There are many other issues I could discuss if there were sufficient time. One of the things I should like to mention is the whole question of our attitude toward so-called emerging countries. I agree that we must do, as indeed we are doing, a commendable job as Canadians in relating to those countries. I have said to them as recently as March of this year, in the five countries of southeast Asia, that they ought not to think in terms of their industrial development, basing it on such as things as textiles, or one of the problem areas we have, footwear. It will not only make it more difficult for us to be of assistance to them in terms of what they can export to Canada; they will also be competing among themselves in a way which inevitably will be very harmful to their underdeveloped economy.

● (1640)

Having said that, the reality is that for the less developed countries one of the easiest and most labour intensive kinds of activity into which they can move once they start developing economically tends to be textiles. Therefore we have to negotiate with them voluntary quotas in some cases; or, in the last analysis, if they do not work, we must sit down with them and tell them that this is the maximum amount that we are prepared to bring in from a particular country.

Nevertheless we also have to understand and recognize, as one of the committees of the House stated unanimously in a report on international affairs, that we have to provide some kind of access to these countries if we are going to be credible in terms of other things that we are seeking to do internationally. Therefore it is a thin line between protectionism, if you like, in terms of looking after domestic industry, which clearly must be the number one responsibility, and at the same time not talk out of both sides of our mouths at the same time, as it were, when we talk to these undeveloped countries.

I think that up to now we have done a reasonably good job to keep the situation in some kind of balance, particularly, I repeat, since the biggest single source of imports into Canada is still the United States by a very wide margin. There the relationship as to how we work out bilateral agreements, or whatever might be possible under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, is much more difficult and complex than is the case with the less developed world.

While acknowledging that there are major problems in this industry, I have to reject, of course, the idea contained in the motion that virtually nothing is being done and that in some way or other we are allowing a flood of low cost imports to destroy this particular industry. I most emphatically say that whatever may be the case in some sectors of private industry, where I have heard the view expressed, as the hon. member also said, that the textile industry is expendable, I have a complete appreciation of the view expressed by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi that this is an important, indeed essential industry.

It is made all the more so for another reason he mentioned which, by the way, I could broaden beyond his reference to textiles. One of the things that is positively frightening when you contemplate economic development in Canada is the incredible number of one industry towns, not merely textile towns but towns with industries like pulp and paper and mining. The vulnerability of so many of these communities is really a nightmare to contemplate if we do have some kind of across the board slump in some of these rather basic industries, of which of course textiles is one. For that reason, if for no other, it certainly deserves the support not only of the government but of the country.

From what I have said—and I will be glad to provide a detailed list of protectionist (if that is not too strong a word) actions that have been taken—I think it is clear that where there have been identified problem areas some action has been taken, perhaps not as much as the industry might like in some instances, but nevertheless some action has been taken. In terms of this new study, if the global quota turns out to be a more practical approach, then we will look at it seriously. But remember that the basis of the policy, which was endorsed by every member of this House, was against that kind of concept and was based on a high or relatively high tariff, certainly high by today's standard, of about 25 per cent, and selective action on particular commodities or sectors which were giving trouble.

To go to the global quota would be to move completely away from that concept, which I repeat was universally approved of at the time it was introduced about four or five years ago. But if it has to be done, then there is certainly nothing in terms of the laws of the Medes and the Persians about what we have now. We are quite prepared to look at an alternative approach.

I take it that my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker, and I simply want to say that I believe we are taking as well as moving toward some quite decisive actions in the textiles field, and that as the general recovery goes on I hope this will also be reflected in this particular sector, namely, the textile industry.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks made by the hon. minister with great interest and I should just like to make one comment. He has on a number of occasions been described as a master of circumlocution, but when it came to his description of how he handles the reports of the textile and clothing board, I really thought he outdid himself.

Mr. Jamieson: Oh, come on. Why don't you give me the answer to the question I asked?

Miss MacDonald: If you listen you will get a few answers.

I rise to take part in this debate for a number of reasons. I first became interested in the problems facing the Canadian textile industry and its synthetic fibres component because it is a major employer in my constituency and the area which surrounds it. But this is not merely an issue of local concern. A number of communities throughout the country are directly affected, and the issue has implications for the secondary manufacturing sector as a whole and for our international trade policy.

The plain fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian textile industry and the associated Canadian fibres industry are in serious trouble. They are losing control of the Canadian market and that has meant and will mean lay-offs, cutbacks in capital and research and development investment, a huge trade deficit, and a shift of new investment to the better protected market in the United States.

The causes are complex—competition from countries whose wage levels permit them to undersell domestic manufacturers in the Canadian market, lack of global quotas, and the situation which currently exists in the United States and which has a spillover effect on Canada, to which the minister referred. Something clearly needs to be done.

That is all very well, the doctrinaire free trader may say, but this industry already has tariff protection, anti-dumping laws do exist, some quotas on imports are in place. If these industries are in trouble even with this protection, it is conclusive proof to the doctrinaire free trader that the industry is not competitive in the market place and should be phased out so that the resources allocated to it may be transferred to more productive sectors of the economy. Moreover, he would agree that by opening up our market to imports from Third World countries we not only ensure cheaper prices for the consumer but we assist in the development of those nations' manufacturing sector.

I have heard these arguments repeatedly, and at first hearing they sound very persuasive. Why worry about the demise of the textile industry? To hear this argument one would think its passing would be a national blessing that would, in one fell swoop, bring us a step closer to industrial rationalization, cheaper consumer goods and a fairer distribution of wealth with the developing nations. But it is not quite that simple. We are talking here today about an industry which directly employs 200,000 people, which contributes $5 billion to the Gross National Product, and provides the main economic base for many communities in this country.

Let us be clear about it; we are not talking about the phasing out of an industry as part of some national industrial strategy which will provide alternate employment for its workers and new industries for the communities affected. No, indeed, we are talking about an industry which is in danger of being phased out by default. Indeed we are talking about a situation which has developed in large part because the government has failed through procrastination and inertia to take the steps necessary to fulfil the expressed intent of the Canadian textile policy as it was set out in 1970.

● (1650)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We have a policy on paper which pledges to create conditions to provide a framework for planning, investment, and development in the industry, and to reverse the decline which it experienced during the 1960's. Yet this policy has been applied with such a lack of conviction, with such procrastination, and in so irresolute a fashion it has disrupted planning, discouraged investment, and cut back on development in the industry. The government vowed to help save the industry, and then has acted as if that expression of its good intentions was sufficient to carry out this difficult and complex task. That simply is not good enough.

A chronic weakness of the government has been that its departments often work at cross purposes to one another. Here we have something even more appalling; a ministry whose implementation of a policy works at cross purposes to the announced intent of that policy.

It is time the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce decided whether or not it wants a strong textile industry in this country, regardless of what the minister had to say this afternoon in his obsequiously expressed concern for the industry. It has to make up its mind whether or not we want a strong textile industry in this country and, if it does, whether it is prepared to take the steps necessary to give that industry a reasonable chance to survive and grow. If it concludes that this industry should be phased out, then let it say so directly and accept the consequences of that decision. If that is what the government intends, let it plan now to cushion the blow to the employees and the communities that will be affected. Let it assess the adverse impact of that step on the balance of trade; let it calculate the effect of that balance of trade deficit on interest rates. Let it investigate the spinoff effects on such related areas as the petro-chemical and synthetic industries. In short, let it cease its present inconsistency between its theory and its practice.

Consistency is the least we should expect, but it is not enough that the government make a decision on this matter. It must make the right decision. In my considered opinion we do need a strong textile industry in Canada. We need it as part of a strong secondary manufacturing sector, both to provide employment and to enhance the strength of the national economy.

Nobody but the most shortsighted nationalist or the most doctrinaire protectionist wants to gouge the consumer to shelter artificial and inefficient industries in this country. But the Canadian textile industry and the synthetic fibre industries associated with it do not fit that stereotype. They are efficient and they are productive. Their annual level of price increase during the past decade is 2 per cent less than that of the manufacturing sector as a whole. Considerable capital investment has been undertaken; $1.7 billion in the last decade, to modernize plant and machinery, and productivity in that decade has gone up 5.1 per cent a year compared to 4.2 per cent for all manufacturing.

The Canadian textile industry is in trouble today not because it is inefficient and unproductive, but because it pays substantially higher wages to its employees than most of its international competitors, and because it is not possible for it to negotiate global quotas. Far from being heavily sheltered or heavily subsidized, the Canadian textile market is relatively wide open. We have only a minuscule part of our market covered by import quotas, 6 per cent as compared to 7 per cent in the United States, and those quotas which amount to only 6 per cent are often short-term as opposed to the three to five-year import quotas many other countries impose. Moreover, they have to be negotiated item by item for each sector of the industry, a time consuming, complex, and frustrating procedure which places the Canadian textile industry at a great disadvantage compared to other industrialized countries which do utilize the global quota system. The result is that when some country wants to engage in distress selling, the natural dumping ground is Canada.

Canada is certainly doing its share to provide export opportunities for Third World countries. We hold a smaller percentage of our domestic market than any other country, and that would be the case by a margin of some 15 per cent even if the recommendation of the Senate committee, that 65 per cent of the Canadian market be held for Canadian manufacturers, were accepted without amendment.

I have great sympathy for the cause of economic development in the Third World, and I agree with many of the proposals they put forward at the recent UNCTAD conference in Nairobi, Kenya, to ensure fairer prices for the commodities Third World countries produce. But let us not delude ourselves into thinking that the Canadian market alone is big enough to provide an outlet for all the developing world's textile industries and all of their produce.

If we really want to help these countries, let us work to get the European Economic Community and the United States to open up their textile markets somewhat wider as part of an international agreement. That would be one way in which we could help developing countries. We cannot, as the former minister of industry, trade and commerce said when he brought in the Canadian textile policy in 1970, "assume alone the responsibility for an unliberalized textile world." By attempting to do so we may progressively destroy our own industry while providing only marginal benefits to the developing countries. That is not enlightened compassion, it is senseless sacrifice of a key sector of the national economy of little use to the nations on whose behalf the sacrifice is made.

If we were to abandon every sector of the economy which cannot compete with international competition because of labour costs then we would indeed be embarking on a journey down a slippery slope. Except in a few resource based industries, and those in which transportation costs provide natural protection, we have very few industries in this country which are immune to the plight in which the textile and fibre industries now find themselves.

It used to be that we could overcome labour cost differentials by having better access to technology than the low wage countries, but that advantage is fast disappearing. Let me give you some figures in this regard. In salaries and research facilities, a basic two-person research team composed of a scientist and a technician costs between $65,000 and $90,000 a year. For research and development to be warranted there must be a stable domestic market that will offer the kind of dollar return in business that warrants this expense. But because the textile industry has been losing control of the domestic market, it has cut back on research and development. The situation in my own area illustrates this trend.

● (1700)

Prior to 1970 in Kingston and the Islands and in Frontenac-Lennox and Addington there were three Canadian research organizations devoted to the synthetic fibres manufacturing business. Since then Celanese has closed down its Canadian research facilities. DuPont has closed two labs related exclusively to fibres research and has cut its personnel in research and development fibres work by 70 per cent, leaving only some research and development work at its central research facilities in Kingston. All these cutbacks and shutdowns resulted directly from market conditions. In other words, our major competitive advantage, that is, better technology, is being eroded because we are losing control of our market. Surely this is a vicious circle which is of serious national concern.

But the danger goes deeper than that. Technology can now be transferred around the world more and more rapidly. It can be moved at a fairly early stage of its life cycle to lower wage-cost countries. This has special significance to Canada. Because our domestic market is smaller—and the minister referred to this—than that of the United States or the European Economic Community, manufacturing is frequently only warranted several years later than in larger market units. If this market size delay closely corresponds to the time delay in applied technology transferred to lower labour cost situations, then Canada will be in a uniquely disadvantageous position in the future.

We have been discussing the plight of the Canadian textile industry. This is a matter of legitimate and great concern. But the greater concern must be as to whether the same syndrome of drift and indecision on the part of the government will make what is happening to the textile industry a preview of what will happen to the whole of secondary manufacturing enterprise in Canada. That sector is usually one of the more stable elements in our economy. If it goes, we are left with only the resource based industries and the tertiary service sector. More and more we would revert to the colonial-type economy, hewers of wood and drawers of water, which we rejected 100 years ago. More and more we would be dependent on our non-renewable resources to make our way in the world. As a nationalist I cannot consent to that kind of future. The first leader of this country made it his life's work to prevent such a future, and that is one tradition we on this side intend to maintain.

We are paying a price now for moving by default in the direction I have just outlined. Our textile trade deficit last year was $1.1 billion. To balance that outflow of cash Canada is maintaining high interest rates. And with what result? Escalating costs for running the federal and provincial governments and for building roads, schools and hospitals across the country; high interest rates on mortgage loans, and high rents for apartments; unemployment in areas where it is difficult to find alternative employment. The result is that depressed communities and regions in this country will wither and stagnate even more.

Taking all these consequences into consideration we are paying a big price for slightly cheaper clothing and it is symptomatic of a deeper malaise. Through drift, inconsistency, procrastination, and inertia the government is slowly but surely eroding Canada's economic base. There is no challenge to national purpose, and fundamental issues are being treated with bandaids. There can only be one result, Mr. Speaker, national mediocrity. Let us turn away from that road. Let us begin by setting the textile industry in order and let that be the first step toward ensuring the continued growth and development of a strong, efficient, and productive secondary manufacturing sector of which Canadians can be proud.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and to deal with two specific points. First of all, I should like to point out the government's positive record of assistance to the textile industry since May 1970 and secondly, to deal with the present conditions in an important Drummondville textile plant, the Celanese Canada Limited.

With regard to the history of the textile industry in Canada, allow me to briefly recall the following facts: we know that early in 1970, a study of the textile and clothing industry was carried out by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This study was conducted with the co-operation of other departments concerned after consultation with officials in the industry, the unions and the provincial governments directly involved. The study was undertaken for three main reasons: first, important basic changes in technology, production and demand have created new competitive conditions in those industries in Canada as well as abroad.

Second, the policy designed to settle the problem created by cheap imports had become most difficult to administer, causing undue delays and concerns detrimental to both producers and workers. Third, textile plants, unions and provinces had expressed strong reservations regarding the existing policy in terms of employment and future investments in the industry as well as their impact on regional expansion.

In its review of the situation, the government has taken into consideration the possible contribution of those industries to the whole economy, the need for employment stability, the regional and local implications, the consumer interests, the importance of our export trade and of our international responsibilities. The resulting policy has been set out following the review of the textile and clothing industries. The textile policy has been formally announced by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, namely the previous representative of my constituency of Drummond, on May 14, 1970. This policy had four main items. First, gradual recovery of the industry towards viable production sectors capable of sustaining ever stronger competition at the international level; second, improvement of legal mechanisms and administrative procedures to deal effectively with the problems of prejudices suffered by Canadian producers because of imports; third, transitional assistance to corporations and workers; fourth, assistance in the areas of technology and marketing.

In the course of the implementation of this policy, the following steps have been taken by the government: The establishment of the Textile and Clothing Board was announced on November 5, 1970 and its three members were appointed on the same date. As everyone knows, the board must make an investigation at the minister's request and it can launch an investigation at the industry's request or on its own. Since its inception, the Textile Board has conducted inquiries on 18 textile and clothing products, for a grand total of 45 inquiries, studies or reviews of these products. Further, it is now looking into two products that were not reviewed previously and reexamining three products that have already been the subject of an inquiry.

Textile Industry

● (1710)

At the present time, eight low cost countries or countries that have nationalized trade are subject to various export restrictions involving 12 products, over and above total restrictions on imports of shirts for men and boys. Other actions have also been taken. A number of programs are being used to help the textile and clothing industries restructure their operations, improve their efficiency and expand their markets. First, from the financial assistance view point, we have the General Adjustment Assistance Program which has been amended to include measures particularly tailored to textile and clothing manufacturers who are now applying their restructuration plan.

Since 1970 44 companies received grants under this program for a total amount of $22 million guaranteed by the government. In addition, 11 companies received grants totalling $45,000 during the same period. Under the Productivity Enhancement Program—PEP—grants covering up to half the cost of feasibility studies were made available to 97 companies for a total amount of $762,000.

Research and development were encouraged: 25 to 30 businesses received assistance every year under the Industrial and Research Development Incentive Act—the IRDIA program. The marketing of products or methods resulting from research work since 1970 brought about expenditures of $2.7 million under PAIT, the Program for Advancement of Industrial Technology.

A second program to promote exports: Canadian companies in the export business received considerable support and produced good results. A third program—manpower training and rehabilitation—and a fourth program—assistance to fashion design—under which millions of dollars were spent by the federal government to help one way or another the textile and clothing industry in Canada. There is also the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. We know that under the Regional Development Incentives Act assented to on July 9, 1969 to promote the creation of productive jobs in designated areas in Canada needing special measures to promote economic development and social progress, textile companies received between 1970 and 1975 grants offers of over $29 million.

Recently, the Senate had a special inquiry, and the minister appeared before the Senate committee. The following points were made: first, that the recent representations made by the industry to the Senate committee as well as to the minister personally contain elements of truth but are not accurate on the whole. It was also determined that when the industry singled out imports from low-cost countries statistics show, as the minister pointed out earlier, that the great majority of imports come from developed countries, particularly the United States. Third, it was shown that imports from low-cost countries are an important factor in the problem as a whole. It was also shown that industry hires a large number of people difficult to retrain. Finally, it was pointed out before that committee that industry showed vision, imagination and that its efforts to rationalize and modernize structures were successful. I am happy with the suggestions of the minister who says that in his opinion the textile industry is essential, that it is an important industrial sector, that he is aware of the legitimate desire of the industry for stability and that he has no thought whatsoever of sacrificing the textile industry to increase Canadian imports from developing countries.

There was some reference to an ad hoc advisory committee of clothing and textile industries which was recently established. The minister spoke in detail of the mandate of that committee, and I am glad to find out that following my intervention in the House on May 19 last, asking for the representation of employees from the textile sector on this important committee responsible for reviewing the whole textile policy in Canada, this request has been agreed to and the minister confirmed today that spokesmen for textile employees are now members of that important committee so as to express the constructive views of the employees from that important sector of industry who want to protect and keep their jobs.

This leads me to talk about the specific problem now prevailing at Drummondville, in the riding of Drummond which I represent, in the plant of Celanese Canada Limited. The dispute in this plant is no longer a private confrontation between management and labour. More than 1,600 textile workers having been without their regular jobs for several weeks, almost two months now, it is clear that the situation has become dramatic for them, their families and the whole community.

As soon as I was elected member of parliament for Drummond nearly two years ago, I asked local employers to make a special effort to improve employment conditions and wages in a region where wages were among the lowest in Canada. Most businesses in the area reacted well and made an effort, and the situation is now improving. I warmly contratulate all those employers and I thank them for their cooperation.

As concerns the Celanese plant, which is the largest employer in Drummondville, I must say that I am disappointed to see that it does not seem to want to react favourably to my appeal. In view of the constant and increased efforts on the part of the federal government to help the textile industry, as I have just shown, it would be normal that Celanese Canada of Drummondville demonstrate a greater social conscience. This long lockout by Celanese is an insult to the population.

I find it completely unacceptable and scandalous that a multinational company can so deny its responsibilities as good citizen and can betray so arrogantly not only its employees, which make up a high proportion of the local manpower, but also the rest of the population in an area which is desperately trying to increase its low economic growth rate. In view of its importance and of the evolution of Drummondville, this plant should cooperate, offer itself as an example, and consequently, not abuse a right conferred by the Quebec Labour Code. In the present case, this radical position is clearly irrespectful of the rights and qualities of the textile employees who have certainly not been among the best paid workers in the past and who are now nearly defenceless and resourceless.

It is more than time for Celanese to show, as an important citizen of Drummondville, a true social conscience, like it should in a society which wants to be just and needs to renew itself. It is because I am concerned for my constituents' economic and social welfare which is now in danger that I make an urgent appeal to those responsible: 1—for this lockout to stop immediately; 2—for negotiations to take place in good faith and without delay; 3—not Celanese employees to be granted the excellent working conditions that they deserve and that the employer can give them.

I finally succeeded in reaching the general manager of this company last Thursday, June 10, and I asked him to put an end immediately to this lock-out. He told me that he could not then promise me that he would do so in the near future, but that he would talk about it to the other managers and his superiors. Today, June 16, the lockout is still on and nearly 1,600 employees are deprived of their means of subsistence. Incidentally, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all those, and there are many of them, who make peaceful demonstrations in good faith or who help Celanese employees in other ways. I urge all the population to support morally the employees who are victim of the lockout at Celanese, and I hope that landlords, businessmen and creditors will be patient with those people who are now without any means of support. Those humanitarian gestures can only add to the pride and credit of my fellow citizens.

If, today, for the love of strategy, the big employers want to use lockouts systematically in their fight against big unions, for God's sake let them avoid doing so on the back of the vulnerable textile sector, on the backs of 1,600 workers at Drummondville, and above all, let them choose another battlefield than a city like Drummondville where efforts are being made to improve the low rate of economic growth. My stand, in view of the circumstances, is definitely not incompatible with the spirit of the anti-inflation act and its regulations, quite the contrary.

The Celanese Company at Drummondville which employs, as we know, over 500 employees, benefits from the exception provided by the act. The workers' contract was signed before January 1, 1974. In addition, the contract expired some time in April 1975, that is before the anti-inflation act became effective on October 14, 1975. Consequently, in view of the act and resulting regulations, and especially regulation No. 44, the Celanese workers are considered exceptions and are not limited to 12 per cent salary increases; so they can negotiate without any ceiling; when an agreement is reached with the employer for an increase of 18 per cent, 25 per cent or more this agreement must be submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board for approval. The board can endorse the agreement as submitted or change it; if it does change it there is an opportunity to appeal since an amendment was made recently to the Anti-Inflation Act.

As we can see, a special consideration criterion applies to labour groups who signed their last contract before January 1, 1974 if that contract expired before October 14, 1975 and a new contract was not signed before October 14, 1975. In other words those contracts were signed before the fast escalation of the cost of living that started in 1974. So protection is given to those employee groups like those of Celanese in Drummondville.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) who restated today the importance of the textile sector of the industry and who declared to be ever more prepared to support that industry. I thank him for heeding my intervention in the House of Commons on May 19, 1976 and allowing the spokesmen for textile workers to participate in the important ad hoc committee responsible for reviewing the whole textile policy in Canada and presenting a report before June 30.

I for one intend to continue to fight fiercely for the improvement of the textile and clothing industry situation in Canada and I do not intend to stop making interventions in the House of Commons as I have been doing in the last two years and particularly on November 18, 1974, November 28, 1974 and May 19, 1976. I wish to continue interventions like those I made one month ago before the regional economic expansion committee to get better wages for textile employees through subsidies from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the textile and clothing industry in Canada. I intend to have more meetings like those I had last year with representatives of all textile industries in Canada, here in Ottawa, and the many other meetings I have had in the two last years with textile employee representatives here in Ottawa or elsewhere in my riding. Lastly, I wish that Celanese Canada Limited revise immediately its radical strategy in Drummondville, as I asked earlier, in the interest of the people I have the honour to represent.

● (1720)

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to make some remarks on a subject which is so important and, having heard a few speeches, I am deeply convinced that some hon. members are really interested in this problem. I would like to congratulate in particular all my colleagues who agreed to take this day to discuss this subject, because we recognize the importance of this industry. I extend special words of praise to my colleague the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) who made some very interesting remarks.

At the same time I listened to the minister who himself attempted to prove that it is not a matter of ill will, but it would seem that answers and solutions are not forthcoming today. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to the absence of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who told me he would have been really pleased to take part in this debate but he is out of the country with a parliamentary committee. He is particularly concerned for the workers of his riding.

Other members have dealt with the hardships faced by the textile workers in their respective regions. Well, I wish as well to refer to those of my own region, and to a large city of my riding in particular, the city of Joliette. As everywhere else, claims have been made there both by the management and the unions, and for several years, even though it has been emphasized that since 1970 the government has made special efforts for the recovery of this area for the benefit of this class of workers. It seems that the effects are not as yet being felt and consequently, in Canada as everywhere else, there has been a drastic cut in two industries of my riding: their staff have been reduced from 210 to 160 and from 75 to 20 respectively.

Mr. Speaker, imports seem to be one of the major issues. I could not miss this opportunity to make a few comments to urge the government to take more efficient action than was taken in recent years.

I know, Mr. Speaker, there are some commercial trade agreements. We all know that but we wonder, and rightly so, whether the government should not attempt to secure Canadian production. In my view, it is important to secure at least this minimum requirement which the people concerned and even the unions have discussed with the responsible minister and the board. They have met the representatives of the political parties and the unions expect a minimum of production in the textile industry and its by-products.

I suggest that it is important to remind the government that it is vital to maintain a minimum of our Canadian production, made by Canadians and for Canadians. It would be dangerous and we know it too well, as the same thing is happening in other areas, to see that the Canadian people are under the obligation to buy foreign products. We have seen the aftermath of such a situation in the oil industry, and we will see it in other areas. Because of the lack of a well-defined policy, we will have to rely on foreign products and God knows what price we will have to pay then.

Therefore, even if it raises some difficulties, I believe it is important for the government to commit itself to support the industry, and the textile industry in particular, to encourage it, to attempt to find proper remedies and to have the courage to impose the necessary controls unless we are prepared to see it disappear on a national scale. In brief, Mr. Speaker, this must be our goal.

We on this side of the House could accuse the government and limit our debate to these accusations but we know that since 1970 the government has shown an interest in this matter. But one thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, even if the government does its best, what is happening? If some hon. members claim that the government did find solutions we still are in a difficult position and the textile industry workers are far from being satisfied: employees, management, members of the unions and union leaders alike. What is clear is that the actions of the government and the investigation committees have unfortunately taken much too long in providing us with the analyses and giving us the appropriate answers.

It is clear that the situation is deteriorating and that things are getting tough not only in the textile industry but in many other areas. So, the question we should ask ourselves is what sort of economic performance can the government offer the country? That is the whole question. Recently, Mr. Speaker, we had the visit of thousands of milk producers. We had hundreds and hundreds of workers from all walks of life over the last few years. Today, we are dealing with one topic: textile. The government has been saying for a decade that it will improve this area and find solutions. It set up commissions yet no one is satisfied. I personally believe that the government has lacked the courage to implement the controls which are necessary to save a Canadian industry. They may boast about and point at the massive investments poured by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion into several industries, I still think that we had better first preserve those which exist already. And when an important class of workers is allowed to be dismissed, are we sure we are in a position to recycle them for other fields? Those are questions that we must ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker?

[Mr. La Salle.]

Therefore, from the discussions we are having today, it is obvious that we do not have the power to solve the problem, but we believe that as representatives of our constituents and considering that those 250,000 workers are deeply concerned as are the owners who invested heavily, it is our duty to press the government into taking more effective measures. We hope that we will be able today to point out specifically those difficulties and entice the government to consider them more carefully and to find solutions, which is their reponsibility. The government has the power to administer this country and to find the required solutions.

In view of the lack of satisfactory measures, are we allowed to think that the government has run out of possibilities to create and find the initiatives that are required? We ask ourselves certain questions, precisely about that absence of reasonable and necessary solutions.

Mr. Speaker, I know that some of my colleagues wish to take the floor after me and I will limit myself to these comments, and refrain from repeating certain statistics already put on record by other speakers. But I dare hope that we can straighten out one point in particular, whenever mention is made of a Canadian trade balance showing a deficit of some $875 million in the field of textile alone. This shows, I believe, a special lack of interest for that industry.

Under the circumstances, and taking in account those problems and the representations made by the representatives and the union workers particularly involved, I would believe that the government will listen more carefully still; and I would like also to point out that recently unions were able to have a discussion with the minister and the Commission. The member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) has pointed out earlier that it was most interesting to note that the minister has seen the need to invite union representatives in order to discuss such important and alarming issues.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this day will have well served the interests of this class of workers and I hope that the government will respond more efficiently than he did today. While recognizing the good will of the minister, I believe that the desire and the efforts of the government, if there were any, were clearly inadequate. Should the workers and industry owners be asked that question?

Let me go back to this objective, which I feel is essential, that is to save our Canadian industry and to maintain a domestic production for Canadians; the government in that area will have to do something more significant and more effective than whatever he has done up to now.

● (1730)

[English]

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I, with others in the House, am indebted to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) for the opportunity to debate this important subject. I am indebted to all who participated in the debate not only for their contributions but also for observing the time limit on speeches. I am particularly indebted to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who preceded me for limiting his remarks. I shall try to finish before six o'clock, to allow one more government spokesman the opportunity to speak. I understand that an hon. member opposite wishes to make a few remarks.

I, and I suppose most of my colleagues in the House, always enjoy hearing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) speak; this afternoon was no exception. But I know that others share my view when I say that this afternoon the minister's remarks lacked conviction. I was disappointed by his speech, disappointed because the minister used as an excuse the fact he was getting conflicting views from within the industry. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) likes to use a similar phrase, which is without validity.

I suggest that if the minister is getting conflicting views from within the industry the fault lies solely with our selective import policy. Inevitably, if the government is to impose selective tariffs and controls, it will obtain conflicting views from within the industry. Each manufacturer in the industry, whether he manufacturers yarn, fibre or finished goods, will want to look after himself and his employees. Therefore if the government pursues a policy involving selective controls or tariffs, it should not be surprised when it receives conflicting views from the industry.

I agree that originally the present policy was initiated with the blessing of hon. members in all parts of the House. But the policy has not worked.

I was also disappointed by the way the minister used statistics, supplied presumably by his department; I was disappointed to hear him talk about the textile industry in terms of dollars, when for generations the output of the industry has not been measured in dollars but in pounds of yarn, or the equivalent. Therefore it did the minister no credit when quoting statistics to speak in terms of dollars and cents. Perhaps his departmental officials are at fault; I do not care. That industry's production has always been measured in pounds, and the measurement has not changed. Let us speak properly in this debate and talk in terms of pounds.

There is no question in the minister's mind about the serious condition of the textile industry. He and I may disagree about the degree of seriousness. Be that as it may, we on my side of the House think this is a matter of extreme urgency and attach great importance to any proposals for solving the difficulties of the industry.

Hon. members have spoken of volumes of production and the percentage of the domestic market served by domestic producers. I do not think there was much discrepancy between the figures the minister used and those used by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). I have always used the same statistics to which the minister referred, statistics which were tabled in the standing committee. They show that we have gone from the position where we supplied 64 per cent of our domestic market in 1964 to a position of supplying but 46 per cent in 1975. That drop in itself is alarming. But it is all the more alarming when we compare figures for this country with those pertaining to our trading partners. I believe that the United States industry supplies 88 per cent of its domestic market, and in Common Market countries, indigenous industries supply about 80 per cent of those markets. The statistics concerning pounds of production are enough to alarm anyone. They show how serious the situation has become; it warrants immediate consideration.

I do not quarrel about the establishment of the ad hoc committee but agree with the minister: the mere establishment of a committee will not lead, inevitably, to the solution of the serious difficulty. I appreciate the minister's frankness in saying that while he respects the committee and looks forward to a report he does not think it will solve the problem. Hopefully the committee will make the extent of the problem clearer. No industry in Canada has been subjected to more surveys, questionnaires, investigations, and reports than the poor textile industry. I would hate, as a manufacturer of textiles, to face tomorrow morning yet another inquiry into by business. I think the industry is sick and tired of this procedure. I think the same can be said for that part of the industry based in Quebec. I do not think conditions in the textile industry in Quebec are much different.

I know the difficulties large textile manufacturers face in creating the basis of the economic life of their communities. Most of the members of the association in my part of Ontario, myself included, are manufacturers who employ, generally, fewer than 100 people. Usually our manufacturers are located in small, rural-oriented communities and provide a small but firm but economic base for those communities. I wish to express my concern on behalf of those people.

● (1740)

In terms of employment in the whole industry, I do not think the statistics need too much elaboration. Forty-six per cent of the domestic market employs roughly 200,000 people, according to statistics I have received. That means for each 1 per cent of the market we have we provide roughly 4,350 Canadians with jobs. Seventy-five per cent of the market would result in an increase of roughly 125,000 positions within that industry. At the Senate committee it was clear that the minister felt that Canada could not expect to supply 75 per cent of its domestic requirements. He may be right, but I am not prepared to agree to that point.

When one talks about employment in the textile industry it is often discouraging when one hears the accusation that this is a low paying industry. I have to reject that. It may have been historically true. I do not know. My first job as a 12-year old student was in a textile plant. I think I got 33 cents an hour, which was pretty good pay in those days.

In terms of current industry I notice that we pay substantially higher than, for example, the United States. In terms of productivity, it is extremely serious in terms of economic conditions today when an industry is failing to produce to its capacity, or reasonably approaching its capacity. The lack of reaching capacity is as equally inflationary as increased prices and wages. In other words, if we are losing the potential to contribute to our Gross National Product, that is equally as inflationary as substantial pay increases or price hikes. Therefore in terms of an entire industry, if Canadian textiles are producing at roughly 60 or 70 per cent of existing plant capacity, we are contributing that loss of potential to the inflationary pressures besetting our economy.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi mentioned the potential loss of this entire industry. The minister says that is simply not true. I do not doubt his word. However, certainly many of those in the industry perceive this to be government policy. That is terribly serious, particularly for a small businessman. If he perceives that government policy is such as to permit the eventual elimination of the industry, whether his perception is right or wrong, there is no possible way that he is going to make capital investment in his company either to create more jobs to maintain a satisfactory level of efficiency or to increase his production. Therefore I say to the minister that while that may not be the policy, and while he was very clear on that, that is the perception among many in the industry. The fact that that perception exists is in itself a very serious matter.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi talked about what would happen if we lost an industry and were at the mercy of exporting countries. I have been through that with regard to baler twine, which was also mentioned. It is a simple fact of life.

Those who have spoken have touched briefly on the relations between the department and the industry. Again, it may be a fact or it may be a perception—to me, it makes absolutely no difference—those in the textile industry perceive their relations with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as confrontation. Whether that perception is correct or incorrect, it matters not. If that is a broadly accepted fact by those in the industry, it is an extremely serious matter. Those in the industry believe they are not being consulted. They believe they are not being consulted before trade negotiations take place. If that is a fact, and frankly I believe that it is, the minister has a very serious problem within his department. I wish him well in the solution of that problem. I do not want him in any way to minimize how strongly small businessmen, at least those I know, feel that they are in a continual confrontation program with the department. That is not the minister's nature and I urge him to direct his mind to that particular problem which exists among people in the textile industry.

We have been talking about tariffs today. I suggest they are not the answer. In my opinion, many of them have been simple window dressing. The eventual answer has to be quotas. They have to be global. It has to be comprehensive. I do not know what other way to approach the matter.

The minister is considering that. I look forward to his remarks following the report of the ad hoc committee at the end of this month. The minister knows the problems. They are set out in the preamble to the terms of reference of the ad hoc committee. The first deals with the import situation. I know that we import from both developing countries and the United States. I know the share the United States has in the market. I know and accept as a fact that the minister has warned the developing countries they cannot continue indefinitely at this level. I acknowledge, as the minister said, that we have international obligations and a fine line to walk.

What impressed me about the testimony in the Senate committee, and I wish he had said it today, is that we should be thinking more in terms of exporting expertise to these developing countries. There are trade commissioners who have retired, and I believe that is one example the minister gave before the Senate committee. We should have been doing this for years in agriculture. Instead we played the role of Lady Bountiful and handed out a few million here and a few million there, without making any effort to make the developing countries self sufficient. I agree that instead of increasing our import levels from them, it is equally important to send them that expertise, whether it be in agriculture, industry, urban affairs, or fighting pollution. I encourage the minister to develop that particular line of thought and that particular policy.

With respect to our self sufficiency and reliance on other countries, the department is prepared to accept that Canada may not be self sufficient, if I read the evidence correctly in the transcript of the Senate hearings. I do not know why it accepts that. I become terribly discouraged when I see how counterproductive the DREE program in relation to the textile industry have become—and the minister is very familiar with this—in the Maritimes. People from Ontario and Quebec went into the Maritimes when those businesses failed and picked up machinery and inventories at bargain prices. I know how discouraging that must have been. I make this as a personal observation.

I urge the minister to consider developing some form of short-term freeze, and I mean by that three, four or five years, on the level of imports. He set the groundwork by warning the developing countries about this in order to give the industry a gradual opportunity to increase to a reasonable level its share of the domestic market. I think the minister can do that without betraying our international obligations and without an adverse effect on the consumer. I would give the industry an opportunity, which is so important to it, to plan its capital investment for the future.

I realize that may be a rather dramatic action. It may not be as easy as a stroke of the pen saying we are freezing imports at current levels. However, I urge the minister to consider that one short term approach to this problem. It would certainly give the industry some confidence in the sincerity of the government in so far as its problems are concerned.

The second item in the preamble to the terms of reference of the ad hoc committee is better administration of those import control elements that we now have. I suggest the mechanics are there. I believe the Textile Institute has said frankly to the minister, "Yes, you have the mechanics; We are satisfied with what you have; It is just the way you are implementing the system." The minister has acknowledged that the system is too slow.

● (1750)

The other day I got a list of references made this year to the Textile and Clothing Board. The date of the brief regarding acrylic yarn was January 6, the report was made on February 11, and the public announcement on April 14. A brief in connection with sweaters was submitted on January 19. No report has been issued. Nylon and polyester fabrics, March 15, no report; worsted fabrics, April 5, no report; knit fabrics, May 7, no report; polyester yarn and hosiery, updating of reports earlier released—I do not know the date of the brief.

Another aspect of the subject is this: when some form of control is imposed, what measures do we take to enforce it?

I suggest to the minister that while we have the necessary mechanism at our disposal we do nothing to enforce it. On the other hand, when the authorities in our neighbour to the south hear of a ship halfway between Taiwan and the U.S. carrying a cargo the discharge of which would breach the control measures established by the United States, that ship is directed not to unload those goods at a U.S. port. The whole world knows that this is U.S. policy, and that is why it is so effective.

The third item in the preamble has to do with the present "selective" approach to special measures of protection against low-cost imports and the suggestion that it is ineffective. I mentioned this earlier. I cannot agree that the prohibition of the entry of fabrics solves anything when one may import the yarn on the one hand and the finished product on the other. My view is that, unhappily, the present approach has not worked. It is obviously not the approach taken by the United States or by the Common Market. Unfortunately, although I agree it received the approval of all concerned, it has not proved to be effective enough.

I wish the committee well in its deliberations. I look forward to its report at the end of the month. In conclusion I think I can do no better than quote the minister, if he will forgive my bad manners. This is what he said in another committee:

> There is no view anywhere in the government that the textile industry is dispensable. It is an important industrial segment in Canada and it is our intention to do whatever is possible to give it a degree of viability.

In that regard I completely support the minister's position. But I have not seen him put his money where his mouth is to this date.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have listened closely to the suggestions made by opposition members, and I have taken some notes. I was somewhat amazed to see the phrasing of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). As the minister stated at the beginning of his speech, when the phrasing and the remarks by the hon. member from Brome-Missisquoi are considered, and this is literal, he supported the federal textile and clothing policy.

Overall, I believe he mentioned twice he was satisfied with the current textile and clothing policy. However, some other members referred to the possibility of reviewing the level of imports, and some referred to the need for certain protectionist measures. In my view, the textile situation is not as gloomy as certain would have it or would imply, as the minister indicated. I suggest the goals are quite clear and the minister stated he was about the textile industry, a vital one in Canada. This was an important segment of manufacturing industry, and he was aware of that industry's hope for stable employment. I think that these points are made up of basic points excessively important for the employers and especially the employees of the textile industries. One of these is that we should not sacrifice the textile industry to increase our imports from developing countries. Again, I think this is an excessively important point. Mr. Speaker, everybody makes reference to figures or statistics and I could follow along on this line because everybody here says that everything depends on the basis chosen for the comparisons, whether they are made on a money, pound or shipping basis. By the way, from 1970 to 1975, our clothing exports increased by 44 per cent. During the same period, our textile exports increased by 34 per cent.

So everything depends on the figures and the comparisons which we want to make. There is one point which has not been raised today—and I think it should be—it is that we should promote some kind of enthusiasm within the consumers. We should develop some kind of advertising campaign to incite the consumers to buy made-in-Canada products. I think that this point is extremely important even if we ask that protectionist measures be taken and, here again, all kinds of solutions may be proposed but I think it is necessary to create a certain feeling in Canada so that in the stores the Canadian consumer may buy and demand products made in Canada. I think this is extremely important and if each one of us behaves according to his own conscience, we could see how we could bring our own excessively imprtant solution if we really believe in this industry.

I made my own experience, I do not know much about the textile industry but, considering my new responsibilities, each weekend I try to go either to a shopping centre or to a department store to see how many products made in Canada I can find; I realize that there are many but that, here again, Canadians themselves are not aware of the purchasing potential they represent to promote the textile and clothing industries in Canada.

[English]

An increased willingness to buy Canadian would be one element in the solution of that problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is the last contribution to this debate which seemed to me very useful. The minister detailed all the various policies being applied and I think that a report prepared by an ad hoc committee with representatives from the three provinces, the manufacturing industry and department officials will soon be tabled. The minister indicated also that the unions will take part in that committee which will review the whole textile and clothing policy and which is expected to produce a report on that question before June 30.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings under the motion have expired.

It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Thursday at 11 a.m., pursuant to special order of Monday, June 7.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 17, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I intend my remarks to be brief, probably only to reiterate the arguments that I have made in the past as a retentionist. However, whether my view prevails or that of certain other people in this chamber who are in favour of abolition does not concern me as much as the fact that we achieve a decision. I hope we will do that next Tuesday morning so that the country will know where this House of Commons stands with regard to the question of capital punishment. I would certainly resist any attempt to put off a decision for longer than that. In other words, our debate has perhaps lasted a little bit too long. It has been interspersed with so many other things that the country must wonder about the procedure of this House of Commons. I am not going to get into that.

I am not going to question the sincerity of those who believe in views directly opposite to my own on this important matter. I might question the attitude of certain members, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with regard to the law for a number of years. I think people are entitled to do that. Even so, I resist that temptation and try to get myself to the main question: Are there circumstances under which one would be entitled to take away the life of another human being on this planet that we call earth? I think that such circumstances exist. I have not heard any argument that had made me really change my attitude, horrendous and barbarous as the act of taking another life may be.

A considerable amount of thought has been given to the question as to whether capital punishment in itself is a deterrent. Some years back I reached the conclusion that, in itself, it probably was not a deterrent. However, the former hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, in one of the few speeches in all of these debates that I recall, pointed out his own wartime experience and how the fear of imminent death had a great motivation for those who were undergoing the experience of war. I suspect the same fear would exist amongst the criminal element. When I read about the hostage incidents in prisons, I say to myself that if there were some method by which the people who would dare take other people's lives so lightly could be made accountable with their own, probably there would not be as many hostage incidents in prisons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: I thank hon. members for their approval of that particular point. I realize that in many cases we are dealing with psychotic people. Many acts of murder are psychotic acts rather than deliberate and planned ones, calculated long in advance. In other words, they are impetuous acts. Apart from that, I think there is a question in the mind of the public, at least, as to the effectiveness of the punishment to be imposed. Prison terms, I suppose, could be considered a deterrent with respect to anyone who went shoplifting. Yet the amount of shoplifting in our society is extensive. Prison terms could be considered a deterrent against drunken driving, but the fact is the extent of this crime remains substantially unchanged.

• (1110)

So it seems to me one has to look to a more basic motive for the consideration of the type of punishment which is suitable. I did think that the Fulton formula of a number of years ago, the division between capital and non-capital murder, should have been given a fair run. However, it was simply repealed by the use of the recommendation for clemency. Successive governments have used this means to repeal, in effect, the will of parliament. This is what bothers me. Even if I were an abolitionist and there were a law in force, I would want the law to be carried out rather than a practice which, in effect, negates that law. This is something which has bothered me over the years—the fact that successive governments—and I do not wish to point a finger at any of them in particular—have used this technique to flout what is the undoubted will of two out of three of the people in Canada. Most of the polls bear out that figure.

I have just been talking to my hon. friend from Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). His poll was taken more recently than mine, but his figures are substantially the same. There was a survey made by the reporters of the Chronicle-Herald and here again the results were substantially the same. It seems to me that in Nova Scotia two out of three people—the proportion is actually slightly higher—think there should be some form of capital punishment. We are not a province noted for way out abberations in our thinking and I would imagine we are in the mainstream with regard to this question whether human life should be taken or not.

Capital punishment is, of course, barbarous.

An hon. Member: It is murder.

Mr. McCleave: Somebody says it is murder, but it is not murder in the sense that the victim of the person who is faced with capital punishment has been murdered. I hear an interjection from one of my seatmates; the point was being made that murder, too, is barbarous Of course it is. And capital punishment is barbarous. I suppose the slaughter of an animal in an abattoir is barbarous. When I am asked whether I would be prepared to push the lock to send somebody to death, my answer is that I am not. Nor am I prepared to cut a cow's throat in an abattoir. And I am not prepared to perform an appendectomy on anyone in this chamber, either. Those are tasks which can be set aside for others. But there are times when things have to be done whether they appear barbaric or not. So I reject that line of thinking as an argument against capital punishment.

At this point, may I put in a word for Hammurabi? I have made the argument before. It has never appeared in the press, as far as I can see, but it is not something I have invented. The Hammurabic code prescribing an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was not the idea of a barbaric society; it was the idea of a civilized society. What Hammurabi and others who preached that code were telling us was this: if society has to extract some kind of punishment it should be an eye for an eye but not more than that; it should be a tooth for a tooth, but not a whole mouthful of teeth; it should be one person for one person, but not a thousand. It still seems to me it is a pretty good code to follow and the ordinary person in the street would be a lot happier if, after reading about the Calgary incident or the Moncton incident, or the Dartmouth incident or the sad things that have happened in Saskatchewan, he could have an idea that the people responsible, those who were so callously indifferent to the right of others to live that in some cases they even laughed when they shot down their victims, would be brought immediately to justice. If there were some minimum extraction of justice in such cases as these, he might believe there was, indeed, a strong basis of law in Canada.

Nobody is trying to be excessive, I think, in applying punishment. The trouble is we are not applying enough punishment where punishment could matter. So people, after a while, shrug their shoulders and say: Really, we are a country which does not believe in the law, or even have a law.

For these reasons I intend to continue voting as a retentionist and will resist any attempt to change the law in the way proposed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill C-84 goes far beyond the specific clauses and details before us. The emotions of millions of Canadians are stirred by the question of where Canada is headed—where the government is taking us. This bill to abolish capital punishment is just one further example, one of many in recent years, which places the stamp of permissiveness on Canadian society.

It is clear that no other issue in many years has moved so many Canadians to speak out, to write letters to their newspapers. Most members of this House can attest to the feelings of their constituents, for the issue of capital punishment has undoubtedly resulted in more mail to parliament than any other. The reason is that most Canadians believe this important ingredient in our system of law and order must be retained, and it is clear to them that the policy of the Trudeau government is to abolish it.

One of the most unfortunate aspects of the forthcoming division on Bill C-84 is that Canadians have been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that members are free to vote as they wish. There are some members on the government side who have exhibited a good deal of courage by speaking against the bill, and against the wishes of the Prime Minister, such as the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who, it appears, has had a good deal of practical experience in dealing with criminals. I fear, however, that her outspoken views on this and other questions will not please her party masters.

Why, then, Mr. Speaker, is this not a truly free vote? I can only surmise that if the pressures were lifted from members on the government side and strict control on the cabinet were removed, a number of Liberals would vote against the bill and in favour of capital punishment. It is becoming clear that a very small shift, perhaps even three or four members voting against the bill rather than for it, would defeat it; it is that close. This is a government bill. It is clearly not a free vote and those who say so are deceiving the Canadian people.

● (1120)

Canada, Mr. Speaker, is undoubtedly unique in the world when our record of violence and crime is compared to most other countries. We have escaped the ravages of war which the countries in Europe, Japan, Russia and so many others experience during the Second World War; and since then there have been wars in Korea, VietNam, the Middle East and Africa. We in Canada have been very fortunate. We have often looked at the cities of Detroit and Chicago and said crime like that could not happen here. Our cities seemed safe, and violence seen in so many places happened here only occasionally.

Well, Mr. Speaker, all that is changing. Canada will in the remaining years of this century, more than ever before, be faced with problems of lawlessness, violence and murder. Statistics clearly show the rapid growth of crime in our country. We will, I fear, be faced too with growing numbers of threats by terrorists and hijackers, all of the things which have become fact in other parts of the world. Terrorist activities are now taking place in such civilized countries as England, Holland, France and Germany. If anyone wonders about the government's concern for this happening here, let him look at the number and cost of our police and military forces being assembled for the summer Olympics in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the point that I am making is that if there was ever a time when we should be taking steps to strengthen our law enforcement and strengthen the support for our police forces, the time is now. We will in but a few weeks be going through one of the most critical security periods in many years in Montreal, and this is obviously clear to the government. It has drained virtually every able man from our armed forces bases everywhere. They could not cope if any serious problem arose anywhere else in our country at the same time. Just this week, support was requested to assist in a serious forest fire in Ontario. No help was possible; our armed forces were stretched to the maximum. In spite of the tensions of the Olympic weeks and as well the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Canada at that time, this government has chosen to attempt to abolish capital punishment in advance of that event, which can only be viewed as the height of stupidity.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) participated in this debate on Tuesday and made a melodramatic appeal to the House for the government's bill to abolish capital punishment. The Prime Minister said that he wanted to make it very clear that, if a majority of hon. members voted against abolition, some people were going to be hanged. He went on to say that 11 men are being held in Canadian prisons under sentence of death for the murder of policemen or prison officials.

I think it is fair to say that our Prime Minister has led a sheltered life. He seems to be a gentle man but a gentle man completely out of touch with the real world, and particularly with the ugly reality of today's criminal element. Our starry-eyed Prime Minister and Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) do not, I presume, recall the brutal and grisly murders of the Moncton policemen or the gunning down in cold blood of two members of the Calgary police force, Detective Boyd Davidson and Staff Sergeant Keith Harrison, so very recently. I will never forget, Mr. Speaker, the tragic picture that appeared in the Toronto Star of Pauline Maitland with her two very small and tearful children. Constable Leslie Maitland who was gunned down at point blank range and his killer is one of the 11.

The Solicitor General, the Prime Minister and his government are responsible for the present law. They argued for abolition of the death penalty but retention for the killers of policemen and prison guards. That bill was passed only 32 months ago. Since that time the federal cabinet has in every case failed to carry out that law. Canadians and members of this House were clearly deceived by the government as well; the example of law-breaking set by the government was surely a horrible example for all Canadians.

I believe, regardless of the arguments made to the contrary, that members of parliament must have regard for the opinions of their constituents on all matters. Surely, this is the essence of our whole system. I find it impossible to ignore the fact that eight out of 10 of the citizens of Calgary South who responded to the question last year favoured capital punishment. The percentage of all Canadians who favour capital punishment is just about the same. Recent mail received in my office indicates some 98 per cent favour capital punishment for premeditated murder. Why, then, is this government attempting to impose something that an overwhelming majority of Canadians do not want? I can only believe that it is just one further example of the arrogance of this government. A truly free vote or a secret vote, and only that, would prove the sincerity of the Prime Minister's claim.

Canadians everywhere are demanding stronger law enforcement. They have seen too much of the soft attitude which places the rights and concerns of the criminal ahead of those of law-abiding citizens. They have had enough of the loose administration of justice whereby criminals, rapists, murderers and child molesters are introduced to country club living and then let out on holidays, weekends and parole, when the safety of society seems to have been completely forgotten in our headlong rush to demonstrate our humanity for criminals, but with little concern shown for the victims of crime.

Canada has been a good place to live. Under this government we are changing that. We are not backing up our excellent police forces with rules and laws that enable them to carry out their responsibilities. Under this government the man who obeys the law and the man who works for his living is taking a back seat to the law-breaker, to those who will not work and to those who are indeed encouraged to live off the system. Added to this unfortunate ethic in our country are the government's unfortunate immigration practices.

Many arguments have been made in this debate and elsewhere that the death penalty is not a deterrent. This was the very thrust of the Prime Minister's remarks on Tuesday. I believe that common sense, which I think motivates most Canadians, will tell us that the death penalty is a deterrent. Canadians who write and speak on this issue believe that it is a deterrent. They speak on the basis of their own feelings and how they would face the threat of the death penalty. That is how I judge the deterrent value as well. There have been many examples quoted from the mouths of would-be murderers which indicate that they too have clearly planned their actions having regard to the penalty.

The government has attempted, Mr. Speaker, to "snow" the members of this House and the Canadian people by offering Bill C-83, the so-called peace and security legislation, hopefully to sneak through the abolition of capital punishment by arguing that appropriate and sufficient safeguards and deterrents exist in the package presented. The bill falls back on 25 years imprisonment; that is to be the replacement for the death penalty, and the cornerstone of the deterrence.

There are two problems with this approach. The first is that, should such sentences be carried out, they may well remove any chance of reform and rehabilitation. But, equally important, I do not believe the government will or even intends to stick with such a commitment. We may well see further legislation brought forward in the next two years to reduce substantially these terms. If there is any doubt about this possibility, I would ask why the minister has seen fit to change the present law now, when the legislation which he brought before the House and which was passed in 1973 does not expire until the end of 1977. The government urged members to support that bill at that time, when all along it had no intention whatsoever of obeying the law which provided for the death penalty for the killers of prison guards and policemen.

● (1130)

In 1974 there were 545 murders in Canada and in that same year six policemen were murdered. In the year 1962 to 1975, 53 policemen were murdered and, according to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), the murder rate since 1962 has exactly doubled from 1.2 murders per 100,000 of population to 2.4 murders per 100,000 of population for 1974. The Solicitor General attempts to explain this away by saying that all violent crimes have increased by just about the same amount. This is just what Canadians are concerned about, and if anyone thinks that patsy treatment for hardened criminals is going to deter them or protect society, he is wrong. It take force to deal with force and it takes brutal consequences to deal with brutal people.

As things stand now, an armed robber or hijacker is prone to murder because he knows he can only be given a prison sentence. He also knows, under our present system, through either parole, holidays, temporary leave, or even escape, his sojourn in custody may well be just a few years or even a few months. The risk of killing someone is truly worth it, especially if a key witness can be wiped out. We must make it clear to the potential murderer that he risks the chance of being executed for the crime. I believe that criminals value their lives as much as anyone else. Many have families and they enjoy living just as anyone else. Many would think twice before plotting murder if faced with the possibility of being hanged. The absence of capital punishment in Canada since 1961 has directly contributed to the violent crime statistics and the murder statistics cited by the Solicitor General.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on Tuesday that restricting the availability of guns, as proposed in Bill C-83, gives every reason to believe that such measures will effectively inhibit criminal activity, whereas he suggests capital punishment offers no such assurance. Most practical people who have studied the proposed gun control law believe it is a farce, that it will force costly and unnecessary restrictions on law-abiding citizens; it will be a restriction on freedom in Canada and it will do absolutely nothing to keep weapons from those who are bent on pursuing criminal activity.

There is something I believe is known to police and prison guards as well as those who work with prison inmates but which is not known or understood by the average Canadian or member of parliament. It is that the person or persons who plot premeditated murder, terrorist killings and other types of murder are not ordinary people; they cannot be treated in an ordinary way. Let us face facts. These human beings are brutal, savage and cruel people, and no ordinary rules are applicable when dealing with them.

In conclusion, I believe that capital punishment should be extended beyond the present limitations to include all those convicted of premeditated acts of murder. Persons who take the life of another while committing such crimes as child molestation, rape, air piracy, political assassination, treason and robbery, if convicted should also face the death penalty. After all levels of judicial appeal have been exhausted and no recommendation for mercy is forthcoming from the judicial process, the federal Cabinet should be prohibited from interfering with that sentence and subsequent punishment. Where a recommendation for mercy is forthcoming from the judicial process, the federal Cabinet should be permitted to commute the death sentence.

I believe, as do the large majority of Canadians, that the death penalty is a deterrent to murder, just as is any jail sentence or punishment of any kind. It is clearly a deterrent, but no amount of research will ever prove the degree. The people of this country want parliament to reaffirm that we are prepared to take a very strong stand on the vital question of law and order in Canada. I intend to vote against this bill and thus support the retention of capital punishment.

[Mr. Bawden.]

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have already made known my intention to vote against Bill C-84 on second reading. Statements made in this debate, and particularly the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House this week, make it necessary for me to clarify for my constituents who are interested, and possibly also for my colleagues, why I will be voting contrary to the expressed wishes of the Prime Minister.

Let me say first that there is no weakening of my party allegiance. If there had not been a decision to call a free vote I would have voted with the government. I do not today agree with the Prime Minister, but I would have been prepared to accept the majority opinion of my party, since my position is not a matter of conscience but of calm and very profoundly calculated reasoning.

Many speakers in this debate have made reference to the basis on which a member should cast his vote. Before I was elected to this House in 1972 I made a commitment to cast my vote on the issue of capital punishment according to the majority opinion of my constituents, if there were to be a free vote. I can tell my constituents that I would be reluctant to make such a commitment today, and since that might take a lengthy explanation I will leave that for discussion with my constituents.

A recent poll asked the question: If a member's opinion is not the same as the majority opinion of his constituents, should he vote according to his own opinion or according to that of his constituents? Of the more than 90 per cent who expressed an opinion, of the English-speaking residents, 28 per cent only said that he should vote according to his own opinion, and 72 per cent said according to that of his constituents. However, among French-language responses to the questionnaire 60 per cent said that he should vote according to his own opinion and 40 per cent according to that of his constituents. It was of great interest to me that this poll underlined another of the differences in attitude between the English and French-speaking constituents in my riding. My intention to vote against the bill is thus both a personal decision and a reflection also of the large majority opinion of my constituents.

In response to a questionnaire in my constituency, only 22 per cent voted for abolition, some 13 per cent voted for restricted use of capital punishment and an overwhelming 65 per cent voted for capital punishment for all first-degree murderers. However, my reasons may not be the same as the reasons of my constituents and it is, therefore, important that I outline the thinking that brought me to this decision.

Let me first get to the real issue and the reason I shall vote against abolition. It is certainly not because I want every murderer to hang, but it is a decision that some murderers must not be allowed to live.

The Prime Minister made four references to the consequences of our actions, and I quote:

—we will actually be deciding, when we vote on this bill . . . whether some human beings will live or die.

He also stated:

—if a majority of Honourable Members vote against abolition, some people are going to be hanged.

He said:

—the defeat of this bill would eventually place the hangman's noose around some person's neck.

And he said:

—those who vote against the bill . . . cannot escape their personal share of responsibility for the hangings which will take place if the bill is defeated.

● (1140)

The Prime Minister can be assured that we fully appreciate the seriousness of the decision we are taking. May I add on a personal note that this will not be the first time I have made a decision to participate in the killing of other persons. This applies just as equally to those who vote for abolition, for the passage of the bill. They must accept their responsibility for the consequence of their action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: The Prime Minister stated:

Any discussion of capital punishment must begin with the identification of its intended purpose, which is clearly the security of society, the protection of innocent people against the ultimate criminal violence . . .

It is clear that the protection of innocent people against assaults on their lives and liberty is one of the highest duties of the state.

However, it is at this point that my disagreement with the Prime Minister starts to become apparent. He says:

The question is whether state execution is an effective deterrent to murder . . . one's moral view of the justification of capital punishement is entirely—

I want to repeat here the word "entirely".

—determined by one's judgment of its deterrent effect . . . The crux of the question before us is whether execution is an effective and therefore justifiable weapon for the state to use in order to deter potential murderers.

Again, the second word I want to underline is "deter"—deter potential murderers.

Mr. Speaker, I received from the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) a detailed response to the recently expressed views of Professor Ernest van den Haag of New York University. This was an extensive response for which I thank the Solicitor General. As a result of his argument and the arguments I have listened to in the House I am not convinced that capital punishment is a deterrent. Accordingly, deterrence is not the basis for my decision. If there is a deterrent effect, so much the better. However, the arguments of the Solicitor General have certainly convinced me that there is more than a reasonable doubt of deterrent effect.

The Prime Minister goes on to say:

Our law, from its earliest beginnings, has always recognized the rights of an individual to kill another when there exist reasonable grounds for believing that killing an aggressor is necessary to the protection of one's own life or that of another.

That obviously applies in his view in the context to which the Prime Minister referred, but it applies also in police actions where a group of policemen are having a shoot-out with a bandit. It cannot be argued that every one of those police officers is using his weapon to protect his own life. In fact, it is a calm decision which is being made that this is a means to save the life of another innocent victim be it one of the police officers themselves or some other person who may be killed as a result of this particular shoot-out.

Again quoting from the Prime Minister's statement:

. . . there are those who say execution is justified because it prevents a murderer from ever again committing the same crime. It certainly does . . . But if you rely on that reasoning, . . .

And, Mr. Speaker, I am relying on that reasoning.

. . . you are killing a man, not because his death may deter others from following in his footsteps but because of what he might possibly do at some future time. To justify such a preventive execution there would have to be some reasonable grounds for believing that a convicted murderer, if released into society . . . would murder again.

Again I take issue with the Prime Minister for including in his remarks "if released into society". Whether or not he is released into society is irrelevant because after all surely a prison guard or a police officer can be considered an innocent victim.

I placed on the order paper a question which clearly indicates the direction of my thinking. I should like to read this question:

For each of the last ten years, how many persons who have previously been found guilty of murder or of manslaughter after having been charged with murder, are known to have participated in the killing of another person?

If I were rewording that question today I would change the last part to read: "are known to have participated in the killing or attempted killing of another person". My thinking obviously is along the lines that innocent persons are being killed because we have made the decision to allow murderers to live. The Prime Minister goes on to say:

We know of only four people who have been found guilty of murder by a Canadian court, and convicted of murder a second time.

I suggest this is playing with statistics. It may be true in the circumstances but it does not get to the basic point. How many innocent persons suffer today because of the decision to allow a person who has committed murder to live? Mr. Speaker, again I am quoting from the Prime Minister's remarks which I found to be excellent throughout except for the insertion of the few words to which I have referred previously in my remarks. He said:

My concern is for the society which adopts vengeance as an acceptable motive for its collective behaviour . . .

We will have chosen violence as a weapon against the violence we profess to abhor.

Who is so confident that he knows for sure that such an official endorsement of violence will not harden the society we were elected to improve, will not pervade gradually many different relationships in our society? Who is so confident that he knows for sure that acceptance of state violence will not lead to the greater social acceptance of lesser forms of violence among our people? Vengeance and violence damage and destroy those who adopt them, and lessen respect for the dignity and rights of others among those who condone them.

I agree wholeheartedly with the sentiments expressed in those remarks. If we are to logically follow through, then the first thing we should do would be to disarm our police forces. I can imagine the reaction of the police in this country if such a move were introduced. What I am suggesting simply, in my possibly somewhat ruthless fashion, is that personally I do not consider the lives of ten convicted murderers to be worth the life of one innocent person.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I said ten. In fact it does not matter to me how many. So far as I am concerned the lives of innocent persons that are taken by persons who have been convicted of murder should be just as much on the conscience of those who vote for abolition as, in their argument, are the lives of the murderers if we go ahead with capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, I say sincerely—and I have given an awful lot of thought to the decision I have made—that it is with sadness I realize that the society in which we live is not perfect and that sometimes brutal decisions have to be taken. I think I have made it clear that I do not believe that the deterrent effect is sufficient reason for voting against this bill. In that respect I appreciated the remarks of the Prime Minister. Nevertheless, I hope I made it very clear where I stand and the reasons that I, personally, with considerable sadness, will be voting on second reading against the passage of Bill C-84.

● (1150)

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak in opposition to the latest government attempt to abolish the death sentence. I find this topic a very difficult one with which to deal, as I know many members have. On the one hand, those who would have capital punishment abolished once and for all have come up with some fairly convincing data and arguments for that cause, while, on the other side of the coin, those who are in favour of retaining the ultimate punishment have also arrived at a convincing set of arguments based on a good deal of empirical evidence. In many cases, the two opposing viewpoints effectively cancel each other out. That is why we are in the midst of debate now. This is a subject that lends itself very well to polarity, and that is why the outcome never has and probably never will be totally conclusive.

After a great deal of introspection, I have taken a retentionist stand on this delicate issue. I asked myself questions such as: What if my son were accused of murder. Or, what would I, as a close friend or family member of a murder victim, want as justifiable punishment for the one who had committed the most degrading and unjustifiable crime of all? I am sure that these are the questions that we have all asked ourselves in preparation for this debate. Once having reached a conclusion in my own mind, based upon moral, ethical, religious and philosophical grounds, I asked my constituents for their views and opinions on this controversial issue.

It has been argued that members of parliament should disregard the views of their constituents on capital punishment and be governed entirely by their conscience. This is what the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) would have us do. That comment was made on the TV news on March 6, 1976, by the Solicitor General. I can only partially agree that members of parliament are simply representatives who are chosen to make decisions on the basis of their own common sense, knowledge and morals without consideration for the people they represent. In most cases, public sentiment demands that elected officials truly represent the feelings of the majority of citizens. Although hon. members must exercise caution and discretion when public sentiment runs high—as with this particular legislation—they must always keep the views of the citizens in mind. A member's constituents are, after all, the ones who elected him to office. Admittedly, it is a rather difficult position when one is called upon to provide both personal leadership and public representation, but it is ludicrous to suggest that the views of the electorate should be disregarded entirely.

A random survey of my riding of Churchill in northern Manitoba has fallen in line with my expectations as to how constituents feel about this subject. Give surveys of this nature whatever credence you like, but 87 per cent indicated they did not favour the total abolition of the death penalty. This is from local survey results found in the March 28, 1976 edition of "From Parliament Hill to Churchill". This is in keeping with the rough national average. The national average varies from 80 per cent to 90 per cent, depending on the source of information. How could any member of this House who espouses the belief in responsible government and true representation of the electorate of Canada not take into consideration figures which show that people are overwhelmingly in favour of retention. Highly charged emotional reaction, you say? Or, perhaps it is a case of "herd psychology". I say, hogwash! The people of this country are fed up with a government that is insensitive to their views and needs.

The government has not had the courage to enforce the laws of the land over the last eight years. The result has been that no one, including the prospective killer, has any reason to be deterred by fear of the ultimate penalty being carried out as prescribed by previous parliaments for taking the life of another person. The House of Commons passed legislation in 1967 with provisions that any person guilty of murdering police officers or prison guards shall be subject to the death penalty. Sentences have been imposed by the courts in good faith that the law would be upheld. But each decision has, without exception, been summarily commuted. I have to say that a mockery has been made of the law. I say this because in every case the prerogative of mercy—and I hold nothing against it by itself—has been invoked automatically. No potential killer is deterred when he knows only too well that there is little or no chance that the ultimate sanction will be levied upon him.

Not only do the majority of private citizens of Canada want the law in this area restored, but many policemen and prison guards have spoken out strongly in favour of retention of the death sentence for the cold-blooded, premeditated murder of those in their profession. Even the Canadian Law Reform Commission came out strongly against sentences of life imprisonment. These individuals and associations are speaking out, and for good reason. It concerns me when those in favour of abolition of the death penalty which is to be replaced by longer prison sentences use the words "inhumane", "vicious", "barbaric" and other epithets when describing the act of capital punishment. Do those who promote total abolition ever consider what it means to lock a human being in a cage for 25 years like some animal—a term spent in agony without a glimmer of hope? They would no doubt re-examine their rationale if they seriously thought of the cruelty involved in the lengthy incarceration of a prisoner. This, to me, is a far more cruel and torturous punishment for the ruthless mur-derer than that of quick death. Perhaps a quote from a great social critic of his time, George Bernard Shaw, is appropriate. I do not want to embarrass those to the left of me, but I could not let this relevant expert pass without some mention.

In his preface to "Major Barbara", Shaw, while speaking of the social injustice of his time, compared criminals to dogs. His often practised sardonic analogies may offend some of you. But he gets his point across through the use of this and other literary devices. In that passage, he says, in part, and I quote:

> We even take the chance of their dogs' first bite. But if a dog delights to bark and bite, it goes to the lethal chamber. That seems to me sensible. To allow the dog to expiate his bite by a period of torment, and then let him loose in a much more savage condition (for the chain makes a dog savage) to bite again and expiate again, having meanwhile spent a great deal of human life and happiness in the task of chaining, feeding, and tormenting him, seems to me idiotic and superstitious.

What he is stating, in effect, is that to incarcerate a prisoner is to torment him, and to send a tormented person back into the society is to invite further trouble brought about by that torment.

We are dealing here with human lives. I think it is a far more humane punishment for a murderer of the kind of which I am speaking to receive the death sentence than it is for him to be incarcerated for 25 years. The point I am trying to get across is that we have a situation where we have a choice between the lesser of two evils: long prison sentences or capital punishment.

● (1200)

No utopian method of deterrence has come into practice in the Canadian penal system. Similarly, there is no sure method of rehabilitation. Leading criminologists have proven, through studies based on empirical evidence, that there is little hope for the rehabilitation of those who have been imprisoned for lengthy periods of time. Until our society advances to the stage where these problems can be dealt with in an adequate manner, the only alternative, in my mind, is the death penalty for those who have committed cold-blooded, premeditated murder or for persons whose clinically proven volatile nature makes them dangerous second-time killers.

With our modern court system and the safeguards inherent in that system, we can be assured that no one would receive the ultimate sanction unless it was proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that the accused was, indeed, guilty. This is one of the major concerns of the abolitionist, and rightfully so. But as I have just explained, this would never happen. If I thought for one minute that there was any chance guilt could be disproved after the fact, I would not have taken the stand I have.

I am of the strong conviction that it is society's responsibility to see that the murderer of the worst kind—and I described that a bit earlier—is treated in a manner according to his crime. By the same token, it is the responsibility of society to see that the family and dependants of the victim be properly compensated financially in whatever way possible. There are those who argue that to do away with a murderer does not compensate the relatives and dependants of the victim. I do not see any logical argument there. A victim's loved ones are not compensated if the murderer is incarcerated, either.

I also feel strongly that the crime rate in Canada—and that includes cold-blooded and well planned murders—is such that it calls for action by this government. I was not surprised to hear the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) say that all offences, including violent crimes, have increased substantially over the past ten years. However, on May 5 I was shocked to hear two pro-abolitionist members of this House say that Canadians perceive more violence in society than actually exists. They invited controversy—and I feel that they have received a fair amount of it—when they said that news reports and violent television shows reflecting conditions around the world tend to make Canadians feel less safe than they really are. I think this is balderdash, and it is an easy way out. That is a very shabby argument. Why do they not tell that to the families of the Moncton policemen who were brutally murdered only a short time ago? Why do they not tell that story to the family of the policeman who was killed in a hostage incident in Calgary in March of this year, the second such murder in only a matter of months, or why not to the families of the children so brutally murdered only recently in Saskatchewan? Then I would like those two hon. members to come back to this House and tell all of us how violence in our society is just a figment of our imagination.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate, until this week. I have been involved in a number of capital punishment debates during the time I have been a member of this House. I have reached the conclusion that at this stage in time the country desires, and has the right to expect, hon. members of this House to support the retention of capital punishment. I do not come to that conclusion with any great feeling of exhilaration. If anything, I come to that conclusion with a feeling of great disappointment because, as a long term member of this House, I could have supported abolition. Indeed, I started down that road a few years ago because I felt that we were developing a form of penology in this nation which would allow us both to protect society and produce a more humanitarian approach to crime and punishment as a result of some of the things which were happening in our society.

Unfortunately, because of things which have happened in the last decade, Canadians, by a substantial majority, have indicated a very strong belief that we can only have law and order if the death penalty is retained. Surely, if this parliament is to reflect the mood of the nation—and if members of parliament are anything, they are the reflectors of the mood of this nation—it should be indicating to the people that parliament does reflect their point of view. It is germane to the national point of view, and it should believe, as the people believe, that we can only have law and order in this nation if we retain the death penalty.

I do not think that Canadians, any more than members of parliament who believe in retention, are barbaric individuals because they feel that the punishment should fit the crime. Indeed, I believe that Canadians, by and large, would have accepted a limited form of capital punishment if the government had lived up to its commitment to the public when the temporary reform of the criminal law was presented to parliament and murder was broken down into two classes—capital murder and non-capital murder—and when it related to extra protection for law enforcement officers and penitentiary employees. But the government duped parliament and got it to support a bill which the government implemented, in effect, as total abolition when neither parliament nor the people wanted that.

As a result of that, we have done great damage to the belief that abolition could some day be achieved. You do not fool people, and you do not make people respect the law if governments do not respect it themselves. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stood in the House this week and suggested to members of parliament who will vote for retention that, by voting for retention, they will have blood on their hands because men on death row at this moment will be hanged if parliament approves the death penalty. That was nothing short of ludicrous, because if the law as it now stands had been put into effect, there would not be anyone on death row at this time. They would have met the penalty that the courts of this land, in interpreting the law, said should be the penalty. Therefore, if those individuals on death row are awaiting the carrying out of the penalty imposed by the courts, it is not the fault of this parliament; it is the fault of this government—and it is nothing short of that.

● (1210)

It is nothing short of ludicrous for the Prime Minister to come here and try to blackmail members of parliament who are retentionists into voting for abolition because the government has placed certain individuals in the untenable position of not knowing whether they are going to live or die. The law says they should die and the government has said they can live—at least until parliament makes up its mind whether the death penalty should be continued.

As the previous speaker, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) stated, nothing worse can be done to an individual than to remove hope. It is better to remove a person's life than to remove all hope of returning to society after a crime has been committed. There are people in this nation who would suggest that a criminal should be incarcerated for the rest of his natural life rather than be punished by having his life taken from him. If there is one thing that would make it completely impossible for penal systems to operate, it is to put people in institutions, without hope. Without hope, there is no way that people can operate logically in the world of today.

Lack of hope destroys everything that is human about an individual. The only way we are going to make our prisons work successfully again is by giving to those who are in them the hope of being rehabilitated and returned to society. We cannot do that with the system that exists now. That is why so many Canadians are urging members of parliament to retain the death penalty. The system as it is has not worked for at least ten years. It has not worked because there has been no driving force that eliminates the problem that puts people in the institutions in the first place.

One of the things that inspired me as a new member of parliament when I came to this House 19 years ago, and the Diefenbaker government was formed, was the approach that the Hon. E. Davie Fulton took to criminology and criminal law in general. As minister of justice, he put in place a completely new concept of penology. He broke down the penal system into three phases. He realized that there were inmates in the institutions who were impossible to rehabilitate, and he believed there should be maximum security institutions for them. He believed that other inmates were there probably because of their environment, more than anything else, who could be rehabilitated.

Among the latter, he believed there were two classes, the young offender, the boy or girl who gets into trouble over and over again, who still needs guidance and direction in order to develop the discipline that is required to operate in society. So he suggested there should be two kinds of institutions for inmates who were capable of being rehabilitated: one, the young offenders' type of institution, and the other, a minimum security institution. The latter would be capable of handling older inmates who still had some hope of rehabilitation, but they would not be mixed with the younger inmates and perhaps teach them the kind of tricks that rehabilitation experts did not want them to learn. They knew that if they learned these tricks they would return to the institution.

Then there was a third institution, a minimum security institution that took the inmate almost back to society, but not quite. All the bars, guns and things that were associated with penal institutions in our mind were removed and inmates were allowed to operate in a daily routine that would get them back close to society. A parole system was established to assist them when they returned to society. Things were moving along in a very satisfactory manner when suddenly a group of individuals gained control of the penal operations of this nation. They came up with more kooky ideas about rehabilitation of inmates than could be imagined by anyone with any common sense. Unfortunately, many of those individuals are still in positions of influence within the Department of the Solicitor General and the Canadian Pententiary Service. The thing that disturbs me about these individuals who have all kinds of schemes about how to rehabilitate inmates is that they neglect the reason the individual is in the institution in the first place. Individuals go to penitentiaries because they cannot accept the disciplines of society. In one form or another they reject the disciplines that society demands and they break the law; in the worst form, they kill people, but they do a lot of other things as well.

When you get planners in the Canadian Penitentiary Service who want inmates in institutions to have no more discipline there than they had outside, you get a complete breakdown within the institution. We have seen it over and over again, Mr. Speaker. Ther has been riot after riot after riot, kidnapping of personnel, wanton destruction of institutions and complete failure of the rehabilitation system as it is in effect at this time. Those who are in, come out, go back in and it is a repeat performance.

When Mr. Fulton was minister of justice, the Canadian Penitentiary Service carried out an operation where discipline was the number one criterion. An inmate who went into an institution knew he was there because he had committed a crime against society. He was not there listening to apologists telling him it was not really his fault he had done something wrong, that it was society's fault and society was going to try to mend its ways so that he would be in a better position to blend into society in the future. The inmate was told that first of all he had to learn to discipline himself, and if he showed that he could, then the Canadian Penitentiary Service would try to assist him to secure the training that would enable him to find his place in society.

That system worked, and worked well. Then suddenly we got these kooks in the Canadian Penitentiary Services who talked about the therapeutic programs they would introduce that will delve into the minds of the inmates. They were going to develop a philosophy and a psychology which would eradicate forever the criminal mind of the individual. It eradicated it very well: as I said, we have had a complete breakdown of control! Inmates are allowed to roam around the institutions, wearing anything they want to wear and as little as they want to wear. They are allowed to let their hair and their beards grow and look as dirty and despicable as possible. Nobody says a word, because they do not want to hurt their feelings.

● (1220)

You cannot expect to create, in the minds of inmates of institutions, the fact that they are being punished for the crime thay have committed against society if you let them operate in that way. In addition, all too often drugs are as prevalent within the institutions as they are outside. There appears to be a complete breakdown of constructive programs because there is no discipline within the institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Unfortunately, those who are really getting the dirty end of the stick are the employees in our institutions. The Springhill institution, in my constituency, was originally constructed as a young offenders' penal institution during the period this party held office. There is now a mix of every age. They tell the guards—possibly I should not use the title "guard" because it is distasteful and might upset the prisoners—

Mr. Alkenbrack: They do not say "warden" any more.

Mr. Coates: No, they do not say "warden" any more. Those titles are very distasteful to those who believe in the therapeutic approach to penology. You must have the right title and the right sound to the words so that you do not offend the inmates. You must not hurt their feelings, because that would be wrong, even though they are in the institution because they did something quite serious, and probably did it a number of times. The guards at the Springhill institution were told that they should not wear uniforms, that they should look like every one else in the institution. Imagine what would happen to guards without uniforms if a riot were to take place within that institution. How would you distinguish between the inmates and the guards? There would be no way. That is the degree of lunacy of some of the programs put forward by the so-called experts in penology.

The reason I talk about this is that I do not think you can separate a rehabilitation program from the death penalty. It is all part of the same package. If we can get back to sanity and produce realistic rehabilitation programs in our penal institutions, we will get farther down the road with the public as far as capital punishment is concerned.

There is little value in a government endeavouring to impose upon the public a point of view that the public does not accept. Surely, this government should know, from every semblance of evidence that is available in our nation at this time, that the public does not want the abolition of capital punishment. If the government could put in place a rehabilitation program that was workable, the public would accept abolition of the death penalty. However, until we reach that point we cannot expect the public to accept the government's view on abolition which is completely out of step with the point of view of the public. By pushing us farther down the road of abolition before the public is ready to accept it, all the government is doing is making parliament that much more of a non-essential item in the eyes of the public. If parliament does not reflect what the public thinks, then parliament is redundant.

If this House supports the abolition of capital punishment, it will be just one more nail in the coffin of this institution as far as public acceptance is concerned. If members of parliament feel that the public gets upset when we are asking for an increase in indemnity, there would be no better reason for the public taking that point of view than parliament completely ignoring the wishes of those who pay our salaries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Surely those who pay the bill should have some say about what is done for them with the money that they pay. If this parliament ignores the opinion of more than 70 per cent of the public, it is just asking for more difficulty in the future in so far as the people of this nation are concerned.

I hope that in future the people of this nation will come to the conclusion that our system of justice can allow us to abolish capital punishment. However, we have not yet arrived at that point. We will not arrive at that point for a long time, because it will take at least a decade to undo the damage that has been done by the permissiveness and liberalism that exists within the penitentiary service at this time.

We have to reach a conclusion that is both logical and sensible within the environment that is Canada today, that is, that the death penalty should be retained, certainly for the type of heinous crimes committed in Moncton, Dartmouth, Calgary, and in the British Columbia institution. Those crimes demand that the death penalty be imposed. I can have no sympathy for two individuals who slaughtered in the way Hutchinson and Ambrose murdered in Moncton. Why should anyone in this nation have compassion for the individuals who took those two police officers out to a country spot, forced them to dig their own graves, and then killed them. They were able to resort to every protection which the law and the courts offer. But they were found guilty.

● (1230)

No one has asked that mercy be accorded to them, and I suggest they should now be assigned to the same fate as their victims. It would be brought about in a much more humane way than the deaths of the two officers, even though it might not be the ideal way. They should be dealt with in accordance with the sentence which was passed, and the same principle should apply to others who have been judged by their peers to be guilty of the crime of murder, when no recommendation for mercy has been made. It is as simple as that. That is what the law demands. That is what society demands. That is what I hope parliament will say to these individuals and to others who might be considered performing the same acts as the persons who are presently on death row.

That is what the law should say. That is what the courts will say, according to the law which is on the statute books at this time. And that is what parliament should say. The people have spoken. They have said they want the death penalty retained. Parliament should confirm that the death penalty will continue to exist in this nation so long as the people desire it as the ultimate punishment for the crime of murder.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to place on record my own thoughts, in a limited time, as to why I shall vote for the retention of capital punishment in the very limited statute we now have on the books. On previous occasions I have voted for legislation which would retain capital punishment for the murder of policemen or prison guards. The alternative was the wider application of capital punishment which was prevalent in years gone by. I have been in favour of a very limited form of the application of capital punishment, mainly on the basis that sometimes mistakes were made which resulted in innocent people being put to death. However, under the present legislation the chances of this happening are extremely limited—I would say almost non-existent. With this factor in mind, I feel the limited form of capital punishment presently provided for should be retained.

I have other reasons for wishing to see the retention of capital punishment in the case of the murder of police officers or prison guards. I feel that if there is no provision for the retention of capital punishment, then police officers will often, by themselves, carry out a form of capital punishment. When the minister spoke a few days ago I took the opportunity to ask him a question, and he was kind enough to reply. He stated that he did not think police officers in this country would carry out this type of retribution. But I do not think that view is a reasonable one. In cases where a police officer is killed in what his colleagues feel is an unfair way, particularly during the commission of a violent crime, it is very easy for them to respond when the occasion arises by carrying out a form of capital punishment on their own. I think it is significant, when reading reports of violent crimes taking place, that they often contain details of the criminal having been shot to death when apprehended and that many more shots were fired than would appear to have been necessary in the apprehension of that individual.

So I think we have our choice. Do we support a very limited form of capital punishment, with a jury, with judges and, in the final analysis, the cabinet making the decision on commutation, or are we going to risk the very real possibility that capital punishment will be carried out to a certain extent by our own law officers perhaps much more often than would happen under our present laws? I feel this point has more importance than it has been credited with. We impose duties on our law officer and also dangers, but they are human beings. It would be nice to think they always look at the law dispassionately and would not use their guns unless it were absolutely necessary. But we have to recognize the personalities of our law officers and the personalities of murderers.

There are some people in our society, no matter what one does, who will never change their ways. They only understand being hit as hard as they would like to hit. In the final analysis, criminals do have, under this legislation, the benefit of trial by a jury which decides whether or not to make a recommendation for mercy. As I understand it, juries may make a recommendation for mercy of they may decide not to make such a recommendation. Imperfect as it might be, in the final analysis the decisions of juries probably are as good a basis as any to decide these very difficult questions. With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate my point of view as to the reason I shall vote for the retention of capital punishment in its limited form.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I can remember back in 1973 when we first debated this bill after I had been elected. It seems to me a shame this time that the government, on a free vote, one in which members are supposed to have total freedom rushing this bill through the House of Commons and trying to get it passed quickly to take away some of their embarrassment because of the fact that they are abolitionists and the majority of the country is not.

On January 26, 1973, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) spoke to the measure to abolish capital punishment except in cases of the murder of police officers and prison guards. Debate on that bill did not end until October 8, 1973. Yet this time around we debated this bill on May 3 for the first time. A budget has been introduced since then, and we have a number of opposition days. The government has done a tremendous job of diffusing this debate in the country so that the people do not really know there is a very short time until the vote. Thus, I do not think we are getting the response from the public in this debate that we should. Certainly, six weeks is not, to me, long enough to have the debate before the House of Commons. I just want to put that on the record at the very beginning.

● (1240)

A number of the speeches that have been made on capital punishment seem to indicate that most people who are retentionists are in favour of hanging people or of disposing of them in some form or other for just about every kind of murder. As one who has done a lot of talking in the area of capital punishment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it very plain that the majority of the retentionists I know are only in favour of capital punishment for the most serious types of murder, that is to say, for the hardened criminals and Mafia-types who go out and kill.

So far as some of the people who are on death row right now are concerned, some of whom are from my area, I think the death penalty should be applied. First of all, there is Elery Steven Long, who killed staff sergeant Ronald McKay of the Delta police force. This was a vicious type of crime, the type for which I think the law should be carried out. There was no recommendation of mercy from the jury, and under the present law I think this man should suffer the consequences. Then there are James Lawrence Hutchison and Richard Joseph Ambrose who killed constable Michael O'Leary and corporal Aurele Bourgeois of the Moncton police force, another grisly murder case with no recommendation of mercy. John Harvey Miller and Vincent John Cockriell killed constable Roger Pierlet of Surrey, which is adjacent to my riding, another case where I think the law that this parliament passed on the last occasion should be upheld.

I shall be talking about the speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) later, but I suggest that the last debate in the House on this issue in 1973 was a fraud. There was no intention by the Prime Minister to let his cabinet carry out the law that this parliament willed, and I think this is part of the problem we are facing today.

I should also like to say something about what people who are serving life sentences in jail for murder have to say about capital punishment. There was an article in the Vancouver Province of last Saturday, June 12, concerning an interview with six different murderers. I should like to quote some of the statements that they made. The first was Larry Corbett. I cannot say I have had the pleasure, but I have had the opportunity to meet this man inside jail and also to talk to one of the persons he tried to kill. He was unsuccessful in killing the woman I talked to, but he did kill her husband. I should like to quote what he said:

Given the choice between capital punishment and spending 25 years in prison as the federal government proposes, convicted murderer Larry Corbett replies unemotionally: "Drop me".

The words come out matter-of-factly. These is no doubt in his mind that after spending a quarter century behind bars, he might as well be dead.

I should also like to quote, from the same article, some of Mr. Corbett's thoughts on capital punishment as well as on spending some time in jail. He begins as follows:

It doesn't matter at this point whether you're guilty or not because they assume you are and treat you just the same. If I thought about it I'd drive myself across the road—

I think that is funny, that he would drive himself across the road.

—(to the psychiatric centre). Who wants to listen to a bleeding heart all the time?"

What bothers him most about his life sentence?

"Basically the thing that tears me up anyway, and eventually tears up most lifers especially if you're a family man, is that the longer you do, your family slides further and further away from you."

Corbett's wife and children live in the Prince George area and he sees them only a few times a year.

"Your family has certain needs and there's nothing you can do to help because you're put away. Theoretically, you're dead and you can't expect them to die just because you're in this position. Their needs and functions are the same as they've always been.

"And this is hard to accept. It's the jealousies and hurts that end up getting to you. My wife must continue functioning in a normal manner and although we've been married for 17 years, after five years in prison we're getting further and further apart. It can't help but work any other way."

Anyone who has any sense of compassion would feel sorry for an individual like this who is spending his time in jail, seeing his family only three times a year. But the one thing that the reporter did not report in this article was what the family of the murder victim has to go through. I can remember a few years ago getting a call from a lady who said that she had to see me about something very important. She would not meet me in my office, which is where most people come to meet me, but wanted me to meet her inside her apartment building. I thought this was rather strange, so I called the RCMP and asked them to accompany me on the visit. When I got there, Mr. Speaker, I was quite surprised, as was the RCMP officer who was with me, to find another RCMP officer sitting in her apartment having tea with this lady.

She was the one whose husband was killed by Larry Corbett. He was killed in a trailer park. Apparently, this man knocked on the door of the trailer in the middle of the night; this lady answered the door, the man put a gun to her face, pushed her into the back bedroom and started to rob her. Her husband woke up, and Corbett just shot him in cold blood. Then he shot the woman and left her for dead, too. Fortunately, she managed to live, and after some months moved back into the Vancouver area. She was threatened all during this man's trial by various people, had to change her name a number of times and move from city to city to avoid some of the people who did not want to see this man convicted. That is not mentioned in the article.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, because we all have compassion for a person who has to spend some time in jail. However, we forget too often about the victims of crime and the relatives of the victims of crime. In cases such as this, of proven, premeditated murder, people should have to pay the supreme penalty. I should like to quote further what Mr. Corbett had to say. I could go on and on because this article runs for several columns, but I just want to quote what he said about spending 25 years in jail:

"You know, normally speaking he'd never do that but now he's only going to get one chance."

He was talking about escape.

"Like, when you drop this 25 on a guy and he gets into a position where he can escape, he's not going to get another chance for years. They're going to swallow him up in one of these 'penthouses'"

Should a prisoner be successful in escaping, he becomes desperate to stay on the loose and this puts the public generally in greater danger than before, Corbett says. If he has a heavy murder term to return to, there isn't much more that can be done to him.

Inside the prisons, Corbett says, there will be a considerable buildup of tensions resulting in more jail killings and suicides.

"It takes a hell of a lot of self-discipline to walk away from a simple little thing now. But what about when you turn around and there's absolutely no hope of me getting out for 25 years. What good am I even to myself?

"Any initiative I might have is totally lost. So now rather than restraining myself I'll be more aggressive. This guy over here isn't going to restrain himself and he's going to stick it to me. So now the paranoia sets in and you figure well, okay, I've got to get him first".

One provision that is not in the bill, and which I think should be, is this. What about the man who is sentenced under this legislation and who kills a second time while inside the penitentiary? Do we just slap him on the wrist and put him in a "penthouse"? What if he kills a third time? The Solicitor General knows full well that this can happen, and probably will, under our present penitentiary system. I now want to refer to the speech of the Prime Minister the other day. As reported at page 14499 of Hansard, he said:

I want to make it very clear that, if a majority of hon. members vote against abolition, some people are going to be hanged. Their death would be a direct consequence of the negative decision made by this House on this bill.

Then on the same thought he said:

While members are free to vote as they wish, those who vote against the bill, for whatever reason, cannot escape their personal share of responsibility for the hangings which will take place if the bill is defeated.

The people of this country gave the Prime Minister a mandate in 1972 and again in 1974. In 1973 this House passed a bill that provided that people who kill policemen or prison guards were to be hanged. Yet the Prime Minister has not taken it upon his conscience to live up to that law. He is now trying to say that those who want to retain capital punishment will have these hangings around their necks. I cannot go along with that kind of logic.

The government is now proposing to institute bilingualism in air traffic control and among pilots. The Prime Minister says he is concerned about the safety factor, yet bilingualism is being forced upon these people. Will he take that personal responsibility if an airplane crashes? I do not think he will, Mr. Speaker. He also says, and I will quote him on this because I do not want to get him wrong:

● (1250)

Longer mandatory sentences, and the tightening of parole regulations in relation to convicted murderers will give society the assurance it needs that those who have unlawfully taken the life of another will be removed from our midst for a very long time.

I have been looking at the present situation in our penitentiaries in respect of temporary absences for murders, and I wonder if we can really take the Prime Minister seriously when he talks about removing them for a very long time. I was told on May 27, when I phoned the Solicitor General's office and spoke with Mr. Dave Tobin, that unescorted lifers are eligible for temporary absences three years before their parole date is due. That is, if the judge sets the lifer's pardon date at 20 years, he is eligible for temporary absence or day parole at the 17-year mark of his sentence, and not before. I wanted to check this out this morning to make sure I was correct, and I phoned and was told that seven years would be the earliest for unescorted temporary absence. This would mean a ten-year minimum sentence a man must serve who was sentenced to life, and he could not get one before seven years. Just before I came in here at 11 o'clock—in fact, I was here and was called out to the phone—they had phoned my office and said, "Well, we wanted to make sure Mr. Reynolds has got it right. Now we find out that they can get a temporary absence, unescorted, after only three years in jail after being sentenced to life for murder".

I wonder how secure we are going to be, with what the Prime Minister has said, when you look at some of the people who are getting out on temporary absence passes. I have the record here in response to a question I placed on the order paper. It gives the number of murderers who received unescorted temporary absences from January 1, 1974, to June 30, 1975. In that group, Mr. Speaker, there is a man, right off the bat, the first man on the list, who was convicted of murder in 1972 and has had one unescorted temporary absence. A man convicted in 1969 has had 23 unescorted absences. A man convicted in 1970, last year had 30 unescorted absences. Another man convicted in 1970 has had two unescorted absences. Another one in 1970, convicted of murder, has had eight unescorted absences. Another, in 1971, has had two. These are all individuals who were sentenced to life for murder.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

There was another man convicted in 1972 who has had 17 unescorted temporary absences. Another, in 1971, has had four temporary unescorted absences. Another one, in 1970, has had one unescorted absence. Another one, in 1971, has had one unescorted temporary absence. A woman convicted of murder in 1970 has received 17 unescorted absences. Another man, convicted of murder in 1970, received 17 unescorted absences last year. There are a couple in my own area. A man convicted in 1970 received 13 temporary unescorted absences last year. Another murderer in the B.C. penitentiary received 18 unescorted absences. Another one, convicted in 1969, in Dorchester, has had 27 unescorted absences. I could go on and on, as I have pages and pages. These are murderers who have served less than seven years and are out on temporary absences, as free as can be.

That is what we are looking at when the Prime Minister tells us that people are going to be safe under this new law. It is just a bunch of boloney, and we all know it. That is why I will vote against this bill. I will vote against it for a lot of other reasons as well, but that is one of the main reasons. I cannot trust this government to make sure that the people in my constituency, which is right next to a penitentiary, will be safe. The Solicitor General knows about this, because we have had a number of escapes from that penitentiary in the last couple of years.

The Prime Minister talked about not being able to take a life without proven necessity and without proven need. I think the Prime Minister should have more faith in our courts system and in the law we have had since he has been Prime Minister. He has had a law on the books that says people shall receive the death penalty for killing policemen and prison guards. He has not lived up to that law. He has not trusted the courts and he has not trusted the jury system in this country. He should be ashamed of himself for not having lived up to the present law, and ashamed that he is forcing this bill through the House so quickly so that he does not have to look at his responsibility for the people sitting on death row in this country. The last thing the Prime Minister talked about was deterrence, and I should also like to quote him in this respect:

I don't want to hear your guesses about the deterrent value of capital punishment. I don't want to hear about gut feelings. I want proof. Not absolute proof. Not even proof beyond a reasonable doubt. A preponderance of evidence will do. A preponderance of available evidence showing that executions are likely to deter other murders would serve as an adequate justification for the act, an adequate guarantee that a human life was not being taken capriciously.

Show me the evidence that capital punishment anywhere, at anytime, has deterred other people from committing murder. My own reading of the speeches made here on this issue since the first week of May, together with the Solicitor General's daily monitoring of the debate, have indicated that no such evidence has been placed before the House.

The evidence does not exist, neither in the Canadian experience nor in the experience of any other jurisdiction. At best, the statistics are inconclusive. They prove nothing. There is no evidence proving that the use or non-use of capital punishment has had any effect whatsoever on murder rates anywhere in the world.

I would say, in response, that the Prime Minister has not really spent enough money with people who might be on the other side of the issue. I know he has got his friend, Professor Fattah, of Simon Fraser University, with whom he has spent an awful lot of money, writing on capital punishment. In fact, Mr. Fattah phoned me a couple of times to have discussions. He is a confirmed abolitionist.

Pretty well everybody the government has given money to has been a pretty strongly confirmed abolitionist.

I would suggest that the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General's department have not spent a lot of time or money with people who might be on the other side of the issue, in order to get their viewpoints and their statistics before the Canadian people. I noticed one booklet that came out, called "Deterrence and the Death Penalty", described as a critical review of the research of Isaac Ehrlich, which was funded by the Solicitor General's department, and one of the few that may have been on the other side, published in March, 1976, and done by Robert G. Hann. The author states, and he is talking about whether or not there is a deterrent effect:

> However, this wisdom is replaced not with "punishment does deter crime", but rather with "we don't know".

That is the crux of this matter. None of us really knows whether capital punishment is a deterrent. We can argue about it. I know of a case where it was a deterrent, and I am sure it would be an isolated incident and somebody might tell me of a case on the other side. We do not really know. I am wondering why this government, after having a number of years with, really, a ban on capital punishment, can say that. The government can say that it is on the books, but every murderer and every criminal knows that there is no capital punishment. Why can we not have a five-year trial with capital punishment and see how the statistics are during that time? I think this government is a little afraid to try something that the majority of the people might want. I would like to quote something the Prime Minister said a long time ago when speaking about what the majority of the people want in this country. He said:

> I have never been able to accept any discipline except that which I imposed upon myself—and there was a time when I used to impose it often. For, in the art of living, or in that of loving, or of governing—it is all the same—I found it unacceptable that others should claim to know better than I what was good for me.

I find that very strange, because the Prime Minister now is saying he cannot accept things, yet he is expecting the people of this country, 80 per cent of them in favour of capital punishment, to accept his wish to abolish it. I think that is unacceptable. I have not quite finished, Mr. Speaker, so I will continue later and call it one o'clock now.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANSPORTATION FOR MEMBERS IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE STRIKE BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that the air controllers could go on strike at any time, and in light of the fact that the vote on capital punishment will be on Tuesday, June 22, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

> That the Prime Minister assure the House that DND flights will be available for all M.P.'s on Monday June 21 to assure full attendance in the House for this important vote.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions under Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ROLES IN UNIVERSITY POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because this is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity I ask leave to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

> That this House urges the government to agree to the request of the Canadian Association of University Teachers for the appointment of a royal commission to consider the funding of higher education in Canada, and to study in particular the relationship between federal and provincial governments with respect to university policy, it being clear that such an informed study should precede any far reaching changes affecting higher education in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions under Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AGREEMENT WITH MR. MORRIS ON SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED AT CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF NATIONAL STRIKE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On Monday, June 14 I asked the Minister of Labour about the agenda and specific items to be discussed between the government and Mr. Morris of CLC at their meeting this morning. I also asked whether the government was prepared to offer concessions to the CLC in order to lessen the threat of a general strike. The minister responded at that time that it would be presumptuous for him to state what was on the minds of the CLC representatives. After a full morning of discussion with CLC representatives, does the Prime Minister still feel it would be presumptuous for the government to inform the House and the people of Canada what plans the government has for labour-government relations during the control and post-control period, and if any concessions were offered to the CLC this morning in order to avert a general strike?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no, and the answer would not be presumptuous but it would be premature. I apologize for not being able to answer the hon. member directly but the meeting has not yet taken place; it will take place this afternoon. Perhaps the hon. member could ask his question tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

METHOD OF FULFILLING COMMITMENT ON REFORM OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS WITHOUT PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I thank the Prime Minister for his answer, and I apologize, through you, Mr. Speaker, for not realizing that the meeting did not start until this afternoon. However, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is the following. The government has stated that it is committed to the reform of industrial relations. Similarly the October anti-inflation white paper invested the Canadian Labour Relations Council with the mandate of considering the appropriate avenues for this reform. Has the government had any indication prior to the meeting this afternoon that the CLC is willing to re-enter the Canadian Labour Relations Council and if the CLC is not, can the Prime Minister inform the House how his government is going to fulfil its commitment toward industrial relations reform without that very body which has been invested with fulfilling this commitment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe it is correct to say that there has been no firm indication by the CLC that it would want to re-enter that body, certainly not insofar as I know and I do not believe the Minister of Labour has heard that either. The reason we are meeting with the CLC is to pursue their own desire expressed at the Quebec convention to have consultations with the government with a view to being able to play a larger role and have a larger input into the processes of government administration and policy setting. This is precisely the subject we want to discuss with them. One way of doing it would be to have them re-enter the council, as the hon. member, I believe, suggests. There might be other bodies or other ways in which this might be pursued. This will certainly be in the forefront of our minds this afternoon as we meet the CLC.

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1410)

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS MANIFESTO

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I want to thank the Prime Minister for his answer and ask him if he is prepared this afternoon to discuss with the CLC the ultimate ramifications of the CLC manifesto, which calls for a type of labour-government dialogue based on social corporatism, which, of course, is the antithesis of the past democratic practices within the CLC and the labour movement in Canada, which would be the antithesis of democracy in this country and which would make this House completely irrelevant.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I share the hon. member's concern on that score, and I imagine the New Democratic Party shares that concern, too. Certainly, our position with any group in discussions with the government, whether it be labour, management or any other sector of society, would be that the government is answerable to parliament and through parliament to the country, and not to any particular group, so to the extent that labour, or any other body, would want to have a firm hand on the decision making process, the answer would have to be no, we answer to parliament. We do not answer to any one movement.

However, of course, this does not preclude us, as we hope, from establishing ways in which the labour movement particularly could have a greater say in the input of the government in determining policies. We think it would be useful if, for example, the labour movement did not tend to be identified with any one party, but rather came as a movement representing the workers, and in so far as it did, would want to make sure the government understood the point of view of the workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Labour. After eight months in operation it is apparent that AIB regulations are having a marked influence on the traditional methods of collective bargaining. For example, with regard to the Thompson strike, Mr. Tansley is there or will be there shortly. I would like to ask the minister if he is now prepared to outline in full to employers, employees, unions and their representatives exactly what they can expect in their collective bargaining relations during this period of restraint and while the AIB is functioning.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the history of events since the government brought in the regulations and the anti-inflation program indicates to labour and the business community—but the hon. member is speaking particularly about labour—that indeed they are limitations, in a sense, of the collective bargaining process, but it is not a denial of it. I can only point to the tremendous number of collective agreements which have been entered into and signed which are within the guidelines and to those which have gone to the AIB for rulings which have resulted in the resolution of disputes. I might also indicate that in terms of man-days lost through strikes, they have been decreasing over the last few months.

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO ACHIEVE INDUSTRIAL HARMONY—NUMBER OF STRIKES THIS YEAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): In view of the fact that 1974 was a disastrous year for labour strikes and that 1975 was somewhat worse, can the minister tell us what his department and the cabinet are doing to rationalize the aims of the AIB and the goal of industrial harmony so that our 1976 record will not be worse? What statistics does the minister have to show that we are actually better off than we were last year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I can endeavour to supply the hon. member with some statistics over the course of the last few months to indicate, as I already have, that man-days lost to strikes are decreasing. I also point out to the hon. member some significant good news which I related to the House the other day with regard to the railway industry, which involves 95,000 men. It would appear that there is every hope for a settlement based on the recommendations of the Hall report. That means no strike in that particular industry for two years. I think there are other examples of this across the country.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER ON PATRIATION—PROTECTION OF PROVINCIAL RIGHTS IN AMENDING FORMULA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister. I understand that the question of the patriation of the Canadian constitution was discussed, at least informally, with the first ministers of the provinces earlier this week. Will the Prime Minister tell the House what progress, if any, was made and whether he is still determined as I think he was before that if consensus cannot be obtained he will seek a resolution of parliament to ensure that the full power of control of the constitution of Canada can be exercised in Canada and not by any outside power?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussions we had earlier in the week were not conclusive in the sense that no premier took the absolute position of saying we should not patriate or conversely we should patriate and the federal government and parliament should do it alone. The positions they want to establish are still uncertain, I believe. They have indicated to me that they would have further meetings amongst themselves at ministerial level as they did a few weeks ago and they, as first ministers of the provinces, would want to discuss the matter in the final sense at the annual meeting of the premiers to be held this year in Edmonton in August. They undertook, as a result of that meeting, to report to me. Therefore, any answer I could give to the hon. member's second question would be conditional and hypothetical.

We still believe that the government, and I think the view is shared by all parties here, should, during the course of the life of this parliament, ensure the results that the hon. member just described, that every part of the Canadian constitution should reside in Canada rather than in some other country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think it is necessary at this time to appeal to other parties to share that resolve very vocally with this party because it is still possible, and I would think hopeful, that the provinces will agree on the position I have just described.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he indicated to the first ministers of the provinces that some such formula as was proposed at the Victoria conference, whereby changes that affected the distribution of power between the federal and provincial authorities, could not be carried through without the concurrence of either the province of Quebec or the legislature of Quebec or the province of Ontario or its legislature or a combination of other provinces? Did he indicate it was the intention of the government to put into any change that was made, such protection of provincial rights as would be involved in some such formula as that?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I am dealing with the question. If I understood it properly perhaps the simplest thing would be to indicate that in my letters to the premiers a month of two ago I indicated three possible means of proceeding with the patriation of the constitution. Perhaps I would answer the hon. member more clearly by indicating whichever of the three means is chosen or if any four or five means is found, it would be with the clear intention of the federal government not to affect the distribution of powers between the federal and the provincial governments. Even in the act of patriation, or indeed in the situation which would exist after patriation, it would not be our intention to have any greater potential federally for acting against the provinces than we have now. I think that was made quite clear in my letters. I repeat, if I misunderstood the purport of the question I should certainly welcome a supplementary.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY WHETHER DEATH PENALTIES WILL BE COMMUTED

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Following his speech on Bill C-84, which tends to blame hon. members who will vote against this bill, does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to ask the cabinet, first, to commute the death penalty of those who are on death row and, second, to comply with the legislation which will be voted on in the next few days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is mistaken. My speech did not tend to blame hon. members who would vote against Bill C-84. I simply reminded hon. members that if this bill was not passed by the House, those who would vote against it should certainly take on their shoulders the burden of reinstating capital punishment in Canada, and I am sure this is a responsibility they would not want to evade and they could not evade. In other words, hon. members must not expect automatic resort to commutation of the death sentence, as the hon. member seems to fear.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

My question relates a little to the second part of my previous question, when I asked the Prime Minister whether he intended to ask the cabinet to comply with the legislation which will be voted by this Parliament in the next few weeks.

* * *

● (1420)

[English]

FISHERIES

ALLEGED EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONES AROUND ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON BY FRANCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN RIGHTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, a question which is not only important to Atlantic Canada, but indeed all of Canada since it deals with international treaties. In light of the enabling legislation covering a 200-mile limit for its territories and possessions as announced by the Republic of France, were any arrangements made by the present government to cover this contingency when phasing-out fishing agreements were signed with France? If not, what steps will now be taken to protect Canadian rights on our continental shelf which include a large part of the prolific fishing grounds on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and which will, if not resolved, make the phasing-out agreements signed with other countries fishing within our 200 mile limit impossible to implement?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I should first put on the record that according to our information it is the intention of the government of France to bring in enabling legislation. Contrary to press reports, France has not proclaimed a 200-mile limit. It is obvious that the particular situation of St. Pierre and Miquelon will cause difficulties in the boundary question which remains to be settled. This question has already been the subject of some discussion. When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I were in New York, we talked to the head of the French delegation. Other contacts have taken place at ICNAF. The 1972 treaty covers the fisheries reciprocal arrangement quite well. It will be a question of negotiations and discussion, as it will be with other countries where geography will not allow us to move away from each other. We share the oceans and, therefore, we will have to come to some arrangement.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE CONCERNING ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the reply just given to the House by the minister, I wish to ask him a supplementary question. Assurance was given to the House or the fisheries committee of the House in 1973 by Ambassador Beesley with regard to negotiations with France that "the position has developed to the point where we could be on the verge of an agreement vis-à-vis St. Pierre and Miquelon." What happened to these negotiations? What is the position at the moment? If France does pursue legislation to unilaterally take action on her own with respect to her boundaries, what does that do to Canada's timetable of January 1 next year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member, who has had much more experience than I, would not expect me to answer a question starting with "if". I will simply tell him that one of the complicating factors in the negotiations with France is that of the position of France, as a member of the community and its impact on upcoming negotiations with Canada, is not yet clarified for the French themselves. I am not an international lawyer, but the possibility of having to negotiate with not one but a whole series of other countries in the community obviously complicates matters. We have underlined this problem to the French authorities.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State (Fisheries). St. Pierre and Miquelon are now claiming 20,000 square miles of continental shelf. If the French extend the 200-mile limit, this will cause serious implications with regard to the location of St. Pierre and Miquelon. There have been no negotiations since 1972. What position is Canada going to take? Also, what negotiations have taken place or are now taking place with regard to resolving this very delicate problem which not only affects Canada, but the whole Atlantic region?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Apparently the hon. member did not hear what I said. There have already been discussions, there has been agreement to accelerate those discussions and enter into formal negotiations. This will be done after the ICNAF conference in the coming weeks. There have already been talks to identify the problem areas and try to find an accommodation. I believe both sides recognize that reciprocal arrangements and ad hoc arrangements could be made until the long term boundary problems are settled.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that Canada has taken the rightful position that the size of the claim of St. Pierre and Miquelon is out of proportion to the size of the blob of land existing there, may I ask whether this has been the subject of negotiation?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): The hon. member talks about Canada's rightful position. I agree with his description of it and that is the position we take.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

USE OF MERCURY-CONTAMINATED FISH BY NATIVES IN AREA OF ENGLISH AND WABIGOON RIVERS—PROVISION OF OTHER SOURCES OF PROTEIN

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. On Friday, June 11, the hon. member for Greenwood referred to a report prepared by officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of National Health recommending that subsidies be paid to Indians on the English-Wabigoon River systems to enable the provision of protein substitutes for mercury-polluted fish. The minister said the contents of the report were being discussed with the Indian people and the provincial government concerned. In view of the seriousness of the situation, can the minister now report on the progress of these discussions and can he also tell us whether he is prepared to offer aid to such a subsidy program?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): I understand that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be here later on in the question period, but if he is not, I will undertake to bring the matter to his attention.

ACTION TO INFORM NATIVE GUIDES NOT TO EAT MERCURY-CONTAMINATED FISH

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Perhaps at the same time the acting minister would bring another matter to the attention of his colleague. It concerns a problem of which he is aware—the difficulty of implementing an effective educational program to convince native people, in particular, native fishing guides, who have been identified as a high-risk group, of the danger of eating mercury-polluted fish. Can the hon. gentleman inform us whether this aspect of the matter was discussed with the native people and the provincial government? Would he tell us, also, whether he has made recommendations with a view to correcting this serious situation?

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES OF CHAIRMAN OF THE ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance; I assume he has now had an opportunity to review the past and present activities, at least in part, of the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. I want to ask the minister whether he is satisfied that the chairman is in full compliance with the provisions of section 21(7) of the Anti-Dumping Act. Also, I want to ask the minister whether he has perused a memorandum to file dated October 17, 1975 which contains, among other things, the following in which the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal appears to indicate to Swedish lawyer Sture Hoveden: "I would not think of risking my reputation for $200,000; I would prefer to risk it for $5 or $10 million, as the opportunity exists in the case of Auto-Chemist". He went on to talk about that subject. Can the minister clarify this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I did have an opportunity of seeing Mr. Gauthier this morning and I shall be making further inquiries in relation to this matter. It would, of course, be of great assistance to receive from the hon. member and, indeed, from any other persons who might have information on this particular transaction. I shall, of course, be glad to pursue it. In any event, I hope to bring this affair to a conclusion and report to the House at an early date.

Mr. MacKay: I shall be pleased to give the minister whatever data I have. Is he now in a position to assure the House that the research capabilities, facilities and personnel of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal organization have not been used for any purposes other than those for which they should be used, or for the benefit of persons other than that of the government of Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would prefer not to give piecemeal answers to these questions until I have had an opportunity to canvass it fully.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

ALLEGED ATTEMPT BY CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL TO OBTAIN FROM CORPORATION RIGHT TO SELL FISH ROE

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): A supplementary directed to the Minister of State for Fisheries. Would the minister tell us whether or not he has been apprized either by the Minister of Finance or by any other source that the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal appears to have contact with business interests wishing to obtain exclusive rights to fish roe sold by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and, if so, does this meet with the minister's approval?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): I am informed there have been press inquiries about the existence of a letter and I have asked the president of the Corporation whether a letter which was described to me over the telephone had been received. He has not seen it. I will, of course, inquire into this. On the other hand, if the hon. member has information I hope that he will make it available to us so that I can share this information with the Minister of Finance.

● (1430)

Mr. Whiteway: In that case perhaps the minister will be interested in a letter indicating that these interests appear also to be willing to work against the efforts of the corporation. I want to quote from this letter, if I may, Mr. Speaker, so that the minister will understand. It is a letter from a company by the name of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the hon. member will have an opportunity to provide the minister with that letter.

* * *

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF REGULATIONS CONTROLLING ASBESTOS OPERATIONS—STEPS TO MONITOR WORKERS LEAVING CLINTON CREEK MINE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns the federal asbestos standards which were announced in December of 1975. I want to refer the minister to the Clinton Creek situation. At the time that it was announced that asbestos standards in the ambient air would be two per cubic centimeter, there was an indication that we would soon receive regulations to deal with mine tailings. In the Clinton Creek area, as the minister knows, mine tailings are continuing to be simply dumped in that area, at some hazard to both the residents and the workers.

My question is, first of all, would the minister advise when we are going to get regulations from the federal government controlling other areas besides ambient air standards, including tailings, drillings and other matters which were referred to earlier?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to look into this matter, but unless I am mistaken this is rather a matter for the Department of the Environment. I will check into the matter and will be pleased to report to the hon. member, but I think this type of regulation would not come from my department but rather from the Environment or even from a provincial government.

Mr. Leggatt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would point out to the minister that his department received a report from the asbestos working group in February. In view of the fact that the incubation period for cancer resulting from exposure to asbestos is some 20 years and in view of the fact that the Clinton Creek mine has announced that it will close in 1978 and that these workers have been there for less than 20 years, what steps is the minister proposing to take to follow up and monitor the workers leaving the area, so we can have some kind of monitoring system for people who have been exposed to asbestos after the mine has closed and they have dispersed all over the country?

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the fact that a group has submitted a report to my department does not necessarily mean that my department is responsible for enforcing some regulations.

As for the second question put by the hon. member, concerning more particularly the case of Clinton Creek, I will check with my officials to see whether there is a special follow-up program for the miners concerned when the mine will be closed. I am not in a position to give an immediate answer to the hon. member about that.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOGNITION OF TRANSKEI

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of which I gave notice this morning. Can we be assured that no present circumstances exist which would persuade Canada to recognize the Transkei, a so-called Bantu homeland, as a separate and independent state, recognition which would involve a de jure acceptance of a fundamental deprivation of human rights, including loss of citizenship?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for the notice but I have just arrived back in Ottawa. I can assure him that the Transkei, which would be the first so-called independent state under the "Bantustan" policy, will not be recognized by Canada, surely not at this time. Canada shares the international community's skepticism, and deep concern that this is a continuation of the racial policy of apartheid, which Canada opposes without any reservation. We would need a good deal of convincing evidence that the black population of this supposed independent territory is going to receive its due rights before we make any move at all on this question.

* * *

MANPOWER

POSSIBILITY OF ERROR IN INFORMATION SUPPLIED ON LABOUR SUPPLY AND DEMAND—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL EDUCATIONAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister of manpower and it has to do with the speech that he delivered on June 4 to the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in which he indicated there were some 200 nursing vacancies in Ontario and some 3,500 nurses graduating this year, an obvious mismatch of labour supply and demand. The minister went on in his speech to say this:

In the past few years, my department has developed programs to make forward-looking labour market information available. If this information is faulty, then we at the federal level must bear some of the blame.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, there is a problem here. Can the minister advise whether he is looking into the information that he has been supplying and has he in fact found any fault with respect to it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might have chosen to go on and quote the next sentence, I think it is, which said that if people do not use the information that is available then they are to blame. It was in that contrast and context that I made the comment, which I think is self-explanatory.

Mr. Alexander: With respect, Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question. He put it as a question in his speech. He said "if this information is faulty", which means that it calls for further study. In light of the seriousness of this matter, both for locations and professions, would he meet with the provincial ministers of education to determine how up-to-date information about jobs, locations and projections for the future can be compiled and distributed to the schools, and thus deal with this very serious and obvious mismatch of labour supply and demand? Does the minister not believe that this calls for some consultation and co-operation with his provincial counterparts responsible for education?

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed I do. I have made announcements to the effect that this has already been arranged, prior to the suggestion of the hon. member. To wit, we met in Toronto three or four weeks ago with my counterparts responsible for manpower in the provinces and we agreed on six or seven very good principles of consultation, including consultation mechanisms which will result in a federal-provincial conference this fall. In addition to that, it is my plan to meet with the council of education ministers to deal with these very questions, and incidentally to find out from them why this information is not being used fully at the provincial level within their jurisdiction for education.

* * *

ENERGY

DATE OF CLEAN-UP OF NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL SITE AT EAST BRAINTREE, MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. A number of months ago the minister indicated that steps would be taken to clean up the nuclear waste disposal site at East Braintree, Manitoba. The minister indicated that the site would be checked for radioactivity and either fenced and warning signs posted or the material transferred to another containment area. In view of the time that has now elapsed and since nothing has been done by the department, when does the minister intend to follow up the commitment that he has given?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that particular site is under review by the task force looking into radiation problems in Canada. I will be pleased to look into the matter and report back to the hon. member; I cannot give him a definitive answer today.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL ACTION IN PATRIATION OF CONSTITUTION—AMENDING FORMULA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the subject of the constitution and the repatriation formula. Is it still the position of the Prime Minister vis-à-vis the first ministers of the provinces that in the absence of agreement on an amending formula the constitution will be repatriated, or a resolution will be presented to repatriate the constitution, on the basis that no amendments will take place following that in any area, excepting that area which the federal parliament can now amend, without the universal approval of all the provinces? Has the Prime Minister had an opportunity to consider the views and concerns expressed as to rigidity by Senator Forsey of the other place?

● (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have considered those views and, as a matter of fact, as the hon. member will remember, I alluded to them or actually stated them rather specifically in my letter to the premiers. Of course, my suggestion there was that the rigidity we would end up with would not be very different in practice from the rigidity we have now in areas which are of joint concern to the federal and provincial governments. I am thinking particularly of the areas which are excepted in Section 91(1) of the BNA Act. In practice, the federal government does not act alone, but after agreement with all of the provinces. I realize that this is not a constitutional obligation, but it is the practice in fact. For that reason, and though I would regret that kind of rigidity, I suggest it would not be all that different in kind from the rigidity which exists now.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, even failing some agreement on an amending formula, is there not some way in which the Prime Minister could, in a sense, repatriate the constitution without locking the country into such a completely rigid situation as that, which would mean not even the slightest amendment could be adopted without the unanimous approval of the provinces? Is there not some way by which the Prime Minister could avoid locking the country into such a rigid situation as that?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course the hon. member realizes that the rigidity would apply to a very limited number of areas, those, I repeat, which are singled out in Section 91(1) by way of exceptions, because the constitution now and the constitution hereafter, assuming it is patriated, would still permit the provincial governments to amend their constitutions unilaterally in every respect except as regards the office of the Lieutenant Governor, and would still permit the federal government unilaterally to amend the constitution in every aspect which concerned the federal constitution as opposed to the constitution of Canada except, and I repeat, in that small number of areas outlined in Section 91(1).

However, if the concern is about the rigidity in these areas, my answer is, yes, we could patriate the constitution with agreement, unanimity, partial agreement or no agreement at all—all these are possible—and impose the method agreed to at Victoria. I see the hon. member indicating he would not want that. It is not what we want either, but that would be one way of having less rigidity. It would be patriated on the formula which was agreed to at Victoria, with the suggestion we are assuming everyone wants it. I think that would probably be a less desirable method than having some form of agreement, with the suggestion that following the agreement we will give the provinces the occasion, after patriation, to indicate their adhesion to the new proposal.

I want to thank hon. members opposite and, indeed, on this side, for the concern they are showing in respect of this matter. Indeed, I was pleased with the reaction of the provincial premiers the other night because I think there is a growing realization among all Canadians that all that is really needed is the political will to become independent in every sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think there is a realization that, while the technical details we are discussing are certainly important, they can only be addressed if there is a clear political will to achieve this thing about which we are talking.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF DISTRIBUTION OF OLYMPIC LOTTERY TICKETS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General of which I gave him notice a few days ago. In answer to a previous question I put to him a week or so ago regarding improprieties and irregularities in the sale and distribution of Olympic lottery tickets the minister acknowledged in the House, without expounding, the fact that there was an investigation into this matter, but only in the province of Ontario. Is the minister now in a position to report to the House on the RCMP investigation into these fraudulent practices, and can he at the same time advise the House whether the RCM Police investigation is taking place in other provinces besides Ontario?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP has been investigating certain aspects of the Olympic lottery. This investigation began in March and has been limited to the province of Ontario. So far two individuals have been charged within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General for Ontario. The investigation has not taken place in any other province.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, is the minister then not aware that certain improprieties in the sale and distribution of these tickets are taking place in other provinces than Ontario, more specifically in the Alexis Nihon Plaza in Montreal and elsewhere? Perhaps the minister could either deny or confirm the fact that certain RCMP officers and other local police authorities are indeed looking into this specific matter or, if not, Mr. Speaker, would the minister assure this House that he will look into the matter and make all findings public prior to the implementation of Loto-Canada in order to avoid the continuation of any fraudulent practices within this new lottery program?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, during my recent consultations with the RCMP they told me that the investigation was limited to Ontario and they did not know of any investigation or complaints originating in Quebec. However, I will check into this from time to time.

* * *

EDUCATION

PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE FUNDING AND POLICY AT THE UNIVERSITY LEVEL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the urgency and reasonableness of the request of the Canadian Association of University Teachers for the appointment of a royal commission to consider the funding of higher education in Canada, and in particular to study the relationship between federal and provincial governments in respect of university policy, will the government give consideration to this request?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but this damned thing was not working too well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure if I could stick—

An hon. Member: You should stick it in your ear; It works much better that way.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I heard some obscenities from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: It works much better if you stick it in your ear instead of in your pocket.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In any event, I caught the end of the question which was, would I consider something. I can assure the hon. member that I will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I had better leave it at that.

ENERGY

PROPOSAL FOR LOCATION OF URANIUM PROCESSING PLANT IN SASKATCHEWAN—PUBLIC PARTICIPATION IN SITE DECISION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary, of which I have given notice. In view of the fact that Eldorado Nuclear Limited is now in the process of reviewing different possible sites for a uranium processing plant, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary is in a position to indicate whether a final decision has been made, particularly in respect of the location of that plant in Saskatchewan, and if he will give the assurance that before any plant is located in any part of Canada the fullest possible investigation and an inquiry among the citizenry and general public in the proposed site area will be held by Eldorado before making a final decision?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I cannot give a definitive answer as to the location of the proposed refinery in Saskatchewan, although I can confirm that Eldorado is evaluating several sites in the province in co-operation with Sedco, the provincial economic development commission, that they are planning to refine the uranium that is mined in Saskatchewan in that province, and that Eldorado when it does make a final decision as to the location of the refinery will have a full public information program.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT ON LEASING OF DC-8'S

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Watch your language.

Mr. Paproski: Will he be tabling today the agreement between Canada and Cuba regarding the lease or purchase of the DC-8's?

● (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): What was that?

Mr. Sharp: A report on the DC-8.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I asked a serious question and the Prime Minister refuses to answer.

Oral Questions

ABORTION

POSSIBILITY OF TIGHTENING REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Justice. Since the Prime Minister attacked the question of capital punishment with such zeal indicating his deep concern for life, I wonder if in view of the fact that about a year ago a petition was presented which contained over one million signatures expressing concern over what appears to be a government policy of abortion on demand, whether the Prime Minister and his government intend to demonstrate a further concern for life by tightening up the regulations pertaining to abortion.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should realize that the government is opposed to abortion on demand. This is the substance of the legislation we passed some years ago which is now in application in the country. I fail to see the logic of the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, since the government further demonstrated its concern over murders involving guns by ramming through legislation which was supposed to curb deaths involving guns, and in view of the fact that in the last five years the ratio of murder by guns to abortion is one to 200 or approximately 1,000 deaths to 200,000 abortions, I wonder why deaths through abortion, in view of the numbers involved, are not given the same attention as death by guns or is the whole exercise on gun control intended as window dressing and aimed at appeasing rather than solving anything or saving lives.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would agree there is some element of argumentation in his question.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTION OLD AGE PENSIONERS BE GIVEN EXPLANATION OF REDUCTION IN SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFIT CHEQUE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the fact that the annual reductions which take place in some old age pensioners' supplementary cheques every spring cause a great deal of confusion and concern among the many thousands of pensioners because they are unaware of the cause of the reductions which take place is the minister prepared to consider revising the procedures for making those reductions whereby any pensioner whose old age pension supplement cheque is to be reduced would also be given an explanation of that reduction by the government.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to consider the hon. member's suggestion. Evidently it has considerable administrative and financial implications, so that I will very carefully examine it.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister might be able to confirm whether or not Bill Teron has been moved from the Chairmanship of CMHC to deputy minister in the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs and that Raymond Hession has become President of CMHC, both effective June 15?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will inquire, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LOCKOUT OF AIR CANADA FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF MEDIATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It is with regard to the Air Canada lockout of its employees in the finance branch in Winnipeg. In light of the fact that more than 250 serious work disruptions have taken place during the last six months at the finance branch and as the talks between the federally appointed mediator, management and labour were adjourned on May 21 after only two weeks of discussions, could the minister inform the House this afternoon if he intends to ask the mediator to have the talks resumed or will he be appointing a new mediator.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this stage, in terms of the interests of everyone concerned, be specific as to what we will be doing in the way of mediation other than answering in the general terms I did to the hon. member yesterday that certainly we will inject ourselves in terms of mediation at the precise time we think it will be helpful in resolving this unfortunate dispute.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF LEOPARD TANKS FROM WEST GERMANY—VERBAL OR WRITTEN AGREEMENT—NUMBER OF CANADIAN FIRMS BIDDING ON CONTRACT

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In light of the fact that the minister is negotiating a deal to purchase Leopard tanks from West Germany, would the minister inform the House whether or not the deal has been completed and whether it is a verbal or written transaction? Would the minister also inform the House of how many Canadian firms were given the opportunity to bid on this large contract?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I informed the House shortly before leaving for Europe and also as I informed our NATO partners, the negotiations for the purchase of 28 Leopard tanks are proceeding satisfactorily, but there is no conclusion at this time of the negotiations and the contract has not been signed. In answer to the second part of the question concerning whether or not Canadian firms were given an opportunity to participate, the answer is no because there are no Canadian firms in the tank manufacturing business. However, we are negotiating offsets from the German manufacturer and there will be a substantial amount of work done in Canada as a result of the contract.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Could he advise the House if the negotiations for the contract are proceeding as usual on a purely verbal basis or is he taking the trouble to get some of it at least on paper?

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could inform the House today what reception the President of the United States gave in respect of Canada's official gift to the United States on the occasion of the Bicentennial—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Corbin: —and if in the course of his visit to Washington he crossed paths with or knows the whereabouts of the Leader of the Opposition, his shadow.

Some hon. Members: Order.

* * *

CUSTOMS

REASON FOR PERMITTING ENTRY INTO CANADA OF JULY ISSUE OF "PENTHOUSE"

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. According to news reports the July issue of Penthouse has been taken from the news stands not because the Revenue Department has done so but because the distributors themselves have felt it so bad that they will not distribute it. I know the government operates on an "anything for a buck" policy, but I wonder how this periodical got into the country when the people who are accustomed to peddling pulp will not even sell it.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting all this time for an opportunity to visit the porno room in the customs office. I had some difficulty explaining to my wife that this is part of my responsibility. I guess all I can say now in answer to the hon. member's legitimate question is that we are probably a little more liberal with a small "l" than are those who distribute this from foreign markets where more strict censorship is imposed on the distribution aspect.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister would like to carry on the research on this himself, but I wonder if he could establish guidelines for his departmental officials that will be at least as rigid as those of the porno peddlars themselves?

* * *

FINANCE

PROPOSAL THAT CAPITAL GAINS TAX NOT APPLY TO SALE OF FAMILY FARM

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It relates to the capital gains tax on family farm property. A family farm operator, during his lifetime, directs all his profit to the improvement of his farm and equipment. When the farm is sold upon his retirement, the proceeds become his sole private pension fund. It is therefore grossly unfair to use capital gains tax to seriously reduce this pension. Will the minister consider amending the Income Tax Act to permit a once-in-a-lifetime sale of a family farm without attracting capital gains tax?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, there are certain provisions now with regard to family farms but I do not see at this time the opportunity to be able to expand those.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, since the capital gains taxes collected on family farm property amount to only 10 per cent of the total collected on property generally, would the minister weigh the appraisal and accounting costs, plus the major irritant effect of this tax, against the net revenue derived and hopefully remove this unfair and unjust tax all together?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it of course has to be relevant also to the question of equity to other taxpayers.

* * *

● (1500)

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL—SUGGESTION PORT MANAGER BE GIVEN REASONS FOR REQUESTING HIS RESIGNATION

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Now that the minister has appointed a port manager for the port of Churchill—an appointee from eastern Canada—will the minister advise the departed port manager why his resignation was requested by the minister?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to the appointee who was named yesterday or today, Mr. Lauzon, as a person from eastern Canada. I suppose that is intended to carry some negative connotation in the context of Churchill—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Goodale: —but in any event the reference in that regard is inaccurate because that individual has had extensive experience in harbour management, particularly in the port of Churchill. So the hon. member's description of that person is incorrect.

In the case of the previous appointee in that position, Mr. Scharf, he submitted his resignation earlier this year. He was given a full and fair hearing before the National Harbours Board and the decision to accept Mr. Scharf's resignation was made by the National Harbours Board after that full hearing.

Presence in Gallery

Mr. Speaker: Presenting Reports from Standing or Special committees.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to appear overly self-righteous, but I have a problem with regard to giving notice of questions and perhaps the House leader will want to consider it. This is not in any way criticism of the work of the hon. member for Saint-Michel.

It took considerable pain this morning, and three telephone calls, to alert the Department of External Affairs on this question. Probably I was considered by the officials of the department to be somewhat of a nuisance, but if one of them would stumble over my remarks in Hansard he would see that surely it is legitimate, when notice is given of a question, that ministers and parliamentary secretaries be given answers. I do not even criticize the answer of the deputy minister, but I resent being told that someone has just arrived back in Ottawa and therefore has not been briefed by the department. The department is in an excellent position to brief ministers and parliamentary secretaries, despite the nuisance that we make of ourselves.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, if I said that, if I began my remarks with that expression, it is precisely because I read very quickly, due to my other responsibilities, the detailed answer prepared for the hon. member. I wanted to apologize in advance, if I may say so, for not giving him all the details contained in the prepared answer, in case I made a mistake. Therefore, it is because I wanted to answer more correctly that I made that preliminary remark, and not in the sense understood by the opposition.

I may add that if a supplementary question had been put to me, which I hoped, I would have had a great deal of information to give to the House, which I believe is fundamental. I thought the answer would have become a speech and would have been too long. I shall therefore send it in written form to the hon. member.

* * *

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARIANS FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if at this time I might be permitted to draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of a distinguished group of parliamentarians from the United Kingdom. They are members of the defence and external affairs subcommittee of the expenditure committee of the British House of Commons. The chairman of the subcommittee is Colonel Sir Harwood Harrison MP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Thirteenth Report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in both Official Languages—Mr. Langlois

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

PERFORMING ARTS

PETITION BY WORKERS IN ANGLOPHONE FILM INDUSTRY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the thirty-first report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are marked by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,585, 5,162, 5,167, 5,293, 5,385, 5,413 and 5,476.

[Text]

CONSULTATIONS ON VOLUNTARY QUOTA AGREEMENT WITH MAJOR FILM DISTRIBUTORS

Question No. 4,585—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Were representatives of the Canadian motion picture industry consulted respecting the decision to proceed with the voluntary quota agreement with the two major film distributors and, if so, with whom were the consultations held and to what extent did the government decision reflect their views?

2. What specific mechanisms have been established to monitor and report on the agreement?

3. Are low budget feature films made in Canada included within the quota?

4. What specific advantages accrued to the Canadian film industry as a result of the previous voluntary quota agreement negotiated in 1973?

[Mr. Richardson.]

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. Representatives of the industry are consulted on a regular basis by the CFDC and have expressed their support for quotas and levies. The specific arrangement with the two major film distributors was not discussed with the industry.

2. Reports are received from Famous Players and Odeon and analyzed by the CFDC staff. There are regular meetings held between the companies and the staff of the CFDC. Results of the quota are made public and the provincial governments in particular are informed of progress in this area. The first quarterly report from Famous Players was tabled in the House of Commons on March 3, 1976.

3. Yes.

4. During the period August 1973 to April 1975, 815 weeks of Canadian films were shown by the two major chains covering 20 titles.

TAXATION DATA CENTRE—VOICE COMMUNICATION SYSTEM AND/OR FIRE ALARM SYSTEM

Question No. 5,162—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a voice communication system and/or fire alarm system installed in the Taxation Data Centre in Ottawa and, if so (a) on what dates (b) are both systems functioning and, if not, in either case, for what reason?

2. Are trained personnel available to operate the voice communication system and, if not (a) for what reason (b) is the Dominion Fire Commissioner aware of this (c) has such a situation existed for over three years?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) A fire alarm system was installed in the Taxation Data Centre in Ottawa at the time of construction. Acceptance tests of this system were conducted on June 22, 1970. An integrated voice communication and fire alarm system was completed and a final acceptance test was conducted on August 25, 1975; (b) Both systems are functioning as designed.

2. Three volunteer Emergency Telephone Operators and three volunteer Emergency Voice Communication Operators from the Data Centre have been partially trained. Four additional volunteers are required to complete the organization. (a) The reasons for not having trained personnel available to operate the Voice Communication System are as follows: Fire Emergency Organization personnel in high-rise buildings over 12 stories in height receive training priority. D.F.C. Training staff limitations. A staffing program to recruit training officers for each of the Regional Offices of the Department has been initiated. The personnel hired in this competition will be responsible for training voice communication system operators in all Federal Government buildings equipped with voice communication equipment, throughout Canada. A top priority has been assigned to this requirement and Training programs will be undertaken immediately; (b) Yes; (c) No. The situation has existed since the acceptance of the integrated system in August 1975.

SMOKE CONTROL MEASURES—GRAIN EXCHANGE BUILDING, WINNIPEG, MANITOBA

Question No. 5,167—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Have the smoke control measures in the Grain Exchange Building in Winnipeg ever been operable and, if not, from what date?

2. Is the situation being rectified and (a) if so, what is the date of such rectification (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Was a voice control system installed in the building in 1972?

4. Are there properly trained personnel to operate the system and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, as of what date?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The smoke control measures were installed during construction of the building and were tested by the Dominion Fire Commissioner January 22, 1973 before the building was occupied. They have been operable from this date. After the test a modification was recommended to shut down air handling fans on the operation of the fire alarm system. This modification was carried out early in 1973 shortly after smoke tests were carried out.

2. (a) Improvements have been carried out; (b) Not applicable.

3. Yes.

4. No. (a) The whole question of control and evacuation of occupants in high-rise buildings, which includes the operation of voice communication systems, is a relatively new one and prototype techniques and programs have had to be developed, tested and evaluated. So as to take advantage of proximity to the major and senior elements of the Dominion Fire Commissioner organization, Ottawa was selected for this developmental work which is now largely completed. Having recently obtained the requisite additions to the Dominion Fire Commissioner's establishment, the department is now in the process of hiring regional training officers to carry forward this and other types of fire safety training in federal government offices across Canada, including such as the Grain Exchange Building in Winnipeg. To date it has only been possible to provide introductory and orientation training on a limited basis. A top priority has been assigned to this requirement and an intensive training program will be undertaken as soon as the training personnel can be recruited; (b) Not applicable.

GUY FAVREAU COMPLEX, MONTREAL

Question No. 5,293—Mr. Masniuk:

1. Is the government presently building the Guy Favreau Complex in Montreal and, if so, what is its purpose?

2. What is the projected cost of the project?

3. At what stage of construction is the project at the present time?

4. How much has the project cost to date?

5. For which government department is the project intended?

6. How was the name of the project chosen?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Department of Public Works is planning to construct the Guy Favreau office complex under the accommodation program for Montreal.

2. Estimated at $172,000,000.

3. Land assembly and a conceptual design have been completed.

4. As of April 27, 1976—$8,617,537.59.

5. The project will provide space as a general purpose building for many departments.

6. By Cabinet decision.

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS FOR 1975

Question No. 5,385—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What was the total amount of Canada Council grants for the year 1975?

2. How much of this money was received by (a) British Columbia (b) Alberta (c) Saskatchewan (d) Manitoba (e) Ontario (f) Quebec (g) New Brunswick (h) Nova Scotia (i) Newfoundland (j) Prince Edward Island (k) Yukon (l) Northwest Territories?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows. The following figures are for the 1974-75 fiscal year. Figures for 1975-76 will be published in the Council's 19th Annual Report, now in preparation. 1. $44,236,000.

2. (a) $4,538,000; (b) $2,174,000; (c) $793,000; (d) $1,932,000; (e) $15,576,000; (f) $11,683,000; (g) $636,000; (h) $1,104,000; (i) $454,000; (j) $234,000; (k) and (l) $35,000.

NOTE: These figures do not include an amount of $5,077,000 awarded to organizations described as national in scope for purposes of statistical reporting, or used by the Council for programs that cannot be divided by province, e.g. Art Bank purchases and touring grants to performing arts organizations.

TRANSLATION SERVICES AT "LA CITÉ" PROJECT IN MONTREAL

Question No. 5,413—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a full description of the type of translation services to be provided by the Secretary of State in the new premises to be rented in La Cité project in Montreal including specifically (a) the general nature of documents involved in translation (b) for what government departments will the work be done (c) what is the estimated percentage of the total translation work that will be (i) English to French (ii) French to English (d) how many employees is it estimated will be (i) Francophone (ii) Anglophone (e) how many public servants will be employed on the five floors to be occupied and what are their estimated annual salaries (f) what will be the estimated total cost per year of this operation including salaries, rent and all other factors?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Secretary of State—The translation services to be provided by the Secretary of State Department in Montreal will consist of two divisions under the Regional Operations Branch and a terminology service and central library under the Terminology and Documentation Directorate. Division I will be made up of four translation sections and the administrative support services for both divisions. Section IA of Division I will be located in Ville Saint-Laurent in the same building as the Atmospheric Environment Service and will include a subsection providing twenty-four-hour-a-day translation of weather forecasts and bulletins for all of Canada. Division II will be composed of seven translation sections, including the Saint-Jean section, which, together with its Saint-Hubert and Collège militaire royal field subsections, will provide translation services for CFB Saint-Jean, the College and CFB Saint-Hubert, where the Canadian Forces Mobile Command is located. In Montreal there will also be a French-to-English translation subsection under Section I of the English Translation Division, General Operations Branch, located in Ottawa. This subsection will consist of three translators and one reviser. The composition of the Montreal staff of the Terminology and Documentation Directorate is contained in the reply to question no. 5,412. The translation services of the Secretary of State Department in Montreal will be used to meet the needs of the federal services in the Montreal area. In addition, some of these sections will specialize in various fields to meet the translation needs of the whole federal government. Other subsections or sections will function as extensions of departmental or headquarters sections in Ottawa. (a) and (b) The foregoing and the list below give a good idea of the general nature of the documents to be translated and the departments or agencies which will be served. Weather forecasts, Meteorology (extension), Environmental protection, Plans and specification, Agriculture (extension), Medical and paramedical (extension), Unemployment insurance, Environment, Customs and Excise and Taxation (extension), Solicitor General, Data processing, Post Office, English translation, Legal and quasi-legal, Economics and finance, Psychology and mental health, Management, Metric Commission, Socio-economic: Immigration, Indian Affairs, etc., Statistics (extension), Natural sciences, Military, Electronics; (c) and (d) The bulk of translation from French into English for the federal government is done in Ottawa. In Montreal the percentage of translation into English and into French corresponds roughly to the percentage of Anglophone and Francophone translation personnel. Excluding Terminology and Documentation Directorate staff, there will be four employees translating into English out of some 152 employees in the TR group at the time of the move; (e) The space to be rented will accommodate approximately 380 employees, including about 260 translators, terminologists, librarians and administrative officers, and 120 clerks, stenographers and typists. The average salary of the first group will be roughly $17,000 and of the second group roughly $8,000 per annum, (f) On the basis of 1976-77 constant dollars, the estimated total cost per year of this operation with 380 employees will be as follows: Salaries, $6,205,043.00; Other operations, $390,556.00; Total annual cost chargeable to program, $6,595,599.00. Plus: Rent paid by Department of Public Works $857,126.67; Cost of other services provided by other departments, $147,557.00; Estimated total cost per year $7,600,282.67.

USER/BENEFICIARY PAY PRINCIPLE TO SHIPPING INDUSTRY

Question No. 5,476—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government consider isolating from all monies spent for icebreaking and dredging services in the St. Lawrence basin, those of benefit only to shipping and apply the user/beneficiary pay principle to that industry and, if not, for what reason?

2. Is the government aware that CN and the National Harbours Board apply the user/beneficiary principle in respect of shipping using the Port of Halifax?

3. Is the government aware of competition between Halifax and the River Ports in respect of the movement of bulk, general and containerized cargoes?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Transport Canada is committed to the principles of cost recovery from users and beneficiaries of transportation services as consistent with other national objectives and the anti-inflation program. As indicated in the transportation policy framework announced in June 1975, when national policy requires departure from this user/beneficiary pay principle, the costs imposed should be clearly and specifically identified and assumed by government. Consistent with these principles, in the study of Coast Guard revenues referred to in the response to Question no. 5,105 of March 5, 1976, consideration is being given to the shipping industry, in the St. Lawrence basin and nationally.

2. The pricing principles that are applied by CN and the National Harbours Board at Halifax are consistent with the objective of commercial viability for these corporations and with the more general user/beneficiary pay principle as applied on a national basis.

3. The Government is aware that competition exists between various port regions, and modes of transport as well as between operators within a single mode. A healthy competitive environment is a safeguard against deterioration of services and escalation of costs. As indicated in the policy framework, intermodal and intramodal competition should be encouraged where economic and technical characteristics permit.

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 5,169 and 5,170 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE—SECOND LANGUAGE SCHOOLS

Question No. 5,169—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1970 to date, have any departments or government bodies negotiated contracts with Centre de langues Feuille d'érables Ltée for the teaching of a second language to public servants and, if so, in each case (a) what was the contract (b) how many (c) for what amount?

2. For each year, what percentage of the money granted to the school was directed to salaries of (a) teachers (b) administrators?

3. Are the requirements for (a) formation (b) experience of the teachers only under the school and, if not, is there a link between such requirements and those that prevail when hiring teachers of a second language for the Public Service?

4. For each year, how many (a) French speaking (b) English speaking public servants have followed courses offered by the school?

Return tabled.

Question No. 5,170—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1970 to date, have any departments or government bodies negotiated contracts with Centre Linguistique Cartier for the teaching of a second language to public servants and, if so, in each case (a) what was the contract (b) how many (c) for what amount?

2. For each year, what percentage of the money granted to the school was directed to salaries of (a) teachers (b) administrators?

3. Are the requirements for (a) formation (b) experience of the teachers only under the school and, if not, is there a link between such requirements and those that prevail when hiring teachers of a second language for the Public Service?

4. For each year, how many (a) French speaking (b) English speaking public servants have followed courses offered by the school?

Return tabled.

* * *

[Translation]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 5,455?

[Text]

*CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF CRUDE PETROLEUM

Question No. 5,455—Mr. Woolliams:

1. In the years 1962 to 1975, what was the total Canadian production, in barrels, of crude petroleum?

2. For the same years, what was the total crude petroleum (a) exported (b) imported?

3. For the same years, what was the price differential between off-shore crude petroleum and Alberta crude petroleum used in Montreal or the Maritimes?

4. For the same years, was it cheaper to import barrels of crude petroleum east of the Ottawa Valley than to transport it from Alberta and what approximately was the ratio?

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in responding to this starred question I would like to say that it is about two pages long and it is statistical material. I would like to ask that it appear in Hansard as read.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer to the above question follows.]

	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966	1967	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
1. Production Mb/d	715.0	766.1	819.3	876.1	956.1	1,044.8	1,125.3	1,228.9	1,382.1	1,476.0	1,698.4	1,962.9	1,843.3(P)	1,575.6(E)
2. (a) Exports Mb/d	236.0	248.3	277.9	295.6	347.6	414.8	462.4	555.3	669.8	750.8	951.3	1,138.6	910.9	707.3
(b) Imports Mb/d	368.5	404.8	392.3	395.0	434.4	446.8	485.6	529.1	568.9	671.1	769.6	897.4	797.6	817.1

(P) Preliminary
(E) Estimate

3. During the years 1962 to 1975, western Canadian crude was used in Montreal or the Maritimes only in the fall of 1973 and the early part of 1974. According to figures supplied by the Manufacturing and Primary Industries Division of Statistics Canada, the relative average costs of crude oil receipts of domestic and foreign origin at refineries in eastern Canada were as follows during those two years:

	$ per barrel
	Domestic	Imported
1973
Province of Quebec	4.81	3.84
Atlantic Provinces	—	3.36
1974
Province of Quebec	6.96	6.74*
Atlantic Provinces	7.47	6.29*

4. See No. 3. A statement prepared by the National Energy Board for the Committee of Public Works and Natural Resources dated 21 February, 1973 compared the cost of crude oil at Ontario and Quebec refineries over the years 1962 to 1972. An accompanying estimate suggested that imported crude oil would on average have been between 25 and 35 cents a barrel cheaper than domestic crude at Ontario refineries during those years. On the basis of that estimate, it may be computed that at Quebec refineries imported crude was in national terms, 20 per cent cheaper than domestic crude oil would have been during that period; this assessment takes no account of differences in the quality of the crude oils or in the mix of product demand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I think I took up about 20 minutes of my time this morning, and I hope to conclude my remarks in five or ten minutes. There are a few other points which I would like to make in this debate before concluding. One of them came to my attention this morning. I would like to mention the fact that the government has been holding back information which could have been used by all members of the House in this debate and which might have been of assistance to members in quoting statistics.

There is a booklet that came out from Statistics Canada called "Homicide Canada", of which the Solicitor General is aware. It was listed in the pink sheets which come to our offices regularly. In a debate of this type, when we are deciding such a serious question, the Solicitor General's department must have known that this booklet was being prepared for information. It was available a week ago, so it could have been made available to hon. members a month ago so that they could use the correct figures. There is good material here for both abolitionists and retentionists, and we can hope the figures are correct.

If one goes through the debate on capital punishment since the start, one finds that every member seems to have stated different figures for different types of murder, and none of the figures seem to correspond. If this material had been put in the hands of members of parliament at the start of the debate, instead of being mentioned on a pink sheet in the hope that each member would notice it, it would have been helpful to us. I think it should have been sent to every member's office with a letter from the Solicitor General's department saying that this booklet was available and should be read before the debate. It would have helped the debate come along a little further, and I think it would have made a little more sense than some of the speeches I have read. I condemn the Solicitor General's Department for making sure that that booklet was not available to the people taking part in this debate.

● (1510)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has made some serious allegations against me with respect to the publication of this report by Statistics Canada. I want to point out that my department, and I as the minister, had absolutely no control over that report. It was prepared and put out by Statistics Canada, and as hon. members know, it would be completely wrong for a minister to interfere with the publication date or with the content of any report put out by Statistics Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I was advised by Statistics Canada that the report would be ready last week. Statistics Canada asked me if I wanted to be briefed on the report. Unfortunately, I had no time. I was in committee with Bill C-83, and in the House with this debate. So Statistics Canada said that it would publish the report in the ordinary course of its business, and that was done. But my department had nothing to do with the publication or preparation of the report.

I might say that most of the statistics in the report have been available in other reviews and publications which I did put out, in particular, the ones which were tabled by the Minister of Justice and myself at the beginning of the debate.

Mr. Reynolds: I do not think that is a question of privilege. It is a bunch of garbage.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Mr. Reynolds: It is a pity this government cannot keep things together when we are debating such a serious issue as capital punishment, and that the minister can stand in this House and tell us that he does not know what is going on with regard to a document which is very important to the debate. I think his department should have some contact with Statistics Canada and should have known when this document was to be made available to the House.

I put a question on the order paper on May 14; I asked the following:

1. How many persons in Canada have been charged and/or convicted of murder or manslaughter more than once?

2. In each case (a) what are their names, (b) how was the sentence disposed of, (c) when was each eligible for parole where prison terms were involved, (d) what was the length of the sentence served?

I think those are important questions to this debate.

Mr. Allmand: Available for years—months.

Mr. Reynolds: I do not know why the minister could not answer it on the order paper in the last couple of weeks. The Prime Minister quoted the information. There are one or two other things I would like to quote before I finish. I mentioned in my speech this morning a gentleman named Dr. Ezzat Fattah, chairman of the Simon Fraser University criminology department. I would like to quote a couple of things he said about this bill, as follows:

On February 24, 1976 the Liberal government tabled one of the most retrogressive pieces of legislation ever presented in the House of Commons—the so-called "Peace and Security Program" . . .

Among the studies and programs to which the government is committing itself in the explanatory notes to C-84, one tries in vain to find anything that might allow a better understanding of the phenomenon which the bill seeks to control—the phenomenon of criminal homicide, or, put more simply, why people kill and how killing can be prevented.

And among the so-called peace and security measures one finds no mention whatsoever of any steps aimed at correcting or improving the social injustices and the social conditions that are inducive to murder.

I am happy to agree, for once at least, with Dr. Fattah and his points. I hope the Solicitor General did not use Dr. Fattah just for his abolitionist views, but also for some of his other ideas, in presenting this bill and Bill C-83. I would like to finish by talking about the committee to which this bill will go. I had intended to move some amendments at second reading to refer this bill to committee for discussion, which I thought should take place before we voted on second reading, based on some points raise by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and by other hon. members of this House. This being a free vote, I felt that some hon. members should have a chance to discuss some of these issues before we vote on the bill in principle. But it seems that the majority of hon. members want to vote on second reading next Tuesday, and I think that is probably a good idea. Therefore, I am not going to move my motions at second reading, but I am certainly prepared to move them at committee stage and at third reading, as are other hon. members.

I just cannot see how the government can hope to get this bill through committee stage and third reading by the end of this month, and I suggest to the government House leader that the committee sessions should not be as they were on Bill C-58, and that his party should allow some government members who are retentionists to sit on that committee. Certainly, there are some government members who are retentionists and they should be allowed to sit on the committee in relation to the number of votes. It is a free vote, and hon. members opposite who are retentionists should have the right to sit on that committee. I say that because I remember, when we were discussing Bill C-58, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) made a great speech at second reading and said she would only vote with the government on second reading to get the bill into committee where all the work would be done. Some of us who had been here a bit longer knew that that was a naive statement and that she would have a hard time achieving changes in the committee. That certainly proved true, because the government did not even allow her to sit as a voting member on that committee. She had to sit on the outside.

I suggest that the same thing will happen when the matter of capital punishment gets into the committee. The government will use its power to make sure that hon. members opposite who sit on that committee will all be abolitionists, and the bill will be hammered through committee. No witnesses will be called, a certain schedule will be set, and members will not be able to call the witnesses they want to call. On a bill as important as this one, we should have the RCMP talk to us so that we can find out their reasons for wanting capital punishment. We should hear people from the prison system. Perhaps we should hear people who have been condemned in the past, so that they can give us their views as to whether it would be a deterrent. I really do not believe the government will allow it to go that way.

Everyone wants to get out of here at the end of June. I have five children at home who would like to see me home from July 1 on, as well. When we debated this matter last time, we went right into July. I think we should have the vote on second reading on Tuesday, and I am willing to forgo putting my amendments and not to try to stall or delay this bill so that we can have the vote to find out what hon. members think about it. The government should be prepared to leave the committee hearings and third reading until the fall. I do not know what the rush is. The government has commuted present sentences—or stayed them—so it will not matter for a few extra months.

Mr. Allmand: Wrong again.

Mr. Reynolds: I wish the minister would stand up and say that. He has stayed sentences for a long time.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has intervened once during the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) on a question of privilege which was to correct something the hon. member said. This is a debate. There are opportunities for discussion and disagreement. I would be most reluctant to allow the minister to intervene a second time simply to register a disagreement with the remarks which are being made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

Mr. Reynolds: The minister will have ample time to speak. I am sure he called me a liar across the floor of the House, and I hope he will say that in his speech. He has stayed sentences—

Mr. Allmand: That is different from commuting.

Mr. Reynolds: I said "stayed". I admitted I made a mistake.

Mr. Allmand: I apologize.

Mr. Reynolds: I do not think there is any reason for the minister to call a person a liar. He is a little bit touchy about this, and I think he should apologize.

Some hon. Members: He apologized.

Mr. Reynolds: I thank the minister for his apology. I see no reason why this matter cannot go over to the fall so that we can have full committee hearings and a full debate on third reading. But the government is rushing to push this bill through by the end of June. I can guarantee hon. members that it will not get through by the end of June. There are enough speakers on this side of the House, and enough amendments which we want to discuss, so that any hon. member opposite thinking of going home on July 1 should change his vacation plans. There is no reason to believe that the government is any more honest now than it has been during the past eight years, or that the Prime Minister will allow people to be hanged. If this bill is defeated, I think the Prime Minister will continue to commute sentences, as he has for the past eight years.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that if they want to go home on July 1, their best bet is to vote against this government bill, which would leave us with the law which is in force right now: that is abolition anyway, because this government does not believe in hanging anyone. I would like to close by quoting an English philosopher, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen. He observed:

> —that if murder could be prevented by the fine of one shilling it would still break the moral bonds of society to impose only one-shilling fine on murderers.

Mr. Speaker, of course, a life sentence is not a shilling—nor is it a life sentence—but to many Canadians it still seems a cut-rate price-tag on their own lives. When people feel undervalued, the moral bonds of society begin to show the strain.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion in the name of Mr. Allmand. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: It is more than difficult for the Chair to determine the preponderance of those people with strong voices. In any case, to be more serious, there has already been an indication by the House that a recorded division is desired. I do not think it is too necessary to go on with the formality of attempting to give either the yeas or nays at this point. It is well understood that a recorded division will take place. I understand it is the will of the House that the division will be deferred, and therefore we have arrived, by the taking of the yeas and nays, at the conclusion of the debate.

It is hereby ordered that the recorded division will be deferred to a time to be announced by the government House leader when the House leaders have had an opportunity to confer.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, you have indicated the desire of the House as included in the House order. May I issue an invitation for the House leaders to meet in my office at five o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we accept.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): D'accord.

* * *

[Translation]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. This bill has been under consideration for a number of days on second reading and in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs as well. The latter has considered every clause of the bill during several meetings. Further, the content of the bill has been discussed at length not only inside the House but outside as well. Essentially, the bill does not intend to reduce the total federal contribution to the cost of insured services that it pays now but rather to limit for the coming years the rate or level of growth of the medical insurance costs.

Everyone is aware that the various governments are greatly concerned about the costs increases in expenditures earmarked for health services.

Provincial governments are really aware of that and so is the federal government. On second reading and before the committee, I already had the opportunity to explain all debates preceding the introduction of this bill under study by the House, and the reasons which prompted this government to set a specific growth rate in the bill.

As a result of representations made by members of Parliament and many citizens outside the House, the government made some changes in the bill which, although they may not meet all the objectives of the opposition, will at least have shortened the gap separating us from those against the adoption of this bill. Particularly, we agreed on a formula under which the growth rate ceiling would not be established from the third year after enactment of the legislation, but determined only after consultation with the provinces through an order in council.

We also agreed that the rate would be subject to debate in the House if enough members were to ask that the order in council adopted by the government be discussed in the House. So, once again, this bill is intended to meet the general concern of the public about the rate of growth of health expenditures and, in addition, still provides for the continuation of a substantial contribution to medical insurance expenditures.

I remind hon. members that we anticipate a rate of growth of expenditures for the current year that will be 14.5 or 14.6 per cent higher than the expenditures for the previous year. Next year, that rate of growth will be 12 per cent. So I suggest that hon. members remember that since October 1975 we have asked Canadian workers to limit their demands to 8 per cent, with a possibility of adjustment up to 10 and possibly 12 per cent in certain cases in their collective agreements.

The total amount that will be available for medical insurance this year in terms of federal government contributions will increase by 14.5 per cent on a national average basis. So I think it would be wrong to suggest that the rate of increase was set too low. In fact, the discussions I had with my provincial colleagues in recent months seemed to indicate that they will be able to meet without difficulty that maximum rate of increase set in this bill, and therefore I think we will have shown the effectiveness of the legislation now before the House. I am convinced that the mere fact that it was announced in the budget of June 1975 and introduced in the House a little later in this session already had a beneficial effect as far as the reduction in the rate of growth of medical insurance expenditures is concerned.

I would also like to remind hon. members that just two days ago the government submitted to provincial governments a new financing formula that would consist in a transfer of a certain number of tax points as well as an equal per capita payment across the country. That formula met with the approval of most provinces in principle. The premiers agreed that the ministers of finance would discuss this in greater detail at their meeting early in July, and they indicated that the provincial ministers of health as well as ministers responsible for education and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) would participate in various stages of those discussions to reach a specific and detailed proposal that would attract the general consent of the provinces and the federal government.

I am confident we shall succeed through these discussions to reach an agreement rather quickly, and I indicated that my officials and myself are willing to pursue them with the utmost speed possible. We might conclude an agreement coming into force as early as next year, if the provinces are really interested in the implementation of such a program. But the agreement might also have to be postponed for a period of a few years in the health area, for the simple reason that as far as hospital insurance is concerned, the federal government is still committed for another four years at least. Because we must serve five years' notice, as we did last July, to terminate the agreement on hospital care.

If the provinces wish to maintain these agreements in force until 1980 in the hospital insurance area, there is nothing the federal government can do to prevent them. But in the name of the federal government, I indicated quite clearly to all provinces that if they were willing to reach an agreement on a new financing formula well before 1980, so terminating ahead of time the agreement reached under the Hospital Insurance Act, the federal government would be quite willing in turn to implement without delay a financing formula that would certainly be more flexible than the current one. It would not require the provinces to contribute an amount equal to the federal contribution. The only condition would be that the funds involved, which will be transferred in the form of fiscal points and per capita payments, be allocated entirely to the health and education areas, and meet certain general criteria such as we have in the medical insurance area. However, it is very clear we would have much more flexibility than we now have under the Hospital Insurance Act.

Therefore Bill C-68, now at the third reading stage in this House, may not be implemented for a good number of years to come. In my view it is realistic to expect that it will certainly apply this year, and probably next year also. But if we are successful, with the provinces, to show as much speed and cooperation as was experienced last Monday, I am hopeful we might have a new financing formula for health services for 1978, if not April 1977. I feel the current state of federal-provincial relations is encouraging in this area. I also feel this special bill on the limitation of medical insurance expenses will be of a transitory nature, because I am convinced that before 1980 at least we will have reached with the provinces a new agreement covering medical insurance, hospital insurance and post-secondary education expenses, to which the federal government has already been contributing for a number of years.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I wanted to say at this stage of the debate on third reading of the bill. I hope hon. members will want to consider the bill in the light of what I indicated, so that it can go through all stages without delay.

● (1530)

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the minister a question in order to clarify one point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. minister accept a question from the hon. member?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I understand from the minister's remarks that the proposals which were put before the first ministers with respect to the new tax-sharing formula will not apply in any province which wishes to continue for the remaining four years in the present Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act program, if that province wishes to remain under the 50-50 sharing program?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to imply that in my statement. If I did, I would like to thank the hon. member for providing me with the opportunity to clarify this matter.

I do not think it is realistic or possible to have a system whereby some provinces continue cost-sharing on a 50-50 basis while others start having tax points and per capita grants between now and 1980. If a province were to favour the early implementation of the tax-sharing formula, this would require the unanimous approval of the provinces, for the simple reason that we need to have a firm formula for per capita grants on a national basis. It would be difficult to do this if you had some provinces operating on a 50-50 basis and others operating on tax points and per capita grants. I am advised that what would be required, in those circumstances, would be unanimous agreement to cut off the five-year agreement under hospital insurance and switch to the new financing formula that has been proposed by the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I understand the minister is saying that unless there is unanimous consent by the provinces to terminate the agreement under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, that formula, on a 50-50 basis, will continue until 1980?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, that would be my understanding as far as hospital insurance is concerned. Obviously, the situation with medicare is different. It would be a matter of decision as to whether it would be worth while having a tax point and per capita system operating only for medicare while we still have hospital insurance operating on a 50-50 basis.

My own inclination would be to insist that we decide the whole issue at the same time, rather than having an ad hoc type of operation where we would be covering only part of the health field in terms of tax points. If I were to make any case, I think it would have to be on the basis of both programs being changed under a new health financing formula.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I begin by saying that we recognize and accept the fact that there is a need for restraint in spending. I think all the provinces recognize the fact that spending in the area of health care has been going on more rapidly than perhaps they had hoped. With that in mind, we have to question very seriously the approach this government has been taking in its desire to cut costs in the health field, as indeed in any other field.

One of the important factors that has to exist in this country if confederation is to survive, and if there is to be a decent kind of relationship between the federal and provincial governments, is a feeling of mutual respect and trust between those governments. We have a situation in Canada at the present time where that feeling of mutual respect and trust has been severely eroded by the action taken by the federal government under this bill.

Generally speaking, Canadians, and indeed people anywhere in the world, believe that if a contract is made between two parties, that agreement must be abided by both parties until one of two things happens: either the agreement expires and becomes no longer relevant for that reason, or it is renegotiated by meaningful, careful negotiation, by both parties.

A number of years ago, when the medicare law was introduced into the federal parliament, only one province—I believe it was the province of Saskatchewan—thought it could participate and, indeed, was anxious to participate in that legislation almost immediately. The remaining provinces had some very grave reservations. It meant a very substantial realignment of their own priorities. I recall reading some of the debates at that time. One question which stands out very vividly in my mind was put by one of the provincial ministers, who asked, "But how do we know that when the federal government realizes how costly this operation is going to be, it will not back out of its commitment to the provinces". We have exactly that situation now.

This reflects the fact that the Liberal government at that time was perhaps working under a good deal of ignorance. It did not think through the consequences of the legislation it was putting forward. I refer, of course, to the economic consequences. We now have a situation where the prophecy of that provincial minister is indeed coming true.

It is naive for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to say that the provinces now are not sufficiently motivated to try to cut costs, at least to the same extent that he is, because under the existing agreement they have maintained 50 per cent of the cost. We have a situation where one party to the contract, namely, the federal government, is trying to weasel out of its obligation to the provinces. My concern is that this kind of behaviour can do nothing but damage the relationship between the provincial governments and the federal government.

● (1540)

We know that costs have been rising rapidly, but we also know that taking unilateral action to change the agreement has put the federal government under a great deal of suspicion in the eyes of the provinces. If the federal government is concerned at all about its future relations with the provinces, it should reconsider this bill. Once suspicion develops in the minds of the provincial administrations with regard to proposals put forward by the federal government, it becomes virtually impossible to conduct meaningful negotiations between the two levels of government. This is the type of situation which is building up now.

I do not think I can say that we in this party are against the principle of ceilings on expenditures. What we are against is the idea that the minister can somehow make unilateral decisions and announce them to the provinces, and that the provinces can go to hell if they do not like what is offered. We are opposed to such an approach.

We recall that when the medicare legislation was first put forward by the federal government, a great deal of concern was expressed about its cost. But the federal government insisted that the plan should go ahead no matter what the cost might be, and to a great extent forestalled objections on financial grounds by undertaking to contribute toward the cost on a 50-50 basis. In these circumstances, the provinces went ahead with the plan, and now they are stuck with it. The Liberal government of the day devised the whole scheme. It should have known what it was getting into. Now that the picture is somewhat clearer, members across the way seem to be taking the position that a change can be made in the agreement without the concurrence of the other party.

When we first heard of this legislation, we thought it was merely a club of some sort which the federal government wanted to use to force the provinces to move more speedily insofar as the rearrangement of the cost-sharing formula was concerned. Today, however, we realize that the bill is more in the nature of a preview of what the minister would like to do in connection with all the cost-sharing arrangements with the provinces. I see the hon. gentleman is smiling. If he thinks I am not stating the situation accurately as far as the provincial governments are concerned, all he has to do is to think back to the beginning of this week when certain proposals were made to the provincial premiers in connection with cost-sharing.

The results of that conference were reflected in newspaper headlines of which I have one or two examples before me. Here is one from the Gazette of June 16: "Premiers talks end in uproar!" Another from the same paper, of the same date, reads: "Federal-provincial jungle is a jungle like no other." Headlines of this sort express clearly the results of the attitude the minister has taken toward the cost-sharing agreements which have been made. There is a general feeling in the provinces that the word of the government, the word of the minister, is simply no good. I hope the hon. gentleman will take the appropriate action to correct that situation. If I were in his boots, I would feel extremely uncomfortable. I suggest there will be hard times ahead for the government if it does not change its attitude. Its present course has resulted in severe damage to the contractual credibility of the Federal administration when dealing with the provinces, as well as severe damage to a variety of useful arrangements of mutual benefit. In the long run, of course, it is bound to be detrimental to confederation itself and to the people of Canada.

I urge the minister to change his mind with regard to this measure. As I say, we support the idea of restraint, but there is a factor which is more important to Canada than simply forcing this legislation through the House. If the hon. gentleman is interested in making meaningful future arrangements with the provinces, he needs to rebuild the feeling of trust and confidence which is required. The best way to begin to do this would be by withdrawing Bill C-68 and going back to the provinces with an open mind and a sincere desire to negotiate.

Mr. Darling: And a contrite heart.

Mr. Yewchuk: Yes, that too. Unless he does so, then for the next two years, at least, I believe there will be little possibility of making the arrangements which the hon. gentleman described in his opening comments. He indicated that the progress of the talks with the provinces was encouraging. But I do not believe him. I do not see any evidence of encouragement from either the premiers' conference or the conference of health ministers held earlier this month. When he says that talks are progressing well, he is simply whistling in the wind. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I have said enough today. The minister seems appropriately ashamed of himself, so I hope that the matter is given serious consideration by him.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-68, designed to place a ceiling on the federal government's contribution to the medical care program, has been before the House for many months. Now we come to third reading. It may seem to be a waste of time to debate it further, but I think it essential that we take some time to make one last, desperate effort to persuade the government and members on the other side of the House to recognize what a dangerous course the government is pursuing with respect to the health services of this country.

● (1550)

This legislation is being introduced on the ground that the cost of medical care has been growing too rapidly and that therefore the government must put a cap on its expenditures in the years ahead. It is true that some minimal amendments to the bill were made when it went through the committee of the House, but the basic restrictions are still there. The mere fact that the provinces have to be consulted means very little. Consultations with the provinces in the past have merely consisted of ministers of health or the premiers being called to Ottawa to be told what the federal government is going to do, and they can either accept it or lump it.

If enough members of the House ask for a debate on whatever formula the government sets for the third year, it will simply be an exercise in futility. Members are able to express their opposition, as members on this side of the House have been doing for some months, but this will not alter the government's decision. Therefore, the fact that the government has welshed on its commitments to the provinces when they came into medicare has now become the established principle that the government proposes to follow.

The minister has been complaining recently, according to the press, about the fact that the provinces have not wholeheartedly embraced his income security program. I have attended a lot of federal provincial conferences, and I imagine that some of the premiers feel the same way that I feel about them; that is, when the federal government invites you to join in a shared program, you had better go in very carefully. Otherwise you may find that, having made commitments and set up a program, the federal government is liable to pull the rug from under you and leave you holding the baby. That is why the provinces have been hesitant about entering the income security program. They have, right here, a concrete illustration of what happens when they do go into a shared program and the government pulls the rug from under them.

This is not unusual with Liberal administrations. I remember the late 1940s, when the Hon. Paul Martin was minister of health and he induced the provinces to go into a physical fitness program. I was one of the premiers who was most enthusiastic about a physical fitness program and we set up a very excellent administration. Then three years later the federal government walked out and left our administration with the choice either of dropping the program or financing it ourselves. The province of Saskatchewan proceeded to finance it on their own, but it taught them the lesson that when you go into a shared-cost program with the federal government, you had better have long-term commitments or you are liable to be left to pay the bill yourself.

The fact is that Bill C-68 is really the first major step in dismantling health insurance in Canada as it was originally envisaged in 1957 when the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was passed, and in 1968 when the medicare program became nationwide. The reason is given that costs have been rising too rapidly. There is no doubt that costs have risen rapidly. However, I think the House ought to take cognizance of the fact that the cost of everything else has risen. In particular, health costs have risen in other countries which do not have health insurance, to a far greater extent than they have risen in Canada.

Those who oppose health insurance—usually those who are comfortably well off and who do not worry about meeting their health care costs—point to the United States where health care costs are met on an individual basis. In that country, as the minister has already pointed out, our American neighbours spend a higher percentage of their gross national product on health care—they have no health insurance program—than we do in Canada, where we do have a health insurance program. We have the best health insurance program in the western hemisphere: not the best in the world, but certainly the best in the western hemisphere. This does not mean, of course, that we should be satisfied to let the cost of health care continue to escalate without our doing anything to limit that escalation. All of us want to eradicate any abuse of or wastage in health insurance programs. But we ought not to fall into the trap, as some members have in the course of this debate, of laying the blame at the feet of the public for over-utilization.

First of all, only a doctor can decide whether a patient requires surgery or diagnostic procedures such as X-rays and lab tests. Any patient who walks into a doctor's office and says, "I would like an appendectomy" is not going to get an appendectomy. It is not like ordering a pair of shoes in a store. Only if a doctor decides that some care or treatment is required will a patient get it. The same is true of hospital care. A hospital is not an hotel where you check in and decide that you want a few days rest. No person can enter a hospital unless a doctor signs an admission form, and no patient can remain in a hospital once a doctor has authorized his dismissal. I have been surprised to hear some of the members of the House who belong to the medical profession—I see several of them here—advocating, in the course of this debate, the imposition of deterrent fees both for persons entering hospital and for persons who go to see a doctor.

Mr. Philbrook: Not from this doctor you haven't.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A doctor, more than anybody else, has control over what treatment a patient will receive, whether or not he will be admitted to hospital and how long he will be allowed to stay there. If there are doctors who are abusing the plan—and there may be—then surely this is a matter for the medical association to take up and exercise what discipline it can upon its members.

When both hospital insurance and then medicare were established in the province of Saskatchewan, one of the things that the medical profession said to us was, "We don't want you policing us; we will police our own members". I, personally, agreed with them. I think they are in a better position to police their own members than is a government board. But let not anyone, particularly members of the medical profession, talk about overutilization unless they themselves are prepared to exercise some discipline with reference to their own members.

The imposition of deterrent fees, whether for hospital care or medical care, is not an answer to the problem. As a matter of fact, those who take the trouble to read the report of the royal commission on health care headed by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall will find in the report that Mr. Justice Hall and his colleagues examined the situation of those provinces that had hospital insurance. They examined the case of Saskatchewan, which had rejected the idea of deterrent fees, and compared it with the provinces that had adopted deterrent fees. They found that in the province of Saskatchewan the morbidity rate and the average length of stay in hospital was less than in the provinces which had adopted deterrent fees. Therefore, in my opinion deterrent fees are not necessary.

● (1600)

I heard in the course of the debate some comment about hypochondriacs, people who have imaginary illnesses, taking up the doctor's time and occupying scarce beds in our hospitals. Naturally there are hypochondriacs. We have always had hypochondriacs. But there are rich hypochondriacs as well as poor hypochondriacs, and the difference is that the rich hypochondriacs are able to pay for having somebody rub their backs and keep them in hospital. The fact is that people who think they are sick, are sick. They may not be ill with the things about which they complain, but they certainly are in need of treatment, either psychiatric or counselling.

An hon. Member: They are incurable.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They need treatment.

Mr. Railton: They are incurable.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The doctor says they are incurable. It may be they are.

Mr. Railton: Everyone recognizes that.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The doctor is not quite right when he says everybody recognizes that, because his own profession is becoming increasingly aware of the psychosomatic aspects of medicare. A great many people can be helped by the provision of psychiatric care.

Mr. Railton: Not those.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Certainly, the fact that we have people who imagine they are ill and who require medical attention ought not to be an excuse for imposing deterrent fees.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Railton: We never got much of that in my time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not know whether they took up much of the doctor's time, and I am not sure it did them any good to take up his time, but I do not want the hon. member taking up my time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is putting the doctor in his place.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of course we are concerned about high costs, but the answer to the high cost of health care in this country is not going to be resolved by imposing ceilings on federal government or provincial governments' contributions. In fact, I think I can show the House that the imposition of such ceilings will be counterproductive rather than beneficial.

Many years ago, when some of us were first arguing for health insurance in this country and when we managed to get legislation passed for health insurance, first in the provinces and then in the federal House, we kept pointing out that there were two phases to health insurance. The first phase was to remove the financial burden between the individuals providing health care and those receiving health care. That is an important burden, and one of the things that this country can be proud of is that we have finally removed the financial barrier, thus enabling the person who is ill to go to the doctor and get whatever treatment is necessary, and to be put in hospital to have all the benefits which modern medical science can provide.

At that time we kept pointing out that there was a second phase to health insurance. It is that if we are not going to undertake almost impossible financial burdens, we have to begin immediately to change the health delivery system. That is the problem which really faces us. What strikes me about this minister and his department is that they have known for a long time, and they have said it in some of their publications, that they way to reduce the cost of health insurance in this country is to change the delivery system and replace some of the high-cost services with low-cost services.

The minister and his department have been told this by the provinces and they have been offered the co-operation of the provinces to bring this about. In May, 1973, when the federal government proposed to the provinces that Ottawa's contribution to medicare should be equated with the gross national product, the provinces rejected that, I think in September, 1974. The provinces put forth, as an alternative, the suggestion that the federal and provincial governments should begin immediately to work on programs to replace the high-cost services with low-cost services.

As the minister admitted when he introduced this bill, the federal government agreed with the provinces to set up committees to study how this could be brought about, but in the budget of one year ago the federal government sabotaged the work of those committees. Without consultation, the government announced it was going to give the required five-year notice to terminate the hospital insurance and diagnostic services program, and only a few months later introduced Bill C-68, which we are now discussing, to put a ceiling on its contribution to medicare. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has done virtually nothing to work out with the provinces the kind of programs which would enable us to reduce our expenditures for high-cost programs by substituting low-cost programs. It is apparent to anyone that unless we introduce low-cost programs first we cannot eliminate high-cost programs.

For instance, in some parts of Canada today hospitals are being closed, but there is little value in closing active treatment hospitals if there is no place to put the patients who should be moved to low-cost nursing homes. There is no doubt that there are people in hospitals today who have suffered a stroke, who are incapacitated, and some are terminal cases—and it costs anywhere from $100 to $150 a day to keep them there—who could be cared for quite adequately in nursing homes, if we were building nursing homes. Once we build the nursing homes and can move these people into them, then it makes sense to close hospitals. But it does not make sense to close them if we have no place to put these people who are today in active treatment hospital beds.

I am sure every member of this House has come across cases of men who have had a stroke or who are bedridden and cannot be sent home because the wife is not well and there is no one to care for them. Until we get alternative programs we will not be able to cut costs. What we will do, as a matter of fact, is increase the cost in the long run, because if people cannot get into hospital and there are delays, when they get in and they are in an acute state they will stay for a long time. Everyone knows that a patient who comes in for an appendectomy may be out in a few days. If he comes in with a ruptured appendix he will be in the hospital for a considerably longer time. We are not saving money by putting the cap on. The intelligent way to deal with the problem of health care costs is to work with the province in instituting low-cost services and then be in a position to reduce the high-cost services.

● (1610)

The provinces have been trying to persuade the federal government to join with them in instituting cost-shared programs for such services. A lot could be done in this country by the establishment of more nursing homes, the provision of home-care treatment, meals on wheels, more extended care units in hospitals, more physiotherapy units in hospitals, more denticare programs in this country, particularly for children, in order that a preventive dental program could be carried on, and pharma-care for the aged. These are the types of programs that would reduce the incidence of illness and in the long run would cut down the cost of health insurance.

Those of us who through the years have talked about a new delivery system have been stressing the need for altering the focus on health care in this country. In the past we thought of the practice of medicine in terms of curative medicine and public health care, but many countries in the world now have switched their emphasis to preventative health programs. Some starts have been made in this country. But really there has been very little leadership from the Department of National Health and Welfare. We have a few community health clinics which have succeeded in involving the public in programs for physical fitness, proper dieting, weight watching and periodic medical examinations with a view to curing incipient illnesses before they have reached a dangerous stage. However, these are minuscule compared to the total need in this country. We really do not have a preventative health program.

No one need tell the members of this House that in the long run it costs less to keep people well than to cut them up and patch them up after they are dangerously ill. If the government really wants to tackle the problem of the high cost of health care in Canada, we ought to be tackling the problem of preventive health programs. For instance, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) could help a great deal by offering financial incentives for doctors to go into group practice, and for the establishment of group practice in the smaller hospitals where there would be diagnostic facilities, X-ray facilities and physiotherapy units.

This would save money and it would bring about better liaison between the general practitioners and the specialists, and better liaison between the medical personnel and the para-medical personnel who operate in the health field. I believe the day must come in Canada when we will have the facilities in the various communities so that the people will go regularly to clinics, so that the health of people will be checked periodically, and so that we will have a preventative program in which we get help to the people before they have suffered serious illnesses.

What has the federal government done in this field? I am disappointed. It is now eight years since we took the first step of establishing medicare in this country. It was a forward step. The late Lester B. Pearson and his government, along with the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who was minister of national health and welfare at that time, are to be commended for that forward step. However, we have taken few steps since to begin to change the health delivery system to any serious extent, and we are paying the price because the whole delivery system of merely curative medicine is expensive and will become increasingly expensive.

What have we done about nursing homes? Some steps have been taken, but they have been really meagre. A few communities have established home nursing care and meals on wheels programs, but only in isolated instances. Some of the hospitals have established physiotherapy units, psychotherapy units and extended care units. Many of the hospitals have not been able to do this. Such programs make a great deal of difference in the treatment of people, because outpatient units mean it is not necessary to feed and look after people in hospitals. They can come from their homes for treatment, and return again.

We have done very little to expand health clinics across this country. Many of the younger doctors would be prepared, with financial incentives, to go into health clinics across this country if they were set up. The other night I attended a meeting of health care executives. Some of the young health care personnel told me how delighted they were when they read the booklet put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare called "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians". I do not know who wrote that booklet, but I pay tribute to whoever it is.

However, since I read it I have been wondering whether or not the minister has read it.

Mr. Lalonde: I wrote it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the minister wrote it, then I congratulate him for doing so, but condemn him for having done nothing about the policy he enunciated in the booklet. It is not enough to write about very fine fullsome programs, and not put them into practice.

We have done nothing at all in this country about physical fitness programs. Countries in which the people are much less wealthy than we are have effective physical fitness programs. In the minister's pamphlet, which I am now glad to be able to identify, "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians", we find this statement: "We must improve our lifestyle and environment". I think that is something with which all of us would agree wholeheartedly. But I ask the minister what his department has done, or what the government with which he is associated has done, about improving our lifestyle and environment. We need merely to look across this country and see the evidence of mercury poisoning from which the Indian people are suffering, the arsenic emissions in the Northwest Territories, the cancer from asbestos fibres, the cancer found in miners at Elliot Lake, and the situation in the oil sands where Syncrude is beginning to get its plant under way. The report of the Department of the Environment suggests a maximum emission of 40 tons a day, while we have an emission of 280 tons per day. We might look at the Eldorado situation and Port Hope where people are being moved out of their homes because of the radiation-contaminated fill there. That was put there 25 years ago. What has been done about it? How can this go on?

● (1620)

Last Thursday I raised the matter in the House. I spoke about the fact that the great Canadian Oil Sands are pouring 400,000 gallons a day from its tailings into the Athabasca river. When I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) what he was doing about it, he said he would look at it. But his own department's report based on tests made in August, 1974, shows that there is an undue degree of toxicity in the tailings being put into the river. Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, it is only a short time ago that we were treated by the Liberal government opposite to a public relations program in which they were going to restore for Canadians clean air and pure water. What clean air and pure water? The Canadian Waters Act—and I remember when it was being introduced by the former minister, Jack Davis—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now a Social Crediter.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): — some of us said that this was simply a public relations gesture, and the government was very annoyed about this. Under that legislation, no national standards have been set up for what pollutants you can pump into a river, lake or coastal waters, as far as I know, and not one water quality management area has been established. When I asked the minister about it the other day, he said he would deal with the matter under the Fisheries Act. He has the power to act.

A moment ago when I spoke about conditions in which the people of this country have to live, somebody from across the way said that this is under provincial jurisdiction. Under the legislation for clean air and pure water the federal government has jurisdiction. Under section 16 of the Canadian Waters Act the Minister of the Environment has the power, if he chooses, to act without the provinces. He can do it under section 9 with the provinces, but under section 16 he can set up a water quality management area without the consent of the provinces, and thus deal with the pollutants that are being poured into the water.

Is this how we are improving our lifestyle and our environment? I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare: Where are our programs for industrial health and safety in this country? In 1974, 1,415 people were killed on the job. Where is our industrial safety program? The government is very good at writing pamphlets and portraying the vision of what Canada could or should be, but I must say that it gets very low marks for putting its dreams into practice. This is a government of big smoke and very little fire.

If the government really wants to deal with the question of growing costs—and all of us agree in the House that costs must be held down to a reasonable percentage—then it is taking the most counterproductive method of dealing with increased health costs. As I have already pointed out, we are not spending an undue percentage of our gross national product in health care, but that does not alter the fact that we do not want it to get out of hand. We are going to put a ceiling on the federal government's contributions, but we are doing nothing about revamping the health delivery system so as to make it possible to give the people of Canada adequate health care at a reasonable price.

The provinces have indicated their willingness to cooperate in such a program. My plea to the government is that what we ought to do is set this bill aside until we meet again in the fall. If you set it aside altogether, I would not object, but the government would not want to do that. However, if we set it aside until the fall and gave the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the provincial governments an opportunity to see if they can work out changes in our health delivery system which would be less costly and just as effective, then this bill would be totally unnecessary.

On top of this legislation, the federal government has now announced a new cost-sharing program which it wants the provinces to accept. I must say that if I was disturbed about the government giving notice last June of its intention to terminate the agreement with respect to hospital insurance and diagnostic services, and very annoyed at Bill C-68 which puts a ceiling on the federal government's contribution to medicare, I am even more concerned about the proposals which have been placed before the first ministers this week by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

We have only fragmentary information about it. Many of the proposals are in principle and no figures are given, no base year is stated. But I take it from the reports and what the minister said today that the government is proposing that it withdraw from its commitment to pay 50 per cent of the cost of hospital care and diagnostic services and physicians' fees, as well as its commitment to pay 50 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education. In proposing this, the government intends to replace the 50-50 share with the provinces by granting to them certain undefined tax points accompanied by equalization grants.

On the radio I heard the Prime Minister say that this will gear health costs to the annual growth in the economy, which he considers a more realistic approach to health care financing. I want briefly to give three reasons why I think this is a serious, retrograde step. First, we cannot equate health care with the growth of the gross national product. Capital costs for providing health care facilities may have to be adjusted according to the state of the economy, but health services cannot be geared to economic growth. The incidence of illness bears no relationship to our national productivity. Sick people have to be cared for and health services must be provided even in times of economic recession.

Indeed, this is one of the basic imperatives in establishing health insurance in Canada. We have no control over when epidemics may occur, and these must be dealt with regardless of the vagaries of the national economy. We can expand or contract highway construction or public building, but we cannot adjust health care to economic growth. Our first responsibility in a humane society is to get people well, and this must remain one of our major priorities. We had an illustration of this last year when the gross national product in this country showed virtually no growth, but the cost of living, the cost of health services and the cost of everything else went up. In a situation like that, how would it be possible for the provinces to provide health services which people need at a time when the gross national product stayed down? We might just as well tie the health contribution of the federal government to the temperature average for the year, or to how many gallons of water go over Niagara Falls, as tie it to the gross national product.

● (1630)

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wants to proceed, he will have unanimous consent because his allotted time has now expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thank hon. members for their kindness, and I will not impose on their good nature. I would just like to finish this point and I will be through.

The second weakness in this proposal is that tax points will provide proportionately less revenue for the less affluent provinces. The wealthier provinces may be able to weather the storm during a period of economic recession, but the poorer provinces will find it impossible to do so. The Rowell-Sirois report of the early 1940s, and the green book proposals of the late 1940s, were predicated on the goal of ensuring that all Canadian citizens, no matter where they might live, would be guaranteed uniform services with regard to health, education and social welfare. We are in danger of losing sight of this objective. Are we to return to the situation we once had, when the standard of services enjoyed by Canadians was determined by the financial affluence of the province in which they resided? If we take this retrograde step, we will remove the cornerstone of confederation and weaken the bonds which hold this nation together.

The third factor which disturbs me is that the less affluent areas of Canada will find that in order to meet their health care costs in a period of declining tax revenue, they must resort to deterrent fees and user service charges. In that event, the concept of uniform health insurance benefits will be destroyed and we shall have a patchwork of health programs across the country. The result will be that those areas of Canada which are already disadvantaged in many other respects will also have a lower standard of health care. To me, that would be the negation of the kind of Canadianism which we have been striving to create over the last quarter of a century.

In my opinion, a nation which is not prepared to make adequate health services available to all its citizens, regardless of income or residence, is a nation which is in danger of losing its vision, and when a nation loses its vision the people perish.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Bill C-68. We have heard today considerable discussion on the philosophy of health care, especially from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who as premier of Saskatchewan had much to do with the development of our present form of health care. This bill, essentially, involves limiting payments to doctors from the medical care portion of the federal purse. It points up a truism pointed out by the Hon. Enoch Powell when he was minister of health in the Macmillan government in Britain when he said that no matter what happens, health care must be limited in some manner. If it is not limited by taking from patients' pocketbooks, it has to be done by rationing the health care system, mainly at the doctors' offices or at the hospital door. Of course, the British national health system was limited because physicians had to see 100 or more patients within an hour or two, and people waited four or five years for elective operations which we would consider should be done within a week or two.

Probably most health care legislation is founded on the philosophy that if we spend only a certain amount of money, and if we do things right, health care will not be necessary, hospitals will not be needed and physicians would be out of a job. As a matter of fact, during the war years the British Labour party promoted the idea of national health care and told the British people that if a national health plan came into effect, hospitals would only be necessary because of lack of attention, and that with a proper health care plan hospitals would not be needed, doctors' services would be superfluous and that eventually the whole system would cost much less, and few beds would be needed. Of course, this flew in the face of reality.

Our population grows older as we keep alive those who might otherwise have died of acute illnesses such as diptheria and acute appendicitis. We save those who otherwise would have died of gall bladder disease, which is reasonably easily treated now, or heart conditions. These people now live longer and are hospital satistics for a longer time as they become older and more senile. Indeed, our problem is only just beginning, because our population is aging. The generation of the 1990s will be faced with a very old population. Statistics in the United States show that at the moment about four people are working for every one who is retired. By 1980, three will be working for every one who is retired, and it is expected that the figure will drop to something like 2.5 working for every one retired, assuming our retirement patterns remain the same.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands expressed the idea that yearly examinations would do much to reduce the cost of health care. That is a noble idea, but somewhat impractical. For instance, if everyone in Canada had a yearly examination lasting half an hour, assuming doctors worked an eight-hour day, those doctors would have little time left to practice the curative portion of medicine. That is just how many people there are. Of course, in the case of special examinations such as heart, brain, eye, chest or gastrointestinal tract examinations, these could go on for hours and hours. So while preventive medicine is good in itself, it takes time, and the rewards have to be balanced against this.

The ideal of community health clinics have been promoted as having the possibility of providing good health care. I can only say that very often it amounts to: Let Joe look after the work today while I take a couple of hours for golf. No matter where they work, whether by themselves, in large hospitals or in large groups, the important thing with physicians is their own reaction to their patients, and community health clinics and other health bodies have many disadvantages. In many ways they are inefficient, and many doctors are temperamentally unsuited for them. From my experience, I would say that perhaps half of our physicians should not be involved with community health centres. However, that is a personal thing.

In this discussion on reducing health care costs it seems rather incongruous that the government has reduced the portion it is spending on research by something like $5 million when we consider that we have an $8 billion—I saw that figure the other day—health budget. To my way of thinking, this is a poor method of saving money. Unless governments fund medicine, there are not many other ways to fund it. If we did not have the sort of national health scheme we have, no doubt this circumstance would still be with us. Having got what we have, however, the government of the day must provide the vast bulk of the money necessary for health research. Of course, the Cancer Society and the Heart Foundation have collected the millions of dollars across the country, but these are special cases. These two funds have a certain appeal as many people lose relatives from these afflictions.

● (1640)

It seems unfortunate that the minister chose this method of reducing health care costs, as it is a very difficult exercise. In hospitals, the first thing that the management wants to reduce is the drugs even though they amount only to about 2 per cent of the total budget. When you consider that other than surgery and care, drugs are the most important part of getting a patient well in any hospital, to be penny wise is to be pound foolish when it comes to drugs. But this is a feature of the modern line of thought on health care.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

This bill is really superfluous now that there has been the federal-provincial conference which took place a couple of days ago when the super-parliament of Canada met; that is, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the ten provincial premiers. I doubt whether Canada can survive as a democracy in a federal system if so much of the decision-making process is to go on behind closed doors when matters of great public importance are debated.

The provisions of this bill are only one small item on the agenda of the federal scheme. While we have days to discuss the proposal in this House, the federal-provincial conference had only a couple of hours. The public and the elected members of this House still do not know what they discussed. The item referred to as the established program financing proposals—EPFP—will go a long way significantly to alter the financial structure of confederation. I am not entirely against the proposal of the Prime Minister that the provinces should now take over and administer hospital insurance and medicare, even if some inequality should exist in the provinces. There are inequalities within the present system, and I do not believe there would be many more. There would be absolutely no point in doing this if there were a de facto redistribution of constitutional power which would permit the federal government to leave the health field and move squarely into the provincial field of education, as they seem to indicate they might.

We ask what the federal government and the Prime Minister are up to. Are they trying to get out of paying for federal-provincial programs such as hospital insurance and medicare and attempting to transfer these dollars to education? The proposals to give the provinces certain tax points by which the federal government would reduce its level of income tax while enabling the provinces to raise their tax, is without meaning until it is spelled out in actual dollars and until the effect it will have on the provisions of this bill is shown.

There has been a great deal of talk about per capita grants. I have always held that it would be better, in relation to shared-cost programs, to have a system of unconditional grants which would take provincial needs into account. I realize the very great difficulty in arriving at a formula which reflects the financial structure of each province, but presumably this new system of per capita grants to the provinces would be permitted to grow with the gross national product or some other escalator.

Will this formula provide a reasonable basis on which the provinces can plan and pay for medicare and hospital insurance that will give the citizens a reasonable standard of care and with, I think one might add, some uniformity across the country? There are differences in the medical care provided in different parts of this country, which cannot be ruled out. There is no doubt that people who live in large cities have a higher level of medical care available than those who live in the country. On the other hand, people who live in the country are not so likely to be run over by motor vehicles.

I can understand why the federal government wants to get out of paying half the cost of provincially administered programs when it can neither control nor accurately predict the cost. There are, obviously, several problems. In a general way, the richer provinces like the idea of extra tax points. At least, that is my view of what came out of the federal-provincial conference and what was voiced by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. He had a great deal of experience with this subject in his time as premier of Saskatchewan, because those were relatively hard days, although that province has now come up to the standard of the others.

There will still be problems with the poorer provinces, with their smaller tax base, being unsure that they will be able to cope with their obligations to their citizens. There will be the problem of maintaining national standards in the health care field, because under the federal proposal the tax points and per capita grants would be integrated with the actual cost of health services. As the provinces can spend the money they receive in any way they choose, almost certainly this will create some deviation in the standard of health care across the country. I do not necessarily believe this is an insurmountable problem.

In the way we measure health care, I believe there would be certain changes, but I have never been too sure that the standards we apply to health care are the best. For instance, we have hospital accreditation which, in essence, means that a group of super-civil servants go around the country looking at hospitals. The things they measure seem, to me, to reflect very little of the standard of care in any particular hospital. Teaching hospitals are rated by the American Medical Association or a branch of it which is involved in rating all hospitals on the North American continent.

Wrapped up in the proposals of the Prime Minister and their relationship to medicare financing and hospital insurance financing in relationship to this bill is the question of whether the federal government wants to get out of the funding of health costs in order that it can make a significant attack on the pattern of education in post-secondary schools across Canada. Will money that is allocated to health services such as contained in the provisions of this bill now be used for post-secondary education or in some other way such as language training or the promotion of Canadian studies?

Obviously, the government intends to introduce considerable educational content. This is typified by what came out of the federal-provincial conference a couple of days ago. There are major problems of how to relate the Prime Minister's proposals to the clauses in this bill. As I said, to me the bill seems to be quite superfluous to what we are now discussing. Here we are talking about a ceiling on hospital insurance, but in his proposals to the first ministers the Prime Minister gave no indication of how much money the federal government is talking about.

● (1650)

How many tax points are to be transferred? How large will the per capita grants be? With the Prime Minister failing to commit himself and making it virtually impossible for the provinces to assess the plan, it seems the height of ridiculousness when a federal official maintains that things will go much better if we can agree to the proposals first and then put the arithmetic on the proposals. Presumably, it is the federal government's idea of equality with the provinces, like the horse and the rabbit, even for the large provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The Prime Minister in his opening statement said: "We care about democracy which entails the formation of an active and informed citizenry". When the provinces are not even informed of the arithmetic of the proposals, how can the citizenry be informed, when conferences are held behind closed doors and the government will not even reveal its figures?

The impact of this bill has been superseded by this first ministers' conference which was supposed to come up with new arrangements for the financing of health care in Canada. Indeed, the necessity of the conference began with this bill and the unilateral action to put limits on federal contributions and change the terms as legally as possible. This bill smacks uncomfortably of rule-changing in the middle of the game, a game which, incidentally, Ottawa levered most of the provinces into in the first place.

I recall in 1969 when the province of Manitoba desperately tried to introduce and modify the federal plan in order to introduce some things that would have put a brake on spending and given more flexibility to the plan. The federal government was adamant; it was "all or nothing." The minister of health for Ontario, Mr. Miller, said what the Prime Minister had done was the most infamous action since the bombing of Pearl Harbour.

This bill has set the stage for the opting out of all provinces from the shared-cost program. It certainly is interesting to see the reaction of the provinces when faced with this. The proposition that the Prime Minister put forward to the conference, and which is embodied in this bill—"it is not the money, it is the principle"—did not turn out to be a very satisfactory one for the first ministers' conference on dominion-provincial fiscal arrangements.

Quebec, which had taken its tax points and which had perhaps foreseen that the federal government would opt out of the arrangements that the Pearson administration had set up, could have afforded to take the view that it could face the issue with equanimity. There was no answer to questions such as, "What proportion of the transfer will be in tax points?" or, "What will the equalization basis be and what proportion will be in cash?" The province of Quebec talked about the principle of keeping the federal finger out of the education pie. The maritimes obviously talked about the formula being deleterious for the poorer provinces, while Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia talked about the principle being good for richer provinces, and they all joined in the chorus of the federal government's reneging on earlier revenue guarantees.

There was even the odd one who had some thoughts about principle, that is, whether or not Ottawa, by backing out of fiscal and administrative responsibility, would be weakening the Canadian capacity to have national social standards in the national economic interest. As this bill indicates, the opting out formula which Quebec had from the very beginning is obviously the one that all provinces should have. The opting out formula that was to recognize Quebec's special status as the homeland of the French Canadian community seems now to be extended to other provinces as well.

We have to recognize that even in the opting out formula, which is essentially what the government has proposed, there will be more autonomy in different regions and provinces. This will create new standards and new difficulties. It may well be a more divisive force in the country than we see at the present time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Industry—Textiles—Request for tabling of report of Clothing and Textile Board on polyester yarn; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Labour Conditions—Possibility of lockout of Air Canada finance branch employees—Government action; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Regional producers' request for investigation—Government action.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say a few words on the bill before us. It is perhaps largely because of my Saskatchewan background that I am concerned about the situation with regard to the medical profession in this country, hospitals, medicare and the like. When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was premier of my province, he and his government introduced the first hospitalization plan in the history of, not just Canada but North America. That was quite a feat for a very small, at that time, rural province which did not have much of a base outside the grain and agricultural economy, an economy subject to the whims of not just the international grain situation but the weather at home, an economy which was then in the stages of being developed. That was done without the aid of federal financing. It was done without the support of the federal government. I believe that was in 1946.

That was followed by the introduction in Saskatchewan of medicare in the early sixties. Again, it was a "first" in the history of, not only Canada but North America. I remember that time very well. I was still in high school when medicare was brought in. There was a vicious fight in my province because of the strike of the medical profession in Saskatchewan. They were calling it state medicine, socialist medicine, an infringement upon the freedom of doctors, an infringement upon the freedom of an individual to see his doctor, and so on. That was a battle that was hard fought. It was a battle that was won. From there we have seen the growth of medical services and facilities all across this country.

A few years ago the federal government took the position of supporting hospitalization and medicare by doing a lot of the funding of these programs all across this country. There was a federal Liberal government which I thought was moving in a very progressive direction, putting more and more funds into what in fact in the most important thing in life, the health of Canadians. They were moving in a very progressive direction, getting more and more involved and participating more. Then all of a sudden we have this bill brought before us today for third and final reading, a bill which I am convinced, if it passes third reading, will allow the government to withdraw more and more from the financing of hospitalization and medicare in this country. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if this were allowed to happen it would be a highly retrograde step, something which should not take place if we think of the future of Canadians and generations to come. Should the bill pass through the House it will result in great hardship falling on many Canadians, particularly those in the have-not provinces.

● (1700)

Back in 1968 the government said a great deal about regional disparities. It talked about a "Just Society". It is readily seen that a large part of a just society is making sure that medical plans and medical facilities are available to any Canadian no matter where he or she may live; that there is equal access to those facilities, regardless of the income or background of that person. It this bill goes through and if the federal government withdraws from some of the commitments it has made in terms of financing medicine across the country, the time will shortly come when many of the provinces—the Atlantic provinces, for example, which are much worse off than most of the rest of Canada—will be obliged to lower their standards of care and treatment. I think of the Atlantic provinces not being able to expand their medical facilities, not being able to purchase as much of the new and modern equipment, and therefore being able to offer only a lower standard of medical services and facilities to their people. I do not think that is fair, Mr. Speaker. The federal government should be involved in medical care throughout this country if there is to be uniformity of service in all parts of Canada.

As the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) said, it may be very attractive for some of the wealthier provinces like Ontario, Alberta and perhaps, British Columbia, to have additional taxation points when it comes to funding things like medicare, hospitals, etc., but it is not so attractive to poor provinces like Newfoundland, because the taxation base they have is so much smaller than that in the province of Ontario or British Columbia or Alberta. If the federal government withdraws, we shall see a pattern of diminishing services occurring in those poorer provinces.

We shall likely see in the not too distant future, the imposition of deterrent fees, utilization fees or user fees—whatever name you wish to use—in the provinces as one of the ways to help pay for medical facilities. In Saskatchewan we have the experience of deterrent fees. I remember very well a Liberal government in my province, back in the late sixties, imposing what it called a deterrent fee. If you went to a doctor's office you had to pay something like $2.50 per visit, regardless of the reason for your visit. When entering hospital you had to pay a utilization fee, no matter how long your stay or for what reason you entered the hospital. I do not think that is fair because these fees are nothing short of an extra tax upon those who are sick. I believe medical services and the availability of medical facilities must be universal regardless of where Canadians live.

If you are in Alberta, where they have all the oil money, or in the province of Ontario, with its wealthy industrial base, there would not be any need for a government with any social conscience to impose a deterrent fee of any kind. They could probably expand in the area of hospital care. But really, what choice is open to Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island? Indeed the same thing applies if you are in Saskatchewan or Manitoba and the farm economy happens to go into a downhill slide, as it did back in 1969-70 and you lose the potential taxation base.

It is true things are good right now in Saskatchewan. They are good in Manitoba. But that is because we now get a higher price for the grain we are selling on the international market. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) knows that. He is just taking his seat. He recalls the policies of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who is responsible for the Wheat Board. Back a few years ago we got just $1.97 for our grain. I am sure he remembers that. The minister was paying people not to grow wheat. The economy of the prairies was in bad, bad shape. And at that time had the federal government withdrawn financing from hospitals, medicare, and so on, we would have had no choice in our province but to increase drastically the taxation of the people of Saskatchewan or cut back on the services and facilities available.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the cycle in agriculture which has been evident throughout man's history is probably going to continue. The time could well come when we would not have the base in the province of Saskatchewan or in Manitoba to finance the facilities which we enjoy today and this in spite of the fact that we are expanding, that we do have excellent governments, and that our provinces are diversifying their economies.

Another point I would like to mention, is that the federal government should be getting more involved in all aspects of medicine, not just in terms of what we are doing today, but in the future. We should be putting a great deal more emphasis on preventive medicine—finding out why people go to hospitals and helping before they get ill.

About a year ago the Food Prices Review Board commissioned a study on nutrition in Canada. One of the results published in that report—something which really astounded me—was that occupancy of about 40 per cent of the hospital beds in this country may be linked to improper or inadequate nutrition amongst Canadians. I believe it was also said that if you were to eliminate this cause of ill-health you would probably save about $2 billion in one year in hospitalization costs alone. If we had a proper food policy in this country we would not only improve the health of Canadians but we could bring down the cost of medicare and hospitalization in a very real way. Why do we not institute innovative programs to teach our citizens about good nutrition?

The same report said that about 70 per cent of old age pensioners in this country were suffering from calcium deficiency. Despite that, farmers have been told to cut back on their production of milk—that we have too much milk and production must be cut back by 16 or 18 per cent. They are told to suffer a drop in income. There is calcium in milk and there are people suffering from calcium deficiency. It would be possible to organize a school milk program; we could place a subsidy of fluid milk, and on milk products in order that people might buy more, be healthier, and eat more nutritious foods. This would be a beneficial, long-term investment, strictly in dollars and cents terms, let alone what it would mean in terms of people, of human beings who live in our country.

I visit schools. I believe the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) does this once in a while. I went to a school last week in his riding. I see in the schools coke machines and pop machines, and kids drinking the Coke and the Pepsi, but I do not see many milk machines in the schools, Mr. Speaker. I ask why, when we in this country produce a surplus of milk, we do not have a school milk program through which students can have milk every day in the schools, free of charge?

An hon. Member: Why not ask your provincial government about that?

Mr. Nystrom: All the provinces should become involved in this program to provide the young people with milk, if not free, then at reasonable prices.

An hon. Member: Nova Scotia is doing it.

Mr. Nystrom: I commend them on their action. I believe all provincial governments should follow their example. But a lot could be done by the federal government. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was asked about a school milk program a week or so ago. He said he would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to look into the matter. I would like to see the minister take the lead in this field by calling the provincial governments together and saying, "Look, we are willing to help you finance a school milk program in a serious way." I do not know exactly how it would be set up. Perhaps it would be on a 50-50 basis. Perhaps it would be on a 60-40 basis. Maybe the federal government could supply the milk and the provinces could set up a delivery system.

We have the capacity to produce milk in this country yet we are asking people to cut back the production of milk when there are people who are suffering as a result of an inadequate diet. People around the world are starving, yet the government tells farmers not to produce more milk. It is no wonder that they come to Ottawa and throw cheese and powdered milk at the Minister of Agriculture. When farmers can produce food it is immoral to tell them not to do so. This milk could be used in our own schools, rather than have our children drink coke and other liquids that are not nearly so nutritious as milk.

● (1710)

Another matter that I think the government should treat much more seriously is additional money for medical research. As a result of research we may find cures for a lot of diseases that are presently plaguing Canadians. I talk not only of finding a cure for cancer and heart disease but of a number of other diseases afflicting Canadians. I think of people in my own family suffering from rheumatoid arthritis. These people have to go through life taking painkillers because no medicine has yet been discovered to cure diseases of that kind. Yet the government is cutting back on money that should be spent on medical research, and I think that that is a crime and a shame.

I realize that we need restraint in various parts of the economy, but surely to God there are certain areas of the economy that should not be controlled, and I suggest one of them is medical research. I hope that the majority of the members of this House feel the same way.

It seems to me that all too often things are not done unless it is profitable to do them. Let me give one example of research that is being done in the food industry. In the United States they found out that a lot of the protein in chicken food went into the feathers. So a few guys had the bright idea of breeding, through genetic engineering, a featherless chicken, and then the protein, instead of going into the feathers, would go into the chicken and you would make more money with fewer chickens. A featherless chicken has in fact been bred in the United States, but unfortunately it suffered from a number of side-effects such as pneumonia, nervous conditions, and probably sunburn. My point is that you do not do this kind of thing unless it is profitable.

They have also discovered that when people buy chicken, whether Kentucky fried chicken or other kinds, they prefer the drumsticks, and they are now in the process of trying to breed a chicken that has four legs—the four-legged chicken. You do not do that unless it is profitable.

An hon. Member: Are they right wing or left wing?

Mr. Nystrom: I prefer the left wing. Maybe you prefer the right. Anyway, restraint program or no restraint program, the government should be putting more money into medical research so that we can help people in a serious way.

Before I take my seat let me say we should be more concerned about uniformity of health plans and programs. You will not get uniformity if the government begins to pull out of some of its commitments. You cannot get equity or equality in this way. As a socialist I believe that it is not enough in this country to talk about equality of opportunity, about laws, peace and understanding, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does. I think what we have to talk about is equality of conditions for all Canadians, regardless of where they live or what their backgrounds may be, be they in oil rich Alberta or in a province like Newfoundland.

Mr. Paproski: Or in the potash rich province of Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Nystrom: You can only redistribute wealth at the national level, by using national plans. I know some of my Tory friends are not socialists, not even the red Tory from Edmonton Centre. However, I know that a red Tory like him must have a heart when it comes to some of the poor people of the Atlantic provinces. I am sure he would not mind sharing just a small portion of that oil money, perhaps just one or two per cent, in order to help finance better medicine and hospital care for those poor Canadians living under a Conservative government in Newfoundland.

In the world today we are polluting the atmosphere, spewing out 100,000 tons of DDT each year. Every one of us has DDT in our body fat. Carbon dioxide is being spewed out at the rate of 20 billion tons a year, and nuclear reactors are emitting waste materials, with unforeseen results on generations to come. We have polluted our waters with mercury. We do not know what effect some of these pollutants will have on the human body. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we should put a lot more money into medical research to help generations to come, and so I plead with the government to reconsider the bill before the House. I ask the government to remember that it has a heavy responsibility to finance medicine and hospital care. It is only through leadership shown by the government that all Canadians in all provinces will have equality of conditions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to all hon. members that, if they are going to speak, they get back to the subject of Bill C-68 instead of wandering all over the field. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga).

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am forewarned or what the situation is, but before I get to the meat of my remarks I should like to share with the House a few observations that I have made during the course of my brief stay here of two years. It has not been prevalent in this debate because I think hon. members have treated the subject matter very responsibly, but when I go back to the debate on the motion moved on our opposition day which condemned the government for its failure to act in regard to medical research, all members on all sides of the House were guilty of playing politics. We saw hon. members opposite condemning the Conservatives when our critic had to go to the graduation ceremonies of his daughter; and we saw members on this side condemning the government when, for legitimate reasons, the minister and his parliamentary secretary had to be absent from the House. However, in all fairness it should be pointed out that the minister's capable parliamentary secretary has been here for the majority of this debate.

If one also goes back to the budget debate one can see the cross-play that took place. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) spent pratically all his time criticizing what our critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), said in his participation in the budget debate. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) devoted half his speech to criticizing the proposals that we had put forward. I had always thought that this was the role of the opposition. It may be that the Prime Minister is indulging in the role of the opposition because he is preparing himself for that role in the future.

The bill before the House proposes to limit government spending on health care costs. The only way that we can realistically hope to accomplish a cutback in this area is to be realistic about our expenditures on medical research. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) did an excellent job of conveying that to the House. I also have a few thoughts that I wish to share in that particular area.

On May 28 the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs was told a story, a horror story, and unfortunately it is a true story. It is called "The Slaughter in Tunney's Pasture, 1976" and it was told by Dr. Kaplan, chairman of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies. The slaughter is brought about by the amputation of an anticipated $5 million from the federal budget for the Medical Research Council, leaving it slightly over $50 million. In terms of real dollars this means a cutback of 15 to 20 per cent. There is a slaughter of time and talent. As one medical researcher puts it, "I face the possibility of having to give up my major endeavour of the last eight years. I cannot help but feel personal bitterness at such a prospect". And I, Mr. Speaker, can well understand his bitterness.

● (1720)

It is not just the doctors who are going to be adversely affected by these restrictions, but their technical and support staff as well. It sometimes takes as long as ten years to build up a cohesive team of technicians and doctors and to assemble equipment. If a grant is cut off after a viable working situation exists and then has to be dissipated, how many years are actually wasted? What happens to the personnel and the equipment involved? How can we evaluate the slaughter of hope, the hope that is to be denied many, many people who are afflicted with debilitating diseases for which there are presently no cures? There are no statistics to enumerate the chronically ill or to indicate the degree of suffering which they must endure.

How many Canadians will have to die prematurely from heart disease and cancer, our two major health adversaries, while we withhold medical research funds that could and should be used to push on with research which has been under way in these areas, or to establish new programs to study their cause and cure?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) tells us that there is no brain drain, that 101 doctors have come from the U.S. to Canada while only 60 have gone the reverse route. Does the minister not take into account those 353 young Canadians who are now working in research fields in the United States and who hold foreign medical visas? That figure was given to me today by the director of special programs in the United States.

The frustration in the ranks of the medical research fraternity is immeasurable. The agony of the "on-again off-again" programming instils such a sense of insecurity that many of our top notch research doctors are simply giving up their hopes of being able to continue their work in Canada and are leaving the country. Submission after submission from medical doctors engaged in conducting research in our universities has indicated that they will not be staying in Canada. We are heading for the second age of the brain drain in Canada. Surely it is a national disgrace that young men and women, graduates of our own schools, are forced to anchor their careers south of the border.

If the government continues to take the shortsighted view that medical research is a frill, a large number of young scientists will have no choice but to stay in the United States, or to leave Canada because of the lack of opportunity to use their highly qualified skills here. Given the current government attitude, Canadian universities cannot continue training and graduating research scientists if there is no future for them in this country. In Canada it is necessary to work out of the universities because there is no central medical research establishment such as exists in many other countries.

We are making involuntary exiles of some of our most promising and responsible citizens of the future. Can we afford this drain on our society? Can we afford to lose the $100,000 it has cost to educate each and every one of these doctors who will not be remaining in or returning to Canada?

What are the priorities of the government? A few days ago representatives of the federal government were sitting down with the provincial premiers. This government announced to them that it wished to cut back on health care. The government has already cut back on health research. I ask you what kind of reasoning this is, because without research to solve some of our medical mysteries how will we ever be able to reduce the cost of health care?

With the spiralling costs of hospital and health care institutions, who can say what a dollar spent today in finding cures will save in ten years? I think a new adage can be coined; we are no longer penny wise and pound foolish, but in this instance we are millions wise and billions foolish. Who can say that billions of future dollars could be saved by present research investment? Who knows what suffering and premature death could be saved by that same investment? When the government speaks about the cost benefit of research, how can it be measured in terms of health and the very lives of people?

In multiple sclerosis alone $200 million is spent each year in caring for victims of this crippling disease and less than $1 million is spent in searching for the cure. Science has proved that it is a virus causative illness, and the President of the MS Association told the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that the basic research has been done. Now they are ready to move into the more expensive clinical phase but research money is drying up.

How can increases of 25 per cent or more to the Department of National Defence, the Public Service Commission, the Post Office, and the Canadian Radio Television Commission be justified while the Medical Research Council has not even received the 15 per cent increase the government indicated would be allowed for over-all government expenditures? When less than 1 per cent of the total National Health and Welfare budget is allocated to the Medical Research Council, and when its real dollar funding has actually declined by 8 per cent while other federal expenditures have increased by 105 per cent, that is pretty indicative of the status that is placed on explorative medicine.

The federal government should not have to be convinced of the value of medical research when many of us can remember the time, not so long ago, when tuberculosis, polio, and diabetes were rampant killers. I ask whether the government is truly concerned about the health and well-being of Canadian people. If that is the case, then how can we in all conscience say that the emotional and physical health of the present and future population of Canada is only worth $50 million?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has proposed that we spend $70 million on influenza vaccine during the next year. That is $20 million more than the whole Medical Research Council funds from the federal government. That is $20 million more than the government will put into research for every type of medical problem now being studied, while at the same time one outstanding doctor has had his application for a modest grant to continue his research curtailed. It is conceded that this doctor has achieved a breakthrough in the study of one of the bacteria that can cause meningitis, a disease which has reached epidemic proportions in some countries.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Elzinga: Is the hon. member rising to make his maiden speech in the House?

Mr. Paproski: Just let him speak, doctor. You have had your say, now let him have his.

Mr. Elzinga: We do not mind the interventions.

Mr. Paproski: Get back in your own seat if you want to talk.

Mr. Elzinga: We do not mind the hon. member. It appears that he makes all his major speeches from his seat in the House of Commons.

Let us look at some of the areas the government seems to consider are worthy of vast expenditures of our tax dollars while cutting back on essential health services. The unoccupied housing in Halifax was deemed to be worth $214,000; there was the bill of $34,000 from Information Canada for miscellaneous little jobs; what about the $3.8 million which was wasted by the Department of Supply and Services for a computerized government payroll system that did not work and had to be abandoned? Then there was another little bill which cost $16 million for advance financing to the Lockheed Company, and this is a saga for which we may not have received the final price tag. We also have linguistic and artistic projects for one year at a cost to us of countless numbers of dollars, but a low estimate is several hundred millions. Just one example of waste, pure and simple, was the issuance of $197,000 in tobacco stamps in excess of what was actually needed, and over $39,000 in liquor bottle labels fell into the same category.

These are just a few examples of fiscal indiscretions, and it makes me wonder in reality where the government does have its priority. I am sure that the people of this country would give their health and happiness and the health and happiness of future generations their highest priority.

[Mr. Elzinga.]

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments at third reading stage of this particular bill. Let me say at the outset I was extremely interested and really gratified to hear the minister state that the present situation in respect of federal-provincial negotiations is somewhat encouraging. I think he amplified that he is hopeful that those negotiations will come up with a new formula for cost sharing relationships with the provinces. I find this most encouraging, but on the other hand it seems to be somewhat inconsistent with the bill that was introduced.

● (1730)

I want to remind hon. members that, as I understood the purpose of the bill when it was introduced, it was in effect to limit the rate of increase in federal spending on medical care but that there was also the important addition that it was to allow for federal-provincial cost sharing on new alternatives with the development of less expensive health care delivery programs and services. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) indicated somewhat earlier, and certainly I concur with this, one must be somewhat suspect concerning the degree of progress which has been made in this particular area. Having said that, I think one also should look the possibility that the minister may well have had an alternative purpose in introducing this particular legislation in view of the encouraging comments he made somewhat earlier, that is, perhaps it was a method to manipulate the provinces in terms of these negotiations.

May I simply say that if the minister is correct in respect of the facts he presented this afternoon, then in fact this entire piece of legislation is redundant. Indeed the particular negotiations which are going on at the present time, if they are as fruitful as the minister indicated, may be far more important than this particular legislation we have before us today.

I wish to make one or two references to the comments made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. If I may say so, certainly I am in agreement with the theme he developed about the importance of the universal concept of the medicare program. However, I think we must also recognize that there have been some inequities in the program. I think if one were to assess the program now—and the minister has the figures at his disposal—we would find that there is evidence to suggest that the very people we had hoped to reach through this type of program, principally those at the poverty level, have in fact not been reached by this program. So in fact in this universal program there are indeed inequities which exist. I think this is one area to which the minister must direct his attention. I refer to the fact that the great proportion of the medicare program, universal in concept, really has not reached that group of individuals, which was the intent of the program in the initial instance.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands talked about the importance of looking for alternative low-cost programs to replace our high cost programs. Certainly one can sympathize with this. I am sure there are ongoing discussions between the federal and provincial governments. However, I think it is important to bring one matter to the attention of this House, that is, that we must avoid what I call the add-on principle. Certainly if one is replacing a high cost program with a low cost program then indeed one must show that these high cost facilities, this high cost technology, and these highcost projects are indeed replaced by the so-called low-cost type programs.

I think there is a trend from time to time—and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that all of us have seen evidence of this—in which we end up with an add-on principle. In principle it seems nice to have a low-cost program, but if in fact it does not replace the high cost program to which I referred then it has been a failure in terms of economics.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands referred to the minister's new health perspective for Canadians. I want to emphasize that I think this is an important part of the equation of the health care program in Canada. I think this is an area in which the federal government must and should give greater leadership. The hon. member has discussed several aspects in this regard. There are one or two things on which I want to enlarge in a moment in respect of which I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) can and should give leadership.

I also agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands when he referred to the problem of attempting to equate health care with economic factors. I would go one step further. I think there is a myth which exists which should be exploded, that is, that good health care can be equated with good health. I think this would be one of the advantages if the minister were prepared to take action along the general tenor of the philosophy that is outlined in the new health perspective.

I wish to make one comment regarding the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who talked about the introduction of a medicare program in the province of Saskatchewan. I would simply say in passing to him, and I apologize for not remembering the year, that the Canadian Medical Association long before that program was introduced actually proposed a universal program of medicare for Canada which in fact was rejected by the federal government of that day. I am sure if the hon. member is interested I could give him all the details of the facts regarding that particular situation.

As I indicated somewhat earlier, I feel there is an important part of the equation which has been referred to previously in which I believe there should be very strong leadership at the federal level. I would like to refer to some of these areas. Perhaps in the first instance I might come back to what one might refer to as environmental health hazards and environmental health problems which are very numerous. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands referred to some of them.

I believe this House will recall, I think it was on May 7 this year, that there was a debate on mercury poisoning. This really in effect is a prototype of several types of environmental hazards which exist in Canada. Obviously, however, it has had a very devastating effect principally upon the native people in Canada, particularly the Crees in northwestern Quebec and the natives in northwestern Ontario. Let me simply emphasize that over and above the destruction we have seen within these native communities there is no question that the myth that Minamata disease does not exist has been eliminated. I am sure we are all aware that Dr. Barbeau of the Montreal Institute of Neurology, who is well known both nationally and internationally, has demonstrated the presence of Minamata disease among the Cree people, and among two white people in that particular area. As I understand it, there is recent evidence to suggest that there are symptoms among the native people in the northwestern part of Ontario.

The member also mentioned the problem of radiation. Irrespective of my personal concerns about the growth of atomic energy, and particularly in terms of weaponry, I think we also must recognize that there is substantial evidence to point out that radiation itself is a hazard. We have had the recent situation, for example, at Port Hope and Uranium City. I think it must be made very clear that the federal Atomic Energy Board has not clearly established safeguards. We now have well documented evidence that radiation hazards are possible, and certainly do cause illnesses such as cancer, leukemia, and other disease entities. I do not know of one expert who will not say that there is a potential health hazard from the possible radiation effects of uranium. This is another area of course which requires additional research.

The problem of polychlorinated biphenyls, or pcb's, has received a great deal of attention lately, particularly in relation to the smelt in the Great Lakes system. We know that this particular substance is stored in the fatty tissues of individuals, indeed probably stays there for a long period of time, and perhaps indefinitely. We are well aware of the potential health hazards in this particular area.

One other rather interesting aspect is that of birth defects. I think that if one were to look very carefully at the Canadian context the two most common birth defects we see are related to spina bifida anencephalus. Spina bifida is the condition in which the neuro sheath is incompletely formed, and anencephalus implies the incomplete development of the brain. Let me say, without going into details, that it is important to know that there is now a substantial body of evidence to suggest that environmental health factors play a substantial role and are perhaps one of the most important causative factors in this regard.

● (1740)

Somewhat earlier mention was made of asbestos in connection with the pulmonary problems it causes. I should point out that it has not only been a problem in Ontario, but a recent judicial inquiry in the province of Quebec indicated very clearly that approximately 15,000 workers in that province are risking their health each day that they work in the mines. The problems of lead poisoning have been well documented in an excellent report prepared by the province of Ontario in recent months. Carbon monoxide, chlorine, smoke inhalation, various solvents, occupational hazards—all of these are problems which play a most important part in terms of environmental health hazards. There have been new findings with regard to health hazards encountered by polyvinyl workers. A rare form of cancer was recognized at the Goodrich plant in Kentucky. I would remind hon. members that there are now well documented cases of this disease entity in the Canadian context.

I could go on and talk about many other environmental health problems which, in my view, require a great deal of attention, but there are three points that should be made about environmental health hazards. First, when we talk about environmental health factors this implies that individual Canadians have no control over certain disease entities, and that there must be intervention on the part of the government. I suggest that in the national context leadership should come from the federal government, and a strong role in terms of our health care system implies a far greater involvement by the government in the entire area of environmental health hazards. As I indicated previously, in my view the federal government has the responsibility of demonstrating this leadership.

As indicated earlier, basic research is most important in the area of environmental health because, as has been alluded to, although we have many of the answers in this area, certainly there are many aspects of pollution and environmental implications with which we are not yet familiar.

Having mentioned the area of research perhaps I should make some comment on the direct relationship between the economics of health and the use of basic medical research, despite the fact that a debate was held two days ago on the importance of medical research, and the point was made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Let me take a moment to compliment the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville on some of the remarks he made earlier, and the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) on the excellent speech he gave. I am sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare was not here last Tuesday, but I know he had an excellent excuse for his absence. Perhaps I might make reference to one or two aspects of this subject which I think he would find interesting. I do this, Sir, because I believe that in terms of the total health care system one cannot divorce Bill C-68 from the most important component that was involved, that is, negotiations with a view to finding alternative forms of health care referred to by the minister in the past.

I would like to review briefly the types of technology in medical research because one must understand the importance of research and the part it plays in improving health care. There is an excellent article by Dr. Thomas Lewis from the University of Cornell in which he writes about technology being divided into three broad groups. The first group is the so-called non-technology. This is the type of technology which is most important, what we often refer to as supportive therapy, the sort of care that is used for cases of rheumatoid arthritis, osteo arthritis, cancer, etc. We must recognize that it requires a great deal of money, time, and effort by specialized personnel, whether they be physicians, nurses or paramedical people, and it requires a great deal of money for hospital care. Yet we must recognize that there is no definitive answer in terms of the actual disease mechanism. We do not have an understanding of the disease process.

The second group is referred to as the half-way technology. It is very significant in today's health care. We see it in connection with organ transplants, and the treatment of coronary heart disease in intensive care units. It involves sophisticated types of equipment and highly trained technical personnel. It is obvious that this type of technology is very expensive, and yet I must remind hon. members that it is only half-way technology, something that compensates for the breakdown of a particular organ, something that is used to prolong the life of a patient. But again in these cases we do not have a complete understanding of the disease mechanism. I believe that the public and many members of this House do not fully understand this type of technology.

Every day when we pick up a newspaper we read about some new organ transplant which is interpreted as being a major breakthrough in research. Yet in many respects it is primitive in its approach, and although sophisticated technology is used there is an incomplete understanding of the disease entity.

Third, we have a type of technology which really goes unnoticed, the technology that introduced the antibiotics which in effect eradicated the very severe problem of infectious diseases which occurred in our hospitals many years ago. The other day I gave the example, which is probably worth repeating, of a case of typhoid fever. In terms of the treatment methodology that was used many years ago, a patient with a case of typhoid fever would probably be admitted to hospital for 50 to 60 days, would require intensive, highly skilled nursing care, and a careful monitoring of laboratory tests. The cost of that was astronomical. A conservative estimate would now be about $10,000 to $15,000 in today's terms. What are we talking about today? A case of typhoid fever is treated with a bottle of cloramphemical, with two or three days of fever, after which there is improvement. I would simply emphasize what my colleagues have said previously, that basic medical research has a very direct cost effect relationship over a period of time.

I want to congratulate the minister on the position he has taken with respect to motor vehicle accidents. It is a matter that has concerned me for many years. As the minister well knows, in recent years it has been the leading cause in terms of potential years of life lost in relation to other deaths. The latest figures I have show that back in 1971 there were 5,690 deaths from motor vehicle accidents, a great number of them in the younger age group. As I recall, 50 per cent were in the age group between 15 and 25. I do want to compliment the minister at least for taking some aggressive action regarding motor vehicle accidents, seat belts, speed, etc.

● (1750)

Another matter which might be looked into is that of alcohol and drug abuse. I am sorry that I cannot compliment the minister in this regard. I recognize that he has allowed some funds for—

Mr. Lalonde: It won't be long.

Mr. Holmes: I am sure I can compliment him for at least a small degree of action with respect to native people, but when one recognizes that there are direct medical costs which exceed the total intake of provincial and federal taxes, which, as I understand, run very close to $1 billion per year, we must recognize that we have a very serious problem on our hands. I want to emphasize that this does not include the indirect costs for loss of work, loss of productivity, family break up, etc. I must remind the minister that, in my opinion, he has not scratched the surface, and a great deal must be done. This is another area which requires federal responsibility and federal leadership.

There is another matter I want to mention in passing. It is related to this whole subject, and I hope it has been discussed at federal-provincial meetings. It is the problem of drug misuse. I am somewhat appalled when I see the amount of drugs used by the average Canadian. From the recent figures I have, Canadians on the average use approximately one million tranquilizers per day. We have to consider the large number of accidental poisonings and overdoses of drugs which take place. The incidence of drug reactions is very high indeed.

There is a good deal of evidence to suggest that somewhere between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of admissions to hospital is really related to the problem of overdoses of drugs and reactions to drugs, and I should remind the minister that in this particular instance there is really a geometrical progression in terms of drugs. In other words, if a person takes two drugs, that does not produce twice the chance for a reaction. It really produces three or four times the probability of a reaction. Of course the more drugs one takes, the greater the propensity for this problem. The minister should be looking at drug misuse very carefully with the provinces, and if there is an area in which leadership at the federal level would fit into the philosophy the minister has described in his new health perspective, obviously this is it.

Another matter concerns me immensely because, in my opinion, the federal government has directed no appreciable attention to it. That is the whole area of mental health. From the limited information which has been obtained from the federal-provincial meetings, I understand that there have been some discussions about this, but I think it is worth while to take a moment to consider the magnitude of this problem. I would like to remind hon. members that approximately four out of every 1,000 Canadians occupy hospital beds because of mental illness at any particular time. I should also point out that there are one million children, or approximatley 5 per cent to 10 per cent of schoolchildren, who suffer from emotional or learning disorders.

I am sure hon. members who have been on school boards or who have been associated with schoolchildren will recognize the effects of dyslexia and learning disorders of all kinds. These youngsters really have the basic innate ability to do just as well as any youngster, and yet we have directed very little or almost no attention to this problem.

We should also recognize that approximately 50 per cent of the time of physicians is devoted to dealing with emotional problems. Here again we have no response from the federal government, and no help in this area. There are innumerable other statistics one could cite in this regard, but let me stress that the federal government has demonstrated no leadership with regard to mental health. That is left entirely to the provincial governments, and I urge the minister to recognize that this is an area which is national in scope. It is a problem which occurs in every province and every territory in Canada, and requires initiative on the part of the federal government and leadership from the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Our aging people were alluded to earlier, and their problems require leadership at the federal level. We must recognize that we have a growing population ratio. I recall the present figure, something like 7 per cent of our population is over the age of 65, which represents about 1.7 million people. However, it is also projected that by the mid 1980's somewhere between 9 per cent and 10 per cent of the population will be above this age. If we look very carefully, we will see that a very high percentage of these people utilize hospital beds. The attitude toward these senior citizens is certainly not conducive to an over-all program of rehabilitation or to an over-all program of handling their particular problems. They have more than just medical problems per se, whether they be, for example, arthritic problems or genital urinary problems in females, or muscular problems which are more common in males. However, what we tend to ignore, and have not concentrated sufficient energy on are the psychological problems of senior citizens.

Far too many senior citizens are lonely, far too many are out of the mainstream of society, and far too many live at the poverty level because their incomes have not been adequately supplemented. Far too many live in isolation. A great deal could be done, not only at the community level—and there should be far more community involvement—but also at the provincial level. However, this is the type of problem which is national in scope and demands leadership from the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Another important area in the delivery of health care is consumer involvement. I have been concerned for some time that in the evolution of our health care system there has been a great deal of misunderstanding with respect to the health care system. Some of this misunderstanding has led to irresponsible comments by many individuals, and the minister should give some consideration to the creation of an advisory council which would involve not only various professionals, but also consumers, who are the most important part of the program. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the House leaders met this afternoon and have agreed, in accordance with the House order of May 20, to fix the time for recording the vote on second reading of Bill C-84 at 12.30 midday on Tuesday, June 22.

May I also indicate that tomorrow the first order of government business will be the report stage of Bill S-32, followed, if there is unanimous agreement, by third reading of that bill, and if by that time third reading of Bill C-68 has not been completed we will return to the debate which is now under way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At 6.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Medical Care Act

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, when I called it six o'clock I had already developed two or three themes. I have indicated and attempted to describe in some detail the irrelevance of Bill C-68 in terms of the federal-provincial negotiations that are being conducted and have been conducted within the past two or three days. I was attempting to make some reference to the health perspective as introduced by the minister some time ago, particularly in the areas of environmental health, problems relating to the aged, mental health, and several other areas where I think the minister should be showing greater leadership and responsibility than he has demonstrated in the past.

Before terminating my remarks I want to deal again with the health perspective as presented by the minister. As I recall, he developed four categories, one of which was the so-called health organization or management system, environmental health matters, lifestyle health, and the area of biology, recognizing of course that the organizational health area is that traditional area of health that in the past historically, politically, and on a community basis has been a provincial responsibility. There were, of course, the other three areas which I alluded to earlier.

I want to turn now to the so-called organization health aspect which as I indicated is, in my view, and has been a provincial responsibility and to touch on two or three matters with which the minister should have some direct concern and input and should show greater leadership. One area is physician manpower requirements. If one were to assess the situation in Canada there are indications that the physician-patient ratio is adequate, but there is no question that there are inequities in various parts of Canada. For example, if one would look at the rural areas, particularly in the northern parts of Canada, he would find that frequently there are not enough physicians.

● (2010)

It is also important to look at the various types of specialties present in the Canadian context. One frequently finds that there may be an over-abundance of certain specialists. Surgery may fit into this category and yet there may be other areas where there is an urgent need; for example psychiatry, opthalmology, and dermatology are frequently bypassed.

Having said that, I believe there is an immediate need for high level negotiations between the federal and provincial counterparts to achieve certain objectives. It is very important that they should help to define these various health needs, some of which I alluded to a moment ago. It is important that they identify these manpower requirements in terms of geographic location. It would also be useful if they established specialist requirements in all of the areas of post graduate studies. This would be extremely important in giving more diversification across Canada.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

It would also be useful to determine the appropriate numbers of specialists needed in the various segments of Canada, certainly in relation to population. They must find means to attempt to encourage physicians to practice in various parts of Canada. Again I refer to those areas such as northern Ontario where in the past there has been an absence of their presence. In this regard it is essential that they look very carefully and re-evaluate the medical schools in Canada to ensure we have the production capability to turn out students which are highly qualified in the Canadian context.

There is another area where the minister could play an extremely important role. I now speak in terms of computer technology. We know there have been rather unfortunate experiences in terms of records. In many instances hospital data is outdated. It is certainly not current in terms of what is happening in Canadian society.

Despite the fact that we had a nutrition survey in the past, we see very little data regarding the health status of Canadians. It is therefore difficult to know the extent of the health problems as they exist on a day to day basis.

It would be useful in this regard if the Minister of National Health and Welfare were to demonstrate some leadership and launch an effective program in this area with adequate help in order to assess the health of Canadians. We would then be far more informed in terms of developing future programs. I have no doubt that, with co-operation from the provinces, we could update and modernize this kind of technology which would give us this kind of information.

Finally I want to refer to what I call the regionalization of health care. We hear a good deal about regional variations regarding health care in Canada. There has certainly been some effort in the past to rationalize the delivery of health care in the various regions of Canada. I think of those so-called depressed or under-privileged areas of Canada. I should emphasize that in the past we on this side of the House have agreed in principle with the concept of community health centres.

In his negotiations with the provinces and in re-defining the new formula in terms of federal-provincial negotiations, the minister must ensure equitable standards across Canada. He must pay very close attention to such provinces as the maritimes, and other so-called have- not provinces. In any formula it is absolutely essential that we ensure those provinces have the same standards and universality as the rest of Canada.

I wish to summarize by indicating that Bill C-68 is redundant in terms of the negotiations going on at the present time. Unfortunately it does not address itself to the comprehensive problems we see in the delivery of health care across Canada. I have attempted to allude to many of these problems for which I feel the minister has a direct responsibility and should be providing leadership. I certainly hope that he will take heed of the observations made by many members in this debate today.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence and with the co-operation of the hon. member, I wonder if I could address a brief question to him because he has expertise in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Will the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) permit a question from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)?

Mr. Holmes: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: I ask this question of the hon. member because of his background in the medical profession. He touched a bit on nutrition. Will he comment a bit further on that? The hon. member said we need some new programs. As a medical doctor, what kinds of programs does he feel should be looked at? What would be the cost of an adequate nutrition program? I ask this in light of the reference I made to the report last year of the Food Prices Review Board which stated that 40 per cent of hospital cases are possibly linked to the fact that we do not have adequate nutrition in this country. I would be interested in the hon. member's comments on that.

Mr. Holmes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has raised a very valid question. I will answer as briefly as I can by referring to the nutrition survey carried out in Canada. If one looks carefully at that survey one will see that it not only involves all provinces and territories, but special groups across Canada. For example, the nutritional standards of the native people of Canada are very bad. In urban areas where there is a great deal of poverty, the problem exists.

In response to the hon. member's question, the most important point at this time is that we should in a very scientific way identify these areas of individuals who need our attention immediately. Some have been identified. I refer, of course, to native people. I also refer to the urban areas in which there is poverty and where nutrition is poor.

This afternoon the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville referred to the nutritional problem as it relates to the youth of Canada. He made reference to the sorts of things that we see in some of the schools.

In answer to the hon. member's question, the most important thing at this time would be an educational program on the part of the government. Of course, there are certain areas which were alluded to earlier today in which direct government involvement in terms of subsidies and other programs would obviously be of value in resolving this particular problem.

● (2020)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I very much enjoy participating in this very important debate on health. There is often talk at federal-provincial conferences of readjustment of federal subsidies to the provinces, and in various areas, as was recently the case with respect to health.

In the Montreal La Presse dated June 16, 1976, Mr. Marcel Adam pointed out in very interesting comments summed up in an editorial the results of the attitude of the federal government which continued to drag the provinces into joint programs in the areas of health, social welfare and assistance to post-secondary education whose costs have increased in recent years because of inflationary tensions. The circumstances are appropriate to quote an excerpt from that editorial as follows:

> Committed to paying 50 per cent of the cost of those programs the federal government now finds the bill exorbitant, and decided to cut back its financial participation. It feels all the more justified in doing so that it is paying for programs it cannot control from an administrative point of view because they affect areas—health and education—of provincial jurisdiction. There is in that new federalism proposed by Mr. Trudeau something a little annoying because he is amending unilaterally under the law of the strongest the rules of a game that his partners accepted to play on the condition that both parties would respect them. Now that the federal government has exhausted the electoral viability of those joint programs he would like to shift on weaker shoulders a burden in which he does not see anything more than financial embarrassment and political inconvenience.

We all realize that the monetary problem comes into play here and becomes at certain moments a determining factor. It is readily seen that provincial health ministers are interested at the smell of federal dollars. On the other hand, the federal government faced with the problems of inflation and monetary instability is attempting to impose restraints. The results can be disadvantageous from several points of view.

Recently, in a document undoubtedly sent to every member of parliament, the chairman of the medical research group mentioned two specific points that I shall quote:

> 1. Research is the sole practical solution to reduce the cost of the various medical services as it enables to develop treatments for diseases affecting thousands of people and costing the government more than $7 billion every year.
>
> 2. The majority of our leading physicians and surgeons are attracted by teaching hospitals with active research programs mostly sponsored by the Medical Research Council. While it allows a general spending increase of about 16 per cent, the government did freeze the budget of the council at the previous year level. This action results in a significant reduction of activities at the medical research level. The greatest scientists have to go elsewhere to continue their research work. This action will have important effects on the quality of medical education throughout the country.

Following the announcement of Bill C-68 concerning the review of federal-provincial agreements in the hospital insurance field and the limitation of credits for the federal contribution to health insurance, the Quebec medical association submitted a brief where it mentioned on the last page, and I quote:

> However, if Ottawa persists in its plan to reduce its contribution to health services without giving to the provinces an equivalent transfer of the taxation base we think that the provinces would be encouraged to impose a deterrent fee to medicare consumers or to use private insurance companies to insure the difference in the medicare costs that the federal does not seem in a position to support any more.

Health is a basic right for every citizen. In principle, this right has been recognized for many years; in practice, however, it was violated since medical treatments were available only to some people within society. Since then, the state has intervened. I am not in favour of public-controlled medical services. However, considering that a large percentage of the people were and still are assisted in one way or another by welfare agencies and that many workers have suffered from endless unemployment periods, considering further the inadequate wages of a number of heads of families, the state felt it necessary to direct this legislation in such a way as to enable everybody to enjoy a good health which present medical knowledge allow us to have.

These are in short the reasons which contributed to the implementation of medicare plans. However, it has to be noted that no concensus was reached to determine what would be the best service: federal or provincial, comprehensive or partial, universal or restricted, compulsory or voluntary. And how many other things should be specified, how many other questions would have to get an answer, among which the following which is of vital importance: Who will pay? To whom? And how?

On several occasions, during the debates which led to the implementation of the present socializing medicare plans, we had submitted proposals which were probably not complicated enough to deserve the attention of the politicians of the time, or too realistic according to their usual idea of administrative difficulties which arise from the different plans in effect. We had suggested that the state might contribute through an assistance at the level of insurance premiums which would have enabled every citizen or group of citizens to select the medicare policy which would suit them best. Based on the Social Credit Party's proposals, the medicare plan would have been more easily implemented, more comprehensive and less costly, while securing everybody's safety with no obligations to all parties concerned. Unhappily, the government opted for a medicare plan prepared by bureaucrats who have complicated things.

● (2030)

Following a lengthy period of hesitation when it was sometimes difficult to determine whether we had a sickness medical care insurance or the sickness of insurance, we finally contracted the sickness of socializing insurance. We all agree on the common objective: access for everyone to every form of medical care. However we realized that a number of difficulties had risen when time came to determine the conditions to be applied.

I want to point out in passing that the health care plans have contributed precious little towards training more physicians, even though people are complaining of a lack of physicians. To remedy this situation, two solutions presented themselves; either train more physicians or allow other persons to take part in dispensing some medical treatments and relieve the physicians from a number of chores. The medical profession has not taken up any of these solutions with regard to the possible cooperation of other professions. We all know the attitude physicians are taking faced with chiropractors, optometrists and even pharmacists.

Health is priceless. So is the service that restores it. Yet most doctors manage to use that imponderable to their advantage. In the newspaper La Presse dated April 18, 1966, a journalist quotes the testimony given by Dr. Benoît Deshaies at a seminar on proverty, and I quote:

> Protected by some politicians and constituted into a real bourgeois and priviledged cast, oblivious to social ills, a minority of some 15 per cent of all doctors, whose income fluctuates between $75,000 and $100,000, rule as masters, at the expense of the population, on an empire: that of their profession and the medical organization.

Too often, qualified and willing students cannot have access to the courses that would allow them to complete their training as medical doctors. The number of candidates seems to be controlled by an organization that wishes to keep its monopoly in the field. If we add to that the disastrous effects of extended strikes which finally penalize defenceless patients, we get a rather dark picture of the result of the various health insurance plans. Those urging undiscriminate change must recognize that too quick a conversion of methods has serious disadvantages.

I have here today's issue of La Presse, from which I quote a paragraph concerning hospital admission problems:

> The President of the Council of Physicians, Dr. Paul Henri Royer, noted there were two very serious cases of heart trouble but only one can be cared for. So the younger was treated. We were thus faced with irrational choices.

This is what is happening. I also read in La Presse of July 30, 1975 an article titled:

> Yesterday's and today's medicine.

That article was signed by Dr. Léo Ladouceur, who has this to write concerning today's medicine, and I quote:

> Today's medicine is capable of extraordinary things that used to be unthinkable. It is in its every day practice that it has become inefficient, and even harmful.

Who is responsible for that state of affairs? The article gives the following answer:

> The government, the patient and the physician. The government, by establishing free care for everybody. What was needed was free care for have-nots, leaving the majority of the people with the obligation to pay a small part of the cost of medical care. This would have prevented abuses, avoiding that physicians' offices be literally invaded by patients with either imaginary or benign sores. Under current conditions physicians do not have the time or enough of it to get interested in those who are really ill. There is no way to prevent clients from going from one physician to another to ensure that the first diagnosis was the right one, and the first prescription the right one, to prevent that imaginary patients besiege waiting rooms and examination rooms because the program is free. The physician, obsessed by the idea of making money and who hands out medicine like a dry good merchant. One patient every ten minutes, assembly line medicine, where symptoms are treated instead of illness. Diagnosis means an investigation, therefore questions and answers, an examination, X-rays, laboratory analyses and monitoring to correct your mistakes or confirm your forecasts. And the poor physician, not as consciencious or tired out, with clouded cerebral processes, makes out a prescription for drugs which are effective, but sometimes contradictory. This is what can come from good intentions and an, extraordinary level of science, which is nevertheless necessary.

In another paragraph entitled "Castonguette or Chargex", he adds the following:

> As much respect as I have for today's surgery and medicine, with its examination, diagnosis, excision and transplant methods, which bring back yesterday's surgeons to the exhalted barbers that they once were, today's medicine is too often practised in doctors' offices where patients pass through at rates that the Medicare Control Board would like to see increased and come out with hastily written but duly signed prescriptions for a series of drugs which are highly effective, sometimes contradictory and capable of bringing a dead man back to life or killing someone.

In view of the present results, of the application terms, of medicare plans, of the many formalities resulting from this bureaucratic system, of the total or partial paralysis of services due to multiple strikes in this area like elsewhere, it is rather difficult to foresee where this expensive and unstable system will lead us.

In closing, to illustrate certain events that can happen, I would like to quote a passage from an editorial of the CJRC station dated March 15, 1971, and entitled:

A TELLING STORY ABOUT HUMAN NATURE

A good family man, when seeing that his sick daughter was not getting any better, desperately tried to have a doctor come to his home. Exasperated by the many refusals of the doctor who told him dryly to take his daughter, to wrap her in a blanket and to bring her to him, the father did as he was told even though the temperature was freezing cold.

A few days later, in the middle of the night and during a cold spell, the doctor's furnace broke down. He looked in the yellow pages to find a heating specialist. He finally reached one who, it happened, was the father of the sick girl of a while ago. Recognizing the voice of the doctor, the plumber-father paid his nighttime customer in his own coin, saying: Take your furnace, wrap it up in a blanket and bring it in to me.

Doubtless, the doctor concerned learned a good lesson. Several ailing persons have had to wait interminably before being hospitalized, and the application of health insurance plans complicated the situation. It would be a good idea to come back to good old common sense. That may be one of the virtues we lack most in our era of insecurity in various fields.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Broadview.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can meet expectations. When I spoke on second reading on February 24 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) was not in the Chamber but his parliamentary secretary was here. The minister is not here at this moment but I am sure he will be, and I notice that his parliamentary secretary is coming into the House. I am also happy that the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) is present tonight because he may recall that when I spoke on February 24, 1976, I tried to dramatize the actions of the Ontario Conservative government in regard to the closing of hospitals. The hon. member will recall that they closed the Doctors Hospital, which I think is in his riding.

I am sure that he will get up this evening and attempt to do what I am hoping to do, namely, that if we could persuade the Ontario government to reopen Doctors Hospital, we will also be able to persuade the minister to take a second look at Bill C-68.

Mr. Blais: It was the courts which did that, not the government.

Mr. Gilbert: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) says it was the courts that did it. I would disagree completely with him. The courts may have made some input, but I am sure it was the persuasion of members like the hon. member for Spadina and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) who have spoken out about the closing of hospitals across Ontario that had a direct effect on the Ontario minister of health. You will notice that the minister of health for Ontario swept across the province closing hospitals. This was followed by an onslaught of criticism because of the closing of the hospitals, the loss of employment, and the resulting decrease in medical health care. Then what happened? That minister of health had a heart attack.

● (2040)

An hon. Member: Don't blame him for that.

Mr. Gilbert: None of us wants any person to have a heart attack, but I am sure that the minister of health for Ontario as a result of that heart attack had second thoughts with regard to closing of hospitals. I would not wish that the present Minister of National Health and Welfare should have a heart attack, but I hope he will have a change of heart with regard to Bill C-68. It is very important that he have that change.

This has been quite a week, Mr. Speaker. On Monday we had the premiers of the provinces meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) trying to work out problems with respect to equalization payments for health and education. I am sure you will remember that on Tuesday we had a Progressive Conservative motion condemning the government for its funding of medical research. I asked at that time whether there was a doctor in the House. There were many doctors in the House, some of whom spoke on that subject. Many laymen also spoke, and most were very critical about the cutbacks in medical research grants across the country. They realize how important medical research grants are if we are to maintain a high standard of health across Canada. We now have, and it seems to be very timely, the third reading stage of Bill C-68 which deals with health and contributions by the federal government toward health costs incurred by the provinces.

We heard many speeches during second reading of this bill and we had many amendments at the report stage. Before this bill passes I am sure we will hear many speeches on third reading. As a result I hope the minister will have a change of heart and a change of attitude. In my February speech I said I always considered him a man of compassion, and a man of high intelligence who could carry some of his ideas in respect of social needs into legislation. However, I have been bitterly disappointed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and bitterly disappointed by his parliamentary secretary who has been unable to persuade the minister.

It is my hope that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), who gave me such healthy applause at the beginning, is able to persuade his colleague in cabinet regarding the contents of Bill C-68. That minister was at the Habitat conference, and I shared some of my time there with him. He is a person who is concerned about human settlements. When we talked about human settlements we were talking about housing, about water, about health and the environment. We spoke about all these subjects at the conference. It was my hope that the Minister of the Environment, after meeting many of the delegates there, would have had a change in attitude and heart, and come back and impose the moral tone in the cabinet that Sister Theresa imposed at the conference in Vancouver.

One thing I like about the Minister of the Environment is that he is a man of very high moral fibre. The minister has been a representative of labour throughout his life. He made the decision to join the Liberal party, which I think was wrong, but he made it. He has had a certain input in some legislation, although it has not been much. I hope he will be able to change the attitude of the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding this particular bill so that he can put legislation on the books of Canada that will be acceptable. I hope the Minister of the Environment will put legislation on the books in respect of the environment and pure water. It is only men like the Minister of the Environment who can persuade other ministers. I have noticed some nodding applause from some of the ministers regarding my statement about the minister's strength, calibre, and intelligence. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here tonight, so I hope the Minister of the Environment will take the message to him that I hope to convey in the next 20 to 25 minutes regarding Bill C-68.

It is my belief that the Minister of the Environment is not fully aware of the contents of this bill. It is a complex piece of legislation and I wish to read some of its contents very slowly. Under the Medical Care Act the federal government contributes to provincial medical care insurance plans on the basis of 50 per cent of the per capita cost for the year of all new insured services provided under the provincial plan, multiplied by the average for the year of the number of insured persons in the province at the end of each month. That just indicates how complex the calculation is in respect of health care expenses experienced across the country.

This bill would also limit the increase in the federal contribution to the provinces. It imposes a maximum yearly percentage increase in contributions for 1976-77 of 14.5 per cent, for 1977-78 of 12 per cent, and for 1978-79 and thereafter of 10 per cent. These maximum increases include an amount of 1.5 per cent for the increase in the population of the provinces, and if a province grows in population by more than 1.5 per cent the minister has said the maximum increase would be adjusted upwards accordingly. He said that in a speech he made on September 15, 1975, in Montreal. That indicates how complex this medical care bill is, and it also indicates how slowly we must move in respect of making changes.

One of the best contributions I could make on third reading would be to impress upon the Minister of the Environment and the parliamentary secretary what has been set forth by the Canadian Association of University Teachers at the conference held on Monday and Tuesday. When the first ministers discussed health and education the Canadian Association of University Teachers issued a statement in which it was suggested that, before any changes are made regarding equalization payments for post-secondary education, there should be a royal commission established to study the problems of education across the country. This association said this was necessary to establish national standards of education and to maintain the high quality of education in this country.

I was rather proud that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moved a motion under Standing Order 43 asking the House for unanimous consent regarding a recommendation of the Canadian Association of University Teachers that a royal commission be set up to study education before any changes are made to equalization payments. Perhaps we could apply that type of recommendation to health costs so that before any change is made in equalization payments there would be a royal commission set up to study health costs across this country. Surely that is a reasonable request by a reasonable person to reasonable people. I am sure the ministers would accept that proposition.

Why do I say that? You will remember that back in 1958 when the hospitalization bill was passed this gave all the provinces the right to contribute or to participate in contributions regarding national health care costs. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that there was a loophole in that bill. Who closed that loophole? It was closed by the Conservative party. Not only that, but the Conservative party under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) set up a royal commission on health under Mr. Justice Emmett Hall.

● (2050)

It was the Royal Commission on Health under Mr. Justice Hall which laid the foundation for the legislation on medicare which was set forth in 1968 by Mr. Pearson. We owe a great debt to Mr. Justice Hall in respect of the report of the health committee of 1960-61. At the present time we are now acting on another report of Mr. Justice Hall in respect of the railway unions. It looks as if we will have peace with regard to the railway unions across Canada as a result of the recommendations of Mr. Justice Hall. We have in Mr. Justice Hall a man who has studied the question of health in depth. Surely it behooves us to request Mr. Justice Hall to set up another commission to study health.

Why is there the need for a royal commission on health to be chaired by Mr. Justice Hall? The reason is plain. Only hospital and medical expenses are covered under the present Medical Care Act. This does not include paramedical expenses, pharmacare expenses, dentacare expenses, and the expense of medical appliances. At this stage it is the provinces which bear the cost in respect of paramedical services, pharmacare, dental care, and medical appliances. Surely the cost of $1.5 billion to all the provinces across the nation is an indication of the necessity that these things be included in a national hospital and medicare program. We need national standards. National standards have been established in respect of medical and hospital care. We need an expansion of this type of standard to include paramedical care, pharmacare, dental care, and medical appliances.

Let me turn for a moment to the question of paramedical care. Perhaps I might mention the Habitat Conference. At that conference many films were shown. There was a film shown by the Republic of China. It was called "The Barefoot Doctors in China". For 15 minutes the film set forth the excellent work the barefoot doctors in China are doing in meeting some of the needs that can be met by paramedics across the country. The average doctor will tell you that a great deal of his time is spent doing things that nurses and paramedic people could do just as well and just as efficiently.

That film, "The Barefoot Doctors in China", indicated the type of work that is being done. These people conduct preliminary examinations; they prepare certain drugs from herbs and give out medicines to the people. They also keep records. Some of them give acupuncture treatments. This allows the regular doctors to perform some of the more necessary functions. In China these paramedics are trained in one and one-half to two years. Surely in Canada we should have paramedics playing an important role in the field of national health care.

We talk about national standards. National standards are required in relation to pharmacare. It is only some of the NDP governments across the country which have provided pharmacare as part of their medicare program.

Perhaps I might relate a personal experience in respect of dental care. I have three children. They all required immediate orthodontal care. I had to pay $900 for each child. I am able to afford the $900 for each of my children. I was happy that their teeth were straightened out. This gave them confidence and a better appearance. However, there are many people across this country who cannot obtain orthodontal care. Therefore it is necessary to establish dental care and pharmacare as part of our national standard in respect of our health and medicare programs.

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is now in his seat. I hope he will listen to this, because when we talk about national standards and compare provinces like Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia with some of the have-not provinces such as the maritimes and Newfoundland it becomes apparent how necessary it is that national standards be provided and that these services be available to people who do not have the money to buy them.

First it is necessary to determine what should be included in health care. Second, the question arises concerning who should bear the burden because at the moment in respect of health and medical care there is a sharing between the federal and provincial governments. I ask the minister to give some thought to this. I also ask the hon. member for Spadina to give some thought to this because I am sure he will be speaking on this subject. It may be that we need a national program with regard to medical and health care across the country in the same way we have a national pension plan and a national unemployment insurance plan.

An hon. Member: And a national lottery.

Mr. Nystrom: And the NDP.

Mr. Gilbert: I will not comment. What do we have at the present? We have different premiums in Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Alberta—you name the province. It seems to me we should study the advisability of determining whether we should have a national medicare policy which would include national standards, which would include all the things I have spoken of, such as medical care, paramedical care, pharmacare, dental care, and medical appliances. Who should bear the burden? Should it be participatory between the people, the provinces, and the federal government? It seems to me it should. I do not believe our medical care and hospital care should be determined by the province in which we live. I think we should have national standards and national premiums. There should be a national program and there should be full availability of all health services to everybody.

My third reason for a royal commission is the persuasion aspect. At the beginning of my remarks I pointed out how able we were to persuade the Ontario government to change its attitude and methods concerning the closing of hospitals across the province of Ontario.

● (2100)

One of the problems I have noticed about the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I have observed him in pension debates, in family allowance debates, and in medical care debates, is that he does not listen. If you look at the bill as passed in committee and at the report stage you will find that he has not made one change of any substance to the bill. That tells the story. We know that he has moved from a position of compassion to a position of contempt, callousness, coldness—you name it. He has become a hardened, indifferent bureaucrat.

Perhaps I can persuade the minister. I will try to tell him that he has his priorities out of whack, out of kilter. Can you imagine the cabinet deciding—and I am glad the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is here because I will speak about a very important subject—that it should spend about $1.2 billion on 18 Orion aircraft when all we give for medical research is $50 million. It seems to me that if you are determining priorities you should put high on the list such issues as health, housing, unemployment. The best that they could do was to put the Orion on the top priority list. It was only because they could not get the necessary financing that the Orion deal did not go through.

Let me tell the minister about the second priority. Can you imagine a country like Canada spending $1.5 billion on the Olympics, which are only going to last for two weeks? Surely if we had our priorities in order we would have said that this $1.5 billion should go to health, housing, pensions, and medical research—things that affect people. What does the government do? It sponsors a national lottery to pay for the Olympics.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gilbert: What is a national lottery? A national lottery is nothing more than a tax on the poor. It is the poor people who think they will win a substantial prize. The result is that they pay out $10 on a regular basis. This is taxation of the poor. I am not the least bit proud of actions in Manitoba with regard to lotteries, nor am I proud of the actions of the federal government with regard to the national lottery because I realize it is a tax on the poor. Men of reasonable and rational thinking, men who have any compassion, would realize that this is what it is. Surely there are other ways of getting money to pay for the necessities of the public.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is not what Nystrom said.

Mr. Gilbert: Have you seen the federal cabinet make any reduction with regard to corporate welfare grants that we make? Not one penny. In fact it has increased capital cost allowances. It has shortened the time with regard to depreciation. It did not touch depletion allowances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest all hon. members take a look at Standing Order 12(3) which reads:

When a member is speaking, no member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest that we all adhere to that rule.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of your suggestion may I remind the hon. member, or suggest to him that we are now debating Bill C-68 which has to do with the Medical Care Act, but he is discussing lotteries, and I am certain he will end up discussing farm bills before long.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest that we all get back to Bill C-68. We have been wandering again.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, in view of what the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has been saying, that lotteries are not a tax on the people. People do not have to buy tickets if they do not want to do so. Lotteries are a voluntary expense that you can incur or not. It is not a tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) that this is not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you for your protection, Mr. Speaker. I need it.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) will not help.

Mr. Gilbert: I tried to tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare how out of whack his priorities are, and I really had to dramatize it to persuade him because democracy depends on persuasion. I hope the minister realizes that, and I hope he has a change of heart and a change of mind.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the minister has done with regard to his response on medicare. He said that people will have to change their lifestyles.

Mr. Friesen: They will have to give up heart disease.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, and they will have to give up cancer, and they will have to give up all the other attendant diseases. They will really have to change their lifestyles. He said it is up to the provinces to pass the seat belt legislation. This was his great contribution. Most of the provinces have passed the seat belt legislation. This is the minister's response to the health needs of the people. The minister said that we must have an educational program on alcohol, on cigarettes, on drugs. I could not agree more, but surely the very people who are affected by alcohol, drugs or cigarettes are those who need hospital and medical care, those who need pharmacare, and drug care. It is not an educational problem, it is a funding problem. There is a requirement for the establishment of national standards. It is a problem of expanding the programs and funding them. Therein lies the duty of the minister.

● (2110)

The minister also talked about air and water, and I saw the performance of the government with regard to water at the Habitat Conference. It was a pretty pitiful performance. In fact the government would not undertake to make any dollar commitment for clean water, not only for Canada but for the world. The government made no contribution whatsoever, and I am sure the Minister of the Environment was not the least bit happy about that, but that just indicates that perhaps the Minister of the Environment has his priorities out of order.

What has the government done with regard to clean air, mercury poisoning, lead poisoning, or asbestonosis?

Mr. Blais: Asbestosis.

Mr. Gilbert: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) really must feel ashamed of what his government has done for the people of the north, and more especially for the native people, with regard to mercury poisoning in fish. What has the government done? Not a thing.

What has the government done with regard to lung cancer? Nothing. What has it done with regard to lead poisoning? There is a plant in my riding which the minister says does not fall within federal jurisdiction but comes under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, it falls both within federal and provincial jurisdiction, and it imposes upon the minister the duty to expand health care, the duty to provide money, to help the native people of Canada and to help people who suffer from lung cancer and from different industrial diseases. I am rather ashamed of the minister for his pitiful performance.

Surely I have aroused the minister and persuaded him and his cabinet colleagues, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of the Environment, to take a second look at our medicare legislation to determine what they are going to do. Surely it behooves the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of the Environment to accept my simple proposition that, before any change is made, a royal commission should be set up to study the expansion of services and to study the sharing of the burden of the costs. I have recommended Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who has experience in the field, and surely that is a reasonable request.

I hope the minister and his fellow ministers will accept that reasonable and rational plea to stop the debate on this matter and to take that recommendation with regard to a royal commission on health, and the recommendation of the Canadian Association of University Teachers with regard to a royal commission on education, to the cabinet. I am hopeful, and I hope that hope is fulfilled.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: Tell us about pensions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Anything to please you.

On Wednesday of next week it will be a full year since Mr. John Turner in his budget speech of last year announced that this bill we are now debating would be introduced. I suppose there are some hon. members who might say that to draw attention to the fact that we have had this matter for a full year is to suggest that the mills of parliament grind about as slowly as the mills of the gods.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

I suggest that the time we have had this bill around indicates that it is a bad bill. Indeed there have been times when the government itself considered not proceeding with it, and whenever we have had a chance to debate it in the House, in committee, and now back in the House, we have done our best to persuade the government that the bill should not be proceeded with at all.

Lest my reference to Mr. Turner's announcement of June 23, 1975, suggests that we have been debating the bill all that time, I might put one or two other dates on the record. Bill C-68 was actually introduced and given first reading shortly after that. The date was July 8, 1975. However, the government in its shame about the bill did not seek to move second reading of it until January 28, 1976, so the actual debating of this bill in parliament spans just the last five months.

We have said on every occasion on which it has been possible to do so that in our view this is a bad piece of legislation. There were times when we thought that the government would decide that its anti-inflation program, for what it was worth, was good enough and that this bill did not need to be proceeded with, and there were other times when we thought we were persuading the government that the bill should be withdrawn, but here we are at third reading with the government still trying. However, as is obvious to the government, we are still trying to get across the message that this is legislation which ought not to be passed by the parliament of Canada.

I referred to Mr. Turner's announcement in his budget speech of June 23, 1975.

Mr. Stevens: June 25.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, June 23. I have it right here in front of me. The hon. member thinks it was on June 25. I can tell him that it was on June 25 that he made his speech.

Mr. Stevens: That's right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But Mr. Turner introduced that budget on June 23. He announced not only the proposal to bring in this bill to amend the Medical Care Act, but he also gave the provinces of Canada a five year notice of the termination of the agreements under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

It has taken us an exceedingly long time in this country to get legislation in the health and medical field, but I believe a good deal can be said about it in its favour. I think we have made tremendous progress, but what really disturbs me—and any hon. members who paid any attention to the speech I made on second reading will know what is in my mind—is that it was in 1919 that the great Liberals of that day first promised that something would be done about health insurance. It took us about half a century to get it out of the Liberals and, as I have already intimated, the kind of legislation we got from the Liberals, with a great deal of input from other parties, other persons and outside agencies, was not bad. The reason it was not bad was because of certain principles that were locked into the legislation, namely, universality and the attempt to structure it in such a way that Canadians would get the benefit of our health legislation on equal terms no matter where they might live in Canada.

● (2120)

One of the problems that we in this country must yet solve if we are going to have national unity, if we are going to have one Canada, is that of achieving economic levels and service levels that are the same right across the country. All Canadians should enjoy the same standard of living no matter what province they live in. That is one of the real problems of Canadian identity and Canadian unity.

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act both paid their respects to this goal by providing that the federal contribution to hospital costs and medical costs would be of the order of 50 per cent of those costs in the provinces, the goal being not just to help provincial governments with their problems but the goal being to establish the same level of hospital and medical services for Canadians wherever they might live. I think it is this kind of thing, the same level of hospital and health services anywhere in Canada, the same level of old age pension benefits—when I began this speech my friend across the way said he hoped I would get pensions into it, so there it is.

Mr. Francis: It is the same speech as in 1959.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend says it is the same speech as in 1959. Where was he for the 17 years before that? I have been making this kind of speech in the House since 1942 and, if necessary, I shall keep on making it until 1999. I say the things that have done the most for Canadian unity and establishing in Canadians a pride in being part of this country are in this social legislation field—health insurance, family allowances, unemployment insurance, hospital and medical services.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And CNR pensions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend wants to get pensions into it too—CNR pensions and the CPR pensions are areas where we have not yet got things to be as proud of as we should like. My point is, however, that we have progressed. We have moved in a civilized direction by getting these services on the same level for our people in this country wherever they might live. One of the tools used to achieve that has been for the federal government to put what was admittedly a generous input into these services as represented by the so-called or roughly 50 per cent formula.

Tonight we are not dealing with the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, the Old Age Security Act or the Family Allowances Act; we are dealing with the Medical Care Act. The Medical Care Act, as passed by the parliament of Canada after half a century of our struggling for it, provided and still provides that the federal treasury will pay 50 per cent of certain defined costs for certain insured health services in the provinces. That was good—good not in the sense that it helped provincial governments with their financial problems, but good in the kind of health security it provided for Canadians in all parts of this land. What does this bill do, Mr. Speaker? It changes that formula; it jeopardizes that important principle that provided for federal financial participation to the tune of 50 per cent. It does it by a new formula which is precise for a couple of years, and then is as uncertain as it can possibly be.

When we debated this bill in the House at second reading, or in committee where we had it for a long time, the spokesmen for the government side tried to counter our arguments by saying that there would be more federal dollars put into health services this year than were put in last year and there could well be still more dollars the year after that. They asked why we say there is any cutback. What one has to do, Mr. Speaker, is not compare this year with last year, or next year with this year, but to compare what will be the story next year under the new legislation with what it would have been under the old legislation.

The old legislation said the federal treasury would pay 50 per cent of the health care costs of the provinces. The new legislation, under this bill if it passes, will say that the federal government will pay the lesser of two quantities; either it will pay the 50 per cent of the provinces' cost or it will pay last year's cost escalated by a certain fixed percentage. If the costs go up more than that percentage the result is that the provinces will get less than 50 per cent of what their health costs are in the current fiscal year or the one that follows this.

There is no question about it, Mr. Speaker. Even though there may be extra dollars in one year compared with a former year, the fact of the matter is that the provinces are being told that they are almost certainly not going to get the 50 per cent which has been the rule—the 50 per cent which enticed them to come into it, the 50 per cent which provided some reasonable guarantee that Canadians would get the same level of health care in any part of Canada. We regard this as a most regressive step. That is why we have done everything we could to persuade the government not to proceed with the legislation. That is why we have played our part in keeping it around for a full year, and if we have our way it will not be passed into law at all.

I said that the bill provides for precise limits that the federal government will pay to the provinces in this fiscal year 1976-77 and for the next one, 1977-78. After that there is no formula in the bill. When it was first brought in there was a percentage there and the government said, "We will be very nice and take that interest percentage out." Instead there was put in a right for the government to fix the percentages of increases that will be allowed after these two years by order in council. Sir, that means that the government will make the decision itself. That means it is a cabinet decision. The provinces can make their representations, there can be consultations—we had that in the Conference Centre on Monday and Tuesday of this week and everyone knows what the provinces felt about those consultations—but they have no input. Parliament has no input.

The government will be free in the fiscal years after the end of March, 1978, to determine unilaterally how much it will cut down on health care revenues for the provinces. The result of this is going to be that the provinces will be getting less than the 50 per cent which brought them into the scheme—the 50 per cent which, while not a sacred figure in itself, has meant a useful contribution to the implementation of the principle that health care should be the same for Canadians all over Canada whatever province they may live in.

In the process of putting in this provision for future years to be governed by order in council, the government acted as though it wanted to be kind to the Tory party which felt that this should somehow come back to parliament. Therefore into the bill was written the provision which states that after the government has passed an order in council fixing a limit on federal contributions to the provinces in the years in the future, if 50 members of the House of Commons sign a motion calling for the matter to be debated, it shall be debated in the House of Commons right away.

● (2130)

If a motion is put down by those 50 members wanting an order in council to be revoked, if that motion is passed in this House and also in the Senate, then that order in council gets revoked. However, what chance does such a motion have of getting passed in the House of Commons or the Senate dominated by a government with a majority, a government which uses that majority in the way it is used by the government that is across the way?

The provisions in this bill about reference of these future percentage limits to parliament are really a farce. The whole business is thrown into a state of great uncertainty. In particular it is a matter of uncertainty for the provinces. They do not know what the score is going to be in the future. They do not know what the limits will be on federal contributions. They do not know how to plan their health services for the years ahead simply because of the uncertainty that is in this bill.

If this creates uncertainty for the provincial governments, that means in the end it creates uncertainty for the citizens of our various provinces. They may not feel it as quickly as the provincial governments, but they will feel it where it hurts. Somewhere down the line the poorer provinces, once they find the government not providing 50 per cent of the money, will have to resort either to extra charges such as special taxes, deterrent fees or what have you, or to cutting down on health care services. That is a real possibility. Flowing from this bill is a picture of Canada retreating from the high ideal of one nation from coast to coast in which the health care services for our people are to be the same right across the land.

My friend across the way says this is the same speech I have been making since 1959. I realize the hon. member is a young man. He does not realize what was going on before then, although he was in the department and he should have known. Some of us were preaching this kind of thing long before that. Apparently we will have to keep at it for a long while yet.

The point I am trying to make, and I may have said this in 1959 or 1942, or I may have to say it in 1999, is that it is not just a matter of dollars and cents. It is not just a case of one group of cabinet ministers in Ottawa not being concerned about the financial problems of groups of cabinet ministers in Toronto, Winnipeg, Victoria and so on. What is at stake here is the whole concept of Canadian unity, which I submit calls for far more than our hearing the same radio and television programs, enjoying the same football or hockey games, solving our language problems, or what have you.

The surest way to provide some unity and establish pride in being a Canadian anywhere in this country is to ensure that the basic needs of our people are met on the level of equality. If we cannot do it right away in everything, we can do it in terms of health and medical care. I deplore as strongly as I can a measure that is certain to have the effect of creating differences in the levels of health and medical care in the various parts of this country.

Criticisms have sometimes been levelled about speakers not staying close to the bill. I have tried to talk about the bill before us, Bill C-68, which amends the Medical Care Act. However, I think I am entitled to refer to it in the context of things that are related to it.

As I pointed out earlier, when Mr. Turner brought down his last budget on June 23, 1975, he made, amongst other announcements, two in that same budget that related to health. One was that the Medical Care Act would be amended as the government is now trying to amend it. The other was that the provinces were then being told that in five years the agreements under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act would be terminated.

These two things have to be taken together. If it was only medical care that was being changed, maybe the provinces could adjust to it. However, when the provinces are told that not only will they have to handle their health and medical care costs with less help from the federal treasury but they will have to provide their hospital services at this point not knowing what they are going to get from the federal government when the five year period is over, you throw the whole business into a state of jeopardy. When you add to that the kind of thing that was put before the provinces and the country by the federal government at the Conference Centre on Monday and Tuesday of this week, you create a situation that is serious for the future of this land.

I have not had time to read everything that was said, even those things of which copies have been given to us, at the Conference Centre on Monday and Tuesday. However, I read enough of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to note that he thinks the federal government, the Liberal party, have done enough because they have played a part in getting hospitalization, medical care, and improved post-secondary education established in this country.

The Prime Minister is almost proud of the fact that his government, and governments before his, gave the money to get these things going. He seems to think that is all the federal government needs to do. I say to the Prime Minister that this is not a static matter. It is not something that comes to an end. You do not just bring proper hospitalization and medical plans into effect and reasonable assistance in the field of education, drop all this, and expect that they will carry on. They will only carry on if there is a formula which provides money from the place where money is most available, and which provides money of the kind that will achieve as much equality as possible right across the country.

The Prime Minister also said at the conference that the desire for the same level of service should not simply become a case of our having a stereotype situation right across the country. In my opinion that was just a rationalization, an excuse for backing off.

● (2140)

Any Liberal in this House who is a Liberal, any Liberal who has respect for what his forbears forecast in 1919, any Liberal who has respect for the dreams and hopes which Mr. Mackenzie King had and which Mr. St. Laurent had, and which Mr. Pearson tried to carry forward, should be mortally ashamed of the steps proposed in this bill as well as in the accompanying termination of the hospital agreements and in the fiscal plan proposed on Monday and Tuesday at the premiers' conference, because these things they are doing amount to turning their backs on the sense of national unity which former Liberals possessed.

I remember—it was a personal conversation but that is no reason why I cannot recall it—being at the United Nations in London in 1945-46. The leader of the Canadian delegation to the preparatory commission was Mr. Dana Wilgress, and then when the first session got going in 1946 the leader was Louis St. Laurent, who was then either minister of justice or the secretary of state for external affairs, later prime minister.

An hon. Member: How long was he prime minister?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Long enough to do a lot more good than is happening now. The time came when some of us were hoping the deliberations would come to an end. Mr. St. Laurent said he hoped the UN session would end soon because he wanted to get back to Canada. The 1945 federal-provincial conference had been something less than a success. I remember him saying, "We can't go on when the advantages for our people are so uneven in different parts of the country." This was the kind of dream some of those Liberals had. Mr. St. Laurent had it; Mr. Pearson had it. They wanted to round out their promises concerning old age security, labour legislation, and adequate provisions in the areas of health and welfare. This meant involving the federal government and the federal treasury so that we might have unity from coast to coast.

The present Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues are now saying, "We were just getting things going; we got the provinces into these things to do the job and now we propose to back away and let them carry the load." Mr. Speaker, the wealthier provinces can carry it and perhaps provide even better levels of service than their people have enjoyed up to this time. But Canadians in the less wealthy provinces will suffer set-backs and cuts. This will not be good for Canada. That is why we are so strongly opposed to this bill.

As I may have said earlier, if this bill were the only one of its kind maybe the provinces could absorb the shock. Even then we would say that the legislation was wrong. We have said so right from the night Mr. Turner announced it on June 23, 1975. It is still our hope that the bill will be dropped as far as this session of parliament is concerned, at least. But when you consider the fact that the hospital agreements are to be terminated five years from last June, and when you add to that the new fiscal arrangements the government is trying to foist on the provinces, and when you add to that the fact that the government is cutting back funds for medical research, the point comes at which one is tempted to ask the question: what is a federal government for? Surely its purpose in a country such as ours is to bring the standards of our people up to the same level from coast to coast, particularly in services which really matter.

I submit that nothing matters more than health and education, and these are the things the federal government has been attempting to cut back this week by the proposals made to the conference on Monday and Tuesday, and health services in particular are damaged by the bill which is now before us. I therefore reiterate our party's determined opposition to Bill C-68. In our opinion it should not pass.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today another element of the government's so-called restraint program. I say "so-called" because this, like so many other aspects of that program, is not restraint at all but rather, intergovernmental buck-passing.

What the federal government is proposing to do is limit the growth in its per capita contributions to the provinces under the Medical Care Act to 13 per cent in this fiscal year, to 10.5 per cent in 1977-78, and to a percentage to be determined by the cabinet in subsequent years. The minister assures us that the cabinet—and for once I trust the government's assurances in the field of federal provincial relations will be worth the paper they are printed on—will set the percentage caps for the years after 1977-78 in accordance with an appropriate formula to be developed after consultation with the provincial governments. But that assurance itself is a hollow one because there is no commitment to negotiate this formula with the provinces, merely a pledge to talk with them about it before it is introduced.

The question before us, Mr. Speaker, is whether this unilateral arbitrary action by the federal government is going to hold down the cost of health services to the taxpayer. Most certainly it will hold down the share which appears in the federal estimates, but if we are merely transferring the burden to the provincial level there is no saving to the taxpayer.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has argued that this bill will provide the provinces with an incentive to hold down the cost of the program because the federal government will no longer be around to pick up half the cost of any increases over the guidelines. That is a clever argument, but it ignores two important facts. First, the provinces already have a strong incentive to hold down costs. After all, they pay a varying but substantial share of the cost of these programs, just as the federal government does. Moreover, it removes the incentive to poorer provinces to close the gap between their per capita expenditures for medical care and those of the more affluent provinces.

Let me quote from the statement of the minister of health for Prince Edward Island, Catherine Collbeck, at the Victoria conference of provincial ministers of health in August, 1975:

> The implementation of Bill C-68 would have a very serious effect on the level of health care in Prince Edward Island . . . Our resources are severely strained to meet the rising costs with federal contributions under the present agreement.

● (2150)

Under the new proposal—

That is, Bill C-68.

> —it will be difficult to maintain the present standards of health care services with no hope of ever attaining the national standard.

That, Mr. Speaker, from a Liberal health minister in the province of Prince Edward Island! Any real financial restraint that we will obtain under this bill—that is, financial restraint imposed on the provinces as a result of these caps or ceilings—will be purchased at the cost of locking in existing regional disparity in health care. The federal government will bear responsibility for that, but it designed the bill so that the provinces will have to accept the lion's share of the blame. It is the federal government's responsibility, Mr. Speaker, but it shifts the blame to the provincial level, and that is the meaning that the government attaches to the phrase "co-operative federalism."

I note that the minister has made a modest amendment to Mr. Turner's original proposal in that provinces, with the consent of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the sanction of the federal cabinet may extend insured services without the increased costs which are attributable to those services being subject to the guidelines. A wise and generous use of that power by the minister and his colleagues might provide a measure of benefit to have-not provinces, but because medical services in Canada are already comprehensive the benefit will be slight at best.

On Tuesday in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) argued that his proposed new financing arrangements for the established programs of hospital insurance, medical care, and post-secondary education would benefit the have-not provinces because the principle of equal per capita grants means a larger contribution from the federal treasury to their coffers. That was the Prime Minister's statement in this House.

I hope he is right and I wish he had allowed the premiers of the have-not provinces to test his hypothesis this week by revealing to them the financial details of his proposal. Instead it remains locked in secrecy. He is once again playing his old shell game of what comes next. However, in the field of medical care that program, whatever its merits, is still at least two years in the future. In the meantime this bill could do serious damage to the principle of national standards in health care services and will certainly leave a legacy of bitterness and frustration with the provincial governments. I would say to the minister that that kind of legacy does not augur well for the future of Confederation.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have just been handed a blank piece of paper by my colleagues so that I can begin.

Mr. Yewchuk: Is that the content of your speech?

Mr. Leggatt: This iniquitous piece of legislation attempts to cap the federal contribution to medicare to 13 per cent in 1976-77, to 10.5 per cent in 1977-78, and to 8.5 per cent the following year. Thereafter authority to set ceilings is left with the federal government. The reason I describe this legislation as iniquitous is—

Mr. Rodriguez: —because it is.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, it is, but also because if there is ever going to be any inducement to the federal government to expand provision of medical care in this country, it must come from federal leadership. What the government has said is that it no longer seeks to provide leadership in the provision of medical services in this country. The government has said that it thinks everything is great, and that it is backing out of medicare.

What do you do, Mr. Speaker, in a place like P.E.I. or Newfoundland if you want to go to a dentacare program?

An hon. Member: What about St. Pierre and Miquelon?

Mr. Leggatt: They have good teeth there so do not need it. Just look at the job that St. Pierre and Miquelon did on the Canadian delegation at the Law of the Sea conference. This little island in the Atlantic is claiming 200 miles all around it, and Canada is fluttering around worrying about this tiny little island. That is why I say they have very good teeth in St. Pierre and Miquelon.

There has been a clear change in the philosophy of the government, Mr. Speaker, a move to the right, a clear abandonment of the kind of idealism that a few naive individuals in 1968, 1972 and 1974 thought the government had. As we see these capping moves and abandonment of responsibility in providing some kind of consistent medical care and social services in this country, we know where their heart of hearts lies. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is making passionate love all right; it is passionate love to the chambers of commerce in Canada, but he has abandoned most of the people of Canada. All that we have accomplished in Canada in terms of medicare has been just the first phase.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

Mr. Leggatt: I would like to call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, but there may be just a minute to go before I can do so—unless the House would like to call it ten o'clock. This may be something members are not really interested in.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we are finding the hon. member's comments so enlightening, might I suggest we not see it is ten o'clock for the next few minutes, so we might all be stimulated on our way home.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Leggatt: May I just comment on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is now ten o'clock.

Mr. Leggatt: That was hardly a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Unless there is unanimous consent to continue, we have to proceed with the adjournment debate.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under the provisions of Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OF CLOTHING AND TEXTILE BOARD ON POLYESTER YARN

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight at the adjournment session to bring again to the attention of the government and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) the precarious position of the Canadian textile industry and of the depressed markets for Canadian textiles at the present time. This depressed and adverse condition particularly applies to the makers of polyester yarn and filament. My words tonight are, of course, pursuant to my question asked of the minister on June 11. I asked it because of my deep concern for the welfare of the industry in my riding.

Celanese Canada, with its plant at Millhaven, is a major employer in my constituency and the area around it, as well as in Kingston, but because of the exposure of its product to the competition from cheap labour from Asiatic competitors overseas, the company has been forced to make major lay-offs in its personnel. This has naturally resulted not only in protests to the government by this great Canadian producer but also has brought sharp protests to the government from the county council of Lennox and Addington. I also have letters from employees and from the reeve and council of the Township of Ernestown.

● (2200)

Let me quote this resolution moved by councillor Grant McIlquham seconded by councillor Ian Wilson:

> Be it resolved that the Council of the Corporation of the Township of Ernestown express concern to the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the depressed state of the Canadian textile industry resulting from excessive volumes of imported textile products. The impact of this recently resulted in the lay-off of 235 employees from our local Celanese of Canada plant situated in the Township of Ernestown. In addition delay in expansion programs involving upwards of 40 million dollars has resulted. To date 360 employees of synthetic fibre producing plants have been laid off in the Kingston area. Potential summer employment opportunities in the area for upwards of 385 students have also failed to materialize.

Needless to say, this motion was carried by the township council unanimously, and it is strengthened by a personal letter I received from Mr. McIlquham in the same vein.

There is no doubt about the seriousness of the situation. There are some strange anomalies abroad in the Trudeau government. Why is the minister hesitating? The answer I got to my question on last Friday was that a report would be tabled on the matter of the dumping of cheap textiles into our market from other countries, and that this report would be tabled at the end of June. The end of June means that this House will be adjourned and the government, the cabinet, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce can then go back to sleep. The House will not be sitting, the government will be rid of the opposition, and generally eased of any further pressure from this beleaguered Canadian industry. That is not a good enough answer for me, Mr. Speaker. This matter should have been dealt with long ago by the minister and the anti-dumping tribunal, but there are some strange happenings and some stange anomalies in the Trudeau administration. The government, figuratively, is not "looking after the store."

The chairman of the anti-dumping tribunal is apparently too busy with his varied commercial activities, trying to sell and introduce the products and munitions of other countries to Canadian consumers. There must be terribly illegal conflict of interest there.

The situation of the textile industry is a case which should be dealt with immediately by the anti-dumping tribunal. What about the cabinet? It does not seem to be interested in the welfare of Canadian industry. Far from it, the ministers are busy now drumming up support for the abolition of capital punishment in the coming vote on Tuesday night, and there is one minister over in France deeply interested in the dangerous proposition of pressing bilingualism into air traffic control in Canada.

You cannot blame me for pointing this out, for most of us here know that if Canadian industry, and especially secondary industry as in this case, does not prosper, then neither does our country nor its workers in industry. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Roy), when speaking during yesterday's textile debate, said that an increased willingness to buy Canadian would be one element in the solution to the problems of the industry. That is all very well, and I think most of us do try to buy Canadian. But we see in our stores a flood of foreign goods from Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Korea where the workers in the plants receive 14 cents an hour, Canadian equivalent. This flood of cheap goods is so great that lately one picks up quite a few garments from display cases in stores before finding one made in Canada.

Having regard to the problems of polyester yarn products in the textile industry, I brought to the attention of the House last week the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had then had a major recommendation of the Clothing and Textile Board for over five weeks. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) replied on behalf of the minister that no action would be taken until the end of June. The minister is thus taking seven weeks or more to act in a crisis where action in two weeks was indicated.

I was distressed initially by this reply, having in mind the hardship it implies for the hundreds of people who have been laid off their jobs in Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, and in the Kingston district and other constituencies where this product is efficiently made and processed. Further investigation of the problem has revealed something more distressing still.

Previous outbreaks of the polyester yarn problem were studied on two occasions by the Clothing and Textile Board. The board made recommendations in December, 1972, and in February, 1975. In both cases the government failed to table or implement the recommendation of its board. The present inaction of the government, which the hon. member for Laval says will continue until June 30, when this House rises, suggests that the government may not be taking any action at all to restore the loss of jobs.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

In this grave matter affecting hundreds of my constituents, I request that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tabled without further delay the recommendations made by the Clothing and Textile Board five weeks ago, and to announce immediately the actions the government will take to implement them.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised to hear tonight about that matter on the late show on a subject that was debated yesterday during an opposition day. I would have preferred to see the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) participating in the debate we had yesterday. He would have understood what the textile policy was. I think the only answer I would have to give would be the following. Either the hon. member just wants to table a report without it having been considered to determine its full application and implications for all parties involved, or he wants the report to be brought forward without any follow-up, or again perhaps he wants some time to be taken to consider the implications of that report and then see what it could mean for the parties involved.

I would refer the hon. member to the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson), as reported at page 14578 of Hansard, and he will see then the exact answer given to his question, and I quote:

> I do not, however, deny the legitimacy of the claim that the process is on the slow side. I have looked into this and asked that once a report comes in from the Clothing and Textile Board there should be no delay in taking appropriate action. In this connection I am faced with something of a dilemma. We could table the report quite quickly after it is received from the board, but the policy has been to hold off publication of the report until a decision has been made on the action to be taken.

I suggest that if we table the report without simultaneously announcing our decision on the action to be taken a whole series of representations could be made which would further delay the process. For the moment we think it is preferable to receive the report, decide on the action to be taken, and made the announcement accordingly. If hon. members think that another amendment to that method could further step up things and they have information or know another procedure that could be used we would be quite happy to listen in an objective manner.

So, Mr. Speaker, once again I am somewhat surprised to see that matter discussed on the late show because if the hon. member had participated in the debate yesterday he would have had the answer.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REGIONAL PRODUCERS' REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on June 4 a group of producers representing all the producers within the CBC who are not of the Toronto-based organization put out a news release asking for the establishment of a royal commission to examine the organizational structure of the CBC and to find ways of decentralize that organization. I rose on June 8 to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) the following question:

Can the Secretary of State inform the House of any of the substance of the president's discussion and why the producers across Canada had to resort to this public call for a royal commission?

Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's answer was as follows:

I myself met with some members of the committee two weeks after his meeting. There is a problem which arises out of the success of our regionalization.

That is a staggering statement. I wish to give a couple of examples of the ludicrous nature of that kind of statement. I have before me a question from the order paper which was put by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds), dated March 25, in which he asked why the ten o'clock p.m. CBC radio news program coming from Vancouver is to be cancelled on April 1, 1977. Here, among some other reasons, is what the CBC representative wrote:

● (2210)

The English services division of the CBC decided that the resources available in the British Columbia region would be better devoted to improving B.C. newscasts and B.C. contributions to national newscasts than to the largely editing job involved in the present 10 p.m. news.

First of all, the answer does not tell you who the English services division is. Obviously it is part of the division in Toronto which cut off the news program coming from Vancouver. It means that all those people in the Kootenays, in the Chilcotin region, in the north country, in the Okanagan, who want local farm news from Vancouver are not going to get that program any more because Toronto knows best. Toronto will decided what will be on the ten o'clock news. But the English services division in Toronto has decided how those resources should be distributed. That is exactly the argument.

What is bothering the producers and directors across Canada within the CBC? Is is not that they do not have quality equipment; it is that they have no decision making power. Toronto knows best. Because I knew that the president of the CBC was going to Vancouver to meet with this informal group known as the Committee of 100, I posed the question to him when he appeared before the Broadcasting Committee on May 6. I asked him about the pilot project of the Peter Gzowski show. Somebody told me that a group of 16 technicians had been shipped from Toronto to Vancouver to do that pilot project. Mr. MacPherson, the vice-president and general manager of the CBC English services division, happened to give me the answer at that time. Here is what he said:

The unit would be a producer, researchers, bascially the travelling group that also produced the pilot program, there would be a director involved—

Here we have a program produced and directed in Vancouver, but the CBC has to bring their crew from Toronto to do it in Vancouver and, above all, they bring a research man. What kind of lunacy is it to have researchers coming from Toronto to produce a show in Vancouver?

The Secretary of State has the gall to say that the problem of directors and producers in B.C. stems from the fact that the CBC has been overly successful. We have a $30 million monument in Vancouver which looks like a grain elevator. The government has poured $30 million into that building, but the CBC is keeping the producers and directors there out of work because Toronto wants to make the decisions. Any time there is a program emanating from Vancouver it looks across the country for producers and directors to put on that show. And what do you know, you cannot find any good ones in Vancouver so you have to bring them from Toronto! The same is true for the Maritimes.

I know the parliamentary secretary cannot speak on this subject, but I know Nova Scotia is suffering in this way, and so is New Brunswick and Newfoundland just because Toronto thinks it is God and has all the answers and nobody else in the country knows anything.

A few weeks ago the House passed a resolution unanimously asking the committee to examine why the CBC abandoned or cut back its farm broadcasts. This is another example of CBC in Toronto deciding that there is a segment of the community in Canada that does not need the show that is going on. This is the point of my question to the Secretary of State. Why has he this penchant, this fixation, on buildings and equipment but not on people who produce the show in the first place?

While I think a royal commission is no answer to this because the report would be gathering dust as soon as it was finished, we do need a Secretary of State who will be serious about the real issues in public broadcasting. Forget about all the fancy, sexy projects that he has going in the country, and get to work to provide the kind of projects that will find work for the producers and directors in Canada and bring about unity.

The president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has said that one of the greatest issues within the CBC is that there are a lot of fractious factions within the CBC. The reason is that nothing is being done which will honour the intelligence and the decision-making processes in the regions.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member emphasizes that it is the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) who is in charge of the CBC, but the CBC comes to the committee quite often, and the hon. member can question there.

During questioning on May 7, 1976, by the hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) when the CBC was before the broadcasting committee, the CBC president, Mr. A. W. Johnson, outlined how he intended to deal with the three major propositions of the Committee of 100. One proposition had to do with the autonomy of decision-making within the British Columbia region; one proposition had to do with the extent of production in the British Columbia region; and the third proposition had to do with the kind of programming that CBC should be emphasizing.

In connection with those propositions, Mr. Johnson told the broadcasting committee meeting that as for the autonomy of decision-making in respect of productions for the network, the CBC must use the best talents, the best executive producers and producers that it can find and that the CBC regards the producers in British Columbia as it regards the producers in Toronto, as being a pool on which to draw. Excellence, not quotas, must be used as the basis for the CBC's determination of what is the best team for producing programming which relates to a particular part of the country.

At the subsequent meeting with the Committee of 100, Mr. Johnson stressed his concern for proper balance between national, regional and local programming and for over-all consultation in the program decision-making process at all levels. He assured the Committee of 100 that this area would be a priority for regular review during his term of office.

At the meeting in Vancouver the CBC president further agreed, as he had said he would when before the broadcasting committee, to give the Committee of 100 the facts, both in statistical and program terms, on what is being produced regionally for regional consumption, what is being produced and used in other centres across Canada in the regional exchanges, and, thirdly, the amount of production emanating from British Columbia on the national network.

On the third question concerning programming emphasis, Mr. Johnson told the broadcasting committee, and subsequently the Committee of 100 in Vancouver, that he thought the short generalization of the point of view of the Vancouver group was that the CBC should leave situation comedies, family dramas, and variety to the Americans because they are good at them. If the CBC were to do that, he said, it would be leaving to the Americans a very large proportion of programming and viewing time of Canadians, and he did not believe that would be a good thing.

The desire of CBC television producers for even more regional involvement is understandable and CBC program managers in Toronto and the regions have discussed and will continue to discuss this question with producers.

I am informed further that the CBC has been reviewing over the past several months both its regional organization and regional program production, production both for regional and network use. It was with this review in mind that the CBC president visited all regions of the corporation during his first nine months in office and met with representatives of the Committee of 100 in Vancouver last month. Mr. Johnson has advised that he expects to be in a position to make a statement sometime this fall on the proposals which result from this review.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the three minutes time allotted to her has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 18, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO LOCKING OUT OF FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES BY AIR CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the following telegram captioned "Urgent" was sent to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro):

● (1110)

In the matter of the dispute between Air Canada and Canadian Airline Employees' Association. CALEA recognizes Air Canada's legal rights under the Canada Labour Code. Nonetheless, CALEA finds Air Canada's action of June 16, 1976, inexcusable in light of the discrepancies of what the public is told and what the employees have been told. I hereby urge you to instigate an inquiry into the current dispute and also into Air Canada's labour relations policies and attitudes. We would be pleased to meet with you at your earliest convenience regarding this matter.

It is signed, J. T. Saunders, President, Canadian Airlines Employees' Association. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Minister of Labour, in view of the long-standing nature of the dispute and the unprecedented action of our national air carrier in locking out its employees, follow the very reasonable request by J. T. Saunders, President of the Canadian Airlines Employees' Association for an inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House before presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION OF SOVIET VETERANS COMMITTEE

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to recognize the presence in our gallery of a very noble group from Russia, the delegation of the Soviet Veterans Committee. It was my privilege to meet with them in Winnipeg on a return visit with the Royal Canadian Legion this week. I was also privileged to meet with them last night, and with your permission I should like to recognize the presence of Admiral Zakharov and Major-General Golyakov.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES OF CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance is temporarily absent so I will ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to provide the House with some information as to the role of the Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, and whether his activities in various business enterprises may have placed him in conflict with the provisions of Section 21, subsection (7) of the Anti-Dumping Act which, prima facie seems to be the case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I did have conversation with the Minister of Finance before he left for a meeting with the Investment Dealers' Association. He had not finished the inquiry he was personally conducting, of which he talked yesterday in the House.

POSSIBILITY OF PREVIOUS INQUIRY INTO COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES OF CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Prime Minister for his answer. If I may I should like to direct a question about the same matter to the Solicitor General. Could that hon. gentleman inform the House whether previous or former activities of the Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal in seeking investments for his own benefits or the benefits of others caused an investigation into his activities sometime ago in this respect, and whether the RCMP or military intelligence ever informed any of the Solicitor General's colleagues about this? If so, when was this done?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have never been advised that there was such an investigation.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT TO PERMIT CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL CONTINUE COMMERCIAL ACTIVITY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will he indicate, if he can recall, whether during negotiations with Mr. Gauthier, at which time it was agreed he would carry on as Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal for an additional six months, that Mr. Gauthier's private business activities were discussed and, as Mr. Gauthier has said, that an agreed condition of his continuation as Chairman was the understanding that he would be permitted to carry on these private activities? In any event, could we have the contract referred to by the Minister of Finance last Tuesday in respect of Mr. Gauthier's current employment tabled in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be gald to convey to the Minister of Finance the suggestions of the hon. member. I would just remind him that Mr. Gauthier was staying on at our request. He had for sometime wanted to resign at the end of December, and it was to accommodate the government and to help us in this transitional period for six months that he agreed to stay on. What exactly transpired of a contractual form or in conversation between Mr. Gauthier and the minister, I think would be wise for me to let the minister answer.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as Mr. Gauthier's tenure of office as Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal was mainly under Mr. Turner as Minister of Finance, will the Prime Minister indicate if at any time Mr. Turner indicated that Mr. Gauthier was carrying on private business activities at the same time as being Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and, if so, what was the rationale for permitting Mr. Gauthier to carry on with these activities?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making an assumption of which personally I have no knowledge; that is, that he is carrying on these activities. On this side, we find it wiser to find out the facts before making allegations. I have nothing further to add as to the period under Mr. Turner when Mr. Gauthier was brought in there except a recollection of not knowing Mr. Gauthier personally. I inquired about him and found out that he was a very valuable civil servant and that it would be a very good appointment if we made it. It was as a result of this that we proceeded to make the appointment.

* * *

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ESTIMATE OF IMPACT ON REVENUES OF PROVINCES OF FEDERAL COST-SHARING PROPOSALS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the cost-sharing proposals which the right hon. gentleman placed before the first ministers' conference. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has done a costing analysis of the proposals giving the estimates of the financial impact on each of the provinces and more particularly, as to whether or not the government has made any estimate as to what financial returns this would have given the provinces over the past years had these proposals been in effect and a projection as to what tax returns and revenues this would give the provinces over the next five years should these proposals go into effect.

[Mr. Allmand.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I answered the other day I cannot give these estimates in detail. Perhaps some figures do exist in the Department of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and that of the Secretary of State, but as I emphasized to the House, and I think the premiers understand this well, the projection through the past of course would not be a fair indication of what we are doing. In the past we knew that these programs escalated at a very fast rate, something I believe in the area of 15 per cent or 17 per cent escalation per annum. We did not want this to continue and that is why we have resorted to capping some of these programs. But in the plan for the future we sought agreement from the House, the country and the provinces to limit the rate of escalation and instead of doing this through capping—

An hon. Member: Capping?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, through capping, a difficult term to understand. I am sure the hon. member will be able to ask a supplementary. It would be a good day for him to do so. What we are proposing instead is a plan which would be composed of cash grants. These would be escalated more or less at the rate of growth of the national product. They would grow as the country grew. This is not possible to calculate in detail but every one would be able to plan on that basis. We know more or less the rate at which we hope to grow.

The other part would be in the form of tax points which we said would grow at least as fast or faster than the GNP. This is the problem with the fiscal dividend which would accrue from the fact that some of these tax points tend to grow faster than the rate of growth of the economy. So, it was a clear indication to the provinces of the principles on which this would be based which would permit them to make the calculations. I repeat that we may have made some estimates in departments but they are always conjectural. It depends upon the rate of growth of the economy.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be very difficult for this House or the premiers of the provinces to make any decision in respect of these problems unless they get the kind of information I am asking for, and particularly some idea of what the base year would be in each case and that so far has not been divulged. In view of the Prime Minister's answer to my question to the effect that the grants for health services and post-secondary education are now to be brought into line with the rate of economic growth, I want to ask the Prime Minister what possible relationship there is between the incidence of illness and the gross national product, in view of the fact that last year the cost of providing health services went up by 15 per cent at the same time that the gross national product was virtually at a standstill.

● (1120)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is obviously no absolutely direct correlation of which I know between the incidence of illness and the growth of the economy, but I take it the hon. member must recognize that the amount of money we can spend for health and education is not unlimited and that it is useful, if governments are to search out priorities and spend the public moneys in ways which meet those priorities, that they be able to do some planning. They cannot just say that they might have an epidemic next year and therefore they will have to let the growth escalate at an epidemic rate for the next ten years. There are obviously contingencies for which one has to plan. But the hon. member has been leader of a government which I think was notoriously successful in the management of its economic affairs, which never came near bankruptcy, so he must have been able to plan ahead what he would spend in various sectors of the economy including health, and I am sure he would understand this.

BASIS ON WHICH COST-SHARING FOR HEALTH AND EDUCATION WILL BE TERMINATED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that last year in the budget the former minister of finance announced that he was giving notice to the provinces of the termination of the five year agreement covering hospital insurance and diagnostic services, since this agreement still has four years to run, are we to understand that all the cost sharing proposals with respect to health services and post-secondary education are entirely contingent on the provinces accepting the immediate termination of the hospital insurance and diagnostic services, or is it intended that they will carry on for the four years which remain on the 50-50 basis and some other arrangement will be made about the other health insurance programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In the case of the post-secondary education the expiry date is April of next year, if my memory is correct. We talked about three areas at this conference. In the area of medicare, of course, the system of federal grants is already well established. The only case I think to which the hon. member's question refers would be hospital grants and we indicated that we were not going to accelerate the termination date of 1980. We were putting in place a program which hopefully would be able to bridge over the difference. If we can institute the program earlier, as indeed some provincial premiers suggested, we are prepared to do it sooner, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that in his statement to the conference. But it is not our desire to foreshorten this date if the provinces do not want to do so and we did not urge for it in any sense; we were merely responding to a suggestion by one of the premiers.

REACTION OF PROVINCES TO FINANCING PROPOSALS FOR MEDICARE AND HOSPITAL INSURANCE—PROVISION FOR REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I asked this supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister two days ago and he said he would bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister now whether he could indicate to the House what the reaction of the premiers was to his established program financing proposal insofar as it relates to medicare and hospital insurance. Could the Prime Minister also explain the circumstances of the review which he has been proposing between himself and the premiers in so far as hospital insurance and diagnostic services are concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that in my perception of it a great majority of the provinces favoured this scheme because it responded to a request the provinces have been making for a long time that there be a transfer of tax room and greater flexibility for the provinces in applying or in spending the money they receive from the federal government. To my recollection, only one or two provinces, or perhaps three, indicated that they were not sure, and that perhaps they would rather continue receiving it all in the form of cash rather than some of it in the form of tax room, but the general response to the scheme, as I perceived it, in principle, was favourable.

Of course, the calculations of rate of growth and the base year, to which the hon. member from the New Democratic Party referred, are important in the calculations, and we indicated that at the meeting of ministers of finance in July these would be the areas which would be discussed in greater detail. However, in so far as the principle of getting more tax room from the federal government is concerned, hon. members opposite will remember that this has been a constant request of the provinces, and this is designed to meet that, at least in part.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PROPOSED REVIEW OF HEALTH PROGRAMS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred repeatedly to the federal-provincial review of health legislation and programs, and I wanted the Prime Minister to tell us how such a review would be carried out and what the circumstances of this federal-provincial review, to which he has been referring, would be.

Perhaps I will repeat the question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister explain the circumstances of the federal-provincial review in so far as health legislation and programs are concerned? There had been mention made in his established program about the financing proposal of the joint federal-provincial review of the health programs. I wonder if the minister could clarify the circumstances of that review.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement in principle with the provinces to consider the possibility of extended cost sharing under the existing legislation, but in addition, there was general agreement in principle with the provinces, when the ministers of health met last time, that it would be appropriate to have a more global review which would consider all aspects of health in this country, not only the provision of the services which we are cost sharing now or those we could cost share under the existing legislation, but the whole area of prevention, for instance, and the whole area of the provision of health services both by the federal and provincial governments. The suggestion was made and agreed to in principle that we should take time, before agreeing on a wholly new financing formula, to look at the whole health field along the lines of the New Perspective on the Health of Canadians, which was published by the government three years ago.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO INQUIRE INTO SAFETY OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT STRIKE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with respect to the anticipated strike by CATCA which, as a result of the statement yesterday, is now nearly upon us. Yesterday in the House the President of the Treasury Board in answer to a question by the hon. member for Vegreville said, with respect to the replacement of an appointee, that he did not believe it is possible to appoint a replacement for Mr. Keenan before the return of the Minister of Transport, who is now travelling abroad. Does the Prime Minister accept the proposition that the government is paralysed with respect to this matter until the return of the Minister of Transport? In addition, I wonder if the Prime Minister could inform the House what other action the government is taking or is contemplating with respect to this important matter.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I could respond to that question, the government is by no means paralysed in the way the hon. member has described. The search for a replacement for Mr. Keenan, as I indicated earlier this week in the House, is going forward. The minister certainly directed his attention to this before he left and his officials are pursuing it very vigorously in his absence. He is in regular and frequent contact with his officials and certainly the House and the hon. gentleman can be assured that we are proceeding with all possible speed to find an appropriate person to replace Mr. Keenan as the commissioner.

● (1130)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we can say at least that it is most unfortunate that the minister chose this time to be away. This leads to the second question to the Prime Minister. When is the Minister of Transport planning to return and are there any plans afoot for the government to make application to the courts with respect to this matter having regard to the announcement made yesterday by the air traffic controllers? What are the plans of the government in respect of the matter and are any sessions being conducted between the government or representatives of the government, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, with the officials of CATCA to find a suitable replacement for Mr. John Keenan? This seems to be the central issue in this whole matter and I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us what is happening?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a series of questions there. In answer to the first one, the Minister of Transport was planning to return by the regular DND flight schedule for Monday. It is possible that he will return earlier depending on several contingencies, one of them being that the government is asking for an injunction which I believe will be heard at four o'clock this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In the meantime, to repeat what the parliamentary secretary just indicated to the House, we are very concerned indeed with finding a commissioner or commissioners to replace Mr. Keenan and, as he indicated, we hope that will be done as soon as possible.

POSSIBILITY OF CONSULTATIONS WITH AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS TO AVERT STRIKE—CONSIDERATION OF COMMISSIONER SUGGESTED BY CONTROLLERS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. Since the application to the courts that he refers to, which I presume is to the federal court of Canada, is likely to be an ex parte injunction and in effect would only postpone this strike for eight or ten days if it were successful, would the Prime Minister answer another part of the question I put to him? Does the government intend to have consultations with the officers of CATCA during that period if the injunction is successful or in the alternative, are those consultations going on now, bearing in mind that what they are talking about is perhaps the curtailment to the Canadian public of an essential service?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, in so far as talking to CATCA is concerned, this is necessary and has been done to the extent that we are trying to look for a commissioner who would be acceptable to both sides, the public and CATCA itself. I do not say that at some point if we cannot reach agreement we will not have to proceed on our own. Of course, we would like, as we did with Mr. Keenan, to find someone who is broadly acceptable to CATCA and hopefully to the other interests involved.

Apart from not wanting to speculate on the results of a legal proceeding, an injunction, which I indicated we are going to proceed with this afternoon, I must remind the House that the government's position is that this strike is an illegal strike, that it is not part of the collective agreement. We are quite disturbed that any group or union in Canada would want to strike against the principle of bilingualism. This in our mind is what is now happening. It is conceivable how a strike can solve, some times, economic issues or issues of a contractual nature, but it is inconceivable to me how this strike can solve safety in the air. This certainly cannot be done by strike action.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, by way of preamble I want to make it quite clear to the Prime Minister that I think all parties in this House of Commons, and indeed the country, regard the matter of air safety as the important aspect—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Why not bilingualism?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can the Prime Minister confirm whether a suggestion was made by CATCA as to an acceptable commissioner and whether the government considered that? Did they in fact reject that suggestion? I understand one was made or is that a point that is still pending with respect to that particular matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, concerning the hon. member's preamble, I am glad to hear the statement that the opposition is concerned for public safety. I hope they would share the government's view that the question of bilingualism, the use of bilingualism and its relation to safety cannot be settled by a strike and they join us in denouncing this strike as ill-timed and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You, as a government, are not taking it seriously.

Mr. Trudeau: I see the hon. member shaking his head in assent. I hope that can be interpreted as a statement of the Tory party to all those—with of course the exception of the hon. member for Edmonton—

Mr. Paproski: Centre.

Mr. Trudeau: Edmonton Centre who seems to disagree with his seatmate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What equivocation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You should not inflame a bad situation.

Mr. Trudeau: Why do you not make a clear statement?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I just did; you make an answer.

Mr. Fraser: You are not helping, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: I should like to know how the hon. opposition is helping. They do not seem to be very helpful in this matter.

REASON MINISTER OUT OF COUNTRY IN VIEW OF THREATENED STRIKE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to make it quite clear that the primacy of safety is in the mind of everyone around here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, with the resignation of Mr. Keenan as the commissioner and with the uneasiness amongst air traffic controllers at the collapse of the commission which was evident a week or so ago, can the Prime Minister explain why the Minister of Transport should have decided at this moment and in these circumstances to leave the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the sequence of events is not as the hon. member seems to suggest. The Minister of Transport indicated to me several months ago his desire to be in Europe at this time in order precisely to look into the kind of issue, amongst others, which is of concern to this country—safety in the air. There are improvements that can be brought to air transport and so on. So he did not decide at this time to go, he had decided long ago to go to Europe. When he left, the issue of the commissioner and had been settled and unsettled in the way the House knows and, as the parliamentary secretary indicated, the search was on for a replacement for Mr. Keenan and it was, beyond the first attempts that had been made, difficult to find people who would be agreeable to both CATCA and les gens de l'air. It obviously was a matter which would take some time and some cooling off, which is what has been taking place, and the uncertainty is going on. We have not yet found someone who would be reasonably acceptable to all concerned in this and the search is proceeding.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has confirmed the reports that the minister has gone to Europe to inquire into this problem of the use of languages and its effect on safety. I wonder what construction one is to put on this particular visit, particularly in the light of its having been decided several months ago. Is one to conclude that the minister has some doubts as to the reliability of the facts set out in the Bilcom report and has had to go there to check matters out for himself?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Scarborough. Order, please. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

* * *

ENERGY

MINISTER'S VIEW OF CRITICS OF NUCLEAR POLICY—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is based on the Statement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that:

> . . . public reaction to the nuclear issue is based on some highly inflammatory and misleading information.

● (1140)

Given that officials of the Atomic Energy Control Board, the president of Petro-Canada and a number of leading Canadians have warned about the dangers inherent in radioactive wastes from nuclear power plants, does the Prime Minister share the minister's cavalier assumption that any criticism, even that of such informed and responsible sources as I have mentioned, falls into the "highly inflammatory and misleading" category?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is totally and completely incorrect in saying that that is the minister's assumption. Therefore, I do not share it.

Oral Questions

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister undertake to look into the statement made by the minister to the Canadian Nuclear Association, with a view to having him clarify it or, at least, retract his broad-brush approach to criticism of nuclear power, in the interests of open and informed debate on this vital issue?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister has participated repeatedly in open and informed debate, and I think the hon. member herself in aware of the existence of broad-brush statements; that, I think, was her expression. Politicians are sometimes inclined to use them. It is important to look at them in good faith, and to see the context in which the minister takes action and is pursuing this debate.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF CONSULTATION WITH AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS TO AVERT STRIKE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? In view of the immediate prospect of the air traffic controllers strike and the unfortunate absence of the Minister of Transport, may I ask if officials of the Department of Transport are meeting with representatives of CATCA, the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association, and setting forth proposals to avert the possibility of the strike?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have decided to take court action, but if Mr. Livingston wants to meet us, we are ready to see him at any time. I must say that Mr. Livingston has made a number of statements up to now, but he did not attempt to approach me or any of my officials. The government's view is very clear: it is an illegal strike and we shall take the necessary steps to avoid it.

[English]

ALLEGATION RADAR AND LANDING EQUIPMENT OBSOLETE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Since it is necessary to harmonize safety with bilingual air traffic control across the country, since there are serious difficulties with regard to the use of outdated radar and landing equipment at airports across Canada, and since the issue of bilingual air traffic control may exacerbate the issue of safety and safe procedures followed by air traffic controllers across Canada, may I ask if the government has taken steps to replace obsolete radar and landing equipment, so that we may at all times be assured of the safety factor?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Canada has an enviable record in air safety. It is second to none.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, we are determined to maintain that standard. If the hon. gentleman is aware of some particular difficulties concerning our navigational aids, I wish he would draw them to the attention of the ministry so that we can examine them one by one.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

GUIDELINES FOR SENIOR STAFF OF MINISTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On July 18, 1973, on the subject of conflict of interest legislation, the Prime Minister was reminded by the then leader of the opposition that "there is also nothing in the guidelines announced today respecting ministers' senior staff people". Has the Prime Minister been addressing himself to this continuing problem? If so, what does he intend to do about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was settled several months ago—I am not sure of the exact date. My recollection of that question is none too precise. However, when I announced the guidelines I indicated that they would, indeed, cover everyone in the position to exercise influence on the government and who might be in a conflict of interest situation. Ministers, in so far as their exempt staff is concerned, have assured compliance with the guidelines on the part of such staff. Of course, the departmental people have been informed, and they have conformed to the guidelines. This is also true of the Crown corporations. As far as we know, every sector of the Canadian public service and ministerial service has been covered by these guidelines.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROPOSED STEEL COMPLEX FOR CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister in the position to report briefly on the progress, if any, being made with regard to the proposed steel complex for Cape Breton? I ask this, Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency of the matter, namely, the apparent cancellation of new developments at the existing steel mill at Sydney, a mill which is the backbone of the economy of Cape Breton Island where the work force has been drastically reduced, as the minister knows. What message of encouragement does the hon. gentleman have today for the people of Cape Breton Island?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member, with regard to the last part of his question concerning SYSCO, that today's newspapers are announcing the last investments, to which the Department of Regional Econcmic Expansion contributed; they will give results in the near future. They will increase by a considerable amount the plant's capacity to produce rails and will thus make SYSCO's operations more profitable. Unfortunately they will not solve all the problems of the company.

In answer to the first part of his question, I must say that it is true that a few weeks ago the premier of Nova Scotia was in Europe and that the president of DEVCO, Mr. Kent, accompanied him. On that occasion they met several industrialists, heads of steel industries in particular, who are interested in the development of a primary steel industry in Canada. I have had a few brief reports on the result of that meeting. I have been told that the meeting was very interesting and very positive and that one could hope that more progress would be achieved at any moment with regard to that project.

With regard to the project for the development of a steel industry in Canada, and in eastern Canada in particular, as the hon. member knows the department continued its analyses as a result of the tabling of the CANSTEL project report. I can assure the hon. member that the department has now completed those analyses, and that we will therefore be in a position to discuss and contribute efficiently, in terms of technical information, to any proposal we may be submitted in the course of the coming months.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—DATE MINISTER KNEW FINANCING ARRANGEMENTS VERBAL

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister inform the House if he knew that the commitment by Lockheed to provide interim financing for the LRPA project was purely verbal, if he first knew it about mid-November and if he was ever given occasion to think otherwise?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not know that in mid-November. I said earlier to the House that I first learned that Lockheed could not perform what they said they could do when I returned from Brussels. That was about the middle of December. That was also the first time I learned there was only a verbal arrangement. In fact, I may not even have known of the verbal arrangement until later in December. I knew on my return from Brussels that they could not carry out their part of the financing.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I could produce half a dozen references to indicate that the minister did know, but will limit myself to one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, how can the minister account for his answer of June 2, as reported on page 14077 of Hansard? When asked whether he had asked Lockheed for any written commitment that they would supply the interim financing he replied, no.

● (1150)

Mr. Richardson: I would have to look at the record to see what was being referred to at that time. None of our officials, it is very clear, asked either Boeing or Lockheed, at that stage, for written confirmation. They asked for assurances that the financing could be arranged. This has been stated so many times that I do not know why we have to keep on repeating it.

* * *

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION DEPARTMENT ADVISING BANKRUPT PERSONS TO IGNORE COURT WRITS OR SUMMONSES

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or his parliamentary secretary or, in their absence, the acting minister in charge of that department. It arises from written complaints I have received from the small claims court in Napanee regarding the new "instant bankruptcy" procedures followed by the department or by employees and officials of the department in connection with cases of bankruptcy. Individuals who apply to this department and commence bankruptcy proceedings are being instructed to ignore all court summonses or writs from county and small claims courts, not to accept them and to avoid service. This is contrary to the law. No one can lawfully ignore a writ or a summons from a court. Why does the minister or his department authorize such illegal acts? Will he investigate the situation and stop this illegal procedure?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Obviously, I shall take note of the hon. member's question and draw it to the attention of the minister concerned. I am not aware of the circumstances surrounding the hon. member's representation but the situation will be examined and I hope to have an answer for him soon.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SENIOR CITIZENS' WEEK

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the fact that next week, in Ontario at least, will be senior citizens' week and that the Ottawa Senior Citizens Council is represented in your gallery today by Mr. Walter Turnbull, who is a former deputy minister and a very prominent former public servant as well as secretary to Prime Minister King, who is present to emphasize this important event. I am sure all members will wish the senior citizens well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MEDIATE DISPUTE BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising from my proposed motion earlier today under Standing Order 43. The minister now has a copy. Can the hon. gentleman report to the House whether his officials have been able, over the last few months, to find any way of breaking the longstanding impasse in relations between Air Canada and its employees in Winnipeg? Having heard both sides of the story, I can assure the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that there is the greatest need for somebody to mediate between the parties in connection with this matter.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I agree with the hon. member that there is a need to resolve this situation; it goes very deep in terms of emotional considerations. I was informed a short while ago that the union has gone to the courts to contest the legality of the company's lock-out. In the meantime, they have sent me a telegram suggesting that a commissioner be appointed and we are giving active consideration to the appointment of a commissioner to look into one particular area which I consider to be the root cause of the dispute. I hope to be able to tell the hon. member at the beginning of next week what action is to be taken.

* * *

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ALLEVIATE EFFECT OF RATE INCREASES AND TO DECREASE RATE OF INTEREST ON LOANS TO COMMISSION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? I had intended to direct this question to the minister for Indian affairs yesterday but he was not in the House. Today, he was here for a while, but he is not here now and I note that his parliamentary secretary is not here either. The question concerns the rate increases proposed by the Northern Canada Power Commission. For the past several weeks, people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon have been expecting the minister's reply to reports on the NCPC by the public utilities boards and by citizens groups in the two territories. Is the minister concerned now prepared to make public the action he is prepared to take to protect northern consumers from the drastic increases in the cost of electricity which are contemplated? In particular, would he change the rate of interest on the loans to the Power Commission to help bring about a favourable result?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice that he will put these questions and make these representations to the minister on Monday. I will ensure that he is prepared to answer.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTION AIRBORNE REGIMENT REMAIN IN EDMONTON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister comply with my request to allow the Canadian Airborne Regiment to remain in Edmonton?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The Airborne Regiment is being considered, as are all units, in the course of the infrastructure study. I cannot make a commitment about any individual unit.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF DISTRIBUTION OF OLYMPIC LOTTERY TICKETS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday, as well as a week or so ago, the hon. gentleman denied any knowledge of fraudulent improprieties within the Olympic lottery program, as well as any RCMP activities in this regard, other than in the Province of Ontario. Upon further investigation I have reason to believe that these fraudulent practices are, indeed, taking place in Quebec and elsewhere and that an on-going investigation is being carried out into this matter in Quebec by the RCMP fraud squad based in Toronto and under the supervision of Inspector Rodney T. Stemler. I would therefore like to ask the Solicitor General who, I say, with respect, does not know a great deal about what is going on in his department—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Well, he does not know whether the RCMP are investigating this matter in Quebec. I would ask him to look into this question again and perhaps report to the House before it rises for the summer break.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I put that question directly to the senior officers of the RCMP a few days ago and they gave me the answer I gave to the House. I have to rely on information given to me; I do not deal with the inspector referred to by the hon. member, I deal with the senior officers here in Ottawa. I told the hon. member yesterday that I will check again. I will do so and if there is any further information, I will give it to the House.

* * *

LOTO-CANADA

SUGGESTED DELAY OF PROGRAM PENDING CLARIFICATION OF ALLEGED FRAUD IN DISTRIBUTION OF OLYMPIC LOTTERY TICKETS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): The minister is obviously not getting the proper information from the top. However, my supplementary question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the many uncertainties and, surely, fraudulent irregularities within the existing lottery program, much of which, as the hon. gentleman knows, will be passed on to Loto-Canada, would the minister consider postponing the inception of Loto-Canada until all questionable aspects of the sale and distribution program have been cleared up in order to avoid the continuation, perhaps unintentionally, of fraudulent practices within the new program?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to appear three days before the committee. I answered all questions. The hon. member did not ask me any question on the distribution of the tickets, even if he had the opportunity to do so for many hours. I answered other questions on this subject. I said we wanted to have strict control over this, to be sure that there is no abuse and that we wanted to have a distribution system controlled by Loto Canada rather than by intermediaries appointed by the provincial government as is the case for Wintario. We intend to appear before the committees of the House each year to answer questions. The chairman of Loto Canada had long sessions with me at the committee, and we tried to give every possible answer to hon. members. We told them that if they had concrete suggestions, they should put them directly to Mr. Cousineau who would be prepared to examine and use them.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

PROPOSAL TO RENAME JUSTICE BUILDING IN HONOUR OF RIGHT HON. LOUIS ST. LAURENT

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the question period the Prime Minister invited me to pose a question to him and, being one of those who can resist anything but temptation, I should like to do that right now.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

● (1200)

Mr. O'Sullivan: As the rather extensive and expensive renovations come to an end on the Justice building next to the Confederation building on Wellington Street, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would give consideration to the suggestion that that building be named after a man who served with distinction as Minister of Justice, who went on to become Prime Minister of Canada and served in that office with distinction. We will not hold it against him that he was a member of the Liberal party. I am referring, of course, to the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for this very generous and worth-while suggestion. It is not the first time that he has referred in gallant terms to a former Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You may have another, too, shortly.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre says there may be another chance a few years down the road.

Mr. Paproski: Right after 1978.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure that if that happens the hon. member for Edmonton Centre and I will retire together. The question is indeed worthy of consideration. I have already had discussions with the Secretary of State and the cabinet on suitable ways of honouring the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. We have decided on one course but this may be one that we would want to consider before making a final decision.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF OFFICIALS FROM GOVERNMENT OF GHANA

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know all members of the House would want to join with me in welcoming to your gallery today a number of trade officials representing the government of Ghana and certain private business concerns in Ghana who are in Canada for discussions with government officials and representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I have to stand on a point of order for purposes of clarification of the answer given me by the President of the Treasury Board. It is true that during the committee stage the situation of Loto-Canada was before the committee, but I did not ask the President of the Treasury Board about the distribution of lottery tickets. However, I asked the president of Loto-Canada about this and he had no idea what the distribution of tickets was going to be. Therefore, my point of order is this: in response to my question, the minister was referring to the committee stage, not to my question at all. I wonder whether the minister would answer and tell me whether he would reconsider postponing the initiation of Loto-Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Seventeenth Report of Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey).

Order Paper Questions

[Translation]

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Sixth Report of Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, in both official languages.—Mr. Guilbault.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are marked by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,773, 5,171, 5,237, 5,402, 5,523, 5,550 and 5,650.

[Text]

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT AND ACTIVITIES PROGRAMME

Question No. 4,773—Mr. Herbert:

Of the total amount of $60,886,000 appearing in the 1975-76 estimates for student summer employment, how much has been (a) paid to students (b) paid as salaries to public servants (c) spent otherwise?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): During the Summer of 1975, some 12 federal departments operated programmes under the Student Summer Employment and Activities Programme. Attached is a departmental breakdown of expenditures of the 1975-76 proportion of funds allocated. The difference of $6,000 between the noted amount of $60,886,000 and the amounts shown on the attached table is due to a rounding off of these figures.

Department	Amount Paid to Students	Paid Salaries to Public Servants	Spent Otherwise	TOTAL
Manpower and Immigration	$35,475,000	$2,293,000	$3,618,000	$41,386,000
National Film Board	80,000			80,000
Health and Welfare	1,009,000	39,000	21,000	1,069,000
National Defence	6,363,000	11,000	1,391,000	7,765,000
Consumer and Corporate Affairs	31,000		29,000	60,000
Secretary of State	6,307,000	340,000	2,389,000	9,036,000
Indian Affairs	1,036,000	158,000	8,000	1,202,000
Solicitor General	37,000			37,000
Agriculture	99,000	3,000	6,000	108,000
National Revenue	18,000			18,000
Transport	73,000			73,000
Energy, Mines and Resources	58,000			58,000
Total	$50,586,000	$2,844,000	$7,462,000	$60,892,000

PUBLIC SERVICE—SECOND LANGUAGE SCHOOLS

Question No. 5,171—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1970 to date, have any departments or government bodies negotiated contracts with Paquette Hudson Associates for the teaching of a second language to public servants and, if so, in each case (a) what was the contract (b) how many (c) for what amount?

2. For each year, what percentage of the money granted to the school was directed to salaries of (a) teachers (b) administrators?

3. Are the requirements for (a) formation (b) experience of the teachers only under the school and, if not, is there a link between such requirements and those that prevail when hiring teachers of a second language for the Public Service?

4. For each year, how many (a) French speaking (b) English speaking public servants have followed courses offered by the school?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by all departments and agencies as follows: none.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CONTAINER RAIL RATES

Question No. 5,237—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Did CNR increase its container rail rate to the Port of Halifax-Dartmouth to and from Montreal and/or Toronto by 10 percent on January 1, 1976 and, if so, what is the government's position on the request for a further 5 percent in June 1976?

2. What is the government's best estimate of the total rail rate increase since 1969, in percentage terms, should the 1976 increase be approved?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Export/Import container rail rates applicable between Halifax and Montreal and/or Toronto were increased by 10 per cent on January 1, 1976. Carriers have advised the shipping public that a further adjustment will take place no later than July 1, 1976, amounting to an additional increase of no less than 5 per cent. Under the statutes, railway companies are not required to request permission for increases in freight rates and may initiate such increases by filing tariff amendments with the Canadian Transport Commission on 30 days notice. Such increases do not in the normal course require approval of the Commission or the government. However, the Canadian Transport Commission is monitoring the recent increase in container rail rates in the performance of its new duties under the Anti-Inflation legislation, and has called upon the railways to furnish it with all the information it requires in this regard. Any finding under the Anti-Inflation legislation will be communicated in due course.

2. An estimate of absolute total container rail rate increases since 1969, in percentage terms, cannot be readily ascertained as terms and conditions relating to specific movements have been broadened considerably since that time. The following statement contains a complete breakdown of charges applicable on container movements between points under review for the period in question.

Containers Export and Import—Loaded—Freight all Kinds or Empty via Rail

Effective Date	Between Montreal, Quebec and Halifax, Nova Scotia										Between Toronto, Ontario and Halifax, Nova Scotia
	Column 1		Column 2		Column 3		Column 4		Column 5		Column 1		Column 2		Column 3		Column 4		Column 5
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)
August 26, 1969	75	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	110	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
October 1, 1970	81	162	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	117	234	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
October 1, 1971	—	—	87	174	93	186	99	198	—	—	—	—	124	248	131	262	138	276	—	—
April 1, 1973	—	—	94	188	100	200	106	212	140	280	—	—	132	264	139	278	146	292	207	414
May 1, 1974	—	—	103	206	109	218	115	230	154	308	—	—	142	284	149	298	156	312	228	456
April 1, 1975	—	—	118	236	125	250	132	264	177	354	—	—	163	326	171	342	179	358	262	524
January 1, 1976	—	—	130	260	138	276	145	290	195	390	—	—	179	358	188	376	197	394	288	576

(a) Charge in dollars per 20 ft. container.
(b) Charge in dollars per 40 ft. container.

Explanations of columns:

Column 1: Applicable on a minimum of 200 containers per calendar week when the carrier receives a minimum of 40 trips per year in each direction.

Column 2: Applicable only on a minimum of 18,000 20-foot containers (or equivalent) per calendar year, loaded or empty, between Halifax, Nova Scotia Montreal, Province of Quebec, Saint John, New Brunswick and Toronto, Ontario. Containers moving on behalf of the same shipper between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick and Hamilton, Ontario may be added to the volume between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Province of Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. A calendar year begins October 1 of each year and terminates September 30 of the following year.

Column 3: Applicable only on a minimum of 15,000 20-foot containers (or equivalent) per calendar year, loaded or empty, between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Province of Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. Containers moving on behalf of the same shipper between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick and Hamilton, Ontario may be added to the volume between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Province of Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. A calendar year begins October 1 of each year and terminates September 30 of the following year.

Column 4: Applicable only on a minimum of 12,000 20-foot containers (or equivalent) per calendar year, loaded or empty, between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Province of Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. Containers moving on behalf of the same shipper between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick and Hamilton, Ontario may be added to the volume between Halifax, Nova Scotia, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Province of Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. A calendar year begins October 1 of each year and terminates September 30 of the following year.

Column 5: Applicable only on a minimum of 20 twenty foot containers (or equivalent) in any one calendar week, loaded in any one direction.

CNR—COST OF "VIA CN" LOGO

Question No. 5,402—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the design cost for the CN's new "Via CN" logo?

2. What is the projected total cost of conversion to the new logo?

3. What is the projected total cost of the advertising campaign promoting this new logo?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. $7,000.

2. Adoption of the VIA logo and colours does not add the CN's costs. Equipment is painted as required and the VIA logo will be applied when passenger rolling stock and locomotives come up for painting in the normal cycle. The first unit to be painted, the Turbo trainset, was in the process of overhaul and required repainting. The VIA logo and colours are used in various graphic applications such as timetables, ticket envelopes, menus, etc., as material is restocked.

3. The objective of the current advertising campaign is to promote business and improved passenger services. The use of the VIA logo does not add to the cost of the campaign. Although the logo will be used in future CN passenger service advertising no funds are allocated to promote the logo itself.

PRINTING OF "BETWEEN FRIENDS" FOR COMMEMORATION OF UNITED STATES BICENTENNIAL

Question No. 5,523—Mr. Horner:

1. Were tenders placed for the printing of the book the government is having printed to commemorate the United States Bicentennial Celebrations and which is called Between Friends?

2. Were tenders placed for the design of the book and, if so, how many were received?

3. Was the lowest tender or the best design accepted and, if it was the latter, under what criteria was the design chosen or if the former, what price range did the tenderers have to work or file between?

4. Who was finally accepted on the tender in the (a) designing (b) printing?

Order Paper Questions

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: 1. Yes.

2. No. The design was carried out under the supervision of the Executive Producers of the National Film Board's Still Photo Division.

3. Not applicable.

4. (a) Not applicable; (b) Ashton Potter Ltd, Toronto, was the lowest tenderer.

MEETING BETWEEN REPRESENTATIVES OF THE PSAC AND REPRESENTATIVES OF DPW

Question No. 5,550—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 5,164 which stated in part that a meeting would be held between representatives of the Public Service Alliance of Canada and representatives of the Department of Public Works in regard to the charges made by PSAC President C.A. Edwards in a letter dated January 19, 1976, has the meeting taken place and, if so (a) on what date and where (b) what are the names of all those who were present?

2. Did the PSAC set a date of October 30, 1976 for remedying various insufficient fire protection situations in government buildings and, if not (a) what exact date was set (b) what is the government doing about the situation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. (a) The meeting took place on April 29, 1976, in the office of the Assistant Dominion Fire Commissionner, Ottawa; (b) E.S. Hornby, Assistant Dominion Fire Commissioner, J. Wyllie and A. Woods of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, and V.M. Clarkson and L.C. Roy of the Treasury Board Secretariat.

2. (a) Fire protection in Federal Government Buildings is a matter of continuing concern and attention, and therfore no specific date was set or discussed in this regard; (b) Arrangements were agreed upon at the meeting whereby the Public Service Alliance's field representatives will be able to bring any suspected fire protection deficiencies to the attention of the Dominion Fire Commissioner's Regional Offices. There was also agreement to hold a follow-up meeting in Ottawa in October, 1976, of representatives of the three aforementioned organizations to review progress, and particularly the operation of this new field liaison arrangement.

RESOURCES REVENUE—YUKON TERRITORY

Question No. 5,650—Mr. Neil:

1. For each year 1970 to 1975 inclusive, what has been the resources revenue from the Yukon Territory?

2. For the same years, what portion of the revenue has been returned to the Yukon Territory?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Resources Revenue—Yukon Territory ($Millions) 1970-71, 1,112; 1971-72, 928; 1972-73, 1,300; 1973-74, 1,770; 1974-75, 4,960; 1975-76, 4,530.

2. Nil. There is no revenue sharing agreement with the Yukon Territory.

[Mr. Horner.]

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 5,408 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION CENTRES

Question No. 5,408—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. How many Manpower and Immigration Centres are there in Canada and where is each located?

2. How many Manpower officers are assigned to each centre?

3. From 1970 to 1975, what has been the yearly cost of officer training in each centre?

4. What is the size of the labour force served by each centre?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCE

MEASURE TO AVOID DOUBLE TAXATION BETWEEN CANADA AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double-taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

That Bill S-32, an act to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, be amended in clause 11 by striking out line 24 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(8) Where a motion taken up and considered in accordance with this section is not adopted by the House in which it was introduced or is adopted, with or without amendments, by that House but is not concurred in by the other House, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force immediately upon the failure to adopt the motion or concur therein, as the case may be.

(9) For the purposes of subsection (2), a day"—

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the minister who moved this report stage amendment not going to explain what it means?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must thank hon. members who worked on the finance, trade and economic affairs committee and were able to agree on an amendment formula, at least to protect the interest of both Houses. I think the idea was to have a neutral resolution, and we did not find any formula at the time. Among all the orders and bills which had been examined, no formula was found acceptable. The committee, with the unanimous consent of all its members, drafted the text included in the present bill. It seems to meet the requirements of this House and the other place, and it gives all members a means to agree and to ask that in the next few years what has to be reviewed be so reviewed, with the three countries mentioned in the motion—France, Belgium and Israel—and that the changes likely to occur between the signatures of the various orders be accepted. That is what is included in the formula, in the amendment to clause 11, which was thoroughly examined by all members of the committee, as I said earlier. I have the impression that this formula will be used in the future in several bills, because so far we did not find any final formula meeting those requirements. That is why we decided to find one and include it in the legislation, as it is here.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) has said. I am pleased that we were able to arrive at a suitable amendment to clause 11 of this bill. As the House will recall, we raised this point extensively at second reading stage, pointing out that we felt the wording was most unfortunate and would, in effect, really have no practical application had it been left as then proposed. We pointed out that, while this is a relatively bulky act, it was an act that deserved the attention of hon. members since we were dealing with a very important aspect of our taxation system. So I am pleased that the amendment now before the House has been agreed upon.

There are two additional comments that I should like to make at this stage. First of all, I think it is most unfortunate that the government has represented to certain members in the private business community that the opposition has delayed passage of this bill. In no way have we delayed its passage. The history of it is that it was first debated in the House at second reading on April 2. It was reported out of committee, and I think both sides are in agreement that the changes made in committee are quite desirable. It was reported to the House on May 11. It has sat on the order paper, as far as this House is concerned, since May 11.

● (1210)

I would suggest we have debated a lot of things in this House without considering this bill, many of which could have been held in abeyance, giving higher priority to this measure. Certainly, we have indicated at all times that we did not intend to delay its passage if it were brought back for consideration. I am pleased that has been done today.

The third thing I would mention is the hope that before we complete third reading, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) will comment on the many points raised at second reading concerning the possibility of tax avoidance, or even fraud taking place to the extent of $1.6 billion involving Canadian companies. I am referring, of course, to the Globe and Mail report which was referred to at the second reading stage in April. At that time, the Minister of National Revenue said the figure was too high and made some rather casual comments.

It is important that before finally passing this bill, the Minister of National Revenue gives an explanation of what is being done in order to ensure that there is no tax avoidance or fraud taking place involving Canadian companies. Perhaps he could also indicate to what extent he thinks a problem now exists. I hope that in the time remaining someone will indicate, for hon. members present, the current position in respect of tax avoidance and fraud. If the Minister of National Revenue cannot do that, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance could make some comment.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) raised—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. We must have unanimous consent for the parliamentary secretary to speak again, since he has already spoken. Does the hon. parliamentary secretary have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues for allowing me to speak again. As he mentioned himself, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) raised a point during debate on second reading. He was extremely concerned to realize that some people could escape taxation. I think that during the debate on third reading, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) could certainly address himself to that question.

Still, I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the point being raised by the hon. member is not covered by Bill S-32 which is now before us. The purpose of this bill is to avoid double taxation of monies already taxed either in Canada or in the countries I have mentioned. As I said earlier, I do believe the Minister of National Revenue will be happy to take part in the debate on third reading. But I repeat that the aspect that causes him much concern and that concerns us too on this side of the House, has been very well put and must strictly apply in another bill or an act different from the one we are now discussing.

[English]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words about the bill before us. It should not pass in the kind of quiet oblivion which seems to have descended on the debate. While we are in favour of international agreements, generally speaking, the special position of Canada means that international agreements almost inevitably work to our disadvantage, especially in respect of taxation agreements. I say that in this sense: most countries have a mutual interest in things, in the sense that there is a quid pro quo. However, given the higher level of foreign ownership in Canada, what happens is that almost invariably our treasury suffers from these agreements.

I know we take pride in being a good international citizen. I certainly take a personal pride in that, as I am sure do other hon. members of the House, and perhaps all Canadians. But increasingly I think that the kind of international agreement we are talking about should be given much more consideration than has been given in the past. We must temper our desire to be a good international citizen with concern about our national self-interest because of the high degree of foreign ownership and penetration into Canada by large, multinational corporations. This is not a national country in that sense, but a country which is more prone to paying more, because of this penetration, than any other. This applies not only to the matter of taxation and the repatriation of dividends, at whichever end they are taken, but it also applies to things like copyright and trade name laws.

Let us consider the situation in respect of patents, for instance. An international agreement in respect of patents is virtually worthless because we do not have, to any great extent, foreign patents. Relatively few patents are taken out in Canada, because if the multinational corporations who operate here make a discovery, they patent it in some other country. The same thing applies to trade or brand names. Brand names originate in other countries and, through our branch plant economy, these foreign names are used in Canada. This creates all kinds of problems when it comes to Canadianizing an industry, or the amalgamation by a Canadian company in order to take over and repatriate an industry to this country.

I do not think this bill should pass without this kind of danger signal being raised. It seems to me that in our great desire to go along with the rest of the world, we are creating these problems for ourselves. What I am really doing is kind of serving notice that from here on these international agreements, particularly when they concern ownership rights, repatriation of dividends and the kind of tax rates that can be levied, should receive much greater consideration then they have in the past. On many occasions in the past we have had to let things go because of lack of information. Let me point out one occasion on which I was very critical of the governor of the Bank of Canada who, at a time when Canada desperately needed to go on a floating exchange rate, because he wanted to maintain his friendship with other bankers around the world opted for a fixed exchange rate.

The point I made at that time, as others did, was that it is fine to be loved by all bankers around the world, and it is fine for everybody to pat you on the head when you meet with the bankers who say that little Canada, or big Canada, is a fine international citizen. But we are cutting our own throats. Many of these international agreements fall into that category.

I pose this dilemma, Mr. Speaker, but, quite frankly, I do not know how you reconcile the great feeling we have in this country, of being co-operative with the rest of the world and not being out of step, with what is going on in the world and is evidently working to our disadvantage because of these international agreements. I think this is one of the great problems with which parliament will have to grapple.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was not particularly moved to make a speech on such a complicated and technical subject as international taxation, but after listening to some of the remarks of the parliamentary secretary, and having read some of the things he said about S-32 when it was before this House for second reading, a few ideas came to mind which are of interest. It may be that as the afternoon goes forward, the parliamentary secretary or someone on the government side who may be knowledgeable in this field will enlighten myself and others in the House, particularly about my concern as to how the double-taxation system works.

Let us take, for example, the taxation system between Canada and South Africa. First of all, is there a double-taxation system in this regard?

Mr. Sharp: That is irrelevant to this bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am interested in the whole question of double-taxation as it affects third world countries.

Mr. Sharp: What is the connection with this bill?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader suggests this is irrelevant to the question before us. There were a lot of things said by the parliamentary secretary that were irrelevant to Bill S-32. He talked about teachers in the future being excluded from this double-taxation agreement. He talked a great deal about that, and about third world taxation.

Mr. Sharp: This has nothing to do with South Africa. It is Israel we are talking about.

● (1220)

Mr. Rodriguez: I raise this question because it is very relevant to the operations of Falconbridge in Namibia. I would like to know, if this kind of double-taxation agreement between Canada and Belgium follows this pattern, whether, in effect, this would be an improvement of any kind in respect of double-taxation with the third world countries where Canadian multinational corporations are exploiting their resources.

I hope the parliamentary secretary, or someone on the government side, will enlighten the House on this question, because if it means what we are doing is coming up with a nice dandy arrangement with the industrialized countries, I want to know how it might be improved to work for the benefit of the developing countries. I suppose it is very nice to have a double-taxation agreement which prevents individuals or companies from being taxed doubly in the home country as well as in the host country, but I wonder when the government will move on a policy to provide that Canadians are not double-taxed. That is an important question.

Canadians living in Canada are double-taxed. For example, in the lumber industry, if a person purchases lumber and the price of a sheet of oak veneer is $25, that price includes the federal sales tax and, on top of that, the 7 per cent provincial sales tax. There are other instances where Canadians are double-taxed. I would be interested in seeing the government come up with a bill that would provide that Canadians not be doubled-taxed.

I am very happy to see that in this agreement taxpayers, at least, will not enjoy the tax haven which results from coming into Canada and teaching for two years without paying a penny of tax either in Canada or the country of origin. I am glad to see that this is not to be permitted. However, I wish some effort were made to review these conventions with other countries from which teachers come to this country and do not pay a penny of taxes for a year on the wages they receive in Canada. Those would be my concerns in respect of this bill. I trust that the parliamentary secretary or someone on that side will elucidate some of these points, because they are very important to me.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) should be congratulated for his attempt in this House to have a careful examination of this rather complicated piece of tax legislation. I wish to say a few words about some of the good things in the bill. I will deal first with the question of teachers.

For a long time we have had a convention with the United States under which teachers coming to Canada—I hope the parliamentary secretary will correct me if I am wrong—are given a tax exemption for two years. That is not a reciprocal tax convention; in other words, they do not have to pay the tax either in Canada or in the United States for a period of two years. I am not against international agreements with other countries, but it seems that we are being very generous with the teachers from foreign countries when we compare the treatment accorded our own teachers.

A great many of my constituents who work very hard in the lumber industry do not receive any exemption. They do not have access to the variety of deductions people have on the business side. I am pleased to see that in respect of France, Belgium and Israel we have ended this kind of situation. However, I would ask the parliamentary secretary—perhaps he has some information from which he can enlighten the House on this subject—to direct his attention to our situation in respect of other tax conventions, particularly with the United States, since many teachers come to Canada from that country, and with other countries in respect of which these tax conventions and tax concessions to teachers apparently still prevail. It is useful, of course, for someone wishing to settle in Canada to have a tax advantage, but it seems to me we are being far too generous with regard to the tax advantage given people from other countries. I am pleased to see that in these three cases we have started to move away from that particular concession.

I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe and the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) are to be congratulated for taking the stand that we should not pass these rather complicated bills without examination. Like the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, I do not argue that we should not enter into international conventions, but we have a very special problem in Canada because of the degree of foreign ownership and domination in this country by multinational, foreign corporations.

We know that Canada's multinational corporations, such as Falconbridge, operate on a world scale and perhaps avoid their fair share in contributing to the Canadian economy and the Canadian tax purse because of the lack of conventions or agreements with third world countries. It seems to me that in respect of a company like Falconbridge which goes into Namibia and employs workers there at a rate of something like 90 cents an hour, there should be a convention with that country to rationalize the tax position of Falconbridge. It seems to me we are in the position, surely, of having a moral duty to do all we can to prevent Canadian multinational companies from exploiting workers in the rest of the world.

One way in which we may be able to put pressure on the multinational companies to act in a decent and civilized way would be through tax conventions or agreements with third world countries. It seems to me that in respect of some of our tax convention legislation there is a wide area with which the government has not dealt, an area in which the churches of Canada are giving leadership. For instance, the United Church has taken an active role in respect of companies such as Falconbridge, in which it holds shares, in seeing that the international policy of such companies is consistent with Canadian standards in respect of their operations in the third world countries.

I welcome the legislation. We find it to be good. I do not have any heavy criticism of this bill. It seems to me it is a useful step to move, now, into further conventions with countries around the world so that we can put some pressure on our own multinational corporate citizens who should be acting in a more repsonsible way in respect of the countries of the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Due to the fact that the parliamentary secretary has already spoken twice, he would require unanimous consent to answer the questions put forward. Does the parliamentary secretary have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudel: First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the reason for this bill, particularly in respect of the three countries in question, is that we are now changing these treaties according to the international code. The draft that was made at OECD has been incorporated in the treaties with the three countries.

● (1230)

Several concerns were expressed. I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to make a few comments on this subject. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) addressed himself to the subject of patent research in this country. I would like to inform him that, although I share his concern, this bill does not deal with that matter. The hon. member also spoke about multinationals, as did the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I think there is a convention in existence regarding multinational corporations, requiring them to be good corporate citizens, paying the appropriate taxes.

This bill does not address itself to that issue. It does not assess the rates that would be charged against these multinationals. I am concerned that they pay their proper share and that they be good corporate citizens, whether in this country or in other countries. This subject has been discussed with various finance ministers, and I am sure it will be continued to be discussed for some years because the proper load of taxes to be carried by these various corporations should be the genuine proportion of taxation either on the international scene or in the country in which the company is operating. If these multinationals are evading taxes, then I think members of the House should be concerned about it, whether it is done by multinationals of Canadian origin or of foreign origin. None of us would like to see that.

Some concern was expressed, regarding taxation under the treaties, by the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). This bill does prevent people from taking advantage of the two-year tax-free ride that they have been having with those three countries. It is our intention to ensure that all the treaties that will be negotiated—and there are many of them—correspond with what has been decided under the present treaties, and that they be based on the same philosophy. We have 16 treaties at present, and we will have two more. At present, a treaty with France is being negotiated, but we anticipate treaties with at least 40 different countries, some of them industrialized countries and others not as highly industrialized and part of the third world.

I think I understand the interest of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I was the one who answered the question which he posed in the House some time ago when he mentioned Namibia which is not covered under treaty although South Africa is covered at present. We have had no discussions regarding their inclusion under the treaties with which we are dealing. This is not to say that they should not be included, but there have been no such discussions.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why do you not initiate some?

Mr. Trudel: If I may answer that point, I think it takes two people to initiate negotiations. At present we have treaties some of which we are renegotiating, and six more will be coming before the House. We would like to see far more than that.

Another point made was on the issue of double-taxation in Canada. I have to agree that sometimes the same taxpayer is taxed twice or three times, but this matter is not dealt with in the bill, although it is of great concern to many Canadians that in some cases we are being taxed unfairly and at a very high rate. I am sure that this matter is being considered, and I will convey this concern to officials of the department. But it can only be rectified by another piece of legislation or by bringing in changes to other acts.

Reference was made to unfair wages paid to workers outside Canada. If all workers received the same treatment that is being accorded workers in Canada, some of the problems that were mentioned would not occur. This is of concern to the government. There is always room for improvement, but I am sure the standards we have set in Canada can be considered and applied in other countries. At the most recent international conferences some improvements in that area were made, particularly in respect of the third world, by multinational corporations regarding wages and conditions that are imposed on workers, here, again, the Department of External Affairs has been very much involved in these international discussions.

I think I have covered all the issues that were raised, Mr. Speaker. I hope hon. members will give speedy passage to this bill. I am sure that over the years other improvements will be proposed and discussed. But with the amendment which has been included in the bill, all hon. members will be able to consider the changes that will be made to the act over the years. I hope that in the few months before us other amendments and other tax treaties will be included so that we can achieve the fairness which we are seeking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double-taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium, and Canada and Israel, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, there is somewhat greater latitude at this time to say a few things than there was on second reading. I want to make a general statement about the intent and purpose of the bill. I appreciate the parliamentary secretary's intervention and his reminder to the House that we are not talking about trade marks under this bill. I want to point out the essential difficulty with some of these international agreements, because if you wanted to find a subtitle for this bill it could be "How to make the world safe for multinational Corporations." I say that because the bill is not so much occupied with getting a fair share of the taxes from multinational corporations as with ensuring that they are not taxed in two places at the same time.

● (1240)

I appreciate that there is some element of fairness involved in this concept and we have to adhere to that element of fairness; but the consequence of a bill of this kind is really that multinational corporations can operate easily anywhere in the world. A bill of this kind facilitates the spread and the growth of multinational corporations around the world because, in effect, it provides international protection for them so they can move from one country to another and know what the ground rules are.

I am not going to diminish the importance of multinationals or anything else having a set of ground rules. I think people should have ground rules; they should know where they stand if they are being asked to invest or if they are invited into a country in order to invest. However, what strikes me as being of far greater importance today than the signing of these kinds of agreements is that the world desperately needs an international convention regarding the behaviour of multinational corporations.

In a very lucid way, my colleague the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) pointed out the kinds of problems which are associated with the expansion of multinational corporations. Recently, at a Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference in New Delhi, this was one of the central questions raised by all the Commonwealth members, because what is becoming quite obvious is that while many of the third world countries resent and find the yoke of the multinationals somewhat difficult, they are so desperate for development that they are willing to have development at almost any cost and under almost any conditions. Given the desperate straits of these countries and their needs, it is very easy for the transnational corporations—if we prefer to call them that, rather than multinational corporations—to strike outrageous bargains with one country, to its disadvantage in terms of taxation and its long-run benefits, as against another.

There are very few hon. members of this House who at one time or another have not been approached by people in large corporations—perhaps not directly, but in the course of conversation, debate, or on other matters—and told that, for instance, Ireland is giving the mining industry a 20-year tax holiday, or that some country in Africa is allowing 30 years without taxation, and that if Canada does not give the corporations that kind of deal they will not operate in Canada but will go elsewhere. I usually tell them to go elsewhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: I do not lack confidence in this country to the extent that without the multinational corporations I think we are going to have to be crawling on our hands and knees, only to be told that we are going to go digging something out of the ground. I think we are quite capable of doing our own development, and we would have been much further ahead had we made that kind of decision. But the far greater problem with regard to multinationals is that there is a need to have some kind of international agreement which would prevent their playing one country off against another.

I realize that that kind of agreement cannot be too rigid, because some countries badly need investment and may have to pay a higher price and forgo revenue in order to get investment. That should be the free choice of those countries. But very often it is not a free choice, but a condition which is imposed because there is no UN, international body or international agreement which would limit the kind of arm-twisting tactics which are employed by the transnational corporations against countries which are really not strong enough to stand up for themselves. For that matter, a country like Canada, theoretically, should be strong enough to stand up for itself, yet somehow or other it gets its arm twisted pretty effectively.

That, to me, is the central problem. It is for that reason that, while in principle very few of us can be opposed to international agreements, it strikes me as a bad set of priorities for us to rush into international agreements which are designed almost entirely to facilitate the work of transnational corporations and to make the world safe for them and their revenue, rather than—which in my view is a more important and urgent question—working out with other countries agreements for monitoring and for at least helping each other in terms of the kind of arm-twisting, and sometimes blackmail, which multinational corporations are able to inflict upon nations.

Therefore, as I said earlier, I do not see these agreements being of any great advantage to the average person in Canada. There might be a few pensioners who would benefit from this on a personal basis by not being subject to double-taxation in certain countries, but essentially it is not designed for that purpose. Whenever governments try to do something for large corporations, they always find a few widows, orphans and pensioners and throw them into the pot to show how even-handed they are and how the little man always benefits. But the point is that the problem of double-taxation in most cases does not affect those people. They do not make enough money in most cases to pay single-taxation, let alone double-taxation.

The problem is essentially that large and profitable corporations want to scoot around the world but do not want to get involved in the uncertainties of dealing with one country's tax legislation as opposed to that of another. If a corporation is a domiciled corporation in the sense that it has a physical presence in a country, it has to pay taxes on the same basis as any other corporation. But then all kinds of problems arise—and we know these problems arise—because profits are taxed. But how do we know what the profits are? The government, and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), admitted that there are difficulties. The AIB, when we questioned it on how it was going to monitor profits, admitted that there are difficulties.

There is the transfer of royalties, which is a deduction against profits, and there is the payment of engineering fees, service fees and all kinds of other costs. In this bill, I see that those things have, at the most, a 15 per cent withholding tax on them and, at least, a 10 per cent withholding tax. That is a far greater problem, because trying to figure out what profit a transnational corporation is making in this country has been admitted by the Department of National Revenue itself to be impossible. For years the department has been trying—although I do not know how hard it has been trying—to monitor these things, but if pressed, and if it is in a particularly honest and frank frame of mind when it is pressed, it will admit that it does not have any control over these particular costs. Saying that the department is taxing the profits of multinational corporations the same as it is taxing any other company's profits is very misleading, because in very many cases the profits of multinational corporations are designed to be what they are prepared to demonstrate them as being to the Canadian government.

We see now that there is a tremendous outflow—probably a deficit of some $2 billion per year—of interest and dividend payments on foreign ownership in Canada, and we are now starting to see the bad effects. I think many of us have seen them for a long time, but more people are starting to see that the investment they made in Canada 10 or 15 years ago, which looked as if it was coming in and was going to do something about creating new jobs and doing all kinds of wonderful things, is no longer doing those things. Instead, there are these tremendous payments outside the country to pay for the investments which came in initially, and we are now on a downward slide with regard to that issue.

I would like to say something more about teachers. I do not know how we ever became involved in agreeing to two-year tax holidays for teachers.

Mr. Leggatt: That's how we got Rodriguez.

Mr. Saltsman: That is how we got the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I think we brought him in under that agreement. I am sure that had the government known the consequences of that agreement, they might have rejected it on the day it was acclaimed.

● (1250)

Mr. Rodriguez: Can this legislation be made retroactive?

Mr. Saltsman: The only thing that can be said about the agreement is that as a consequence of it we got the hon. member for Nickel Belt. There is always something good about legislation, whatever its defects.

I do not know how we ever got involved in this kind of agreement, and I do not know the thinking that went into it. It was typical of the era where some groups of people were picked out to be given favourable tax treatment and nobody seemed to think very badly of it. The argument was that if we did not give special tax treatment to offshore teachers coming to Canada, then our teachers would not get special tax treatment in the countries they go to. What is wrong with that? If Canadians go to another country, surely we expect them to contribute to the taxation of that country, whether they are there as guests or are working. We expect them to abide by the laws of the country and to be as good inhabitants as the permanent residents or citizens. I see no reason why Canadians should be given favourable treatment in other countries, or why people coming to this country should receive tax benefits.

Over the years I have received a great deal of correspondence from people working in our schools who complain bitterly about the tax load they carry in comparison to some of the people who came to Canada and who are virtually laughing at them. I guess it has been caused by the colonial mentality of some of the past governments of this country. I presume they were trying to entice people to Canada, as though we did not have enough teachers or university professors already.

If Canadians are going to countries that really are not in a position to provide their own teachers, I could understand if special financial arrangements have to be made in order to accomplish the national objectives of those countries. But why do it through the tax system? This is perhaps some of the justification for the teacher exemption in the third world countries; but most of the people who go there are not looking for special benefits, but go through a genuine desire to help. If they are to be compensated, it should be done in an above-board manner, either in the form of salary or a grant from one of the agencies involved in this country. The last thing we should do is alter the tax system to handle a few specific problems. In that way the whole system gets fouled up and creates resentment amongst all kinds of people.

The government has acknowledged that the two-year period was not a good thing, and in the new agreements it is signing it is making sure that this benefit is not perpetuated. Most of us are trying to figure out how we got into this mess in the first place. Why did the government ever agree to this kind of measure? I certainly cannot recall the rationale for this move.

Mr. Speaker, while I welcome any move in the direction of international co-operation, and I think in many ways the new agreements we are signing are somewhat better than those we signed in the past, I want to record my concern about the ease with which we take these international agreements at face value. We have done little to explore them for the long run consequences to this country. In the case of the teachers, we probably thought it was a good idea at the time, but we have all lived to regret it.

While I am going to support this legislation because it has a number of good things in it, and my colleagues have indicated they intend to support it, I think there are many things in the bill we are passing today that we shall regret in the future. I think our optimism about international co-operation will be somewhat tinged with regret at making life too easy for the multinational corporations around the world under the umbrella of easy taxation.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) has pointed out very clearly the manner in which agreements such as these tax conventions ease the world for multinational corporations. When we deal with conventions such as this, I cannot help but think of answers given in this House, and statements made in this House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). When the question of the sale of CANDU reactors to South Korea and Argentina came up, the Prime Minister put a very rhetorical question to members. He asked, "Do we not have a moral responsibility to share our technology with developing countries?" That seemed to be a fair question to put to the House and to the country. I find it a rather interesting question. At the Habitat conference recently, the Prime Minister stated that what the world needs now is love, and what we need is a conspiracy of love.

Since my election to this House I have been raising the question of Falconbridge and its operations in Namibia. I have been calling on the government to ensure that Falconbridge does not enjoy any tax benefits from the exploitation of the resources of Namibia. This country and the United Nations many times have favoured a motion to tell South Africa to get out of Namibia.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do not leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourned for lunch I had made a few comments about Bill S-32.

Mr. Sharp: That is irrelevant.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader suggests that is irrelevant. We shall try to show that the government moves with great speed to set up international conventions for the avoidance of double-taxation. If the government could move at the same speed in other areas, namely, those involving tax avoidance on the part of multinational corporations, we would pat it on the back. I wish the government moved half as fast with respect to multinational corporations which escape paying their fair share of taxes in this country.

Before lunch I was referring to some comments the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made about sharing our nuclear technology, and about our moral responsibility for sharing nuclear technology with developing countries. In his great speech in Vancouver he said that the world needs love; we need a conspiracy of love and love will conquer all. Those were fine words. Mother Teresa answered the Prime Minister well at Habitat when she said he should put his money where his mouth is. The same can be said with respect to this bill. When one considers what the bill is designed to do, and the financial arrangement it encompasses, one must agree that all this has been well arranged.

Ever since being first elected in 1972, I have asked the government to act on certain aspects of international taxation, but I hear only fancy responses like, "We will look into it", "We are studying the matter", and so on. One glaring example of exploitation of a developing country is to be found in Namibia, in southwest Africa. We talk about moral responsibilities. Mr. Speaker, in that regard I wish the Prime Minister and the government would put up or shut up. I wish the government were as decisive in that field as it is in the field under discussion, and would initiate, in that field, the sort of action which has resulted in Bill S-32.

● (1410)

I would be interested if they would take some decisive action to initiate the kind of action which has resulted in this Bill S-32. Namibia has been exploited by South Africa. South Africa has illegally occupied Namibia, in southwest Africa. The United Nations and this country participated in a vote informing South Africa that it ought to get out of Namibia.

Mr. Stevens: What about the Cuban troops in Angola?

Mr. Rodriguez: What about the American troops in Viet Nam? Let us not get into that; I shall not be diverted by the interjection of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I return to the subject of Namibia. This country took a position. We said this country must be turned over to the Namibians: only Namibians could enter into long-term agreements with multinational companies to exploit those resources. What do we find? We find that the United Nations appointed an administrator, Mr. Sean McBride—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I suggest the hon. member should get back to the terms of Bill S-32.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a measure to regulate international taxation. Other members will get their turn to speak. We need an international convention which would prevent multinational corporations avoiding their proper taxation and exploiting countries in which they are operating. Earlier this morning the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge pointed out that we can come up with agreements such as Bill S-32 which very nicely regulates the flow of income and the development of multinationals and allows them to grow. But nothing in Bill S-32 speaks about the behaviour of multinational corporations and their acceptable behaviour in third world countries.

It is within this context of international taxation that we have in Namibia the Falconbridge Nickel Corporation, which is a multinational organization. While the government has a double-taxation agreement with South Africa, it has no such agreement with respect to Namibia. I have called on the government to act with some speed in this area, to make sure that Falconbridge does not write off any of the cost of its operations in Namibia. I have asked it to take this action in order to live up to the moral responsibility which the Prime Minister has talked about and which we hold up in the world because we say we have a moral responsibility toward the developing countries. This is very important. The whole question of tax avoidance is very important. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, speaking in the House in the same vein on February 27, 1976, as recorded at page 11321 of Hansard asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) the following question:

> On June 12, 1973, the minister's predecessor announced in a speech to the Inter-American Centre of Tax Administrators that the government was launching a campaign to crack down on multinationals evading taxes. On November 19, 1975, the current minister announced the formation of a joint U.S.-Canada committee to study the same question. On February 23, 1976, the minister's department announced that because of spending restraints, all such plans had been shelved. While a penny saved may be a penny earned, in this case, does the minister feel that the savings in wages and salaries outweigh the loss of forgone corporate taxes?

In reply, the Minister of National Revenue stated:

> Mr. Speaker, within a month after my appointment to this portfolio, I met with Don Alexander, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue Service in the United States. We set up a committee to look into how we might act under the Canada-United States tax treaty to get at multinationals and transnationals which are using the tax haven to avoid taxes. Mr. Alexander will be back here following the report of that committee. We will be meeting again. I, like every other minister, would like to have all the resources necessary. Personally, I do not think it is a waste of money. I think it is an investment to get back the hundreds of millions of dollars. To me, a tax haven is anathema. Within the scope that we have, both the resources, financial and man-years, we will do our best to plus these particular abuses.

Mr. Speaker, it is fairly obvious that many millions of dollars, over a billion dollars in taxes which the minister has estimated as being due from the corporations, are lost to this country. If we had a billion dollars more in taxes which we could collect, we would not have to cut back medicare and we would not have to introduce cutbacks in the social welfare field. But lo and behold, that has all gone out of the window. The whole effort of trying to plug the loopholes which multinationals can use to get out of paying their fair share of taxes goes out the winddow.

This agreement with the three countries, set out in Bill S-32, is all very fine. But when we come to the crux of the problem, the tough measures which must be taken, those things seem to go by the wayside and, lo and behold, the old anti-inflation program which is used to avoid setting up the necessary machinery so that we can get these multinationals to pay their fair share of taxes.

We are not calling attention to something that is not happening. We are not talking about something that isn't so. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has said there are about 20 cases presently under investigation or before the courts, and they are there because of attempts to avoid paying taxes in Canada. The whole question of whether these corporations operate for the benefit of Canada or for the benefit of their own narrow interests is fairly obvious in these cases. As a matter of fact, Dominion Bridge, a very large multinational company, was found guilty of avoiding taxation—and it seems this is only one small example; there are many other companies which involve themselves in that sort of thing.

In the same way as it developed Bill S-32, we would have hoped the government might have acted with speed and rapidity in doing something about the Namibian situation. Why do we always have to be on the wrong side of this question? Why are we always seen as propping up the large, multinational corporations which are only interested in exploiting the black people of South Africa? It seems to me we have to stand up and say, "No more will you operate as you have been doing."

In my area, Falconbridge laid off 600 workers last fall. They get all sorts of tax breaks from both the provincial and the federal governments. By the international body we shall be seen as supporting this kind of tax rip-off, this kind of tax avoidance by Canadian multinational corporations in much the same way as our neighbour to the south, unfortunately, is viewed by the developing countries of the world. It is interesting to look at the governments in the third world with which we reach agreement: it is always with a junta or some kind of autocratic rule, and therefore the benefits of any taxation measure never flow to the people in that country.

● (1420)

We will probably end up supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, but we do want to take the opportunity to point out some of the concerns this party has about international taxation and the sort of moves we think the government should be making in this area. We hope that the government will act with all the expedition they can summon, given their moral responsibility which they have often touted here and abroad, and this great wellspring of love that the Prime Minister seems to have discovered at the Habitat conference. I am hopeful but, knowing the Liberals, my hope may be misplaced. Hon. members opposite can hide all they want behind the anti-inflation program, but the fact remains that if the government can put the bite on collecting over $1 billion of tax lost to Canada, we can do many things with that money that we keep putting off.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

It is too bad the minister is not here, but I see his parliamentary secretary is present. I have listened to his answers in the past about the Namibian question, and I should like to reiterate that the situation in South Africa is deteriorating rapidly, with 50 more people killed today. If the government does not take quick action we will forever seem to be among the exploiters of the third world.

I want to bring home to the parliamentary secretary the point that no one but the government can move against Falconbridge in the area of taxation and prevent their writing off their Namibian operation against their Canadian operation. The government can do this through the federal Income Tax Act, and they should do it. I call upon the parliamentary secretary to convey that message to his minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Paproski: Filibuster.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who said something about a filibuster is obviously not interested in what is being said here today. The remarks of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) were entirely related to this bill. He was not attempting to move into areas that were not directly related to the legislation before the House, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to do exactly what he did.

Mr. Sharp: We all know that you are filibustering Bill C-68 as well.

Mr. Leggatt: I am not going to stand in this House and allow this kind of legislation to pass without proper examination. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), to his credit, made some major contributions to this debate and his remarks were directly related to the bill and the questions it raises, as I hope mine will be.

Just before the dinner hour we were dealing with the problem raised by the parliamentary secretary which has been partially solved, namely, the question of the two-year tax exemption for teachers. What I want to know—I hope the parliamentary secretary will be given the opportunity to respond this afternoon—is whether the tax convention with the United States is still operative. I have not been able to get an answer to that question, but it seems to me that it is most important since so many U.S. teachers are coming to this country and are being given this tax advantage.

Another provision which is common to most other conventions, and from which the three countries mentioned in this bill are being exempted, is this: a teacher from a third world country who comes to Canada is provided with a two-year tax exemption. He has received his training in his country of origin in the third world. We are employing someone of great talent and skill who was trained to make a contribution in his own country. I am not against bringing such people to Canada, but I am against providing this kind of major tax concession.

I hope the parliamentary secretary can tell me what is the position vis-à-vis the United States. My understanding—I will be happy to be corrected if I am wrong—is that at the present time the United States is one of the countries with whom we do not have a tax convention. Surely, if ever there was a country with whom we do need a tax convention, it is the United States. I see the parliamentary secretary is shaking his head and I will not proceed if I am wrong, but my understanding is that a conscious decision was taken to allow the last convention to lapse, partly because of the introduction of the anti-inflation program of the government. If the parliamentary secretary is better informed than I am, I should be happy to hear what he has to say.

Another problem with international tax conventions continues to be the difficulty nations have in getting a fair share of tax revenue from multinational corporations. We face the same sort of problem in Canada in attempting to impose proper guidelines on multinational corporations. We do not have control of their internal bookkeeping, with the result that by overcharging for some services, and undercharging for others, they are able to escape tax. When a product is exchanged between a parent company and its subsidiary, there is no law that says it has to be exchanged at fair market value; therefore, revenue can be attracted by the company that will pay least tax.

There is, of course, a tremendous amount of manipulation going on in the world today on the part of multinationals in order to maximize their profits and deprive countries all over the world not merely Canada, of their fair share of tax revenue to which their citizens are entitled. I could give numerous examples of this sort of thing. The situation is similar to one of our boards that tries to regulate, for example, the investments of a telephone company. They may be allowed 6 per cent or 10 per cent on their investment, but what they are doing, in fact, is getting their own subsidiaries to sell them services well above market value, thereby siphoning off the profits into that subsidiary.

Take the case of a U.S. multinational corporation that has a Canadian subsidiary. The U.S. corporation can set rental rates for, for example, computer services. They can set the charges for a variety of other services rendered to the subsidiary, and as a result the profits of the Canadian subsidiary are reduced and thus fall within the AIB guidelines. This means that they can legally avoid the tax consequence. Then the parent company, whose head office may be in Bermuda or some tax haven like the Bahamas, gets all this money tax free.

Not only the Canadian public but people all over the world are getting a little tired of multinationals ripping people off. What we need desperately, and what I hope Canada will be party, to, is not merely bilateral tax conventions but an international tax convention that is administered by an international body like the United Nations, so that finally we can have equity and justice so far as the operations of these multinational corporations are concerned. At the moment they are operating well above the law and no nation has yet been successful in controlling the sort of manipulations that have taken place for such a long time.

The question of double taxation is interesting but quite often, instead of avoiding double taxation, as a result of the convention there is no taxation at all. Let me give the House an example of this. A British citizen who resides in Britain but whose revenues are obtained from Canada does not have to pay Canadian tax on his Canadian income. He has to pay tax on his British income, but because he is a British resident his Canadian income is tax free according to the convention. This tax free money remains such, and Canada continues to lose this tax revenue. The British resident is able to obtain this tax free money because of an anomaly in the tax convention. That is not double taxation; that is no taxation at all.

● (1430)

There are many examples in this country where a loophole opens up as a direct result of that tax convention. When one looks at how aggressively this government has proceeded in terms of closing these tax loopholes, which admittedly it is attempting to do in the bill before us, it is interesting to go back through some of the clippings and attitudes of some of the ministers. For example, on June 13, 1975, in the Ottawa Citizen it was stated that the then consumer and corporate affairs minister, Mr. Basford, had pointed out that the government was about to strike out at those multinational loopholes. The article stated:

> Revenue minister Ron Basford plans to spend more of the government's money in order to boost its revenues by eliminating tax loopholes.

The article then stated Mr. Basford said:

> As society becomes more complex, as taxpayers become even more sophisticated, governments must invest more money in their tax systems to close the tax gap—

I have not seen any evidence in this House of that, but that was away back in June, 1975. There has been ample opportunity for moves in terms of the literally millions of dollars that Canada is losing. Let me give another example. I will quote from the February 24, 1976, edition of the Ottawa Citizen. The article is by Peter Cook and stated in part:

> The federal government has shelved plans to close a tax loophole that costs the country "hundreds of millions of dollars" because the government cannot afford the expert investigators needed.
>
> The loophole involves multinational firms that set up foreign subsidiaries and then divert income out of Canada to lessen tax liability.
>
> Last June, Ron Basford, then revenue minister, said the practice was costing hundreds of millions of dollars in lost revenue. He promised a series of proposals to "significantly strengthen Canada's compliance effort."
>
> The measures meant hiring experts to evaluate the cost of goods and materials being shipped in and out, and to set fair market values for tax assessment.
>
> Revenue department spokesmen say government austerity measures have given the project low priority.

Surely we are being penny wise and pound foolish in this House when we start to cut things like expenditures on social services, yet we at the same time cut things in areas where we could increase tax revenues, such as the hiring of tax investigators and other people who could get out and try to stop the flow of legitimate tax funds from government coffers. We should be moving in these areas particularly in regard to the multinationals, so that they do not continue to milk the Canadian public as they have been doing for some time. The article continues:

> The usual way of lessening tax payments is to underprice exports or overprice imports from a subsidiary located in a tax haven, or to charge artificially high expenses against the subsidiary.
>
> To spot this, tax investigators must have thorough knowledge of the cost of materials and true market value.

Sometimes detection is impossible if a firm is shipping a new product, or if a product has a number of components. As an example, when oil is shipped to Canada from Venezuela via a tax haven, investigators may find themselves arguing over pricing of particular grades and chemical formulas.

Oil and chemical industries can best take advantage of this method of lessening tax. Very often, extra charges are laid against transportation.

The devices are there and they are being used, and it is costing Canadian taxpayers millions and millions of dollars every year. The poor fellow who works for wages in this country, who gets no deduction for anything appreciable at all and who sees the taxes taken off his cheque every month in advance, is getting a little tired of pious statements from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about closing tax loopholes, while at the same time hearing statements that we cannot afford to hire extra investigators. I say this is something the government should be thoroughly ashamed of. It should be thoroughly ashamed of allowing the multinational corporations to siphon Canadian tax dollars without doing anything about it, without making the kind of investigation in depth, and without hiring the small research staff needed in terms of investigation so we can begin to attack the problem.

The bill before us does not attack the problem. It does not do anything at all about the problem. What we have done in this party is sort of give this a back-of-the-hand support. We should like to have seen some meaningful legislation which dealt with these tax and revenue transfers between the multinationals of one country and Canadian subsidiaries.

Another indication of the cost of this negligence can be found in this article by Mr. Jonathan Manthorpe in the Globe and Mail of October 31, 1975. This is what is said here:

Canada is losing hundreds of millions of dollars a year to people and companies that avoid taxes, and a lot of it is being lost to multinational corporations using their international status to shuffle their profits out of the taxman's reach.

James Gourley, director-general of audit for Revenue Canada, says some of the multinationals use their intricate corporate structures to minimize the taxes they pay.

He said that at present there is not the staff, expertise or co-operation necessary among countries to stop them.

Mr. Gourley said that for governments, "it's a very expensive type of tax collecting. Unfortunately we are up against the best tax brains in the world. These companies don't move today unless they know all the tax laws and then they just run around them all."

We need a combination of two things. We need to move toward international conventions in terms of the role of the multinational corporation in the world. But there is a lot we can do in Canada just in terms of turning our attention to the problem, such as hiring investigators and getting legal people to research and examine our own tax laws, at the same time looking at multinational corporations and the service charges between foreign companies and their subsidiaries. Surely we can move in this area to some extent, and then in the long range move to the international situation with world conventions in respect of this particular subject.

It is interesting to note that the government is able now to produce an international agreement between three countries and Canada which goes some distance toward rationalizing tax problems. However, our record in international agreements in another field, which involves the nuclear CANDU reactor, is a sorry one indeed in terms of providing security to Canadians. We may be very much more secure in respect of companies and taxes as a result of this particular agreement, but we are doing nothing for Canadians in the field of providing international safey as we flog CANDU reactors like vacuum cleaners around the world.

Mr. Rodriguez: Loss-leadering them.

Mr. Leggatt: We are loss-leadering them. We should be prosecuted under our own consumer protection laws for what we are doing with the CANDU reactor. That is an example of how not to go about entering international treaties. By moving very quickly in flogging this reactor we are doing a great deal to create the hazard of proliferation, for which this country may be ashamed in the future.

We will support the legislation. We understand the feelings of those countries that are interested, undoubtedly, in having the legislation passed. It is not our purpose to see this legislation unnecessarily delayed, but I must say that I resent any comment in this House that there is some kind of filibuster going on in respect of this bill. We are asking for the performance of a duty that every member of parliament should have, which calls for a careful examination of legislation that comes before them. That is what we are attempting to do in this party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

● (1440)

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has the floor.

An hon. Member: No filibuster.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): No; this is just good sense. Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my remarks last night that someone had handed me a blank page and that I would try to carry on from there. I now have notes and I hope to be able to be a little more to the point this afternoon.

As we know by now, this legislation provides for capping federal contributions to medicare. The provision, of course, was for a 50-50 sharing formula. The legislation now provides that for the year 1976-77 there will be a cap of 13 per cent, that in 1977-78 there will be a cap of 10.5 per cent, in 1978-79 there will be a cap of 8.5 per cent, and that thereafter there will be authority to set ceilings. That sounds innocuous enough, but really it amounts to the beginning of a complete change of philosophy and direction by the government.

I do not think the Canadian public is fully aware of the philosophic direction in which the government is moving. I am sure the government thinks it is moving in the direction the public desires in terms of social services. I think that at the next election members of the government will be very disappointed. The fact is that the country still needs a great deal in the area of health services. We have taken much for granted since medicare came in. Admittedly, this was a significant step forward, for which by the way full credit should be given to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who I believe should go down in history as the person who brought a decent, humane and proper approach to the provision of medical care. I hope history will give him the recognition he so richly deserves in respect of the policy for which he had fought over many years.

There are many areas into which we must move. One is the area of environmental health. An increasing number of people in this country are victims of cancer because of the way in which we treat the environment. When the federal government abandons its leadership role, and when it says, "We will leave it up to you fellows. We will give you some tax points, or you must use your own money", what it is doing is abandoning its role in providing quality medical care for Canadians.

There must be inducements for the provinces to move into new areas. By the abandonment of leadership in this field, at the federal level, we will be committing a great number of Canadians to ill health and even to death as a result of the failure to move in the field of research, the environment and preventive health care. We have completed the first phase of medicare in Canada. We have removed the financial burden which meant that a father sometimes would not send his children to a doctor because he did not have the money to pay the doctor. Much pride goes with poverty. There are examples, in the years before we had a medical care scheme, of people who literally were crippled as a result of the refusal of the family to seek charity, or simply because of their shame at not having sufficient funds.

Now, to the credit of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and to the credit of people who came after him, such as Lester B. Pearson, that particular burden has to a large extent been lifted. However, we have not gone into the second phase, which must be a change in the delivery system relating to health care in Canada. That does not mean that we will eliminate private medicine, but we must have a two-stream medical system. In fact, we can provide a public health and public medical system and stream it alongside the private system. The two systems can be rationalized one with the other. In this way we can have public health services and public health doctors for treatment in those areas where we have difficulty establishing private medical clinics.

All through the north and in areas of my province there is need for a two-stream medical service delivery system. I do not have anything against private medicine in particular; I think our doctors do a good job in Canada. However, there are many other areas of health where treatment is needed. There must be an expansion of medical services into the public area so that we can get to the real problem of health in respect of Canadians. I refer not merely to the treatment of sick people but to the question of keeping people well.

This lends itself more to the public health sector than to the private sector. There is an element of inefficiency in the private sector. Too often, if we go to a private clinic we see a large X-ray machine and other equipment and then see that equipment duplicated in the hospital down the street. It seems to me that the medical profession in the private sector could do a great deal to release some of the great amount of funds available to it.

One thing medicare has done is make sure that the doctors are reasonably well paid for their services. In the days before medicare, when some of us were young lawyers, a good percentage of the medical bills were never collected. Some doctors sent them to a collection agency, while others did not. A large percentage of the charges were not paid. That situation has been cured under the medical care scheme, and so it should be. The fact is the profession has been treated rather well by the medical care scheme.

I am pleased to note that the medical profession does not have a closed mind in respect of alternative methods of delivery. A great many of my friends in the profession talk about a two-stream system whereby we might place reasonable emphasis on the preventive area.

In respect of our medicare system, I believe we have a program which is superior to that in the United States. I do not say it is superior to that of countries in western Europe, because I think many countries are ahead of us. If we examine the percentage of the gross national product used for the provision of medical care in the United States, we find that it is 8 per cent. In Canada, even though we hear complaints about people going to doctors when it is not necessary, which I do not believe really is the case in many instances, the percentage of the gross national product is only 6 per cent for medical care. That is an indication that medicare is efficient.

The decision of the government to abandon medicare, in the sense of capping it, really flies in the face of the example which medical care schemes have provided. Canada's medical care scheme may be very closely copied in the next United States election as a platform for the Democratic party. We should be proud of what we have accomplished, although there is much more to be done. The government does not seem to be giving the Canadian people the leadership they want. The people do not want a fractionalization of the scheme. They do not want different standards for Prince Edward Island and Ontario. They want a national standard. They want to move into the area of prevention as a main lifestyle. Prevention means taking another look at the advertising of tobacco and alcohol.

An hon. Member: Better tell that to Stanley.

Mr. Leggatt: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is one of the best examples of a man in good health clothed in an ambiguous body.

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: When we look at prevention we must consider smoking, alcohol, and the provision of drugs, both medical and non-medical, which in my view are abused to a great extent. We must look to the government for leadership in lifestyle modification, changes in habits in terms of advertising and of trying to change public habits and attitudes in those areas which are so thoroughly unhealthy.

The next matter we should consider is nutrition. A dramatic example is the one of the farmers on Parliament Hill, which should make us realize that in a country which overproduces milk to the extent we do now, and where Coca-Cola is sold at approximately the same price, there is something wrong. We can make national provision of milk for school lunches right across the country without any trouble and at minimum cost. In the long run this will lower our medical costs because of the nutritional value of that product, which we should be pushing in our schools rather than pop and other junk foods.

We should encourage all Canadians to continue to have routine medical examinations. The result of this legislation will be the beginning of deterrent fees, a clear backward step from what we have become accustomed to. When we get back to the reasons for the bill, the argument is that costs are rising so fast and are so out of line that we have no choice but to cap them at this end. When you examine the figures, you find that sort of argument questionable indeed. The figures for the increase in medical care costs, the increase in the federal contribution, are quite interesting. When you break them down on a national basis, you find that in 1972-1973 the increase was 7.6 per cent; in 1973-1974 it was 8.8 per cent; and in 1974-1975 it was 6.6 per cent. Each year the increase was well below inflation in Canada, yet here we have a government which does not even want to keep its increasing contribution in step with the rate of inflation. Even that is too much. This is a niggardly, Scrooge approach to the question of the provision of medical care.

It is interesting that in my own province of British Columbia the federal contribution was 13.9 per cent in 1970-1971. It was reduced all the way down to 5.9 per cent in 1974-1975, and 1974-1975 was the year of the NDP government in that province which allegedly was squandering money; at least this was the theory abroad. It is certainly not indicated in the provision of medical care in that province or the reduction of the federal government's contribution to those medical services. As I say, the capping is unnecessary. The costs are not increasing at a rate which is inordinate or unreasonable, and by limiting the increase we are taking away the provincial inducement to move into new areas.

One area with which I want to deal now and which I think is most important is environmental health. More and more in this country we find that as we alter the natural state of the environment, as we provide new chemicals and new pesticides, and as we provide insulating materials such as asbestos and new plastics, new forms of cancer emerge. We cannot let that happen to the Canadian people. But by abandoning the federal contribution in medicare that is exactly what we are doing. The standard of living that we have in this country in the south is now becoming dependent upon the poisoning of Indians in the north.

It is to our shame that we see at English river, in northwestern Quebec, in Mistassini and other places, our native people suffering from Minamatas disease. The reason they have been suffering from Minamata disease is that the standard of life in the south is higher. We have industrialized areas in the north and we have taken risks with the future of the Indians. What are we repaying them with? The most we are doing at English River is to tell them not to eat the fish.

It is time we did something in terms of full compensation for native people but, most important, it is time we learned a lesson from Minamata disease in this country, that you do not move into an area in a rush for spoils, profit and money in the process of which you destroy the environment and kill the native people. That has been the tradition in this country. Let us make no mistake about it. We have nothing to be proud of in the way we settled Canada, in terms of our native population. That is what we are still doing when we consider the mercury poisoning that is now taking place in these areas of Canada.

We have a real problem with vinyl chlorides in the provision of plastics. Liver cancers are developing at an alarming rate. The interesting thing about preventing cancer is that it takes 20 years for lung cancer to develop in asbestos workers. The workers themselves do not feel the immediate risk, although they are running a high risk daily. They need the money, they have to continue to work. We cannot sit idly by as parliamentarians, nor can this government sit idly by and let this continue. We still do not have mandatory regulations regarding the use of masks in asbestos mines. Admittedly, we brought in some ambient air standards.

We still have not done anything with regard to tailings or with regard to drill standards. The wind can blow tailings all over the place. Only a minor amount of asbestos causes cancer. Are we to abandon the fight against cancer because of this government's niggardly approach to medical care and its tragic departure from principles in which they once believed? There is no question that what we are seeing in Bill C-68 is the end of the purported just society and the end of those great promises of 1968. It is all over now.

● (1500)

Mr. Rodriguez: The society of love.

Mr. Leggatt: The flower children are gone. They are now working in the asbestos mines.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And eating contaminated fish.

Mr. Leggatt: We are now living in a so-called society of love.

I feel very strongly that we should try to do what we can to prevent the government from moving in such a disastrous direction and that we should not deal with this bill at this time. I am convinced that this is a very inappropriate time to do so. Indians are in need of help, and medical services still need to be provided. I believe it is now time to hoist this bill and give the government a chance to have another look at what it is doing to a program in which all Canadians have taken pride for so long.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That Bill C-68 be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months hence.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment put forward by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is a very wise one indeed. What we see happening with respect to the actions of the government with regard to medicare reminds me of the definitions of a Tory and a Liberal. A Conservative is one who stands at the seashore, sees someone drowning 20 yards offshore, throws out a rope which is 15 yards long, and expects the drowning person to show initiative and swim the other five yards to catch the rope. A Liberal is one who stands at the seashore, sees someone drowning 20 yards offshore, throws out a 20 yard rope, and when the drowning person grabs the rope and starts pulling, the Liberal drops it. That is the kind of thing we see in Bill C-68. The government is trying to beat a hasty retreat from a program which has proved to be what the government expected it to be.

Mr. Fairweather: All you do is throw out the Regina Manifesto.

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not know. There are some Tories who would do other things with the rope.

The medicare program in Canada has been held up by the government as an exemplary program. The United States sent representatives from its Senate, led by Senator Ted Kennedy, to come here and study our medicare program, the universality of our program, and the way the program is operated, because the Americans do not have a similar program. This government was very proud to run around beating its breast and holding up its program as being exemplary.

However, what do we find the government attempting to do in Bill C-68? The government has proposed a withdrawal from an area which is vital to the national health and security of this nation. Indeed it is rather interesting to note the unilateral action which is being proposed by the government. Here we have a government which has talked about co-operative federalism and said that the decisions in Canada are made through discussions between the federal government and the provincial governments, and that they try to work out co-operatively decisions which are acceptable to all sides. Bill C-68 jettisons that whole concept of co-operative federalism, and the government is taking a unilateral position with respect to medicare.

When we entered into medicare, it should be noted that it was the socialists of Canada who pushed and pushed for a minimum level of medicare and of health services in this country and finally obtained it. After having been promised it since 1919, we finally ended up with a medicare program.

The present program was held out by the federal government, and the federal government encouraged the provinces to join and participate in providing medical care coverage. It might not affect wealthy provinces so much when the federal government withdraws from some of the areas of medicare coverage, but it seems to me that the poorer provinces in Canada will have a very difficult time reaching even that minimum level of medicare and health services to which their citizens have become accustomed. It seems to me that it is only right that the whole question should be reviewed after six months, instead of moving with such undue haste into this area. This is what we are saying in the amendment of the hon. member for New Westminster.

This motion would give the government the opportunity to go back and sit down with the provincial ministers of health to try to work out an agreement which would ensure that the medicare services of this country are maintained. Indeed, they should not only be kept at their present level but should be expanded to cover many of the other areas which the hon. member for New Westminster pointed out in his excellent presentation this afternoon.

We on this side of the House have said time and time again that any tampering with the present medicare act will result in a loss of services to parts of the country which cannot afford to pick up the cost of carrying the program. There can be no doubt that this bill may damage forever both the quality of health care in Canada and the quality of our health insurance program.

Canada's health system has served the people of this country very well, and it is only right that at this point in time this party should vehemently protest any changes which will cause a reduction in the delivery of health care services across the country. When our party first introduced this idea in Saskatchewan, it fought the vested interests. There is no question that there were some who were opposed to medicare. This party fought for the right of every man, woman, and child in that province and in the country to have the benefits of decent health care. This party fought for an idea which would guarantee access to the needs of life, and it also fought so that we would not have to depend on wealth alone to provide what is essential and what is a right of Canadians.

Where were the Liberals and Tories at that time? We knew where they were. They opposed that idea. They used all kinds of excuses. They called it socialism and interfering in the lives of the Canadian people. Then they used the old bogeyman of cost and said that we could not afford a universal medicare program. We have experienced that kind of opposition over the years, and that is why we are so leery about Bill C-68. We see it as the thin end of the wedge to revert back to the situation where only those who have wealth will be able to enjoy health care. That is what we are leery about, and that is why we take such a firm stand in opposing any changes of this kind in a unilateral way.

● (1510)

We know that the Liberals in Saskatchewan fought medicare tooth and nail. It was only because of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and his colleagues that the Liberals of Saskatchewan were dragged kicking and screaming into the twentieth century. Looking back at the scene in Canada, that seems to have happened federally as well. The federal government did not like medicare but gradually we forced them to accept it because it worked so well elsewhere. They are all running around now boasting what a fine medicare program we have, yet they are ready to use the scalpel on it. The Liberals had never liked the program. I would be the last member in this House to accuse them of being politically motivated, but they finally picked up the idea and saw it had some relevance and acceptance in the country.

Were the Tories any different, Mr. Speaker? Look at them in Ontario today. Frank Miller runs around the province like some avenger, just turning up at a hospital and telling the administrative staff that it is being closed down. We saw that with Doctors' Hospital in Toronto, but the staff there won a stay of closure in the courts. Now the Ontario government has appealed that. The Doctors' Hospital was serving the ethnic people in one area, and indeed some of the staff speak many languages. This is the kind of action which can only discriminate against newcomers to this country who might not be familiar with our ways. The Tory government in Ontario talks about restraint, but not about restraining itself. Why does it not start restraining its own expenditures instead of hacking away at essential services?

The federal Tories are not any different. The Canadian Medical Association tells us of the need for psychiatric care, but here in the Ottawa area they are cutting down on psychiatric beds, and this after we have been told they are one of the biggest needs in society today.

The Tories and Liberals have never supported programs like medicare but have always opposed them. It was only because of the vision of people like the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and members of his party and of the CCF who fought for and achieved their goals that we have this program today. Now the government wants to hack away at it, but we are not going to stand here and let it take it apart piece by piece in this phony fight against inflation. It is all right to fight inflation, Mr. Speaker, but the government blew $16 million bucks and we have not got even one plane for it. Members of the government should be ashamed of themselves. They go out and elect one guy who has an ego as big as the Olympic project, and build the Olympic project for $1.5 billion without batting an eyelash.

Today we talked about the multinational corporations getting away without paying over $1 billion that is due in taxes. The government talks about fighting inflation but what kind of fighters are its members? It has often been referred to as "the law of the sea" kind of thing—it is women, old folks, and the unemployed first, but the corporate citizen sits back at the Rideau Club with his Liberal and Tory friends and gets the benefits of the fight against inflation. That is shameful. Then they have the gall to say they are interested in people.

The government says we are spending too much on medicare and on the health of the nation, but as has been pointed out previously the percentage of our Gross National Product spent on health care has been dropping, not increasing. One thing we cannot afford in this country is to have people debilitated by lack of proper medical care. We hear a lot about the man days lost through strikes and lockouts. The Tories are famous for asking questions in the House about this, but do we hear about the number of man days lost due to sickness? The number is triple that of the time loss due to labour problems, and it is growing. Why do we not tackle that type of problem?

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

We know something about industrial diseases in my area. Surely the government could do something through Atomic Energy of Canada or the commissions and acts that exist. It is the government's responsibility to ensure that people working in the uranium mines are not exposed to undue danger. Would it not be cheaper to prevent a person contracting silicosis that to treat him afterwards? This government and the Ontario government have reneged on their responsibility to see that safety levels are enforced. We read of the asbestos workers at Kananaskis walking around with asbestos fibres in their feet and breathing the fibres that float around the atmosphere. We have to ask what price we are going to have to pay 25 years from now perhaps to support their widows and orphaned children. We are now faced with the cost of the carelessness of those people who had responsibility for enforcing health standards at the INCO and Syncrude plants.

The cost of preventive medicine and delivery of services to those parts of the country that do not have them surely cannot be considered in the same light as the health of the people. Surely there is no comparison, Mr. Speaker. There are certain things that Canadians have a right to such as decent housing at reasonable cost, and education for the people as far as their abilities will take them. And we have said, although this government has never accepted it, that every Canadian has the right to a job. There ought to be a policy of full employment. Surely the other right that Canadians have is the right to adequate health care whether they live in the outposts of Newfoundland, in Vancouver, Toronto or Nickel Belt. Surely Canadians who live in the slow growth areas of Canada have as much right to the best medical services available as Canadians living in downtown Toronto who may earn $40,000 per year.

● (1520)

Surely all of our people have a right to decent medical care. My party believes that the government, by introducing Bill C-68, has retreated from that concept. For that it should hang its head in shame. Its action is despicable. It is limiting the rights of the people of this country to proper health care.

Those are not the only rights the governments has eroded. The right to free collective bargaining, for which many people were jailed, for which others were knocked on the head, and even died, went through the window when the government introduced the anti-inflation program. At present the right of our people to decent health care and medicare is being attacked and eroded by the government. We shall oppose that process of erosion as far as we can. We have proposed an amendment which we hope is accepted.

The government ought to consider again, with the provincial ministers of health, the status of the present program. That, it seems to me, is only fair. We should not cut back with regard to medicare. Instead, we should consider expanding the program. When the government talks about saving money by cutting back on health care, it does not take into account what these cutbacks will cost the people. Those costs one cannot calculate.

We ought to be concerned about the nutrition of our children. Having taught for 16 years in the province of Ontario I am aware of what some children eat and know how well nourished or otherwise some of our school children are.

An hon. Member: So you are responsible for the mess.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, the provincial Tory government is responsible for the mess in the Ontario educational system. They loused it up. They centralized the Ontario educational system; yet we hear the Tories talking about decentralizing government services. I have never heard such phony nonsense spoken in all my life. That party is sucking and blowing at the same time.

An hon. Member: So are you.

Mr. Rodriguez: The whole gang of them are doing it. You will see when we become the government in Ontario what we shall do to this province's educational system. It will be the envy of the world. I ask, how much money do we waste in our schools trying to teach children who cannot learn because they have not been fed enough of the right foods. Half the time, instead of teaching these kids, we tranquilize them. I have seen this time and again. Our dairy farmers are prepared to dump milk. I suggest that we could clear up the milk surplus at once by giving each of our school children a quart of milk a day.

An hon. Member: Dump a quart a day down each school child's throat.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is an excellent suggestion. That way we could clear up the surplus in no time at all. Such nutritional help could be of great advantage to children and does not come under medical care.

I have seen the results of the Nutrition Canada survey commissioned by the government. I do not think government members read reports which the government itself has commissioned. We spend taxpayers' dollars on these reports. The survey clearly shows that eating the wrong foods leads to tooth decay, obesity, and ill health.

An hon. Member: Just look across the way for some examples.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, looking at the Liberals I can say that I have never seen a sleeker looking lot of people anywhere, except in the ranks of the Tories. I have never seen a sleeker looking bunch of fat cats than when I have been in the Ontario legislature looking down at Bill Davis and his cats.

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member looks pretty sleek.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member is purring. Government members should be encouraged to read government commission reports. If they did, perhaps they might be more inclined to spend money where it ought to be spent, instead of cutting back on essential services.

Government members ought to be encouraged to read the Treasury Board's report about injuries in the Public Service of Canada in 1974-75. According to that report, in the year 1974-75 there were 22,218 accidents in the public service which cost us, directly, over $7 million. Over 10,000 of these injuries took place in that department which considers itself the friend of the working class, the Post Office. Almost 7,000 of those injuries were disabling. As I said, the total cost of public service injuries was over $7 million. That cost does not include the cost of medicare given to the people involved. I suggest that the true cost of the injuries would be much higher if one included the cost of medical care.

In Ottawa, I discovered that the majority of lung-related diseases are caused by smoking. In the riding of Nickel Belt, lung-related diseases, in the main, are to be found among people who live too close to the smoke stacks of Inco and Falconbridge. Whenever it seems that corporate profits may dip, the first item of equipment to be sacrificed is anti-pollution equipment—thanks in large part to the attitude of federal and provincial departments concerned with the environment.

I have spoken of ways to improve the quality of life with preventive medicine. We are lagging in that field. It seems to me that preventive medicine can lead to cuts in medicare cost. We should be thinking in terms of such cost cuts, instead of in terms of such arbitrary cost cutbacks as the federal government is now proposing, cost cutbacks which will lead to a lowering of the already minimal level of the country's health and medical care services.

An hon. Member: What about home care nursing?

Mr. Rodriguez: I agree with the hon. member. At present we have chronic care patients occupying active care beds which cost us at least $100 per day.

Mr. Benjamin: That's an example of government waste.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. We need more efficiency in the field.

In Ontario, because of the Tory government's approach to hospital costs, many nurses will be out of work. I understand that some 3,000 nurses have already been laid off in Ontario. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) blames the nursing schools and universities for not projecting properly the job market. But how could the universities know that the federal government was to cut back its participation in medicare?

The minister has blamed the universities, whereas the fault lies with the government which created the difficulty in the first place. It is like blaming the rape victim for her own predicament. That is despicable. Why did the minister not tell the universities beforehand that the government intended to cut back with regard to medicare? Why did not the Tory government in Ontario take the universities and post-secondary institutions into its confidence and tell them what it wanted to do? The nurses are available. Surely we need not keep chronic care patients in active care beds at over $100 per day.

We have heard little about rehabilitative programs. Surely it would cost less per diem to apply rehabilitative measures than to keep certain chronic care people in active care beds, at great cost.

The government has not even considered the paramedical field. Many people in remote parts of ridings must travel over 100 miles in order to get emergency attention.

Surely such attention could be provided by paramedical workers. Little has been done in this regard.

The government can do all sorts of fine sounding things. It can bounce a signal off a satelite to provide television and communication coverage for corporations and frontier regions.

Mr. Benjamin: You can't bounce a signal off a Liberal's head.

Mr. Rodriguez: It would reverberate round the Chamber.

Mr. Benjamin: It would be like bouncing a signal off cement.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. We can build all sorts of fancy buildings. For the last four months an outhouse has been under construction on Parliament Hill. That looks like a make-work project, and it seems to me that these things all cost money. Some of these projects cost a heck of a lot of money. But we are not afraid to do this.

● (1530)

The Bank of Canada is erecting a building across the road made of glass. When it was started it was to cost a modest $30 million. The figure has now jumped to $75 million. They have some exotic plants in there now, the like of which I have not seen since I left Latin America. I go over there, Mr. Speaker, when I want to feel at home. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it will cost $75 million, and they don't bat an eyelash.

Mr. Saltsman: They have been building like that since the Spanish conquistadores.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is right. Ever since the conquistadores came to this country.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) got up in this House and said we are to have a national lottery to raise money until 1989 and then we shall be able to pay off the Olympic debt—if it costs every widow the last ten dollars she ever had. We are prepared to go to those lengths for the kind of monuments Shelley referred to, the kinds of monuments that will stand in the desert and just crumble apart in the sands of time.

When it comes to those services which affect the quality of life for people, surely the government has to say: those things we will not touch—there are certain agreements we will not back away from. On the contrary, we should be expanding those particular kinds of agreement in the areas we have mentioned before.

I remember the time when I taught in the schools. We had no money to pay for speech therapists. Children with speech disabilities received no special attention: their problems were ignored in the hope they would go away. School boards and taxpayers could not afford to support speech therapists in the school system. The same was true of children who were hard of hearing. We were not prepared to let a private member's bill go through this House—the Tories were dragging their feet on it, I know—which would set the upper limits of noise levels in any one place to 85 decibels. They were not prepared to let that through. I thought it seemed to me to be a very fine bill, one which we could do with in the work places in the Sudbury area; the vast majority of those who work for the mining companies are suffering from some kind of hearing disability.

There is something which will always be held against the government sitting over there. It is the fact that it was not prepared to move in an aggressive way in the area of preventive medicine. Surely, we on this side of the House ought not to be the ones to stand up and press the government to retreat from its position—a position which we consider to be a totally backward step with respect to the provision of medical services.

I have talked about some of the documents which were commissioned by the government. I want to read from the Ontario Economic Council report a rather interesting section on health issues and alternatives, published in 1976. This is what is contained in this particular document:

> The situation with respect to industrial health and safety may be worse than it seems because many industrial health problems remain undetected or unreported and in the Council's view we lack professionals specializing in industrial medicine. We have too few investigators and inspectors. There are several thousand toxic chemicals used in industrial processes but standards have been set for only a few hundred.

If the government wants to spend money, if it wants to avoid wasting medicare support, the best way to save is to spend money in these particular areas of industrial health safety and preventive kinds of health problems that are presently put upon society. If, beyond that, the government wants to save money, it can do it.

One of the comments made by the hon. member for New Westminster was that we should start taking a look at home care so that we can assure that active care beds in hospitals are occupied by active care patients. It seems to me this step would be a good one for patients, not only because they could be taken care of in their home environment enjoying the love and comfort of their family, but also because it would mean saving money for the taxpayers of Canada.

As I mentioned before, there are many parts of my own riding where we have to depend on emergency services which may be a hundred miles away. The people who live and work in those areas do not get a cut on their OHIP premium—they just pay the same OHIP premiums as I pay, living in a town where medical services are close and readily available. The effect of this bill will be to create even more difficulty for these people.

We talk about dental problems. The government has no dentacare program at all. It has been left completely up to the private sector; it has been left to workers in a particular situation getting into a collective agreement. But the minute they get a dentacare program established, what happens? The dentists put their fees up overnight to grab the highest possible charge they can. The government has reneged in this matter. It is fairly obvious that those who are in an organized shop can get the benefit of a dentacare program. But, once again, those workers who are not organized, usually lower-aid workers who do not have the strength of collective agreements, are left without the benefit of a dentacare program for themselves and their families. The government has not moved in the area of expanding medical services to include a dentacare program which would be of preventative benefit. Instead, it is quite prepared to sit back and cut away existing programs.

I have said that the Liberal government which sits over there is not unlike the Tories—we have seen an example in Ontario. One of the costs which drove up medicare in Ontario was the rip-off which took place by the private labs. There we saw the doctors and the private labs working hand in glove and ripping off the taxpayers.

An hon. Member: All of them?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, not all of them, but certainly more than 2 per cent of them. I am glad the hon. member has raised the question because I stand around in this House and hear of all these people who rip off the unemployment insurance fund, who rip off the welfare system. Studies in Ontario and elsewhere in this country have shown that approximately 2 per cent rip off any social welfare program. Interestingly enough, in Ontario the rip off of the OHIP program among doctors was 10 per cent—five times as great, Mr. Speaker. So when the hon. member on the government side of the House talks about percentages he should keep things in proper perspective. We have seen this kind of rip off by the private labs in Ontario, and it has added to the cost of medicare. Some hon. members give the impression that only the working class and people on welfare rip off the system. Rip-offs are not confined to poor people, the rich people rip off the system more so.

● (1540)

Mr. Reynolds: What about the NDP ripping off British Columbia?

Mr. Rodriguez: When the story is told we will find out who ripped off British Columbia. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) will find out that in the long run the people of British Columbia benefited. Dave Barrett certainly did not put the money in his pocket.

I think I have given some very good reasons why this bill should be put off. The motion moved by the hon. member for New Westminster is a very reasonable one. If we put this bill off for six months it will give the government a chance to recover—

Mr. Leggatt: —its sanity.

Mr. Rodriguez: The government never had any sanity. Let them grab this rope and we will pull them to the shore safely.

Mr. Firth: My hon. friend is too much of a humanitarian.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is in the nature of a New Democrat. The New Democrat throws out the 20 yard rope to the drowning man to grab, and will pull him safely to the shore. We are giving the government the opportunity to hoist this bill for six months, and it should grab it.

It is rather interesting to see the condition of federal-provincial relationships. I can see why the government might not want to take this opportunity since the provincial premiers left in a huff. I can understand them not wanting to go back. In view of what they are proposing in regard to federal-provincial shared programs they will be jumping out of the frying pan and into the fire.

In conclusion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I hear the Tories applauding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has now expired. If he wants to continue he will have to have unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to prolong this debate; I just want to make a couple of points. The New Democratic Party in particular has tried to portray this bill as being a cutback in expenditures on hospitalization and medicare. In fact it is no such thing. It simply sets out the growth rate at which the federal government will continue to participate in the medicare scheme. The NDP persist in talking about cutbacks in hospitalization. This bill has nothing whatsoever to do with hospitalization.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) made a few valid points and it is too bad he wrapped them up in so much red rhetoric. I can understand why it is he would want to increase expenditures on medicine; it is because he is suffering from a bad case of verbal diarrhea this afternoon. The fact that must be on the record is that this bill has nothing to do with hospitalization. It deals only with the limit to which the federal government will go in increasing expenditures on medicare.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to speak at all on this bill, but after the nonsense I have heard from the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) I feel I must say a few words. If my party ever had any intention of helping the NDP, it certainly has not after the speech of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. My party has been against this action by the government because it felt it was unilateral. The idea behind the bill is a good one; it is an attempt to control expenditures. However, we do not think the government should do this unilaterally without first negotiating with the provinces.

The NDP are in a great position to tell us what they would do. If anyone recalls what they did to the province of British Columbia within the short space of three years, they drove the province into half a billion dollars worth of debt.

Mr. Rodriguez: All right, let us have an election there now.

Mr. Reynolds: If we had an election in British Columbia right now you could be sure that the NDP would not be returned to power. It will be 20 or 30 years, if ever, before the NDP form another government in British Columbia. The people of Canada had a better idea of what the federal NDP was all about than did the people of B.C., as we can all see from the small number of that party left in this House after the last election. I think that after the next federal election they will have even fewer members.

The party that did win the last election in British Columbia is basically a Conservative party anyway, and it got rid of a party that was bankrupting the province. I think in the long term the Conservative party has a much better future ahead of it in British Columbia than the NDP ever did. I see the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is in the House. Had he sought the leadership of that party, perhaps it would be in better shape than it is right now.

I say these things to the hon. member for Nickel Belt because I think it is wrong to hoist this bill for six months. We did not suggest that the capital punishment bill should be delayed; we wanted to put it to the vote and get it passed by the House. I do not know why the NDP is making this move now unless it is to delay the business of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it has been agreed among the House leaders that a vote on this motion should be delayed until a time fixed by agreement among the House leaders.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I agree. I would even delay it for six months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion that has been made. Is it agreed that by unanimous consent a recorded division be deferred, pursuant to this special order, to a date to be decided among the House leaders?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so there is no misunderstanding—decided after consultation among the House leaders. I am sure no one wants to have a veto on the time of the vote, so that it can be put off indefinitely. My suggestion is that it be decided by the House leaders after consultation among them. It would not give any House leader a veto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope the suggestion is clear to everyone, that the vote will come before we recess anyway. It is so ordered.

● (1550)

Mr. Paproski: Five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There seems to be a suggestion that we call it five o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m.

At 3.51 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 21, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FINANCE

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF INFLATION ACCOUNTING FOR FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. In light of the impact of inflation on the declared profits of the Canadian corporate sector without sufficient provisions to alleviate this problem and, furthermore, since Canada is lagging behind other nations in implementing inflation accounting which would properly measure the economic progress of business, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to initiate a study to bring about a long-range program to implement inflation accounting in all federal government departments, Crown corporations and agencies as an example for the private sector to follow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF FISHERIES ZONE BOUNDARIES BETWEEN ST. PIERRE, MIQUELON AND CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The failure of the government to reach agreement with France in negotiations over boundaries between Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon now creates serious problems as a result of declarations by both countries over the extension of 200-mile limits. In view of the fact that the last discussions on the delineation of boundaries was held in 1972, and that the government refuses to comply with motion for production of papers number 70, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the whole matter be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to such a motion under Standing Order 43?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF EFFECT OF NEW DAIRY POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the position just taken by the Quebec Order of Agronomists, which asked the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to postpone the application of his new dairy policy because of the serious effects it may have, namely possible shortages of dairy products which would result in further price increases for consumers, and considering also that the effects of that dairy policy are already causing an important decline in farm machinery and feed sales, which may have an impact on other vital sectors of our economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House immediately analyze the short- and long-term consequences of the new dairy policy so that it can be reviewed thoroughly in the light of that reevaluation, before Quebec agriculture is completely broken up and other sectors of our economy are affected.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONNECTION BETWEEN ALLEGED DEFRAUDING OF COMMISSION AND TRAFFICKING IN NARCOTICS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Unemployment Insurance Commission of the defrauding of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, particularly in the Ottawa area. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Manpower and the Solicitor General give details to the House of the specific aspects of this investigation being made by the RCMP, by Real Meilleur, Chief of UIC benefit control and two of his control officers, Mike Richard and Claude Charron, into the possible and suspected connections between the defrauding of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and trafficking in narcotics.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL THAT SOUTH AFRICA ABANDON POLICY OF APARTHEID—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact it is obvious that the policy of apartheid, or racial separation, of the government at Pretoria is the source of the recent massive violence and bloody riots there, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That the Canadian government call on the government of the Republic of South Africa to consider these events as a warning that they must once and for all abandon a system which is clearly unacceptable under any criterion of human rights.

Mr. Speaker: The motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be debated only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED CONGRATULATIONS TO ORGANIZERS OF WORLD HEREFORD TOUR AND CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the World Hereford Tour and Conference commencing today and ending July 9, when representatives from 50 countries will visit some of the world's leading farms and ranches across Canada, culminating in Alberta, with 1,000 delegates expected at the conference in Banff June 27-July 2; an anticipated attendance of 2,000 at the Alberta Hereford Centre, Innisfail, July 6, the only place in the world where a breeding association does its own recording of performance testing; the Hereford Show at Calgary, July 8-9, where over 700 Herefords will be shown, 110 from the United States and 620 from Canada; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That this House request the Speaker of the House of Commons, on behalf of the members of the thirtieth Parliament, to send greetings, salutations and congratulations to members of the tour on their ingenuity, independence and importance, to Mr. Warren Smith, President, Central Alberta Hereford Club, Olds, Alberta,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bruce-Grey.

* * *

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF BEEF

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As it has become apparent that the importation of Australian and New Zealand beef has increased by 34 per cent as of the end of May this year over the same period last year and that prices for imported beef—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Capilano.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF SITUATION OF A. J. PERRIER IN CONNECTION WITH LEASES NEGOTIATED BETWEEN CAMPEAU AND THE CROWN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the Prime Minister's recently expressed views concerning conflict of interest and in view of the fact that Campeau Corporation is the largest landlord renting space to the federal Crown not only in the Ottawa area but in the whole of Canada, and in view of the fact that these lease arrangements in the Ottawa area between the federal government and Campeau have increased over 900 per cent since 1968 and that these leases with Campeau now have an annual cash flow of nearly $10 million, and in view of the fact that the government rents 90 per cent of Campeau's available commercial office space in Ottawa, and in view of the fact that the incumbent assistant deputy minister, Planning and Development for the Department of Public Works is actively involved in leasing functions with Campeau—a company he was vice-president of until 1973—a situation which could give rise to a possible conflict of interest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a motion perhaps he might put it.

Mr. Huntington: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That this House instruct the government to launch an immediate and in depth inquiry into the possible conflict of interest existing in the situation of A. J. Perrier in regards to leases negotiated and arranged with his recent former employer on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED APPLICATION OF BILINGUAL POLICY AND TO DEAL SEVERELY WITH RECALCITRANT CONTROLLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provision of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an urgent and important matter.

As the irresponsible and disgraceful actions of the English-speaking controllers who want to prevent the use of French in Quebec province whose population is francophone, and as those controller's blackmailing threatens Canadian unity by giving Quebecers the impression that one cannot be a Canadian in French, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House order the government to go ahead with its bilingual policy in ground-to-air communications, and that severe sanctions be taken with anglophone controllers who spurn the law and our courts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE SAFETY OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that a majority of the aviation community has brought air traffic movements to a halt in Canada on the grounds that it is not safe to fly in present circumstances, and noting that the Minister of Transport has promised an inquiry into the implications for safety of the possible introduction of bilingual air traffic procedures which were to be conducted simultaneously with the MOT simulator study, can the Prime Minister tell us when a commissioner is to be named to conduct this inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the search for a commissioner or commissioners to replace the one who resigned recently is actively going on and we hope to be able to name a commissioner very soon. I would point out that the work in which that commission would have to engage would probably take a period of several months and it is hoped that the pilots and air traffic controllers will await the outcome of that study. This being the case, I find it very regrettable that some of them would be engaged in a strike because the strike in itself cannot advance the very basic requirements of the commission's work which would be to see how safety could be maintained in every way and be made compatible with the bilingual capacity.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport or to the parliamentary secretary. In light of the fact that approximately two weeks ago the Minister of Transport requested from the air traffic controllers suggestions as to names for people who could satisfactorily be commissioner or commissioners, could there be some explanation of why there has been a delay and whether official communications have been concluded with the air traffic controllers to say whether or not the proposals they have put forward are acceptable.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister, before his departure, and certainly officials since that time have been in rather regular communication with all parties interested in the decision which is to be taken. As the hon. gentleman will appreciate, the job which the commissioner or commissioners will have to do is extremely important and one that requires substantial expertise and sensitivity to the issues that are involved. Therefore, it is our hope that we will be able to find the best person possible to conduct that inquiry, so we are conducting the broadest possible search in order to find the individual or individuals who will do the job that is necessary.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY STRIKING AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS WILL BE SUBJECT TO PENALTIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Can the minister tell the House whether it is true, as has been announced, that the Treasury Board is in the process of penalizing the controllers as provided by the law?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON SAFETY OF COMMERCIAL OPERATIONS IN VIEW OF THREATENED STRIKES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise us what position the Minister of Transport is taking in view of the refusal of air traffic controllers to report for work? Is it the position of MOT that, notwithstanding the absence of air traffic controllers at a number of airports and threats to not work at others, it is still safe for commercial flights to be continued?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman will appreciate, the inactivity or the lack of operation of certain air traffic control towers in the country very obviously complicates the problems of managing the traffic flows from one part of Canada to another. The ministry is very actively observing the situation at present, and obviously flight operations will not be allowed under circumstances which are unsafe.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON POSSIBLE BREACH OF INJUNCTION BY PILOTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Is it the government's position that the airline pilots are in breach of the injunction obtained against them yesterday? I ask this in view of the fact that under all circumstances individual pilots who have reported for work are in the invidious position of having to make their own decision as to safety.

● (1420)

Mr. Ralph Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the position of the air line pilots is something which was determined by a legal proceeding initiated by the airline companies, and the relationship between the companies and their employees is a matter for them to sort out, with the assistance of the courts.

SUGGESTED WIDENING OF INQUIRY TO INCLUDE ADEQUACY OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL EQUIPMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport who, I understand, is attending the funeral of his father—and all hon. members extend their sincerest sympathy and condolences—I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government would be willing to widen the terms of reference of the commission of inquiry to include not only the matter of bilingualism in air traffic control, but also the adequacy of equipment which air traffic controllers have to use at airports generally in Canada, and their working conditions, in the light of the kind of stress they have to work under in present circumstances.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has just finished negotiating with the air traffic controllers, and as I understand it, there has been a satisfactory conclusion of the contract on every point. The question of bilingualism is the only non-contractual matter which is outstanding, and I do not think it would simplify things if we were to introduce into the work of the commission the various extraneous propositions put forward by the hon. member. They are, of course, of interest to the government, and the parliamentary secretary indicated just last Thursday or Friday that if there were anything particular that the government should do to increase safety by way of instruments, it would gladly hear any representations, of the hon. member or of anyone else.

Mr. Benjamin: Whether air traffic control is carried out in one language or six, we cannot separate working conditions from the quality of the equipment they are using in the performance of their duties. When the Prime Minister is considering the terms of reference for the commission of inquiry, he should be aware that at the Vancouver airport there are 900 aircraft movements on one runway per day—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely if the hon. member is seeking information, the question ought to go forward, but if it is a representation with respect to details, that ought to be made in another way.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister asked me if I had some specific points. I will begin the wording of my question in a proper and accepted way. In view of the fact that there is an average of one equipment failure per day at Vancouver airports, that they are using world war II receivers, that radar which has been installed is not working and that surface detection radar, ordered six years ago, has still not arrived and they cannot see planes on the ground in a fog—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: —would the Prime Minister reconsider the terms of reference of the commissioner or commissioners so that it will be more than just bilingualism in air traffic control which will be considered? Should the considerations not include the adequacy of equipment which is available for the controllers and their working conditions?

Mr. Trudeau: Apart from the representations which have been made, which I will look into, the answer to the question remains the same.

Mr. Benjamin: I might also ask the Prime Minister the following: in view of the circumstances and the atmosphere presently prevailing in the country, particularly with regard to air traffic controllers, pilots and the Ministry of Transport, is the government now prepared to provide sufficient assurances so that the Ministry of Transport, the air traffic controllers, the pilots and the public can cool it on the matter of how and when bilingualism comes into air traffic control until the findings of the commission of inquiry have been reported and fully discussed among all concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: I think that is a very proper suggestion. I suggest that this House in some way should adopt the suggestion of the hon. member that the pilots and the air traffic controllers should cool it and agree to do their jobs and stay within the law until this point has been properly decided.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER DAIRY POLICY WILL BE MODIFIED AND WHEN

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

The Quebec Order of Agronomists analyzed the new dairy policy of the federal government last weekend and underlined the serious consequences which are already being felt in this area, namely the sale of major farm equipment which is close to zero and the decline of 50 per cent in the sale of feeds.

Considering that industrial milk producers have really agreed to lower their production in the last two months, can the minister tell the House whether his department proposes to change the dairy policy enunciated a few months ago and when.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, over a week ago we announced what we were considering at that time whether any changes were to be made in the policy. I would remind the hon. member that the dairy policy was agreed to by the dairy farmers of Canada. The dairy farmers of Canada will have to agree to any new conditions in the dairy policy. It will not be without any discussion with them if changes are to be made. This is an agreement signed by the dairy farmers of Canada and the provinces. The real problem is the distribution of quotas within the provinces themselves. If the provincial people would quit passing the buck to Ottawa, it would be better for all producers concerned.

* * *

TRADE

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF QUOTAS ON TEXTILE IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the United States retains 90 per cent of its domestic textile market for its own producers, the European Economic Community retains 80 per cent and Canada retains only 46 per cent, is the government planning to introduce quotas on textile imports which will more closely approach those of our most important trading partners and thereby make it unnecessary for the large scale and steadily increasing lay-offs and closing of plants which have been taking place in recent months in the Canadian textile industry, due to a steadily increasing stream of cheap imports from law wage countries?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it was only last week that there was full and detailed debate on this subject in this House. I answered many of the questions at that time. I can assure the hon. gentleman I used the words "more quotas" than at the present time because we have quotas on a great number of commodities and textiles. We are presently considering additional ones relating to such things as outerwear. As I told the House during the debate last week there is an industry, government and provincial committee with labour representation on it which is asked to report to me by the end of this month the further steps that should be taken.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister stayed very clearly away from this issue of increased quotas in his speech in the House last week, and as those people in the industry with whom he has been dealing and will be meeting later on are unanimously and strongly of the opinion that the only way to correct this disastrous and increasingly serious situation is to increase quotas to levels more approaching those imposed by the European Economic Community and the United States, I again ask the minister if he will give serious consideration to bringing Canadian quotas to a level closer to those of the countries with which we deal on a larger scale, the United States and the European Economic Community, so that this industry, which is in very serious condition right now and is getting worse day by day, will not perish?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my comments the other day we are looking at whether there should be a different arrangement of quotas or an expansion of the quota system. The hon. member says it is the unanimous view that this will solve the problem. I would say to him that there are certain sectors that are by no means of that view. There is a certain degree of conflict which we are seeking to eliminate at the present time. I have indicated that we are flexible and that if some proposals come forward that make sense and would bring about the result that the hon. member desires, and which we all desire, we certainly would look at it very seriously and quickly.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAM OF SENATOR LAWSON IN VIEW OF SALARY INCREASE ACCEPTED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns a member of the other House, Senator Ed Lawson who was appointed some four years ago by this government. His salary has been boosted as vice-president of the International Teamsters' Union from $18,000 to $22,500, an increase of 25 per cent. In addition to that he draws a salary as director of the Affiliated Canadian Conference of Teamsters and is president of the Union's B.C.-Yukon Board. As the senator gave such strong support for the guidelines providing for increase of between 8 per cent and 12 per cent, has he been in touch with the government to advise that he would not be accepting this increase, so unjust to the enforcement of the guidelines and to wage earners earning comparatively low wages, but yet, in this case, apparently defended by the senator who previously gave his full support to the guidelines?

● (1430)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the senator has not been in touch with me, but I will be glad to inquire to see if he has sought advice in this regard.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF AEROSOL SPRAYS ON OZONE LAYER—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROPOSED BAN OF AEROSOL SPRAY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of the Environment arises from recent reports, the most recent one being from the University of Denver, which suggest that chemical reactions occurring from gases released by aerosol sprays are threatening to erode the atmosphere's layer of ozone. As such erosion could result in a substantial increase in skin cancer, will the hon. gentleman tell the House whether he has investigated this latest evidence and, if it is factual, will he consider introducing legislation to ban the use of aerosol sprays?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, it has not been proved thus far that the use of aerosol sprays causes an irreparable damage. The U.S. Academy of Science made a study and came to the conclusion that nothing proved that the use of aerosol sprays could cause damages such as those he mentioned.

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister. This is the single voice in opposition to the proposal that has been advanced by the University of Denver and other groups. Be that as it may, is the hon. gentleman aware that, according to the Canadian Cancer Institute, it is estimated that a 10 per cent decrease in the ozone layer will result in a 20 per cent increase in the incidence of skin cancer and that, at present trend rates, we shall reach that point within the next quarter century? Does the hon. gentleman propose to take action to protect Canadians from the threat of this dread disease which last year afflicted over 11,000 Canadians?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I missed part of the hon. member's question, but I agree on the consequences of the destruction of the ozone layer. As for the second part of the question, of course we are interested in the problem raised. We are following it closely and seeing by what means we can prevent an increase of that destructive element in the atmosphere.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INDUSTRIAL MILK—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH PRODUCERS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As industrial milk producers are now in severely straightened financial circumstances, having received in the month of May one quarter of the income they received in the same period last year for the production of milk, and since the minister has intimated that he will be consulting the dairy farmers of Canada, can he now confirm that he will consult them, and when?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an ongoing subcommittee of the market-sharing quota committee has been studying the problem. It is made up of producers from all over Canada. I understand they are to meet today or tomorrow in the city of Toronto, if they can get there, to further discuss the distribution of provincial quotas. I repeat, the dairy farmers of Canada producing industrial milk are the highest paid in the world. The reason for the problem in Ontario and Quebec has to do with the way the programs are administered in those provinces, programs with which I have nothing to do.

* * *

TRADE

ALLEGED DUMPING OF BEEF BY AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As it has become apparent that the importation of Australian and New Zealand beef has increased by 34 per cent by the end of May this year over the same period of time last year, prices for imported beef having been from 15 cents to 25 cents lower per pound than that paid for the same beef delivered to the United States, and as it would appear that this practice is very close to dumping by Australia and New Zealand, would the minister tell the House what steps his department has taken to prevent this practice from continuing to the detriment of Canadian cattle producers?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Agriculture some days ago referred in the House to this problem. Since that time, indeed, I think before then, representations were made to the governments of New Zealand and Australia. I personally, in the absence of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, met with the minister of agriculture from Australia. They have undertaken to reduce the differential in price between sales in Canada and the U.S., but some details are still to be worked out at the official level. As soon as this is done no doubt some kind of public statement will be made.

ENERGY

ALLEGATION BY MINISTER THOSE OPPOSED TO NUCLEAR POWER ISSUING MISLEADING STATEMENTS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources concerns the statement he made last week in which he condemned those opposed to nuclear power for issuing distorted and misleading information laced with scary sensationalism. Since the Liberal convention of 1975 called for a full public inquiry into this matter, and the Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility also called for a full public inquiry, will the minister advise the House why he still opposes a full public inquiry, since any misleading information could be defused during such an inquiry?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was making the important point in my remarks that lots of people are taking advantage of public ignorance and public fear to put forward very scary, alarmist statements which cannot be supported by fact. I hope the hon. member shares with me the call to those who report on the generation of nuclear power to exercise more responsibility and look at the facts before they make statements or write an article.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRE TO DISSEMINATE INFORMATION ON GENERATION OF NUCLEAR ENERGY—TYPE OF INFORMATION DISSEMINATED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, that is a good argument in support of a public inquiry. I am pleased to note the minister making it. Since the minister has called for the establishment of a public information centre to disseminate information, may I ask, will that centre be providing for new evidence available from responsible sources showing that the export of the CANDU reactor brings no compelling economic benefits to third world countries and that, according to IRDA, an agency of the U.S. government, the CANDU produces twice the amount of plutonium, which could be used by terrorists, of any other reactor and that the CANDU is the most dangerous reactor being exported in the world. Is the minister ready to see that kind of information disseminated by the public information centre the establishment of which he is calling for?

An hon. Member: The IRA want a CANDU.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a number of responsible agencies and groups in the country are interested in advancing public understanding of nuclear power generation, not only for Canadian use but for use outside. I was speaking specifically about the use of nuclear energy in Canada. It seems to me we have not marshalled the important resources of universities and the expertise and opinions of the public responsibility group to which the hon. member referred, the Coalition for Nuclear responsibility. I have written, or am in the process of writing, to a number of groups such as the Science Council of Canada and professional groups, including engineering groups, suggesting that perhaps we should form, with their assistance, some kind of public information body on resources. It should not be a propaganda agency; it should be a publicly supported agency which can deal with this question on a factual basis. That is one way of going about it. The other way is by proceeding by way of interaction between these various groups, and that has been going on. I am interested in getting the views of those most concerned and most knowledgeable in this area, and their advice.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ALLEGATION MR. BISSONNETTE IS LINKED WITH COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES OF CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance follows the question asked by my colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe on June 15, and also arises out of a newspaper article printed last Saturday linking Mr. A. L. Bissonnette, another member of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, with the private business activities of the tribunal's chairman. Is the minister in a position to inform this House whether he widened the inquiry he undertook last week and when he will most likely be able to report to this House with respect to his findings concerning Mr. Bissonnette?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with Mr. Bissonnette and expect to be able to make a statement about the chairman tomorrow.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN THE INTERPROVINCIAL QUOTA TRANSFER SYSTEM

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture is on the same lines as another question asked earlier this afternoon. It has to do with dairy policy. Since Manitoba has remained within its quota for the last two years but at present faces the prospect of severe cutbacks under our dairy policy, I ask if the minister has put forward, or is prepared to put forward, any proposals to the provinces and the Canadian Dairy Commission for changing the operation of the interprovincial quota transfer system, which, as it presently operates, appears to reward provinces contributing to the surplus while penalizing those which have kept their production under control? Manitoba is one of the provinces which seems to be penalized.

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Manitoba increased its production last year over and above the 5 per cent. However, Manitoba has probably one of the fairest systems of any marketing program in Canada because it has a complete pooling system for number one milk. They are not without problems in Manitoba. I addressed the annual meeting of the Manitoba milk producers. They made some representations. However, I can state that they are a lot happier in that province than in any other province, including Ontario and Quebec, because of the system under which they operate.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF PROVISIONS FOR MOVEMENT OF GRAIN TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the fact the government has agreed not to proceed with Bill C-87 before the summer recess and as there is considerable fear that the provisions of clause 15 of that bill will be enacted in anticipation—what I speak of is with regard to the act and East rates and the handling of grain at the Great Lakes terminal—can the minister give the House and all those involved some assurance that the previous pattern of grain movement will be retained until such time as clause 15 of Bill C-87 is amended, withdrawn or a new bill drafted for the next session? Also, will he advise the wheat board that this grain movement should be maintained because to act upon the provisions of a bill that had not been passed would be to act unlawfully.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Of course, Mr. Speaker, if a particular provision of a bill has not been enacted, it does not become law. The existing statute will therefore continue in force as it has in the past.

* * *

[Translation]

STATISTICS CANADA

INQUIRY WHETHER EMPLOYEES WHO ARE TO BE LAID OFF WILL BE HIRED BY OTHER DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since several employees of Statistics Canada will be dismissed on September 30 next, allegedly because the staff ought to be younger and less numerous, if they have not been restored either to their same functions or hired in another service in the federal government, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to contact Statistics Canada's officials so that these employees may be rehired by other services in the same agency or in the federal government?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of the particular matter to which the hon. member refers. With regard to the second part of his question, I will certainly take this up immediately with the head of Statistics Canada.

[Mr. Whelan.]

HOUSING

OFFERING BY TRUST COMPANIES OF ONE YEAR MORTGAGE AT REDUCED RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It arises as a result of the parliamentary secretary's answer in the House last week that it is common practice to offer lower interest rates on one year mortgages on the part of the trust companies. Will the minister indicate whether he is aware of this practice of one year mortgages at a reduced rate of a half per cent and does he intend, either in his own name or in the name of his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to take action to prevent this bait and switch method of mortgage financing?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. Looking at the whole picture of the rollover of mortgages, it was CMHC which in 1969 introduced the five year rollover. It is designed to bring more mortgage money into the market. The reduction in cost of the one year rollover might be a difference on the one quarter of one per cent. This seems to be reasonably stable now with the five-year planning. I am looking at it. We always keep all options open. I will discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO NEAR ACCIDENTS WHICH HAPPENED OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the allegations made by members of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association that near accidents have occurred in the last few weeks in places other than the province of Quebec, and since there are some doubts in the public opinion concerning the causes of these near accidents, can the parliamentary secretary inform hon. members of the House whether inquiries are now under way at the Department of Transport to identify the causes of these near accidents, share the responsibilities of the parties involved and take the measures and necessary action to prevent their repetition or sue those who spread a false rumour?

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whenever incidents of this kind are reported to the Ministry of Transport, they are investigated quickly and thoroughly. I can assure the hon. member that in the particular instance to which he is referring, an investigation will be undertaken to determine if there is any validity to the allegation which has been made.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

PROPOSED INCREASE IN RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and concerns the proposed rate increases by the Northern Canada Power Commission. For the past several weeks, people in the Northwest Territories and Yukon have been expecting the minister's reply to reports on NCPC by the Public Utilities Boards and by citizens groups in the two territories. Is the minister now prepared to make public the action he will take to protect northern consumers from these drastic increases in the cost of electricity? The minister has gone on record as saying he favours a reduction in the interest rates on loans to NCPC. Will this be one of the methods the minister will use to protect northern consumers from this increase?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct. I have received the two reports of the public utilities boards in each of the territories as well as the Dalby report. Virtually all of the matters with which it dealt fall within the competence of the Northern Canada Power Commission and have been taken in hand by the chairman of the NCPC. The one matter that will have to be examined by the federal government is the question of the capital debt. We are currently looking at this. We are not sure it can be handled by a lightening of the interest charges, as the hon. member suggests, or a diminution of the actual amount of the outstanding debt. These matters involve departments other than my own. We are currently looking at this and hope to have some sort of proposal to present before the summer months expire, while people in the north are enjoying minimum power consumption.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether there will or will not be a rate increase announcement?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, there have been rate increases announced. It is our intention that these will proceed. As I indicated, it is our hope that during this period of low power consumption during the summer months we can examine this and see if we can roll back part of this increase.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST THAT BOARD STUDY RATE INCREASES PROPOSED BY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The automobile insurance companies are increasing their rates as of July 1 by 10 per cent after a 12 per cent increase on January 1 of this year, making a cumulative increase of 23 per cent on top of a 40 per cent increase last year. Acknowledging that the insurance companies are losing some money, but with the imposition of seat belt legislation and lower speed limits, the picture will be a little brighter, does the minister intend to ask the Anti-Inflation Board to take an especially close look at the justification of these increases and perhaps ask that the increases be phased in over a longer period of time?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was specifically because of this concern that we put this industry under the AIB control.

* * *

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING COMPENSATION FOR LIVESTOCK DESTROYED

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister indicate when we might anticipate receiving the new regulations respecting compensation for livestock that have been destroyed under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act? Also, what efforts are being made to ensure that this information is available to Canadians prior to the summer recess of parliament?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that it will be ready by then.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGATION DOMESTIC DEMAND WEAK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement in Jasper that the budget maintains a substantial amount of fiscal stimulus in order to maintain a high level of domestic demand, and as Statistic Canada now reports that the domestic demand was a weak point in the economy with a high buildup of inventory, can the minister now say if his assessment of the strength of the domestic economy was wrong?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that the national accounts for the first quarter of 1975 indicate an increase in that quarter of 2.7 per cent and that consumer spending, current government spending, housing and inventory accumulation were all the sources of that strength. The hon. member might go back and reread the article.

* * *

● (1450)

FINANCE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF BUDGETARY BILLS—NUMBER OF BILLS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister indicate when we may expect some budgetary bills, and specifically how many bills might be tabled?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that will be in the next session. Very likely there will be two bills; it will depend on the nature of the actual tax changes.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister at least give first reading to the budgetary bills to enable people over the summer period to have the chance of reviewing the provisions of the bills, since many people in the private sector are disturbed at some of the aspects of the budget now before us?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the interval would be better used in discussing with people in the private sector the ways and means resolution that is now before parliament, so that this discussion can be taken into account in the drafting of the bills.

* * *

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the continuing and pressing need to create jobs in Canada, can the minister tell the House whether a decision has been made with regard to the reintroduction of the LIP program or any other job-creation programs, when will he be making the announcement, and what date will the programs start?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be making an announcement within a very few days about the $100 million Local Initiatives Program for the fall and winter of 1976-77. We anticipate that this will start in the fall. The details will be similar to those which apply in the previous two years, but with some increase in influence on the allocation of funds to areas of high and chronic unemployment. Some of the other criteria I will be announcing in detail, as I say, certainly before the end of the month.

* * *

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

POSSIBILITY NEW ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES IN FORCE AFTER JUNE 15, 1977—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I have not been able to get an appropriate answer from the Secretary of State, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. Under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act the draft order was presented on June 7, it was proclaimed on June 11 and I believe gazetted on June 16. Have all steps been taken such that any election held after June 15 of 1977 will be on the new boundaries? If not, would he explain what steps have to be taken?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that within the next couple of months returning officers have to be appointed for all the new ridings. I think the situation is this, that you could not hold an election before the date mentioned by the hon. member. I do not think I can yet give assurances that one could be held immediately thereafter; that would depend upon the chief electoral officer, if he is satisfied.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. When will the reorganization of the ministry, as announced to the press on May 28, the day after his estimates were passed by the committee, take place? Since this in fact represents a major reorganization of government, does the minister intend officially to notify parliament by way of a statement in the House?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reorganization has been underway, is currently underway and largely in place. It was dealt with when the estimates were before the committee and we talked about the restructuring, co-ordination and new positions within CMHC and the ministry. This process is proceeding smoothly and we think it will have a great beneficial effect in making the ministry even more effective in the future.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. Would the minister be prepared to make a statement in the House as to the timetable of the reorganization, and can he confirm to the House the plans of the government to appoint the present president of CMHC as deputy minister or undersecretary in the new ministry?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I thought the information was pretty clear. The information given out was certainly discussed before the committee. I would be delighted if the hon. member would choose an opposition day on which we could discuss this in some detail. I think all hon. members would find it of very great interest and a great step forward in the reorganization of government, making more effective use of resources which were complementary but not sufficiently well co-ordinated, as will now be the case.

* * *

HEALTH

MERCURY POISONING—PROPOSED CLOSING OF ENGLISH AND WABIGOON RIVERS TO FISHING

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of health concerning mercury poisoning in northwestern Ontario. Is the minister or the special study group on mercury poisoning in his department aware of the contents of a special report in the hands of the Ontario minister of health which recommends that the English and Wabigoon river system be closed to all fishing, and is the federal government prepared to take such action under the Canada Water Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a report. However, I know that consultations are now under way with Indians and between Indians and Ontario government ministers on that matter, and I am sure we will have the opportunity to discuss it soon with the Ontario government.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY IF NEW REGULATIONS APPLY TO LEBANESE VISITORS TO CANADA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question.

Would the minister inform the House on the new situation concerning Lebanese visitors to Canada, and confirm whether it is true that new regulations have been decreed last Friday concerning Lebanese visitors to Canada?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are, effective today, going to offer the opportunity to some 1,000 Lebanese people here in Canada in the category of independent immigrants or who are here as visitors to apply for landed immigrant status through order in council, provided that with assistance from the Lebanese community they can be successfully established in Canada. Immigration officers will review their applications in those terms under relaxed criteria. Indeed, persons with or without relatives who arrive with visas will be admitted in the category in which they are seeking entry.

On the other hand, those who come to Canada illegally—that is, without visas—from countries other than Lebanon will be returned to the country from whence they came; that is standard immigration policy. We will be offering to those people here who do not have relatives, and who are here as of today, the opportunity to apply for permanent residence within Canada through order in council.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO EVACUATE CANADIANS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question has a very related and important connection. May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in light of the successful efforts by the United States to evacuate a number of their nationals from Lebanon and activities by other countries in Europe, she can advise the House if Canada is taking any steps to evacuate the 200 or so Canadian nationals who are still in that war torn country?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House may know, the airport at Beirut is closed and this does not give us any possibility of sending Canadian aircraft to take out Canadians. Our information indicates that there were no Canadians in the British organized convoy which arrived in Damascus on June 18. On the other hand, I was just informed that there were nine Canadians included in the 263 civilians being taken to Athens by the U.S. navy.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PRICE OFFERED BY CORPORATION FOR WHITEFISH

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fisheries). Has the minister received a request from the fishermen of northern Saskatchewan for a review of the price offered by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation for cutter whitefish of as low as two cents up to 7¼ cents, which is less than half the price offered last year; and can these fishermen expect any support under the fish support program?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen a request of this type but I will obviously check into it right away. I might say to the hon. member, on the other hand, that the price is set by the corporation, its board and advisers, including a large number of fishermen represented on the advisory committee and on the board itself.

* * *

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the massive deficit on current account of international payments reported by Statistics Canada last week, is the minister considering any initiatives designed to improve Canada's trade position in relation to its level of exports?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Very much, so, Mr. Speaker, and a great many of them are underway. I am sure the hon. member has been advised of them. If not, I will be very glad to make them available to him. They include various missions to different countries as well as a number of missions coming here to look at the potential for export, and there is a wide range of other activities. So that the total package is quite impressive. Of course, as I mentioned to the House some weeks ago, particularly on the trade account itself, it looks as though last year's deficit is in fact being turned around and we will wind up with a small surplus.

Oral Questions

● (1500)

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO MODIFY LEVEL OF FOREIGN BORROWING AND ALLEVIATE BALANCE OF PAYMENTS POSITION

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Does he intend to take steps to modify the level of foreign borrowing, particularly by provincial governments, in order to reduce the level of interest paid from Canadian sources in respect of such borrowing, thereby alleviating to some extent the very serious balance of payments situation facing this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take it what the hon. gentleman is advocating is a very loose monetary policy, and it would not be the intention of the government to ask for that action by the Bank of Canada.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF BEEF IMPORTED FROM AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that is supplementary to one asked earlier of the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the matter of imports from Australia and New Zealand of frozen carcas beef and boneless beef. Would the minister, perhaps in consultation with his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, suggest that Canada should insist that all such imports from down under be brought in at a price no less than that for equivalent types of meat going into the United States and not at any discount, whatsoever, particularly the six-cent a pound discount we have heard about?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I, too, met the Minister of Agriculture for Australia, but in another city, namely, Rome. We discussed this very topic that the hon. member has mentioned. I did say I would discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, at the first opportunity, but I have not had that opportunity so far. I am satisfied that the Minister of Agriculture for Australia is quite serious about bringing this whole matter of the sale price of their meat in Canada in line with what it is selling for in the United States.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO MARKETING OF BEEF AND VEAL

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table, in both official languages, the report of the commission of inquiry into the marketing of beef and veal.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉ ISSUED FOLLOWING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table, in both official languages, a communiqué issued following the federal-provincial conference of attorneys general held at Vancouver on June 17 and 18, 1976.

* * *

SUPPLY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO CONCUR IN MAIN OR SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there was a technical slip-up at the end of the week. I should, therefore, like to move a motion, which I understand carries the support of my colleagues the House leaders of other parties, as follows:

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 58(4)(a), during the period ending June 30, 1976, twenty-four hours' written notice shall be required for any motion to concur in main or supplementary estimates.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have had some communication in respect of this matter, and we are prepared to concur in the motion. I should like to commend the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) for not following the precedent of his colleagues in criticizing his public servants for the slip-up that occurred and for accepting the responsibility himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to this method of correcting this error.

Mr. Beaudoin: Nous sommes d'accord, monsieur le président.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) which is introduced without notice at this time with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 5,362, 5,392, 5,401, 5,417 and 5,420.

[Text]

REVIEW OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION ANSWER TO QUESTION 3,703

Question No. 5,362—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Have any officials of the Department of Justice examined the answer to Question No. 3,703 in which it is stated that the Public Service Commission "is restrained by the provisions of section 13 of the Public Service Employment Act to the consideration of a prospective candidate's place of residence rather than his or her place of birth" and, if not, for what reason?

2. Are there any regulations or orders issued pursuant to section 13 and, if so, have they been examined by the Department or its officials and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does the answer to Question No. 3,703 have the nature of a legal opinion?

Mr. Francis Fox (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. No. The Department of Justice has not been requested to provide legal advice to the Public Service Commission on this question.

2. Section 9 of the Public Service Employment Regulations, which were made by the Public Service Commission in 1967, deals with the determination of the area in which applicants must reside in order to be eligible for appointment. As required by section 4 of the Regulations Under Section 9 of the Regulations Act (which were then in force), the Public Service Employment Regulations would have been examined by the Clerk of the Privy Council in consultation with the Deputy Minister of Justice to ensure that the form and draftsmanship thereof followed established standards. An examination of those Regulations also would have been made by the Department of Justice under the Canadian Bill of Rights.

3. No. Government legal opinions can only be given by the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada by virtue of the Department of Justice Act.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT—INTEREST ON ARREARS

Question No. 5,392—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. For the crop years 1974-75, 1973-74 and 1972-73, how many producers, in each of the provinces, were charged interest on arrears arising from default under provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act?

2. What was the total (a) aggregate amount (b) for each province collected by the Canadian Wheat Board for interest in lieu of default under the provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act?

3. Were any producers successful in appealing the decision of the Canadian Wheat Board to levy interest and, if so, how many?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Canadian Wheat Board statistics, relating to producer accounts for the crop years 1974-75, 1973-74 and 1972-73 that were placed in default and assessed interest under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, are not maintained by province. The total number of producer accounts placed in default and assessed interest for each of those crop years are: 1972-73, 3,657; 1973-74, 3,555; 1974-75, 1,999.

2. (a) 1972-73, $453,829; 1973-74, $751,822; 1974-75, $397,259; (b) Not available by province.

3. No.

MIRABEL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 5,401—Mr. Beatty:

What was the total cost for the building and opening of Mirabel Airport?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The actual total cost, as of March 31, 1976, for the building and opening of Mirabel Airport is $324,858,000.

COMMITTEE ON THE OPERATION OF THE ABORTION LAW

Question No. 5,417—Mr. Reid:

1. With respect to the answer to Question No. 3,938, does the government have a statement from Dr. Marion C. Powell that she has not been and never has been a member of Doctors for the Repeal of Abortion Laws?

2. Is the government aware that in an advertisement in the CMA Journal of June 21, 1975 (Vol. 112, 1419) the name of a Dr. Marion C. Powell, Toronto, Ontario appears, and has the government investigated to discover if this Dr. Marion C. Powell is the same Dr. Marion C. Powell appointed to the Committee on Abortion Law Study and, if so, what were the results of the investigation?

3. If the two Dr. Marion C. Powells should happen to be the same person, does the government consider that the neutrality of the Committee on Abortion Laws is destroyed by virtue of having a committed advocate of one side of the question on the Committee and, if so, what action does the government intend to take to redress the balance and to ensure that other sides of opinion are represented on the Committee?

Mr. Francis Fox (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): 1. No, but the government does have such a statement from Dr. Marion G. Powell.

2. If the name appearing in the advertisement of the C.M.A. Journal of June 21, 1975 (Vol. 112, 1419) was intended to refer to Dr. Marion G. Powell, I am informed that she did not authorize the use of her name in this advertisement.

3. The terms of reference of the Committee on the Operation of the Abortion Law, tabled in the House of Commons on October 15, 1975, make clear that the government is not asking the Committee to make recommendations on a policy with respect to abortion. The government considered it more appropriate to establish a committee to conduct a scientific study of the way in which the existing abortion law is actually operating. All the members of the Committee were carefully selected on the basis of their knowledge and experience and their ability to carry out this kind of research.

MIRABEL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 5,420—Mr. MacKay:

What is the total cost of Mirabel International Airport to date, including approved estimates relating to (a) original land acquisition (b) supplementary land acquisition (c) court and legal costs arising out of land acquisition and expropriations (d) consulting fees to CAIM (e) consulting fees to outside consultants excluding CAIM and related to Mirabel (f) construction costs as approved by the New Montreal International Airport Project Office and costs of ancillary equipment for operations?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The total actual cost, as of March 31, 1976, of Mirabel International Airport is $324,858,000. This includes the airport proper (including land used as airport operational zone), the air navigational aids (some of which are used exclusively for Mirabel), the meteorological services and ancillary equipment for operations. The total estimated cost, as of March 31, 1976, of Mirabel International Airport, including approved estimates relating to items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) is $336,437,000.

N.B.: (a) Some 17,000 acres of land used as the airport operational zone were acquired for an approved estimated cost of $18,000,000. This cost is charged against the airport costs. In addition to the land used as airport operational zone, some 76,000 acres of airport peripheral land were acquired for an approved estimated cost of $143,000,000. This cost is not charged against airport cost; (b) there was no supplementary land acquisition; therefore no cost; (c) $1,280,603 have been spent as court and legal costs arising out of the total (some 93,000 acres) land acquisition and expropriation. Therefore, these costs are charged to the airport or to the airport peripheral land in proportion to the area of land. The proportion of these costs chargeable to the land used as airport operational zone is included in the $18,000,000 mentioned at item (a). (d) $25,637,500 have been approved for consulting fees to CAIM; (e) approximately $16,000,000 have been approved for consulting fees related to Mirabel to outside consultants excluding CAIM; (f) the total construction costs as approved by the New Montreal International Airport Project Office is $336,437,000. This figure includes, among other items, the estimated cost of the land used as airport operational zone, fees to be paid to consultants, the estimated cost of ancillary equipment for operations, the air navigational aids and meteorological services. The estimated costs of ancillary equipments for operation is $10,121,000.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Fox.]

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a question I placed on the order paper on June 8. It is a starred question and is in respect of which members of the cabinet were on the Treasury Board on December 2, 1975, dealing with the LRPA contract. This is an answer that could have been provided in one day and I would appreciate it if I could be provided with an answer by not later than tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR ITS ALLEGED CYNICAL BEHAVIOUR AT HABITAT CONFERENCE

On the order: Opposition motion for the supply period ending June 30, 1976.

That this House condemns the government for its cynical behaviour at the Habitat conference held recently in Vancouver, first, in its position on land speculation; second, its policy of placing commercial criteria ahead of any others in the sale of nuclear reactors; and third, the obvious conflict between the government's bold statements on such environmental matters as clean water and its inability or unwillingness to enforce minimal standards in Canada, as in the case of the Syncrude plant in northern Alberta—Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a day for confessing errors. I am grateful to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) for pointing out a drafting error in the motion which our party has put down for debate today. As an old printer, I emphasize that it is a drafting error and not a typographical one. At any rate, the last phrase of the motion that will be debated today reads, "as in the case of the Syncrude plant in northern Alberta." It should read, "as in the case of the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant in northern Alberta". Like my hon. friend across the way, I will take the blame for it. Like him, I have discussed the matter with the other House leaders, and they have agreed that consent be given to making this change so the motion will read as I have indicated.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite right, and I should like to join him in congratulating the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk).

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the motion which is on the order paper will be amended, by consent, so that in the last line the words "Syncrude plant" will be changed to read "the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant". Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its cynical behaviour at the Habitat conference held recently in Vancouver, first, in its position on land speculation; second, its policy of placing commercial criteria ahead of any others in the sale of nuclear reactors; and third, the obvious conflict between the government's bold statements on such environmental matters as clean water and its inability or unwillingness to enforce minimal standards in Canada, as in the case of the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant in northern Alberta.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion today refers to the recent United Nations conference in Vancouver on human settlements which was hosted by Canada and was called Habitat. This conference of over 125 countries, involving 4,000 persons, was a follow-up to the UN conference held in Stockholm on the environment, the conference in Rome on food, the conference in Belgrade on population, and the conference in Mexico on the status of women. Hon. members will note that in the motion I am critical of the performance of the government of Canada. It was outvoted, outclassed and outmanoeuvered, and played a role of compromise, cajoling, pleading and begging instead of giving leadership and direction to the problems of human settlements.

I am not critical of government ministers who represented Canada. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), who acted as president of the conference, is a decent, open, honest and compassionate person—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1510)

Mr. Gilbert: —who spoke from the heart in the hardfisted business of politics. But the head as well as the heart must be used in respect of these problems.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) worked hard and long trying to defend the indefensible and trying to reach compromise solutions. What annoyed many Canadian delegates and observers was the weak and vacillating position of the government on the main issue of land, nuclear reactors, clean water and the new international economic order. I should like to demonstrate the government's poor and pitiful performance. The moral tone of the conference was set by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), Mother Teresa, the Vancouver symposium made up of Barbara Ward and 23 other world-renowned human settlement experts, and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I should like members to listen to what the Prime Minister said at the opening of the conference. He said:

> Love is all you need—

But ordinary love will not be enough, according to the Prime Minister.

> The only type of love which would be effective in the tightly packed world we already live in would be a passionate love—

Then he quoted Teilhard and said:

> Love one another, or you will perish.

Then he said:

> Life would become intolerable if one failed to love one's neighbour, the only path is a "conspiracy of love"—in this lies the salvation of human settlements and the hope held forth by Habitat . . .
>
> The ordinary people, the youth, of whatever age, the participants in the parallel Habitat forum—all have a commitment. And of all the factors bearing down on the conference, Trudeau stressed that urgency was as important as any.
>
> The long years of experience, the specialization, the advanced knowledge and the wisdom of the delegates of Habitat, mixed with the imagination, the originality, the spontaneity, the boldness and the irreverence to be found at Habitat forum will produce, I am sure, an effervescence of quality.

That is what the Prime Minister said at the opening of the conference to set the moral tone. Let me relate what Mother Teresa had to say. Mother Teresa, the saint from the Calcutta slums, told people at the Habitat forum to put their love into living action and to give love until it hurts. She said:

> Let us not just put this love into words. Let us love until it hurts.

Mother Teresa responded to the words of the Prime Minister in respect of a conspiracy of love by saying that the Prime Minister of Canada should match his words and his actions in accordance with what he stated at the opening of the conference. The Prime Minister's actions and Canada's actions were deafening by their silence and inaction. The third group to set forth the tone of the conference was the Vancouver symposium lead by Barbara Ward and 23 other renowed human settlement experts. The following is a news release:

> The Vancouver conference is about the whole of life, says the declaration. "It is in settlements that mankind achieves happiness, justice and dignity—or suffers rejection, despair and deepening violence—Let Vancouver be remembered as a city where a new hope was born".

Then they set forth some of the problems which we are facing in respect of human settlements, and offered some solutions. They said that every encouragement must be given to the citizens themselves to arrange, build and diversify their communities. The declaration contains a strong commitment to public control over development land. The unearned increment created by changes in land use must return to the community, the 24 experts said, and not to private land owners. They also propose a moratorium on nuclear power and the transfer of research and resources to income-energy systems like solar power. The fantastic waste of resources and energy in western technologies, the declaration states, are errors and extravagances which all countries, developed and developing alike, can and should avoid. This was the statement led by Barbara Ward, Margaret Mead, Buckminster Fuller and others who set forth the moral tone.

May I relate what the Minister of State for Urban Affairs said. I quote from the Vancouver Province:

> Danson said the ultimate reason for poverty is not a lack of resources but a lack of political will. "We have an opportunity here to change that choice. This, to me, is what we mean when we speak of Habitat as a solution-oriented conference."
>
> Danson later held his first news conference as Habitat president. He repeated the position that industrialized nations must increasingly share their wealth with the developing world.
>
> "If we try to isolate ourselves from other parts of the world, there will be despair and violence and from that we cannot escape, nor should we escape."

May I deal with the performance of Canada with regard to the Habitat conference. Canada's performance was disappointing and duplicitous. It was duplicitous in the sense of pretending to listen, but not acting. Senator Perrault was the embodiment of the duplicity in the sense of being all things to all men. The Prime Minister, on Monday at the opening of the conference, spoke of the conspiracy of love. On Tuesday, the day after, he said that Canada will not stop the sale of nuclear reactors to other countries. On Wednesday, Maurice Strong, the chairman of Petro-Canada took an opposite view and expressed the need for a moratorium to study the impact and safeguards with regard to nuclear reactors. You could hear and feel the crash of the moral tone as a result of the statement by the Prime Minister with regard to a moratorium on nuclear reactors.

Second, with regard to the land issue, the conference started off with the principle that unearned increment should be returned to the community. Canada played the role of compromise, the role of waffling and vacillating with regard to the particular course Canada should accept. Mr. Speaker, this begged the question of how much of the unearned profits should be returned to the community. Should it be 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 95 per cent, or 100 per cent? The Minister of Justice summed it all up to the delegates. He said that this is a political question to be determined by the particular government. The final draft read:

> The unearned increment resulting from the rise in land values resulting from change in use of land, from public investment or decision, or due to the general growth of the community, must be subject to appropriate recapture—

Again it begged the question: What is appropriate recapture. Is it 5 per cent, is it 10 per cent, or is it 100 per cent? The problem with regard to the recapture of unearned profits was a problem that Canada had because it was in the grips of the land developers. It was in the grips of William Teron, the president of CMHC. It was in the grips of Keith Morley, the president of Costain Land Development Company, and it was in the grips of the minister of housing for Alberta, William Yurko. It was they, and they alone, who set the vacillating and compromising position of Canada which Canada took with regard to the recovery of unearned profits relating to land. I shudder to think what would have happened to Canada's position if the persons representing the non-governmental organizations had not applied pressure to the delegates and the ministers concerning this problem.

● (1520)

The third issue is that of clean water. Practically every country there agreed on the general principle that we should have clean water either by 1986 or 1990. Clean water should be available by those dates to all persons throughout the world. What did Canada do? Canada did not make any dollar commitment to implement this principle. The best Canada could do was to have one of their delegates from the Department of Finance, Brian Hunter, come to the NGO meeting and say, "Really, gentlemen, this falls under CIDA. We have $1 billion to spend under CIDA, and perhaps we can spare $70 million to $100 million under this program. But really it is up to the developing countries to determine whether they want this money." If Canada had wanted to show leadership and direction, they would have said that we have money available immediately outside CIDA to implement this program. Then they would have had the support and encouragement of all the other countries. But no, they vacillated, they compromised, they refused to act.

The other area was with regard to the new international economic order which would have taken care of monetary reform, trade patterns, resource development and multinationals, because all these have formed part of the problems of human settlements. The answer of the Canadian government was that they could not discuss this because the problems had already been discussed at the other UN conference of UNCTAD and therefore Canada could not disturb what took place there. You can see the position of refusing to act on a moratorium concerning nuclear reactors. There was waffling and compromising with regard to land, no action with regard to international economic order, and no dollar commitment with regard to clean water. Is it any wonder that Canada's performance was disappointing and duplicitous?

The real performers at the conference were the non-governmental organizations which were represented by approximately 200 persons. They were chaired by Mark Dorfman and the co-ordinator was Bernard Daly. It was they alone who had a real appreciation of the problems of human settlements, and it was they alone who forced the government to take the small steps that it took. I should like to read from the resolutions that the NGOs put forth to this government. I will summarize them because they are rather lengthy. In the Canadian NGO manifesto they said the following regarding the new international economic order:

> 1. Regarding the new international economic order, let Canada take action to lead in establishing new international agreements and arrangements regarding trade, monetary systems, industrial strategies and resource development programs that are advantageous to the developing countries. Let Canada's response to the needs of poor countries not be only aid through the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).
>
> 2. Let land be treated as a community resource and not as a market commodity . . .
>
> 3. Let Canada lead in establishing a moratorium on expansion of nuclear power, with accompanying emphasis on alternative power sources and on energy conservation.
>
> 4. Let there be an end to fragmentation of housing programs among the federal, provincial and municipal levels of government. Let priority in housing be directed to special-need groups, especially by means of government action at all levels to control the cost of land and the cost of money for housing.
>
> 5. Let there be a Canadian dollar commitment now to programs for clean water . . .
>
> 6. Let indigenous land claims be settled prior to the undertaking of development projects in Canada; and let special attention be paid to advancing the equality of indigenous women and to the general needs of native peoples in such matters as housing and jobs . . .
>
> 8. Let there soon be right to information legislation covering all levels of government in Canada.

They also added to that the need to develop a conservation-oriented society. This is what the Canadian position should have been, and what the Canadian delegates should have expressed at the conference. If they had, they would have had a splendid response, not only in Canada but throughout the world. The least that can be done now is for the Minister of Justice and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to meet at a post-Habitat conference in Canada with the representatives of the non-governmental organizations and address themselves to the answers to the problems and to the solutions that they set forth to the government.

One of the main problems—and I dealt with it in a way—was the problem of land. Canada's position with regard to land and to the United Nations reveals a weakness at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. The high cost of housing in Canada is made up of three components: the cost of materials, the cost of financing, and the cost of land.

We in the NDP have pointed out to the minister on many occasions that the high cost with regard to financing is due to the fact that mortgages are in the control of the financial institutions which control the flow of moneys and determine the interest rates. Is it any wonder that people in Canada today are paying between 11.5 per cent and 12 per cent for mortgages? It is because the control and flow of mortgage money is in the hands of the financial institutions instead of under the control of the government.

The control of land for housing in Canada is in the hands of developers, and the government aids and abets the developers and speculators to increase their profits at the expense of home buyers. When I heard the Minister of Justice, the developers and the minister of housing for Alberta, Mr. Yurko, speak with regard to the recovery of unearned profits on land, I heard them say that in Canada they can recapture these unearned profits through the capital gains tax, the special speculation taxes in certain provinces, the corporation taxes, the municipal taxes and the impost taxes with regard to services. All these instruments do not work, and land developers are gouging the purchasers by unwarranted, unjustified and unconscionable profits in land development. They are treating land as a commodity instead of a community resource.

● (1530)

This philosophy is expressed by the developers and they are aided and abetted by the government. Back in 1973 this government commissioned Peter Spurr to make a special study with regard to the land problems across Canada. He prepared a report and gave it to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC did not publish it for public use, but James Lorimer, who is a specialist in urban affairs, a teacher, writer and publisher, published the work of Peter Spurr with regard to land. The real thrust of his report is that in all the main cities across Canada, with the present exception of Montreal, land for housing purposes is in the hands of small groups of developers who make enormous profits and who pay little or no taxes on these profits because of the tax laws with regard to capital cost allowances, and the accounting and reporting procedures of these land development companies.

This is the price the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has had to pay to accomplish an increase in housing starts across the country. He had to give to the developers all the tax advantages available to them. This is the rip-off to which home buyers in Canada have been subjected to obtain shelter.

Let me deal with two examples. Let me deal, first, with the example which was raised by Wendy Day on CTV this past week when she said that in Erindale, Mississauga, in 1972 a three-bedroom bungalow on a 50-foot lot cost $32,850. To qualify, a purchaser required an annual income of $12,000. A down payment of $9,000 was made, which the purchaser obtained from the sale of his former home. With the down payment of $9,000 and a mortgage of $25,000 at 8¾ per cent interest, the monthly payment for principal and interest amounted to $204.96; with taxes, $270 a month. Today, less than four years later, the same bungalow two miles away, situated in Erindale, Mississauga, costs $63,995. That is almost a 100 per cent increase.

The purchaser now requires an income of over $20,000, and with a down payment of $15,500 and a mortgage of $48,480 at 11 per cent, the payments are now $466.83 for principal and interest; and with taxes included, $530 a month. That dramatizes how the cost of homes has increased in the short period from 1972 to 1976. In 1972, 50-foot lot in Mississauga cost $12,850. That same lot, in 1976, sells for $30,934, 2½ times the price of 1972. This situation with regard to Erindale is true of all the major cities in Canada.

In an article by James Lorimer published in the Globe and Mail of May 22 he pointed out that in 1972 in Calgary a three-bedroom home on a 50-foot lot cost $25,000. In 1976 the same home on a 40-foot lot costs $54,000, an increase of more than 100 per cent; and an income of over $21,600 is required. In 1972, the average 50-foot lot in Calgary cost $6,320. In 1976 it costs $20,400, three times as high. Mr. Lorimer points out that the largest Canadian development corporations are in the land banking and land development business on a very big scale indeed.

Information collected by Peter Spurr for 1973 showed a total of 119,192 acres owned by 47 development corporations in about 21 Canadian cities. These private land banks in many instances are large enough to supply all the new land required for housing for the next five years. I am going to repeat that: these companies have enough land within their control to supply all the housing needs of Canada for the next five years. Around Ottawa and Hull—and I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Gauthier) will be interested in this—nine corporations were found to own 9,416 acres. That is almost 15 square miles of land. It is an eight-year supply at current new house densities and projected growth rates. Around Toronto, 24 firms were listed as owning 41,198 acres, and nine large firms held 87 per cent of that land. The same pattern prevails across the country with regard to the control of land by the development companies and with regard to the cost, profiteering and release of that land.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary wishes to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to answer the question when I have finished speaking. My time is very limited and I want to finish what I have to say. It is not only that land developers have land under their control; the government aids and abets the developers through capital cost allowances, and some provinces are permitting them to charge carrying costs. One would think that all these land developers who make such high profits would pay their proper share of corporation taxes. In James Lorimer's article of May 29, 1976, it is pointed out that in 1974 S. B. McLaughlin and Associates made a profit of $2,254,000 and paid taxes of only $376,000. In 1973, that company made a profit of $3,224,000 and did not pay one cent in taxes.

Daon Developments in Vancouver made a profit of $3,096,000 in 1974 and did not pay one cent in income tax. The Cadillac-Fairview Development Company, which is a Toronto firm, made $13 million in profits in 1975 and paid $440,000 in taxes. Why is it that all these land development and building companies can make such huge profits at the expense of Canadian home buyers and not pay the proper taxes? The reason is that the tax laws of this government with regard to capital cost allowances provide loopholes to these companies so that they can get away with their enormous profits. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) will not take action with regard to these companies because he knows as well as I do that in Toronto the profits of Cadillac-Fairview, Bramalea, and S. B. McLaughlin are enormous. He knows that by permitting these companies to take advantage of capital cost allowances, they get away without paying any, or very little, taxes.

What should we in Canada do to reduce the cost of housing for the ordinary person? The first thing we must do is develop the philosophy that land is a community resource and not a commodity. The minister must learn that principle quickly. The second thing is that we must have public land banking. The minister will say that we have a form of public land banking. It was instituted by the present Minister of Justice. It is mere token land banking. What is needed is an immediate thrust with regard to the—

● (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I certainly will not abuse the privilege given me.

I say that the minister has to set forth on a better land banking program which will immediately get within the control of the federal government, the provincial and municipal governments a sufficient number of lots which can be released to purchasers at a reasonable cost. I say "at a reasonable cost" because the experience, not only of CMHC but of some of the municipalities, as they have released the lots at an inflated price compared to what they paid has had little or no effect on the cost of land.

The government must purchase selective land development companies across the country so that we will have a yardstick with which to compare the price of land of private development companies and of public development companies. I am sure the Minister of State for Urban Affairs knows of the British Columbia experience when a private company was taken over. It provided them with a yardstick for the price of housing and the price of land. It was used for comparison purposes when the private developers tried to tell the provincial government that they were not making money on land and homes.

Another measure would be to close the loopholes with regard to capital cost allowances. These companies are permitted to charge 5 per cent of the cost of the buildings that are on the land. Experience has shown that in most cases the buildings on those lands have not depreciated but have, in fact, appreciated. In the financial statement given to shareholders, the figures of the accountants and auditors show that it does not come anywhere close to the 5 per cent; in fact, it is much less than 1 per cent. What the minister must do is persuade the Minister of Finance to close the loophole with regard to capital cost allowances.

These suggestions are only starters with regard to the problems of land, Mr. Speaker. If the minister would take them under consideration, we could go to the next United Nations conference and make a real contribution to the problems of human settlement. We would not be seen to be wavering, vacillating or compromising on the question of land.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), I, too, have some critical comments to make about the government's performance at Habitat. I want to begin on a positive note, however, by congratulating the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) not only for his chairmanship of the entire conference, where I thought he conducted himself with great dignity and did credit to our whole country, but I want to pay him a particular tribute for his speech on Thursday night at the climactic moment of Habitat. As he, himself, described it, it was a speech from the heart, a speech that I think spoke for many Canadians who saw in Habitat a chance to make a forward move in the whole direction of international development.

Having said that about the minister, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the House to consider some of the reasons the government's performance was indeed, as the hon. member for Broadview said, so cynical with respect to Habitat—cynical for a much deeper reason than the three mentioned by the previous speaker.

The motion deals with the specifics of land speculation, the spread of nuclear technology, and putting water in settlements, it says that the government was cynical with respect to those three matters. I could agree with that, but I think, despite the lip service that the hon. member for Broadview paid to Barbara Ward, he indicated that he still thought Habitat was fundamentally a housing conference. Habitat was far more than a housing conference, Mr. Speaker. In order to have any kind of realistic evaluation of what it was trying to do, what it failed to do, and why the Canadian government was cynical in its conduct during that conference, Habitat has to be seen in its total perspective.

It is quite true that the press of this country branded Habitat a failure. The press, that paragon of wisdom, reported up and down this country that Habitat was a failure because of the Arab-Jewish enmity which was carried from the halls of the United Nations in New York into the Queen Elizabeth theatre in Vancouver, turning a conference that was designed to provide settlements for people around the world into a prolongation of that terrible conflict in Palestine, and because of the Arab intransigence in insisting that the final declaration of principles contain an oblique derogation of Israel, forcing Canada along with 14 other countries to vote against the declaration. The press has regarded this whole performance as a failure.

That is too superficial a view of what Habitat was. I do not say that Habitat was a success. I deplore as strongly as anyone the ugly Mid-east battle that took place in Vancouver, a battle of words, a battle of resolutions, a battle to slow down the very slow progress being made in the area of international development. But to tell the Canadian people that Habitat goes down the drain because of this resolution is to miss the point of what Habitat was. What did Habitat try to tell us, what was it trying to tell the world? Why was it more than just a housing conference?

One third of the entire urban population of the developing world lives in slums and settlements. Thirty per cent do not have water within 100 metres of their home. More than half the people in developing countries do not have electricity. Those are just the opening statements in the description of a world scene in which hundreds of millions of people in the 35 developing countries, now called the fourth world, live under conditions of absolute poverty and deprivation. It forms a global ghetto which closes in on them while pressing out on the rest of the world.

In many small, developing countries where dramatic growth has occurred, the benefits have not reached all the people. Of course, the question of numbers enters into it. The figures of the growth of cities, especially in the third world, are horrendous. Of the 17 cities in the world that are now called the "ten million" cities because they have populations in excess of ten million, ten will shortly be in the developing world where there is a desperate shortage of existing social services to provide the inpouring migrants with a semblance of human dignity. It did not take Habitat to tell us the situation of global disparity which produces this mass poverty.

● (1550)

The United Nations, through the series of conferences of which Habitat was but one, has shown us the global picture. The environment conference of 1972, the population conference, the world food conference of 1974, and the status of women conference in 1975, together with related conferences, culminated in the seventh special session of the United Nations in 1974-75 which gave us the new economic order. These factors, considered together, give us an overview of the global scene today, of which Canada is one part, and show us how serious the situation has become.

The situation has arisen because of the manner in which we and other industrialized nations maintain our standard of living and growth. We do it with the continued acquisition of technology, capital and resources which feed the ever-growing demands of our societies. The problem is terribly complex and can only be resolved by a new international partnership of developed and developing nations. I add, parenthetically, that the days of aid are over. I am talking of aid in the sense that it can raise the standard of living of people trapped in countries without resources, technology and capital. Aid is a "way-station" on the way to true reforms of social and economic systems which will allow the peoples of the underdeveloped countries of the world to become self-reliant. Basically, that is what Habitat was all about. It was concerned with specific questions relating to human settlements.

We should not think, by any means, that the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at Habitat, and the speech of Mother Teresa, earlier referred to this afternoon, set the tone of Habitat. The previous speaker suggested that the tone of Habitat was set by the Prime Minister of our country and Mother Teresa speaking eloquently and rhetorically about love. That tone was quickly dissipated by the President of Mexico, President Echeverria, in the most under-reported speech of the whole conference. President Echeverria, who headed the delegation from Mexico to Habitat, was given a standing ovation in the plenary hall. He excoriated the industrialized nations for not following their rhetoric of the past few years with action which would help developing nations. I shall quote a paragraph or two of President Echeverria's speech to show the mood of Habitat, a mood to which Canada failed to respond. That led to cynicism. President Echeverria said, in part:

> How could the human tide that is moving the cities actually be kept in the rural areas with a decent standard of living when the prices of food and raw materials are at the mercy of mercantile monopolization and iniquitous international speculation? . . .
>
> The attitude which the industrial states have recently adopted in economic matters reveals the extent to which their real dispute is waged not in the sphere of worldwide ideological conflict but rather in that of specific economic interests, and how easy it is for powerful minorities to reach circumstantial agreement when the majorities make specific demands and organize for action. When matters come to a head, however, questions of profit and loss have always proved more powerful than the standards of freedom, democracy, justice and solidarity.

The President of Mexico told the world and delegates to Habitat that despite the gravity of conditions facing developing nations, the industrialized world is not backing its sentiments of love with concrete action. It has not adopted the great resolutions previously passed by the United Nations. He specifically referred to the fourth UNCTAD conference which ended in Nairobi a few days before the Habitat conference began. Hon. members will recall that we discussed the work of the conference in this House a little over a week ago. It turned on the validity of the principle of a common fund being established for some ten buttressed commodities which developing nations export and on which they depend for foreign exchange, exchange with which they pay for the manufactured goods and commodities they need.

Although the matter was highly technical, the main line of the argument became clear. It was this: an integrated system to protect the prices of primary commodities produced in developing countries must be in place if those developing countries are to be given a chance at being self-reliant. Canada at the beginning of the UNCTAD conference gave lip service to the idea. At the end of the conference we said we would go along with the establishment of the common fund provided it was actually established. That quasi-commitment was dragged out of Canada in the course of the UNCTAD conference.

I mention the UNCTAD conference while talking of Habitat because both conferences are very much connected. Both Habitat and UNCTAD bear some relationship to the principles set forth in the UN charter of rights dealing with duties of states, and with the new economic order. These matters were raised in the declaration of principles. Canada voted against the declaration of principles which the Habitat conference finally produced. We voted against the declaration for reasons set out by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the head of the Canadian delegation, to the effect that the declaration contains an iniquitous section derogatory of Israel. Since the Canadian government made it clear that it will not tolerate any UN resolutions which link Zionism with racism, we found it easy to vote against the entire declaration of principles.

Mr. Lalonde: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) applauding.

Mr. Lalonde: I will applaud again. Are you in favour of racism?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the minister that I have not successfully communicated with him this afternoon. I thought I made it clear at the beginning of my speech that I deplored that point as much as anybody.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member should be consistent with his own speech.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, if only the Canadian government would be consistent with its own announcements, we would be a lot further down the road to development. I am sure the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) knows precisely what I mean. Canada voted against the declaration of principles presumably because it contained the anti-Zionist section. Actually, the declaration contained other points which made Canada uncomfortable and for which we did not want to vote; and as the Minister of Justice himself said during the two weeks, those points gave Canada a great deal of trouble. For instance, may I quote point 14 of the declaration of principles, which reads:

To achieve universal progress in the quality of life, a fair and balanced structure of the economic relations between states has to be promoted. It is therefore essential to implement urgently the new international economic order, based on the declaration and program of action approved by the General Assembly in its sixth special session, and on the charter of economic rights and duties of states.

If hon. members wish to know in more detail Canada's difficulties with that resolution, I direct their attention to an article written Mr. Bernard Daly in the Ottawa Journal of Friday, June 18 last. He points out that the intransigent position of the Arabs provided a smokescreen behind which Canada was able to hide its opposition to some of the bitter facts which developing nations were including in the declaration of principles. A balanced structure of economic relations between status has to be promoted, yet Canada is not ready for that kind of action.

● (1600)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) was interviewed by the press at Habitat. It was widely quoted across Canada. He said that we could not expect Canada to go along with any of these substantial changes because the government would risk electoral defeat. That is to say that the people of Canada and the Minister of the Environment would not support the changes called for in such declarations as the declaration of principles of Habitat because the government would risk electoral defeat. That is a very interesting point indeed. Is that to say that the government's own five-year strategy of international development co-operation that was published before the seventh special session opened last September—a 21-point dimensional strategy, a structural reform that puts it together as our own policy, which I have several times said in this House that I support—will not be implemented because the government is afraid of electoral defeat?

Let us follow this down to hard specifics. I know the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is extremely familiar with this. I quote from our mutual friend, Barbara Ward, who wound up her brilliant and masterful book, "The Home of Man", which was the overview of the Habitat situation, by asking: What is it we are really trying to bring about in these structural changes? I quote:

A sustained determination to end hunger in the next ten years—

Is the government afraid of electoral defeat for trying to do that?

—a committed plan to provide every human being with clean water by the mid-eighties—

Will that plan throw the government out of office?

—a strategy for decent shelter for every family as the new century dawns—

Is that program going to defeat any Canadian government? I say that any Canadian government afraid to implement such a program is not worthy of holding office.

The remarks of the Minister of the Environment were widely noted by delegates from around the world when they read the Vancouver press. That minister ought to be excoriated by this House for failing to indicate the true Canadian position, a position supported by all sides of this House, for the movement forward of Canada's meaningful participation in international development. That policy is contained in a report to parliament from the subcommittee on international development, representing all parties, which studies this issue extensively.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roche: I thank my colleagues. I will not abuse the privilege. I want to make it clear that the policies for international development that we are talking about are incorporated in the report to parliament by the subcommittee on international development. It is still on the order paper awaiting debate. I will get to that in a second. I will read just one paragraph from the policy that supports this parliamentary policy and supports the government's own five-year strategy about which they are worried they are going to be defeated. I quote:

We realize the need for realism and for a long-term view of the role Canada can play in the global resolution of these difficult issues. Canadian influence must not be overestimated, but neither must it be underrated. Canada's own interests and economic influence place this country in a strategic position in a number of these debates, and Canadian credibility is reasonably high among most groups of countries.

That is just an inkling of the words that are found in that policy. However, Mr. Speaker, the problem gets down to this very simple reason about which the Minister of the Environment is concerned regarding electoral defeat, namely, that the Canadian people do not know what is going on; they have not been told about this policy.

We are debating Habitat this afternoon on an opposition day motion. We debated UNCTAD on an opposition day. We are always doing this. Why does the government not bring in its own motions, resolutions and legislation in order to state in this House its position in a positive way so that we can respond positively? It is wrong for parliament to be debating international development in the context of an opposition day. The government must become committed to promoting its own policy. Do not tell me that they are promoting it. If you go to the shelves of the CIDA library you will find 25,000 copies of the government's five-year strategy, unused and uncirculated. What is wrong with a government that allows its own policy to sit on the shelves?

There is a lot more to be said. I will not say it because my colleagues will speak on some of the specifics with regard to land speculation and the nuclear and water sections of the NDP motion. However, as the first speaker for our side I would be remiss if I did not attempt to point out the true reasons for Canadian government cynicism at Habitat. We went there with an excellent delegation, good leadership and a terrific program brought out by the NGO participation group throughout the country in the preceding year.

Talk about information overload! There was so much good material that even an expert could not absorb it all. There was no reason for the Canadian government not to seize the moment of leadership. UNCTAD centered around a common fund. Habitat centered around the provision of clean water for every human being by 1990. Canada did not stand up and say, "Yes, we will live up to this with a dollar commitment." During the course of Habitat, the Prime Minister said in the House that we are giving money to regular CIDA programs; nothing more special needs to be done. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs knows as well as I do that there was a moment lost at Habitat because we did not live up to our words. That was the true cynicism.

We covered our reluctance to move ahead with the declaration of principles to join in what could have been a consensus. We covered by hiding under the smoke screen of Arab-Israeli resolutions which I deplore. These are terribly complex plans. The United Nations is in great danger of losing the dwindling support it has in the western world. Read the letters to the editor in last Saturday's Toronto Star and you will get the mood of the Canadian people with regard to the UN following the Habitat conference.

The government has a terrific obligation to promote its own policy. That policy is incorporated into its five-year strategy. It centres around industrial co-operation, transfer of technology, trade liberalization and a better pricing policy for the commodities of the world. That is the true way to help the developing nations. The government has a great responsibility to promote that policy and show how it plugs into the United Nations systems of conferences, of which Habitat was one, and how all of that relates to the provisions of the new order. That is the way we are going to make progress.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is co-chairman of the continuing conference of international economic co-operation, the conference of rich and poor producing and consuming nations that meets in Paris. If he is going to maintain his credibility, he will have to be backed up by a government that is willing to move to show the Canadian people the tremendous responsibility we have, and also the opportunity. This is the most important moment in Canadian history because we can move ahead in the global community in which we live by a profound, positive policy of enlightened internationalism.

● (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the opposition motion condemns the government for its cynical behaviour at the Habitat Conference. It includes land speculation, nuclear reactors and environmental matters such as clean water and the necessity to enforce minimal standards in Canada.

In reading the word "cynical", Mr. Speaker, I could not believe that a political party represented in the House—in this case the NDP—had chosen to impute motives as contemptuous and outrageous as they did to the Canadian delegation. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is not the government of Canada that attended the Habitat Conference but a delegation made up of representatives from all levels of government and non-government organizations: ministers, members of this House, provincial ministers and representatives of provinces and municipalities—

Mr. Lalonde: Including NDP governments.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): —including NDP governments. The delegation was further enhanced and completed in a serious and professional manner by spokesmen for several organizations or near government agencies, representatives of various Canadian citizens groups as well as by organizations of specific interest, such as minority groups and those with a particular vocation.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, as the first speaker on this side of the House in this debate, allow me first to report to the House, as an alternate delegate, on our experience in Vancouver. For me—and I understand for many other members—it was a very enriching one, a period that was very well spent. I should like to stress at the beginning that the government is convinced that the results have justified the considerable effort and expenditure over the past few years in arranging to host the conference and participate in it. Much of the press and others have suggested that the conference was so bedevilled with political issues that all else was obscured. I cannot agree with this view.

On the other hand, it is too soon to be certain that Habitat was a success. Its organization was certainly a success. I should like to thank the members of the opposition for recognizing the role that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) played. He displayed a very human approach to the problems. Although his position was sometimes difficult, he showed an understanding of the situation and gave leadership and constant direction in spite of the stress he was under. He has been for Canada an example of statesmanship, and I want to recognize that here this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Habitat Conference

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): In my judgment, Habitat will produce lasting improvements. Our experience in Canada indicates a much greater public awareness of the issues which must form part of human settlement policies, and a greater acceptance by all levels of government that these issues must be handled in a comprehensive manner, with full co-operation among the various jurisdictions involved.

In passing, may I say that we seem to have difficulty in Canada with the word "national". We define it as "a confederation", and recognize it has both a federal and a provincial definition. In preparing for and participating in Habitat, we have had to stand back and take a good look at ourselves, our settlements policies and institutions, and consider our values and our hopes for the settlements in which we must live. This process involved not only the federal government but also the governments of the provinces, municipalities, public groups, business and private citizens. Much of this consideration went into Canada's national report to Habitat entitled "Human Settlement in Canada," and into the three short films which we prepared for the conference.

This wide participation was reflected in the Canadian delegation to Habitat, and I would like to express my thanks to all those who so generously gave of their time and effort to join with the federal government in this fully representative delegation. I think that all will agree that the experience has been beneficial in itself and has set the stage for further co-operation among those concerned with settlements in Canada. From our observation at the conference, it seemed clear that many other nations had similar beneficial experiences in preparing for, and participating in, Habitat, and that we may expect that all nations, separately and jointly, will be approaching the problems of human settlements in a more coherent manner and with a greater sense of urgency.

Canada's objectives at Vancouver were twofold. First, as host government we were responsible for providing the extensive facilities and services required for such a conference and for the parallel, non-governmental meeting, the Habitat forum. I can report that our host arrangements, with the single exception of the weather, met with universal praise and were a credit internationally to Canada, to the province of British Columbia and to the city of Vancouver. In addition to the usual conference facilities, we provided extensive facilities for television coverage and for the use of audio-visual presentations, and many of these new techniques will undoubtedly be incorporated into future world conferences as a result of their effectiveness in Vancouver.

We were a participant in the Habitat conference, as well as host, and we took a very active role and received from every member a full measure of co-operation. We put forward a clear and balanced view of our national settlements policies and tested these policies in discussions with other nations. We have learned a good deal about what is happening in other nations, some of which will undoubtedly find its way into our own practices and will show us how best we may assist other nations who will require considerable outside assistance in improving the lives of their people.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

In this last regard, I believe that the conference has provided an important new focus for development efforts, a focus on the place and the manner in which people live, rather than some impersonal objective such as GNP or tons of metal ingots. The message of Habitat has been that we must address ourselves more directly to the improvement of the life of the individual if we are to improve the lot of the whole. It is for this reason that the Canadian delegation repeatedly stressed the need to identify specific targets in matters which directly affect people's daily lives, such as the availability of safe drinking water, and committed ourselves to assist in the achievement of such goals.

There were several other Canadian initiatives at the conference which I would like to mention. The offer of the University of British Columbia, supported by the federal government and the government of British Columbia, to house a continuing United Nations audio-visual library on human settlements was well received by the conference. Arrangements for this program are now being completed between the university and the United Nations and it is expected that the library will commence operation within a few weeks.

The delegation also succeeded in putting forward some fairly distinctive Canadian views on policy recommendations dealing with the control and the value of land, the rights of indigenous peoples, nuclear energy, the conservation of resources, and the participation by the public in the formulation and implementation of settlements policies and programs. We were also able to gain acceptance for a more positive approach to the role of environmental policies in settlements planning, rather than the purely negative considerations which have been current. Over all of the recommendations for national action discussed at the conference, we sought minor amendments to make them more applicable to federal states such as Canada.

Debate on international co-operation was divided into discussions of new programs which might be undertaken following Habitat, of how the appropriate section of the United Nations secretariat might be reorganized to deal with increased programs, and on a declaration of principles to be issued by the conference to emphasize the role of settlements policy in national and international affairs. The Canadian contribution to the debate on programs included a general commitment to give favourable consideration to settlements projects within our development assistance programs, and several specific commitments: to create the audio-visual library at the University of British Columbia and to continue and expand our support for a human settlements training program at the Asian Institute of Technology at Bangkok. We also indicated that we would be prepared to participate in similar programs in other regions.

● (1620)

On the reorganization of appropriate United Nations secretariat resources, the Canadian delegation argued for a rationalization of all available resources in a single unit, with headquarters in New York but with its staff and activities deployed as much as possible at the regional level. In a fairly extensive debate emerged a fairly broad consensus on what should be done, but it appeared that many nations were not ready to take decisions on the location of the secretariat headquarters or its precise attachment to the United Nations' framework. This will be the subject of further discussions at the summer session of the UN Economic and Social Council and at this fall's General Assembly.

The discussions on the declaration to be issued by Habitat provided the sharpest division among governments at Habitat. At the end of the first week the group of 77 brought forward an amended version of the original draft declaration, a version which included some greatly expanded references to a new international economic order, and an unacceptable reference which would have linked Zionism to racism. Subsequent negotiations failed to improve these aspects of the draft, and in the end the Canadian delegation, together with many others, was obliged to vote against the declaration as a whole when attempts to obtain a paragraph by paragraph vote proved fruitless. The vote was 89 in favour, 15—including Canada—opposed, with 10 nations abstaining. In explanation of the Canadian vote, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) stated that had it not been for the paragraph which sought to link Zionism with racism, Canada would have been in a position to join in a consensus on the declaration.

The vote on the declaration received a great deal of publicity and I think it is important to keep it in perspective. The objectionable feature which led to our negative vote is a matter of a few words in a lengthy document, most of which we did, and shall continue to, support strongly. While the declaration lacks the weight of consensus, it is nevertheless a valuable statement of some of the basic thoughts which should guide nations in improving the lives of their peoples. In addition, the debates on the declaration and the divisions they produced were largely separated from the main bulk of the conference's work and did not detract from the more positive achievements in other areas.

On the whole, therefore, I think that the Canadian delegation can be proud of the twin roles, as host and as a participant in Habitat, and I think we can be confident that this conference will yield great benefits to all peoples over the years to come.

[Translation]

To finish, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on the results of the conference and the wish of some people who want to quantify everything. It is impossible to measure the results of such a conference quantatively. One has to attend it to realize what forces were at play and to really take part in it to understand that it is not always possible to reach a consensus by mere good will. It seems utopian to me to quantify the conference in the sense that, for instance, Canada has a national policy to provide clean water to all parts of the country by 1986. A consensus was reached for 1990. We would have preferred it sooner, for all countries. Still, to answer one of the comments made by the opposition, I do not think Canada wants to be paternalistic and impose any programs which might not be well received now in underdeveloped countries.

Problems at the international level, and I think particularly of the terms of the exchange, are acute. The fact remains that, as Mrs. Barbara Ward said, we are dealing with an international problem in which we have the world of the wealthy endowed with a conscience and the world of the poor whose will and force to strike can cause concern. Habitat, Mr. Speaker, may have given us opportunity of becoming aware of the international problem, of exchanging view, of realizing that audio-visual aids are fantastic.

We saw, thanks to electronic devices, what goes on in other countries. For my part, the experience was rewarding. For most of the delegates, it was obviously the experience of a lifetime. I hope the press and hon. members will understand that to quantify the conference in terms of government measures was not the aim of the conference. Its objective was to give an awarenesss of the situation, to give the opportunity to elaborate, to think, to discuss and to exchange views: if the conference has had positive results, I trust they will be given concrete form.

As for speculation, there is a long way to go. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) said, I know, that we are up against a problem that is difficult to solve. Still the fact remains that the collective will of the people, expressed through the various levels of government, by government representations, in terms of what is a fair profit or gain, will be decided by the governments themselves and not imposed by them, by the government at the top. We have a long way to go, we have a lot to do. Of course, it is important that we should conserve what arable lands we have. We must have overall policies that induce us into conserving them. We must elaborate new policies, as well as new ways and means. I think the minister, in convening his tripartite conferences has found a formula that might work, because town planning is a matter for municipalities and provinces and not the federal government. But I think that to get a group of government bodies in Canada to plan the common good, everyone will have to show considerable good will and recognize the fact that we have not solved all our problems, that we have much to do and that though, in the final analysis, the Habitat Conference may have brought some solutions it did not solve them all. We must continue to work at it.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) will take the floor tonight. He will listen with interest to hon. members' remarks, and I hope those remarks will be positive. In addition, we will have some spokesmen who will discuss certain particular points in the debate, with a view to answering as much as possible hon. members' concerns and questions.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I want to devote my time this afternoon to the third complaint contained within the NDP motion, that is, the complaint regarding pollution of the Athabasca River from one of the tar sands extraction plants. Just to put this in its proper perspective, I should like to spend a little time on background in so far as the development of tar sands is concerned in a general sense. I believe it is fair to say that this party is every bit as concerned about environmental matters as the author of the motion we are debating, and perhaps even more so than some of the members of his party. But we also want to be realistic and practical in talking about these developments.

We know the Alberta tar sands can produce all the crude oil Canada will need in the foreseeable future if they are developed in an orderly manner. A couple of months ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) told the House that Canada is short of oil and gas. I think everybody knows that, and knew it at the time of his statement. He went on to say that the future looked so bad that we would be investing $181 billion in energy projects in this country between now and 1990, and by crossing our fingers the best we could hope for would be limiting our demands on oil imports to one-third of our needs.

I want to question the minister's projections because I think they are not necessarily accurate. We will have to spend on oil exploration and development, according to the minister, $40 billion in 1975 dollars. In return for this massive investment of capital we will increase our productive capacity by 500,000 barrels, or one-third of what the province of Alberta is producing today. But the energy department's own figures and graphs show that development of the Athabasca, Peace River, Wabasca and Cold Lake tar sands would give us the same amount of oil for $6 billion. In fact, the price spread would be still greater because frontier oil has to be carried down from the north in pipelines which are very expensive and, as yet, unbuilt. Pipelines from the tar sands would be shorter and much less costly to construct.

● (1630)

How much oil would we have if we spent $40 billion on new tar sands plants? When it comes on stream in 1978 or 1979, the Syncrude plant at Mildred Lake will produce about 125,000 barrels of synthetic crude oil per day in return for a capital outlay of $2 billion. Other things being equal, it is just simple arithmetic to see that $40 billion would buy us 20 plants with the same productive capacity as Syncrude and would give us 2.5 million barrels of oil per day. Moreover, the civil servants of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) have been estimating that if world prices for petroleum remain high, close to $6 billion will be spent on tar sands plants without any particular encouragement from the federal government.

The three plants which an additional $6 billion would buy could produce 375,000 barrels of oil per day, bringing total tar sands' production, when Syncrude and Great Canadian Oil Sands are counted in, to over three million barrels per day. As it happens, three million barrels per day is greater than the total Canadian demand for oil is expected to be in 1990. And all this is to say nothing about the enormous savings in pipeline costs which investment in tar sands plants would bring, the very large economies of scale which would come from the building of 20 or more plants, or the tremendous benefits which might accrue to the national economy if Canadian industry were geared to producing the machinery for these plants.

Finally, 20 or 25 tar sands plants would require in excess of 100,000 workers on a permanent basis and would constitute a partial answer to the unemployment from which so many Canadians today are suffering. I am trying to make the point that the development of the Athabasca tar sands, as well as the other three tar sands areas to which I referred earlier, is essential to Canada. Beyond that, I also want to say that Canadians should not expect that Alberta alone should be responsible for developing these plants just to supply energy to the rest of Canada. In other words, there is also a role which the consuming Canadian provinces can play in this development. One of them, Ontario, already is doing that to some extent in that it is participating in the Syncrude project directly.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

However, there are a number of things which need to be done before development takes place in accordance with what I have described as a possibility. Those requirements are that the processed synthetic crude should have access to world prices, as has been guaranteed to Syncrude but so far refused to anyone else who has indicated a desire to develop a plant. The federal government should become less greedy and get away from double-taxation. I realize that greed is one of the government's greatest assets, but I think it should dispose of that asset and get away from the idea of disallowing royalties to be deducted for tax purposes. I think the government should also bring in a program for earlier depreciation write-offs, when we consider, for example, in respect of the Syncrude plant that there is perhaps a $3 billion capital outlay, or between $2 billion and $3 billion, before one single barrel of oil comes out.

Finally, we should consider the tragedy for Canada which would result if the crew of experts, the construction teams, were allowed to disintegrate in 1978 when the construction at Syncrude is finally completed. I think the government should plan that new plants would be started at least as frequently as would be necessary to keep this crew of skilled people assembled and working.

I wanted to put that background material on the record because it emphasizes the proper perspective in respect of pollution control in so far as the plants are concerned. I think the NDP motion complaining about pollution by GCOS originated from a Globe and Mail article of June 9 written by Mary Kate Rowan and entitled "The Athabasca foul-up". In that article there is a suggestion that 400,000 gallons of polluted water is going into the Athabasca River from the tailings pond at the GCOS plant site. This plant and the tar sands happen to be in the middle of my constituency. For that reason alone, if not for any other reason, I usually keep in close contact with the developments in the area. I have been informed by a representative of GCOS that the statement indicating that water from the tailings pond is going into the river is totally erroneous and that indeed there is no polluted water going into the river from the tailings pond.

However, 400,000 gallons of water are going into that river, but they come from a filtering system contained within a large dike built of sand which forms a portion of the wall of the tailings pond. Some tests have been carried on in respect of this effluent. I have a report here which was produced by Environment Canada in September, 1975, concerning this particular problem. I wish to quote from this report because I think it will help clarify the matter before us. The report reads in part:

> The liquid effluent being discharged from the effluent holding pond during the sampling period demonstrated no acute toxicity and the chemical parameters measured were all reasonably low. Notably the oil and grease values were low, particularly in comparison to some reported values for this effluent stream. Analysis for metals indicated that all were below detectable limits except for zinc and vanadium. However, the one detectable zinc level was low and could not be considered a problem in relation to other treated industrial effluents. The significance of the vanadium value is uncertain and is currently under investigation by Alberta Environment and Environment Canada. However, it is evident that the vanadium levels present in the effluent did not cause acute toxicity to rainbow trout.

There was also some testing carried out with regard to the effluent which comes from the drainage pipes which are the outflow of the filter system I mentioned in the dike forming part of the tailings pond. The effluent from this did contain some toxic materials and the toxicity to rainbow trout was indeed significant. The cause of toxicity could not be conclusively specified from the water chemistry, but the relatively high concentration of total organic carbon and total dissolved solids would likely include the specific compounds or elements responsible for toxicity.

Separation and identification of organic compounds from the organic fraction was shown to be feasible and produced some interesting compound identifications. Further work to comprehensively separate and identify the organic compounds and classes should be pursued under the auspices of the Alberta oilsands environmental research program. I wanted also to read that, because it suggests quite clearly that the industrial people in question are indeed making reasonable efforts to control the pollution.

● (1640)

There has been some toxic effluent from the drainage pipes in the dike. I am informed by this report, as well as by a representative of the industry, that engineering studies are under way which are aimed at collecting this effluent into a collection system of some kind and pouring it back into the settling pond. However, there are some fairly serious problems with that, one of them being that the location of the dike is close to the river and that the collection ponds which might be erected could well be taken away with the spring flow when the river levels are high. That could be a serious problem.

However, I am also informed that tests have been carried out on the river water above, as well as below, the outlet of these pipes and that there was no significant difference in the quantity of the toxic material above and below the outlet from these drainage pipes. The reason for that is that the volume of 400,000 gallons is so small in relationship to the total flow of the river that a substantial dilution of this toxic material takes place immediately, so that the river water is not at all toxic to the fish in it and, indeed, there is an abundant fish supply in the river in that region.

The ratio of this 400,000 gallons to the total river flow is around 3,300-thousands of 1 per cent of the daily river flow or, in other words, .00033 per cent of the total water flowing in the river. This suggests that the volume is so small in relation to the river that there is not much danger. When we compare that to some other areas of pollution right on our doorstep here in Ottawa, we can see that the problem here is much more severe. When the city of Hull pours 10 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the river, and the city of Montreal pours 300 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the St. Lawrence River, we can see that the problem of water pollution much closer to Ottawa than the Athabasca River is substantially greater and, I suggest, perhaps warrants a great deal of immediate attention as well. But for some strange reason our left-wing friends to my left neglected to make any mention of that kind of pollution. I find that rather strange. Of course, I find them a rather strange bunch anyway.

Mr. Gilbert: I had only 30 minutes. I could not cover everything.

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), for whom I have a great deal of admiration, is the epitome of humanitarian concern. If he had a chance, I think he would smother half the people of Canada to death, particularly the poor and the aged, with his affection for them and concern for their welfare as individuals. If we consider the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), perhaps he might liquidate the other half of the Canadian population because they happen to be successful on their own without government assistance.

Mr. Jarvis: Right on.

Mr. Yewchuk: We can see what would be the result of the NDP policies on the population of this country. No one would be left. Half the population would be smothered, and the other half liquidated.

Mr. Gilbert: And you would like to exploit them all.

Mr. Yewchuk: It seems to be a curious mixture of sadism and humanitarianism which moves the NDP. No wonder there is difficulty in giving serious credibility to their arguments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Physician, heal thyself.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Good advice; take it.

Mr. Yewchuk: The extremely original statement which we have just heard from the member for Winnipeg North Centre will be duly noted by me. I will see what I can do about it.

I will carry on for a moment because there are a few more things that need to be said about this problem. One of them is that an attack has also been made on Syncrude and GCOS by my friends to the left in so far as the emission of sulphur into the air is concerned. I am told that GCOS is licensed to put out 348 long tons of sulphur, mostly in the form of sulphur-dioxide, and the permit which has been granted Syncrude allows them to put out 287 long tons of sulphur a day. Some reports on this matter have been produced—one of which I have here—again by Environment Canada or the regional department of the environment task force. Through the application of the best available technology, total sulphur emission could be reduced from 287 long tons to an estimated 40 long tons.

I have looked into this problem and I am informed that this equipment to which reference is made is still unproven. Both companies, involved as well as the provincial government, suggest that this equipment is indeed unproven and perhaps not at all practical at this time. I am told also that the use of energy in the operation of a plant with this kind of equipment would be very high and the efficiency of such a plant would be drastically reduced. In addition, no real need has been demonstrated to reduce emissions below that level because studies have been done, again in relation to CGOS which has been operating in the area of 348 long tons a day, and a study was conducted by the Canadian Wildlife Service in 1973, as well as a more recent study in 1975, to determine whether there has been any damage whatsoever to the soil or vegetation within a radius of seven miles around the plant in question—and they all indicated there was no evidence of damage of any sort. So insofar as the Syncrude plant is concerned, it seems difficult to conclude from these two studies that there is a any real need to reduce the emissions beyond the amount granted in the licence.

Finally, in so far as Syncrude is concerned, it is difficult to estimate the cost of installing such equipment. If it were ordered today, I am told it would not be available for another five years, but it may well raise the cost of construction by $1 billion. So we have to consider all these factors before we become too raucous in attacking provincial governments and industry about the decisions which have already been made regarding further development.

I would like to conclude my remarks by stating that I am very concerned that some politicians in this country, and perhaps some other people, are making a lot of unwarranted attacks on the tar sands development. I do not know how much influence that has had upon the federal government, but perhaps it has resulted in a situation where the federal government is turning its attention from the tar sands and is looking to frontier development. According to the figures which I have given, this is a ridiculous decision on their part because such a move is extremely costly and a total gamble. You do not know where or whether you will find the oil, whereas with the tar sands there is no gamble, the development costs less and you wind up with a greater supply of energy for Canada. We are all interested in pollution control but also in self-sufficiency in energy. I would like to suggest that everybody concerned should stop being hysterical about possible errors made in construction associated with the tar sands. We should be very careful to ensure that proper attention is paid to the environment, but we should not be so hysterical as to retard development in that area.

● (1650)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Labour Conditions—Lockout of Air Canada finance branch employees—Possible resumption of mediation; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Energy—Proposal for location of uranium processing plant in Saskatchewan—Public participation in site decision; the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—The Canadian Economy—Area in which jobs will be created this year.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR ITS ALLEGED CYNICAL BEHAVIOUR AT HABITAT CONFERENCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gilbert:

That this House condemns the government for its cynical behaviour at the Habitat conference held recently in Vancouver, first, in its position on land speculation; second, its policy of placing commercial criteria ahead of any others in the sale of nuclear reactors; and third, the obvious conflict between the government's bold statements on such environmental matters as clean water and its inability or unwillingness to enforce minimal standards in Canada, as in the case of the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant in northern Alberta.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal particularly with the clause in the motion which refers to the government's policy of placing commercial criteria ahead of any others in the sale of nuclear reactors. But before I get to that specific subject, I would like to make one or two general remarks.

I do, indeed, support my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), in his criticism of the government's actions at the Habitat conference, but I want to say that I do not think it follows from that that we wish to criticize the Habitat conference as such. There is too much cynicism about some of these international activities. Of course things happen in international forums which are distasteful to us, but we should not jump from that to saying that the whole thing is a failure. Indeed, to put it mildly, that is premature because it destroys the foundation of the concern and the enthusiasm which is necessary if we are to do the things internationally that the welfare of the people of the world in every country, including Canada, requires.

I do not in any way, by being critical of some of the points of view taken by the government, wish to denigrate the importance or the significance of the conference itself, nor of some of the things the government did.

However, we are an opposition and we look with a critical eye. We frequently find, in the actions of the government, a considerable gap between rhetoric, on the one hand, and action on positive issues on the other. I have been to quite a few international conferences. I have never found a single reason to complain about the rhetoric of the Canadian spokesmen; it has always been of the highest order. But when it came down to practical decisions on practical issues, a different story is told. I want to say to all members of the government that they should try to reconcile their rhetoric with practical actions, and there are many fields where that injunction should be carried out and taken seriously. To get to the question of nuclear reactors, I would like, first, to quote what Albert Einstein said, as follows:

The splitting of the atom has changed everything, save our modes of thinking, and thus we drift toward unparallelled catastrophe.

The subject of nuclear energy which came up at the Habitat conference at Vancouver from time to time is one about which very many serious-minded people in Canada are deeply concerned, but I am afraid the Canadian government's action at this conference was inadequate, to put it mildly. There is a fairly new organization called the Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility. Its supporters include the Primate of the Anglican Church and Moderator of the World Council of Churches, the Very Rev. E. W. Scott; the founder of the Club of Rome, Dr. Aurelio Peccei; and Maurice Strong, president of Petro-Canada, who is well known for his deep concern about these subjects. They have joined others in signing a petition asking for an inquiry into the whole nuclear field. The petition has been signed by General Burns, who is well known not only as a soldier but as a statesman, who is the former head of the U.N. peacekeeping force; a gentleman named Joe Clark, who I believe is known to some hon. members in this House; Alex Campbell, who is Premier of Prince Edward Island; and Gerry Regan, Premier of Nova Scotia, among many others.

This petition deals primarily with the question of the increased reliance on nuclear energy to deal with our energy crisis. The pamphlet which the coalition put out says that the government expects to see 112 CANDU reactors in operation in Canada by the end of the century. The pamphlet goes on to point out that the industry has been exempted from having to carry full accident insurance because no insurance company will risk issuing such a policy. The coalition points out that the inhalation of dust particles and radioactive gases in mines has caused 450 cases of silicosis and/or cancer in Canadian uranium miners. That is something which could have been prevented if the proper controls had been adopted.

The coalition to which I have referred calls for complete public accountability on the subject of nuclear energy, accompanied by a full disclosure of all pertinent information, and as a possible mechanism for realizing these objectives the coalition is challenging the federal government to conduct a public inquiry into all aspects of nuclear power development in this country. I ask the House to note that this refers to all nuclear power development, not just nuclear power for reactors for export but the nuclear power which is going to be used to supplement our energy resources. The coalition says that the proposed inquiry would investigate a host of unanswered questions about the Canadian nuclear program, questions of safety, economics, energy requirements, social impact, health and pollution and the decision-making process itself.

In speaking to this motion I would like to take this opportunity to urge upon the government, as has been done before in this House, that it proceed with such a public inquiry so that the very grave disquiet which many informed people feel on this subject can be allayed by the disclosure of the facts or by the necessary action to prevent these developments.

At the Habitat Conference the question divided itself into two parts. One was about the increased demand, domestically, for the production of nuclear power, and the other was the sale of nuclear reactors abroad. I wish to deal with them separately. I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) addressed himself at the conference to these matters and was very explicit. He said that it is the Canadian government's policy to proceed with the sale of nuclear reactors on a commercial basis, and he linked that with the need for the development of developing countries.

I want to challenge the Prime Minister on the suggestion that the developing countries are seeking nuclear reactors, on the whole, for the purpose of developing power. I want to point out what was said at the conference by Mr. Arjaun Makhijani, who works on practical energy solutions in a village near Bombay, which certainly is a part of the world which is underdeveloped. He attacked the policy of imposing large-scale energy projects like nuclear power plants on societies which are not suited for such schemes. Mr. Makhijani said that it is not a question of emotionalism but that nuclear energy is extremely capital-intensive. It must be used 80 per cent of the time in order to be economically efficient, and in the underdeveloped countries it could be used only about 40 per cent of the time, and in villages only about 10 per cent of the time. Because the highly centralized nuclear energy must be used in such an intensive way, it is unsuitable to types of societies, to the underdeveloped countries and to their mainly rural village populations, he said. He went on to say that we could save enough power to deal with this much better and much more cheaply by other methods. He said he rejects, on behalf of developing countries, the theory that the nuclear option is the one that will really solve their problems—problems which not only require scientific developments but require labour-intensive developments to give employment in the countries concerned.

● (1700)

The Prime Minister started out at the conference with what I think must have been a cold douche for the enthusiasts thereby reiterating Canada's stand and basing it on what I suggest is the false belief that this is the best way to help developing nations.

This matter was raised at the NGO conference forum, and was raised again by the group led by Barbara Ward—I think they called themselves the Vancouver symposium—and it was raised in the final conference resolution which, when dealing with the subject of shelter, infrastructure and many other things, recommended an extreme examination of the whole question of energy. An effort was made to add to that the special consideration for hazardous developments in this field and they sought to be put in the words "for example, nuclear power" as a main example of the type of development that was hazardous and ought to be examined. It is my understanding that the Canadian government did not support that, and that the official resolution had no reference to nuclear power. I say they were failing to give the leadership that this country could give and should give in this field.

I should like to turn to the subject of the sale of nuclear reactors. It has been fully debated in this House a number of times, so there is not much point in repeating what has been said at length. I believe the three opposition parties joined in a motion criticizing the government for the sale of nuclear reactors to certain countries and urged that we stop this particular policy. The government responded by saying that sales would continue on the grounds that we had safeguards.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked to General Burns and other people who believe that the safeguards are totally inadequate; they are only safeguards if you trust the word of the people who sign the agreements. Of course, in international affairs we have to trust other countries to some extent, but why do we make nuclear reactors capable of being transformed into making plutonium for weapons purposes? Why do we do that with a country like South Korea, which has a militant dictatorship in charge and does not try to conceal its warlike attitude toward North Korea? Only recently in the Argentine we have seen how unstable their regime is, yet we sell reactors to them.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) constantly tells us that the safeguards are the best answer. But are they good enough? He has never been able to answer that question or deny that the agreements we have depend on the good faith of the people with whom we make them. He has never been able to defend the fact that some of the people we make agreements with are not to be trusted in this particularly dangerous field although, of course, they may be trusted in other things.

I, therefore, feel that the right of this House to pass a resolution regretting the government's policy in dealing with nuclear reactors is not adequate; there was no leadership in this field and, in fact, the reverse attitude was adopted by government representatives at the Habitat conference in Vancouver.

I just want to mention one other subject, Mr. Speaker, and that is the new international economic order. Once again, we have subscribed to that and have given full lip service to it. But what was wrong with reiterating our concern about it? The minister says we have to let the people of Canada know about it. Why not use the opportunity of such a forum as Habitat to say it once again? It may be repetitive, but we have to keep on repeating the tremendous importance to the world and Canada of making the structural changes that would bring about a new economic order throughout the world. I say that Canada showed lack of leadership when they failed to join with those—which included the NGO and the Barbara Ward group—who urged that there be specific reference to the new economic order. There is none at all.

While we feel that the conference was worth while and that much of great value may emerge from it, we will do our best to urge that action be taken on things like clean water and other matters that were raised. We are duty bound to say to the government that their leadership at that conference was inadequate. That is the purpose of this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words on this motion put forward by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) concerning the Habitat conference and the resolutions relating to clean water, energy and land use. I had an opportunity to speak at one of the non-governmental organization conferences on nuclear energy, and even though I did not agree with all who attended some of those NGO conferences and their view of nuclear energy, I think it is well that these things are discussed at an international conference of this kind.

I listened very closely to the arguments opposing nuclear energy and I did not find anything very new or exciting in them. I applaud the suggestions that we should have stronger conservation programs. These fit in very well with this government's policy as announced earlier this year by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and in earlier announcements concerning conservation by the former minister. I certainly agree with their aim that over the next few years we should move toward greater use of renewable energy resources.

It is rather interesting that Barbara Ward, who was one of the principal speakers on the panel that I took part in, said in glowing terms that we want to see, 40 or 50 years from now, a greater use of renewable energy. Who does not? We all do. We all know that in the long haul we are going to see very extensive use of renewable resources. That is why the government is investing more in windmill energy, tidal power, solar power, and other renewable forms. But governments today cannot just plan for 40 or 50 years; they have to make plans for this year, next year, the immediate future, the intermediate future, and the long haul. We cannot permit ourselves to say we will spend all our resources for something that is going to be important 40 or 50 years from now. That is why we see nuclear power being very important during the intermediate term, and perhaps the long-term as well, let alone the position that holds right now in our country.

• (1710)

The hon. member for Greenwood suggests that because the government does not agree with some of the positions or resolutions coming from the NGO conference, the government is wrong. Mr. Speaker, international forums of this kind are set up to allow us to discuss these questions. Surely, everyone will not agree with every motion put forward by every individual group.

The motion suggests that Canada places commercial considerations ahead of all others in the sale of nuclear reactors. This is not so. The person who wrote the motion was either cynical about the position Canada has taken over the years or, worse, ignorant of what the federal government has done in fields of safeguards related to nuclear energy. Canada has participated in the International Atomic Energy Agency. We were one of the early signatories, in 1970-71, of the Non-Proliferation Treaty. One of the important parts of that international treaty concerns the sharing of nuclear energy and technology internationally. We have done this; we have provided power plants to various countries. We have done it in the form of providing cobalt beam therepy units for medical purposes, and isotopes for agriculture. Surely, such uses of nuclear technology are an important part of our international trade and assistance to other countries.

Canada has always given safeguards high priority. Indeed, the safeguards which Canada announced in December, 1974, are the toughest in the world. They apply not only to the reactor itself; they apply to uranium fuel used in the reactor, to nuclear technology and to the spent fuel, no matter whether it originated in Canada or elsewhere. The safeguards are to last the full life of the reactor, not just the life of the Np treaty which will run out in less than 25 years. They prohibit experiments which could result in a nuclear explosion of any kind. They provide for fallback inspection, and for monitoring of the use of nuclear energy if the country which is a signatory to the bilateral treaty should abrogate or withdraw from the NPT. Likewise, Canada this year is participating in the discussions and negotiations of the nuclear supplying group, sometimes known as the Club of London. Canada is to encourage that group to adopt international safeguards similar to those Canada has asked of other countries. We are playing an important role in those negotiations.

People who think Canada should get out of the business of supplying nuclear technology and equipment to other countries have not considered how much clout or impact Canada would have with the nuclear-supplying nations if it opted out of sales to other countries of reactors and nuclear technology. It is a question of being on the outside and looking in, rather than of being on the inside and trying to influence other countries to adopt the highest possible safeguards to ensure that our nuclear technology and equipment are used for peaceful purposes.

One of the encouraging ideas at Habitat was that of providing clean water to all peoples of the world. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking in the House, indicated that if this were to be a priority of countries receiving our aid, our government would surely co-operate in any way possible. When we are concerned about clean water, we may be talking about water containing chemical and mineral impurities which make its drinking unsafe for health, we may be talking of bacteria in water which will make it unsafe to use, or we may be talking about salt water. As the world's population grows—and it was suggested at Habitat that the world's population will double during the next 30 years—more countries will look to salt water as a source from which to obtain pure water. Many countries are already looking in that direction but many do not possess the oil, coal or other resources needed to produce electricity for desalinating water. Such countries may be thinking of using nuclear energy for desalinating water and for pumping or otherwise transporting that clean, fresh water which is important for human life.

I now shall speak briefly about the CANDU system. It upsets me to note that many in our country who have not studied this system, have not visited Pickering or the new plants at Douglas Point or Bruce, criticize the CANDU system. Most agree that Canadians should not be hewers of wood and drawers of water and that we should advance by becoming an industrialized economy using high technology. Yet such people often criticize the CANDU.

In the world today two basic nuclear systems are in use, the American system, used by many countries, under license from U.S.A. and the CANDU system which produces electricity in our country at rates competitive with those produced from non-nuclear sources of power. It can be equally useful in other countries where it is difficult to produce electricity. I think we should not care lessly criticize this important Canadian technological achievement which enables us to produce energy at low cost. For example, a recent study demonstrated that the Lambton generating station, which is coal-powered, produces electricity at 16 mills per kilowatt hour, whereas the Pickering plant, of roughly comparable size, produces electricity for about eight mills per kilowatt hour.

Further, Pickering uses natural uranium, of which we have a good supply. We have ensured that supplies will last well into the future. The spent fuel does not require reprocessing; to produce electricity economically. In other words, in order for the reactor to be an economically feasible proposition, the spent fuel does not require reprocessing.

The safety advantages of the CANDU have been mentioned many times. Significantly, there has not been one accident anywhere in the world involving commercial, civilian nuclear reactors which has resulted in loss of life.

● (1720)

I want to touch on a couple of other points. The Pickering reactor has operated at 75 per cent efficiency. That compares very well with other reactors around the world. It can be refuelled at full power. It does not require a shutdown. That is one of the reasons it has operated so efficiently. It produced more electricity by January of this year than any other reactor in the world. We should not listen to the glib comments of people criticizing the CANDU system without challenging them.

One of the arguments that was made very effectively in the group with which I participated at the Habitat conference was the efficiency we are now seeing with the Pickering reactor compared to coal reactors. Although there is a large capital cost in setting up nuclear reactors, in a day and age of high inflation the cost of the fuel is a relatively small part of the cost of the electricity produced. If we are going to energy systems which are subject to inflation, the nuclear reactors are relatively less subject to inflation after the initial capital investment. It is rather interesting to note that Pickering B, which is a 2,000 megawatt station identical to the Pickering A station which is now operating, will in fact cost less in constant dollars than the Pickering A station. That is an important point to note in the efficient generation of electricity.

One member opposite, I believe it was the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), pointed out that nuclear energy is not a good source of energy for many less developed countries. That is very important. I completely agree. The government's review committee which reviews the sale of reactors and uranium always takes this into account. If a less developed country has coal, oil, gas, hydro or other sources which often require less capital-intensive programs, that is a much better system for them. However, some countries do not have any of these indigenous sources of energy. In those cases, nuclear energy may be a suitable system for them. Of course, they need to have an adequate technological base. They need a large enough grid system to accommodate it. No electrical grid should receive more than about 10 per cent of its power from one station. There are these important constraints on nuclear power stations.

Every country cannot use nuclear energy effectively. In spite of this, we have a growing demand in the world for energy. Many countries will be moving to nuclear energy in the future. This is not just because of the situation we have seen in the past, where it was a sort of status symbol to have a nuclear generating plant, but because of the serious shortages of energy, whether from the increased price of oil or a lack of indigenous coal, hydro and other sources. To Canada, these factors are important. Even more important is the fact that the country is willing to submit to safeguards and inspections of the International Automic Energy Agency and is willing to submit to the bilateral safeguards agreement Canada has imposed which go beyond the non-proliferation treaty.

We see that the generation of electricity is going to increase around the world in future. Canada has been able to cut back its 1974 estimates from some 40,000 megawatts by 1990 to about 25,000 because of the reduction in demand that we foresee.

I wish to spend a moment on the suggestion by the hon. member of the opposition, that there be a moratorium on all nuclear sales to foreign countries. I have already dealt with this in the context that Canada is exerting its influence through the London Club, the nuclear supplier countries, to move toward higher safeguards to ensure that nuclear energy is used for peaceful purposes.

In some ways the non-proliferation treaty was really a bargain between the nuclear weapons countries and the countries which have a nuclear know-how, like Canada, and the non-nuclear weapons countries. The non-nuclear weapons countries said they would forgo acquiring these weapons if the nuclear countries would provide the transfer of technology so that they could generate electricity and take advantage of the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. We will have to ask ourselves if nuclear countries like Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but his allotted time has expired. He may only continue with unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Foster: If the countries with advanced nuclear resources say to the countries which do not have nuclear know-how that they are going to cut off the transfer of this technology, are these less developed countries going to keep their side of the bargain of the non-proliferation treaty? In conclusion, Canada has always worked for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy through the IAEA, the non-proliferation treaty, to which we were one of the first signatories, the bilateral safeguards which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced in 1974, and through the work of the nuclear suppliers' club of London to ensure that we have the highest possible safeguards in the world.

Our policy is to support the developing countries with regard to their energy problems, with the use of nuclear energy, provided there are adequate and strong safeguards. It is not to say to them that nuclear power is fine for us, but no good for you. The challenge facing Canada and the world is not to opt out of the problems and difficulties, both domestically and internationally, that nuclear power poses. Rather it is to work with these problems to ensure that it is used for peaceful purposes, and to overcome the tremendous energy problems that face us today and which will face us in the rest of this century.

● (1730)

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the New Democratic Party affords us an opportunity to step back for a moment and reflect upon Habitat. If the House will forgive me not only do I want to do that but I want also to take a look at some of the other what might be called meetings on specific subjects under the aegis of the United Nations through the years. I recognize that I do not have very much time and that only in general terms will be I be directing myself to the issues raised. Nevertheless I feel that we in this country, and as a matter of fact the United States too, are entering a period where, unless we are very careful, the public urge government to withdraw altogether from the United Nations or its agencies. I think this would be a very great mistake, and it is in this context that I want to say a word or two about Habitat and the United Nations, an organization that is reaching its thirtieth anniversary.

A wise Canadian, John Holmes, in a speech on December 1, 1975, to the Canadian Club had this to say:

> Canada's reputation in the UN is based on a long-standing disposition to avoid dramatic postures, look at critical situations as we find them, accepting the balance of forces as facts of life, and then see that what could be done to move us from a real situation to something better, denouncing the wicked, calling upon legions which do not exist to punish them, or demanding a new United Nations is self-indulgent.

Not only do I admire John Holmes but I certainly believe that what he said is true, that we could indulge in a luxury. I could indulge in a luxury today, if I wished, in castigating the national and international press for its coverage of Habitat. Some people who know more about this than I—therefore most people—tell me that it was easier to get despatches from Bucharest when the world was discussing population, that it was easier to get information from Nairobi when the world was discussing trade, and that it was much easier to get information from Mexico City than it was from the Minister of Justice's (Mr. Basford's) cosmopolitan city of Vancouver. I have no way of judging that, but there are many people in the Department of External Affairs and in government generally who have been quite distressed about the coverage of Habitat on the part of the press of this country.

Of course people were, it seems to me, waiting to pounce on the inevitable. As I understand it, the inevitable came in the last couple of days when an amendment was proposed by, of all people, Cuba, to the principles that many of us hoped could have been unanimously adopted. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is here today and we all heard his eloquent plea that these principles be adopted.

I wonder why it is that we are unable to judge what might be called the humdrum, or that we are unable to get publicity for such basic requirements as clear water, adequate housing, and a better standard of living for people of the world, yet when a mischievous amendment is introduced equating racism with Zionism, the headlines are stark for all to see, and the success of the entire conference, according to some journalists, hinged on whether that malevolent and extraneous part of the whole is acceptable or not to the majority.

I am glad to say that one reviewer in Canada at least, writing in the Montreal Star for Saturday, June 19, Mr. Terence Moore, had this to say:

> It is important not to judge the United Nations Habitat conference simply on the basis of what it said about occupied lands and aggression and resettlement of refugees. Those are subjects of intense legitimate interest and friends and supporters of Israel are naturally upset by the conference's implied condemnation of Israel.
>
> But it has been clear since last November where the great majority of Third World governments stood on Middle East politics.

The headline writers should not have been surprised at that intervention at Habitat. We should really judge other parts, and I hope that the motion introduced by my hon. friends of the New Democratic Party will allow us to focus as well upon the positive aspects not only of Habitat but of the United Nations in general.

A journalist said to me even today, "How does Habitat affect your constituency or your province of New Brunswick?" I suppose that after a while in this House one gets used to xenophobia of that kind, and had I more time to reflect I might have been able to give this journalist friend of mine a catalogue of potential lumber orders that could have been processed in the province of New Brunswick, interesting new techniques in building and so on, which obviously the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce would want to promote around the world. Many of these techniques have their origin in the province of New Brunswick and in my constituency.

Must we always measure things, Mr. Speaker? Surely we must not. I pose the question and then answer it. Surely we cannot pose questions having only to do with what is a functional problem of housing and water, or such functional problems as food supply as were posed in Rome, or of pollution in Stockholm, or population in Bucharest, or of how women are treated in contemporary society in Mexico City. In some of these conferences there were political interventions, but this should not surprise the member of parliament. It should not surprise anybody who is an advocate of the United Nations and who realizes how essential is the United Nations to the future of mankind.

I once read what was said, I was going to say by a distinguished Archbishop but I suppose that archbishops do not need any such adjectives so let me just say by the Archbishop of London and leave it at that; others can judge of his distinction. In a sermon or homily he asked that immigration be taken out of politics. As a practising politician I resent, with great respect to the reverend gentleman, the concept that such things can be taken out of politics or public life. This is the place of politics, and I think that is right. It will be of no surprise to anybody that the UN is a place of politics. It so happens that many recent conferences have dealt with the functional problems faced by men at the time of their movement, and I profoundly hope upward movement, toward a better life.

● (1740)

I think it is good news that the New Democrats of Canada have taken the government to task on various parts of Habitat. I prefer not to do that, but not because of any feeling of bon ami toward the government. God forbid that ever happening to me, although I suppose it might in a weaker moment just before Christmas. Otherwise I am prepared to take the government to task on any occasion.

What I am really trying to say is that we should not worry that the world is engaged in the political process. We should not worry that the New Democratic Party has seen fit to try to dissect some problems faced by Canada and the world. After all, this was only the host country at Habitat.

My belief in this aspect is that we must be careful not to become so obsessed with political issues and manifestations of them, amendments to resolutions and so on, that we lose the concept or the real purpose of the United Nations, which is to harmonize—and this is part of the charter—the national interests of the states which belong to the United Nations.

I get increasingly worried about people who would like to step back from the UN and throw it up because they happen to be in opposition to the majority, or even equate the majority with some form of tyranny. I think this is hyperbole that does great damage to the UN as an institution, and also that it is terribly self-serving. Many states, if they have any historical perception at all, could presumably turnabout and suggest that for many years there was a majority in the interests of those states, that are now part of the majority, that was equally as tyrannical. That is a terribly complicated sentence, and I realized that as I got it half out. What I am really trying to ask is, is a majority any more tyrannical because it occurs in 1976 than one which occurred in 1953, 1954 or 1955? Was the majority of the veto, that excluded for a whole generation a quarter of the world's population, a tyrannical majority? I think not.

Canada is in a very interesting position because next year, if present indications go as expected, we will be once again a member of the Security Council, and we will have the opportunity to work very carefully and, as some wise observer of the scene informed the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin), and myself the other day, the Secretry of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will have to have a good hotline down to Port Hawkesbury when Canada sees what becomes of members of the Security Council. Officials of the department will need instructions instantaneously, and perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have a hotline in his aircraft when he shuttles back and forth to his beautiful riding.

Miss Bégin: In a gas station.

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member for Saint-Michel talks about a gas station, if I heard her correctly. That might be one way, of course, of publicizing the United Nations and Canada's interest in it. It might be one way to inform Canadians of the implications for all of us of the responsibilities that will be on the government and on the parliament of this country when we become a member again of the Security Council, because the gas station, or wherever it is the Secretary of State for External Affairs gets his telephone calls from Ottawa, will be the point of information for the public in that community. This is the dilemma the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has faced too, because there are not enough people in gas stations who understand the aspirations of this country vis-à-vis the United Nations. This is a communications problem that the government wrestles with in its domestic affairs as well.

In any event, when we become a member of the Security Council we will have to do two or three things, and I should like to list them. We will require a much more clear identification of our policy priorities as a nation. We will require more active diplomatic pressure to implement these priorities, and we will have to be considerably more frank than we have been. I am not now gainsaying what the Minister of Justice and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs said at Habitat. I was not there. I must say, however, that the Minister of Justice has a very highly developed press section which grinds out material. Our mail boxes are full of it, and I think this is a delightful innovation in the Department of Justice.

We also will require more selective participation in United Nations debates and activities. The voting provisions, yes or no, on major issues according to our assessment seems to me to be an absolutely fundamental essential. It would be a peculiar Canadian experience, just as the patriation of our constitution would be the final sort of identification of our nationhood, if we stopped looking all the time to see what other nations did, and took the initiative on votes because we are peculiarly Canadian. I have no doubt that we are mature enough as a country to be able to do this. I do not say this in any boastful way, but today this is a positive thing for the United Nations.

Then lastly, and I guess I mentioned this in the Port Hawkesbury part of my speech, we will have to focus on improving opinion in Canada and our understanding of our opinion of the United Nations.

I suppose this is an intervention, afforded me because of the initiative of the NDP on this opposition day, which allows me to say that it is a good, plus thing that once again we are going to take up responsibility of Security Council membership. This will mean not only general support for the United Nations, but also that this is a government priority and that there can no longer be any question about that. I am sad to say that this is the case with some other countries, that is, selective withdrawal from the United Nations and its agencies.

I do not want to get in over my head on issues, but I think it is a sad sight to watch members of the United Nations trying to withdraw selectively from the ILO, for instance. Certainly the United States interests have been deeply troubled, but it does not do the United States foreign policy very much good, if I may say so candidly, for them to threaten to get out, take their marbles and go home, and not pay their dues if such a course of action should not occur. It is obvious that I would not at all favour the total giving up, but I think that is an option that could be exercised. We could give up altogether and decide that large conferences, international as they may be, with long and boring speeches and with the relentless pressure that will be on this country when we become part of the Security Council, are not in the interest of Canada. I would hope, despite the criticism by the New Democratic Party, that no one in this parliament would seriously consider that it is in the interest of Canada to withdraw altogether.

● (1750)

The United Nations, as the Charter says, has as its purpose the harmonizing of the interests of nations. It is difficult for parliament to harmonize the interests of this country; God knows it is a relentless preoccupation of all of us to try to harmonize the interests within our country. Therefore I fail to see why anyone would be surprised if the harmonizing of interests beyond the borders of this country should be equally relentless and equally demanding. I am glad to say I have no doubt that Canada will not want to withdraw. We will see that in the area of air law, sea law, housing and water—

[Mr. Fairweather.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was jettisoned in the middle of flight. That is fine. What I was seeking to do before your short intervention was urgently to invite our country to participate actively. There are signs that we will do this. There are signs that the cynicism about the United Nations can be abated if people of good will realize the difficulties. There are signs too, I am sure, that despite temporary setbacks the general purpose behind this organization will be understood, accepted, and approved by the vast majority of our citizens.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I read again the motion of the opposition which was moved by the New Democratic Party member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), I just cannot understand what is the common denominator which inspired this motion, if not a general and fundamental attack, valid or not, against the assistance policy of the government of Canada.

As a matter of fact, why relate the conference on human settlements called Habitat in Vancouver and the sale of CANDU reactors? Why talk about the so-called cynical behaviour of the government and in addition about our supposedly conflicting and bold statements on the subject of clean water?

I frankly cannot understand why criticisms are levelled against the federal assistance program. To begin with, if I quote a short excerpt from the speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Vancouver on May 31 for the opening of Habitat, it is because in my opinion he clearly states the intention of Canada. He said:

> The globalization process is speeding up and already a new world is developing. The world-wide responsibilities which our wealth leads us to assume constantly remind us of the fact. No country can remain aloof and conscious of what it has nor keep its possessions secret. Pressures from numbers and needs compel all of them to become more open with others and share more widely the secret of their resources. Failure to account is becoming impossible. Willingly or reluctantly, we are at the beginning of a new era of universal control.

I am quoting in the House from that speech because perhaps very few Canadians and parliamentarians read it and unfortunately could not attend the Habitat Conference since we are constantly sitting here instead of being in our constituencies.

To my mind, the Prime Minister was thus stating quite clearly that Canada intends to help. At the time, the opposition said, and today I speak of the New Democratic Party, as well as all the other parties for that matter: Why good intentions? Again, we are getting empty words: where is the money? Where are the concrete proposals? I heard, to my astonishment, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) introduce the idea of the Nairobi common fund, the fourth UNCTAD conference in the debate. In fact, from the numerous interventions, I gather there is a general attack against Canada's foreign aid policy. I shall come back to the common fund later on.

So, to my mind, the intent is clear. So, where is the money, were is the concrete help? Here, Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall what Habitat is. I am not an expert, but I am very much interested in the matter. Habitat was one conference among several United Nations manifestations. It is one conference in time, not a permanent organization, nor an institution that operates full-time.

It is one conference which attempted to give the people an awareness of one of the most acute problems of our times, a problem that is completely unknown in Canada, unless one has gone from southern Canada and some distance into the north of our provinces or the Territories. Those places are, to my mind, a source of shame to all Canadians. I am thinking here of some of the communities inhabited by the first settlers of our country, in which none of us would want to live, and of which we are ashamed. In other words, Habitat was meant to make Canadians aware of their wealth.

It was a forum in which resolutions developed and not a forum of commercial negotiations. It was a forum of the resolutions crystallizing everybody's goodwill to develop material forms for the promotion of the places where human beings must live, to determine how and with which basic elements they have to be able to survive. Many resolutions have been established, several of which are only recommendations because they are directed to national sovereignties, the others being commitments, at least moral commitments, because they are directed to the international community.

I did not understand the remarks of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who was unable to translate into reality . . . Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock? I would like to ask permission to continue at eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock, when we adjourned the debate, I was saying how surprised I was that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) had apparently failed to translate into reality what the conference on human settlements in Vancouver could bring to Canadians and I just described that kind of conference which is only a momentary event and not a permanent organization. Its goal is to make people like Canadians who live in a very wealthy country aware of the most crucial problems faced by three quarters of the world—lack of housing, lack of basic sanitary facilities in houses or cities and mainly lack of clean water with all the endemic diseases it creates.

Apart from that awareness development aspect, the Habitat conference gave us a large number of resolutions which were not submitted in advance and negotiable, according to the wishes of the international community to which we all subscribed. Three of them could be easily identified and I think important to mention them in the face of serious accusations such as those made in the socialist party motion.

The first concerns us very much as it relates to the audio-visual library received by one of our universities in Vancouver. My colleague, the parliamentary secretary for urban affairs, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has already mentioned it. The two others concerned us but particularly the Canadian assistance and I mention it because I am deeply disappointed by the character of that motion which condemns the whole foreign assistance policy of Canada concerning the Third World. I shall resume them rapidly and I quote the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) who, on June 1 in Vancouver, said bluntly and I quote:

> First, Canada is prepared to provide, through bilateral Assistance and cooperation programs, favourable answers to assistance proposals in the field of human settlements that will be submitted by its partners in those programs.

He goes on:

> In addition, we will use our influence within multilateral development agencies to encourage the latter to prove favourable as well.

I conclude with a second and last quotation of his text:

> Second, we consider as particularly worthy the proposal to establish regional training centres aimed at those having to plan and direct human settlements. For several years Canada has been giving its support to the Asian Institute of Technology located in Bangkok and to its program of human settlements. We think this program deserves continuous support and, in this way, might serve as a pattern for similar programs in other regions.

Finally, as a concrete recommendation, I will mention the one in which Canada had proposed that countries of the planet would all have access to drinking water by 1986. The final recommendation, as I understand it, was much more moderate than the emergency position advocated by Canada. There was agreement so that that goal might be reached by 1990, that is within 14 years. That shows fairly well the extent of the problem.

Coming back to the money issue, there can be no reference to cynicism since we already committed $210 million over the next three years on the last resolution alone. I therefore wonder whether opposition members are ready in the context of budgetary restraint, we had to impose on ourselves and every Canadian to fight domestic inflation which is the cause of specific ills—particularly in the area of employment—whether they are ready to fight in support of the suggestion that the external aid budget, now approximating $1 billion but still 5.2 per cent only of our GNP while it should be around 7 per cent, if they are ready to fight to maintain that in real terms and or increase the amount of money extended by Canada to the third world.

I wonder what kind of arithmetic the socialist opposition is following. But when we commit ourselves to increase n-fold, to give urgent priority to water purification projects to ensure drinking water to all communities in the world, mainly through our bilateral programs maybe through certain international bodies but mainly through bilateral agreements. The sums of money voted by Parliament are limited, they are already committed formally or through pre-agreements in the case of certain projects. Therefore, who is going to pay, where shall the money come from for that indisputable priority, drinking water for every human community on this planet?

Apparently, it is all very easy when in opposition to level that kind of criticism, but without coming to a single view. When time comes to vote subsidies, suddenly we hear all kinds of subtle criticism, suggesting we throw the money away on military aid which is totally inaccurate. Today we are faced with the horror of a South Africa where officially more than one hundred dead were registered, not even taking the trouble to tell before the world what is happening to 80 per cent of its citizens, who are treated as a minority in a totally shameful way.

Confronted with the deep contradictions regularly apparent among the opposition as to the suggested importance of the help effort, which is in my view an indisputable priority, and the subsidies Parliament has to vote regularly, I feel this is a very serious scandal. The New Democratic Party added in its opposition motion that we are putting our commercial interests above everything in Canada's nuclear sales. Such statement is really gratuitous and stupid. Canada—and I shall not emphasize that point—may not be the best seller since everyone knows that, being committed towards some countries, it is now dealing with foreign economies whose inflation rates exceed 200 per cent and that despite this fact, in the so-called conventional contracts, Canada is obviously not first of all a seller. First and foremost, although it was a seller, Canada is a member of the non proliferation treaty. It was one of the very first members, as soon as the treaty was put into force in 1970. At this time, about 100 countries only approved this treaty. At the same time I can say: 100 countries only and 100 countries, already, because that is a lot. By the way, I regret that some advanced countries in the nuclear field, such as France and China, have not accepted to sign the treaty. I can also say that this treaty has been greatly strengthened in 1975 when it was signed by five EURATOM member-countries, Belgium, Holland, Luxemburg, the German Federal Republic and Italy, and by countries such as the Korean Republic and many others which are not yet so-called nuclear states.

Why did we sign the non-proliferation treaty? Why did we systematically study this treaty? Why did we judge two years ago that it was not severe enough as far as standards for countries are concerned? Why did we take initiatives from which we heard through the London Club? We took all these measures because we are convinced that we must, according to the treaty and according to the principle of human solidarity, share, for pacific aims only, a technology which is often the only energy source which can be used in human settlements. That is why I often think of the spectacular example which is often given, that of the electricity for the town of Karachi in Pakistan. We could also find other examples. So, this is often the only energy source which can be used in human settlements and we have no right to judge that our stability, our democracy and our sufficiency are superior and to refuse to others what we judge as good for ourselves.

I shall end with a few remarks on the accusation that Canada's trading interests come before the other interests of humanity when it comes to selling nuclear reactors, and I shall underline that from now on Canada's policy, as far as its public bilateral development assistance is concerned, will be to refuse Canadian nuclear reactor to countries which are not members of the non-proliferation treaty. Mr. Speaker, before I end—I see that my time is coming to an end—let me refer to an accusation made during this debate by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), who said that we were not involved in development assistance to the Third World, giving as an example our so-called absence or negativism towards the common fund in Nairobi, during the month of May.

The UNCTAD worked during the whole month of May, following the Manilla declaration of the group of 77, to stabilize, among other things, the basic commodities market in the world. Not only did we endorse the principle of the common fund, but we did actively participate in it. It is evident however that it was a bit utopian to try to delude the developing countries by having them believe that we thought that this was the best and only solution. Politically, we accepted the fund because it had become the very symbol, if I may say so, of the international new economic order. I see that my time has expired—

● (2010)

[English]

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss Bégin) a question for clarification? Perhaps I did not understand correctly from listening to the translation. What figures did the hon. member use—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Due to the fact that the parliamentary secretary's time has expired, the hon. member must have unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to ask a question?

Mr. Hogan: It is just for clarification.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hogan: I just want the figure of the percentage of the Gross National Product which is going to the underdeveloped world. It seemed to me that the translator said 5.2 per cent, and it was probably meant to be 0.52 per cent.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank my colleague from Nova Scotia for giving me the opportunity to correct a mistake I made.

[English]

It is true that I said 5.2 per cent instead of 0.52 per cent, and I would like to thank the hon. member. I am sure that many hon. members in this House, but unfortunately not the majority of us, wish Canada's figure were 1 per cent. I am dreaming of Utopia in this particular field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to our colleagues in the New Democratic Party for bringing forward this motion. Frankly I am confused by some of that wording, and to this moment that confusion has not been particularly alleviated by the speakers from that party.

I wish to assure the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) that I am not one of those who wish to judge the success or failure of Habitat. I do not think that is our responsibility or, still less the responsibility of those who attended the conference and who were subjected to the pressures, and emotions, and effort required to make a reasonable input into such a conference. My only experience which is comparable was a food conference in Rome some time ago. Since that time I have felt that I, least of all, am able to judge the success or failure of such a meeting. I think we should leave that to the future. It is much too early for a final verdict on what took place in Vancouver.

● (2020)

What concerned me very much was the attack, which had some validity, on Canada's credibility which arose from that conference. That is not the same thing as judging a conference in terms of success or failure. It would seem to me that people can say to Canadians with some justification that those who live in glass houses should not be the first to throw stones, or they may say to us, "Physician heal thyself", or we may say to them, "Do as I say and not as I do".

A very good example is the water issue. It is very difficult for me to understand how Canada can retain its credibility in terms of pure, clean, acceptable water, as a preacher of this position, when we have reports daily of the sins we have committed in terms of our own water resources.

I was very impressed with what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) said, and I believe I can quote him fairly accurately. It was to the effect that developed nations do not follow up their rhetoric with action. I am not particularly happy to be branded a hypocrite, Mr. Speaker. It would not bother the parliamentary secretary, I am sure. She has already intervened without waiting to hear what I have to say, which is fairly consistent with the conduct of members of the government in this regard.

I was not particularly impressed with the fact that our Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand)—and I rise particularly because the motion deals with environmental matters—says that our action and interaction with neighbours throughout the world will depend on the government's ability to judge its action or interaction by the votes it may get in the next election. As the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, that gained wide press coverage. I think that is unfortunate, though I do not object to them saying that in an election campaign. I think it is part of the fight in an election campaign.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) says he did not say that. I asked the minister that very question in this House in the unavoidable absence of this minister, and he did not deny for one moment that it is what he said. I gave him every fair opportunity, and despite the intervention now of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, the Minister of the Environment did not deny that statement. I gave him every opportunity to do so. I do not think it brought any credit to our Minister of State for Urban Affairs—and I join my colleagues in congratulating him on his contribution; I was very proud of him, but I was not proud of his colleague when he made that particular reference which was so widely quoted in the Canadian and international press. I was embarrassed as a Canadian to read that our contribution would be dictated by an election result that was some time away. Despite the intervention of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I think the low water mark was that reference by the Minister of the Environment.

The motion deals with the commercial criteria with regard to nuclear power, and I should like to deal with that matter as it affects the environment. I think we are going to be judged on our actions by the developing countries. I am afraid of being accused of hypocrisy, and I think one of the things we are going to be judged on is nuclear power and nuclear waste.

The most serious environmental impact of nuclear power in my judgment is in the field of the management of waste produced by reactors. This waste is composed of radio-actinides which have extremely long half-lives—in the case of plutonium 25,000 years. This means that a given quantity of plutonium will be half as radioactive in 25,000 years as it is today. At this rate it would take 250,000 years for a moderate sized quantity of plutonium to become safe.

There are a number of methods of disposing of the waste. We have investigated burying it in salt, and we have investigated burying it in stable geological formations—and even shooting it into the sun. At the moment Atomic Energy of Canada seems to be leaning toward the geological disposal of waste in the pre-Cambrian shield.

Aside from the obvious problems associated with even geological disposal of the waste, it is important to remember that, as of today, no waste has ever been disposed of successfully. In the United States liquid waste is stored in steel tanks which, although built to very high tolerances and with double walls, have been known to leak. Substantial leakage of waste could obviously pollute the water table of a considerable area leading perhaps to the closure of an entire community. In addition, waste in temporary storage is vulnerable to theft, which given its toxic nature could have grave security implications.

Another hazard of nuclear power as far as the environment is concerned—and here again we are going to be judged on the way we deal with our environment—is that caused by thermal pollution created by nuclear power plants. Because of the high steam temperatures at which the facilities operate, vast quantities of cooling water are needed—about 50 per cent more than the conventional plant; thus, given present technology, nuclear power stations need to be located near very substantial bodies of water.

All of these considerations may be deemed theoretical, and perhaps they were until the Port Hope incident. They are not theoretical any more but are very, very real. Human error in the past was translated into significant dangers to children who were not even born when the mistakes were made. Therefore I think, and I urge upon my colleagues, that if we are going to be dealing with the less developed countries that the environmental considerations be given a priority and consideration far beyond that given by the government to date.

The economics of nuclear power are increasingly coming into question. In the last three years capital costs, inflation, and the general cost of capital have made nuclear power decreasingly economic even though oil prices have quadrupled during that period. At present trends, oil-fired power stations will be competitive with nuclear stations in the very near future. In fact the Barber report commissioned for the energy research and development administration in the United States calculates that at about $30 a ton for power station coal, nuclear stations under 600 megawatts are uneconomic. Ontario Hydro estimates that this is about its average cost of coal delivered to its power stations.

Another economic problem of nuclear power as far as less developed countries are concerned is that the current vendors of nuclear stations sell only 600 megawatt or larger units. In a less developed country with a relatively unsophisticated power grid, a 600 megawatt unit represents a tremendous proportion of the total electricity requirements. This can mean that the less developed countries in question will develop an excessive dependance on one power source. In light of the fact that most power stations only operate between 50 and 70 per cent of the time, this leads to immense distortions in the power supply.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that?

Mr. Jarvis: The parliamentary secretary shakes his head. Can he tell me where a developed country can purchase a nuclear power station under 600 megawatts on the market place today? It is impossible. A country which purchases a unit that size or greater becomes tremendously dependent on that one single unit. In terms of safety it is probably the biggest issue confronting the advocates of nuclear power. This is a most controversial question, technically, and I claim no expertise.

● (2030)

I suggest that claims for the over-all safety of nuclear power plants are usually based on United States experience. They are summarized in documents such as the Rasmusian report, which suggests that the probability of a fatality from a nuclear accident is extremely small. Apparently the chance of being killed in a nuclear power accident is about as great as that of being killed by a meteorite. Because laymen do not usually readily understand probability theory, and because these statistics may easily be distorted, there is widespread unease about the safety of nuclear power in communities located near nuclear power plants.

Another problem concerns the use of nuclear material by terrorists. Quite apart from the potential which exists for making bombs from plutonium, a potential which is very likely not as great as has been commonly stated, it must be borne in mind that plutonium is a highly toxic element.

An hon. Member: Who can understand that?

Mr. Jarvis: If the hon. member wants to participate in the debate, I invite him to take part.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Will the hon. member please address the Chair?

Mr. Jarvis: I do not know if the hon. member wishes to participate in the debate. I listened to him not long ago and could not understand one thing he said. He made a most inconsequential contribution. Perhaps we are getting even. The hon. member may not be prepared to understand; I do not know.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

One pound of plutonium can kill many times over every man, woman, and child on this planet. This worry is magnified by the exponential growth of world plutonium stocks. By 1980 200 tons will have been produced; the figure by 1985 will rise to over 700 tons.

My second point relates to the wording of the motion. The motion refers to "the government's bold statements on such environmental matters as clean water and its inability or unwillingness to enforce minimal standards in Canada, as in the case of the Syncrude plant in northern Alberta." The mover of the motion referred to the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant, instead of the Syncrude plant. I would have been happier if the motion had referred to the Great Lakes as an example, particularly as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), the mover of the motion, is more familiar with the Great Lakes than with the Athabasca oil sands. I think the example in the motion is most unhappy. However, since the motion mentions the Syncrude plant, my remarks will relate to Syncrude as well.

I accuse the Minister of the Environment for creating a confused situation with regard to environmental matters on which other countries will inevitably judge us. For example, what is the minimal standard if we use the GCOS yardstick? Is it to be 287 long tons per stream day, which is apparently the standard being set for Syncrude? Or is it 40 long tons, a standard which many allege can be reached if sulphur scrubbing equipment is installed in the plant? Further, what is the cost of such equipment? On the one hand we have reports saying it costs $60 million; in other cases companies allege that the cost will be up to $1 billion. Is the equipment any good? On the one hand some people allege that, for a $60 million expenditure, emissions can be reduced to 40 long tons a day. On the other hand some companies say that the equipment is unproven, unsatisfactory, and will never meet that particular target. The Minister of the Environment ought to answer such questions; so far he has not done so.

Who has authority for dealing with such environmental matters? The Minister of the Environment says that certainly the federal government has no authority. Despite the legislative authority of the Clean Air Act and the Environmental Contaminants Act, the minister has said repeatedly in this House and elsewhere that this is simply a provincial matter. Although the federal government is largely involved with the Syncrude operation, the Minister of the Environment has said repeatedly in this House that the federal government has no responsibility with regard to environmental matters. If this is true—and I am speaking theoretically only because I do not agree that it is—why in heaven's name has the minister not agreed with his provincial counterparts on what the acceptable level ought to be?

Surely developing countries will judge us for our inadequacies, since we cannot determine who has authority and, even if there is joint responsibility, what the commonly acceptable standard ought to be. Really, that is the thrust of the motion. We tell developing countries how concerned we are about the environment; we brag of our environmental assessment studies. And in fact we have commissioned environmental assessment studies. One was undertaken with regard to Syncrude. But we do not do what we say we will do.

The Environment Canada comments on Syncrude's environmental impact assessment were so extensive as to merit a further study which is now under way, financed 50-50 by the federal and Alberta provincial governments, and will cost around $40 million to complete. The study is to be completed in 1985 owing to the comprehensive scope of its investigations. Syncrude, however, will begin operations in 1978, which leaves a hiatus of seven years. The spending of $40 million of taxpayer's money will result in a study which we shall receive seven years after the start-up of plant operations. And we say to developing countries, do as we say, not as we do. We tell them how concerned we are about our environment; yet we shall not complete a major environmental impact study until seven years after the Syncrude plant is in operation.

Apparently the NDP are concerned about the Athabasca tar sands. I do not wish to enlarge on what the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said, but I am concerned about the example to which the motion we are debating alludes. In Alberta the main thrust of the forces opposing Syncrude has been managed by Mr. Grant Notley, the sole NDP member of the legislative assembly. Mr. Notley reportedly has a highly qualified staff of three working for him full time, on a generous research budget provided to him as leader and sole member of one of the opposition parties in the legislature. On occasion Mr. Notley's researches have steered him up some blind alleys. For example, Mr. Notley claimed that the GCOS emissions were killing thousands of water fowl in the Athabasca area. The hon. member for Athabasca this afternoon, as have others at other times, completely rejected such claim as being inaccurate. It is unfortunate that the mover of the main motion did not use a better example to illustrate concern for the environment.

I come back to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and say that I will not judge him on these matters. He and the government will be judged on these matters by others some time in the future. On the other hand, I join my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona in complimenting the minister on his speech at Habitat. I say to him, sincerely, that I thought the Minister of the Environment made a most unhappy intervention at that conference. Second, so long as we are hypocritical about environmental matters in Canada, it will be difficult to show developing nations the leadership they expect of us in this field.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks may I congratulate the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) for acting as chairman at the Habitat conference and for performing his duties under conditions which, as many know, were most trying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: The motion the House is debating refers to the cynical attitude the government adopted at the Habitat conference on the question of pollution and the provision of clean water, as well as to what has happened pollution-wise in the Alberta tar sands development. The last point relates to the way this country has sold nuclear reactors to various countries of the world with the attendant pollution and safety problems.

● (2040)

In the debate at Habitat and again today, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) brought in the whole question of the Habitat conference as it relates to the whole new economic order and the discussions that had taken place in Nairobi. He mentioned that the Vancouver conference was a successor to several important U.N. conferences held in the past few years, notably the food crisis conference in Rome, the population crisis conference in Bucharest, the rights of women conference in Mexico City, and the environmental conference in Stockholm.

There is an old Biblical saying that is familiar to most people: There is faith, hope, and charity, but the greatest of these is charity. The line that I am going to take tonight is that there is food, clothing, and shelter, and the most important and greatest of these is food, even though I realize that the Habitat conference was supposed to be primarily directed to the problems of human settlement. In reality a great deal of the time was spent trying to allay the political by-play or inter-play between the mid-East forces that unfortunately crept into that conference, as it has into so many UN conferences in recent years. Perhaps it was unavoidable.

I listened to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and part of the speech in reply by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss Bégin) who would very well have been talking about the new economic order in the same way as the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I realize that since the world food conference in Rome we have not moved as quickly as possible. Obviously if we are going to get into a new economic order it involves what was discussed at Nairobi, including commodity agreements, raw materials, preferential tariff agreements between the developed and underveloped world, changing trade patterns, a host of structural changes that need to take place in the underdeveloped world as well as in the developed world in order to bring about a greater redistribution of resources as between the poorer and richer nations. We all know that in the long run that has to be done. A start has to be made.

There is something, though, about which I am becoming increasingly concerned. My fears have not been allayed since the conference in Rome. I refer to the fact that we underplay too much the necessity of foreign aid in the traditional sense.

I was particularly struck by this fact last night in watching the CTV program "W5". There was a discussion by two people, one of whom was Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, a well known Canadian scientist who did a study of the oil spill disaster in Chedabucto Bay. The other was Dr. Schneider, I think his name was, a climatologist from one of the mid-western states. They predicted that we have fed into the computers too much of these historical climatic cycles without any reasonable room for random variations that can completely change the picture with regard to food supplies in the short run as it affects our country and, therefore, millions and millions of people in the underdeveloped world.

Since the world food conference in Rome, books and articles have been produced with regard to the question of the lifeboat theory, the idea that wealthy countries should help only the most promising of the poorer countries. I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question with regard to the comparison of the GNP. The answer she gave me is correct; it is much less that 1 per cent. She did not state, and I am subject to correction on this, that the close to $1 billion figure she quoted includes $100 million to $150 million for military expenditures in these countries. I do not consider that conducive to helping these countries to obtain food or better human settlement.

An hon. Member: That should be million.

Mr. Hogan: I should have said $250 million, I think it is. Anyway, I am subject to correction. It may be $150 million. My point is that the distinction needs to be made between military expenditures as a part of the foreign aid program and the real foreign aid program relating to food, shelter, and things like that.

As I was saying, the lifeboat theory is still prevalent. There has been much written about it, probably as a consequence of the world food conference in Rome. The idea is that the wealthy countries should help only the most promising of the poorer countries, since spreading resources too thin could jeopardize chances for survival of the strong as well as the weak. There is the suggestion that wealthy nations should make distinctions between poorer nations in the spirit of "triage", the first world war medical practice of dividing the wounded into survival categories in order to concentrate medical resources on those who could truly benefit from them, and to ignore those who would die even with treatment or survive even without it. Some proponents of these theories cite projections from the Club of Rome's statistical model "The Limits to Growth" to add a seal of technological legitimacy to their modern-day malthusianism.

These apolyptic concepts are provocative, and the threads of truth they contain do have frightening implications. Moreover, momentum for this pessimism has been building, abetted by full page advertisements in major newspapers, articles in important international publications, and a marked increase in the demand for triage speakers on American campuses and television panels.

As a recent copy of the New York Times magazine noted, the campaign has had its impact. Many leaders who have been in the forefront of efforts to help the needy are currently mired in an uncharacteristic mood of inertia. And the lifeboat and triage theories offer a rationale for their passivity.

Yet a close look reveals that the theories are not appropriate to today's realities and need not be for tomorrow's. In fact reasonable and hard headed assessments of available figures suggest that it is well within the power of humanity to produce enough food to prevent masses from starving. The fact that it is possible to refute the current lifeboat and triage theories, however, as Barbara Ward notes, does not mean there is no food crisis. Various food crises and inadequate distribution systems have affected nutritionally the status of millions of children from low income families, and unless dramatic policy decisions are taken soon this trend, I am afraid, is likely to accelerate over the next decade, with ominous consequences. That in face is the reason why the lifeboat and triage theories must be refuted now.

● (2050)

I was happy to see that in a recent interview Mr. Hopper, Canada's head of the International Development Research Centre, had this to say about the triage concept. He said it is an unworthy concept. It assumes that there is nothing you can do, or that the resources that it is going to take to do it are just so colossal that you cannot afford to expend them. He says that this is a perfectly valid classification in the heat of battle on the battlefield. If I may quote him from an interview in the Globe and Mail for November 3, 1975, he says:

> But when it comes to the world food situation, "I don't think we're at anything like that limited capacity at the present time. I don't think we're out of time and I don't think we're out of resources."

He went on to point out that some nations that would be left to their fates are in fact agriculturally very productive—India, for example. He says that the concern should be not to abandon them but to transform their traditional agricultural practices into scientifically based ones that will increase their output of food.

I want to go further than that, Mr. Speaker. I think it is most important to recognize that the basic concept of squeezing the world into a single lifeboat is wrong. The aim should be to build more lifeboats. You then increase food production in needy countries in the longer run, while in the shorter run you supply them with the needed food, so that the many possible and in some cases probable famines that will be facing the world will be readily dealt with.

The view of helpless countries holding out begging bowls for a few kernels of grain is I know the last thing in the minds of all development agencies and low income nations. We all know that in many countries there is nothing politically more difficult to handle and more damaging to a nation's pride than food aid. However, realities are realities, and it does not do to have leaders such as, with all due respect to his memory, the late emperor Haile Selassie who, as we now know, tried to hide the fact of some famine in Ethiopia. Pride can only go so far.

Based on today's technologies, we know the opportunities for major growth in food production are there. Scientific breakthroughs are possible. Some research projects are already approaching fruition and others offer interesting promise. In any event, if we take the lifeboat and triage theories to their conclusion and deny aid to many hungry nations, what ultimately will happen to them? This is the reason we have to get up to the one per cent of GNP that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned is her dream. It must not be a dream, even in a period of national restraint; it must become a reality in one of the most relatively affluent countries of the world, even though our growth rate over the last few years, in GNP-per capita terms, has gone from second among the nations of the western world to sixth or seventh.

Furthermore, evidence is beginning to accumulate showing that great efforts are being made now at reducing population growth and improving nutrition. These two factors are linked together far more closely than once thought. In many poor areas the best way to lower the birth rate is to provide a family's children with a decent chance for survival by the economic transformation of their society, as well as the provision of food aid in the short run. If half of their children die before reaching their productive years, parents will feel that they have to conceive a great many children—common belief puts the figure at eight—to ensure two surviving sons. So ironically the rate of population growth could be lowered partly by providing food to keep children alive and healthy.

It is hard for Canadians to realize, Mr. Speaker, as became clear at the Habitat conference, what it is like to be in the shoes of those who have to live on $200 a year. It is evident across the country, despite the attempts of officials to break that barrier down, that it is pretty tough for us who are used to restaurants with plenty of food, who are used to three square meals a day and a pretty good roof over our heads, to realize the suffering endured by these people.

If we try to imagine what it is like for a family to live on $200 a year, Mr. Speaker, first of all let us take out the furniture, except for a few old blankets, a kitchen table and one chair, take away the pantry, save for a few potatoes, dismantle the bathroom, take away the house and move the family to the toolshed, and take away all the other houses and set up in their place a shantytown.

My House leader has reminded me, Mr. Speaker, that I do not have much time left, so some of the things I was going to say will have to be left unsaid. I hope on another occasion I will have an opportunity to make some further points. Let me conclude by congratulating the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) on pointing out today that one of the great problems in our country in regard to housing is land speculation. Although we have developed this question before in the House, I wish he had developed it a little more today in relation to the food policy of this country and foreign food aid. Some of our best agricultural land is owned by these greedy speculators, and the provincial and federal governments are allowing them to go ahead as in the fertile Niagara Peninsula.

Let me remind us all of what John Maynard Keynes said after the first world war when he predicted what was going to happen in Germany. I suggest we remember this today. He said:

> Men will not always die quietly. For starvation, which brings to some lethargy and a helpless despair, drives other temperaments to the nervous instability of hysteria.

We are seeing that at the present time.

> These in their distress may overturn the remnants of organization, and submerge civilization itself in their attempts to satisfy desperately the overwhelming needs of the individual. This is the danger against which all our resources and courage and idealism must now co-operate.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to engage in this debate and I thank the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) for introducing it. It gives us the opportunity to talk about matters which I think are very important and which we do not discuss all that often, even though there have been accusations of cynicism. I think we can make them both ways, though it would not be very productive.

The important thing to remember is that we had a fine delegation at Habitat, one that was truly representative. It was not only a federal delegation; it was a national delegation and included all levels of government, non-government organizations, our native people, and women, of whom I wish there were more on the delegation, who acquitted themselves admirably under the outstanding leadership of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) who led the Canadian delegation. I think they did us credit, and I include all the members of the Canadian Habitat Secretariat. I think they did us credit; the people of Canada, the Habitat Secretariat, and Commissioner General Mr. MacNeill did us credit. The arrangements, as all the delegates and all the United Nations people said time and time again, were second to none. Perhaps more important was the fact that the hospitality of the people of Vancouver was second to none. The warmth, the spirit, and the interest was noticed everywhere the delegates went, and this situation was repeated time and time again.

● (2100)

I certainly want to thank those who have paid tribute to the role I played there. It was one of considerable interest. I must say, however, that the conference did not solve the problems of the new international economic order. It could not deal with those things which the UNCTAD conference at Nairobi did not really resolve. There is still trouble in Ireland, and there is still tragedy in Lebanon. The Middle East problems have not been solved. The United Nations Habitat conference on human settlements was not able to solve those problems which neither the General Assembly nor the Security Council have been able to resolve so far. Many people ask: well, is that not a tragedy? That is not what the conference was about. These are the things that most of the people directed their attention to day after day in tough sessions. This is what the people directed themselves to in the long period of time in preparation for the Stockholm conference.

These people dealt with settlements. They reached conclusions on many of the human settlements issues. Perhaps 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the substance for which the conference was called was agreed upon by consensus. As the Minister of Justice has said, it was not such that we could vote or approve the Declaration of Principles by consensus.

We should not lose sight of the real progress that was made and for which the conference was called. There were no surprises. We were not surprised when issues which some consider extraneous or irrelevant arose. Delegates in most cases were not briefed on them. They did not have instructions from their governments on them. The conference was not really competent to deal with them, but these reflected the real world, and also something else which we Canadians had the opportunity of learning. It reflected that these things which we sometimes consider extraneous and irrelevant are very central to other people. I think that is the lesson we must learn.

There were over 140 nation states represented, plus many observer groups, liberation groups, and non-government organizations. We were getting the full spectrum of the world and it has shifted, just as the United Nations has shifted. The conference is suffering from that democratic fault of having the majority have its way, and this was reflected very much there.

If we look back, as we will, and as we are beginning to do now at the Stockholm conference on the environment, we will remember these things. Very few people, except perhaps a few UN watchers or specialists, will remember the difficulties at the Stockholm conference with the recognition of the Chinese delegation, or of the German Democratic Republic delegation not being represented. I forget the details myself. When we look back and forget all the turmoil of the so-called extraneous political matters we remember the substance of what the Stockholm conference was all about. Many things have happened as a result of that. There are very few nations in the world without environmental programs, and at that time there were very few with such programs or even with environmental ministries. The word "ecology" was perhaps known to a few academics, specialists, and scientists, but now it is used by school children, and felt with their hearts.

There are many programs now on the environment under the auspices of the United Nations Environmental Program in Nairobi, for instance, the one begun following the conference regarding depollution of the Baltic Sea. Even the preparatory arrangements leading up to the conference have resulted in progress. Canada and the United States signed the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement as the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement as a direct result of the interest created in preparing for such a conference because it focused attention on this. Very few people know about the Barcelona agreement for the gradual depollution of the Mediterranean Sea which was signed a few months ago. It involves the nations around the Mediterranean, including those opponents in the Middle East conflict. Even they reached agreement on this fundamental issue which was of human and social concern. This is the way we will look back at the United Nations Habitat Conference on Human Settlements in Vancouver.

I am told there are some 20 territorial disputes going on in the world today. I am sure that in another 20 years there will still be 20 territorial disputes going on. They probably will be different ones, but the work started at Habitat and in the preparatory process will continue, and its impact will continue to be felt. That is what is important and that is what made Habitat worth while.

I have mentioned consensus. We must remember that there were three committees, including Committee Two which dealt with policies, strategies, planning, institutions and management. It brought in a report under Mr. Ansari of Iran which was a consensus report. Committee No. 3 under Mr. Aria of Venezuela dealt with shelter, infrastructure and services, land, and with public participation, and it brought in a report by consensus. The conference dealt with water quality.

It was Canada which led the fight for water targets. It was said here today that we made no financial commitment. No nation there made a commitment for funding in respect of water quality, but we fought for targets in order that there would be piped pottable water to every community by 1990. Canada would have preferred the 1986 date, but perhaps we are a little too progressive and there was a consensus reached in respect of 1990. For Canada this is important because we forget sometimes that in our own communities we do not have clean, piped water, but we hope to in all Canadian communities by the 1980's.

We are prepared to make commitments through our external programs. This is not cynicism. It would have been the height of cynicism or self-righteousness for us to tell the developing nations what their targets should be, because there were also programs of national action. This was a critical part of the whole Habitat Conference which was made up of sovereign states which must set their own targets, their own goals, and their own priorities. If their priorities reflect that which was reflected by the conference, that is, a high priority on water, Canada is very much ready to respond.

Certainly it took the magic of Barbara Ward to dramatize this for the whole world, but that consistently throughout was Canada's position. In addition, the University of British Columbia, as was mentioned, will be the scene for the unique and innovative audio-visual program which will be for the transfer of information. Not only the audio-visual program itself, but all the other documents and upgrading and enriching it as time goes on, will be of advantage to Canadians and also to other people throughout the world.

There were plans for international co-operation and institutional arrangements, and this came of Committee One under Father Muhoho of Kenya. It is true that a consensus was not reached on a statement of principles, but it is rather striking that but for perhaps ten or 15 words there would have been a consensus. It was with sadness that I noted this was all that prevented us from reaching a total consensus.

It is this planning for international action which should go to the setting of priorities and the preparation of programs to which Canada will respond as we do already through our CIDA people. In this way we exchange internationally technology, know-how, and resources. Many things are still to come as a result of the conference.

The level of consciousness throughout the world was raised immeasurably in this whole area of human settlements. Country after country had programs which were going on before Habitat. Some made them a national effort. Through the activities of many, many people in the forum under Mr. Van Puttan of The Hague, and perhaps fortunately with the help of people like Barbara Ward, Margaret Mead, Buckminster Fuller and Mother Theresa, there was a consciousness that permeated every facet of Habitat, and those people who were interested became fully aware of what the basic problems are in the world, where our priorities and commitments should lie. So it was hardly a waste.

● (2110)

Many steps forward were taken. We did not solve the problem of human settlements, I might say also. We just started the process. This was the second stage of a process. There was a long preparatory process. Habitat was the time when we made our commitments, and now is the time of implementation. There will be a time of monitoring too. There will be monitoring at a national level which we will do here in Canada, I hope in the fall when there will be meetings involving our delegation and the non-governmental organizations, and there will be international monitoring through the United Nations both on a global and on a regional basis.

In so far as our own concerns about human settlements are concerned we face some issues very squarely. There is the question of land which really reflected the Canadian reality. It exposed us. That is fair enough because it was a national delegation. I must say I take exception to the reference to particular names. The name was raised of Mr. Teron, the secretary to the ministry. He really fought very hard for a very liberal position in those committees.

There were others present there who represented Canadian reality, the mixed economy and the federal nature of our country. That I consider a great assist because now it has exposed the problems for Canadians to see, for governments to see. I now am making contact with the ministers responsible in the various provinces across the country so that we can face that problem squarely together for the very first time.

There are jurisdictional problems, and there have been problems presented before. However, there has been a reluctance to sit down together to do something about it. I do not care if we sit down together or work in parallel, if the municipalities sit with the provinces or if we all sit together, or whether or not the private sector is there, the fact is that it has to be approached with urgency because obviously the problem is there and it will not go away. We have come to realize that certainly land is not a commodity but is a resource. This is the way in which we have to face it. Regrettably the debate today and elsewhere focused on the windfall profits in land, which are a problem. We have ways to deal with them through taxation. The provincial governments have ways to deal with this matter through taxation, and I guess also the municipalities.

We have to examine the matter much more thoroughly. However, that is only one element in the high cost of land and housing. There are many other factors. It is an important element, but it is not the most important. We have to sit down and look at it in the totality. Our job is not just to recapture profits for the community, which we do in many of our programs now; we also have to reduce the problems in respect of serviced land so that we can get housing at a lower price.

We have made our commitments in respect of water. We have to work very hard to meet them. We are making progress through our municipal infrastructure programs, and even this morning we had further meetings on how we could move into the area of remote communities where the greatest problems are.

There is the whole question of energy conservation, the design of our communities, and the need for proper urban transportation. This problem certainly has developed, and is one to which we certainly will have to give much greater priority as a result of this conference. This is something to which we are addressing ourselves now.

Then there were the problems of the Third World. We have problems in Canada. All developed nations have problems, or perhaps the industrialized nations, because some of those less industrialized are perhaps more developed as societies. But we can hope. We have the resources and the skills, and all we need are the political will and the priority to make them work. But in the Third World they do not have that luxury. When you are dealing with the squatter settlements of Asia, Africa, Latin America, and even in some North American areas to some extent, we see problems of immense proportions.

We talk about children and families living in refugee camps in Palestine and elsewhere. In this regard we have immense problems to which we must address ourselves as a world community. When we look at the villages in Asia, Africa, and Latin America which have never known clean water, where the women perhaps spend five hours a day hauling water, never really clean water, when the same water is used for cooking, drinking, washing, laundry and for defecating, end where virtually 100 per cent of the people suffer from water-borne disease, our problems fade into insignificance.

I do not believe our answer is to be able to provide housing for all the people of the world. If we can get that one first priority of clean water in each community then we have made immense progress. Then we need some decent sewage disposal, health services, and education, and then people will start building their own homes and their own communities. Then they can have a piece of land which they can call their own. Then they can have tenure of land, some pride and some stake in the community. Then things will happen. Then the problem of population, and not until then, will start to fade because then, as one of the hon. members opposite said, the families who have eight children, two of whom survive, will realize that maybe if they have two or three the two or three will live, and they will have the education and the will to do the proper family planning.

Those are the things which also come home to us as Canadians and as members of a world community. Organizations like CIDA and others have now focused in on the problems of water, sewage, and of human settlements, as has the World Bank and as have other international institutions. We must really face these issues squarely. We must realize that Habitat was not to cure all the problems of the world. It made immense progress in those areas it was intended to address.

I believe I have responded to many of the questions raised by the hon. member for Broadview, or certainly my colleagues have in the area of nuclear waste and in the area of the environment. I did want to deal particularly as I have with the question of land where the incremental gain being recaptured is only one element in the whole land picture, as I am sure he realizes quite well. I am sure that because it was a federal delegation, and because the provincial ministers were present, there was a disposition to meet on this subject. There is no commitment, but I will be in touch with my provincial colleagues to address this issue together as quickly as we possibly can.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) indicated that the Minister of Justice, the leader of the Canadian delegation, reserved Canada's position on these important issues. I think he will agree in all fairness that he made it perfectly clear that there was a lot of area for compromise and for agreement and consensus. There was only one area which prevented us and all other nations from supporting it, and that indeed was unfortunate.

Other members have zeroed in on other points of concern. I note that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) mentioned the question of rhetoric as opposed to action. Of course none of us can afford this kind of self-righteousness. Conferences are made up of words, and politicians use words. So do non-governmental organizations which sometimes do not have the responsibility for implementation, so I do not think this is a case of the kettle calling the pot black. It is a matter of realizing our responsibility in this respect and making commitments, as nations did.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) of course mentioned the question of press attention. This was raised. It was rather a disappointement because I am told by UN hands and by the press people generally that the press arrangements were the finest ever made for such a conference. Yet editors thought it best simply to focus on those highly contentious issues which were not central to the conference, those about which it is easier to write perhaps, and which attract more attention.

Having said that, I think the Vancouver press and the British Columbia press generally were very responsible and covered the conference in great depth, as did radio and television. Many journalists took a serious interest in the whole issue of human settlements and reported it very well and in depth. Indeed I am rather pleased to see the press reaction now, a week or so later, which did not take an interest in the conference before but in doing an assessment now is doing it wisely.

● (2120)

The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) spoke about the danger of self-righteousness. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) was cynical about our commitments with regard to water. I think that a healthy degree of cynicism is good, but so is a healthy degree of naïveté. I would not like to be out of balance either way.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal spoke about politicization. I should like to repeat that this was not surprising. We hoped it would not happen, but this is the real world and it did happen. As a matter of fact it might be unproductive because the Third World is not monolithic, and because sometimes it detracts from the substance of these conferences, and more and more people are coming to realize that it is best to keep the specialized conferences as much to the point as possible.

We cannot believe for a moment that other problems will go away or that they are indeed extraneous. They are not extraneous to us as a world community, they are problems with which we must deal very seriously because if we forget the little children in the Methari Valley in Kenya, the children in the refugee camps in Palestine, or those children who have not survived the Warsaw ghetto, then indeed as a world community we are in great difficulty. I ask hon. members to assess this conference properly, to see what happened at Habitat, to look at the accomplishments, the plusses, and to hope for more of them in the future, but also to see what the alternatives are so that nations can get together and air their problems.

Even if we do not like the real world, we must be exposed to it. It is much better to have those differences on the table with the cards face up so that we can deal with them rationally and reach solutions. We in Canada cannot isolate ourselves from the world and its problems, and this was another benefit of Habitat because it brought them home more closely to us, more closely to the people of British Columbia and especially of Vancouver who really had a close-up view of the entire conference.

I respect the cynicism of the hon. member for Broadview, but I do not share it. I think that we accomplished a great deal at Habitat, and I think the world made a great step forward there. We will look back, not in 20 years but in two or three years, and see major action taking place as the result of this conference, as we have seen major action taking place as the result of the conference on the environment at Stockholm.

As I said, Habitat reflected the reality and the despair of the world, but also the hope and the highest ideals of mankind. I appreciate the fact that having a big heart and good-will is not enough—there must be commitment, there must be action to follow. But I am proud of Canada's role as host of Habitat and as a delegation at Habitat. I think all facets of the Canadian presence contributed well and did Canada proud.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the minister a question, if you will allow it. Can the minister tell us what specific plans he has for a follow up to Habitat. He just touched lightly in his address on the subject. The non-government organizations which attended Habitat are most anxious to have follow up meetings across the country, and I wonder if the minister would tell us now what plans he has to promote the national program of action which came out of Habitat in a series of seminars on a regional basis across the country, perhaps culminating in a national meeting in the winter of 1977.

Mr. Danson: It is not only the non-government organizations but the non-organized governments that must get together now. I think we must leave sufficient room for assessment so that non-government organizations will be encouraged, as they are being encouraged, to meet, assess and monitor us, politicians. I do not want to give specific dates but I hope that not too late in the fall there can be a national meeting of non-government organizations. We have to decide if that is not too early, if perhaps we should not allow a longer time range to give more time for assessment. Certainly action in this direction has been started. I do not expect miracle answers overnight, but the process has to start quickly and we need the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities, which I am sure will be happy to participate.

In so far as external programs are concerned, I am aware of the fact that CIDA is looking at these new programs to respond to them. I think we will look at our energy conservation programs, and urban transport will get greater priority, all of this within the context of what are real economic restraints. I think this puts a different complexion on them, but I believe that this follow up and monitoring must start very quickly even on an international plane. The secretary general will be reporting to EcoSoc in Geneva this August, and then he and I will be reporting to the General Assembly in New York in the fall. We hope we can reach agreement on the institutional arrangements so that international action can start. The UBC project is now under way and going to work immediately so that the very valuable information which was collected from many countries will not be dissipated immediately after the conference.

I can assure the hon. member that we will not let grass grow under our feet. This will not be fast enough to satisfy him or me, but we will certainly try as best we can.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that only 30 minutes are left in the debate I have no way of forcing my preference over other members who want to speak, but what I have to say will only take seven minutes in order to allow equal time to the remaining four speakers who want to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: I agree with the minister. I find that I myself am not guilty enough of ethnocentricity. I find that I am not guilty of measuring the standards and values of other nations based on the values I hold in this country to be right, good and equal for Canadians. I think that if more of us were guilty of ethnocentricity in reverse, we would perhaps be a little more concerned about some of the conditions we discussed, that were discussed at Habitat, and that were mentioned by the minister tonight.

● (2130)

Even though there are problems abroad, that does not in any way wipe out the real problems facing Canadians with respect to housing. There are people in this country who have a great hope, and they hope that one day they will be in a position to be able to own their own homes. That hope exists among young people in spite of the failures of the minister and the government. These are the days when old men dream dreams of how things used to be, and young men have visions of despair. Why has this hope turned to despair? Why are young people having to give up the right or the possibility of owning their own homes?

Just in passing, I was disappointed with the answer the minister gave me this afternoon in the question period. I was disappointed that he did not level with me and this House with reference to the one year mortgages which are a rip off to first time home owners in this country. The minister chose to evade the question.

I hope that there is still time for repentance, that the minister will read his answer, come to his senses, and tomorrow with tears streaming down his face stand in his place and right the wrong, and tell the people of this country what he intends to do with reference to the situation which has arisen with the bait and switch of one year mortgages.

In the time left to me I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the situation in the United States where, primarily in the area of housing, they make use of tax incentives, housing credit assistance, and cash subsidies, with the emphasis on tax incentives. I am wondering if the minister has given consideration to this and whether he would give thought to moving in this direction and providing tax incentives on interest paid on mortages—perhaps over 8 per cent or 9 per cent, but that could be decided upon—and perhaps to avoid double taxation, tax credits for taxes paid on municipal property to be deducted from revenue, primarily personal income tax.

I think that the advantages of this would be numerous. It would ease the burden of interest rate fluctuation, particularly high interest rates, on the taxpayer in a visible fashion; stimulate demand for home ownership; assist new families purchasing homes by allowing higher interest costs to be deducted from the generally lower incomes of younger families in the early years of family formation; and assist in building long range stability within the housing field. This scheme avoids tax upon tax, which I have already mentioned, and which has been part of past schemes. Home ownership ought to become a reality.

Just 50 years ago in this country education was considered to be a privilege, and now we consider that to be a basic right. I want to say categorically that I believe it is a basic right of expectation of every Canadian to own his own home or to have the option to own his own home. However, the option to own one's own home applies only in a certain context. We want to come to grips with that. It is not good enough, day after day, to give us the kind of verbiage that the minister gives us so well. It is not good enough to articulate the problems and then wring your hands in despair and say it is not possible.

Sir, Canadians from one end of this country to the other cannot understand why it is, with our vast resources in land and natural resources and with our hundreds of thousands of acres of land and timber, that our economic system does not allow people to own their own homes. It is not good enough that we cannot put our interest rates in order and that you, sir, cannot put your House in order to bring this about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member is not blaming the Chair for all these weaknesses.

Mr. Whiteway: With those words I will conclude by saying that I challenge the minister tomorrow, sometime during the question period or perhaps in a statement on motions, to put right the wrong he made during the question period today, and the wrong which was stated by his parliamentary secretary in his absence last week.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join the debate on Habitat, 1976, which I believe was the largest United Nations conference ever held. It is certainly a credit to the UN, to the great city of Vancouver, to the Government of Canada and its delegation, and especially to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) for his devoted leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Philbrook: As we have heard, some praise Habitat for its results and some criticize, but I believe that the most important thing about it is that it happened. I do not think any reasonable person can deny that a new initiative had to be taken on such a high priority subject as human settlements. Human settlements, of course, mean much more than housing. They mean such things as land and space, water and disposal, a stable climate and an agreeable environment.

I also congratulate my friend, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), for raising this subject, although I am afraid I cannot agree with his skepticism about it.

I would like to speak for a little while about one particular subject, as did the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who is also the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and that is the subject of Canadian policy with regard to nuclear sales. Human settlements depend not just on structures and resources, but also to a very large extent on that basic commodity, energy. There is no question that, as a result of the recent changes in the world energy situation, many countries must turn to sources other than oil to meet their increased requirements. It is the obligation of the world community, including Canada, to help them to do so. There are a number of sources which must be adequately explored and developed, including indigenous energy resources such as coal and hydro, which in many cases were not considered at all seriously in the days of cheap oil. That has only come about recently.

New technologies, also largely ignored until recently, will have to be examined urgently and carefully. Nuclear energy, especially nuclear fission, however, is the major technological option available today. It is by no means applicable in all cases because of the scale of power requirements and power grids, and because of the massive investments in capital required. Nuclear technology is highly complex and sensitive, and only a relatively small number of countries have the technological resources to manage it adequately.

The government recognizes these limitations in deciding on export sales. It is, however, the responsibility of Canada as a member of the international community to make energy resources available to other countries, and in those cases where nuclear energy is the most appropriate, to share that technology.

Such sales, however, are only authorized under the most stringent international safeguards against the diversion of Canadian assistance to non peaceful uses. Canada is prepared to forgo sales where these guarantees are not available, and is acting vigorously in all international forums to raise the world standard of guarantees to levels which give the greatest protection against diversion to explosive use.

In general, Canadian export sales decisions are not, as charged by the opposition, based on an overriding commercial motivation. The government welcomes Canada gaining national benefits through world acceptance of CANDU, but this is not the central element in reaching decisions on nuclear exports. Nuclear transfers are motivated by the responsibility to help with the world energy situation on a number of fronts, including, but by no means restricted to, nuclear. Sales are made only on the basis that the facilities Canada supplies are built to the best and safest standard and are operated with the best protection for the environment. They are only authorized when there is a high degree of assurance that the facilities will be used for agreed and purely peaceful uses. Having said that in generality, there are a number of questions posed recently on the specifics of this particular subject. I should like to quote a few of those questions, and some of the answers which are widely appreciated.

[Mr. Philbrook.]

● (2140)

I can think of about ten different questions that arise: the diversion of spent fuel; the return of spent fuel to Canada; Canadian nuclear export policy in general; the non-proliferation treaty as a pre-condition of sale; justification of Canada's reactor sales to non-NPT countries; a moratorium on nuclear exports; CANDU licensing safeguards; bilateral inspections on nuclear safeguards; CANDU licensing negotiations, with Italy in particular; safeguards in uranium sales, and finally, environmental considerations.

We should look at one or two of those questions, Mr. Speaker. First is the question about diversion of spent fuel or misuse of spent fuel. It has been alleged that the CANDU reactor is particularly suited for the purpose of diversion if a country desired to do so. Regardless of verification techniques, how can the government be supporting the sale of such a potential bomb maker to countries like Argentina and the Republic of Korea? The answer is that both Argentina and the Republic of Korea have a nuclear power plant from other sources. Canada is not supplying reprocessing equipment and technology. All nuclear reactors produce plutonium and there is no essential difference in this respect between CANDU and light water reactors exported by other suppliers.

The quantities of spent fuel available in Argentina and the Republic of Korea will be considerable, quite independent of the CANDU reactor to be constructed in these countries. The CANDU facilities will be under stringent safeguards, including a Canadian veto on reprocessing. This may hopefully lead to an upgrading of safeguards on reactors sold by other suppliers.

Let us look at another question. Why is it that Canada does not insist on what appears to be the ultimate measure of safeguards in terms of restricting the use of plutonium by the Republic of Korea by having all the spent fuel from the reactor returned to Canada? The answer is that this option was carefully considered by Canada and it has been decided, as we have noted in the House previously, that on balance such a requirement would not be the best to serve the interests of Canada.

Apart from the serious environmental problems that such a course would create, it would not prevent a country, intent on violating an agreement, from retaining the fuel either by directly abrogating the agreement or by non-compliance. In the event of abrogation of the agreement, that country would be left with a significant stock of spent fuel stored for cooling which is essential before shipment, as well as fuel in the reactor and fuel about to be inserted in the reactor. Since this quantity of material would be more than ample for any immediate production of plutonium, the margin of protection against diversion would not be nearly as significant as the question indicates, at best it would mean a reduction in available stocks over a very few months.

Canada does have the clear right to prohibit reprocessing of fuel from the reactor and has given clear notice that it is not willing at this time to agree to it being carried out. In the government's view this stipulation, together with the inspection mechanisms in place, provide an adequate level of protection against diversion.

Perhaps I should raise one final question, the third out of those ten, and that is on the general Canadian nuclear export policy. The following question has been posed: in light of the criticism by such a well-informed critic as Ralph Nader that nuclear exports to Third World countries are an example of "criminal responsibility", how can the government continue to maintain that it is pursuing moral objectives in selling CANDU reactors to Third World countries? In particular, how does the government respond to criticism that less developed countries do not have the technological capability to manage such complex technology safely?

The answer is we believe that in speaking in the very extensive debate in this House on March 23, we outlined the government's policy very clearly. The government does not maintain that nuclear power is, in all cases and at all times, the only or even the most desirable energy alternative for all developing countries. It is recognized that likely only some Third World countries at any particular time need or are fully able to operate such a sophisticated energy source. What we are saying is that in the cases where the need and the ability exist, this energy should not be denied.

The moral problem is a complex one and should be examined in all its dimensions. I cannot accept the suggestion that Canada should fail to observe its international obligations to help developing nations achieve economic progress. Surely the way to meet the concerns raised is not to cut off access to nuclear technology but to provide the means and techniques to ensure its use, with safety, and under safeguards.

I might note in this connection that Canada's approach in marketing the CANDU system is to ensure that the reactors are not only built to Canada's high standards, but are handed over to operators of high technical competence and run under international safeguards earlier outlined in this House.

The other seven questions can certainly be answered with an equal amount of thoughtfulness.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the world must continue to address itself to all basic human and social concerns such as settlements and all means to that end, no matter how challenging those means may be. A fortunate people, like Canadians especially, cannot afford to shirk that responsibility.

Some approaches, such as nuclear energy, will themselves give rise to new concerns and new questions such as the questions which I have just reviewed. We are answering today's questions and we must answer tomorrow's, but answer them we will.

Canada is in the forefront of such progress of benefit to all mankind. A great deal of the credit for this goes to our federal government and especially to our Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I for one shall be pleased to continue supporting him and all the efforts of our government both at home and abroad to take care of the needs of people. Habitat was an important step toward that goal.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the brief time that I have to devote to the subject of debate tonight there are some areas I should like to discuss, though possibly not in the context of the motion.

Habitat Conference

I should like to start with the question of a pure water policy and the environmental concerns that were expressed. While I have some very serious reservations about the Habitat conference they really do not lie upon the shoulders of the government for I honestly believe that the minister set out in a very forthright fashion to produce something that nations around the world could be proud of, and set out to do a job that the United Nations and Canadians would be proud of. I think he was frustrated in that.

Some of the Third World countries set political priorities; that was the way they viewed it, and in my view it was unfortunate. The minister made reference to a developing situation at the United Nations some years ago which concerned the German Republic and China, but those are not the countries that are creating problems today at the United Nations; instead it is the countries that need our help. In my view those countries are going to have to be dragged through the doorway to that help, and they are going to resist every inch of the way. They used Habitat as a political forum, and I think that unquestionably they are the ones which are going to suffer rather than the countries devoted to human settlements.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move to the question of pure water. This is an area of great concern, and perhaps the classic example of this concern is demonstrated by the series of questions I placed on the order paper in 1974. On December 11, 1974, I placed on the order paper the following question:

● (2150)

What is the estimated tonnage for the next five years of human waste that will be dumped from vessels plying the Great Lakes?

The Department of the Environment replied:

The estimated quantity of human sewage, including the usual 32 gallons flush water per person per day, is 7 million tons for the next five years.

I put the question on the order paper because the then minister of the environment had indicated that, in her view, it was not necessary to take action with regard to the amount of human sewage being dumped in the Great Lakes from Great Lakes vessels. She felt that the five-year moratorium provision was fine.

My second question of that date reads as follows:

What is the estimated average cost per commercial vessel for the installation of holding tanks for human waste?

The department's response reads as follows:

The estimated average cost per commercial vessel for the installation of holding tanks for human waste ranges between $23,000 for new tugs to $74,000 for new lakers and between $28,000 for existing tugs to $81,500 for existing lakers.

If the federal government had wanted to clear up a serious difficulty, it could have provided subsidies. For smaller vessels the subsidy, amortized over five years, would work out at between $5,000 and $10,000, an insignificant sum to pay for something which would help to clean up the Great Lakes. I use the word insignificant because, in terms of total pollution of the Great Lakes, the quantity of human sewage dumped from vessels is relatively insignificant.

Habitat Conference

The third part of my order paper question reads:

What improvements for the holding or disposal of human waste in Great Lakes ships are anticipated in five years time and at what cost?

In 1974 the then minister had said she was not prepared to do anything for five years. In part, the answer of the department informed me that in five years time I could anticipate:

... Construction of approximately 12 shore-based reception facilities, strategically located, and designed to receive commercial ships' sewage for subsequent discharge in a manner which ensures adequate treatment. The anticipated total cost of these facilities... is $2,500,000 assuming that, existing wharf space will be made available at no charge.

I wonder how far $2.5 million would go, even if paid as a partial subsidy, toward the installation of sewage holding tanks in Great Lakes steamers.

Lastly, I asked in my order paper question:

To what estimated percentage degree does the dumping of human waste from such vessels contribute to the pollution of the Great Lakes?

According to the department's answer, approximately .3 per cent is attributable to ships' crews.

When you consider that .3 per cent of pollution is attribuable to ships' crews, but that in five years Great Lakes ships discharge seven million tons altogether into the Great Lakes, it is clear that the total volume of human sewage dumped into the Great Lakes in five years is in the order two and one third billion tons. That is shocking.

The minister indicated that we have a clean water policy. Let me say that the people of Kootenay West are most interested in that policy. I hope the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will agree with British Columbia to provide in the valley a pipeline to carry pure, potable water for all communities along the Columbia River or, assist the province and municipalities concerned by providing for pumping stations to pump water from the Columbia River into holding areas where the water can be purified for human consumption and industrial and agricultural uses. At present the area cannot expect to develop unless it has available considerable additional volumes of clean water.

The water is available. Unfortunately in the Columbia River below the High Arrow Dam one sees the pollution effects of a pulp mill and also of a lead smelter. Would that not be an excellent program for DREE? What an excellent contribution the department would make to providing the pure water advocated by the government. The government could help us in two areas; one is in my riding; the other is the Great Lakes.

I am concerned about the question of nuclear reactors. I suggest that anyone wishing to debate that subject will open up a can of worms on my side of the House. We have heard many statements on the subject from the government benches. Perhaps the most flowery and inconsequential statements are made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). There is beautiful rhetoric, adding up to nothing, except pending disaster. In my view CANDU sales are an example of fiscal irresponsibility. The government is ignoring its responsibility in the nuclear field to all countries of the world. Expert after expert has offered testimony showing that CANDU is a financial calamity, a nuclear catastrophe and should not be considered. I contend that if the government were concerned more about pure water and less about heavy water, it would have accomplished a great deal more.

We have seen the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) beating his breast and expressing concern because people in the poorer countries of the world must drink lousy water. Heaven knows, I have seen it myself and could not agree more. I suggest it is time the government wound down its CANDU policy and wound up its pure water policy.

I now come to the tar sands. I am greatly concerned because Alberta has claimed sole responsibility for evironmental controls with respect to the tar sands. I saw the same attitude displayed two years ago in British Columbia. I saw evidence of pollution connected with a DREE project in my riding. When I wrote to the provincial government, asking what they were prepared to do, they said, in so many words, "You are a federal member; keep your nose out of this." I say that since federal funds are used in DREE projects of that kind, the province's attitude was irresponsible. I could say much more; unfortunately I see my time has expired. May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have now expired.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since there has been no public announcement of the business for tomorrow morning, is there someone here who is an acting House leader, who can tell us what the business will be tomorrow morning, or can confirm that it will be Bill C-88?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, yes, it is to be Bill C-88.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At eleven o'clock in the morning?

Mr. Drury: Yes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under the provisions of Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—LOCKOUT OF AIR CANADA FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE RESUMPTION OF MEDIATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, for the last three or four weeks I have been calling on the government to direct the Auditor General to conduct a complete audit into the financial fiasco, or complete financial breakdown, of the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg. I was hoping, after what happened last week, that the minister would take action. Unfortunately the government had sluffed me off and referred the entire matter to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. In no way can the committee conduct an audit into the financial fiasco at the finance branch of Air Canada in Winnipeg. Nevertheless, I shall welcome seeing Air Canada representatives appear before the standing committee as I wish to discuss several matters with them, and will be glad to hear their comments.

May I allude to a statement made to the Winnipeg Free Press on June 17 by Michael H. Cochrane, vice president of the Air Canada finance branch. He denied union allegations that mismanagement had contributed to the airline's record $12.5 million deficit last year. He said two major audits by private firms in the last year had thoroughly studied Air Canada accounting procedures and found them satisfactory. That statement is completely false. There was no detailed accounting whatsoever by any accounting firm in the finance branch.

● (2200)

He went on to say that the audits were conducted by Clarkson and Gordon Ltd. for the Estey inquiry into the airline last year, and by Coopers and Lybrand for the airline itself for 1975. The deficit, he said, was caused by a major decline in passenger traffic, rising fuel bills and other escalating prices.

In the Coopers and Lybrand report in the 1975 financial statement of Air Canada they state:

Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures—

The general review did not consist of a detailed study into the airline billing at the finance branch, Winnipeg.

Also, under the terms of reference from the Estey report, Clarkson and Gordon were required primarily to review the Winnipeg centralized payment system, the Montreal payment system, the Dorval purchasing system, certain local branch purchases and the system of authorization for expenditure. The review did not include payrolls and did not examine, except in a very summary fashion, the subroutines related to specific disbursements.

As a result of this review Clarkson, Gordon & Co. prepared a description of the disbursement systems and submitted this description to the commission, a brief summary of which is included in Chapter 5 of the Estey report. They did not go into detailed billing whatsoever.

I discussed this with the employees of the finance branch in Winnipeg. They told me that no outside auditors came into the finance branch to do a detailed study. Some employees recalled outside auditors dropping by in 1972. However, there have been no outside auditors doing any review since 1972.

Also in the Estey report it is recognized that, under the Financial Administration Act, the Auditor General is eligible to be appointed as auditor or joint auditor of the corporation, but such has not been the case in the past. It is certainly time that it was done, especially in view of the charges by the CALEA union in Winnipeg. Also, in the Estey report it states, and I quote:

There is no doubt that the final fiscal responsibility for Air Canada resides in Parliament when all other resources fail and therefore Parliament is entitled to the fullest and clearest financial reporting.

That is all I ask for, a clear, precise report from the Auditor General. The government has a responsibility to send the Auditor General there in light of the serious charges by the CALEA union in Winnipeg.

I have cited many cases of mismanagement over the past two weeks. One was that there are no longer any enforced controls for travel agents reporting ticket sales. As of October, 1975 there was in excess of $96,000 worth of unreported travel agent ticket sales, which represents a minimum of $2,208,000 unpaid for transportation. There is no mention of this in the Coopers and Lybrand report or in the Clarkson, Gordon report. They did not touch on any of these matters at all, so that Mr. Cochrane's statement that they have had a real in depth audit made is absolute nonsense.

I have also pointed out that Air Canada's own internal auditors endeavoured to audit the refund bank drafts account in 1975. This account is not less than $2.5 million per month, about $30 million a year. They finally gave up, and this account remains unaudited since 1972. Therefore over the past four years a $120 million account has been in question. The Clarkson, Gordon statement in the Estey report makes no mention of that whatsoever.

I have also been pointing out that Air Canada has been writing off debts from corporations as large as $186,000. How can it allow a debt for air travel to accumulate to the amount of $186,000? It is rather obvious that these two firms have not been doing any detailed study whatsoever in the finance branch in Winnipeg. There is no mention of that in the Estey report or in the Coopers and Lybrand statement in the Air Canada report for 1975.

I have also pointed out in the past that Air Canada has been breaking IATA rules and regulations. They have issued bar vouchers for Tours Mount Royal to the tune of $27,384. All that Air Canada collected from this travel agent was $9,445; they wrote off $17,938. This is illegal under IATA rules and regulations and is another matter that the Auditor General should look at.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that the time allotted to the hon. member has now expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just spoke had labour conditions, the lockout of Air Canada finance branch employees put on the orders of the day. Well, he discussed only the auditing of Air Canada accounting books. If that was the matter he wanted discussed tonight we would certainly have had someone from the Department of Transport come down to answer the very important matter he raised.

But the matter he raised for the late show was labour conditions, the lockout of Air Canada finance branch employees and the possible resumption of mediation. Well, I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member who personally asks to debate a specific issue should debate an entirely different matter. I do not understand his attitude at all. I understand that he is interested in what is happening in Winnipeg since he is the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (M. McKenzie) but when one wants to raise a point and receive an adequate answer I think one must stick to the point one wants to have discussed and not raise another in a debate like tonight.

So, with respect to the problems of the Air Canada lockout I think it can be said—and the hon. member knows it; if he does not, he should—that a—

[English]

A senior departmental mediator has held several meetings with the parties in an effort to resolve the dispute which led to rotating strike action by the union members and more recently a temporary shutdown and readjustment of the work in the finance branch operation at Winnipeg. Over this past weekend, officials of the department have been monitoring the situation, and the mediator was in contact with the parties and arranged to commence further mediation sessions in Ottawa on Tuesday, June 22, 1976. Because of the difficulty in arranging transportation between Winnipeg and Ottawa, it is now necessary to reschedule the meetings for Wednesday, June 23, 1976, provided transportation can be arranged.

Departmental officials are keeping in close contact with this situation and every effort is being made to assist the parties in the resolution of this protracted and very involved dispute. Recently, on June 18, the minister sent a telegram to the President of the Canadian Airline Employees Association which reads as follows:

● (2210)

This is in reply to your telegram advising that you find Air Canada's action of June 16 inexcusable although you recognize the company has exercised its legal rights under the Canada Labour Code. You are aware the union acquired the right to strike and the employer the right to lockout on October 22, 1975.

Apparently my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but I still want to mention that it is not fair to raise a question and then call another question at ten o'clock.

Mr. Paproski: You have to be pretty sharp and know what is going on over there.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. parliamentary secretary knows that the adjournment motion is a very special procedure. There are no points of order, and if he wants to raise the matter I suggest he do so tomorrow afternoon after the question period.

[Mr. Leblanc (Laurier).]

[English]

ENERGY—PROPOSAL FOR LOCATION OF URANIUM PROCESSING PLANT IN SAKSATCHEWAN—PUBLIC PARTICIPATION IN SITE DECISION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I undertake to stick directly to the topic I raised in the House on June 17. You will recall that on that date I asked for an assurance from the minister through the parliamentary secretary, who was standing in the place of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), that before a final decision is made on the establishment of an uranium processing plant there would in fact be a full public inquiry. The parliamentary secretary said in reply at that time that Eldorado Limited "when it does make a final decision as to the location of the refinery will have a full public information program". Today in the House the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources again argued for public education on the question of nuclear power. It is all important that those who might be most directly affected have the right to know the full circumstances of the proposal and to make their concerns known as well.

What I was trying to elicit from the parliamentary secretary was an assurance that before the decision is made there will in fact be a full opportunity for representation and a full opportunity for education.

I have had the opportunity of travelling in my constituency in the area which is now under consideration by Eldorado and the provincial government, and I have heard repeated expressions of concern that the decision will be made before an opportunity is given to the public for input, and also before a full explanation of some of the safety factors is given.

If nuclear power refining is as safe as the government maintains, we should have a full public inquiry so that the concerns of the citizens in the area can be laid to rest. As I said, there is to be substantial investment, as this is a capital intensive process. It is anticipated that something in the area of $50 million will be invested. This will be of great economic benefit to the area but, notwithstanding that fact, it is only fair to point out to the parliamentary secretary some of the concerns that are being expressed, and possibly he will take these under advisement and relate them to the minister and Eldorado.

First, before the decision is made hearings should take place. Secondly, only after the environmental impact assessment, which is undertaken by the federal Department of the Environment, is completed and has been made public should a decision be made. The hearings should not simply consider the site of the proposed plant, but whether the refinery plant should in fact be established in the province of Saskatchewan.

Some concerns have been expressed and I would hope that Eldorado, before making its final decision in respect of the location, would in fact deal with these concerns. The public education process should take place before the decision is made and not after.

In regard to the matter of safety, I think the people in the area should be satisfied before a decision is made whether they are getting involved in a situation that has been determined in advance over which there is some concern about safety considerations. These concerns have been expressed to me as first being in respect of radiation. Any level of radiation is known to cause biological damage. Therefore setting "soft standards" can be somewhat arbitrary. Simply because radioactive material is emitted from an industrial source at a level that is safe does not mean that it cannot cause some harm. Apparently no solution has been found to the problem of long-term storage or disposal of the highly radioactive fission products from nuclear reactors. Then there is the question of possibility of theft of the product from the refining plant.

An explanation should be given to the public in respect of the whole area of possible accidents. The arguments of the industry about safety are predicated on a level of fail-safe technology, in the absence of human error, which has not been demonstrated in any other similar venture. The next question is in respect of opposition abroad. We have the example of the recent referendum in California. One third of the people there voted for a moratorium on the development of nuclear power. The people of California have had substantial experience with nuclear power, and I believe the number of people who expressed some concern is significant.

As I say these are the concerns which have been expressed. I simply bring this to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. With the experience of the Port Hope situation I want to know whether this is perceived as being a problem or whether this is a completely different situation. This should be made quite clear to the people in the proposed site area. I bring this to the attention of the parliamentary secretary so that these matters can be dealt with in advance of a decision rather than afterward.

There is also the question of health hazards to workers. I think this is an area which also should be fully explained by Eldorado so that people who might be employed in such a plant would be aware of the situation. Another very important consideration, I think, is the benefit to the province. I think this is an area of public information which should be entertained by the government. I realize this is a capital intensive project. Since there will be something in the area of between 150 and 200 employees it is not a labour intensive project.

These are my remarks and I simply ask for elucidation. What I am hoping to obtain from the parliamentary secretary is assurance that he will in fact undertake that there will be a public inquiry before the final decision is made in respect of the location. I hope he will be able to give an affirmative answer to that.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) I want to assure him that there is considerable economic benefit to the province of Saskatchewan from the establishment of a uranium refinery and conversion facilities in that province. Indeed I do not believe the provincial government would allow this uranium, which is being mined in increasing quantities, to be refined outside the province if it were at all possible to prevent it. In that connection there has been full consultation between the Saskatchewan government and Eldorado Nuclear Limited. As a matter of fact there has been a great deal of consultation with Sedco and the Saskatchewan Scientific Council as well as the government Department of the Environment and other federal government agencies on this subject. At this stage they are evaluating several sites in the province to determine the best possible site from an economic point of view. That is one priority. A second priority is the environmental impact of the plant.

I should caution the hon. member that we are talking about a plant which I believe is to come on stream in the next four to six years. In fact the exact capacity of the plant is not known at this time because firm commitments for production from the new mines coming on stream in Saskatchewan have not been determined. In any event, when this has been decided, the plant will be the most modern possible. The company has indicated that when they get closer to a decision on the actual site preferred, they will have public consultation.

● (2220)

I believe that the environmental impact studies will also require public consultation. Surely it is desirable from every point of view to have as much information available to the people, expecially in the immediate area where the plant will be located. I will make representations to Eldorado to ask that there be good public consultation before a final decision is reached on the question of the location of the uranium refinery in Saskatchewan.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—AREA IN WHICH JOBS WILL BE CREATED THIS YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the question that I am dealing with tonight is one which I put to the minister on May 26, the day following his non-budget. At that time I asked the minister if he could identify where the 250,000 jobs would be created in the current year, and lo and behold the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) helped out the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) by saying "In Canada", and then the Minister of Finance added that he thought there would be an opportunity during the course of the budget debate to get into this point more fully.

I pressed the matter, stating that there had been a suggestion of auxilliary work being created through such studies as the one carried out by the Economic Council of Canada and I asked whether the minister could be more specific, where exactly do they see the 250,000 jobs being created, is it mainly in the private sector, the government sector, or a bit of both; in short, have they make-work programs in mind?

In his second response the Minister of Finance passed it off to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and said he thought that that minister would deal with the question, again during the budgetary debate. Unfortunately no minister has dealt properly with this very vital question in Canada today. I think the most basic tragedy in the nation is the fact that we have some 700,000 people out of work. When you read the budget you find that the minister's own figures indicate that that may be aggravated this year in that it is likely that 300,000 jobs will be needed this year, and yet the budget contemplates the creation of only 250,000 jobs to satisfy those who will be looking for work.

Essentially the government's fundamental problem is that it cannot make up its mind if it intends to count on the private sector to produce the jobs that are needed in the country, or whether it must have public participation to create these jobs. Certainly our belief is that the private sector can produce if the government would renew the confidence that is essential in the private sector to get on with creating the jobs that are needed. This is something that we have emphasized time and time again, but unfortunately we find that the present administration's response is really in response to the problems that it itself creates, and it comes up with the solution that it must participate still further in creating the problem by, according to it, creating the solution.

This minister is very fond of referring us to the United States and of stating, as he did on May 26, that we must wait for world markets to upturn in order that, somehow or other, we can get up to a higher level of prosperity in this country. I would point out to the minister and his parliamentary secretary that the U.S. has in fact turned its economy around in a much more imaginative way than we have in Canada. It has done it essentially by counting on the private sector to produce the type of real growth to which I am referring tonight.

In short, I hope the parliamentary secretary will give us a further explanation as to what the government plans, not just for the immediate future, not just for between now and March 31 next, but what it plans for 1977 and 1978, to ensure that there will be a lower level of unemployment in this country than we see at the present time.

Having talked with some backbenchers on the government side, I believe that the hard fact is that they have no plans. They are drifting, and they are hoping, but that is not good enough. Other nations have shown, through imagination and through proper industrial strategy, that there are ways to create job opportunities and to relieve unemployment.

With the resources we have there is no reason to believe that we cannot do likewise, and certainly for the minister, in response to my question on May 26 and also in response to the questions of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), to indicate that it is the export trade turn up upon which we are counting, and nothing else, is not satisfactory.

I would like to conclude now, and I hope that the parliamentary secretary will shed a light as to where in fact these 250,000 jobs are going to be created. If he cannot, we must assume that the minister himself had no idea of what he spoke on May 25.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) stated when he began his speech he did ask questions. I looked at the questions he raised on May 26, and he is quite correct, he did ask questions, but I think he stopped short in looking at page 13845 because on the next page there were questions raised and answers given.

At the risk of being repetitious I should say that the hon. member should have paid attention to the speech which was given in this House by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) which regard to job creation, a subject with which he is very much concerned. I will try to be very brief, but I will be going over the same answers which were given, with possibly a little more detail.

In the section of the budget speech dealing with the international economy the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) pointed out that, and I quote:

> The international economy is launched on recovery from the depths of the worst recession since the great depression of the 1930's. The output of the industrial nations making up the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development stagnated during 1974 and declined sharply at an over all annual rate of 5 per cent during the first half of last year. This decline, fortunately, was arrested by mid-year, and with the United States in the lead, the prospect for strengthening recovery seems well-assured.

As a result, one of the main sources of strength in the Canadian economy in 1976 will be our growth in exports. This growth will influence the gains in employment on an industrial and regional basis.

In terms of particular industries, we expect that the recovery in our exports will have a major impact on the goods-producing industries including manufacturing, mining and forestry. Both output and employment declined in these industries in 1975 as our exports feel sharply. Manufacturing employment should lead the way, followed by mining and forestry. However, the major portion of employment growth during the year will emanate, as usual, from the services industries. Personal, business and community services industries will create the largest number of new jobs followed by wholesale and retail trade and transportation, communication and storage. Little growth is expected in the various levels of government employment during 1976.

In terms of the regional aspects, we expect all regions to benefit from the recovery. However, given the expected demand for our exports, strong output and employment growth should be registered in those areas which send goods to foreign markets. These include areas that export manufactured goods including automobiles and other durable goods, mining products including coal, and non-ferrous metals and forestry products including lumber, newsprint, pulp and paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to special order adopted by this House on June 7.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 22, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw) moved:

That Bill C-88, An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), be amended in Clause 1 by

(a) striking out lines 10 to 12 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"bers who shall be actual producers having the qualifications prescribed by any regulations made pursuant to section 10.5".

(b) striking out the words "members of the Advisory Committee and of" in lines 20 and 21 at page 3.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the amendment will be brief, but in spite of that fact I think they are very important.

Bill C-88 provides in section 10.5 (3): as follows

The Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the conduct of an election of members of the Advisory Committee and in particular, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations

(c) prescribing the qualifications of members of the Advisory Committee and of actual producers for the purposes of section 10;

The purpose of my amendment is to spell out in the Act that members of the Advisory Committee shall be actual producers. It is important that this be spelled out in the Act in order that producers in the Wheat Board area will know what the ground rules are. If it is not spelled out in the Act but is left to the Governor in Council to make regulations, these regulations can be changed from time to time without the knowledge of the producers, so they could suddenly find themselves faced with a change in qualifications. On the other hand, if it is enshrined in legislation, it would be necessary before any change is made that a bill be brought into this House and passed through the usual stages of first and second readings, the report stage and third reading. When a bill is presented to the House a debate takes place and members of the public, in this case the producers in particular, would know what was happening and would have plenty of opportunity to make representations to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board as well as to their individual MP's who in turn could make their wishes known.

The Canadian Wheat Board is charged with the sale of grain primarily for export purposes. Its function is of prime importance to the producer. The purpose of the Advisory Committee is to ensure that the producer has input into the decisions of the Board. I am sure officials of the grain trade have plenty of opportunity to have input from time to time. Therefore, in my opinion, it is very important that members of this Advisory Committee be actual producers.

We held some agriculture committee hearings in connection with this bill, and on May 12 last Mr. Vogel, chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, appeared before the committee. In giving evidence he said this, and I quote from page 87.6 of issue No. 87 of the evidence before the committee:

One of the hardest jobs for the Board is two-way communication, communicating back to the 160,000-odd farmers whom we represent, and in turn receiving their views back. There has as yet been no perfect way discovered to do this, and it is a very hard thing. I think we have made progress generally as a board in our information work that we are doing and I think the election of an advisory committee was a step in that direction.

Later on at the same meeting, and I quote from page 87.10, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had this to say:

It is a question really of having people that are farmers and, I think, clear sight of the Wheat Board being in touch directly with some farmers about problems that concern them. We all know how easy it is to forget the obvious if you are not dealing with the problem daily as the farmer is.

Later on he said:

I am sure the Wheat Board consults with many others as well as the Advisory Committee.

I think the key words are in the first sentence I quoted, namely, "having people that are farmers". The intent of my motion is that the members of the advisory committee be actual producers or, in other words, farmers. Since presenting this amendment I have spoken to members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association as well as individual farmers who have no connection with any particular agricultural organization. Without exception these farmers told me that they support the tenor of my motion, namely that members of the advisory committee shall be actual producers. As a matter of fact, the minister in commenting upon my motion before the committee on Tuesday May 18 as recorded at page 89:31 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture said:

● (1110)

Mr. Chairman, I had indicated at the last meeting that I could not argue in substance with Mr. Neil's basic proposition, that I would only make a general argument about leaving it flexible for possible inclusions of people that desire to be included by the producers themselves. I would not stick on that because if there were any great movement requiring that there be a change in that, I am sure we could quickly put an amendment through the House to do that. And so I would be inclined, in the spirit of the day, to go along with that particular change.

Unfortunately, on that date 12 government members attended the committee meeting. Not one of those 12 members from the government side represented a constituency in the Canadian Wheat Board area. With all due respect, I suggest that the members who were there and who do not represent a constituency in the Canadian Wheat Board area do not understand the function and the purpose of the Canadian Wheat Board. In fact the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Marchand) in speaking on my amendment, as recorded at page 89:33 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of Tuesday May 18 had this to say:

> Another concern that I have is that on a number of these gc vernment boards, producer boards and so on, I think there is a real place for consumers.

Then, he went on to say:

> I think that on these government boards, producer boards, there should be a consumer interest in there or a consumer point of view, and I feel very strongly about that.

As I mentioned earlier the sole function of the Canadian Wheat Board is to sell grain on the export market. There is no place on the advisory committee for consumer representation. The consumers of Canada have been taken care of by a bill passed about a year or two ago which had to do with the two-price system for wheat. That was a government bill which now is law. It is separate and apart from any of the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is interesting to note that in committee, notwithstanding the comments of the minister to the effect that he would accept the amendment, the 12 government members chose to vote against the amendment. As I said not one of those 12 government members represented a constituency in the Canadian Wheat Board area.

It is interesting to note, on the other hand, that there were 10 members of the Conservative Party present as members of the committee. Of those 10 members eight represented the Canadian Wheat Board area. They represented constituencies within the area. Two others who were outside the Canadian Wheat Board area were farmers. Of the eight members who represented constituencies in the Canadian Wheat Board area every one was the holder of a permit book from the Canadian Wheat Board, either under suffix A or suffix B.

A few minutes ago I quoted the minister as saying in committee that he would accept the amendment. I think it is unfortunate there was a misunderstanding on the part of the government members who were sitting on that committee and who voted against the wishes of the minister. This is an important amendment. It is important to the producers in western Canada. I would ask, under the circumstances, that the members on the other side of the House reconsider their position and vote in favour of this amendment today.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to support the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) in respect of his amendment. I think he put forward excellent arguments concerning why we should support this amendment and why we should consider that only actual farmers be allowed to represent their constituencies in western Canada on the Canadian Wheat Board.

To start with, I think there is no better way to find support for the amendment than to read the words of the minister who in a sense totally supported this amendment when he stated in the committee as recorded at page 87:10 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence:

> It is a question really of having people that are farmers and, I think, clear sight of the Wheat Board being in touch directly with some farmers about problems that concern them. We all know how easy it is to forget the obvious if you are not dealing with the problem daily as the farmer is. In that sense, having practical men and women who are chosen by the farmers to be there and to draw their attention to how the farmers will be affected by something the Wheat Board is doing, I think, is just very, very useful.

I agree entirely with that statement. I think it is necessary that only producers of actual grains in the Canadian Wheat Board area be allowed to sit on this board. There are some problems at present because men or women who are members of farm organizations, and who spend their entire time as leaders of these organizations, now are eligible for election to this board. In the last election some of them were elected. While these people do an excellent job in their positions—I have no doubt of this—it would seem to me that they also are very busy in their principal occupation of being the leader of a farm organization. Although at the present time the advisory board meets 3, 4 or 5 times a year, or perhaps more often, I think in the future the Wheat Board intends to ask for its advice more often.

The Canadian Wheat Board and the Governor in Council are prepared to give these people some money in order that they may go to the areas from which they were elected and set up meetings at which they can ask the farmers, their constituents, how they feel and what advice they can give which might be passed on to the Canadian Wheat Board. Mr. Vogel of the Canadian Wheat Board stated his intention to have this advisory board meet more often. He mentioned 10 or 12 times a year. It seems to me it would be a very good idea if these people were not leaders of farm organizations but rather actual producers who are involved in the day-to-day workings of the farm in the production of grains. We could take the example of a member of parliament who really is not a professional in certain fields but when elected is asked by his constituents to become knowledgeable in a number of areas. We sit on committees and the experts in the various departments come forward to give us various examples of how legislation should be changed and why it should be changed. We as laymen, sit on the committees and attempt to pick out from this mass of information the logical things that we think would be of use to our constituents and should be in the legislation. Therefore, it seems to me that a producer would be able to do the same for his constituents or for the farmers in his area if he sat on the advisory board advising the Wheat Board commissioners on how they should sell grain or give advice to farmers in the production areas.

● (1120)

An example was brought forward to me recently which I think points out the necessity of having producers on the advisory board. The Wheat Board has encouraged the farmers in western Canada to produce hard spring wheat year after year, yet it is well known by the farmers that there is a market for some of the soft wheats and that our hard spring wheats are bought by other countries and mixed with lesser quality wheats to produce a form of flour. Researchers in Canada are working with their limited budgets and limited time on the advice of some of the Wheat Board staff to produce some soft, white wheats; they spend a great deal of time on this. The producers are encouraged by this because these varieties of wheat have a larger yield than the hard spring wheats. They are easier to produce and if allowed to be grown, the result may be an increased income for these farmers.

It seems to me that this is an ideal example of a situation in which the advisory board, if it were composed of producers, could advise the Wheat Board that the farmers in their area would like to produce this type of wheat. Of course, farmers are always interested in maximizing their incomes, and it would be to their advantage to have as their advisor a producer in the area who can go to the Wheat Board and recommend that they encourage the research staff in our country to continue research into these extra varieties and encourage the Department of Agriculture to give researchers the necessary funds to continue this research.

These are just a few examples which explain why I feel the hon. member for Moose Jaw has brought forward an excellent amendment which I feel the minister himself has agreed on a number of occasions would improve this bill. I think, as a member representing a great number of grain farmers in the Wheat Board area, that these farmers would support this amendment wholeheartedly. Therefore, I commend it to all members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the comments that have been made will be very brief. First of all, I want to say that all hon. members who sit on the agriculture committee, even if they are not from a region affected by the act, are still very much interested by the proceedings of the committee and try to keep informed as well as possible of the work that is being done there and to make the most objective contribution possible.

Concerning the amendment proposed and discussed in committee, the comments made both by the members of the committee and by the minister during his appearances before the committee were in favour of not limiting the eligibility for membership. That was the basic argument put forward and I think it did not create any opposition or misunderstanding among the Liberal members of the committee. The answer given by witnesses and the purpose of the amendment were well understood. However, it was thought that by limiting the range of candidates, the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board would be deprived of candidates who would have been very useful because of their experience and their knowledge in the field. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, those were the only comments I had to make.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). On the surface, it looks like an excellent amendment, almost like motherhood. I know the hon. member for Moose Jaw is moving this amendment with the best of motives and intentions, and I accept that. However, I want to suggest that this kind of amendment suits very well the people who support and believe in the private grain trade, the so-called open market. The amendment will allow them to accomplish what they could not do in a democratic election, that is to get rid of people like Mr. E. K. Turner, the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and Mr. Roy Atkins, the president of the Farmers' National Union, who were elected by the producers in their respective districts in a democratic vote. So, I am a little suspicious of what this amendment is trying to accomplish.

Another objection I have is that this amendment would prevent a retired farmer from running for the advisory commission and it would prevent farmers' wives from running for the advisory commission. If a group of farmers in any district decided to pick a lawyer in the local town and nominate him as their candidate, it would prevent them from doing so.

If farmers want nothing but producers on the advisory board, they can vote only for producers. It is for them to decide, not for the hon. member for Moose Jaw, for me or the government. I think the qualifications for candidates who may be elected to the advisory committee should be broad enough so that the grain producers can nominate and vote for whomever they darn well wish; I see no point in trying to restrict the eligibility of people for election to the board. I think the producers themselves will make the decision regarding who they want to nominate and for whom they want to vote. I do not think we should prohibit anyone from running. Why prevent farmers from nominating a prominent, respected retired farmer in whom they all have great confidence? He is retired, he no longer holds a class A permit book. He might have a special delivery book to clean out a number of bills after he has retired, and that is it. If he happens to be the one whom they want to elect, it seems to me that grain producers in a region should have the right to do so.

So I think the hon. member's amendment does not really accomplish what he wants. In fact, it places more restrictions than I think he realizes. So I urge the House to defeat the amendment.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) would entertain a question. If he wishes to see qualifications broad enough to include retired farmers and others, would he be agreeable to permitting landlords who, say, are holders of suffix B permit books, to vote for these people, or would he restrict the eligibility strictly to producers?

Mr. Benjamin: I think I made that clear. I said that actual producers should have the right to nominate whom they wish to run for an election to the advisory commission, whether it is a suffix B permit holder, a retired farmer, the town lawyer or the town drunk—that is there business. It is up to them to decide for whom they are going to vote. I do not see any point in saying that only certain people can be nominated. What kind of democracy is that?

● (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, just a few words to say that we are in favour of the motion before the House because, to my mind, it is the very essence of logic that farmers should be represented on their board, the Canadian Wheat Board. A while ago, the speaker who preceded me said that the producers could sit on the advisory committee. Even if all the members of that committee were farmers, they would not have enough influence or power to get their wishes implemented. The farmers must be represented above all on the board of administration.

On the Canadian Dairy Commission, for instance, we should have no one but dairy producers, not only civil servants who have never seen a cow. I think we would then have far more fairness. Today, the same problem seems to exist out west with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board. There are not enough wheat producers, real farmers, interested in the Board to guide the orientation of the government policy. We should get back to basics, give everyone his responsibilities, especially those who are interested in the industry, that is farming, whether it be in dairy production or grain farming. I feel we would then have much more fairness, and a much better agricultural policy in Canada. I suggest we rely far too much on experts. A while ago, I heard the representative of the NDP say that we need experts. When we need lawyers, we will get them—and this will surprise him—from farming circles because, yes, some farmers have sons who are lawyers. There are good lawyers, capable of sticking up for the farmers, without having to get them from the ranks of city dwellers who know nothing about farming the land.

I believe that is the idea the mover had in mind, and I can assure him that we are in favour of his motion. Indeed, we are in favour of all motions that will give back to the farmers the power in their respective fields of endeavour, and put a stop to the administration of that specific field by strangers.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, when I first entered the House I was somewhat hesitant to participate in this debate because I felt that the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) would adequately represent the point of view I hold on this matter. However, after reflecting on what went on in the committee and after listening to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), I feel that I must raise a few points.

First, let me deal with what went on in the committee. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board during the presentation of this particular amendment by the hon. member for Moose Jaw spoke very highly in favour of the suggestion; he thought it was a very valid suggestion. However, it seems that he instructed his supporters in the committee to vote against it. I understand why many of them would not support a motion like this; they do not know very much about the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board because many of them are not representatives from western Canada.

Perhaps the hon. members from eastern Canada should be excused, but I certainly cannot excuse the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, who apparently represents a western constituency. I can understand why he would not want to have a producer advising the Canadian Wheat Board because he himself is not a producer. He does not know what it is like to be represented by some so-called expert from out of town. It seems that once you are from out of town, you become an expert, and you can tell everyone how to run his business. Personally, I have experience in operating a farm. I also know what it is like to be away from the operation. There is no better way to obtain knowledge than by practical on-the-spot experience.

The hon. member argues in favour of people like Mr. Turner, capable as he may be, but he already has a forum. There is the wheat pool. There is already a paper in which producers can put forward their points of view. Mr. Atkinson, the head of the farm union, already has a forum in which to speak. Why do we want someone who we know holds a particular point of view to become a member of a board and advise the Canadian Wheat Board?

I was very much surprised by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I can remember the time when the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board made an appointment to that board, and that person was from Ottawa. Without mentioning the name, I think anyone who knows the operation of the Wheat Board knows whom I am talking about. However, I know the criticism the hon. member levelled at that time. He said that was a political appointment and that it was not an appointment which was in the best interests of farmers.

Remembering all those things and having just listened to the hon. member, I was somewhat provoked into participating in this debate, in order to point out the hypocrisy of some of the comments which come from that quarter, for no other reason than it seems they may have somebody in mind themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: I can understand that they may want a particular point of view expressed. I know that the hon. member has had leanings toward the farm union, and in many instances the farm union does represent a particular point of view. It has divorced itself from the operation of, say, the agrabusiness. There we have two farm organizations taking opposing points of view.

I know that many times in politics we find ourselves in a position where we are perhaps not strongly in favour of a proposal, but because it is a caucus decision, we go along with it. It is obvious that anyone who belongs to any organization and anyone who is not a practical farmer is going to hold the view of that organization unless and until such a time as his organization points out to him that he can take a different point of view.

There is great merit in the recommendation put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and I rose only because I know what happened in committee. The minister wanted to be on both sides. He argued on one side of the question, that is, in favour of the suggestion, but then he turned around and instructed his supporters to vote in opposition. Here we have an hon. member who in the past strongly advocated proper representation. Now, he has an opportunity to demonstrate his feelings and put his money where his mouth is, and he talks against this measure.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a motherhood type of amendment. I am sure that everyone agrees that those who are involved directly should be represented. I think that is a fair position and one which everyone supports. However, there are other boards, for instance the board which was mentioned in another context by one of my colleagues from the province of Quebec. He indicated that producers have to be represented on these boards. I remember some of the representatives who were on the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, for example, who were retired farmers or retired milk producers. They sat on that board for a number of years with great distinction, and it seems to me that it is not really necessary for a representative to be an A class permit holder, but he must be someone who has the subject as his primary interest. I think even the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) would agree that most farmers would not vote for someone just because the government wants him or just because some other entity, such as the Caghill Grain Company, wants him, but that person is going to be elected because he will be able to do a good job.

It is a fact that there were elections for the advisory board, but those elections did not turn out exactly as planned. In fact, there were a number of people elected who were not anticipated to be members of the advisory board, and it may be that the Palliser grain growers did not really get the kind of representation they wanted. However, farmers are going to elect to that board those whom they think will do the best job for them. It may be some woman and she may be very involved and have a special knowledge of farming, although she may not hold the permit. Her husband could hold the permit, but I think if everyone in the community agreed that they wanted her to represent them it should be possible for her to do so. Many farmers are smart enough to know that the day comes when the farm should be turned over to the children. I think that will happen to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). He has been a farmer for a long time and is familiar with all the problems. If he decides one of these days to turn all the A class permits of his operation over to his sons, then there really would not be much more for him to do and he might make an excellent representative on the advisory committee. He might make that representation in a better way as a retired farmer than he would as a farmer in the actual production.

● (1140)

An hon. Member: Or as a member of parliament!

Mr. Peters: My colleague says, maybe more than as a member of parliament. That may be true, but I think he would then have time to devote to the operation.

While this a motherhood motion and I am inclined to support it on that basis, I do believe that we are really talking about allowing the largest number of competent people to be on the list from which the farmers will make their choice. I have faith in the farmers to choose those representatives for the advisory committee who are going to make representation on their behalf in the best way possible. In my opinion, it may be that retired farmers are suitable.

Let us not kid ourselves, Mr. Speaker; there are honest people and partly dishonest people. It is a matter of degree. But there is no question that most of the people we would like to get rid of turned over their A class permits when they could have held them on one section, and have met the requirements of a bona fide farmer or bona fide permit holder. That they saw fit, because they are in effect out of the operation, to surrender their permits does not mean they have given up their expertise, their ability or their knowledge of the subject and that they might not be the best representatives of the farmers on the advisory committee. I think there is considerable merit in letting the farmer make the choice himself.

Mr. Neil: It is the cabinet that makes the decision.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, it is said that the cabinet makes the decision. The cabinet always did make the decision. There were party hacks on the advisory committee, there is no doubt about that but I do not think that was true in the last election. I think the cabinet was as surprised as anybody else at some of those who were chosen.

If the farmers have faith in the ability of the advisory committee to advise the Wheat Board, then they will choose people who are going to represent them. It is a fact that they will be representing regions and representing various points of view. I am sure the Palliser Wheat Growers, who are very close to the minister, may not be a very good representative for many of the wheat producers in other areas, but in those areas representatives will be chosen to represent their point of view. That is the purpose of the advisory committee.

While I agree with the idea that producers must be involved, this amendment limits it to producers today, to people who have an A class permit. There are many producers who have retired and who have not lost their ability to provide representation. Indeed, in some cases they may have gained a much wider experience which could be of use to the producers. This could be so if we increase the number of people who can seek election.

So far as the House of Commons is concerned, anyone who meets the very basic requirement of age and certain moral standing can run for election. The public makes the decision in its own interests when it elects people to this House. I think that is the principle that could be extended to the advisory committee. The farmer is a very sophisticated voter and will make the selection in his own interests.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak for a few moments in support of the amendment I have to poke a few holes in the statements made by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). As usual, he does not seem to have his facts straight.

He stated that a farmer's wife could not have a permit book. Mr. Speaker, that is not true. A farmer's wife can have a permit book and many of them do. It is a matter of whether they wish to have one or not and whether they own the land, whether they are renting it or leasing it or owning and operating it and making the decisions on it. There is, therefore, nothing to limit the individual who wishes to become a grain producer. All he needs are three basic fundamentals—either land which is leased, property which he owns or property which he operates. It is as simple as that, and certainly has nothing to do with the size of the property and nothing to do with the amount of produce delivered.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said that Roy Atkinson, president of the National Farmers' Union, would not be allowed to operate in this capacity. We all know that Roy Atkinson is a farmer so he probably has a permit book and would be eligible for election as a producer. Many of those who are interested in becoming a member of the advisory committee could just as well be producers.

There are a few things that I think we should consider. One is the fact that the stabilization bill, as brought in by this government, is open only to actual producers. We have to consider that therefore there is an intermingling of ideas, suggestions and words of wisdom for the benefit of the grain industry of Canada.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) suggested that consumers should be considered for this committee. This is one of the things that I think we must be careful about and see that there is no misconception whatever that benefits the grain producers in western Canada receive will create a hardship for the consumer. Such is not the case. In the Agriculture Committee on May 18, the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo said:

> I think that on these government boards, producer boards, there should be a consumer interest in there or a consumer point of view, and I feel very strongly about that.

Mr. Speaker, the consumer is protected under the two-price wheat legislation whereby grain is purchased for home consumption at $3.25 per bushel and that cannot be changed until that Act expires in another three or four years. Therefore, this bill is not going to create any problem whatsoever for the consumer.

We have to consider that the grain industry in Canada is of fundamental importance to our economic well-being because it contributes between $3 billion and $4 billion to our balance of trade. This should not be overlooked. Just imagine what our deficit would be if that amount were not included. Instead of being $5 billion it would be up toward $9 billion. In view of the fact that producers are seeking whatever they can get on the world market for their product, they should have the opportunity of making an input into the marketing and saying how it should be handled.

● (1150)

The present minister in charge of the Wheat Board is creating more difficulties for western grain producers who come under the Canadian Wheat Board than he is solving. Lack of adequate transportation hinders the movement of grain. Boxcars are vitally important to move other kinds of grain besides wheat. Clearly, the proposed advisory group will need to have greater input, greater say with regard to Canadian Wheat Board policies, than has been the case in the past.

As the new advisory group, if the amendment passes, is to be elected, it is clear that people well known to producers and farm organizations stand a better chance of election than those who are unknown. We have heard the names of several politicians mentioned as possible candidates for the proposed advisory group. These politicians, as I say, stand a better chance of running successfully, because they are well known. At present there is no mechanism whereby the names of people unknown but willing to run can be put before producers. As well, we must consider that it takes a great deal of money to cover the Wheat Board country comprising Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Peace River district of British Columbia. No matter how well qualified an individual may be to advise the Canadian Wheat Board, he, or she, probably cannot afford to travel around the area and become known. Therefore the unknown candidate is at a disadvantage, whereas people like Roy Atkinson, for instance, or Mr. Turner, the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, enjoy a great advantage, in that they are relatively well known and can advise the Canadian Wheat Board. As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggested, we should broaden the base and enable more people to become involved in the advisory process.

We are considering a question of fundamental importance. I think that producers and consumers in future will want to rely less on bureaucrats for guidance. I hope the House will accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), and enable more producers to be involved in the governing and advisory process.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the amendment the House is considering is simple, but an important principle is at stake. During the last 40 years almost every democratic country has turned even more decision-making power over to experts. In the case of wheat, in 1935, over 40 years ago, the farmers of the west turned certain decision-making powers over to a board appointed by the federal government, known as the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board has been an unique and useful institution for stabilizing the price to farmers and helping Canada to expand wheat sales on world markets. But no board set up by man is perfect. In the past the power to decide with regard to the sale of certain farm products was handled by the group of experts who represented some 200,000-odd producers. The amendment seeks to set up an advisory board or committee, which would wield some of the power formerly wielded dictatorially by the group of experts; and, what is more, the proposed group is to be established on an elected basis.

From my experience as a minister I can say, confidently, that the views I was given by the Wheat Board and the advisory committee of my day did not necessarily reflect the views of producers. It soon became clear to me, as I said in the second reading debate, that the advisory committee I had appointed consisted of representatives of giant corporations whose interest was to maximize the profits and efficiency of their corporations. Therefore their advice was largely the advice of vested interests. Those reprentatives were concerned about how best to serve those interests. They could represent either private companies or co-operatives. But the result was the same: they wanted to do the best job they could for their particular organizations. Therefore, no matter how well intentioned such people may be in giving advice, they do not represent the voice of farmers. The farmer has become suspicious; he thinks that perhaps his views do not always get first consideration.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) is simple and shows how we can turn the clock back a little. In the past we took the power of decision-making away from the owner of the product and gave that power to a board of experts. We could allow the owner of the product some little say in the decision-making process; therefore, I support any decision for making the advisory board an elected one. The recommendation of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, namely, that members of the proposed advisory group should be elected from producers, is sound.

Let me make one thing clear. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said in committee that the proposed amendment is good; but something strange happened on the way to the forum, so to speak. All the Liberal members on the committee who knew nothing about wheat and nothing about western Canada decided to vote against the amendment; that is why the matter has been raised in the House today. We are attempting to correct the injustice which occurred in that committee. Surely all members know that the Wheat Board would like to get advice from producers, that the bulk of farmers want some say in the decision-making process and that the Palliser group, which has been in the news for the last few years, is in favour of this move. Further, I suggest that people who love their country, who want to see the owners of a product maintain some sort of control over that product, would also support the amendment. Really, this amendment says to farmers, "You have the right to have producers on the advisory board."

As several others have mentioned in the debate, this country is run by the bureaucracy. Really, the cabinet has little power; it listens to its advisers. Our population is dissatisfied with this and expresses dissatisfaction in many ways. In the dairy industry, wheat industry and poultry industry, to name but some segments of our economy, experts are trying to run the whole show and give no say to the producer. This is happening at both the federal and provincial levels in Canada. If we continue on this road by 1990, 90 per cent of the people of this country will be working for some government institution. That is the course we have charted ourselves. I appeal to the House to support this simple amendment. Without doubt, the professional politician or bureaucrat who runs our big organizations must move over and give the producer or owner some chance to have a say in matters which affect him. That is what the amendment says.

I shall close with a well considered example. The world is hungry and needs food. In our dry farm lands of the west, by using our knowledge and expertise which has resulted in new types of grain in the last 20 years, we can produce more grain. Does this House and country know that our experts in the Canadian Wheat Board and experts in the farm corporations have opposed bringing of these new types of grain into the marketing system of our country? At least a dozen new varieties have passed every scientific test there is, yet are suppressed from farm use.

● (1200)

There are new types of grain which produce many more bushels per acre, at the same cost. They would feed many more million people. However, the experts say they cannot accept these new grains because there would be trouble in the grading system. One particular grain, has 3 per cent or 4 per cent of small kernels. Even though this grain would produce 30 or 40 more bushels per acre, it is turned down because the experts say it would be hard to market, with 3 per cent or 4 per cent of small kernels. I am not the one to judge that. However, with a hungry world on one side, and farmers who want more income on the other, I think the farmers should have this brought to their attention so they can study it with the producers with regard to any problems of growing. The farmers should decide on the types of grain we have to sell.

I know that the Canadian Wheat Board are well intentioned. They have an efficient-running system with the present grades. They do not want to change that efficient system. It is the very nature of bureaucracy that once you get it running, you do not change it. The farm organizations which make money out of storage do not want it changed. It would mean having new grades to handle in their elevators. The vested interests who own the elevators, and the people who are bureaucrats by profession, oppose this type of question being brought to public attention. This matter has been before those of us who have been responsible for decisions for the past 20 years. It has not come to public debate because no one who advises the Wheat Board or sits on the Wheat Board wants to bring it to public debate. I believe there are eight or ten producers on that advisory board who would be able to enter a public debate on this issue, and they who have the right to decide would make the decision.

This question has moral issues as well as economic ones. The curse of this and other countries today is that we have turned the responsibility of governing the nation at the national, provincial and corporate levels over to experts. I was not surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). He knows, as well as I do, that in the management of our companies and unions we have turned over their running to the experts. Experts keep the fight going as long as they can between labour and management, because that is the only way they can get paid.

Mr. Benjamin: Let the farmer decide.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is right: let the farmer also decide whether he wants bureaucrats to represent him, or his own people. I simply say that if you put a weasel in a hen-house, the weasel represents the weasel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): If you put in a man that represents a corporation which makes its money out of storage, all he will think about is storage.

Mr. Benjamin: What if the hens elect the weasel?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): If the hens elect the weasel, you know what will happen to the hens. I think I have made my point. Let me give one little warning to the government side. The farmers know the significance of this amendment. By the eastern members on that committee voting down what the minister recommended was a good idea, they have put the Liberal members in the farm areas in jeopardy because farmers have had it up to the neck with regard to being run by bureaucrats. I do not necessarily want to see all Liberals eliminated from Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I do not even want to see the NDP eliminated. However, if ever they want to commit suicide, this is the way to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I will take just a very few minutes of the time of the House to speak to some points that have been raised on the other side about members from non-wheat growing areas on the committee not knowing what they are doing. I take some exception to that. I think other members from eastern Canada do, as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milne: Members from all parties on this committee were concerned enough to agree that the committee should travel to western Canada in order to have a better insight into the wheat and grain growing problems of this country. I think that all members share the view that, when they came here, the committee process was one of the most important things. They take their responsibilities seriously and do not automatically vote amendments pro or con as might be indicated. We have our own caucus meetings on this. We have discussions, good arguments and come to some agreement as to the best disposition. We follow that principle.

I take some exception to members opposite saying we do not take our responsibilities seriously and, just because we do not come from a wheat-growing area, we do not have any right to sit on the Standing Committee on Agriculture and discuss wheat matters. That is a wrong impression and it is one that members opposite might want to take off the record.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to the discussion on the proposed amendment to Bill C-88. We have had an interesting and worth-while discussion on the idea proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and the arguments on both sides of this particular issue. Although I do not agree with the substance of the amendment proposed in the House this morning, I want to thank the hon. member for presenting this idea to the House for consideration.

We have had a rather interesting and useful analysis of the issues that are involved here in what may appear, on the surface, to be a very simple, straightforward and thoroughly desirable change. However, that is not entirely without complication. It is important to bear in mind what those complications and considerations could be. As the minister indicated during the committee hearings on Bill C-88, there are arguments pro and con on the substance of this amendment. On the one hand, as many members have pointed out, it is fundamentally important that this advisory committee should have the choice and be representative of prairie grain producers. There is no disagreement on that point. That is the reason why, a year or more ago, the minister initiated the experiment of seeing whether, in fact, it would be desirable to devise an electoral procedure for the selection of the advisory committee members. That experiment was conducted last year and members were elected.

According to the legislation as it is written, the minister specifically appointed the successful candidates in that election to the advisory committee. Following that experiment of a year ago, the minister made the commitment that we would come back to the House of Commons to formalize that electoral procedure in legislation. That, of course, is what Bill C-88, among other things, is designed to do.

The point, clearly, is that there can be no disagreement on the fundamental issue about the desirability of this advisory committee being the choice of farmers and being representative of farmers. I do not believe anyone, on either side of the House, is arguing that point. The ultimate safeguard in this respect is to be found in the fact that the electoral process itself is squarely in the hands of producers. They are the ones who will exercise their franchise and will make the ultimate decision as to their choice of who should represent them on the advisory committee.

● (1210)

On the other side of the question, the argument in opposition to the amendment is based simply upon the desirability of maintaining flexibility and allowing producers a broad spectrum of possible candidates for election. As I say, the franchise rests with the producers. Bearing this in mind, should we, by legislation, restrict the opportunity of some to come forward? Should we limit the range of options? Ought we to restrict the class of persons eligible to sit on the advisory committee? For the time being, at least, my response would be "No." That is my view, at least until we have had further experience with this electoral process.

I remind hon. members that it is a very new one. It has been tried once and, of course, the next election a few years down the road it will be the first to be held under the terms of the legislation. Until we see some evidence that there is a problem which must be dealt with—and, surely, such evidence would have to indicate clearly that there was an impairment of the interests of producers because of the broad range of choice—the amendment ought not, in my opinion, to be accepted. Instead, I believe we should opt for flexibility and for maintaining a broad range of choice. Again, I emphasize that the choice will remain in the hands of producers. All we are talking about in the amendment is limiting the number of options. Surely it is advisable at the outset to make the choice as broad as possible. I have a great deal of personal confidence in the capacity of producers to make their decision in their own best interests. I do not believe they need the kind of artificial protection which is being proposed. Nevertheless, if safeguards are required in future, changes can be implemented either by statute or by regulation.

I should like to turn now to some of the remarks which were made in the House today having to do with what took place in the standing committee when this amendment was presented—the argument that government members of the committee that day happened to number 12 from regions outside the Canadian Wheat Board area, and that, somehow, the fact that they did not come from constituencies in the west impaired their ability to listen to the arguments being made, to assess the evidence and to form a reasonable judgment on the basis of what was before them. Like another member who spoke earlier in the debate, I take exception to this argument. It is one which does no credit to the House of Commons, to the standing committee or to the individuals putting it forward. I do not believe it carries any weight at all.

It is an extremely divisive position for a member to take. As a westerner, I initially came forward for election from a constituency in Saskatchewan with a fundamental belief in the basic reasonableness of Canadians in all parts of this country. We in the west have had what is called, in some circles—perhaps too grandly—a feeling of alienation, a feeling that somehow our interests are not taken fully into consideration; that somehow we are left out of the decision-making process. It was my belief, when I stood for election, that this feeling of western alienation, real as it might be, was not completely justified in the sense that there were a great many initiatives being taken by the present government to relieve the concerns of westerners. I believed great progress was being made to identify and eliminate the root causes of the malaise we call western alienation.

At the root of my confidence, that we could overcome this feeling of alienation was my belief that all Canadians are basically fair-minded people whether they are asked to deal, for example, with a simple amendment to the Wheat Board Act, or the question of amending the freight rate structure as a whole. I was convinced that Canadians from other parts of the country would be prepared to listen to argument and hear the evidence, and that once they did so they would be willing and anxious to respond in a positive manner to the arguments we were making.

Surely this is a more positive approach to confederation and to the legislative process—an optimistic approach as we look forward, in a realistic way, to making the kind of changes which will work to the proper advantage of western Canada. I have confidence in Canadians and believe that through them this goal can be achieved. I have confidence in members on both sides of the House and, again, I believe that with their help our objectives can be reached. In the particular context of my remarks today, I have confidence that those who were present when this matter was being discussed before the standing committee listened to the arguments that were put foward and made a good judgment on the evidence before them, not in a biased or hasty fashion which could work to the detriment of the farmers of western Canada. I take exception to the point which was made, attacking the credibility and integrity of members on this side who serve on the committee and who do a tremendous job for all farmers both from the east and from the west.

To sum up, in the circumstances before us I think it is desirable to opt for flexibility and maintain a broad range of choice. As I say, if we determine that there is a problem, and that the interests of producers are being impaired, we could take corrective action either by legislation or by regulation. The first advisory board chosen on the basis of election is now established, and I have no evidence that there has been any impairment of the interests of the farmers as a result of the system used. The farmers themselves are the electors; they have the franchise in their own hands, and I am satisfied they will make the ultimate decision in their own best interests.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a few words to the amendment in the name of my hon. friend from Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) with respect to the selection of the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board.

● (1220)

I listened to the last speaker during this debate, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). I must say that I have always respected his ability to research a matter, but I am disturbed that he should be concerned that there is something wrong with insisting that producing farmers should provide the nucleus of this advisory committee. We are not talking about the Wheat Board, of course; we are talking about the advisory committee to the Wheat Board. Surely, that in itself should suggest that producers should only be members of this type of board.

I have in mind a man from my own area. He has tremendous responsibility in that he represents that area consisting of over half of the southern part of Alberta. He is a very aggressive producer in that area and is a member of the advisory committee. His name is Orville Reber, of Burdett, southern Alberta. This is the type of producing farmer who can tell the story, on behalf of the farmers he represents, in a very convincing way. I am sure he has made some members of the Wheat Board and of the grain trades a little annoyed because of his persistence. But he gets the story across and the message is there.

For the hon. member for Assiniboia to suggest it is premature to call for total farmer representation on this advisory committee is unfair and unjust. He suggested that perhaps, when the need becomes apparent, we should consider this question. I say the need is now, because the government, in its wisdom, has already agreed there should be an advisory committee; and that advisory committee, in its wisdom, must advise about grain producers' problems. For that reason there is great need to support this motion all the way down the line.

There is another reason for supporting the amendment. The producer who represents the grain growers, or the farmers, is much more knowledgeable about another pressing matter in western Canada, and that is the conflict of interest between producers of domestic feed grain and the customers, the feeders of hogs and cattle. For far too long we have only had one side of the argument presented at the Wheat Board level. Surely, with producers on the advisory committee, all of them farmers, they will be much more knowledgeable in that two-sided argument as to how we should use domestic feed grain in western Canada in order that the feeding industry will survive. Let me leave it at that for now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make one point, and it seems that perhaps it can only be done by repetition. Those who are to be electing the members of the advisory committee are all going to be producers. Surely the election should be left to them. If you look at Bill C-88, you will find that the regulations which have been stipulated or set down relating to the conduct of elections are clear in this respect, and surely it is a breach of faith in the producers for hon. members opposite to suggest they cannot choose the best members of that advisory committee.

Those regulations specify that the list of producers is to be prepared prior to any election, and only those producers will be voting. Surely, the producers or farmers of whom the hon. members have such a high opinion and of whom I have such a high opinion, will be able to select and elect the members of that particular committee based on the criteria that the members have enumerated, and I suggest that the amendment ought not—

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I would very much like the hon. member who has the floor to speak more slowly, not only for himself so that it will be possible to hear the simultaneous interpretation. Actually, he speaks for the gallery. I do not know why, but there is no interpretation at this time.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, all I said was that the opposition members who moved the amendment have stated that indeed only farmers and producers, necessarily western producers, should sit on the committee. All I say is that the only ones who will be able to vote for the election of council members will be farmers and producers. If they are unable to judge by themselves the quality of the people who should advise the Canadian Wheat Board, I would not know who could chose them. That is the purpose of my intervention.

● (1230)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. Blais.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among House leaders to the effect that it would be undesirable to have another vote at this time, since we are scheduled to have a vote on Bill C-84 in a minute or so. I suggest, therefore, that the timing of the vote should be left to consultations among the House leaders. Probably the vote would take place tomorrow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Beaudoin: D'accord.

Mr. Speaker: Having heard the suggestion of the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), the debate having been concluded and the yeas and nays having been called, the recorded division as required by the Standing Orders will be deferred to a time to be agreed upon by the House leaders and to be announced perhaps later this day.

It being 12.30 p.m., pursuant to an agreement of Thursday, June 17, 1976, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings in order that the House may proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-84, an act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 17, 1976, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having regard to the special nature of this vote, I have examined precedents on similar votes in the past and have consulted the House leaders. There is agreement that I should establish the procedure, without discussion, and in an effort to ensure accuracy and reflect the departure from the usual party voting, I will proceed as follows.

[Translation]

Having regard to the special nature of this vote, I have examined precedents on similar votes in the past and have consulted the House leaders. There is agreement that I should establish the procedure without discussion, and in an effort to ensure accuracy and reflect the departure from the usual party voting, I will proceed as follows.

As is customary, hon. members in favour of the motion will be asked to indicate their position first, followed by hon. members who are opposed. I will ask all members in the first row to my right who are in favour of the motion to rise together, whereupon their names will be called by the Clerk Assistant beginning with the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who is seated closest to the Chair. When the name of a member in the row has been called and recorded, that member will resume his seat.

When the taking of names of hon. members in the first row to my right has been completed, I will ask members in the second, third, fourth and fifth rows on my right to proceed in a similar manner. I will then ask members in the first row to my left who are in favour of the motion to rise and remain standing until their names have been called and will carry on similarly with the other rows on my left.

Once the votes of hon. members supporting the motion have been completed in this manner, I will then invite hon. members in the first row to my right who are opposed to the motion to rise. I will proceed similarly through the remaining rows on my right, and then follow the same procedure for hon. members to my left.

It bears repetition that the taking of names of hon. members in every row will begin with the hon. member seated closest to the Chair and continue consecutively along to the far end of the row. This will be so to my right regardless of rank and it will so to my left regardless of rank or party affiliation.

[English]

As is customary, hon. members in favour of the motion will be asked to indicate their position, first, followed by hon. members who are opposed.

I will ask all members in the first row to my right who are in favour of the motion to rise together, whereupon their names will be called by the Clerk Assistant beginning with the hon. member seated closest to the Chair. When the name of a member in the row has been called and recorded, that member will resume his seat.

When the taking of names of hon. members in the first row to my right has been completed, I will ask members in the second, third, fourth and fifth rows on my right to proceed in a similar manner.

I will then ask members in the first row to my left who are in favour of the motion to rise and remain standing until their names have been called, and will carry on similarly with the other rows on my left.

Once the votes of hon. members supporting the motion have been completed in this manner, I will then invite hon. members in the first row to my right who are opposed to the motion to rise. I will proceed similarly through the remaining rows on my right, and then follow the same procedure for hon. members to my left.

It bears repetition that the taking of names of hon. members in every row will begin with the hon. member seated closest to the Chair and will continue consecutively along to the far end of the row. This will be so to my right, regardless of rank and it will so to my left, regardless of rank or party affiliation.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Allmand) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1250)

(Division No. 139)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Alexander
Allmand
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baldwin
Basford
Beatty
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blais
Blaker
Boulanger
Breau
Brewin
Broadbent
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Chrétien
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Collenette
Corbin
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Ethier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Firth
Fleming
Flynn
Forrestall
Foster
Fox
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gilbert
Gillespie
Gillies
Goodale
Goyer
Grafftey
Gray
Guilbault
Haidasz
Halliday
Harquail
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Jamieson
Johnston
Joyal
Kaplan
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lalonde
Lang
Laniel
Lapointe
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
MacDonald
(Egmont)
Macdonald
(Rosedale)
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Macquarrie
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McGrath
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
Nystrom
O'Connell
Olivier
Orlikow
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Peters
Philbrook
Pinard
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rodriguez
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Saltsman
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart
(Cochrane)
Stollery
Symes
Trudeau
Whelan
Yanakis—133

NAYS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Allard
Anderson
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Bawden
Beaudoin
Blouin
Brisco
Cadieu
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Caouette
(Témiscamingue)
Caron
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Clermont
Coates
Comtois
Condon
Corriveau
Cossitt
Crouse
Darling
Demers
Dick
Diefenbaker
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Dupras
Duquet
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fortin
Francis
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Horner
Howie
Huntington
Hurlburt
Isabelle
Jarvis

Transport

Messrs.

Jelinek	Masniuk	Roy (Laval)
Jones	Matte	Rynard
Kempling	Mazankowski	Schellenberger
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)	McCain	Schumacher
Korchinski	McCleave	Scott
Lajoie	McKenzie	Skoreyko
Lambert	McKinley	Smith
(Bellechasse)	McKinnon	(Churchill)
Lambert	Mitges	Smith
(Edmonton West)	Muir	(Saint-Jean)
Landers	Munro	Stevens
Langlois	(Esquimalt-Saanich)	Stewart
Laprise	Murta	(Marquette)
La Salle	Neil	Tessier
Lavoie	Nowlan	Towers
Lawrence	Oberle	Trudel
Leblanc	O'Sullivan	Turner
(Laurier)	Paproski	Wagner
Lee	Parent	Watson
Loiselle	Patterson	Wenman
(Saint-Henri)	Pearsall	Whiteway
MacKay	Portelance	Whittaker
MacLean	Reynolds	Wise
Maine	Ritchie	Woolliams
Malone	Roche	Yewchuk
Marshall	Rondeau	Young—125

● (1300)

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED HEARING BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION ON RAIL BARGE SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): In view of the fact that in August of 1975, the Canadian Pacific Railway abandoned the rail barge service on Kootenay Lake, in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has ignored a three year contract with the owners of the tugboat Melinda Jane after only one year of operation and occasioned them great financial difficulty, and in view of the fact that to date, despite the submission of briefs by myself, the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec, as well as several local chambers of commerce, the Canadian Transport Commission has yet to conduct a hearing into its jurisdiction over rail barge service as well as address itself to the constitutional issues it creates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That the Minister of Transport urge the Hon. Mr. Benson, president of the Canadian Transport Commission, to provide greater locomotion to his gluteus maximus and minimus muscles and address himself to this long overdue and urgent matter.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can only be presented to the House with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PRESIDENT OF SENEGAL TRANSMIT MESSAGE OF FRIENDSHIP TO ALL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and as a Canadian M.P., member of the parliamentary group Canada-Senegal Friendship, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move an important motion.

In view of the visit today in Ottawa of His Excellency Léopold Sédar Senghor, President of the Republic of Senegal, who is in Canada as the honorary president of the World Federation of Twinned Cities, an international non governmental organization endeavouring to draw together the various nations of the world; since tomorrow, at the official opening of the Olympic village in Montreal, His Excellency, who is a keen champion and promoter of a universal brotherly civilization, will proceed with the symbolic twinning of the Olympic village with the cities of the world, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron):

That the House convey to His Excellency Léopold Sédar Senghor the pleasure caused by his visit and say to him that Canadian government members join with him in his intense desire to see real bonds of friendship and cooperation develop between the peoples of the world and finally, on the occasion of the symbolic twinning of the Olympic village with the cities of the world, that the House earnestly press His Excellency to transmit to all nations the message of friendship of Canada, which really demonstrated in the past a sincere desire to establish friendly international cooperation and which endorses the various positive ways of bringing people together, including the creation of bonds between municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

● (1410)

[English]

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

PROPOSED ADOPTION OF MEASURES TO INCREASE LEVEL OF INCOME OF FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the announcement that the prices for freshwater fish are to be at the same depressed level as in 1973, in view of the minister's failure to comply with a request for representation on the board in line with production in certain areas, in view of the failure of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to provide adequate markets—to the point at which very low and in some cases no prices are quoted for certain species—resulting in many lifelong fishermen having to resort to welfare, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Minister of State (Fisheries) be immediately seized with this problem, to propose effective measures to maintain levels of disposable income for freshwater fishermen at an increased level which would take into account increased costs of production.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion can be presented to the House only by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM TO BENEFIT UNDERDEVELOPED REGIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the House recognize and support the merits of the principle of decentralizing the public service towards underdeveloped areas in the country facing a historically high and chronic unemployment rate due mainly to the lack of jobs, and that the House recognize the emergency of speeding up the process in an orderly and balanced way so that all Canadians wherever they may live be provided with equal opportunity to have access to the Canadian public service, in order to reduce the inequalities and distortions already existing within these areas.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: As there is unanimous consent of the House, I shall move the motion. Seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) moved:

That the House recognize and support the merits of the principle of decentralizing the public service towards underdevelopped areas in the country facing a historically high and chronic unemployment rate due mainly to the lack of jobs, and the the House . . .

Order, please. Is the hon. member for Abitibi rising on a point of order?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, there was not unanimous consent on this last motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS WORKING—ASSURANCE TO PILOTS OF SAFE FLYING CONDITIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport to whom we extend sincere condolences. At 5.30 yesterday afternoon an official in the hon. gentleman's ministry stated that air traffic control operations were back to normal at all airports across the country. I am advised that this is the situation which prevails as of now. Can the minister confirm that this is the case and, in the light of the position taken by CALPA can he tell us what assurances, if any, have been given to the airline pilots so that the services can be normalized?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Again today we have indications that the air traffic controllers are working throughout the country. Conditions, therefore, are normal for the flight of aircraft. There seems to be no reason whatever for pilots not to fly. International flights are, indeed, flying through Canadian airspace and using Canadian airports. It is my hope that other pilots in Canada will do the same and that the inconvenience to the travelling public will end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In view of the misgivings felt, apparently, by many pilots about what the commissioner, or commissioners, once appointed, will be asked to do, may I inquire whether the terms of the reference to the commission have been drawn up and, if so, whether the minister would be prepared to table them?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will certainly be glad to table them as soon as they are put in place. We drew up certain terms of reference which were later worked upon. We are now at the final stages of selecting the commissioners, and at that point we will appoint them with terms of reference. I will certainly make them available to the House at the first opportunity.

SUGGESTED EMPHASIS ON SAFETY OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—DISCUSSION WITH CONTROLLERS ON TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSIONER

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question. In light of the minister's answers, I was wondering whether there were discussions with CALPA and the controllers as to the terms of reference, and in particular that the commissioner or commissioners be directed to place priority on the question of safety? In addition, when can the minister receive the views of this House and its members and the representations of the public of Canada on a question in respect of which the public of Canada is very interested as well?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the very purpose of the commission is to assure the Canadian public that safety has been put foremost. That has been consistently our position. I believe it to be fair to say that it is the likely position of all parties in this House to put safety first, but also be prepared to proceed with some bilingual air traffic control in the province of Quebec where that can be done consistent with safety, and where this has been demontrated at certain airports where it has taken place. I say I believe that to be the position of all parties in the House, and I would appreciate specific approval in that regard from all parties so it can be known by the public in this country that this is a very limited course of action we have taken, and that the suggestion which seems to be carried abroad from time to time that somehow there is a threat to safety because French is flying fast and free over Winnipeg and Calgary is simply not the case, and that those who are concerned about making it sound as though that is the case are in fact engaging in some unfortunate blackmail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSULTATIONS WITH CONTROLLERS ON APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE SAFETY OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I simply remind the minister that we on this side of the House have directed our questions to the question of safety and safety alone. Arising out of an answer the parliamentary secretary gave the House yesterday to the effect that there had been rather regular communication with all parties interested in the decision which is to be taken regarding the naming of a commissioner, I would ask the Minister of Transport whether he can clarify this statement, in light of the fact that the President of CATCA, Mr. Livingston, stated that his only contact with the Ministry of Transport occurred on June 8 in respect of naming a replacement for Mr. Keenan, and again last Friday, at which time he had informal discussions with the deputy minister of personnel, and during which there were no references to the appointment of a new commissioner?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the discussions between the officials of the Ministry of Transport and the various groups involved, the pilots and controllers, are going on from time to time, and practically continuously. Obviously the question of commissioners is very much foremost, so I do not understand if there is supposed to be some hesitancy on the part of the controllers and pilots to bring forward comments on the question of the commission and commissioners. We did in fact ask them for suggestions, but we have received very limited help in that regard. Indeed, the latest word I have is that there is some lack of interest in the commission because they seem to be taking the position that the only thing they will be satisfied with is a move away from the position which we have taken, when we have always said that safety comes first with bilingualism in certain areas within the province of Quebec when possible. Notwithstanding that, I have to take the position with them that backing down from this reasonable position is something we cannot do. As I say, I believe we have the support of reasonable members of all parties in this House in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the appointment of a new commissioner seems to be the central issue involved in this dispute, and in view of the fact there have not been any formalized meetings with officials of the Department of Transport and CATCA, I would ask the minister whether he would undertake to convene a meeting with Mr. Livingston and his officials in order that their advice might be sought so that a suitable replacement might be named to head the commission of inquiry which would hopefully avert continued disruption of air traffic in this country?

● (1420)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, needless to say if I felt there was anything to be gained from a particular form of meeting I would see that it was held immediately. I am indeed always available, my door is always open.

The hon. member is quite wrong in repeating his statement that there had not been any formal consultations. There have been. I have indicated to the hon. member that we asked for lists. We ended up with a list containing one name which is a strange form of helpfulness in the way of suggestions. We asked for further names. We then got an expression of now perhaps some lack of interest in the commission because of a lack of interest in anything which may allow the policy we have set forth to progress. I say to hon. members, and I say it most earnestly, I wish they would take the opportunity of their supplementaries to indicate that they do in fact support the basic policy I have enunciated here.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO EXTENSION OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL IF SAFETY JEOPARDIZED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Transport. Since neither his statements in the House today in respect of questions—and I was listening with care—nor his statement of May 12 on the question of bilingualism being introduced to air traffic control procedures in Quebec, nor indeed the Order in Council that was passed on May 13, in the first preamble paragraph, make clear where the government stands on this issue, I should like to ask the minister, in order to remove all uncertainty on the issue, whether he will assure the House that safety on this issue will remain paramount and that if it is found that safety would be jeopardized by any extension of bilingualism in respect of air traffic control in Quebec it will not be undertaken.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to express my appreciation to the hon. member for inviting me to again state most definitely what is the case, which is that safety is foremost. If safety were in any way jeopardized by any procedures suggested in the use of bilingualism in air traffic control in Canada we would not implement those procedures because safety is foremost and that is a fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR SPEEDY PROSECUTION OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely thank the minister for that unequivocal and clear answer. I should like now to turn to the President of the Treasury Board. Since one of the basic principles of effective labour relations is to maintain civil relations between the two groups in conflict, and since the Prime Minister in the House yesterday expressed a desire that both parties to the current air dispute "cool it", I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board to tell us why the government's immediate response to the Winnipeg walkout was to apply the full and literal force of the law to the people involved, instead of sending an emissary to negotiate a speedy resolution of the conflict?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we had no choice at all because the law of the land has to be respected. In fact Mr. Justice Addy, if the hon. member would read the judgment, made it a condition that he would render a judgment in injunctions if the government were ready to take its responsibility to make sure that the injunction would be respected and this is exactly what we have done.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well—certainly his colleague the Minister of Labour knows—that the full and vigorous application of the letter of the law can cause more harm than good if the hope is to get a settlement. I should like to ask the minister whether it is the government's position on this particular dispute that it should remain with a hands-off attitude and simply let the situation be resolved in terms of the law as it now exists.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have a contract with the air traffic controllers and we have asked them to respect it. We went in front of the court. The court said we had a contract and ordered the air traffic controllers to go back to work. It is the policy of the government to make sure that no one in this land is above the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN DAIRY POLICY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

Following the last subsidy received by the Quebec milk producers, many of these have lost considerable revenue because of the new government dairy policy which penalizes those who have worked. Also, the President of the Treasury Board was visited last weekend by some milk producers and according to newspaper reports the minister assured them he would discuss this question with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. In view of these facts, could the minister tell the House whether discussions did take place with the Minister of Agriculture in this respect, and whether this policy can be changed in the near future to prevent many Quebec dairy farms from going under?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to talk briefly with the Minister of Agriculture about this, and I believe that meetings are now taking place between representatives of the union of Quebec milk producers and spokesmen from the Department of Agriculture to try and find a solution. The Minister of Agriculture has already announced that in the case of those who have farm mortgages granted by the Farm Credit Corporation, the latter will not demand payments as a measure to help farmers.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

As the solution proposed by the Minister of Agriculture—and endorsed, I suppose, by the President of the Treasury Board, whereby payments due by the farmers would be postponed—is not in fact a solution since the debts will remain and income will be lost, could the minister recommend to his cabinet colleague a solution that could really solve the acute problem that now exists and threatens the very existence of many dairy farms in Quebec?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the government is aware of some difficulties. However, we hope to find administrative solutions to those problems. The hon. member should recognize that the problem faced today by the farmers is the result of overproduction last year, and they in turn should also recognize that they must reduce their production.

As for administrative steps, I know the Minister of Agriculture is trying to find a solution in consultation with the interested parties. In addition, if my information is correct, some time this week he will be meeting some of the provincial ministers of agriculture to discuss this subject.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN IMPORTATION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Considering that this matter is very important and that it has been alleged that there are surpluses and the dairy producers ought to be penalized, could the minister assure the House that the import policy of dairy products which could be produced at home will involve a reduction of these products, thus helping solve this problem so that in the coming months we will not run the risk of having, as it happened two years ago, to import tremendous amounts to the detriment of Canadian farmers and, in particular, of Quebec dairy producers.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member that the government has decided this year to limit cheese imports to 50 million pounds while we had made commitments to import much more, and that we take a close look at the situation to try to reduce imports, as the Minister of Agriculture has often pointed out in this House.

● (1430)

[English]

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO DAIRY FARMERS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to the problem of dairy farmers in Ontario, and it is also for the President of the Treasury Board. In the light of the fact that dairy farmers across Ontario have now received their subsidy cheques for May and that these cheques have been cut substantially—one of my constituents who not only did not receive payment for the $3,100 worth of milk he shipped but also received a bill for $170—what assistance is the government prepared to make available to dairy farmers to save them from imminent bankruptcy? They have to pay their bills.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the government is aware of that situation. In fact, I received a certain number of farmers in my office on Saturday who explained the problem to me. We are looking into that, and I think the Minister of Agriculture is supposed to meet with some provincial ministers of agriculture to try to find a way out. However, I am not the Minister of Agriculture; I am just doing my best to answer the hon. member.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN FORMULA FOR ALLOCATING QUOTAS FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture perhaps I could address the following question to the Acting Prime Minister. In the light of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board pointed out that the present formula for allocating quotas between the provinces actually encourages over production, what recommendations, if any, is the federal government making to reform this formula to remove the disincentives from producing within the provincial quota?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when he was answering similar questions the other day the Minister of Agriculture explained in the House that the most important problem relates to the internal allocation of quotas. He stated, for example, that in Manitoba there is no problem of this kind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Oh yes there is.

Mr. Clark: Send Jim Richardson home.

Mr. Sharp: The problem is one which involves co-operation between the provinces and the federal government. The Minister of Agriculture will be making some proposals which will fulfill our part of the bargain, and I hope the provinces will act with similar goodwill.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED PROVISION OF UNITED STATES COMPANY WITH LIST OF THOSE IN RECEIPT OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister completed his inquiries into the question raised on June 7 about the alleged supplying by his department to a United States mailing list company, the names of people in receipt of old age pensions?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is Mr. Diefenbaker's question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You don't seem interested; don't you want the answer?

Mr. Lalonde: This allegation was promptly investigated. I checked with the officials of my department, who checked with all government sources. There is no indication that the list provided to a United States company came from any government. As a matter of fact, on the basis of the content of the list with which I was provided, it appears that it could not have come from government sources for a number of technical reasons, such as zip codes and so on.

We have checked with the United States company, and the president of the company has clearly stated that the information came from public records. Moreover, the president of the company has volunteered to put in future a disclaimer on all such forms to the effect that they are not coming from social security, medicare or other government sources.

LENGTH OF TIME MINISTER HAD INFORMATION CONCERNING LISTS OF OLD AGE PENSIONERS USED BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the same minister a supplementary question. How long has he had that information? My understanding was that he gave an undertaking in the House that as soon as the information was available, without any prompting from his own backbenchers, he would make it available to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton will confirm, I have had that information for several days, but I was waiting for the hon. member for Prince Albert to raise the question. I had a discussion with the hon. member for Prince Albert on the telephone yesterday morning and told him that I would be in the House yesterday, but the hon. member chose not to ask the question. He chose to ask another question, so I am not surprised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —that if the hon. member's colleagues do not do their homework, our members have to do it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, arising out of the statement just made by the minister, who is famous for his contributions and dialling judges—

Some hon. Members: Ask your question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I very much appreciate that he held up the answer until my return. I was absent because of my wife.

Yesterday the minister telephoned me and said that he was going to bring this matter up. I waited; he was silent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not here to correct the hon. gentleman, but I point out that his continual reference to me as "the hon. member"—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order please, I do not know that we can solve this disagreement in the question period. I know the right hon. member for Prince Albert was seeking the floor. Perhaps he has a question on another matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think it is right for me to bring up the fact that the hon. gentleman invariably refers to me as "the hon. member". I am the only right hon. member who is a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL LOTTERY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with widespread opposition across the country to the establishment of a Crown corporation lottery. In view of the fact that lotteries come within the jurisdiction of the provinces, have the provinces been consulted, and have they accepted something they strongly objected to in the past, namely, a national lottery which will take income from the provinces which should remain in the provinces?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I hope the right hon. gentleman's previous interjection did not indicate that he needed an adjective to show that he is honourable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You are just a dirty Basford. You will be growing hair when he gets finished with you.

Mr. Basford: With regard to the question, it is clearly established under the Criminal Code that lotteries may be permitted by the governor in council or by lieutenant governors in council. With regard to the second part of the question as to the degree of consultation, I will ask my friend the President of the Treasury Board to answer that.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the right hon. member for Prince Albert that there were extensive consultations among all the provinces on that subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did they accept?

Mr. Chrétien: There was no agreement between the provinces, and that is why we have decided to step in. I would like to inform the right hon. member that we had a vote in committee, and the count was eleven to one; all the members of his party supported Loto Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REJECTION OF WAGE AWARD TO AIRCRAFT SAFETY INSPECTORS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the light of the fact that the aircraft safety inspectors group of the Ministry of Transport, who review and renew airplane pilots's licences, will be going on strike this coming Friday, what action does the minister propose to take with regard to the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to reject the binding award of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in the recent aircraft operations group dispute? The reason for the strike is the Anti-Inflation Board's rejection of Mr. Justice Hall's wage proposal to the group.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the House passed a law which gives the board the authority to make decisions of that kind, and I intend to respect that law.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

THREATENED STRIKE OF AIRCRAFT SAFETY INSPECTORS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE ADHERENCE TO SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the fact that the aircraft safety inspectors group will be going on strike this coming Friday, what action does the minister intend to take to guarantee that no pilots will fly with invalid licences after Friday?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows from a specific experience Wednesday, there is a limited amount we can do, in the end, to assure that reviewing of pilots' licences, but other testing goes on satisfactorily in a strike or slowdown situation. We try to take what steps we can, and we try to assure safety, of course, but we cannot avoid inconvenience to many individuals.

* * *

● (1440)

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED NEW PROPOSAL FROM LOCKHEED FOR PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. I think it concerns more than one department. The Wall Street Journal of last Friday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I am trying to keep abreast of the facts from wherever they may come. The article quotes the chairman of Lockheed Aircraft Corporation as saying that a final proposal was submitted Tuesday to the Canadian government for the $1 billion sale of 18 PC-3 Orion aircraft and that negotiators are discussing fine tuning—whatever that may mean—and that Lockheed would need a definite answer by the end of June when the Canadian parliament recesses. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government received such an offer? Will it make an announcement of any decision to the House before parliament recesses?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Fine-tuned or otherwise.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really do admire the catholicity of the hon. member's reading. I never expected to hear him quote the Wall Street Journal. To answer the question, we have received an offer which is being evaluated. I am not quite certain when a decision will be made. If a decision is made before we recess of course it will be announced here.

An hon. Member: Is it in writing?

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. Has the government satisfied itself that the Lockheed Corporation indeed is in a financial position that would make it reasonable to anticipate that the contract as entered into with Lockheed would be carried out?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if we had any doubts on that score we would not enter into such a contract.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EVALUATION OF PIPELINE PROPOSALS BY UNITED STATES—DISCUSSIONS WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister probably knows a bill has been introduced in the United States Senate calling for the evaluation of various pipeline proposals by the FBA to be done by February 1; it would then allow for the President of the United States to respond within 90 days. There is the implication that this timing has been undertaken by the United States government because of discussions with the Canadian government as to when Canada may arrive at a decision with respect to pipelines. Can the minister confirm whether such discussions have taken place and if there is an understanding that a decision would be made about a pipeline in Canada—I am talking about moving northern gas—within this time frame?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm to the hon. member the harmony that he suggests may exist between Canadian policy and United States policy. I do know that there have been discussions between the two governments on a continuing basis about this question. I will investigate whether this question of synchronization of activities has been brought up and report later.

* * *

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON OUTCOME OF ICNAF TALKS—POSSIBILITY SOME COUNTRIES REFUSED NEW QUOTAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). The three-week annual meeting of the 18 member countries belonging to ICNAF is scheduled to end tomorrow without agreement reached on quotas for some stocks or on the future role of ICNAF. The United States government has announced their intention to withdraw from ICNAF. In the light of the extended fisheries jurisdiction of Canada and the United States early next year and the ownership problems surrounding Georges Bank as well as St. Pierre and Miquelon, is it the minister's intention to inform the House of the outcome of the ICNAF talks and whether any of the foreign countries presently fishing on our continental shelf have refused to accept the new reduced quotas?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the conference still has a full 24 hours to run. I contacted the delegation this morning, and we have attained most of the objectives with which we entered the conference. Some issues remain and possibly one or two have been delayed but there is a further meeting later this year. It really is too early to assess the general outcome of the conference. I would suggest that, generally, we are very satisfied with the progress that has been indicated and the allocation to Canada as a coastal state of a good share of the quota which we feel we needed with the advisers involved in these discussions.

EFFECT OF WITHDRAWAL OF UNITED STATES FROM ICNAF

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House what will be the effect of the withdrawal of the United States from ICNAF and is Canada assessing her own position in light of our announced intention to control the fisheries some 200 miles off our coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the United States delegation gave notice at the beginning of the conference, as we did, that they would consider withdrawing. They felt that those quotas and regulations adopted for 1977 were not acceptable. We have said very clearly that if they were not consistent with coastal state jurisdiction we would withdraw. This is a legal matter and you have to give notice before June 30. We made it clear that we might not exercise that option to withdraw if the conference moved sufficiently in the direction we thought it should move. I should point out to the hon. member that when the full results of this meeting are known he will see that some stocks outside the 200-mile limit zone have been considered and in fact Canada did obtain quite a number of concessions for stocks beyond the 200-mile zone.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF WHITEFISH

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): While I am on my feet and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the hon. member for McKenzie in respect of a request that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation may increase the price of one type of fish, the cutter or whitefish. This matter has been referred by the corporation to the Prices Support Board and a recommendation will be coming through in a matter of days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF PURCHASING LOCKHEED PC-3 AND EQUIPPING WITH ELECTRONIC GEAR MADE IN CANADA

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It has been reported that Lockheed has put a new LRPA proposal to the Department of National Defence which would extend the delivery date of the planes by one year to 1981, and which deletes some of the more sophisticated electronic gear. As this proposal seems to have retained the most serious disadvantage of the previous Lockheed plan, large payments before any plane is produced, would the minister inform the House if he is still considering the option of purchasing an off-the-shelf PC-3 and equipping it with a largely "made in Canada" avionics package?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are at the present time studying the proposal that has been made by Lockheed. Until the cabinet has made a decision on that proposal we will not be studying seriously other possibilities.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—INQUIRY IF APRIL PAYMENTS MADE AND HOW MUCH

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to ask if it is a verbal offer or not. May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Supply and Services? Could the minister advise the House if any payments called for in April in the signed contract tabled in the House have been made to Lockheed? If the answer is yes, how much and if not, why are we not paying up and are we liable to interest charges on these now overdue accounts?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, at the end of April we had paid $10 million and $808,000 on May 7. We have paid those amounts in time, which means that we did not have to pay interest on amounts owing.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED DELAY IN MOVING AIRBORNE REGIMENT FROM EDMONTON

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and it is in the interest of the taxpayer by saving money through not moving the Canadian Airborne Division out of Edmonton. Would the minister at least wait until after the 1978 election so that we may deal with this problem?

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONE AND RELATIONSHIP TO ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I should like to welcome him back from his visit to France. Could he report to the House if any discussions took place while he was in France with regard to St. Pierre and Miquelon as related to the extension by France of its 200 mile limit and the difficulties that could be experienced?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not raise the question of St. Pierre and Miquelon. We had consultations on this subject in the past with the French and as the hon. member knows we will have to have further discussions. I made extended reference to this point when we announced our extended jurisdiction on June 4. I assure the hon. member that this matter is of great importance to Canada and we intend to protect Canadian interests.

● (1450)

POSSIBLE RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY CEDING ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON TO FRANCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Is the Treaty of Utrecht which ceded St. Pierre to France and gave France certain fishing rights within Canadian jurisdiction off the coast of Newfoundland, to be renegotiated in the context of our intention to declare a 200 mile economic zone?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not raised that in the negotiations. I will check to see whether it is involved in the resolution of these difficulties or problems which arise as a result of our extended jurisdiction and the jurisdiction claimed by France.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INVOLVEMENT OF MR. PERRIER IN LEASING FACILITIES FROM CAMPEAU CORPORATION

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister launch an immediate investigation and report on any conflict of interest which might be present in the situation of Mr. A. J. Perrier, assistant deputy minister of the Department of Public Works, who is involved in the leasing of facilities and who was, until 1973, vice president of Campeau Corporation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Perrier was selected for the vacancy of assistant deputy minister of the Department of Public Works by the Public Service Commission, a body reporting to parliament. At the time of his appointment he severed all connections, financial and otherwise, with Campeau Corporation. He has, since then, complied completely with guidelines regarding conflicts of interest laid down for civil servants and we have every confidence in his intention and ability to avoid a conflict of interest. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it does not help much to act on the supposition, because of certain circumstances, of suspected wrongdoing, rather than the reverse.

Mr. Huntington: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House of the extent to which Mr. Perrier was involved in the negotiations and arrangements for leases totalling almost $10 million per annum with Campeau Corporation, and the extent to which he has been involved in the negotiation of the $490 million lease package for the three towers in Hull, Quebec?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the bulk of the leases to which the hon. gentleman referred were entered into with Campeau Corporation before Mr. Perrier joined the government. Since then he has not had charge of direct negotiations of any description with Campeau Corporation. These were conducted by the National Capital Region, of which Mr. McFarland is the manager.

* * *

TRANSPORT

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAIL-BARGE SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INTERCESSION ON BEHALF OF OWNERS OF TUG "MELINDA JANE"

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since, apparently, the Canadian Transport Commission has no jurisdiction over rail-barge service on Kootenay Lake, it follows that it has no jurisdiction over rail-barge service between Portes aux Basques, Newfoundland, and North Sydney, Nova Scotia. This authority would then revert to the cabinet. Is the minister prepared to accept this responsibility, or will he use his good offices to stimulate the Canadian Transport Commission into taking some action?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept as a legal conclusion that because one thing is a certain way, the other is as well. However, I will look into the matter.

Mr. Brisco: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's response, I ask, is he prepared to intercede on behalf of the owners of the rail-barge tug Melinda Jane whose three year contract with the CPR was unilaterally cancelled after one year and who were advised by the CPR to "sue us?"

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member suggested, other remedies are available to the complaining party. I think those remedies should be pursued first.

FINANCE

NEED FOR ECONOMIC STIMULATION IN VALUE OF ALLEGED WEAK DOMESTIC DEMAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance arises out of the recent release concerning first quarter gross national product information by Statistics Canada. On May 26, the day after the presentation of the budget, the leader of my party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: —asked the Minister of Finance why he had not brought in a budget which would stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment. The reply of the minister was that final domestic demand in Canada is and has remained at a very strong level for the past 12 to 18 months; therefore the further stimulus of consumer demand in Canada will not take up the slack in current production.

In light of statistics released since the introduction of the budget by Statistics Canada and in light of their conclusion that the first quarter was characterized by very weak personal expenditure on goods, can the minister say whether he is now prepared to revise his arguments made at the time of the budget, namely, that we are in no need of more economic stimulation than was shown in his budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that the first quarter figures of 2.7 per cent indicate an annual rate of about 11 per cent, most of which was concentrated in the domestic sector of Canada. I think if he will read the release again, he will see that both the government sector and private spending have contributed substantially to the situation in Canada; but, as I observed in the budget speech, the export side has been the weaker.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since most of the increase has occurred in inventory build-up, which means that there is a danger, once inventories are built up and consumer demand remains low, of our heading for a recession, is the minister prepared to revise his estimates on the need for stimulus in the economy and bring in additional stimulus, by cutting taxes for those at the lower end of the income scale?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the inventory build-up is founded on the assumption of business that consumer demand will be high and that it will be necessary to have extra inventory.

Mr. Broadbent: That's absurd.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN STANDING ORDERS TO PREVENT FALL OF GOVERNMENT EXCEPT ON VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Could the minister tell the House if during the summer recess he intends to proceed with an amendment to the parliamentary procedure to be presented when we will resume work next fall and which would enable us to change the standing orders, something like this:

That the House cannot bring down the government otherwise than by a non confidence vote, which would make it possible, each time we have a free vote as we did this morning, to show to the people of Canada that this House is an example of living democracy?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon subcommittees of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization are submitting reports which will propose very substantial amendments to the rules of the House. I hope those reports will commend themselves to the House: but when the committee itself reports we have no intention, on our side, of making changes of the kind proposed by the hon. member. I think our rules with regard to confidence motions are well established and traditional, and we should continue to adhere to them.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF INVESTIGATIONS INTO AVIATION SAFETY CONDUCTED PRIOR TO JULY, 1974

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport with a view to eliciting as much factual information as is available with reference to the Canadian Airlines Pilots Association and CATCA? Would the minister make available to the House and country the aviation safety investigations conducted by the Ministry of Transport prior to the issuance of NOTAM 1274, in July, 1974, since I believe the minister specifically referred to this document, or to this study, in an address delivered on March 2, this year, at Ottawa, to the special international air safety symposium. Will the minister make this information available to the House and country?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I gathered from the beginning of the question that the hon. member was referring to investigations relating to incidents in the air. I will be glad to look at the relevant practices and procedures. I have no reason to think that the basic information should not be available; however, I will look into it.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF UNITED STATES NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCE ON EFFECT OF AEROSOL SPRAYS ON OZONE—SUGGESTION MINISTER CORRECT HIS ANSWERS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the minister, replying to my question, advised the House that the U.S. National Academy of Science concluded that there was no proof showing that the use of aerosol sprays can cause a deterioration of the atmosphere's ozone layer and bring about an increase in the incidence of skin cancer. Can the minister say whether his information from the academy came by way of an academy report, or by way of his conversations with academy officials?

An hon. Member: By way of academy award.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the translation or the words I used implied that the aerosol sprays have no effect on the ozone layer, that is not what I meant because they do have an effect which is, however, not important enough to jeopardize public health at the present time. It is a report which I got from my department and I am going to check its source.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: In fairness to that very distinguished group of scientists, will the minister correct his answer of yesterday wherein he told me that the United States Academy of Science made a study and had come to the conclusion that nothing proved that the use of aerosol sprays affected the ozone layer because as late as this morning, the academy categorically denied that they had reached any conclusion or made any reporting indicating a conclusion about the effect of aerosol sprays?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to change anything before I check with the department that gave me this information.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of National Health and Welfare on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, first I referred to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) as the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton. I want to make a correction to Hansard on that point and I would like to refer to the hon. member by his proper title.

Furthermore, I would like to make clear that during my conversation yesterday with the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), I returned his call; I never committed myself to take the initiative to answer the question. It was agreed that I would be in the House at two o'clock yesterday and that I would be pleased to use this opportunity to answer his question on that matter.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the point of order raised by the minister, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for that correction. Ottawa-Carleton is a vacancy which we on this side of the House hope to fill the next time around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that those opposite are whistling in the dark. It is going to be held by the Grits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, questions have arisen both inside and outside the House with regard to the conduct of the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. From inquiries that have been undertaken, and from information made available, I have concluded that there is no evidence to indicate that Mr. Gauthier had a pecuniary interest or was associated with anyone who had a pecuniary interest in any matter before the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

I wish to make it clear that there is nothing in the information which has been made available to me which indicates that Mr. Gauthier has conducted himself in any manner conflicting with the due performance of his duties. I have discussed this matter extensively with Mr. Gauthier and he has given me his assurance that there was no conflict of interest involved in his activities, and I have no reason to believe the contrary.

A question has been raised as to whether, pursuant to section 21(7) of the Anti-Dumping Act, the chairman has devoted the whole of his time to the performance of his duties under this act. From the information supplied, it is clear that both before the chairman's reappointment on January 1, 1976, and since, in contemplation of retirement, he has been involved in a variety of private interests during the course of his employment as chairman. While, clearly, in the normal course, any government employee may feel compelled from time to time to deal with private interests during the working day, the number and variety of matters referred to, in my view, go beyond the normal course as contemplated by section 21(7).

In view of the situation that has now arisen, and the strong feeling of Mr. Gauthier that his position on the tribunal has been impaired, I have discussed with him the question of his continued tenure on the tribunal until the end of his term. Mr. Gauthier has submitted to me his resignation as chairman and a member of the tribunal with effect from today's date, and on behalf of the government I have accepted that resignation. Mr. Gauthier has had a long and distinguished career in the Canadian armed forces and public service and has been a strong and effective member and chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

Questions have also been asked concerning the involvement of Mr. A. L. Bissonnette in private business ventures while he was a member of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. I have questioned Mr. Bissonnette about his involvement, and he revealed that he had a financial interest in certain companies. He also said that he was a director and/or officer of these companies. He assured me that the activities of the companies in no manner conflicted with the activities of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

I have asked Mr. Bissonnette to resign from positions in any private company which would require a positive obligation at law, such as that of director or officer. This, in itself, would avoid the risk of being required to sit as a director or officer at the same time as he was a member of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. I have asked Mr. Bissonnette to consider whether these investments are in conformity with the conflict of interest guidelines which were sent to him and acknowledged by him on June 4, 1974. I have pointed out to him that if any investments he does retain put him in conflict with any matter before the tribunal, he would be required to disqualify himself from such matter.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the minister, in the statement he just read to the House, has demonstrated once again that this administration is a most permissive one. I would point out the background on this matter. In 1964, the then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, made very clear what the obligations were with regard to public servants. I read from page 3 the submission to his cabinet colleagues of that day where the then prime minister stated:

> Equally, a staff member, like a minister, must not have a pecuniary interest that could even remotely conflict with the discharge of his public duty.

It has been assumed, certainly on this side of the House, that that was the high standard of duty that would be required of every public servant. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) says that he has now reviewed the circumstances and there does not appear to be any evidence of confict of interest—but on the other hand, considering the circumstances, he has asked the chairman to resign. Bear in mind that this is an eight-day resignation and the term runs out at the end of this month. That shows how far this government has strayed from the high principles once held by administrations in Canada.

On December 18 there were two significant references to the duties involving public servants which were laid down at that time as guidelines. Item 4 reads:

> Public servants should exercise care in the management of their private affairs so as not to benefit, or appear to benefit from the use of information acquired during the course of their official duties,—

Item 6 reads:

> All public servants are expected to disclose to their superiors, in a manner to be notified, all business, commercial or financial interests where such interests might conceivably be construed as being in actual or potential conflict with their official duties.

The Minister of Finance owes an explantion to this House. Were these involvements in fact conveyed to him? Did Mr. Gauthier at any time indicate that he did have these pecuniary interests as laid down in item 6 of the guidelines to which I have referred? Specifically, I believe the evidence the minister has referred to is sufficient to justify an inquiry into this matter. It is not enough for the minister to come here and say he has had a chat with the chairman and that he believes there was no conflict of interest, based on the chairman's statements. Surely we are entitled to an inquiry, or at least a reference to a standing committee of this House to go through the travel itinerary of Mr. Gauthier. Who did he meet? When did he meet them? We should be able to look at the dockets to decide for ourselves whether there was a possible conflict of interest involved as far as the chairman's obligations are concerned.

The minister carefully avoided any suggestion of asking for an accounting as to the travel expenses paid for by the taxpayers of Canada with regard to these extensive private dealings to which he referred. In short, I believe we certainly have prima facie evidence to justify a full investigation into exactly what did transpire in the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, not only with respect to the chairman but also to a member of the tribunal, Mr. Bissonnette.

As far as Mr. Bissonnette is concerned, it is not enough to say that he has been asked to divest himself of private company interests—and I draw the attention of hon. members to this wording, "which would require a positive obligation at law such as those of director or officer." By implication, the minister is indicating that it is quite acceptable to have a certain amount of private business dealings, to have an interest in private concerns, but "do not go too far, and do not get caught." That is not good enough for a standard to be followed by public servants in this country. We need an inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1510)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his courtesy in letting us have in advance a copy of the statement he has just made. As for the decision he has taken with respect to Mr. Gauthier and Mr. Bissonnette, that, of course, is his responsibility as Minister of Finance.

Having looked at the rules and at the guidelines in the short time available to me, I suspect the minister has done all he could. I am not sure that what is needed now is an inquiry into how Mr. Gauthier and Mr. Bissonnette have behaved. I suggest there is a much broader issue before us, and one which must not be allowed to lapse.

The real difficulty is that the guidelines applying to public servants are unclear and uncertain. The minister said today, with respect to both these gentlemen, that they have given him certain assurances: they have assured him that what they were doing was not in conflict with their duty to the public. The unfortunate thing is this: as I read the rules, that is all they are required to do. I see the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) looking at me; he had something to say on this point, and I shall come to that in a moment.

What is called for is not an after-the-fact inquiry into the activities of those two persons. What is called for is a revamping of the guidelines which affect public servants as far as conflicts of interest are concerned. I want to quote briefly from two authorities—I am one of them, and my leader is another.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Which is the more important?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am quoting myself first, simply on the basis of chronology. In December, 1973, when we had before us a statement on this matter by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I pointed out the shortcomings in the guidelines which were put forward. I complained in particular about the onus which was placed on public servants to report to their superiors as to whether or not they were in a conflict of interest situation. I said:

I join with the Leader of the Opposition—

That is the gentleman whom we now designate as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield).

—in expressing concern over the extent to which in the Prime Minister's statement as well as in the so-called guidelines everything seems to be left to the individual public servant. I think this is unfair to the public and also unfair to the public servant. I note this sentence in the paragraph in the Prime Minister's statement having to do with disclosure: "Only those matters which the public servant believes are in actual or potential conflict of interest will require disclosure."

I ask, frankly, of what earthly use is that kind of guideline when, in the final analysis, it is left to every individual public servant to decide whether the interests he has are such that he should disclose them. As the Leader of the Opposition said, surely the poorest judge of one's own conduct is the person himself, yet that is the way this has been drawn up.

That is a quotation from Hansard of December 18, 1973, at page 8840. Later, in the same citation, I called for what we believed was required, namely, full public disclosure, especially by those who are involved in what could be called decision-making—by those close to the making of government policy or its administration at a high level. Subsequently, on December 10, 1974, as reported at page 2118 of Hansard, my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), outlined in two or three very succinct paragraphs four points which are extremely important. I mention two of them because they are relevant to the situation before us.

Second, there is no requirement for public disclosure.

Third, too much discretion is vested in the public servant. The onus is on him to disclose to the minister those matters which he believes to be in actual or potential conflict.

One note on the second point. This is the situation in which we now find ourselves. Mr. Gauthier and Mr. Bissonnette were not required to disclose their other interests. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has already read into the record one of the sentences in that connection. I believe the trouble is right there. Our former leader, Mr. David Lewis, also had something to say on this point. We have pointed out what is really required—not just voluntary disclosure by public servants of what they believe may be wrong, but full disclosure of financial and business interests by all public servants at the upper level.

Mr. Gauthier has gone, losing eight days of his term, and Mr. Bissonnette has been told to drop some of his associations. Rather than spending too much time going over the past, the point has been reached at which we should revise these rules. This should be done for the protection of the public as well as for the protection of public servants. Senior personnel should not be left in the position where they are asked to determine what is right and what is not right. The line has to be drawn somewhere. We should not make a requirement that will not hurt those on the cleaning staff, while in the process letting those at the upper levels get off scot free. Those in the lower ranks will perhaps not be called upon to make any disclosure at all, but certainly those in the middle and upper brackets should not be left free to decide whether they should report to their superiors or not. There should be full public disclosure, and in my view this is what should come out of this latest experience.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has just made important statements concerning the integrity of some government officials.

One of them concerns the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, Mr. J. P. C. Gauthier. In his statement, the Minister admits there has been some conflict of interest, but he plays with the situation. In the first paragraph, he says:

I wish to make it clear that there is nothing in the action which has been made available to me which indicates that Mr. Gauthier has conducted himself in any manner conflicting with the due performance of his duties.

In the second paragraph, the same Minister of Finance says:

. . . the number and variety of matters referred to, in my view, go beyond the normal course as contemplated by Section 21(7).

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore an indication of two things: first there are a certain number of cases concerning the former chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal which could be a breach of Standing Order 21(7) to the extent that the Minister of Finance would have to accept the resignation of the chairman.

The second part of the minister's statement deals with another official who is a member of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. In that case, the minister himself is both judge and tried, the judge of his official and tried by the House of Commons. The minister said: "I have questioned Mr. Bissonnette and he assured me . . ."

The Minister told him: "I will send you a short letter on June 4, and will explain to you the guidelines on the conflicts of interest. If you think, my dear Mr. Bisonnette, that it could give rise to conflicts of interest, you will not be accepted for such and such a case.

In the case of Mr. Bissonnette, the minister imitates Pontius Pilate, he backs out, he simply goes to see him, talks to him, sends him a letter and says: If you ever consider you are in a situation of conflict of interest, just offer your resignation and we will settle the problem; you will get rid of all your registered capital in such and such company.

So much for Mr. Bissonnette. Everything considered, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to boast about in the statement of the Minister of Finance. As regards Mr. Bissonnette, he simply disclaims all responsibility. The minister tells Mr. Bissonnette to judge by himself whether or not he is in a conflict of interest situation. That is all.

In the case of the president of the labour court, the minister accepts his resignation, but he announces today no positive and immediate measure, in the short or intermediate run, to prevent that kind of situation. Mr. Speaker, if a similar problem had been raised five or six years ago, there would have been a general outcry in the country and the government would have been charged with corruption.

This has become usual practice nowadays. Recently the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) got rid of a problem by shifting blame on an official who in turn is counter-attacking the minister, and this gets into the headlines and prompts legal actions which have no sense and never end. Mr. Speaker, we are always on the alert. I suggest that the credibility of the Minister of Supply and Services as well as the credibility of this minister have been affected in this situation. We have therefore two victims; public opinion is still not fully satisfied because more light has not been shed on the truth and the solution is still to come.

The matter discussed today is serious. I would like the minister to go a step further, since he pretends to be an administrator. In view of the fact that for some time the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and one of its members have had to examine, build up and administer files about dumping complaints submitted by some plaintiffs, Mr. Speaker, and since the minister is acknowledging today that in the case of the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal there has been actual conflicts of interest, I am wondering how we can trust the results of the inquiries made following the complaints raised when those conflict of interest situations arose. I would like to know who the plaintiffs were. What were the complaints raised when those conflict of interest situations arose in the case of Mr. Gauthier, since the minister himself has acknowledged the existence of such situation to the point where he had to accept the chairman's resignation. It is therefore evident that during that period complaints have been examined, files have been built up and decisions have been taken.

● (1520)

If that man was found a victim or a cause of that conflict of interest, that leads me to question the validity of either the judgements or the studies made when these complaints were lodged and when conflicts of interest were existing.

How many complaints were there? Who were the witnesses? On what issues? Was it on textile? Was it on steel, or on any other issue? Is the minister then prepared to allow the plaintiff—who might not be satisfied with the ruling since it has been admitted today that there was a conflict of interest, so much so that the resignation of that president was accepted—is the Minister of Finance, with his intellectual honesty and as an administrator of the government finances, prepared to contact the plaintiffs so they may again file their grievances, obtain common law justice and firmly believe in the validity of the review of these files and the decision-making process with respect to these files during the conflicts of interest.

Mr. Speaker, the question is fundamental. If today we feel quite satisfied with merely congratulating the Minister of Finance, with accepting those resignations and simply turning over a new leaf, without giving any guarantee that positive steps will be taken to avoid that type of conflicts of interest in the future, to protect those who were judged at the time when those conflicts of interest were pointed out, then, Mr. Speaker, we are just playing ostrich this afternoon.

I should like to close by saying that in Canada we have need of an efficient and, above all, humane public service. As a member of the Social Credit Party of Canada, Mr. Speaker, no one need lecture us in this House on the services we render our constituents with regard to the administration in general. We need not necessarily shout out against the civil service but many incidents prove that it takes liberties with powers it does not have, that it takes decisions unilaterally that discriminate against defenceless citizens. Please allow me to express the very humble wish, this afternoon, that the public service in general will learn its lesson from what is happening to Mr. Gauthier and may happen to Mr. Bissonnette eventually, if the Minister of Finance decides to reach a decision rather than leave it to Mr. Bissonnette. The civil service must, in its decisions with the Canadian people, with the claimant in unemployment insurance matters, in matters of old age security or income tax, be as understanding, as broadminded, as humane, as welcoming in its judgment as those two officials were in dealing with their own business.

Mr. Speaker, come the day when the civil service considers the people it wants to serve with as much broadmindedness and humanity as it serves itself when its own protection and interests are involved, then, Mr. Speaker, we can trust our civil service. But, at this time, I doubt very much that we can.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put some questions to the minister. Would he first of all reply to the point I raised in my reply to his statement in respect of item No. 6 of the guidelines tabled on December 18 which provided for public servants disclosing to their superiors, in a manner to be notified, of business, commercial or financial interest where such interest might conceivably be construed as being in an actual or potential conflict with their official duties? Would the minister indicate whether, in fact, the chairman, Mr. Bissonnette did at any time disclose to the minister the business dealings to which the minister is now referring in his two statements?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, after these guidelines were issued, and indeed were sent to autonomous tribunals such as the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, the question was raised—I am not sure of the source of the question—with the government and with the Privy Council office as to whether it was appropriate to apply these guidelines to members of a self-ruling body such as the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. While the question has been under consideration, for that reason my understanding is that at least most of the members of tribunals of this kind have not reported on the guidelines. I might indicate that copies of these, as was indicated in my statement, were sent to Mr. Bissonnette. I understand it has been the general policy not to press on with that inquiry until the matter is resolved.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the guideline to which I have referred was really annexed to the statement of the Prime Minister on December 18, in which he stated very clearly that Crown Corporations and agencies will be urged to develop further standards and procedures within their own organizations in respect of this general question of conflict of interest, will the minister indicate whether in fact there are any guidelines established within the tribunal at the present time and, if not, why not?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I said, Mr. Speaker, the strict application of these to tribunals has currently been a matter of some discussion between tribunals in general and the Privy Council office. My understanding is that the matter has not come to a conclusion, and it is for that reason there is no definitive position on it at this point.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again to the minister, who has indicated he is satisfied there is no conflict of interest involved in the chairman's activities. To become satisfied, would the minister indicate whether, for example, he reviewed the possible Swedish steel dumping cases which have been before the Anti-Dumping Tribunal for some time? If he did review these, how did he satisfy himself that in fact there was no conflict of interest involved, bearing in mind the involvement the chairman appears to have had with various Swedish business concerns, or at least in one instance a connection with the steel business; and did he specifically invite the steel representatives to indicate if they were satisfied with the tribunal's decision in respect of that matter?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have certainly reviewed some of the correspondence in this regard, and I would remind the hon. gentleman that the result of the tribunal's decision was a substantial withdrawal of Swedish steel from Canadian markets. Indeed, Atlas Steel indicated its satisfaction with the outcome of this matter. There was no indication in either the material made available, or as a result of questioning, of any connection between the persons involved and Mr. Gauthier's individual dealings or the principals or officers of the Swedish steel company.

● (1530)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister three brief questions. Is the matter entirely closed at this point, or is the minister still making some inquiries? Second, will the hon. gentleman, make any recommendations to his cabinet colleagues for any modification or some of the existing guidelines for public servants? Third, had any previous investigation taken place in respect of any aspect of Mr. Gauthier's activities as alleged by CTV?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Mr. Bissonnette, as the hon. member will note, I have indicated my wish that he should take further action with regard to his position as either a director or officer of certain private companies. The matter, therefore, is not closed. It is a matter which, obviously, I will have to pursue.

With regard to Mr. Gauthier it seems to me the matter is closed. I also made inquiries, in respect of the point of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, concerning whether any charges were made to the tribunal in respect of the travels of Mr. Gauthier or the use of the tribunal's facilities. I do not have a final report. The preliminary report contains no indication of abuse of funds or substantial use of facilities for these particular transactions. What was the second question?

Mr. MacKay: Previous investigation.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There apparently was an investigation at the time the dispute arose with regard to the previous chairmanship of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. There has been an investigation. I have inquired of the Mounted Police in this regard. At the moment of speaking I do not have a report in that regard. Mr. Gauthier indicated to me that the transactions at that time were the subject of investigation, but there were no further proceedings from that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, actually the question I wanted to put to the minister is the second question asked by my friend from Central Nova. Since the minister did not answer the question, I can ask it now. In light of this experience, is the minister recommending to the Prime Minister or to his cabinet colleagues a tightening up of the guidelines so that this kind of experience will not happen again? I have in mind the loopholes in the situation, because the onus is on the public servant to report only the things that he might think would be matters in conflict.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty with the position taken by the hon. gentleman is that it appears to be a position that would require the continuous surveillance of senior public servants by the government. I have some doubt concerning whether employees in whose judgment trust is placed should be treated in that way by being under continual surveillance. The question has been raised of the required time in which to declare their interest in all personal matters which could conflict with their duties.

My understanding of the matter is that public servants, strictly speaking—and in this case we are talking about an autonomous tribunal—have now been required to declare interests which might possibly conflict with their duties. So the declaration is there in that case. The matter has not been finalized in relation to the tribunals because the question of the independence of a court of record, for example, is raised by the existence of such a tribunal. Very obviously, we will have to have further discussion about this problem. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal says that is an even stronger reason to subject to scrutiny people who are in a quasi-judicial position. I think one would want to consider whether someone who has been put in a quasi-judicial position should be subject to that kind of surveillance by the administration.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to finalize the questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for one supplementary, the hon. member for Lotbinière, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, and the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have just one more question. May I ask the minister if it would not be more fair to all public servants to require full disclosure by all those above a certain level?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it—and I sought to confirm this with the President of the Privy Council—that is indeed the case with regard to senior public servants who are in the structure of the ministries, strictly speaking. There has, however, been a question with regard to the position of members, among others, of quasi-judicial tribunals, and this question has not yet been brought to resolution. Obviously, I can say that it would have been very much simpler in this case if it had been brought to resolution. I have an incentive to try to do this.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) stated the following this afternoon about the chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, as recorded at the last but one paragraph, at page 1 of the English version, quote:

[English]

While clearly in the normal course any government employee may feel compelled from time to time to deal with private interests during the working day, the number and variety of matters referred to, in my view, go beyond the normal course as contemplated by section 21(7).

● (1540)

[Translation]

Can the minister tell the House how many matters he is talking about and can he say when they took place? What conclusions did he draw from this period, when for example he is talking of the number and variety of the matters referred to? So, what is the number?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the precise number, but according to my estimation I think there may be six or seven transactions, distinct cases in which the chairman of the tribunal was involved. Some press reports are somewhat different. There are six or seven distinct cases.

Mr. Fortin: Since the minister knows approximately the number of cases in which he established that there was a situation of conflict of interest, will he tell the House, in such cases, what claims had been filed with the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and what were the result of these claims? Was it in favour of the plaintiffs or of companies involved, since there is a situation of conflict of interest? The minister will now conclude that—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that this is not really a situation of conflict of interest, strictly speaking.

As I stated in the first paragraph, there is no evidence of a conflict between a sub judice matter and the private interests of the chairman or other member of that tribunal. There was a second criterion, namely that the chairman devoted the whole of his time to the performance of his official duties, and in this regard there was, in my opinion, a failure to comply with the provisions of the anti-dumping legislation. There is no conflict whatsoever between his private interests and a sub judice matter, and it is because he was attending to other matters when he was chairman. That is the conclusion I came to. It is in this perspective that I referred to the number of situations. It is not a sub judice matter, but his personal activities were involved.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance tell us, given the conflict of interest as regards time, whether the reason why this public servant acted in this way might be that his salary was too low? Therefore, what was the public servant's salary?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think so. I believe he had a high salary. I cannot answer that question, but I believe his salary was adequate.

Mr. Fortin: But that was it?

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will reconsider his judgment that the position of a member of a board or commission might be in any way different in the sense of his having a diminished sense of responsibility in terms of conflict of interest. Having said that, may I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to put the matter before a committee of the House, not only for an examination of the facts in this particular case but also to look toward the future in these kinds of matters which I am sure cause embarrassment to the government and embarrassment to the public servant who does not have an opportunity to put his side of the case forward except through the words of the minister.

I think it would assist members of the House in understanding the purport of the guidelines, and would also assist the public servant and the public service generally in terms of their responsibilities. The hon. member for York-Simcoe raised that possibility, and I do not think anyone has asked the minister about that. I wonder if the minister would consider such an inquiry in view of the circumstances and looking to the future, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I did, indeed, consider that situation. I point out to the hon. gentleman that parliament has specifically provided a procedure for dealing with this kind of complaint against members of tribunals by providing for a reference in this kind of matter to the Canadian Judicial Council as a preliminary step to those that might be taken for their removal. In the case of members of this kind of quasi-judicial board—the situation is analogous to that of judges—the assumption was made by parliament at that time that parliament itself should not inquire into their conduct, but it was appropriate that the Canadian Judicial Council should do so.

The next question which I am sure is on the hon. member's mind is, why did we not do that in this case? Quite frankly, that would have been my preferred course of action. The difficulty was the time factor involved. The chairman was going to remain in his position for another ten to twelve days. The opinion which I received on the application of the law was that the Canadian Judicial Council might well refuse to hear a matter for the removal of someone who already had ceased to be a member of the tribunal by reason of the passage of time. It might be said, in that particular case, that through the accident of time it was not possible to follow the procedure which parliament had proposed. I would think it would be preferable not to submit to the scrutiny of the legislature the conduct of individual members of quasi-judicial tribunals such as this one. I would have to acknowledge that, for reasons of time, there is a lacuna in this instance, but reference to the Canadian Judicial Council is preferable.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I gather from the minister's statement that Mr. Bissonnette's time as a member of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal has not run out. We do not have a problem with respect to him as he is continuing in his post. However, the minister did not make it clear whether he had answered the guidelines at the time he was to answer them. Having regard to the situation in which Mr. Bissonnette must find himself, and his desire, I am sure, as well as that of the government, to avoid any suspicion of wrongdoing on his part, has the minister considered putting his case to the Canadian Judicial Council? I understand his reason with respect to Mr. Gauthier.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In the case of Mr. Bissonnette, both from documentary evidence that was available, and from his personal declaration, it was clear that he had not been a participant with Mr. Gauthier in the rather extensive conferences, exchanges of telexes and other transactions which had occurred in the past eight months. The interest of Mr. Bissonnette was as an investor in one company which was involved in these transactions in which he has the position of director. His other interest dated back to the time when he was in private law practice and when he remained on the board of a number of private companies in which he retained no pecuniary interest.

It seemed to me, on the facts of that case, that there was no evidence of conflict of interest, strictly speaking, and that there was no multiplicity of transactions to indicate that he had been failing in his duties as a member of the tribunal. Evidence would indicate that there was a potential conflict because he is director or officer of a company, but there was no evidence of an actual conflict. It would seem to me to be unfair, under the circumstances, because of that relationship, to refer the situation to the Canadian Judicial Council. Naturally, if other evidence came to light I would have to consider the suggestion of the hon. member, and that would then be the appropriate course of action.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for the attempts he has made to give us as full replies as possible to our questions. I listened with a great deal of interest to the reply he gave to my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova. I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong, but if I understood him correctly, he said that there was no substantial use of government facilities by Mr. Gauthier for his private business purposes. Could the minister indicate to the House what he meant by "no substantial use of government facilities for personal business", and also could he detail to the House what evidence he has, if any, of Mr. Gauthier's use of government facilities for private business purposes?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It did become clear that Mr. Gauthier had had a number of meetings in his office with people who were there, not about tribunal business but in relation to transactions about which we were speaking. Indeed, some of the correspondence that was on file might well have been typed by the staff of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

One of the questions upon which we focused was whether, in the course of the rather extensive travels in which the chairman was involved as a member of the board, he had charged the government for what was essentially a trip on private business. We could find no evidence of that, although it was clear in one case that while he was in Sweden on business of the tribunal on a pending case he had taken some days off, part of which time was devoted to meeting the principals involved in one of these transactions. It is in that sense that I used the words "not substantial use of facilities"—in particular, not charging for any extensive travel.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Beatty: In elaborating on the answer which the minister gave, has the minister been able to find any information which would suggest that, for example, Mr. Gauthier's travels abroad were timed deliberately to coincide with his desire to travel abroad on business purposes? Also, the minister indicated previously that Mr. Gauthier took some time off while in Sweden to conduct personal business. Could the minister indicate whether, when Mr. Gauthier was conducting private business during the time when he would customarily be employed by the government, he reimbursed the public treasury for his salary for those days? Also, could the minister indicate whether there was any reimbursement of the public purse for any transportation costs which were carried by the government if Mr. Gauthier was able to conduct his private business during a trip which was paid for by the government?

● (1550)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I said, if the chairman in that particular case was in Sweden for the purpose of the business of the tribunal, in that sense the expense to the Crown was no greater than it would have been if that was all he had done. As to payments back, I cannot specifically respond to that. I can inquire further. I would have been inclined, from the inquiries, to have said that this is not the appropriate subject for civil action for an accounting and payment back to the government. However, I think it would be appropriate to make some inquiries in this regard to see whether further proceedings of that kind might be taken. I have not passed judgment on that question at this point.

* * *

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EMPOWER ATTORNEY GENERAL TO TAKE ACTION FOR PERSONS DAMAGED BY VIOLATION OF THE ACT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-441, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (ex relatione class actions).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide Canadians from one end of the country to the other with the right to class actions in the Federal Court of Canada, a right which they do not presently have.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is not the time that there can be formal introduction of the appropriation bills, but perhaps I should inform the House that these bills are ready for distribution. I believe this will help in handling the business later in the day.

Mr. Speaker: The practice adopted by the House on recent occasions during which it has had to consider and finalize the process of supply has certainly been improved by the early introduction of supply bills, and again, although the Standing Orders do not provide for the introduction of those bills at this particular time of the day, it certainly is gratifying to know that those bills are ready for distribution. I presume hon. members would want to have them distributed in advance, even though the understanding must be that they cannot be introduced until later in the day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my thanks to the government House leader for his accommodation. I think Your Honour properly put the point, and I hope that the minister, or perhaps his parliamentary secretary, will make the appropriate arrangements to have that distribution take place. Nonetheless, we are very grateful.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is a good idea, and we welcome it.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 5,345, 5,432, 5,438, 5,501, 5,503, 5,508, 5,510, 5,713 and 5,737.

[Text]

ATLANTIC SEAL HUNT—INFORMATION LEAFLET

Question No. 5,345—Mr. Jones:

1. Did the Director General, Quebec Region, Department of the Environment, order on March 30, 1976, that all French texts recently issued by Information Services on the Atlantic seal hunt and accompanying 1976 policy be destroyed and, if so, for what reason?

2. How much waste is represented by such action in terms of time, money, paper, etc.?

3. Has any action been taken to ensure that this type of incident does not recur?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): 1. The Director-General, Quebec Region, Fisheries and Marine Service, Department of the Environment requested that all French texts of an information leaflet on the Atlantic Seal Hunt, "La Chasse aux phoques dans l'Atlantique", be destroyed because of errors in the French text. These errors were due to inadequate editing and proofreading, and the fact that the text was a translation of a preliminary draft.

2. $284 for typesetting and printing of replacement copies for the 2,500 discarded leaflets. Errors were corrected and reprinting was completed within one week.

3. Staffing of vacant editing positions within the Fisheries and Marine Information Branch has been authorized, and closer supervision of editing and printing procedures has been implemented.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ATLANTIC REGION—SAINT JOHN

Question No. 5,432—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What was the total cost of the National Harbours Board Atlantic Region Office in Saint John during 1975?

2. How many staff members are employed in the NHB Atlantic Region Office?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. $125,458.74.

2. The Board member and two employees.

WELFARE GRANTS PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,438—Mr. Herbert:

1. By province, for each of the past five years, how much has been provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Welfare Grants Programme?

2. Are all projects, in the Province of Quebec, in the social welfare field given prior approval by the Government of Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. See reply to Parliamentary Enquiry No. 5,404, tabled on June 11, 1976.

2. No. Projects are forwarded to the Department of Social Affairs for comments and reactions prior to final consideration by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD SHEDS—PORT OF MONTREAL—LEASES

Question No. 5,501—Mr. Forrestall:

What percentage of National Harbours Board owned sheds at the port of Montreal were leased during the years (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 on (i) an annual (ii) a monthly (iii) a weekly (iv) a daily basis?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises that permits of occupancy for shedded terminals were issued on the following basis:

	(i) Annual per cent	(ii) Monthly per cent	(iii) Weekly per cent	(iv) Daily per cent
(a) 1974	74.4	3.7	Nil	6
(b) 1975	80.9	2.6	Nil	5
(c) 1976	83.3	1	Nil	—

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—JACQUES CARTIER TERMINAL—PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 5.503—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How much of the total estimated cost of the Jacques Cartier Terminal at the Port of Montreal is attributable to the take-over of general cargo facilities being incorporated in the Terminal?

2. How was this amount determined?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. $390,128.

2. Original cost of the sheds on the Jacques Cartier Terminal as they were used for break-bulk handling less accumulated depreciation.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—MARINE TERMINAL PROGRAMME—PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 5,508—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many man-years were spent by the National Harbours Board in the administration of the shed rental programme during 1974 and 1975 and how many are anticipated in 1976 at the Port of Montreal?

2. What is the estimated cost for each year?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. 0.29 man-years were spent in the administration of the marine terminal programme during 1974 and 1975, and it is anticipated that the same time will be spent during 1976.

2. Cost for 1974, $4,810; Cost for 1975, $5,290; Estimated cost for 1976, $5,690.

UIC—FISHERMEN

Question No. 5,510—Mr. Marshall:

1. Do (a) fishermen require eight insured weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, yet only get .83 of a week's benefits for each insured week worked (b) labourers and other workers require eight insured weeks to start a claim and are they then entitled to between 18 and 44 weeks of benefits and, if so, for what reason is there discrimination?

2. Do the present UIC regulations take into consideration factors such as years when fish are not plentiful and when fishermen are subject to weather conditions not suitable for fishing, and which prevent them working?

3. Can the majority of fishermen qualify for benefits any time prior to the week in which December 1 occurs?

4. Are the Minister and Chairman of UIC aware that ice and weather conditions discriminate against fishermen in qualifying for UIC benefits?

5. Is the government considering changes to UIC regulations in an effort to overcome the problems of Canadian fishermen and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. (a) A distinction must be made between self-employed fishermen and fishermen who are regular employees working under a contract of employment. The latter group have the same rights under the unemployment insurance legislation as all other employees. Self-employed fishermen, the only self-employed workers covered by unemployment insurance generally may qualify for benefit only during the period December 1 to May 15. This is a period of approximately 24 weeks, which is usually the non-fishing period for most self-employed fishermen. Their benefit duration is .83 benefit weeks for each week of qualifying insurable employment. However, if a self-employed fisherman has at least eight weeks of regular insured employment, this can be combined with his insured weeks from fishing self-employment to establish a regular claim for benefits; (b) Labourers and other workers require eight weeks of insurable employment in the qualifying period and they may qualify for benefit at any time of the year for up to 44 weeks. Providing benefit during the usual non-fishing period only is not discriminatory in that they enjoy a benefit not available to other self-employed workers. Furthermore, they can normally resume full scale fishing after May 15.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Both the Minister and the Chairman are aware that weather conditions can and do affect the unemployment insurance benefit entitlement of fishermen. This fact has been recognized by the Department of Environment in the last few years by additional financial support programs for such fishermen.

5. Not in respect to unemployment insurance for self-employed fishermen as the Department of Environment is developing programs to replace unemployment insurance for this group.

CAR ALLOWANCE FOR MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT

Question No. 5,713—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) What is the total amount of public funds paid to the present Minister of the Environment for a car allowance since he became a member of the Cabinet (b) has the Minister always used his own car during this period of time in the Ottawa area and/or has he ever made use of government owned transportation?

2. (a) Is the government officially aware if the Minister's driver's licence was under suspension during any time over the past year and, if so, was the usual car allowance paid to the Minister during this period of time (b) how much was paid (c) has the amount been refunded and (i) if so, on what date (ii) if not, will the government request such a refund?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) The number of years the hon. member for Langelier has been a Minister of the Crown times the amount provided for in paragraph 43(2)(a) of the Senate and House of Commons Act, Chapter S-8 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. (See also the reply to question 4,126, Hansard 321, page 14415); (b) Both.

2. (a) No, the question of permits to operate motor vehicles being a matter falling within provincial jurisdiction.

UIC—CLAIMANTS REGISTERED

Question No. 5,737—Mr. Alexander:

1. In each month, for the years (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 to date, how many claimants were registered for unemployment insurance benefits?

2. In each case, what was the level of unemployment by (a) percentage (b) numbers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. (a), (b) and (c) See Statistics Canada Publication 73-001 entitled "Statistical Report on the Operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act."

2. (a) and (b) See Statistics Canada Publication 71-001 entitled "The Labour Force".

TABLE 1. Summary Data
December 1975

Item		Number Current month	Number Previous month	Number Year ago	Percentage change from Previous month	Percentage change from Year ago
Benefit payments
Gross amount	$	281,832,666[P]	209,853,021	165,202,526	34	71
Net amount[1]	$	280,391,035[P]	209,182,954	164,448,626	34	71
Weeks of benefit	$	3,166,823	2,384,357	2,093,785	33	51
Average weekly benefit	$	89.00[P]	88.01	78.90	1	13
Claims received		334,761	258,703	332,058	29	1
Beneficiaries		703,136[P]	615,322[P]	...	14	...
Claimants at month-end[2]		1,065,509	924,628[r]	910,103	15	17

		Year-to-date Current year	Year-to-date Previous year	Year-to-date Percentage change
Benefit payments
Gross amount	$	3,159,279,881	2,131,410,625	48
Net amount[1]	$	3,146,136,978	2,119,212,741[r]	48
Weeks of benefit	$	37,326,671	28,460,714	31
Average weekly benefit	$	84.64	74.89	13
Claims received		2,857,227	2,410,367	19
Beneficiaries		...	...	...
Claimants at month-end[3]		1,048,984	827,740	27

[1] After cancellation of warrants and collection of overpayments.

[2] These figures are overstated in terms of active files. If claimants do not report that they became re-employed, a period of five weeks is allowed to elapse before their claims are transferred to the inactive file.

[3] Monthly average.

Table 1. Summary Labour Force characteristics by Sex, Canada

	Participation rates per cent	Employed Labour force	Employed Purchases of workers Total	Employed Purchases of workers Agriculture	Employed Purchases of workers Non-agriculture	Employed Paid workers Total	Employed Paid workers Non-agriculture	(b) Unemployed	(a) Unemployment rates per cent thousands
Both sexes
Actual
1975 December	57.6 A	9,923 A	9,226 A	420 D	8,806 A	8,237 A	8,150 A	697 D	7.0 D
November	58.0	9,972	9,332	460	8,872	8,308	8,208	640	6.4
1974 December	57.9	9,715	9,118	409	8,709	8,121	8,047	597	6.1
November	57.8	9,682	9,189	431	8,758	8,180	8,101	493	5.1
1973 December	57.0	9,298	8,786	391	8,395	7,833	7,760	512	5.5
November	57.1	9,297	8,829	416	8,413	7,875	7,795	468	5.0
Seasonally adjusted
1975 December	58.5	10,080	9,367	493	8,878	8,327	8,213	713	7.1
November	58.8	10,122	9,388	505	8,890	8,329	8,210	734	7.3
October	58.8	10,098	9,373	481	8,899	8,532	8,235	725	7.2
September	59.1	10,127	9,395	492	8,918	8,366	8,249	732	7.2
August	58.7	10,034	9,298	482	8,838	8,301	8,182	736	7.3
July	58.7	10,040	9,316	476	8,848	8,294	8,191	724	7.2
Annual average
1975	58.8	10,015	9,308	479	8,828	8,272	9,162	707	7.1
1974	58.3	9,662	9,137	473	8,664	8,105	8,006	525	5.4
1973	57.5	9,279	8,759	467	8,292	7,757	7,661	520	5.6
1972	56.5	8,891	8,329	481	7,848	7,310	7,211	562	6.3
Men
Actual
1975 December	75.4 A	6,417 A	5,921 A	360 D	5,561 A	5,127 A	5,055 A	496 D	7.7 D
November	75.9	6,450	6,041	389	5,652	5,222	5,142	409	6.3
1974 December	76.1	6,320	5,889	354	5,535	5,095	5,035	431	6.8
November	76.3	6,323	5,996	369	5,628	5,190	5,125	327	5.2
1973 December	75.6	6,100	5,726	344	5,382	4,963	4,901	374	6.1
November	75.7	6,097	5,776	364	5,412	5,007	4,943	321	5.3

Order Paper Questions

Table 1. Summary Labour Force characteristics by Sex, Canada

	Employed							(b) Paid workers	(a)
			Purchases of workers
	Participation rates per cent	Labour force	Total	Agriculture	Non-agriculture	Total	Non-agriculture	unemployed	unemployment rates per cent
					thousands
Seasonally adjusted
1975 December	76.9	6,537	6,053	407	5,660	5,234	5,142	484	7.4
November	77.2	6,559	6,075	418	5,672	5,246	5,151	484	7.4
October	77.2	6,554	6,053	402	5,668	5,247	5,152	496	7.6
September	77.1	6,545	6,044	402	5,656	5,241	5,151	501	7.7
August	76.8	6,511	6,010	398	5,629	5,209	5,123	501	7.7
July	77.1	6,512	6,022	292	5,636	5,214	5,128	490	7.5
Annual average
1975	77.2	6,499	6,016	398	5,618	5,194	5,107	483	7.4
1974	77.3	6,338	5,976	397	5,579	5,160	5,079	361	5.7
1973	76.8	6,127	5,767	397	5,371	4,972	4,896	360	5.9
1972	76.2	5,938	5,533	406	5,127	4,730	4,650	405	6.8
Women
Actual
1975 December	40.3 B	3,505 B	3,305 B	60 E	3,245 B	3,110 B	3,095 B	201 D	5.7 D
November	40.5	3,522	3,291	71	3,219	3,087	3,066	232	6.6
1974 December	40.0	3,395	3,229	54	3,174	3,026	3,012	166	4.9
November	39.7	3,359	3,193	62	3,130	2,990	2,975	166	4.9
1973 December	38.8	3,198	3,060	47	3,013	2,870	2,858	138	4.3
November	38.9	3,200	3,053	52	3,001	2,867	2,852	147	4.6
Seasonally adjusted
1975 December	40.7	3,541	3,313	86	3,220	3,092	3.071	228	6.4
November	40.9	3,558	3,313	88	3,221	3,086	3,062	245	6.9
October	40.8	3,541	3,315	81	3,238	3,109	3,086	226	6.4
September	41.3	3,567	3,338	87	3,256	3,120	3,093	229	6.4
August	41.0	3,519	3,287	82	3,208	3,081	3,057	232	6.6
July	40.8	3,524	3,293	82	3,210	3,082	3,053	231	6.6
Annual average
1975	40.9	3,515	3,291	81	3,210	3,078	3,055	224	6.4
1974	39.7	3,324	3,161	76	3,085	2,945	2,927	163	4.9
1973	38.7	3,152	2,992	70	2,921	2,784	2,765	160	5.1
1972	37.1	2,953	2,796	75	2,721	2,580	2,561	157	5.3

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 5,249 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

FISH SPECIES IMPORTED BY CANADA

Question No. 5,249—Mr. Marshall:

What are the fish species which Canada imported, by dollar value, for the years 1970 to 1975?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Andras.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton) moved:

That this House, finding unacceptable the performance of the government, particularly its penchant for shifting blame, reaffirms its belief in the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility and expresses its lack of confidence in the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) shout "Agreed," I was gratified and I was looking for a similar form of acknowledgement from the other side. It would have been an acknowledgement of what has become apparent in the minds of most Canadians, that is, that as we draw to the close of the longest session in Canadian parliamentary history—and I suspect we may be close to the end of it—the government has gradually, steadfastly and inexorably lost control of affairs. While this motion is expressed in terms of a matter of confidence by this House, whether it passes or not I am satisfied it expresses the view of the Canadian public with respect to the performance of this government.

We are drawing near the end of a session. What a session it has been, as we look back over it. The paradox which has become apparent to us day after day was first brought to light by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, having condemned the policy of controls during an election campaign, finally marched before the television cameras and announced what can only be described as a deathbed repentance and adopted controls for himself.

In terms of agricultural policies, we have seen in the last few days the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) blame everybody. His policies have managed to do something which no minister of agriculture, as far as I am aware, in Canadian history—perhaps I will be corrected with respect to that—has been able to do, and that is to skewer both the producer and the consumer at the same time.

We sat in this House on the dramatic budget night a few days ago and heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) advance a budget which will do nothing for inflation or for unemployment, which managed to blame the Americans or somebody else for the failings of this government on the one hand, but which hitched its future to the United States on the other.

As Canadians look at this government, they see a rather sorry performance. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) recently in this House, outside the House and even outside the country, said to the people of the Atlantic provinces that they are really to blame for the high price of energy there, and he advanced an energy strategy which is no more that a pricing strategy.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) came into the House not too long ago and decided, at long last, to cast the blame on India for the results of his policy respecting nuclear proliferation. When we consider that policy, we realize that all along it has been the carpetbagging approach of this government in the important matter of nuclear proliferation to place the question of sales beyond and above the question of public morality.

Those are the failures, and as honestly and objectively as I usually look at these things, I have tried to find what this government can really show for over 300 days of parliamentary work, in terms of real accomplishments or changes for the better, for the lifestyle of Canadians and in terms of what Canadians can expect by way of leadership from the government and, quite frankly, I am hard put to come upon anything of that nature.

● (1600)

The government has blamed their failings on everyone but themselves. When it was convenient, they castigated labour. When it was convenient in another way, they blamed management. From time to time the farmer came in for a share of the blame. The workingman gathered his share of the blame for the policies of the government, and if they were stuck, as they were from time to time, for being scapegoats, so that they could sleep at nights—and I imagine it was an uneasy sleep—they blamed the provinces and the opposition, and they even came down once in a while to blaming the weather. Mr. Speaker, this is the litany of failure; it is also the litany of the denial of responsibility by the government to account to the people of Canada, through this House, which it has not done.

I do not want to sell this government short, Mr. Speaker. Even a government dedicated to making a mess can sometimes outdo itself—in the dredging affair, the Sky Shops affair, the judges' affair—and if all these were not enough, let us not forget the "Orion" crash, the $16 million disaster. This most unusual game they play in the House would have been comical had it not been a serious matter—the game of seeing the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) blame the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), on the one hand, and the next day on the volley-ball courts the Minister of Supply and Services casting the blame on the Minister of National Defence, and the Prime Minister straining himself to find some common ground between these two ministers who are the epitome and essence of the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing. That showed itself to the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, someone will deal later with the details of that matter.

The country has two answers to the Galaxy of Goofs that I have described. I should like to refer to an article by Richard Gwyn. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) asks where I found that. I found it in this article. To this Galaxy of Goofs, the latest goof is now being run out, excuses are being made, people are being blamed and answers are not being given. In his column in the Montreal Star of June 10, Mr. Gwyn said:

> To tabulate the price taxpayers will pay for this Galaxy of Goofs is easy: $16 million in penalties to Lockheed; several million in wasted defence department plans; a year's delay in the delivery of new anti-sub planes and anything up to $50 million in inflationary costs that will have to be added to the new contract. About $100 million in all which, if burnt as $1 bills to heat a house would, quite literally, have been better spent.
>
> Undecided is the price that will be paid by one minister... and by senior civil servants in three departments. Excepting Stopforth, who has been reassigned to spend a year on French, I will bet anyone one hundred million to one that the answer will be nothing.

Mr. Speaker, who stars in this saga? The Minister of National Defence, and the Minister of Supply and Services. One is exactly the same star who was involved in the saga of the overpriced oil not too long ago. What does he do? Does he come into the House and say he is sorry? Does he come into this House and account? Not likely. But he does have an answer for all that has gone on. He sums up his courage, rises in his place and blames it on a public servant. The public servant, Mr. Larry Stopforth—whom I do not know—denies the charge, threatens to sue the minister for libel if he does not retract, and the minister wraps himself in the swaddling clothes of parliamentary immunity and refuses to retract.

The Prime Minister, who ought to be an arbitrator in this dispute, did not even try to examine it. He did not come to the rescue of the public servant, nor did the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) who had a hand in that Lockheed deal with the handwritten memorandum and who also has some responsibility to the public service of this country. Nor, may I note, did the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who was formerly a public servant and was president of the Professional Institute of Public Servants of Canada at one time. None of them came to the rescue.

I asked in this House that the public servant at least be given the right to come before a committee of parliament and give his side of the question. Another former public servant, the President of the Treasury Board, said "no" and cast him on the tender mercies of a grievance procedure which would take the public servant to the very person who ordered his removal; or, in the alternative, he put the public servant to the tender mercies of the courts. All of us who have practised in the courts know the delays incurred. All of us who have served in this parliament know how fruitless and futile that remedy is. Mr. Speaker, we have $16 million down the drain; that is for sure. We have no aircraft for the military; we know that. Out of it all, instead of taking his responsibilities seriously, the minister points his finger at a public servant. I think in this long session of parliament, not having been here very long, that particular action—I see the Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is involved, and I hope he would not do that to his public servants.

The Minister of Supply and Services has really carried this matter of ministerial responsibility to a new low. It is an interesting matter to the public service of Canada. They are much the same as any other group of Canadians in wanting to do a particular job and to do it well. If a minister is prepared to encourage his public servants, protect them when necessary, take responsibility when necessary, then the public service of this country is prepared to put out for the minister and for the government.

The things I have heard on the street, the things that are relayed to me by letter and telephone, show me that public servants are shocked by what has happened. The public service of this country will not tolerate incompetence. I do not think a government ought to tolerate incompetence, but I do not think it is fair for a government to make an accusation of incompetence and shift the blame for its own irresponsible acts to a person who has no opportunity to defend himself. That is what happened in this case.

Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, if you would enter into any transaction that would cost you the amount of money that this transaction has cost the people of Canada, without putting it in writing? You would not buy a rowboat under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker. Yet this government embarked upon a defence policy with a company whose record is at least questionable in the eyes of the rest of the world, without even a jot in writing with respect to one of the important aspects thereof.

That same minister, and indeed the ministry—because the Prime Minister was drawn into this, and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp)—does not have the guts to stand up and take its responsibilities and its lumps with respect to this transaction.

● (1610)

I do not want you to think, Mr. Speaker, that the doctrine of ministerial responsibility is not important. James Eayrs, professor of international relations at the University of Toronto, in a newspaper column entitled "Minister must take blame for Lockheed" said in part:

> At stake is the charge by Jean-Pierre Goyer, Minister of Supply and Services, that L. H. Stopworth, Goyer's representative on the interdepartmental committee supervising the acquisition of 18 Orion patrol planes from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, failed to keep him properly informed.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

> At stake is more than the careers of the two men concerned, more than the $16 million that we, the taxpayers, must cough up in cancellation charges now that the deal has fallen through.
>
> At stake is a cornerstone of our structure of parliamentary democracy—the way we run our country. At stake is the constitutional principle known as "ministerial responsibility."
>
> The doctrine of ministerial responsibility prescribes that a member of the cabinet is answerable to parliament for what goes on in his department. It is not for him to point the finger. It is not for him to pass the buck. If he speaks at all about the public servants in his charge, it should be to protect and defend them—never to accuse and attack them.
>
> Ministerial responsibility's most attractive feature is its sense of fair play. After all, it's the minister who is quick to claim the credit and grab the glory when his department does well by him. Why shouldn't the manfully shoulder the blame when there are goofs? Since he gets the praise, he should take the rap. This is what ministerial responsibility requires him to do.

Next I shall read something written by Professor McGregor Dawson. In his book he mentions changes which have occurred in the public service, but he makes the point that the minister takes the responsibility and should not place blame elsewhere. Speaking of what has happened in the public service, he said in his book:

> None of these changes, all of which helped produce a massive reorganization of the executive and the public service of Canada, altered the fundamental fact that executive and public service in Canada have always in one respect discharged a common function, the enforcement, application, and development of the national policies. But the distinction between the two is never in any doubt: the executive is a political body; the public service is non-political, and consists of the growing number of employees of the state who work in either a department of government, or a Crown corporation or other agency engaged in administering some particular law or laws.

There are those who say times have changed, that governments have grown more complex. That is true. To an ever greater extent governments, at their own instance or the instance of others, have intruded into our affairs and grown more complex. Nevertheless, at the very foundation of our system is the doctrine that the minister is ultimately responsible, that he must stand up publicly and be answerable. That duty remains, and does not in any way limit the right of the public servant to expect that the minister will be answerable for the affairs of the department. That has not changed, and it is time this House confirmed and reaffirmed its views on ministerial responsibility. That is why the House is debating this motion today. Writing in "Parliamentary Affairs," volume 26, No. 4, published in the autumn of 1973, David Butler said, at page 403:

> Consider first individual ministerial responsibility. Its central doctrine is that for every public act of a public servant, a minister has to answer to parliament. It is an assertion of democratic accountability. Honouring the ancestral cry "grievances precede supply," some member of the government has to reply for any action—or want of action—in which public money, gathered from the taxpayer, is or might be involved.
>
> Individual ministerial responsibility is easy to ridicule. How can a minister take responsibility for the innumerable acts of his civil servants, many of them involving technicians of which he could not conceivably master? In ordinary affairs we are seldom willing to carry the can for things about which we have no knowledge and no possibility of control. We can hardly feel surprised when we see ministers passing the buck: "It was before my time," "I had to rely on the expert advice I was given," "I could not have known anything about it."

The House has received replies of that kind. I continue:

> But to answer does not mean to take the blame in a personal way; still less does it mean to resign. To answer only requires a minister to say "I have ministerial responsibility for this. I am sorry that a mistake has been made. I have taken steps to see that it does not happen again."

And if it does happen again the minister will, at the least, look foolish and lose caste in the eyes of his Prime Minister, his colleagues and indeed the wider public.

Because of the factors I mentioned, the old, strict rule regarding ministerial responsibility has been diluted. But the Minister of Supply and Services, backed by every one of his colleagues and every member on his side of the House who cheered when he made his statement concerning Larry Stopforth, refused to take even a mini-step and acknowledge that he, as minister, was responsible for what was done and for what the government did. The minister and the government did not have the good grace to do that.

There is another side to ministerial responsibility. The decline is at the heart of the relationship between ministers and public servants. Mr. Speaker, as I have said, ministers take the blame; but they also take the praise. Public servants accept power without publicity. As long as they do not violate the traditional code of their profession, they are shielded from public criticism for their mistakes. That is as it should be and as it should continue to be. I have said previously that incompetence does not have to be tolerated, but that is not the case here. Incompetence has been alleged. The public servant should have the right to answer that allegation, but this government steadfastly refuses to give him that right. Why is it refusing, Mr. Speaker? Is the government worried, afraid that an examination of the case of Larry Stopforth may also lead to an examination of the blunders, foolishness, bad business practices, and so on, relating to the Orion deal? If the government is afraid of this, it ought to say so.

The present position does not do much for Larry Stopforth and every other public servant who finds himself caught in a similar situation. It is to be the lot of public servants in Canada that ministers shall attack them on the floor of the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Are they to be named on the floor of the House of Commons and left without redress? If that is how the government feels, it is unworthy, not only of the confidence of the people of Canada, which it does not have, but of the confidence of this House. I hope that during this debate some minister of the Crown will stand up and plead the case, publicly, of the public servant who is shunted aside and moved out of his position. Really, Mr. Speaker, that is not the important factor. What is important is this: a public servant who may have served his country in war, served it in peace in the public service of Canada, and advanced in the public service now finds himself named in the House of Commons and subject to ridicule.

● (1620)

He is in danger of losing all that he has, that is not transitory, by its nature—namely, his reputation. What the Minister of Supply and Services did by naming this civil servant was an act of cowardice. The act of the Prime Minister, in not rebuking his Minister of Supply and Services, was an act of complicity in that cowardice. In my judgment and respectful submission to this House of Commons—

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Be honest.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do not expect the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) to know very much about ministerial responsibility. Anyway, he will never have to worry about it.

I speak strongly about this matter. I have raised it before in this House of Commons, and I will continue to raise it. If this is going to be the attitude of the government, there is a danger to the public service of this country. Whether we are dealing with Mr. Stopforth or any other public servant, there will be a danger to the integrity of the public service. It could, in fact, lead politicization of the public service—and the public service has suffered enough by the heavy, left-handed methods of this government.

I ask the support of this House of Commons with respect to the individual about whom I have spoken today who has been maligned here and left without remedy. If the hon. member for Timmins thinks that is fair, I do not know where his moral values lie. If there is anything wrong with a public inquiry or parliamentary examination at which Mr. Stopforth would be prepared to put his reputation on the line and suffer the slings and arrows of that disclosure, along with what the government would suffer, I would certainly like to hear it.

I moved this motion because the people of Canada have lost confidence in this government. This House, therefore, ought not to have any confidence in it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, after the historic half hour that we had in this House just before lunch, anything to be raised during the rest of the day is almost bound to be anti-climactic. Yet even in that kind of atmosphere the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in his motion has raised a very important issue. Like him, and like other members of the House, I look forward to the reply that will come from the ministerial benches. I notice that most of the ministers have left—all but the two orators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Mackasey). I do not know which one is going to indulge in a flight of oratory this afternoon.

I suspect—in fact, I believe—that both ministers concur, in the proposition set out in the first part of this motion. I cannot expect either of those two ministers, or any other minister, to concur as I do in the proposition that the government does not have the confidence of this House or the country. However, I trust I am right in assuming that both of the orators sitting in the front ministerial benches agree with us about the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility. I know my two friends very well. I know their capacity for getting into debate, slaughtering their opponents, and so on. If they cannot do it directly, they do it by beating around the bush and talking about other subjects. I hope they will come to grips with this issue. I see them tossing glances to see which one is going to do it.

This question of the importance of ministerial responsibility is such that whoever speaks for the government ought to affirm it today, even if in so doing he casts some doubt on what was done from a ministerial bench a few weeks ago.

When I first came here some years ago, there was a notion about Ottawa that the real government was the public service. There was the notion that it was the deputy ministers who ran things, that even if there was a change of government, some of the same policies would be carried forward. I saw that happen. I saw governments change. The departments of government continued to give the same advice, and what might have been brought forward had the previous government stayed in office was brought forward by the new government. When this present government came in in 1968 under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we were told that it was a new era. From here on in, the decisions were going to be made by the cabinet. There are indications that to some extent the present government has carried out that position.

Deputy ministers have been moved from one department to another. Shifts have been made so that senior public officials do not get into positions of too much power. All of this has seemed to be part of the implementation of the present government's philosophy that the government should be controlled and run by the elected ministers, not by public servants at any level.

The government has made it clear that they have a tremendously valuable and efficient public service and that their advice is very important to them, but that in the final analysis, it is the government, the cabinet, those who have been elected to office, who have the say. I submit that a government that has taken that position has even more responsibility than some earlier governments which did not take that position, to stand by the principle set out in this motion, namely, the principle of ministerial responsibility.

It is inevitable, in a debate of this kind, that reference is made to the action of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) when he stood in his place in this House on a question of privilege or on a ministerial statement and condemned one of his senior public servants. I suggest that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was quite justified in condemning that action outright, as he has done. Just as I do not like the way in which Mr. Stopforth was castigated and pilloried, so I do not intend to spend time castigating or pillorying the Minister of Supply and Services. Nevertheless, the principle which is brought into focus by this incident is certainly one concerning which there should be a clear statement by whichever of those ministerial orators is to reply in the debate today.

● (1630)

As I understand it, Mr. Stopforth is not the deputy minister in the department. He is not the assistant deputy minister. He is three, four or five rungs down the ladder. I do not know how much contact he had in a direct way with his minister. But, surely, for the Minister of Supply and Services, when the government has found itself in an awkward situation, to stand in the House and name him and blame him for the mess and, in effect, ruin his professional career, does not sit well with the position the government has taken with regard to its own authority and responsibility.

I am one who thinks we are served by a very efficient public service. When, on a recent occasion, it was attacked in this House, I felt I cculd not keep my seat; I had to stand up and say it as I see it. However, I realize that even the most efficient group of men and women is made up of persons who can make mistakes. We all do so from time to time. A couple of us had to get up in the House yesterday and admit we make mistakes. We admitted it and took the blame for it. A senior public servant, or a public servant a little down the ladder, can make a mistake. Maybe it happens in circumstances when something has to be done. Maybe he should be suspended, or called in on the carpet or, in an extreme case, dismissed. But for a minister to name him publicly in the House of Commons, where the minister has immunity and the public servant cannot reply is, I think, deplorable.

In doing this, the minister is trying to say, "It is not my fault. We came to power prepared to take responsibility and make decisions, but now we have goofed and I say it was not my fault; we are placing the blame on somebody else." I shall not go back to my old profession and preach a sermon, but there is a story in the Old Testament about a golden calf. When Moses came down from the mountain and found that the children of Israel had created this golden calf despite his objection to idolatry, the answer was, "We do not know how it happened. We just put in the gold and out came the calf." This is one of the classic examples of failing to take responsibility.

Yet the Minister of Supply and Services is a member of a government which said things had changed, a government whose attitude was: We are in charge now. We are not letting the public service run things; we are taking the responsibility. Thus, I think the idea the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton had when he put down this motion for discussion, anti-climactic though it may be today, was a good one and I hope that whichever of the two ministers over there is to reply will take the matter seriously.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and I do not mind being demolished in debate. That is part of the game. But it is not hon. members who are to be demolished. It is an issue which has to be faced, and I hope that whoever replies on behalf of the government will face that issue. It seems to me the best thing that could come out of this debate would be for a minister to say, "Yes, this should not have been done. It was wrong, and as far as the government is concerned it will not happen again."

I do not see how anyone could fail to agree with the first part of the motion which calls attention to the convention of ministerial responsibility. I trust that principle will be endorsed this afternoon. Since ministers over there have faces to save, they will no doubt dislike the latter part of the motion which calls on the House to express its lack of confidence in the government. However, I can tell hon. members opposite that the House is only being asked to express a view which is widely held in this country. Indeed, I believe it is held by a very large majority of the Canadian people. It was a long and sorry list the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton brought to our attention. I might mention some of the items, though I shall not do so in any detail. There was the dredging scandal, the judges' affair, the Sky Shops situation and, finally, the Orion debacle resulting in the loss of $16 million because of fumbling which was the responsibility of the government. It may be that the Orion affair is not over even now, because there are reports that something else is in the wind—

An hon. Member: In what newspaper?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was in the Wall Street Journal—we have to keep in touch with the organs of my hon. friends.

An hon. Member: Be careful, now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I refer particularly to the statement in that newspaper that an announcement might not be made until after parliament has recessed. That is one of the favourite tricks of the government when it has something embarrassing to announce; it waits until parliament recesses before doing so.

As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton pointed out, this session has already lasted—what is it—329 days. Before it ends it will probably have gone on for two full years from September, 1974, until September or October, 1976, and it is a session which has been characterized by messes. The present Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), when he was minister of transport, came out with that truism about transportation policy being in a mess. It still is. At the moment, transportation policy, in particular with respect to aviation, is in a mess.

Agricultural policy is in a mess. There are messes with respect to energy, messes caused by the shortcomings of the government in the field of housing and environmental control. I suppose the word "mess" applies in a double way to our lakes, rivers and air—and because we have a government which cannot even manage to get a session of parliament over in the usual year or 18 months, we should not be surprised if it compounds this messy situation. When we turn to consider the anti-inflation program, we find that an extensive bureaucracy has been set up to make sure that wage increases do not take place beyond certain levels, though price increases continue to make life difficult for our people.

● (1640)

It is a two-year mess, this first session of the thirtieth parliament. Even if I cannot persuade my ministerial friends across the way to agree with the latter part of the motion, the fact is it is true that most of the Canadian people do not have confidence in the present government.

I want to say a word or two about one or two other things that are the cause of the lack of confidence. One of my friends across the way, if he were here, would say he knows what is coming, and he would be right. I know that a little bit was done in the first part of this session in respect of the Canada Pension Plan, but in the main this has been a very disappointing session of parliament in so far as the pensioners of Canada are concerned. No increase has been provided at all in the basic pension paid under old age security, except, of course, the cost of living increase that comes along every three months, always five or seven months behind, leaving our senior citizens in worse trouble as time goes on.

The one change that was made in the Old Age Security Act created another mess, and that is the provision for spouses' allowances which are payable only to persons who are married to and living with their spouses. I am speaking now of persons between 60 and 65 years of age. The allowance is not available to persons in that age bracket if they are spinsters, widows, bachelors or widowers. The letters we all get from persons who were not aware of what was happening in the debate express amazement. They suggest that surely this was an oversight or a failure to think the thing through, and that a government of a civilized country like Canada would not provide a pension for a spouse who has another spouse, since they can somehow get along, but would not provide it for a person who is living in the single status of any of the categories I have already mentioned.

That is a mess, and the fact that it is a mess has now been demonstrated by some answers to questions I received a few days ago to the effect that now there are about 200 cases a month of spouses who started to draw the pension but who are losing them because the elder spouse in the meantime has died. So many wives of 62 with husbands of 67, for example, were receiving the spouses' allowance. Then a few months later this generous Liberal government takes that allowance away, because the other spouse has died. The word "mess" certainly applies down the line.

We had a bill earlier in this session, Bill C-52, that had to do with the pensions in the public service. There, again, the government failed to meet a number of very crucial situations. We took care of our own pensions, of course; we seemed to be able to do that. We took care of our pay a year or so ago, over my objection. But in terms of the needs of many of our people, these needs have not been met during the course of this session.

In addition to all these other things, the difficulties we are having with relations in the public service, and so on, we have a total picture that nobody on that side can look at with any sense of pride. When the vote is called on this motion, it is pretty clear how we will vote. We will vote for it because what it says is true, that there ought to be an affirmation of the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility. It is also true when it says that this House—and, I would add, the majority of the people of Canada—no longer has confidence in that government across the way.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, today this House is here to discuss ministerial responsibility. Rather than examining a specific policy or decision, our objective is to look at something which is less tangible but perhaps of greater import, namely, the conduct of government per se, for it is this, the conduct of government, which is at the core of ministerial responsibility. What, though, is meant by this term which is bruited about so freely?

In Canada, the basis of the term lies in the British tradition that a minister is responsible for the probity of his ministery and of its employees. We seem, however, to have modified this principle somewhat. There are now few who would extend this notion to make the minister responsible for the honesty and propriety of every action of his department. While this has reduced the range of ministerial responsibility, a new connotation has added a dimension to the term.

Ministerial Responsibility

In addition to probity in the conduct of affairs, we also demand diligence of the minister in seeing that the affairs of his department are undertaken with a basic level of competence. While it might seem more accurate to call this expectation ministerial competence rather than responsibility, this would be a mistake, for the basic principle remains that the minister is responsible for the conduct of his department's affairs. Above all, the minister is bound to ensure that his actions set an example for diligence, honesty and competence. He can scarcely excoriate a subordinate for laxness if he has been lax himself; for dishonesty, if he has been dishonest himself; or for incompetence, if he has been incompetent himself. The Canadian people should demand from their government behaviour which at the very minimum meets these criteria.

I intend to use this opportunity to examine in detail one case, namely, the financing of the LRPA project. I intend to look at it, however, not so much for the content of the decision but, rather, for what it reveals of the process and style of decision-making as practiced by the current government. In this process we will find revealed the increasing inability of the Liberals to conduct the day to day business of government.

We are not concerned here with corruption, chicanery, or even with the incoherence of the government's approach to defence policy. Rather, it is a lack of simple competence in carrying out the decisions which confront them. Because the government's blundering in this case has been both obvious and enormous, it has afforded the House a rarely equalled opportunity to catch a glimpse of the reality of decision-making as it is conducted by the Liberal cabinet.

Before I begin my analysis of the cabinet's actions, however, I wish to apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and to members present, and beg their indulgence, as the information which I will present is far from straightforward. As a result of the government's unwillingness to let the House or the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence have access to much of the relevant documentation or to several important witnesses, the story must be pieced together from a variety of sources and teased out of ministers' obfuscatory statements. The results are difficult to follow and not entirely unambiguous. However, the general lesson is clear. We find here a cabinet conducting the nation's business without even a minimum of competence.

Let us begin with the rather surprising statement made on Friday last by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson). In response to my question asking whether he knew by about mid-November "that the commitment by Lockheed to provide interim financing for the LRPA project was purely verbal", the minister replied:

> I did not know that in mid-November ... about the middle of December ... was also the first time I learned there was only a verbal agreement.

This is recorded in Hansard at page 14657. This means that the minister did not know, he now claims, about the verbal agreement. This is in direct contradiction of everything we had been led to believe up to that time. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, as I go through several statements here, to note how often we heard the word "said" and how often we hear the word "told".

[Mr. McKinnon.]

You might wonder why the minister has changed his declaration from one of easy compliance with what his officials told him to one of denying that he knew it. I suggest to you that it might be that, as the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) was well off in denying that he knew about the agreement, blaming it on a subordinate, the Minister of National Defence is now trying to do the same thing.

● (1650)

While this admission of ignorance as to the details of the financing of a billion dollar purchase is surprising for the lack of diligence it reveals on the minister's part it implicitly contradicts his earlier statements. Indeed, the minister had, until last Friday, never wavered for a second from his contention that the whole cause of the misunderstanding was that Lockheed said it could arrange financing and then later said it could not. The Minister of National Defence has consistently identified himself with his officials on this position. The full position the minister has taken can be deduced from his various statements to the House and to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The Minister of National Defence told the first meeting of that committee which was considering the estimates:

> —it was during the final negotiation of the contract that we learned that Lockheed was not going to be able to provide the financing for the short-term production-phase payments which we had believed the company could provide.

That was what he said on March 23. At the same meeting he admitted there was a difference between the funds available in the DND budget and the funds required. He said:

> It was that difference which was to be financed. It was known then and now and Lockheed indicated they could finance that previous difference. Subsequently, they said they could not and that is the sole source of the misunderstanding.

That is what the minister said on March 23. Further, he said:

> The misunderstanding was that we believed, and my officials were told by Lockheed, they could finance the difference. They subsequently told us they could not.

These are the words of the minister who said he never knew there was a verbal agreement. Further in the minister's statement, he said:

> And we were satisfied then—

Meaning in November.

> —that they had the financial capability to complete the contracts ... we had also been talking at the same time with Boeing ... and Boeing gave us the same assurance that they could assist with the financing.

He went on to say:

> It did not seem to me there were very real difficulties in arranging the financing.

I would draw to the attention of the House the minister's use of the word "me". The minister seems to have been of the opinion that there would not be substantial problems associated with financing for a company that had had prolonged financial difficulties and was in the throes of scandals which could not but jeopardize its future hope for contracts. This despite the fact that the minister had had the problem of financing brought to him by General Allan, according to General Allan's testimony on April 13 before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. When I inquired on May 6 why the Minister of Supply and Services claimed he did not know about the shortfall and the verbal agreement, the deputy minister of national defence, Mr. Nixon, declined to answer directly, stating:

> We as officials certainly informed Mr. Richardson, and I can only presume that the people in Supply and Services had equally informed Mr. Goyer of the situation.

That quotation is taken from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence of May 6, at page 37:6; yet the minister now claims he never knew there was a verbal agreement. Mr. Nixon at that time admitted he would have preferred a written assurance that financing could be arranged. This is what Mr. Nixon said:

> —but I think General Allan and I have both made it clear to the committee that if time had permitted under the circumstances in which we had this understanding that Lockheed could provide the financing, it should have been in writing, but not being in writing it did not obligate you to something of undue proportion.

The Minister of National Defence agreed with this contention.

> The truth is that General Allan was told and believed that the shortfall could be financed by the Lockheed Company. He was told the same thing by the Boeing company.

Those are the words of the minister who said he never knew of any verbal agreement. When asked if the Minister of Supply and Services knew this, the Minister of National Defence said:

> I will not speak for another minister but I know it was in the cabinet document, as I have said, and which cabinet considered.

That is from the Minutes and Proceedings of Evidence of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence of May 27. The minister went on to say:

> It was certainly not, and I have said this before, the Department of National Defence that said, let us finance the shortfall, let us do it that way. Other departments of government said that in order to hold down government expenditure next year and the year afterwards we only want you to spend so much. I said, all right, we will only spend that much. The payments required are so much. I think the figures are $140 million in the first year. So that must be financed. That is what took place.
>
> As I said before, it is not really very hard to re-enact the circumstances. But when we started in to the further negotiations, Lockheed said that they could not proceed. This is the crux of the matter. I think if you have to place the blame somewhere, it was a failure of Lockheed to be able to do what they said they could do.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where in all this can one find the slightest trace that the Minister of National Defence was ignorant of the fact that this was a verbal agreement they were talking about. I would like to point out something the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is often fond of saying, that is, that Machiavelli said one who deceives will always find those who will allow themselves to be deceived. There was a lot of deception going on in this case, according to the senior members of the cabinet who claim that they were just simple people who believed everything everybody ever told them. They had no hesitation in believing this and in giving away at least $16 million of the Canadian taxpayers' money on the strength of their gullibility.

The statements that I have quoted thus far were made by the minister and his subordinates only at the end of a long and painful process stretching over a number of months in which the minister and his colleagues had sought to keep the details of their conduct from the public. The Minister of National Defence did, however, let the House know in late March that the problems revolved around the interim financing. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that before that he tried to blame it on Lockheed's bribery around the world and suggested that this was holding up the signing of the contract. In March he said it was his opinion that it was the Lockheed company's fault that the financing was not forthcoming. On March 26 he affirmed this. He said:

> There was a difference between the amount of funds available in the National Defence budget and the progress payments required by Lockheed. We explained this and were told by Lockheed that the difference could be financed by them.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister had claimed he did not know it was verbal. In the days up until March he said they were told by Lockheed of the difficulties in respect of financing.

> Subsequently they told us they could not do it. That is all there is to the misunderstanding. It is serious, but easy to explain.

I trust that the government will not find it so easy to explain this in the years ahead. On March 30 the Minister of National Defence went on to say:

> Mr. Speaker, as recently as this morning, and on numerous earlier occasions, I talked with the officials who were negotiating with Lockheed and they were very clearly of the belief that Lockheed could provide this financing. They were so told and they so reported to us, and it was on that basis that we continued—

They had been told that it was a verbal agreement and the minister now claims he knew nothing about it. It seems logical to conclude that if the officials reported what they were told, and it was on that basis that "we" continued, then it seems to me that the Minister of National Defence and anyone else included in the term "we" must have known Lockheed gave a verbal, not a written, assurance.

● (1700)

This reasonable conclusion does, however, fly in the face of the minister's statement of Friday past. Are we then to conclude that the minister and his officials did not bother to inquire in any detail into the financing arrangements to be made by Lockheed, despite the minister's claim that the problem and its severity had been recognized by the minister and his colleagues a month before they were informed by Lockheed that they could not undertake the financing alone? Again I will quote the minister:

> The need for financing, as I have said many times, was known during November and was the subject of discussion in the cabinet, the cabinet committee and the Treasury Board.

The minister does seem to be affirming that the decision on financing was seen as vital, yet despite that perception he made no real effort to see that the interim financing was in fact being arranged. If there was no verbal agreement and no written agreement, what on earth were they going on—pipe dreams?

What are we to conclude from this examination of the statements of the minister and his staff? The overwhelming feeling which one gets from looking at the record is that the government lacked all common sense, to say nothing of business acumen. The inadequacies that have been demonstrated are not restricted to the Minister of National Defence alone for he has involved his colleagues by saying that the fact that financing was needed was pointed out in the cabinet documents, and that it was on the basis that both companies could provide financing that negotiations continued, that cabinet decided on a particular plane, and that cabinet decided to pay for the plane by a financing rather than a direct funding route. He has also admitted that perhaps "all of them"—one assumes he means his colleagues in cabinet—should have looked more closely at this financing question.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has been vague in his replies as to whether he knew how the financing was to be arranged. He did not say whether he knew or not if there was a verbal agreement. He just stated that he agrees with whatever the Prime Minister had said in his latest statement. Obviously if cabinet decided on the commercial financing route, this involved Lockheed, but the President of the Treasury Board will not say whether he knew that Lockheed had given any assurances—verbal or otherwise—that it could arrange financing.

The Minister of Supply and Services has, however, consistently maintained that he did not know until mid-December that the Lockheed commitment to provide financing was based on nothing more than a verbal agreement. Far from claiming to have been misled by Lockheed he has stated:

> In all the negotiations with Lockheed I do not have to complain at any time about the behaviour of the company nor about their ethics.

This was recorded in Hansard of April 5, at page 12437.

The Prime Minister seems to have changed his story in a most blatant manner. Having said on June 3 and 8 that they—the government—negotiated on the basis of a verbal agreement with Lockheed, on June 10 he said that he, like the Minister of National Defence, only knew of the verbal agreement in mid-December. This was two weeks after they had decided to go ahead with the contract, seemingly contradicting what he said on June 3 and 8. It appears inconsistent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. If he does not have much more of his speech left, perhaps he could get the consent of the House to carry on.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the indulgence of the House and I will try to be brief.

The Prime Minister said, "We had been assured that Lockheed could supply it", meaning money. If there was no written assurance, and the Prime Minister says he did not know there was a verbal assurance, then what kind of assurance did they have? None at all.

Presumably the Prime Minister would say there is no inconsistency in these statements—that what these statements really mean is that they negotiated on the basis of a verbal agreement without knowing at the time that it was a verbal agreement. If this is the Prime Minister's justification then it says little for his own judgment or that of his colleagues. What it means is that no one ever thought to check into this financing question, that they simply proceeded on an assumption, and that the whole cabinet, not just the Minister of National Defence and his officials, were gullible and imprudent.

If no one, including the Minister of National Defence, heard anything about a verbal commitment from Lockheed that financing could be arranged, this means that they all assumed—totally incorrectly—that the contractor would and could provide financing. This assumption was ludicrous for two reasons: first, Lockheed's financial situation, and second, defence contracts such as this, which involve research and development, setting up new production lines, etc., are never more than 20 per cent funded by the contractor unless the circumstances are exceptional. Given Lockheed's position, it would be lucky to find that 20 per cent, let alone more.

A verbal commitment from Lockheed is at least some explanation of why the cabinet acted as it did; with no commitment of any kind from Lockheed. It means cabinet just went ahead on the basis of assumptions or wishful thinking. If they assumed there was a commitment in writing, ministers should at the very least have asked to look at it. The Prime Minister has said that they acted in good faith though perhaps imprudently. Since when have we started electing governments who feel entitled to act imprudently so long as they do so in good faith?

What are we now to conclude about ministerial responsibility and the government's conduct? Thus far there seems to be no indication whatsoever that the probity of the government is in question. Despite a sometimes rather craven willingness to blame others, there is no hint of the corruption which has tainted Lockheed contracts elsewhere. The same cannot be said of their competence in the discharge of their duties. The government, both as personified in the cabinet as a whole and in the person of several of the ministers, seems not to have taken the most elementary precautions in the financing of this contract.

The government is responsible for this fiasco. We heard the Minister of Supply and Services say today that the government made its first payment on it, amounting to $10,800,000, all for nothing. The concept of ministerial responsibility requires that those whom the Prime Minister finds to be at fault must be asked to resign.

Finally, I would remind the Prime Minister that it is he and his colleagues in the cabinet who are responsible for the actions of the members of their departments; attempts to blame them for the ministers' errors are a denial of their responsibility. In this context I would ask the Prime Minister to recall the words of Machiavelli: "One who is not wise himself cannot be well advised".

[Translation]

Mr. Donald C. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am in complete agreement with those who have moved this opposition motion today because I find unacceptable the conduct of the government, and particularly its tendency to always find means to shirk its own responsibilities by putting them in most cases on the shoulders of a scapegoat or by not recognizing them.

Mr. Speaker, ministerial responsibility is at the basis of our parliamentary democracy; once eroded, we would have difficulty in restoring it. There has already been some mention of a few cases of lack of responsibility, for instance in the case of the Department of Supply and Services, and in the case of the former Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who admitted in the House the mess existing in his department. And we have just witnessed a similar case of lack of responsibility on the part of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). But my comments today concern the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), and I would like to tell him through you how he has in my opinion evaded his own responsibilities.

Among the duties of the President of the Treasury Board is the responsibility to negotiate in good faith with various organized units in the public service: typists, engineers, professional external services agents, filers, researchers, and so on. In this regard, his department, the Treasury Board, has made so many mistakes, has allowed so much injustices that today, in the public service and among the public servants, there is an attitude of frustration, fear, unstability and uncertainty for their own future and that of their children.

Mr. Speaker, because of these abuses the public service which is so devoted, loyal and qualified is now becoming a group of people who no longer know where to turn to protect their carreers. Those people, those servants of the great Canadian public, are becoming more and more disillusioned. In the past, they carried out their functions and duties with a certainty, a pride and a precision which was admired throughout the world. They were an inspiration, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, it is no longer the case. What we now see are demoralized senior public servants. I would therefore like to give a few examples.

● (1710)

[English]

In the House I asked questions on a number of occasions indicating the areas in which the Treasury Board had not properly fulfilled its function. I do not think I should have to go over them all, but I feel that I should at least cite them and demand some sort of reckoning. The first one I recall, since assuming the responsibilities I have been asked to assume in my party, is one affecting an arbitration award to a group of public functionaires. It was with regard to the forestry and biological sciences group of the Professional Association of the Public Service of Canada. That was a technical professional group which was highly qualified and anxious to do its work, and instead of striking, as it could have done, it opted for the arbitration route. What happened? The dates are here. It was on May 3 that I raised the question. The arbitration award came down and was accepted by the Treasury Board and by this group. If I remember correctly, the award came down just after the Anti-Inflation Board had been put into place.

An arbitration award is just exactly that. It must be recognized as one of the legitimate procedures of the bargaining process. If it is not accepted as an arbitration, we must go to some other method. However, the Treasury Board decided on its own to push aside that arbitration award and refer the matter to the Anti-Inflation Board, and there the award was set aside. I still think that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) ought to have recognized the award which was given by the arbitration tribunal, but he found a means of putting on someone else's shoulders the responsibility for setting aside an award with which he felt he would rather not agree. That was the first instance.

I brought the second instance to the minister's attention and he undertook to look into it.

Incidentally, I mentioned this arbitration award in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee on May 17 as well. To my knowledge it has not been resolved, and I would be glad if, when the minister gets a chance to consider the procedures today, he can find out just how far this matter has come, recognized his responsibilities and put things back on the rails.

The second matter is one which stems from 18 months ago. I raised the question first in 1975 in one of the committees of which I am a member, and it referred to the disbanding of a group of highly qualified and multi disciplined public servants who had been brought together into a unit called the Defence Research Board. This group has been disbanded, and the members were told that they would be allocated to other parts of the civil service. That was 18 months or perhaps two years ago, and they are still waiting to find out just what role they play and how they fit into the public service, because their prior employment was part of a separate organization. This is an abdication of the responsibility of the Treasury Board for making sure that these devoted public servants, whose objective in life is to serve the Canadian people, are not cast aside. Their rightful awards are being completely neglected.

Another matter came to my attention earlier this month. There was a group, and this time it was the economists, sociologists, and statisticians who were getting ready for their negotiations, and just prior to submitting their demands, which were negotiable, they received from Treasury Board an indication that the whole group was to be reclassified, and that threw the whole thing into disarray. That is the sort of activity a responsible minister would not allow to happen in his department. I deplore it because of what it is doing to the public service and because the government claims it wishes to respect the principles of collective bargaining.

[Translation]

And finally, this government has so much speeded up the bilingualization program of the civil service that the results could have been expected because there is no doubt that this speeding up policy has compelled many officials to resign or accept a transfer to other jobs for which they are not necessarily qualified.

The speedy application of the policy and the mistakes made consequently have been strongly criticized in the recent report of the Language Commissioner. Before quoting from that report, I would like to provide some clarifications to make you understand my position and that of the Progressive Conservative Party on the application of the bilingualism legislation. I hasten to note that we support the principle on which that legislation is hased, that is the Canadian people are entitled to the services provided by federal government in the official language of their choice.

[English]

To be more specific, section 9 of the Official Languages Act, to which we subscribe without any hesitation, reads as follows:

[Translation]

Every department and agency of the Government of Canada and every judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or Crown Corporation, established by or pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada, has the duty to ensure that members of the public can obtain available services from and can communicate with it in both official languages.

● (1720)

[English]

This position is clear and unequivocal. It cannot be questioned.

[Translation]

But we refuse to accept without protesting the actions that demoralize and destroy honest and diligent civil servants. To illustrate my point, let me first quote an excerpt from the Commissioner's report to Parliament as found on page 4. I quote:

On November 21, 1974, the President of the Treasury Board announced the creation of a research project led by recognized linguists to determine why some persons appear unable to learn a second language and whether, as a consequence, teaching methods could be improved. The study group, headed by Dr. Gilles Bibeau of the University of Montreal, set about examining all elements entering into provision of language training in the public service.

The Bibeau commission proceeded with its enquiry and I read as follows:

One of Professor Bibeau's main conclusions is that many of the roughly 53,000 bilingual positions identified in 1973-74 were chosen without regard to any detailed evaluation of each department's specific needs. Indeed, levels of second-language ability required by various occupational categories for bilingual positions had been established in 1969 by the Public Service Commission in the following manner:

In other words, the policy was a failure and that failure is acknowledged by the Commissioner of Official Languages in his report.

[English]

To give some idea of the problems that this is creating for good honest well-meaning public servants who find, for one reason or another, that they are unable to learn a second language, I should just like to read from two letters that have passed over my desk recently. I am not going to cite names because I do not want to get anybody into trouble, but these are authentic documents and the names are here.

A civil servant at Shirley's Bay approximately nine years away from retirement finds that his job has been declared bilingual. He has been in the security line, presumably on perimeter security to make sure that the Shirley's Bay operations are not tampered with. I look back to the Bibeau report. Is this one of the 53,000 posts that were declared bilingual for no good reason other than to have 53,000 to report? I suspect it is.

This man tried to learn French but he is tone deaf. Anyone who has tried to learn a language, particularly at a certain age, knows that you need some tonality—you have to be able to hear changes from what you normally hear. The deafness does not affect his work and he has indicated that he very rarely needs the second language and gets along very well with one. Suddenly he was sent a letter on April 1 of this year which informed him that his position had been made bilingual and telling him that he should resign by letter immediately. The letter, which grieved me, said:

As you were unsuccessful in attaining the required level of language proficiency in the other official language—

He is tone deaf and has no need to use the language in his position, Mr. Speaker.

—those aspects of your duties which resulted in your position being identified as bilingual, shall not be carried out by you.

Even before this letter was sent it had been determined that an employee of the bilingual division of the public service was phoning around to other people in his division asking if they would take on his job. Is this the way to maintain morale in a public service? I must say I find it deplorable.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Despicable.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am surprised that the President of the Treasury Board should accept it. There is another letter I should like to quote from which came from a highly trained professional scientist. I am not going to give the name but I have the letter. The division in which he was working has given national leadership in technology, training methods, and efficient management methods. I have to avoid a little bit of this because it could be identified. They publish their works in both French and English on the development of the system, and have received national and international acclaim. A second edition of one of their works has been published, and a request has been received from Spanish-speaking countries to have it translated.

The director of this particular part of the public service has developed his unit to the point where it has full international recognition. It has been operated as a bilingual unit for a long time and has played a major role in encouraging institutions in the province of Quebec to improve their methods and training.

All of a sudden this man and his administrator were called to go to a language course. The administrator had just finished a course in organization and administrative management by objective. He had just reported back when he got another letter to go off to a French course. They were expecting to implement the management by objective procedures that he had learned when he was sent off on two weeks' notice. My friend here suspected he would have two weeks's notice or so, and was making plans accordingly. But not a bit of it; he received two days' notice. Having cancelled his engagements he reported to the Centre Asticou in Hull. Unfortunately this is not where the story ends. He reminds me that in this sort of thing he is taken out of the world to which he has been committed all his life, and he writes;

This is grossly unreasonable and shows a flagrant lack of understanding of the professional role in the public service. No employer has the right to demand such sacrifice for any person, particularly when a unit has already demonstrated its capability in fully achieving the employer's goals, which includes bilingualistic facility in this instance.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, when he got there he found people who had just joined the public service and had immediately been assigned to the Centre Asticou in Hull. One young person was sent on language training immediately on joining the public service. She had no intention of working in the public service, and on completion of her training intended to resign with a working knowledge of French and money in the bank. This is no way to run the public service, and the President of the Treasury Board is not living up to his responsibilities. He is always asking for instances, Mr. Speaker, so I can give him instances.

The people who are called there know their careers are at stake. Failure means the end of the road for them. This is a tragic thing to impose upon a man four, five or six years before retirement who has performed his duties. When he joined the public service his contract did not contain any of this, and now he finds his career is jeopardized if he does not succeed.

● (1730)

The other thing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time having expired, he may only continue to complete his remarks if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Has the hon. member consent to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its indulgence. I shall not be long.

The public servant of whom I am speaking is most detailed in his remarks. He says, "When the language bureau instruct one to report, one must do so." There is none of this business of telephoning and saying, "I have an appointment." Why, the service is worse than the Whips around here, although when the Whip says, "You must be in the House," you make sure you are in the House.

Then he writes, "Can nobody see what these officious incompetents are doing to the morale of public servants?" He says that he was given two days' notice to report, and alleged that this action showed gross insensitivity to his position, function, and responsibilities, thereby unnerving his management team and those with whom he worked. He said that this mindless, officious act was equivalent to hauling a man out of his bed in the middle of the night, to be taken from his family, still dressed in night attire. He went on to write, "Can nobody see what these officious incompetents are doing to the morale of public servants?" I hope the President of the Treasury Board is now aware of the situation. The public servant went on to say, "What is more important, cannot the cabinet see the damage it is doing to management in all government departments?"

A few lines later he said that one could not ask for a better public service unit; it is a great service, but is being demoralized. He mentions what happened to an administrative officer, and why, because at a crucial time he was sent off on a certain course, he was unable to attain certain management objectives. Mr. Speaker, it is sheer nonsense to send a man off to a management course and then, as soon as he returns, to send him on another course.

The writer of the letter said:

> In the meantime the indecent haste with which the language blitzkreig is being waged on a demoralized public service indicates that our political masters clearly place 'instant' bilingualism far above more efficient use of public funds . . .

Although I value bilingualism in the public service, I do not value the way it is being imposed.

The writer of the letter was true to his own character; he said:

> I believe in the coexistence of the two founding cultures . . . It requires fostering and funding. We need better and more translation services. We need to train good language graduates as highly competent specialists; we need Francophones and Anglophones side by side across Canada.

He then asked:

> Are you aware that when one is interviewed for language training the interrogator attempts to assess one's beliefs related to bilingualism?

Such an interrogation concerning one's bilingual ability is reprehensible. According to what I hear, people are being interrogated in the manner described. As the writer of the letter says:

> It is insidious interrogation, calculated to look into and manipulate private thoughts, and depending upon the outcome a Canadian's career will be affected . . .
>
> . . . Criticism from within has been scarce and muted. Many are not in a position to do so for they fear for their future. Management by fear has become uppermost in the minds of all public servants. Many Canadians fought and died to prevent such tactics becoming entrenched in the western hemisphere. It is tragic to consider that some of the survivors of that struggle should find themselves at a rather late age as victims of oppression, based on irrationality and . . . political posturings . . .

He believes that we should improve our translation and interpretation services.

He ends his letter with a forthright statement: as a result of this treatment he resigned from the public service and accepted a post in the United States. We have lost a valuable public servant who during his career made a name internationally and who, but for the treatment meted out to him, would have enhanced the reputation of the Canadian public service.

I hope the minister to whom my remarks are directed, a minister prominent for having failed to shoulder the responsibilities he assumed when taking the ministerial oath, will correct the abuses mentioned in order that we may have a good, bilingual public service, able to serve the Canadian people in the official language of their choice.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, judging by the thrust of the debate begun by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that he has in mind the by-election coming up in October in Ottawa-Carleton. The constituency is populated mainly by public servants. The hon. member is trying to convince them that somehow the government is anti-public service and that the opposition has a monopoly on concern for those who work day in and day out for the people of Canada. Such a position is not abnormal. I presume that if I were a member of the perpetual opposition—

Mr. Benjamin: You wouldn't know how to handle the job.

Mr. Mackasey: —I would try to change my status. The point is, the hon. member talked almost exclusively about public servants. He forgot that the present government has done more for Canada's public servants than any other government in Canada's history.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Rubbish! The public service is demoralized.

Mr. Mackasey: Unfortunately the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, whom I respect, cannot be here at present because he must attend to certain other matters. No matter what he says, he cannot suggest that any other government has done more for the public service than the present government. We have given them high wages, a good pension plan with indexation, the right to organize, the right to strike, an ample grievance procedure, and an official languages act which the opposition can either accept or not accept. I do not know what the opposition would do but, speaking for myself as part of the minority in the province in which I live, I know the government does not intend to retreat from its determination to open as many careers in Ottawa as possible to bilingual people of this country. Under our policy those who are not bilingual are given the opportunity to become bilingual.

Provisions in the act, known as grandfather clauses, say that certain people, because of their seniority in years and length of service in the public service, need not take language courses. For example, in post offices in Montreal I know there are people without the ability to learn the other language. Because of their years of service in the public service they are entitled to continue as unilingual employees and will not suffer for their inability to learn the other language.

The new person entering the public service is being asked to learn the other language. This qualification is not necessarily a prerequisite. Once the new employee has joined the public service, where it is necessary he or she is asked to take advantage of the opportunity to learn the other language. It is to the everlasting credit of many hon. members opposite and members of my party that members of parliament as well as public servants have taken advantage of this program.

When the opposition bemoan the fate of the public service and try to paint the Liberal government as the enemy of the public service, I suggest it is doing this only because of the upcoming by-election. It is trying to paint this government, as I say, as anti-public service. But it should not be forgotten that day after day in the House of Commons members of the opposition rise to complain about the wages of public servants and about their numbers. They ask, when will we reduce the bureaucracy, or the public service, by 5,000 or 50,000? The opposition raises such questions almost every day.

Mr. Benjamin: Which part of the opposition?

Mr. Mackasey: The official opposition. Day after day its members get up in the House and complain about the size of the bureaucracy. When they are talking about the bureaucracy, they are not talking about the minister, the member of parliament. They are talking about the poor public servant who, day in and day out, has to grit his teeth as somebody gets up during the question period and questions why he has got a job.

● (1740)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Mackasey: When the opposition says that this has been an unproductive parliament, I refer them to the hundred bills that have been passed in what is a record session of parliament. There was the Petro-Can Act, the Federal Business Development Act, the Citizenship Act which is already through second reading, amendments to the Canada Pension Plan Act, the Salaries Act, the CRTC changes, the amendments to the War Veterans' Allowances Act which my colleague brought in at a time of austerity. I give credit to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who had a part in that.

There was the Lieutenant Governers Superannuation Act, the Environmental Contaminants Act, amendments to the Customs Tariff Act, the Animal Disease and Protection Act, the Canada Business Corporation Act, the Petroleum Administration Act, and to the National Housing Act which latter are already resulting in record building.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: There were amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act coming forward from a joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate. That is a study of what can be done to improve the lot of the public servant in the field of industrial relations. Members from both sides of the House as well as of the Senate make up the committee.

There were amendments to the Supreme Court Act. I could go on and on. In fact so much progressive legislation passed this House of Commons it would take the whole half hour to read them. There was the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Why did that take so long? It was because those across the way could not understand it. It took them months and months to understand finally that it was for the benefit of their constituents. There were amendments to the Law Reform Commission Act as well as the Income Tax Act to help the less fortunate. There was the West Coast Ports Operations Act and the Appropriation Act. There was also the Anti-Inflation Act, which I want to talk about in a few moments. I have no hesitation in talking about that. If this House is not a better House, it is because this is the most inept opposition we have seen in many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: If ministers get away with murder, as has been alleged today, it is because of the ineptitude of the people across the way in the question period and in debate. Perhaps the biggest single problem of that party is that they have no leader in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) came into the House as Leader of the Opposition, he was here day after day learning his business. The present leader who knows what he should do to weld the opposition as a team rather than divide them is never in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: There has been a lot of talk about parliament. Parliament is not only the government, the members of the majority. It is everyone in this House of Commons. The opposition in this motion suggests that this is a poor parliament. They must realize that they, more than any other single force in the last two years, have been the reason for what they call a poor parliament.

One only has to look at the treatment of the Anti-Inflation Board by the opposition. One day out on the hustings, within the first two months, they criticized the Liberals for stealing their election platform. After we allegedly stole it, they criticized us day in and day out because we put it in place and it happens to be functioning. It is bringing down inflation in this country, as we said it would. What kind of co-operation did we get from the opposition? When they thought they were going to get elected on it, it was their legislation. Now they want to disown it because they think it is unpopular. Well, it is not unpopular because this government is providing the leadership that the people of Canada want.

We have a fine Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a leader who is in the House of Commons every possible day despite his responsibility as leader of the government, a leader who does not shirk his responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: He gets up and answers questions. Whether the answer is popular or unpopular, you have to say one thing; he provides what the Canadian people want at this crucial time in our history, leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When the Prime Minister says that controls and restraints will stay on until inflation is at a controllable level, he means it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a partisan mood today. But since this debate began a couple of hours ago, the official opposition have been portraying themselves as the friends of the public servants. However, after a union exercises its legal right to go on strike, the opposition is the first party to demand that that right be taken away from them. Every time some group goes on strike, the official opposition demands that that right be taken away from the public servants of Canada because it might upset or inconvenience a few people. They regard everything as a national emergency. If you were to poll the opposition tonight, they would say that if they had the opportunity, they would take away from the public servants of this country not only the right to strike but even the right to organize without the right to strike. That has been their position for the past 25 years.

I have in my little department 52,000 public servants. I have been a minister for 8 years. I have had one single case of discrimination brought forward to me as a minister. I came to the conclusion that the public servant had a case, ruled accordingly, and that person received the monetary compensation to which I thought he was entitled. We in this government understand that.

I might sometimes get a little angry and say that we have too many ex-public servants in cabinet. I often state that in good humour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Look at the reaction. I did that on purpose. I said that public servants did not have a chance to run for office and be cabinet ministers. Did you hear the applause? Without realizing it, the members opposite walked into the trap. What they said by their applause, and it will be on the record, is that public servants should not have the right to present themselves as candidates and, least of all, should not have the right to be members of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Why were you applauding? The opposition says they should not have the right to be candidates, they should not have the right to be cabinet ministers, they should not have the right to organize, and must not have the right to go on strike. What do they stand for? It is obvious, and I will tell you in a moment what they stand for.

● (1750)

Mr. Ellis: May I ask the minister whether now, or some time before he finishes his discourse, he will accept a question?

Mr. Mackasey: Right now.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I ask him whether he is prepared, because of his great benevolence toward all civil servants, to prevail upon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) to allow members of parliament to knock on the doors of members of the Armed Forces to campaign for election, something they cannot do now?

An hon. Member: Sure, they can.

Mr. Mackasey: I have to consider the hon. gentleman to be a unique Conservative, because once again he is going against the party line. He is so extreme in his left wing tendencies that he does not wish to consider the fact the army must be in a unique position because of the discipline needed and because of its special position in a democracy. When people join the army there are certain disciplines they must accept, as is the case in certain police forces, including the RCMP. These restraints are supposed to be compensated for in other ways, and this is, in fact, the case. Incidentally, the Canadian army never had a better friend than it has in the person of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: When the changes in the Public Service Relations Act come before cabinet I undertake to bring forward the hon. member's representation with respect to members of the army in the hope that by then he will have succeeded in convincing his caucus that this is the official position of the Conservative party.

The motion before us, brought forward so late in the session, is really indicative of the barrenness of the thinking in the party opposite. It is two motions rolled into one, of course, and as I indicated I suspect from the trend of the debate so far that the opposition, in its sudden concern for the public service, is looking apprehensively toward the by-election which is to take place in Ottawa-Carleton since there is now a pretty good indication that they will lose a contest which a month ago they thought, to use a vernacular expression, was in the bag. They are beginning to worry that Ottawa-Carleton will remain true to the Liberal party as it has for so long.

Because it is getting close to six o'clock, and I want to take only five or ten minutes in which to speak after the recess, let me make it clear that no government has done more for the public service than this government. We have given to certain elements the right to collective bargaining, the right to opt for strike action if that is felt necessary. We have resisted the demands of the opposition to deny that right, particularly at times when members opposite were prepared to remove that democratic privilege on the ground that a strike by public servants was inconveniencing one party or another.

When the chips are down, we live in one of the most democratic countries of the world, and the average Canadian will put up with legal strikes if the alternative is a form of government which infringes to an intolerable degree on civil liberties and freedom. If we on this side have any bias it is to see that public servants continue to enjoy the right to go on strike provided, of course, that they have met the legal requirements. That is official Liberal policy, and we shall find out whether it is official Conservative policy when the appropriate moment comes.

The motion before us is a "nothing" motion. I am suprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should have stated very early in his address that his two-man party would support the opposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Three.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Four.

Mr. Mackasey: Four, then. In any event I suspect that the basic motive of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the same as that of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. One of the things about being a New Democrat, and even more about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is that you become a living example of the old adage which says hope springs eternal in the human breast. The hon. gentleman really has hopes of winning that by-election in Ottawa-Carleton. Thus, when the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton sat down after his eloquent, effective, and persuasive speech, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre got up and virtually endorsed everything which had been said. Summed up in two words, his contribution to the debate was: "Me too."

It may be I am too suspicious. Maybe there has been a change in heart among the opposition. Perhaps they were concerned all these years about the plight of the public servants. Maybe they will stop demanding that we fire or lay-off tens of thousands of public servants across the country. Maybe they will cease to echo some of the editorials appearing in right wing papers in this country which say that bureaucracy is running rampant, that there are thousands on the payroll who should not be there. That is what we read day in and day out. But suddenly, the opposition is prepared to try to find out who these thousands of public servants are. They are people. They are voters. They are, many of them, residents of Ottawa. If the bureaucracy in this country grows it is because we as Canadians want more services, and if we want more services from government a larger bureaucracy is needed to supply them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe the question could be asked after supper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I want to ask the minister whether, when he gets back at eight o'clock, he will deal with the motion, which concerns ministerial responsibility?

Mr. Mackasey: That will be a pleasure.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

TABLING OF REPORT OF ANTI-INFLATION ACT ADMINISTRATOR

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please the hon. Minister of National Revenue rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cullen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to the tabling of documents in order that I might table the report of the office of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Does the hon. minister have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their generous and vocal support of my request to revert to the tabling of documents. Pursuant to Standing Order 41 I should like to table, in both official languages, the report of the office of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

That this House, finding unacceptable the performance of the Government, particularly its penchant for shifting blame, reaffirms its belief in the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility and expresses its lack of confidence in the Government.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, at this time—

Mr. Paproski: Let's hear the truth now, and let's hear it for Bryce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You have some support on this side. You are not all that bad.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the only ones supporting me are the philatelists. They want their first cover issues.

An hon. Member: Let's keep this clean.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I am at a handicap as I forgot my glasses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: It is very difficult.

Mr. Paproski: That's no handicap. You are better without reading it anyway, Bryce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: As I said before six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was really very disappointed that this is the last opposition day debate before the end of the session. I happen to be a little bit of a traditionalist and I would like to be serious for a moment.

There were two events I enjoyed this session; one was discussing my estimates in the House, which took place on a Friday as I recall when there were a lot of excellent and intelligent questions asked from the local party and the odd one from the opposition. Really it was parliament as I knew it in the 1960's, when you had to defend yourself.

If I have any advice for a friend who might come into the House of Commons it would be that he must learn to defend himself without being personal. If you cannot do this then you do not belong here, because one must look at the House of Commons and come to the conclusion that there have been great speakers, great debaters in this House of Commons and in this country for over 100 years. Somehow they learned the difference between personal vindictiveness and debate. This is a very important point, and it makes all the difference between a job and working at something you enjoy.

I sit here languishing in relative obscurity most days. I must admit that I admire the hon. gentleman representing Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He has a gift for words, but I admire him because he never gets personal, and I say that sincerely. Mind you, he is very obvious, but that is another thing. He became very obvious early today when suddenly he rediscovered the electors in the public service and the upcoming Ottawa byelection in October.

The amazing thing about that hon. gentleman's speech was that he did not make the point that should have been made when talking about parliament.

Mr. Paproski: You have no excuse now, but you were going great guns without your glasses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, there is a gentleman out of order, but it is not unusual for the socialists. They have never been in order as long as I can recall.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Just before six o'clock I asked the minister if, when we came back at eight o'clock, he would speak to the motion, and I think his answer was "with pleasure". I wonder whether he is now going to address himself to the motion before us.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is what he is doing, but you do not like it.

Mr. Mackasey: My problem was that I did not have my glasses and I was not sure what the motion was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: At quarter to ten the House of Commons will express its opinion on the motion as to whether this House has a lack of confidence in the government. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman will vote with or against the government, but I am willing to concede, or risk my reputation, by stating that somehow the representatives of the people of Canada will express their confidence in the government that leads them, and in the Liberal party. If I am wrong—

● (2010)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us about ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Mackasey: An hon. gentleman says, "Speak to the motion". I am doing precisely that. I am doing what the hon. gentleman for Winnipeg North Centre said, "Me too". The nice thing about the speech by the hon. gentleman from Grenville-Carleton is he said they are really the unofficial voice of the public service and that we are really bad people on this side in that we have been really hard on the public service. They say, "Look how you have treated a certain individual; we wouldn't do that". But day after day after day someone over there would get up and say, "When are you going to fire 11,000 public servants in the Ottawa district because your office is too big?"

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We never said that.

Mr. Mackasey: More or less in those terms. If you look at Hansard, which I did at seven o'clock, I think you will see that there are 40 odd questions which, if you follow through on the implication, will show that in every case they represent criticism, unintentional maybe, of the public service.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Or the government.

Mr. Mackasey: Or of the government, but also the public service. It is not the government which criticized Reisman and Grandy who were public servants.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Retired.

Mr. Mackasey: Who were public servants and then retired. I do not wish to become involved in personalities. However, they are the people who brought up names today, not the government. I do not want to get involved in names. I would rather get to the fact that we live in a society right here which, rightly or wrongly, and I think rightly, is demanding of our private enterprise system a certain quality of life. We are demanding a Gross National Product that can support the poor, the blind, the crippled, the alcoholics, and even the lazy people. We are saying to that private enterprise system, which I think all of us stand for, including the converts in the corner because they become converts when they form provincial governments, that rightly or wrongly it is the best thing for this country but that at the present moment it is subject to a lot of tensions.

For the first time maybe in 30 years these tensions have come in the industrial world, or in the "have" world if you like.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: I promise, Mr. Speaker, not to be too long. I just want to make a point which is important to me. Perhaps for the first time some of the industrialized nations such as our own are a little uncertain, a little afraid, a little terrified to trust the market place. They are worried because of the OPEC dispute, because of the energy crisis, and because of the environmental problems. They are worried because the poor are no longer passive. They are worried because, ironically in our quite logical dedication to democracy, for the first time all Canadians have a voice through some organization. This is not abnormal. It has penetrated, I believe, the whole western world, the whole of industrialized society. It is bound to have reflected on people. When it reflects on people it is bound to reflect on parliamentarians on both sides of the House. I am being as non-partisan as I can.

What is the problem with which we are faced? The problem is to resist panic. The problem is not to recreate the mood of the thirties when somehow leadership was tired out, and the leaders who then came forward were Hitler and Mussolini who were going to solve all the problems of the world when they were first elected. This is the problem in this country. How do we react to this world-wide situation? It is not really world-wide.

One thing about prosperity is that if you have never known it you never know when you are worse off. The industrialized world has known prosperity for 30 years. Suddenly we are faced with a challenge. We are faced with the thought that there may be no energy in 20 years, the thought that we may destroy the ecology, the thought that just possible our free enterprise system might not be able to provide the wealth that is needed to look after the less fortunate or those who somehow have to be supported, and also provide those who contribute to the quality of life whether they be doctors, dentists, lawyers, teachers or whatever. It would be surprising if the question period and the government's actions did not somehow reflect that concern of the people. Our challenge is to have the courage to resist a mod which if carried to its ultimate, will simply destroy what has taken decades to build—our concern for each other.

I look forward to a country in which we recognize everybody's right the poor and the blind, to a minimum income, but also a society where anybody in this room can have children who, if they want to work 10 or 15 hours a day, can go to it in order to have a two-car garage, a summer home, and have a level of income that is incomparable around the world. This is really why I am here and why most of us are here on both sides of this House. This is why I feel very deeply about this institution. I may be in the minority in my thinking and I do not apologize for that.

I just want to say that as a member of the Liberal party, and as a member of this parliament which has run for 300 and some days, I have no apologies for our records. As I said earlier before six o'clock, we have brought in about 100 meaningful pieces of legislation. When I say "we" I am speaking for everybody, because parliament is not just one party; it is four parties. We are dedicated; we fight; we improve, and hopefully and practically we end up with better pieces of legislation for all Canadians. It really is very unimportant whether one sits here or there so long as one is dedicated to improving society. Much of our legislation has been improved by backbenchers and by opposition members. That is why we are here. We are not here simply to be re-elected.

We must have the courage of our convictions which got us elected in the first place. Mr. Speaker, you might say what does that have to do with the public service? Simply this: if you want government to look after the lame, the poor, the crippled, the blind, and the lazy as well as all the others including, the abandoned mother and the widow, rather than have private enterprise saddled with it, then you have to expect bureaucracy to grow in the same way corporations such as General Motors grow. So it is incidental to me whether the public service is comprised of 5,000 people or 500,000 people. What is important is why we hire them and what they are doing.

I like to see our public service fulfil a useful role. It is the best public service in the world, despite the speech of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton today. The opposition has no monopoly on concern for the public service. I must be partisan to the point of repeating that this is the party, the Liberal party, which gave that public service a voice in its own destiny, which gave it the right to bargain and the right to strike even as opposed to arbitration if it felt this necessary after it met the requirements. This is the party which gave public servants a decent income, which gave them a decent pension, and we have no apologies to make to the public service. They know it, and the opposition knows it.

I am not blaming the hon. gentleman for preparing the ground for the Ottawa by-election. I would be doing it too. I will be there at that by-election, as he will, and we will end up good friends, as we are now.

● (2020)

I want to say in conclusion that the Liberal party has nothing to apologize for, both in its relationship with the public service and in its record as a government in the last couple of years.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to repeat the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Mackasey). I had the privilege to act as the co-chairman of the committee considering labour relations in the public service and as such I have noted the efforts made by the members of every party within that committee to protect the rights of civil servants in Ottawa and elsewhere in Canada who are responsible under the legislation governing labour relations in the civil service.

[English]

I would simply like to repeat that in effect when dealing with the public service at the federal level we established, in terms of labour relations for the public servants in Canada at the federal level, a system which has not been equalled in any of the public services anywhere else in the western world. Those advantages that befall public servants in terms of labour relations at the federal level in Canada are the envy of public services throughout the world. We provided them with the right to strike, and indeed we have protected them with benefits that will continue to be provided to them.

Also we are providing for the public servants in Canada the continuation of the principle which has been espoused in parliamentary democracy, that is the principle of anonymity, the principle that public servants are responsible to the House of Commons through their minister. That principle has not been changed and it is honoured every day in the House. No one will deny that in the question period, the period which is the most interesting and followed most closely by the public, every minister in the government answers for his department in terms of policy and in terms of administration. That principle has been recognized and no one denies it.

I was really disapppointed with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). When he introduced his motion I thought he would address himself to the question of ministerial responsibility which, in my view, has received a great deal of attention as the result of the statement made by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). But no, he was too interested in making some possible gain, in trying, in his particular style, to draw attention to his presence in the House by making a speech that is strictly political and partisan in nature.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I had hoped that he would deal with the interesting and essential problem of parliamentary democracy in our adversary system. However, he did not deal with it. I left ten minutes before the end of his speech because I was disappointed that he had not dealt with the basic issue. On my return I inquired to see whether he had deigned to deal with the issue, but I found that he had not. He spent all his time dealing with the Orion case and with the Minister of Supply and Services, without specifying why he believed the conduct of the minister to have been in contravention of the recognized principle of ministerial responsibility.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did bring his attention, even though only glancingly, to the question of ministerial responsibility, primarily in requesting the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Mackasey) to deal with that issue. That was the contribution of the hon. member. I cannot understand it because members of the opposition have a wealth of material upon which to draw in order to deal with the doctrine of ministerial responsibility for this government has been immersed in that particular doctrine. As I understand it, there are two aspects to the doctrine, if I may be so bold as to deal with the issue at hand.

An hon. Member: Yes, dredging and Sky Shops.

Mr. Blais: The first one is the doctine of collective ministerial responsibility, namely, the responsibility of the cabinet which is the collective responsibility of the whole front bench on the government side. That particular principle has been honoured increasingly since the coming of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1968.

An hon. Member: The coming of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Blais: In support of my contention I draw the attention of hon. members opposite—individually perhaps they might not be able to comprehend it but perhaps collectively they might be able to bring some intelligence to bear on an article written by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: It is entitled "Decision-making".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor. I suggest that we should listen and we might learn something.

Mr. Blais: It is entitled "Decision-making in the Federal Cabinet". The President of the Privy Council has been a minister and a public servant. That has been stated by members of the opposition and members on this side on a number of occasions. He entered the public service when Mackenzie King was still prime minister. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will remember that epoch. It was in 1942 that the President of the Privy Council entered the public service. He describes the situation as he found it in those days, with a great deal of accuracy. He states in that article which was published in the "Canadian Public Administration," volume 19, in the spring of 1976, that he entered the public service in 1942. Then he goes on to say:

The tradition was an oral one, and the recommendations of ministers were seldom rejected. Cabinet agenda were reasonably flexible so that matters could be raised of which notice had not been given . . .

There were few formal cabinet committees except Treasury Board, the Defence Committee and, for a time the Wheat Committee. Proposals by ministers came before cabinet in the first instance and only in the event of disagreement were they referred to ministerial committees which were more often than not ad hoc. At that time, interdepartmental committees of officials were more numerous than ministerial committees.

A great many comments were made this afternoon relating to the suspicion that the public service in Canada at one time really governed the government. There might have been some reason for that suspicion at the time when the President of the Privy Council first entered the public service. He states in the article:

When I arrived in Ottawa at the beginning of 1942, I recall Dr. Mackintosh's account of how he had been instructed to prepare a statement for Mr. King to use when announcing on the radio the over-all price ceiling which came into effect toward the end of 1941. He showed his draft to the prime minister who, after reading the opening paragraphs, looked up and said: 'This is important, isn't it, Dr. Mackintosh?' I couldn't imagine Mr. Pearson or Mr. Trudeau being so unaware of the momentous consequences of introducing over-all price controls.

● (2030)

Indeed he says in his article that in those days decisions originated much more in the public service than they did in the cabinet itself. He goes on in his article as follows:

The main characteristic of the Trudeau Cabinet in my judgment has been the application of the principle of collegiality, the practical application of the concept of joint responsibility.

Under Mr. Trudeau all proposals must be fully documented, their conclusions and recommendations based on a careful consideration of alternatives and presentation of the arguments pro and con. Lengthy documents must be accompanied by a summary in both official languages . . . Caucus consultations must be described or reasons given if these have not taken place.

I can personally attest to the fact that cabinet decisions now cannot be taken unless there has been prior caucus consultation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is why they are so bad.

Mr. Blais: That caucus consultation has been substantial and very beneficial, if we consider the list of statutes and enactments which were enumerated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs this afternoon. The President of the Privy Council stated further as follows:

The general rule, to which there are extremely few exceptions, is that proposals are referred in the first instance to the cabinet committees for consideration and decision or, failing decision, report to cabinet.

He goes on to say the following:

The Trudeau approach to decision-making in the cabinet has had many consequences. Perhaps one of its most significant has been to require ministers to become knowledgeable, even expert, to an extent that was not required of them in the past.

My impression is that for these reasons ministers are not as dependent upon their principal civil servant advisers for policy guidance as they were in earlier administrations and that interdepartmental committees, while they remain numerous, are not as significant in the decision-making process as they once were.

This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre alluded to that fact. Although his particular position in this House did not permit him to commend the government for having taken these initiatives, I could read between the lines that indeed he approved of the greater political input in the government decision-making process. I do as well, because at this particular time we are facing a development of the powers of the House.

It is not a question, as has been said by hon. members of the opposition, of reinstating in the House powers which once were within this House. I disagree. It is a question of evolution. As members of parliament we are headed toward an increase in the control we can have over the operations of the government and over the administrative aspects of government and the bureaucracy. More and more, members of parliament are becoming ombudsmen vis-à-vis the bureaucracy in the public service, and members of parliament on both sides of the House are demanding more power, more time in the House, more control over the operations of the government and of the bureaucracy, and that is as it should be. I fully agree with that.

When we look at the changes which are being announced, undoubtedly the government in the next session will be introducing legislation relating to freedom of information. That is an essential piece of legislation, but I am surprised that hon. members opposite have not directed their minds to the principle of individual ministerial responsibility vis-à-vis the question of freedom of information. That is one of the major stumbling blocks.

When the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton attacks the Minister of Supply and Services for having chastised or castigated a member of the public service in the House, he is working against his own interest with regard to freedom of information because there is nothing wrong with what the minister did. That course of action has been followed in parliamentary democracies such as ours. It has been followed in Westminster, in New Zealand, and in Australia, and if I may quote from an article—

An hon. Member: You are showing your ignorance.

Mr. Blais: I am not showing ignorance at all. I am just showing more depth than the hon. member who is singing on the other side.

I would like to call the attention of the House to an article published by Hutchinson in 1961 and written by C. Marshall entitled "Some Problems of the Constitution". Under the heading "Responsibility for Civil Servants", at page 84 it is stated:

There seems to be uncertainty about the doctrine that Ministers are responsible for every act of their Civil Service subordinates. Sir Ivor Jennings in his Cabinet Government speaks of 'the responsibility of the Minister for every act done in his department'. In Mr. Herbert Morrison's words, 'There can be no question whatever that Ministers are responsible for everything that their officers do!' The Minister 'is responsible for every stamp stuck on an envelope'. Now it is clear in the light of earlier discussion of the term 'responsible' that such a statement might mean a number of things. It might mean that each act is legally to be considered that of the Minister. It might mean that the Minister must hold himself morally responsible for every act of his subordinates. Or it might mean that the Minister (and the Minister alone) is the constitutional mouthpiece through which departmental actions are to be defended or repudiated and from whom information is to be sought.

That is the solution which C. Marshall feels has been accepted by parliamentary democracies. He cites no less an authority than Sir Anthony Eden as follows:

> . . . thus clearly indicating his officials and not himself as the agents of the mischief. Moreover where action is taken of which the Minister disapproves and has no prior knowledge 'there is' said the Home Secretary, 'no obligation on the part of the Minister to endorse what he believes to be wrong, or to defend what are clearly shown to be errors of his officers'.

Herbert Morrison, in his book "Government and Parliament",

> . . . that though the consequences 'may be rather hard on a Minister from time to time', he 'must accept responsibility as if the act were his own'. Yet he has 'a perfect right to reveal the facts and to assure the House that he has taken suitable action' where his specific orders have been disobeyed. On one such occasion a disobedient officer in the Home Office had been castigated in the House.

There are numerous precedents where public servants have not abided by the directives of their ministers or have acted contrary to recognized priciples of conduct and been castigated in the House. There is no doubt that Mr. Morrison's reference was to that. I suggest that to argue the contrary works against the growth of control by this House over the government and its operations. There is no doubt that if we are to say that the government and the ministers within that government are totally responsible for every act of civil servants, whether policy making or administrative, they will fight any move to liberate the flow of information, and that is as it should be. There is no doubt that no government can really act to the betterment of public interest if it sees that its public servants can be called on to account at any time without any clearance from their ministers. That is why I find it very strange that hon. members opposite have not sought to consider the aspect of freedom of information in terms of individual ministerial responsibility.

In an article entitled "Parliamentary Affairs" written by Leslie Wolf-Phillips there is a statement to the effect that in this House and in Westminster there has been a failure to deal with the question of secrecy in terms of ministerial responsibility. He states:

● (2040)

> . . . the key justification for secrecy—the whole working of the existing system with its tradition that ministers act on confidential advice from a professional cadre of civil servants.

If we are to deal with secrecy, the justification for that secrecy is that public servants act in the belief that their particular counsel to their minister is going to be kept secret. If, on the other hand, the minister feels that he can throw the public service open to public scrutiny, indeed there is no question but that there is going to be a great interplay so that the public servants themselves will refuse to divulge to the minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. parliamentary secretary have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: That is enough.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion today. We have somewhat rambled away from the meat of the motion, which reads:

> That this House, finding unacceptable the performance of the Government, particularly its penchant for shifting blame, reaffirms its belief in the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility and expresses its lack of confidence in the Government.

I have no hesitation is supporting that motion. We got on to the subject of civil servants, and the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) said that the Conservative party was going to fire tens of thousands of civil servants. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall us making any such statement.

Mr. Mackasey: I said 50,000.

Mr. McKenzie: Even 50,000—that is not correct. There is an element of concern on the part of civil servants. In an article in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 15, 1976, entitled "The Big Sleep" Jacques Grenier writes:

> Because of the sheer size of the bureaucracy, a civil servant who wants to can go almost completely underground performing little or no work. A federal employee at the National Museums of Canada admitted to me he works about an hour a week. He makes over $15,000 a year. A bright young bureaucrat with the Foreign Investment Review Agency admits working about two hours a week. His salary is $28,000.
>
> An acquaintance of mine who has been in the civil service for four years, with a salary in excess of $20,000 confided, "I took this job because I wanted to make some kind of difference. Now I'm working a total of about three hours a week. It's at something I don't like, and there is no real way out of it." He is completely disillusioned.

This is what we should be concerned about in the civil service. I hope the minister has investigated the charges made in this article of federal civil servants drawing $28,000 to work two hours a week.

The minister said he is proud of his government's record. After this latest budget with about a $5 billion deficit, I do not think he has anything to be proud of. This year the Post Office will have a deficit of three-quarters of a billion dollars. That is nothing to be proud of; he should be ashamed.

Turning to ministerial responsibility, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to an article in yesterday's Globe and Mail regarding the air travel privileges which cabinet ministers receive, as well as the leaders of the opposition.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And some members of parliament.

Mr. McKenzie: I said leaders of the opposition. The article quoted the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) as follows:

> Do you think it's funny for an airline to know that the Prime Minister is going to travel with them? And for the passengers. If I was a passenger I would not want to travel on the same aircraft as the Prime Minister. So many people want to kill this man.

I think the minister has a responsibility to report this to the RCMP. If he knows that so many people want to kill the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) he has a ministerial responsibility to report it. Is he getting phone calls or letters from kooks? What is he going to do about it? Maybe the list is too long to present to the RCMP.

An area of ministerial responsibility that I have covered many times is the serious financial problems being experienced by Air Canada in its finance branch in Winnipeg. They are not only experiencing financial problems with millions of dollars going astray, they are experiencing labour problems. The government has taken some initiative in regard to labour problems and has appointed a federal mediator to deal with them, but it is shirking its duty in looking into the financial problems of Air Canada. On a number of occasions I have asked that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the Prime Minister dispatch the Auditor General to the Air Canada finance branch to find out what is going on.

The CALEA union has laid documented evidence on the table in regard to financial mismanagement and the poor billing procedures that are taking place, and the millions of dollars that are being lost. What do we get from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport? Just the answer that we should not be running Crown corporations from the floor of the House of Commons. This is nothing but a slough off. Then the parliamentary secretary tells me that Air Canada will be coming before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and that we can question them. Mr. Speaker, there is no way this committee can conduct an audit. That is impossible. The government has the power to dispatch the Auditor General to the finance branch in Winnipeg to find out what is going on.

Here are some of the charges that are being made. An article in the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, June 12, states:

> But CALEA says Air Canada, through its clearing house section, has paid out $40 million to other airlines without an audit and, as of September, was backlogged to October, 1973. By not auditing, the airline is simply writing off errors in billings which normally amount to $160,000 a month, or nearly $2 million over a year, the union claims.

They provided us with all documents in regard to this. It is not supposition. They go on evidence. I have the documents. The article continues:

> According to the study, the Air Canada department which bills other airlines for flight coupons accepted by the Crown corporation isn't in much better financial shape.
>
> The union estimated that $10 million in coupons were still not cashed in as of September and the backlog at one point last year hit $20 million. Even if they are eventually processed, the airline has lost millions of dollars in interest on the revenue because of the delay, CALEA says.
>
> In press reports, published in March of last year, an internal Air Canada memorandum between officials in Winnipeg and Montreal was quoted as reporting "significant delays in billing other airlines" because of the processing delay.

This is costing millions of dollars. They estimated that $1 million in interest was lost due to this poor procedure.

The vice-president of the Air Canada finance branch, Michael H. Cochrane, made some startling statements to the Winnipeg Free Press last Thursday. He denied union allegations that mismanagement had contributed to the airline's record $12.5 million deficit last year. He said two major audits by private firms in the last year had thoroughly studied Air Canada accounting procedures and found them satisfactory. That statement is completely false. There was no detailed accounting whatsoever by any accounting firm in the finance branch. He said that the audits were conducted by Clarkson and Gordon Ltd. for the Estey inquiry into the airline last year, and by Coopers and Lybrand for the airline itself. The deficit, he said, was caused by a major decline in passenger traffic, rising fuel bills, and other escalating prices.

In the Coopers and Lybrand report in the 1975 financial statement of Air Canada they state:

> Our examination included a general review of the accounting procedures—

I have asked Air Canada employees if Coopers and Lybrand did any examination, if they came into the finance branch in Winnipeg to conduct a proper audit. They said they have seen no one there at all. The last person they saw was in there around 1972 doing some kind of an audit.

Also, under the terms of reference from the Estey report, Clarkson and Gordon were required primarily to review the Winnipeg centralized payment system, the Montreal payment system, the Dorval purchasing system, certain local branch purchases, and the system of authorization for expenditure. The review did not include payrolls and did not examine, except in a very summary fashion, the subroutines related to specific disbursements. In other words, they did not delve into airline billing.

● (2050)

I have referred, time and again, to discrepancies involving the finance branch; but the Minister of Transport has sloughed me off. He has refused to conduct a review into the difficulties at the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg.

Let me cite another example of mismanagement concerning reporting of ticket sales. As of October, 1975, there was in excess of $96,000 worth of unreported travel agent ticket sales, which represents a minimum of $2,208,000 unpaid for transportation. There is no mention of this in the Coopers and Lybrand report, or in the Clarkson, Gordon report. I have also pointed out that Air Canada has allowed debts as large as $186,000 to accumulate; it wrote them off because it could not collect. I submit that such a fact alone should result in an investigation of the finance branch. After all, the Estey inquiry looked into a $100,000 item. The report cost the government about $400,000. Commissioner Estey, after looking into the matter, said that he had never seen such unethical business practices as occurred in the operation of Air Canada. Yet when we ask the Minister of Transport to conduct an inquiry, he sloughs us off. He will not respond to requests for an investigation into the financial fiasco at the finance branch in Winnipeg.

Next I wish to talk about the foundation underpinning Canada's parliamentary system as inherited from Britain, cabinet solidarity. Everyone knows that a cabinet seldom agrees unanimously on any issue, and it would be a poor sort of cabinet if it did. It would nothing but a group of smug yes-men. Yet although solidarity has always been a fiction, the system cannot work without it. Cabinets argue and disagree in private, but once a majority decision is reached all ministers must support it or honourably resign; otherwise the life of any government would be chaotic and short, parliament a war of factions, and the public business neglected and deranged by frequent, indecisive elections.

As a constiutional lawyer, the Prime Minister fully understands this historic fiction and the working facts of the system. When he took office in 1968 the Prime Minister warned his colleagues that any of them who publicly disagreed with a cabinet decision or revealed a cabinet secret would be dismissed immediately. But in the two recent extraordinary instances of public disagreement the Prime Minister did nothing to discipline, much less dismiss, the offenders.

In statements made outside the House of Commons, the Postmaster General criticized the government's revision of the unemployment insurance scheme, while the Conservative opposition supported the obvious need to curb its abuses. Quarrelling openly in the House of Commons, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) attacked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) for bungling the purchase of Orion aircraft; the national defence minister replied, quite rightly, that the collapse of the Lockheed deal was the shared responsibility of all ministers. Finally, the supply and services minister, defying a basic rule of the system, named and blamed a defenceless civil servant.

But the malaise in Ottawa is not sudden, temporary or unexpected. The disorder of the government did not begin with the outbursts of those ministers. It began with the resignation of John Turner as minister of finance last fall, followed by the conviction of the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs for contempt of court, and his resignation as minister of consumer and corporate affairs. This was then followed by the proffered resignation of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) in the affair of the Quebec judges; but the Prime Minister refused to accept the resignation. Even this regrettable episode did not prevent the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) from approaching the National Parole Board to inquire about the suspended driver's licence of the Minister of the Environment who had been convicted of leaving the scene of an automobile accident.

The behaviour of the Trudeau cabinet is disturbing and unacceptable, because it weakens the whole governing system at a time when strength is most required.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What about the hon. member's leader? He is seldom here.

Mr. McKenzie: Oh, boy, here we go again with the government Whip. A recent article in the Globe and Mail says that:

> ... Liberal Joseph Guay (St. Boniface) was feted for his leather-lunged performances in the Commons and described as the 'noisiest, most abrasive' MP on the Liberal benches.

Many of us hear the interjections of the government Whip. They are not constructive. If he would take lessons from the opposition whip, he would be far more constructive.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that my interjections make a lot of sense compared with the nonsense we hear coming from the other side of the House much of the time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't be so modest, Joe.

Mr. McKenzie: The article went on to say:

> (It's said by some of the MPs in attendance that the comments were too close to the bone—Joe was not amused.)

Apparently I got to Joe's bone again tonight.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You don't know what you are talking about, unless you read. Keep reading.

Mr. McKenzie: Clearly, the Prime Minister cannot allow such a spectacle of confusion to last much longer.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Keep reading.

Mr. McKenzie: He indicated months ago that the cabinet would be shuffled after the current parliamentary session; but he will need more than another game of musical chairs if his credibility as the nation's leader is to be re-established. I suggest that Canadians have the right to expect something better than a cabinet in public disarray, a governing system unable to govern effectively until it is repaired, or to make any policy work.

Let me now deal with the Lockheed Orion fiasco which has cast a harsh light on the competence of two members of the Trudeau government, the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of National Defence.

By his shabby attempts at blame shifting, the Minister of Supply and Services has revealed that he also lacks the sense of responsibility to be a cabinet minister. Because of the financial and political troubles that had overtaken the Lockheed company, both ministers should have been especially watchful and prudent in making the deal for 18 long-range patrol aircraft at a cost of more than $1 billion. It was to be expected that a company in that position, urgently needing the contract, would put the most optimistic face on its ability to carry through.

The defence minister's chief fault was that, in emulating Lockheed's professed or real optimism, he took on trust its verbal assurance last November that it could get interim financing. I can recall, on November 27, the defence minister announcing that the big purchase would be going through and that two factories in Winnipeg would start making parts immediately for the Lockheed Orion. I questioned the minister further in the defence committee on December 1 and he assured me again that the deal was going through. He had no business making such statements.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And what happened with regard to aircraft when the Conservatives had a majority?

An hon. Member: Water your mushrooms, Joe.

Mr. McKenzie: Because of the financial and political troubles that had overtaken the Lockheed company, both ministers should have been especially watchful and prudent in making the deal for 18 long-range patrol aircraft at a cost of more than $1 billion. It was to be expected that a company in that position, urgently needing the contract, would put the most optimistic face on its ability to carry through. The defence minister's chief fault was that, in emulating Lockheed's professed or real optimism, he took on trust its verbal assurance last November that it could get interim financing. It was even more precisely the supply and services minister's responsibility to nail down this assurance in writing and to clear the financing of the entire deal before accepting the company's proposal, as he did in a telex message last December 2.

There was further confusion with regard to Treasury Board's authorizing this expenditure. I asked ministers in the House about their knowledge of this transaction, but neither would give me an answer. The Minister of Public Works refused to refer my request to the President of the Treasury Board. I questioned the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) who at that time was on the Treasury Board, but he would not get up to answer.

On June 8 this year I put on the order paper a starred question in which I asked what members of the cabinet were on the Treasury Board on December 2, 1975. The second part of my question reads:

Was the financing of the Lockheed (LRPA) deal discussed at the Treasury Board meeting of December 2, 1975 and, if so, what members of the cabinet were present?

The government does not want to tell the House which members of the cabinet at that time were on the Treasury Board. A starred question is supposed to be answered within a period of two weeks. However, they have chosen not to answer this one. I have severe reservations about this. I doubt whether any members of the cabinet appeared at the December 2 meeting. It was rubber stamped and sent through, and that is why they will not answer my question.

● (2100)

Further, it is now revealed that the Minister of Supply and Services received a document from his deputy minister on December 1 advising that there was some risk with Lockheed financing and warning that the Defence Department could not finance the first year of the project. This evidently demolished the minister's excuse that he did not know on December 2 that the Defence Department was not going to finance the deal by direct payment to Lockheed.

It makes even more contemptible his naming and blaming officials in Defence and his own department. Under our system of government, cabinet ministers are required to shoulder responsibility when things go wrong, not blame underlings.

The Orion mess has delayed by months, if not years, Canada's acquisition of modern patrol aircraft to replace the obsolete Argus. It will waste $16 million of the taxpayers' money—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the motion although I do it with a bit of a smile on my face because it is another example of the pot calling the kettle black. Listening to free enterprise Tories saying mean things to free enterprise Liberals is amusing, because when it comes right down to the way they operate there is fundamentally no difference between their policies, philosophy, and everything else. Of course we have always looked with amusement on the pot to my right calling the kettle across the way black. The motion reads:

[Mr. McKenzie.]

That this House, finding unacceptable the performance of the Government,—

That is a broad statement. Even I would not be brave enough to say that the entire performance of the government is unacceptable. Some parts of its performance were acceptable. On balance, however, I agree with the motion because there was more that was unacceptable than acceptable.

Before I get into the main part of my remarks I want to refer to something that was said by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), and repeated by the parliamentary secretary, to the effect that that government and that Liberal party have done the best of any in the world with regard to the rights, support for, and so forth with regard to the public service. If the Postmaster General will check Canadian history, he will find that in typical Liberal fashion they were 20 or 25 years behind.

When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was premier of Saskatchewan in 1944, 1945 and 1946, the provincial public service got a union, the right to strike, and a better pension plan. They got rid of all the Liberal hacks in the public service. They had all this plus an independent public service commission 20 years before any Liberal government even came close to thinking about it. The minister can, however, feel proud because he is still 20 years ahead of the Tory party. He can take some satisfaction in that. However, I do not want to hear any nonsense from any Liberal. They had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, into the twentieth century with regard to the public service having the right to organize, the right to strike, an independent public service commission, and a decent pension program. The Liberal party in Saskatchewan and in every other province in Canada had to be dragged kicking and screaming into this. Finally, the federal Liberal government did it. Of course there is no Tory provincial government in the country that has got to it yet.

The minister should only take credit in terms of comparing the Liberals with the Tories. I grant him that they are 20 years ahead of the Tories, although they are 25 years behind the CCF and the NDP.

The motion further states that the House finds unacceptable the government's penchant for shifting blame and, I quote:

—reaffirms its belief in the importance of the convention of ministerial responsibility—

I imagine everyone in the House agrees with that clause. Not even the government members can argue against that. Finally it states:

—and expresses its lack of confidence in the Government.

I want to illustrate the shifting of responsibility or the failure to carry out the responsibility on the part of ministers, particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who is also in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. That minister still refuses to carry out a vote by producers of the prairie provinces with regard to feed grains being under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, even though he promised it.

The minister in charge of the wheat board has failed to carry out that commitment in spite of the fact that the producers on the Saskatchewan Natural Products Marketing Council carried out a plebiscite which indicated 93 per cent support for keeping the Canadian Wheat Board as the sole marketing agency for feed grains. That may be why the minister in charge of the wheat board refused to carry out his responsibility and commitment. When he saw the result of the vote of the Saskatchewan producers on that issue, he cut and ran.

The minister did carry out the results of a vote one time. That is what I call shifting, or being shifty. That vote was with regard to whether rapeseed should be under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. The minister in charge of the wheat board handled that cutely. He sent a ballot to all producers. Instead of it having the usual yes or no, it had yes, no, or no opinion. In order to ensure that the rapeseed producers would not vote to have rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, the minister counted all "no opinion" ballots as "no". When the results were tallied, the minister was able to shift responsibility. The producers voted, he said. Is that what you call a responsible exercise of ministerial responsibility? I do not think so.

With regard to railway passenger service, particularly transcontinental service, the minister made a policy announcement which in effect said that we will have only one transcontinental passenger train. In order to take the heat off, the minister asked the railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission to carry out hearings across Canada with regard to transcontinental railway passenger trains. However, in the terms of reference there was a little fence put around them, saying they will consider the various alternatives to a transcontinental passenger train.

The minister is neatly trying to shift responsibility for his policy announcement to the Canadian Transport Commission, and he worked it in such a way that the Commission could report back on various questions concerning one trans-continental passenger train rather than two. It work very well. It suits the minister's purpose very well. He has been able to shift political and ministerial responsibility from his own neck to the railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission.

● (2110)

The beauty of it is he has not only done that with the CTC. He is the boy who did a lot of talking about rail line abandonment and the political heat got heavy so he appointed a commission headed by Mr. Justice Hall. He is the boy who opened the whole thing up about reviewing the Crowsnest pass rates. It was not any other political party or any farm organisation. Then he appointed the Snavely Commission. Again he shifts the heat and the responsibility, and while those organizations are meeting and carrying out their tasks the minister continues to make decisions which come under the purview of those various inquiries. The beauty of it for the Minister of Transport is that he can take credit for it if it works, and continue to shift the blame to these other commissions and boards if it does not.

This is another reason for my supporting the motion. I do not think that is a proper or responsible exercise of ministerial responsibility. If you have made a political and philosophic decision, you have made it. And then you see to it that it is implemented. You don't try to look around in ten directions at one time or shift the heat to other public bodies or to public servants.

The same thing has been occurring in the past several days in connection with the dispute between the government and the air traffic controllers. The House should remember some of the history of this matter. It was not the Government of Canada, it was not the Minister of Transport or his predecessor, or the minister before that, who said there should be bilingualism among air traffic controllers. It was the air traffic controllers themselves who were responsible for taking the initiative in 1974 because of the failure of successive ministers of transport to set out proper regulations governing air traffic control, particularly small aircraft using smaller airports.

In 1962 the ministry directed that French might be used by air traffic controllers only in emergencies and an immediate translation must be made into English.

In 1971 a transport study found no major problems about air traffic control in English, though some private flyers required additional assistance in French. For this reason the informal use of French in air traffic control proceeded without authorization. In other words, air traffic controllers themselves, when someone needed assistance in the second language, gave it.

Even though the air line pilots and the controllers repeatedly requested the ministry to put some regulation and order into this process, nothing was done. Finally, in 1974, the air traffic controllers proposed that limited bilingual air traffic control for visual flight rules, meaning lowflying planes, be allowed to apply at Quebec airports where traffic was light and there was no significant mix of high-speed jets with small craft.

I do not want to hear the Minister of Transport or any other member of the government trying to take credit for bilingualism being brought into five airports. It was the air traffic controllers themselves who initiated that move, and to their credit. It was the air traffic controllers who started using French informally. All this is in the ministry's own report if hon. members would care to check on it. In June, 1974, bilingual traffic control was used for visual flight regulation. It was authorized then by the ministry following the example of the air traffic controllers for the airports of Quebec City, St. Jean, Baie Comeau, Sept-Îles and St. Honoré.

By March of 1975 the MOT task force called Project Bilcom presented 23 recommendations related to the use of language at airports. That report was presented to the House on May 22 last year. The majority report, with only one dissenting voice, found there was no demand for wider bilingual service. It recommended that air traffic control under instrument flight rules remain English only, that visual flight rules above 9,500 feet provide for English only and that bilingual visual flight be restricted to the five airports in the province of Quebec.

Some aviation personnel in Quebec referred the findings of the report to the Commissioner of Official Languages. Mr. Spicer, in a letter to the Ministry of Transport, recommended that the minister continue to consult with all interested parties and always give overriding priority to the safety of air travellers and air crew.

In September of last year a committee representative of CALPA, pilots, controllers, machinists, the airline industry, and the province of Quebec was set up to study bilingualism in air traffic control. It recommended that the use of French remain limited to visual flight rule operations, yet on December 31, 1975, despite all these studies, the Minister of Transport suddenly announced that bilingual air traffic control would be extended to all elements of air traffic control in Quebec. This was in spite of recommendations not only from the air traffic controllers but from the airline pilots, the machinists, the government of Quebec, and the airline companies. Disregarding this advice, the minister says bilingualism will be extended to all elements of air traffic control in Quebec, with an extension of visual flight rules to two more airports in the summer of 1976 and an eventual extension to instrument flight rules when safe procedures are developed. The minister made that announcement even though some of his own press announcements had led one to expect something different.

All parties in this House have supported bilingualism. There is no argument about that. Again we are in a situation where the minister either evades, or misuses, or abuses the responsibility which belongs to him. There can be no question about this: if it is intended to add a duty to an air traffic controller, whether that additional duty involves another language, or new instruments, or polishing his supervisor's shoes, it will increase the controller's work load, it will increase the stress upon that person, and this may be reflected in his ability to carry out his job with the maximum effectiveness and safety. This is perfectly logical. It is saying nothing against one language or another.

Surely the Minister of Transport could have met with the controllers, if necessary on a daily basis, to let them know that the resignation of Mr. Keenan was regretted not only by their organization but by himself—to let them know he would try to get another commissioner appointed as soon as possible. He might have taken them into his confidence, discussed the subject with them and reassured them that in the end the controllers, the pilots, and the companies, though the process might take somewhat longer, would have a full and definite part to play in developing an acceptable system. He might have done all this instead of making an arbitrary announcement which flies in the face of the recommendations of a committee of his own department. That is not carrying out ministerial responsibility.

● (2120)

Instead of that what did the minister do last week? He went to Paris. Why did he go to Paris? He went to check on bilingual air traffic control at the airports in Paris and in other countries in Europe. I could have saved him the trouble. There were eight members of this House who made a trip on April 13 and 14. I was privileged to be invited to the flight deck by the captain of that Air Canada aircraft, and I listened to the air traffic controller in Paris for the last two hours of the flight. I could have saved the minister the trouble. I could have told him it was working very well there. The same situation exists in Brussels. But the minister went to Paris to investigate.

The terms of reference for the commission of inquiry into bilingualism in respect of air traffic control are limited, as reported in the Globe and Mail of Monday, June 21. The article states that the commission is vested with the power to inquire only into methods of introducing bilingualism but it cannot inquire into the policy of whether it is safe to introduce bilingualism at all.

The minister went to Paris to check on bilingualism in air traffic control, but I should have thought that would be the job of the commission of inquiry. I should have thought that the commissioner would go to Paris, London, Brussels, The Hague, Rome, Berlin, and anywhere else necessary. The minister went, and in the meantime the whole country was shut down. Is that carrying out ministerial responsibility or is that some more of the shifty, shifting operations of that minister and, I am sorry to say, some others in the government?

I fully support the motion of want of confidence because I am convinced there has been too much of this shifting of responsibility. There has been too much evasion of responsibility, with the using of public bodies and public servants to take the political heat off or to get a tough decision implemented. Whether members of this House agree or disagree with a particular policy taken by the government is not the point. The point is that the government resorts to the use of public bodies and public servants to shift political heat and political blame. It seems to me ministers are working at abdicating their own responsibility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, the last words on the bilingualism issue in air communications show to what extent some members opposite can be hypocrites when it suits their purpose.

Indeed, unless I am mistaken the discussion today was to show our confidence in the public service. However, the case which has just been raised by the member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) shows how principles give way to prejudices. Let us take for example bilingualism in air control.

[English]

Let us take the precise example of bilingualism in air traffic control if we really believe in the competence of civil servants. Every single aircraft in this country flies according to rules devised by officials of the Department of Transport headed by Mr. McLeish. These rules are considered all around the world to be the most strict and safest. Now that these experts who devise rules concerning flying say that they can devise rules to permit bilingualism in the province of Quebec, what is the reaction of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre? He does not have confidence in them any more even though their record is flawless, and even though they have a world renowned reputation concerning safety. Now hon. members attack their reputation.

Mr. Benjamin: No, I attack the minister.

Mr. De Bané: No, Sir, do not try to misconstrue the situation we are in today. Knowing that these civil servants have an absolutely perfect reputation and record in Canada and elsewhere concerning safety, it should not be suggested that these people can play into the hands of politicians or anybody else with the suggestion that they cannot devise bilingual procedures which are safe. How can someone in his right mind say something like that? Now we say we have to check on this through an inquiry, yet all the other rules they might devise are O.K. In this particular instance we have to check to see if what they are doing is safe. When civil servants actually do what we like we have nothing to quarrel with them about, but when there is a partisan or narrow minded benefit to be gained then we attack the policy which, in this instance, is made by experts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the matter before us today deals with many concepts which hardly bear any resemblance to reality any more. As Kenneth Galbraith says in his book The Affluent Society:

Ideas are by nature conservative.

They do not yield under the attack of other ideas, but under the massive aspect of circumstances against which they are helpless. When Confederation was proclaimed 109 years ago, there were hardly four civil servants in the country. Today, besides the 300,000 civil servants who come under the Public Service Commission, if we add the employees of Crown corporations such as Air Canada, Canadian National and the Armed Forces, we number about 750,000 civil servants who at an increasing rate of between 2 and 3 per cent a year, will hit 1.5 million—15 years hence. And we go on saying that ministers should be responsible for the least decision taken within their department.

In this regard, I would like to quote Norman Ward, who says at page 236 of his book The Government of Canada the following:

[English]

It is obvious that the opportunity to exercise control becomes more and more unreal as functions become more varied and complex and as the number under the minister's direction increases. A carefully planned organization can do much to overcome these handicaps, yet even with the most efficient methods, the subordinates at some level under the minister will inevitably acquire more power. The constant assertion of the principle of ministerial responsibility will cover to some degree the actual delegation of authority which has taken place, but this cannot conceal the fact that no minister (or his deputy) can hope to make even the major decisions for the five or ten or twenty thousand employees who may be nominally under him.

[Translation]

This idea was developed again recently by one of the most competent civil servants that I know in the federal administration, Michael Pitfield, in an article entitled "The shape of government in the 1980s: techniques and instruments for policy formulation at the federal level". Talking about the principle of ministerial responsibility, he refers, in my opinion, to one of the ideas where theory and practice are getting farther and farther apart. On page 9, he writes:

[English]

The benefits to be gained from enhancing the relationship between theory and practice are obvious; for theory to be sound it must reflect the way the real world operates, and for practice to maintain its effectiveness while keeping up with the changing needs of society, it must be consistent with theory. I suspect that for some years in Canada the theorist and the practitioner have been getting out of touch with one another.

● (2130)

[Translation]

A relevant excerpt, according to me, is the one where the former conservative Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, said:

[English]

A Minister of the Crown is responsible, under the system in Great Britain, for the minutest details of the administration in his department; he is politically responsible, but he does not know anything at all about them. When anything goes wrong in his department, he is responsible therefore to Parliament, and if he comes to Parliament and points out that he entrusted the duty to an official in the ordinary course and in good faith, that he had been selected for his capacity, and ability, and integrity, and the moment that man has gone wrong the Minister had investigated the matter to the full and punished the man either by degradation or dismissal, he has done his duty to the public. That is the way matters are dealt with in Great Britain, and it is the way, it seems to me, that our affairs ought to be carried on in this country.

[Translation]

And here I quote from the debates of the House of Commons of May 15, 1909, page 6723.

I would also like to quote an article by Professor S. E. Finer on "The Individual Responsibility of Ministers" published in Public Administration, volume 3445, 1956, page 377, where he shows that the idea of the minister's accountability for all actions taking place within his department is getting gradually further away from reality. I quote:

[English]

There is a good deal of constitutional folklore on this subject, to be true, but whether it adds up to a convention is very questionable.

[Translation]

And here he refers to a well known case in England: the resignation of Sir Thomas. He says:

[English]

And as to whether such enforced resignations as Sir Thomas' can be deemed a certain and effective constitutional remedy for mismanagement, the answer is not in any doubt. They cannot.

[Translation]

And he recalls what the meaning of this principle is, that is only the minister can report to Parliament. I quote from page 381:

[English]

Although the doctrine became established that Ministers alone are answerable to Parliament in respect of every act or omission of their civil servants, there seems no evidence that it was also established that—in the words of Wade and Phillips—'no Minister can shield himself by blaming his official'. And indeed, as Sir David Maxwell Fyfe himself observed, it is not true that 'Ministers are obliged to extend total protection to their officials and endorse their acts,' or that 'well justified criticism of civil servants cannot be made on a suitable occasion.' But it is clear from the cases to be cited below . . .

● (2140)

[Translation]

And he provides us with several examples on page 381 . . .

[English]

—that Ministers do not have to defend subordinates who defy instructions or who act reprehensibly in circumstances of which the Minister could not have become aware. It is equally clear that Ministers have defended themselves by blaming their officials and firing them. And it is also true that the House does not censure the Minister who can show that the delinquency was against his express instructions, or that he could not physically have known of it—provided he makes it clear, by speech or action, that the offender has been dealt with and that therefore the delinquency is unlikely to recur.

[Translation]

And on page 381, he gives numerous examples of the same situation. Obviously, on a tendency . . .

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow a question. Does he intend to deal in the course of his speech with the position of the member of the public service in Canada who has been named in the House of Commons by his minister and what remedies or what avenues or what redress for at least fair a hearing that a public servant is offered today? Does the hon. member intend to deal with that point?

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: The hon. member has most certainly raised a very interesting point and if time permits, Mr. Speaker, I would be quite willing to discuss that.

We can say that generally there is a tendency to assume that, in politics, politicians are concerned with decision-making while civil servants deal with implementation. But I think that this distinction which was certainly worthwhile years ago is less and less appropriate nowadays. The best example I can think of is a conference held in Quebec City on June 2, 1976—barely three weeks ago—by professor Kenneth Kernaghan of Brock University entitled: Politics, policy and public servants: political neutrality revisited.

It is stated on page 7 of his document about the distinction we are trying to draw between politics and administration:

[English]

During the 1930's, writers on public administration who recognized the significant and growing political role of the bureaucracy lived uncomfortably with the text-book dichotomy between politics and administration. The dichotomy came under increasing attack during the war years as many scholars gained practical administrative experience in government. Shortly after the war, a number of political scientists launched a devastating assault on the notion that politics and administration were or could be separated. Among this group of post-war authors, Paul Appleby stands out for his defence of the proposition that 'public administration is policy making . . . Public administration is one of a number of basic political processes.' In less celebrated and more broadly focused works than those written by American authors, British and Canadian writers demonstrated during this same period a growing recognition of the blurring of the traditional constitutional line between the politician and the administrator in the parliamentary system of government.

[Translation]

And on page 8, he adds . . .

[English]

Since the political role of public servants is attributed primarily to their contribution to policy development, much attention in the literature has focused on the intermingling of policy and administration. The conventional view that a clear division may be made between policy and administration has always been a fiction but has become increasingly untenable with the continuing growth of government activities and of administrative power.

[Translation]

And in my opinion this fiction is becoming even more obvious, if I may say so, when one sees the momentum gaining process of government decentralization where more head offices and work units of the civil service and Crown agencies as well as government institutions are distributed across the country to allow people closer contact with the administration. In such cases, how can one argue that the ministerial responsibility must be borne by the minister for the least little action made within the department by one of his agents?

In the past, certain distinctions were made concerning the carrying out of actions that I would call normal, executive and administrative, where the ministerial responsibility is quite beyond involvement. The classical example is obviously that of a mailman who steals a letter he should be delivering. In such a case, nobody think of putting the responsibility on the minister who holds that portfolio.

But, as Professor Kernaghan said, where does the distinction lie when the administration has so expanded and become so complex that neither the minister nor his deputy nor even the assistant deputy minister can be aware of all important decisions that are taken within their own department? The best example is control by parliamentarians since, according to the current theory, hon. members not only pass estimates but exercise control over expenditures as well.

More and more, and this has been the case for several decades, no one is fooled by this so-called control of parliamentarians over public expenditures. When one considers that 264 parliamentarians must control expenditures of billions of dollars made by hundreds of federal agencies and institutions, by hundreds of thousands of public servants, one may think that this control is also becoming ever more fictitious.

And I think we should make a case for an evolving theory that would be summed up in the following way: ministers are responsible for the development of their department's policy, they are collectively tied by decisions made by one of their collegues in the cabinet when it comes to the matter of management, when public servants may unknowingly fail to exercise judgment or take action without their minister's knowledge. Under the latter aspect, namely taking decisions that emanate from policies, I suggest the theory rapidly grows into fiction which is far removed from reality. Where is a minister's responsibility when, for instance, to refer to a conventional example, an inmate is released as a result of a collective decision by various people?

● (2150)

Let us recall the case of notary Geoffroy who had been convicted of murder and who had obtained from public servants the authorization to leave to get married. It was a total lack of judgment on the part of the officials who made that decision and according to the traditional doctrine, despite the fact that the minister had not taken part in the decision, he had to assume the responsibility for it. I believe, as Kenneth Galbraith would say, that ideas are conservative, but that facts are always there to demonstrate their absurdity and to contradict them at one time or another.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45, it is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of section 10 of Standing Order 58, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion concerning the main estimates and the supplementary estimates (B) and for the passage through all stages of any bill based thereon.

[English]

The first question is on the motion of Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

● (2200)

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton)) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 140)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Bawden
Beatty
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Cadieu
Caouette (Villeneuve)
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Darling
Dick
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Firth
Forrestall
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Horner
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rondeau
Rynard
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith (Churchill)
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wenman
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—102

Estimates

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blouin
Boulanger
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lee
Lefebvre
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Yanakis
Young—130

● (2210)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

* * *

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN MAIN ESTIMATES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, except those items disposed of at prior sittings, and less the amounts voted in Interim Supply, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-93, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1977, be read the first time and be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I would assume that the bill now having been read a first time and having been printed, it is available and has been distributed to hon. members.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-93, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1977, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 5 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Clause 6 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Schedule agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Preamble agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Title agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Bill agreed to.

Bill reported.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1976-77—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE L27a, TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote L27a, in the amount of $5,000,000. of the Treasury Board, in respect of Loto Canada, in Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to these supplementary estimates, vote L27a. This estimate deals with the establishment of Loto Canada. It sets out certain conditions for its operation. We in our party agree with the lottery and its purpose, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), when he appeared before the committee, gave an assurance that the last draw in this particular lottery, based on the current formula as prescribed in the bill, would be December, 1979, and that the annual reports would be referred to the committee each year. To a large extent this satisfies our reservations about Loto Canada. However, our general support for the substance does not alleviate our profound disquiet over the method of its presentation in this House.

● (2220)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We contend that this is far more than an estimate; it is in fact a legislative measure. Instead of a description, we have a detailed, substantive proposition to which the House is asked to give its approval. This is a measure with all the elements of a bill; it establishes government control over the corporation, and sets out its purposes and structure as well as its finances.

The President of the Treasury Board has stated that the measure is presented in this way so that the House can express its opinion. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point. We are asked to express our opinion on a number of points forming part of a complex scheme, yet the actual vote is the only thing before us that can be amended. The minister is trying to get agreement to the detail of the scheme from the House without giving the House the corresponding right to examine that detail and to propose amendments which may be necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: To support our contention that this matter is not properly before the House, I would like to refer to three rulings. The first was made on March 10, 1971. On that occasion Mr. Speaker found that three items in Supplementary Estimates (C) for 1970-71 were clearly legislative and improperly included in those supplementaries. I will quote from the part of the ruling that discussed dollar items in relation to the opportunity for debate in the House under Standing Order 58, because it has been suggested by the government House leader that Loto Canada could be subject to a debate and vote in the House on the initiative of the opposition on an allotted day. Mr. Speaker said:

> Those members suggest that there is now no real opportunity for the consideration of such items by the House itself. That, of course, is not entirely correct since the new Standing Orders do provide for such an opportunity, albeit restricted, under the terms of Standing Order 58. Clearly the Standing Orders do provide the machinery for the consideration by the House itself of specific items in the estimates to which the opposition might take exception. However, this opportunity is undoubtedly limited and depends very much on the number of allotted supply days which might still be available by virtue of Standing Order 58. In other words, under the old rules there was unlimited time to consider supplementary estimates, including items intended to amend statutes. Under the new rules there may be only a limited time to consider supplementary estimates.

That, indeed, is the relevant point. In the case before us only two such days were left when the estimate was reported back to this House. Mr. Speaker went on to say:

> Is the difference between the two situations so substantial that the past practice of allowing statutory dollar items in the supplementary estimate should now be disallowed? Should the very limited time allotted by Standing Order 58 be restricted to the consideration of what is strictly supply? There is much to be said to support an affirmative answer to these questions.

Then Mr. Speaker went on to endorse that reasoning, and specifically establish the precedent that legislative items should come in as bills and not as supplementary estimates.

The same reasoning applied on December 10, 1973, when supplementary estimate dollar items, back in the House for final approval, were declared out of order. In confirming the previous ruling Mr. Speaker stated:

> —the dollar legislative item is just that—it is legislation by way of a dollar item in the estimates and I think it is not a practice which ought to be condoned and supported by the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Later on Mr. Speaker stated further:

> I suggest that if such justification were put forward, it would have to be based on an emergency rather than on principle. The Chair has to make a ruling on principle, and on this basis I would have to say that these three specific items are not properly before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, Vote L27a in Supplementary Estimates (A) is a slightly different dollar item in that the dollar actually is used in a purchase, but this purchase is a subterfuge to secure ipso facto House approval for the creation of a corporation. This approval would normally be sought through legislation.

The final ruling to which I would like to refer is March 26, 1974. On this occasion Mr. Speaker rejected the argument that the provision of money for the Food Prices Review Board was legislative in nature. I quote part of that ruling because it puts succinctly what must be proven in this particular case. Mr. Speaker stated:

> I agree with him that Parliament cannot legislate by estimates, but on looking at this particular item I do not see what act it claims to amend or in what way it seeks to establish a legislative principle, or to legislate, to put it simply.

What I am contending is not that the estimate amends a bill other than an appropriation act, but that, more serious still, it asks the House to approve in detail, in a legislative fashion, the establishemnt of a company, its purposes and the benefits of some of its staff. In other words, it simply legislates.

When an estimate goes so far as not only to say what the money is allocated for, but how the proceeds of the corporation it is being lent to will be divided up, and what the financial position of civil servants will be, we have a detailed enactment, not a description. Either this is a legislative enactment or all the other estimates before us tonight have been inadequately described.

It has been contended that most of the things done here can be done by Order in Council anyway. These are the words of the President of the Treasury Board. That may be, although I do not believe that generalization applies to the last clause concerning public servants. This still does not mean that this form is proper.

The fact that the government has two options does not justify its inventing a third. Things intended to be part of statute law should be introduced as bills, even if their purpose could also be pursued, in whole or in part, by an Order in Council. If this type of estimate legislation stands as a precedent, then the next time it is tried it might take the form of legislative action which could not be done by Order in Council. We will have created a legislative form which offers governments speed as well as immunity from parliamentary scrutiny.

This point is raised. Mr. Speaker, not to throw out the lottery, with the general purposes of which we are in agreement, but to allow us the normal input which would be our right if legislation were before us. If you find that this estimate is not properly before the House I would be willing to consult with the minister and his colleagues, as are other members of our party, as to the form and progress of any bill that the President of the Treasury Board may wish to introduce before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2230)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has given some advance notice of his interest in this subject and his objection on similar grounds to the presentation of this measure in this fashion, I must indicate that I have some difficulty in accepting the precedents relating to one dollar items in the past because they are artificial in both form and substance in that they do not represent legitimate spending estimates. The amount here represents a legitimate spending estimate and is a departure from the one dollar estimate, as stated accurately by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

There is another distinction, that is, that separate and apart from the introduction of this item in the estimates is the legislative authority or licence for the establishment by the federal government of a lottery under the Criminal Code, and therefore again it is not the breaking of new ground to introduce it in the estimates in the legislative sense but rather is the approval by parliament of what is approved in another statute.

I say that, to make sure that hon. members who speak on this important point of order will address themselves to those questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support wholeheartedly the point raised by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and I hope I may be permitted to commend him on the excellent case he has made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have studied the same precedents that the hon. member has quoted, but since he has put them on the record I will not re-quote them. I would simply like to sum up what he said by way of referring to those precedents by saying that he brought them to the correct conclusion, in quoting the words of Mr. Speaker, that the government cannot legislate by estimates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even though Your Honour has raised a point—and I shall try to adjust myself to it—as to whether that is being attempted in the supplementary estimate now before us, I think that that principle is so important that this is where we should start, that it is not open to the government to use the estimates as a means of doing what ought to be done by way of legislation brought in in separate bills with first, second, and third readings. This has become all the more important since we changed our rules and do not have an opportunity on the floor of the House to debate anything that is in a supply bill.

The contention that the government has made that we could raise these matters on an opposition day does not meet the point. It is not the business of the opposition to find ways for the government to get its legislation discussed; it is the responsibility of the government to bring its legislation before parliament so that it can be dealt with in the proper way. The proper way is to have a bill that is debatable on second reading, that goes either to a standing committee or a committee of the whole, and that comes back for report stage and third reading. But when the government can put an item of legislation into a supplementary estimate and send it off to a standing committee, it obviates completely the possibility of that matter being debated on the floor of the House. I join the hon. member for Vegreville in using all the adjectives he wants to use. This is high-handed, and is no way to treat the parliament of Canada.

Before I quote some other items which I want to produce in support of the case we are making from this side, I should like to address myself to the point Your Honour raised, namely, that it is not necessarily appropriate to use citations or to use statements from the Chair which were made in relation to dollar items and apply those words to this supplementary estimate because, after all, it is a genuine request for money, namely, in the amount of $5 million. May I point out that though this estimate is genuine in that it asks for $5 million for a loan—which, incidentally, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) told us in committee Loto Canada could have got from the banks if he had not been wanting to bring the thing before parliament in this way—there is in the wording of this estimate far more legislation than there is in many bills we get before this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This estimate does not establish Loto Canada. The government has already done that under legislation under which it can set up corporations. So it does not establish Loto Canada, but it does lay down some of the conditions which will apply to Loto Canada. If that is not legislation, I draw the attention of the Chair in particular to the last couple of paragraphs of the item, which are preceded by the significant words "to deem" and "to provide," and I suggest that in those paragraphs, which relate to the Government Employees Compensation Act, the Aeronautics Act, and the right of persons employed by Loto Canada to have vacation leave, sick leave, and all the things which go to public servants, this item is legislating to an extent which is greater, I say, than is the case with many bills which are brought before this House.

So the fact that it is $5 million instead of one dollar does not set aside the argument. The items of legislation are just tacked on—and I use that word because of a quotation I shall produce in a moment—to get them through. The $5 million is in itself incidental. In fact the President of the Treasury Board said that he was doing it this way so that at least it could be discussed in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, but I ask Your Honour to read it again, as I know you must have done already several times.

I ask hon. members in the House to read the item L27a, which takes a page and a quarter in the bill which is now before us, and no one can deny the fact that it is a piece of legislation. It does not establish Loto Canada, but it sets out conditions which it will observe, and it amends in effect, legislation such as the Government Employees Compensation Act, the Aeronautics Act, and certain provisions having to do with employment in the public service.

I come back to the pronouncement from the Chair to which Your Honour has agreed, namely, that the government does not have the right to legislate by using the estimates.

I said that there was something else from which I wanted to quote. I add this to the excellent quotations which were given by the hon. member for Vegreville.

I have in my hand a letter which was addressed to me on March 24, 1950, by the then auditor general of Canada, Mr. Watson Sellar. I suggest that that name, to anyone who was around a few years ago or to anyone who knows the history of the public service, stands very high. This is a letter which he wrote in response to a request I made to him, with which he enclosed a copy of a memorandum he presented to a committee of the other place. I suppose I have to expect a few catcalls along the way if I read from something which was brought to light in the other place, but at least it was brought to light by a distinguished public servant, Mr. Watson Sellar. This was a memorandum on estimates and the various issues that arise in dealing with them. There were in it two or three paragraphs, Nos. 8, 9 and 10 under the heading "Vote Texts That Legislate".

● (2240)

If I may abbreviate it, Mr. Speaker, he said in these paragraphs that the practice of legislating by means of items in an appropriation act is a matter of particular constitutional concern. He spoke not only of dollar items but of any items that were legislative in character, any items that had tacked on to them matters that should be brought in by way of bills. In discussing the matter he said at one point:

Legislating by means of an Appropriation Act is a convenience when a need is transitory. Furthermore, it avoids cluttering the statute books with expired legislation. But from the constitutional viewpoint, it is open to the objection that it is, in fact, incomplete legislation . . .

He was addressing himself particularly to the problems facing the Senate because he was giving this memorandum in the Senate. He said later on that if the Senate is sent a supply bill which has in it matters which are legislative, it should ask that those legislative sentences be struck out and put in another bill. Here are his exact words:

If other matters are inserted in the bill or "tacked to it"—

That is the phrase I used in anticipation a while ago.

—these should be struck out and be made into a separate bill or bills.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is exactly what we have here. We have a supplementary item for $5 million. That is money. That is a proper subject for a supplementary estimate. The purpose of that $5 million is to make a loan to Loto Canada so that it can get started.

May I say parenthetically, Mr. Speaker—it does not need to be said because the House knows where I stand, but it should be put on the record—unlike my hon. friend I have no use for this national lottery at all. If this goes forward my colleagues and I shall be voting against it in its entirety. However, that does not deny me the right to argue that it should not be before us as an estimate at all.

Later in this memorandum Mr. Sellar says that a vote text which deals with a matter which normally should be proceeded with by a bill should be handled by a bill.

In light of all that, look again at what is in this supplementary estimate L27a. It is a money item. It is not just a dollar put in by way of subterfuge. It is real money, $5 million to get Loto Canada going, but there has been tacked on, and incidentally the government did not need the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am having considerable difficulty in hearing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I wonder if I might be permitted to hear the conclusion of his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was trying to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has in it something that is legitimate as an estimate, namely, a request for $5 million to lend to Loto Canada. But there has been tacked on to it things that are legislative in character. The government did not need to bring in this bill to create Loto Canada. It has done this by order in council. It did not need to bring in this bill to establish some of the conditions—who will run it, the officers, how the directors will meet and all that, but it has tacked on to this $5 million some conditions about the money that will be raised out of this state lottery. It has tacked onto it items which are in effect legislative in that they amend some of the other statutes of Canada.

I submit that if the government can get away with this, it can do almost everything by including a matter in the supplementary estimates, and then shipping it off to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. The government tacks onto an item in the estimates other items of a legislative character and, in the process, completely avoids debate on the matter on the floor of the House of Commons.

We have argued in the past about the impropriety of dollar items in the estimates. I can remember the father of the present hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) telling us that supply bills were legislation; so, why were we kicking about dollar items? He had a bit of a case then, because supply bills were debated on the floor of the House. Now they are not so debated. By using the device of tacking legislative items on to an estimate, the government can avoid debate on the floor of the House.

Earlier in this parliament Your Honour had to rule out of order clause 5 of an appropriation bill precisely because under the new rules there was no opportunity to debate something which was in clause 5 and which had not been included in the notice.

An hon. Member: You have had all day to debate legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend opposite still thinks there is merit to the government argument that we can use an opposition day to discuss their legislation.

Mr. Broadbent: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This side is not the government; the hon. member's side is. His side is responsible for bringing its legislation before parliament in the proper way. I submit, along with the hon. member for Vegreville, that this is not the case with this supplementary estimate.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I say I am thoroughly and totally opposed to the federal government's using its right that was put in the Criminal Code—although some of us voted against it—to hold state lotteries. We are opposed to this national lottery, although that is a separate issue on which we can express ourselves when this estimate comes to a vote. I contend tonight that the government does not have the right to legislate by using the estimates. In my submission Your Honour should find that the item now before the House is out of order.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, commenting on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) you rightly pointed out that we are not dealing with a dollar item. We are dealing with the request for a loan of $5 million to be put at the disposal of Loto Canada for working capital. You drew attention to what you think are the important issues, namely, whether the item which is in the estimates and the bill now before the House are a proper use of the supply procedure for legislative purposes. This was the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I draw attention to the fact that many programs are approved, not by separate statute, but by items in the estimates. Indeed, if we look at the main estimates which have just been approved, and the bill based on them which has just been approved by this House, we shall see several items of that character. For example, I draw attention to Vote L25, of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, concerning the General Adjustment Assistance Program. That has its legislative foundation in this item in the estimates. No other legislation is required. Also, consider Vote L15 coming under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion concerning community and industrial infrastructure development. This item in the estimates forms the foundation of this program; no other legislative authority is required.

I also refer Your Honour in these particular estimates which have just been approved by the House to Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Vote L15, dealing with the Indian housing assistance program. These are established as an item in the estimates as approved and carried forward in the appropriation bill. All these give the government authority for programs for which there is not other specific legislative sanction.

It may be that there can be a preference on the part of the government, or of the opposition, as to whether any particular program should be expressed in the form of a bill or bills brought before the House in the ordinary way, or as an item in the estimates.

● (2250)

The point that is before you, Mr. Speaker, seems to be whether in fact a procedure is being followed which has been approved in the past and which is founded upon sound legislative practice.

The only grounds for objection to the legislative impact of an item in the estimates is when the primary purpose of that item is to amend an existing statute other than the Appropriation Act. The rulings on this are quite clear. The classic ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on March 10, 1967, quite clearly distinguished between items amending other statutes and items whose effects, although clearly legislative, do not amend existing statute law. The key portion reads:

—such proposals, when they are clearly intended to amend existing legislation, should come to the House by way of an amending bill rather than as an item in the supplementary estimates.

In conclusion may I suggest that the creation of Loto Canada is authorized by the Corporations Act and by the Criminal Code. Second, the provision of start-up money to the corporation and the authorization of payments does not amend any existing statute. Finally, and I hope this will be Your Honour's view, there is a strong and irrefutable argument that Vote L27a is entirely in order, and so is the bill based upon it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if we are to adopt in this House the reasoning just put forward by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), especially his last point, then we are to admit the complete abandonment of any reason at all for a bill such as the one we just dealt with a few moments ago, or a bill of this nature. If we are to say that parliament is to approve all these things without customary debate and to use as the basis for it the Criminal Code of Canada, it is a sorry day for the legislative rights and the rights of this parliament.

[Mr. Sharp.]

The other point that he raised was with respect to a number of programs which he cited as precedents. The first program that he cited as a precedent for this happened to be an emergency program which, as I understand it, would perhaps be one of the exceptions under the ruling that was made in 1973. Surely that does not apply here. There does not seem to be any particular emergency about this that could not be satisfied by a bill before parliament which could be dealt with in the normal way.

The second example which he cited in support of this dealt with an established program under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That may be a sound precedent. I do not argue that point. However, it is certainly not a sound precedent for what the government is trying to do here, which is a completely new program.

I think the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) ought to be complimented with respect to the argument he has presented. I suggest he has put the case for a bill, a bill which we are prepared to deal with in a reasonable way. The support given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicates that he, too, is prepared for a bill. I believe there ought to be a presumption, in any ruling Your Honour makes, against allowing such large sums of money to be passed through parliament so quickly without the usual trappings which are designed to permit the examination of programs of this nature.

I can quite appreciate the urgency of the matter as seen by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), but to say that this is an emergency, or to argue that this is an established program, or to use the Criminal Code as the basis for producing what really amounts to a brand new program by way of a supplementary estimate, is not an acceptable argument and I believe the view put forward by the hon. member for Vegreville ought to be upheld by Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is a very important one, and it will come as no surprise to hon. members that the Chair has had an opportunity to anticipate it to some extent. The support given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was carefully noted; it conformed to many of the pronouncements and precedents which have been cited, as well as to others which have been referred to in the research done up to this point.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has presented a portion of the opposite case. I note that his parliamentary secretary and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Francis) were also anxious to get into the debate, but I did not find it necessary to hear them at this time.

There seem to be two questions to be decided. The first is whether the method which has been followed in bringing before the House a matter which involves not only dollars and cents but a question of principle is a desirable one. If we do adhere to the theory that a vote on second reading is a vote for or against the principle of a bill, then certainly it would have been preferable for such a matter as this, which involves not only money but a question of principle, to have been brought before the House in the form of a bill in order to allow hon. members to address themselves at one and the same time to the question of whether or not money should be voted to set up a lottery, and, further, to whether or not in principle the federal government should be involved in a scheme of this sort at the present time. However, that involves the question of the desirability of such a course being followed. The arguments of the three hon. members to my left who have contributed to the discussion made a strong case in this regard.

Nevertheless, what I have to decide is not whether it is a desirable course, but whether it is a legal course in terms of our procedures, in other words, whether it is permissible. It is not proper to compare it with a one-dollar item in the estimates because these are technical in every sense of the word. Neither is it proper to attempt to compare this particular case with cases which have been argued rather ably in the past and which led to difficulty with respect to a supply bill because it contained a borrowing clause.

I say this because the borrowing clause problem surfaced only at the time the supply bill was presented. This item is fundamentally different inasmuch as it was tabled as an estimate a month ago and is therefore substantially different from the principle involved in a borrowing clause. In a situation such as this, I have to conclude that where legislative authority exists separate from the item in the estimates, and where that authority permits the establishment of the kind of corporation which is envisaged here, and indeed both the references to the Criminal Code and to the Corporations Act are supported and do in fact provide that authority, then what is happening is that the government is not coming to parliament for legislative authority to do something, but in fact possesses the legislative authority and is coming to parliament for the money to fund it.

● (2300)

Again I say the desirability of this course is open to severe question, and it would certainly be hoped that where a question of principle is involved in an urgent situation, such as that which has given rise to this course and this particular situation, it would be considered an extremely singular situation, and will not be repeated in the future.

However, I do have to find and rule that in fact the legislative authority exists separate and independent from the estimates, and therefore what is sought in the estimates, the item before the House, is the money to support that legislative action which exists independent from it. In these circumstances I have to conclude that there is no legal bar to proceeding in that fashion.

The question is therefore on the motion of Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Sharp:

Estimates

That Vote L27a, in the amount of $5 million of the Treasury Board, in respect of Loto Canada, in Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might ask hon. members whether, the attendance being what it is in the circumstances, and due to the lateness of the hour, hon. members would be prepared to dispense with the ringing of the bells, or perhaps agree to a short five-minute bell. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien), which was agreed to on the following division:

● (2310)

(Division No. 141)

YEAS
Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Basford
Beatty
Beaudoin
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blouin
Boulanger
Brisco
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cadieu
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Clermont
Coates
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Darling
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dick
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Elzinga
Epp
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fraser
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Grafftey
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave

Messrs.

Harquail
Hees
Herbert
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Hopkins
Hurlburt
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jones
Joyal
Kaplan
Kempling
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lee
Lefebvre
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
Maine
Malone
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Marshall
Martin
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McIsaac
McKinley
McKinnon
McRae
Milne
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Oberle
O'Connell
Olivier
O'Sullivan
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Ritchie
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rondeau
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Rynard
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Schellenberger
Sharp
Skoreyko
Smith (Churchill)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Tessier
Towers
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Wenman
Wise
Yanakis
Yewchuk
Young—190

NAYS

Messrs.

Benjamin
Blackburn
Broadbent
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Firth
Gilbert
Hogan
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Leggatt
Nystrom
Orlikow
Peters
Rodriguez
Saltsman
Symes—15

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-94, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1977 be read the first time and be printed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-94, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1977, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to on division.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Bill reported.

● (2320)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien thereupon moved that Bill C-94, for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1977, be now read a third time and do pass.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

[Translation]

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed on division.

Mr. Speaker: It being after 10 o'clock, the House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 11.23 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 23, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH GUIDELINES FOR EMPLOYEES OF CROWN AGENCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the revelation yesterday by the Minister of Finance that there are still no conflict of interest guidelines applying to employees of Crown corporations and similar agencies in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the House support the immediate establishment and implementation of guidelines with regard to employees of Crown corporations and similar agencies, and that the standard be similar to that set for public servants on December 18, 1973 by order in council, and that in the case of quasi judicial bodies the standards be at least equal to those applying to our judiciary.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TELEVISION COVERAGE OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS ON BILL C-84—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, due to the importance of the discussion on Bill C-84 in committee, I move under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House instruct the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to allow live radio and television coverage of the committee hearings on Bill C-84.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED REVISION OF DAIRY POLICY IN CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL MARKETING BOARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Now that the full impact of this government's new dairy policy has been experienced by producers and observation reveals individual producer hold-backs in sufficient amounts and numbers as to result in extreme financial losses and bankruptcies within the industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

● (1410)

That this House instruct the Minister of Agriculture, in consultation with the various provincial marketing boards, to revise immediately the present dairy policy, having special regard for the removal of at least a portion of the penalty clause and the return of a percentage of the resultant holdback and a revision of the interprovincial subsidy quotas.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTION BILL C-242 BE PUT FORWARD AS GOVERNMENT MEASURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the rapid approach of the summer recess I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That Bill C-242, which deals with smokers in transit, be put forward as a government bill in order to facilitate its passage through this House before the House breaks for the summer recess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, could only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: The Liberals said no.

Oral Questions

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH AND ENFORCE NATIONAL STANDARDS FOR SO_2 EMISSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the continual exceeding of provincial limits on the emission of SO 2 by the Great Canadian Oil Sands Company at the Alberta tar sands site. Since 1974, according to a report by STOP enclosed in a letter to the attorney general of Alberta from that organization, Great Canadian Oil Sands has exceeded the provincial SO 2 limits 258 times.

In view of the fact that this evidence corroborates the view of many that the province of Alberta is unable or unwilling to enforce its standards on GCOS, and in view of the fact that such emissions are a threat to the environment and health of tens of thousands of people living in the vicinity I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the federal government take action immediately under the Clean Air Act to establish and enforce national standards of SO 2 emissions, which are long overdue in any case, and to enforce those standards in the tar sands operations.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be some indication that this motion has less than unanimous consent.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM AUSTRALIA

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the oral question period, may I take this opportunity to call to the attention of all hon. members the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished delegation, under the auspices of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, from Australia, headed by their distinguished Minister of Defence, the Hon. D. J. Killen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INSPECTION STAFF OF INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The question arises out of the recent remarks of the Prime Minister that rather than the industrial countries giving up their right to sell nuclear power to whoever they wish, the world should not be afraid to live dangerously. In the light of the fact that it seems increasingly unlikely that mankind will be able to control the political chain reaction of proliferation, which now threatens to become critical, will the Prime Minister take steps to achieve an increase in the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards capability, which at present has a staff of only 40 professionals to inspect over 400 nuclear installations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the question on behalf of the Prime Minister, just a short time ago I had a long discussion with the officers of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, and one of the questions I put to them quite forcibly was the very question the hon. member raised, namely, whether they had at their disposal adequate staff and inspection services to carry out their responsibilities. The answer from the officials was that they had adequate staff and adequate resources, and if the need for future additional resources should arise, they will make the appropriate request. That is the answer to that question.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made a speech to the OECD this week in which he chastized the industrial nations for not doing more in the cause of peace and development in the world. In the light of that speech and the answer he has just given, will the Canadian government indicate to IAEA that Canada is willing if necessary to increase contributions to the agency, with the proviso that the extra resources are to be used to expand the safeguards division?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first part of the question, my comments with respect to industrial nations were to suggest that in the continuing dialogue that is going on in Paris, it would be dangerous if the industrialized countries engaged in foot-dragging in the vital months that lie ahead. During my discussions with officials of the International Atomic Energy Agency, I indicated to them that Canada was prepared to increase its financial commitment to the agency and I am sure that we would consider, if in their judgment additional resources were required for inspection services, doing precisely the same in that field.

* * *

ENERGY

NUCLEAR POWER—PROPOSED TRANSFER OF ACTIVITIES FROM PROMOTION TO SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the government indicate to the governing board of the IAEA that it is this country's view, as expressed by such people as Maurice Strong, the chairman of Petro-Canada as well as many distinguished Canadians who met during the Habitat conference, in Vancouver that the promotion of nuclear power is inconsistent with its proper regulation and that resources presently used in promotion should be redeployed to safeguards activities?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already referred to his discussions with IAEA and I think has made it very clear to the hon. member what the position of Canada is, as the Prime Minister also indicated in a public statement at the Habitat conference.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAKISTAN—ALLEGED REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL NUCLEAR ASSISTANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He says the international agency has sufficient capability for inspection. It would be interesting if he would ascertain how many inspections have actually been carried out in the last three years at the CANDU plant outside Karachi. My question in relation to Pakistan is simply this: the minister has had on his desk for two months a request from Pakistan for added nuclear assistance. Has the government at long last come to a decision in respect of that request, and if so, what is it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has things mixed up. The situation is that Canada has requested a renegotiation with Pakistan of the present safeguards arrangements with a view to upgrading them. This is presently what is before the government of Pakistan and before the government of Canada. They have not requested additional assistance above what is presently provided.

* * *

ENERGY

RENEGOTIATION OF CONTRACT WITH ARGENTINA FOR NUCLEAR REACTOR—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Again the minister has been evading questions with regard to AECL cost of the Argentinian project by saying for six months at least that this has been under renegotiation. How long can the renegotiations go on, and has the government any idea what that is going to cost Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a precise time frame. Quite clearly it is in Canada's interest to make the best deal it possibly can. That is what Canadian negotiators are presently in the process of doing.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INCARCERATION OF GEORGES FERNANDES—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS FOR RELEASE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of Canada's association with the Republic of India in the Commonwealth and the long friendship between the two countries both of which are or were united by respect for democratic freedom, will the minister express to Mrs. Gandhi, the Prime Minister of India or the appropriate representative of the government there, regret that one Georges Fernandes, a leading democratic socialist and trade union leader has been arrested and imprisoned for political reasons. This action is calculated to destroy democratic opposition in that country. Will the minister suggest that Mr. Fernandes should be released?

● (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, any effort on the part of Canada to suggest to Indian authorities how they should administer the internal affairs of their country would very likely be more counterproductive than helpful in the present situation. The hon. member's representations, I am sure, speak for themselves.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate sincerely what the minister is saying, but suggest that when fundamental freedoms are at stake and many people throughout the world are expressing their regret, Canada might join in.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION OF RURAL HOUSING—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON ELIGIBLE REGIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

A few weeks ago the minister sent a communiqué to hon. members in which he announced a support program for the rehabilitation of rural housing. As far as Quebec is concerned, could the minister tell the House whether a special agreement has been reached between his department and a department of the province on the regions to be designated as eligible under this program?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, agreement has been reached with the Quebec Housing Corporation but I am not quite certain at the moment if the agreement has been signed. I shall be glad to check. The designated areas have been agreed upon with the province.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR TABLING COPY OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON RURAL HOUSING

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Given his affirmative answer, could the minister table a document enabling hon. members to read the agreement which was signed with the province of Quebec and could he also tell us what amount of money is made available for the implementation of this program?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to supply that information.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSAL TO ACCEPT FIVE PER CENT CEILING ON GROWTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of his pending visit to Puerto Rico, to attend a meeting of the heads of state of certain states, and in view of the OECD tentative understanding that member countries should accept a 5 per cent per annum ceiling on growth for the balance of this decade, would the Prime Minister indicate what position he intends to take on this important subject in Puerto Rico, bearing in mind that we have much higher unemployment in Canada than exists in most OECD countries and that, if we are not permitted to grow at a faster than 5 per cent growth rate, there is little likelihood of our being able to materially lower our jobless level in the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will attempt to grow at the optimum rate, from the Canadian point of view, regardless of what was said in any other place.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister to do with his attendance in Puerto Rico? As Canada's population and work force is growing at a faster rate than is the case in most OECD countries, does the Prime Minister intend, in Puerto Rico, to make it clear that we need a higher than 5 per cent per annum growth rate to even keep level with other countries on a per capita basis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that is precisely the question the Prime Minister just answered.

[Mr. Danson.]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF UNITED STATES NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCE ON EFFECT OF AEROSOL SPRAY ON OZONE—SUGGESTION MINISTER CORRECT HIS ANSWER

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of the Environment? Yesterday I asked the hon. gentleman if he would care to correct the misleading impression he left earlier concerning the U.S. Academy of Science, when he said, and I quote:

[Translation]

. . . made a study and came to the conclusion that nothing proved that the use of aerosol sprays could cause damages . . .

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That's the result of some weeks of Berlitz.

Mr. Jarvis: Since the minister did not take advantage of the opportunity I gave him yesterday to correct the misleading impression he left with the House on Monday concerning the state of scientific opinion with regard to the destruction of the atmosphere ozone layer, will he now admit that his original statement regarding the conclusions of the academy was in error, and will he take the opportunity to correct the impression he left on Monday?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, what I said in substance is absolutely true. I have the confirmation of the department. It has not been proved scientifically that the atmosphere's ozone layer has now so deteriorated that it puts people's lives in danger.

Now, a study was made by the U.S. Academy of Science, the report of which has not been published yet. I simply read the information published in Canadian and American newspapers, which confirms the opinion of my department that nothing shows right now that we are in danger, but that this could eventually happen if we do not take whatever action is necessary to prevent an increase in atmospheric pollution.

[English]

SOURCE OF REPORT TO MINISTER ON EFFECT OF AEROSOL SPRAY ON OZONE

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): When the minister referred yesterday to a report that he had received from his department, was he referring to a report from the National Academy of Science or was it an interdepartmental report? If it was the latter, can he indicate the source of that report leading to the conclusion he has just drawn? What is the source of that report and who is its author?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a communication I received from my department. People who work on that kind of pollution, scientists, tell me that an interdepartmental committee composed of representatives of the Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport, the National Research Council and also some universities, are currently studying that important question. But right now I repeat, that nothing shows that there is an immediate danger for people's lives, but that is an extremely serious problem which is being looked at very closely by all scientists.

* * *

[English]

HOUSING

PROGRAM FOR NATIVES IN URBAN CENTRES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It is with regard to the decision by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to cut off the support program to native housing groups in the larger centres such as Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary. In light of the fact that the minister, recognizing the special problems associated with the increasing migration of native people to the cities, has repeatedly promised that a native housing policy for the cities would be established, can he explain why this latest step has not been taken and what remedial action is being proposed before the end of this month?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there certainly have not been any programs cut off or concluded. There are certain programs which are desired by native people in the urban areas that are not possible under present legislation. We are working very closely with them. I recognize, as does the hon. member, the particular nature and growing urgency of the problem of urban native people. I repeat, no programs have been cut off and we are working with them. I was to meet with a group yesterday which unfortunately could not get here because of some difficulty with aircraft. We are continuing on that and indeed emphasizing those programs that are at work now as well as trying to expand upon them. There are some programs that cannot work at the present time, because of provisions relating to ownership as opposed to rental. Unfortunately, I cannot give an answer on it before the end of this month, as much as I would like to.

Mr. Oberle: In the case of Winnipeg in particular, there will be a massive layoff of people who have seasonally and assiduously managed to succumb to their own desperate situation. In view of the fact the minister has promised for three years that there would be a special policy that would address itself to the problems of native housing, particularly in the cities, will the minister, in spite of the air strike, establish a moratorium over the policy of CMHC that has come to light in the past few days?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, no final policy came to light in the past few days. There is a committee that has been working on this, but no final decisions have been made on that at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL TO FOUR COUNTRIES ON MEMBERS' PASSPORTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister explain to the House under what authority restrictions were placed on passports of members of this House dated June 3, 1976, for four countries. What were the circumstances leading up to those restrictions being imposed? I ask this with particular regard to Taiwan where there is no civil strife, contrary to the three other countries in which civil strife may be anticipated. I am referring to restrictions on travel to North Korea, Namibia, Rhodesia and Taiwan. In particular, would the minister explain why members of this House are forbidden, according to their passports, from travelling to Taiwan?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would like to examine the question and reply to the hon. member, probably tomorrow.

An hon. Member: No way; it is a holiday.

Mr. Wagner: St. Jean Baptiste Day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the Secretary of State inquire into the practice whereby personnel in the passport section call in the passports of members who are taking part in parliamentary delegations under the pretext of endorsing their passports accordingly, and then enter restrictions in the passports without giving prior notice?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will do that.

CANADIAN POSITION AT OECD CONFERENCE CONCERNING RATE OF GROWTH OF THE ECONOMY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from an OECD report which suggests there is to be a lower rate of growth and lower employment. According to a news item from Paris in this morning's paper, the Canadian delegation agreed with the thrust of the final OECD communiqué, noting that it was consistent with present government policy in Ottawa. I ask the Secretary of State to tell us what it was that our delegation agreed to, and in what way our position at the OECD can be reconciled with the statement just made by the Prime Minister that we were pursuing our own course at the conference.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not seen the final communiqué but I do know that one of the questions before the OECD was the attitude of the industrialized countries toward future growth, the context within which future growth should be undertaken and the extent to which the policies of the industrialized countries could be harmonized. As I understand it, the thrust of the final proposal by the Secretary General was that the industrialized countries ought to support economic growth in the future but not to the extent that this would bring about unacceptable levels of inflation which would obviously result thereafter in greater unemployment and perhaps a further recession. I believe the position has to be understood against the background of a fear of resurgence of inflation in all industrialized countries if growth is permitted to go beyond reasonable bounds.

* * *

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY BUDGET REFLECTS COMMITMENT TO LOWER RATE OF GROWTH

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): I should like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance and ask him to what extent his May budget was influenced by this agreement Canada has made with the OECD countries and whether his budget does reflect that commitment to lower growth and less concern about unemployment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): It was certainly not influenced by an OECD agreement which was reached about three weeks afterwards. Nevertheless, the position stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to be a reasonable one and one which, I should have thought, would have commended itself to the hon. member. While we should be seeking growth to meet our employment requirements in Canada we would be the losers if we allowed it at the expense of unrestrained inflation. To that extent, the position stated by my colleague is the position taken in the budget.

PROVISIONS RELATING TO CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES AND LEASING—EFFECT ON CANADIAN FILM INDUSTRY

Mr. John Roberts (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance—it is one of great concern to film-makers in Canada. In the budget of May 25, the hon. gentleman announced a new rule against tax sheltering related to capital cost allowances and leasing; it is feared that this will militate against the production of Canadian films. May I ask whether it is intended that the rule apply to films produced in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Subject to confirmation I would say it really applies to movable equipment only in Canada, that is to say, to chattels rather than to the films themselves. But I would have to confirm this through closer examination.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF TABLING REPORT ON RAILWAY PENSIONS

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. When will the long-awaited report on railway pensions be tabled, and in any event, when will steps be taken to alleviate the distress of railway pensioners covered by inadequate pension plans?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is asking me when a report will be tabled. I will inquire.

An hon. Member: You have been doing that for two years.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR PRIVATE PILOTS' AND AIRCRAFT LICENCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): My question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Many hon. members have received complaints because of the heavy backlog in the processing of applications for licences for private aircraft and pilots dealt with by the Toronto District office. Can the minister offer us any hope that there might be a "catch-up" operation in the processing of these applications so that people wanting these licences will not have to wait two months or more as is now the case?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I cannot extend a great deal of hope at the present time. The labour dispute is not yet settled in a final way and there is a danger of falling further behind, let alone being able to provide for a catch-up operation. Nevertheless, some steps are being taken to deal with the situation.

RENEWAL OF PILOT'S LICENCES IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE STRIKE OF AIRCRAFT SAFETY INSPECTORS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): In the light of the planned strike by the aircraft safety inspectors group, is the minister proposing any extension whatsoever of expired pilots' licences once the strike commences and, if so, for how long? Further, will he be conducting proper medical examinations before any of these licences are renewed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The question is clearly hypothetical but I would refer the hon. member to our past practice.

* * *

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—METHOD OF MAINTAINING BENEFIT OF CROW RATE FOR RAPESEED

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It arises from the many statements made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in this House as well as in Western Canada about discrepancies between freight rates for rapeseed, rapeseed products, feed grains and beef. I refer in particular to one occasion upon which the minister, in answer to a question, said: "I would fight to try to preserve the benefit of the Crow rate in some other way . . . " Would the minister tell us what he meant by "some other way"?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will send the hon. member a copy of the speech I made in Edmonton a year and a half ago.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OIL SPILL IN THOUSAND ISLANDS AREA OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT IN CLEAN-UP

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and it has to do with the recent oil spill in the Thousand Islands area of the St. Lawrence River system. Is the federal government involved in any way in the clean-up operations and, if so, to what extent? Further, is there any danger to the Canadian side of the river?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, some 4,000 barrels of crude oil were spilled in the area of the Thousand Islands, on the American side. There is a real danger that the crude could reach Canadian shores between Brockville and Kingston. Naturally, that will depend on both currents and winds. I know that at the present time violent winds are blowing. The United States have recognized that the spill is their responsibility, they are taking steps to prevent the crude from reaching the Canadian side. But we have no assurance that it will not, and we are working with them to reduce damages to a minimum.

[English]

Mr. Murta: My supplementary is, really, the first part of my question. If that is the case, could the minister bring us up to date as to exactly what the federal government is doing to ensure that in the event the oil does move into the Kingston area the authorities will be prepared to deal with it?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are working in co-operation with the American authorities. If at some point the Americans cannot contain the spill alone, there is no doubt that the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment will help them directly.

* * *

LOTO CANADA

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ADMINISTRATION NOT MODELLED ON LOTO QUEBEC

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the revelations made in the last few days concerning Loto Quebec, namely that influence and extortion tactics were resorted to, can the Prime Minister assure the House that Loto Canada will not be modelled on Loto Quebec and that it will not call on the concessionaires and distributors of the provincial lottery?

[English]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would be glad to bring that question to the attention of the minister. He will be in a position to answer it when he returns to the House.

● (1440)

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING TICKET CONCESSIONS TO NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): I also want to put a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister consider the possibility of granting the Loto Canada concessions to non-profit associations that are above suspicion such as those of the veterans, handicapped, blind and other worthy groups?

[English]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will also bring that question to the minister's attention.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EXTENSION OF COVERAGE TO ISOLATED AREAS—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who is reponsible for the CBC. In view of the concern expressed by his colleague the Minister of Communications in a speech at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea over the extension of communication services to the north and isolated areas, would the minister indicate what progress is being made with the accelerated coverage program that the CBC has now had in effect for two or three years? No action, or it appears that no action, has been taken to extend T.V. coverage to remote areas that have yet to receive coverage.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not have the detailed information with me but I will be pleased to provide the hon. member with details of the accelerated coverage plan for the province of Newfoundland.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY OF LEBANESE BEING DECLARED REFUGEES—NUMBER IN CANADA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. First of all, may I welcome the statement that he made regarding the relocation of Lebanese refugees in Canada. May I ask the minister whether these applicants have been declared refugees by the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, and can the minister give any indication how many people will be involved under the program that he has announced?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the people in question have not been declared refugees by the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, and indeed we are not declaring them refugees either. Faced with the situation of continuing strife in Lebanon, we have made the decision to proceed to offer them the opportunity to seek landed immigrant status through order in council. To the best of our information there are between 1,000 and 1,100 such Lebanese individuals here in Canada now, and of course this will apply to those who have been in Canada as of, I believe, last Monday.

SECURITY CHECKS ON LEBANESE ENTERING CANADA—POSSIBLE USE OF POINTS SYSTEM TO DETERMINE ELIGIBILITY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether these applicants will have to qualify under Canada's immigration points system, but more importantly are proper security checks being completed at the present time in order to avoid the unfortunate situation that reflected negatively on the Vietnamese resettlement program, which was something that placed in jeopardy the whole question of Canada being a receiving country for international refugees?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, the applicants would be subject to the normal background and medical checks. As to the criteria by which they will be judged, these will not be exactly in accordance with the points system. The other requirement is some assessment that they will be able to adapt successfully to Canadian life, hopefully with the assistance of the Lebanese community.

With regard to the other part of the hon. member's comment contained in his question, I think there were only one or two incidents that occurred in the Vietnamese movement or any other refugee movement. I would defy anybody, faced with the emergency measures demanded by the sad state of affairs that cause refugees to apply for special consideration, to avoid an issue such as that, but I do not think that it should be over-emphasized.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WHICH BOARD BASED DECISION TO ROLL BACK SALARIES OF REHABILITATION WORKERS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the recent rollback of the salaries of the pharmacy, physical and mental rehabilitation unit employees who fall under part III of the New Brunswick labour relations act, would it be possible to obtain a copy of the case worker's report on which the Anti-Inflation Board based its rollback decision, and if not, why not, keeping in mind that allegations of inaccuracy have been forthcoming?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have pursued with the Anti-Inflation Board the questions posed to me by the hon. member in this regard, and I am advised by the board that due to the provisions of section 14(1) of the Anti-Inflation Act the documents would not be available because they are confidential. I therefore regret that the answer would have to be in the negative.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

INQUIRY IF DEPARTMENT RESPONSIBLE FOR DESIGNATION OF ELIGIBLE ZONES FOR REHABILITATION OF RURAL HOUSING

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

We know that the minister consults the provinces to set up the designated zones eligible for the RRAP program. Can the minister tell the House whether his department is responsible for the designation of those zones and on which criteria his department relies to determine if a municipal area may be eligible for this program?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I gather the hon. member is referring to the rehabilitation program which replaced the urban renewal program. The first criterion is that the residential rehabilitation and assistance program applies with priority to those areas previously urban renewal areas but which are no longer so designated, having been replaced by this more effective approach. The second priority would be neighbourhood improvement areas and the basic criterion is that area which is most in need, which has the lowest income and lowest standard of housing which has to be revitalized. The province usually selects the areas; final selection is subject to CMHC approval. There is a somewhat different and special situation in the city of Montreal where a special arrangement has been made in two areas in the east part of the city; but other than that there are 12 such designated areas throughout the province of Quebec.

* * *

EDUCATION

INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE OF INVITATION TO CONFERENCE BY PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Have the provincial ministers of education accepted an invitation to meet with the minister on July 7, and have they asked him to clarify exactly what it is he wants to talk to them about?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I understand it was discussed at the meeting in Manitoba last weekend. I plan to get in touch with the chairman of the council of ministers, Mr. Bennett Campbell, the minister of education for Prince Edward Island. I tried to get him this morning but he was occupied; I hope to speak to him later in the day and to be in a position to give a more complete response to this question next week.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION OF HOUSING—INQUIRY IF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT APPROVAL IS NECESSARY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

I would like to know if a municipality, to be eligible for grants under the RRAP program, must necessarily get the approval of the provincial government?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it does.

* * *

TRANSPORT

NUMBER OF DREDGING CONTRACTS LET AND AGENCY RESPONSIBLE FOR SUPERVISION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the House what has been done regarding bidding procedures in dredging contracts, have any contracts been let and who is supervising these contracts?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some contracts have been considered. This question, of course, in the broad area of government, would have to relate to the Minister of Public Works as well as myself. If the hon. member would refer to a specific contract I would be glad to try to deal with it.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, may I direct the same question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister advise the House what is being done so far as dredging contracts are concerned? Is he supervising these contracts?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, dredging contracts are the responsibility of the department both with regard to letting and supervision. The department enters into the contract. There is, however, under the chairmanship of the Department of Public Works a committee that monitors not only the tenders but the contracts themselves and their execution.

DREDGING OF TURNING BASIN AT CHURCHILL—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT DELAY OF SHIPPING

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. I understand that the dredging program in the turning basin at Churchill is seriously behind schedule. Would the minister take immediate action to have the situation corrected so that this year's shipping season will not be further hampered or restricted?

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been some earlier problems with regard to the dredging program. As much action as is possible has been taken to put that right. As the hon. member knows we are looking forward to a record movement of grain through Churchill this year.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INADEQUACIES FOUND IN RAIL SERVICE BY COMMISSION WILL BE RECTIFIED

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the provisions of the Railway Act and specifically section 262 which requires the railway to provide adequate and suitable accommodation for traffic at all places served by it, and in view of the fact that the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission is presently holding hearings in Saskatchewan to determine the adequacy of service to a number of centres in Saskatchewan by the Canadian Pacific Railway, will the minister assure concerned residents in Saskatchewan that where the committee finds the service inadequate the government will undertake to make sure that the provisions of Section 262 will be complied with by the railway.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the very reason the committee is there is to determine adequacy and to take the appropriate action. The committee will do that and the commission has the power.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF PRINCIPLE OF DIPLOMATIC IMMUNITY IN RELATION TO NUCLEAR REACTORS TO GUARD AGAINST DIVERSION OF PLUTONIUM

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is supplementary to the other questions asked on the issue of the export of the CANDU reactor. Would the minister advise whether Canada has ever taken a position in terms of the nuclear exporting powers that she would be willing to grant diplomatic immunity in terms of its own requirements within the country and outside, so that we can enter into the principle of extraterritoriality in protecting reactors that we sell abroad so that there is some protection against diversion of plutonium from those materials. Has that concept been forwarded by the Canadian negotiators at any time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand precisely what is meant by extra-territorial diplomatic immunity and reciprocity in these circumstances. In the normal course Canada relies on the International Atomic Agency to carry out inspection to ensure that materials are not diverted for explosive purposes. There is also a provision for Canadian back-up to this inspection service where required. On the fact of it I do not see any additional evidence arising from the hon. member's suggestion that does not presently exist.

SUGGESTED REASSESSMENT OF POLICY OF EXPORTING NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister will understand the advantages behind diplomatic immunity for embassies around the world and the same advantage would apply. IRDA, a division of the United States Department of Commerce, has now in a very intensive study indicated that there is no telling economic reason for the export of CANDU reactors to third world countries and that the purchases without exception have been made for power and military prestige only. In view of the continuing body of evidence that is flowing in terms of U.S. and world authorities, is the minister now making a reassessment in terms of Canada's position on the export of those reactors and the increasing risk to world peace that is occurring as a result?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no one has ever suggested that it would be appropriate in every developing country to have sited power reactors. In some developing countries it may be possible to secure power requirements from other sources. But certainly in a number of developing countries the evidence seems to be overwhelming in the present circumstances that they must rely upon nuclear sources for present power requirements. It is on that basis, and because of the obligation Canada has assumed under the non-proliferation treaty, that we have undertaken to transfer technology to other parts of the world, especially the developing world. It is really one of the most urgent requirements for certain developing countries.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REASON UNITED STATES COMPANY RECEIVED COPIES OF PRICING AND PROFITS REGULATIONS BEFORE MEMBERS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the recently announced regulations of the Anti-Inflation Board on pricing and profits were made available to the media in time for a news article on Tuesday, June 15 and in view of the fact that the United States office of Eaton-Yal in Cleveland, Ohio, received a copy of the regulations three days later on June 18 and more particularly in view of the fact that the Canadian office of that same company in Ontario was embarrassed and annoyed that they were unable to obtain the same information until three days later, at the same time that the local members of parliament received their copy, I wonder how the minister justifies this order of priority?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will bring that grievance to the attention of the board.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED ELECTRICAL TRANSMISSION LINE FROM QUEBEC TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Since the province of Quebec has long considered putting up a transmission line which would enable it to sell electricity to the United States, could the minister tell us where those negotiations now stand and would he say if the province of Quebec will receive a positive answer.

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe that upon reflection the hon. member would agree that it would be quite improper for me to speculate on the decision that would be rendered by the National Energy Board on this matter.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL TO FOUR COUNTRIES ON MEMBERS' PASSPORTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from an earlier question by the hon. member for Edmonton West. It concerns if it was correctly stated by the hon. member for Edmonton West to be an outrageous interference with the rights of members of parliament to have freedom to go where they will, and the rights of Canadians as a whole under the United Nations charter to have freedom of egress and ingress. Was this order made by Order in Council or is it the consequence of bureaucratic lawlessness?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if that is a question I think the answer to both would be no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister did not know anything about it when he was asked a moment ago. Has he had some information since the question was asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West? If there is an order in Council, will he table it because this is a gross interference with the rights of members of the House of Commons and parliament in general.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Elgin.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND ON IMPORTATION OF BEEF

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture perhaps I might direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister confirm or deny reports to the effect that trade agreements between Canada and the Governments of Australia and New Zealand have been reached with reference to the importation of beef from these two countries?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the question and I will provide the hon. member with the information.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF POISONED MILK IN CHILLIWACK AREA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that a dairy farmer in the Fraser Valley telephoned a radio station and stated that he had just put poison in the milk. In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to ask his parliamentary secretary whether the minister has been advised of this report and whether it is being investigated.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that report was brought to the attention of the Health Protection Branch. I think I can give the hon. member some reassurance. The department is taking the report seriously although it may be a hoax. All milk shipments in Chilliwack have been stopped. Milk will be tested and approved before any will be released. If this is indeed a hoax or a joke it is a pretty expensive joke for the taxpayers.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that we have a group of very distinguished parliamentarians from Australia in our gallery, and in light of the fact that the Canadian cattlemen have lost more money in the last few weeks than ever in the history of this country, would the Prime Minister ask our guests from down under to find another market for their beef and give us a little time to recover.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1500)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF REFERENCES RESPECTING COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS WITH CERTAIN SCHOOL BOARDS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I should like to table copies of references to the administrator, under the Anti-Inflation Act, with respect to collective agreements concerning the Wentworth County Board of Education, the Prescott and Russell County Roman Catholic Separate School Board, and the Sudbury District Roman Catholic Separate School Board.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to table, in both official languages, copies of the order in council appointing the Hon. W. R. Sinclair, of the Court of Appeal in Edmonton, and the Hon. Julien Chouinard, of the Court of Appeal in Quebec City, to a commission to study the safety aspects of bilingual air traffic control in Quebec, and the terms of reference of that commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: General aviation outside the commercial airline field is extremely important in Canada, especially because of our space and because of our income levels, which means that we can take advantage of the means of travel which is fastest and covers that great space of ours. This is true of Canadians who use English, and it is equally true for Canadians who are much more at home or even only at home in the French language, particularly in that great area which is comprised of the northern parts of the province of Quebec. This led us some time ago to look at the question of air traffic control in that area in both languages, and we took some steps in that direction.

I think it is important for me to draw to the attention of the House the fact that what we have done so far is simply extend bilingual air traffic control in visual flight operations to five airports in the province of Quebec and to indicate that within the near future that will be extended to two additional airports in that province. It is important to note that, outside certain radio services in that language, that it is all that has been done, and that all of this has been done now without any argument or disagreement on the part of the air controllers or pilots in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The key consideration in this policy as it has been developed to this point, and as we look forward to the future, is that the current, strict safety standards and practices in aircraft operations in Canada have not, and will not, be lowered or jeopardized. We have indicated some plans which are subject to greater controversy. They are, specifically, plans to examine procedures for bilingual air traffic control in the broad Montreal area, in completing bilingual air traffic control in the province of Quebec both in instrument flight procedures and visual flight procedures. Because of the complexity of our air traffic which the interest in general aviation creates, we had to take the time to develop procedures which were particularly suited to this area, in keeping with the fundamental commitment, we will maintain the safety standards and practices in aircraft operations in Canada of which we have been proud. These will not be lowered or jeopardized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: It is important to note that this matter is under study and examination in terms of the development of procedures, and we have asked for and been given an indication of support from pilots and controllers in the development of these procedures with elaborate simulation equipment which exists here, in the national capital region, and at the Dion site as well. If this succeeds, then we will move to the next step. This was something that was to be done in 1977 and 1978 as we could proceed with it.

In every case it should be emphasized that throughout Canada the pilot of the aircraft will determine the language of use between himself and the air traffic controller. In no case would it be required of any pilot that he become bilingual, certainly not in any case if he was unilingual English, because throughout Canada air traffic control in English would be available to him at all times. What we were hoping to do, and what we are hoping to do, is provide air traffic control in the French language when the pilot is better served by that in the province of Quebec, and perhaps at a later date in the national capital region. No controller will be required to be bilingual except in areas of bilingual air traffic control or, in other words, basically in the province of Quebec.

In order to provide double assurance that safety remains our pre-eminent watchword, we agreed to the appointment of a commission to examine the manner in which our procedures were being developed, and at the end, when those procedures were ready for implementation in our view, to comment upon them and the standard of safety which we have achieved.

As hon. members know, Mr. Keenan, first appointed to such a commission, found it necessary to resign. Today I announced the appointment of a new commission. In view, not only of the distinction of the commissioners who will be at work, but the fact that the work being done is toward the development of procedures which will be put in place if we are successful in developing them in a year or two years from now, and in view of the fact that everything that is being done in air traffic control in Canada at present is judged safe by all the parties involved, I think it is right for me to ask hon. members in the House to join in the request to the parties to go back to work flying passengers in Canada while the work of this commission goes on, and to cease the disruptions which have so afflicted our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Lang: I ask for that support earnestly, as I have done in the past, in the belief that the right thinking members of all parties in the House—and I take that to be the majority in every party—believe that these steps are reasonable and that so long as the principle of the high standard of safety to which I referred is maintained, this course of action deserves support.

Just before coming to the House I received word that Mr. Maley of the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association had indicated through the press that he would like to see a meeting between himself and Mr. Livingstone, certain of the airline chief executives, myself and senior officials. I immediately responded by inviting Mr. Livingstone, Mr. Maley and such of the executives as can be present at such a meeting tonight to come to a meeting in order to attempt to resolve this matter. I am sure that in that resolution the support of all members of the House will be helpful indeed, and again I solicit it.

● (1510)

Mr. Jack Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome the statement of the minister and join with him and wish him success in getting our airlines, air pilots and air traffic controllers back to what might be called a cordial effort to return our air freight and passenger travel to a normal situation.

We are deeply concerned about the safety aspects of this question and it is regrettable that language and racial questions have to enter the picture. We also regret that the minister has taken this long to meet the president of the pilots' association and the air traffic controllers. We believe that he, as Minister of Transport, would serve the country well if he answered the question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and released all the air safety studies which have taken place in his department to this date so that we who want to judge this issue in an unbiased and fair way could have an equal opportunity to do so. I urge the minister to consider the question put yesterday by the hon. member for Central Nova, to answer it and to make available to the country those studies, because I think that would be helpful to the country in reaching a favourable decision.

It is regrettable that the minister does not, in essence, come completely clean. He says in his statement that pilots can and will be available to operate in both official languages at five airports. In his statement he also threw in the question of the Ottawa-Hull region, and that leaves the question in the minds of people as to whether this is the beginning and not the end.

An hon. Member: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Horner: I am afraid of nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: We urge the minister to come completely clean and to place the facts on the table, and we regret very much that the whole question of safety has become clouded. I am particularly pleased that the minister has agreed to meet with Mr. Maley and Mr. Livingstone, because as a passenger I share their concern—

Miss Bégin: We all share it.

Mr. Horner: —that safety standards are maintained in every part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I want to commend the minister for the way he stuck up for and stood by Mr. Keenan. It is regrettable that he had to resign from the commission. I am pleased that the minister has appointed a new commission so that the whole situation can become more stable. It is regrettable, however, that he appointed two members to this commission and not three, because there cannot be a majority decision reached. While the minister appointed a member from each official language group, I think the best recommendation I could give him would be to appoint a third person from neither of those groups.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: In that way, a majority decision could be reached. Hon. members laugh at that, but we all remember the Bilcon report in which a minority position was filed. I think the country wants this issue settled, not for political reasons but for the safety of air passengers, and I do not know whether these two gentlemen, Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Chouinard, are satisfactory to the pilots' association or to the air traffic controllers. I do know that in settling the contract with the air traffic controllers Mr. Keenan was satisfactory. I hope Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Chouinard will be, and I hope we can get back to a more stable situation with the highest degree of safety maintained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, following the minister's statement and the response of the official spokesman for the Conservative party, I would like at the outset—perhaps it is not necessary, but under the present circumstances perhaps it is worthwhile—to emphasize the very profound commitment of the New Democratic Party to the principle of bilingualism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As hon. members in all parties recognize, on an issue as sensitive and as important as this, the political issue involved is in maintaining a federal Canada. It is always extremely difficult to apply a principle to a particular circumstance, and it is very important for those of us involved in political decision-making to have a basic sense of trust about the motives of those involved in reaching a decision on this matter so that we do not call into question basic commitments if there happens to be a difference in judgment about the application of a general principle to the particular circumstances at issue.

In his comments today the minister correctly noted that the issue is not whether bilingualism is introduced all across Canada. That, of course, is not the issue. Unfortunately, perhaps that is widely misunderstood, and I am glad the minister emphasized that that is not the issue. The issue pertains very much to the province of Quebec, with a minor extension to the Ottawa-Hull area. The minister is also correct when he says that bilingualism has been effectively in operation for some two years in the province of Quebec, and is in certain areas right now. He might have added that it has been in operation in those aspects of aviation covered only by visual flight rules. That is an important technical consideration, as I am sure the minister recognizes.

The issue is about the extention of bilingualism in air traffic control in the province of Quebec, particularly in the Montreal area, from those areas covered by visual flight rules to those covered by instrument flight rules. Again, that is an important technical consideration. The minister has said that this extension raises more complex questions and that is why technical studies and an independent public inquiry are needed.

There are a number of serious and, for me, as yet unresolved issues flowing from the government's position and from the terms of reference of the commission which were tabled today by the minister when he made his statement. In the preamble of the order in council it is stated that the commission will consider both the safety implications and the operational efficiency implications of extending bilingualism into flight control procedures in the province of Quebec. The order in council elaborates in detail on a number of specific considerations which arise from those two general points. However—and this is an area of serious concern to me—at no point is it stated that the commission, after all its deliberations on all the specific considerations which are referred to it, can reach a negative conclusion. I choose my words with care when I say that if it cannot reach a negative conclusion it can appropriately be seen as some kind of sham, and a costly sham at that. For example, one possible interpretation of the order in council that the minister has tabled is that bilingualism will be extended regardless of the cost, regardless of efficiency and regardless of the inconvenience to passengers. I am saying that is one clear implication of the order in council as I read it.

● (1520)

For this commission to have any validity at all it is much more important, in our view and in the view of the public of Canada, that it must have the genuinely open option of recommending either "Yes" or "No" after it considers all the factors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The implication remains with me that the deck has in fact been stacked by the terms of reference as indicated in the order in council that has been tabled. If the deck is stacked, this implies that the conclusion has been reached and what the minister may be going through here is a costly public relations exercise. If that is the case, what we have is a mere form of political advertising and, like all advertising, it is intended more to deceive than to enlighten. I say those words with care, Mr. Speaker. I hope the questions that follow and the answers we will get from the minister will show that the commission can recommend to the government "Yes" or "No"; that it is not wedded by the terms of reference to come in with a "Yes" answer, with all the elaborate justification for that answer. I repeat, if the commission is not open-ended, if it does not have a completely frank mandate, it will be seen as a sham not only by the public but by those now involved in the aircraft industry who are out of work and who all of us would like to see go back to their jobs.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are thankful to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) for the statement he made in the House today on the serious problem of the strike in air transport. We deplore that such a strike has happened. However we doubt that the commission will be able to proceed quickly enough to allow us to take the necessary procedures so that the problem will not drag on for days and weeks. We are now waiting for the commission's report and, during that time, the Canadian economy is unfortunately burdened with serious problems because air transport in Canada today has become very important, and we know it.

Mr. Speaker, some individuals make it a specialty to turn this problem into a racial issue under the guise of safety. In the last paragraph, the minister said in French, and I quote:

Experience in recent years has shown that while making for better comprehension bilingualism can increase the safety of operations.

I do not think the minister included this sentence in his statement without checking its meaning. Bilingualism can increase air safety. When we see individuals now making a pretext of safety for disrupting air transport, particularly in Quebec, I think that unfortunately they are using a false pretext to cover up a racial issue. We know very well that studies have been made and that in certain other countries more than one language are used even in communications and other areas, and that nowhere else as far as we know has there been a strike because of the hazards the language used in those other countries would have caused.

Mr. Speaker, I myself had the opportunity in recent days when several of my colleagues were caught in the middle of this air strike and remained grounded because air services were no longer working, I had the opportunity to meet a unilingual anglophone, a pilot who feels that this safety issue is a false problem in air transport. He does not believe a word of it. Yet he does not speak French and he is a pilot from western Canada who believes they are creating a problem from a false situation. We wish, therefore, that a solution can be reached by the federal government, which should make it possible for Canada to remain a bilingual country. As far as I know, we still are in Canada, we have two official languages and we should not allow some individuals, under false arguments or for other pretexts, to take steps which will result in one of the official languages of Canada not being recognized in a public service as important as Air Canada or air transport in general. We therefore support the means—not radical means, but means of understanding, we hope—to be taken by the federal government to have the French language respected in Quebec, because it is the official language of Quebecers and one of the country's official languages. We must have the French language respected and prove wrong those who take pleasure in repeating that under the cover of safety, we must use only the English language, and particularly in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a couple of questions to the minister in view of the statement he has made. The minister indicated he was meeting with the representatives of the air traffic controllers, the pilots' association and executives of the airlines. Could he tell the House if he has had an opportunity of reviewing the terms of reference, whether these have been approved as yet, or whether he intends to put them to these meetings when they take place?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that after sitting down I received a note that my suggestion for a meeting has been accepted at least by Mr. Maley, Mr. Livingston and Mr. Taylor of Air Canada who happens to be in Ottawa. We will meet at eight o'clock this evening and I have no doubt that the terms of reference will be further considered by us at that time. A good deal of what is in the terms of reference already has been the subject of earlier discussions between at least my officials, Mr. Livingston and the air traffic controllers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question. Could the minister inform the House whether he is going to take the position that unless the parties themselves are satisfied that the terms of reference are sufficiently broad to satisfy their membership or particular companies, the commission will not proceed, or does he intend the commission to proceed notwithstanding the concurrence of the parties affected?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference are very broad, starting out by specifying the safety aspect as the key to allowing, under one paragraph, the commission to report on relevant matters. There is a great deal of breadth. While I hope the terms will be acceptable as they stand, obviously I have to await the discussions to know whether that will be so.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could put a further question to the Minister of Transport, for purposes of clarification. Yesterday, as reported at page 14744 of Hansard, referring to the air traffic controllers the minister said:

● (1530)

Indeed, the latest word I have is that there is some lack of interest in the commission because they seem to be taking the position that the only thing they will be satisfied with is a move away from the position which we have taken.

Meaning, the position the government has taken. Could the minister be more precise and tell the House whether he has been advised directly, especially recently, by the air traffic controllers that they will not co-operate in the matter of the technical commission?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, no, I would not put it that way. The reference I made yesterday was to the conversation between them and my officials. I hope we will have their co-operation. They had earlier indicated that they could co-operate on the simulation exercises even before the question of the commission arose. I had a discussion with Mr. Livingston about the announcement I was making today. I spoke to him last night, but had no positive indication then of the attitude he would take.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the unfortunate situation which has resulted from what I may call the series of inconsistent statements coming from the government side of the House, can the minister assure us that beginning tonight he will personally make every effort, which will be supported by members on my side of the House, to maintain constant communication with the parties in this matter so that they will not feel, as they put it to us on this side of the House, that there has been a talking to them but not talking with them.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, first I wish the hon. member would not accept the press versions of inconsistent statements. The only thing which has been inconsistent is the way in which these statements have been reported in the press. As hon. members on all sides of the House know, this can happen from time to time. The principal persons involved in the current dispute have been the air traffic controllers. My officials have been in constant contact with them. It was well known that I was available at any time to meet with them as well, if it seemed that such meeting would be helpful or useful.

I happen to have a great deal of confidence in the officials who are involved in these discussions and did not see any particular need to intervene every day or on an hourly basis. I had not been requested by the controllers to meet them personally or directly, at least not until the message reached my office today at about 1.30, and I had not had such a request from the pilots. Actually, I received the request today by way of a report to me by a reporter who said that an indication of interest in the meeting had been shown. I responded immediately by extending the invitation to meet me. But I was always available to meet in that way.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise some rather obviously inconsistent statements which have been made by the government. In the order in council of May 13, three tasks were to be given to the commission. They were to inquire into and report on implications relating to aviation safety, on implications regarding costs, and on the operational efficiency of procedures. Those three considerations were included. However, for some reason, in the order in council tabled today one of those three items has been left out. Why, in the order in council tabled today, is the commission not given authority to inquire into the cost factor? For some reason that item has been left out of today's order in council, but was included in the order in council of May 13. Why has it been left out?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the reason, essentially, is that while operational efficiency is seen as relating directly to aviation safety, we wanted to leave the major impression that safety is the key consideration here. It is included under paragraph E in relation to relevant matters on which the commission may comment. It might not want to pursue to the ultimate limit the question of total additional costs; therefore it seemed better not to highlight that matter as an obligation for the commission.

On the matter of additional costs and whether additional procedures should be instituted, a decision would have to be taken by the government, which accepts its responsibilities in this House and the country for the cost of bilingualism. On the other hand, it is just as clear that although ultimate responsibility rests with the government, on questions involving safety it would, clearly, be practically and politically impossible for the government to take any step which would lower or jeopardize safety. In that area, the commission is playing the key role.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it was a serious mistake to leave out the matter of operational costs, because those committed to implementing bilingualism as much as possible, where appropriate, should know the costs involved. Leaving out that matter was a serious ommission. My last question to the minister is this: Is it the government's view that if the commission looks at the areas to which it is now restricted it can bring in a recommendation not to proceed with any extension of bilingual operations in air traffic control?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the commission is not limited in its recommendations and therefore that kind of recommendation is essentially open to it. It would be making a judgment on the quality of safety and operational efficiency and would draw conclusions therefrom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems appropriate, in the circumstances, to conclude our questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Moncton, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, the hon. member for Vegreville, and the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, there should be no doubt that I, as a member of this parliament, am not committed to the present system for the implementation of bilingualism, particularly where air safety is concerned. Frankly, I have doubts about the sincerity of the Ministry of Transport in this whole matter.

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Jones: Let me speak. The airline pilots held a symposium on air safety this spring in this city. I should like to know why Ministry of Transport staff did not participate in that symposium. I believe the airline pilots made an effort to deal with the matter of air safety.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member will see this in a different light when he knows that the date chosen for the meeting was chosen without consulting us, and the organizers of the symposium should have known that my key officials who are involved in air safety were on that date obligated to attend another meeting.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, since it is important to create an atmosphere of good will, trust and confidence as a positive step toward resolving this dispute, can the minister advise if the government will reconsider its somewhat hasty decision to prosecute the Winnipeg controllers, since the threatened prosecution has not been conducive to the achievement of an atmosphere of good will and confidence? Is the government reconsidering its position in view of the appointment of the commission of inquiry?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. It has been the plain and straight-forward position of this government that laws must be upheld and those who offend the law must be proceeded against. I hope that hon. members opposite will in this instance, as they have in other instances involving broad and important principles, support us.

Mr. Fraser: But the contract is still before the courts. Its validity has not been determined. How can the government prosecute in such circumstances?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, since similar incidents in other sectors of the labour force have occurred, and the government has not proceeded with such indecent haste, if I may use that expression, why has the minister and the government taken the present, adamant position in the present situation?

Mr. Fraser: Particularly as the matter is still before the courts and is not resolved.

Mr. Mazankowski: Particularly as the issue is still before the courts, as my colleague says.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly why the issue is before the courts. That is where it will proceed, and I do not intend to comment on the subject.

Mr. Fraser: Precisely. It is before the courts.

Mr. Lang: With regard to the question of broad policy, I say to hon. members that there was a time when hon. members opposite would say in every case, "You should not proceed because this would be the first time," or "because you did not proceed the last few times," and so on. We made it clear that this had to change. The law has to be respected. Therefore, when an injunction is issued it ought to be followed with action. I have made that position clear and I have followed that course throughout.

Mr. Fraser: But the validity of the contract has not been determined, and you are prosecuting.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I, along with the hon. member for Vegreville, am concerned to establish stability with regard to air traffic in this country. I want to see good will prevail on the part of those who oversee our air traffic, namely, the air traffic controllers. Can the minister, for the benefit of the House and the country, state that in the selection of Mr. Chouinard and Mr. Sinclair the air traffic controllers were consulted, and whether they agreed to the selection of those two individuals to carry out this commission for the study of air safety?

● (1540)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, earlier we had asked the controllers to suggest names—we meant in the plural—in order that we might look at those persons as possible commissioners. Certainly, once we had made the decision that it would be better to move to the judiciary for the commissioners, it would have been inelegant to begin discussing the merits of one or another of the commissioners. Therefore, there was not discussion in that sense, although I did have a discussion about the appointments, prior to their being made, with various elements within the dispute representing both CALPA and CATCA.

Mr. Horner: I very much regret the minister's answer. In order to attempt to clarify this, did not the air traffic controllers agree to Mr. Keenan to carry out this commission originally? Was it not the belief of the air traffic controllers that the faith demonstrated by the minister and the ministry in the first instance would be continued in the second instance? I very much regret the fact that the minister now says he did not fulfil the obligation that they would be consulted.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member misstates the situation with regard to an earlier occasion. The earlier occasion was indeed a reason for my not expecting that full consultation, to the last bit of consent, would have been successful. The earlier occasion was evidence that that would not work. In the earlier situation we had submitted certain names to the controllers as possible commissioners, and received no response about those names. We then determined the possibility that Mr. Keenan might be available, and concluded that it would be a practical impossibility for them to disagree that he was acceptable. We indicated his name to them before we proceeded to appoint the commissioner, but received no response. It was really a question of my not wanting to be in the position of having to incur further delay.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the country is now faced with a stoppage of air service. It is obvious that for some time there have been serious misunderstandings and profound disagreements between the minister and his senior officials and the controllers and pilots. If we are to have a resumption of service in the very near future, why did the minister not propose the appointment of a commission or commissioner and set the terms of reference 2½ weeks ago? Why did he not even at this time discuss with the organizations concerned the people he would appoint and their terms of reference, so that we could be assured even today, as I doubt we are, that the organizations concerned are willing to accept the appointment of the commissioners, the terms of reference and are willing to go back to work while the commission is working? Why did he not do these things earlier? Also, will he have any assurance before tonight that he is likely to get an agreement with regard to the working of this commission and the employees going back to work today or tomorrow?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, even now I cannot give any assurance about where we will be moving from here. Indeed, it was exactly for that reason that I asked for the full support of hon. members opposite in urging that we resume normal air travel while the commission gets on with its work. The reason I did not take a certain course of action, and so on, was that it probably would have been more likely to exacerbate the situation than heal or cure it. Therefore, I will take the liberty of not going into that question in detail.

Mr. Orlikow: What consideration, if any, has the minister and his department given to the fairly quick bringing into operation by the controllers much more modern equipment and instrumentation such as that used by controllers in the United States, which I understand would make the plotting of movement and safety much easier? Further, it might have facilitated the agreement of the controllers to implementation of more bilingualism than they have been prepared to do until this time.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we have, of course, an ongoing program for the improvement and renewal of equipment. I have no reason to believe that that program, or the state at which it is, would have affected the current dispute.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, since it seems to be generally agreed that there must be an atmosphere of confidence created between the government, on the one hand, and those who are directly concerned with air traffic on the other, the air controllers and pilots, a situation which has not been improved by some of the statements made or reported to have been made by the minister, why did the minister decide to avoid some of the provisions of the law last week when a strike was threatened, when he might have appealed to the PSSRB for a ruling as to whether this strike was legal? Also, does he know that a request has been made to the PSSRB by CATCA for a statement as to their legality at the time?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of that later application after the earlier action that had been taken. Of course, the conduct of employer-employee relations is in the hands, strictly speaking, of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, rather than myself as Minister of Transport. However, certain courses of action were open, and one of those courses of action was pursued.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister is not going to aggravate matters even further by turning down the appeal that has been put to his ministry—and I cannot give the legal terms because I am not legally trained—to appear before the PSSRB for a declaratory judgment on this matter.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that, essentially, involves some highly legal considerations. There are other proceedings taking place, and I will not comment on that matter today.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I intended to rise under motions to inquire whether the House would give unanimous consent to my reverting to motions later this day to deal with House business. I am not sure that I will want to take advantage of the opportunity, but if things look reasonably favourable I might put forward a motion for consideration at that time. I would like to have agreement now to revert to motions for that purpose.

Mr. Lawrence: Before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that there is at least one fairly important committee meeting at the same time as this House is meeting. I do not know what the government House leader has in mind, but it may very well affect the conduct, in one way or another, of what goes on in committee. If the House leader desires to come forward later with a motion, the members on the committee have the right to know, now, what will be contained in the motion. If he is not in a position to tell us that now, and if unanimous consent is required, I must respectfully decline to give that consent.

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps we should wait until we come to motions. We do have one or two routine proceedings to attend to before then.

Mr. MacKay: I rise on a brief point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the seriousness of the transportation situation and the amount of time spent discussing it, would the Minister of Transport tell us whether he has considered the question I asked him yesterday with respect to making public the results of the aviation inspection safety standards investigation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Standing Order surrounding the making of statements by ministers gives the Chair discretion as to how many questions are permitted during the question period. There could be no other way of interpreting the request of the hon. member except as a request to extend the question period, which I, in my discretion, consider to have been ample. Seven or eight members, representing the parties in equal proportions, have put questions. The hon. member now seeks to put a further question. Two other hon. members of New Democratic Party were also seeking to put questions.

Having indicated halfway through that question period that I would terminate it by recognizing certain members, if I were now to extend it by allowing the hon. member for Central Nova to speak I would obviously have to recognize other hon. members as well. It was an exercise of my discretion to discontinue the question period when I did, and I do not see how I could reconsider that decision now.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be more convenient for the House if I were to make a motion on House business later today, but I must, of course, accept the rules. Since unanimous consent has apparently not been given, I should like to make a motion which would, of course, require unanimous consent because there is not the ordinary notice; it would have been impossible to have given the notice earlier than today.

This afternoon we shall be reaching the conclusion, I would hope, of most of the remaining business before the House with the exception of Bill C-84 and Bill C-83. The House will recall that I said we would continue debating Bill C-83 as long as other business which was on our program was still before the House, but that I would not keep the House in session in order to complete consideration of Bill C-83. That is still the government's position.

The one item which does remain on the government's program and which must be completed before we rise is Bill C-84, apart from Bill C-88 and C-68 on which progress will be made today. This being so, it will not be necessary for the House to sit on Friday for the purpose of completing our business by June 30, unless, of course, the justice committee were to report today, which I think is very unlikely. It would be possible, however, for the House not to sit on Friday if some provision could be made that should the committee complete its business tomorrow, when it might be sitting, or on Friday, the committee could report as though the House were sitting.

This does not, of course, require the committee to report by Friday. That is a matter which is in the hands of the committee, not in the hands of the House or of the government. This proposal would simply facilitate the work of the committee, which would be able to sit more continuously on Friday because it would not be interrupted by the necessity of certain members being here for the question period, and so on. I should therefore like to move a motion as follows:

That the House shall not sit on Friday, June 25, 1976;

That, if at any time before 5:00 p.m. on Friday, June 25, 1976, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs shall have agreed to report Bill C-84, an act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, the House shall be deemed to have received the report of the said bill as if it had been sitting; and

That, if the said report shall have been deemed to have been received in accordance with this order, it shall be in order for the House to take up the report stage of the said bill on Monday, June 28, 1976;

Provided that it shall be in order for any member to submit to the Clerk of the House notices of proposed amendments at the report stage of the said bill at any time before 8 p.m. on Friday, June 25, 1976.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: The motion, if it were put forward now, would have to be put forward by unanimous consent. I could, perhaps, hear some brief comments on a point of order if there were some hope the motion might be consented to. Without considering that the motion is being spoken to, the Chair might be ready to accept requests for clarification on a point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am disguising a request for clarification by suggesting that I rise on a point of order. As I understand it, what the House leader is asking is that the House give permission to the committee sitting tomorrow, if it so desires, and to the committee sitting on Friday, if it so desires. It is also proposed that the House should not sit tomorrow and, as well, that the 48-hour period for the reporting of the bill be abridged to 24 hours. This would be the practical effect if the House were not sitting on Friday. In other words, notice respecting the report stage of the bill, if the bill were finished in committee on Friday, would mean that the House could go ahead with the report stage of the bill on Monday. To my mind—and I don't care how you slice it—that still is abridging the time required for the report stage to the House from the committee, because the House is not sitting on Friday.

I suggest to the House leader that perhaps there still might be unanimous consent—I do not know, because this is not a matter for party discipline; there are no party whips and there is no party discipline on this matter—on two conditions only. First, that the House leader give an undertaking that in neither case would the third reading stage of Bill C-84, or the report stage of that bill, be proceeded with until after the House resumed in the fall.

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Lawrence: Otherwise, members of the committee are perfectly entitled to say "No tickee, no laundly", "No House, no committee". In other words, if the House is not sitting, we have the right to object, in the committee, to the committee sitting.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the hon. member is denying unanimous consent, I suppose the matter is closed. But I should like to make it clear that we would be happy to agree to this motion. As we understand it, it would provide that if the committee completed its work and made its report on Friday, we would be in exactly the same position on Monday, with the House not sitting on Friday, as we would with the House sitting on Friday. If we sit on Friday and the committee makes its report, then the report stage debate begins on Monday. If the motion passes and we do not need to sit on Friday, the report stage will be proceeded with on Monday. We do not see it shortening anything; all it does is obviate the necessity of sitting on Friday, which would probably be futile anyway. Therefore, although we voted as individuals yesterday we all voted the same way and I can now say that we would support this motion.

[Mr. Sharp.]

● (1600)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, one point that bothers me is that in his proposal the President of the Privy Council has totally abrogated the right of individual members to put forward amendments. Under the rules it is open to any hon. member to put down an amendment at report stage 24 hours prior to the taking up of a bill. In his proposal, the President of the Privy Council is saying that members who wish to put down any amendment shall have until 8 p.m. on Friday, June 25, a day when the House is not sitting.

That is all very well for Ottawa and Toronto members, Mr. Speaker, who are interesting in sitting around here to see whether or not the bill comes in so they can put down amendments. I am sure that the table officers would not be prepared to accept, and would not accept any proposed amendments until the bill is reported back. Therefore, hon. members are precluded from putting down amendments. I would suggest that hon. members read the rules and understand them. I was sorry to see a demonstration of what I consider to be the falsity of a free vote on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When I hear a concerted catcall on these particular points, it shows that hon. members opposite are advocating government policy. They are taking a party-government stand.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to hear the hon. member for Edmonton West on a point of order, but I think we must be careful to stay away from substance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My point of order is very simple, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Don't take so long, then.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member even looked at the rule book he would understand my point, which is that there is no possibility of any member of the House being able to put down an amendment, under the proposal put forward by the President of the Privy Council. When the House is not sitting there is no obligation on the table officers to accept amendments. Does the President of the Privy Council expect or insist that any member who wishes to put down an amendment must stay around in Ottawa on Friday, when the House is not sitting, in anticipation of the committee making its report?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the free vote atmosphere that prevails on this side of the House—I say nothing about the other side of the House—there was one point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West which concerns the third paragraph of the draft motion, namely, that the House "take up the report stage of the said bill on Monday, June 28, 1976". As I understand the situation, that is quite within the rules of the House and it can be done on that short basis, but it is not within the common courtesies of the House. As I understand the courtesies of the House, if the draft followed what has been the normal custom of the House it would read in this way: "... take up the report stage of the said bill on Tuesday, June 29, 1976". This would give the time the hon. member for Edmonton West suggested for filing report stage amendments in the normal course of things.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will give consideration to that, if I may speak as a private member. It might be that with that kind of consideration the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West would be satisfied, and perhaps the feelings of other members on this matter would be soothed somewhat. I believe there would be time for this consideration to be given, and perhaps we could deal with the matter later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By previous agreement, two deferred divisions are to be taken almost forthwith. I think the House is agreed that both divisions will be taken one after the other, with only one calling in of the members. That will require some time.

Despite some technical objections, there seems to be a general will to accommodate members by not sitting on Friday so long as the rights of members who wish to file amendments at the report stage are not in any way prejudiced. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made the point that technically the situation remains the same as if the House sits on Friday, but as the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, members who wish to file amendments will have to stay here on Friday if the House does not sit. It does seem to disadvantage those members if the House does not sit on Friday. Obviously, they would have to stay here to file amendments if the report does come forward, which is an eventuality that does seem unreasonable in view of the uncertainty. They, alone, would be the ones who would have to wait here if they wished to file amendments. I think technically we could probably make the arrangements at the table, but it does seem to put some members who wish to file amendments at report stage under an extra burden.

Perhaps during the ringing of the division bells and the taking of the vote which is about to be taken forthwith there might be some further discussion to see whether the motion could be refined in order to accomplish this purpose. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following 30 questions will be answered today: 4,187, 4,192 to 4,213 inclusive, 4,795, 5,203, 5,410, 5,426, 5,466, 5,534 and 5,637.

[Text]

PSYCHIATRISTS—SASKATCHEWAN FARM ANNEX

Question No. 4,187—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of (a) full-time (b) part-time psychiatrists at Saskatchewan Farm Annex and, in each case, what were their (i) educational qualifications (ii) previous work experiences in Canada and abroad (iii) salaries?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

ESCAPES—ONTARIO REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,192—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Ontario Regional Psychiatric Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	1	1	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	1	—	—	—	—
Total	1	3	—	—	—	—

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—PACIFIC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,193—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Pacific Regional Psychiatric Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	1	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	—	—	—	1	—

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—MILLHAVEN

Question No. 4,194—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Millhaven Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	2	15	3	—	4
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	2	15	3	—	4

At large (December 31, 1975): 3

ESCAPES AT LECLERC

Question No. 4,195—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at LeClerc and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	16	24	21	14	5	2
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	1	—	2	2
without escort	1	4	4	7	11	3
Total	17	28	26	21	18	7

At large (December 31, 1975): 6

ESCAPES—SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 4,196—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Saskatchewan Penitentiary and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	197
Escapes	18	1	1	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	4	—	—	2	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	1	—	1
without escort	—	—	2	6	1	—
Total	18	5	3	7	3	1

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—COWANSVILLE

Question No. 4,197—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Cowansville and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

[Mr. Poulin.]

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	8	12	26	15	1	4
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	2
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	3	2	2
without escort	1	5	10	6	12	13
Total	9	18	36	24	15	21

At large (December 31, 1975): 11

ESCAPES—STE-ANNE DES PLAINES

Question No. 4,198—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Ste. Anne des Plaines and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	6	—	—	—	—	2
Walkaways	2	16	6	2	—	3
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	2
without escort	4	1	2	2	3	3
Total	12	17	8	4	3	10

At large (December 31, 1975): 3

ESCAPES—ARCHAMBAULT

Question No. 4,199—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Archambault and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	4	10	8	1	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	1	—	—	—	—	1
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	5	10	8	1	—	1

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—FRONTENAC

Question No. 4,200—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Frontenac Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	1	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	3	5	21	10	7	4
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	4	10	7	6	12	11
Total	8	15	28	16	19	15

At large (December 31, 1975): 3

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	5	5	17	2	4	—
Walkaways	2	2	2	—	—	2
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	—	2	1
without escort	2	23	10	11	9	19
Total	9	31	29	13	15	22

At large (December 31, 1975): 10

ESCAPES—ROCKWOOD

Question No. 4,201—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Rockwood Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	4	6	7	9	2	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	2
without escort	3	11	20	13	15	6
Total	7	17	27	22	17	8

At large (December 31, 1975): 8

ESCAPES—MONTÉE ST. FRANCIS

Question No. 4,204—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Montée St. Francis and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	2	—	—
Walkaways	3	3	7	5	7	6
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	1
without escort	—	14	3	6	4	3
Total	3	17	10	13	11	10

At large (December 31, 1975): 7

ESCAPES—STONY MOUNTAIN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,202—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Stony Mountain Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	4	4	7	2	1
Walkaways	—	2	—	1	2	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	2	—	—	2	1
without escort	5	10	8	14	20	12
Total	5	18	12	22	26	14

At large (December 31, 1975): 4

ESCAPES—BEAVER CREEK

Question No. 4,205—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Beaver Creek Correctional Camp and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	6	—	—	—	—	2
Walkaways	2	1	2	7	1	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	11	3	5	4	2	6
Total	19	4	7	11	3	9

At large (December 31, 1975): 7

ESCAPES—JOYCEVILLE

Question No. 4,203—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Joyceville Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

ESCAPES—PITTSBURG INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,206—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Pittsburg Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

Order Paper Questions

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	2	5	4	7	10	6
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	1	10	15	8	8	10
Total	3	15	19	15	18	16

At large (December 31, 1975): 9

ESCAPES—QUEBEC FEDERAL TRAINING CENTRE

Question No. 4,207—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Quebec Federal Training Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	4	13	—	6	3
Walkaways	—	—	—	1	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	1	—	—	2
without escort	—	—	6	2	6	5
Total	—	4	20	3	12	10

At large (December 31, 1975): 6

ESCAPES—COLLINS BAY

Question No. 4,208—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Collins Bay Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	3	1	4	7	3	3
Walkaways	—	—	1	—	—	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	2	4	1	—	—
without escort	4	9	13	5	6	12
Total	7	12	22	13	9	16

At large (December 31, 1975): 18

ESCAPES—WARKWORTH

Question No. 4,209—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Warkworth Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	7	4	8	9	3	—
Walkaways	—	1	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	1	3	2
without escort	8	6	4	1	2	5
Total	15	11	12	11	8	7

At large (December 31, 1975): 4

[Mr. Poulin.]

ESCAPES—BATH INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,210—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Bath Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	4	11	9	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	4	8	3	2
Total	—	—	8	19	12	2

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—SASKATCHEWAN FARM ANNEX

Question No. 4,211—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Saskatchewan Farm Annex and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	4	—	9	6	10	7
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	2	5	3	2
Total	4	—	11	11	13	9

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—LANDRY CROSSING CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,212—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Landry Crossing Correctional Camp and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	1	—	—
Walkaways	8	5	7	12	10	10
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	1	1
without escort	1	13	12	7	8	4
Total	9	18	19	20	19	15

At large (December 31, 1975): 7

ESCAPES—QUEBEC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,213—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Quebec Regional Psychiatric Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	1	—	1
Total	—	—	—	1	—	1

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

LIVING UNIT-OFFICERS AT FERNDALE

Question No. 4,795—Mr. Reynolds:

1. For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of living unit-officers at Ferndale?

2. Was their education (a) less than grade 10 (b) grade 10 to grade 12 (c) some college (d) beyond a first university degree?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1 and 2. For the years 1970 to 1974 inclusive: Nil.

1. For the year 1975: 11.

2. (a) 3; (b) 7; (c) 1; (d) Nil.

PEST CONTROL SERVICES—TYPE OF PESTS BROUGHT UNDER CONTROL

Question No. 5,203—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 86 of the Second Session of the 29th Parliament which listed expenditures from public funds in various years for "pest control services" at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive, what is a detailed description of the type of pests that the Prime Minister was attempting to have brought under control?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): The pests referred to were: rhynchophora, rodentia, tinea pellionella, plodia interpunctella, lepisma saccharina, musca domestica.

NAMELESS POSTMARKS

Question No. 5,410—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Has the Post Office Department recently introduced a policy of nameless postmarks and, if so, for what reason have the names of cities and towns been replaced by a code?

2. Does the Department have a policy of replacing all names with numbers and, if so, what is the next planned change?

3. Did the Department examine the experience of the USA Postal Service, which introduced similar nameless postmarks, and which more recently restored city and town names in the face of popular demand?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. The Post Office recently introduced the use of the postal code in its cancellation mark primarily for certain centres where changes in the pattern of mail processing made the continued use of a community name identifier impractical. This has occurred where mail from a number of communities is now gathered into one major processing plant and collectively processed in one stream. In these new mechanized plants it is impractical to keep segregated the mail from different source locations, and rather than select the name of one community to be used for the cancellation of all mail processed through such a plant, it was decided to use the postal code of the plant. For example, the processing plant located in Scarborough, Ontario will process mail from surrounding areas such as Richmond Hill, Willowdale, Thornhill, Markham, Ajax, Pickering and others.

2. No, the Post Office does not have a policy of changing all names to numbers; postal code postmarks will be used only at a limited number of locations. The next location where such a postmark is to be used is St. John's, Newfoundland, to be followed, possibly later this year, by new plants in the Toronto and Montreal areas.

3. Yes, the Post Office Department is familiar with the United States Postal Service experience. However, the systems are different in the two countries and there is no practical relationship.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT WITH CANADA CUSTOMS

Question No. 5,426—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many persons, including university students, applied for summer employment with Canada Customs from within the Constituency of Leeds and of these (a) how many sought employment at the Port of Lansdowne (Thousand Islands Bridge) (b) how many were interviewed and on what basis were they selected for such interviews (c) when were interviews held (d) were those not interviewed at least given the courtesy of an acknowledgement (e) of those interviewed, how many were actually hired (f) were those with previous experience given preference and, if not, for what reason (g) what are the names of all those actually hired?

2. What is a full description of the manner in which persons are selected for summer employment with Canada Customs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Public Service Commission and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1. 124 students within the Constituency of Leeds have applied for summer employment with Canada Customs. They are divided as follows: four students came from secondary institutes; 18 students came from colleges; 102 students came from universities. (a) 30 students within the Constituency of Leeds have sought employment at the Port of Lansdowne (Thousand Islands Bridge). They are divided as follows: six students came from colleges; 24 students came from universities. (b) 23 were interviewed. They were selected for interview on the basis that they were considered: full-time registrants at a recognized University or Community College of Arts, Science or Technology (or similar post-secondary educational institutions, technological institutes, C.E.G.E.P.'s, etc.), returning to an educational institution in the fall of 1976; residents within the area of the Port of Lansdowne and, had been referred by the Public Service Commission; (c) From April 26, 1976 to May 7, 1976 inclusive; (d) All 26 candidates referred by the Public Service Commission were invited for interview but 3 declined; (e) five; (f) Yes, 11 students are returning this season; (g) Names of returning students: Colville, C. A.; Duff, J. A.; Gagnon, D.; Galway, E.; McDonald, M. A.;

O'Brien, S. K.; Ready, C. P.; Rupners, J.; Watters, K.; Wheeler, A. B.; Whiteland, B. N. Names of those offered employment this season: Lynch, S. E.; MacDonald, D. G.; Raymond, R.; Reid, B. J.; Walsh, M. P.

2. Persons selected for summer employment are considered for three types of employment: Customs Officers, Carreer-oriented employment, Other temporary employment. Customs Officers and Career-oriented Employment. Eligibility: To be considered for this type of employment during the 1976 summer period, selected persons must be: full-time registrants at a recognized University or Community College of Arts, Science or Technology (or similar post-secondary educational institutions, technological institutes, C.E.G.E.P.'s, etc.); returning to such an institution in the fall 1976; available to the Department for the full period of requirement, e.g., May 15 to September 15, their employment to be on an "as required" basis during this period. Preference in Employment is given to: students employed last summer who have retained their eligibility and received a satisfactory performance rating in 1975; students who reside in the locality in which the position is being filled or who are enrolled in the academic institution within or in close proximity to the locality; Canadian citizens.

NOTE: Students enrolled at academic institutions at locations other than their normal place of residence and locality may, if they so select, be regarded as having dual locality preference.

Qualifications: At interview, candidates are assessed by a Rating Board on relevant knowledge, ability to analyse, control and communicate as well as their tact, judgment, maturity and other factors which would contribute to their effectiveness. These selection standards are prescribed by the Public Service Commission; qualified students, sufficient to meet our requirements, are placed in order of merit on an eligible list. Application: To be considered for employment, students must have filed an application with the Post-Secondary Recruitment Program, Public Service Commission. Candidates are referred to the Department as appropriate. Other Temporary Employment: For other summer employment opportunities, persons must have registered with their local Canada Manpower Centre and/or Regional Office of the Public Service Commission. Candidates are referred to the Department as appropriate. Preference in Employment is given to: persons employed last summer who have retained their eligibility and received a satisfactory performance rating in 1975; persons who reside in the locality in which the position is being filled or who are enrolled in the academic institution within or in close proximity to the locality; Canadian citizens.

NOTE: Students enrolled at academic institutions at locations other than their normal place of residence and locality may, if they so select, be regarded as having dual locality preference.

[Mr. Sharp.]

POST OFFICE—STEINBACH, MANITOBA

Question No. 5,466—Mr. Epp:

1. Is a new building to house the Steinbach Manitoba Post Office contemplated for the fiscal year 1976-77 and, if not, on what date is it planned?

2. Has $75,000 been allocated for 1976-77 for site acquisition for a new building to house a post office?

3. Have budgetary acquisitions in the amount of $850,000 been made for the year 1976-77 for the building of a new post office building in Steinbach, Manitoba?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. No new building is contemplated for the fiscal year 1976-77. Our current status at this location is for the provision of new Post Office facilities to be in service in the Spring of 1979. The present schedule is subject to availability of funds, Canada Post Office priorities and Treasury Board approval.

2. No.

3. No funds have been included for Steinbach, Manitoba in the Department of Public Works Accommodation Capital Program for the fiscal year 1976-77.

SALE OF CANADAIR LIMITED

Question No. 5,534—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the government sell Canadair to General Dynamic Corporation and, if so, what was the price?

2. Did the government recently purchase Canadair from General Dynamic Corporation and, if so, what was the price?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Canadair Limited was a privately owned company established in 1944, with an authorized share capital of $10,000, to operate the aircraft manufacturing facility at Cartierville. Canadair leased the land, buildings and equipment from the Crown. Included in the lease agreement was an option for Canadair to purchase these assets. According to the share transfer records of the company, the Crown did not own any of the shares of Canadair at any time prior to January 1976. In February 1947, the company's authorized share capital was increased to $3,000,000 by supplementary letters patent. Electric Boat Company subscribed for 990,000 of the new shares for $1.00 per share cash. It should be noted that this subscription was paid to the company treasury and not to the Crown. On 24 October 1949 Canadair purchased some of the land, buildings and equipment at Cartierville from the Crown for $3,760,745. In 1953 Electric Boat Company, Consolidated Vultee and Canadair became General Dynamics Corporation. On 1 December 1955 Canadair purchased additional Crown owned land, buildings and equipment at Cartierville for $11,468,409.83. On 14 November 1958 General Dynamics subscribed for a further 306,963 shares of Canadair for $7,674,080. As in the February 1947 transaction, this money went to the company treasury. Over the years, General Dynamics acquired a further 111,494 shares from the original shareholders, employees and directors. As of the date of the option agreement, General Dynamics holdings amounted to 1,408,457 shares out of a total issued and outstanding of 1,408,463.

2. The Crown purchased Canadair Limited from General Dynamics on 5 January 1976 for a maximum price of $38,150,000.

STEEL BELTED RADIAL TIRES

Question No. 5,637—Mr. Beatty:

1. Is the government aware of the report to the Ontario Traffic Conference by Mr. Leonard Thomas of the accident research team of the University of Western Ontario stating that older-model steel belted radial tires designed in or injury?

2. Has the government done any research which would confirm or dispute Mr. Thomas' findings and, if so (a) by whom was the research conducted (b) what were its conclusions?

3. Is the government aware of an abnormally high level of failures of such tires under actual driving conditions?

4. Does the government intend to (a) order a recall of any of the tires presently on sale or in use (b) issue a warning to motorists about a possible hazard?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. (a) Transport Canada, Accident and Defect Investigation Division; (b) That a specific series of tires failed to meet the compliance test requirements.

3. Yes. As in (2) above.

4. (a) A recall was instituted by the manufacturer on the specific series of tires that failed to meet the tests; (b) Press coverage was given at the time of the recall to warn the motorist of a possible hazard. A press release on Transport Canada's tire safety program was issued on June 15, 1976.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 4,040 and 5,115 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

GRAIN

Question No. 4,040—Mr. Korchinski:

1. In each of the past two years what was the amount of feed grain in storage at the beginning of the crop year and at the end of each month since the beginning of the crop year in commercial positions (a) in Eastern Canada (b) on the Prairies?

2. In each case, what amounts were held by (a) the Wheat Board (b) others?

3. Was the initial price raised by the Wheat Board in the past two years and, if so, on what date?

4. What was the initial Wheat Board price for feed wheat, oats and barley at the beginning of the past two crop years?

5. What was the average off-board price on wheat, oats and barley from August 1 to the date of increase in the initial Wheat Board price?

Return tabled.

ENCEPHALITIS

Question No. 5,115—Mr. Jones:

1. In regard to the reports of encephalitis being spread by mosquitoes, have steps been taken by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of the Environment to study and survey the increasing problems caused by the mosquito population in various regions of Canada and, in particular, southeastern New Brunswick and, if so, what are they?

2. Have any studies and surveys been made by any department with respect to mosquitoes, their breeding habits and their disease carrying capabilities?

3. (a) How many persons died from encephalitis spread by mosquitoes in the years 1965 to 1975 (b) in which locations and areas did such deaths occur?

4. (a) How many cases of encephalitis were there in the years 1965 to 1975 (b) in what locations and areas (c) what were the defects left to those who suffered from the disease?

5. Has consideration been given to studying the relationship between encephalitis and the mosquito and, if so, in what manner?

6. Will steps be taken to eliminate disease carrying mosquitoes and, if so, what are they?

7. Have any studies been made of the efforts of the Moncton Mosquito Control Authority in its efforts to control mosquitoes?

8. Will the government consider making a substantial grant to the Moncton Mosquito Control Authority to assist in its efforts to eradicate the mosquito population in the greater Moncton area?

Return tabled.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 5,393?

[Text]

*CANADIAN FORCES PERSONNEL REQUIRED TO SERVE AS MEMBERS OF A SHIP'S CREW

Question No. 5,393—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does QRO article 10.015 still provide that former members of the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force will not be required to serve as a member of a crew or of a ship's company without first consenting, "except in an emergency" and (a) if not, when was such a provision altered and with what has it been replaced (b) if so, does the government intend to honour that provision?

2. Does CFAO order 10.3 still provide that no member of the CAF who, as of January 31, 1968, was a member of the Canadian Army or RCAF will be required to serve as a member of a crew or of a ship's company without first giving his consent, "except in an emergency" and (a) if not, when was such a provision altered and with what has it been replaced (b) if so, does the government intend to honour that provision?

3. Is the government presently requesting members of the CAF, who were members of the Canadian Army and Royal Canadian Air Force on January 31, 1968, and whose consent has not been obtained, to serve as members of a ship's company or crew and, if so, how many have been so requested?

4. Are the Canadian Armed Forces in an "emergency" situation of the type contemplated by article 10.015 of the QRO or order 10.3 of the CFAO and, if so, for what reason?

5. Is Maritime Command in an "emergency" situation of that type and, if so, for what reason?

6. Is the government contemplating any changes in CFAO 10.3 or QRO 10.015 and, if so, in what respect and for what reasons?

7. What steps, if any, is the government taking to upgrade manpower levels within Maritime Command?

8. Is any attempt being made by the government to induce members of the CAF, protected by CFAO 10.3 and QRO 10.015, into serving as members of a ship's company or crew and, if so, for what reason?

9. Are the responsibilities assigned to the CAF particularly Maritime Command, compatible with the provisions of QRO 10.015 and CFAO 10.3 and, if not, in what respects?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are several parts to question No. 5393. 1. The answer is yes. (a) The answer is: not applicable; (b) Yes.

2. Yes. (a) Not applicable; (b) Yes.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

6. No.

7. The following are the major steps being taken to upgrade manpower levels within Maritime Command: (a) The training capacity of the two Fleet Schools has been increased three-fold in the critical trades to accommodate the increased recruit intakes; (b) A new retirement plan is presently being offered to selected navy personnel to extend their period of service; (c) A plan is now being developed to guarantee a definite period of shore time to naval personnel after a reasonable period at sea.

8. Yes, to provide relief for certain trades personnel from countinuing sea duty so that they may serve for periods ashore.

9. Yes.

● (1610)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 22, consideration of Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I again remind hon. members that there has been an understanding that members being called in for the deferred division on the motion of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) will at the same time, without further ringing of the bells, be proceeding to take the deferred division on Bill C-68 as well. Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Neil) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 142)

YEAS
Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Beatty
Brisco
Cadieu
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Dick
Diefenbaker
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Forrestall
Fraser
Gillies
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Horner
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Korchinski
Lambert
(Bellechasse)
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
MacDonald
(Egmont)
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Oberle
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rondeau
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith
(Churchill)
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Towers
Wagner
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—76

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Brewin
Broadbent
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Caron
Clermont
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Firth
Fleming
Flynn
Fox
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gilbert
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Herbert
Hogan
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lajoie
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)

Messrs.

LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Orlikow
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Peters
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rodriguez
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Saltsman
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Symes
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Yanakis
Young—132

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): At the next sitting of this House.

* * *

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Friday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: The other motion on which a deferred division has been ordered, and which I understand there is agreement to take now, is the question on Bill C-68.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Leggatt) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 143)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Beatty
Benjamin
Blackburn
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Cadieu
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Dick
Diefenbaker
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Fraser
Gilbert
Gillies
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Horner
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacLean
Macquarrie
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rodriguez
Rondeau
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith (Churchill)
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—91

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Caron
Clermont
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Fox
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Yanakis
Young—117

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. I understand that the third reading of the bill will be the order of the day. Before we call the order, let me say that there has been discussion about reverting to motions. Is now the appropriate time to discuss this, or does the House wish to proceed with discussion on Bill C-68?

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members know, custom would have it that on St. John the Baptist Day parliamentarians should not work or assume their responsibilities as parliamentarians. I should like to draw your attention to the fact that, a few minutes ago, in committee of justice and legal affairs a motion moved by a government member proposed that the committee sit on St. John the Baptist day. Recognizing, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Joliette has brought up a very interesting point of order but, it is permissible, under the Standing Orders of the House, for standing committees to sit whether or not the House is sitting. All matters brought up in standing committees are theirs to decide upon, and not the House.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You may recall that just before we took the votes I had risen on a question of procedure. There have been some discussions, and also discussions with members of the committee. I understand that the justice committee is most unlikely to report by Friday; therefore, I am not proceeding with the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on the main motion, and the Chair recognizes the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth).

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, may I make a few remarks on Bill C-68 when the House has quietened down?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) might be given the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on third reading of Bill C-68. I should not like to see the bill pass in its present form; I do not think it will be of advantage to the country. This opinion is shared by many hon. members, especially those who sit on my side of the House. This bill is a retrograde step and will decrease the amount of health and medical service available to people of this country. Bill C-68 has been in the works now for over a year. That, I think, is a pretty good indication that there is something wrong with it. It has been through committee and has been amended slightly, but it is still nowhere near the sort of bill it should be.

Not long ago the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), seconded by myself, proposed an amendment which if passed would have hoisted the bill for six months. We did not propose our motion because we wanted to be nasty; we did it to give the government an opportunity to look more closely at the bill and, hopefully, to bring it back to the House in a form which would satisfy the majority of hon. members. That, essentially, is why we proposed our amendment. We do not want to see the bill pass in its present form.

The principle of the bill is wrong. We are asking the government to take another hard look at it. The bill will not solve the problems it is alleged to solve. Although members on the front benches opposite have spoken in rambling detail on the bill, they have not convinced us that it is satisfactory. We say that the bill will not solve health problems in this country. I think the general idea behind it would have been more acceptable and it would have received our consent if it had provided for improved, basic health care for all the people of Canada, since health care is extremely important and a basic human right to which all Canadians are entitled.

We as a country are rich enough to provide such health care. The government ought to provide better health care and streamline present facilities so that all who need health care may receive it. I am sure no Canadian would begrudge paying a little extra here and there if this could be done. This bill fails principally because the government has failed to realize that one can divide the problem of the high cost of medical care into two parts. The government has put all its efforts into the cost part but has ignored the part to do with providing high quality medical care and services. In short, Mr. Speaker, the bill shows no leadership. It is a narrow-minded bill which does not take into consideration all those things which make for good health in this country.

We have a system of health care in this country which is based on the idea that if something goes wrong, we should try to fix it. We have built up a system of hospitals, doctors and insurance, all geared to waiting around for something to happen, until something goes wrong. Now that we have established the system, the government is saying to us, "We are going to save money and give you less health care." There is no provision for changing the type of health care available in this country. It is almost as if the government were treating health care as if it were potatoes. First the government decides that it will give everybody potatoes. It begins a program and supplies all the potatoes. Then, when the price of potatoes goes up, the government comes along with Bill C-68 and says, "We cannot afford to give you potatoes at these prices; we will set a limit on how many you are to get next year." Mr. Speaker, health is not like potatoes. You cannot measure it and divide it up. What is more, it does not fit easily into whatever accounting system the department is working on this year. Instead of giving us better health services, instead of showing a little leadership and imagination, the government has presented this bill. I do not like it because, as I said earlier, it gives us fewer potatoes.

We ask the government to look seriously at the bill and to listen to the important proposals and suggestions which have been made in the debate on the bill, especially by members on my side of the House. Over and over again the point has been made in the House that a number of changes can be made to our health care system which would accomplish the government's aim of saving money. They can all be made without reducing the present level of health care. Some of them may even make it better.

● (1700)

I think this bill should be studied further because of the very important and good suggestions made in this House on many occasions, particularly with regard to Bill C-68, by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), a pioneer in the health insurance field. He was implementing health care programs when the biggest health program the present minister had to deal with was acne. There have been all kinds of good suggestions for ways to replace this bill, ranging from use of paramedics to group or community clinics, from increased public education about nutrition to stricter safety standards in the work place.

I want to single out one area that I think shows this government's lack of concern for cutting down health care expenses except in the most visible ways. It is a pretty extreme example, but it points out one of the areas where the government should be concentrating its efforts. The example is mercury pollution. I read the other day that government officials are running around saying that there is no documented case of Minamata disease in either Ontario or Quebec. They cannot say for sure that anyone has it. However, there are a number of experts who have discovered symptoms of that disease in people who depend on fish from the several river systems affected by mercury pollution. The Japanese experience shows that Minamata disease takes a number of years to reach a stage where it can be diagnosed. Therefore, if we have symptoms this year we may very well have diagnosed cases next year or the year after. We have known about mercury pollution in our rivers for over six years now, and this government has done very little or nothing. I am not even going to mention the pain and suffering this horrible disease causes. Nor am I going to dwell on the costs of replacing a fisherman's livelihood, especially the Indian people who live on reservations.

These remarks are for the health care planners opposite. I just want to ask them how much they think it will cost to provide what little treatment is available for people with Minamata disease. While they are doing this, it might be good for them to keep in mind that their colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), gleefully announced the other week that he was going to allow pulp and paper plants to continue dumping mercury. They will do it a little more slowly, perhaps, but they will continue to dump it all the same. At least, they will continue to dump it until their machinery wears out. Then they will replace it with the next generation of machinery that does not use mercury.

For the price of writing-off some out-of-date plant facilities we will continue to get mercury in our rivers for another eight or nine years. Add that to the cost of providing health care to the Minamata disease victims. That is only one example where increased attention to environmental problems would have an effect on the cost of health care.

There is another area in the Northwest Territories where we spend a lot of money and which should be looked at very seriously. It has been estimated by some people in a position to know that it costs between $2 million and $3 million a year on what we call "medivacs". This situation arises because there are not enough health care facilities, hospitals, doctors, eye specialists and dentists. To evacuate to the areas where these facilities and experts are available costs the taxpayers millions of dollars. As I mentioned earlier, it costs between $2 million and $3 million a year for charter aircraft to airlift people from the north to facilities in the south. That is a lot of money.

That problem can be partly solved by building one or two more hospitals and having a few more people to work in the north. I suggest that a hospital in the Cambridge Bay-Copper Mine area would save a large number of lives. Who can put a price tag on a life? I do not think you can do it. It would certainly save the taxpayers of this country a lot of money, and a lot of families much misery and grief.

These are the areas this government should be looking at—disease prevention, paramedics, and so on—in the north. On behalf of many people in this country, I wish to register these comments against the implementation of Bill C-68. I hope that other hon. members who have similar objections will make them known to the government.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to speak at considerable length on second reading of Bill C-68. I also had the opportunity to express some very specific concerns about this bill at the committee stage. I am fortunate to serve on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. As a result, I participated in the dialogue and debate with regard to the amendments which were introduced in reference to this bill. Indeed, as the House knows, we were successful in having one amendment accepted. It requires this government to report back to parliament, before they make any substantive changes, some 18 months down the line.

Throughout the debate there has been one area that has caused me considerable concern. It is, indeed, unfortunate that any party that is concerned about a federal bill dealing with the health and welfare of Canadians should decide that at the same time they should drag in the red herring of the health and medicare situation in a particular province. This has been the tactic of the NDP. I have read some of their speeches and some of the other things they have said. There is no question but that they have made a valuable contribution to the debate. However, I see no necessity whatsoever, nor do I see any similarity in the situations when they make reference, in a most derogatory fashion, to the situation in the province of Ontario. They would have us believe that the problems faced by the province of Ontario have been generated solely by that government, that they are the authors of the piece, the architects of the piece, and therefore the responsibility rests entirely with them. They fail to recognize that in their own province of Saskatchewan, the same restraints are now being clearly demonstrated. In my view, they will become more and more apparent as the days go by.

Only recently there was evidence in the newspapers that the province of Saskatchewan, with a limited budget—they do not, after all, have the wealth of British Columbia—would probably be horror-struck, at the government level, if some cabinet ministers decided to spend an extra $100 million on welfare. Mind you, the NDP government in British Columbia did not agonize over that. After all, most of it was federal money. However, in the province of Saskatchewan $100 million is a great deal of money. To the taxpayers of British Columbia it is not a great deal of money, and to Canadians generally it is not a great deal of money.

I can say to the Liberal government that it is not a great deal of money. When the province of Saskatchewan is forced to reduce their health care budget or hospital care by $44 million, there has to be something seriously wrong with the government's operation of that province and the way in which they are managing their economy. If such be the case, it is a question of the pot calling the kettle black, and maybe the NDP members should examine conditions in Saskatchewan if, indeed, they know what is going on there.

● (1710)

I call their attention, for instance, to a report in the Globe and Mail of June 19, 1976, which states that one of the major reasons for the increase in hospital care in Saskatoon hospitals is that patients are coming in from outside points. This indicates that there is a breakdown in hospital administration in the outlying communities. What they are probably trying to do in Saskatchewan is reduce the staff employed in those hospitals. They are taking action in those situations where they have a hospital in one community, and another 10 miles or 20 miles down the road.

There are similar situations in the province of Ontario. The distances are the same; population densities are the only variants. The NDP should address itself to this question, I suggest, rather than bring in the red herring of the province of Ontario. If they are so concerned about Bill C-68, I suggest that is what they should do. Because of the criticism and comments of the NDP with reference to medicare in Ontario, the unfair, unjustified criticisms they have made, I felt obliged today to rise and defend the province of Ontario even though it is not my home province. In fairness, I feel bound to defend it, while pointing out that all is not well in the province of Saskatchewan. What are we to think when a good doctor there, Dr. Louis Brand—

An hon. Member: An ex-Conservative candidate.

Mr. Brisco: That is right. At any rate, he is a man sufficiently responsible to be chief of the emergency department of the St. Paul's Hospital in Saskatoon. He comes out with the facts and tells us that 33 per cent of the patients in St. Paul's, 40 per cent of those at the city hospital and 70 per cent of those at the university hospital, came from outside the city. This clearly shows there is something wrong with the system.

I should like to make a few comments now about Bill C-68. The evidence is there as a result of the conference between the federal minister and his provincial counterparts. The chickens have come home to roost. When the federal government, in its largesse, indicates to British Columbia that it owes the government of Canada some $750 million retroactive to 1972 or 1973, where does that put the Province of British Columbia in relation to its budget of some $2 billion? When that happens, what kind of faith can exist at the federal level in its dialogue with the provinces?

Once more we face the age-old problem of a party which has been in power too long. The arrogance is there and it will ever more be so. When there is consultation with the provinces it is always after the fact, never before the fact. That is the sickness which is ingrained in the pores of this administration. How can the government expect to get the co-operation of any province while Bill C-68 is being forced down the throats of Canadian citizens?

The inevitable is already happening. In Ontario we see proposals for increases in medicare charges. In British Columbia the situation is the same. In Saskatchewan there will unquestionably be increases in medicare costs to the province, as predicted when this bill was introduced. The chickens have come home to roost and it has been clearly demonstrated that the only hope for the provinces is to increase charges to the consumer. Who will suffer most? Who are we most concerned about at this time? Here I speak for the NDP as well as for my own party. We are concerned for the poor, we are concerned for the sick, those who will suffer most from this increase in medicare charges.

What happens? The poor get poorer, the sick get sicker, the poor get sick and the sick get poor. Let it ever be on the conscience of the Liberal government. Let them answer for the increases in medicare charges. Let these people answer as to how widows and pensioners will cope with these increases. There is the possibility that the provinces will be obliged to impose a deterrent fee applicable not just to the wealthy but to the poor. That is the type of thinking demonstrated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) at the federal level.

It was interesting to note that while the vote was being taken today, to a man members on the opposition side of the House opposed this bill. This measure has been debated as long as any other I can remember, and this has been the case for a valid reason. The reason is simply that the bill is wrong. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in a moment of truth of which he is frequently capable, I will admit, stood at his desk, banged it and said, "This bill is wrong. It is wrong, wrong, wrong." I felt that there was a demonstration by a man who felt sincerely that an injustice was being foisted upon the nation.

Our own critic, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) holds the same view as me. Other members who come from the medical profession have condemned the legislation, especially at committee level, because they can see clearly the hardship it will cause, the fiscal, financial and technical problems it will create. They realize the effect it will have on the workingman who carries the main burden of the tax load. I want it on record, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Kootenay West, along with every other member on this side of the House, is strongly opposed to the basic thrust of this bill, that he believes it to be wrong and will not support it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it was just a year ago today that the then minister of finance delivered one of his budgets of 1975 in which he announced government policy, part of which is contained in the bill before us. This policy has become clearer with every day of this past year to members of parliament and provincial governments, whether Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Social Credit. It represents a substantial pull-out on the part of the federal government from shared-cost programs, and therefore means either sharp cutbacks in services or very much greater funding by the provinces than has been the case till now.

● (1720)

As these matters have become clearer, the provincial governments have become more adamant in their opposition to the proposals outlined by the federal government in this bill, as well as in other bills that have either been introduced or proposed. Just this last week the premiers of the ten provinces met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and in public and in private expressed their complete opposition to the course being followed. I am told by reliable sources that the Prime Minister admitted to them in private conversations that the cutbacks outlined in this bill were part of a deliberate, arbitrary and unilateral decision on the part of the federal government directed toward reducing the financial participation of the federal government in shared-cost programs as part of its restraint program which restrains expenditures in certain major fields.

These are programs which to a large extent were initiated and promoted by the federal government. Indeed, as I have said on other occasions, they were forced as a result of blackmail on the provinces. What are these programs? We have hospital insurance, a tremendous program of post-secondary education, the Canada Assistance Plan, regional economic expansion, a fantastic increase in expenditure on behalf of the native people, and this medical care insurance program.

All these programs were made national in scope as a result of generous funding on the part of the federal government. The hospital insurance plan and the medical insurance plan did not become national in scope but were restricted almost entirely to within the province of Saskatchewan until the federal government, first a Liberal government and then a Conservative government headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), said to the provinces that they would pay 50 per cent of the cost of the programs if the provinces would implement such programs.

In many cases the provinces were reluctant to implement these programs. I remember when the Liberal government of Manitoba accepted the idea of hospital insurance, but then the leader of the Conservative party, later premier of Manitoba, Duff Roblin, opposed a universal hospital insurance plan that would cover everyone. At that time he said, as many people both in politics and in the professions said, "We already have voluntary plans such as Blue Cross covering most people. We do not need a bureaucratic government plan that will grow in size. All we need is a government program that will meet the premiums of people who cannot afford to join a voluntary program".

However, each province succumbed to some good arguments, and time has proven this to be an excellent program, as a result of which every person in Canada is now insured against large hospital bills. I am sure all members of this House know of families in their constituencies that have had major illness, with a hospital bill running into thousands of dollars. For years this has not been a worry for the people of Canada in the ten provinces and two territories.

What is happening now, Mr. Speaker? The federal government has given notice to the provinces that in 1980, which is the earliest it can do it, it will no longer be willing to pay 50 per cent of the cost of hospital insurance. After that time the increase that the federal government will be prepared to pay in any one year will be tied to the increase in the gross national product.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the amount of illness in the country, the number of people who fall sick, the kinds of sicknesses they are subject to, and the time they have to spend in hospital, does not depend in any way on what is happening to the gross national product. If the federal government is not prepared to pay 50 per cent of the cost, the provinces will have to choose from among a number of pretty unhappy methods of meeting the increased cost. For example, they will have to cut back on services, they will have to implement some kind of deterrent charge of so much a day spent in hospital, or they will have to meet the increased cost that will not be paid by the federal government through a subsidy out of general revenue.

The provinces are hoping, just as much as the federal government, that the increased costs in the year 1980 will not be in the neighbourhood of 20 percent, as they have in recent years, but that they will be half that. Nevertheless, each province is looking at ways in which the increased costs can be reduced, if not eliminated. Some have had considerable success in new programs, though they have no assurance that they can succeed entirely. They do not know what the rate of inflation will be, any more than they know what the rate of illness will be. Indeed, the federal government has a great deal more responsibility, authority and ability for dealing with inflation increases every year than any provincial government, yet the federal government has already given notice that beginning in 1980 it is going to restrict the amount it will pay to cover any increase in the cost of hospital insurance.

● (1730)

At the same time, as I say, they insist on sticking pretty closely to a policy under which they are prepared to pay 50 per cent of the cost of hospitalization in acute-bed hospitals, while they are not prepared to pay for any of the costs, or virtually none of the costs for alternate methods of caring for ill people, which involves such things as nursing homes, convalescent homes and visiting nurses, any one of which is substantially less in cost than the intensive care hospital bed for which the federal government has been paying 50 per cent of the cost.

There is a similar situation in the field of post-secondary education. The federal government has given notice that it will limit the amount it will pay for post-secondary education. At least, it will limit the increase in the amount it will pay for post-secondary education to 15 per cent in any year. Post-secondary education costs have been going up substantially more than 15 per cent in each year. In the 30 years since the end of World War II we have done a fantastic job of improving the educational facilities and the educational opportunities provided the people of this country.

This is not the time to discuss it, but a recent report prepared by an examining committee appointed by the OECD authorities detailed what the provinces and the territories in Canada have done to improve the educational facilities in this country. The number of young students attending high school has more than doubled, percentage-wise, over what it was in the years up to and including

World War II. The number of people attending our universities has grown fantastically. Community colleges which did not exist until a few years ago are now functioning and growing in every province in this country. We have built technical institutions in this country for thousands of young people. We have retrained hundreds of thousands of Canadians whose education was such that they could not fill the jobs that were vacant in this country.

Despite that, this federal government has again, in the field of post-secondary education, announced that it is restricting the size of the increase it will pay in any year for such education to 15 per cent. Was that done on the basis of an examination of the needs? No. Was there consultation among the federal government, the department of the Secretary of State, which is the department responsible for what Ottawa does in the field of post-secondary education, and the provincial departments of education and/or the colleges and the universities? No. There was no formal discussion, and so far as I can find out there was no informal discussion. Yet there is to be a limit of 15 per cent on what the federal government will pay out, beginning this year.

Is this being done because it is good for education? No, not at all. Why? It is because the federal government set itself the goal of restricting the increase in its expenditures for the year 1976-77 to 16½ per cent, regardless of the consequences of that policy. The government was not satisfied with simply saying it would restrict the increase of expenditures for post-secondary education to 15 per cent. It has now decided to cut back on the actual payout to the provinces for post-secondary education.

Let me place on the record what that meant as of just a month ago. Although we have had no formal announcement, I believe the situation in fact is much worse than will be indicated in the figures I will now put on the record. The provinces, in the field of post-secondary education, will lose in two ways in the year 1976-77. First, the application of the 15 per cent ceiling which Ottawa has annouced will mean a payments shortfall of $63.1 million for all provinces, combined, for the coming year. Second, the newly-announced cut-back in cash payments will mean an additional reduction of $110.7 million for the ten provincial governments. Thus, the total shortfall resulting from these two figures will be $173.8 million.

Because of the decision to cut back on cash payments, the expected or true ceiling on federal payments for 1976-77 will not be the 15 per cent announced by the federal government but, in fact, will be 7.7 per cent for each of the ten provinces. As a result of the federal cutbacks, Ottawa's total share of shareable post-secondary costs in 1976-77 will be just 45.5 per cent instead of the normal 50 per cent. Of course, Ottawa counts 4.357 percentage points of provincial personal income tax and one point of provincial corporation income tax for which the provinces take political responsibility, along with related equalization and revenue-guarantee payments as part of the federal share. If these amounts are netted out, the real federal share, in terms of cash payments, is only 15.1 per cent of total shareable post-secondary education costs. The provinces affected most seriously by the double impact of the 15 per cent ceiling and the cash payment cutback are as follows: Ontario, which loses a total of $80.4 million; Quebec, which loses a total of $42.5 million; B.C., which loses a total of $22.6 million; and Alberta, which loses a total of $9.4 million.

I place those figures on the record partly for the benefit of members like the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), who spoke before me, who seemed to feel that we usually criticize the government for purely partisan political purposes. I would point out to the hon. member that respecting the four provinces I used in my illustration, Ontario and Alberta have Conservative governments, Quebec has a Liberal government and British Columbia has a Social Credit government.

Mr. Blackburn: Of sorts.

Mr. Orlikow: Of sorts, as my colleague so rightly points out. About a month ago, since the facts about the real cutback became known, some questions have been asked by members of the official opposition, which were replied to by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). It is interesting to look at the questions which were asked, not purely for information purposes and not just for the replies which were given, but for the language used in the replies. I shall place the questions and the answers on the record, because the answers show that the ministers felt that the provinces had to be taught a lesson in restraint, that the federal government believed the provinces may have submitted false or overly high estimates of the costs, and that the federal government has no immediate plan to make up the cuts in cash payments and may wait for three or four years before paying the outstanding amounts.

● (1740)

The Secretary of State suggested that the provinces were reluctant to meet with him to begin negotiations on a new financing scheme. There is no truth in that at all. Let us just look at a couple of the questions and answers that were given. On May 14, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) asked the Secretary of State the following question:

> It has to do with his admission of a $111 million mistake in estimating the payments due to the provinces for the financing of post-secondary education under the Fiscal Arrangements Act. What justification does the minister have for reneging on the agreement with the provinces to pay the full amount calculated under Section 6 of this act in respect of post-secondary education?

The minister replied:

> First of all, Mr. Speaker, the notion of an admission of a mistake is the contribution of the CBC, not mine. I have never admitted to a mistake. It was not a mistake. It was one the realities of a restraint program.

He went on to say:

> We shall be paying 50 per cent of the operating cost of post-secondary institutions. What is at issue here is the rate at which we shall be paying over the next three years.

Then the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands asked a supplementary question, and the minister said:

> As to the time frame, that is a matter I shall be discussing with the provinces . . . It is not a question of error. We are talking here about estimated costs. The estimate offered by the provinces may in fact be higher than the real costs. We have a certain estimate—it happens to be a bit lower than the provincial one—but neither has been confirmed.

In other words, the Secretary of State is saying in his answer that the provinces inflated their estimates of cost, not just one province but all the provinces. I suggest that if the minister really believed that the place to deal with that was at meetings, either his meeting with ministers of education of the provinces or with his officials sitting down with the appropriate officials from the provinces and showing them where they had inflated their costs, that is the road he should have taken instead of giving some kind of rambunctious answer to an MP in this chamber.

The same day, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) asked a question about the same matter. He suggested it might be an idea to have a federal-provincial meeting to try to delineate the goals of post-secondary education, or education in general. He asked the minister how he responded to that idea. The Secretary of State said:

Mr. Speaker, I have responded sympathetically to that idea. I think it is a sensible and constructive idea. I have not at this point had any response to the idea from the provinces.

I do not believe for a moment that the provinces would not be prepared to discuss the whole question of education costs, particularly at the university and community college level, with the federal government. I am sure that they would be more than happy to discuss with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) what he and the federal government are doing to the provinces with the unilateral and cruel cutbacks in their expenditures for post-secondary education, having induced the provinces to get in the business of building and staffing community colleges, a large percentage of whose students consist of people whose expenses are being paid through manpower training grants.

These students are now being told that the federal government is cutting back on the number of seats it is prepared to pay for in the coming year. All the provinces have the unenviable task of deciding whether to cut back on the number of courses which they offer, which means telling a number of professors and teachers that they will no longer be employed, or meeting the increased cost out of their general revenues.

On May 17, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands asked questions of the President of the Treasury Board. She asked him how he could justify the deliberate tabling of misleading estimates designed to show restraint in the federal government's spending program, when he knows that final payments under this program for 1976-77 will be much higher and that what he is trying to pass off as restraint is in fact a deferred payment of an expenditure mandated by law. The President of the Treasury Board replied in part:

We had, under the law, the privilege of postponing payment of certain debentures to show to all levels of government that we are serious about our restraint program and indirectly encourage them to do likewise. Those expeditures will be settled when the government deems it opportune.

I have dealt with the question of post-secondary education and the way the federal government has cut back in this field, unilaterally, because it is one more example in the growing list of programs sponsored originally and encouraged by the federal government of a program which is now being virtually destroyed, certainly being cut back drastically and unilaterally by the federal government. They are breaking the faith, they are reneging on promises which they made to the people of Canada and to the provinces over the years. Of course, it is two years away from the next federal election and Liberal governments have learned from experience that if they can show some form of repentance—

Mr. Saltsman: On their deathbed.

Mr. Orlikow: —they often have a miraculous recovery. This time it will need a miracle for them to recover, but that is what they will try. What they have done in hospital insurance and post-secondary education is, as I have tried to indicate in some detail, to prepare the poor people who have been supported under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan for what they propose to do to them. Some of us were here when that plan was brought in with such great fanfare. It was one more part of the Liberal program of providing total social security to meet the needs of the people of Canada, one more plank in that program of promises began away back.

Mr. Saltsman: Thirty years ago.

Mr. Orlikow: No, back in 1919.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was born.

Mr. Orlikow: That bill, which was to be so important to Canadians, is going to disappear. In its place we will have a social services act which will take the place of the Canada Assistance Plan. It is going to provide a guaranteed income to all Canadians.

● (1750)

The provinces are not completely stupid, although the Prime Minister may often think so. How many times do the provinces have to be burned before they will recognize that they are dealing with a pyromaniac? Whether the governments of the provinces are Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Social Credit, they are beginning to ask questions. They are saying that this sounds great, and that the federal government is telling the public that it will have to look after, not only the people on welfare, the old and the needy, but also the working poor, but let the government give us some of the nitty-gritty and answer some of the small questions, like who is going to qualify and how much they will get. Are they going to get $50 a week, are they going to get something near the poverty level, or is Ottawa going to pay 50 per cent or 60 per cent? I am speaking from memory, but I think I am not far wrong when I say that Newfoundland has an unemployment rate of 18 per cent. Newfoundland cannot pay 50 per cent.

Is the federal government going to be prepared to pay more, and if we are going into this program will the government come back in 1977, 1978 or 1981 and say that it has changed its mind and will no longer pay the 50 per cent or whatever it will have promised to pay? Will it pay only 20 per cent, 30 per cent, or 40 per cent?

We want to know these things before we get involved. Despite all the meetings of first ministers, of finance ministers and of health ministers, the provincial ministers still do not have the facts, and they are not going to get any more information from this government than the government is prepared to give them—and that is damned little. Let us look at this medical insurance bill. We opposed this bill from the day it was first mentioned in that infamous budget of a year ago, and so have the provinces. I do not know why the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) digressed from a pretty constructive and positive speech to attack the Saskatchewan government. It is caught in the same bind as every other government, whether federal, provincial or municipal, and it is trying to cut back on increased costs.

The provinces have not agreed, and we oppose this bill. We have held it up. We have been accused of filibustering. While we are accused of that publicly, privately the provinces are told by officials not to worry, that there is time, that agreements will be worked out, that the deal will be sweetened and that the federal government will look after the provinces within the next few months. We do not trust this government, and we do not trust the statements it makes in public. Nor do we trust the statements it makes in private, and it is for that reason that we will continue to oppose this bill.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING STATEMENT ON TV CONCERNING AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS AND PILOTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time on a question of privilege. It has been brought to our attention by representatives of the media that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intends to go on national television this evening. He intends to interrupt the regular programming on both national television networks at nine o'clock to make a statement to the country with respect to air traffic controllers, airline pilots and the situation in Canada in that respect.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) made a statement in the House today, and the Prime Minister sat through that statement and listened to it with all of us. We had occasion to question the minister. There was a vigorous question period after his statement, and under those circumstances, for the Prime Minister to pre-empt, as he is apparently now able to do, network time all by himself on a matter of such significance that it was discussed in the House of Commons and has been the subject matter of the question period for many days, offends all the rules of the House. It offends not only the rules of the House, the privileges of hon. members, the rights of parliament and the position of parliament in the scheme of things, but I say, with respect, that it also offends good taste, common sense, and involves a downgrading of this parliament. This is not the first time this sort of thing has happened, and if it is going to continue, I think it is time this House looked into its privileges with respect to the Queen's first minister appearing here first to make his statements.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just a minute. I still have the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is not a question of privilege.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The matter which disturbs me is that the Prime Minister has—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest the hon. member should come to his question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Before six o'clock.

Mr. Basford: Let's have a little free speech so that we can reply.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What do you know about it? The Prime Minister is going on television and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My submission is that the privileges of this House are being infringed upon, and that parliament is being bypassed by a Prime Minister who at one time called members of parliament nobodies outside parliament, and now we are being called nobodies when we are here. Further, the Prime Minister must have known, as he sat in his place here today, that he was going to pre-empt that network time, and if that is the case he did not have the common courtesy to tell hon. members that that would be done. More than that, he has not had the common courtesy to tell the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that this would be done, or to consider the importance of giving the other parties in this House the opportunity to appear and comment as well. This is a matter for the consideration of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I am raising this matter now, but I do not suggest that you should deal with it now. I am raising it as a matter of notice to the Chair that this is a matter which may well be pursued on a later occasion. I would like the right to pursue it on a later occasion and to reserve the right of other hon. members to pursue it, including the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) who had the bad manners to rise when I was in the middle of a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I trust that hon. members opposite who have been talking about free speech will not cut me off by the clock. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did not cite one Standing Order or one rule of this House relating to this question of privilege. There is no question of privilege.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been in this House every day this week during the question period to be examined and cross-examined on the air traffic controllers' situation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) made a statement on motions in this House today on behalf of the government, which includes the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: The matter was fully canvassed by the Minister of Transport on behalf of the government and the Prime Minister. The opposition parties replied to his statement, and the minister was examined and cross-examined. That, Mr. Speaker, is totally in accordance with the rules of the House. However, I am not aware of any rule of this House or any question of privilege which says that any member of this House, the peoples representatives, be he Prime Minister or no, is not entitled at any time to go outside this House and speak to the people he represents and is supposed to be reaching. It is, surely, no question of privilege, in a free society and a free parliament, for one of its members, including the Prime Minister to go out and speak to the people of this country.

● (1800)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) said he did not know what rule the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was citing in raising this question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Cite it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend has asked me to cite one. Mr. Speaker, I cite a very simple rule—the rule of fairness.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Liberals are all leaving.

Mr. Paproski: They do not care about parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé), either in her own capacity in that portfolio, or maybe she is Acting Secretary of State—and I would be delighted if she were—that the suggestion be made to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation right away that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is given free and extra time tonight for a political broadcast, equal or commensurate time be given to the other party leaders in this House. Mr. Speaker, I make that plea simply on the basis of the rule of fairness, which I think is still in existence.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member's question may be a question of propriety, but in my opinion it is not a question of privilege and I consider the case closed.

At 6.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 25, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF THE EXTENSION OF BILINGUAL TRAFFIC CONTROL UNTIL AUTHORIZED BY PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43, the urgency and pressing circumstances of which are quite apparent. I therefore move:

That as a basis for resumption of air transport the government forthwith put before the House a motion that there be no alteration and extension of bilingual air traffic control unless and until parliament has enacted legislation to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REASON INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED DEFRAUDING OF COMMISSION IN OTTAWA AREA CEASED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity stemming from events occurring subsequent to the matter I raised Monday with regard to the fact that three Unemployment Insurance Commission investigators and the RCMP were working full time on an investigation into defrauding the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the Ottawa area and examining the possibility that such defrauding was connected with trafficking in narcotics.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration advise the House immediately as to why, with his approval, removal was made within 24 hours of the matter being raised in the House Monday of the Unemployment Insurance Commission investigators working full time on this case, and finally, that the Minister advise the House all reasons why Real Meilleur, chief benefit control officer, and two former Ottawa police officers, Mike Richard and Claude Charron, were instructed to cease forthwith any further investigation into this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROPOSED IMPARTIAL HEARING FOR SERGEANT JOSEPH PRIMEAU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 with reference to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to emphasize, as a matter of principle, another example of unnecessary, unjust and arbitrary treatment of a fine officer, Sergeant Joseph L. N. Primeau, who completed almost 23 years of good service to the force.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That Joseph L. N. Primeau be given a fair and impartial hearing and review of the circumstances involved in his discharge, which circumstances involved, among other things, further ramifications of the Securex matter, which has had widespread repercussions on the force, and which has graphically illustrated certain policy deficiencies and weaknesses in the upper echelons of the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Now that it has been possible to compare more carefully the two versions of the terms of reference, the one agreed to by all parties involved and the new one prepared for the two new commissioners, could the minister explain why it was decided to change those terms of reference, and in particular, would the minister be prepared to re-issue the terms of reference using the wording which was agreed to by all concerned, the Ministry of Transport, the Treasury Board and the air traffic controllers, when they met in Newfoundland two weeks ago?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that I believe there are only two changes of any significance of which I am aware. One is the potential for issuing interim reports, and the other is the removal of the specific reference to implementation costs in the body of the document, whereas it would, as I indicated in answer to questions earlier, be capable of comment by the commissioners under subparagraph (e) of the terms.

However, I should say that in my discussions on Wednesday evening with the representatives of the controllers I made it quite clear that in our view these were not significant changes in that everything was still before the commissioners and there was no great demand at that point for a change of the terms, but I certainly indicated that I was prepared to entertain discussions along those lines if in fact the controllers do indicate a preference for a somewhat different form.

REASON FOR ELIMINATION OF COST FROM TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I think the House would be interested in knowing why the reference to costs in particular was deleted from the terms of reference for the Sinclair-Chouinard inquiry, and it is obviously clear that a suggestion which creates a capacity to comment upon those matters is not at all the same as a requirement to comment on those matters. I should like to ask the minister to tell us now specifically why there was a deletion of the requirement to comment on the cost factor, and whether he would be prepared to give us an undertaking that such a requirement would be reinserted in the terms of reference?

● (1110)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, this matter is being discussed with the controllers. I should think that is the proper place for the discussion about the terms of reference to take place rather than across the floor of this House at the present time. I say that with full knowledge of the interests of hon. members in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: If hon. members opposite would wait for a moment perhaps they would get some information. What I have said to the hon. Leader of the Opposition when he asked for the reasoning is that, first of all, it was in order to emphasize that the key role of the commission is very much related to the safety and operational efficiency aspects of any proposal for air traffic control that it seemed appropriate not to throw another item into that particular section of the area; second, to give the commission some greater freedom about how much it did want to get into the cost question. I am prepared to say the real issue of what it will cost if further certain steps are taken is one upon which we will certainly be interested in having full information. I am prepared to undertake that we will make our estimates of costs available to members here, too, as we have them and before we take further steps. In any case, apart from the work of the commission we are prepared to make it quite clear what the costs are and, therefore, what it is what we are prepared to pay for the specific further implementation of bilingualism.

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT ADVERTISEMENT CONCERNING DISPUTE OVER BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is not at all presumptious of me to suggest that the House of Commons itself is very much interested in this question of costs and that we would be more satisfied with a finding on the question of costs that came from the inquiry rather than simply from the minister himself. In light of that I would express the hope that the item might be reinserted in the terms of reference as a result of the interest of the House of Commons, bearing in mind that we, as well as the controllers and the minister, have an interest in this matter.

My supplementary question relates to the approach of the government toward the goal of trying to maintain an atmosphere of calm and avoid the inflammation of this dispute which has already become too seriously inflamed. In that light, I ask the minister why he felt it necessary to take the extraordinary step of issuing advertisements over his signature, paid for by the government of Canada, setting forth one side—the government's side, of this dispute—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —and whether he would not agree that this kind of advertisement by the government of Canada will serve to inflame relations between the parties—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —and if he would not agree specifically to desist from that kind of advertisement until there has been some resolution of this matter?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in my view what is contained in the advertisement is an explanation of fact and of the truth. I thought it was not just our side but perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition's side as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I shall certainly try to do everything I can to avoid inflaming or inciting any additional feeling on this issue. But it should be obvious to all hon. members that, because of a great deal of misunderstanding and misdepicting of what we are doing and a certain amount of aversion to basic principles and policies, the country is aflame with antagonism toward fundamental Canadian facts like bilingualism. It will be important for all members of this House including, I hope, hon. members opposite, in support of bilingual policy to make it known throughout this country that our whole approach to any extension of bilingual air traffic control has always, as stated specifically, been: only when and if consistent with safety. But, given that consistency, we believe there are some rights of importance to francophones in this country, particularly in the province of Quebec, and I ask hon. members opposite to remember that.

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I would like to make it very clear to the minister that the matter of bilingualism is not at stake within the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

My question, Mr. Speaker, is whether the minister will not recognize that the kind of advertisement which was run this morning, coupled with the tone of some of the remarks unfortunately made by the Prime Minister in his speech on the matter, has served to inflame this situation. Would he not agree? I make this plea to him as one whose interest is in trying to achieve a resolution of this question and avoid any inflammation of questions relating to bilingualism. Bilingualism is not at issue. Would he please accept the plea of this side of the House not to engage in actions which are bound to be interpreted by the pilots and controllers as inflaming the situation, and would he desist from actions or advertisements of this kind in future?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition noticed another ad in that same paper which he was waving, which is an example of another, basic problem in this country. I see the Leader of the Opposition nods his head about that. Now, what I should like to ask him is if he would—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Answer questions; do not ask.

Mr. Lang: —in response to his question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a natural and strong temptation to engage in debate over this question. I suggest we should keep to questions; therefore the questions ought to come from the opposition side, and not from the government side.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that that was rather a manner of speaking, not an indication that I expect the Leader of the Opposition to respond in this forum.

What I wished to say was this: I would be delighted to receive from the Leader of the Opposition any indication on whether any of the matters contained in that ad are wrong, false or anything but plain statement of fact, which is very much needed. I say to him that if there is to be an understanding of this issue throughout this country so that, indeed, bilingualism policies may be supported, it will be important for all facts to be known by the people of this country. If opposition to what we are apparently doing is based on failure to understand that a commission has been appointed, that we have put safety first, that we will take no steps if safety is jeopardized, that at present there is only a limited amount of air traffic control bilingually in five airports, going on to seven and only for visual flight rules; if it is based on the belief that there is danger in the skies over Winnipeg because there is bilingual air traffic control there now, and if those beliefs have been put abroad by a lot of people, some of whom have done it perhaps accidentally but some of whom may have done it without any good intent, it is important for us to make facts known and to make these factual statements. I will be pleased to have from the Leader of the Opposition any indication of what specifically is wrong in the ad or ought not to be included in it.

● (1120)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what is wrong in the ads is that they add to the atmosphere of confrontation in which, on one side, the pilots and the controllers see the government as being opposed to the interests of the pilots and the controllers. All I ask is that the government of Canada act in a way that is not inspired by a stubborn desire to state its own case, but inspired instead by a determination to achieve a resolution of this problem. In order to try to achieve that kind of climate, will the minister consider desisting from this type of ad or from statements by other of his members which he must surely know will simply inflame relations between people whom he must bring together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe that on reading the ad, if one is in touch with people across this country, one will understand the extreme misconceptions which occur across this country on this issue and which, therefore, have people inflamed against what we are doing, even though what we are doing, if properly depicted, has the full agreement and support, as I read it, of reasonable members opposite, including the Leader of the Opposition. The more important point right now might be for the Leader of the Opposition to indicate, as he did to the nation last night, that he does in fact support what we are doing because we have put security first, because we are saying to the pilots and controllers, "now, let us get back to work; we are taking no steps until the commission is over and taking no steps until safety is assured." With that kind of support from the Leader of the Opposition, the day of traffic flying again in this country will come just that much sooner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF COST IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in his last two answers the minister appealed, on the one hand, for understanding and, on the other, demonstrated the need to provide more facts. I remind him that one of the essential facts required for those who support the principle of bilingualism is to know the real cost in advance. If that is not known, the whole principle subsequently becomes undermined.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say that seriously. I refer the minister to the answer he gave to me on Wednesday when I first pointed out the change in the terms of reference of the commission involving costs. He seems to have changed his mind a bit since then. He said on Wednesday, and I quote:

It might not want to pursue to the ultimate limit the question of total additional costs; —

The minister said at that time that was the reason for the government not now including in its terms of reference the question of costs. I would like to get a commitment from him now that the government will look once again at the question of costs in defence of the principle of bilingualism and make that a mandatory requirement for this commission to investigate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret the diversion to this particular issue because, in the end, the impression will be left that in some way there is a lack of support for what we are in essence doing here. Therefore, I repeat what I did say to the Leader of the Opposition, that I really believe that the negotiation of this dispute between ourselves and the controllers—where, after all, the first terms of reference were developed—is the appropriate place for these discussions to be held. I indicate that, quite apart from what the commission might do with regard to costs under its general terms, I was prepared to do more specifically on our own part before action was taken; I should have thought that was enough to satisfy them.

If they want me to go further and say I will put on the table before the controllers that we re-include the cost expression up in the earlier paragraph rather than in the lower one, I will be glad to do that in order to make it quite clear to hon. members opposite they ought not to deflect attention to such an issue as that. Obviously, at certain points in time bilingual programs in this country will cost more than unilingual programs. We will know that; we will want to state that very clearly and we will want to defend those costs clearly and expressly and it will not be a part of this party's program at any time to hide behind the ignorance of costs but rather to know those costs, to support them and to fight for them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The minister is obviously desperate and trying to deflect attention from the issue. I would remind him that he changed unilaterally the terms of reference; he did not consult the unions involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If we now have his assurance that costs will be reinstated, then those who are committed to the principle are just as prepared as is the minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Broadbent: I was pleased to hear the Leader of the Opposition assert this, too. All the parties are committed to the principle of bilingualism. But we want to look at it honestly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON ALLEGED BREACHES OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Since goodwill is obviously a pre-requisite to reaching an acceptable solution to this labour dispute, would the minister assure the House that current violations of existing MOT regulations as they pertain to bilingual air traffic control in the Province of Quebec will be looked into and corrected, because this is one area of concern expressed both by the pilots and by the air traffic controllers. Will the government give a commitment that those violations will be investigated and stopped immediately?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman must have missed my opening remarks in answer to the Leader of the Opposition. I had already indicated a willingness on Wednesday night to review the terms of reference with the controllers and they did not show great interest in having this particular section reinstated. That is an important fact. He should realize that this is a matter that will be the subject of negotiation. I have now made the fullest statement I can possibly make about what I am willing to put on the table in those discussions.

I can also say that the incidents which were brought to our attention—and there were, I believe, a total of six in a period of about a week, two or three weeks ago—where an improper and irregular use of language was reported, have been the subject of investigation. Up to this point we have been able to verify the existence of four cases in which French appeared to have been used in IFR communication, contrary to the regulations. We are following up that investigation with appropriate action. We are on the verge of having the necessary information regarding what has happened to enable us to take proper steps and we will do that. So I do give the House an assurance that our regulations must be adhered to; that while we are trying to make progress with bilingual air traffic control once safety is assured, it is a fundamental principle that as long as the regulations prohibit the use of a language, that must be the guide for all controllers. That is what I have said time and time again, and I went to Montreal to say it to the controllers there who had been on the edge of some violations.

REASON FOR CHANGE IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL RELATING TO SIMULATOR TRIALS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is addressed to the Minister of Transport. There are other ambiguities in the terms of reference to which I should like to refer. There seems to be some ambiguity as to the manner in which the new commissioners are being asked to deal with procedures developed in the simulator trials and the manner in which Mr. Keenan was being asked to deal with them. Could the minister explain the difference and why it was decided that he should change the manner of dealing with procedures, if only—and this seems to be the most important part of the whole business—to restore confidence which has been completely eroded?

● (1130)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the changes should indeed restore complete confidence. If the hon. member is referring to differences between the terms of reference when Mr. Keenan was appointed and the terms of reference now for the new commissioners, most of the changes were proposed and agreed upon for the Keenan commission prior to Mr. Keenan's resignation. Therefore, most of them were made as a result of suggestions or requests by the controllers themselves to which we, in our usual flexible way, to try to accommodate their wishes, were willing to agree.

ALLEGATION LACK OF ADHERENCE TO LANGUAGE REGULATIONS BY CONTROLLERS—REASON FOREIGN PILOTS BOYCOTTING CANADIAN AIR SPACE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think one could take issue with a statement of that sort just given off the cuff, but I should like to ask the minister whether he could comment on the report coming from the Montreal area control centre that language use regulations are not being respected or enforced. I wonder whether he would explain if this is perhaps the reason foreign air pilots have decided to boycott Canadian air space—because they are being confused and endangering their passengers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Outside of the six incidents to which I referred earlier, of which four have been verified by the investigation to this point, there is no evidence of any substantial deviation from our rules in the Mirabel and Dorval areas where the incoming activity of a foreign nature, and indeed of Canadian transporter travel, occurs. There have been some rather more complicated situations arising at St. Hubert and they also have been subject to investigation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say what attitudes and positive matters he is going to take to the meeting that he is going to have this afternoon which will calm the atmosphere and enable negotiations to take place?

EFFECT OF DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN THE TWO COMMISSIONERS INQUIRING INTO SAFETY OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it relates to a statement he made out of the House after the tabling of the terms of reference. As I understand the statement, bearing in mind the commission is a two man commission and the possibility that there could be a difference of opinion, with no third person to break the tie, so to speak, is it the position of the government that in the event of a difference of opinion between the two commissioners this would be taken by the government to be an indication, as the outcome of the commission, that it was not safe to extend bilingual air traffic control? I ask this because I think it is important that we all understand the parameters of the commission's considerations.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is important to understand that all along, as we have developed the program for establishing procedures for possible IFR flight control in the Montreal area, we have asked for the participation of the controllers and pilots and indicated that we did not see how we could proceed unless there was at the end, when we had the procedures ready, a broad consensus that the procedures were satisfactory and safe. We had always counted upon having to persuade reasonable individual pilots and controllers of the safety of our procedures. So I have no trouble in saying about the commission that safety is too important a matter to say that we could proceed in any way if there is any significant dissent, and the commissioners' dissent would certainly be significant. We would therefore need the approbation of the commission and the commissioners.

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF LABOUR CONCERNING PROSECUTION OF STRIKING PILOTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which has to do with the atmosphere that we were discussing a few moments ago. The Minister of Labour indicated yesterday that he was prepared to issue warrants under the Canada Labour Code to pilots who failed to return to work. I understand the position of the government with respect to breaches of collective agreements and all those things, but in view of the Prime Minister's admonition to "cool it", which I assume applies to the Minister of Transport, if it should apply, and to the Minister of Labour and all others, is the minister going to speak to his colleague the Minister of Labour with respect to these statements, which I think can only help inflame a situation which is a pretty serious one in this country? If he has not done so, would he do so in terms of trying to bring some peace to the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Labour did not go out of his way to volunteer any such statement but rather responded to a question about what he would do as a matter of duty. I would say broadly speaking that what we want, of course, is as reasonable and positive an atmosphere as we can establish. On the other hand, there is the law, and the law is there to be enforced; we have certain obligations in that regard.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF ICNAF CONFERENCE AND AGREEMENT WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move from airline traffic to fish traffic in Canada. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Fisheries.

Could the minister advise the House and Canada fishermen what optimism they can expect from the ICNAF conference which has just ended in Montreal and what is the position of rosefish fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and eastern Canada, following the agreement between the Soviet Union and Canada which he recently signed in Moscow on behalf of Canada?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the conference which has just ended in Montreal yielded excellent results for Canada. ICNAF member countries have accepted that special efforts should be made to rebuild the stocks; thus the total rosefish catch will decrease from 985,000 down to 697,000 tons for the year 1977. On the other hand, Canada's share will be comparatively higher. As for the exchange of rosefish and capelin between our country and the Soviet Union, there was indeed an agreement that 14,000 tons of the Soviet quota would be transferred to Canada, as well as 1,500 tons of the Cuban quota in exchange for our support for a higher capelin quota for the Soviet Union.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM SOVIET UNION

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to underline the presence in your gallery of a delegation from the Soviet Union.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to underline the presence in your gallery of a distinguished delegation from the Soviet Union to the recent ICNAF conference, which was led by their able deputy minister, Mr. Kamentsev.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF LANDING RIGHTS WITH ICNAF COUNTRIES FOLLOWING EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). May I ask him whether at any time preceding, during or following the ICNAF conference discussions took place with member countries of ICNAF respecting landing rights for these countries after we have declared our jurisdiction over the 200 mile economic zone?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the hon. member means landing rights for fishery products, not for repairing vessels. Normally, this matter would not come under the terms of reference of the ICNAF commission; it would be the subject of bilateral discussions and is part of the ongoing discussions within the framework of our bilateral treaties with six of the ICNAF nations.

* * *

ENERGY

ELLIOT LAKE URANIUM MINE—POSSIBILITY GOVERNMENT WILL REQUEST SAFER METHOD OF OPERATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of energy, but in his absence may I direct it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. In view of the large expansion program at Elliot Lake uranium mine and the ensuing waste disposal problems, has the Atomic Energy Control Board demanded that the company must utilize safer methods of operation, such as increased and continuously monitored ventilation, recycling of waste water and backfilling of surface pollutants underground, in order that we do not have a repeat of the severe health problems affecting miners at Elliot Lake?

● (1140)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Atomic Energy Control Board is constantly reviewing these standards relating to the health and safety of uranium miners. This is a shared responsibility with the provincial departments of health. I may say that the government is increasing its research programs this year by some $600,000 as they relate to continuous monitoring and improvements to the mine atmosphere, and they will work with provincial governments in this regard.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the answer that no new instructions have been given to the company about environmental safety.

* * *

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO FIND ABOVE-GROUND JOBS FOR URANIUM MINERS WHO HAVE HIGH RADIATION EXPOSURE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that as of the end of 1974, the latest figures available, some 139 employees at Elliot Lake have a high radiation exposure, some as high as three times the allowable limit, and are having difficulty in being placed in non-exposure jobs above ground, will the minister establish a special job search and job creation program for these miners who are facing extreme health hazards by continuing to work underground?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will note that suggestion and consider it.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON LEVEL OF ABSENTEEISM FOR THOSE ISSUED DAY PASSES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General which has reference to peace and security and, particularly, safety for society. It is based on a new report that in respect of day passes there appears to be an absenteeism level of approximately one-third. In light of that report, whether it is correct or incorrect as to the percentage, would the minister be prepared to give a full statement on motions covering the details of absenteeism, the action that is being taken on recommendations to tighten up the system rather than have it like a sieve?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what report the hon. member is referring. The report I have in respect of temporary absence passes is that last year they were 98 per cent to 99 per cent successful.

SUGGESTION COURT ORDER BE OBTAINED BEFORE GRANTING DAY PASS TO CONVICTED MURDERERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it was in the newspaper. Perhaps the minister would be prepared to answer this question as it is a serious one. As Bill C-84 deals with first degree murder and provides that even convicted murderers can get day passes with escorts on humanitarian grounds, and this is the law as it now stands, will the Solicitor General not agree, in view of the serious situation we dealt with in the committee and in the House, that under any circumstances, whether they are humanitarian or otherwise, when a person has been convicted of capital murder and given a life sentence, either through commutation as it exists today or under the law, there must be an order of a superior court before granting such leave? I do not think this would inconvenience anyone and would certainly provide the element of safety the public is looking for at the present time?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-84 provides that no day parole or temporary absence without escort can be granted until three years before the full eligibility date for parole. That means that for first degree murder there can be no unescorted absence until after 22 years, and for second degree murder until after seven years. If the date of full eligibility is changed by three judges of the court, as provided in the legislation, then there would be eligibility for day passes three years before the end of the eligibility date. These are very strict provisions and, at the moment, that is all we are considering.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the minister is deliberately doing this, or perhaps he is misunderstanding my question. He has answered it in one form. Let me put this specific question to him. Under Bill C-84, and this is as the law now exists, a person convicted of first degree murder may be released on a day pass with an escort. Putting aside the 15-year rule, and that is a beautiful thing to throw in as it confuses the issue, under the present circumstances will the minister not agree that under no circumstances when a person is given 25 years or life for first degree murder, whether it is of a police officer or as a result of a planned and premeditated act, shall the person be released before obtaining a judge's order, because we know how wishy-washy humanitarian grounds can be, and in this regard you just have to check the Geoffroy case?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the hon. member has made that suggestion to me. I will look at it, but I must say I cannot agree with his statement that the great majority of escorted temporary absences are not being carried out successfully. They are being carried out in accordance with the Penitentiary Act. This is a new proposal and we will look at it.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS IN ADVERTISEMENTS PUBLISHED BY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. The Leader of the Opposition has referred to the advertisement of the Minister of Transport. There also appears today a full page advertisement in the Globe and Mail sponsored by a so-called "Voice of Canada" concerning the present pilots' strike. Considering we are in the midst of a national emergency, and considering that this advertisement is riddled with vicious, false and misleading statements, is there no lawful method by which those persons sponsoring such an ad can be held legally responsible for such misleading statements?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult with the Minister of Justice to see if such an ad would fall under the heading of mischief or some other criminal offence. I think the existence of the ad indicates very clearly that this country is in very serious danger of being divided on as basic an issue as has ever divided the country in the past 34 years. I would hope that all parties in parliament and everyone in the country—

An hon. Member: The chickens come home to roost.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind all hon. members that the question as put has a rather narrow scope, namely, the legal responsibility concerning statements in the ad, and I wonder if the Prime Minister would confine himself to that answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I will consult with the Minister of Justice on this. I am somewhat disturbed by the remarks of the opposition. I was not trying to divide this House, I was trying to appeal to everybody, to every member of this House to talk to the country in the next few days and to make it understood that the issue in this regard is indeed national unity and no other issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION MOTION BE PUT PROHIBITING EXTENSION OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL WITHOUT PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on that level I will go back to the Prime Minister and ask him this question. In light of the fact that one of the problems is in unlocking the logjam which now exists, and in view of the fact that, for a variety of reasons which in any event I would not be allowed to go into, there appears to be deep distrust, suspicion and an unwillingness to accept guarantees by the government, would the Prime Minister not consider the suggestion I made earlier, that a motion be put before this House which would make this place the underwriter of the government's guarantee in terms to be set forth in the motion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think immediately of a debate in this House three years ago when the government brought the question of bilingualism before parliament, at which time opposition spokesmen of both the NDP and the Tories were suggesting this was a very decisive issue that we should not be bringing to parliament through this kind of a question. Now the hon. member is asking parliament to arbitrate in this particular case! I believe the reason members on this side said no to the hon. member's proposition is that the suggestion was, if I understood it correctly, that there be legislation by this House. That is the way his suggestion seemed to be phrased. At this stage there is no need for legislation, there is merely a need for understanding that the government's concern in respect of safety is foremost, but that we believe the people of Canada should understand that within the parameters of safety the issue is that of bilingualism and whether we believe in it in this country. That is the issue. That is why I say that, even after this strike hopefully is peacefully settled, the kind of misconception which is revealed in the ad to which the hon. member for Mississauga has referred, and the kind of misinformation that is being repeated over the airways, indicates that the issue is not the strike, but that the issue is national unity. I would hope that in this issue we have the support of every Canadian.

● (1150)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister should know better; I am not proposing any discussion or any motion dealing with bilingualism in the House. What I proposed, and what I now ask the Prime Minister if he would consider in the light of my explanation, is that this House may be in receipt of a motion proposed by the government which would underwrite the government's guarantee that no steps and no action will be taken further with regard to bilingual control unless and until certain conditions have been met and I have indicated those conditions. Let the House have the opportunity to underwrite the government's proposition in the terms of the motion as a means of trying to settle the present impasse.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I misunderstood the hon. member. I believed the hon. member had mentioned legislation. If he did not, I apologize. I thought in his earlier question he was talking about legislation. If he is referring to a motion, I would accept the suggestion, and ask the Minister of Transport perhaps to help draft a motion which, I hope, will get the unanimous consent of the House on Monday or Tuesday, if the problem is not solved before that. The motion would indicate that the House supports unequivocally the government's intention to apply its bilingual policy within any strictures required by safety regulations, or some other wording. I see the hon. member shake his head. It would indicate that safety must be first and foremost in flying passengers in this country and that it is within this first and foremost requirement that we would see how far we can go in implementing the bilingual policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Will the government consult members of this party and other parties in the House as to the terms of any such motion and discuss it with the other interested parties who have a considerable stake?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport is indicating his assent. Certainly, it would be our intention to have the minister or the House leader meet immediately, at one o'clock if possible, to draft the terms of a motion. If it can be adopted later in the day, that would indeed be very helpful. If not, we could do it for next week.

* * *

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED CHANGE IN REGULATIONS GOVERNING ISSUANCE OF PASSES TO WIVES OF MEMBERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Some years ago passes were issued to former prime ministers and their wives—not at my request nor, I think, at Mr. Pearson's request. Naturally, I am concerned over the revelations, to use the mildest term possible, as reported in the Toronto Sun of yesterday's date and the Globe and Mail of today, concerning promiscuity in the issuance of passes. In the absence of the minister concerned, who apparently admitted everything contained in the statements, I will ask just one question: Has there been any change made by Air Canada concerning qualifications on the part of spouses for passes, and why is it that a pass was issued to one described as a common law wife, an expression which of course is non-existent except in the vocabulary of certain people?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is accurate to say that that was the description used in the past. However, I will be glad to have a look at what is the current policy of Air Canada with regard to passes and to report more fully on whether there have been any changes since the time the right hon. gentleman was prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can the minister not say whether or not the rules that have applied through the years have been changed in order to meet the request of a minister?

Mr. Lang: I indicated that I do not know of any change of rules and I will be glad to determine whether or not the rules are the same. I thank the hon. member for repeating his question.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGATION LANGUAGE REGULATIONS VIOLATED BY CONTROLLERS AT DORVAL AIRPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I know that he and all hon. members agree that there has to be a maximum of trust and good faith shown by both sides in order to resolve the present situation with air traffic controllers and the Department of Transport. Therefore, in order to obtain a greater degree of trust and good faith, can the minister tell us whether in fact pilots on instrument flights communicated in French in violation of the regulations at Dorval airport and, if that has occurred, have instructions been issued for it to cease?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question put by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre was answered by the minister.

ALLEGATION AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS DO NOT HAVE BINDING COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport in an attempt to find a way through the difficulty the minister will have this afternoon when he meets with the air traffic controllers. The argument put forward by the government a week ago was that a collective agreement is in existence and, as a consequence, air traffic controllers are in breach of it. The air traffic controllers are saying that the collective agreement was conditional upon or collateral to the arrangement to set up the commission and the acceptance of Mr. Keenan, and as a consequence they do not feel they are in breach of the total agreement they had with the government. In view of that, can the minister give consideration to instructing counsel for the government when the parties reconvene on Monday in such a way that the court could be made aware of the fact that the government also realizes that there was more to this deal than just the collective agreement? With respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this might go a long way toward assuaging feelings and finding a way through the difficulty.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): These issues would be before the courts, as the hon. member has indicated, and therefore it would be wrong to argue them in any detail here. I have no doubt that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, will know what instructions to give properly to counsel in this matter. I should point out to the hon. member, however, that the question of bilingual air traffic control is not a bargainable issue and was so found by the Public Service Staff Relations Board. Our willingness to continue discussing the possibility of a commission, and all the arrangements in relation to a commission, were in that sense not technically a requirement but something we did willingly and gladly to try to continue to improve the atmosphere. Of course, it was in that way that we followed up the withdrawal of Mr. Keenan by an indication immediately that we would search for appropriate other commissioners, and of course I have now done so and appointed them.

Mr. Fraser: I appreciate the minister's reply and I understand the legal issue clearly, I think, but my point is that no matter what the narrow legal issue may be—and I know what the judge found a week ago and as a consequence the government is moving on that narrow legal issue—the traffic controllers thought they had a bigger deal than that with the government. It is the feeling that this has been forgotten, that it is not agreed to by the government, and that somehow or other in their dealings with the government the government is taking a narrow position rather than a broader one. I entreat the minister to consider this very carefully this afternoon and over the weekend, because I think if a little flexibility were used here, we might be able to find a way to get everybody back to work.

● (1200)

Mr. Lang: I think to some extent we are infringing on matters before the courts and certainly also on matters which may be discussed a few minutes from now, and which I would not particularly want to discuss here. However, I think it should be clear that we made it known immediately that whatever feelings the controllers had toward the importance of the commission, we were fully in accord with the notion that a commission should go forward and that Mr. Keenan's withdrawal was not the basis for simply forgetting about the commission. We made that clear immediately, and therefore at all times we were, as much as we could be, in keeping with the obligations which we ourselves had assumed, but which were not a matter of legal obligation.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

CONSIDERATION OF BUDGET WAYS AND MEANS MOTIONS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government House leader may I, on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), and in accordance with Standing Order 60, request Your Honour to designate the necessary orders of the day for consideration of the notices of ways and means tabled by the Minister of Finance at the time of his budget presentation.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following 50 questions will be answered today: 4,460 to 4,472 inclusive, 4,827 to 4,840 inclusive, 5,262, 5,270, 5,283 to 5,289 inclusive, 5,371, 5,470, 5,484, 5,531, 5,532, 5,555, 5,556, 5,708, 5,734 and 5,738.

[Text]

ESCAPES—DORCHESTER

Question No. 4,460—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Dorchester Penitentiary and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	2	1	8	—	—
Walkaways	—	2	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	—	5	1
without escort	3	1	6	—	5	1
Total	3	6	7	8	10	2

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—CARLTON CENTRE

Question No. 4,461—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Carlton Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

Insert Table 4461

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	1	1	—	3
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	—	1	1	—	3

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—PORTSMOUTH CENTRE

Question No. 4,462—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Portsmouth Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

[Mr. Basford.]

ESCAPES—MONTGOMERY CENTRE

Question No. 4,463—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Montgomery Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	4	2	—	—	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	2	3	7	2	—	—
Total	2	7	9	2	—	1

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—ST-HUBERT CENTRE

Question No. 4,464—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at St. Hubert Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	2	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	6	9	1	5	2	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	4	8	7	2	1	—
Total	12	17	8	7	3	—

At large (December 31, 1975): 3

ESCAPES—PARRTOWN CENTRE

Question No. 4,465—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Parrtown Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	3	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	1
without escort	—	—	—	2	—	—
Total	—	—	—	5	—	—

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—ONTARIO REGIONAL RECEPTION CENTRE

Question No. 4,466—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Ontario Regional Reception Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

ESCAPES—QUEBEC REGIONAL RECEPTION CENTRE

Question No. 4,467—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Quebec Regional Reception Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	2	1	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	1	—	—	—	—
Total	2	3	—	—	—	—

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—LAVAL

Question No. 4,468—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Laval and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	7	5	10	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	—	7	5	10	—

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—ONTARIO PRISON FOR WOMEN

Question No, 4,469—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Ontario Prison for Women and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	2	6	—	—
Walkaways	1	—	1	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	1	—
without escort	3	11	20	19	11	10
Total	4	11	23	25	12	10

At large (December 31, 1975): 17

ESCAPES—DUNGARVON

Question No. 4,470—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Dungarvon and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	3
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	1	—
Total	—	—	—	—		13

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—SPRINGHILL

Question No. 4,471—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Springhill and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	9	4	7	6	1	5
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	1	—	—	—
without escort	1	4	10	2	4	7
Total	10	8	18	8	5	12

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—WESTMORELAND

Question No. 4,472—Mr. MacKay:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Westmoreland and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	3	—	—	—	4	—
Walkaways	13	6	1	4	9	6
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	2	—	2	7	1	4
Total	18	6	3	11	14	10

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—FERNDALE

Question No. 4,827—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Ferndale and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

Order Paper Questions

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	1
Total	—	—	—	—	—	1

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—MATSQUI

Question No. 4,828—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Matsqui and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	8	13	14	12	2	6
Walkaways	1	3	5	1	1	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	6	—
without escort	12	24	33	13	2	1
Total	21	40	52	26	11	8

At large (December 31, 1975): 9

ESCAPES—MOUNTAIN INSTITUTION

Question No. 4,829—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Mountain Institution and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	6	11	17	7	5	4
Walkaways	—	1	1	2	—	2
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	4	16	15	8	10	5
Total	10	28	33	17	15	11

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—AGASSIZ CORRECTIONAL CAMP

Question No. 4,830—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Agassiz Correctional Camp and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	4	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	4	6	13	7	8	11
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	1	—	1
without escort	4	8	15	8	5	3
Total	12	14	28	16	13	15

At large (December 31, 1975): 7

[Mr. Poulin.]

ESCAPES—WILLIAMS HEAD

Question No. 4,831—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Williams Head and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	3	—	—	—	2	3
Walkaways	3	20	21	10	—	3
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	3	3
without escort	—	3	12	5	7	5
Total	6	23	33	15	12	14

At large (December 31, 1975): 7

ESCAPES—BOWDEN

Question No. 4,832—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Bowden and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	—	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	1
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	7
Total	—	—	—	—	—	9

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—DRUMHELLER

Question No. 4,833—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Drumheller and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	7	6	1	3	1
Walkaways	—	2	6	—	1	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	1	3
without escort	2	16	10	13	10	10
Total	2	25	22	14	15	14

At large (December 31, 1975): 5

ESCAPES—BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

Question No. 4,834—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at British Columbia Penitentiary and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	3	—	2	5	3	1
Walkaways	2	—	—	1	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	1	—	—	—	—
without escort	1	1	1	—	—	—
Total	6	2	3	6	3	1

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—PANDORA CENTRE

Question No. 4,835—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Pandora Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	—	3	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	—	—	—	—	3	—

At large (December 31, 1975): 2

ESCAPES—GRIERSON CENTRE

Question No. 4,836—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Grierson Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	2	5	5	1
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	5	6	3	—
Total	—	—	7	11	8	1

At large (December 31, 1975): Nil

ESCAPES—OSKANA CENTRE

Question No. 4,837—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Oskana Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	1	2	—	2
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	1	1	—	—
Total	—	—	2	3	—	2

At large (December 31, 1975): 3

ESCAPES—ALTADORE CENTRE

Question No. 4,838—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Altadore Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Nil.

ESCAPES—SCARBORO CENTRE

Question No. 4,839—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Scarboro Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	5	4	—	—
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	—	6	—	—
Total	—	—	5	10	—	—

At large (December 31, 1975): 1

ESCAPES—BURRARD CENTRE

Question No. 4,840—Mr. Reynolds:

For the years 1970 to 1975, what was the number of escapes at Burrard Centre and how many are still at large?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General):

	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
Escapes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Walkaways	—	—	—	1	5	2
Failure to return from Temporary Leave of Absence
with escort	—	—	—	—	—	—
without escort	—	—	1	—	—	—
Total	—	—	1	1	5	2

At large (December 31, 1975): 6

Order Paper Questions

RDIA OFFERS NOT ACCEPTED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND REST OF CANADA

Question No. 5,262—Mr. Brisco:

1. What was the number of RDIA net offers made and not accepted from 1969 to 1975 in (a) British Columbia (b) the rest of Canada for the (i) establishment of new industries (ii) expansion of existing industries?

2. What were the total amounts in each case for the incentives offered but not accepted?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: See table below.

Regional Development Incentives Program
Information as of September 30, 1975 for Offers Made Between April 1, 1969 and September 30, 1975
Which were Subsequently Declined or Lapsed

	Number of Offers Made which were Subsequently Declined, or Lapsed	Estimated Amount of Incentive Grants Offered
1. (a) In British Columbia
(i) New Industries*	15	$ 4,038,853
(ii) Expansion of Existing Industries	2	303,600
	17	$ 4,342,453
(b) Rest of Canada
(i) New Industries*	376	96,683,949
(ii) Expansion of Existing Industries	143	13,265,939
	519	$109,949,888

* New industries include the following categories: (a) new facility (b) new product expansion (c) expansion and new facility (d) expansion and new product expansion (e) modernization and new facility (f) modernization and new product expansion (g) new facility and new product expansion (h) expansion, modernization, new facility (i) modernization, new facility, new product expansion (j) expansion, new facility, new product expansion (k) expansion, modernization, new product expansion (l) expansion, modernization, new facility, new product expansion.

 Expansion of existing industries includes the following categories: (a) expansion (b) modernization and (c) expansion and modernization.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP APRIL 10, 1976

Question No. 5,270—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister attend an event sponsored by the Mount Royal Liberal Association on April 10, 1976 and, if so (a) did he travel by helicopter to and from Ottawa (b) who owned and who paid for the use of the helicopter?

2. If the helicopter was government owned (a) what was the entire cost to the taxpayer including all flying time and waiting time (b) what are the names and addresses of all persons who travelled in the Prime Minister's party (c) were any other helicopters used to accompany the Prime Minister and, if so, what are all the details in this regard including names of those on board exclusive of news media personnel?

3. Is the Prime Minister giving consideration to changing his past procedure of travelling to Liberal Party functions at public expense and, if not, is he prepared to immediately give such reconsideration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Yes. (a) Yes; (b) Ministry of Transport.

2. (a) $357; (b) Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, Sacha Trudeau, Mary Macdonald, Administrative Assistant to the Prime Minister, Room 214, East Block; (c) Not applicable.

3. See reply to question No. 2,333, part 3, answered October 14, 1975.

COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAM

Question No. 5,283—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Community Services Programme (Program 2) and, if so, in what amount?

2. (a) How much is allocated to Project 1, Community Water Supply and Sewage Disposal (b) how many Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (c) how many departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

3. How much is allocated to Project 2, Multi-Purpose Community Facilities, for (a) Sub-project 1, Fire Halls (b) Sub-project 2, Town Halls (c) Sub-project 3, Community Halls (d) Sub-project 4, Municipal Buildings (e) Sub-project 5, Streets (f) Sub-project 6, Gymnasiums (g) Sub-project 7, Educational Facilities (h) Sub-project 8, Potato Lake Probationary Hostel (i) Sub-project 9, Group Home for Boys-Beauval (j) Sub-project 10, Creighton-Home for Girls (k) Sub-project 11, Pinehouse Health Centre (l) Sub-project 12, Dental Clinics and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

4. How much is allocated to Project 3, Community Planning, for (a) Sub-project 1, Housing Needs Survey (b) Sub-project 2, Terrain Analysis and Photogrammetric Contour Mapping (c) Sub-project 3, Legal surveys and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $7,320,000 to the program.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $4,861,680 in DREE funds have been authorized; (b) A number of northern communities with a total population of approximately 9,000 will be served by the program. A high percentage of the population is made up of people of native ancestry. Priority is also given to the employment of northern people in the construction of individual sub-projects. Funds are not specifically allocated to people of native ancestry; (c) See reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

3. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $59,355 in DREE funds have been authorized. Two northern communities, Buffalo Narrows and Green Lake, with a total population of approximately 1,700 will be served by the sub-project; (b) As of March 31, 1976, $18,312 in DREE funds have been authorized. The community of Cumberland House, with an approximate population of 938 will be served by the subproject; (c) As of March 31, 1976, $51,374 in DREE funds have been authorized. The communities of Deschambault, Sandy Bay, and Sturgeon Landing, with a total approximate population of 1,150 will be served by the sub-project; (d) As of March 31, 1976, $23,760 in DREE funds have been authorized. The community of Turnor Lake, with an approximate population of 316 will be served by the sub-project; (e) As of March 31, 1976, $85,418 in DREE funds have been authorized. Twelve northern communities, with a total population of approximately 5,300 will be served by the sub-project; (f) As of March 31, 1976, $961,207 in DREE funds have been authorized. The communities of Beauval, La Loche and Green Lake with a total population of approximately 2,782 will be served by the sub-projects; (g) As of March 31, 1976, $204,463 in DREE funds have been authorized. The communities of Pinehouse and Wollaston Lake with a total population of 863 will be served by the sub-projects; (h) As of March 31, 1976, $84,224 in DREE funds have been authorized. The sub-project, located adjacent to the community of La Ronge, is intended to serve the eastern side of the Northern Administration District; (i) As of March 31, 1976, $3,960 in DREE funds have been authorized. The sub-project is located in the community of Beauval but intended to serve the entire population of northern Saskatchewan; (j) As of March 31, 1976, $2,680 in DREE funds have been authorized. Located in the community of Creighton, the sub-project is intended to serve the people of northern Saskatchewan; (k) As of March 31, 1976, $6,600 in DREE funds have been authorized. The sub-project will serve the community of Pinehouse which has a population of approximately 512; (l) As of March 31, 1976, $78,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) In (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k) and (l), priority is given to the employment of northern people in the construction phase of individual structures. Precise figures relating to the employment of people of native ancestry are not available. No specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is made; (ii) See response to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

4. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $18,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The sub-project is being carried out by the Northern Municipal Council under contract to the department of northern Saskatchewan; (b) As of March 31, 1976, $16,200 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The sub-project is being carried out by staff of or consultants under contract to the department of northern Saskatchewan; (c) As of March 31, 1976, $21,060 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The sub-project is being carried out by staff of or consultants under contract to the department of northern Saskatchewan; (ii) In (a), (b), and (c)(ii) above, see response to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

INDIAN RESERVE PROJECTS (PROGRAM 3)

Question No. 5,284—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Indian Reserve Projects (Program 3) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How much is allocated to (a) Project 1, Community Water Supply and Sewage Disposal (b) Project 2, Multi-Purpose Community Facilities (c) Project 3, On-Reserve Transportation Facilities and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows. 1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $5 million to the program. Approximately $3 million of this amount is allocated from DREE funds, with the remainder being committed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, the following funds have been allocated to the projects. All funds to date have been contributed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. (a) $135,000; (b) $171,000; (c) $87,000; (i) The projects are directed at assisting treaty Indians in northern Saskatchewan. The allocation of funds is 100 per cent to treaty Indians; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii)

RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM (PROGRAM 1)

Question No. 5,285—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Resource Development Programme (Program 1) and, if so, in what amount?

2. (a) How much is allocated to Project 1, Resource Development Planning (b) how many Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (c) how many departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

3. How much is allocated to Project 2, Tourist and Recreation Facilities, for (a) Sub-project 1, Campground construction improvement and relocation (b) Sub-project 2, Tourist, recreation and resource access roads (c) Sub-project 3, Legal surveys—recreation sub-division (d) Sub-project 4, boat launches (f) Sub-project 6, Wells at tourist and recreation sites (g) Sub-project 7, Septic tank pumpouts at tourist and recreation sites (h) Sub-project 8, Nuisance grounds at tourist and recreation sites and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

4. (a) How much is allocated to Project 3, Fisheries Sector development (b) how many Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (c) how many departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows. 1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $1,422,000 in DREE funding to the program.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $328,208 in DREE funds have been authorized; (b) The work is being carried out by consultants under contract to the department of northern Saskatchewan. The project will assist all the people of northern Saskatchewan. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (c) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii)

3. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $133,846 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (b) As of March 31, 1976, $154,500 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people.

Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (c) As of March 31, 1976, $23,700 in DREE funds have been authorized; i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (d) As of March 31, 1976, $36,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see response to question 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (e) As of March 31, 1976, $12,900 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (f) As of March 31, 1976, $35,369 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (g) As of March 31, 1976, $14,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see response to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (h) As of March 31, 1976, $12,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The numbers of people of native ancestry directly employed is not available. The results of the sub-project are expected to benefit all northern people. Specific allocation of DREE funds to each group is not made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

4. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $603,390 in DREE funds have been authorized; (b) Over 20 people of native ancestry are employed directly year-round in the project with approximately 15 more employed in summer months. The project is aimed at assisting over 700 northern fishermen, of whom approximately 95 per cent are people of native ancestry. Specific DREE funds have not been allocated to each group; (i) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM (PROGRAM 2)

Question No. 5,286—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Community Economic Development Programme (Program 2) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How much is allocated to Project 1, Economic Development Planning and Feasibility Studies, for (a) Sub-project 1, Development Unit—Economic Development Branch (b) Sub-project 2, Green Lake Socio-economic Study and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

[Mr. McIsaac.]

1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $198,000 in DREE funding to the program. The program complements the Canada-Saskatchewan Special ARDA Program.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $39,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The Development Unit—Economic Development Branch is an office of the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. DREE funds are not specifically allocated to each group; (ii) See reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (b) As of March 31, 1976, $22,200 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The Green Lake Socio Economic Study is being carried out by Amisk Planning Consultants of Winnipeg, under contract to the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. Local people of native ancestry are being employed to gather information for the study. The total population of Green Lake is 675. DREE funds are not specifically allocated to each group; (ii) See response to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

TRANSPORTATION PLANNING PROGRAM (PROGRAM 1)

Question No. 5,287—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Transportation Planning Programme (Program 1) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How much is allocated to Project 1, Transportation Planning, for (a) Sub-project 1, East Side Transportation Study (b) Sub-project 2, Southern Overland Access Study and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

3. How much is allocated to (a) Project 2, Highways (b) Project 3, Community Access Roads (c) Project 4, Community Airstrips and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $9,300,000 in DREE funding to the Program. An additional $7,500,000 has been allocated by Transport Canada.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $12,000 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) A consulting firm, Clayton, Sparks and Associates of Regina is carrying out the study, under contract to the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. No specific allocation of DREE funds to each group has been made; (ii) See reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (b) As of March 31, 1976, $6,000 in DREE funds have been authorized for the Southend Overland Access Study; (i) The work has been carried out by a consultant under contract to the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. No specific allocation of funds to each group has been made; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

3. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $5,969,310 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The direct involvement of people of native ancestry through employment in the sub-project is not available. Priority is given to the employment of northern residents in the work. Funds are not specifically allocated to each group; (ii) See reply to question No. 5,282,

2(a)(ii); (b) As of March 31, 1976, $2,088,030 in DREE funds have been allocated; (i) The construction of five general access roads to the northern communities of Pinehouse, Sandy Bay, Stanley Mission, Patuanak and Black Lake involves work forces composed primarily of people of native ancestry. In addition, the roads will service communities composed largely of native people with a total population of over 3,000. No specific allocation of DREE funds to each group has been made; (ii) See reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (c) As of March 31, 1976, $646,800 in DREE funds have been authorized; (i) The construction of community airstrips in the northern communities of Île-à-la-Crosse, Pinehouse, La Loche, Buffalo Narrows, Cumberland House, involves work forces composed primarily of people of native ancestry. In addition, the airstrips will service communities composed largely of native people with a total population of over 5,000; (ii) See reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM (PROGRAM 2)

Question No. 5,288—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Communications Development Programme (Program 2) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How many (a) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (b) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands allocates $1,200,000 in DREE funding to the program.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, no projects have been authorized under the program, (b) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

COORDINATION AND IMPLEMENTATION PROGRAM (PROGRAM 1)

Question No. 5,289—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Co-ordination and Implementation Programme (Program 1) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How much is allocated to (a) Project 1, Administration (b) Project 2, Management Information System and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. The Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement allocates $960,000 in DREE funding to the program.

2. (a) As of March 31, 1976, $240,420 in DREE funds have been authorized. The administration project is a unit of the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. No allocation of DREE funds to each group is made, (i) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii); (b) As of March 31, 1976, $463,200 in DREE funds have been authorized, (i) The work is being carried out by consultants under contract to the provincial department of northern Saskatchewan. The number of native people directly employed is not available; (ii) see reply to question No. 5,282, 2(a)(ii).

CNR TURBO TRAIN POSITIONS

Question No. 5,371—Mr. Halliday:

On the regular CNR "Turbo" train between Montreal and Toronto (a) what is the number and title of all positions (i.e. conductor, engineer, etc.) on each train (b) what is the minimum and maximum salary for each (c) what is the number of hours worked per week by each?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

	Number of employees
(a)	Train Nos. 60-61	Train Nos. 66-67
Enginemen	2	2
Conductors	1	1
Brakemen	1	1
Flagmen	1	1
Trainrider	1	1
Steward-Waiter	2	6
Take-out Attendant	1	2
Cart Attendant	1	2

(b) Enginemen and trainmen are paid on a mileage rate rather than hourly or weekly rates, and it is not the company's practice to disclose information respecting employees' salaries. (c) Enginemen, estimated 21 hours; Conductors, estimated 26 hours; Brakemen, estimated 26 hours; Flagmen, estimated 26 hours; Trainrider, estimated 33¼ hours; Steward-Waiter, estimated 30-40 hours; Take-out Attendant, estimated 33-38 hours; Cart Attendant, estimated 31-35 hours.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 5,470—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Does the Post Office Department publish a publication called Postal Progress and, if so (a) how many copies are printed per issue (b) how frequently is it issued (c) what is the cost per issue (d) who prints it (e) was the printing contract awarded by tender (f) who is the editor and how many staff does he have (g) to whom is it distributed?

2. How many requests have been received asking (a) to be kept on the mailing list (b) that it be discontinued?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. Yes. (a) 10,000; (b) Quarterly; (c) Average cost of printing an issue, $3,583; (d) Marketing Communications, Toronto; (e) Yes; (f) Manager, Promotion Division—No staff, prepares it himself, (g) Executives of Large Volume Mailers.

2. (a) 5,425; (b) 22.

COMPENSATION—BUTTER SPOILAGE

Question No. 5,484—Mr. Stevens:

1. For each year (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 to date, what was the total number of requests for compensation filed with the Canadian Dairy

Commission on account of mouldy, rancid or tainted butter which had been sold by the Commission to their customers?

2. Of the requests received (a) what was the total number in which compensation was paid (b) what, in each year, was the total amount of the compensation (c) how many pounds of butter were involved?

3. To the knowledge of the government, was any of the butter upon which compensation was paid, eventually sold to the public and, if so, how was it graded?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Fifteen; (b) Two; (c) Two.

2. (a) Nineteen requests for compensation for mouldy butter were paid; (b) 1974: $9,130.80; 1975: $3,850.00; 1976: $3,114.44; (c) 321,905 pounds.

3. Butter upon which compensation is paid is first examined by a government inspector to verify the seriousness of the complaint, and secondly, it is kept under control until corrective action is taken. The corrective action in the case of mouldy butter involved removing the mould and re-pasturizing or re-processing. It is then re-graded and sold to the public with the appropriate grade certification.

MILK POWDER IN STORAGE

Question No. 5,531—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many pounds of domestic skim milk powder were in storage at the end of March 1976?

2. In what locations is the powder stored and what are the names of companies providing the storage?

3. What are the (a) costs of storage (b) interest costs on a monthly basis?

4. What is the value of stocks held as of March 31, 1976?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Stocks of skim milk powder held by the Canadian Dairy Commission, not including stocks held by the private trade, at March 31, 1976, were 282.5 million pounds.

2. Locations of powder storage and names of companies providing storage: Quebec; SLW Distribution, Lachine; Coop Fédérée de Québec, Montréal; Eastern Packaging Corp., Montréal; Montréal Refrigerating, Montréal; Seaway Midwest Inc., Montréal; Blaicklock Bros., Lachine; Coop Agricole de Granby, Lawrenceville; Coop Agricole de Granby, Plessisville; Lactantia Ltée, Victoriaville; Vermette & Fils Ltée, St. Agapit; Schenker of Canada Ltd., La Salle; National Warehouses, Montréal; Fleur de Lys Warehouses, Montréal; Supply & Services, Montréal; Coop Agricole de Granby, Louiseville; Lebourg Warehouses, Ville St. Laurent, St. Patrick Warehouse, Montréal; Placements des Bois Francs, Victoriaville; Québec Lait, St. Lambert. Ontario: N.W. Distribution, Toronto; Schenker of Canada Ltd., Mississauga; Central Warehouse, Toronto; Intercontinental Whse., Rexdale; J.D. Smith, Downsview; Toronto Harbour Commissioners, Toronto; Seaway Midwest, Toronto; Ault Foods Ltd., Winchester; Manitoba: MacCosham Warehouse, Winnipeg; Seaway Midwest, Winnipeg. Alberta: Seaway Midwest, Edmonton; Canada Messenger, Edmonton; MacCosham Warehouse, Edmonton; MacCosham, Calgary. Maritimes: Maritime Warehouse, Nova Scotia; McQuaids, P.E.I. Saskatchewan: Dairy Producers Coop, Regina; Dairy Producers Coop, Yorkton; MacCosham Warehouse, Saskatoon. British Columbia: Fraser Valley Milk Produce, Vancouver.

[Mr. Stevens.]

3. (a) Cost of storage on a monthly basis. The Commission's cost of storage for each month of the dairy year 1975-76 (not including one time costs such as in-and-out charges, transportation charges and related costs) were: April, $107,551.79; May, $159,682.80; June, $141,036.44; July, $222,548.61; August, $203,919.80; September, $415,223.73; October, $133,183.60; November, $319,758.68; December, $509,240.33; January, $534,995.21; February, $378,916.11; March, $404,197.17; Total: $3,530,254.27; (b) Cost of interest on a monthly basis: The commission's costs of interest are not separately available for skim milk powder and butter. The total of interest costs for both products in 1975-76 was $8,717,133.17. This total comprises the actual monthly interest payments made to the Minister of Finance upon repayment of loans, total $3,389,152.51, and interest accrued at year-end in respect of outstanding loans for a total of $5,327,980.66.

4. Value of Canadian Dairy Commission's stocks at cost held at March 31, 1976, was $177,237,170.00.

BUTTER IN STORAGE

Question No. 5,532—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many pounds of butter were in storage at the end of March 1976?

2. In what locations is the butter stored and what are the names of companies providing the storage?

3. What are the (a) costs of storage (b) interest costs on a monthly basis?

4. What is the value of stocks held as of March 31, 1976?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Stocks of creamery butter held by the Canadian Dairy Commission, not including stocks held by the private trade, at March 31, 1976, were 42.2 million pounds.

2. Locations where butter is stored and names of companies providing storage: Quebec: Coop Agricole de Granby, Lawrenceville; Coop Agricole de Granby, Granby; Coop Agricole de Granby, Plessisville; Coop Agricole de Granby, Weedon; Granby Locker, Granby; Frigorifique Québec, Lachine; Canada Packers Ltd., Montréal; Jersey Brand, Montréal; Olive & Dorion, Montréal; Montréal Refrigerating & Cold Storage, Montréal; Lansdowne Storage, Sherbrooke; Vermette & Fils Ltée, St. Agapit; Associated Freezers, Montréal; Beaudoin & Marcoux, Sherbrooke; Québec Apple Growers, Farnham; Lovell & Christmas, Montréal; Entrepôt Igloo Ltée, Québec; Thompson & Alix, Sherbrooke; Produits Laitiers, St. Hyacinthe. Ontario: Teeswater Creamery, Teeswater; Toronto Harbour Commissioners; Stacey Brothers, Mitchell. Manitoba: Diamond Cold Storage, Winnipeg; Winnipeg Cold Storage, Winnipeg. USA: Harbour Side Terminal, Management-New Jersey.

3. (a) Cost of storage on a monthly basis. The commission's cost of storage for each month of the dairy year 1975-76 (not including one time costs such as in-and-out charges, transportation charges and related costs) were: April, $51,540.46; May, $40,899.88; June, $42,106.57; July, $119,411.40; August, $202,343.96; September, $142,675.80; October, $194,360.00; November, $176,183.32; December, $278,165.42; January, $296,835.58; February, $202,525.75; March, $153,935.93. Total: $1,900,984.07; (b) Cost of interest on a monthly basis. The commission's costs of interest are not separately available for skim milk powder and butter.

The total of interest costs for both products in 1975-76 was $8,717,133.17. This total comprises the actual monthly interest payments made to the Minister of Finance upon repayment of loans total $3,389,152.51, and interest accrued at year-end in respect of outstanding loans, for a total of $5,327,980.66.

4. Value of Canadian Dairy Commission's stocks at cost held at March 31, 1976, was $43,654,651.00.

VEHICLE ALLOWANCE FOR CABINET MEMBERS

Question No. 5,555—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total amount of taxpayer money paid to all Ministers for automobile allowances since April 20, 1968 and does the government plan to eliminate such payments in the interest of cutting expenditures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to question No. 4,126, Hansard 321, page 14415, dated June 11, 1976.

PRIME MINISTER—CAR ALLOWANCE

Question No. 5,556—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the Prime Minister receive an annual car allowance and, if so (a) what is the amount per year (b) what is the total amount he has received since April 20, 1968 (c) what are the reasons justifying the payment when the Prime Minister travels in government owned automobiles?

2. Has the Prime Minister ever returned, or offered to return, any of this money to the Treasury and (a) if so, on what date and how much (b) if not, will he make such a return?

3. In the interest of restraint, will the Prime Minister refuse to accept this allowance in future and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to Question No. 4,126, Hansard No. 321, page 14415, dated June 11, 1976.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS PROGRAM—RIMOUSKI

Question No. 5,708—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the introduction of the Farm Improvement Loans Programme, what was the total amount of subsidies granted to farmers in the Constituency of Rimouski?

2. How many farmers (a) applied for (b) were granted such a loan and, in each case, where is their residence located?

3. For each loan granted, what was the (a) name of the lending institution (b) repayment period (c) average rate of reimbursement?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Statistics concerning the F.I.L. Programme are not maintained on a constituency basis. Under the terms of the programme loans are made at the discretion of approved lending institutions who are responsible for the administration of individual loans.

VALUE OF BUTTER AND SKIM MILK POWDER STOCKS

Question No. 5,734—Mr. Mazankowski:

What is the total value of stocks based on the cost of the Canadian Dairy Commission for (a) butter (b) skim milk powder, as of March 31, 1976?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): (a) See answer to Question No. 5,532, part 4; (b) See answer to Question No. 5,531, part 4.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—COST OF ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 5,738—Mr. Alexander:

What was the (a) estimated (b) actual cost of administration under the Unemployment Insurance Act for (i) 1974 (ii) 1975 (iii) 1976 to date?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned:

	Estimated	Actual
1974	$166,200,000	$162,942,320
1975	198,100,000	191,890,289
Year-to-date May, 1976	88,064,600	82,355,700

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 5,328 and 5,403 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM (PROGRAM 1)

Question No. 5,282—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion committed itself to the Human Development Programme (Program 1) and, if so, in what amount?

2. How much is allocated to Project 1, Options North, for (a) Sub-project 1, Manpower Planning (b) Sub-project 2, Northern Careers Plan (c) Sub-project 3, Training in Government for (e) Sub-project 5, Community College Developers and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (ii) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

3. (a) How much is allocated to Project 2, Public Information and Extension Services for Sub-project 1, Regional Communication Centre (b) how many Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (c) how many departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

4. How much is allocated to Project 3, Human Development Planning and Pilot Action, for (a) Sub-project 1, Community Correction Officer (b) Sub-project 2, Ethnohistorian and Instructional Services Consultant (c) Sub-project 3, Nutrition Study (d) Sub-project 4, Health Services Planning—Health Education Programme (e) Sub-project 5, Trapper Training Development Programme (f) Sub-project 6, Work Training Centres (g) Sub-project 7, Services to the Elderly and, in each case, how many (i) Indian or Metis people are involved and what is the allocation of funds to each group (b) departmental or resource people are involved and what is the cost of their services?

Order Paper Questions

Return tabled.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Question No. 5,328—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. For each year 1970 to date, how much has the government granted under the Regional Development Incentives Act to the Constituencies of (a) Témiscamingue (b) Abitibi (c) Villeneuve?

2. In each case, what was the (a) location (b) purpose of the grant (c) amount granted (d) year it was granted?

Return tabled.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Question No. 5,403—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. How many Unemployment Insurance offices are there in Canada and where is each located?

2. How many agents of the Commission are working in each office?

3. From 1970 to 1975, how much was spent annually for the professional development of the agents in each office?

Return tabled.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred Question No. 5,724?

[Text]

*TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 5,724—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What members of the Cabinet were on the Treasury Board on December 2, 1975?

2. Was the financing of the Lockheed (LRPA) deal discussed at the Treasury Board meeting of December 2, 1975 and, if so, what members of the Cabinet were present?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The President of the Treasury Board, The Minister of Finance, The Honourable Charles Mills Drury, The Honourable Stanley Ronald Basford, The Honourable Jean-Pierre Goyer, The Honourable Daniel Joseph MacDonald. Alternates: The Honourable W. Warren Allmand, The Honourable André Ouellet, The Honourable Barnett Jerome Danson, The Honourable J. Judd Buchanan, The Honourable Roméo LeBlanc.

2. The inner workings of cabinet, cabinet committees, and the services rendered by support staff are traditionally considered confidential matters. Canadian precedents in this regard flowed from British practice over many years. In response to a question in the House the Canadian Prime Minister of the day on 4 February 1960 in part replied:—

"The means by which the cabinet conducts its business are traditionally regarded as its own domestic affair, and questions on the subject are normally neither asked nor answered."

A detailed answer to the question would be a departure from the traditional position that has always been taken that meetings of the cabinet and of cabinet committees are private and no information is given concerning attendance.

I should simply like to indicate that—

[English]

It is evident, from the number of questions we are answering so late in the session, that our office is making its best efforts to be able to clear the order paper of all questions which have been inscribed thereon.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, June 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-68. I want to comment on some of the remarks made the other evening by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). I am afraid he got his facts wrong, and I know he would not want incorrect facts to remain on the record of this House. I want to point out, first, that in this federal-provincial cost-sharing relationship the situation is that there are three main programs which the federal government cost-shares with the provinces, namely, medical care, which was started in 1968; hospital insurance, which started in 1958; and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, part VI, post-secondary education program, started in 1967. In the current fiscal year federal payments under these programs will be in excess of $5 billion. That represents 40 per cent to 45 per cent of all federal cash payments to the provinces. Most provisions of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act expire on March 31, 1977, and the hospital service provisions expire in 1980.

The federal government is currently proposing that it replaces the current cost-sharing agreements. That is essentially the same as the proposal the federal government made in 1973 which was rejected by the provinces as being unfair to the have-not provinces. The federal government proposes that federal contributions to health care and post-secondary education should begin at about the present level and rise at a rate similar to the rate of increase in the gross national product; that federal contributions should rise independent of provincial expenditures; that the provinces should receive, after some kind of transitional period of indeterminate length, equal amounts in per capita terms; and that there should be three years' notice of any intention on the part of the federal government to withdraw, instead of the present five years' notice which is required for hospital insurance changes.

This proposal would come into effect in 1977 for post-secondary education, and in 1981 or 1982 for health care. The federal government proposes that federal contributions be made up in two parts: one would be cash payments based on an unknown base year and rising at the same rate as the GNP. There would be tax room: Tax points would be transferred to the provinces and equalized to the national average of revenue yielded from that number of points by the use of transitional payments. Tax room would probably grow at a faster rate than the gross national product, according to the federal government.

The provinces reacted to these proposals and they certainly were not enthusiastic. A number of questions have to be answered before the provinces can reply rationally to the proposals. What base year is to be used? What escalation factor is to be used? What proportion of payments will be in the form of cash grants, and what proportion in tax room? How can the federal government guarantee equal per capita contributions to the provinces, given the wide discrepancies in the tax base of have and have-not provinces? What amount of money is the federal government prepared to add to existing medical care cost-sharing? There has been a vague mention of $200 million over the next five years. If that is so, what services will this cover?

If the federal government, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) would answer those questions, the provinces could then more rationally assess the government's proposals in terms of their own situation and the government might stand some chance of getting a more enthusiastic response from the provinces. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and, formerly, British Columbia are not in favour of transferring tax points, particularly if revenues are equalized only to the national average as opposed to the average of the two or three richest provinces, as this would reduce federal contributions. In fact, Manitoba has calculated that if federal contributions to post-secondary education and health care had been tied to the gross national product for the past three years, the ten provinces would have received $800 million less than under current arrangements.

● (1210)

One has to be suspicious of any guarantees that the federal government promises. It should be remembered that the federal government is currently reneging on $800 million to $900 million of the revenue guarantee promised at the time of tax reform in 1972. What good is a federal guarantee that the provinces will not lose under the transference of tax room?

Even if it were possible to equalize per capita contributions to the provinces, would that be appropriate? Cost may be higher in some provinces because of any number of factors. A widely dispersed northern population, for example, could mean a great difference in the costs of one province compared to another. What could happen to national standards if all provinces received the same per capita funds? What possible correspondence can there be between an increase in health expenditures and the rise in the gross national product? Manitoba has taken the position that we do not spend nearly enough on health care, that there are many health care services which we should be providing. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is serious about preventative medicine, as was espoused in the 1974 white paper on health care, he should be expanding federal contributions, not limiting them.

I do not think we should be impressed by the guarantees of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the first ministers' meetings that federal contributions to health care after 1981-82 would represent the same proportion of the total gross national product as at the moment.

In 1973, Canada spent 6.9 per cent of the gross national product on health care. Frankly, that is not enough. It is not something the Canadian government can be proud of.

I think the federal government's sharing of revenues with the provinces is now being put in the form of a federal squeeze. Since the budget of June last year, the government has been putting ceilings on federal contributions to cost-shared programs as part of the restraint program, and forcing provincial governments to pick up more and more of the costs of programs. The attack started prior to the last budget. In 1972, under tax reform—which were just tax changes—the provincial share was reduced from 28 per cent to 23.4 per cent. To make up the revenue guarantee, a formula was drawn up to protect provincial tax revenues for the five-year period 1972-77.

At the most recent finance ministers' conference on April 1 and 2, the federal government announced it was changing this formula. They predicted a loss to the provinces of $800 million to $900 million as a result of the change in the formula. Is it any wonder there is lack of enthusiasm by the provinces when the federal government's earlier guarantees were reneged upon and changed in the middle of the game? The provinces have not received much money under the formula. In 1975-76, which was the first year any funds were actually paid out, the provinces had estimates and had budgeted accordingly. In 1974, indexing was unilaterally introduced by the federal government. This measure cut significantly into provincial as well as federal income tax revenues.

Since 1975 we have seen a limit placed on equalization of oil and gas revenues, a 15 per cent limit on federal contributions to post-secondary education, limits on medicare contributions, withdrawals from services to treaty Indians, cutbacks in funds for police protection, manpower training and regional economic development. It was estimated at the recent finance ministers' conference that in 1975-76 alone, the ten provinces lost $1 billion in potential revenue as a result of just three of the federal government's actions: limiting the equalization of oil and tax revenues, indexing, and changes in the revenue guarantee formula. This figure is expected to increase to $1¼ billion to $1½ billion.

The federal government has been making a great deal of noise lately about the need to increase the efficiency of shared-cost programs. For example, it introduced the medical care limits bill in order to force the provinces into steering away from expensive hospital care and toward less expensive forms of treatment. All the while, the provinces had been carrying about $1 billion in such health care programs without any assistance from the federal government. As the Premier of Manitoba stated at the April finance ministers' conference:

—the provincial governments have an even greater interest than the federal government in ensuring improved efficiency—of programs—because with less broadly based taxing powers, it is generally more difficult for the provinces to match federal funds than it is for the federal government to provide them.

The 15 per cent limit on post-secondary education contributions is estimated to have cost the provinces $120 million to $150 million in 1975-76 in forgone revenue. This statement is borne out by the figures of the Department of Finance. In the April, 1976, Economic Review, figures are provided on a national accounts basis for federal, provincial and local government revenues. Even taking into account the dramatic turn-around in 1975, when the federal government went from a surplus of $593 million the year before to a deficit of $4.5 billion, the federal government's cumulative deficit for the years 1960 to 1975 amounted to $3.6 billion, compared to a cumulative deficit for provincial and local governments of $9.6 billion in the same period.

The equalization formula is now under review. The federal government has consistently retreated in recent years from the concept of equalizing revenues: for example, the 1971-72 proposal of the Department of National Health and Welfare for a new formula for cost-sharing health care based on percentage changes in the gross national product on a per capita basis. This plan was rejected by the provinces because it would adversely affect the have-not provinces and destroy national health standards.

It is possible that the federal government could come up with a new equalization formula which bears no direct relationship to the taxing capacities of the provinces. Alternatively, it could produce a formula which simply makes minor adjustments to the present formula to neutralize the impact on equalization of the widening disparities in income among the provinces. Either way, the federal government will most likely seek to reduce the amount it expends on equalization.

● (1220)

Another potential problem concerns the taxation of provincial Crown corporations. I think it most unlikely that the federal government would tax such agencies, although it may in future threaten to hurt the provinces by proposing such a move. Given the figures I listed with regard to fiscal imbalances as between federal and provincial local sectors, one cannot have much sympathy for government claims that the potash takeover, for instance, would have a severe effect on federal government revenues. I do not believe it; therefore, I have little sympathy for the federal government's claim.

I bring these facts forward to show why we feel this bill in its present form should not pass. The government should not retrench in areas as vital as national medicare and hospital care, post-secondary education arrangements with the provinces and the cost-sharing of those programs. Surely, our efforts at restraint should not include such areas. This should be done in other areas; there are other ways of doing it, Mr. Speaker.

On Wednesday afternoon the hon. member for Kootenay West, referring to a newspaper article, quoted the comments of Dr. Louis Brand of Saskatoon. Interpreting what had been said, the hon. member concluded that Saskatchewan has been forced to reduce its budget for health and hospital care by $44 million and, therefore, there is something seriously wrong with the operation of the province and the way in which it is managing its economy.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has his facts wrong or has accepted wrong information printed in the newspapers. The fact is that the health care budget in Saskatchewan was not reduced by $44 million; it was increased by $46 million in the face of the federal government's threat to restrain, hold at present levels, or even reduce its contributions to hospital and medical care. Even so, Saskatchewan increased its budget for that field by $46 million. The provincial ministers of health and finance have estimated that of the $46 million increase, inflation will have eaten up about $30 million, so that in real dollars the health care budget of Saskatchewan will have risen by only $16 million.

Let me explain what happened in Saskatchewan. I suspect my explanation will show why Dr. Brand, of St. Paul's Hospital, Saskatoon, complained. The sums required by hospitals were reduced, partly for the sake of maximum efficiency and partly to show restraint in areas which do not harm medical services. It was felt that what had already happened with regard to contributions from the federal government had increased the pinch on the provinces and they had to pass some of that pinch on, so to speak. The federal government had already cut back cost-sharing with regard to the Victorian Order of Nurses, air ambulance services and home care programs. Some of the pinch the federal government had put on the provinces was in turn passed on to the hospital districts, health regions and health care agencies.

The hon. member for Kootenay West made disparaging remarks about the operation of hospital and medical care in Saskatchewan, the province which originally led Canada and North America in the health care field. I am proud enough of that province's accomplishments and of the way those programs are presently operating in Saskatchewan not to be worried by the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West. He defended the province of Ontario's record in this field. He can do that if he wishes, but I find his arguments indefensible in this field.

Let us consider the costs of delivering hospital and medical care to individual citizens and families. For example, in British Columbia, medicare premiums are $90 for single persons, $180 for a family of two, and $225 for a family of three or more. In Alberta, the premium is $76.80 for a single person, and $153 for a family of any size. That is somewhat better than the premium charged in British Columbia. Next, let us consider rates in Ontario, the province for which the hon. member for Kootenay West felt sorry and so defended it. Ontario assesses $192 for a single person, and $384 for a family.

In Saskatchewan, the premiums charged individual citizens and families are zero: no premiums are paid by citizens in that province. Not only are our provincial programs well run, contrary to what the hon. member for Kootenay West alleges, but they are run in the best possible fashion from the standpoint of financing; that is, the funds raised by the province are raised fairly through taxation based on ability to pay. Funds are raised by way of income tax, corporation tax and sales tax, as well as from revenues derived from our natural resources. Our people get the benefit of their natural resources and funds derived from those resources are applied to programs such as hospital care, medicare, and so on.

Of course, we must always be vigilant in making sure our hospital and medical care programs are run efficiently and without waste of money. In the health care field I should like to see more done with regard to how doctors allocate beds in hospitals. Mr. Speaker, people do not put themselves into hospital; doctors put them there. I am told that sometimes doctors refuse to reallocate beds even when there are waiting lists. It may be that a doctor has to plant his crop on his hobby farm and wants to disappear for a week, or he may want to go fishing for a day or two. Be that as it may, he will not reallocate beds. That, it seems to me, is inefficiency. I hope that Dr. Brand, the former Conservative candidate whom the hon. member quoted, will take the lead among his medical colleagues in Saskatchewan in making certain that the most efficient hospital and medical care services possible are provided.

Saskatchewan has made specific cutbacks in other programs purely on account of inflation and the necessity to hold down costs as much as possible. It is also partly because of federal government cutbacks and fear with regard to the intentions of the federal government in coming years concerning the cost-sharing of these programs. As I say, Saskatchewan has made some specific cutbacks. These were necessary for the reasons I have mentioned. The department of health's budget of $338 million is $46 million above the amount actually spent last year. However, severe cutbacks had to be made in the initial budget request.

● (1230)

The department asked for $44.3 million, which was eventually granted. This included $30 million to meet increasing costs of existing programs, and $14.3 million to finance group programs. One cutback in Saskatchewan was forgoing the $14.3 million to finance new health care programs, something that members on all sides of the House have been urging the federal government to do for the past several years. They might well want to pat themselves on the back for their cost-sharing in medicare, but they are still dragging their feet, refusing to take part in new health programs.

The federal government should be more involved in assisting the provinces and territories in the matter of air ambulance service. This should involve a very nominal fee for the patient, with the major part of the cost being shared by the federal government and provincial governments. Instead of this, the federal government has been cutting back. There should be new programs, or present programs should be extended, with regard to home care, nutrition education and better diets, all of which are part of health care.

We have a situation where the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is up to his eyes in milk, when literally hundreds of thousands of people in this country are not getting the amount of milk they need. I do not understand why that minister cannot persuade the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance to start up a school milk program in the provinces and territories. I find it appalling that in almost every school there is a Coke machine but no milk machine. That might keep the dentists busy, but it does not do much for the children. The federal government should assist with a provincial school milk program and should pay the major part of the costs in the case of the territories.

There are many new programs that should be begun. The federal government should follow the lead of Saskatchewan with regard to pharmacare, hearing aids, dental care for children, which Saskatchewan pays for on its own. The federal government should be moving into these areas. Instead of that, they have put the provinces in the position where they must cut back on their health care budgets. I find that alarming.

The government of Saskatchewan had to carefully assess and make selective reductions in those programs where it was felt they could be absorbed without significantly limiting benefits to the public. That was not easy to do. One such cut involved the number of patient days for which hospitals will be reimbursed by the Saskatchewan hospital services plan. The government has been working with the hospitals to reappraise the personnel and budget for each. It has made some tough decisions which have resulted in some cost efficiencies.

The government has decided that further restraints must be applied to hospital spending. They have decided upon a general reduction of 5 per cent in the approved number of patient days for which all hospitals will be paid. This should not cause too much difficulty in Saskatchewan, in terms of service, because for a number of years that province has had the highest number of general hospital beds per 1,000 population. Therefore, a 5 per cent reduction should not restrict hospital benefits in the province. What I find tragic is that it should even be necessary for the provinces to have to resort to this, not only because of inflation and ensuring that the programs are operating efficiently, but because of federal government cost sharing in the health field.

We oppose Bill C-68. We will do all that we can to prevent it being passed. This is not the direction for the government to move. This is not the area to which the government should be paying attention and giving priority with regard to cutting expenses. In this legislation, as well as other legislation with regard to revenue and cost-sharing programs, the federal government is reneging; they are backing out of a deal, going back on their word. If the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are somewhat nonplussed or concerned about the lack of co-operation of the provincial premiers, they should take a good look at their own actions. The activities of the federal government have done more to harm confederation and national unity, as well as causing failure at federal-provincial conferences, than anything the provinces might have done.

If there is an element of distrust and lack of faith on the part of the provinces, I submit there is some cause for that. When the federal government starts to renege on a commitment halfway through a deal—and this has cost the provinces $1 billion—naturally the premiers will be somewhat suspicious. They will look upon new proposals by the Minister of National Health and Welfare with a jaundiced eye. I do not blame them for the way they feel about these federal proposals in the health care field and in the whole area of revenue and tax sharing.

The federal government has been less than completely open with the provinces. They have left a large number of questions unanswered about which the provinces need data. They must have these answers from the federal government before making any rational decisions with regard to federal government proposals made over the past several months. It is incumbent upon the federal government to meet them more than halfway in providing that information, as well as complete information on the intentions of the federal government. The provinces must have this before they can start with any degree of responsibility to accept proposals by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I urge the House not to let this bill pass, so that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance will have to go back to the drawing board and come up with something better to submit to this parliament and the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a few comments from the riding of Capilano, in the province of British Columbia, on third reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act. This act might be entitled "a tale of good intentions and unmanageable consequences".

● (1240)

I would not be taking part in this debate had it not been for some of the political venom spewed forth by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) using the occasion to aggravate the condition which exists in the province of Ontario. He paid high tribute to his colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and I would like to endorse that tribute. But one thing has to be put on record to correct the statements made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt and those in his party. It is this: some 15 years ago the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) recognized that action should be taken to reduce income barriers to adequate health care, and he appointed a royal commission to assess the situation and bring in recommendations.

There were two obvious needs at that time. A minority of the population were not in a position to afford adequate health care, and the care they did receive was subsidized by other patients through the fee structures of hospitals and the medical profession. I agree that this did interfere with the dignity of people with marginal incomes, those at the perimeter of the work force. The second was that families risked being made bankrupt by having to pay catastrophic hospital and medical costs. Many were protected against this hazard by a variety of successful private and corporate plans. In those days, many of us who were then just hard working members of the public, taxpayers of Canada, spoke out with regard to the possible consequences of a universal plan for health care. The Liberals came to power. They considered the studies of the royal commission to which I have referred, and they opted for universality despite the warnings of the provinces and the advice of many of us who were involved in this field as citizens in our communities.

This decision led to the destruction of the private plans which were looking after some 85 per cent of the people in Canada at that time. Many of us who were members of community organizations were in favour of government subsidies to look after the medical needs of those in the work force whose incomes were marginal. The day has now come when we see clearly that there is no such thing as a free lunch. What people need now is a system of cost-benefit measurements which relates to their own purchasing power. We have hidden the cost of medicare. We have created a system which is out of control. We are failing to utilize our tax resources efficiently. Hence the present debate on an act to amend the Medical Care Act.

Some of us in those days were calling for an end-user tax by means of which the taxpayer could measure the cost of the services which were being provided for him in terms of his own income. Hon. members to my left will immediately scream that such a proposal favours the rich and works against the poor. But we were also suggesting that there be increased tax exemptions at the lower level of the income scale to counter such objections. The chance of having a means of meaningful measurement of cost was thrown away. We offered free lunches all over the country. Now we have to pay the piper.

This program, which was imposed unilaterally upon the country by the Liberal government, has created bureaucracies at the federal level, at the provincial level and at the hospital level. The bureaucracy has grown to such an extent that non-medical administrators exercise more control than the doctors trying to cure patients. There is continual agitation and confrontation between doctors, patients, hospital staffs and the system.

These disputes and the runaway costs of health care are a reflection of the inflation which is causing so much hardship and is bringing our system to its knees. In my opinion, it started with the St. Lawrence Seaway settlement under the Liberal administration of that day—an ad hoc measure for which we are now paying the price. We have since seen an escalation in costs on every side, and a recklessness in the use of our tax resources for which the government in power is totally responsible. The stability of the structure to which the scheme is related is now being threatened.

Having committed the federal treasury to massive expenditures, the government finds itself short of cash, unable to generate sufficient funds to discharge the commitments it has made. In these circumstances, it is preparing to dump the worst of its financial problems on to the provinces although they are already overburdened with tasks laid upon them in Ottawa. The effect of this proposal to cap expenditures will be dislocation of services throughout the provinces. Had the Liberal government, back in the days when insurance schemes were serving 85 per cent of our population, left that structure intact and put in a scheme to assist those on marginal incomes, this dilemma would not exist today.

Members of the New Democratic Party have devoted a good deal of time to attacking the province of Ontario for the readjustments it is making to meet the changes which this bill is designed to impose. I remember that some years ago I personally presented a case for more efficient administration of health services to the NDP cabinet in British Columbia. It arose from the fact that laboratories and X-ray facilities in British Columbia hospitals were not being used over the weekends. Nevertheless, doctors were booking patients into those hospitals on a Friday and the patients were lying in expensive chronic care beds over the weekend. Nothing could be done until Monday, when the laboratory staff and technicians arrived and the usual two-day or three-day program of tests could be carried out. Here is an obvious case of hospital accommodation being needlessly taken up.

● (1250)

I had the opportunity of pleading with the provincial NDP cabinet of British Columbia to make sure that the X-ray and laboratory facilities of the hospitals were manned over the weekend so that this waste would stop, so that we would stop building additional facilities and unnecessarily tying up expensive beds. But what did they do, Mr. Speaker? Not a thing. They were not interested in the more efficient use of existing facilities. They wanted to play the same kind of political game that we have seen from NDP members in this House today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Years ago I used to be in the business of consulting and productivity and I studied in the early 1950s, the work study concepts that evolved from Britain and from which the European Common Market, West Germany and other European nations grew. There was a great science developing in productivity work studies, critical path studies, and so on, and I had the opportunity of hiring one of these experts from the United Kingdom, who immigrated to Canada. He was on my staff for four or five years until his function with our organization was phased out. He then moved from our organization to a similar department of the federal government in Vancouver, and I never saw a man become so frustrated by the incompetence, inefficiency and the "I don't care" attitude as this lad who worked for us for so many years and did so much for our company. One productivity study, critical path study or work study after another having to do with hospitals and other government operations was locked away in filing cabinets and never read again.

Here we are, today, at the point where we are having to amend an act which has been in force in Canada for years, because the government is not paying attention to the efficient utilization of our tax resources. They have not implemented any of the studies of task forces. We have had task force report after report presented to the government, none of which has ever been studied or implemented, having to do with health and delivery care in our national system. The minister has ignored continual references to these reports in the House of Commons. Province after province has protested, yet we have seen nothing but powerful Liberal arrogance. Today we are paying for this kind of neglect.

Even before this bill is passed the provinces are having to make cutbacks in expenditure. We have already heard about the $750 million that this government owes the government of British Columbia, reaching back to 1972. B.C. has its problems of cash flow, too. The NDP throughout this debate has made nothing but political hay at the expense of the province of Ontario, which is immersed in an unbelievable readjustment that affects the emotions of people all over the province as well as the country. The people of Ontario had better pay attention and head off the irresponsible extravagance that we have just witnessed in the last three years in British Columbia.

In British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, you never saw nests built and feathered so fast as in the three years of the NDP, B.C. sham. Our friends in the New Democratic Party talk about serving the little guy, the average man on the street. What utter nonsense! How can they do that when their vested interest and their bankroll comes from organized labour and the higher echelons of this monopoly movement? "Grab, grab, grab, and to hell with those who don't pay dues to us." They may be whining about individual cases of hardship, and so forth, but they have had their chance to serve and they missed out, particularly in the area I come from.

The waste of our tax resources by this government is one of the things that has brought this bill to this House. We have the example of $200,000 being paid for unused rooms at the Habitat conference in Vancouver. We have the example of a co-operative to which this government has some $4.5 million of commitment in the north of Vancouver Island which has been in operation only a year and is now in receivership. They had a $1.7 million guarantee on a $2.5 million Bank of Montreal loan. They have committed $2.5 million of DREE money under ARDA to these people in order to employ 75 people, two-thirds of whom were supposed to be native people. This is an unbelievable use of money since there is not a sound, solid marketing plan to back up the issuance of this kind of credit.

Over $86,000 per person has been spent by the government in trying to create jobs. This is how the tax resources of this country are being wasted all over the country, and yet we are discussing a bill like this. We have committed $16 million to Lockheed for the Orion, and we do not yet know whether we have one aeroplane. The bilingualism commissioner has for two years now been calling for a better use of our tax resources for this particular aspect of Canadian life, yet have we seen one move made in any direction which he has called for? Then we have had dredging scandals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to the debate on Bill C-68, an act to amend the Medical Care Act.

Mr. Huntington: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to re-emphasize the fact that I am debating the bill. The reason the bill is before the House is that this government can no longer afford the unilateral commitment that it imposed upon the provinces. This government has no proper priorities for our tax resources in this land, and it is time somebody brought to light the extravagances and wasteful use of our resources which have caused this bill to come to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: This government's priorities are from election to election, with decisions being reached by "ad hockery". Their spending is out of control, otherwise this bill would not be before the House. They are spending beyond cash flow, and all these costs will have to be paid by tomorrow's work force. How would you feel, Mr. Speaker, if you were so extravagant in the management of your affairs that you put the cost of today's benefits and privileges on tomorrow's work force?

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Huntington: I have still more to say when we reconvene. This brings me to a further point having to do with priorities. Research Council grants have been cut off, and I should like to take this opportunity to say a little more about the priorities of this government. A most important research project has been going on in the Vancouver General Hospital in connection with the disease of diabetes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair till two o'clock later this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, when my quiet, constructive dialogue was interrupted at one o'clock, I was talking about the record of wasteful use this government has made of our tax dollars, and the fact that there is no such thing as a free lunch. The government has finally found this out. This has brought us to the debate on Bill C-68.

I want to emphasize the lack of priority this government has for matters that can in the future reduce the cost of medical care in Canada. I would mention that the Medical Research Council, in its wisdom, has seen fit to dismiss the $40,000 medical grant to Dr. Wah Jun Tze who is a consultant at the Vancouver General Hospital and a director of the metabolic investigation unit at the Children's Hospital in Vancouver. I realize we are on the other side of the mountains—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member is aware that the bill before us has nothing to do with research, which is covered in other legislation. I would respectfully suggest that he is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I did bring this to the hon. member's attention just before lunch. I would suggest that he get back to the terms of Bill C-68, an act to amend the Medical Care Act.

Mr. Huntington: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With due respect, sir, the point I am making is very germane to the reason Bill C-68 is before the House and the lack of priorities on the part of the government regarding research which could reduce the cost of medical care. If those priorities were in a little better order, we would not be debating this bill today.

I was mentioning the fact that Dr. Tze was involved in a very important piece of research in relation to diabetes which holds tremendous potential for the reduction of the cost of medical health care. I remember from my schooling the tremendous good will that was produced for Canada by the work of Dr. Charles H. Best and Dr. Frederick G. Banting regarding insulin. Here we had a research project, which evidently has very low priority, in the final stages of establishing the fact that islet cells which produce insulin and can correct diabetes can be transplanted, without rejection, in rats. At this point in time the government, because of its lack of priorities, sees fit to remove the grant for this very important work which would result in reducing medical health care costs in Canada in the future.

● (1410)

I think the point I am making is very germane to this debate. If it had not been for the anger aroused in the Vancouver community, that very important work, as a result of which the conclusion was reached that islet cells from a related rat could remove diabetes in a diseased rat, without rejection—and islet cells from an unrelated rat cause rejection and secondary detrimental effects in rats with diabetes—would have been stopped. It is to the credit of Mr. Ed. Murphy, a former member of the press gallery in the House, who is now a "hotliner" in Vancouver, that he was able to raise some $26,000 from the public to allow this important research work to be carried on. We seemed to have a chance to reduce tomorrow's costs with today's research, but we see the government's priorities interfering with a mere $40,000 which could allow important work of this nature to be carried on.

In closing my comments in this debate on Bill C-68, may I repeat the words used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in concluding his remarks last Wednesday, when he said, "We don't trust you". With all the unilateral action this government has taken, that is one of the constant facts with which we are faced across Canada today: people no longer trust this government. There is the example of the airline pilots, the example of Bill C-61 which is causing anguish in the maritime provinces, the example of cost-sharing for post-secondary education, which was double-dealing—particularly for my province—and now we have this unilateral action in Bill C-68. It is too bad that bills of this nature have to be brought forward at this time.

I believe that in my comments I have explained fully why this party, and I as the member for Capilano, cannot support the legislation.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important for me to enter this debate for the second time. I spoke on the bill at second reading. I was not satisfied with it then, and I am certainly not satisfied with it now. I had the impression, when listening to the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), that he was basically opposed to medicare and that he felt many of the private medical plans back in the 1950s, such as PSI in Ontario, were far superior to the universal, present medicare legislation.

I should like to remind the hon. member that in those days there was not nearly the equality of treatment that we have today. I am not blaming the physicians for this, or the surgeons. I think the major problem in those days lay with the fact that we simply did not have sufficient hospital facilities, operating room facilities and medical people, so that 15 per cent of the population—and that is many Canadians—were not covered by any kind of medical care plan. I defy anyone in the House to stand up and say honestly that the general public is opposed to medicare. It is not. Some may complain about the increase in premiums. Sometimes the premiums jump too quickly, particularly in the province of Ontario where they jumped quite drastically in the past year.

However, there is one thing about universality which I think the hon. member may have omitted from his speech, namely, that if all people are involved in the universal program, the most vocal and powerful groups in the country, which are usually organizations of professionals, of educated people, of physicians as well as of lawyers, accountants and trade unionists, make sure that the quality of medicare under a universal program shall continue to improve, because they have the power to demand that it shall improve. The quality of the program does improve as the years go by. But there is always the possibility that when only a certain percentage of the population is involved—and usually the great majority of people are in the lower income bracket—the quality of private medicare scheme treatment may not be as high, and I emphasize the words "may not". This is why I believe in universality.

I do not believe in waste. I do not believe we should have facilities which are not necessary. I appreciate the fact that some hospitals across the country may have to be closed. We had an incident in my constituency of Brant where the people so far have made the major decision as to whether a hospital in the area will close. I think some of these basic philosophical standards should be established at the outset of any hon. member's address to the House. What we all want, regardless of political affiliation, is the best quality of medical care, at the best price. I admit that there has been abuse and that some hospitals have overspent, and I am not just referring to Ontario. The hon. member for Capilano seemed to dwell on just two provinces, British Columbia and Ontario.

I am willing to admit that in Ontario—I am not familiar with British Columbia—there has been some waste. The fundamental fact still remains that it is the sick person to whom we are addressing ourselves in this bill. If we could clean off some of the fat without reducing the quality of medicare, then most of us in the House would appreciate that universal medicare, which has been in effect for many years, is probably more desirable than private insurance plans which are sometimes very difficult to obtain for a number of Canadians.

When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) spoke on third reading of Bill C-68, he outlined the reasons he felt it necessary to introduce the bill, and how recent events, particularly the first ministers' conference, had led him to believe that Bill C-68 would now pass without too much opposition. As he now knows, he was wrong. We in this party do not believe that anything has changed since the introduction of this bill which would cause us, as a party, to support the bill in toto. A week ago yesterday, the minister said in the House that just two days previously the government had submitted to provincial governments a new financing formula which would consist of the transfer of a certain number of tax points, as well as equalized per capita payments across the country. He went on to say that the formula met with the approval, in principle, of most provinces. He did not say "all" provinces.

This was one of the factors which prompted the minister to say that he hoped this bill could now go through all stages without delay. It seems to me that while the provinces may have agreed in principle, the fact remains that they were less enthusiastic about the proposals presented to them. This should not have come as any surprise to the federal government, in view of its attack on provincial revenues dating back to 1972.

● (1420)

If hon. members recall, in 1972, under tax reform, the provincial share of income tax growth was reduced from 28 per cent to 23.4 per cent. To make up for this a revenue guarantee formula was drawn up to protect provincial tax revenues for a five-year period. This five-year period was to have ended in 1977. Since 1972, the provinces have not received much money under the formula, and consequently they budgeted accordingly. In other words, they had to overbudget because they were not receiving what they had anticipated they would receive from the federal government. This, of course, was passed on, as in most cost-sharing programs, to the municipalities. Let me tell this House that in the province of Ontario, and no doubt in other provinces, the municipalities are now bearing the brunt of the restraints programs not only of the federal government but of the provincial governments. In other words, the buck has been passed all the way down to the local municipal councils and township councils, which are closest to the people on a day to day basis. They are the ones who are getting it in the neck by letter and by telephone, day in and day out.

In 1974, indexing was introduced by the federal government and this resulted in significant losses in provincial tax revenues. Since 1975, the federal government has placed limits on an assortment of programs; for example, limiting equalization of oil and gas revenues, limiting the growth of federal contributions to post-secondary education, and so on. In view of all these limitations, it is no wonder the provinces are extremely skeptical about any new financing formula. Based on recent past history, the provinces cannot be faulted for thinking that any new financing formula probably means a further squeezing of provincial revenues. This would most certainly be the case with respect to health costs.

On June 18, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in this House that in the plan for the future, the country and the provinces would limit the rate of escalation of health and education programs more or less to the rate of growth of the gross national product. I think it was quite appropriate for my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what possible relationship there is between the incidence of illness and the gross national product, especially in view of the fact that last year the cost of providing health services went up by 15 per cent and at the same time the gross national product was virtually at a standstill. How the Prime Minister worked that one out, I do not know; but according to the government, that is the formula.

Since the Prime Minister did not adequately respond to this question, except to say that there are obviously contingency plans—he did not spell them out—we can conclude that the provinces are to be left holding the bag. This would essentially leave the provinces with two choices. They could raise revenues through their own taxation powers and continue to meet these costs, or they could cut back on some of the valuable services they are presently providing. The first alternative would only be available to the wealthier provinces in Canada; the second would most likely be the end result for the majority of the provinces, and provinces like Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island would suffer very much.

In view of the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare on June 17, that Bill C-68 would now be more palatable as a result of the first ministers' conference, I put forward the following points to the minister. The federal proposal to the provinces would entail a transfer of a certain number of tax points to the provinces. Surely the minister and the Prime Minister realize that transferring tax points, particularly if these revenues are equalized only to the national average, will mean reduced federal contributions to rich provinces such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

In addition, we must seriously question whether per capita contributions to the provinces will be appropriate. The minister must be aware that costs—I refer here to health costs—may be higher in some provinces as a result of any number of factors. This being the case, I can only envisage a situation whereby we shall not have any national standards in terms of health care as a result of all provinces receiving the same per capita contribution.

When medicare first came in, if I recall correctly there was an equalizing factor to it. People born anywhere in this country received an equal standard of medical care. If this bill goes through as it is—and we have a majority government; we know that we cannot block the bill indefinitely—I am convinced that there are people in outlying areas of Newfoundland, the hinterland of New Brunswick, in northern parts of Canada and in other remote parts of Canada—who are entitled to the same benefits as a child or a sick person in the cities of Toronto or Vancouver—who will not receive the same standard of medical care. In this House we legislate for the whole of the country and not just for any particular province or city.

Nothing has happened since this bill was introduced months ago which has caused me or my colleagues to lessen our opposition to it. Bill C-68 was designed to place a ceiling on the federal government's contribution to the medical care program. Essentially, it is a first step in dismantling the health insurance program of this country. Based on the little we have been able to find out about the intentions of this government with respect to replacing the current cost-sharing agreements, it seems evident that it has every intention of placing the burden of health care on the provinces.

I would like to digress without straying too far from the bill. In the United States, where they tout the great free enterprise approach to medical care, not only is the cost of professional medical care—that of physicians and hospitals—much higher than the cost in Canada, but private insurance premiums are also much higher. Are we going to revert to that kind of program in this country? I hope to God we are not.

I would like to reiterate what I said during debate on second reading of this bill. The Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed out in late January that Canadians enjoy one of the best health systems in the world. While this is true, much of the credit goes to the provinces, two of which—Saskatchewan and Manitoba—have instituted programs such as dentacare, free drugs, the provision of hearing aids and the like. While these progressive provinces are to be congratulated, in my view we must keep in mind that if Canada is to achieve a high uniform standard of health care right across the land, the federal government will have to become more involved in these programs, not less, as it is attempting with measures such as Bill C-68 and new cost-sharing agreements. I can well appreciate this government's desire to cut down on its expenditures. However—and this has been said before—if we must cut government spending, let us pinpoint those areas in which we can most afford cuts.

● (1430)

The federal government's contributions to the provinces under the Medical Care Act have, in fact, been rising in very modest proportions in the past few years. For example, in the 1972-73 fiscal year the percentage increase in federal contributions to the provinces was 7.6 per cent; in 1973-74 the increase was 8.8 per cent; and in 1974-75 it dropped to 6.6 per cent. I do not wish to suggest that these are small sums of money, but at the same time I find it incomprehensible that in times of supposed restraint, when we see the private sector spending millions of dollars building mammoth hotels and office buildings, some of which are currently not being used, we are closing hospitals in the name of restricting government expenditures.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare may say that hospital closings have nothing to do with federal measures such as Bill C-68, but I would point out to him and the government that medical care and hospitals are financed out of one budget in each of the provinces. When you combine restraint in Bill C-68 with the load of current programs not included under federal cost-sharing, and add to it the uncertainty concerning the future terms, for example respecting cost-sharing hospital costs, something in the provincial health budget has to go. Several hospitals in Ontario have either gone or are on the verge of going, although I hope some of them will not.

While it is extremely difficult to understand the reasoning behind the current round of hospital closings—if in fact there is any reason—two incidents which recently occurred in Ontario serve as examples of how federal financing priorities can affect a province. The provincial Tory government announced that two psychiatric hospitals—one in Goderich and one in northern Ontario—are to be closed and the buildings are to be used to treat the mentally retarded. Psychiatric hospitals are not included under federal cost-sharing; centres for the mentally retarded are.

These psychiatric hospitals were not closed because of a reduced need for them—in fact, all information points to their being run efficiently and usefully—but because the provincial government simply felt it could not afford them any longer. This is ironic when we find that by closing the psychiatric hospitals and reopening them as mental retardation centres, total costs will increase by $650,000. Aside from the stupidity of this provincial action, this serves as a glaring example of the type of situation that can arise out of federal initiatives such as contained in Bill C-68.

One of the underlying assumptions of this bill—and the minister responsible for it restated it during his third reading remarks—is that the government saw a need to increase the efficiency of shared-cost programs. This bill would have the effect of forcing the provinces into steering away from expensive hospital care and toward less expensive forms of treatment. Those are not my sentiments, but those of the minister. Nothing could be more callous, if we take into account the fact that the provinces have been carrying about $1 billion in those less expensive, preventive medical programs without any assistance from the federal government. I think that is a very important point.

While I would agree that we must start to change the health delivery system, that is, get into lower-cost forms of treatment, the federal government has done virtually nothing in this regard. When the province of Ontario decided to close hospitals arbitrarily, there were no alternate plans made to take care of those who needed some form of treatment. I agree that it was wasteful and inefficient to keep people in active treatment hospitals when they should have been in lower-cost nursing homes. But no steps have been taken by the government to ensure that enough nursing homes are built to accommodate those who require them.

We could go a long way toward reducing health costs if the federal government worked hand in hand with the provinces to institute lower-cost services. This simply has not been done. Provinces which have these services have instituted them on their own. Therefore, we have a situation in this country whereby the wealthier provinces, if they so choose, can initiate these moves on their own and provide adequate health care. The poorer provinces, on the other hand, simply have to do without. This, again, is not what I call co-operative federalism. It is not the real kind of federalism that we should have in this country.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is well aware that preventive health measures would do much to reduce our health costs. After all, it was he—according to his statement of about a week ago—who was the author of the booklet "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians". I shall not go into some of the suggestions made in it; other members have already done so. The only point to be made here is that while he eschews the virtues of preventing various illnesses, he, through his government, will not undertake to provide adequate funds to begin programs which would do much in the way of preventive care. Again, I need only remind this government where the funds came from to initiate dentacare and pharmacare in some of the provinces.

Within the context of preventive health care, it was interesting to note that on June 15 this House discussed a motion in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) criticizing the failure of the government to give adequate priority to health research funding. That motion was very significant with regard to the bill we are debating today. I suggest that this is not out of order. If we examine the government's record of performance regarding research in general and medical research in particular, we see that there has been a slow but steady erosion of the research dollar on a pretty well continuous basis since 1971. In fact, this year, with the freeze on research funds, the total value of current dollars available for research is down considerably.

What this means in terms of our long term health costs can best be summed up by the comments made by Dr. H. Arnold Steinberg who is the chairman of Canadians for Health Research. That is what this bill is about, and it is why I say I am in order, as was the hon. member who spoke before me. Part of Dr. Steinberg's letter was read into the record on June 15, but it bears repeating during this debate. He said:

> The quantity and quality of medical research affects every Canadian in two principal ways (1) it is the only practical answer to reducing health care costs—

I repeat—

> —to reducing health care costs by finding cures to those diseases which randomly strike thousands of people necessitating government expenditures now in excess of $7 billion annually.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare is at all serious about preventive health care, I would ask him to question his colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Drury) about his priorities. Why has he frozen research funds? The second point in Dr. Steinberg's letter, the freezing of medical research funds, was covered when he said:

> —has caused a major cutback in medical research activity . . . this will have a profound impact on hospital care and the quality of teaching medicine across the country.

Both arrangements will be adversely affected. We have in this country a situation whereby one minister—the Minister of National Health and Welfare—makes pious statements about the need for preventing health care measures, while another, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, subverts this by failing to provide the needed money, which in the long run would save us money in the whole field of health care.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major conclusions that was reached by members of the opposition during the debate on health research funding was that this government, no matter what various ministers say, has not grasped the idea that the future of hospital economics is clearly bound up with the future of medical science and technology. The Minister of National Health and Welfare showed this lack of comprehension when he said the following in a speech delivered to the annual meeting of the Canadian Nurses' Association a few days ago:

● (1440)

> The country cannot afford for very much longer the type of rise in health costs that it has experienced in recent years . . . it has been shown that pouring money into health care does not translate necessarily into better health.

He went on to suggest that quality of life is the critical factor in health as well as the avoidance of unnecessary illness and premature death. In other words, individual Canadians should assume more responsibility for their own well-being. However, as I have stated before, this is only part of the solution. Frankly, I think all individuals should be more responsible for promoting their own personal health. Good health in itself is not the end; it is just the beginning, the prerequisite to high quality of life. Therefore, it is not enough for the government to say to Canadians, "We shall arbitrarily cut back spending on health costs and research. The onus will now be on you to become more physicially fit, that is, get more exercise, stop smoking and reduce your intake of alcohol, and so on."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: What is the minister doing about it?

Mr. Blackburn: My colleague from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) asks, what the minister is doing about it. What can the government do? Can it legislate against smoking and against the consumption of alcohol? Perhaps it can, but I do not think that is the right or practical way to go. Why not end tax concessions given to those powerful, wealthy industries which produce cigarettes in particular and alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who spent a considerable portion of his political life arguing for health insurance, has always maintained, correctly, that there are two phases to health insurance. The first, which for the most part has been achieved, is to remove the financial barrier between individuals providing health care and those receiving health care. The second phase is that we had to begin changing the health delivery system. In other words, if we want to reduce the cost of health insurance we will have to replace some of the high-cost services with lower-cost services. Again, it needs to be stressed that for the initial period this would necessitate an outlay of money, but in the long run savings would be realized.

It is my sincere hope, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will not be passed. There is every indication that members on the government side will see fit to give the bill final approval. In doing this, the government may satisfy the wishes of those who have declared that this government should curtail its expenditures. Nevertheless, if it does pass it will surely be to the detriment of all Canadians who require, and indeed deserve, the best possible health care system which can be provided.

I return to what the minister said and what others have repeated during this third reading debate. Canadians enjoy one of the best health care systems in the world. Why does the minister—who is not in his seat this afternoon—want to change it? If he boasts—accurately, I think—that we have had for several years one of the best health care systems in the world, what is the point of reducing its efficiency or of lessening its ability to deliver health care in a general sense? I quite agree about the need to trim some fat. But why must we jeopardize the established system of federal-provincial cost-sharing originally set up with the interest of the health of this country's people in mind?

Perhaps Liberal Senator David Croll best summed up my thoughts on this bill when he said:

It is wrong in concept, it is divisive in practice, and in my opinion it is wrong, wrong, wrong, a thousand times wrong.

[Mr. Blackburn.]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to participate in the closing hours, hopefully, of the debate on Bill C-68, not having participated previously in the debate at second reading stage of this fundamental bill. Many of my concerns have been ably expressed, particularly by members on the opposition side. Some concerns have been expressed by members on the government side. I wonder, on this Friday afternoon, what William Lyon Mackenzie King, looking down on us from up above, would think of Bill C-68 which represents a retreat from the flagship of the Liberal party's social program which he introduced in part.

This bill will put fundamental restrictions on something Canadians from coast to coast need, namely, medicare. The program was begun a decade ago, when I was a neophyte member of this House, under the then leader of the Liberal party, Lester Pearson. The government had proposed a formula which would interest—that is the conservative word, although "seduce" might be more appropriate—the ten provinces in joining the proposed medicare program, a program which was to be greatly to the benefit of the Canadian people. Little provinces like P.E.I. and Nova Scotia, other provinces like Ontario, and richer provinces like Alberta chose to join the program. British Columbia is in its own district category.

There were four conditions for joining. The government said to the provinces, "You do not have to participate in the program; we do not intend to trespass on your jurisdiction. However, if you abide by four conditions, we shall give you federal money with which to set up a bona fide medicare program." That program was designed to help all Canadians, particularly those who did not have money to obtain proper medical services. The formula was fair and provided for a 50-50 system of cost-sharing as between the government and participating provinces. Succumbing either to suggestion or political seduction, all ten provinces, over time, joined the program. As the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), other members of my party and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) speaking on behalf of the NDP, said, we have set up in this country a pretty respectable, responsible plan of medicare for all Canadian citizens.

Then something happened. Out of the blue, unilaterally, the federal government made an announcement. It decided that the ground rules would no longer provide for a 50-50 cost-sharing as between federal and provincial governments. Participation would be on the basis of provincial expenditures. We know costs have been rising. The government, in the name of responsibility in spending, wanted to control the escalation in medicare spending. That was a laudable objective, but the government's action would have been more laudable and better received if it had come about after consultation and negotiation with the provinces concerned.

Such a process would have been preferable to the unilateral statement which announced what the government intended to do. In so many words, the government said to the provinces, "You had better come along with us, boys. Now we have a majority in the House of Commons and if we want to we can change the ground rules." Perhaps that is oversimplifying the matter. All the same, this is a subject of extreme concern to all Canadians from coast to coast. My part of Canada, which is not famed for the greatness of its financial resources, is most concerned. Even when the government shared costs on a 50-50 basis, the people of my area, which is coloquially known as an area of regional economic disparity, never enjoyed the sort of medical care services which were available in richer provinces like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. Being richer, those provinces were able to develop a medicare system with many extras which provinces like my native Nova Scotia could not afford. Certainly, on a 50-50 basis, it is part of the problem in post-secondary education, about which I know a little, having the very illustrious Acadia University in my home town. That university surpasses most others in basketball, football and hockey, as well as being a leader in the educational field. Even though it is a small university, it has won several basketball championships. We believe in quality rather than quantity.

● (1450)

With regard to medicare, and at the same time appreciating the problem of post-secondary education, with a 50-50 program one province may have more capacity for building a medicare or education program with extras. With the federal government sharing 50-50, obviously with an expensive program it gives to the citizens and students of the richer provinces something better than can be afforded in those provinces which do not have as many economic resources. We understand that in a way; it is part of the facts of life in Canada. With a medicare program or any other social legislation, the emphasis has always been, whether it be a Liberal or Conservative government, to try to equalize opportunities. This is true with regard to medical services and education.

Also on the docket is the hospitalization program. The federal government has given notice that it wants to opt out of that program. However, when the program was brought in by a Conservative government under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), a clause was inserted to the effect that a province or party wanting to opt out must give five years' notice. That is why in this bill the government is giving five years' notice.

Hopefully, within the five years the provinces and the federal government will be able to work out a suitable substitute program for hospitalization. It would be anarchy if the federal government pulled out of this hospital plan without having something to fill the vacuum. I do not think this government would want to stumble, as we will be stumbling into the July 1 weekend next week, and God knows how many weeks after that, into that type of quagmire with regard to medical services in this country.

In the hospitalization program put into place by the Conservative government of the day, the five-year notice requirement before any province or party could opt out was a very constructive proposal. However, as I said earlier, under a Conservative or Liberal government the emphasis has always been to try to equalize medical services and educational opportunities. We are debating the medicare bill today. It does not have the five-year notice provision. That is why we had unilateral action about a year ago, and why there has not been very much consultation or negotiation as the government moves on with this bill, and I might point out that we are in the dying stages of the bill.

As I pointed out earlier, even a 50-50 program mitigates against a program that does not have fundamental economic wealth. On a 50-50 basis, the richer provinces are able to have a better type of medicare scheme than the poorer provinces. I know several cases in my constituency where people have told me they would benefit from a medical care program if they lived in Ontario, because the provisions cover that here, whereas in Nova Scotia they do not. We are always a little reluctant about a 50-50 basis, but at least we know it is a start toward equalized opportunity.

I have read most of the debate on Bill C-68. I have talked to the chairman of our committee, the hon. member for Athabasca. For some strange reason, the government will, out of the blue, be putting a limit on future increases in medical care payments which it will make. This will be done even before the final cutoff. It gives me a great deal of concern.

There is nobody in this House who does not appreciate that medical costs, along with gasoline costs, energy costs, food costs, and so on, have gone up and will continue to do so, hopefully on a reducing scale. However, under Bill C-68 the 50-50 provision is being changed. In the first year the federal government will pay only 13 per cent of any increase in their 50 per cent. The second year they will only pay an increased 10 per cent of their 50 per cent, regardless of whether the costs go up by 90 per cent or 40 per cent. The limit on federal government involvement will be 15 per cent next year and 10 per cent the year after, regardless of the inflation factor.

In my province, which does not have the fundamental economic resources of others and therefore cannot afford even a modified medicare program, there is great concern about what this restriction will do to basic medical coverage, let alone any so-called rich plan. I have not yet heard the justification for the 13 per cent and 10 per cent. We then get to the third year, the real nigger in the woodpile. The restriction on government involvement will be done by order in council. That is the cabinet, meeting in the East Block, perhaps having time to think in a constructive way, but more often meeting in a crisis situation at the end of the session or at 11 o'clock at night, not able to give full ventilation to something so fundamental. Who knows what figure they will come up with for the third year? It will not just be a damper but a blanket on medical care payments to all Canadians.

Through the work of the standing committee that reviewed this bill, as well as the work of the hon. member for Athabasca, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), and the co-operation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)—at least at that stage—the third year kicker will have some ventilation because of an amendment introduced by the minister through the persuasion of opposition members. It will not be changed, but at least there will be two days' debate in the House of Commons with regard to the order in council. The effect of the 13 per cent limit next year and the 10 per cent limit the second year might already have put medical care programs, in all provinces, in such a state of chaos that I do not know if a two-day debate will be sufficient to point out to the government all that will be necessary. Hopefully, there will be an election before that time and this proposal can be looked at in a much more constructive way.

● (1500)

Bearing in mind that the medical care program, having seduced or by mental enticement got all the provinces involved, some against their will, more than ten years ago, the government's unilateral withdrawal has done a great disservice to federal-provincial relations. This is one of the reasons why there is great reluctance in many provincial capitals about approving the Prime Minister's pet project of patriating the constitution and bringing back the BNA Act so that Canada can finally be a full-fledged nation in his eyes.

I do not think the Prime Minister fully appreciates the fundamental lack of faith or confidence that Canadians have, extending even to provincial governments of the same political stripe, and there are a few of those left across the country, a couple in Atlantic Canada, and they will rue the day down there; you do not have to be in Atlantic Canada very long before turning on the TV and finding the Liberal premier of Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia saying things that might have come right from the front benches of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. That is the type of thing which is going on because of that unilateral approach, quite apart from the details of this bill and how they will affect a program as fundamental as medicare.

I do not want to take too much of the time of the House right now. I can understand very well any admonition that we should move on to the point. All I can do is to conclude more or less where I began. A fellow called the right hon. Wee Willie Mackenzie King who used to look at crystal balls for guidance, so we are told, did lead this country into some very emancipated social legislation of which Liberals have every right to be proud, notwithstanding the very genial Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fleming). Long before he was born, the Liberal party, like the Conservative party, had in its platform something called medicare, which the Liberals supposedly first put forward in 1914.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was 1919.

Mr. Nowlan: I don't want to go back that far. I was not even born then. The fact is that some time thereafter Mackenzie King, looking in his crystal ball and getting advice from all sources, did talk about a medicare program, and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), as a Liberal member and a sincere one at that, must really wonder whether this is true liberalism in the true sense of the word, with a small "l", when you go back on a program you said you believed in since 1919, one you talked about at election after election. Mackenzie King, looking down here from above through the crystal ball on another one-way mirror would be shaking his head in shame at what the present so-called Liberal party is doing.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-68 has many lessons for the Canadian people. One of them surely must be that you cannot trust a Liberal.

In the 1974 general election many workers voted Liberal because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) swore up and down and across the country that wage and price controls were wrong, discriminatory, and ineffective. A few months after he was re-elected he went back on his word and introduced a wage and wage control program—it was not a wage and price control program. And the people were betrayed. In this bill the provinces, and ultimately the people, will be betrayed in another fundamental way. The provinces are betrayed because the federal government has gone back on a solemn pledge to pay half the cost of medicare, and the people are betrayed because if and when this bill passes they will receive a kind of medicare inferior to that to which they have been accustomed. It is a backward step, but it is consistent with the actions of a government which lacks commitment to the legislation it undertakes.

The Liberals sniff the wind, discover which way it is going, and then jump on the bandwagon. In this case the bandwagon is one which will strike a sour note as the Canadian people realize what is being done to the standard of health care they have enjoyed in the past.

We in this party have fought tooth and nail against this legislation because of its discriminatory, negative implications not only for Confederation and the principle of equality of treatment from east to west, but because of what it will do to standards of health care especially as they apply to low-income Canadians. For years and years this party and its predecessor, the CCF, fought to bring about a program of universal hospital and medical care so that Canadians, irrespective of their financial situation, could have access to one of the most fundamental human rights, the right to good health care. Surely this is the measure of any civilized society; we do not say there shall be one standard of health care for those who can afford it and another for those who cannot.

It was a premier of Saskatchewan, my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who led the fight for this principle. First they had universal free hospital care across the province, and then medicare. He fought against tremendous odds, tremendous pressures by medical lobbies and others. He even faced personal defeat believing that his cause was right. We carry on that fight today because we believe the principle of medicare, having taken so long to become established, ought not now to be undermined by the government with its lack of commitment to human rights.

I was proud to say I was a Canadian and to point to our medicare program and say to any visitor that it was one of the finest in the world. If this bill passes I shall no longer be able to do that; I shall no longer be able to say to the five million people in this country who live below the poverty line that they can expect adequate health care. The result of this bill will be that provinces will no longer be able to staff and maintain the system of health and medical care to which we are accustomed without implementing fees to be imposed every time a person visits a doctor, or, on the other hand, raising taxes to maintain the standard of the program at its present level. It is an indication to me that the government, when it comes down to the crunch, always puts the dollar sign before the welfare of the ordinary Canadian.

● (1510)

In this legislation the federal government is going back on a solemn assurance that it gave the provinces that it would pay half the cost of medicare in this country. The minister of health has been arguing that medicare costs have been escalating and that the only way he can bring them down is to change the funding formula. I dispute that claim. There are other ways to reduce the costs than arbitrarily changing the basic formula of the program. The minister of health has struck a severe blow at those poorer provinces which were reluctant to join the program in the first place because they knew that it would be very difficult to pay the costs. They are now left out on a limb because the federal government has gone back on its word.

Of course health care costs have been increasing. Anyone who was naive enough at the beginning of the program to expect these costs not to increase surely does not deserve to be in elected office. The whole point of a universal program is to get people to a doctor or to a hospital at the onset of an illness so that they may be given adequate treatment which will prevent the illness from becoming more severe, with consequently less chance of curing the illness. In the past all too often the tendency was, especially among low income people, not to visit a doctor if they felt ill but to try to hang on in the hope that things would improve. These people could not afford to go to a doctor or a hospital; hence in the majority of cases they waited too long, the illness became more complicated, and the chance of recovery was less.

It seems to me that one of the fundamental principles of the medicare program was that of prevention; that a person would see a doctor early enough before the illness became complicated. Many Canadians have taken advantage of this opportunity and have been seeing doctors regularly. As a result we have a higher standard of health in this country than we had prior to the introduction of this program, so the government cannot use the argument that this increase in cost has taken it by surprise. The increase in cost is due, in part, to greater usage of the program, which was one of the fundamental goals of the program, a very laudable goal at that.

The problem has been that, with increased use of the program, our institutions have not adapted to the changing situation. Far too many of our expensive, regular treatment hospital beds are being used to care for people who should be handled in less expensive, chronic care or outpatient facilities. Part of the rise in the cost of the program, besides greater use of the program, has surely been the failure of provincial governments, hospital boards, and the medical profession to adapt to changing circumstances and to look for cost saving measures in areas other than the traditional treatment of illness. This is something I want to come back to later because I think it is an avenue for saving that can be vigorously pursued by provincial health care programs and which would eliminate this kind of arbitrary action on the part of the federal government in changing the funding formula.

What worries me at this point, Mr. Speaker, is the formula that the federal government seems to be coming up with. Instead of saying that, no matter what the escalation in cost is, the federal government will pay half, it has put forward the proposal that it will keep its contributions in line with the annual growth in the Gross National Product in this country. I cannot for the life of me figure out the reasoning of the bureaucrat who dreamt that one up. In other words what the government is saying is this, that in times of recession, such as now, if the economy is growing at a slower rate, then Canadians must be sick less. What an absurd proposition. As if viruses will stop at the border of this country and we can say that, because our economy is stagnant, we must not have any increased incidence of 'flu, polio, or what have you. How ludicrous, how absolutely absurd, to tie health care costs to the growth in the gross national quotient! I just do not understand the reasoning behind this proposition. However, all this may make sense if the House accepts my original premise that it is the dollar sign, not the health of Canadians, that concerns the government most.

I do not want to see this country go back to the situation that obtains with our neighbour to the south which does not have a universal medicare program. In the United States private insurance plans call for very high premiums, higher than any premiums that Canadians are paying for their nation-wide health program administered by the provinces. I do not want to see Canadians face the situation that one Canadian faced when he was visiting New York and his daughter became ill. She was taken to a United States hospital, but before they would admit the girl for treatment the admitting desk told them, since they did not belong to any American program, that until they could investigate the Canadian plan to which the father belonged he would have to deposit a $1,500 cheque.

We cannot go backwards, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think that Canadians want to go backwards. I fear that most Canadians do not understand the implications of this legislation which surely will mean a return in some form or another to those days when the kind of health care treatment you got depended on the size of your pay cheque, when the kind of doctor or specialist you engaged was contingent upon your own personal wealth. In a way, Mr. Speaker, that is the sort of thing that is going to happen now.

Since the federal government is not going to maintain its share of the cost, the provinces will have to cut back on the services that they have been providing, or being to implement deterrent fees, or raise taxes, or pass other kinds of punitive measures that will affect the ordinary individual as surely as if he had to pay directly every time he or a member of his family goes to a hospital.

● (1520)

The implications of this change in funding are very far reaching, and it seems that medicare is to be the first victim. I have warned Canadians that once this occurs in respect of medicare it will not stop there. We are going to see cutbacks in federal shared-cost agreements not only in medicare but in university funding, in equalization payments, and in other things, which surely is what Confederation is all about, that is, providing a standard of living and a standard of service that are not discriminatory because you live in Newfoundland as opposed to Ontario, or Manitoba as opposed to British Columbia.

We can begin to see what is taking place if we look at medicare legislation and other statements that have been coming out of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau's) office. One just has to look back to the June, 1975, budget to begin to see what I mean when I say the federal government is starting to back off from its cost sharing programs. We find since that budget that the government has put ceilings on federal contributions to cost sharing programs as part of its over-all restraint program and is forcing the provincial governments to pick up more and more of the costs of these programs.

We can trace the beginning of this to earlier than the 1975 budget. In 1972 under tax reform the provincial share of income tax growth was reduced from 28 per cent to 23.4 per cent. To make up for this the revenue guarantee formula was drawn up. It was designed to protect provincial tax revenues for the five-year period from 1972 to 1977. At the most recent finance ministers' conference back in April the federal government announced it was changing this guarantee.

The estimates projected a loss to the provinces of some $800 million to $900 million as a result of the change in the formula. In fact we find that in 1975-76, and that was the first year any funds were actually paid out, the provinces estimated how much money they would receive under the revenue guarantee and budgeted accordingly. In 1974 indexing was unilaterally introduced by the federal government. This measure cut significantly into provincial as well as federal income tax revenue.

Since June, 1975, we have seen a limit placed on the equalization of oil and gas revenues, a 15 per cent limit in the growth of federal contributions for post-secondary education, limits in this bill on medicare, withdrawals from services to treaty Indians, cutbacks in funds for police protection, and in manpower training and regional economic development.

This bill is not just one isolated example; it is part of a growing pattern of federal cutbacks in cost sharing with the provinces. Every Canadian living in each of the provinces across Canada is going to suffer in one way or another. If this bill passes, the provinces will not only lose money in the medicare field they will be losing money in other cost sharing programs as well. This will be an added pressure and burden on the provincial governments if they want to maintain medicare at the same level as it has existed in the past, because they will be required to make some choices.

The federal government is cutting back in the area of equalization payments, in manpower training, and the provinces have to make up that difference with limited revenue, especially under the new tax sharing formulae. They have to get that money from somewhere, and the temptation may well be to get it from the budgets allotted to medicare.

It is shocking to realize that at the recent finance minister's conference of 1975-76 the ten provinces lost $1 billion in potential revenue as a result of just three of the federal government's actions; limiting equalization of oil-gas revenues, indexing, and changes in the revenue guarantee formula. This figure is expected to increase to $1,250 million or $1,500 million in the years 1976-77. Any province faced with that kind of cutback in revenue will be in a precarious state.

[Mr. Symes.]

The only way the provinces can raise revenue, if the federal government is not going to provide it, is by increasing the taxes on the citizens of the provinces. That will hurt those people living in the provinces that are less wealthy than others. I think particularly of the maritime provinces, Quebec, some areas of northern Ontario, northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan. These provinces have a limited potential for raising revenue and they can only squeeze so much out of the people. The only alternative left to them is to cut back on the programs, and that will mean we will have gone back on those great recommendations of the Rowell-Sirois Royal Commission in the early 1940's. That commission said we must have equalization of services and standards of living for Canadians from one end of the country to the other.

If this bill passes, with the changes in revenue sharing the federal government proposed at the recent first ministers' conference, it can only lead to a balkanization of Canada, dividing it up into first, second, and third class regions, and first, second, and third class citizens. Surely that is a backward step and a negation of the whole principle of co-operative federalism which is what this country should be all about.

If the bill passes I am certain we are going to see deterrent fees levied by provinces. How else can they raise the money to meet increased costs? This will mean to the average citizen that any time he visits the doctor there will be an extra fee charged, maybe $5, or maybe $10. Everytime he gets an X-ray there will likewise be an additional fee charged. Every kind of service will have a price tag with the cost coming out of the individual's pocket, no matter what his or her ability to pay.

The beauty of the medicare system was that the revenue came from general taxation, or personal income tax which is based on the ability to pay. The deterrent fee, just like sales tax, is a negative cost not based on that principle. The deterrent fee to someone at the poverty level, with a family of four, which is about $7,600 per year, is a much more severe penalty than it is to a family with an income in the range of $15,000 to $50,000.

● (1530)

If we move to deterrent fees—and I regret to say that the provinces will probably go that way—then we are back to the stage at which we were prior to the introduction of these health care schemes, that is, health treatment based on the pocket books, not on the universal principle of equal treatment. Surely we have fought too long to go back to that situation. If the provinces do not move to deterrent fees then the only other way they can increase revenue is to increase the premiums for medicare, and that means that the annual premium will have to go up, and for certain provinces, such as Ontario which do not take medicare costs out of general income tax revenue but levy a premium on each individual or each family, which is regressive, those costs of course will go up. It will mean an added hardship to those residents in the province who have to pay increased premiums by the direct premium method at a time when inflation is continuing to rise and at the same time as people's wages are controlled by the anti-inflation program.

We can have deterrent fees, or we can have increased premiums for medicare, or provinces can choose the third route, that is, to cut back on services. Of course that is the most arbitrary and cruel method of all. We have had a foretaste of that in my province of Ontario where the government, faced with escalating costs, rather than initiate a study to look at ways of becoming more efficient, to look at ways of taking people out of expensive regular hospital beds and putting them in out-patient clinics, arbitrarily decided that it would close down small community hospitals or reduce the number of beds available in larger urban hospitals as a means of saving money in its health care system. This was done in Ontario before the passing of this bill and the change in the funding formula. If we see the province under that kind of pressure at this stage, how much more drastic will those cut-backs be a few years down the road when the effects of this act come into force?

Again I say this Liberal government is undoing what the provincial governments, especially in Saskatchewan, have struggled to achieve for so many years. But there is a way around the arbitrary cut-back and change of the federal funding formula. This government can be a leader in promoting preventive medicine if it wanted to, in developing programs that could be a model for provincial governments to follow, and in improving the standard of health of Canadians across the country. But we only see tokenism on the part of the federal government when it comes to initiating preventive medicine.

I refer to what has happened in a community outside my riding, nearby in northern Ontario at Elliot Lake, where the uranium mines are located, and where evidence has now come to light of serious problems among the miners due to silicosis because of the lack of federal leadership. It is a mine which comes under the control of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada, a federal agency. I am referring to the lack of leadership of the government in ensuring that proper safety and environmental standards are adhered to in that mine.

If the federal government is serious about demonstrating its commitment to preventive medicine, why has it not revised and upgraded the standards of health and environment in uranium mines across this country? Elliot Lake is now undergoing a tremendous expansion. The steelworkers' union there has submitted proposals to the Atomic Energy Control Board outlining its concerns about the same kind of environmental mistakes and health hazards being repeated because the company, in its expansion, is not required to put in adequate and proper ventilation systems, to recycle polluted water, and to bury contaminated waste.

We see growing evidence of industrial cancers across the land in many occupations, not only in uranium mining but in asbestos plants and in work places where dust is high. Dr. Selikoff, a renowned American doctor, has documented this in case studies. He states that as little as two weeks' exposure to high dust levels in asbestos plants and certain other mines, even for people conducting roofing with hot tar, can lead to the development of cancers some 20 years later after the dormant period takes place. Yet we do not have national standards, proper environmental standards in the work place, nor do we have a government which seems to be serious about the proliferation of alcohol and tobacco advertising, which creates a demand for these products which have been shown to lead to great health problems throughout the country.

The incidence of lung cancer and alcoholism is growing, and yet the federal government still allows advertisers of these products to deduct the costs of advertising for income tax purposes. If this government were serious about reducing the incidence of lung cancer and alcoholism, it could easily amend the Income Tax Act to make it less attractive for these industries to carry out the kind of advertising that promotes excessive consumption of these items.

If this government were serious about reducing health care costs, it would not be cutting back its funding of medical research programs. Example after example can be shown of this Liberal government's policy saying "Do as I say, not as I do." It has not demonstrated its serious commitment to preventive medicine. It has taken the easier route of arbitrarily reneging on the solemn commitment that it has to medicare and sloughing off the burden on to the provinces, which of course have less room in which to manoeuvre so far as revenue is concerned.

I say again and again that this bill is a backward, regressive step. All Canadians will suffer as a result. We will have a lower standard of health care. We will have a system of health care that becomes increasingly geared to one's ability to pay rather than to the fact that one is a citizen of Canada and, as such, deserves adequate and affordable health care. I think this is a regressive and backward bill, as I said, and I wish that some of the Liberal backbenchers who represent constituents from different parts of the country would be honest enough to admit to them that a few years down the road they will suffer because their Liberal majority will force this inequitous piece of legislation through the House.

● (1540)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions among the House leaders about the undesirability of having votes on Friday, and it has been agreed that the vote will be called at a time to be decided after consultation among the House leaders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the vote will be taken at a later time after agreement between the House leaders?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Like six months later.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as I rise at third reading of this bill I point out that we intend to allow the bill to go through, but I do not think it should go through without making some comments.

The purpose of the legislation is to set up a committee to advise the Canadian Wheat Board, with which I agree, and there is a provision in the bill which stipulates what the advisory committee can do. There are also certain regulations established by the governor in council. One error in this bill is that it allows too much control to be retained by the governor in council and not enough control is given to the advisory committee.

After all, the advisory committee is made up of producers, and it is in their interest to be on the committee. I think it was brought forcibly to our attention in the standing committee that when members of parliament from the area served by the Canadian Wheat Board, that is, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Peace River area of British Columbia, wished to bring in legislation, it was agreed to by the minister, but it was turned down by other hon. members not from that area. This raises the very fundamental point that it is dangerous to allow politics to become involved in the operation of a board such as the Canadian Wheat Board. We have seen that happen in the past. We have seen manipulation of pay-outs prior to the end of the year.

Mr. Goodale: Nonsense.

Mr. Towers: The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) says that is nonsense. He has not been around here very long. He does not remember that the Senate had to bring in a bill which curtailed the actions of the manipulators. If all control of the Canadian Wheat Board were given to the board and its advisers, there would be very little reason for the governor in council to have that control. I would far rather have the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board or the chairman of the advisory committee stating what the initial payments are to be and what the final payments are to be. I think it would be better if they were doing it rather than the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

I feel that there is a misconception of what actually takes place within the operation of that board. I should stress that the Wheat Board pays its own way. It pays its own expenses, and I am sure that the consumers and taxpayers of Canada feel that the final or initial payments come out of the federal treasury, which is not the case. I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia would agree with me that it comes out of the farmers' own money.

We must never underestimate the value of this income to the Canadian economy. The other day at report state I stressed that it gives great assistance to our economic well-being in counteracting our deficit balance of payments, which must never be overlooked, but also must not be taken for granted because inclement weather can have a great deal to do with the income of the prairie grain producer. Perhaps many Canadian taxpayers have to contend only with the Canadian government, but the western grain producer has to contend with the weather as well as the Canadian government. This has proven to be of fundamental importance. Reports coming out of central Europe and England indicate that that part of the world is undergoing a severe drought which is having a devastating impact on its economic well-being. That could well be the case in Canada if this happened to us, so therefore we must consider as carefully as we can the economic outlook of the western grain producer and afford him the opportunity of participating to the greatest extent possible in the handling of his business.

As the years go by the prairie grain producer is becoming better informed, better educated, and better able to look after himself, as long as he does not run into too much government interference. I fear that there is a tendency in the present administration to interfere to a great degree with the Canadian Wheat Board as a selling agency. The board was initially set up as a selling agency.

I think there are few in this House who remember the years when producers who were not very well off had to sell their grain in the fall at a low price because they had to have money to pay their debts. This was the reason the Canadian Wheat Board came into existence under the administration of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. The bad things about his administration are remembered, but seldom is he given credit for the good things he did, and establishing the Canadian Wheat Board was one of them. In those years the person who was able to hold his grain until the spring or the following summer sometimes was able to get two or three times as much for it, and that increased the deficit balance which then existed between one producer and another. However, through the marketing agency of the Canadian Wheat Board all producers now receive pretty well the same amount, provided the grade and quality are the same.

● (1550)

One of the benefits of this bill is that it will allow for the governor in council to set up a pool primarily of malting barley. There has been a great discrepancy in the past year with relation to grades in malting barley and it has caused confusion among producers. It was not fair for those who had No. 3CW to receive 80 cents more than the person who had No. 1 Feed. We all realize that the margin was very narrow—perhaps a half pound per bushel differential between one grade and another. This has caused a problem for a lot of producers, some of whom lose $2,000 on a carload of barley. This is not fair. This protection is one of the good aspects of the bill.

If the bill had gone further and given more control to the advisory board I could certainly have given it my full support. As it is I feel the governor in council is retaining too much control and that the Canadian Wheat Board is still open to manipulation by either the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Just this week the Minister of Agriculture was in Red Deer, and I should like to read a little bit of the speech he made there.

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Towers: Red Deer is in the very heart of Alberta—far western Canada. It is the heart. Here is a portion of the speech made by the Minister of Agriculture:

> Another federal policy with implication for Alberta hog producers is the domestic feed grain policy. We announced some changes in this policy three weeks ago.

When the minister said "we" I presume he was referring to the announcement made in this House by himself and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. He went on:

> Effective August 1, the Canadian Wheat Board will be offering feed grains at corn-competitive prices worked back from Montreal. And, feed freight assistance is being reduced or eliminated to British Columbia, Ontario and western Quebec.

When the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board made this announcement they said it was going to do away with the inequity that existed between feeding in eastern Canada and western Canada. Feeders in western Canada are now beginning to realize that such is not the case. This is not working out that way, and we on this side of the House said at the time that it would not work. What is happening is that western grain producers are going to receive 50 cents per bushel less for the grain that goes to the eastern market; yet it is not going to make the grain any cheaper to the western feeder—not a penny.

I would be prepared to debate this issue with the hon. member for Assiniboia or either minister on the figures available, because we have worked it out. Mr. Turner, the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, agrees that the only thing it is going to do is give western grain producers 50 cents per bushel less for the grain that is fed to the eastern market.

I feel that unless a great deal of caution is exercised there is danger that the Canadian Wheat Board could become an agency of provision rather than a selling agency. If it is going to serve its purpose in the best interests of the producer, those people who are commissioners and those who are members of the advisory committee must have complete freedom.

I really have no quarrel with western grain filling the requirements of the eastern feeder—not at all. I realize and recognize the value of the feeding industry in Canada; nevertheless I have a concern that the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board as well as the commissioners could hamstring this policy which has been announced by the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board because it is tied to corn. The price of western grain is tied to corn f.o.b. Montreal.

I have no quarrel whatsoever with the element of competition, but if eastern feeders can buy United States corn from Chicago cheaper than they can buy western grain—at less money than the western producer can get if he ships it to the west coast or through the port of Churchill—I have to question the economics of it. It is not taking anything away from the eastern feeder as long as his requirements are met, but I do not see why we should throw money down the drain to fill a market that could adequately be filled from some other source.

I am sure the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board recognizes that you can put corn on the Montreal market cheaper and with less freight involved than that which comes from western Canada. It takes $11 a ton to move it from Thunder Bay to Montreal, but only $9 a ton from Toledo to Montreal, and that adds up to a lot of money.

Another thing we have to deal with is the St. Lawrence Seaway charges. There is no doubt that the St. Lawrence Seaway is going to try to increase those charges. At the present time the Canadian taxpayer is picking up those charges that were created by the movement of freight—not necessarily grain but also ore and all other freight that goes through the system. If the total cost were charged to the grain, instead of paying one and a half cents per bushel for Seaway charges alone, we would be paying five cents per bushel. That is just the lock charges and not the freight charges because the latter run at 27 cents a bushel. However, an increase would be required to compensate for the differential.

I feel therefore that much greater consideration should be given to the advisory committee and that their terms of reference should be enlarged. I think they could have a greater input into the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board than can the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board or the governor in council. After all, that is the reason they are elected. They have the confidence of the producers and this is their sole purpose in being there. It is not so with the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board because he operates in a dual capacity. As Minister of Transport he is trying to do away with the Crowsnest freight rates which the grain producers want to retain. No minister can serve two parties, and I am sure he would be the first to realize that.

The other day I tried to find out from the minister what he meant when he spoke of doing away with the Crowsnest freight rates—what he meant by "some other way". He relied on a speech he made in Edmonton a year and a half ago. Actually he is just living in the past. He has had his day and he is not resolving the problems; in fact with what is happening in the air at the present time I think he is creating more problems than he is solving.

I think this bill errs in that it is definitely not giving enough power to the advisory committee. After all these people are wise; they are smart; they are producers, and should have considerable input with regard to the well-being of the Canadian Wheat Board.

● (1600)

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take the floor after the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who made such wise remarks. He showed clearly the problem relating to Bill C-88. It is a surprising bill because in many ways it is pretty good, which is the surprising part. What a surprise that the Liberals should introduce a good bill! But that surprise tends to disappear when one realizes that all the good parts of the bill are the result of comments made by members of the opposition.

Mr. Paproski: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: But the Liberals who are known as humanitarians did not want to surprise anyone too severely; therefore they included certain inequities in the bill to make it seem normal.

I want to focus attention on these inequities, and focus attention on the motion proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) with respect to the advisory committee to the Wheat Board. Basically the hon. member's suggestion proposed a guarantee in legislation that the advisory committee shall be made up of farmers or producers.

I challenge government members, especially the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), to tell the House what they have against farmers exercising influence on farming business. Was not the Canadian Wheat Board set up in order to sell our grain on foreign markets? Does it not sell the product of the farmer? Therefore, why should not the farmer expect a guarantee in legislation to the effect that the advisory board will be made up of farm producers? It is only normal that the members of an industry want to look after themselves. The legislation ought to provide for the advisory board to be made up only of farmers and that ought to be spelled out.

It is interesting to note what has happened in this country with regard to the input of farmers into Canadian society. When Canada first became a confederate nation, 95 per cent of its people were rural; in essence, most of them were farm people. Today the reverse is the case. Approximately 85 per cent of all Canadians live in cities; that percentage, according to the Lithwick report, will become even larger by the year 2000. In the past decade we lost from the land 170,000 farm people. This means that, at this time in our history, the input into our society of the farming industry is becoming progressively smaller.

It is important to recognize that while the proportion of farmers in Canadian society is becoming progressively smaller, farming is still the most important industry, both in terms of economics and in terms of social well-being. At no time has an advanced culture not been preceded by advanced agriculture. No society in the world has ever developed and advanced without a firm agricultural foundation. All societies depend on a well developed agricultural system. Despite this, the present government is unwilling to guarantee in legislation the right of the farmer to have some say in matters pertaining to the administration of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Farming is a business; the farmer is in the business of food production. Food comes from two sources, soil and water. There are no others. According to United Nations standards, 20 per cent of all Canadians are poor. On the international scene, of course, the incidence of total poverty is much more severe. With regard to the international scene, every day 12,000 children under the age of five die of starvation. Four fifths of this world suffers from malnutrition. In most countries of the world the individual daily calory intake of the people is less than one fifth of the normal intake of the individual Canadian. Therefore the business of food production is one of our most important businesses. Agriculture is our most important industry. There is no advanced society which does not have access to a well developed, progressive agricultural industry.

This piece of legislation purports to make certain adjustments with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board. While I commend some clauses in the bill, I suggest that it is folly not to broaden the scope of the legislation in order to permit farmers to exercise power through the advisory committee. I suggest that enshrined in the legislation should be the provision calling for members of the advisory committee to be farm producers.

It is important that farm producers throughout the Canadian Wheat Board growing area should have confidence in the institution to which they sell their grain and some powers with which to direct and manage their own affairs. But that apparently is not how the government proceeds traditionally; it is not concerned about the rights of individuals. It is concerned about imposing management. In other words, it puts a society based on structure ahead of one based on people's choices. That is why farmers and certain organizations have resisted legislation of this type so strongly.

An order in council does not allow farmers to put their case before a standing committee. I ask the government, why is it afraid to have farm people appear before the standing committee in case changes are to be made in the legislation?

Mr. Paproski: They don't like farmers.

Mr. Malone: If they were willing to guarantee with legislation that farm people have the right to run their own affairs, they would have nothing to fear.

It is evident that this bill shows a distrust on the part of the government of the farm people of this country. Apparently the government thinks farmers do not have the wherewithal to run their own affairs. That should not be the government's attitude. It should adopt a more trusting attitude to those who have so capably allowed us to achieve our present high standard of living.

Mr. Paproski: The way the government treats farmers is shameful.

Mr. Malone: The minister in charge of the Wheat Board agreed, when appearing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture, that the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw was acceptable. Actually he said that he agreed with the spirit of that amendment, agreed that there should be some guarantee that farmers would be on the advisory board. Unfortunately, ten government members, not one of whom represents ridings within the Canadian Wheat Board growing area, at a later date, not knowing the minister's position, chose to vote against the amendment. That was unfortunate. Farm people again are being jeopardized because people from outside the Canadian Wheat Board growing area have made a decision without understanding the agricultural industry. They did not extend their trust to those in that industry. Really it is not a matter of whether farm people should be on the board; it is a matter of whether the government is willing to extend trust to farmers. The other part of the question is, why is the government so distrustful? Why is it not willing to let farmers have some persuasive say in the management of their own affairs?

We need to reverse trends in this country. Instead of building structures and institutions and imposing them on people, it is high time we encouraged Canadians to take a more active and responsible role in the administration of their own lives.

I conclude by saying that while I think most of this bill is satisfactory, I wish the government would see fit to extend more trust and responsibility to farmers within the Canadian Wheat Board growing area.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like for a few moments this afternoon to speak generally on Bill C-88, but before I do that may I deal with the arguments advanced earlier by the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken.

In particular I refer to the argument they are making about the amendment which was proposed in committee and later at report stage by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) having to do with the restrictions which that particular member wanted to place in this legislation. It is interesting to note the contrast between what the hon. member for Moose Jaw was in fact proposing and the rhetoric of the two hon. members who have just spoken.

● (1610)

The point is that that amendment would have restricted the range of choice of farmers in selecting people to represent them upon the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board. The amendment would have restricted their freedom of choice. It would cut down their range of choice. The argument presented to the House in opposition to that amendment, the argument which persuaded itself to the House, was that we should leave the range of options broad and general for farmers when making their selection of producers or others to represent them.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) a question. Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Goodale: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Towers: If it was a bad amendment, why did the minister in charge of the wheat board agree with it in committee?

Mr. Malone: That was my question too.

Mr. Goodale: In the committee hearings that were cited in this House when the bill was debated at the report stage, hon. members opposite chose only to read those selected portions of the committee minutes which supported their case. They stopped short of reading the full context of what was said.

Mr. Malone: You were not there.

Mr. Goodale: When you read all of those minutes, as I have read them very carefully word for word, you find out very clearly what transpired in the committee. The members of that committee drew to the attention of the committee certain aspects that were being overlooked in the amendment being proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

The point is this. The amendment would have restricted the freedom of choice and the range of options of producers. The committee, and later this House, opted at the initial stage of establishing this new election procedure, for a broad range of choice for farmers. The ultimate protection is in the legislation. When an election is held to select the advisers to the Canadian Wheat Board, that election is squarely, fully, and solely in the hands of producers. They are the ones who have the franchise. They are the ones who will make the ultimate decision. I have every confidence in the ability, capacity, and good judgment of farmers that when they exercise their franchise they will make the right decision in their own best interest. They do not need this kind of artificial protection which would limit the freedom and range of choice they would otherwise have.

In Bill C-88 this House of Commons is being called upon to amend in two specific and postive respects the legislation which forms the foundation of the system of marketing for most of our western Canadian grain production, namely, the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It is clearly understood that these changes are being proposed in direct response to the clear expression of opinion of prairie farmers.

Primarily this bill seeks to achieve two quite separate objectives. First, clauses 1 and 3 of Bill C-88 deal essentially with the provision of a permanent basis for the election of advisers by prairie grain producers to the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee.

Second, clause 4 of the bill makes provision for the establishment of separate marketing pools, within the wheat board structure, for certain selected and accepted grains, such as malting barley.

The remaining sections of the bill, namely clauses 2 and 5, are of a technical housekeeping nature, unrelated to the two major amendments I have just mentioned, which correct errors in wording or minor anomalies which presently appear in the act.

As we conclude this debate, may I comment just briefly on the two essential highlights contained in Bill C-88; first, the matter of a separate CWB marketing pool for malting barley, and so on. Presently the Canadian Wheat Board Act requires the pooling of proceeds from all sales of wheat, oats, and barley in their respective pool accounts, the deduction of all expenses incurred in marketing each grain, and the same payment per grade to all producers. For example, the sales revenue for No. 1 feed barley which is selected and accepted for malting must be pooled by the board with the revenue from all sales of No. 1 feed barley irrespective of its end use. That is how the bill reads now. That gives a nutshell explanation of the problem which farmers saw and the government recognized in bringing forth this amendment.

Under the amendment, a separate pool for barley that has been selected and accepted for malting purposes will ensure that only those costs incurred in marketing malting barley are charged to that pool. With a separate pool, those producers who deliver selected grains such as malting barley will receive the full benefit of any premiums obtained by the board for it. That is the gist of the amendment dealing with the separate pool. Naturally enough, in recent months at least, western producers have been anxious to see the wheat board begin to keep separate accounts. The government, through the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, committed itself to respond to that concern. Accordingly we have this amendment. Under its terms, and as a result of preparatory accounting work already done by the wheat board, it will be possible to treat deliveries of malting barley in this current 1975-76 crop year as a separate pool account, that is, the amendment, when it receives parliamentary approval, is intended to be retroactive to the beginning of this crop year, August 1, 1975.

The second major amendment in Bill C-88, that dealing with the wheat board advisory committee election, follows upon a very successful experiment conducted last year in which the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board provided prairie producers with a first opportunity to elect for themselves this most important advisory group to the board. This, of course, is the aspect of the legislation which was dealt with in the form of amendments at the report stage.

Under the present terms of the Wheat Board Act, the members of the advisory committee are in fact appointed by the governor in council with no provision for their direct selection by producers.

The minister, the Government of Canada, and many prairie producers have believed for some considerable time that the 11 member advisory committee should be chosen by farmers themselves having a direct vote. It was with this thought in mind that the minister authorized the first election of the members of the advisory committee in 1975. The widespread interest of producers in the process is illustrated by the fact that 67 individuals were nominated to seek election in the 11 electoral districts. The campaigns were vigorous and enthusiastic. The successful candidates in that election were subsequently appointed to the committee by the governor in council as technically required by the act.

The new bill will establish and guarantee the electoral process for the advisory committee in the Canadian Wheat Board Act itself. Under the amendment the board will exercise the direction and supervision of the administrative process in all future elections. The governor in council will be empowered to enact regulations prescribing the procedural and electoral rules for the election, and the rates of remuneration for expenses incurred by the members in the proper discharge of their duties.

The next election of the advisory committee will be in 1978, and every fourth year thereafter, according to the new amendment.

As I mentioned at the outset, Mr. Speaker, these amendments have been presented to the House in direct response to the representations of producers and producer organizations which have indicated a genuine desire to see the electoral process for the advisory committee enshrined in the statute itself, and to see in the interests of equity a separate pool for selected grades of grains such as malting barley.

May I close, Mr. Speaker, by taking a moment or two to put these latest amendments to the Wheat Board Act into context, into the context of the exciting and impressive development of the grains industry and relevant Government of Canada grains policy over the past six or seven years under the leadership of the present responsible minister who has carried, since 1969, the fundamental responsibility for the development and co-ordination of all policies and programs of the Government of Canada relating to western grain.

For the record, here is a partial list of some of the things which have been achieved since the early difficult days in 1969 and 1970 when prairie grain producers were facing one of their most depressing periods, certainly the most difficult era in recent decades.

● (1620)

For example, we have seen the introduction of expanded credit facilities and long term government guarantees to enable the Wheat Board to pursue new markets. Vigorous efforts have been made for the first time, to break into the world barley market where we had never seriously been before 1970. There was the annual commitment of $10 million toward a new market development fund to enhance grain marketing opportunities. New research facilities have been established through the Canada Department of Agriculture, a new crop science division at the University of Saskatchewan, and a "protein-oil-starch" pilot plant in Saskatoon to help find news way of processing grain and oil seeds.

I would remind hon. members of the establishment of the two-price wheat program, of the substantial increases in the level of available cash advances together with provisions for more flexible repayment arrangements. I would also call attention to improvements in the timing of Wheat Board final payments and adjustment cheques, to the implementation of the deferred cash ticket option on grain deliveries, and to the arrangement for putting reliable production and marketing information into the hands of producers regularly each year well in advance of seeding.

Determined efforts have been made to remove old inequities in our system of domestic feed grains marketing. The House will recall measures to bring about an upgraded crop insurance program, the premiums for which the Government of Canada shares 50-50 with farmers. In addition, the terms upon which Farm Credit Corporation loans are made have been substantially improved.

Further measures for the strengthening of the western grains industry include: a poll among producers on rapeseed marketing; the experimental producer election of an advisory committee to the Wheat Board a year ago; a new quota system; the block shipping system; the purchase of 6,000 grain hopper cars; a boxcar repair program; the Mants Report on boxcar allocation procedures; the appointment of port co-ordinators for Thunder Bay and Vancouver; the Snavely Commission on the cost of transporting grain by rail, and the Hall Commission on grain handling and transportation. Finally I must mention, of course, the western grain stabilization plan which will bring a new and unprecedented measure of strength and stability to the western grains industry, to individual producers, and to the western economy generally.

That is just a partial list of achievements but it will give the House an idea of the important and impressive advances which have assisted the western grains industry to rise to the unprecedented state of strength and health which it has enjoyed in recent years. Also important, indeed I would say crucial to this improved state of affairs for western producers, is the unparalleled ability, capacity, and good judgment of prairie farmers themselves as producers and marketers which places them in the ranks of the world's most resourceful and productive people. The bill now before us is another progressive step forward on two fronts for the Western grains industry. I commend it to the House for speedy final passage in the interests of prairie grain farmers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock!

Mr. Sharp: We have completed the government business before the House today, but before asking Your Honour to call it five o'clock might I indicate the order of business for Monday? We shall call Bill C-61 for third reading. This will be followed by Bill C-83 and discussion will continue until the House can resume consideration of Bill C-84 which will be at the report stage when the committee reports on Monday evening.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There was some discussion earlier today about the possibility of the House passing a resolution in connection with the air traffic control and airline pilot situation. Has anything been done on that matter?

Mr. Sharp: I had some discussion with the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and with the House Leader of that party, as well as with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). The minister concerned held discussions today with the air traffic controllers and these talks have now been adjourned.

There have been some very preliminary discussions here and it may be that on Monday we shall want to consider a resolution. However, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated during the question period, the terms of the resolution would of course be negotiated with the other parties before being presented to the House; so there will be no action today, though there may be on Monday.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If I understood the government House leader correctly he mentioned Bill C-61 which, as far as I know, had been left out of the package which was to be completed by June 30. I take it this is just a filler—that we shall just have a discussion on the subject and continue when we resume in the fall.

Mr. Sharp: When I announced the business the government insisted be completed before we adjourn, I did not include Bill C-61. However, this did not mean we would not want to discuss Bill C-61, and if the House is prepared to approve third reading, that would not be contrary to any undertaking I have given. But we are not insisting on the approval of Bill C-61 before we adjourn.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And that, I understand, is to be the first order of business on Monday. May I ask for how long we will be discussing that measure before we go on to Bill C-84? Is a certain period of time to be allocated?

Mr. Sharp: I would be prepared to devote the whole of Monday to Bill C-61. If the House were able to agree to approve it, we would be very pleased. But if the House decided not to do so, we would accept that situation. We would then proceed to Bill C-83. Also, if Bill C-61 is approved of some time on Monday we would turn to Bill C-83, but in any event Bill C-83 would be taken up until we go back to consideration of the report stage of Bill C-84.

Mr. Stanfield: My understanding was that at the time the House agreed to extend hours it was also agreed that only a very limited legislative package would be considered, for example, the bill relating to government expenditures was not included—Bill C-87.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't bring that back.

Mr. Stanfield: No, I don't want to do that. But my impression as to what was agreed to differs from that of the government House leader. I am subject to correction, but my impression was that when we agreed to extended hours part of that agreement was that a list of certain bills was to be considered, and that Bill C-61 was not one of those. I think there is something more involved in this than the government House leader simply saying that he never agreed to more than that the government would not insist on certain bills being considered before the House adjourned. My impression is that the government House leader agreed that only certain bills would be considered as part of the package of extended hours.

● (1630)

I am not accusing the government House leader of bad faith—I do not think he would be guilty of such a thing—but it seems to me that there should be some consultation in regard to the government House leader bringing forward some bill that is not in the package. Otherwise there might be quite a widespread feeling in some parts of the House that there has been a breach of good faith by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Sharp: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the extended hours were introduced in order to enable us basically to get ahead with Bill C-84. However, I would indicate—and I think this will support the position I have taken—that while we would not insist upon the passage of C-83, for example, it would be discussed as long as the House was in session and progress could be made. I think we are in very much the same position on Bill C-61, that the government would like to see it approved but would not keep the House in session for the purpose of discussing Bill C-61. Moreover, we would not be discussing Bill C-61 during any of the extended hours.

Mr. Paproski: Are we going to have extended hours on Tuesday and Thursday of next week? We agreed that once Bill C-84 was passed that was it, or did it relate to all government business?

Mr. Sharp: The order speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker. At one time at an earlier stage we negotiated for extended hours only for the purpose of considering the second reading of Bill C-84. Then at a later stage the negotiations were changed and there was a clear understanding, which is expressed in the order, that the extended hours and the end of private members' hours extend until the adjournment.

Mr. Towers: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the government House leader give us his word that he will not bring Bill C-83 on until the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), who is leading the discussion at the present time in committee on Bill C-84, has at least had an opportunity to debate it? Also in view of the fact that the justice committee is going to be sitting all day Monday, and that it sat this morning and this afternoon, surely to goodness the government House leader will not bring Bill C-83 on and debate it in the House at the same time as the justice committee is sitting. Could we have a promise from the House leader that he will not bring Bill C-83 on without at least our having an opportunity to debate the issue, or until Bill C-84 is reported to the House?

Mr. Sharp: I understand the concern of the hon. member and this is the reason, for example, that I did not call Bill C-83 today or call it as the first order of business on Monday. However, I do want to make it clear that on Tuesday we would resume consideration of Bill C-83, because by that time, by its own order, the committee would have reported. I am prepared to say that if the House does approve Bill C-61 during Monday I would adjourn the House and not call Bill C-83 if at that time the committee is still sitting. When the committee has reported, I think it would be proper to bring Bill C-83 into the House. I quite understand the hon. member's concern, and it is the reason I did not call Bill C-83 today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I assure my good friend from Edmonton Centre that there will be no extended hours on Thursday. Thursday is a holiday.

Mr. Paproski: I should like to ask the government House leader what it is we shall be doing on Friday. If he has a program all set up for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, what about Friday?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the situation is this, as I understand it. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has an order which requires that the bill be reported before some time on the evening of Monday. It would require the unanimous consent of the House for the report to be received at that time. If that consent is denied, which I hope will not be the case—I hope everyone is interested in disposing of the matter and in allowing the debate to proceed without unnecessary delay—if someone does object, and it only takes one voice to object, then the report would be made on Tuesday at two o'clock. That would require 48 hours' notice before we could take up report stage, which would take us to Friday, so we will be sitting on Friday to take up consideration of the report stage of Bill C-84.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m.

At 4.38 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 28, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WEEKEND PRISON SENTENCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the statements made by Superintendent J. M. Gillingham of the Headingley Correctional Institute in Manitoba, that the four-year old federal program of weekend jail sentences is an administrative nightmare, and one-third of those serving weekend jail terms are not showing up and also many of the prisoners arrive drunk or under the influence of drugs, and as the Chief Judge of the Manitoba Provincial Judges Court has called on magistrates to stop handing out weekend prison sentences, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice to prepare a report on weekend prison sentences and, if necessary, rescind the legislation allowing weekend sentences.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS TO EMPLOYEES OF HOUSE OF COMMONS AND SENATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of some urgency. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urges the government to bring in legislation to implement the recommendation of the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service, made on February 3, 1967, to the effect that employees of the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament should be accorded the same collective bargaining and other rights that are accorded to federal public servants under the terms of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTION THAT FINAL STAGES OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL BE DELAYED UNTIL FALL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That once Bill C-84 for abolition of the death penalty is reported to the House that this House do adjourn for the summer recess and that report stage and third reading be allotted five days debate in the fall with a vote to come at the end of the fifth day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REVISION OF EXTERNAL AID POLICY TO MAKE IT MORE EFFICIENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a question of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Mr. Fernand Séguin has just resigned from the important position he held at the Science Council of Canada because of the content of the advice next to be presented to the government by the council concerning the attitude it should take toward the Third World and the imminent world food crisis, and that this disagreement underlines the possibility for Canada to adopt a policy of food imperialism toward the starving countries, as was pointed out by Mr. Omond Solandt, former president of the Council, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House of Commons review the entire Canadian aid policy towards the Third World in light of the advice of the Science Council of Canada, in order for such aid policy to be realistic, taking in account our surpluses and our production capacities, instead of becoming a disguised form of pressure on nations of the world.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

* * *

● (1410)

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION OF MINISTER'S EFFORTS IN SETTLING DISPUTE WITH AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, to seek the unanimous consent of this House to move a motion. Given today's announcement of an agreement resolving the work disruption in Canada's commercial aviation sector, and given the attendant prospect of a full and complete investigation into the relationship between safety and bilingual air traffic control, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme):

That this House do express its appreciation to the Minister of Transport for his efforts in securing a resolution of the current air traffic situation in Canada by involving the major parties in the aviation industry and commend his commitment that the maintenance of Canada's high aviation safety standards will be the key consideration of the study.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Worthy though that objective may be, it is not the proper subject for a motion under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Nowlan: Make sure you mail a copy of the motion to Pierre.

* * *

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDIES ON WHICH WARNING LABELS ON ALCOHOLIC PRODUCTS BASED—MOTION ORDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the stated intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to compel distilleries to label alcoholic products as dangerous to health, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the minister table all studies and other information which show the basis for this move by the minister.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the procedure which we will follow in the question period. The matter pertains directly to the difficulty of asking questions in the House following news reports that there has been a settlement of the air dispute. My point of order concerns the procedure which is to be followed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) with regard to this important issue.

The understanding I have from his office is that he does not intend to make a statement in the House today but, rather, intends simply to table the order in council establishing the terms of reference which have been agreed upon by all parties, I take it, and which are to be followed by the commission.

My point of order is this: if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), I and other members of the House are to ask questions on this important dispute, if our questions are to make sense, we have a right to know the terms agreed on by the minister. But if the minister intends to follow the procedure his office has indicated, he will not be making a statement; he will simply table the document later in today's proceedings. In that case, the opposition parties will not be able to ask questions on this important issue.

I doubt if Your Honour will consider that I have raised a prima facie point of order. Really, I am trying to appeal through Your Honour to the Minister of Transport to please not foul up this procedure, to change his mind and tell the House that he intends after the question period to make a statement on this important question, so that members of the opposition will be able to ask sensible questions following that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONDITIONS OF SETTLEMENT OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS' DISPUTE AND THAT ALL PARTIES ACCEPT IT

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, following the point of order raised by the leader of the NDP, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? The first part of my question is simple: is the minister going to make a statement on motions, so that we will all understand clearly the exact conditions of the settlement? Second, can he assure the House and country that all parties, direct and indirect, have accepted the settlement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I am not sure how broad the hon. member meant to make his question by referring to everyone "direct and indirect;" therefore I will not even try to grapple with that part of his question. I had not intended to make a statement on motions because I had nothing in the way of principle or policy to add to what was said in the course of the debate on motions last week where the principles were very clearly set out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I am in the situation where the rules allow for the tabling of documents at three o'clock and I propose to do that, at which time the documents will become available to all members of this House. That is probably an important consideration as well. I did have the agreement of the parties which had worked on these various documents that we would not make them public at the time of indicating to the public that we had reached an agreement; that we would speak broadly about them but not make them public so that they could indeed be tabled in the House in order that all members might see them. A day of reflection on what is in the documents may be of benefit to members opposite. I will be glad to be here tomorrow to answer questions on them. As I say, if I felt that there was any important change in any policy or principle involved in the documents, I would have made a statement. However, as hon. members will see, the basic principles to which we really all agreed last week stand very firm, so this is simply a matter of settling a dispute at this time and having the airlines fly again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The minister concluded his remarks by saying that it was simply a matter of getting the airlines flying again. We on this side of the House want the airlines to fly again. However, we feel that in some ways the minister's inflammatory statements and the Prime Minister's inflammatory statements—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should put his supplementary question.

Mr. Horner: —have in fact in some ways delayed a fruitful settlement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: My question to the minister is quite simple. Can he assure the House that all factions in this dispute have in fact agreed to the settlement? In other words, will he proceed with his legal cases? If someone is sentenced to jail, are we to expect another walkout? These are matters still in the minds of the public and I wish the minister would clear them up.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would hate to say to the hon. member that those suggestions almost smack of something inflammatory. However, I would only say that matters before the courts are still before the courts. It was very clear in these discussions that we could not bargain or discuss those matters in any way, but let them pursue their ordinary course. We believe that in this regard the law must be obeyed and pursued. I have some confidence that the air controllers and pilots in this country will be back at work in a full way as a result of this agreement. If the hon. member wants me to assure him that will be true of every pilot and controller in this country, I cannot do so. We have done our very best to give the various assurances that should quiet the fears of almost everyone. I know there are some other people who would like to create additional fear, but I do not think that should be done.

Mr. Horner: With regard to the minister's last remark, we on this side of the House are particularly pleased that he accepted a recommendation made in this House last week that a third party satisfactory to the other side of the dispute be appointed. We graciously gave the minister that advice and we are thankful that he has accepted it. However, his evasion and non-statement today do not help to assure the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POSSIBILITY OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—DATE OF RESTORATION OF DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering about some of the legal procedures. For example, a number of public servants have been suspended or had penalties assessed against them. Will the minister make a statement as to whether these will be proceeded with in the normal course of events or whether they will be waived?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member knows of some suspensions or actions of this kind, I would be glad to know about them. I do not have any in mind at this point.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the House and the country when he expects domestic service to be restored to normal?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, just as soon as that can be done mechanically. Upon arriving at a firm understanding, I am told by the pilots, their various members told the various airline managements at that point that a firm arrangement was in prospect and that shaping of the operation could begin. They felt that some planes might be flying by this very hour and just as fast as normal operations can be resumed, they will be resumed. There are always, of course, technical difficulties in connection with making sure that aircraft are in the right places and that crews are in the right places after a period of disruption such as we have just come through. However, it will only be a matter of a number of hours before fairly normal service is resumed.

● (1420)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I assure the minister that I do have special cases to tell him about but I do not intend to mention names in the House. My further question refers to foreign airlines services. Has the hon. gentleman or his officials had any conversation with foreign airlines to ascertain when their services will return to normal?

Mr. Lang: It was quite clear why certain foreign services were being suspended from Canadian operations and this happened only in certain cases. There were at all times a significant number of foreign services flying into Canada. I take it the reasons for the suspension of services by some airlines have now disappeared and I anticipate seeing an early resumption of those services, too.

FORM OF RECOMMENDATION TO PARLIAMENT FOLLOWING REPORT OF COMMISSION ON SAFETY OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is also to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Having had to change his mind on a number of crucial items in the past 48 hours, it is delightful to see the minister has regained his traditional modesty.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister say whether in the order in council which we are to see later today it is clear as to the form of parliamentary agreement which will be necessary to implement recommendations from the Commission? More specifically, will the minister tell us what form the recommendation to parliament will take following the Commission's recommendations? Will it be a detailed recommendation submitted to parliament to be voted on, or will the vote be more on a question of principle as it applies to air traffic control?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I am happy to note that the hon. member is finding it a little difficult to keep on talking about rigidity in the face of flexibility, but that will not take him too long to get over. I will not try to predict the exact form of the resolution because that will no doubt be decided at the time we receive the report of the commission. But the gist of what we are proposing is that at that time the Commission, in order for the report to be before us at all, has indicated that certain additional air traffic services in a bilingual way are fully consistent with safety in the Province of Quebec. This report will be put before the House in a way which will allow the House likewise to endorse the view that safety is indeed consistently satisfied by the changes in procedure and implementation which would follow from them.

I say most emphatically to the hon. member that this is not in any way a proposal that the House in any way question the bilingual policy or indeed the broad proposition that to the extent safety is not degraded or in any way jeopardized we shall propose to move forward with bilingual aircraft services in the Province of Quebec. That is a principle for which I believe this House stands firmly now and needs no further resolution. It will be only a question of the actual report and the adoption of certain implementation measures as being consistent with safety. This is a further triple, quadruple assurance we are seeking to give to any who doubted that, indeed, safety did come first and that no steps will be taken to jeopardize safety. I will be glad to put that proposition before the House and before going forward, therefore, the majority of members of the House will also have to say that safety was not being jeopardized.

[Mr. Lang.]

REINSTATEMENT OF COST IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I believe in the House on Friday, and certainly outside the House, the minister indicated that the government would be prepared to reinstate cost as one of the three principal elements of the investigation of the commission, in addition to the crucial element of safety and the element of efficiency. Would the minister tell the House whether cost has now been reinstated as one of the three principal areas of investigation for the commission?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in the House when we were last discussing this matter, while there had been no great interest in or question about this matter on the part of the controllers, I was prepared to reintroduce it into our discussions to see whether it would sit well with the controllers. I did do so and they were agreeable to it, and as a result the implementation cost is an item specifically mentioned in the document, as it had been in the draft we had worked on earlier.

POSSIBILITY OF FREE VOTE ON REPORT OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, having to do with the important area of what has been described in the news media as the government's decision to have a free vote on this issue. May I ask the minister whether, once the commission makes its recommendation, it is the government's intention simply to bring a motion before the House that will not have the specific endorsation of the government but will be left to government backbenchers as a free vote on the issue—that is to say, it is not a matter of government policy—or is it the government's intention to bring forward a specific recommendation which it is prepared to support as a party in the House of Commons?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, so far as this part of the policy is concerned I can only think in terms of the government side, there having to be some decisions on the other side in order to have it work in full. The position as described by whatever words were used is that we really wanted a general attitude that would reflect sufficient consensus, and I was saying that even among opposition members there would be found to be some reasonable people who were willing to support the position of safety being met. That is the approach we are taking in this matter, though in the end, of course, it will be the majority in this parliament who will decide the issue as to whether the report shall be approved.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT REAL CAUSES OF AIR CONTROLLERS' DISPUTE BE IDENTIFIED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

The Minister having gone to France where he found out that it was possible to fly in French and English, and given the statements made Friday night by the Prime Minister concerning that matter, can he tell the House whether that question of bilingualism, which seems to be exaggerated by the parties involved in the conflict, is as serious as it seems to be? Does it have to do only with bilingualism or is there anything deeper than that?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, there are some very complex issues that can combine together, and I think in this case they did. I do not think that any good purpose would be served by my trying to analyse the exact nature of the issues at this stage; I do not think the rules of the House would give me the time that may be required to do that.

[Translation]

SUGGESTION COMMISSION STUDY ASPECTS OF BILINGUALISM OTHER THAN THOSE RELATED TO CONTROLLERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

In view of his answer, can the minister tell us, with respect to the commissioners who will be responsible for the inquiry on that matter which so far seems to be limited to bilingualism whether the commission will deal with other problems which are related to the question of bilingualism and of which practically everybody is aware?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the terms of reference will speak for themselves.

* * *

● (1430)

PENITENTIARIES

CONSULTATION WITH PRISON GUARDS ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL—NUMBER OF GUARDS RESIGNING IF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT ABOLISHED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, will the Solicitor General advise whether there was any meaningful consultation with prison guards or other correctional officers in reference to Bill C-84 prior to it being introduced in the House, and prior to the vote being held on second reading, other than ad hoc discussions with various officers at various institutions from time to time? In other words, was there collective consultation and did the minister discuss with officers of the union whether they would continue to work?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, before we introduced the peace and security program we met with officials of the correctional officers' union and told them the different items we had in mind, including the abolition of capital punishment. I must say there was considerable disagreement with us on that point and there was not much room for discussion. The same opinion was conveyed to me on other occasions that I met with the executive of the union, and of locals of the union at different prisons throughout Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would ask a supplementary question because this is a very serious matter. Did the minister determine from any of these ad hoc discussions that the personnel in federal institutions, whose grave and grim responsibility and duty it is to see that society is protected against escapes and, indeed, to protect inmates against homicide by violent, incarcerated criminals, particularly in light of the fact that 15 inmates have been killed from 1971 to 1976, will continue their jobs, or how many will quit or resign if the bill becomes law immediately?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall on the occasions that I did meet with the union that they ever threatened to withdraw their services or quit if the bill were passed. I must point out also that I have met with other people who work in the prisons, such as classification officers, parole officers and so on, who also work in close contact with dangerous inmates and they do not hold the same opinion as correctional officers. I might say that in other countries where they have abolished capital punishment, and in many states of the United States, the correctional officers have carried on quite successfully after abolition of capital punishment.

CONTINGENCY PLANS IF PRISON GUARDS RESIGN

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate that those in the administrative branch would take a different position. May I put this question to the Solicitor General. What contingency measures has he set up, in light of his statement today in committee that if guards and correctional officers wish to resign because of the law they will have to do so? Therefore, the penitentiary would be left with a dangerous situation in relation to the protection of society and other inmates who are serving terms for various offences, and whose disposition and character, irrespective of the offence for which they were convicted, make them ideal prisoners, and as such they are entitled to the same protection as if they were free persons in society and not incarcerated?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I told the hon. member this morning at the committee meeting, or the commissioner of penitentiaries told him, that following the vote so far only three persons have resigned and those were in the Quebec region. We have no indication that there will be mass resignations or a strike. If there were to be a strike we do have a contingency plan similar to the one we had last year when there was a one day walk-out in Quebec. We had people to man the prisons on that occasion.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO REVEAL CONTENTS OF DRUGS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is not supplementary but has regard to a matter which is more mundane. It is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, through his official position, at least qualifies as an expert. I have received a letter from a correspondent who says that following recent reports in the press about the effects of estrogen used in a contraceptive pill she made certain inquiries of the Department of National Welfare, to which an answer came back in a stereotype form letter stating:

> With the new government regulations, we cannot distribute material which shows the contents of drugs.
>
> Please contact your doctor for further information on the pill.

I would ask the minister if there are such instructions on what they are based, and the reason behind refusing people of this country information of this sort.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to investigate the particular incident to which the hon. member is referring. But I believe there is, indeed, a standard regulation to the effect that the composition of drugs coming under the patent laws of Canada cannot be revealed by the government to competitors or to the general public at large. I think this is the situation, but I will investigate it further and report to the hon. member.

* * *

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—REASON EMPLOYEES NOT GIVEN SECURITY CLEARANCE ALLOWED IN SECURE AREAS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, now that the airlines will once again be operating I should like to repeat my question to the Minister of Transport regarding airport security, specifically at the Toronto international airport. In an answer to a question on May 28 the minister said that those who have access to security situations are processed for security clearance. Would the minister advise this House whether Air Canada computers and immigration offices in Canada are classified as security areas and, if they are, would he explain why members of the cleaning staff at the Toronto airport who, as he knows, have not been processed for security clearance, continue to have access to those areas, thereby creating a potential break in the security system at that airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously if the hon. member wants information about specific employees or groups of employees I would want to check before answering him.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I realize it is a known fact that security for the Olympics, including passenger areas, at our major international airports is indeed excellent. However, because potential dangers continue to exist as far as security is concerned, in respect of employees working at these airports, be it because of illegal immigrants or the lack of appropriate security clearance of employees, would the minister undertake to initiate an investigation into this specific matter prior to the start of the Olympic games to assure Canadians the absolute safety they deserve during this potentially explosive period of time?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member knows that very special steps have been taken to assure security, and I think he may be satisfied that that is the case.

* * *

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINGENCY PLAN IN CASE OF NUCLEAR ACCIDENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister and relates to recent reports that the United States government is developing a disaster plan to cope with the casualties, property damage and loss of civil control which might be caused by a serious accident at a nuclear plant or by the explosion of a nuclear device by a terrorist group. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether similar contingency planning is being done by the Canadian government and, if so, which government departments are involved and what minister is responsible for the co-ordination of this planning?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been aware of any such discussions going on, but I thank the hon. lady for putting this idea in our minds. Perhaps it is something to which we should be turning our attention.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN INFRASTRUCTURE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Defence in a position to indicate that by the end of this week, or if parliament should be sitting at the end of next week, he will announce changes in the defence infrastructure in Canada having regard to the closing of certain bases and the possible reduction of the reserve strength of certain units?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate making any announcement concerning changes in the infrastructure before the House rises.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is considerable interest and a great deal of unrest in certain communities, is the minister able to give us the target date at which he is aiming in this regard, bearing in mind the fact that he told several members of this House, including myself, that the decision could be expected first of all in April, then in May, and now we are at the end of June, so presumably he is taking us into the middle of July? Is there any particular date by which he thinks he can make this announcement, or is this to be another one of those things that is to be ducked?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, the matter is under study but I do not want to set a date for an announcement at this time.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE DATE WHEN COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL WILL COMPLETE WORK

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is basically supplementary to those questions asked earlier by the hon. member for Crowfoot. My question is in connection with the timing of the commission which is on everybody's mind today. Can the minister indicate when the three man commission will start its work or deliberations, and will he inform the House whether the government has set a deadline on when the commission is to report back, or is the work of this commission to in fact be open-ended?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the commission will begin its work in terms of assembling its advisers and staff as soon as it can get together. The procedure to be followed is that the expert staff of the commission will be expected to work alongside the other experts from the department and the various associations through the development of the procedures in the simulation exercise which at all times was a contemplated requirement to develop a satisfaction about safety. The work will go forward to a point where my own safety advisors are satisfied with the procedures which have been developed and at that point in time they will say so and, according to the terms of reference, the commission must report within 90 days of that exact moment. That report will then be laid before Parliament.

● (1440)

STATUS OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL IN QUEBEC DURING COMMISSION INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he could inform the House if there will be any change, I suppose of status for lack of a better word, of air traffic control in the province of Quebec while the commission is investigating this matter or will we have a situation in which nothing will move ahead so far as the two major airports are concerned until after a recommendation has been made by the three-man commission.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the most recent attitude, a good deal has been accomplished over time in respect of a general agreement. That may still be possible. In addition there is a provision in the terms of reference for interim reports by the commission so that if a specific item we found where traffic in a bilingual way should be advanced or put in place because it is clearly and fully consistent with safety, then there is the possibility of that happening on the basis of an interim report before the elaborate work of the commission has been completed.

MANPOWER

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO LABOUR COSTS OF REBUILDING HOUSES AT MAIN À DIEU

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower. In view of the fact that Nova Scotia's provincial government has announced that it will make available $125,000 for materials to rebuild the houses lost by fire in Main à Dieu, can the minister give a general figure on what his department will offer toward the labour costs of rebuilding the houses.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the House the other day we are making special local initiative program funds available to Main à Dieu in view of the disaster which hit that community. Program officials have visited that community. There have been meetings on the problems. I cannot say specifically the amount of money that will be decided on. We want to stay flexible. I expect to see the projects and be able to judge them in a matter of a very few days. There will be substantial funding for that. The exact amount will have to wait until we assess all the projects.

* * *

FISHERIES

EXTENSION OF BREAKWATER AT MAIN À DIEU—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, although the main thing is housing, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. I hope the minister will not feel I am bugging him too much on this matter. I wonder if he has made up his mind regarding our request for an extension of the breakwater in Main à Dieu, as a means of giving the small fishing community a needed lift at a very trying time?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I well understand the words the hon. member used in the interest of his constituents. I certainly recognize his efforts. The decision as to the possibility of reorganizing our schedule of work still has to be taken because most of the money which was committed for this present fiscal year involves contracts for which tenders have already been called. But we are trying to gather enough funds to advance this project. If I succeed I will let the hon. member know.

* * *

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED MEASURES TO ENSURE EFFICIENCY OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the statement made this morning by the president of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association before the Minister of Transport that CATCA will not commit itself to accepting the recommendations of the commission of inquiry even if they are unanimous, if they support the use of French as a factor of air safety, will the Minister of Transport advise the House of the measure he intends to take to make sure that we shall not find ourselves at the end of the commission's meetings in the same situation that has prevailed over the last two weeks?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With the greatest respect may I say that question has a largely hypothetical element in it.

* * *

HEALTH

REASON FOR LABELLING ALCOHOLIC PRODUCTS AS DANGEROUS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF RESEARCH STUDIES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the skepticism with which spokesmen for several distilleries have greeted his department's plans to force beer, wine and liquor companies to label their products as dangerous, and in view of the conspicuous lack of success which a similar warning printed on cigarette packaging material has had in regard to smoking, I wonder if the minister could explain why he thinks such labelling will be useful in the case of alcoholic beverages?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall refer the hon. member to the statistics which were made public concerning tobacco consumption in Canada over the last few years. He will realize that his statement is, as usual, unfounded.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the intention of the minister to expend public funds on this program in an effort to reduce the excessive consumption of alcohol, could the minister say whether the sociological, economic, political and philosophical implications of this program have been thoroughly researched and if so would he table the reports in the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: In answer to the hon. member's questions, I shall say that even spiritual studies have been made on this subject.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO PERMITTING SENTENCES TO BE SERVED ON WEEKENDS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It is with regard to weekend jail sentences and prisoners not showing up. Superintendent J. M. Gillingham of the Headingley Correctional Institute, Manitoba stated that the four-year old federal program is a nightmare. Harold Gyles, Chief Judge of the Manitoba Provincial Judges Court has called on magistrates to stop handing out weekend prison sentences because they are impossible to administer. Has the Minister of Justice any plan to renew the weekend sentences program or is he preparing any legislation to rescind weekend sentences?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand there are press reports along the lines of the hon. member's question. I can say we have not received any complaints from officials about the operation of serving sentences on weekends. I have recently completed a meeting with the ten provincial attorneys-general at which sentencing was discussed as a specific topic on the agenda. This matter was not discussed or complained about at that meeting. Of course, if there have been complaints made from Winnipeg I will examine those complaints, but I think there generally have not been complaints. Such a technique where appropriate is a desirable one.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Minister that the Winnipeg Free Press has conducted a study across Canada in consultation with the provinces. They all have the same complaint. The deputy director of the B.C. Correctional Institute stated he had been complaining for four years. Perhaps the minister would investigate this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

INDUSTRY

SHIPBUILDING—REQUEST FOR FLEXIBILITY IN SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There has been some criticism of the government's federal shipbuilding subsidy program by the president of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association. Will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicate what active consideration is being given to the proposals of the association in order to achieve a more flexible subsidy program, while at the same time providing much needed employment opportunities for some of Canada's unemployed.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I met last week with some of the authors of the particular submission to which the hon. member referred and indicated to them, and indeed as recently as this morning, that I was prepared to sit down with them again to try to figure out the kind of flexible program to which the hon. member has referred. In the meantime, I think it is fair to say that some accommodation has been reached with the shipbuilding industry, not entirely satisfactory, but nevertheless an improvement over the previous situation with regard to the disposition of the funds as provided in the current year's estimates, that is construction programs which are presently underway. The short answer is that we are in constant touch with the association and its members and I feel the atmosphere is good. Certainly, my own commitment is to give them all the assistance we possibly can under the present circumstances.

* * *

INCOME TAX

LOSS ON EXCHANGE TRANSACTION BY CAMPEAU CORPORATION—INQUIRY WHETHER ARM'S LENGTH DEAL

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue of which I have given notice. In view of the fact that Campeau Corporation has either paid or reserved a $13.8 million exchange transaction loss on a 1972 $27 million loan from a Swiss lender, has the minister satisfied himself that this loan arrangement causing a potential loss of tax revenue to the Receiver General was and is an arm's length deal?

● (1450)

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in the interests of confidentiality we do not discuss individual taxpayer's situations or investigations which may or may not be taking place. I can only say to the hon. member that when we see transactions which are not at arms length, we consider them very carefully, but I do not think the hon. member would want me to comment on an individual taxpayer's return.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF MOTION APPROVING REPORT OF COMMISSION ON BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL—EFFECT OF FREE VOTE ON MOTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and it is supplementary to the questions asked by the Leader of the NDP. To expedite proceedings my question is in three parts. First, did I correctly understand the minister's explanation in answer to questions to be that there will be a motion for approval of the commission report regardless of the conclusions of the report? Second, since everyone has said that this issue is a technical one involving safety, and since a commission has been chosen to hear and assess technical evidence in a very complex field, does the minister think parliamentary approval by a so-called free vote is going to help or hurt the resolution of this technical question? Third, is this unusual and potentially divisive procedure to be a precedent in all future labour-management problems involving federal public servants, or is it to be restricted just to labour problems in the federal field where bilingualism is an issue?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no, the second question is clearly argumentative, and the answer to the third question is also no.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY IF CANADIANS ON AIR FRANCE AIRCRAFT HIJACKED IN AFRICA

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could tell us if there were any Canadians implicated or involved in any way with the Air France aircraft which was hijacked in Africa this week.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I understood, the hon. member is worrying about Canadians who were on the plane hijacked to Uganda. To the best of our knowledge, unfortunately there are five Canadians involved, probably six. I think it would not be appropriate to give the names in the House, but I could do so in private to the hon. member. I wish to assure the House that the department immediately sent a telex to our High Commissioner in Nairobi, urging him to send an official to Kampala to discuss with the government of Uganda and to do his utmost to save the lives of those Canadians who, for the moment, appear to be safe.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

EFFORTS TO STOP NATIVES EATING FISH FROM WABIGOON AND ENGLISH RIVERS—SUPPLYING OTHER SOURCES OF PROTEIN

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the most unfortunate news that Minamata Disease has been confirmed in Canada, would the minister tell us what efforts he is making to stop the eating of all fish from the Wabigoon and English river systems which are affecting the Indians at the White Dog and Grassy Narrows areas?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that one case of Minamata disease has been identified in Canada. The individual concerned was sent to Winnipeg to pass more elaborate tests so as to proceed with a necessary extensive follow-up.

With regards to Indians eating this fish, there is an extensive education, follow-up and control program for them which has been in force for almost two years now. There is also the problem of sport fishing which is done in this area. My colleagues are to meet the Ontario ministers responsible for those matters in early July. I hope that the government of Ontario will agree to close completely this river to sport fishing.

[English]

Mr. Malone: In view of the dangers of Minamata disease, and in view of what we have witnessed in Japan, would the minister guarantee that he will stop the eating of all fish from that system and supply supplementary diets to the people who require fish or other products for a protein diet in that area to guarantee that they will not be eating diseased fish?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I cannot personally stop people from eating the fish caught locally, but the Ontario government should absolutely forbid even sport fishing in that area. As far as we are concerned, we did advise people not to eat that fish. We have taken steps, with the collaboration of the Ontario government, to have fish from other areas available. Further, commercial fishing in these rivers should be forbidden. There remains, however, sport fishing, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Ontario government. Once again, I hope that in the future months, the Ontario government will take the necessary steps.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR DELAY IN PAY ADJUSTMENTS FOR BIOLOGISTS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board regarding the biologists in the public service. In view of the fact that the biologists concluded their agreement on June 30, 1975, and the minister in a letter to me dated May 18 said that he would undertake to make sure their pay adjustments were made to them up to the Anti-Inflation Board levels, can the minister advise why these people after one year have still not received the pay increase to which they agreed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated, we have decided to pay them as much as the Anti-Inflation Board will allow. However, if the cheques have not been issued, I shall inquire immediately and report to the hon. member, because, if I remember correctly, the decision has been taken along these lines.

* * *

[English]

AIRPORTS

MEASURES TO ENSURE UNIFORM APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING CARRY-ON BAGGAGE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On March 31 last when I asked the minister about the lack of uniform application at different airports of safety regulations with regard to air passengers' carry-on baggage, the minister indicated that it was not a serious question and declined to answer it. In view of the current surge of interest in the topic of air traffic safety, I would now like to ask the minister whether steps have been taken during the past three months to assure uniformity of application of safety regulations at Canadian airports.

[Mr. Malone.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what was not serious was the way the hon. member asked the question on the previous occasion.

Mr. Horner: That is not for you to judge.

Mr. Lang: The department, of course, is endeavouring to see that regulations are enforced in a uniform way.

Mr. Clarke: Can we now assume that ground security for air passengers will be applied, when there is an opportunity, in a uniform manner throughout Canada?

Mr. Lang: I think the hon. member may recognize that a certain human element may still be involved.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AUTHORIZATION FOR PAYMENT OF FUNDS TO CROWN WITNESSES—SOURCE OF FUNDS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and I gave him some notice of it this morning. My question deals with the case of Regina versus Palmer, in which a Crown witness received some $25,000 for testifying. Could the minister now advise the House by what authority those funds were paid out and by whose authorization those funds are paid out to Crown witnesses in cases of this kind? I accept the fact that there is difficulty getting convictions in these drug cases.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to get a precise answer to the question, but from time to time the RCMP and other police forces do pay informers for testifying in cases or providing evidence. In this particular case there is a dispute between a witness and the RCMP with regard to the amount paid, and that is going to court, so I do not want to comment on it any more. However, I will attempt to get more information.

Mr. Leggatt: While the minister is trying to find more information, would he determine whether the amount is $25,000 or $60,000, as alleged by the witness, and would he also advise the House as to the source of these funds in terms of whether those funds are directly from the public purse or another source the RCMP is using for paying witnesses in these kinds of cases?

Mr. Allmand: I know that in general these funds come from the public purse, and I approve a general amount each year for purposes such as this, investigation purposes, and so on. However, I will try to find out if there are other sources of funds.

[Translation]

STATISTICS CANADA

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER MET AUTHORITIES CONCERNED WITH LAY-OFFS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Following the question I asked him on Monday June 21, 1976 concerning some forty permanent employees declared in excess at Statistics Canada, who will lose their jobs if they are not given other functions by September 30, 1976 and about whom I sent the minister some documents before the beginning of this sitting of the House, can the minister tell the House whether he has been in touch with the management of Statistics Canada and if so, what were the results; if not, when will he check on this matter?

● (1500)

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the hon. member asked me the question I did communicate and I have a response with me at the present time. As a result of certain documentation which the hon. member was good enough to send me today, however, I am not entirely sure that the two letters are consistent. If he will bear with me, I will have his correspondence of today checked out with the appropriate officials and give him a response probably in writing tomorrow.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT APPLICATION OF NEW DAIRY POLICY BE POSTPONED PENDING BETTER SOLUTION TO PRODUCERS' PROBLEMS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Agriculture is absent, I shall ask my question of the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that next month milk producers, particularly in Quebec, will perhaps have to pay fines of more than $15 million and considering also that the minister is aware of their demands and difficulties and that the new milk policy will result not only in difficulties but also in bankruptcies, is the minister in a position to urge cabinet to delay the implementation of the new milk policy? I have already expressed the view that it was advisable and that last week the Quebec Order of Agronomists recommended that this be done to enable both parties to find a more equitable solution.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Department of Agriculture is in contact with the APU, which is expected in Ottawa, I think, but we are not yet in a position to make an announcement on this.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON MEMBER'S PASSPORT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. I received my passport this morning because I am going to travel in the fall. I notice it is stamped "invalid for travel to North Korea, Namibia, Rhodesia and Taiwan". May I ask the Acting Prime Minister on whose authority my passport was stamped to the effect that I could not travel to those four countries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs was asked that question a few days ago and indicated he would shortly be making further information available on the matter.

* * *

OLYMPIC GAMES

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF HOUSING FOR ATHLETES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the arrival of athletes in the city of Montreal who are to take part in Canada's Olympic games, and since it is now appparent that the facilities to house them are hopelessly inadequate, may I ask if the minister has consulted with his colleagues in the province of Quebec who are responsible for the Olympic Games with a view to examining some options that may be open by which the federal government could assist in bringing some additional facilities into service?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to entertain any representation from the hon. member indicating in a specific manner that the accommodation of the athletes in Montreal will be, as he indicated, totally inadequate. I shall be pleased to look into any representation from the hon. member.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

TABLING OF AMENDED TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO AIR TRAFFIC DISPUTE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table two copies, in both official languages, of the amended terms of reference for a commission of inquiry and also a memorandum of understanding concerning the recent air traffic dispute.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the wide interest in the documents the minister has just tabled, could there be agreement to have them appended to today's Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). This would require unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For documents referred to above, see appendix.]

* * *

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that at the conclusion of the debate on C-68 there was agreement that the vote would be held at a time to be announced after consultations amongst the House leaders. It is my understanding that it would be agreeable to have this vote tomorrow evening at 9.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is that understood and agreed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,139, 5,165, 5,374, 5,489, 5,524, 5,536, 5,541, 5,654, 5,729 and 5,754.

[Text]

TRIP OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO CALGARY FOR GREY CUP

Question No. 4,139—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did the Minister of Transport visit Calgary on Grey Cup Day, November 23, 1975 and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) what are the (i) times (ii) locations (iii) persons involved in any meetings?

2. What are the (a) names (b) responsibilities of passengers aboard the Minister's aircraft and, in each case, were they on official government business?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. (a) and (b) Inter-alia representing the Hon. Marc Lalonde at events connected with the Grey Cup.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

2. Yes. (a) and (b) Mr. Ralph Goodale, Parliamentary Secretary, Mrs. Adrian Lang, Special Assistant, Miss Marian Hooge, Special Assistant, Mr. Dale Verbeke, Special Assistant, Miss Judy Cedar, Special Assistant.

FIRE ALARM SYSTEMS AND PROCEDURES IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 5,165—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Dominion Fire Commissioner address a letter dated February 6, 1976 to Mr. David Morley, a Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board on the subject of concern on the part of Mr. C. A. Edwards, President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, of fire alarm systems and procedures in government buildings?

2. Did the letter state in part "as a result of the fire protection equipment installed, testing procedures and training of personnel in government owned or leased buildings, we feel that the protection provided far exceeds that provided in the private sector for similar occupancy"?

3. What is a detailed description of the (a) testing procedures (b) training programme for personnel in government owned or leased buildings followed by the Dominion Fire Commissioner?

4. Is a complete descriptive list of all fire protection equipment installed in public buildings maintained by the Dominion Fire Commissioner and (a) if not (i) for what reason (ii) can the Dominion Fire Commissioner properly function without such information (b) if so (i) since what date has such a list existed (ii) can such a list be readily and immediately produced and made available for public scrutiny?

5. Do government owned or leased buildings receive inspections (a) for fire prevention (b) of fire alarm systems by the Dominion Fire Commissioner and, if so, how often?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. (a) Testing procedures for installed fire protection equipment are listed in the Fire Protection Engineering Standards of the Dominion Fire Commissioner. Copies of these standards are available from the Department of Public Works. (b) The training program for personnel in government owned or leased buildings is outlined in the Dominion Fire Commission Fire Protection Standard No. 14 and Dominion Fire Commissioner Guidelines for Phased Evacuation Training. Copies of both publications are available from the Department of Public Works.

4. No. It is not considered essential for the Dominion Fire Commissioner to maintain a list of installed equipment. (a) (i) The Department of Public Works, Property Administration Branch maintains such a list for maintenance purposes in all federal buildings; (ii) Yes. Testing of all equipment is carried out during the inspection of buildings; (b) (i) Not applicable; (ii) Such a list may be obtained from the Property Administration Branch of the Department of Public Works.

5. (a) Yes; (b) Yes, during scheduled inspection at five year intervals.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 5,374—Mr. Reynolds:

Did a drug shipment mailed to the Vancouver General Hospital disappear on or around March 11, 1976, while being processed through the Vancouver Post Office?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Post Office officials are not aware of such an incident.

PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL—STAFF

Question No. 5,489—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names, job designations and annual salaries of all persons employed in the office of the President of the Privy Council as of July 8, 1974?

2. Since July 8, 1974, what are the names, job designations and annual salaries of all persons who have joined the staff of the President of the Privy Council?

3. What are the names, job designations and annual salaries of all persons employed in the office of the President of the Privy Council as of the date this question was answered?

4. What is the date this question was answered?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1, 2 and 3. See following statements.

4. The government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements. The President of the Privy Council assumed his portfolio on August 8, 1974.

			Appointed	Resigned
Champagne, G.	CR-4	$ 9,280—$10,146
Church, J. S. C.	Executive Assistant	Up to $25,000		December 31/74
Dugal, J.	Special Assistant	Up to $21,000		May 1/76
Lee, F.	ST-SEC-04	$ 9,797—$10,715
Monette, J.	ST-SEC-02 Bil.	$ 7,743—$ 8,462		February 25/75
Morin, L. G.	ST-SEC-04 Bil.	$ 9,797—$10,715
Winkler, I.	ST-SEC-05	$11,043—$12,086
Legislative Unit
Cloutier, A.	ST-SEC-04 Bil.	$ 9,797—$10,715		April 1/75
Deadman, I.	ST-SEC-03	$ 9,239—$10,102		May 28/75
Labelle, J. D.	Research Assistant	$10,500—$14,500		November 28/75
Lay, R.	Research Assistant	$10,500—$14,500
Millson, L.	ST-SEC-03	$ 9,239—$10,102
Morris, D.	CR-3	$ 8,360—$ 9,136		November 1/75
Van Dusen, T.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $25,000
Yanover, J.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $21,000
(b) Public Service Appointments
LeBoeuf, L.	ST-SEC-02 Bil.	$ 7,743—$ 8,462
McNamara, T.	CR-3	$ 7,777—$ 8,499
McDonald, L.	CR-4	$ 8,633—$ 9,438

2. As of August 8, 1974. (a) Appointed under Subsection 37(1) of the Public Service Employment Act.

Bryan, W. L.	Special Assistant	Up to $21,000	December 9/74
Menard, S.	ST-STN-1 Bil.	$ 5,665—$ 7,877	February 26/75
Paget, D. D. A.	Executive Assistant	Up to $25,000	January 1/75
Wiebe, J.	GS-MES-2	$3.79 per hour	October 8/75
Legislative Unit
Carter, W.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $21,000	December 2/74
David, M.	ST-SEC-03 Bil.	$ 9,239—$10,102	August 5/75
Haldorsen, D.	ST-SEC-03	$ 9,239—$10,102	May 28/75
By Contract
Robert Anderson Associates Ltd.	Special Advisers—see replies to part 1 of Question 5,437
Douglas Wilkinson	and to Question 5,454, answered May 31, 1976.
Owen, V.	Technical Assistant, Broadcasting of Parliament		May 3/76
(b) Public Service Appointments
Bates, K.	CR-2	$ 6,936—$ 7,568	February 10/75	February 2/76
Bialy, S.	CR-3 Term	$ 8,360—$ 9,136	March 25/75
Lajoie, L.	A/CR-5	$10,532—$11,519	March 17/75

3. Presently on Duty (a) Appointed under Subsection 37(1) of the Public Service Employment Act.

Bryan, W. L.	Special Assistant	Up to $21,000
Champagne, G.	CR-4	$10,394—$11,364
Lee, F.	ST-SEC-04	$10,532—$11,519
Menard, S.	ST-STN-1 Bil.	$ 5,665—$ 7,877
Millson, L.	ST-SEC-03 Bil.	$ 9,239—$10,102
Morin, L. G.	ST-SEC-04 Bil.	$10,532—$11,519
Paget, D. D. A.	Executive Assistant	Up to $25,000
Wiebe, J.	GS-MES-2	$3.79 per hour
Winkler, I.	ST-SEC-05	$11,871—$12,992

Order Paper Questions

Legislative Unit

Carter, W.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $21,000
David, M.	ST-SEC-03 Bil.	$ 9,239—$10,102
Haldorsen, D.	ST-SEC-03	$ 9,239—$10,102
Lay, R.	Research Assistant	$11,500—$15,500
Van Dusen, T.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $25,000
Yanover, J. D.	Legislative Assistant	Up to $25,000

By Contract

Robert Anderson Associates Ltd.	Special Advisers—see replies to part 1 of Question 5,437
Douglas Wilkinson	and to Question 5,454, answered May 31/76.
Owen, V.	Technical Assistant, Broadcasting of Parliament

(b) Public Service Appointments

Bialy, S.	CR-3 Term	$ 9,363—$10,232
Lajoie, L.	CR-4	$10,394—$11,364
LeBoeuf, L.	ST-SEC-02 Bil.	$ 8,324—$ 9,097
McDonald, L.	CR-5	$11,796—$12,901
McNamara, T.	CR-3	$ 9,363—$10,232

CANADA WORLD YOUTH PROGRAMME

Question No. 5,524—Mr. Brisco:

1. Who were the original organizers of the Canada World Youth Programme?

2. What is Canada World Youth's past and present arrangement with the government?

3. During the years in which Canada World Youth has been in operation, what (a) have been the sources (b) was the amount of its funding in each year?

4. Are there any provisions (a) to ensure that indebtedness incurred by the organization will be provided for (b) to guard against the participants being stranded in foreign countries or being subjected to undue personal financial loss and, if so, what are the details of such provisions?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): According to the Canadian International Development Agency, the answer is as follows: 1. (a) Prof. Pierre Dansereau, then Dean of the Faculty of Science, University of Montreal; (b) Prof. Frank Scott, former Dean of the McGill University Law School; (c) Prof. Léon Dion, sociologist, Université de Laval; (d) Mrs. Gertrude Laing, President of the Canada Council, Calgary; (e) Mr. Jacques Hébert, publisher and President of the Civil Liberties Union; (f) Mr. William Neville, executive consultant, Ottawa; (g) Mr. David Bartlett, Secretary General of the Canadian Commission to UNESCO, Ottawa; (h) Mr. Maurice Champagne, Vice-president of the Quebec Government Human Rights Commission; (i) Mr. Harold Baker, Director of the Extension Division of the University of Saskatchewan; (j) Dr. Michael Oliver, President of Carleton University, Ottawa.

2. The Canadian Government has for the past four years entered into an agreement with CWY for the financial support of the program of Youth Exchanges between Canadians and youth from selected developing countries.

3. (a) and (b): 1972-73, Secretary of State, $1,400,000; 1973-74, Secretary of State, $2,000,000; 1974-75, CIDA, $2,500,000; 1975-76, CIDA, $2,950,000. Estimated value of contributions by overseas governments in exchange countries—$600,000 per year. Estimated value of contributions by other Canadian governments, municipal administrations, agencies and private enterprises—$450,000 per year.

4. (a) The provision of a grant to CWY for its planned program for a fiscal year does not include the guaranteed provision of funds to cover indebtedness incurred by the organization. CWY is expected to work within the income constraints of its budget as presented to and approved by CIDA; (b) The CWY budget for each fiscal year includes funds required to recruit, prepare, send, support and return all Canadian and overseas young people to their homes and CWY staff are responsible for the administration of these activities. In the past four years, there have been no volunteers stranded in foreign countries and appropriate health and accident insurance is provided in order to avoid undue personal financial loss.

[Mr. Sharp.]

PROCEDURAL CHANGES RELATING TO SALES TAX ON AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Question No. 5,536—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Is the Minister of Finance considering streamlining the complicated and time-consuming method of "proving end use" in respect to small parts and attachments, in particular, under the provisions of the Excise Tax Act as they relate to the application of federal sales tax on agricultural implements, parts and attachments?

2. Will the Minister consider the advisability of accepting the proposal of the Prairie Implement Manufacturers Association to either implement a system of annual or semi-annual exemption certificates to replace the present requirement for an "end user certificate" upon the sale of each individual part or attachment, or provide that the parts and attachments be unconditionally exempt from federal sales tax, having in mind that they are designed for farm purposes only and that they are being sold for use on tax exempt whole machines?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. A number of officials of my department and the Department of Revenue Canada are currently involved in a review of the commodity tax system, as announced by my predecessor in the budget of June 23, 1975. I would like to assure the honourable member that the use of conditional exemptions based on "end use" to provide sales tax exemption for agricultural implements, parts and attachments will be considered during this review exercise.

2. The proposals of the Prairie Implement Manufacturers Association concerning the use of annual or semi-annual exemption certificates to replace "end user certificates" will receive careful consideration during the course of the commodity tax review.

CRTC—NON-ESSENTIAL TELEGRAMS

Question No. 5,541—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the policy of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission with respect to the sending of non-essential telegrams during a period of austerity?

2. Did the CRTC send telegrams in 1975 and, if so (a) how many (b) at what cost to the taxpayer?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): 1. It is the policy of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) to send telegrams and/or telex only in instances where mail service is not able to meet prescribed deadlines as set out in the Broadcasting Act for interventions, etc.

2. (a) 8,600; (b) $31,000.

INCREASE IN OIL PRICES

Question No. 5,654—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. How much has the government earned through the successive increases of oil prices, in each year, since 1972?

2. What percentage of funds has been granted to oil companies for research and to which companies?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. This matter is dealt with in the second section of the report entitled "An Energy Strategy for Canada—Policies for Self-Reliance" (especially page 39 in the English version; page 48 in the French version). This report was tabled in the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources April 27, 1976.

2. The above report (page 145 of the English version and page 162 of the French) shows the federal energy research and development program expenditures for oil and gas were $10.5 million in 1975-76 and about $12.0 million in the current fiscal year. Some of these monies will be spent via grants to private industry for approved projects, but not necessarily by oil and gas firms.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK—ACQUISITION OF LAND

Question No. 5,729—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to negotiations presently under way by Parks Canada for the purchase of certain islands in the St. Lawrence River as additions to the St. Lawrence Islands National Park (a) are such purchases governed by the National Parks Act, Section 3(b) which states that such acquisitions can be made when "agreement has been reached with the Province in which the lands are situated that the lands are suitable for addition to a National Park" (b) in the case of each of the properties presently being acquired, on what dates was provincial approval received, from whom was it received and who received it?

2. If provincial approval has not been received for the acquisition of additional property for St. Lawrence Islands National Park, on what basis can the government legally proceed with acquisitions now in progress?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) No; (b) Not required.

2. Section 6(3) of the National Parks Act, R.S. c. N-13 amended by 1974 c. 11.

UIC—CHEQUES NOT PICKED UP DURING POSTAL STRIKE

Question No. 5,754—Mr. Cossitt:

What is the total number of unemployment insurance cheques that were cancelled, and claims closed, as a result of the fact that the cheques were not picked up personally during the last postal strike and (a) how is the total broken down by province (b) was any investigation conducted to determine how many of these might or might not have been fraudulent claims and, (i) if so, with what result (ii) if not, for what reason (c) did the Minister or any other senior official of the Unemployment Insurance Commission receive recommendations for an investigation into possible defrauding and, if so (i) on what date and from whom (ii) was no investigation carried out on the grounds of insufficient manpower to perform it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned—Approximately* 1,520 warrants were cancelled as a result of the fact warrants were not picked up personally during the last postal strike and (a) total by province not available but by region is as follows: Atlantic Region (Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland) ($7,679.00) or about 40* warrants; Quebec Region (Quebec) ($110,428.00) or about 600 warrants; Ontario Region (Ontario) ($109,967.00) or about 600 warrants; Prairies Region (Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta) ($18,814.00) or about 100 warrants; Pacific Region (British Columbia) ($31,709.00) or about 180 warrants.

---

*Number estimated by dividing actual dollar value of cancelled warrants ($278,597) by average bi-weekly benefit payment of $178. Actual count of cancelled warrants not extractable from general statistics.

(b) Yes; through the normal benefit control activity. (b) (i) Statistics resulting from subsequent investigation of those failing to report are not extractable from normal benefit control activity of the Commission and, therefore, specific activities in this regard cannot be reported. However, 3 possible prosecutions have been initiated, 1 in the Atlantic provinces where it is suspected that an employer posed as a claimant and 2 in the Pacific Region where two claimants did not report earnings while in receipt of benefits; (b) (ii) Not applicable, see (b) (i); (c) The Executive Committee of the UIC decided that all claimants who could not be contacted, or where there was a suspicion of fraud, should be investigated by Benefit Control and this was done; (c) (i) See (c); (c) (ii) Investigations were carried out; see (b) (i).

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 5,394 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

RETENTION OF LAWYERS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 5,394—Mr. Crouse:

1. What are the names of all lawyers in Lunenburg, Queens and Shelburne Counties who have been appointed by the government to handle all federal prosecution duties since 1968?

2. What is the amount of the salary, commission or consultants' fees paid to these lawyers by the Department of Justice, or any other department during the years 1968 to 1975 inclusive?

3. Since January 1, 1970, what lawyers in Nova Scotia were engaged by the Departments of Justice, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Transport and Treasury Board and what fees were paid to them?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

CONCURRENCE IN MOTION TO AMEND CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved that ways and means motion No. 16, to amend the Customs Tariff, tabled May 25, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CONCURRENCE IN MOTION TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved that ways and means motion No. 17, to amend the Income Tax Act, tabled May 25, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CONCURRENCE IN MOTION TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT APPLICATION RULES, 1971

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved that ways and means motion No. 18, to amend the Income Tax Act application rules, 1971, tabled May 25, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CONCURRENCE IN MOTION TO AMEND EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved that ways and means motion No. 19, to amend the Excise Tax Act, tabled May 25, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF (NO. 4)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-95, to amend the Customs Tariff (No. 4).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

EXCISE TAX ACT (NO. 2)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) (for Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-96, to amend the Excise Tax Act (No. 2).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE A MARITIME CODE FOR CANADA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-61, to provide a maritime code for Canada, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential or related provisions, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order with respect to this matter. Last Friday, at the close of the day, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) rose in the House and indicated that the order of business for today would be Bill C-61 dealing with third reading stage of the maritime code. In the course of the discussion objection was taken to that by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). The discussion arose out of a matter raised in this House on May 31, 1976, when we were talking about the extension of hours of the sittings of this House. At that time the President of the Privy Council made a very definitive statement about the business of the House prior to the recess. I would quote from page 13976 of Hansard for May 31, where he said:

● (1510)

These six items, all except one of which has already been the subject of extensive debate, plus the budget resolutions and supply, constitute the government's program before adjournment. Unless some emergency arises—

I emphasize the word "emergency".

—the government has no other items which it considers essential to be disposed of before the adjournment. The parties may, of course, be ready to agree on the approval of minor housekeeping matters such as motions 33 and 34 under government business.

As I recall, the last two motions mentioned were concurred in. Reference has been made to Bills C-68, C-81, C-84, C-87, C-88 and S-35. Bill S-35 has been disposed of, and Bill C-87 withdrawn from consideration before the adjournment pursuant to a subsequent agreement. Bill C-84 is now before the committee, and we have agreed to vote on Bill C-68. But nowhere on this list of bills does Bill C-61 appear.

I know the minister may be in some difficulty with respect to calling bills on the order paper. Bill C-83 is before the committee and I suppose could be called. The President of the Privy Council had indicated, quite properly, that it would be unfair to call Bill C-83, which deals with peace and security, when Bill C-84 was still before the committee. It would have been particularly unfair to call it since members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs are considering Bill C-84 and, therefore, could not attend the House of Commons. I am not quarrelling about that. The government has put the House in a difficult position. We are asked to debate a bill which we had understood we would not deal with until later this year, perhaps in the new session.

There is also the matter of hours to consider. It was always the intention, when the agreement was made for extended hours of sitting, that we should deal with the package of legislation which had been mentioned. That package was arrived at as a result of careful negotiation carried out in the best faith on the part of House leaders. Yet at present we are asked to debate a bill which was not included in that package. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council has something to say to the House about further extended hours.

I feel that I must raise a point of order about the calling of Bill C-61. I regret very much that it is necessary to do so. It was the impression of the hon. member for Halifax on Friday, as reported on page 14872 of Hansard:

—that a list of certain bills was to be considered, and that Bill C-61 was not one of those.

His recollection was exactly right. It therefore appears that the government should reconsider the matter of extended hours and the matter of reinstituting private members' hours. I would not raise the matter if the government had forced extra hours on the House; but that is not the case. Exactly the opposite is true. Extended hours were arrived at by agreement on the part of all parties for the purpose of debating a particular package of legislation which did not include Bill C-61. Therefore, I wish to know what the government House leader proposes to do about the question of hours.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, some of the comments made by the House leader of the official opposition, and some comments made the other day by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), have a good deal of merit. When laying down the business for the remainder of this session, I admit, frankly, that I did not anticipate the sorts of difficulties which have arisen in the last few days. However, I do not believe that the calling of Bill C-61 is contrary to any undertakings I gave. Nevertheless, the members of the opposition may feel from what I said that I did not intend to call the bill again. At one stage, I think it is fair to say, I did not think I would have the opportunity to call it again.

What I said in the statement which has been read by the official opposition House leader is not inconsistent with calling Bill C-61, because I have no intention of pressing Bill C-61 through to completion unless that is the wish of all parties in the House. There is no other way in which that can be done. I want to make a couple of points of emphasis and clarification. I do not intend to call Bill C-61 after today because I foresee no occasion when it will be possible to do so.

It is our intention, if the necessary consent is not given, to call Bill C-83 tomorrow and Wednesday. After that we shall get to Bill C-84, which is the last remaining item on the government's list of business which must be concluded before we adjourn. It may be that consent will be given, in which case we would devote the time available to Bill C-84 and not to Bill C-83, because I do not think it will be possible to dispose of Bill C-83 before we adjourn unless we were to keep the House sitting, contrary to the undertaking I gave in order to dispose of it.

As to the extended hours, the House leader of the official opposition is quite right. The extended hours were agreed on for the purpose of considering certain business. Bill C-61 is not one of the items we intend to dispose of unless there is agreement on both sides. I do not intend to use any of the extended hours for the purpose of debating Bill C-61. Since on this day there are no extended hours, that question does not arise. I see no opportunity to call Bill C-61 again because the House will be considering Bill C-84, which must be disposed of, and Bill C-83 which can be called when, as expected, the justice committee reports tonight.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the minister speaks now, will he not close the debate?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has just moved the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The minister will be making the first speech on third reading.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that I was opening the debate, rather than closing it, which I hope may be the case. I suggest that the exchanges between House leaders on the government and opposition sides challenge hon. members to see if they cannot pass Bill C-61 before the House rises for the summer. In the limited time available, I suggest it will be possible for hon. members to understand the purpose of the bill. Hon. members will recall that the bill had broad support on second reading. It was referred to committee without division, and apparently without dissent.

This bill is part of a large program for advancing and improving the law relating to seagoing vessels. Generally, it would institute a maritime code for Canada. It is but a part of a massive step of legislative change which has evolved from elaborate consultations between experts from the various departments of governments and many representatives of the shipping industry and interested shippers. It is, therefore, in its bulk a very importance piece of legislation in a practical sense.

● (1520)

I will not go over the second reading debate and recall to mind the very important changes in regulations which are involved in it, such advances as being able to deal with the sistership in connection with matters that are involved in appropriate legal process, matters which members from all sides of the House indicated they received well and warmly.

I will want to refer a bit to the broad principle involved in relation to the coasting trade. However, I must start by drawing the attention of hon. members to the importance of the whole of our maritime industry and the advantage in our being able to proceed with it into law now. What has happened, however, is that two matters of controversy have arisen in connection with the bill. One has been fairly satisfactorily settled as a result of the work in committee. That had to do with the issue of the central registry. Certain changes were made in the bill to deal with that.

The other area of controversy, and much the more important one, relates to the coasting trade provisions which are contained in clauses 8 to 15 of the bill. A number of individual problems with regard to the coasting trade were worked out in committee. However, three concerns remained outstanding at the time the bill was reported back to the House. Since that time representations have been made to me and my officials by interested parties. Our reaction to those concerns may be expressed by reference to three possible amendments to the bill which I draw to the attention of hon. members as we begin third reading. These are changes which I do not see as fundamental because the independent and basic purpose of the bill as it went through second reading and committee was really in accordance with these changes. Without doubt, however, these changes should allay some fears as to how the bill might be applied or whether it might cause some problem in its application.

I recognize the procedural problems that we will face in dealing with possible amendments. However, I wish to set out before hon. members the types of changes that may solve some problems we have had, and perhaps also to elicit suggestions and co-operation in order to deal with these changes procedurally. The first area of concern expressed was in relation to the intercoastal trade between the west and east coasts of Canada where there is a particular interest in maintaining lower transcontinental rail rates, and the fear that these might be adversely affected by changes in the law. It is based on the belief that while the quantity of goods moved by ship is small and is likely to remain so, the fact of its existence or potential existence creates a balancing effect on rail rates.

At the moment, both Canadian and British-built British flagships enter the trade freely. Foreign-built British flagships may enter the trade on a waiver system which is complex and poorly understood. It is not proposed materially to alter the cost of bringing non-Canadian ships into this trade where necessary, but only to formalize it and to establish a tariff procedure which will be understood and easily accessible to shippers.

I have given assurances that the tariff charged will be fair, and will be seen to be fair by all interested parties through the formulation of the regulations before these sections of the bill are proclaimed. That the tariff will be reasonable is further assured by the legislation itself which, in section BI-13, provides for publication of proposed regulations and for inquiries. Under the provisions of that section I give the further guarantee that public hearings will form part of the inquiry.

The concerned interests have argued that there should be statutory exemption for non-Canadian ships in the intercoastal trade. There has never been such exemption in the past, and to give it now, when we are attempting to bring the coasting trade under general and reasonable control, would be a retrograde step. What there has been in the past has been an ability by order in council, under section 665 of the Canada Shipping Act, to suspend the coasting laws in specified waters. Such suspension has taken place in the past in crisis situations wich made it necessary to attract large amounts of foreign tonnage into the intercoastal trade for temporary purposes. The special problem of the intercoastal trade has always been borne in mind, and Bill C-61 makes specific reference to it in clause 8(5). This clause gives the same sort of power as was formerly contained in section 665 of the Canada Shiping Act, but with direct reference to the intercoastal trade.

In order, however, to give the fullest possible assurances to the intercoastal trade interests that the balancing effect of that trade will be maintained, and that the potential for specific exemption will remain, we are prepared to reinforce the provisions of clause 8(5) by removing by individual and specific orders in council, and to provide published regulations in the same manner as regulations under section 12. This will give the further assurance of the application of section BI-13 and, as with the section 12 regulations, I am prepared to state at this time that if objections to the regulations are raised, public hearings will from part of the inquiry.

By amending clause 8(5) and adding a further subclause (6), we will again be formalizing the procedure. That has certain implications with respect to the ability to react quickly in times of crisis, but I am assured that if such a crisis were to develop in future, the reaction to it could be accommodated under the emergency provisions of clause 11(4) at least until such time as formal regulations could be published and any necessary inquiry held. To accomplish this objective, clause 8(5) of the bill will be deleted and replaced with the following subclause:

(5) The governor in council may make regulations exempting from the application of this section and sections 9 to 14, during such periods of time as are specified in the regulations, the carriage by water of such classes of goods as are specified in the regulations, and towage, in either direction, between,

(a) ports or places on the east coast of Canada, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the St. Lawrence River or the Great Lakes, and (b) ports or places on the west coast of Canada.

Clause 8(6) will be added as follows:

(6) Section BI-13 of the maritime code applies with respect to any regulations that the governor in council proposes to make under subsection (5) as if those regulations were made under a provision of that code.

The second concern which has been expressed and to which we feel we must respond relates to the limitations of licences to 12 months. Although such licences would, of course, be renewable providing the initial circumstances remain the same, they could not be renewed as of right. The purpose of the limitation was, of course, to ensure that if in a particular case circumstances did alter and Canadian ships became available at reasonably competitive rates, we would not find that that particular segment of the coasting trade was locked in to the use of foreign ships. That principle should be maintained as the general rule.

We are increasingly aware, however, that special cases exist, particularly with respect to developing industries where the transportation is only part of a package which must be arranged to cover a term of years. We feel that allowance must be made for that possibility, but it should only be done where the licensing body is satisfied that no reasonable Canadian alternative exists. In addition, the licensing body must bear in mind the future possibilities of a Canadian alternative, but only if it can be accommodated within the terms of the applicant's current necessity. These are delicate problems which cannot be prejudged here, but for which allowance must be made. Such allowance can only be made by allowing the licensing body a considerable latitude of discretion. We propose to do this by amending section 11 as follows:

● (1530)

(1.1) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Canadian Transport Commission may issue a licence pursuant to that subsection for a period specified in the licence that exceeds twelve months from the day on which the licence is issued where it is satisfied that contractual arrangements with respect to the use of the ship in the aspect of the coasting trade of Canada in which the applicant for the licence proposes to use the ship cannot be made for a period of twelve months or less.

The third concern deals with the definition of coasting trade in section 8(3) of the bill as including the carriage of goods and passengers from one port in Canada to the same or another port in Canada whether directly or by way of a foreign port. Except for the reference to "the same port", which was included only to fill what appeared to be a technical gap, the words "whether directly or by way of a foreign port" also appear in the Canada Shipping Act and over a period of many years no problem has been caused by their use. In the past, these words have always been interpreted in the light of international practice with respect to the clearing of ships to a foreign destination.

In spite of that, their appearance in this bill did cause some fear that there would be interference with the extensive cruise trade which has developed over recent years on the west coast and which involves the use of non-Canadian ships. Because of the great variety of passenger cruises that are operated in Canadian waters, we feel it is necessary to retain the words from the Canada Shipping Act, but in order to establish clearly that no interference with the generally recognized international practice is intended, we propose to amend section 14 of the bill, which is the one dealing with offences under the coasting trade provisions, as follows:

(2.1) Notwithstanding subsection 8(3), the master and owner of a ship are not guilty of an offence under subsection (1) where

(a) either of them has obtained a valid clearance in respect of the ship for a port outside Canada as the intended destination of the ship, whether or not it is intended that the ship will return to the port from which the clearance was obtained or another port in Canada, and

(b) it can be established that an essential purpose of the voyage is to carry goods or passengers to a destination outside Canada.

This amendment will allow Canada to retain a measure of control without interfering with international practice. The whole section, the purpose of the change, was really to avoid the technical visit of a Canadian coastal ship in coastal service at a foreign port simply for the purpose of getting itself outside the rule pertaining to service in the coastal trade.

These amendments have been put before a certain number of interested members who took part in the work of the committee, and I hope they will answer most of the questions and criticisms which have surfaced during the course of the consideration of this bill.

Mr. Hogan: Would the minister allow one question for clarification? Can he tell us whether there has been a definitive cost-benefit study with regard to the impact of the proposed changes as they relate to coastal shipping in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Lang: A study of that kind has not been carried out because it would be very difficult to theorize the changes in shipping practice which might follow from these amendments. It is important to appreciate that when this bill received approval, in principle, on second reading it did so, I am sure, with the knowledge that we were making a change in the rules in relation to coastal shipping which involved a change in regard to Commonwealth vessels, it is true, and their particular position, but that the general approach of the law was meant to remain unchanged, by and large. In other words, we are making the same reasonable provision for Canadian shipping so that it will not be subject to predatory practices by vessels of other nations which might at a particular point in time make it impossible for a viable Canadian shipping industry to continue.

To this extent, protection is enjoyed both by those who might man the ships engaged in Canadian shipping and also by the industry as a whole. Canada benefits to the extent that a viable shipping industry is kept in being. Suppose, for example, there was no Canadian shipping industry. We would be at the mercy of foreign ships, and at a time when adequate shipping facilities were short we would find ourselves obliged to pay whatever rates were demanded, however high.

This is not meant to be a protective bill in the sense that it would allow for unduly high rates to be charged by Canadian shipping, but it is designed to protect shipping interests reasonably against predatory shipping practices so that a Canadian industry can exist for the greater good of this country. This is an important principle and one which in the formulation of the bill was well understood, though it may now have been lost sight of.

In order to reassure those in the Atlantic provinces and on the west coast who have worried what the regulations might be under this measure, I indicated to the Atlantic ministers and to the western ministers that the fullest consultation would take place concerning the regulations necessary under clauses 8 to 14, and that these consultations would take place prior to the proclamation of those clauses. I also indicated that I would not want those sections proclaimed until there was a high degree of satisfaction with the regulations. I mean, therefore, to attempt to give every assurance possible, in addition to suggesting these three amendments, that the bill will serve as intended and not be an instrument which needs to be feared by anyone who is interested in the shipment of goods between the coasts or in coastal water either of the Atlantic or of the west.

I have put before the House three possible amendments. I recognize the procedural difficulty in which we find ourselves. These amendments can only be dealt with at this stage by consent. We could revert to the report stage or, with a certain amount of trust and confidence, they could be dealt with in the other place, or I suppose they could be dealt with by sending the bill back to committee for the amendments to be put in there. I suspect that the latter course would delay the passage of the bill unduly in present circumstances, and that the middle course would be unacceptable to some members of the House for a variety of reasons, although I note that some hon. members who might hold such views are not present in the House. I refer to the absence—very temporary, I know—of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The proposal I would make, therefore, is that we find a way, by agreement, to consider these three amendments as being positive advances in the context of the legislation and of the debate. If, as the debate proceeds, we can agree to revert to committee or deal with the amendments by consent, I trust we will do so in the hope that this bill, upon which so much work has been done and upon which so much depends in terms of a great part of the regulations—and upon which, after all, even a continued sense of a Canadian coasting trade depends—might find its way into law.

I shall not make a formal proposal at this stage because I believe that consultation might be required to bring about an effective result. But I would commend those sentiments to hon. members: that we should try, before leaving the bill today, to incorporate these amendments so that some of the fears which have been expressed concerning the measure might be allayed.

● (1540)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have just heard the minister make mention of three amendments. For purposes of wider dissemination of the nature of the amendments, I wonder whether they may either be appended to today's proceedings or be read into the record by the minister.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have read them into the record carefully. However, in addition to that I will ask for extra copies so that hon. members present can have them at hand while the debate goes on.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister accept a question?

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister spoke of assurances, and I know his concern for transportation in the Atlantic provinces. Has the minister received any statement from the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, or even from ministers purporting to speak for the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, to the effect that they were prepared to have the bill passed with the assurances given by the minister? What can the minister say in this House in regard to the position taken by the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, in light of the assurances he gave this afternoon and having given those assurances to the ministers?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we have tried to have further meetings with the premiers or their representatives in recent days, but because of the transportation problem we were unable to accomplish this. However, I appreciate the hon. member's question. The maritime code was discussed at the last meeting of the transport ministers of the Atlantic region which I attended, and at that time the concerns of the Atlantic area were fully expressed. I gave the assurances that I have repeated today to the Atlantic ministers. The five ministers from the Atlantic region and myself then joined in issuing a communiqué that indicated approval of Bill C-61, these assurances having been received by the Atlantic transport ministers. I have since elaborated on those assurances because of the further comments made in other regions of the country.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister have similar discussions with the premiers of the western provinces, and did he receive similar approval from these ministers of transport such as he declares to have received from the eastern ministers?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the matter was discussed at a western transportation ministers' meeting, but because it was more particularly of interest to one western minister—not alone, of course, but more directly of interest to one than to the others—it was not made the subject of a particular communiqué. I had the impression at that time that there was satisfaction. However, since that time communications from the British Columbia minister of transport have led me to reinforce the assurances and to indicate that there would indeed be no proclamation until the regulations had achieved a high degree of satisfaction in our consultations. I hope that, as a statement of assurance, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, relating to the choices that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) suggested a few moments ago. I understand that while I was out answering the phone he made an allusion to that fact, and he was absolutely right in what he said. It seems to me that it would be quite unfair to the members of this House who have studied the bill to expect these rather substantial amendments to be made in the other place, which in effect allows for no possibility of discussion here.

Therefore, I urge the minister to have some member from his side move, as an amendment to third reading, that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the standing committee so that the amendments can be made there. It seems to me that that is the fair and reasonable way of dealing with this matter.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will indeed be happy to do that as the debate on the bill proceeds if it appears that this will have some real chance of allowing the bill to make progress.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I was particularly pleased with the minister's answer to the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He seemed to receive favourably the suggestion that an amendment be moved to refer the bill back to committee for further study, and that would be acceptable to me. We intend, I think, to make a motion to that effect later in the debate.

In days gone by this would probably have been considered a rather unique debate. The subject of a Canadian maritime code has been around parliament for a number of years. We are presently going through what is, I think, the longest session on record, yet this bill came before the House late last November, was passed on to committee on December 8, and we find ourselves at this late date being asked to give unanimous consent to three substantive amendments to the bill. I think this is an indication of poor handling of House business on the part of the government. I do not have the committee proceedings for December 8 with me, but it also appears that a certain practice is becoming widespread in the House and in committee. I refer to the fact that the committee was urged by government members not to call witnesses so as to speed the bill through. This was back on December 8, and the bill received rather rapid passage through committee.

I would not accuse committee members of not being diligent, but because not as many witnesses were called as possibly should have been called, the government argued throughout the winter months with a former colleague of theirs, now a minister of transport on the west coast, as a result of which we now have conflicting reports from the ministers of transport or premiers of the Atlantic provinces in regard to this legislation, and I include the province of Newfoundland.

At one time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said that the Atlantic provinces were in agreement with this bill. However, when we contacted them they said no, they would not agree to it without further changes. The minister has now told the House that he is prepared to give his utmost assurance that clauses 8 to 16 will not be approved until everyone is completely satisfied with the regulations that are to follow.

The minister's words have been severely questioned. It took him a great deal of time and negotiation with another body before he was able to give any assurance at all. It behooves every member of parliament to take his job seriously, to pass legislation and to serve his constituents well. Certainly, we are not going to turn over those responsibilities to the minister, and we will not leave it to him to decide when he has the complete assurance of the interested parties in this matter, the shippers and shipping companies.

In addition to improving perhaps the maritime code, the minister has said that over the winter there was lengthy consultation with the shippers and shippees. A rather simple check on how much consultation was held would readily indicate it was not nearly as much as we were led to believe by the minister today.

● (1550)

We are told that this measure is important for the economy of Canada. The minister admitted a few minutes ago that at no time has there been a cost-benefit study carried out. We have also been told during other debates on transportation matters that the "user pay" concept is the new principle on which the minister is staking his reputation. Apparently he is going to make the user pay. Some days ago, during a debate in the House of Commons, I suggested that the user is deeply concerned about this new concept. The user believes this will cost him more money.

First of all, the bill tends to minimize competition. It suggests there may be a shortage of vessels and at times there may be an inefficient use of available vessels. The bill seems to suggest that Canadian raw materials or resource products may be moved by ocean liners to foreign countries for manufacture at cheaper rates than those applying to similar movements to Canadian ports. That seems to indicate an increased cost of finished goods. The bill also seems to point out that many foreign products will be in a favoured competitive position and may even replace some Canadian products because of the increased transportation cost to Canadian companies. All of these concerns have not been fully considered by the minister, his department or the transportation committee which studied this matter. I certainly agree with the suggestion that the whole matter be referred back to the committee where more witnesses can be called. Without having a net cost or net benefit study to determine whether Canada will benefit from this bill and the "user pay" concept, I think members would be derelict in their duty if they accepted the bill wholeheartedly.

The other aspect of the "user pay" concept is that we are led to believe this will develop a whole new Canadian merchant marine and increase shipbuilding in Canada. The minister suggests that the full implementation of the bill will not take place for perhaps five years. He says this will give some time for those Canadian ships to be built. I suggest that while some ships may be built by then—and I suspect that many others will still be in construction—losses to the industry, such as those that will take place through lack of improvements to the STELCO steel mills and the linerboard plant in Newfoundland, will be tremendous. The resulting loss in jobs, I suggest, will be greater than the increase in jobs in the Canadian shipbuilding industry and the coasting trade.

We must take a very close look at this bill. It is regrettable that we have reached this stage of the session having to go on the minister's assurances. Already he has had a number of amendments ratified by the committee. The committee ratified a whole host of amendments during its sittings, and we now have three more in respect of which there has been no consultation.

The minister suggested that the provisions contained in clauses 8 to 16 would not be implemented immediately. The whole question of passenger trade on the west coast has not been satisfactorily explained. We have not had a satisfactory explanation regarding the number of vessels in the coastal trade on the west coast of other than Canadian registry. A great number of these ships provide a service to many many Canadian centres along the west coast, and fears in this regard have to be considered as well.

For reasons best known to myself and a few others, I was not in attendance at the committee during its considerations following second reading. For that reason, I come to this debate with no bias of any kind. Not being from either the west coast or the east coast, I suppose I could go along with the passage of this bill. However, in view of the slipshod manner in which the government has handled legislation, with a heavy emphasis on transportation legislation geared for the next session, and in view of the determination of the minister to follow closely the concept of the user shall pay, there should be unanimous agreement to refer the subject matter of Bill C-61 back to the Committee on Transport and Communications. That committee should be empowered to call witnesses so that these many fears can be considered. Perhaps in this way we can have a new maritime code.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I want, first of all, to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to the extent that he agrees that the amendments proposed by the minister should be referred back to the committee. In the event we have unanimous consent to do so, I believe it important that the committee consider that we do not want the bill locked up in committee until we are faced with another throne speech, resulting in the measure dying on the order paper. Let me assure you that this is one party which wants to see the principle outlined in Bill C-61, which of course is the principle contained in the Darling report, put into law before this session concludes and we begin another with a new throne speech. This legislation has been a long time coming. We are now getting to the point of developing a Canadian coasting trade and a Canadian merchant marine. If we continue to listen to critics all the time, we will never get the bill through.

One can always pick holes in a legislative measure. Let us not kid ourselves about this bill. It will cost money to have a Canadian merchant service. We should not try to have the best of both worlds. Let me state, straightforwardly and honestly, that this party believes the small additional amount of money that might be required, in terms of transportation costs, would be well worth it to provide an additional 40,000 jobs with the creation of a new industry. That is a principle we have not been talking about this afternoon, and I think we should get back to it.

Let me refer to the Darling report and some of its recommendations. Incidentally, those recommendations are largely contained within the provisions of Bill C-61. The main principle is that the Canadian coastal trade should be reserved for Canadian flag vessels. This would result in the employment of an additional 40,000 seamen and a refurbishing of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. This would also ensure Canadian sovereignty in our coastal and Arctic waters. This has become especially important now that we are moving toward a 200-mile economic zone off both our coasts. If we are to be effective in terms of maintaining our jurisdiction in those zones, we must have Canadian presence. We cannot maintain a Canadian presence simply with a few military aircraft; we must have Canadian merchant service ships in the 200-mile zone.

If you support that principle, surely you support the principle of Bill C-61. The other advantage in terms of the Darling report is the development of Arctic and offshore resources. Here again, the question of Canadian ships with Canadian men, which would certainly involve a price well worth paying in the event there are some additional transportation costs.

● (1600)

I wish to say a word about the coasting trade. The bill has always contained provisions for licensing in terms of the coasting trade. I was much surprised when I picked up the paper not too long ago to find that the Vancouver Province had a headline which said that the cruise ship business of British Columbia would be completely on the rocks in the event this bill is passed. I really think the editor of the Province has not looked at clause 11 of the bill. I am also wondering whether the members of the Vancouver Chamber of Commerce read the bill, or whether they just listened to Norman Hacking, the editor of the Vancouver Province. Perhaps they just had cocktails together and did not look at the bill.

Despite all the publicity surrounding clause 11, there is a provision that licensing can be provided in proper circumstances. I submit that in the bill there is no risk to the coasting trade of British Columbia. What has happened is that this kind of red herring has been floated, and everyone gets excited and loses sight of the principle behind the bill, which is to create a very substantial number of jobs for Canadians in a brand new shipping industry.

I notice that representatives of Burrard Drydock, which is interested in seeing a substantial increase in ship construction in Canada, were absent from the chamber of commerce. It is time we in this country started to act like a country and did things for ourselves, such as provide our own merchant shipping. It is all very well to use foreign bottoms in terms of our coasting trade, and to exploit cheap labour around the world in order to subsidize the multinational interests such as the Greek shipping interests and that small coterie of ship owners around the world who dominate freighter traffic, but we can do something in this country in terms of shipping. If we improve the working conditions in our own vessels so, also, will we improve the working conditions of men in vessels around the world. That, alone, is very important, because in a sense humanity is being exploited around the world because of the conditions which exist in international freighters. Surely, by doing something under Bill C-61, we could make a significant contribution in that way.

I note the complaints about the use of a central registry and the suggestion that the registration facilities be moved to Ottawa. What is being done as a result of the amendment is that, really, we are superimposing one level of bureaucracy over another. This is a difficult sort of Liberal compromise. They looked at the question in terms of the provision of services on the coast and listened to the complaints coming in: rather than discuss the matter with the people who know something about the question of registration, they left the registration in Vancouver and have created another office in Ottawa. The registration was perfectly satisfactory before they started tinkering with it.

I shall not take very long, Mr. Speaker, because our party is substantially in support of the bill. We have some concern, however, about the question of the referral back to the committee to deal with the government's amendments. I would not be interested in giving unanimous consent if the bill was to be locked away in the committee. I do not want to see the bill referred to the committee and killed—because that could happen unless we are pretty careful.

I would hope that the amendments to be referred back to the committee would not be there for a long time. I do not see why that would be necessary, although I agree they require careful examination because they are not simple amendments. The consideration of the committee should be restricted to those amendments and should not include the entire bill. I hope, when we are giving consideration to the terms under which the bill would be referred to the committee, those terms do not include a general reference but merely a specific reference related to the amendments.

That being the case, I hope this House will see that the bill is reported back expeditiously, given third reading and passed, so that at long last we can give effect to the very worth-while, useful and intensive investigation carried out by Mr. Justice Darling on the coastal trade and so we can create a new industry for Canadians, some new employment and do something useful for the country in terms of nationalism as well.

Mr. Goodale: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to a question asked by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) in connection with copies of the amendments which the minister indicated to the House earlier would be available. I now have copies of the amendments for members who may wish to look at them during the course of this afternoon.

Mr. McCain: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I presume these amendments will be distributed to all members who are here. If, by any chance, a copy of the speech is available, it would be nice to have it as well. The minister made a statement in his speech which indicated there was agreement among the transport ministers of Canada, Atlantic and federal, in respect of the principle of the bill. Was that meeting held after May 25 and 26, when the premiers met and expressed some objection to the bill?

Mr. Goodale: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, first of all, with regard to the copies of the amendments, I have made copies available to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and I believe he will ensure that members of the official opposition will have copies available to them. Other copies are available at my desk for members who may not have them. Second, in connection with the minister's reference to discussions with the ministers of transport from the Atlantic provinces, I am not aware of the precise answer to the hon. gentleman's question, but I will determine that information for him later this afternoon.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to join my colleagues who have spoken in expressing my concern over the fact that this bill is before the House today. There is no question in anyone's mind that the bill was not to be brought in before the recess of parliament. There were very specific reasons for this when we negotiated with the government to have the bill withdrawn from debate in the House of Commons until the fall. The minister, of course, enumerated these reasons. The first was that this would not provide sufficient time for consideration of the bill or its implications.

● (1610)

The minister is not surprised that there is further objection to this bill, and that is why he indicated today that he might be prepared to refer the bill back to committee. Of course, he knows exactly why. On the surface this looks like a very innocent bill. When we consider the geographic make-up of our great land, it is our natural desire to establish a maritime industry. We are surrounded by three oceans. We want to establish industry in our country to put the thousands of unemployed to work and to give us a greater variety of options with regard to self-determination.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) said that a maritime code would be essential for the development of our Arctic resources, but at the same time he said that if we had a Canadian maritime industry, it would cost more. Is not cost exactly the component which is hindering the development of our frontier reserves? The hon. member proclaims that additional costs should be added. The whole thing does not make sense. There has not been a cost analysis of this bill; the minister knows that very well. Industrial expansion must obviously be our aim, but it should be attuned to our areas and industries of greatest potential. In the opinion of my colleagues on this side of the House, the expansion of the maritime industry at this stage of the game, particularly when we are working with significant advantages as a result of not having artificial barriers, is not in the greatest interest of any industrial expansion today.

We are asking ourselves: Why Bill C-61 at this time? The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) says that this bill is a filler which he wants to get through today. It is poor planning that he should be caught like that at this stage. This has been the longest session in parliamentary history, and the minister brings in a bill of this magnitude to get it through as a filler. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was somewhat less than honest when he proclaimed in the House today that there has been general agreement between industry and governments throughout our country, particularly on the west and east coasts. He is even less honest when he says that he has the agreement of east and west coast officials. I would like to quote from a letter the minister wrote to the minister of transport in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Goodale: That is a hopeless case.

Mr. Oberle: The Minister of Transport to whom the letter is addressed sat across the House from us and received support for years, and now he turns out to be a hopeless case. The reason he is not sitting across the House from us is probably quite apparent, because people on the west and east coasts are sick and tired of the way this government deals with our industry and transportation system. In his letter to the minister of transport of British Columbia, the minister said:

General satisfaction and acceptance of the proposed legislation have been clearly indicated at these meetings by the provincial officials, including the representatives of your Department, subject only to the development of suitable coasting trade regulations to be made under the legislation when enacted and proclaimed in force.

The minister of transport of the province of British Columbia replied as follows:

The western premiers expressed the strong view that pending legislation to change the Canada Shipping Act (which would remove the freedom to use foreign ships for inter-coastal trade) should be delayed until such time as the Hall commission has reported.

In response to the minister's saying that there has been consultation and agreement, the minister from British Columbia said this in a letter dated April 30:

It is not true. I have personally been present when four western ministers of transport told you personally that they objected to the legislation. Officials of the B.C. department of transport communications have been under instruction, since the change of Government in B.C., that the intercoastal provisions of Bill C-61 were objectionable from our point of view.

Mr. Goodale: You missed the reply to that reply.

Mr. Oberle: Why the rush? The minister said on previous occasions that he would expect that all provisions of this bill would be declared by 1980. This country has traditionally been built on those two strands of steel which tie us together from east to west. Our east to west trade is the basic foundation of confederation. Were it not for these artificial barriers, Canadians certainly would have a legitimate interest in developing a maritime industry; but we do have these artificial barriers. We do have horrendous problems with regard to freight rates, which no one ever understands. Even the people who work them out do not understand them—and we create these artificial barriers to protect the centre from the west and the east, and so on.

The reason the minister agreed that the bill should go back to committee was that cost-benefit studies have not yet been made. We have pushed for such studies. Since this bill emerged from committee in December, many of my colleagues got together with industries and individuals who would be affected by the bill and, for our own purposes, conducted such a cost-benefit study. The results should be made known, not only here but in committee. Witnesses should be called and the bill should be discussed further.

Let us consider, for instance, what this maritime code would do to the lumber industry in British Columbia. We have access to foreign bottoms on the west coast of British Columbia. Most of the trade in the lumber industry is with eastern customers in the United States and eastern Canada. That is the main reason the lumber industry on the west coast has a competitive advantage over the lumber industry in the United States. The reason for that is that Canadian railways and American railways have to compete against ocean shipping through the Panama Canal. Whenever the freight rates in our rail systems get to a point where the industry can no longer remain competitive in the eastern parts of the United States, we revert to shipping through the Panama Canal. Canadian railways have always taken that into consideration and have adjusted their rates accordingly.

It is true that all the lumber, or most of it, still goes by rail, but the industry does have the safety valve that if the policy of "user pay" should ever be implemented—and that is the new, sexy phrase which has emerged in recent times—then we have that additional option. Bill C-61 would remove this option and render the forest industry in British Columbia no longer viable because freight rates would increase by at least 30 per cent, freight rates which are already the biggest component in cost to our customers in eastern Canada and the United States.

The United States railways also attune their rates to the competition of the Canadian railways. For that reason, the forest industry—which, incidentally, has a credit balance of $5 billion per year with regard to foreign trade—has this competitive advantage over that industry in the United States. The legislation in that country is similar to what is proposed here. When we consider the concerns of these industries, the "user pay" concept is simply not valid.

For the record, I would like to point out what has happened over the last five years whenever a shortage of ships was experienced at the west coast. Naturally, the railways have responded, when the rates on foreign ships have gone up, and have increased their rates over a five-year period by 22.2 per cent. Current rates for shipping via the Panama Canal, in Canadian vessels, are more than double the rates for foreign flag vessels. Our concern is exemplified by the fact that over the last five years lack of water competition has seen rail rates applicable to lumber and plywood to eastern Canada more than double, with particularly sharp increases in 1974, which reflect the railways' conviction that water competition for this business is not a factor.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, there is a shortage of foreign vessels and a shortage of business, and this has been demonstrated to me. I recall flying over the port of Vancouver last summer during the grain handlers' strike. There were many vessels lying there, charging $10,000 or $15,000 per day in demurrage to our wheat shippers. We have experienced a shortage of vessels on the west coast for shipping lumber products. This vacuum could be filled if we were to improve our capacity to build our own vessels which could compete against other shippers.

The hon. member for New Westminster would have us believe it is our responsibility to improve working conditions on foreign vessels, and that workingmen, no matter where they perform their duties, should have equal pay and working conditions. I agree that we have a responsibility in this regard, but I doubt whether this maritime industry would create the 40,000 new jobs hinted at in the Darling report. If we were to make it our responsibility to improve the working conditions of seamen in foreign vessels, I dare say we would price ourselves out of the market and lose more than 40,000 jobs in the lumber industry alone which are connected indirectly and directly to that important sector of our economy.

There is no way that we can allow this bill to proceed in light of the working conditions that exist in our country. That is what it will boil down to. We have already priced ourselves out of the market in lumber and wood fibre products, plywood and pulp throughout the world because of some of the extravagances we have practiced in regard to wages and social conditions without paying proper attention to increasing productivity. There have not been the technological advances in the last ten years or so that we saw in the early sixties, and as a result we have priced ourselves out of the market because of extravagant schemes in the labour field for which we will pay dearly in due course.

There is no question in my mind that the United States will soon import lumber from other parts of the world. As we all know, there is a serious trade imbalance between the United States and the U.S.S.R. It is no secret that the U.S.S.R. and the East Block countries have developed a lumber and wood fibre industry as modern and efficient as ours, and it is no secret that some of our own technology which we exported there has helped. Anyone who has travelled in the United States and has talked to senators and other people who are concerned with this matter realize that they will react to our nationalistic and centralistic approach with serious competition in the not too distant future. If Bill C-61 were to come in by 1980, we would face this competition without the United States pressing for any artificial barriers against our products.

This bill should be amended, Mr. Speaker, and it should be tabled for a number of years. We cannot establish any more artificial barriers than we already have, and that is what would happen: artificial barriers would be created to protect an industry which would yet have to be created. Do we not already have enough industries that need subsidies every year? Does our transportation industry not already need to be subsidized? I wonder if it is the intention of the government to use this bill to get away from the heavy subsidies paid to the railways at the present time.

In an attempt to get a cost analysis of Bill C-61, I corresponded with officials of the department of transport and communications of British Columbia. I would like to quote from a letter signed by the minister on April 15, 1976, as follows:

> Obviously, Bill C-61 is a "protectionist" device which owes its origins, primarily, to pressures from the central provinces. It solves a problem on the Great Lakes vis-à-vis U.S. shipping. But it hurts in the maritimes and it is bad, bad news in B.C.

The letter continues:

> —a senior official with the federal Minister of Transport states that "with regard to section 11, considerable concern was expressed that Canadian ships would lose out to foreign flag ships because they may be non-competitive due to higher operating costs.

The industry which we are artificially creating, and which we already know will need a subsidy, is thus identified. I ask my colleagues and the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker: Who is to make up this subsidy? Where is it to come from? There is nothing left in the bucket. The industry cannot afford any more artificial, any more intervention or constitutional conflicts between the provinces and the federal government. There is just nothing left to give. The letter further states:

> —"Upper Lakes Shipping is extremely interested in becoming involved in this movement." ... Central Canada will build the ships, man the ships and own the ships. We, out on the west coast, will have to use them if they are offered at all. And the additional cost will be borne either by goods coming or going from British Columbia. The netback on our resources will be diminished accordingly.

That is the view of the minister in British Columbia who not too long ago sat in this House, across the floor. I suggest the reason he is not there now is that he recognized then what this government is trying to do. We do not wish to use the minister as an example; there has been a change in government and there has not been time to complete the analysis that was necessary for this bill to be seriously considered.

I have here a telegram that was sent to the Minister of Transport, who has said that he consulted the industry as a whole. The telegram, sent March 24, 1976, was signed by a number of coastal industries—the Council of the Forest Industries of B.C., the Mining Association of B.C., the B.C. Construction Association, the B.C. Chamber of Commerce, and the Vancouver Board of Trade. I should like to know which of the coastal industries in British Columbia the minister consulted. If these are eliminated, not many are left. The telegram begins:

> Representatives of major industrial organizations in British Columbia have met at short notice to consider implications of Bill C-61 for transcontinental shippers. Represented were—

The firms are named, and the telegram goes on:

> The meeting was unanimous in its concern for the effects of Bill C-61 on the level of freight rates for transcontinental shipments. Bill C-61 will eliminate intercoastal shipping as an effective competitive alternate to other modes of transportation. Competitive intercoastal service is an important factor in maintaining a well balanced and economic domestic transportation system. The bill must be amended to exempt shipping between Canadian east and west coast ports ... organizations will make submissions to your special study committee when they visit Vancouver, urging that section 8 of the bill be amended to provide full exemption for intercoastal shipping.

● (1630)

The industry's position is clear, and the minister has promised study sessions. I suggest that the eastern maritime provinces and the province of British Columbia would like to be assured that this bill will be sent back to committee for the study it deserves. I hope that we can hear witnesses and evaluate the problem, which is not confined exclusively to our coastal trade.

The position of the associated chambers of commerce of Vancouver Island is clear. Incidentally, I think the hon. member for New Westminster will support me when I say that Bill C-61 does not say that Canadian ships should be built in Canada. The Jones Act of the United States requires commercial vessels used in trade between U.S. ports to be of U.S. construction. Even if this bill passes, there will be no assurance that Canadian ships plying our coastal trade must be built in Canada. We shall still be able to buy ships anywhere in the world and sail them under the Canadian flag. This is not the case in the United States. I suggest that the United States Jones Act has been of advantage to the United States shipbuilding industry. While the American maritime industry is protected, we have derived some advantage from using foreign bottoms. Actually, Canadian goods travel more cheaply on American railways than do some American goods, because American railways compete with Canadian railways and Canadian maritime shippers.

May I advance a proposal for the committee to study and on which, hopefully, it will report back? My proposal is that the federal government should alter this legislation to enable us to protect ourselves against countries like the United States which have passed restrictive legislation in this area. Because of the U.S. Jones Act, our shipbuilders cannot sell their ships to the United States. Therefore, restrictions in the legislation should apply only to maritime states which have enacted restrictive legislation.

As the associated chambers of commerce say, Bill C-61 seems to be an extremely ambitious piece of legislation which will require a tremendous expansion in the Canadian merchant marine in a very short time, by April, 1980. Even though the minister may have suggested this is possible, I say he is dreaming. I do not think it is possible. For one thing, Canadian shipyards lack the capacity for expansion beyond our present fleet of three ships. There is nothing in Bill C-61 requiring the construction in Canada of Canadian flag vessels. The Jones Act in the United States, as I said previously, requires commercial vessels used in trade between U.S. ports to be of U.S. construction. The associated chambers of commerce suggest the following alternative which, if accepted, would accomplish what the hon. member for New Westminster was talking about, namely:

That the federal government enact legislation that would permit vessels of foreign construction to be used for commercial purposes in Canadian waters only if the nation of origin extends the same privilege to vessels of Canadian construction operating in that nation's waters.

I suggest that such a position would meet the wishes of the hon. member for New Westminster and fortify the Canadian shipbuilding industry. We ought to enact legislation which will protect us against nations which have already adopted restrictive legislation in this field. The legislation ought to be aimed only at such countries and not against those which have not enacted restrictive legislation. As the associated chambers of commerce say, such a provision would permit the foreign construction of ships to be used in Canada and would exert pressure on the U.S. for amendment to the Jones Act in so far as Canada is concerned. The associated chambers of commerce go on to say:

Prior to 1973, many Canadian craft, particularly in the fishing category, were sold in the U.S.—the closure, by the Jones Act, has hurt Canadian yards, while Canadians continue to purchase large numbers of U.S. boats (indeed the Canadian Coast Guard recently chartered the Lumba Lumba built in Erie, Pa., over Canadian built vessels). We feel that there should be some pressure exerted counteracting the protectionism inherent in the Jones Act.

Bill C-61 will exert no such counteracting pressure, a pressure which would protect our industry, expand our productive capacity and create jobs for Canadians. We could build ships and sell them to the United States, if the United States agreed to buy them. If they do not so agree, we could sell them to other countries. But we shall not sell to others if we continue following the nationalistic, isolationist path this government has laid down in areas such as communication, investment, and so on. Apparently we are determined to create artificial boundaries. After existence for 100 years we are determined, apparently, to be unlike any other nation. Our neighbour to the south will not look kindly to that approach; neither will any other country with whom we do business. Other countries will not look kindly on what we have done in the field of communications, foreign investment review and so on.

Canada is not alone in the world. Cartels are being formed, nations are banding together to exert greater pressures on commodities traded internationally. Trading blocs are being formed. Countries are co-operating together as large trading units in order to trade more effectively and compete. This is happening in developing and third world countries. Mr. Speaker, this is not the time to interfere with that process. We must find ways to ship our goods more cheaply and produce them more cheaply. We must bring under control the management of our fiscal policy which is totally out of line internationally. If this means we must create artificial barriers to recapture what we have lost—

[Mr. Oberle.]

Mrs. Campagnolo: Whose artificial barriers?

Mr. Oberle: Does the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), in whose constituency exists, potentially, the greatest coastal harbour in our country, not know what her constituents are saying?

Mrs. Campagnolo: At least my constituents are not taking orders from Aristotle Onassis' heirs.

Mr. Oberle: Their message is, "For God's sake sit on this bill." Don't let them do this to us. This is the time for opening our doors. If we keep going the way we are, we will continue to be five to six percentage points of inflation behind the rest of the world. We will have a much slower rate of recovery with regard to economic matters than any other country. We must ask ourselves what we have done about opening our borders, improving our productive capacity and steamlining our capacity to ship and communicate with other parts of the world in an economic sense. We are not doing that now, and we must.

● (1640)

There is one example that I am sure other hon. members will probably quote. On the east coast there has been a recent development with regard to the Sydney Steel Corporation. It illustrates precisely what will happen if this kind of legislation is put in place to protect a non-existent Canadian maritime industry in a way that is artificial and cumbersome. I quote from the Chronicle-Herald of May 4, 1976. Had Bill C-61 been in effect, Sydney Steel Corporation would have been forced to pay more than double the rate now in effect for shipping ore to the Sysco plant. I quote:

The "Canadian flagship only" policy proposed in the Shipping Act amendments now before parliament would have prevented Sysco from entering into a contract with a foreign-operated shipping line, in this case of Bermudian registry under the British flag... When the time came to renew the contract, Upper Lakes Shipping wanted to increase the basic freight rate from $1.15 per gross ton to $3, plus the costs (of the day)—

The demurrage was also to be doubled. It was possible for that company to make a deal with a foreign shipping line at $2 per gross ton, without an increase in demurrage charges. Had the provisions of Bill C-61 been in effect, this company would have been trapped. It is no secret to anyone here that the proposal for the increase in rates would not have been limited to $3, but would have probably been closer to $5 or $6 had the protection been in place. I am sure my colleagues will cite other examples similar to those in the lumber and wood fibre industry in western Canada. Therefore, we would be ill-advised at this time, when we have so much catching up to do, to allow ourselves the luxury of creating yet another white elephant which we would have to support.

In closing, I wish to state that I share a desire and a dream. In my opening remarks I referred to the geographic make-up of this country, the three oceans that surround this great land and how it would be desirable for us in the future to look closer at creating a maritime industry of which we could be proud. That, however, must be done in a way that is attuned to the industrial strategy of our country. It must be done as a vacuum occurs, and it must be done gradually. This must not be like the implementation of the Official Languages Act. What happened with regard to that program would happen again if we went along with the minister on this proposal. To say that by 1980 we would have a maritime industry would be just like when we said that by 1978 or 1980 everyone in Canada would be bilingual.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): We never said that.

Mr. Oberle: The minister says they never said that. There was certainly an attempt to do it. In any event, it is probably a poor example. However, if we ever do become bilingual in this country, and that is certainly the desire of all members of this House, it must be over a period of 25 to 30 years. The process should not be started in the hierarchy of the civil service in Ottawa or in the regional offices. We should start with the educational system in our schools. It is probably a poor comparison to make.

Mrs. Campagnolo: We are talking about ships.

Mr. Oberle: Hon. members are again aroused. Every time something like this comes up, the hon. member is reminded of the letters she receives from her constituency. Many people write to her saying, "For God's sake—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member is again skating at thin line. I suggest he get back to Bill C-61.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: That is probably because of my seatmate who is such a great Canadian skater. I was merely trying to demonstrate that we are always on solid ice. We have to make a commitment. I am sure that all hon. members are prepared to make that commitment. However, we have to know what are the costs. We must establish a proper time-frame and it must be in conformity with the aims and ambitions of other sectors of the economy as well as individual Canadians. We must know what the costs will be and who will bear them. We must also find out where the subsidies are to come from. I am at a loss to know what additional costs any of the industries I referred to are prepared or, indeed, able to pay. In that sense, we are not against the establishment of a maritime industry. There have been shortages of ships on the west coast to ship wood fibre products. Possibly we should stimulate shipbuilding in Canada. However, we must not do that in a way that rules out selling these ships to other nations, or rules out access to other vessels in our ports.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) referred to the poor seamen who travel on these foreign vessels and come into our ports. If every country did what this country intends to do, those poor seamen would not have any jobs at all. I wonder if the hon. member has considered that. It is time we in this country examined what is happening here and around the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member may only continue with unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Oberle: I appreciate the courtesy that has been extended to me. I was just making my closing remarks. I was pointing out that it is high time we examine what is going on in our country. Possibly we have been a little extravagant in according ourselves a standard of living that is out of tune with what other countries have accorded themselves. We may have priced ourselves out of the market with regard to foreign trade. We are faced with a trade deficit which will be very difficult, if not impossible, to correct. We are faced with a slow growth in the increase of our gross national product. We are not experiencing any real growth in the economy. Therefore, at this time we can ill afford to create another problem which will have to be paid for out of the public purse, or which someone else will have to subsidize.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles)—Finance—Proposal that capital gains tax not apply to sale of family farms; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Communications—Proposed use of balanced armature receiver by Bell Telephone—Request for delay; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Allegation Israel has stockpile of nuclear weapons—Government action.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURES TO PROVIDE A MARITIME CODE FOR CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-61, to provide a maritime code for Canada, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential or related provisions, be read the third time and do pass.

Maritime Code

● (1650)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this debate is probably most notable for the fact that among the ministers whose duty confines them to the House, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and his parliamentary secretary are not included. This, in my opinion, is regrettable. It is perhaps indicative of the attitude which the government has taken toward this bill from the day of its presentation. It is most unfortunate that this should be the case.

I want to go back for just a minute to the committee meetings which were held in respect of this bill as the standing committee considered the subject matter. Several people appeared as witnesses, though a great many interested people did not appear. I think it is important that I should quote some of the things Mr. Gralewicz, for instance, said with respect to questions which were directed to him. He was asked what would be the effect upon other industries if this bill were to be made law in the form then before the committee. He said, in part:

As I said, I have never made this study. I would not know. However, the bulk carrier ocean-going vessel could not compete with lake carriers because the 730-foot lake carrier can carry umpteen million tons where the other one could not. So we would not be, we shall say, competitive.

I think we know that Mr. Gralewicz is the president of the Seafarers' International Union. With him that day was Mr. Nuss, who was counsel for the Seafarers' International Union of Canada. Some of the questions were referred to him. He said, with respect to the bill:

If there is to be a distribution of wealth in order to carry out the policy, that is what parliament is here for. That is what should be done. No matter what we do in Canada there are other places in the world where it can be done cheaper whether it be manufactured goods or transportation. We have to decide as a country that it is not merely a question of what can be done the cheapest which counts but also a question of policy that it should be done by Canadians.

I do not quarrel with the statement that it should be done by Canadians but, Mr. Speaker, what I would point out is that both Mr. Gralewicz and Mr. Nuss recognized that this is a program which cannot be introduced without government recognition of the total package. This is what the government has failed to do. I want to quote Mr. Gralewicz again:

Subsidies are given to the airlines and subsidies are given to the railroads. Why not a subsidy to the other mode of transportation which is water transportation?

But this is not being considered. He also said:

I could not compete if I were a shipowner with the airlines which are subsidized or the railroads which are subsidized unless there is some form of subsidy or some form of relaxation given, maybe on the Seaway tolls or whatever. I do not know what they need.

He asks, again, for recognition of the fact that government has a responsibility to bear in the form of assistance if this bill is to become law. It was suggested during that committee meeting that there were people whose jobs were going to become marginal as a result of the decrease in net returns which might accrue to certain coastal industries. It was in respect of this approach that Mr. Nicholson, the national vice-president of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers' Union, said:

Yes, I think I agree, but actually no Canadian, whether he is a worker, in management or anyone else, should be required to make an unfair or disproportionate contribution to the economy. He should get some realizable and beneficial gain from the economy. I think we are just talking about ways of doing that.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

That is what we were talking about, Mr. Speaker—an opportunity to give to the Canadian seamen a part of that which is due to them from the Canadian economy. But again, there must be recognition of the fact that it cannot happen by itself, by legislation alone. In response to a question I put as follows:

As we transfer that movement of freight to the Canadian ownership under the Canadian tax structure does this not damage the competitive position of Canadian owners and seamen in the area?

Mr. Nicholson responded as follows:

That is what I meant when I said there should be a cost-benefit analysis in this particular field. And there has not been.

This is Mr. Nicholson, speaking for the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers. I repeat his title because I think it imperative that the government and the people of this nation should understand that as the unions presented their case in connection with this bill, in every single instant they recognized that it could not happen by itself, that it might require study. To quote Mr. Nicholson again:

I think as a result of that cost-benefit study the government might well be in a better position to decide what financial arrangements have to be made and whether they are justified.

Now I would like to turn to the president of the Dominion Marine Association, as he appeared before the committee with his group of supporters. He was asked about the competitive costs of Canadian ownership of ships and the Canadian purchase of Canadian-manufactured ships in respect to cost to a Canadian purchaser or a foreign purchaser. This is what he said:

Oh yes, I see your point. You are speaking now of the STAP, the export plan, under which a foreign person can order a ship built in Canada, get our 17 per cent subsidy and get cheap money under the Export Development Corporation plan, which we cannot get. So you are right. That ship would cost the Canadian more than it would cost the foreigner.

It is, therefore, imperative that the government should recognize this additional cost to the owners and operators of ships who will take this position under this legislation. We have a certain class of Labour Code in Canada and it is not comparable to any other. Mr. Hurcomb, president of the Dominion Marine Association, said with respect to this:

No, I think by and large the other nations did not fall into this pitfall. They recognized the special case of the seagoing industry, of the water borne industry. I know of no other country which has the same kind of legislation applicable to its shipping industry.

Mr. Speaker, here is another handicap which we must consider. Admiral Porter, who was also appearing before the committee, is executive director of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association. I put this question to him:

As a manufacturing structure, can you supply a Canadian shipping industry on a competitive basis at the moment or are there going to be subsidies and financial considerations required to make them competitive?

In reply, Admiral Porter said:

I think that a factor here is, of course, that every other country subsidizes its industry, and if Canada is to be competitive I suppose we have to do likewise. Perhaps I might just read you an excerpt from a study which was done by a European consulting firm. This was a study done in 1973 entitled "Shipbuilding Credits and Government Aid". This ia a quotation from it:

"Most countries today are providing financial assistance either directly for construction operating and interest subsidies or in the form of special taxation, depreciation and concessions or by financial guarantees. The OECD secretariat estimates that for 1970 the cost of government support for shipbuilding was about 12 to 15 per cent of the cost of ships or in the order of $650 million to $750 million. This is obviously only an estimate as the great variety of systems and the interconnections between the various forms of government intervention make it difficult to assess accurately the amount of government aid given to shipbuilding. Of the quoted amount, direct construction subsidies accounted for about $250 million. The various other forms of assistance, i.e., taxation relief, finance for investment, reorganization and research probably account for a similar amount."

● (1700)

We do not have the expertise developed here, but we have the opportunity to develop it, so that those who have been successful in Canada do not find it necessary to import certain of their requirements. The assistance given by Canada for exporting ships may amount to one or two percentage points of interest rate. On a boat costing anywhere from $20 million to $30 million, that one or two percentage points amounts to a lot of money. Should, then, the government continue in its present policy of giving a subsidy to those who purchase boats from abroad, giving them cheaper interest rates, which in turn puts the foreign-owned, Canadian-built vessel in a more competitive position than the Canadian-purchased, Canadian-owned and Canadian-operated vessel?

What I want to point out is that in every aspect of the presentations made to the committee on transportation, recognition of government subsidy was given. Whether it was the shippers, the seamens' union, the railroad union, the operators or the manufacturers of ships, all recognized that Canada had to be prepared to put money into the pot if the policy was to be successful. Let me repeat what I said when I spoke last on this matter in the House. When the unions made their presentation to the in-camera meeting at Halifax, they went so far as to say that if the government of Canada had to provide the boats to the operators, it should do so.

I am no less in favour of the principle of this legislation than was the hon. member of the New Democratic Party who spoke a few minutes ago, but I am concerned that we do not trade the devil for a witch. Some of the presentations made to the government never did get to the committee, and most of those who made representations came away dissatisfied with what they heard.

The minister has given us today an outline of certain permissive opportunities that enable the government to do certain things with this act. I wish it to be noted that in every instance, except only the one relating to a penalty clause, things are done at the discretion of the government, since in the second line of the amendment we find the word "may". This is what nearly every businessman has been complaining about in this legislation. The businessman has asked the government to spell out in its legislation precisely what will and shall be done under this act. It should not be put in permissive form, that a group of individuals within the structure of the Department of Transport "may" make decisions. These decisions will in the main be made by people who have never in their lives paid a freight bill, who never in their lives have run a business whose viability might hinge totally upon whether or not it could afford the transportation costs. That is why this must be given proper consideration, Mr. Speaker. No amendment to the bill to date has recognized that it may be necessary that the industry be viable both on the water and on the land.

I think it important to read into the record the press release issued by the Maritime Council of Premiers following their meeting on May 25 and 26 held at Charlottetown, P.E.I. They had this to say on national transportation policy:

The Premiers reaffirmed their position that transportation systems should be used by governments as positive tools for the attainment of national and regional objectives. They noted that over a year ago, the federal Minister of Transport had agreed with this policy, but they stated that despite the federal government's agreement with their position, there is an alarming lack of hard evidence that transportation is, in fact, being used as a positive development tool. Indeed, there are examples of just the opposite.

Bona fide consultation is required between governments to ensure that transportation is used to help rather than hinder economic developments. The premiers expressed concern that the federal government is increasing cost recovery within some transportation systems without considering the effects of this on the over-all economy. Consultation between governments should first establish regional economic objectives, they said. Then the undue reliance upon user pay concept should be replaced by the vigorous pursuit of cost effective solutions to these objectives.

They also commented on passenger service, but for the purpose of this debate I will skip that section. With regard to ports policy, which is an integral part, of course, of any maritime code that we might establish, the communiqué said this:

The Premiers expressed support in principle for the federal proposal to introduce a new port administration policy aimed at providing greater autonomy for our major ports. They commented that this is something they have been advocating for some time as they believe it will result in greater efficiency. However, the proposal put forward by federal officials lacks sufficient detail for them to draw definite conclusions as to its true merit. More specifically, the financial aspects must be better defined. For example, the financial performance of maritime ports will undoubtedly be compared with other ports when determining future investments. In making this comparison, consideration must be given to the cost of non-port activities required to keep ports operational. As an example, the fine natural harbours of the east coast require little of the expensive dredging and ice breaking that is required to keep the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes' ports operational. It may be felt that the development of inland ports is a desirable national goal, and that these substantial expenses should be undertaken in pursuit of such goals. However, Atlantic ports must not be penalized by defining artificial boundaries within which "cost recovery" is vigorously pursued, while ignoring real and substantial costs outside those boundaries.

I think the suggestions of the maritime premiers in these minutes of their news release are very pertinent. There are expenses not considered part of the cost of transportation in some areas of Canada, yet these expenses are in fact part of port expenses.

Let me come now to the coasting trade, and I again quote from these minutes:

The Premiers expressed concern that the safeguards required to protect regional industries against high transportation costs which would result from the removal of Commonwealth shipping in the coasting trade do not appear to have been adequately provided in either the new act or proposed regulations. The Premiers said that at a meeting of the Council of Maritime Premiers and the Premier of Newfoundland with the Honourable Jean Marchand in September, 1973, it was announced that Canada would withdraw from the British Commonwealth Shipping Agreement and reserve coastal shipping to Canadian flag vessels. At the same time, assurance was given by the federal minister that safeguards would be introduced to protect regional industries against high transportation costs. The Premiers today are sending a telegram to the Honourable Otto Lang urging him to permit the use of non-Canadian vessels according to the dictates of availability and cost. This is essential to enable maritime industries to benefit from one of the region's natural advantages.

● (1710)

The minister has said that the ministers of the Atlantic provinces pertaining to transportation are satisfied with the principle of the bill. As I am satisfied with the principle, so are they. But they are not satisfied with the realities of the bill, not with the regulations which they have seen once and on which they have met once. They have requested further meetings, through members of that committee, when they were discussing other transportation problems in Ottawa. No second meeting has yet been called to consider those regulations, or if it has been called it has been very recently and they have not as yet met.

When the area heard that this bill was to come back on the agenda of the House of Commons, the phones began to ring, because we had assurances, which we extended to the various interested parties in the Atlantic area, that this would not be brought forward again until the fall. The Atlantic area felt it would have an opportunity to make presentations to the government during the summer, or some opportunity while it was before hearings of the Senate or if it should go back to the House committee. They did not have an opportunity to present their case at the committee hearings which were held before. Certain individuals or groups have made presentations to the government and have been unable to obtain satisfactory replies.

One industry which was very deeply concerned, for instance, was the linerboard plant in Newfoundland. It wished very sincerely to give the government the position in which it would find itself, and that position is very serious. Yet it has not been possible to negotiate a firm position for these people so they may be sure they can obtain foreign charters to hold the costs in line with what they can afford. They are transporting hundreds of thousands of tons along the coastal areas of Canada, and any change in the rate which may accrue as a result of this measure will put a very heavy burden of expense on that industry. The figure it used was $400,000 in one instance.

These people have expressed concern. They believe, for instance, that the bureaucracy of the Department of Transport will control the destinies of a large number of industries in respect of waivers; the shipping industry will not offer their ships for charter in Canadian waters if there is no certainty of a definite term or a reasonable time for charters. This is the type of boat they have been using. It is all right to make all kinds of aspersions, casting them at Onassis and other shipowners on a worldwide basis, but I do not think that will help the case of the coastal industry which depends upon international shipping markets.

They are also concerned about the effect of this permissive, or enabling type of legislation with the changes in policy that can take place. They are concerned that it will not be the minister, but members of the staff who may not be familiar with shipping costs of a particular industry, who will make the decisions in respect of what these industries will pay for the cost of transportation. These people expend approximately $20 million for coastal transportation. That is a pretty large sum of money. If you spend $20 million for water transportation and your rates go up at all, you are then talking big money. A 1 per cent increase of $20 million is $200,000, and a 5 per cent or ten per cent increase, which is anticipated, might put these people completely out of business.

[Mr. McCain.]

Their concern is that the apparent benefits of the bill to the whole of the Canadian economy might well be offset by the detriment to their companies. The government has not justified that the bill is in the public interest. Members of these industries have attended meetings of the in-camera committee held in Halifax. There have been several meetings along that line, and the same answers have been received. Their comment is that the bill has never been changed substantially as a result of these meetings, and that the most notable government concessions was given in the minister's letter to Jack Davis that the government will not restrict waivers to one year. We already know there are those who must plan for 20 years for the development of this country, and there is a need to have assurances that there will be specific guidelines. Certainly the linerboard plant is among those who must look a long way ahead in the future. That is just one industry.

I must say that I am deeply disappointed that it has been the choice of the leader of the government to bring this bill back. As I mentioned earlier, the people in the Atlantic area had been advised, as a result of the statement by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), that this bill would not be back before the fall. They had gone back to mend their fences and prepare their presentations to put before the government or, they hoped, before the committee which was to study this bill further, either in the House of Commons or in the Senate. It was with great consternation that they received the word that this bill would reappear at all.

I appeal to the government and to the minister that the cost-benefit study that was urged by the unions, by the shipbuilders, by ship charterers and by the coastal industry, be undertaken, and that under no circumstances should this bill be put before the House of Commons again until we can have a reasonable measure of its effect on the coastal industry of Canada. It should not return until the minister can lay upon the table of the House a document showing what effect it might have on any industry in Canada which has had the benefit of water competitive rates. It should not be returned until such time as a Canadian shipowner can buy a Canadian ship as cheaply as a foreign shipowner can buy a Canadian-manufactured ship. It should not be returned until such time as the minister can advise this House that the government is prepared to accept the responsibility, which belongs at the government level, to subsidize transportation by water to the degree that it will not disrupt basic coastal employment in Canada.

It is the fear of Canadians that these industries will no longer be viable if they have a severe increase in transportation costs. We need a definite answer. We cannot have more permissive legislation which will be interpreted, on a daily basis, as government policy on a particular day when a particular application appears before the government. This is what the industry fears. The industry wants spelled out a foundation on which to do business. This is not present in this bill. It is not even present in the regulations which, again, have discretionary powers and which give the decision-making not necessarily to the ministry. This will give to other people the authority to decide at a given moment in time that there is an unemployed ship in Canada and the industry must employ it regardless of the cost. This decision can be made under such enabling legislation as we presently have before us. These are assurances for which the minister has plenty of time to obtain answers and to respond to those who are going to pay the bill.

● (1720)

Again I state, in an unqualified way, that I wish Canada had a Canadian merchant marine. However, in an equally unqualified way I say that this is an item of national concern which must be paid for by the nation. As the union members have stated, clearly it should not be paid for by any particular group of people such as those presently employed in the coastal industries. These items must be spelled out and answers must be given before Canada or any part of Canada should give favourable consideration to such a piece of legislation which could have such a tremendous impact upon employment in coastal areas as well as in areas which are not coastal.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I, along with some other members, am reluctant to have this bill pass at this time for reasons which have been stated. However, what is much more important, I am opposed to this bill because I do not think it would do the things that have been recommended in the Darling report and in the other two major maritime reports, namely, the building of a merchant navy in Canada for our coastal trade, or the building of a shipbuilding industry in Canada which has been neglected for a period of years.

When this bill was before the committee there was discussion to the effect that if we were to implement a Canadian shipbuilding industry and a totally Canadian flag coastal trade, considerable expense would be involved to the shippers in the maritime areas of Canada, particularly on the east coast. I think that is a fact. If in a short period of time we were to re-establish our shipbuilding industry to build the type of ships that are necessary for the coastal trade, there would have to be a considerable capital expenditure in that industry, particularly if we were to eliminate the cheap labour and the improperly equipped ships which are now plying our coastal trade, especially on the east coast. There should be a considerable increase in the cost of moving goods on that coast.

I think we should realistically look at the problem in a much broader sense than we have up to now. If we were to establish in the maritimes a shipbuilding industry which would meet our Canadian requirements, which would have a capacity, as well, to meet our liner trade which is a trade that would enable Canadians to ship Canadian goods on international waters, this would provide employment in the maritime areas where unemployment is exceedingly high and where I believe the ability exists to build that type of ship and to provide that type of employment.

In terms of employment and the capacity of people in the shipbuilding industry to buy goods and services in other parts of the country, I believe this would have a very large effect on the economy of Canada in general. Also, I believe in the maritime areas we have the type of people who would be able to man those ships, who would provide a large maritime core that could be employed on a long-term basis. This would eliminate much of the problem which exists on the coast at the present time in respect of the issuance of licences which enables any fly-by-night operator to move into that area, obtain a licence and compete unfairly with other carriers simply because he does not have to pay the wages or meet the standards we have in Canada.

I was very surprised when the Liberal members of the committee and also the minister paid little attention to the requirements of the Canada Labour Code in respect of any ships operating under either permit or licence in the coastal trade. It seems to me that in the Canadian coastal trade, where we move goods from one port to another, if we do not have the ships to carry that coastal trade and offer a licence to a foreign ship or a permit to a Commonwealth country engaged in that trade, we at least should insist on the Labour Code being applied in respect of those ships so that scab wages do not apply, so that our normal safety requirements apply, and so that Canadian standards apply in order that damages do not occur such as those which obviously have occurred in respect of foreign bottoms which are not sufficiently safe to ply in those waters. I could mention the accidents which have taken place. Probably the people in the maritmes are well aware of the fact that some of those disasters are still causing difficulty in respect of insurance and because the companies which own those ships are not able to meet their liabilities under Canadian law.

The government has said that in implementing the first section of the maritime code, and in fact the first two of a series of five studies which have been commissioned and undertaken, we are providing for the development of a Canadian flag in coastal trade and are eliminating many of the abuses which have taken place off our coasts in the last few years. They have not. I think the fact is that nothing will happen under this act which has not happened in the past.

We have agreed that the Commonwealth countries will be phased out over a period by means of a grandfather clause, and that those who were issued permits who previously were doing business in the coastal trade will have their permits extended for a period of five years under that clause. If a person goes to a maritime area and is unable to ship his goods at a reasonable price in any available Canadian ship or Commonwealth ship, and can prove that such a ship is not available to carry his goods at a price, then he will be able to apply for a licence which will enable him to use a foreign ship which would be exempt from any of the regulations we would normally apply to any of our own ships on that coast.

Unless the Canadian public is willing to see all the advantages of having a Canadian shipping industry, and all the advantages of having a Canadian shipbuilding industry, as well as the advantages which would accrue to the Canadian public, we will always find great reluctance by shippers on the coast of Canada to ship in Canadian bottoms when there are other bottoms they can obtain that will carry those goods at a cheaper price.

● (1730)

There are few people who have said that they would like to establish a Canadian flag fleet on our coastal waters if it were going to mean that the communities there would have to pay the total price of having those ships and Canadian crews operating in competition with foreign vessels. Most people are well aware that if we in Canada are going to enjoy the advantages, we will have to pay the price. Obviously considering the moneys and benefits we would receive from having our own shipbuilding industry again, and from having the capacity to go into international shipping as the need arises, there has to be a price tag, but I think the Canadian people would be willing to pay.

I was very surprised that the government in this bill did not at least have the Canadian Labour Code attach to all ships. We are well aware of the fact that there are Koreans, Portuguese, those flying under the Panamanian flag, the Liberian flag and all the other flags of convenience who are receiving very low wages. By the standards of this country they are paid considerably less than our minimum standard. These people are working in conditions which are well below the standards demanded in Canadian ships, which include standards for the safety of the crew, the safety of the ship, navigation facilities, and all the other requirements. Yet the government was not willing to apply that section of the Labour Code which would have ensured that any ship operating under Canadian licence would have to meet the Canadian labour standards. That would have provided Canadian operators with the opportunity to compete on a more equitable basis with the foreign ships of convenience which are now often in the coastal trade of Canada.

There are problems which would develop from having a totally Canadian owned shipping industry. Restrictions often have odd effects, and one of those effects would be on the west coast where large cruise ships are going up and down the coast between the mainland of the United States and Alaska. They call at ports in British Columbia, mainly for convenience, and pick up passengers at one Canadian port and drop them off at another Canadian port, or pick them up at a Canadian port and drop them off at the destination of the ship. This service is operating and would obviously have to be an exception until we are able to develop a replacement coastal service.

No one objects to small exceptions, but I think it is a shame that we are going to operate on the basis of licences which will not be the exception but which will be the general rule for much of the shipping in the coastal area. We are going to issue those licences without demanding that any Canadian requirements attach to them. I think this is the weakness of this legislation. It has been hailed by many as a step in the right direction, and I think it is. By this legislation we will be able to overcome some of the problems we did not have when designations of terms were used. For instance the word "ship" has now been applied to things like floating derricks, oil drilling rigs, and other facilities which are now used off our coasts. They are not necessarily self-propelled and are not movable in the sense that the term "ship" had previously been used. I think this is really worth while.

In this legislation we have eliminated the very stringent requirements there were under the Arctic waters protection legislation in which we demanded that all shipping be totally under the control of Canadians, and also in which anyone operating in that area must do so by applying all the protection Canadians demand of themselves, and that things like Canadian standards must apply to crews in that area as well. It seems odd, in looking at the Arctic waters protection legislation, that we as members of parliament were faced with a new problem. We were faced with a problem that was very young in nature but was growing very rapidly and was of considerable importance to the economy of Canada. The Arctic waters protection legislation was designed in such a way as to give maximum protection to Canadian interests in an area where Canadian interests are of primary importance and where already there were a number of other interests likely to have a continuing effect. I think that really is the direction we intend the new Maritime Code to go.

We want to protect a Canadian industry which, in effect, we do not have at the present time. We want to develop a capacity, which we do not have at the present time, for the building of merchant fleets, and at the same time we want to establish sovereignty and nationalistic aspirations. These are some of the considerations anticipated by the general public, but I am sorry to say that in my opinion these objectives have not been met. Many of them have been written in such a way that they will be considered at a later date, and many of them will be considered far into the future when the situation may have changed drastically.

We are often very dependent on the economic factor rather than on the Canadian sovereignty position most Canadians now want. I am thinking of one instance in which a ferry was going to Newfoundland. The ferry ran into difficulties, and we brought one in. We were able to operate it on a lease basis much more cheaply than we could operate our own because of the wage factor and other considerations. There was great reluctance to go back to the system we had before, and there was a great desire on the part of many people to retain that service which appeared to be cheaper to operate than our own Canadian service.

I think everyone will agree that we do not want to add to the cost of maritime transportation a large sum for developing Canadian Sovereignty, but I think there is a large benefit to be obtained from developing the maritime industry, the shipbuilding industry, and the coastal trade industry. That would provide us with the possibility of developing an international capacity, something which we gave up a long time ago.

It is interesting to consider what some other people have done. Most countries in the world have decided to have a capacity of their own to deliver their export goods, no matter where those goods may go. The Arabs have bought many tankers and have a capacity now which they did not have a few years ago. They decided to buy this capacity simply because they wanted a guarantee that deliveries would be continuous and that those operating the ships would not be able to hold them up for ransom. This was also true of the United States and of almost all other countries, and there is a great desire on the part of the newly developing countries, the Third World countries, to develop for themselves the capacity to move their goods to market in their own ships.

● (1740)

Many countries signed a United Nations resolution; indeed about 80 per cent of the countries concerned with shipping signed it but Canada did not. One of the reasons was consideration of the economics of developing our own facility rather than buying it from those in the business of selling transportation. This has produced in Canada, as elsewhere, the large lobbies that I think have been very influential with our civil servants who were largely responsible for developing this legislation. The bill is really only a modernization of some existing legislation, and has not come to a legislative decision that we are to have a Canadian shipping industry and navy.

There are those who contend it is not possible for Canada to develop a maritime capability, but it should be remembered that during the last war Canada was able to handle about one third of the world's shipping mainly through the Liberty ship program. There was no other way to move our goods across the ocean. But it was surprising how the friends of C. D. Howe decided shortly after the war that there was no place for Canada in international shipping. The ships were sold to Onassis, and some of them are still plying the seas and coming into Canadian ports. We have the ability, Mr. Speaker. There is an immense amount of unemployment in the maritimes but I am sure people still have the skills and the facilities necessary to build ships that would be needed for a Canadian coastal trade if such were included in this bill.

While we are getting rid of the grandfather clause we are in effect eliminating the Commonwealth preference within a five year period but we have not done anything to get rid of the licence that would permit foreign ships, Commonwealth or otherwise, to ply the waters off our coasts. That is unfortunate because I think we are ready to go into that ourselves. We should also give consideration to the next step, international trade. We could buy tankers to move some of our oil. I see the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) in the House and I am sure he will remember the time when we faced a great shortage of oil and hired a tanker to bring oil from western Canada to eastern Canada. Nobody was too sure whether the ship could stay afloat, it was in such poor shape, but we had to take a chance because there was no alternative. I do not blame the government in that case, but I think it is a disgrace that a country with one of the largest coastlines in the world should not have one tanker.

About a year ago I spoke to the engineer of a tanker which was lying at Freeport. He indicated that it had not been to sea for six or seven months and was going into drydock for refit at a cost of $1½ million. He did not think there was any advantage in putting it in drydock because he did not see any future for that relatively small tanker. The tanker's last trip had been to Quebec City in winter, bringing oil from the Caribbean. The engineer was of the opinion that Canada could get a real bargain in that tanker and a number of others that were lying offshore. They could be used in emergencies if we needed them. There was nothing wrong with this particular tanker that $1½ million would not correct, but it was too small for international trade.

Some members may be surprised to learn that Japan has on the drawing board a tanker capable of carrying a million tons of oil, and already there are a number of ships on the high seas capable of carrying half a million tons of oil. This small tanker that came into Quebec City is available if our government should see fit to buy it. However, we have not made the decision to develop a merchant navy.

Workers in the area of maritime trade will be interested to see if we take the step of ensuring that the Canada Labour Code applies to every ship that is issued a licence to participate in our coastal trade. I do not know whether the government believes that Canadians can compete, but I believe they can and that they have proven it in the past. If people are employed at a dollar an hour on a foreign ship under a flag of convenience while Canadians demand $4 or $5 per hour for the same job, not many shipping companies would be willing to compete. We should demand that companies operating under licence comply with the Canadian Labour Code and I would suggest that they also carry the Canada Labour (Safety) Code.

I do not come from a coastal area, Mr. Speaker, but from inland—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Land-locked.

Mr. Peters: Not quite land-locked. When I have a new riding under my jurisdiction it will have the only salt water port in Ontario.

Most of the sailors who were part of the Canadian merchant navy during the last war and those who manned the naval ships, came from the prairies. They had never seen salt water in their lives.

This country has an extensive coastal area and most Canadians acknowledge that shipping is important to us if we are to be competitive in export trade. I think most Canadians would agree that it is desirable to establish a Canadian merchant navy and international fleet, and to do so we must start with our coastal areas. We have now established a 200-mile fishing limit and are talking about establishing the continental shelf as the edge of our fishing zone but, Mr. Speaker, we do not have ships that will go out that far. We have, under the Canadian flag, three or four ships registered which are capable of going to the edge of the continental shelf. We should develop additional capacity in this field.

● (1750)

I strongly urge the referral back to committee of this bill. We should require the Canadian Labour Code to apply not only to ships of Canadian registry flying the Canadian flag but to ships operating under permit in our waters. This provision should apply to Commonwealth ships and to foreign ships operating in Canada under the permit-system. Nothing less will satisfy Canadians who want to see the Canadian merchant navy flying on ships plying our coastal waters and the oceans of the world.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, one should not be surprised at the manner in which this bill has been sneaked back into the House, despite previous undertakings. I suppose that this sort of thing has become part of our way of life around here. Certainly it is par for the course for the government to make an undertaking and then renege on it later. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), having raised this matter by way of a procedural point of order, I shall let the matter rest. However, I do wish to indicate that I was disconcerted and distressed by the sudden re-appearance of this bill since I had given certain undertakings on the basis of assurances given to me earlier this month that the bill would not come back. I gave an undertaking to a variety of interests on the west coast that the measure would not re-appear, would not be called again, before our rising for the summer.

With the coming of summer the tourist industry on the west coast became concerned in case the provisions of this bill should damage or disadvantage the tourist trade on the west coast. For example, there was the fear that under the terms of this legislation tourists would be unable to embark either at Vancouver or Victoria, proceed on a tourist cruise into the South Pacific or the Caribbean, return, and disembark at Victoria or Vancouver, or wherever they had embarked. I say this because the existing language of the bill made it seem that such cruises would be part of the coastal trade.

As well, another queer sort of procedure took place which I still do not understand properly. Certainly it went beyond any of the procedures of which I have been aware in the House. I am referring to three informal meetings to which members interested in this bill were invited. Actually they were notified of the meetings. The meetings were not in camera but there was no record kept of them. Members concerned about and interested in the provisions of this bill were given the texts of amendments which the government was planning to introduce to clarify ambiguities in the bill. I could not then understand why unanimous consent of the House was not sought for returning the matter to committee to permit the amendments to be made. However, the House has now heard the terms of certain amendments.

I do not know when the initial philosophy behind Bill C-61 was developed; perhaps it was before my time in the House, and I have been a member for about four years. As I recall, when we examined the bill in February and March, it was found that a number of amendments needed to be introduced to correct problems connected with translation, for example, and careless drafting.

Although this bill has been before the House for a long time, three more substantive amendments have been proposed in an unusual way. When we attended the meeting with officials in the West Block, we were handed copies of the amendments and of the regulations, and enjoined not to show them to anyone. Why they were offered to us I do not know. Why were they not brought forward in the House? Surely it was most unusual to propose the three substantive amendments in the manner followed this afternoon. The minister read them into the record. I am glad he did so, because he at least removed from them the aura of confidentiality with which they were clothed when they were first shown to us. Some who were more conversant than I am with the rules and practices of this House had wit enough to pass these amendments around to certain people. If I may call it six o'clock I shall continue later, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock later this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I called it six o'clock I was referring to the extraordinary practice of letting us have copies of these three amendments which were read into the record this afternoon by the minister, along with the injunction that they not be transmitted to the interested parties.

As I was also saying before six o'clock, there are those who are more familiar with the customs and practices of this House who sent these amendments to the trade in order to secure some reaction. I did not do that until this morning. On learning that the bill was coming forward, I felt it was high time that I had the opportunity to get some reaction from the provincial authorities and the shipping interests on the west coast who had expressed concern because these amendments deal with three matters: intercoastal trade, the licensing operation, and operations in the tourist trade.

Having had the text of the amendments passed to us and having been told not to circulate them, I intended to consult with the interested parties during the summer. However, as the bill was brought back very unexpectedly today, I felt I should get the amendments off, together with the regulations, because we have another draft of the regulations.

The regulations, of course, are another matter. If I am not mistaken, one copy of the regulations has already gone out to the provincial authorities. I am not sure whether the second set has gone out. Admitting that they are draft regulations, they are being fed out for reactions to see if they fit the need. This is being done because there is a tendency here, at the centre of things, to get a sort of tunnel vision. We sometimes cannot see some of the implications that are readily noticeable when the provinces, tourist trade, or shipping concerns look at the regulations and apply them to the jobs they have to do. Therefore I was going to consult the trade again when I went back to the west coast.

I believe that the matter of consultation is very important. In answer to a question put to him the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), I got the message, although I have not checked the blues to see if my impression is correct, that the minister is satisfied that the western provinces have agreed to these various amendments. I have had within recent date correspondence with the minister of transport of the province of British Columbia that suggests otherwise. He has suggested that there should be time to consider the whole matter, particularly the amendments that are brought forward.

● (2010)

In this connection I should like to read a letter, of which a copy was sent to me, from the minister of transport and communications of the province of British Columbia, dated April 30, indicating just how much consultation there has been between this government and those who are interested in this legislation. The provincial minister, Mr. Jack Davis, who of course is a former colleague of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), refers to a communiqué which was issued by the western premiers in April dealing with Bill C-61. In that communiqué the western premiers had this to say:

> The Western Premiers expressed the strong view that pending legislation to change the Canada Shipping Act (which would remove the freedom to use foreign ships for inter-coastal trade) should be delayed—

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, "should be delayed".

> —until such time as the Hall Commission has reported.

The Hall Commission, so far as I am aware, has not reported. To pick up the letter again:

> This is in line with the views which the four western ministers of transport expressed to you—

Meaning the federal Minister of Transport.

> —orally in Edmonton two months ago. It also reiterates in a very general way the concern expressed by a number of ministries in western Canada about the generality of Bill C-61 and the fact that exclusion of inter-coastal trade by regulation is simply not good enough.

This may be the purpose behind one of these amendments. I pick up the letter again:

> I was surprised, of course, to receive your letter of April 14th, 1976 in which you—

That is the Minister of Transport's letter.

> —say that "relevant clauses of the Bill have been reviewed at meetings between the federal and provincial governments. General satisfaction and acceptance of the proposed legislation have been clearly indicated at these meetings by the provincial officials, including the representative of your department.

That is a quotation from the letter of the Minister of Transport to the minister of transport for the province of British Columbia. To pick up the letter from the provincial minister once more, he says quite bluntly:

> This is false. It is not true. I have personally been present when four western ministers of transport told you personally that they objected to the legislation. Officials of the B.C. Department of Transport and Communications have been under instruction, since the change of government in B.C., that the inter-coastal provisions of Bill C-61 were objectionable from our point of view.

They are pretty solid objections. Obviously there is some sort of foul-up in the consultations between the Minister of Transport and the provinces. I speak only for the west; the same may apply in the east for all I know. I do not know whether the Minister of Transport came back from the consultations with some misunderstanding, but there is certainly every need imaginable for referring this bill to the committee and for calling witnesses to speak to the substantive changes, if only to satisfy these well formulated objections.

For example, in one of the amendments—and this could cause concern—having to do with clause 8(5) of the bill, the governor in council "may make regulations exempting" certain classes of goods. The governor in council is given no mandatory power there. If there is good cause for these regulations to be made exempting from the application of this provision the carriage by water of certain classes of goods, I think that should be clear and the provincial ministers should be given the chance to come here to speak, or to send their representatives here to speak on their behalf, to these proposed amendments.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I personally want to see a Canadian merchant marine. I have said this in the House on more than one occasion. I feel we need it, and the reasons are fully outlined in my intervention on second reading last March. They have also been outlined in my contributions in the twenty-ninth parliament. However, I cannot carry this wish to the point of failing to hear what problems are likely to arise if we are to establish a merchant marine without consulting those who are concerned. In view of the contradictions that are all too apparent in the correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the provincial minister of transport, I think this caveat on my part is well grounded. It is most important that these apparent differences be resolved; indeed it is essential that they be resolved. This can no longer be done on paper since obviously correspondence between the ministers leads to misunderstandings and absolute contradictions. Therefore it has to be done in committee, and I hope that my colleague from Capilano, who will next have the floor, will be able to move the required amendment.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as I enter the debate on third reading of Bill C-61 it is still a mystery to me why the government has not accepted the advice that has been given during the many hearings and presentations the bill has received over the past several years. It has been submitted that national policies aimed at developing a merchant marine and a shipbuilding industry should be kept separate from policies governing the transportation of goods. If we in the province of British Columbia have one serious reservation about the implications and aspects of Bill C-61 it is just this, that we are mixing the transportation of goods with our transportation policy, with potential spin-off effects which can be extremely detrimental to the economy of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, and also the Atlantic provinces.

I listened with attention to the minister's presentation today and I compliment him on being calm, cool, and very rational. He made several points that we have understood from the many communications he has sent out across the land to people who have been studying this bill, but one of the matters that has caused a backlash in the province of British Columbia so far as Bill C-61 is concerned is this: various interested groups—I speak of the Board of Trade, the B.C. Chamber of Shipping, the B.C. Council of Forest Industries and the B.C. Chamber of Commerce—groups that have a dedicated interest in the future of their business, have not received courteous attention from the staff of the minister or his parliamentary secretary as they were not invited before the committee during committee stage. Why this has happened I do not know. On going back into the files I find that all of these organizations in British Columbia submitted briefs to the former minister of transport, and resubmitted and supplemented them to the incumbent Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang).

● (2020)

There is a situation that has developed in British Columbia in which we do not trust the government in Ottawa any longer in its desire to rule by regulation. There are too many examples on the record of rule by regulation favouring some and not being applied uniformly across the land to all the interests competing in the same arena.

West coast interests have been on the record with the two ministers since 1973 in this regard and, as I said, not one of those interests has been invited to appear before the Committee on Transport and Communications during its deliberations and study of this bill. The minister has gone to a great deal of trouble to circulate a whole series of telegrams and letters he has received from various interested groups in Canada who are in favour of the passage of Bill C-61. It is very interesting to note that of all these letters and telegrams that have been circulated, fundamentally from the unions and the guilds in the Great Lakes region, none that I can see comes from anyone outside that group of unions and corporations in the Great Lakes region. This is the region that supports Bill C-61 as it is presently written.

I notice also, and I guess this adds to the feeling of distrust we have out west, that none of the other submissions have been circulated by the minister to give a fair view of our concern in British Columbia. This is the group of organizations and associations which co-ordinate the interests of the people and employees in British Columbia. They are concerned about the spin-off and detrimental effect to our markets and to the rising costs that we are facing in transport of goods to market, and in the transport costs of the goods we receive from the Atlantic provinces.

I might say that the B.C. Council of Forest Industries put in a specific request to meet with the committee. The committee was out in Vancouver studying the port of Vancouver. It sat three days there and visited the port and the airport at Seattle, yet at no time did the B.C. Forest Council receive an invitation to appear before the committee. Why is that when it has had briefs prepared and its concerns have been expressed most clearly in telegrams and letters? That council has not been given the chance to put its positions specifically on the record. I hope I am able, in the time allotted to me tonight, to do just that for that council.

That council was also advised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) in this regard, and I will read his letter into the record. This is a letter sent by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni on House of Commons letterhead to the Council of Forest Industries, British Columbia, under date of May 27, addressed to Mr. Lanskail:

> As you may have heard it is the government's intent to recess on June 30 and for this reason it will be impossible to give third reading to Bill C-61 prior to this date.
>
> It is still unclear as to whether a new session will be initiated upon members' return to parliament in September or October and therefore Bill C-61 may or may not be carried forth into the fall and winter session. For this reason the informal committee of which I was appointed co-chairman to study regulations dealing with Bill C-61 will not meet certainly before the end of June and possibly if the bill is not carried forth, ever.
>
> [Mr. Huntington.]
>
> Representations have been made to the minister by British Columbia Liberal caucus members and you can rest assured your interests will be considered in any new proposed legislation.

Just what is going on, Mr. Speaker? This is a letter to a very responsible organization which is overseeing an industry that provides 65 per cent of the income of British Columbia, and it received a letter such as this from a member who purports to be the co-chairman of the committee. He said the bill would not be brought forth in the fall. Then what are we doing here today? The government has brought the bill forth but did not even place it on the list of legislation to be discussed by parliament prior to the summer recess. This is another reason why there is a feeling of mistrust in the west concerning the attempts and the desires of the minister and his staff to cover key points concerning British Columbia and other maritime provinces by regulation.

If the government is really sincere it would be very easy for it to put these points of concern into the statute and not into regulation. The whole thing causing concern is the attitude on the part of the government. The feeling of mistrust is there, and if I were on the government benches I would be extremely concerned about that mistrust of the department and of Ottawa in general.

Added to this attitude, we have a member of the Department of Transport commenting in a newspaper column. He was being interviewed concerning the technical details of the cruising industry in British Columbia. It is reported in the newspaper that:

> When representations were made to one Ottawa transport official, he replied: "Why don't they pick up their passengers at Seattle?"

The passenger cruising industry out in the port of Vancouver carries on between the months of May and September. Since I was born that very beautiful cruise along the coast of British Columbia up to Alaska has been run by Canadian ships; the CNR ran a vessel and the CPR ran a vessel, and for years that was one of the great experiences, travelling up the coast and back between May and September.

Our tastes have changed. That whole industry now depends on cruise ships that can carry 350 to 400 people during the short season from May to September. We were never able to cut the mustard with Canadian bottoms because of the short season, but now all of a sudden we want to destroy the industry that has a spin-off effect in these short months within the port of Vancouver, and the spin-off effect amounts to $29 million for victualling these ships, and the expenditures of passengers and the clientele of these ships. Yet we are here fooling around with this kind of input in my city.

I have been asked if there is any concern for this industry in my province, particularly in view of this type of interference and dogmatic attitude whereby this $29 million seasonal industry should be sloughed off to the city of Seattle. How are we going to keep our pay rolls going in order that our economy can help pay off the debts we have incurred in the past three years in the province of British Columbia unless we do something constructive?

There is a complete lack of trust and faith in the west regarding rule by regulation. There were two gentlemen, one from the CTC and one from MOT, out meeting with various interest groups in British Columbia recently, and I believe this point was clearly made to them. I am very surprised that in light of the subject matter of these meetings this bill would be presented again now before June 30, and particularly in light of the correspondence received from a member on the other side.

West coast industries are completely opposed to rule by regulation when it is not necessary. There are all kinds of examples which show that this has caused nothing but trouble. One in particular that recently came to mind involved the Financial Arrangements Act as it applied to post-secondary education. This was a statute that the province of British Columbia agreed to, and as soon as it was agreed to and the statute was passed, officials started to work on regulations. The federal government wrote each of the ten provinces asking for a definition of post-secondary education. The government accepted three different definitions and did not advise the other provinces. The sum and substance of that kind of treatment in the west is that on a per capita basis in respect of that one transfer alone the province of British Columbia was short changed $290.8 million. Another eastern province gained $448 million through that hidden regulation or that definition that was not shared equally across Canada. You wonder, Mr. Speaker, why we do not trust them down here! How much do we have to take in order to feel a part of this country?

● (2030)

I have other examples of regulations here in Ottawa whereby fines are imposed unevenly. Fines are imposed on individuals and small organizations, while large organizations which should be fined for the same infraction are overlooked. As an example I speak of GELCO and its failure to file under CALURA. While the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is fining a bunch of little people it overlooks the fact that GELCO is guilty of the same thing. This is another example of the reason we mistrust rule by regulation. Where do we get assurance from rule by regulation that fines are not bestowed on those in political favour? This is something that has the backs up of people out west because they do not know how to play that game. What we are in the regulations—

An hon. Member: Is a shafting.

Mr. Huntington: —is a shafting. You bet it is. We are just building another bureaucracy, when we should give the industries operating on the west and east coasts a chance to plan for the future.

A few moments ago I spoke of the cruise industry. Those ships run for a short period of time. The charters must be arranged anywhere from two to four years in advance of the time the passengers go abroad. Who in his right mind would enter into commitments with the penalties involved in charters unless he knew exactly where he stands in this regard? Why not cover these regional needs in the act? This Bill C-61, as I read it and as I look at the telegrams and everything else that the Minister of Transport circulates, is a Great Lakes bill and an SOU bill. Very little consideration is being given to other interests.

In my area I have probably more shipyards than there are in any other riding on the west coast. I cannot count the number. They are large and small. They are extremely skilled, with a very high degree of technology. Those shipyards today are in real difficulty. Their work forces are low. If the Burrard Shipyard did not have the two icebreakers it would not have work for its skilled workers.

The Vancouver Shipyard, thinking it was going operational, expanded the yard. The employees say they are the highest paid tradesmen there are, but there is no work for them. That yard today cannot build its own equipment. It can have that equipment built in Korea at 42 per cent less than it would cost them to build it themselves in their own yard. There is something seriously wrong with our priorities when we try to impose something on the citizens of Canada which has no relation to the cost involved with the same industry in other parts of the world.

We are very generous in respect of foreign aid; we are up to .7 per cent of our GNP, and some people would have us go as high 1 per cent. We are very generous through CIDA which is a soft loan organization giving aid to offshore countries. In EDC, the Export Development Corporation, we have a hard loan lending fact for the development and assistance of Nations less developed than Canada. Today in the House I have heard speeches in which we have been chastised for utilizing labour from Third World and less developed countries than Canada on ships which carry our goods. Surely that is a form of aid if we ourselves cannot compete.

I could tell stories about how we are building very technical high horsepower units to service the oil platforms in the North Sea. Those ships were built with Canadian technology and are of Canadian design. We have every right to be very proud of our ability to build and design equipment for coastal work, towing services, and offshore exploration rigs, but can we man those Canadian ships and vessels with Canadian crews to service the North Atlantic? No. Those Canadian ships of Canadian design are manned by crews from the Scandinavian countries. Not only is there a cost factor involved, but we have difficulty in Canada getting Canadians to serve, no matter at what level of pay, in that type of work.

I welcome the marine college, the expansion of our patrol vessels, and the expansion and need for expansion of our coastguard, but since the SIU has called for this bill can it assure us that it can man these vessels? We are now financing industrial sales to Algeria and Poland which have idealogies foreign to those of most Canadians. We now find that the greatest merchant marine in the world is that of the U.S.S.R. We think we can build a Canadian merchant marine and be competitive with that organization. They have one of the largest merchant fleets in the world. I guess it now surpasses that of the United States. The U.S.S.R. is a member of 30 of the 300 ocean conference tariff groups.

We must charge $52.75 per ton for carrying kraft wrapping paper from the U.S. west coast to the Far East while the Soviet price for the same commodity on the same route is $38 per ton. Russian ships are hauling coffee or sisal from Kenya to Europe for half the conference rate, machine tools from west Germany to Canada at 45 per cent reduction, or indeed any product at whatever discount will win the business. Should we not be expending our energies on that which we can do best?

How can we operate a Canadian merchant marine in competition with fleets like that of the Soviet Union which has got itself in a real box in terms of international payments and is trying to earn foreign exchange in any way possible? How can we compete without massive subsidies from the public purse? I often wonder why this has not been said in any of the dialogue pertaining to this bill that is thrust upon us. The United States now has to subsidize the use of United States bottoms for the movement of goods throughout the world. When members of the Transport Committee were in Seattle we spoke to the U.S. officials on this subject. This subsidy is justified by way of a military need for ocean transport in the event of war. It is extremely hard to compete with the type of rates the Russians offer in the ocean movement of commodities.

● (2040)

Before the turn of the century one of our greatest wants will be capital. With the right work attitude, the right national attitude, and the right community attitude we could generate that capital. However, we keep killing our chances of national self-determination. Our desire for national ownership of everything has absolutely got our priorities all out of whack.

Clauses 8 to 14 serve Great Lakes interests and are impositions on the coastal maritime provinces and the industrial interests of our maritime provinces.

The two points I want to make—and I will repeat them—are that our priorities for coastal regions on the use of much needed capital are mixed up with a bill written for Great Lakes interests, and that the continuing man-year benefits for Canadians are just not there, because of uncompetitive wage costs and because of a lack of desire to serve on the high seas.

I listened with attention to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). He was saying that there is work for 44,000 people, and I have read elsewhere in the debates that we could have 175 ships on the high seas carrying Canadian goods. However, I see nothing but an increase in the cost of carrying those goods, and those costs will have to be borne either by the regions producing those goods and trying to market them in the world or by the Canadian treasury, and that means spreading it across the country.

I suggest that if we were to get back on the track with regard to the tremendous need for capital, we in Canada, between now and the end of the century, have to do more saving and more work, particularly with regard to energy from the north, for future generations. We must rebuild and modernize our transportation system, and in some areas the transportation system will have to be electrified. We should not be applying our much needed energy and tax resources to this area where there is world surplus and where there are labour forces in the world. In no way, shape or form can we compete with the end costs.

We can only add to the burden of those people responsible for the production and delivery of goods. In the Beaufort Sea we will have a need for underwater silos. We will have a need for a pipeline. These are the areas in which our dollars can be well spent.

I repeat what I said in my opening statement that national policies aimed at developing a merchant marine and shipbuilding industry should be kept separate from a policy governing the transportation of goods. We cannot fight inflation—

[Mr. Huntington.]

An hon. Member: On the backs of barnacles.

Mr. Huntington: On the backs of barnacles. Thank you very much.

We cannot fight inflation when we start to spend our dollars in a way which will create a burden for the future generations of this country. Why not spend our dollars where a benefit can be derived? Let us put money into the treasury and not keep taking it out.

We have heard from the NDP today to the effect that there is no cost-benefit study in terms of dollars and man-years on this subject. We have heard that there are 44,000 man-years of work to be created. I would like to know where these studies are and where these figures come from, because the straight logistics do not make any sense.

In view of the fact that the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, along with others from the west coast, have not had an opportunity to present their briefs and thoughts to the committee, I would like to put on the record their concerns with regard to Bill C-61. Their concerns apply to the inter-coastal trade, and they state that what causes significant damage to the forest products industry of British Columbia adds inflationary pressures to the eastern Canadian consumers of B.C. products, and adds to the cost of eastern manufactured goods consumed in British Columbia.

The Council further states that access to non Canadian vessels on a duty free basis for use in intercoastal service is an important factor in maintaining a well balanced and economic domestic transportation system. To a significant degree Canadian rail freight rates to eastern Canada are based on the availability of the competitive alternative, shipping via the Panama Canal on foreign flag vessels. Current rates for shipping via the Panama Canal on Canadian vessels are more than double the rates for foreign flag vessels. We have just recently seen an example of that in the movement of western coal into Hamilton for steel and hydro purposes.

The concern of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries is exemplified by the fact that, over the last five years, lack of water competition has seen rail rates applicable to lumber and plywood to eastern Canada more than double, with particularly sharp increases in 1974, which reflect the conviction of the railways that water competition for this business is not a factor.

In 1971 there was a 7.2 per cent increase in rail rates; in 1972 a 6.7 per cent increase; in 1973 a 6.6 per cent increase; in 1974 a 19.9 per cent increase, and in 1975 a whopping 22.2 per cent increase in rail freight rates for getting B.C. products to eastern Canadian markets. The effect of Bill C-61 would be to double the rail rates in the next five year period. It would eliminate British Columbia producers from the eastern Canadian market. The producers out in British Columbia would be replaced by producers in the United States southern pine producing territory who in 1975 double their shipments to eastern Canada over those of 1974, and by U.S. plywood producers who now enjoy in excess of 25 per cent of the Canadian plywood market.

Here we are adding to the cost of getting our goods to a market, and we have that market now buying from the United States causing further demand on our balance of international payments. The B.C. Council of Forest Industries goes on to say that water transportation is a vital factor if British Columbia lumber and plywood manufacturers are to maintain eastern Canada markets. The cost of that water transportation must reflect the competition of foreign flag vessels. To do otherwise is simply to place these markets in the hands of American producers. This is the kind of spin-off about which we in British Columbia are very frightened. We plead with the government and those on the staff of the department to understand this need.

The B.C. Council of Forest Industries is not convinced that regulations under the act will provide adequate provision for the use of foreign vessels in intercoastal trade. The proposed regulations are still classified confidential and therefore are not available for perusal and comment. That was true at the time of this brief, and the government has been good enough since to give us the draft of those regulations, which has helped us indeed.

It is interesting to note that at a meeting on the west Coast of all the organizations interested, the B.C. Chamber of Shipping, the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, the chambers of commerce, the Vancouver Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Mines, to an organization and to a man were against rule and interference by regulation, because of the past record of the government.

There is no reason at all why an area of Canada trying to provide jobs and get its product to world markets cannot work and have an improved decision making base. There is no reason at all why the key factors of concern in clauses 8 to 14 inclusive cannot be organized and be part of the statute so that our decision making base will be improved and so that we will not have to keep traipsing back to Ottawa—the act states "in writing"—to the minister. Mr. Speaker, have you any idea how long it takes for mail to come from British Columbia to Ottawa these days? It is unbelievable. The mail clears out of here and goes to British Columbia in about one third of the time it takes to move in the opposite direction.

● (2050)

The minister mentioned that the regulations would be made public, kept public, and that all changes would be public. This is one of the major concerns of the Council of Forest Industries, that changes in the regulations that are subsequent to the approval of the bill are not subject to the public procedures and public scrutiny that would prevail when a change in the act is proposed. They say that the only acceptable assurance is a specific amendment to the bill to exclude intercoastal trade, in clause 8.

On the west coast we are very edgy about rule by regulation and we are very edgy about the attempts of the bureaucracy down here to get this through. They seem to be more interested than does the minister. I would urge that our concerns be given full consideration. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That Bill C-61 be not now read a third time but be referred back to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for the reconsideration of clauses 8 to 14 inclusive including any government amendments to be proposed thereto.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale).

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully today to the debate in this Chamber on Bill C-61 and have been interested to hear the views expressed and the arguments in some quarters for changes in the legislation. This legislation has been before the House for a long time. Members of this Chamber who have sat in previous parliaments know that this subject has come before the House for consideration in the past, and that legislation has been presented to parliament which has not emerged in the final legislative process to become law.

The basic concepts we have been discussing today have been of interest to various groups in the country for many months and years. It is a subject which is not new to members nor to those who have an interest in it and have been looking at this particular concept and the proposals before the House for some long time.

The points of concern in regard to Bill C-61 were clearly and specifically identified earlier today in the comprehensive speech delivered by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). With respect to those aspects of the objections and the concerns which lie outside the scope of the statute, the minister on many occasions in this House has given far-reaching undertakings not only to consult with all interested parties with respect to regulations but also to search conscientiously for a fundamental consensus about those regulations before moving the coasting trade provisions into law.

Mr. Oberle: Why has he not done it before?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I heard a voice ask why it was not done before. As the hon. member would know if he had studied the debates of this House and the minutes of the standing committee, and the publications issued from time to time by the Department of Transport, this minister and his predecessor have made it very much their business to consult with interest all across the country. The consultations have gone on literally for years and are going on right at this time.

As the minister indicated this afternoon, if it had not been for the unfortunate disruption of air services this past week, officials of the Department of Transport would have been in in the maritime provinces on Monday of last week consulting with senior officials there to determine what further steps needed to be taken to satisfy the genuine needs of some interests across the country. To make a phony allegation that there have not been consultations or a commitment to further consultation is ridiculous.

With respect to the complaints about certain aspects of the statute itself, that is, the wording of the proposal which is before the House, the minister has clearly identified those specific clauses which might be subject to further amendment. This afternoon he placed before the House the substance of three amendments which would serve to meet the complaints raised about various clauses.

There has been thorough and lengthy discussion of all aspects of Bill C-61 in this Chamber and outside, and it has been going on for a number of years. There was an opportunity to consider the provisions of the bill in principle in the lengthy debate at second reading stage; it was considered again for weeks at the committee hearings, and finally it came back to this House some weeks ago for further analysis and discussion at report stage. If we refer the bill or part of it to the standing committee for further analysis at this stage, we should be very specific in our requirements. I do not believe it would be wise to make a general or broad reference back to the committee.

The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) in the wording of his amendment referred to clauses 8 to 14 inclusive, but I believe that phrasing is still too broad. The reference from this House should be more specific and direct the attention of the committee to those clauses of the bill which have been identified by interested groups and by the minister in the House today as requiring some modification. I refer to clause 8, clause 11, and clause 14.

There has been considerable discussion and certain representations about the bill in this House, and I think members have identified the areas about which they are concerned. I think it is clear that the areas that should be dealt with by further statutory amendment are those in clauses 8, 11, and 14, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the wise and proper course for this House to follow would be to ask the standing committee to consider generally the subject matter of the coasting trade which has been before the committee already and has been exhaustively examined.

● (2100)

I suggest that it would be more appropriate to ask for consideration of those portions of the statute which could be subject to further modification at this stage. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais):

That the amendment be amended by deleting the words 'clauses 8 to 14 inclusive' and substituting the following words therefor:

'clauses 8, 11 and 14'

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, amendments, and amendments to amendments are coming thick and fast tonight, as we debate this bill shortly before we are to return to our ridings. Bill C-61 is an attempt to implement government policy in certain maritime areas.

You know, as I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale), the minister having been involved in other activities for the last few days, I wondered if the minister and the parliamentary secretary who come from the heartland of this country, beautiful Saskatchewan—

Mr. Goodale: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —where the wheat grows as thick as seaweed grows on the east coast, would have shown the same cavalier attitude to changes affecting the east and west coasts if the Crowsnest Pass agreement were under scrutiny with a view to amendment. Yet there were the minister and the parliamentary secretary using professorial platitudes to describe the effect of Bill C-61. The parliamentary secretary, whose experience is limited basically to the heartland of Saskatchewan, proposed an amendment. If he had felt the sea between his toes he would begin to appreciate what this bill means to maritimers.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Would he not have felt the salt?

Mr. Nowlan: The only thing the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) knows about the sea is that the St. Boniface River ultimately empties into the sea.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I was in the navy before you were born, son!

Mr. Nowlan: Joe, you are getting old.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Not old, better.

Mr. Nowlan: As long as you keep the fire in your belly and not in your head, you'll be all right.

Bill C-61 is a measure fundamental to the east and west coasts of this land. We heard the minister speak today in a competent way. He is one of the competent fellows on the other side. At least he stands out in comparison to other cabinet ministers, something like a lightning rod to attract lightning. There are so few competent cabinet ministers opposite that when one is the least bit competent, he rather stands out like a lightning conductor for the lightning to strike. Unfortunately for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) he will get hit by a lightning bolt if he allows Bill C-61 to pass without amendment.

The minister gave assurances that, before certain regulations are proclaimed, there will be a committee hearing at which the impact of these regulations can be assessed.

Mr. Goodale: It is in the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: As the parliamentary secretary says, that is in the bill. We know what that means.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is as if the minister had a simulator.

Mr. Nowlan: He does not meet the expense of running a simulator. We know that once the government makes up its mind and regulations are defined, it is somewhat late in the day to hold public hearings. Perhaps I can use an analogy the parliamentary secretary can understand, because he does not understand much about the sea but understands something about barnyards. You know, it is a bit late to close the barn door after the sheep, cattle, and livestock have bolted out to the range. It is a bit late then to close the barn door. Mr. Speaker, I say this because you, I, and other hon. members have been involved perhaps in more situations requiring common sense than has our young parliamentary secretary from the heartland of Saskatchewan. Be that as it may, it is difficult for Canadians to listen to the Minister of Transport and believe what he says when he gives assurances about matters affecting transportation. They remember that we had an election a couple of years ago when, almost every day of the week, some announcement concerning transportation was made.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And it started in Cornwall.

Mr. Nowlan: People wonder how many of those fundamental promises to do with transportation have been implemented since the majority government was formed after that unfortunate event of July 8, 1974. How can the minister and the parliamentary secretary expect Canadians to go along hand in hand down their rose petal-strewn path of assurances and guarantees? People are suspicious.

Let me now talk about specific provisions of the bill. What bothers me is that the minister and his officials in the gallery are looking at this bill in terms of what it will do to shipowners and unions running the ships rather than in terms of the potential it could have for developing industry in areas of the country which very much need industry. In the opinion of many this bill will adversely affect the development of our industry.

The minister has talked much of the user-pay concept as applied to transportation. But Bill C-61 sort of leaves behind the user-pay concept with respect to the burden being imposed on the shipper and the public, which nobody wants.

Bill C-61 also contains a fundamental paradox. Instead of expanding competition in the marine trade and the trade along our coasts, it will actually restrict competition because certain provisions are to be restricted to Canadian bottoms and Canadian sailors. Perhaps the government has in mind a laudable object. But will the attainment of that object increase competition? Competition, after all, is the anchor or keystone of the National Transportation Act. In his speech the minister glossed over two fundamental paradoxes involving the user-pay concept. It has been completely ignored in Bill C-61.

All speeches by members on this side today, in committee and on second reading, clearly set out that if you restrict the movement of goods along our coasts to ships with Canadian bottoms and Canadian crews, no matter how laudatory that may be, you obviously restrict the competitive factor which is so important not only in setting competitive rates at sea but in maintaining some balance of rail rates on shipments between our coasts and inland. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) amplified those concerns earlier today.

● (2110)

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte asked why, after all these years, we are moving in this new area without a cost benefit study to tell us as members, and the Canadian public, how Canadians will benefit by restricting coastal traffic to Canadian bottoms.

If the Conservatives had been in power as long as this government, with all the cobwebs hanging from its ears, and had done all the surveys, research, and reviews of surveys, we would be subject to the same legitimate complaint. The government is renowned for studies, task forces, reviews of studies, but there has not been a cost benefit study to give us some indication of the economic impact, good or bad, on what will happen in the coastal areas of our country, let alone the marine industry, by restricting coastal trade to Canadian bottoms.

Before being elected to this institution, many years ago I practised law. I have not practised since being elected. However, when you could not prove anything beyond a reasonable doubt or even a preponderance of evidence—if the hard evidence was not there—you had to draw inferences from some of the facts that were given. The only inference I can draw from this glaring omission is something that is fundamental to a meaningful consideration of Bill C-61, namely, a cost-benefit study of how many ships will be built in Canadian yards as a result of this bill. How many Canadian sailors will ship out on Canadian bottoms as a result of this bill? As the hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte said, the fact that there is not a report leads one to infer that it will not confirm some of the generalities that had been expressed on the other side, namely, that the passage of Bill C-61 will open up a new day for Canadians along our coast and for those serving on Canadian ships. Otherwise there should have been a survey. With all the time spent thus far, and there is still time to do it, it is almost beyond comprehension that there has not been that type of study.

I am amazed there has not been such a study because many stories circulate. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is not in the Chamber this evening. However, I am sure he saw the article in the Chronicle-Herald of June 2 which states the province of Nova Scotia may be losing 2,200 jobs involved in a $700 million deal because of the potential of Bill C-61 becoming law. I would like an answer with regard to this story from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Transport, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs because this is right in his own backyard. I will not read the whole article, but simply the highlights. It was written by Ian Thompson, the transportation reporter of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. I quote:

> It would appear Nova Scotia has lost a planned $700 million iron ore processing mill planned for either the Strait of Canso or Garbarus Bay because of proposed amendments to the Canada Shipping Act.
>
> The plant would have directly employed 2,200 and initially would have used 200,000 tons of Cape Breton coal a year.

As I said, this is right in the backyard of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He should be called upon to explain whether this front page headline story in the June 2 Chronicle-Herald is just a frivolous report. This type of story certainly deserves some explanation.

If there is any credence at all to that story, the potential loss of the 2,200 jobs will more than offset any potential jobs in the merchant marine for Canadians serving in Canadian bottoms as a result of Bill C-61. What kind of set-off is it to give the monopoly to Canadian bottoms on the coast, with the higher traffic charges, when there has not been a scintilla of evidence either today, on second reading, or in committee, to show how many jobs will be created by the Canadian merchant marine if the bill is passed?

This headline story states unequivocally that P. E. Kavanagh, one of the right-hand men of Cyrus Eaton, was prepared to go into this type of development but changed his mind because of the potential adverse effect of Bill C-61. That is pretty close to the core of Atlantic Canada, which does not have that type of industry at the best of times, let alone the bad times we are now experiencing. Therefore he should receive an explanation from the government as to the credence to be placed in that story before we proceed further with this bill.

I wish to quote another story, not from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald because I would not want hon. members to think I am prejudiced. This story, involving the St. Lawrence Seaway, appeared in that great paper, the Montreal Gazette.

Those of us in the deep east have always been glad to bring part of the sea into the heartland of Canada through the St. Lawrence Seaway. It has not helped us in terms of developing viable industries, but we are largely Canadian, notwithstanding some of the small Canadian talk we have heard in this parliament in the past few days.

The Seaway is a fact of life. If it ever starts paying its way, we will not begrudge it. However, we will begrudge it if it does not start to pay its way or forgive some of the debt that has accumulated.

I want to refer to a story on page 54 of the May 25 Gazette—I did not know it had that many pages—where it states, and I quote:

● (2120)

The federal government's shipping advisory board expects to make its first recommendations on federal support for a Canadian merchant marine by this summer, according to a board official.

This is dated little more than a month ago. In other words, a creature of the government, the Shipping Advisory Board, is expected to make its first recommendation by this summer concerning a merchant marine for Canada. The article goes on:

A key element in forming the recommendations will be a series of cost-benefit studies now under way, Roland Murray, a senior adviser to the federal transport ministry, told a meeting of the Naval Officers' Association of Canada, Montreal Branch.

Before the House leader gets us too far down the road beyond return, or to use nautical language, before he gets us into the locks and pulls the plug and leaves us high and dry, surely he has some responsibility or rather the government has some duty to let us know what the results of these cost-benefit studies show. It is obvious there is some work going on but the minister has completely omitted to tell us about it.

Further on in this article in the Gazette we read:

Murray, who heads the board's working committee, said there can be no policy recommendations to the transport minister until the board sees the conclusion of 20 studies it has commissioned covering such areas as international agreements, labour, shipping rates and shipping in the Arctic.

These studies are being carried on through an agency of the federal government yet we know nothing about what they tell us.

It really gives one cause for concern when knowledgeable people within the industry draw attention to these things. For example, Michael Bell, senior vice-president of Federal Commerce and Navigation Limited, has stated that Canadian registered ships can only be profitable in areas in which they have a special advantage which offsets high Canadian labour costs. One such area would be the operation of bulk carriers and tankers especially designed to operate in the Canadian Arctic.

I would call attention to the following paragraph in the article from which I have already quoted:

Bell estimated that a blanket policy of using Canadian ships for Canadian trade would drive up shipping costs by as much as $400 million requiring an annual government subsidy of that amount if rates for users were to remain unchanged.

Is it any wonder, when such views are expressed by people with more knowledge of the marine industry than I have, that any objective member on the opposition side would ask to see the conclusions of these cost-benefit studies which are presently being undertaken, or that the government should be urged at least to deal candidly with the taxpayers? In the absence of subsidies, shipping rates are bound to go up and those living in the extreme east and west of our country will be faced with costs which are even higher by comparison with those borne by central Canada.

I realize there are many others who wish to speak in this debate. There are many other aspects with which I should like to deal but I shall make no attempt to cover them all. I might point out that the concern I feel with respect to this bill is widely shared.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte earlier read into the record certain parts of the communiqué issued by the Atlantic premiers. I should like to read now a telegram dated May 26, 1976, again a little over a month ago, and addressed to the Minister of Transport. It was sent by the Chairman of the Council of Maritime Premiers, Premier A. B. Campbell of Prince Edward Island. Incidentally Premier Campbell is a great friend of mine—we went to law school at the same time—though he and I do not wear the same political stripe. I believe the parliamentary secretary was asked about the situation outlined here but I am not sure whether he gave a full answer as to whether there had been any meaningful consultation with the Atlantic premiers since their meeting. The telegram reads:

Further to our telex to you of December 16, 1975, and other representations made to you and your predecessor, we are still deeply concerned about Bill C-61. Recent representations from industry have heightened this concern, giving it a new dimension.

In view of this, we now urge you to take action which will retain for Atlantic industries their access to non-Canadian vessels for the coasting trade without serious impediment in the form of the necessity for either expensive or difficult-to-obtain waivers, licences or permits. Availability of suitable vessels and their cost should be the criteria for the selection of carriers, with the decision resting with the shipper.

Existing industry and future industrial development in the Atlantic provinces will be seriously affected if this bill, and those regulations of which we have been made aware to date, come into effect. This legislation would tend to transform the Atlantic provinces into inland provinces insofar as coastal shipping is concerned without their concomitant advantages. High transportation cost to and from markets is already one of the most serious obstacles restricting growth in this region. By restricting competition, Bill C-61 will increase these costs for water, rail or truck.

We urge you to withdraw or change this legislation as it pertains to coastal shipping and to permit the use of non-Canadian vessels according to the dictates of availability and cost, thereby enabling our industries to benefit from one of this region's natural advantages.

That is signed by the three Atlantic premiers, two of whom happen to be Liberal premiers. Political stripe means nothing when something as fundamental as Bill C-61, the maritime code bill, is going through the House, a measure which is bound to affect Atlantic interests so directly. Those of us who come from Atlantic Canada, together with members from west coast constituencies who are familiar with marine traffic, are obviously among the most vociferous in expressing concern.

As I drove to parliament Hill tonight, knowing there might be a chance of speaking on Bill C-61, I found it whimsical to reflect that the last time Canada had a merchant marine was way back in the days of sail, if one excludes the Canadian National Steamship boats which plied the Atlantic coast just before they were stopped during the second world war. And here in this Chamber are members from the Atlantic coast and the west coast who have lived with the sea and who want a merchant marine. They are also well aware that at least in the days of sail—and I could get very rhapsodic and philosophical about all the little Newfoundland ports we come from, and the ports along my own coastline of the Annapolis Valley—these places were viable communities some 50 years ago. I know you cannot turn back the clock; the days of sail pass into the days of steam and the days of steam pass into the days of nuclear energy, I guess. The fact that this bill ignores is that the reason there was a vibrant Canadian merchant marine in the days of sail was that there was competition between the ports of Atlantic Canada and between the skippers in those ports.

● (2130)

I will now conclude since my illustrious colleague, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), is usually renowned for his brevity and conciseness and I want to exhibit those same qualities and let others speak. However, having had for the first time the opportunity to speak on Bill C-61, I cannot emphasize enough that unless changes are made to preserve the cost situation and provide access to other bottoms so there can be meaningful competition, be it on the east coast or in the central part of this beautiful land, the maritime industry will be done a disservice. As I have said, the bureaucrats here in Ottawa really do not know the sea, so I hope they will come down to the sea to see for themselves.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague who has just resumed his seat, this is the first opportunity that I have had of speaking in this debate. I was afraid that I was not going to get the opportunity to speak tonight, but since I do have a few minutes I should like to make some comments on the bill now before the House.

In concert with many of my colleagues I regret the fact that Bill C-61 has been brought forward again at this time. As stated by several hon. members, not only this House but the nation as a whole had the understanding that this bill would not be brought forward for third reading until the fall. Some of the individuals and organizations interested in the bill were instituting studies into various aspects of the legislation the results of which, I believe, would bring about a much better measure than that before the House at the present time.

I think the action of the government House leader has again raised the question of the credibility of the government and of the dependability of the assurances and promises that have been given. We have had quite a discussion today about the assurances or guarantees given by the government, or which the government is willing to give regarding various measures, but I wish there were some basis upon which we could accept those assurances. Certainly a study of past statements that have been made would not give one much hope that those assurances would be carried out.

I should like to refer, first of all, to a matter regarding which concern was expressed in earlier debates in this House. I refer to the change in location of the registry office. I realize that there have been some accommodations reached in this particular connection, but I believe that the policy in operation up until the present time is still the best one and that we should stand by that policy.

I think the government would be inconsistent in closing down the registry office and reducing its effectiveness by moving it to the city of Ottawa. This point was dealt with on second reading quite eloquently by my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). I believe my colleague from Grenville-Carleton also dwelt on that topic.

The government has made much of its policy to decentralize its departments and to bring government closer to the people. I understand too that a very large part of this decentralization is for the purpose of dealing with chronic unemployment areas. In this regard two or three announcements have been made. One was in connection with a certain branch of the Department of Supply and Services, and another was brought to light a few days ago when certain agencies were moved to the city of Moncton, New Brunswick. I am not raising any objection to those moves; I am just pointing out an inconsistency in government policy.

On the one hand the government is decentralizing, moving certain government operations to the regions to encourage employment and to bring government closer to the people. On the other hand the government is moving an operation that has been highly satisfactory from the west coast to Ottawa, a distance of 3,000 miles, expecting it to give the same service to the people that it gave on the west coast. I say the government is not being consistent and I think this policy will result in a lower standard of service for the people on the west coast.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the Vancouver shipping registry office is the largest in Canada with more than 10,000 ships on file.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the parliamentary secretary rising for the purpose of asking a question, or on a point or order?

Mr. Goodale: To ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

