.

The psychiatrist's sole function is to diagnose the present medical condition and to afford all medical treatment possible for it.

Under the Pension Act, the psychiatrist's report and all other available data is reviewed and on this basis, the degree to which the condition has been aggravated during service is assessed and determined.

2. Question—Can a key psychiatrist free the commission from the responsibility of furnishing either the applicant or his representative with a summary of evidence?

Answer—Section 61 of the Pension Act reads as follows:

"Subject to departmental regulations, the following persons may be permitted to inspect the records of the department and all material considered by the board of pension commissioners for Canada, the pension tribunal, the commission or an appeal board thereof, in disposing of any application for pension—

(a) the applicant for pension concerned and such persons as may be employed by him to present a claim on his behalf before the commission or an appeal board thereof;"

The departmental regulations make all such information available to the persons mentioned above unless the imparting of such information would be contrary to the public interest or that the former member of the forces or his dependents would be prejudiced thereby. The decision as to whether neuropsychiatric cases or any other cases have their records made available to them or not depends on whether good or harm would come to the veteran by his obtaining this knowledge. If it is for his good these records are made available.

3. Question—Does this arrangement give the psychiatrists a strangle-hold upon the medical profession?

Answer—From the answer to question 2, it will be seen that this is not so.

4(a) Question—In order for the psychiatrist to exercise over the veteran such fearful power as is indicated in questions 2 and 3, is it necessary merely for the psychiatrist to label the veteran a "psychotic"?

Answer—It will be seen from the answers to questions 2 and 3 that "such fearful power" is not exerted over the psychotic veteran.

4(b) Question—If a psychiatrist labels a man as having "emotional instability", will that fact also deprive the man of pension rights?

Answer—If a psychiatrist diagnoses a medical condition as being "emotional instability", this does not deprive a man of pension rights.

5. Question—Do psychiatrists use what is called the pentothal test?

6. Question—What is the nature of this test?

7. Question—Do psychiatrists use what is called the truth serum test?

8. Question—Is there any difference between the pentothal and the truth serum test?

9. Question—If so, what?

Answer 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Either sodium pentothal or sodium amytal (intravenous barbiturates), sometimes spoken of "truth serums", are used occasionally as part of the psychiatric treatment, as injections to permit the subject to recall rapidly memories which he may have repressed and may be interfering with recovery; they permit him to talk more freely about his trouble than would be the case otherwise. In each instance the patient receives an explanation of what will occur and he is never forced to submit against his will.

10. Question—Does the patient under the truth serum test go into a sort of trance, a state somewhat resembling hypnosis?

Answer—No.

11. Question—While the patient is in that state, can the psychiatrist make the patient answer questions according to the way they are framed, thereby causing the patient to say almost anything he, the psychiatrist, may desire the patient to say?

12. Question—Can the answers of the patient obtained in such a trance be used to defraud the veteran patient of his rights to pension and proper treatment?

Answer 11-12—There is no trance. The psychiatrist cannot make the patient say anything he pleases.

13. Question—Was this very technique employed against certain Hong Kong veterans so to deprive them? For instance, were Hong Kong men who survived the terrible tortures and privations of Japanese prison camps told in their examinations that they were not suffering from those most harrowing experiences but that they were suppressing childhood fantasies and fears?

Answer—No treatment techniques were ever employed against any veteran. No matter who the veteran may be and regardless of where he may have served, he is given the best treatment that can be obtained in Canada. Obviously if suppressed childhood fantasies and fears are playing a role in the illness of a Hong Kong veteran, then these things must be dealt with. Otherwise, he is not receiving good treatment. The stresses that he underwent as a prisoner are given major consideration.

14. Question—Did Doctor J. P. S. Cathcart, while in office as a sort of official psychiatrist for the Department of Veterans Affairs, publish the following statement?

"Popular belief to the contrary, mental diseases are not common hazards of war even for men in the field. If a man is mentally sound on entering the army, navy or air force he runs no greater risk of having his faculties upset than if he continued in civilian life."

Did he declare the belief that wartime service brings mental upset is unfounded and arises from ignorance fostered by ill-advised propaganda?

Answer—Dr. J. P. S. Cathcart, at that time (1940) chief neuropsychiatrist for the Department of Pensions and National Health, was interviewed by a reporter of the Ottawa Morning Journal and the statement quoted was published on April 18, 1940, as part of the interview. Dr. Cathcart's chief intention in this interview was to point out that as a result of studies made of enlisted men in the Canadian army during the first great war and comparable figures among the civilian population for a similar age group, there was no increase of the incidence of mental disease under war conditions.

15. Question—Did the Department of Veterans Affairs for a time base the treatment of veterans policy upon the principle laid down in that pronouncement, namely, that psychosis or neurosis was automatically a pre-enlistment disability?

Answer—No statement was ever made to the effect that a psychosis or neurosis was automatically a pre-enlistment disability and accordingly no policy could be laid down along these lines. When these illnesses occurred, treatment was supplied according to the individual case requirement.

16. Question—If so, for how long a period and between what dates was this principle used as the basis for departmental treatment of veterans?

Answer—See answer to question 15.

17. Question—If not, when and by what pronouncement was the principle and the policy announced in Cathcart's statement changed?

Answer—Since the policy never existed, this question does not apply.

18. Question—How many veterans' cases were disposed of by the department on the basis of pre-enlistment neurotic or psychotic disability during the period throughout which the Cathcart principle was in use by the department?

Answer—This question is not applicable in view of the answers to questions 14, 15, 16 and 17, since the assumption is based on false premises.

In reply to statement made by Mr. J. H. Blackmore, as reported in House of Commons debates, June 18, 1948, page 5434, column 2.

1. Statement—First, the evidence I have indicates too strongly that psychiatrists attached to the Canadian veterans affairs department are employed occasionally to deprive a deserving veteran of the financial reimbursement to which he is legally entitled.

Comment—This statement is unwarranted and entirely without foundation in fact. These physicians are employed for the single purpose of giving Canadian veterans every opportunity for recovery from psychiatric ailments.

It may at this time be pointed out that the professors of psychiatry from eight Canadian medical schools serve the treatment services of the Department of Veterans Affairs in some capacity. The leading psychiatrists in Canada are retained as part time consultants and the majority of those employed by the department are members of the American Psychiatric Association. When the hon. member from Lethbridge casts aspersions at D.V.A. psychiatrists, he therefore automatically includes the highest men in this profession in Canada. It is ridiculous for him to assume either that these physicians would allow their opinion to be purchased to the disadvantage of Canadian veterans or that the Department of Veterans Affairs would ever consider such a course of action, even if it were possible.

It cannot be stressed too strongly that the treatment services of the Department of Veterans Affairs exists for the sole purpose of assisting the veteran to the greatest degree possible in his physical and mental rehabilitation. There is no basis for any belief to the contrary.

2. Statement—Second, certain of these psychiatrists are of the type exemplified by General Brock Chisholm, a man who gave the definite impression that he was distinctly materialistic, if not crude, sordid or even sadistic in his outlook upon human life.

Comment—This is the personal view of the hon. member from Lethbridge regarding one psychiatrist and does not call for comments.

3. Statement—And, third, such so-called psychiatrists, men who should be called rather pseudo-psychiatrists, are not to be named in the same breath with those noble psychiatric healers who in Britain, the United States, Australia and other lands are, with Christlike devotion to spiritual values, salvaging wounded souls stricken by the desecrating hand of war.

Comment—There is a great deal of evidence available in the department and elsewhere which shows that this statement is not true. The psychiatrists in this department and psychiatrists generally in Canada are held in high repute by leading psychiatrists the world over and this includes opinions from those in Britain, the United States and Australia.

On the following day when the news of these charges was carried by the press I had, without solicitation or without any knowledge, a telegram from the president of the American Psychiatric Association in Topeka, Kansas, indicating a view on our services in Canada and the type of men engaged in that service. The telegram is as follows:

Accusations against Canadian psychiatrists in their treatment of veterans by a member of parliament are to be deplored because of extremely unfortunate effect of such misinformation. During the war in my position as chief consultant in psychiatry for the surgeon-general of the United States army, I personally visited many hospitals for veterans in Canada and know first hand of the work. I am personally acquainted with many Canadian psychiatrists and voice the sentiment of our leaders in American psychiatry in expressing high esteem of and regard for them. In their efforts to provide treatment instead of pensions they are acting in accord with best medical and psychiatric principles. For your own information Canadian psychiatrists have the full support in their efforts of the nearly 5,000 psychiatrists in our mutual organization the American Psychiatric Association. I hope you will give the Canadian psychiatrists your full support.

The author of this telegram has given permission for it to be used.

In addition to the questions already answered relating to Mr. Connorton, the hon. member for Lethbridge asked certain other questions relating to V-86097, Walsh, Stanley, L. These questions appear on page 5433 of Hansard of June 18. I should like to submit the answers to these questions. They are as follows:

Mr. Walsh enlisted in May, 1944, and was discharged in March, 1946, after serving in Canada.

In July, 1944, two months after enlistment, he gave a history of having been involved in a car accident some four months previously, following which he was in hospital for two days; X-ray reports at that time were negative. He also gave a history of having incurred an injury to his back with pain in the dorsal area left shoulder and arm shortly after enlistment, while engaged in physical training. He later gave a history of having been injured while playing football. Finally, on discharge, he complained of pain in the lower back and stated his back had become sore after he had slipped in the shipwright's shop in Vancouver.

Careful investigation was carried out, which finally resulted in a diagnosis of spondylolisthesis. A small congenital defect was also found in the fifth lumbar and first sacral vertebrae.

In its decision on spondylolisthesis, the commission took cognizance of the opinions of leading orthopaedic specialists, who are in general agreement that this condition may arise from fracture of the articular processes of the lumbosacral joint, or from imperfect development of the laminae of the lowest lumbar vertebra. As there was no evidence of a fracture but definite evidence, supported by X-ray findings, of a congenital defect, the commission ruled—bilateral defective laminae of fifth lumbar vertebra with spondylolisthesis, pre-enlistment condition, aggravated three-fifths during service in Canada.

The opinions of two specialists, to which reference has been made above, are as follows:

Specialist's opinion—dated April 18, 1947

"If one excepts acute fracture dislocation, there is no case of spondylolisthesis which is 'acquired'.

These cases are either congenital defects in the isthmus or by the alternative theory, fractures occurring at birth. This defect is very frequently accompanied by other congenital anomalies. It is possible, however, to have displacement forward of the body, in cases with defects in the isthmus, as the result of trauma. Usually, however, the process seems gradual. I have not been able to observe any connection between the degree of displacement and the symptoms of which the patient complained.

Many of the men complaining most bitterly, showed merely the defects without displacement.

This condition would appear much more prevalent than we at first believed. The improved X-ray technique now shows defects which would otherwise be missed. While the most common displacement is that of L. V. on sacrum, the displacement may occur elsewhere. I have seen L. IV on L.V. several times.

In the cases with displacement of body L.V. on sacrum clinically, the prominent shelf of the upper end of the sacrum and the local hollow just above are characteristic. Also the approximation of rib margins to iliac crests."

Specialist's opinion—dated July 31, 1947

"Most recent investigation indicates that the lesion leading up to spondylolisthesis is a separation of the neural arch probably caused by birth trauma. For this reason it is probably best to speak of the forward slipping as a congenital lesion. Pain usually occurs in periods of stress such as one would encounter in the army age period or in heavy work. A single relatively minor trauma may also start the syndrome of pain. True traumatic spondylolisthesis without any pre-existing bone lesion is extremely rare and is caused by a violent trauma, definite history of which will necessarily be readily available. So that a soldier may claim aggravation when he develops pain in the presence of spondylolisthesis if he can give authentic evidence of not having had pain previous to service."

Having read the record of various remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo, the hon. member for Lanark, the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Vancouver South, I find it necessary to explain the policy of the department with regard to the medical treatment of non-service conditions. Firstly, the department does not charge a veteran $9 a day. The only exception to that rule is where a veteran or any other citizen is taken ill in the vicinity of one of our hospitals, is admitted as an emergency case, and is able to pay.

Secondly, the $9 rate is charged when the department admits a person to hospital at the request and expense of another government, another federal department, or some other agency. This rate is subject to variation; it represents neither profit nor loss to the department. It is the department's average hospital patient-day cost as last computed, and I believe that hon. members will find on inquiry that it closely approximates the cost of treatment obtained privately; that is ward rate, plus extras, plus medical, surgical and special nurse services.

Thirdly, free treatment is provided to a veteran who is a pensioner or a war veterans allowance recipient, or who served in a theatre of actual war and who meets the means test. Such free treatment is provided under a recent amendment for chronic, as well as acute conditions, except tuberculosis and mental disease, for which the province is responsible, alcoholism, and drug addiction. Even these conditions are not excepted in the case of a war veterans allowance recipient; he has complete coverage and no means test. Furthermore, if the veteran's income is less than $13 a month, an allowance of $5 a month for comforts and $8 worth of clothing may be supplied.

Fourthly, the hon. member for Nanaimo spoke of the personal welfare of the old soldier who comes into a hospital built for the express purpose of looking after him. These men pay something toward their quarters and rations. They feel they are paying their way; it is good for their morale, and my observation is that they like the arrangement. But they do not pay $9 a day; they pay $30 a month, and then only if their income is at least $43 a month and is not required for maintenance of dependents.

Finally, if hon. members wish more detail than I have given in this brief sketch, they can find it in our office consolidation of the treatment regulations or, if they prefer, any of my staff who are handling these matters from day to day would be glad to discuss it as fully as may be desired.

If it is the wish of the committee I should be glad to submit treatment regulations at the hospitals on that point. I should like to place them on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. GREGG: They are as follows:

Re: Treatment Regulations and Hospital Costs

A. Treatment Regulations

The following treatment regulations apply to veterans apart from those who are pensioned and receive treatment for their pensionable condition.

1. A veteran is treated for any condition arising in the first year post-discharge from the service.

2. He is eligible for treatment for any condition while in receipt of training allowances from the department.

3. He is treated for any condition if he is a war veterans' allowance recipient.

4. Domiciliary care, including treatment is given for all veterans with meritorious service where such care and treatment are indicated.

5. Treatment is provided for all conditions except tuberculosis, mental disease, alcoholism and drug addiction, to veterans whose financial resources are not adequate for them to obtain this treatment themselves, that is,—a veteran with meritorious service who has dependents and whose income is less than $1,800 a year receives treatment by the department. If the veteran has no dependents and his income is less than $1,200 a year, he receives treatment from the department. This treatment is given for any condition except the four types of diseases named above.

6. If a veteran is admitted for emergency treatment in a departmental hospital and does not qualify for treatment in any of the classifications, he is given treatment. If the veteran can afford to pay he is charged $9 a day for an all-inclusive treatment.

Other examples where this cost of treatment is recovered by the department are when the treatment is given at the request of another government department or where the departmental hospitals have facilities for treatment which do not exist in civilian hospitals; for example, the treatment of paraplegics.

B. Hospital costs

The average actual per patient day cost of operation of departmental institutions includes all services (doctors, nurses, etc.). This rate compares favourably and is generally lower than a similar service given in non-departmental hospitals.

Where the department provides treatment for veterans in a civilian hospital it has been found that the total cost per treatment is at least $9 a day.

C. Copy of synopsis of all treatment regulations follows:

May 18, 1948

Summary of Treatment Classification under Treatment Regulations

Department of Veterans Affairs

The hon. member for Trinity spoke of a reduction in 1936 of comforts allowances from $10 to $5 a month. I said I did not realize that there had been a reduction, but I would look into it. I find there was no such reduction. Perhaps the veteran who advised my hon. friend was confusing this payment with something else.

The hon. member for Vancouver South asked for figures to the end of 1947 showing the number of pension applications declined as pre-enlistment conditions not aggravated. The hon. member has figures as at June 30, 1947. I am sorry that in the time available it has not been possible to bring the figures to a later date, but I will provide them as soon as possible.

In reply to the hon. member for Bruce, I may say that 2,807 veterans of the world war were granted new awards of war veterans allowance during the fiscal year 1947-48, and, in addition, 999 widows were given an allowance for the first time during the same period.

Answering the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) and the hon. member for Nanaimo, no war veterans allowance payments are made to the Indian Affairs branch because the veteran is an Indian. However, in a number of cases administration is deemed to be in the veteran's interest whether he is an Indian or not. If he should happen to be an Indian, the logical person to administer the money in such cases is the Indian agent. Such cases number less than twenty.

The war veterans allowance board does not receive information as to the individual distribution of band funds if such is done. Payments of treaty money are reported, but in no case have they been sufficiently large to have any bearing on the award made to the Indian.

The hon. member for Nanaimo referred to the status of our seamstresses. The department employs seamstresses throughout its several institutions, but these personnel occupy temporary positions exempt from the Civil Service Act, which consequently are not found in the detail of classified positions. They are paid at the prevailing rate as advised by the Department of Labour for such employment in their respective areas. In the Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver areas they are paid $960 a year, elsewhere $756 a year. The department has under active consideration the propriety of a general upward revision of the compensation to this group of employees.

In the detail of items appearing on page 5486 of Hansard, the words "provisional lands" in line 2 of item 551 should be corrected to read "provincial lands".

As to the question asked just now by the hon. member for Vancouver South, I have the final report of the parliamentary committee on veterans affairs, and I will bring that forward to the attention of the government during the recess.

Mr. GREEN: Has any action been taken with regard to any of these recommendations? For example, there was a recommendation with regard to the size of a small holding in the Yukon. I think that change could be made by order in council and does not require legislation. There may be other recommendations that could be made without amending legislation.

Mr. GREGG: No action has been taken on the main recommendations, but in respect of the one mentioned by the hon. member just now, definite action is going forward during the next three weeks to see whether the Yukon situation cannot be solved under authority at present existing.

Mr. GREEN: Has any action been taken with regard to such recommendations as those in favour of former members of the Canadian Red Cross Society and the St. John Ambulance Brigade? The hon. member for Wentworth asked me to bring that up. The committee recommended that they be granted (a) if pensionable, eligibility for vocational training as provided for veterans, or equivalent educational training; and (b) a gratuity of fifteen dollars for every thirty days of service in an actual theatre of war. Has any action been taken on that recommendation, or is it possible to take action without amending legislation?

[Mr. Gregg.]

Mr. GREGG: No action has been taken; but the items mentioned, as well as others in the recommendations, are being carefully studied with a view to finding out, before taking it up with the government, the point mentioned as to what method would be most appropriate if action is needed.

Mr. GREEN: There was also a recommendation that vocational training be made available for the men of the merchant navy. Is it possible for that to be done without an amending statute? I would suggest to the minister that the benefit be not restricted to vocational training. I know several young men who served in the merchant navy and who are attending university. I am afraid that the recommendation of the committee does not include the educational benefits. The minister will correct me if I am wrong on that point. I hope that when the recommendation is being considered the minister will see fit to give them, not only vocational training but also educational benefits. It is a most unfair situation when you have two young men in the same class at university, one of whom served with the merchant navy under fire, the other having served only in Canada, and the man in the merchant navy can get no help, whereas the man who served only in Canada gets an educational grant. I suggest that there is no justification for a situation of that kind.

Mr. GREGG: As to the recommendation of the parliamentary committee, while these young men had had an opportunity for training in seamanship, evidence was brought before the committee which made it appear that the demand for work as seamen in civilian life was not as great as during the war, and the view of the committee was that something should be done to provide them with an opportunity for vocational training in other fields of activity. There was no recommendation as to university training. Incidentally, I believe there was little demand, but no recommendation was made. I have undertaken a study of vocational training possibilities in co-operation with the Department of Transport, which is also interested in it.

Mr. GREEN: One more question. There was a recommendation that the crops of Canadian overseas firefighters should be made eligible to receive the Canadian volunteer service medal and also that they be given the veterans preference in employment in the civil service. Certainly it is possible to give them that medal without further legislation, and I hope the minister will see that they get it. I suppose they could not get the benefit of the preference without legislation. The minister will tell me whether I am correct.

Mr. MUTCH: Before the minister speaks, may I point out that the recommendation of the veterans committee was broader than has been indicated by press reports or by the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South. The recommendation of the committee with respect to firefighters was to the effect that they should have granted to them the residue of those benefits which are accorded to veterans, which are still applicable, and special reference was made to the C.V.S.M. and to the civil service preference, because the delegation which appeared before us laid particular stress on that. In the case of the C.V.S.M., they pointed out that they had themselves served in uniform continuously on the job and as such are entitled to wear the medal, and it was pointed out that their families were embarrassed by unfortunate incidents arising out of the fact that they did not have the medal.

The committee was aware of the fact that the very nature of the order which created the medal did present difficulties in the granting of the medal, because it is a volunteer medal for service in the armed forces of the country. The committee felt, in view of the fact that it had been given to certain other groups, that they were justified in making the recommendation. They do not restrict the recommendation to these two classes, although they were specifically mentioned.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I have been asked to allow this item to stand, so that the Prime Minister may deal with his estimates.

Item stands.

GOVERNOR GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

113. Office of the secretary to the governor general, including the salary of the secretary to the governor general at $7,600 additional to salary authorized by R.S.C. chap. 182, $111,468.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item relates to His Excellency the Governor General and lieutenant governors. It is statutory for the most part.

Item agreed to.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

116. Salaries of staff and other pay-list items, $93,972.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: No, Mr. Chairman; we cannot let this item pass like that tonight. This is the item for the Prime Minister's office. In the past there have been some little celebrations on the occasion of the departure of the Prime Minister for a trip overseas, when he was going to a conference. The members of the house wished him Godspeed, a safe return and things like that. That was all very nice, timely and appropriate with regard to those minor things like a trip overseas, a trip to the continent, a trip to Paris, or a trip to San Francisco. Before Mr. King went to San Francisco, I remember that it was suggested that he should be the president of the united nations; but he was not interested. Since then, the Prime Minister has made the decision to leave the position of Prime Minister. Two years ago I suggested to him that he should do so, and I was his best friend when I told him that. When I said that it was not because I am an unfaithful follower. At times I may be misunderstood, but I am always faithful. It was during the post-war period and it was necessary for us to rebuild over the ruins of the war. I thought then that the best man for the job was a man of action like the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I suggested him. I had made no pledge. I was just as independent as I am now. But, as the Prime Minister himself had said, without any suggestion being made to him by anybody, that it was his own express desire to get out of the picture, I thought we must respect the desires of a gentleman who has had a most successful career in politics and who thinks he has been leader of the party long enough. My idea was just to concur in the wishes expressed personally and often by my chief.

I then made another suggestion. I said that the Prime Minister should drop the portfolio of external affairs. He was dissatisfied with his trip to Paris in the spring of 1946 or in the fall of 1946, I forget which.

Mr. McLURE: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: I would ask my hon. friend to wait a little; and if I do not interest him I suggest that he go to sleep.

Mr. McLURE: I have been waiting for a long time.

Mr. POULIOT: When my hon. friend interrupts me, I have the impression that he snores. It is a feeling that I understand quite well. I do not expect to keep anybody awake. But I leave it at that. These are matters of great importance; and they are of greater importance because tonight the alpha is the omega, meaning by that that the first letter of the alphabet is "Z"—omega in Greek. But my language will not be Greek; it will be easy to understand.

An hon. MEMBER: It is still Greek.

Mr. POULIOT: I will speak in my own plain English that puts the hon. member for Queens to sleep. Now that he is sleeping well—

Mr. KNOWLES: You hope.

Mr. POULIOT: —I will go on with modern history.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Not for too long, I hope.

Mr. POULIOT: I suggested also that the Prime Minister should drop the portfolio of external affairs, and I gave the reason why. He was dissatisfied with his trip to Europe. Whether it was in the spring or fall of 1946, I do not remember exactly; I know it was in 1946. He said that when he was in Europe he could not think of anything other than European affairs. That was a statement which surprised me greatly, because when I returned to Canada from England some years ago and saw over the hill the spire of St. Paul de la Croix in my constituency, I was moved to tears because I was coming back home. But impressions may be different. I understand that one may be taken up by the atmosphere of Europe, especially in certain circumstances, to the point of forgetting Canada. But I was greatly surprised.

There was something else, however. Now I remember that the Prime Minister landed in Canada on the day of the prorogation of the session in 1946; it was around August 30 or September 1. But my speech was made on August 28, 1946. I remember what was said by the Prime Minister on this occasion; and I remember the reports in the press. I told him that he should have resigned before his trip, because if he had not gone to Paris, and if someone else had gone in his stead, everyone would have said how unfortunate it was that Mr. King was not there, and that if he had been there he would have settled the question. That is an observation which I was not alone in making. It was made by all those whom I met around that time.

What happened? I represent a constituency of lower Quebec, but when I speak like this I speak respectfully and sincerely. I am sure the Prime Minister realized that such were my feelings, because as soon as he landed on Canadian soil he hastened to transfer the heavy burden of external affairs to the present minister, following the suggestion I made. It was not advice; it is not for me to give advice to my chief, but on my advice that he should drop that portfolio, he did so. He was relieved of a great burden, which was assumed by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs.

But, sir, there are other things. The Prime Minister is still the first minister, is still the president of the privy council, is still the big boss. I remember when I was first elected when I felt secure within the party because the party was doing nothing that was not submitted to and approved by the caucus. No policy was enunciated until it had been approved by the party rank and file. This gave a feeling of confidence. Then, as I have said before in the house, I had the comfort I feel when I go to sleep on the train. I rely upon the crew of the train. I do not think of the crew, but I go to bed and to sleep. Then I was trusting the party entirely, because it was consulting members of parliament who were responsible for the policy of the party.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What has this to do with the item?

Mr. POULIOT: Those were the olden times. Perhaps the ministers were not all as bright as those we have now, but they were all stalwarts who had the old parliamentary tradition; men like George P. Graham, Ned Macdonald and others who were around the Prime Minister. Then the Prime Minister did nothing without consulting them, and always he was consulting the party. I knew then the decision of the party was the decision of the majority.

Since then, because of a change in government in 1930 and due to war conditions, things have been different. For eighteen years I have been miserable, and I do not want to be miserable for another eighteen years. I do not want my son to be miserable when he reaches his majority; and I do not want future generations to be miserable. I want responsible government.

Mr. BENTLEY: You do not care about this generation?

Mr. POULIOT: Well, our days are past.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. We have before the committee at the moment an item which has to do with the salaries of staff and other pay list items, amounting to $93,972.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir. I regret very much to have to say this, but I have been waiting for eighteen years to do so. I do not want to be unpleasant, but I have a duty to perform and I intend to perform it. I am speaking of the relations that should exist between the Prime Minister and his supporters in the House of Commons.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The salary of the Prime Minister is not included in this item, and I think we should keep to the item which is before the committee.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir, and I shall keep to the item. I have the greatest respect for the Chair, and I am not doing this to satisfy any rancour, because I have none, nor am I doing it to be disrespectful. I do it in the hope that the next prime minister will adopt a different attitude with regard to members of parliament from what we have had for the last fifteen years. This is the connection between the item and what I am saying. I do not think there should be any acrobatics with respect to the position of Prime Minister. What is most important is not to remain in office but to have the confidence of members of parliament by consulting them, by giving them inspiration to fight for a definite program in the old manner, the manner of Laurier, of Ernest Lapointe, of George P. Graham, of Ned Macdonald, of Fielding and all the others I have known and fought under. It is time the Liberal party changed its attitude of worship of one man and returned to the old system of co-operation between all members of parliament.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask the hon. member to deal with the item before the committee. He is not dealing with it at all.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, this is a vote for the Prime Minister's office for the year ending March 31, 1949. Who will spend that money?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The Prime Minister's salary is statutory and not included in the item before the committee. This item just deals with the salaries of staff and other paylist items. The hon. member knows that speeches in committee must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration, and I hope the hon. gentleman will try to deal with the item.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir; and I shall satisfy you as to that. I want to know who will give instructions to the civil servants whose positions are mentioned here, until the end of the fiscal year. If the position of prime minister is statutory, all right.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The salary is statutory.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not speaking of that.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I hope the hon. member will deal with this item.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir. The details of the item are shown on page 223 of the estimates. There is a special assistant to the Prime Minister, a secretary to the office of the Prime Minister, a confidential officer, Prime Minister's office, a head clerk, principal clerks and so on. Who will give instructions as head of that branch of government, from the time of the Liberal convention—if it takes place—until the end of the fiscal year? I am quite in order in asking that question. It is most unpleasant for me to have to do so, but I asked the question yesterday and I want to know if the gentleman who actually gives instructions to these civil servants enumerated at page 223 of the estimates will be the same gentleman who will give instructions until the end of the fiscal year, and if he will expect to have his name in nomination at the convention, or if he will withdraw it in order that all the other candidates may have an opportunity to run.

I am not going to insist upon it, sir, though I could say much more. I suffered in silence for eighteen years and compared what had happened in the past with what was happening now. I want to see the Liberal party as strong as it was before and I want my colleagues to be successful in the country. I should like to know if the Prime Minister will be a candidate at the next Liberal convention in Ottawa?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I might perhaps say a word to my hon. friend. I am afraid I shall have to read his remarks carefully in Hansard to grasp what it is he is protesting against, and what it is he wishes me to do or not to do. The hon. member for Temiscouata and I have a very good understanding of each other, but I fail to comprehend tonight what it is he is so greatly disappointed about. I do not think anyone could be more conscious of his many limitations than I am when it comes to being able to satisfy the generous aspirations which so many of my fellow Liberals have had for myself. There is nothing I regret more than that it has not been possible to perform the duties expected of me from day to day, and at the same time see more of the members of the house personally, to do many things which have been left undone during the course of the years that I have held office. There is one thing that I am perfectly sure about, however; it is that I have never at any time, as far as I am aware, forsaken the doctrine of responsible government and attempted to set myself up as a dictator. At all times, I have sought to be guided by the counsel of the cabinet and by my following in the House of Commons, as well as by the opinion of the House of Commons generally as expressed from all sides.

I shall have no regret in my remaining days over not having had full consideration for those who have honoured me with the position that I hold as leader of my party, and who have entrusted me for over twenty-one years with the high office of Prime Minister of our country.

May I say just a word with regard to the office of Prime Minister. I am glad the hon. member brought up the matter; otherwise I should probably not have spoken at this time. I believe he is quite right when he says that the burden has been a little too heavy, and for permitting that perhaps no one is to blame more than myself. I have hesitated repeatedly to ask this house to enlarge the staff of the Prime Minister's office. I carried on through the war with the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs because I felt that at that time it was better in every way that the two positions should continue to be combined. I have never regretted that course because I was and am sure it was the right one. Immediately after the war there were many questions that arose out of the war which still had to be dealt with and for a time I continued to hold that office as well as the office of Prime Minister. But I can assure my hon. friend and others that it was not through a desire to hold on to too many offices. I was anxious to prepare the way to be free of one office that I had held over so many years so as to retain, with more in the way of freedom, the office of prime minister.

As a matter of fact, if I had consulted my own personal wishes, in 1945 immediately after the election I would not have waited until the present to give up the leadership of my party. I would have given it up a year or two sooner than I am now proposing to do except that I gathered from my party, particularly from my followers in this house and the ministers around me, that they hoped I might continue to hold office still for some time. Indeed I can say to my hon. friend that I know of nothing of which I shall be prouder for the remainder of my life than the fact that if it were a question tonight as to whether I should continue on through the remainder of this parliament and through another general election I would be given by the members of my party in this house and in this country well nigh unanimous support toward that end.

I have felt that the time has come when someone else should take over the duties and the office of leader of my party and of Prime Minister. I feel that I have done my full duty and my part. For some time past I have made it quite clear that having received the leadership of my party from the party itself I intend to ask the party to allow me to return to its members the trust they placed in my hands, and which I shall have held for twenty-nine years when the convention takes place on August 5, 6 and 7. I shall still for a short time remain in the office of Prime Minister. When I will give up the office of Prime Minister will depend upon circumstances that may exist at the time of the convention as they may relate themselves to the immediate future. In addition to other things it will depend upon the wishes of whoever may be chosen to succeed me in the leadership of the party and what may best suit his convenience. I have made it quite clear right along that while this would be the last session in which I would appear in this house as leader of the government, I did not mean to give up the leadership of the government the moment I gave up the leadership of the party.

Only a few weeks ago I made a statement in the presence of the press and many members of this house that it might be two or three months after the convention before I would be giving up the position of leader of the government. I mentioned one or two things that I had then in mind. The obligation with respect to retaining office is one that I owe to the crown. How long I shall continue to exercise it will, as I have said, depend upon circumstances which I shall have to consider carefully. These circumstances, at present unknown, will help to determine the advice I shall give the crown as to whom my successor should be, and as to the time at which the advice should be tendered. Much, of course, as I have said, will depend upon the wishes of whoever may be chosen as leader of the party at the convention, and upon conditions that may be existing in other parts of the world as well as in our own in relation to great matters of state consideration of which no Prime Minister dare shirk in times like the present. I wish to make it quite clear however that I shall not be appearing in this house as leader of the government at its next session.

Before leaving office there are one or two things I should like to say about the Prime Minister's office. I hope that in subsequent sessions for my successor, whoever he may be, more provision will be made than has been made in the past for the Prime Minister's office. If one looks at the estimates he will see that the staff of the Prime Minister's office is quite small. It is practically what it has been over many years. An explanation of that is that it has been and still is in large part associated with the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the office of the President of the Privy Council. The duties and responsibilities of both those departments of government have grown tremendously within recent years. The Department of External Affairs has become one of the great departments of government and certainly demands all the time that a minister can give to it. The Prime Minister's office still has the advantage of close association with the Department of External Affairs in the matter of recruiting from that department a part of its staff. At the present time some members of my staff really belong to the Department of External Affairs, having been seconded to the Prime Minister's office. I think that is a very desirable practice to have followed. But the Prime Minister's office should, I believe, be increasingly staffed with its own officials to a number which would be adequate. The same is true of drawing for assistance upon the office of the president of the privy council. That office I think has become one to which a minister of the crown might well give his whole time, regard being had to the extent to which the duties of the office have expanded in recent years, the number of questions that have to be considered, the many subjects, both of national and international concern, that have to be taken up by the cabinet as a whole, to say nothing of the business of the cabinet as it has to be arranged and carried on from day to day.

There is one other thought I should like to express. I can make this observation now when possibly it might have been misunderstood before. I hope that subsequent parliaments will make provision for an official residence for the Prime Minister. Ours is one of the few countries in the world where that has not been done. Personally I have been fortunate in having had Laurier House left to me by Lady Laurier. I was left the house itself, but all its contents were, under Lady Laurier's will, left to her nephews and nieces, as one would expect would be the case. Had it not been for the generosity of friends who helped me to furnish Laurier House, I doubt very much whether I would have been in a position to occupy it. However, through the generosity of some friends, and, in particular, I would mention the late Hon. Peter Larkin, I was fortunate enough to be able to have my house furnished in a way which lends dignity to one's home, and particularly the home of one who is occupying high office.

I hope through a kind Providence I may be spared for some years to enjoy Laurier House as my home. I should, however, be very sorry indeed if my successor in the office of Prime Minister were to find himself in the position in which I have been right along of being obliged, in addition to paying taxes on his income, his salaries and the like, to have to pay taxes on the house in which he is living and which is regarded by most people as an official residence and be obliged to provide the lighting and the heating, as well as the necessary services, and to have in addition to look after maintenance and repairs.

There is an impression among a great many people in this country that Laurier House has been maintained by the state. It has been maintained by myself personally out of my own pocket and my own income, and if I have not been able to invite my hon. friend and some members who are about me at the moment and many others as often as I should like to have done and extended as much in the way of hospitality as I should like to have done, that is one of the reasons. I hope that my successor, whoever he may be, and subsequent gentlemen holding the office of Prime Minister will not be embarrassed in that way. The obligations are very great indeed upon the individual who holds the high office of Prime Minister of his country. The state should seek to make the leader of its government independent of considerations of the kind, that he may give his whole time and thought and energy to the discharge of his public duties in the largest possible way.

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Federal district commission—

809. To authorize the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the national capital fund, consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated by parliament for the purpose out of which the Minister of Finance may from time to time, on the recommendation of the president of His Majesty's privy council for Canada, pay to the federal district commission amounts to be expended by the federal district commission with the approval of the governor in council for the construction, operation and maintenance of works or projects within the national capital district in keeping with an approved general plan for the improvement and development of the national capital and not in the nature of ordinary municipal improvements—amount required for the fund, to be effective July 1, 1948, $2,500,000.

Mr. McLURE: I would ask the Prime Minister with reference to this item of $2,500,000 for the national capital fund, whether he proposes to implement his suggestion of a year ago and appoint a man from each of the provinces of Canada to the national capital planning committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad my hon. friend has asked that question. The answer is yes. The reason no appointments have been made up to the present is that it was thought advisable to wait until the time when parliament had expressed its intention to carry out the larger essential developments, the first of which was mentioned the other day.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

532. Departmental administration, $2,253,340.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Inasmuch as the hour is so late in respect of both the evening and the session I would be very happy to be freed from the obligation of speaking tonight at all. I have endeavoured several times previously to find an opportunity to present to the house and the country the things which I feel I ought to present but have been unable to do so. Before saying what I feel I ought to say, I should like to assure the Minister of Veterans Affairs that I have no ill will toward him. I have only sympathy for him in the responsibility which he has been called upon to assume, because I believe he has an exceedingly difficult road to travel.

I should like to recall to the house the fact that the other day I asked some questions about a veteran, Thomas Harvey. The reasons for my intense interest in that case were such that I think every member of the house would wish to know about them.

On June 14, 1948, I received a letter which I am going to read rapidly to save the time of the house, but it will appear on Hansard, so that members can read it. It is as follows:

Thomas Harvey
Ward A, Ste. Anne's Hospital,
Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q.

There is no date on the letter, but the envelope is postmarked June 14, 1948. I have the envelope here, which can be seen. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Blackmore:

Having read in the Montreal Star, June 9, of your speech on behalf of two Vancouver veterans, I would like to enlist your help in my case.

I am afraid to write to anyone in the government because I am afraid of being locked up in solitary confinement where I had been held incommunicado these last six weeks. I do not relish another term.

A criminal is at least given a chance to plead his case before a judge, but I was taken by force from St. Hyacinthe and locked up here at Ste. Anne's, for nothing.

I understand that this is supposed to be a free country. I don't think so. I don't like Ste. Anne's as I have always been abused here, and I want my release so as I can enter a hospital where I know I will be treated according to law. I am entitled to sign out of hospital but I am refused the privilege.

I am a prisoner here and not receiving treatment. I am refused the privilege of seeing my family. I cannot get a pass like other patients and I am taking a big chance writing this letter to you. If I am caught I will be taken to the cell again so I am appealing to you to stand by me and give me protection.

When I was taken by force from St. Hyacinthe I was not even given a chance to bring my belongings and I left a hundred dollar radio there. The patient I left it in charge of has sold it. Now I am told it is too bad but nothing can be done about it.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Please get me out of this place. I am depending on you to get me released from here, as my health will never improve as long as I am unhappy, and held against my will.

Thanking you kindly, I remain

Yours truly,
Thomas Harvey.

P.S.—On receipt of this letter please send me a telegram collect, saying "Am investigating your case."

When I receive your telegram I will feel safe as they dare not abuse me knowing you are on the job, and I will be able to relax. Until I hear from you I will be in fear, so please do not fail me. I will pay the telegram.

T. Harvey, D-76502.

I wonder if there is an hon. member in this house who, upon receipt of a letter such as that, would not feel he had been called upon to assume a responsibility. I examined the letter with great care, as did also one or two of my friends, and as we could see no indication of insanity in the man I felt that the wise thing was to do what he had asked me to do. So I sent him this telegram the following day:

Ottawa, June 15, 1948

Mr. Thomas Harvey
Ward "A" Ste. Anne's Hospital
Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec

Am investigating your case.

J. H. Blackmore.

That is what the man had requested. The telegram had not reached him by the afternoon of the 15th. We received word from the Canadian National, by which we had sent the telegram, that it had not been delivered. This was the word which was given us:

C.N.R. (John Larouche speaking) phoned June 15 3.45 p.m. approx. that the telegram to Mr. Harvey was undelivered because Mr. H. has been discharged from the hospital. Last address was Ford Hotel, Montreal, enroute to Ottawa. 47 cents toll charges.

Taken by D.M.

I am putting in these little details to show hon. members how real this thing is and what a difficulty it puts me in. I did not know what to make of that situation, but we had the Canadian National Telegraphs look into the matter as far as they possibly could, and I received this word on the 16th:

Ryd re Thomas Harvey ward A Ste Anne Hospital was discharged June 14 as advised by information bureau. Names are Mr. Brule and Mrs. Taylor.

That puts me in a difficult position. I had never been in a situation of that sort, and I did not know just what to do.

Harvey came to my room on June 16. In accordance with the information that was given in the telegram that he was on his way to Ottawa, he came to my room on June 16. I treated him as I would have treated any Canadian. I met him just as a fellow Canadian. I took him to the House of Commons reading room, obtained permission for him to sit while he wrote a deposition, feeling that this was the first thing that the House of Commons and the country would desire me to do. I took Walter H. Kirchner, who had been visiting with me, down and introduced him to Harvey to make Harvey feel more at ease. I also desired to have the benefit of Mr. Kirchner's wide experience to aid me in appraising this unusual case.

Harvey finished his deposition, and we had it typewritten on June 17. On that date Harvey signed the statement in the presence of witnesses. I think it would be fitting if I should give the committee a little memo on this point. These are the words from the memo made by Mr. Kirchner, who had a wide experience with soldiers and kept a careful record of his relations with this gentleman. These words were written on June 16, 1948:

I met Thos. Harvey for the first time in the reading room of the House of Commons. He had been unshaven for two days, having hitch-hiked from Montreal.

He related how he had got out of Ste. Anne's after being held there "incommunicado". He was compiling a statement of the reason for his present plight. He looked like a man who had undergone great strain and was quite "washed up". Stated he had been discharged from Ste. Anne's without a cent of money.

June 17: He stayed at the mission in Ottawa. Had shaved, a good night's sleep, bath and food. Would only accept enough money to pay for a few incidentals, meals, etc.

Friday, June 18: Harvey showed me a railway warrant given him by a C.P.C. doctor in the Daly building providing him with transportation to Montreal. He stated the D.V.A. informed him they had sent a cheque for $150 which was due him to his Montreal address but gave him no funds here.

He said he wanted to get to Montreal so as to bring back his documents in order to complete the statement of his case. I told him it would be O.K. if he reported back here (Ottawa) on Tuesday, June 22.

Hon. members will understand why I became more concerned about June 23 or June 24 because this gentleman did not return. I think it will be quite easy for all hon. members to realize just why I should have been greatly concerned and what was the anxiety of my mind. I desire to ask several questions, not because I expect the minister to be able to answer them, but in order that hon. members and the people of Canada should be able to get what I consider to be the salient points of this case clear in their mind:

1. Was Thomas P. Harvey regimental number D76502, pension No. 550593 classified as A-1 when he enlisted in September, 1939, and classified as category E upon his discharge in 1940, though not even x-rayed, and though being told that there was no need of treatment?

1. (a) When veteran Harvey was discharged was he left several years without means of supporting his family with apparently serious consequences as regards his wife?

2. Was veteran Harvey refused medical treatment on grounds there was nothing wrong with him?

3. Did he then go to a civilian hospital and receive the decision that he had T.B.?

4. When he took back to the D.V.A. civilian proof of his T.B. was he told that because he had been out of the service more than a year he was ineligible for treatment?

5. Did veteran Harvey try to work but fail to carry on because of his pain?

6. Was he consistently refused pension?

7. Did he finally in a sort of desperation resort to a measure of violence in Ottawa in 1944 to draw attention to his plight?

8. Was he then admitted to the Veterans Pavilion, and was this the first time he had been admitted to a departmental hospital in four years?

9. Was he then removed under escort, to Ste. Anne's, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q.?

10. Does he state that in that institution he received harsh treatment, including being beaten into insensibility and thrown into a locked ward among demented veterans?

11. Was he later let out from that institution upon promising not to fight his pension claim or to write to members of parliament.

12. Does he declare that he was then haemorrhaging and that his condition was growing worse but that the D.V.A. still refused to treat him?

13. Did he then go to Ste. Agathe public sanatorium, and in May, 1946 have seven ribs removed to collapse his lung?

14. Did word then come that the pension claim that he had been fighting six years had been finally granted?

15. Was he about that time transferred from the public sanatorium to Lachine veterans hospital?

16. From that hospital was he discharged in July, 1946?

17. Did he, while doing a light job as orderly at the Veterans Pavilion, suffer because his affliction became active in January, 1948?

18. With a letter from Doctor Brown of the veterans pavilion did he apply for treatment at D.V.A. Montreal?

19. Was he told he must go to Ste. Anne's?

20. Remembering the treatment he had received at that institution, did he refuse to go there and request to go to the Queen Mary or St. Hyacinthe hospital, or to Sunnybrook?

21. Did he then enter St. Hyacinthe in February, 1948 and did he make fine progress in that institution?

22. Was he taken forcibly in May from St. Hyacinthe to Ste. Anne's without even being permitted to take his personal belongings?

23. Was he detained in Ste. Anne's for weeks incommunicado with treatment at least unfit for a veteran?

24. Did veteran Harvey receive discharge on June 14?

25. Did he then go to see Mr. Haig, district administrator and Mr. Perrault, without much encouragement? Did he then see Mr. Binns of the welfare department, and did that official tell the veteran that he had a persecution complex and forcibly eject him from his office?

I think all hon. members can realize readily that if these questions have to be answered by yes, or any considerable number of them, then the Minister of Veterans Affairs has a difficult task ahead to clean up a most undesirable state of affairs in his department.

I shall read the deposition of Mr. Harvey, so that the committee can have before them the evidence that I had, and they can weigh it and determine what ought to be done:

The Union Mission, 35 Waller Street, Ottawa, Ontario, June 17, 1948

Statement by Thomas P. Harvey, Regimental No. D76502, Pension No. 550593.

1. September 28, 1939, I enlisted with the R.M.R. About a month after, while doing P.T. exercises was taken with severe pains in my chest; reported right away and sent home for a couple of days to recuperate. On returning to the regiment after my couple of days were up I reported to the M.O. that my pains were still there. I was then strapped up with adhesive tape to relieve the pain and put on light duty. I was transferred from the R.M.R. to the Third Infantry Brigade Headquarters as mess steward, and went overseas in November, 1939, with my chest still taped on account of pain.

2. My duty as mess steward started at 5 a.m., getting fires lit and preparing breakfast, and I finished about 8 p.m. at night, stood on call for whatever was needed by the officers such as tea and toast brought to their rooms, before retiring for night; and often at 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. at night had to leave my bed and open the door and make something to eat for officials returning from pass.

3. I was kept busy from morning until night and for four months I never had a day off. My health was failing, and I knew I could not carry on much longer. I asked the mess president to send a car and take me to a M.O. as there was none at our headquarters, which was a golf club taken over by the army. The mess president refused to let me off to visit the M.O. and told me I was swinging the lead. My pains were getting worse so I asked Major General Price who was in charge of our brigade, and a resident of the golf club if it were possible for a private to lay charges of abuse against an officer. He told me, "Yes", so I had the president of the mess, Captain Haljerston, paraded before Major General Price, and charged him with refusing to relieve me of duty while sick, and refusing to obtain medical aid for me. Major General Price said he would look into these charges and see what could be done.

4. About three days after the laying of my charges I had just finished serving dinner when the mess president called a meeting of all batmen cooks and myself, to tell us he was sorry we had been kept so long without leave, and he was going to arrange for relief to come from the regiment barracks in the future. As spokesman for all mess personnel I told him it was about time and that it should have been done long ago.

5. He then told me that because I paraded him, he was kicking me out of my job and taking me back to his own unit where he would make life miserable for me for daring to parade him.

6. I told him that if he was going to use his rank to get even with me that he was no officer but a rat, and if he was any kind of a man to take off his tunic and fight me man to man. This was told to him in the presence of 14 staff officers, including Major General Price and Major General Pearkes, V.C. I wanted to come to blows with him on account of the abuse I had received from him, and I would have if the Padre had not intervened. No charges were laid against me, but I was relieved of duty and sent to No. 1 convalescent depot where I was examined by doctors, and in a couple of weeks I was on my way back to Canada, with the pains in my chest bothering me still.

7. On June 10, 1940, a couple of days after I arrived, I was asked to sign my discharge. I asked if I was going to receive treatment for my pains. I was told no, so I refused to sign unless I was given medical treatment. I was told I would sign or stay in detention until I did. Seeing I had no choice I signed under protest. I had to turn in every stitch of uniform and was handed $35 for clothes, plus $7.83 pay due to me. I was not even X-rayed on discharge and, although they told me there was no need for treatment, I was discharged, category E, the lowest possible medical category—after enlisting as A.1.

8. By the time I had bought clothes I had only a few dollars left and, after paying my own transportation home, I had $4, to feed a wife and child, and within a couple of weeks my wife was in hospital with another child.

9. If it was not for Mrs. Fulford of Brockville, I do not know what would have happened as I was unable to work and had no money, and when I told Mrs. Fulford of my condition, she sent us groceries for a month.

10. I tried various jobs, but could not stick them on account of the pains in my chest. I applied to D.V.A. for treatment. I was refused on grounds there is nothing wrong with me. This kept up for more than a year. I went to civilian hospital and was told I am T.B. I went back to D.V.A. with proof of my sickness, and was told that as I have been out of the service more than a year, I am not eligible for treatment, so I returned to civilian hospital and started writing to different members of parliament about my case, and all this time my wife and children have been destitute. She finally gets tired of waiting for my pension claim to come through and leaves me to live with someone else who can support her.

11. In 1944 I came to Ottawa to try and get some satisfaction. I was so sick and tired of the way the D.V.A. had treated me and caused my home to be broken, that I decided to do something to bring attention to my case. I broke into the chamber of the House of Commons to try to plead my case. I started to address the House but I never got much said before I was escorted out, and taken to Ian Mackenzie's office.

12. After explaining my case to Mr. Mackenzie I was sent to the vets pavilion. I was starting to feel I was getting some place now, as this was the first time I had been admitted into a department hospital in four years. Little did I know what was in store for me!

13. After a few days at the Vets Pavilion I was taken under escort to Ste. Anne's, and there I found out a new treatment for T.B. It consists of being beaten into insensibility and thrown into a locked ward among demented veterans, and if what I saw there is considered treatment, may Heaven protect them.

14. When you have seen veterans who have lost their minds in the service of their country being manhandled, it is time to ask ourselves is this a democracy?

15. However, after a month or so of being locked up, and under guard I managed to slip a letter out to a friend of mine telling him about conditions; whether or not it was through him I got out I will never know. But I did get out under a promise I would not fight any pension or claim or write to parliament about my treatment. I was even offered a job at Ste. Anne's and, although my condition was active, I accepted in order to get out of the mental ward.

16. The first thing I did when I got out was to go to the Montreal Gazette and give an 8 page statement of the things I had seen. I was assured it would be printed, but when I never saw it I went back, and I was told that the censors had refused to allow publication of my story as it would be a detriment to recruits for the armed service, and believe me it would too.

17. I am now hemorrhaging and my condition is getting worse, and the D.V.A. still refuses to treat me, so I entered a public sanatorium at Ste. Agathe, and in May 1946, I have seven ribs removed to collapse my lung and close the cavity, and then comes word that the pension claim I have been fighting for six years has finally been granted. I was then transferred from the public sanatorium and transferred to Lachine veterans hospital.

18. In July, 1946, I was discharged from hospital, and took things easy, and once in a while taking a light job for a couple of months, it was while on one of these light jobs as an orderly at the Vets Pavilion that my condition became active. This was Jan. 1948. I was told I would have to go into sanatorium again. I said O.K.

19. On Feb. 9 of this year with a letter from Dr. Brown of the vets pavilion I applied for treatment at D.V.A. Montreal. I was told I would have to go to Ste. Anne's. I said, "No thanks", as I still remembered my last sojourn there and that if I could not go to the Queen Mary or St. Hyacinthe hospitals I would go to Sunnybrook. The fear of what would happen to me if Ste. Anne's ever got hold of me is what kept me away from there. My fears were well-founded as I shall prove in my next paragraph.

20. I entered St. Hyacinthe on Feb. 10, 1948, and was doing fine. I had gained 15 lbs. and I was happy. On May 7 the doctor came to me and said, "Harvey, the ambulance is here; we are taking you to Ste. Anne's to see a psychiatrist."

21. I said I would not go, as I knew what would happen if I ever got to Ste. Anne's. I could be locked up for life and no one would ever know, because even the Legion and the Red Cross are not admitted in F5 at Ste. Anne's.

22. I was told it is not what I want but what they want; that I have no say in the matter. I said that the only way I would go to Ste. Anne's would be as a corpse, and I grabbed a nail file off my side table and threatened to plunge it into myself if they tried to take me. My dread of Ste. Anne's was such that I would have willingly killed myself.

23. Holding the nail file pointed at my heart I made a break for the outside, intending to jump the first vehicle that passed and to get away. However, the hospital grounds are surrounded by a 8-ft. barbed wire fence, and I could not get out. In the meantime, five policemen plus two ambulance drivers were drawing in on me, and I saw my chance for freedom diminishing. I tried to jump a ditch but missed my footing and sprawled on my face. Everyone jumped on me. Some stood on my legs and others on my arms; my arm was then twisted behind my back and I was bleeding in about eight different places on account of being jumped on.

24. I was then taken into the ambulance and without a chance to get my personal belongings together, taken to Ste. Anne's where I was locked up this last six weeks and held incommunicado. Through bribery I was able to get a letter out to Mr. Blackmore, and this I believe is the only reason I am free today.

25. My cell had walls covered with urine from its last occupant. My mattress was rotten with urine also; the blankets are just left from one patient to another. The food is served on a paper plate and consists of the poorest variety and served in an unsanitary condition all mixed up together like pigswill, and no cutlery to eat it with. Doctors pass when they feel like it. I have seen a week pass without a visit, and they just leer at you as though you were so much dirt.

26. When I got out I went to see Mr. Haig, district administrator; he was not interested and sent me to Mr. Perrault. Mr. Perrault asked me to write him a letter. I went to see Mr. Binns of the Welfare Department. He told me I had a persecution complex and forcibly ejected me from his office. Then, when I wanted to retaliate and punch him he called the police and had me put out.

27. How long are these men who draw good pay but refuse to carry out their duty going to be allowed to manhandle veterans who have legitimate complaints to make?

28. While I was locked up a patient at St. Hyacinthe sold my radio. Now D.V.A. tell me they are not responsible. Yet if I was not locked up it would not have happened.

P.S.—Being a grade 3 orderly I know what I am talking about in the following complaints on behalf of other patients who are still locked up:

Patient Beebe, TB of the spine, in cast yet, has to walk to toilet, and has not been bathed for the six weeks I was there.

Patient Papineau. Urinating blood for seven days without anything being done, and no transfusion to replace loss of blood. No doctors' visit for six days.

Miss Shepherd a patient of the women's ward was brought into F5 on Thursday night June 10 and locked in the men's ward.

Signed "T. Harvey."

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the man's deposition. I think every hon. member will recognize that it would be difficult to detect any sign of insanity in that statement. To me it is straightforward. In order to make the case complete, so that the minister can go to work on it, I will read a supplementary statement on the man's pre-war history. This is dated June 17, 1948:

Came to Canada Nov. 1921 at 13 years of age. I was an orphan. My father was killed in world war I. My mother having died after my birth. My father died in 1918. He had served in the Queen's Liverpool Rifles and was a war disability pensioner. I received a child's allowance until I was 16 years of age.

I was brought to Canada by the St. George's Home, 1153 Wellington street, Ottawa, Immigration No. 21 B 196. From date of entrance into Canada till 18 years of age I was a farm worker under the government's supervision. From 18 years of age to my enlistment in 1939, I did various jobs over the Dominion of Canada, such as bush, farm and construction work.

Thomas Harvey

P.S. Pensioned in March, 1946. Rate 100 per cent and $15 for my son. Total $90. I pay $20 per month to the Children's Aid Society of Montreal for the care of my son.

I regret that this is just a statement given from the man's memory. As I said, I took him into the reading room, let him sit down where it was quiet, and told him he was safe there. I spoke to the people in authority. I gave him paper on which to write. He wrote just as fast as he could write and straightforwardly. He finished up in a few hours; I am not just sure of the time. When he went to Montreal we thought it would not be very good for him to go there. I had some anxiety.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Why?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am telling what I thought. Never mind why I thought it. I thought it was not good for him to go to Montreal. But he went there with the object of getting documents which would support the statements that are made here. I understand that is why the whole deposition remains undocumented. But Mr. Chairman, this is the deposition of a Britisher; it is the deposition of a Canadian; it is the deposition of a man who joined His Majesty's forces in 1939, and it is certainly entitled to the fairest consideration of this house and of the country. I have no idea as to the authenticity of it, how many flaws can be found in it, or anything of that sort. I merely presented it to the house.

I feel that this one conclusion ought to be drawn from this unfortunate situation, in which I am afraid there is a great deal more truth than some hon. members would like to imagine. I ask the minister this question, and I believe one of the most important things for him to do in his regime is to enable himself to answer this question satisfactorily. Has the minister any officer or board whose business it is to know the whereabouts of ex-servicemen and to assure this nation that no such abomination shall be committed against veterans as that which appears to have been inflicted against veteran Harvey? If not, will the minister take steps to see that such an agency be set up forthwith? Will the minister take steps to see that the veterans affairs committee, or some other committee which this house may see fit to set up and charge with the responsibility, shall be free to examine the cases of all those who may be in doubt and who might possibly be the victims of such treatment as this man complains of?

That is the case of veteran Harvey, Mr. Chairman; I leave it to the house and to the minister. When we come back next session, of course we shall be interested in the whereabouts of veteran Harvey.

Before I take my seat I should like to say just a word or two with respect to this case, because I have another one to which I wish to refer. The minister has put on record a number of answers to questions which I asked on June 8 and June 18. Of course I have had no opportunity whatsoever to see finally just what the answer is. I do not know the nature of the telegram which he has bearing upon Canadian psychiatrists. Everyone knows the stand I have taken with respect to psychiatrists. I have not said anything in particular about them. I have merely asked a number of questions. Consequently, because I have not heard what the minister has said I shall have to leave the answering of what he has said until the next session of parliament, when I shall be most watchful concerning that matter and ready to go.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. BENTLEY: No, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. BENTLEY: It is necessary for me to make the Chairman hear; he keeps on going at a fast rate.

Mr. ADAMSON: Does the minister wish to reply?

Mr. BENTLEY: Does the minister wish to reply to the hon. member for Lethbridge before I ask my questions?

Mr. GREGG: No.

Mr. BENTLEY: I just want to mention here that I have gone carefully over the report of the committee on veterans affairs, and I also sat on it most of the time this session; in fact, I have sat on that committee during all the sessions I have been here. In the recommendations I see that nothing whatsoever has been done for those individuals who are still left under the operation of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. The rise in the cost of living has affected those people as well as all others. I should like some assurance from the minister that these people are to be considered when the other recommendations are being considered.

One other matter that I wish to mention at this time is in connection with merchant seamen. If the government accepts the recommendation with regard to merchant seamen, which I believe the indications are that they may, will the minister make arrangements for their attendance at technical schools, as is recommended here, as quickly as possible? And will he see that full information goes out to the public just as quickly as possible, so that those who may wish to take advantage of the opportunity may arrange for their entry into schools of this kind as quickly as they require or desire to do so.

Mr. GREGG: To reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South earlier in the evening, the recommendations inherent in the report of the committee on veterans affairs are all receiving the careful study of the department and of myself at the present time, and I will take under consideration the remarks made by my hon. friend.

While I am on my feet, I will say that I greatly deplore the method used by the hon. member for Lethbridge in bringing before the committee in the way he has individual cases of extreme difficulty, with names and numbers. Although I know about the cases concerned, I will not tonight go into the extremely difficult circumstances surrounding them, because I do not think it is right to do so. All I will say is this. While the parliamentary committee dealt with suggestions and proposals for amending the legislation on principle, and did not go into individual cases, they did bring individual cases to my attention. I think nearly every member of this house has, since last January, brought to my attention cases of veterans' difficulties; and I have tried to give them a most complete opportunity to see all sides of the cases. The same opportunity would have been provided to the hon. member for Lethbridge had he desired to take advantage of it. That is my only comment on the matter, except to say that, while these estimates are up, I did intend to pay just one word of tribute to the excellent work performed by all members of the parliamentary committee on veterans affairs during this session of parliament.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What number did you call, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has he a number too?

Mr. YOUNG: I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the case of veterans on allowance at universities. This matter comes particularly to my attention because until recently I was one of them. A number of veterans who are single men and who are at the universities are now drawing D.V.A. allowances; but because their particular courses are such that there is no room for them at Canadian universities, they will have to go abroad. I particularly refer to 483 pre-medical students who are in the country now and for whom there is no room to carry on their studies at Canadian universities. Just about the time I left Vancouver for Ottawa, one of them was busy getting ready to fly to Australia to take his course. The amount of money the department has been allowed for the purpose of helping those veterans, $60 a month—while it may be of vital assistance to them while they are pursuing their studies in Canada—is extremely small in relation to the price structure in the United States and some other countries. Has the minister any suggestions as to how the government may assist financially those who are compelled to go abroad to complete their education?

Mr. GREGG: That matter was discussed before the committee and has been discussed on many other occasions. At present the additional assistance granted for dependents of veteran students during the winter has not been extended to any increase for those without dependents. The situation will be watched carefully during the coming academic year, but in the meantime it is not my intention to make any further proposals to my colleagues in this connection. I would point out to my hon. friend that the amount was never intended as a complete living allowance but rather as a generous scholarship. In the case of the medical students he mentioned it is possible now, when tuition fees have gone up, as in some cases to as much as $500 a year, to have the entire tuition paid in addition to the $60 a month. The matter is kept under constant review.

Mr. YOUNG: Is it true that in the case of a student attending university in the United States the $60 granted by the government is withdrawn in part, that he is permitted only to draw $10 a week in United States currency? I cannot vouch for the accuracy of the statement, but I should like the minister to tell us whether or not it is the case.

Mr. GREGG: It is not true that it is withheld. The student is able to get $60, if he is single, during his training there, just as he would if he were training in Canada.

Mr. MOORE: The deliberations of the veterans affairs committee this year have shown that the problems of veterans will be with the government for some time to come. I believe the special committee on veterans affairs did a pretty good job this year; and in view of the problems veterans may have in future I should like the minister to consider having the veterans affairs committee as a permanent committee of the house.

Mr. GREGG: That question was brought up in the early part of the session, and I indicated that I felt we should take some time to consider it. It should be pointed out that in some forty meetings of the committee this year the existing legislation was carefully reviewed. I believe representations were received from practically every body and every group that wished to make them. In addition to changes in legislation, further recommendations have been submitted to me to pass on to the government. My own deputy and his officials were in attendance at many of the forty meetings of that committee, during which a great deal of hard work was done by the members; some of the officials attended every meeting. They were glad to do so, and I believe a resolution expressing appreciation of their work was adopted by the committee. But I would point out that in attending these meetings and in helping improve our legislation and our plans, at the same time they were leaving important work within the department itself to be done by someone else. So in these closing hours of the session, in reply to the question asked earlier by the hon. member for Royal and repeated just now by the hon. member for Churchill, I must say that during the coming session of parliament I would rather give the department an opportunity to digest the recommendations already made and carry out the plans consequent upon amendments to the legislation. So at this time, at any rate, I would not recommend that a permanent committee be set up.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Gregg.]

925. War veterans' allowances — further amount required, $4,325,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Under this item I believe it is fitting that I should discuss the next matter I wish to draw to the attention of the committee. Before doing so, once more I wish to assure the minister that I have no antipathy toward anyone, neither toward him nor toward his department; but when these stories come, as they come incessantly, it becomes the duty of any ordinary member of parliament to look into them and not just accept the words of those who happen to be in authority. I was a schoolteacher for twenty-one years, so that I am not without some experience with people, or without experience with officers, either.

The matter I desire to discuss at this time is the McCann commission. I wish to examine this matter with some care before the committee this evening. Once more I am going to read rather rapidly, when I have to read, in the hope that we shall be able to finish in time.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Would it suit the hon. member if the committee gave unanimous consent to allow him to place his statement on Hansard without having the statement read?

Mr. BLACKMORE: No, it would not be possible to place it on Hansard; I think I shall have to read it. I can read quite rapidly, though.

The CHAIRMAN: I thought it might save considerable time if the committee would agree to permit the hon. member to place his statement on Hansard.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is quite all right with me if it is on Hansard, but I think hon. members should hear the facts as I read them. I am, however, in the hands of the committee in that respect. I only want the statement on record, so that the minister may give it consideration.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Mr. KNOWLES: I am as anxious as anyone else to go home, but I think it would be a bad precedent.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then I shall read certain passages. There is a good deal of reading to be done, but I consider it necessary to have it on record so that the people may appraise the situation. On July 16, 1947, the hon. member for Acadia made a speech, as recorded at page 5764 of Hansard for that year. In that speech these questions were asked:

Did Doctor William Baillie, departmental psychiatric consultant, who has never seen John Thom personally, submit as "evidence" to the Canadian pension commission his opinion based solely on a statement alleged by Doctor B. F. Keillor to have been made to him by John Thom?

Did John Thom submit evidence to the Canadian pension commission denying the statements attributed to him by Doctor B. F. Keillor and submitting documentary evidence in proof they should have been expunged from the records as falsities?

Did the Canadian pension commission accept Doctor William Baillie's opinion, based on Doctor B. F. Keillor's challenged statements, to outlaw John Thom's pension claim as a total war disability?

The hon. member for Swift Current, on the same day and in the same debate, also had something to say at page 5767 of Hansard. I am inclined to think this would be a place where, with the permission of the committee, it might be possible to place the hon. member's remarks on Hansard without reading them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But I am in the hands of the committee. Perhaps I could give the general purport of the hon. member's remarks. He is right here, and will be able to say whether or not I am right. His statement was to the effect that there were irregularities in regard to psychiatrists who were treating men. In the course of his remarks he conveyed the idea that so many of these unhappy stories had reached members of parliament that he felt it was time a public inquiry was made, as a result of which we would be able to get the truth and form our judgment on the basis of actual proof.

Let me read now the statement by Mr. Mackenzie, then minister of veterans affairs:

As far as we are concerned, I would welcome a committee of three doctors from this house to go into the suggestions that have been submitted, and I would suggest the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. McGarry). They could meet some time between now and the next session and call in whom they want and submit a first-class report.

Mr. Bentley: That is quite a concession for the minister to make and I appreciate it, but I would ask him to go one step farther and include a member from this end of the house—

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): May I ask a question now?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why not allow me to finish reading from Hansard?

—because we have no doctors—to consider the layman's point of view.

Mr. Mackenzie: Absolutely yes.

Mr. Bentley: If the minister says he will do that, I have nothing further to add except thank you.

That is interesting, because that is the situation which brought about the appointment of the McCann commission, which I intend to examine into in some detail. The minister promised, according to page 5769 of Hansard, that he would set up a commission "to submit a first-class report." A charge was made in this house by two responsible members of parliament and by two members of the veterans affairs committee. In my opinion that matter should have been investigated for this house, and a report involving the hearings should have been made to this house.

Two specific charges were made. The first was that there had been falsification of records, and the second had to do with the evils of psychiatrists. The McCann commission was set up under P.C. 4980 of 1947 and P.C. 75 of 1948 to conduct an investigation under the Inquiries Act, part I. That is an exceedingly important fact. What does it mean to be appointed a commissioner under part I of the Inquiries Act? Perhaps I should read from the documents under which this commission went to work, as follows:

Appendix "A"

Report of a commission appointed under the provisions of part I of the Inquiries Act by order in council P.C. 4980 dated December 4, 1947, as amended by order in council P.C. 75, dated January 8, 1948.

1. The following members of parliament were appointed by order in council P.C. 4980 dated December 4, 1947, and order in council P.C. 75, dated January 8, 1948, as commissioners under part I of the Inquiries Act for the purposes hereinafter set forth:

The Hon. James J. McCann, M.P., chairman, Ottawa, Ont.

Dr. M. E. McGarry, M.P., Margaree Forks, N.S.

Dr. W. G. Blair, M.P., Perth, Ont.

J. O. Probe, Esq., M.P., Regina, Sask.

R. H. Winters, Esq., M.P., Lunenburg, N.S. in the absence of the Hon. James J. McCann, M.P.

F. L. Barrow, Esq., Ottawa, Ont., departmental secretary, Department of Veterans Affairs, was secretary of the commission.

2. The purpose of the commission was to investigate complaints made by Walter H. Kirchner, Esq., M.C., D.C.M., secretary, Canadian Combat Veterans Association, Inc., Vancouver, B.C., regarding pension and treatment services and, in particular, to inquire into and report to the Minister of Veterans Affairs on

(i) the adequacy of the treatment provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs with respect to the cases concerning which Mr. Kirchner has made representations;

(ii) the qualifications and competence of departmental doctors treating these cases; and

(iii) the adequacy of pension consideration given to the cases concerning which Mr. Kirchner has made representations.

5. The commission was charged with considering the cases of sixty-two veterans with respect to whom Mr. Kirchner had made representations. Subsequently, in giving his evidence at Vancouver, Mr. Kirchner presented one additional case in which it was understood that he had become interested only very recently.

Hon. members will find that on page 214 of No. 6 of the minutes of proceedings of evidence of the special committee on veterans affairs 1948. I think the first thing hon. members will be interested in is that there is not a single word of mention of the falsification of documents or of the work of the psychiatrists.

What does it mean to be appointed as a commissioner under part I of the Inquiries Act? Let me read from that act, which is chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, being an act respecting public and departmental inquiries. Part I of the act reads as follows:

1. This act may be cited as the Inquiries Act.
2. The governor in council may, whenever he deems it expedient, cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.
3. In case such inquiry is not regulated by any special law, the governor in council may, by a commission in the case, appoint persons as commissioners by whom the inquiry shall be conducted.
4. The commissioners shall have the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and orally or in writing, and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.
5. The commissioners shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases.

It is quite clear that the commissioners had all the powers necessary to inquire into any problem whatsoever. It is also quite clear that they were appointed by the governor in council and consequently were called upon to perform an exceedingly solemn task and were charged with an exceedingly solemn responsibility before this house and this country.

I should like to examine into some of the aspects of the proceedings of the McCann commission as recorded in return, reference 159, dated June 24, 1948, mover Mr. Low. I quote:

26th November 1947.

It was agreed that the commission would examine the files of the cases in which Mr. Kirchner had made representations and the other evidence at hand and would recommend to the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he should sponsor further inquiry, or action.

Let us comment on that remarkable statement, and it is a remarkable statement, which appears in their own words or in the words of the people who prepared this report for presentation to the House of Commons.

At that first meeting several things were agreed to. The commission assumed authority to recommend to the minister whether he should sponsor further inquiry or action. Where did this commission receive instructions, or how did they obtain the discretion to do any such thing? Where does such authority appear in the terms of reference or in the discussion in the House of Commons on July 16, 1947.

Later in the document follow some statements with regard to December 3 and December 4, 1947, which are quite interesting. I quote:

3rd December 1947.

The commission met at 10 a.m. Examination of the files continued.

Mr. K. C. Rappell, departmental solicitor of the legal division, D.V.A., was heard during the afternoon and questioned as to the meaning, in law, of certain of the charges made by Mr. Kirchner in connection with the case of 86684, John Thom.

4th December 1947.

A draft comment on one of Mr. Kirchner's charges, which had been prepared by Mr. Rappell on the instructions of the commission, was considered and approved.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): May I ask a question?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Let me finish and then ask your questions.

There is not one word about the charges made by the hon. member for Acadia on July 16, 1947, with regard to the falsification of evidence. The pension commission's legal personnel had accepted as evidence false evidence in making decisions upon pension claims. Mr. Rappell, departmental solicitor of the legal division, D.V.A., would conceivably be one of the very gentlemen against whom Mr. Kirchner's charges would be levied. The McCann commission had authority to call before it the ablest independent legal talent in Canada or Great Britain to study the evidence, to weigh its import, to give unbiased judicial opinion upon it and upon the decisions based upon it.

The commission could have gone out to the men whose cases were being studied. They could have got all the evidence from those servicemen. They could have called all witnesses involved and heard them in detail. They could have called in Mr. Kirchner and had before them all the evidence of every kind suggested by that well-informed gentleman.

Then, having heard all this evidence in support of the prosecution they could have called for an exhaustive presentation of the case for the defence. Then they could have submitted the whole case to one or two judges of the supreme court, perhaps having Mr. Kirchner select one and the pension commission select one. Then they could have questioned the judges on the meaning in law of certain charges. Then the commission could have had the judges write the decision in respect of the charges of falsification of evidence.

But what did the commission do?

They asked the accused to give the meaning of the law under which he was charged. They asked him to appraise the evidence. They asked him to write the decision before any witnesses for the prosecution were heard while the commission was still in Ottawa on December 3 and 4 and had heard only one side. In other words, the commission asked the accused to do the job which the commission was asked to do. Then the commission accepted the accused's decision and blessed it with their approval and submitted their report based upon the decision of the accused!

The commission did all their work on the falsification of evidence charge apparently in two days, December 3 and 4. It might be argued that they went out to Vancouver and heard witnesses afterwards, but it is stated specifically in that part of the return that the report was prepared by Mr. Rappell on their instructions and presented to them on December 4 and accepted by them.

So that so far as the witnesses and the commission were concerned we must assume that from that time the matter was closed as regards the charge of falsification of records.

I make no claim to being a lawyer at all, but that is how it looks to an ordinary person on the street.

Here are some other aspects of this McCann commission having to do with the conduct of its affairs. First, Walter Kirchner was recognized as the advocate of the veterans. I draw attention of members of the house to two or three press reports. In one of these reports we find these words:

The commission reviewed sixty-three cases—

This is in a press release from the commission apparently:

—all of which were represented by Kirchner and heard testimony from twenty-four witnesses here and in Ottawa.

This appeared in the Vancouver News-Herald. They, at least, tried to convey the idea that Mr. Kirchner was the advocate, and certainly he should have been the advocate, because he was the man who made the charges.

What actually did occur? According to my information the commission called before it by subpoena certain of Kirchner's key witnesses without Kirchner being present—J. S. Beltz, H-6417, a Hong Kong prisoner of war, keyman for the Hong Kong men; Sholto D. McClellan, #77732, another key witness.

On January 16, 1948, Doctor Lynn Gunn, Superintendent of Shaughnessy Hospital interfered with Ernest J. Maxwell, R-51164 by telling him that this commission did not require his evidence and that he could return to hospital, after, I presume, he had been subpoenaed, although we are not sure about that. Is not this a most remarkable method of proceeding with a hearing?

On January 16, 1948, John V. Thom, M.M., gave detailed supporting evidence to show that the Canadian pension commission had falsified his records, and Albert B. W. Crowhurst, No. 954-38, gave similar evidence, and Arthur Perfitt.

Following the release of the commission's findings these witnesses wrote to the press protesting against the unscrupulous action of the McCann commission in omitting any reference to their evidence supporting the charges that they had been defrauded of pension rights by unlawful practices. May I read some of the letters from these men who were examined by this remarkable commission we sent out. The first appears in the Vancouver Daily Province and reads:

Sir:

Re the Shaughnessy hospital inquiry. The government has once again wasted the country's money and the time of busy men if the commission mentioned was sent out to investigate charges against the hospital management and doctors.

These are not the evils charged. The government has just sidetracked the original charges which are against the pension commission doctors and have nothing to do with the hospital staff doctors.

The pension doctors have wilfully omitted certain items from a soldier's medical history which would have given him a pension and have inserted false statements to prevent a pension.

I feel sure you will search out and reveal the truth as shortly it will be revealed and with this first-hand information.

A Witness.

North Vancouver.

(Note: Regarding charges of "deliberate falsification of reports," etc., the commission made a conclusive finding that "in none of the cases examined does the record substantiate these charges or even suggest that a basis for the charges exists or that the case was carelessly handled."—Editor).

Here is another letter to the Vancouver Daily Province of April 8, 1948, written by the same man:

Sir:

With reference to the note added by you to the end of my letter signed "A. Witness," stating the commission investigating Walter Kirchner's charges has reported that certain charges were not substantiated, I would like to state that the commission admitted that evidence in my case was lacking, or omitted, from 1918 to 1928, and that was the reason I was not pensionable.

I replied that if they searched the hospital records they would find I had been treated for those complaints, but the board doctors had left it out in their reports. Now, if something is left out that would have given me a pension, is it not falsifying the records? If it is, then can you tell me why the commission states that the charges are not true?

I also submitted irrefutable documentary proofs of something omitted.

Vancouver.

A Witness.

How does that sound, following this commission? I will read another one in the Vancouver Daily Province of April 13, 1948:

Thanks Hospital Staff

Sir: I am one of the witnesses who protested against the practices of the Canadian Pension Commission doctors omitting items from my medical history and substituting statements which deprived me of pension for totally-disabling injuries received in the services, and substantiated by two of the leading orthopaedic surgeons of this province, who are also D.V.A. consultants in this specialized sphere.

I wish to add my testimony before the recent Royal Commission which was given from a hospital stretcher under great difficulties, as my spine has been twice "cracked" in a successful major operation to straighten out my back, doubled over for many years past.

May I publicly repeat my thanks to the wonderful treatment services of the Shaughnessy Hospital both physicians and nurses, which I recorded in my evidence, and which was also emphasized by Walter H. Kirchner, M.C., D.C.M., in his evidence before the Royal Commission on my behalf.

Albert B. W. Crowhurst.

Shaughnessy Hospital.

The point is that the press reports have been so worded—I have them here, but shall not take time to read them—as to convey to the people the idea that Walter Kirchner's charges were against the medical personnel of Shaughnessy hospital, which was as far from the truth as possible, as will appear from what I have said.

Albert Crowhurst points this out. Here is another letter dated April 1, 1948:

The charges of Walter H. Kirchner, M.C., D.C.M., of the Combat Veterans against the D.V.A. administration concern the unlawful practices of the Canadian Pension Commission, and not the treatment services of the Shaughnessy hospital, the latter being over-emphasized in the press reports of March 20, 1948, to the exclusion of the former.

I was one of the witnesses before the Royal Commission on inquiry here and gave evidence proving my war disability rights had been outlawed by a false report inserted into the records by the pension medical examiner. In consequence, the expert medical evidence of three top ranking specialists unlawfully was ruled out by the Canadian Pension Commission. The House of Commons is now in a position to take action against the Canadian Pension Commission in the interests of all disabled veterans affected by these most unlawful practices.

J. V. Thom, M.M.

These are letters from some of the men. I ask hon. members whether in the light of such letters and other considerations as these, we can pass this whole matter easily by.

Here is another remarkable aspect of this McCann commission's behaviour: Apparently most of the evidence, if recorded at all, was recorded upon phonographic records. That evidence has never been transcribed. As I pointed out, the charge was made in public in this House of Commons by two responsible members, the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Swift Current.

Right Hon. Ian Mackenzie's words, although they were somewhat vague and were not fully specific, would certainly convey the idea that there was to be a public inquiry which would provide evidence which every hon. member and the people of the country could have in their hands and consider, not a study conducted in a secret way with all the evidence recorded on records to which almost no one could gain access? How in the world could you have any kind of intelligible result from a commission conducted in that way? The evidence has been kept on the records in the possession of the McCann commission as its own personal property! Certainly that is not what the hon. member for Swift Current and the hon. member for Acadia asked for. One would have expected that the evidence would be given before a public inquiry and would belong to the public. I cannot escape the conviction that that is exactly what it should have been.

Again, we are told that none of the witnesses was sworn. We have the minister's own words for that, on June 14 in a statement in which he endeavoured to have the hon. member for Peace River withdraw his request for a copy of the evidence and proceedings of the McCann commission, appointed under the authority of P.C. 4980, made this statement at page 5151 of Hansard:

The witnesses were not sworn, and as a result they gave evidence over and above that which would have been required had they been informed that they were proceeding on a formal basis under oath. Some of the discussions at Vancouver were recorded on sound recording discs in order to assist the commissioner in writing his report on that phase of the hearing.

I must confess that as an ordinary man on the street that sort of thing is completely incomprehensible to me as being the record of a public inquiry into two of the most important charges that have been made since I have been in the house.

I have been told, however, that the veterans claiming injustices were sworn. I am not sure whether it is true. Men who say they are in a position to know say they were. Again I will not give the names because I am not willing to make that charge particularly specific. I have been told that the veterans who were claiming injustices were sworn while the departmental witnesses who were in a way speaking for the defence were not sworn. I submit that hon. members and the people of the country must agree that that gives room for the widest kind of misrepresentation possible.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I know some would like to have it carried, but I have a few other things to say. A commission consisting mainly of doctors would not be in a position to understand the conduct of a legal investigation into a legal matter. Yet this commission consisting mainly of doctors retained no counsel to guide them! How in the world a group of five men could have considered themselves competent to inquire into so vexatious and so widely ramified a problem as that without a counsel to guide them, I cannot understand. Under the terms of their reference, and under the Public Inquiries Act, under which they were appointed, they had full power to select the finest legal counsel who could be found in Canada and have him to guide them into the whole of their investigation; but apparently they considered themselves quite capable of doing this thing—a most astonishing situation!

Having laid before the house and the country the kind of thing that has apparently been attempted here, I shall not undertake to say what must have been the motive behind the men who set up that commission or planned it. I would not dare to suggest it, even. I would not suggest that the object of the whole thing was to discredit Mr. Kirchner. I would not like to suggest that the object of the whole thing was to whitewash the grievances of those unfortunate veterans, sixty-two of them, so that they would never again have any chance, even to be heard. I would not like to suggest that the object was to deceive parliament, although I must say that the kind of press reports that went out at the time the commission was first appointed to commence its hearings until the last, was certainly of the kind that would deceive the public, because the emphasis in all the press reports is placed on the question of whether or not there was anything wrong with the medical personnel in Shaughnessy hospital, a matter which had never even been suggested by Mr. Kirchner, or by anybody else, so far as I know. The commission makes such a statement as this, for example. This was published in the veterans affairs publication in May, 1948, which all hon. members received:

> McCann commission report that hospital facilities are satisfactory.

This appears under the signature of A. T. Paton, regional public relations officer, and reads as follows:

> Medical and surgical treatment and the results obtained in Shaughnessy hospital are quite satisfactory and of a high calibre—as high as in any hospital in Canada. The percentage of successful operations performed there is, in our opinion, well in line with that obtained anywhere in the profession.

It was never even suggested that anything but such was true. Why should a headline in the veterans affairs paper indicate that the charge had been that there was anything wrong with the doctors in Shaughnessy hospital? Further down we have these words:

> Their report stated, "The commission is satisfied with, and finds no basis for complaint concerning the organization, operation and facilities of Shaughnessy or the qualifications of departmental doctors. On the whole, the commission is fully satisfied with the high degree of competence of all departmental doctors."

If you were looking at these headlines, Mr. Chairman, you would find that because these later words are set out in black type this passage is the chief thing which the people were supposed to read.

I have produced sufficient evidence at this late hour of the session to give hon. members something to think about quite earnestly before we get back next year.

As a result of what I have feared from considering this whole affair, this McCann commission, has come as almost the crowning piece of evidence of evil in the whole Canadian pension set-up. I am not criticizing any one of the people in the pension commission, but something is entirely wrong, and this McCann commission is the strongest possible evidence that this house and this country can have, to prove that something is terribly wrong.

Considering all these facts, Mr. Chairman, I say the minister should take steps immediately to set up such an organization as will enable the people of this country to satisfy themselves that the unfortunate veterans who happen to fall between stools, as these lads like Thom and Crowhurst and Harvey, shall have the right to be heard before some tribunal that shall be unbiased either politically or in any other way. How can our men have any confidence at all when they have to be tried before a tribunal with such a record as has been indicated, and when they feel that they have to appear before an appeal board which is selected from the very men who ruled on their cases in the first place? Where is the possibility of justice? I suggest to the minister that something must be done. I will not undertake to suggest what it ought to be, but something certainly must be done to give our men something like a fair chance.

One more thing I should like to say, and it comes as a result of what I have read before, regarding Harvey and some of these boys. Apparently there is a demand on the part of somebody in the Canadian pension commission which has caused the doctors all down through the organization to threaten men who have been veterans, and who find themselves in such circumstances as have been described, with punishment if they write to their member of parliament. Have we got to the point where it must be conceded that in this country, when a man dons the king's uniform and risks his life for the welfare of the state, he thereby forfeits his title to his citizen's rights, that he no longer has the right to communicate with his member of parliament, that he is in effect disfranchised, as it were? And must he be looked upon as an offender if he writes to his member of parliament, and from that time forward be subject to all sorts of petty meanness and discrimination, even to the extent perhaps of being locked in a padded cell incommunicado? Have we got to that point? Some hon. members laugh. Well, the members who laugh would be simply appalled if I were to give evidence of a man who spoke to me three days ago, whose word would never be questioned, and who told me exactly what had been threatened him because he had asked for the milk which his doctor had prescribed in the hospital in which he was taken care of. That sort of thing must cease to be.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. ABBOTT moved:

That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949, the sums of $781,658,186.63, $197,067,420.89 and $10,100,000, respectively, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 399, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1949.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 2.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, may I say just a word in connection with this section. I am not forgetting that three or four hours ago I told the house that I did not plan to say anything more today, but there has been called to my attention a press dispatch which I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance. It relates to one of the items in schedule A to the bill. This clause 2 is the clause that validates schedule A, hence my speaking about this matter now. Last evening, in one of our many discussions about the plight of superannuated civil servants, the minister told me and the house once again that he felt the government should not be asked to do something which private employers are not doing. My hon. friend the member for York West has made an interjection which indicates that he knows the report which I have in my hand, issued by the Canadian Press, under yesterday's dateline, which I am quoting from today's Ottawa Journal, to the effect that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is giving a small supplement to its pensioners in the lower brackets.

This house knows very well my complaint against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the matter of pensions. This house knows the score on behalf of many of my constituents which still has to be settled; yet even that company, which I have castigated in this house many times, is now recognizing the plight of its pensioners in the lower brackets. As a matter of fact, the company is making a shameful admission in recognizing that it has employees on pensions of $30 and $40 a month. At any rate, all credit to the company for this gesture; it is providing a supplement of $5 a month to those whose pensions are less than $40 a month, and to those whose pensions are between $40 and $45, a sufficient supplement to bring those pensioners up to $45.

I make this further plea—perhaps it is the last plea of the session—to the Minister of Finance, and I ask him once again to consider the plight of superannuated civil servants, particularly those in the lower pension brackets. I said to him last night, as I have said before, it seems to us that the government should be a model employer. Here is one private corporation which has made a gesture in this direction, and I would hope that the Canadian government would not fall behind the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not familiar with the pension plan of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but I doubt very much whether it is as generous as the government's superannuation plan.

Mr. KNOWLES: I can support what the minister is saying about deficiencies in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company pension plan, and perhaps at this hour of the night it would not be well for him to start me on that, or I might try to raise the question about which I am still concerned, and if it were in order I would do so. My point is that when a company which has the record that this company has is prepared to do at least this little bit, the government ought to be able to do the same. May I remind the Minister of Finance that there are superannuated civil servants down in these same brackets. I have given the figures to him before. And even those who are in brackets higher than these are having real difficulty.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I remind my hon. friend that there are hundreds of thousands of people in this country who are neither eligible for, nor do they receive, superannuation from any superannuation plan.

Mr. KNOWLES: Shame to the government for that too.

MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It is customary, Mr. Speaker, to announce resignations from and changes in the ministry. One resignation has been handed to me today. It is that of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley). I have replied to the Minister of Justice stating that in the circumstances which are mentioned in his letter to me I would advise His Excellency to accept the minister's resignation. It is true that the resignation does not take effect until midnight tonight, but as the house will not be sitting tomorrow, and as probably the exchange of correspondence would not find its place in the official records if left over until the next session, I would ask that I might be permitted to table tonight the correspondence which has passed beween us. I would also ask that the correspondence might appear in Hansard, in its record of today's proceedings.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to give the Prime Minister such leave?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): On behalf of the official opposition, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word in appreciation of the services that the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley has rendered to this nation. We watched him during the war years when he carried such a heavy load as Minister of Finance. We saw him bear that burden with courage and with great distinction. I think from coast to coast Mr. Ilsley is highly respected by Canadians of all parties. On behalf of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative party, I am only too glad to be able to pay him that small tribute this evening. I trust that in his professional life he will have, not only great success but also great happiness. He has done a grand job for Canada, and I am sure we all appreciate that fact.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I, too, Mr. Speaker, should like to join in the expressions of appreciation of the work of the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley. I think no man in public life in Canada stands higher in public esteem than the former Minister of Justice. No matter in what quarter of the house we sit, there are certain people whom we can respect. Mr. Ilsley, through his devoted services during the war, the manner in which he did not spare himself, and by his unquestioned integrity and honesty, made a contribution to the public life of Canada of which I think not only he but the nation itself can be proud.

I am glad that this opportunity was afforded to us to express the general feeling of admiration and respect that we feel for the Minister of Justice whose resignation is before us tonight. Regardless of Mr. Ilsley's party associations, I think his retirement is a loss, not only to the Liberal party but to the country as a whole. The country can ill afford to spare men of the type of the former Minister of Justice. Speaking on behalf of those associated with me and of myself personally, may I say we feel that his retirement is indeed a distinct loss, not only to the government and to the party, but to the entire country.

Tonight I listened to a discussion between the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I presume, from what was said, that in all probability this is the last time that we shall see the Prime Minister in the position of leader of the Liberal party, at least; I am not quite clear with regard to the other high position which he occupies. In any event, I should like to add this comment before I sit down. I think we can say to him that we wish him well in retirement from the one office or from the two offices, whichever he himself may decide, and as to which we shall probably know when the house assembles in the autumn, or after Christmas, or whenever the new session may be called.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I should like to associate myself, Mr. Speaker, and those who sit with me with all the good things that have been said with regard to both the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). We greatly admire both these gentlemen for their high personal qualities and their integrity. We hate to see them leave public life. We feel that they have set a great example. In my associations with both of them I personally have had pride in the fact that I received the utmost satisfaction with regard to anything that I have taken before them. I feel that the country is losing from those two high offices men of great ability and outstanding qualities.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Despite the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of this group spoke for the group when he referred to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), whose resignation we have received, I should like to state personally my own great feeling of loss as a result of the fact that Mr. Ilsley has decided first of all to give up his portfolio and later on his membership in this house. It is a loss that this country can ill afford. Mr. Ilsley, in all the offices he has filled in the ministry, has, I think, proved himself to be one of the greatest cabinet ministers Canada has ever had. There was nothing spectacular about him; but his integrity and earnestness were so manifest that no one who watched him, as I did from my seat almost across from him, could help being impressed. As I said before, I feel that his leaving public life is a loss to this country as well as to the party, of which he has been an ornament and a useful servant for so many years.

(Translation):

Mr. A. PHILEAS COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say a few words in French, not on behalf of all French-speaking members of the house, for I have no authority to do so, but in my own name. I should like to voice and put on record my heartfelt wishes.

I hope that during the August convention, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), who seems to be enjoying good health, will hear a unanimous appeal to remain by our side, if not as leader of the Liberal party, then at least as prime minister.

I have no objection to another party leader being chosen when the right hon. Prime Minister decides to withdraw from that position but, to my mind, there never was a time when we needed the right hon. Prime Minister Mackenzie King more than we do today. Political events of recent elections have made that obvious.

Since the people on the whole place their trust in the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King, I honestly believe that he could do the country no greater service than by remaining in office as prime minister as long as he wishes, rather than by becoming governor general. Knowing that his successor is already chosen, he could resign whenever it suited him to do so.

In the meantime, I hope I speak on behalf of most if not all the members in saying to the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King: "Long live the King".

(Text):

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I asked to be permitted to table instead of to read the correspondence which passed between the Minister of Justice and myself today, I had in mind the desire of hon. members to bring proceedings to a close as speedily as possible. As words have been expressed by others in reference to my colleague the Minister of Justice, I should like to read the correspondence if I may be permitted to do so. It helps to reveal my own feelings toward my colleague, as well as those of other members of the government and of the parliament of our country. May I say I think in Mr. Ilsley's resignation from the government our country is losing one of the greatest public servants any country has ever possessed. I do not think it is possible to pay the Minister of Justice too much in the way of praise for his fine integrity, indefatigable industry and great ability and for the splendid public service he has rendered our country in time of peace and of war.

The letter I received from Mr. Ilsley today is as follows:

Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada

Ottawa, 30th June, 1948.

My dear Prime Minister,—

Pursuant to our conversations at the beginning of the session and to the statement which I made to the press a few weeks ago, I now beg to tender my resignation as a member of the government.

As I have already stated, my reason for taking this step is that it is necessary for me to give attention to my personal affairs. I need hardly say that it is with many regrets that I leave a government with which I have been associated for so long, whose members I like and respect so much and with whose policies I am so completely in accord.

I should like also to express my appreciation of the privilege of serving under your leadership for so many years of your long and distinguished career as Prime Minister.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,
J. L. Ilsley.

The Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

To Mr. Ilsley's letter I replied as follows:

Office of the Prime Minister
Canada
Ottawa,

June 30, 1948.

The Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, P.C., K.C., M.P., Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

My dear Ilsley:

I have received your letter of today in which, in accordance with your intentions as intimated to me in personal conversations at the beginning of the session, and in a statement to the press a few weeks ago, you tender your resignation as a member of the government.

You know, without words, how profound is the regret repeatedly expressed by our colleagues and myself, that you should, for any reason, have felt it necessary to contemplate retiring from the ministry in which for almost thirteen years, you have held successively the portfolios of National Revenue, Finance and Justice. As, however, you state that it has become necessary for you to take this step in order to give attention to your personal affairs, I feel I have no alternative but to submit your resignation to His Excellency, and to advise its acceptance.

The regret felt by our colleagues and myself at your retirement will, I know, be shared by the people of Canada whose interests you have served so honourably and with such exceptional ability and fidelity in times alike of peace and war. Indeed warm appreciation of the strength which your presence in its councils has brought to the government of our country has already been expressed in parliament by the people's representatives irrespective of party affiliation. The devoted service you have given Canada, as a minister of the crown, will be remembered with gratitude.

As one with whom I have been so closely associated in public life since your election to parliament twenty-two years ago, and the one who today is my senior colleague in the cabinet, I cannot begin to express to you how deeply, both on personal and public grounds, I regret your retirement. I can only thank you for all that your helpful counsel and close co-operation have meant to me in the discharge of the heavy responsibilities which together we have been called upon to share.

As you resume the practice of your chosen profession, may I extend to you every possible good wish on the part of all our colleagues in the government and myself.

With warm personal regards,

Yours very sincerely,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

May I express my very sincere thanks to the leader of the C.C.F. party and to the other hon. members who have so kindly made reference to my own approaching retirement from the leadership of my party and also from the leadership of the government, both of which, may I say without any reservation, will have taken place before another session of parliament. I thought I had made myself clear in that regard; I should be sorry if anyone thought there was any reservation. What I have sought to convey in regard to the time of tendering my resignation to His Excellency the Governor General is that this will not necessarily be at the same time I cease to be leader of my party; that it may be a matter of weeks or a month or two thereafter. But this is the last moment I expect to be present in this House of Commons in the position I have had the honour to occupy as Prime Minister and leader of the government for now in all over twenty-one years. I am happy indeed to think that after that length of time it is possible for me to feel that I am parting with members of all parties in the house with their good will. I thank one and all.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the twentieth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

World conditions continue to occasion anxiety. Instead of the closer co-operation which had been hoped for between all nations, the cleavage between certain nations of eastern Europe and nations of the western world has become increasingly marked. The sense of danger has led, on the part of free nations, to the establishment and promotion of regional associations to ensure their joint security and well-being. Canada has continued, as opportunity has afforded, to further effective organization for international peace and security. My ministers have made clear our country's intention to assist in maintaining a preponderance of strength on the side of the preservation of freedom.

The delay in restoring production in Europe and Asia has resulted in an unprecedented demand for commodities from the western hemisphere. This demand has had an inflationary effect on world prices. Higher world prices have been reflected in rising domestic prices. The effect of this on the cost of living has been of increasing concern to consumers.

While shortages of food and other supplies to meet the demand abroad and at home have resulted in increased prices, production in Canada, to meet this demand, has led to a degree of employment and prosperity not hitherto experienced.

My ministers are of the opinion that widespread controls of prices, so necessary at a time of war, would prove prejudicial if maintained indefinitely in time of peace. The controls made necessary by war have accordingly been progressively removed. As a means of resisting inflationary pressures, certain controls have been continued in this transitional period.

The whole question of prices and the cost of living has been debated at length in both houses of parliament. It has been the subject of detailed investigation by a select committee of the House of Commons. The investigation has had a restraining effect upon unjustifiable increases in prices. The report of the committee deserves wide public attention. The government will give most careful consideration to its representations.

The inability of Canada's European customers to pay for their imports resulted, during 1947, in a serious depletion of our reserves of United States dollars. To meet the critical situation occasioned by the shortage of United States dollars to pay for our vastly increased imports from that country, it became necessary to impose drastic and unpopular temporary restrictions on our trade. You will recall that the consideration of measures for this purpose necessitated beginning the session early in December. Debate on these measures occupied a large part of its earlier months.

It is gratifying to note that the measures taken have helped not only to stop the depletion, but to replenish Canada's reserves of United States dollars. The implementation by the United States of the European Recovery Program will contribute materially to the same end. As our reserves increase, and our trade is brought into better balance, restrictions will be progressively removed. A permanent solution of our exchange problem depends, however, upon the revival of world trade.

While much of your time has been devoted to a consideration of economic and financial problems arising almost exclusively out of abnormal world conditions, you have been careful to give the necessary attention to those matters with which, in ordinary times, parliament would be concerned.

Among measures related to agriculture, an international wheat agreement has been approved. Minimum prices for wheat and other agricultural products have been increased. The period during which agricultural prices may be supported has been extended. Provision has been made for the reclamation of marsh lands in the maritime provinces.

In the field of immigration, the movement of desirable immigrants from the United Kingdom and western Europe as well as from the displaced persons camps has been accelerated. A large number of close relatives of persons residing in Canada have been admitted, and provision has been made to hasten the admission of others.

In the field of industrial relations, legislation has been enacted respecting the investigation, conciliation and settlement of disputes in industries over which parliament has jurisdiction. It is hoped that this legislation will provide a model throughout Canada for legislation respecting industrial disputes. Provision has been made for the payment of larger benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The scope of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act has been widened.

With respect to the affairs of veterans and their dependents, a thorough study of existing legislation and related matters has been made by a select committee of the House of Commons. The veterans charter has been amended in the light of the experience of the past three years. Pensions of disabled veterans and of pensioned dependents have been increased. Larger allowances have been provided for married veterans in training. Other veterans' benefits have been broadened.

The welfare of Indians has been the subject of careful study by a select joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. The committee continued and completed the examination of the Indian Act begun in 1946.

In relation to the housing problem, it is to be noted that more houses were built in 1947 than in any previous year. The National Housing Act has been amended to assist in meeting the need for rental housing. Provision, on a substantial scale, of quarters for servicemen and their families is contributing materially to the total available housing accommodation.

A most significant advance in the government's policy for the establishment of a national minimum of social security and human welfare has been the development, in the present session, of a national health program. Provision has been made on a generous scale for annual grants to the provinces, over a period of years, to assist in the development of health plans and in the improvement of existing health services in both urban and rural areas. The health grants will be of immediate benefit in making possible much needed increased hospital facilities throughout Canada, as well as in the prevention and treatment of disease. The grants also constitute an essential prerequisite to the establishment of a nation-wide system of health insurance.

Other important measures enacted during the session were bills respecting the Canada Shipping Act, the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Dominion Elections Act, the revision and simplification of the Income Tax Act, the Criminal Code and Prison Reform, an improved pension plan for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the creation of a Hydro Electric Power Commission in the Northwest Territories.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for all essential services.

You will be gratified that an unprecedented surplus of revenues over expenditures has made possible considerable reductions both in the national debt and in taxation. The sales tax on virtually all types of food has been removed. A further exemption in personal income taxes has been granted for persons over sixty-five years of age. Estates up to a value of $50,000 have been freed of dominion succession duties.

Honourable Members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

On July 1, the Post Office Department will inaugurate, at ordinary first-class rates, an air-mail service which, as respects the delivery of letters, will, under normal conditions, reduce the distance from one end of Canada to the other to less than twenty-four hours.

As you are aware, floods in the Fraser valley of British Columbia recently reached the proportions of a national disaster. In coping with the appalling situation thereby created, there has been the closest co-operation between the federal government and the provincial and local authorities. I should like to express my appreciation of the prompt and effective measures taken by the armed services, the civil authorities, and the citizens of the province in meeting the emergency. I should like also to thank you for the financial provision you have made to assist in relief and rehabilitation, and in the constructive work of repairing the dykes.

The approval given by both houses of parliament to a planned development of the national capital, and the provision you have made for necessary improvements, will help to ensure continuity in the capital's development in a manner which will have regard to its position in the present, and to its probable needs in years to come.

Today there is no country in a more fortunate position than our own; nor has Canada, at any time, enjoyed a higher place in the regard of the nations of the world. May Divine Providence continue to bless our country, and to guide the Parliament of Canada in all its deliberations.

This concluded the fourth session of the twentieth parliament.
