The nature and extent of the power assigned to Parliament in the field of criminal law was not considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council until 1903, when the case of Attorney General for Ontario v. Hamilton Street Railway (1903) A.C. 524, was considered by that body, which of course was then the ultimate tribunal in that field. What was under consideration was the validity of an Ontario statute entitled "An Act to prevent the profanation of the Lord's Day". In holding the provincial statute ultra vires, Lord Halsbury said, at page 529:

> The reservation of the criminal law for the Dominion of Canada is given in clear and intelligible words which must be construed according to their natural and ordinary signification ... It is, therefore, the criminal law in its widest sense that is reserved ...

There were, prior to 1931, a number of cases, which I do not consider it necessary to cite, which appeared to restrict the meaning of "Criminal Law". However, in the case of Proprietary Articles Trade Association v. Attorney General for Canada (1931), A.C. 310, the validity of the Combines Investigation Act was in dispute. The act was upheld as being in the domain of "Criminal Law", and it has been said by Mr. F. P. Varcoe, the former Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General for Canada, at page 116 of his excellent work Legislative Power in Canada:

> This judgment is perhaps the most important rendered by the Judicial Committee on the subject of criminal law.

In the case cited, Lord Atkin said, at pages 324-4:

> If Parliament genuinely determines that commercial activities which can be so described are to be suppressed in the public interest, their Lordships see no reason why Parliament should not make them crimes. "Criminal law" means "the criminal law in its widest sense": A.-G. for Ontario v. Hamilton Street Railway Company, (1903) A.C. 524. It certainly is not confined to what was criminal by the law of England or of any province in 1867. The power must extend to legislation to make new crimes. Criminal law connotes only the quality of such acts or omissions as are prohibited under appropriate penal provisions by authority of the state. The criminal quality of an act cannot be discerned by intuition; nor can it be discovered by reference to any standard but one: Is the act prohibited with penal consequences? Morality and criminality are far from co-extensive; nor is the sphere of criminality necessarily part of a more extensive field covered by morality —unless the moral code necessarily disapproves all acts prohibited by the state, in which case the argument moves in a circle. It appears to their Lordships to be of little value to seek to confine crimes to a category of acts which by their very nature belong to the domain of "criminal jurisprudence"; for the domain of criminal jurisprudence can only be ascertained by examining what acts at any particular period are declared by the state to be crimes, and the only common nature they will be found to possess is that they are prohibited by the state and that those who commit them are punished. Their Lordships agree with the view expressed in the judgment of Newcombe, J., (1929) S.C.R. 409, 422, that the passage in the judgment of the Board in the Board of Commerce case, (1922) 1 A.C. 191 at 198-199, to which allusion has been made, was not intended as a definition. In that case their Lordships appear to have been contrasting two matters —one obviously within the line, the other obviously outside it. For this purpose it was clearly legitimate to point to matters which are such serious breaches of any accepted code of morality as to be obviously crimes when they are prohibited under penalties. The contrast is with matters which are merely attempts to interfere with provincial rights, and are sought to be justified under the head of "Criminal law" colourably and merely in aid of what is in substance an encroachment.

Since the Supreme Court of Canada acquired utlimate jurisdiction in criminal matters, it has had occasion, and very recently, to consider the meaning of "Criminal Law" as used in the British North America Act. I refer, of course, to the famous "Padlock Law" case, namely: "Switzman v. Elbling and Attorney-General of Quebec", decided in 1957. In that case, all of the judges, saving only Mr. Justice Taschereau, held that the Padlock Law—technically the Communistic Propaganda Act, R.S.C. 1941, c.52—was beyond the power of the province of Quebec to enact because it was legislation in relation to criminal law.

Moreover, honourable senators, it is my submission that the whole of the bill is valid under the general heading of "Criminal law".

Clause 3 of the bill provides for an offence punishable on summary conviction which carries with it a comparatively small penalty, namely, by section 694 of the Criminal Code of Canada, a fine of $500, or imprisonment for six months, or both. However, clause 4 of the bill also provides a penalty in the nature of the forfeiture provisions which are found throughout the Criminal Code. That is to say, any person who carries on the business of extending credit and furnishes credit to any other person, without fair disclosure, is not, under this bill, entitled to recover any of the finance charges if these have not been disclosed in their entirety.

The bill before the house, therefore, goes further than any of the federal or provincial measures now on the statute books. The person victimized does not have to sue, or even lay a charge. He may, and should be able to, if adequate publicity is given to this bill, simply refuse to pay the finance charges. Therefore, there is in this bill a built-in antenna, or a form of automatic protection, which knowledge alone is sufficient to invoke.

I should add that it was not the intention of clause 4 that the person receiving credit should not repay the outstanding principal obligation or unpaid balance in the event of non-disclosure. I personally agree with the interpretation placed upon this clause by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) rather than on the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt). However, should there be any doubt in anyone's mind as to what is intended, the matter may be easily rendered beyond doubt in committee.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Will the honourable gentleman permit a question? If the borrower refuses to pay, he would be sued, I take it, in a civil court. I presume that he would defend the action and that the federal authorities would have notice of the case and would lay a charge. Would the borrower then not have to give evidence, and is that not the only way by which the federal authorities could get hold of the case?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I think the honourable gentleman is right. I agree with that.

I could extend my remarks in this regard. However, it seems to me that, as the eminent judges whom I quoted have said, criminal law as used in our constituting statute bears a meaning broad in its scope. We are living in a highly complex and industrial society, which is characterized, perhaps in particular, by the extension of credit. Credit is not in itself a bad thing, but the abuse of credit, by those extending it as a business matter, by the non-disclosure of the substantial amounts which the person receiving the credit will be required to pay, is in my opinion, as I have said before, an extremely bad thing. We are not living in the horse-and-buggy days or in the days when horse stealing was a capital offence. Time marches on. Lord Atkin wisely said:

> That which is criminal, or that which may properly be declared criminal by the appropriate body, must obviously vary with the times.

I suggest to honourable senators that when we deal with the extension of credit today, we will be dealing with something that is vital and important. It is the most important single factor in our economy. We cannot turn back the clock, or if we can we should not. Moreover, if the essence of criminal law is legislating against evil we should, in my opinion, legislate against current evils which affect adversely large numbers of our people. I commend to the consideration of this honourable house, particularly in view not only of the classic statements which I have quoted but of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, the proposition that this legislation is properly in the nature of criminal law and thus within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada.

There is such a thing as commercial criminality recognized by our laws.

If there is still some doubt as to the constitutionality of this bill—there is none in my mind—then we can take a look at the bill as having to do with interest, which, too, is within the prerogative of the federal Parliament. I have already indicated that Parliament is given this prerogative by section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, subsection 19.

The matter came before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons in 1938, when that committee was making a study of a bill intituled "An Act respecting interest on small loans". Mr. F. P. Varcoe, Q.C., then Deputy Minister of the Department of Justice, was asked to give an opinion on its constitutionality, which he did. It appears on page 421 of the Report respecting Small Loan Companies, No. 14 of the proceedings of that committee, dated Wednesday, June 1, 1938.

In order that there may be continuity, I ask that Mr. Varcoe's opinion be printed in Hansard. I will make comments on it as I go along, if the house will grant permission.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Note: The document presented by Hon. Mr. Croll reads:

With a view of determining the matter of jurisdiction, the committee asked for an expression of opinion from the Department of Justice and were advised by Mr. F. P. Varcoe, K.C., as follows:—

First: That a project for the regulation of money lenders which would fall short of complete control would probably be inadequate and almost useless.

Secondly: That the department concluded to advise the committee as to the powers of Parliament by reference to a feasible project as follows:—

No sum in excess of X per cent of the principal sum loaned shall be exacted from the borrower as:—

1. Interest, that is to say, compensation for the use of money and for the risk of its total or partial loss; and

2. Service charges, whether genuine or interest disguised as such; and

3. Disbursements, real or fictitious; and any sum exacted in excess of such per cent shall be deemed oppressive and usurious, exposing the lender to criminal proceedings and invalidating the contract.

Furthermore, if the lender requires the borrower to make any expenditure—that is, imposes an obligation on the borrower to obtain a chattel mortgage, let us say, or make any expenditure to a third person—in connection with the loan as a result of which the cost of the loan exceeds the aforesaid X per cent, the lender shall likewise be guilty of an offence and the contract invalidated.

Dealing with items of charge mentioned in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, viz, interest, charges and disbursements of the lender, the projected provisions are justifiable constitutionally, first, as being legislation in relation to interest, or as being indispensably or reasonably ancillary to interest legislation.

The differentiation between true interest charges and service charges is so difficult (they are in many cases probably indistinguishable) and the possibility of disguising interest as other charges is so great that it becomes indispensably or reasonably necessary to regulate or fix these charges in order to make good the interest restriction and there appears to be no reason why the ancillary doctrine may not be relied on notwithstanding that the restriction of the rate of interest and the ancillary restriction of the service charges are contained in one and the same restrictive regulation.

Further, the principal ingredients in the gross sum charged the borrower is interest and if Parliament fixes a maximum gross charge, it must be presumed that if the sum is exceeded an excessive interest charge is being made; therefore, the fixing of a gross maximum charge constitutes a limitation of the rate of interest.

The imposition of a gross maximum charge would have this effect, that in each case the interest ingredient therein would be fixed by reference to the other ingredients. It is arguable that by this means there would be a fixing of the interest charged in each case.

Then again, it is to be borne in mind that interest is not only compensation for the use of money but also compensation for accepting the risk of loss. The service charges, for example chattel mortgage expenses, are, theoretically at any rate, made to protect the lender against loss.

Parliament, therefore, in restricting certain of the charges which the lender can make against the borrower is limiting the compensation for accepting the risk of loss and so is legislating in relation to interest or at the worst is enacting legislation necessarily ancillary to interest legislation.

It is noteworthy in this connection that, in England, Parliament, when legislating respecting loan societies and money lenders, found it necessary to prohibit the making of charges for expenses (Money Lenders Act, 1927, s. 12, and Loan Societies Act, 1840, s. 23), and in the Money Lenders Act of 1900, excessive interest charges and excessive expenses were treated as equivalent grounds for setting the contract aside.

Secondly, the projected legislation already referred to may be justified as being in relation to criminal law. The charging of an amount in excess of a maximum gross might be regarded as oppressive and usurious.

Thirdly, there is the power to regulate trade and commerce. The lending by money lenders of money at interest is a business which falls in the dominion field of regulation. The combined effect of the assignment of the subject of the regulation of trade and commerce and the assignment of the subject of interest to Parliament would seem to enable Parliament to deal with all the activities of money lenders.

This analysis leaves to be considered expenditures made by the borrower on the demand or requisition of the lender, e.g., legal fees for chattel mortgages, etc. If the lender imposes an obligation or requirements on the borrower to make an expenditure which raises the cost of the loan to a point in excess of the maximum gross fixed, the result, it would seem, is indistinguishable from the case where the lender himself makes the expenditure and claims to be reimbursed. After full consideration, it would appear that, for the reasons mentioned in connection with direct charges by the lender, Parliament has the power to fix the maximum gross cost of the loan including expenditures by the borrower on demand of the lender.

If the views expressed are correct there would seem to be no doubt that the money lenders might be required by Parliament to be licensed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) referred to this opinion and purported to read it. He did read from the opinion, but he inadvertently omitted to read all of it. He read the paragraphs which appear on pages 660 and 661 of Hansard of May 24, but then he inadvertently skipped two middle paragraphs which are the very essence and go to the heart of the constitutionality of the bill. Now I will read them. Here are the paragraphs which my honourable friend omitted to read after the word "contract" at the top of page 661:

> Furthermore, if the lender requires the borrower to make any expenditure—that is, imposes an obligation on the borrower to obtain a chattel mortgage, let us say, or make any expenditure to a third person—in connection with the loan as a result of which the cost of the loan exceeds the aforesaid X per cent, the lender shall likewise be guilty of an offence and the contract invalidated.

Now, listen to these words:

> Dealing with items of charge mentioned in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, viz, interest, charges and disbursements of the lender, the projected provisions are justifiable constitutionally, first, as being legislation in relation to interest, or as being indispensably or reasonably ancillary to interest legislation.

That is the opinion of Mr. Varcoe, given in 1938.

The whole principle of the Small Loans Act, which has been one of the most helpful and best administered federal statutes, is based entirely on the "cost" of a loan. The "cost" of a loan is defined in paragraph (a) of section 2 of that act, chapter 251 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

> 2. In this act,
>
> (a) "cost" of a loan means the whole of the cost of the loan to the borrower whether the same is called interest or is claimed as discount, deduction from an advance, commission, brokerage, chattel mortgage and recording fees, fines, penalties or charges for inquiries, defaults or renewals or otherwise, and whether paid to or charged by the lender or paid to or charged by any other person, and whether fixed and determined by the loan contract itself, or in whole or in part by any other collateral contract or document by which the charges, if any, imposed under the loan contract or the terms of the repayment of the loan are effectively varied.

The Small Loans Act of course goes much further than this legislation in its somewhat narrower field. Administrative control and control over licensing of federal lending agencies in the small loans field is provided for in the act, and the basis for all this is the "cost" of a loan as defined above. It appears quite obvious to me that to impugn the validity of the Disclosure Bill now before the house is to attack the very vitals of the Small Loans Act. I am not impugning the validity of the Small Loans Act directly, nor by establishing the validity of the proposed legislation on the ground of interest am I doing so indirectly. I believe in the validity of both pieces of legislation.

I have dealt at some length with the constitutionality of the measure now before the house. I have done so because, in my view, the principal assaults that have been launched against the bill have been of a constitutional character.

I have heard no serious attack on the merits of the bill, although I must say in frankness that a considerable number of red herrings have been drawn across the trail.

Having established, as I believe I have, the legality of this bill, I now propose to deal, not particularly with those red herrings, which must have disintegrated in the light of the discussion, but with the impact of the measure upon the provincial and federal legislation presently existing.

May I first deal with the provincial legislation, which has been referred to by the honourable gentleman from Toronto and others. In my view, such of the bills as have been mentioned deal in a considerable measure with the matter of interest, a subject-matter assigned exclusively to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. Moreover, when I hear reference to "unconscionable" practices, I merely wonder how unconscionable a thing can be before it becomes criminal in character. Froude has wisely said:

> Crime is not punished as an offence against God, but as prejudicial to society.

However, I am not here to impugn the validity of any provincial legislation which seeks to achieve a good object.

All I am prepared to say is, this matter of non-disclosure of finance charges should not be dealt with in a parochial or piecemeal fashion. The problem, in my humble submission, is a national problem which is as fraught with danger in Newfoundland as it is in Vancouver Island and, of course, at all intermediate points.

In the old days, when a bargain was made about a horse—then essential to civilization—the bargain was clearly understood or somebody would suffer in one way or another. Our civilization today, and I say this at the risk of repetition, is largely dependent, not upon the horse, but upon the extension of credit. Let us be as zealous of safeguarding people against any abuses which may attend upon the extension of credit as our forefathers were in protecting society against horse thieves.

I say again that the problem is national and must be dealt with in a national and uniform way. I say further, that the proposed bill, although I am not wedded irrevocably to its precise language, is fully constitutional under the headings of "Criminal Law" and "Interest". However, it has been drawn to our attention that there is some fragmentary federal legislation dealing with the matter of disclosure. It has also been drawn to our attention that there may be some financial institutions, federally regulated, which should be absolved from any further responsibility in the matter of disclosing finance charges. If this is so—and I must emphasize that in dealing with this bill we are dealing with the extension of credit only—let the matter be discussed in committee, where we will have available to us the best talent and the fullest information to enable us to adjudicate the matter properly.

I make no apology for commending this bill to the favourable consideration of this honourable body. It is a bill which I am convinced is right in principle and which is constitutionally within the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. I am not going into the minor details or minor modifications, but I am satisfied, as I am sure all honourable senators are satisfied, that this bill, if it is given the second reading, will receive the careful attention of one of the most competent committees in the British parliamentary system, namely, the Standing Committee of the Senate on Banking and Commerce. If modifications there should be, let them be done there.

On the other hand, again at the risk of some repetition, the question before this house now is not on the matter of details or modifications, but on a question of principle, and an important question of principle. I hope and trust that all honourable senators will consider this question of principle and reach a decision on whether or not to vote for this measure on the principle itself.

It may be that some honourable senators will think that this bill should properly be in the form of an amendment to existing legislation, such as the Interest Act or the Small Loans Act. I think myself that, dealing as it does with specific problems not yet dealt with nationally, it should stand of itself. This problem too may be worthy of consideration in committee.

Honourable senators, I have only two further observations to make.

In the first place, this is not a partisan bill. It is a bill which I have introduced personally, seconded by the Honourable Senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I have noticed that during the debate there has been some support indicated from both sides of the house and that some measure of disagreement has been evinced by both sides also. I do not believe that this proposal should become a partisan matter in any way, and I hope indeed that, if there is a division, the house will not divide along party lines.

My second observation is this: I do not feel that it would be in the interests of this honourable body to be regarded as being primarily interested in "big money" or even "big business". The Senate must act, as it has usually acted, in the interests of the people of Canada as a whole. We must never forget the individual—the little man or woman who is victimized. On the contrary, we must regard their interests to be of paramount importance.

I hope, as I say, that this measure will be agreed to in principle and that the fullest possible consideration may then be given to its precise terms and, if you will, to its constitutionality, in the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to which, if the bill gets second reading, I shall move that it be referred.

Honourable senators, I ask for your endorsation of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John G. Higgins moved the second reading of Bill C-70, respecting the International Development Association.

He said: Honourable senators, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was established at the end of the 1939-45 war by a number of countries whose names are set out in Schedule A to the bill now before us. The main purpose of the bank is to assist in the reconstruction and development of territories of member countries by facilitating the investment of capital for productive purposes.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—which I shall henceforth in my remarks refer to as "the bank"—fulfils its purpose mainly through the provision of loans. Since its inception it has made 260 loans, amounting to some $5 billion. In recent years most of the loans made by the bank have been to finance projects in less-developed countries. I have been informed there has been no default in repayment.

All the powers of the bank are vested in the Board of Governors, which consists of one governor and one alternate for each member of the bank. The governor for Canada is the Honourable Mr. Fleming, Minister of Finance, and the alternate is Mr. Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance.

The articles of agreement of the bank call for an annual meeting of the Board of Governors. At the last annual meeting of the board the governors adopted a resolution which was put forward by the United States representatives for the executive of the bank to formulate articles of agreement of an International Development Association for transmission to the member governments of the bank. Pursuant to this resolution the executive directors drafted and approved for transmission to the member governments the articles of agreement of the International Development Association, which are annexed to the bill before us.

The purpose of the bill is to seek parliamentary approval of the articles of agreement which are set forth as a schedule to the bill, and to authorize the Minister of Finance to pay the subscriptions assigned to Canada under the articles of agreement. The Canadian subscription has been set at the Canadian dollar equivalent of $37.83 million in United States funds. This subscription is payable in five annual instalments. The first subscription will amount to $8.7 million, and subsequent instalments are of $7.3 million each.

The purpose of the International Development Association is for more economic development, increased productivity, and raised standards of living in the less-developed areas covered by the association members. It would do this by providing finances to the less-developed areas covered by its membership. The financing will be in the form of loans. The loans will be in terms more flexible and bearing less heavily on the balance of payment in the less-developed areas than the terms of loans obtained through conventional sources, including the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development. The terms under which the loans will be extended are not specified in the articles. They might take various forms. For instance, payment of the principal and interest might be in local currency, or the interest rates might be below current commercial rates, or there might be a long period of grace before payment of principal begins.

Only members of the bank are eligible for membership in the association. The members of the bank, as I have said, are those countries set out in Schedule A of the agreement, at page 23 of the bill. It is hoped that all members of the bank will become members of the association.

The proportionate scale of subscriptions assigned to members is the same as the one used by the bank, and they are set out in Schedule A. The amount paid by each country has been determined by taking into account such factors as population, gross national product, volume of trade, and others.

The payment of contributions is dealt with in article II of the articles of agreement.

Ten per cent of the initial subscription of each member is payable in gold or freely convertible currency. The remaining 90 per cent is payable in gold or convertible currency in the case of members listed in Part I of Schedule A, and in the currency of the subscribing members in the case of members listed in Part II of Schedule A. Total subscriptions will amount to $1 billion, if all members of the bank join the association. The more economically advanced countries, which are listed in Part I of Schedule A, will subscribe $763.07 million, and the less economically advanced countries, listed in Part II, will subscribe $236.93 million.

The International Development Association will be established as an affiliate of the bank. It will have the same board of directors, and the president of the bank shall be the president of the association, and to the extent possible the staff of the bank is to be appointed to serve as the staff of the association. However, it is set out in the bill that the association is a distinct organization and is entirely apart from the bank, except that it will have the same officers.

The association will not commence operation until September 15, 1960 and the articles of agreement will remain open for signature until December 31, 1960. This means that any member of the bank can join the association at any time up to December 31, 1960. The agreement will not come into force until it has been signed by Governments whose subscriptions comprise not less than 65 per cent of the total subscriptions.

The articles of agreement authorize the association to accept supplementary contributions in a currency other than the currency of the country making the supplementary contribution. Thus, a country holding counterpart funds in another country may offer to put these funds at the disposal of the association. In considering such offers, the association will pay due regard to the possibility of effectively using the supplementary contributions, and to their possible inflationary and other undesirable effects.

The articles of agreement also provide that in the procurement of goods and services required for projects which it is financing the association shall give due regard to considerations of competitive international trade. The association will seek to subject the procurement of goods and services to the maximum amount of international competition and, whenever possible, to international competitive bidding. Firms from all member countries, including Canadian firms, will thus have the opportunity to provide the goods and services to be financed by the association.

If honourable senators wish I can give the important sections of the agreement. I might say that the bill, as you will notice, consists of only a little more than one page, and its purpose is to confirm the agreement and to authorize the Minister of Finance to pay the amount allotted to Canada under the terms of the agreement.

On page 3, which is the first page of the agreement, article I sets out the purposes, as follows:

> The purposes of the association are to promote economic development, increase productivity and thus raise standards of living in the less-developed areas of the world included within the association's membership, in particular by providing finance to meet their important developmental requirements on terms which are more flexible and bear less heavily on the balance of payments than those of conventional loans, thereby furthering the developmental objectives of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (hereinafter called "the bank") and supplementing its activities.

Membership is dealt with in article II, and section 1(a) reads as follows:

> The original members of the association shall be those members of the bank listed in Schedule A hereto which, on or before the date specified in article XI, section 2 (c), accept membership in the association.

The date mentioned in section 1(a) is set out on page 21 in article XI, section 2(c) of which reads:

> This agreement shall remain open for signature until the close of business on December 31, 1960, at the principal office of the bank, on behalf of the governments of the states whose names are set forth in Schedule A, provided that, if this agreement shall not have entered into force by that date, the executive directors of the bank may extend the period during which this agreement shall remain open for signature by not more than six months.

Section 1(b) of article II reads:

> Membership shall be open to other members of the bank at such times and in accordance with such terms as the association may determine.

Article III, on page 5, deals with additions to resources; and section 1, dealing with additional subscriptions, reads:

> (a) The association shall at such time as it deems appropriate in the light of the schedule for completion of payments on initial subscriptions of original members, and at intervals of approximately five years thereafter, review the adequacy of its resources and, if it deems desirable, shall authorize a general increase in subscriptions. Notwithstanding the foregoing, general or individual increases in subscriptions may be authorized at any time, provided that an individual increase shall be considered only at the request of the member involved.

Currency is dealt with in article IV.

Article V says:

> The association shall provide financing to further development in the less-developed areas of the world included within the association's membership.

On page 9, and still in article V, there is a reference to competitive arrangements:

> The association shall make arrangements to ensure that the proceeds of any financing are used only for the purposes for which the financing was provided, with due attention to considerations of economy, efficiency and competitive international trade and without regard to political or other non-economic influences or considerations.

On page 10, under article VI, "Organization and Management", section 1 reads:

> The association shall have a board of governors, executive directors, a president and such other officers and staff to perform such duties as the association may determine.

Section 2 reads:

> All the powers of the association shall be vested in the board of governors.

And then it sets out that each governor and alternate governor of the bank shall also be a governor and alternate governor of this association.

On page 12, section 4 of article VI deals with executive directors. Paragraph (b) of section 4 reads:

The executive directors of the association shall be composed ex officio of each executive director of the bank who shall have been (i) appointed by a member of the bank which is also a member of the association, or (ii) elected in an election in which the votes of at least one member of the bank which is also a member of the association shall have counted toward his election.

Paragraph (a) of section 4 says:

The executive directors shall be responsible for the conduct of the general operations of the association, and for this purpose shall exercise all the powers given to them by this agreement or delegated to them by the board of governors.

The board of governors meets only once a year and decides on various matters, and its work is done by the executive directors in the interval.

Section 3 of article VI, on page 12 of the bill, deals with voting. It provides:

(a) Each original member shall, in respect of its initial subscription, have 500 votes plus one additional vote for each $5,000 of its initial subscription.

Article VII deals with withdrawal, suspension of membership, and suspension of operations. Section 1 of this article deals with withdrawal by members. It reads:

Any member may withdraw from membership in the association at any time by transmitting a notice in writing to the association at its principal office. Withdrawal shall become effective upon the date such notice is received.

Honourable senators, I would again like to draw your attention to Schedule A on page 23 of the bill. You will notice that under Part I of this schedule the more economically advanced countries are listed, while under Part II the less-developed countries are listed. You will observe that the initial subscriptions on the part of the more economically advanced countries total $763.07 million, of which the United States contributes $320.29 million, the United Kingdom $131.14 million, the Netherlands $27.74 million, Japan $33.59 million, France $52.96 million, and so on.

The countries listed in both Part I and Part II of Schedule A form the countries which make up the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and, as I said, it is hoped that these countries will also form the International Development Association. Any of these countries can join the association before December 31, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: I would like to inquire whether the amounts to be initially subscribed by the various countries as listed in Part I and Part II of Schedule A were agreed upon by the countries.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Those are the amounts that have already been paid to the International Bank. The same proportionate scale is to be followed by this new association. The contributions are to be made on a proportionate basis.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Is there any relationship between this association and the International Finance Corporation, with respect to the payment of money for the protection of industry? Canada has subscribed several millions of dollars through that source.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: The International Bank gives loans at the usual rate of interest and under certain terms which probably would be impossible for the under-developed countries to meet. This association has been formed for the purpose of helping out these underdeveloped countries which cannot afford to pay in United States or Canadian currency but whose own currency would be accepted.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Is the money to be paid directly to the industries in those underdeveloped countries or through their governments?

Hon. Mr. Reid: We can get that information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: If my honourable friend had given me short notice I would have been able to give him the answer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is in the agreement.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Paragraph (c) of section 1 of article V of the bill reads:

The association shall not provide financing if in its opinion such financing is available from private sources on terms which are reasonable for the recipient or could be provided by a loan of the type made by the bank.

Paragraph (d) of the same section reads:

The association shall not provide financing except upon the recommendation of a competent committee, made after a careful study of the merits of the proposal. Each such committee shall be appointed by the association and shall include a nominee of the governor or governors representing the member or members in whose territories the project under consideration is located and one or more members of the technical staff of the association.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I believe the question of the honourable gentleman from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) is answered by subsections (c) and (d) of article V on page 9, where it is provided:

(c) The association may provide financing to a member, the Government of a territory included within the association's membership, a political subdivision of any of the foregoing, a public or private entity in the territories of a member or members, or to a public international or regional organization.

(d) In the case of a loan to an entity other than a member, the association may, in its discretion, require a suitable governmental or other guarantee or guarantees.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I wish to thank the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) for providing that information. I was looking for it and would have found it eventually, but in doing so I might have read too many paragraphs, to the boredom of honourable members.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I just happened to strike the reference before my honourable friend did.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all in favour of this bill, for the reason that its purposes are laudable. The honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), referring to article I of the agreement, said that the purposes of the association are to promote economic development, increase productivity and thus raise standards of living in the less-developed areas of the world.

We all support any project which will accomplish what this agreement endeavours to do. I understand that the idea of this association originated in the United States of America. Today, when we hear so much criticism about that country, which I personally feel is not at all warranted, it is very refreshing to have a bill presented to this house with these worthy objects in mind, the idea of which originated in the United States.

Honourable senators, I am in agreement with this bill and I hope that it will receive second reading and be sent to committee. I understand that a gentleman by the name of Mr. L. Rasminsky has a fund of knowledge as to what is being done in these underdeveloped countries, and I think it would be most interesting to have him give us information on this matter in committee.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have just one comment to make and one question to ask. To my mind it is very interesting to see the list of member countries which have undertaken to become associated with the International Development Association. The list includes two members of the communist bloc. If honourable members will look at page 23 of the bill they will see that one of the countries becoming a party to this agreement is China—

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Is that not Nationalist China?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: —which has undertaken to provide $30 million. Another country, Yugoslavia, has undertaken to provide $4 million. So in a sense this is an international agreement which cuts across the Iron Curtain. I think everyone agrees that this is an admirable thing. The more we can get the countries of the world to work together for mutually profitable interests, regardless of particular political affiliations, the better it will be.

The question I wish to ask, and perhaps my honourable friend from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) can answer it, arises out of section 1 of article XI. I am not sure whether he referred to it, but it provides that the agreement shall come into force when it has been signed on behalf of Governments whose subscriptions comprise not less than 65 per cent of the total subscriptions set forth in Schedule A. I wonder if he could tell us how many Governments have become parties to this agreement so far. How far have they got toward the 65 per cent which is necessary before the agreement becomes effective at all?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I am afraid I have not the slightest idea. I am sorry, I did not think of that question arising.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Can we not get that in committee?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I suppose so.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Higgins moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it occurs to me that this is a bill of the type which should go to the Committee on External Relations. We had a splendid meeting of that committee this morning under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am wondering if that is feasible. There are five or six bills going to the Banking and Commerce Committee, which probably will have to sit more than one day a week to deal with them. However, if it is possible to have the bill dealt with by the Committee on External Relations, I am agreeable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If that were done it would lighten the load of the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is a financial bill of considerable proportions, and it seems to me that it should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hugessen, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

RAILWAY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 15, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine for the second reading of Bill C-61, to amend an act to amend the Railway Act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to provide funds for ensuring the safety of the public at grade separations and level crossings, and also for protecting the public at level crossings when freight cars are on the tracks and blocking the highway. I will not go into the last feature of the bill. That feature was discussed when the bill was before the house the other day, and I understood that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) was to get additional information, which no doubt he will give to the house when he closes the debate.

In connection with grade crossings, the bill provides that where there is at the present time automatic protection, such as flashing lights, gates, et cetera, the grade crossing fund will provide 80 per cent of the cost, the railway 7½ per cent, and the municipality or the province 12½ per cent. The 80 per cent of course, is fixed by this bill, but the balance of 20 per cent is apportioned by the Board of Transport Commissioners. For new installations—where there is at present no protection—no definite percentage has yet been fixed by the board, but for equipment placed at crossings on which there has been no previous protection the railway is usually called upon to pay 5 per cent of the cost, and the highway authority pays 15 per cent.

Honourable senators, I have said that this bill is to protect the public at these crossings, and I think we are all in accord with any provision which is made to protect lives and property at railway crossings. The act was passed when the former Government was in office. That is only one reason why I support it. It was good legislation, as is evident from the fact that it is being carried on by the present administration. The act was passed in 1955.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought it went back to 1909.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The original act was passed in 1909?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, and it has been amended about eight or ten times since then.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I thank my honourable friend for reminding me that the measure was passed by a Liberal administration under the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1909. That does not detract from the legislation in any way.

I am sure honourable senators will be interested to have some figures on accidents at railway level crossings over the years. In 1949 there were 2,290,000 motor vehicles registered in Canada. The number registered in 1959, last year, was 4,719,474. Honourable senators will therefore see that there are now over twice as many motor vehicles in Canada as there were in 1949. What was the accident toll during those years? Railway crossing accidents in 1949 were 441. In 1959 there were 546, or just 105 more, notwithstanding the great increase in the number of vehicles on the road. The number of persons killed in these accidents in 1949 was 138; in 1959, it was 185, or only 47 more killed than in 1949, when there were less than half as many vehicles on the road. Persons injured at railway crossings in 1949 numbered 589; in 1959, 717, or only 128 more than in 1949.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is a pretty good record.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is an excellent record, and no doubt the reason for it, to some extent, is that these crossings have been protected. I think the money that has been spent over the years has indeed been well spent if it has resulted in saving lives and preventing accidents, as would appear from the figures I have quoted. However, honourable senators, in a great many instances it does seem that there has to be at least one fatal accident, and often two, before anything is done about a dangerous crossing. I am not unreasonable, and I know that all the level crossings throughout the country cannot be improved in a few months or a few years. But when there has been a fatal accident at a level crossing you would think then that some protective measure would be provided. We were all shocked two or three weeks ago to read that a father of 16 children had been killed at a level crossing a short distance out of Kingston, Ontario. That crossing was on a provincial highway, and provincial highways are always important roads for traffic. The accident occurred at 5.30 in the morning. The train which killed this man, who was driving an automobile, was being hauled by three diesel locomotives and was travelling at 55 miles an hour over that highway crossing on a provincial highway. The finding of the jury which investigated the fatality was that the crossing had no wigwags or other protection. That was bad enough, but listen to this: the visibility was poor. I do not know how long it will be before some protection is put up at that highway crossing where there is now no wigwag and where the visibility is poor.

A few days later we read that a man had been killed at Strathroy, Ontario, at the same level crossing where a woman had been killed four months previously. The coroner's jury which investigated the cause of her death recommended the installation of certain equipment for protection of the public at that crossing, but nothing was done. So in some instances at least two fatal accidents have to occur before necessary action is taken.

Honourable senators, I am not unreasonable about these things, but I do feel that where it is known that a crossing is dangerous every effort should be made to protect people using the crossing. The department or the railways—whoever is responsible—should take the necessary action.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Is not the installation of wigwags or other protection at a level crossing in a municipality the responsibility of the municipality? Or does the federal Government go in and say that protective equipment must be installed without regard to whether the municipality or the province will pay a share of the cost?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know. But here is a crossing where there have been at least two fatal accidents. I say that where there has been one accident some authority should step in and see that protection is provided, and surely at a crossing where two accidents have occurred something definite should be done. But it seems that nobody cares about it. The railways, I am sure, care, and the municipalities and the provinces should care. I sometimes feel there is so much being done that those who are doing it say: "Let us finish one job first. We know that a certain crossing is dangerous, but we are working on this now and want to complete it before beginning another job." I say that where there has been one accident, and more especially where there have been two, there is no excuse for something not being done.

Hon. Mr. Blois: Has the honourable senator any figures to show the number of accidents that have occurred at unprotected crossings as compared with those having some form of protection? I think it will be found that more accidents have occurred at protected crossings than at unprotected crossings, but I am not suggesting that the latter should not be protected.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The figures that I have given are for all crossings.

Hon. Mr. Blois: You do not have them separately?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, not separately.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, by speaking now I will close the debate on second reading.

I think I should as briefly as possible answer certain questions which were put to me when I moved second reading of the bill and dealt with its provisions. One of these questions was with regard to reflective markings on railway cars. I got in touch with the Board of Transport Commissioners as soon as possible and I received information which I think will explain the bill and the objects of the legislation a little more in detail.

As to reflective markings on railway cars, the board issued two judgments following a public hearing. The first judgment, dated May 1, 1959, contains the following paragraph:

> Parliament has made money available to help defray the cost of placing the markings on railway cars, and it is the considered view of the board that a start should be made in so doing as soon as is reasonably practicable. The board believes, however, that it is advisable not to attempt or require too much at the start and to have the benefit of actual experience in the use of such markings on railway cars for two or three years before determining what the longer term programme should be. We believe that it will be practicable and useful, and well worth the necessary expenditure of money, to have the markings placed on all new box cars received by the railways during this year and next year and also on approximately the equivalent number of other box cars during the same period while such cars are in for shopping. This will make possible the study of, and experimentation with different types of reflective materials and patterns and colours under varying operating conditions, and the effect of weather, speed, dust, etc. on the markings; and ascertainment of actual cost of markings and maintenance. We consider that this will be much more helpful to the board and railways than study and tests involving only a very limited number of cars, and the cost will not be excessive.

Pursuant to that judgment, the Canadian Pacific Railway marked approximately 3,000 cars last year and the Canadian National marked approximately 770.

On February 5, 1960, the board issued a supplemental judgment which requires the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific to each mark at least 3,000 cars this year. The markings consist of a number of "Scotchlite" or other reflective discs attached along the sides of the cars.

The board has not decided what future program will be ordered. It will depend somewhat on experience gained with the present markings: how they stand up to wear and tear, whether they stay clean under operating conditions of snow, dust, etc., their reflective qualities, cost of maintenance, etc.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Were there any accidents such as automobile collisions with freight cars that had already been marked? Is there any information as to the beneficial effect or otherwise of the markings on the cars up to now?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not the information it did not occur to me to ask that question.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is important.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I can get the information and have it available if the bill should go to committee. I do not think a similar bill went to committee in 1958, and if the present bill is not referred to committee I will place the information on the record on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is important to know what the experience has been.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In answer to the question as to the number of box cars in circulation, my information is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has approximately 88,500 freight cars, of which 60 per cent are box cars, and the Canadian National Railways have about 106,000 freight cars, of which 65 per cent are box cars.

A question was asked with respect to United States railway cars, on which I have some information. The Board of Transport Commissioners has made no order for marking of United States railway cars. Such cars are in Canada for limited periods. When they enter Canada they are loaded and en route to destinations, and there would be objection to delaying their journey for marking.

I believe I explained that the Great Northern Railway had marked all its box cars, and that some of the companies were marking the sides of box cars with luminous paint. But no order has been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States to compel the general marking of all box cars with reflective markings.

These reflective markings are put on new Canadian cars when they are delivered and on old cars when they are in railway shops for periodical re-painting, but the United States cars are not re-painted in Canada. There are practical considerations against taking such foreign-owned cars out of service for marking while temporarily in Canada, or forbidding their entry into Canada without markings.

That, honourable senators, is the information which I have obtained since I spoke on the bill last week. I shall endeavour, as I stated a moment ago, to ascertain if any accidents have occurred at level crossings where the train causing the accident carried box cars bearing markings. Is that satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I say another word? If the bill is not going to committee perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) could also inform the house who initiates the request to have a protective device placed at a level crossing. I believe that question was asked by the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson).

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would suggest that the bill be read the third time on, say, Wednesday next. In the meantime I shall endeavour to get the information requested, so that I may place it on the record on Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, there are some important Government bills to come before the house which should be referred, along with certain other bills which we have considered, to the Banking and Commerce committee as soon as possible. With the consent of the house, I would like to proceed on Tuesday next with the business in the following order: first, I would deal with the motion for ratification of the Russian trade agreement; and I would like to have as the first item on the Orders of the Day the third reading of the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Bill; as the second item, the second reading of the Income Tax Bill; as the third item, the second reading of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Bill; and as the fourth item, the second reading of the Canadian National Toronto Terminals Bill.

Do I have leave of the Senate to have these items placed in that order on the agenda for Tuesday next?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to the order for motions:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, the 28th day of June, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 28, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 28, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

JUDGES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-78, to amend the Judges Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Financial Statement on the operations of the Veterans Insurance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 20 of the said act, Chapter 279, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Financial Statement on the operations of The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 17 of the said act, Chapter 54 of the Statutes of 1920, as amended. (English and French texts).

Statement of expenditures and financial commitments made under the Veterans' Land Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 42 of the said act, Chapter 280, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Copies of the Capital Budget and Revised Capital Budget of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, for the year ending December 31, 1960, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, together with copies of Orders in Council P.C. 1960-68 and P.C. 1960-870, respectively dated January 15 and June 23, 1960, approving same.

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1960, Wednesday, June 22, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Canadian Arsenals Limited for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 85 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, together with Report of the Auditor General on the examination of the Accounts and Financial Statements of said Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 87 of the Financial Administration Act aforesaid. (English text).

Report of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 85 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, together with Report of the Auditor General on the examination of the Accounts and Financial Statements of said Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 87 of the Financial Administration Act aforesaid. (English and French texts).

Report of Defence Construction (1951) Limited for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 85 of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, together with Report of the Auditor General on the examination of the Accounts and Financial Statements of said Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 87 of the Financial Administration Act aforesaid. (English text).

CITIZENSHIP

BRITISH SUBJECTS IN CANADA

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. Besides the High Commissioners, are there other British subjects residing in Canada who are not citizens of Canada?
2. If so, who are they and why are they not citizens of Canada?
3. Do they all enjoy the same public rights as the citizens of Canada do?
4. If so, in virtue of what authority?
5. Is there any difference between the public rights enjoyed in Canada by—
   (a) the British subjects,
   (b) the Canadian citizens, and
   (c) the citizens of the commonwealth?
6. If so, what is it?
7. If not, why?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

1. Yes.

2. They are British subjects who have come to Canada from the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries as immigrants or on a temporary basis. They are not citizens of Canada either because they have not sought to become citizens or are not qualified to receive Canadian citizenship.

3. Some legislation favours Canadian citizens over British subjects. For example, in the province of Quebec Canadian citizenship is a condition precedent for practising certain professions such as medicine, law, pharmacy and dentistry. Another example will be found in the Broadcasting Act which limits the issuance of licences to persons who are Canadian citizens or corporations controlled by Canadian citizens. Another example is the Immigration Act which vests an unconditional right in Canadian citizens to come into and remain in Canada.

4, 5, 6 and 7. Answered by number 3.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISION PROGRAM "CLOSE-UP"

Hon. William H. Golding inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. If at any time in the past the C.B.C. has given a scale of fees paid to those taking part in their programs? If so, when?
2. The name or names of those responsible for the C.B.C. programs on "Close-Up", on the evenings of May 26, 1960, and June 2, 1960.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I have the following answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry:

1. I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that while on some occasions, before parliamentary committees, for example, the range of fees for various types of broadcasters has been given, at no time, to the best of their knowledge, have specific payments to individuals been made known.

2. The responsibility for programs and other actions and activities of the C.B.C. is a corporate one. It has therefore been a long-standing policy of the corporation not to name individual employees when replying to queries in the Senate and the House of Commons. To the best of the corporation's knowledge this practice has never been questioned in the Senate or the House. It has been upheld in the parliamentary Committees on Broadcasting. For example, the corporation cites the ruling by the chairman of the 1959 parliamentary committee, as recorded on page 325 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 9, of Thursday, June 4, 1959. To quote in part, the chairman stated ". . . . and I will still rule as I ruled at first, to help this committee complete the tabling of evidence. We are going to keep out personalities; we are going to keep out names of individual programs; we are going to keep out, from here in, anything that is of a personal nature. . . ."

UNIVERSITY GRANTS

DISCRIMINATION ALLEGED DUE TO NON-PAYMENT TO QUEBEC UNIVERSITIES OF AMOUNTS VOTED IN 1952-56

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard rose pursuant to notice that he would "draw the attention of the Senate to the anomaly and discrimination maintained against the province of Quebec universities due to the lapse of subsidies voted in favour of but not paid to such universities during the years 1952-53, 1953-54, 1954-55 and 1955-56, amounting to approximately $9 million".

He said: Honourable senators, when I first gave notice of a motion on this subject I realized that some members might consider it to be a little bit political in nature, on account of the fact that an election was about to take place in the province of Quebec. As I wanted to put this matter above politics, not only did I change the wording of my notice so that it would become an inquiry, but I thought it preferable to postpone the discussion on it until after the Quebec provincial election. I am told the election is over now, so I am ready to proceed with this.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Do you feel better?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I feel much better. My original notice of motion was that the Senate strongly recommend that the Government give consideration to the payment to Quebec universities of grants or subsidies amounting to over $8 million voted by the Government of Canada in favour of Quebec universities in the years 1952-53, 1953-54, 1954-55 and 1955-56. On giving more thought to the matter, it came to my mind that perhaps it would be setting some kind of a precedent for the Senate to recommend to the Government the payment of any sum of money over which the Senate has no control. I therefore changed the notice to the form of an inquiry, which is merely to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that Quebec universities have lost during the period of 1952-56 an amount of approximately $9 million.

I do not want to go through the history of our Quebec universities, but I would remind honourable senators that around 1950 there were four universities in Quebec: McGill University, which I think everybody knows about; the University of Montreal, which was founded by Laval University in 1851, and Laval University in Quebec City, founded in 1851. At that time Laval had what might be termed a subsidiary university, called Laval University of Montreal, which later became the University of Montreal and which today is quite independent of and separate from Laval University in Quebec. The fourth university was Sir George Williams College, which I believe assumed its present status of a university in 1951. A new university today is the University of Sherbrooke. But around 1950-51 there were just the three major universities: McGill, the University of Montreal, and Laval University.

Without going into details, may I say that Laval University was founded by the Seminary of Quebec, and from 1851 to 1950 it was developed and maintained by the seminary. There was no contribution by any government and, except on one occasion, up to 1948 no contribution was made by the public. In one instance the university collected from the public $2 million, and that is all it received from any source other than the seminary in the space of practically one hundred years. The universities in Quebec, I may say, like those in the English provinces, were able to go along until approximately the end of the war without requiring much support from the public or governments, but after the war was over it was realized everywhere, and especially in countries behind the Iron Curtain, that adequate funds should be provided for the support of education and that as many pupils as possible should receive the benefit of higher education, particularly in the fields of chemical engineering and atomic energy.

It was quite apparent at that time that our Canadian universities lacked sufficient funds to enable them to perform their proper role in this regard, and it was then that the Canadian Government decided it would give subsidies or grants to these universities and encourage our young people, in as large numbers as possible, to pursue higher education, especially in research and chemical engineering. In 1951-52 I do not think anyone questioned the decision of the Government to make grants to all universities in Canada. These grants were based on 50 cents per head of population in each province. In 1951-52 Quebec universities applied for the grants, which they received, just as did all the other universities in Canada. However, some difficulty soon developed in Quebec as to whether the universities in that province could apply for the grants in the future in the way and upon the terms that they were granted and paid. As a matter of fact, in 1952-53 the Quebec universities received from the provincial Government a definite decision that they should not apply for these grants. I am not here to discuss whether the decision was wise or good or bad, but a decision was taken by the provincial Government that no university should apply for the grants, and that if any one did it would be severely punished. The decision of the Government was such that no Quebec university, whether independent or not, applied for the grants in 1952-53, 1953-54, 1954-55 and 1955-56, and consequently during those four years the universities lost the sum of $9 million.

It is quite evident, as everybody knows, that during those four years many meetings took place between the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent, then Prime Minister of Canada, and Mr. Duplessis, then Prime Minister of the province of Quebec. No doubt they tried to come to a compromise or to arrive at a formula which would be acceptable to both Quebec and the federal Government. Evidently in 1956 the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent came to the conclusion that there was no possibility of an agreement and, as the subsidies were to be increased to $1 per head of population in 1956, he decided to organize or to establish the Canadian Universities Foundation, to which the grants would be paid, these to be taken up by any universities that applied for them. And it is due to the statesmanship—I call it statesmanship—of Mr. St. Laurent that the Quebec universities have been able to get the $25 million which had accumulated in the hands of the Canadian Universities Foundation—and able to get it as soon as there was an agreement as to terms and conditions upon which these universities could get the grants.

There is no doubt in my mind that everyone in Canada thought that it was wise and timely to make these grants to Canadian universities—that the universities should be enabled to develop higher education, but that they could not do so unless they had the help of the Government. This was the conclusion reached by all Governments and all parties, including the St. Laurent Government, which initiated these grants first in 1951-52. The St. Laurent Government increased the subsidies in 1956-57, and the present Government decided to increase them further to $1.50 per head of population, which is one-third more than was paid before.

Consequently we have all come to the conclusion and nobody doubts at all that these grants are necessary in order that Canada may develop a system of unversity education comparable to that available in Europe and also in the countries behind the Iron Curtain.

I say also that all Canadians desire that there should be no discrimination made between universities, regardless of the provinces in which they are situated. As a matter of fact, when the grants were voted they were to be distributed all over Canada on an equal basis to all universities. They all needed the money, every one of them; they all were being filled up with young people seeking education.

Well, honourable senators, I say that if Quebec universities were prevented from applying for these grants between 1952 and 1956, now that the terms upon which the grants are being paid are accepted by Quebec, not only for the present but also for the past—because all the grants made by the Government between the years 1956 to 1960 have been paid over to the Quebec universities—it seems to me they should be put on the same basis for the grants which were voted between 1951 and 1956. Those grants amount to approximately $9 million and the Quebec universities did not receive them because they could not apply for them. Why did they not apply for them? It was not because they did not need the money, it was not because the Government did not make these grants, it was not because the money would not have been useful, but it was only because of the divergence of opinion—because there was no accord, no agreement, no possibility of agreement—between two men, one at the head of the Canadian Government and the other at the head of the Quebec Government. Today the crisis is past, and the terms and conditions of these grants can be accepted by the Quebec universities, so it seems to me that there should be no hesitation on the part of the Government to pay these past grants to the Quebec universities as they would have been paid if application could have been made at the time when they were voted.

I quite understand that if Parliament votes, say, $1 million for a building to be situated at a certain place, it is quite appropriate that if the money is not spent in the course of the year the Government may change its mind in the interests of Canada as to the design or location of the building or may even decide to abandon the project, and in those circumstances the money, not having been spent, disappears from the budget. But in the case of a grant which is still considered by everybody to be useful and necessary, and especially when everybody agrees upon the terms of payment, it seems to me that the matter of procedure should not stop the Government from paying the grants and that another vote should be given in one year so that the Quebec universities will not lose $9 million on account of the fact that they could not apply for the grants.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it not correct that during the four years from 1952 to 1956 when the Quebec universities refused to accept the money the votes lapsed, and that it was only after 1956 that the Universities Foundation was established?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: That is correct. It is because the votes lapsed that the Quebec universities lost $9 million. It must be remembered that Quebec has paid its share of the tax to pay the grants that were given to other universities, and likewise other provinces have paid their share for the grants to be paid to Quebec universities, but the grants that were to have come to Quebec have completely lapsed. It seems to me that it is just as important today as it was in 1951 for the universities to receive the money granted to them. As a matter of fact, I would say that it is more important, because the grants have been increased three times. So it is recognized that the necessity has not disappeared, that the development of education continues, and it seems to me that in the interest of the unity of Canada no discrimination should be made between one province and another, and that the grants should be given to Quebec now.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Has the Government got enough money left now to pay the amount of the lapsed grants?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, I would say so. There is no reason why it should not. It has not paid it. The amount of the surplus that has been declared in these years is still there, and I do not see why it should not be paid under a new vote.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Why did not the Government in power from 1952 to 1956 bring in legislation for granting that money?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: At that time the moneys had been voted. It did not occur to anybody that some universities would not be in a position to accept the money, or would be forbidden from accepting it. As a matter of fact, in 1951-52 moneys were accepted by Quebec universities. It was only in 1952-53 that the money could not be applied for.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Why could it not be applied for?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Because the universities were forbidden to make application for the grants. They were told if they made application for the grants they would no longer receive the moneys that the province of Quebec had been granting them. They were told: if you apply for these federal grants, do not count on any provincial grants, because we will cut you off completely.

The universities of Quebec had to decide whether they were going to fight with the provincial Government, which had helped them for many years, or not make application for the grants and avoid a fight. Everybody thought this matter would be settled within a short time. The two Governments both knew that the grants were necessary and useful for the benefit of Canada as a whole. Surely the universities should not miss out on the grants because of the form or the way in which the money was to be paid. I think it reasonable to say that not one soul in Quebec believed that this condition would continue for a period of four years.

It was only after several meetings between the provincial and the federal Governments that it was realized that there was no formula which could be accepted at that time. That is why these universities had to decide whether they would apply for the federal grants and lose all the provincial grants, or submit to the request of the provincial Prime Minister of that time.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Does my honourable friend mean to tell us that in 1954, 1955 or 1956 the Government of Quebec and the federal Government agreed to let these grants lapse?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No, they did not.

Hon. Mr. Haig: One more question. Did the Government of Quebec tell the universities in that province not to accept the grants, and that if they did they would be in trouble?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Exactly; that is why they did not apply.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Then they took their own chances.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It was not their choice. Should they have got into a fight with the provincial Government? They were told by the then Prime Minister of Quebec: "If you accept these grants you will be cut off from all grants in Quebec. I forbid you to do it."

The authorities of the Quebec universities, namely, Laval, Montreal and McGill, met at that time and, after a long discussion of the pros and cons, decided they could not apply for the federal grants because if they did so they would be cut off from all provincial grants, and they would have a difficult life in the province of Quebec. The universities did not apply and the grants lapsed. I say, they only lapsed; it is only a matter of procedure. For example, if the Government decides one year to erect a building in Canada at a cost of $1 million, and if for one reason or another the building is not put up that year, and the necessity for it remains, a new vote is made for the building the next year. That procedure may go on for two, three or four years. Why should the Quebec universities be treated differently? Do they not deserve to be put on the same basis as all other Canadian universities? If there were no longer any need for the money, I would say that is all right, let it go. But the Canadian Government itself recognized that the money was useful at that time and that it is more useful today, because the grants have been doubled and tripled.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Am I right in saying that in those years the grants lapsed because the universities decided it was better to have the goodwill of Mr. Duplessis than to have the money from the dominion?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: They did not decide that. They decided that they could not make application for the grants without getting into a fight with the provincial Government. I am sure that all were certain that the Canadian Government would treat them properly after the fight was over. And it was a fight over which they had no control. They believed that the Canadian Government would treat the universities in Quebec in the same way as it treated other universities across Canada. Why should the universities of Quebec lose $9 million because of a fight over which they had no control? Why should they lose $9 million out of their share of moneys paid by the whole of Canada for the benefit of all universities across Canada whether in Winnipeg, Toronto, Vancouver or any other centre?

It seems to me this discrimination between universities should be stopped, and a new vote should be made so that the Quebec universities will be treated exactly the same as the others. The Government imposed taxes and the money was collected at the time for the purpose of distribution among the universities. It is just as useful today as it was then and there should be no discrimination and no acrimony between provinces. Everyone should be treated in the same way. Had the universities in Quebec accepted something in lieu of grants, I would say that that was all right, that they preferred one thing to the other. But in these circumstances they had nothing to say about it; they were told that if they applied they would be punished.

Well, a menace like that, coming from the man in power in that province, was something to face. Would it have been preferable for McGill, Montreal and Laval universities to get into a fight with the provincial Government, and not only lose the benefit of the provincial grants but be faced with all kinds of other difficulties? They realized the difficulties would be so great that an application for the grants at that time would have been a mistake. But they all hoped that when the fight was over a formula would be found by which they could accept the grants. It seems to me, now that a formula has been found, these universities should receive their grants.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is the formula?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The formula at that time was that the federal Government would pay the money directly to the Quebec universities.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I mean the formula at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The present formula is that the Government at Ottawa sends the money to the Quebec Government and it pays it to the universities.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: When was that system adopted?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: A recent bill was passed at this session. I have for the moment forgotten the name of it, but my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) presented the bill and we passed it. It dealt with federal and provincial grants for education.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I just wanted the honourable senator to mention the fact that we had something to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, we passed the bill. I spoke on it when it was in this house. I would point out that it is not constitutional, but on the other hand it is better that we obey the law, whether constitutional or not. It is better that all universities in Quebec get the grants, even though the procedure under that bill is not constitutional. I believe the bill was unanimously passed by this house.

Under the previous formula the money was paid by the federal Government directly to the Quebec universities. That is what Mr. Duplessis objected to; he thought it was unconstitutional and was an interference by the federal Government in matters of education, which are exclusively provincial.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The grants are now given to the Quebec Government, and it makes the distribution to the universities. I cannot see a great deal of difference between the two systems, but apparently the Prime Minister at that time felt there was a great deal of difference; so much so that he forbade the universities to apply for the grants, and he menaced them with a warning of what would happen if they did apply.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: My honourable friend keeps saying that he forbade them, he menaced them. Did that direction appear in the newspapers, or how was it done? Was it by letter or by open declaration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No, it was not done that way at that time. It was done verbally. They were told that if they did apply they would be punished. If you want to make an inquiry on that you can ask the chancellors of the three universities—the chancellor of McGill, the rector of Laval and the chancellor of Montreal—and they will tell you that they were told they could not accept these grants and that if they did they would be severely punished. For what other reason would the universities not accept these grants?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Was not the "punishment" the payment by the province of the equivalent of the federal grants to the universities? Was not that the "punishment" that Mr. Duplessis inflicted upon them?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: He did not punish them because, as a matter of fact, they did not accept the grants. But, the grants given by the provincial Government to Quebec universities during these years were far from being equivalent to similar grants in other provinces. The Quebec universities lost at that time because they were receiving small grants from the province. It is true that the grants have been increased every year since 1948, but not by the amount they should have been. That was why the Canadian Government came into the picture and decided it would give 50 cents per head of population.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Does my honourable friend say that Mr. Duplessis said something to them, and by reason of what he said, or what he did, they did not accept anything? Surely, from 1956 on when Mr. St. Laurent was Prime Minister of Canada the situation could have been remedied by legislation. Why did he not have that done?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: How?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: He did do it. As a matter of fact, when the Quebec universities could not agree with Mr. Duplessis so that they could get these grants, what happened? Mr. St. Laurent established the Canadian Universities Foundation.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: At that time, when it was decided by the St. Laurent administration to turn all the grants over to the foundation, would it have been possible for that administration then to turn over the $9 million at the same time?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The $9 million was not paid to the Canadian Universities Foundation.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am referring to the grants that had lapsed.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The grants that had lapsed were never paid to the Foundation.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It was not possible at that time. The Canadian Universities Foundation was established as a medium for receipt of the grants, which it was hoped would be accepted by the Quebec universities, but even at that time they could not be accepted. It was only this year that these grants could be accepted, and they were accepted last May, even though they were paid to the Canadian Universities Foundation.

Suppose in any province grants were given for universities or for farmers, or for anybody else. I am pretty sure that there is not a single member of this house who would want inequality between the provinces in that regard. If the Quebec universities were entitled to these grants in 1952, and if they could not apply for them for a certain reason, the validity of which I will not discuss but which prevented them from applying, then what is the reason today for the existing anomaly and discrimination between the Quebec universities and the Canadian universities at large? It seems to me that if it had been the fault of the Quebec universities, if they had done something which prevented them from accepting these grants or if they had decided not to accept them, the situation would be different. But the Quebec universities never refused those grants. They could not make application for them, because if they did they would have been in trouble with the provincial Government.

Honourable senators, why should these lapsed grants not be paid to the Quebec universities today? The money was voted. The money was there. Taxes were imposed to obtain that money. Why not treat them in the same way as we treat a building the construction of which is not completed in the course of the year in which the money is voted? In that case the vote is renewed the next year. Are the universities of Quebec less important than a building which has not been completed, for some reason or other, during the course of the year? Are not the universities of a province as important as a piece of road or a building? It seems to me that there is no comparison.

The Canadian people decided it was necessary to pay grants to all universities in Canada. If for one reason or other, and not because of any fault of their own, some universities could not apply for these grants in one year, in two years, or in three or four years, it seems to me there is no valid reason why the money cannot be voted again and paid out to the universities, because the money has been kept by the Government.

There is no reason for allowing this discrimination to continue. I say that this factor will be remembered by Quebec. If we want unity in Canada—and I think we all desire that—there has to be equal treatment between Quebec and the other provinces. That is the first thing that must be accomplished, and that is why I want to draw the attention of the Senate now to the fact that difficulties preventing payment of the grants have disappeared and that the universities are as much in need of the money now as they were when it was granted. It seems to me that this is the time to draw the attention of the Canadian Parliament, and especially of the Senate, to this discrimination which still exists. That discrimination should disappear. The people of Quebec will appreciate action that leads to its disappearance, and such action will be to the honour of the Government which takes it.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I am glad that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) has raised this question, and that he has raised it in the modified form which he has chosen. It is modified as compared with his original idea of a motion to be submitted to this body. I agree with him that his second thought is perhaps the more preferable, and that it might be a dangerous precedent for the Senate to pass a resolution suggesting to the Government of the day that it spend a specific amount of money. I agree with him that the proper course is the course that he has followed this evening in drawing the attention of the Senate to the circumstances.

Just what are those circumstances? It was in 1951 that the then Government decided that the time had come when the federal Parliament should vote grants in favour of the universities of the country. That seemed at that time, and still seems, to be a logical development which has arisen over the last few years, during which a university education has ceased to be the privilege of the few and has become the opportunity of the many. That condition, I think, largely arose owing to what happened at the end of the war when we had what was called the Veterans' Charter under which, as you will recall, men and women who had served in our forces overseas were given the opportunity of receiving a university education at the expense of the country. The result was a very large increase in the number of students at all our universities, an increase which did not, however, cease when the veterans graduated, for it appeared that by that time the public of Canada generally had got the taste for university education into its system or, perhaps, to put it another way, it was becoming more and more apparent that a university education was a good thing for the young men and young women of Canada.

In 1951, when the federal Parliament first voted moneys in support of universities, the Quebec Government of that day, headed by Mr. Duplessis, said quite openly that it did not think this was constitutional inasmuch as education was the sole responsibility of the provinces, but it did allow the Quebec universities for that first year to accept these funds granted by the federal Parliament. Then in the second year it clamped down. My honourable friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) is connected with Laval University in Quebec City, and I happen to be connected with McGill University in Montreal. What was said to us, in effect, was, "If you accept these federal grants from 1952 on you will be in danger of losing the provincial grants which the provincial Government is now paying." These were approximately equal to, or I think a little larger than, the federal grants in their original amounts. We all realized, of course, that if we accepted the federal grants we would be in danger of not only losing the provincial grants but of antagonizing the provincial Government.

How can you expect any board of governors of a university to deliberately flout the Government of the province in which their institution exists? It is asking a good deal too much intestinal fortitude of any board of governors to face a proposition of that kind. So for the next four years the universities of Quebec saw these grants voted annually by the federal Government while being unable to accept them, and they saw equivalent moneys going to other universities throughout the country.

As the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has quite properly said, the grants to the Quebec universities lapsed after each annual vote and after the money for that year was not accepted. It was not until 1956 that the then federal Government under Mr. St. Laurent tried to remedy the situation in this way. It said, "Well, if the Quebec universities cannot accept these grants now it is very unfair that tax money should be paid to the universities in every other province of the country and that the moneys payable to the Quebec universities should lapse." So it evolved this system of the Canadian Universities Foundation, to which all the moneys were paid and to which all universities had to apply to get the money. It was not a question of the grants lapsing. The money was voted and was there, and though for that period from 1956 on the Quebec universities did not apply to the Canadian Universities Foundation, at least the money was there waiting for them when they could apply.

My honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) has asked, "Why didn't the federal Government at that time put the $9 million into that fund?" Well, it seemed rather silly to do that when it knew that for the time being the Quebec universities could not get it. But now the situation has entirely changed. I give my friend and his Government the credit for having reached this agreement with the last Government of the province of Quebec, the Government until Wednesday of last week. But what my honourable friend from Grandville is suggesting is that the same attitude be taken with respect to the moneys voted between 1952 and 1956 as has been taken with respect to the moneys voted since 1956, which the Quebec universities are now able to get, and that the $9 million should be voted by the federal Parliament to either the Quebec Government or the Canadian Universities Foundation or in some other manner.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How do you know the present Government of Quebec would accept the money?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The present Government or the last Government?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The present Government.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, if my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) was willing to take the credit for having made the arrangement with the last Government, I think he can depend upon those on this side of the house to take the credit for making an equally satisfactory arrangement with the new Government.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: With the same appreciation as was shown on June 22?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: May I ask the honourable senator from Inkerman a question? Are Quebec universities in any different position in regard to provincial grants from that of universities in other provinces? In other words, they all get provincial grants, do they not?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They all get provincial grants, but I do not know what the relevant scale of grants is in the various provinces.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: What I mean is, they are all getting provincial grants, and they could be cut off if they did not do what the provincial Governments concerned wanted?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Oh, yes. The universities are getting substantial grants from the respective provincial Governments. How they match up, one province to another, I do not know, but again I want to say that the short-lived Government of Mr. Sauvé, in the days when he was Premier of Quebec after the death of Mr. Duplessis, did very substantially enlarge the grants to Quebec universities, and it is entitled to a great deal of credit for that. But that does not affect the point raised by my honourable friend from Grandville. All he is asking is to put this $9 million which the universities of Quebec lost during the period of 1952-56 into the same form as the moneys which were voted to them after 1956, which they are only now able to obtain, and thereby equalize the situation of the universities all over the country and cure a feeling which I think does exist among the Quebec universities that, owing to circumstances over which they had no control, they have been unfairly treated in having lost that $9 million.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Would I be fair in saying that what they did take from the provincial Government was more satisfactory to them than if they had got this money at that time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No, nothing of the kind. Our Quebec universities, if they wished to maintain the standard of the universities in the rest of the country, needed both federal and provincial moneys in the worst way, but the trouble was that during this period of quarrelling they could only get one and not the other. My honourable friend's university in Manitoba got grants from the federal Government and from the provincial Government. So did all the other universities throughout Canada except those in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Why didn't Mr. St. Laurent have the law changed when he was in office? He was Prime Minister from 1948 to 1957, and he had a majority in both houses. Why didn't he have this law changed at that time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What possible good would that have done?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Didn't he know what had gone on? He must have known, and if he did why didn't he have the law changed? That is what I can't understand.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What good would it have done if—

Hon. Mr. Haig: He had power to control the money.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: From 1956 he did provide specifically that this money should be accumulated. He had been hoping year after year, I suppose, that the matter could be settled. I suppose it occurred to no one to take that $9 million and put it into the fund. I suppose it was felt that when the question was finally settled whatever Government was in power at that time would see the justice of it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: You don't answer my question. He knew the situation about the universities. Why did he not get the information when he got into office in 1948?

Hon. Mr. Farris: What good would it have done?

Hon. Mr. Haig: He had power to have the legislation passed.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What legislation?

Hon. Mr. Haig: The legislation you are asking for now.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No; we are asking that no discrimination continue.

Hon. Mr. Haig: When you want to vote the money, that becomes an act. Why didn't he do that in 1956? He had the power. He had more power then than the present Government has got, because he had a majority in this house at that time. I know, for I was here.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I do not think my honourable friend understands the situation.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes I do.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As from 1956 Mr. St. Laurent's Government made quite certain that this money voted to the universities would, so far as the Quebec universities were concerned, be accumulated in their favour and be paid to them at some time in the future. That was quite a different business from trying to re-vote $9 million that had lapsed. That was a question that would only arise when the Quebec universities were entitled to get their rights, as they are now, and that is why my honourable friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) raises the question now.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Why didn't the Government set up a fund in 1950? Because nobody thought of it is no reason for coming to the present Government and asking for the money. The federal Government should have set up a foundation in 1950—

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Why?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: —with the amount that the Quebec universities were to be granted, and held it in reserve. The Government did it in 1956, so why not earlier?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: During the first year, 1951-52, Mr. Duplessis allowed the Quebec universities to accept the money.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, I would like to express my sympathy for and my approval of the substantive part of this inquiry.

Actually what we are dealing with here is the intent of Parliament at the beginning when these grants were being allocated directly to universities through these annual votes. It has been established in this house tonight that the Quebec universities needed the grants from the very beginning, and were willing to accept them and did accept them the first year. Then this intent of Parliament was contravened or negated—

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Frustrated.

Hon. Mr. Wall: —by the action of the provincial Government, and the universities were really victims of circumstances beyond their control. What has happened now is that times have changed, and we are now looking at a moral obligation of this Parliament to these universities which have been deprived of a certain amount of money and whose situation has been termed one of discrimination and one of anomaly; and that is true.

Now, the technicalities connected with the lapse of these annual votes should not prevent the present Government from taking hold of this problem and benefiting from the kudos that will evolve from the kind of equitable treatment that is to result from this discussion. When questions are raised in this house such as, "Why wasn't it done before?" or "Why wasn't it done in this form before?" I claim that that is not in issue at all—and, in a certain framework, that is really a kind of red herring.

The problem is simple. It is now possible for these universities to accept this money. Ways have been found. The Government has been commended for doing this. Now it is possible to correct this anomaly. I respectfully suggest that Parliament has an obligation to look at it from this new point of view and irrespective of all these little technical nuances being interjected into the substantive part of the inquiry. The issue is clear, and I support it wholeheartedly.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, as an entire outsider from British Columbia listening to the question put by my honourable friends, I do not think they have put the question in just the way they mean it. As I follow it, what they are saying is this: When Mr. St. Laurent was in office there was a big surplus. That money was put aside, and now why should the Conservative Government pay these lapsed grants after all that money has been squandered? In effect, that is what my honourable friends are saying.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask my honourable friend from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) one question? What does this inquiry mean, anyway, and what can the Senate do? I have been trying to study the matter, and it seems to me that it is only being drawn to the attention of the Senate. Where does it stop, or does it end there? It seems to me to be just a lot of words.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, may I add a few remarks about this very important question? First, I should like to offer my sincere compliments to my honourable colleague the sponsor of this inquiry (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), as well as to my good friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen).

To put the matter in a nutshell—in an attempt to clarify the point—after all, $9 million is a large amount of money to be found and to be returned to whom it belongs. As I was listening to the discussion, however, I thought of the Fathers of Confederation, and reminded myself of the fact that one of the main reasons why they instituted a second chamber, the Senate, was to have a body that could rectify injustices done to provinces. I think I am right in saying that. Well, during the years I have had the honour to be a member of Parliament, I have invariably found here men and women of good will from all parts of Canada, regardless of race, creed or party allegiance, and I have discovered that if a question of this kind, for instance, is put to them and an appeal is made to their spirit of justice and fair play, there is never any resort to political partisanship or provincial privilege, but there is invariably in evidence that great spirit of justice which has always dominated Canadian leaders, regardless of their origin.

The province of Quebec has always paid its legitimate share to help the universities in other provinces. A request for justice for the universities of Quebec is now being made to the Government. Whatever party happens to constitute the Government at any time—at present we have a Government led by the Conservative party—the spirit of justice and fairness always prevails. So I am hopeful, indeed I am convinced, that the Government of this country will give back to Quebec that which belongs to Quebec: the grants amounting to $9 million which were to be distributed to the universities of that province.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I have only a few words to say in corroboration of what has been said by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), who was at one time Professor of Law at Laval University, and by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), who is connected with McGill University. At the University of Montreal, where I was a professor, and at the time was Acting Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences, we were in the same situation as McGill and Laval. We would have been very glad to accept that money because there was a tragic need for it.

I do not wish to discuss the attitude of the late Premier Duplessis, other than to say that he felt very strongly on the question, taking the attitude that matters touching upon education were exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province and that such federal grants were an encroachment upon the provincial field. The universities of Quebec needed the federal grants very badly and they would have been exceedingly glad to receive that money in addition to that which they were receiving from the provincial Government. The universities of Quebec cannot possibly carry on unless they receive sufficient funds, especially now with the increased number of students applying for admission every year to the point that it is not always possible to accept all the candidates desiring to study law and other subjects.

For the period of the four years in question it was impossible to reach what I would call a compromise with the provincial authorities. The newspapers of the province of Quebec at that time gave the fullest coverage to the words uttered by Mr. Duplessis to the effect that he would practically declare war on any university which, in his opinion, did something which was wrong, and he thought that it was absolutely wrong for a university to accept federal money. Under those circumstances no solution could be found. So the grants lapsed. But from 1957 on the Canadian Universities Foundation provided us with what we believe was a satisfactory way of getting out of the difficulty. However, the provincial Government maintained its hostile attitude, and it was impossible for our universities to accept the grants. This method of distributing the grants formulated by the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent was an excellent one. He felt that later on the universities of Quebec would be in a position to take this money, which they needed so badly.

I believe this is the real question: Is it not right, is it not fair, to suggest that the $9 million which was lost to our universities through no fault of theirs—because they could not possibly antagonize the provincial Government—should eventually be paid to them?

Should not the universities of the province of Quebec be placed in exactly the same position as universities in the various other provinces of Canada? Personally I consider it a matter of elementary justice that this should be done. I know very well it is out of the question for us to make what I would call a formal recommendation, but I think it was a very good move that our attention be called to that situation.

I sincerely hope that the present Government, now that a way has been found to allow the Quebec universities to accept these grants, will remedy what I would call this abnormal situation and will do justice to the universities of my province.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, it has been said by one of our colleagues that his intention in speaking was to clarify the matter, but, to use the expression of a soldier, I will say that after his speech it is just as clear as mud. And that is said with due deference to all.

The matter is very simple. I always rise in circumstances like these as a peacemaker carrying in my arm an olive branch. Why should anyone discuss with animosity a subject-matter which is purely academic?

Tonight we had a feast for the intelligence. We have heard several of our colleagues who are on the boards of some of our great universities, and they have delivered speeches and made remarks which are worthy of great occasions, but there is one point which has not been elucidated, and it is very simple. Everyone of you, my honourable colleagues, will understand the whole position as it should be understood.

It is an interesting matter, and I congratulate the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) and all those who have spoken on the subject. One fact is acknowledged: it is that in 1951-52 Mr. Duplessis accepted a federal grant. Why? Purely as a matter of goodwill to show his friendly disposition toward the federal Government. That was the first year. What was the sequence of it? He was abused, he was called a traitor, a man without convictions, just because he had accepted the offer of the federal Government. He had a great deal of trouble because of it from the very people who were the protagonists of that proposal. He had only one thing to do. He said to himself: If I am abused like that because of what I have done to show my goodwill, I will not do it again.

This is what any one of you would have done, had you been in his place.

He also said to himself and to his friends: The universities shall not suffer; I will treat the universities of this province of Quebec as well as any other universities in Canada are treated.

You have heard the lamentations by the heads and the professors of the universities, of Dr. James of McGill, of the rector of Laval, and the rector of the University of Montreal. They all complained that they were treated miserly, although they were building palaces and were guilty of all sorts of extravagances.

Mr. Duplessis said the universites will not suffer; the province will give them all that is needed to help them continue their program. That is what happened. And I challenge anyone to state the millions of dollars that have been paid by the Quebec Government to the universities of that province. I must defend them now: they were just as well treated by the past provincial Governments as the universities of any other province in Canada, and better than some of the American universities that are supported by millionaires. Naturally, there are some benefactors who are very generous to universities, men who are not former students and cannot call any university their alma mater. There are many men who have succeeded the hard way, who never had a university education, but who are the pillars and the supporters of universities in all provinces.

But let no one tell us that the provincial Government of Quebec has been stingy with the universities of that province, for it is not true. I can get you the figures to show that it is not true; they can be found in any issue of the Canada Year Book. Anyone who knows will agree that the universities of Quebec have been well looked after by the provincial Government.

Then for a time the federal Government decided to give subsidies to the universities. How many times has the Constitution been disregarded in other provinces than Quebec, even by those who are supposed to be familiar with the law? When there is a question of grants or subsidies they are all there with open arms to get those grants or subsidies without thinking about the exclusive jurisdictions of the provinces and of the federal Parliament. They are not interested in that; they are interested only in getting more money. But there is a question of principle, and there is the Constitution, which cannot be overlooked or disregarded. This is a very serious matter.

The bill affecting university grants came before the Banking and Commerce Committee. I was there and had the satisfaction of questioning the witness, a very able witness. I was struck by the fact that during the four or five years after the first year there were lapses of the subsidies; at the end of the fiscal year the subsidy intended for the province of Quebec lapsed, and three or four or five years afterwards there was established a sinking fund which was called the Canadian Universities Foundation, and grants that were transferred to the foundation did not lapse. The proceedings of the committee were not reported, but I presume my memory is reliable. As I say, I was struck by the fact that there was an interval of three or four years before the Universities Foundation was established.

At that time my leader was Mr. St. Laurent. In my view I was on good terms with both Mr. Duplessis and Mr. St. Laurent. My impression was that Mr. St. Laurent did what was best, and so did Mr. Duplessis. So no one shall incur any blame in this matter. Mr. Duplessis wanted to defend the rights of the province of Quebec in the matter of education; he did not want to be abused by those who were the protagonists of federal subsidies to the Quebec universities. Mr. St. Laurent never thought that four or five years afterwards the Universities Foundation would be established. The matter is just as simple as that. There is no question as to the rights of the province of Quebec or anything like that. No one can be expected to foresee everything that will happen. Mr. St. Laurent acted in good faith; Mr. Duplessis acted in good faith. Now we face a situation that is quite complicated, if we are going to exhume all the past errors and difficulties.

In conclusion, may I say I consider that in this matter nobody did any harm. Everybody acted for the best under the circumstances. It is very easy, after a certain time, to be philosophical about the past and say that, well, it should have been done in this way or that way. I agree with what has been said by one of my colleagues with whom I very often differ. The matter has been very ably brought before the Government of Canada by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) and by all my honourable colleagues who have spoken, and it is now for the Prime Minister and his colleagues to decide what they consider the best thing to do under the present circumstances.

CANADA-U.S.S.R. TRADE AGREEMENT

APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF PROTOCOL

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I move the motion standing in the name of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine):

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the ratification by Canada of the protocol, signed at Moscow, on April 18, 1960, renewing the agreement on trade between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, concluded in Ottawa, on February 29, 1956, and that this house do approve the same.

After listening to a controversial debate such as we have just heard I am certain you are happy to know, honourable senators, that we are moving into much quieter waters in the motion which I have just moved.

Honourable senators, on April 18 of this year a protocol was signed in Moscow renewing the trade agreement of 1956 between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Our approval is sought for ratification by the Government of this protocol. The protocol itself and the exchange of correspondence concerning the Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement were published as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of May 3 last.

The protocol renews for a further three years the 1956 agreement, with the exception of article IX, and the letters which the two parties exchanged at that time concerning the right of the Canadian Government to fix, under the Canadian Customs Act, values of goods for ordinary and special duty. Honourable senators may recall that the other house approved ratification of the agreement on April 18, 1956, and that this house gave its approval on April 26, 1956.

Article IX of the 1956 agreement, which is not renewed, provided for signature and ratification at that time. It also stipulated that negotiations may be held to renew the agreement. These negotiations have been successfully completed with the signing of the protocol by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

It may be useful at this time to review briefly the main features of the agreement which is now before us for renewal. Provision is made in it for the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment between the two Governments. The term "most-favoured-nation treatment" refers to tariffs and related matters in the field of commerce. Such treatment does not entitle another country to any unique advantage, but merely guarantees that the country will not be discriminated against in trade matters. This has the effect of placing Canadian commercial relations with the U.S.S.R. on a basis similar to our relations with most other countries. Most-favoured-nation treatment, of course, does not involve the extension of the British preferential rates of duty to imports from the U.S.S.R.

A provision is included in the agreement which permits either Government to apply prohibitions or restrictions of any kind for the protection of its essential security interests. Another clause refers to the treatment of merchant ships of either country in the seaports of the other, assuring them of as favourable treatment as the merchant vessels of other countries. This simply confirms the situation which had existed previously in regard to ships of U.S.S.R. registry.

There are also provisions which refer to the legal status of persons, access to courts and arbitration. These clauses did not establish any new procedures for settling disputes that might arise in the conduct of trade between Canada and the U.S.S.R. They merely indicate the facilities that are available if such dispute should arise. Canadians are free to choose between Canadian and Soviet courts, and they are not bound to enter into arbitration.

From the Canadian point of view, by far the most important part of the renewed agreement is an exchange of letters between the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Honourable Gordon Churchill, and the Minister of Foreign Trade of the U.S.S.R., Mr. N. S. Patolichev. The letters provide that in each year of the renewed agreement the Soviet foreign trade organizations will purchase Canadian goods to a value of $25 million, including not less than 200,000 tons of Canadian wheat, provided, however, that the total annual value of Canadian purchases from the U.S.S.R. is not less than $12½ million. May I point out, honourable senators, that the reference to 200,000 tons of wheat is approximately the equivalent of 7 million bushels.

Should the total value of Canadian purchases from the U.S.S.R. be less than $12½ million in any one year the Soviet undertaking to purchase from Canada would be reduced and would be determined on a two-to-one basis. That is, the Soviet Union would purchase twice as much from Canada as Canada imported from the Soviet Union. Wheat will constitute not less than half the amount of such annual Soviet purchases.

It will be noted that Canada does not give any undertaking in this agreement as to purchases from the U.S.S.R. The major commitment made by Canada is that imports from the Soviet Union may compete on equal terms with imports from other countries in the most-favoured-nation category.

The letters also provide that the authorities of the two countries will consult periodically concerning the implementation of the agreement and any other matters affecting trade relations between the two countries. Under the earlier agreement the consultation provision and the undertaking of both parties to give sympathetic consideration to each other's representations was limited to matters concerning the implementation of the agreement. The broadening of this to include other matters affecting trade relations would permit Canada, for example, to take up with the Soviet Government any problems which might arise in connection with any Soviet selling practices in world markets that may be unfair and harmful to our export interests. Consultations will take place annually and should permit the development of closer co-operation and understanding with the Soviet authorities concerned with trade.

I might just expand on this feature very briefly to say that it envisages, as I understand it, cases where we might deem that the U.S.S.R. is, say, engaged in dumping goods in other countries that are competitive with goods that Canada sells in those countries. In that event provision is made for consultation between Canada and the U.S.S.R. in regard to such unfair trade practices.

To conclude the description of the arrangements to be ratified by the Government I might mention that the protocol will terminate three years from the date of signature and consequently a further renewal, if it should then be desired, would be a matter for negotiation.

Honourable senators will note that under the terms of the new agreement 200,000 tons of wheat will be purchased from Canada, should our exports reach the level of $25 million. In the previous agreement the total Soviet purchase commitment was for 400,000 tons of wheat a year.

I might add here, however, that that commitment was never carried out during the last three years and, indeed, I do not think that in any one of the three years more than about 200,000 tons of Canadian wheat was purchased by the U.S.S.R. If any honourable senator desires it I can give figures in regard to those purchases.

It will be appreciated that the situation has changed markedly since 1956. The Soviet Union has greatly enlarged its production of wheat and is a regular exporter. Moreover, the level of sales achieved by the Russians under the previous agreement did not come up to their expectations and they were not prepared to continue trading on a basis which they considered too strongly favoured the Canadian side. In addition, since 1956 the Soviet Union has concluded a number of trade agreements with non-communist countries in which they have avoided making unilateral and unconditional purchase commitments. As a result of these considerations, they were not prepared to renew the previous purchase commitment without some modification. However, the arrangements that have been made for trade on a two-to-one ratio do involve a purchase commitment on the Soviet side and the terms of the arrangement are better than those offered by the U.S.S.R. to any other country. Under the new agreement we may expect that substantial quantities of Canadian commodities, including wheat, will again be sold and that a mutually advantageous growth in trade between the two countries will take place.

Both countries are aiming to diversify as well as to expand trade and a basis has been established for closer and more fruitful co-operation between the two countries in the field of trade.

Under the arrangements which have been concluded, traders and trading organizations of the two countries have been provided with an opportunity to establish and expand their business relationships. The success of the agreement from the standpoint of Canada's trade will hinge upon the results achieved by the Canadian business community in its dealings with Soviet trading corporations. For their part, the Soviet export corporations, if they wish to expand their sales in Canada, will have to make the necessary effort to ascertain what Soviet exports may be saleable in the Canadian market and how these sales can be developed on an orderly basis. Canadian exporters will no doubt also wish to consider what Canadian products might be sold to the Soviet Union. In this connection the Minister of Trade and Commerce has announced the appointment of a Canadian Commercial Counsellor in Moscow who will be available to assist the efforts of our business community. The minister also mentioned in the other house the prospect of visits of trade missions between the two countries.

The conditions for trade have been established and a spirit of goodwill and co-operation has been initiated. It is the hope of the Government that the envisaged levels of trade will be realized and that we may look forward to a flow of commerce beyond these levels.

I trust that the resolution which is before us will find approval with all members of this house.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, after the animated debate to which my honourable friend from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) referred and which he followed with the statement that this debate would be of a relatively restrained and quiet nature, I would say at the outset that while I propose to make some observations on this new trade agreement with the Soviets, I do not propose to say anything that is particularly controversial.

I do not entirely share, however, the apparent optimism displayed by my honourable friend in stating the terms of the agreement. This agreement with the Soviet Union brings to my mind a somewhat similar agreement made in 1936, which formed the pattern for the agreement of 1956 and the present one—the present one being almost entirely a repetition of the treaty that has just come to an end.

I am going to give a bit of the history of our trade agreements with Russia. After the First Great War, when Russia had become communist, the Government of the day in Canada, the Bennett Government, placed an embargo upon all Russian goods for the reason expressed by him, I think, that Russia was a godless country. The succeeding Government, the King Government, decided that trade relations with Russia should be restored, and the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, who happened to be myself, was entrusted with the work of conducting the negotiations in Moscow, just as the present Minister of Trade and Commerce did recently.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: What year was that?

Hon. Mr. Euler: 1936.

We agreed then in the negotiations to give the Soviet Government the most-favoured-nation treatment, which was extended in the 1956 agreement and also in the proposed one. They agreed to buy from us some 5 million bushels of wheat. Before that agreement could be ratified World War II broke out and nothing came of it. I might mention in connection with this, for I think it is of some interest, that at that time Canadians had been buying from Great Britain a considerable quantity of anthracite coal. A paralyzing strike of the miners in Wales developed, and as a consequence when I had negotiations with Russia we had agreed that the embargo on Russian coal would be removed and we proposed to buy from them something like 200,000 tons of anthracite coal. The Canadian Government could not by itself buy the coal, but I think the arrangement contemplated at the time was that the business should be handled by a coal firm in the city of Montreal. Whether before the war broke out any importations of Russian coal resulted, I am not sure.

It may be of passing interest that the two Soviet officials with whom I conducted negotiations were the commissar for Foreign Trade and the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs. I regret to say, since I had very pleasant relations with them, particularly with the Commissar for Foreign Trade, that about a year after that, among the 20 men who were charged with treason were these two gentlemen whom I had known so well, and that both were convicted and in due course executed.

In 1956 a new agreement was made, which is now being renewed with a very slight change. It gives, as I have already said, the most-favoured-nation treatment. But the most important provision of all—and to me it seemed almost the only important provision—is that Russia agrees to buy at least $25 million in Canadian goods, half wheat, provided we buy half as much, namely, $12,500,000. If we buy less, then she will be committed to buy proportionately less. If we should buy only $2 million-worth she will have to buy from us only $4 million. And there is an escape even from that. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in the Commons that he regards that as quite a concession, because of the two-for-one clause. Without belittling it, I would point out that last year we sold Russia $12 million-worth of goods without any commitment whatsoever. Besides, as the minister himself pointed out, and as my honourable friend stated a moment ago, the Soviets had made the commitment of 400,000 tons of wheat they were supposed to buy each year.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Will the honourable gentleman permit a question? Would he mind telling me where he got that figure of $12 million in exports to Russia last year?

Hon. Mr. Euler: Yes. I got that figure from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. A total for wheat of $10,787,000, and for nickel, $1,207,000.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Oh, yes, that represents our sales.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Yes, and that was practically all.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, those figures are correct.

Hon Mr. Euler: Last year they should have purchased 400,000 tons of wheat, but they bought only about 200,000 tons. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his speech, as appears in the Commons Hansard of April 25 last, at page 3226, specifies certain provisions that were made:

> Provided trade develops in a satisfactory manner, in accordance with the agreement and the letters exchanged in Moscow.

That is one provision. The minister goes on to say:

> I was assured . . . that the Soviet Union would endeavour to make up this deficiency so there would be no question of the Soviet Union not having fulfilled the earlier obligation.

But even when they say that, they are putting in two provisos. So far as I am concerned, it seems that the statement has too many "ifs" in it to be of great value.

It might seem strange that Russia should buy wheat from Canada, for she has been a great producer of wheat herself and her production will be increased in the future. I am told, and I think it is correct, that the reason she buys wheat from Canada is that it would pay her better to buy our western wheat and ship it from the port of Vancouver to the eastern ports of Russia rather than to bring it in from the western parts of Russia on the railways to the Pacific coast. Under those circumstances I would think, with the growing of wheat in Russia proceeding at a rapid pace, we could hardly regard the Russian market for wheat as a very stable one. Even now she exports wheat to France, for instance.

Here is a rather interesting circumstance. The Financial Post of last week stated that France is now producing excellent hard wheat, which is Canada's specialty, and that she will soon be able to supply her own needs and perhaps enter into markets that we thought were strictly our own, that is, in the sale of hard wheat.

One of the difficulties in expanding trade with Russia is the fact that the Soviet Union produces almost the same things that Canada does. She has tremendous resources. She has large acreages of fertile land on which she can produce all kinds of crops. She has great deposits of metals and minerals, in which she can compete with us. She has oil and she has great forests. I think my friend from Vancouver (Hon. Mr. McKeen) will probably admit that even now the exports of lumber from Russia into the British market have prejudiced our own sales of lumber in that market. Russia has great expanses of forest that produce pulpwood, and I have no doubt that in due course of time, with her expanding economy and progress, she will be able to produce pulpwood and have mills to produce newsprint and become competitors of ours. She also has great manpower. And she can fix prices just as she pleases.

Last year the Soviets bought, as I stated before, about $12 million in goods from Canada. More than $10 million of that was in wheat and most of the balance was in nickel. These were practically the only commodities she bought from us. What more can we sell her? What more can we sell her that she does not produce herself? We bought from her last year goods to the very small amount of $2,291,000. Now, as has been stated, we are not making a definite commitment. We are expecting to sell to her $25 million-worth of goods, but she need not take that much unless we buy from her goods worth $12,500,000. Last year we bought goods worth only $2,291,000. What else can we buy from Russia? Well, we bought from her furs, which we also produce, in the amount of something over $1 million. I was looking over the list in the records, trying to find out something else we bought from her, but there was nothing else that amounted to—I was going to say a "hill of beans". I will give a few items: sugar candy, $652; cigarettes, $286; advertising and printed matter, $80; picture postcards, $1,375; plywood, $35,000. I am not saying this in a disparaging manner, but just to point out how difficult it is to find commodities which Russia can sell to us or we can sell to her and which neither country produces for itself. To my surprise I did not find in the list what I imagine the Russians produce in quantity, that is, vodka and caviar. Apparently they sold us none of either of these items.

In my view it is a mere truism that any agreement to extend export trade is desirable. In Canada particularly, where our prosperity depends so heavily on exports, it is absolutely necessary, and to that principle I make no exception. We should trade with every country where our products are saleable, whether it be Russia or China or any other in the world. Indeed, with the Outer Seven and the Inner Six threatening to shut us out of our European markets, our prosperity may in the future—the distant future, perhaps—depend, to some extent at least, upon selling our products to the hundreds of millions in the underdeveloped countries of the Far or Middle East.

I would also express this opinion while I am mentioning China as a possible market for us—perhaps it is not pertinent in this debate, but I think it is—that the time has come when we should recognize that Communist China with its 650 million people is China, and that little Formosa with its 10 million people is not. It is about time that we recognized the real China and dropped the absurd and unrealistic course of pretending that Formosa is China just because we are afraid of someone else. Let us cast off the leading strings that have been binding us because of what I might call our national inferiority complex.

Canada employs a well-trained body of trade commissioners, and they are a very capable body of men if they are as good as they used to be, and I have no doubt that they are. We have not had a trade commissioner in Russia for some time and I commend the Government for now appointing a Commercial Counsellor to our Canadian Embassy in Russia.

Here I shall make a comment, which perhaps I should call a criticism. These commissioners are supposed to explore opportunities for the sale of Canadian goods in various countries to which they are accredited, and they are doing a good job. They go from place to place in Canada, they meet with the manufacturers and other organizations, and they point out to them where in this country and that country there is a demand for certain goods which Canada could supply. Unless Canadian producers and manufacturers co-operate with them and take advantage of the opportunities which are pointed out to them for expanding trade, and do that with courage and enterprise, we certainly shall not derive the full benefit of the services of our trade commissioners. I am inclined to doubt to some extent the aggressiveness and progressiveness of our Canadian producers in this respect. In any case, the matter of getting these markets, of supplying these markets, is right up to the producer himself. Our Government can do only so much. It can open and smooth the way, but after all in a country like Canada, a country of private enterprise, the individual must go out and sell his goods. So far as Russia is concerned the situation is different; under a communist system the Government can buy whatever it likes and distribute it.

There are several other courtesies—I was going to call them amiable courtesies—to which my honourable friend has already referred in the resolution which may mean something or may mean very little. It is agreed that businessmen should visit the respective countries. Well, that has been done for some time now. They agree that representatives of the two countries should meet once a year, alternately in Ottawa and in Moscow, and there discuss any difficulties they may have or opportunities for extension of trade in both countries.

The minister in his speech in the Commons says that we can—I am not quoting his exact words, but I think this is the meaning—go to the Soviets and talk over with them our difficulties in cases where they invade markets that we think are our own. No trade agreement is required to give us the right to talk to them as we please, but it has its place and I have no objection to it. I merely say here that I wish we had some sort of a commitment from another certain country that it will not invade our markets unfairly to the disadvantage of our own producers.

All these things are to the good, as far as they go, but there is little sentiment in business and there is not much value in an agreement unless both parties obtain some benefits from it.

Now perhaps I have drawn too gloomy a picture with regard to our trade with the Soviets, but I did not intend to do so. There is no purpose in raising false hopes that we are going suddenly to expand our trade with the Soviets, for the simple reason that there are not enough commodities which we do not make in common to enable us to exchange much in the course of trade.

I welcome the agreement, because while in itself it is not a thing of tremendous importance it should tend to promote something of goodwill toward a country which too many people seem to believe is waiting and ready to destroy us. I support the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, for Hon. William R. Brunt, moved the third reading of Bill C-69, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1960 to the 30th day of June, 1961, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I have the honour to again present the annual amendments to the Income Tax Act. You will recall that last year the amendments contained some rather unpalatable tax increases, both in respect of individual taxpayers and corporations. I am happy to say that no tax increases whatsoever are involved in the present legislation, or at least no direct ones; and similarly, there cannot be said to be any tax deductions, except such as may ensue incidentally from the annual tidying up of the Income Tax Act which is done by these bills.

The present bill is of considerable length, containing as it does 33 clauses, and consisting of 23 and a fraction pages. As the bill will be dealt with in committee in the usual way, I do not propose to deal with it here section by section. I think that would be a complicating procedure because of its length and the technical nature of some of the amendments; further, the fact is that many amendments relate only to administrative procedures. Rather, I shall try to deal with the legislation in respect of broad generalities on the phases of tax law dealt with. I hope that honourable senators who want a detailed explanation of the various sections will attend the committee and obtain explanations there, because I propose to do as has been done in other years, to move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Every session, and this is no exception, there is a certain amount of tidying up of the act to do, resulting from loopholes that may appear during the year, resulting also from court decisions and from recommendations from outside bodies, such as the Canadian Bar Association and other bar associations, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Tax Foundation and so forth; and possibly also resulting from administrative experience throughout the year.

To begin with, I should say that most of the amendments are technical and administrative in character and cannot be said to have any effect whatsoever on revenue. They are made partly to assist in the administration of the income tax law, and in some instances they relieve against procedural practices that are needlessly onerous to the taxpayers. However, I will try to explain generally the main and most important changes effected by the bill.

The very first clause of the bill is of more than usual interest to this house, by virtue of the fact that it goes far to adopt the position taken by the house in regard to certain provisions of the Estate Tax Act, which, as I recall, was enacted two years ago. It refers to a superannuation or pension benefit, a death benefit or benefit under a registered retirement savings plan, received by a taxpayer in a particular year and which requires to be included in computing the aggregate net value of property passing on a death.

For example, a widow receiving a life annuity under the terms of her late husband's pension plan will be allowed to claim a deduction for the purposes of her income tax each year to compensate for estate tax that was paid on the value of the annuity. The purpose of the amendment is to alleviate the double impact of the two taxes. May I give a simplified example of how this adjustment might work? I do so because of the discussion we had on this very problem during the debate on the Estate Tax Act on its passage through this house a couple of years ago.

Suppose the aggregate net value of an estate is $100,000, of which one-half is comprised of the present value of a pension continuing to a widow. The total estate tax would be $6,200. The effective rate of estate tax on that pension would be 6.2 per cent. In such circumstances, 6.2 per cent of the pension payment received each year by the widow would be excluded from income for income tax purposes. In that way the double impact of the estate tax and income tax would be done away with.

Another important amendment, clause 5, has the effect of increasing the maximum amount that a taxpayer may deduct from income on account of medical expenses. The present and proposed limits are as follows,—and here, honourable senators, I have prepared a short table which, with the permission of the house, I would place on Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The table reads as follows:

	Present	Proposed limit
Taxpayer with married status	$2,000	$3,000
Taxpayer with single status	1,500	2,500
Husband and wife together	2,000	3,000
For each dependant	500	750
Maximum on account of dependants	2,000	3,000

Clause 6 amends section 31 of the act, which deals with the income of a non-resident from employment in Canada or from a business carried on in Canada. The clause is not for the purpose of making any change in what the law was deemed to be and as administered by the department. It is intended instead to clarify what the practice has been in regard to this type of income, and also to clarify the law respecting the calculation of foreign tax credit to be allowed to such person.

Another amendment, clause 8, provides for a tax credit of 13 per cent to individual taxpayers in the province of Quebec against their federal income tax for 1960 and 1961. This is merely a continuation of similar amendments enacted in each of the years 1958 and 1959 and, as is well known, results from the fact that Quebec imposes its own income tax on individuals.

Clause 11 of the bill amends the present rules for determining when one corporation is associated with another for the purpose of determining whether or not the corporation is entitled to be taxed on only 21 per cent on the first $25,000 of net income. At present the question of association of one company with another for the purpose of receiving this benefit is based on the ownership of 70 per cent, more or less, of shares. The purpose of the amendment is to replace this 70 per cent rule by a rule related to control of the corporations. However, this clause is not to have effect until after December 31, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Has the honourable senator any statement to make as to what might be included in the word "control"?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The rules set out in the act are somewhat lengthy, and unless the honourable senator desires me to consider them here I would prefer that further consideration be given in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, I was not asking that. I am well aware that the word "control" is used many times in the section you have referred to. What I was asking was whether you think you can define "control" by using the word "control"?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I realize it is a very difficult thing to work out, and I myself am somewhat concerned with the amendment and the effect of it. However, I would be glad to hear the honourable senator's comments on this clause when he speaks to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I will stop asking questions if they are bothering my friend, but my friend did say, or at least I understood him to say, that this new method was a method of control replacing the method of ownership of shares.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No; I said the proposed method is related to the question of control.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Rather than the ownership of shares?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, rather than the ownership of 70 per cent, more or less.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: What I am asking is: What are the badges, or what is the outward appearance, of "control" as it is used in the section we have before us if we eliminate the question of ownership of shares?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I presume that the control that is envisaged is the control of the company through ownership of 51 per cent of the common stock. That is at least one of the—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is the one that is removed.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not think it would serve any great purpose to enter into an argument in regard to the technical position of this clause in this house, and I suggest again that the preferable place to do that is in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I just wanted to know what it meant.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Another amendment, contained in clause 12, is for the purpose of carrying out the recent proposal concerning grants to universities.

The general rule in the Income Tax Act is that corporations may deduct from their federal tax otherwise payable an amount equal to 9 per cent of their taxable income earned in a province that imposes its own corporation income tax. This amendment provides that this figure of 9 per cent shall be increased to 10 per cent in those provinces which enter into the arrangement provided for in the Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements Act under which federal grants to universities are replaced by provincial grants.

A further amendment in clause 13 provides a less restrictive method than at present for computing credits for foreign taxes. This change will be primarily of interest to corporations operating branches outside of Canada.

One of the amendments, clause 27, increases the number of members of the Tax Appeal Board from five to six including the chairman, so presumably there will be an additional appointment of one member to the Tax Appeal Board.

Honourable senators, although there are several clauses that I have not referred to specifically, none of them affects the revenue to any considerable extent and most of them are tidying-up and administrative amendments.

I propose to move, when the bill receives second reading, that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the bill goes to the committee may I remind you of the discrepancy and the discrimination that exists in the taxation of our statutory expenses? In the House of Commons each member is allowed to have a tax-free amount of $2,000 for his travelling expenses, and here we have to pay the tax on it. It makes no sense. The members of the Senate should be on the same footing as the members of the House of Commons in regard to remuneration. For a time some of our colleagues, some of whom are dead, practised a kind of hari-kari with regard to the rights to which they were entitled. They were sacrificing their rights on the altar of the country, and they thought they were doing splendidly. As a matter of fact, honourable senators, I do not see why we should pay any more to the state than do our colleagues in the House of Commons. What is good for them should be good for us, and what is bad for us should be equally bad for them. I would have no objection to the tax on the travelling expense allowance of the members of the Senate if the allowance of the members of the House of Commons were taxed in the same manner, but as theirs is tax free there is no reason in the world why ours should be taxed.

Some people may say that the members of the House of Commons travel more than do the members of the Senate. Who knows that? Whoever made statistics about it? Nobody. What is a fact is that when we travel we meet many senators who drive their cars or who travel on the trains or on the airplanes, and we find they travel just as much as the members of the House of Commons in order to be able to attend to their parliamentary duties.

This, honourable senators, is not a speech. It is a letter to the Honourable the Minister of Finance and the members of the Government, and I hope it will be countersigned by my honourable colleagues who do me the honour of listening to what I have said about the curtailment by taxation of our travelling expenses.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. R. B. Horner moved the second reading of Bill C-64, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the original Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was passed in 1948 and, as many of you are aware, amendments to that act have come before the house from time to time since then. The powers under the original act expired after a period of three years and have been renewed from time to time. As those who have any experience in gold mining operations are aware, it is now necessary to extend the relief and assistance provided under the act to 1961-62-63 without any change in the present method of computing the amount of assistance payable.

In dealing with this bill we must take into consideration what the gold mining industry has meant to Canada down through the years. It has created an immense amount of labour and a great market for products of all kinds for those employed in the industry.

In the early days all prospectors mined for gold, and I think I am safe in saying that most of our valuable ore, including uranium, has been discovered as a result of gold prospecting. Down through the years, despite rising production and labour costs and higher costs of machinery and equipment, the price of gold has remained constant. As a matter of fact, since the price is payable in American currency, the price received in Canada has depended on the value of the American dollar, which has meant that in some cases it has been as low as $33 or $34 an ounce. I understand, of course, that should our dollar become less in value than the American dollar the gold price would increase, but that condition has not prevailed and the general condition has been that the gold mining industry has been faced with higher and higher production costs while having to sell gold without any increase in price.

Perhaps there are some questions honourable senators might wish to ask, but I would suggest that if the bill is given second reading it should be referred to the appropriate standing committee where departmental officials would be available to give a fuller explanation and to answer questions. I do think that with the understanding most honourable members have of the position of the gold mining industry and this amendment to the act to extend the relief and assistance provided thereunder for three years, it should hardly be necessary for me to give any further explanation at this time. If the bill is given second reading I intend to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I do not think there can be any objection to the bill that is now before us which, as my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) has said, is similar to bills for emergency assistance to the gold mining industry that we have had before us almost yearly for the past twelve years.

As he says, the purpose of this bill is to extend that assistance in the same form without any change for the next three years, to 1963. There is one minor alteration which he did not explain and perhaps which he could say a word to us about. I notice that in section 1 of the bill it is proposed to confine assistance in the case of gold that is exported from Canada and sold, to gold that is so exported and sold in the form of ore or ore concentrates containing gold. That is a restriction that did not appear in the preceding bill and now has been inserted in this new one. I do not know how important that restriction may be or how many classes of people it may affect who had previously had the right to benefit by this legislation. Perhaps my honourable friend who sponsored the bill could say a word about this.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You mean gold sold in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No. I am talking about the words added in subparagraph (b) of subsection (1):

in the form of ore or ore concentrates containing gold . . .

That is a restriction upon the kind of gold exported from Canada and sold, in respect of which the benefit of the act is available. I wondered what the reason for that was.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The explanation I received was that there is not a plant in Canada capable of economically extracting the gold from a particular type of ore in British Columbia, so the mine operators are allowed to sell it in the form of ore concentrate rather than refined gold.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Thank you.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, having spoken from time to time when amendments to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act have been before the house, and having had a much greater interest in gold mines on those occasions than I now have—

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Have you sold out?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: He took a handsome profit.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —I feel I should point out that this method of subsidizing the gold industry is not the most desirable method. But it appears to be a method which takes care of part of the increased costs of mining gold without encouraging too many people to go searching for more gold and to open up more mines, for the formula that is followed is that the assistance applies to, I think, two-thirds of the production, and in respect of that the assistance is in the form of two-thirds of the amount by which the cost of producing gold exceeds $26.50 an ounce.

Now, on that basis gold mines that are marginal may be able to continue in operation. I think that is the theory that was behind the legislation in the beginning, and it is still the theory, because communities have developed in these areas where there are gold mines, and those communities have acquired a way of living, and the farming communities and small manufacturing plants —secondary industry—in those areas look to that market for their products. I think it was felt in the original emergency legislation of 1948 that it was desirable in the national interest that some method should be devised, the least costly to the Government, which would take care of increasing cost and so permit these mines to continue operating. Notwithstanding that, numbers of them have shut down, but there are still quite a number operating which if they did not get this assistance would have to shut down. The basic problem is a very simple one. There is a fixed price for gold, and you have your increasing costs pressing against that ceiling, so you just reach a limit where on the economics of it you could not, without this assistance, operate many of the mines at a profit. Therefore this plan of subsidies is worked out to provide for some part of the cost over what was regarded as being a basic cost that a gold mining operation should be able to absorb.

I should point out that there are times when we are very happy to have gold mines. One of those times I recall, as I am sure many senators here do, was during the war years when we were very short of foreign exchange. In looking at our figures of gold production during that period it will be seen that it was most desirable and most important for us to have it to supplement our fast-dwindling supply of U.S. dollars so as to be able to continue our financing of purchases outside Canada that were needed here in order to live and to finance the war effort. So that gold mines are very good for Canada when Canada is in a position of extraordinary emergency. We must therefore keep gold mines as long as they can operate within the plan of this formula, because the problem is such that we now have many people in various areas depending on these operations for their incomes and living. The alternative is to try to move them somewhere else. We have an example of that kind in the Elliot Lake episode. It is highly desirable that within reasonable limits of cost we should keep these communities settled and keep these operations going. I am sure that is the purpose behind the continuance of this measure for another three years.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, if I may be allowed, I should like to say that I have before me an explanation of this bill which was given to me by the Mineral Resources Division of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. It reads as follows:

> A second purpose of the bill is to amend the wording of subsection 1 of section 3 of the act to clarify a point in administrative procedure. The amendment of subsection 1 of section 3 is intended to ensure the maintenance of the policy of the Government to pay assistance on gold boullion only when it is sold to the Royal Canadian Mint and not on gold boullion that is exported and sold elsewhere. Assistance will continue to be paid on gold exported as contained in ore or concentrates which cannot be economically treated in Canada.

That is the question I was endeavouring to clear up.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Horner, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. F. W. Gershaw, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-470, for the relief of Shirley Edith Rich Henry.

Bill SD-471, for the relief of Helene Lepine Greig.

Bill SD-472, for the relief of Marion Adelaide Smith Berube.

Bill SD-473, for the relief of Sheila Ethel Mitchell Martin.

Bill SD-474, for the relief of Margaret Hunt Tibbo.

Bill SD-475, for the relief of Simone Laramee Desroches.

Bill SD-476, for the relief of Ethel Bannister Thomas.

Bill SD-477, for the relief of Leo Antonio Gianfrancesco.

Bill SD-478, for the relief of Mary Spalton Humphries.

Bill SD-479, for the relief of Lise Des-Rosiers Eccles.

Bill SD-480, for the relief of Nicola Salvatore Veri.

Bill SD-481, for the relief of Noreen Elizabeth Cassidy Pineo.

Bill SD-482, for the relief of Marie Therese Barolet Cayer.

Bill SD-483, for the relief of Iris Nellie Armstrong Wedge.

Bill SD-484, for the relief of Lucien Carbonneau.

Bill SD-485, for the relief of Peter Borbely (Annulment).

Bill SD-486, for the relief of Joseph Pierre Claude Aubin.

Bill SD-487, for the relief of Vladimir Ignatjev.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this order for resuming the adjourned debate stands in my name. May I ask permission of the house to allow the name of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) to be substituted for mine? I understand he wishes to go on tomorrow or Thursday, and I am not ready to proceed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not relinquishing your rights?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No; I retain my rights to speak after the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BILL, 1952

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the Order:

Second Reading of Bill C-71, intituled: "An Act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952".—(Hon. Senator Aseltine).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand, and that it be proceeded with as the first item on the Orders of the Day at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 29, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the National Librarian for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 13 of the National Library Act, Chapter 330, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report for 1959 on the Radioactive Fallout Study Program. (English text).

Resolutions of the Canadian Bar Association and Correspondence between the Canadian Bar Association and the Department of Justice, with reference to the retirement of Judges at the age of seventy-five years. (English text).

JUDGES

DOCUMENTS RE AGE OF RETIREMENT TO BE PRINTED IN MINUTES

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Brunt:

That the resolutions of the Canadian Bar Association and the correspondence between the Canadian Bar Association and the Department of Justice with reference to the retirement of Judges at the age of seventy-five years tabled this day be printed as an Appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

Honourable senators, on June 21 I stated, as reported at page 837 of Hansard, that from 1936 to the present time there have been eight submissions from the Canadian Bar Association concerning the retirement of judges at the age of 75 years. I now find, and as honourable senators will see from the material which has been tabled and which will appear, if the motion is carried, as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day, that there have been, in fact, eleven submissions on this question.

Motion agreed to.

ESTATE TAX BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-65) intituled: "An Act to amend the Estate Tax Act", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-65, to amend the Estate Tax Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-64, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. White, for Hon. Mr. Horner, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, had considered Bill C-70, respecting the International Development Association, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, had considered Bill C-74, to amend the Customs Tariff, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-73, to amend the Excise Tax Act and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with the following amendment :

Page 6: after the line reading: "Maple syrups; corn syrup; table syrups; molasses;" insert a new line as follows: "Margarine;".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be now adopted.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, in amendment, that the said report be not now adopted, but that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole presently.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I assume the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) proposes to refer the matter to a Committee of the Whole now?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know what "presently" means, then.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought probably on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then "presently" means next Tuesday?

The Hon. the Speaker: A very broad interpretation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If "presently" means next Tuesday, I have no objection.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Hayden, with leave of the Senate, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien, that the report be now adopted.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Brunt, that the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-71 contains a brief amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

Honourable senators are familiar with that act. For some 30 years it has been the means of providing assistance to a large number of veterans, widows of veterans and orphans who were unable to provide for themselves the necessities of life because of financial difficulties, aggravated in most instances by advancing years. The original act of 1930 has been revised from time to time to ensure that its provisions are in keeping with changing conditions.

The number of recipients of allowances payable under the act has increased over the years, and at the present time there are some 68,000 in receipt of allowances. Of this number about 48,000 are veterans, and the remainder are widows and orphans of veterans. The annual cost of these allowances is approximately $62 million.

The act has heretofore provided that in order to be paid an allowance the recipient must be residing in Canada. Some few years ago this principle was modified so that recipients could be absent from Canada for a limited period, up to three months, and on their return receive payment of the allowance for the period of their absence. In 1957 the period of absence permitted from Canada in order not to disturb the continuity of the allowance was extended to six months in each calendar year. The requirement that the recipient must return to Canada in order to receive the allowance was, however, retained. During the year 1959, according to the records of the department, 265 veterans and 266 widows left Canada, but they all returned within the six-month period. Also during 1959 the number of allowances cancelled because of absence from Canada over the six-month period was 32, those being allowances for 23 veterans and 9 widows. I am advised by officials of the department that this is a fair average.

This bill would permit payment of allowances to veterans and widows who absent themselves for periods longer than the present maximum of six months. It is considered that this change will not materially increase the annual expenditure because these people would be receiving the allowance if they remained in Canada.

As honourable senators are aware, payment of this allowance is subject to a means test. To qualify, a male veteran must be 60 years of age and a female veteran 55 years of age. Also eligible are veterans and widows who are permanently unemployable because of physical or mental disability.

In my opinion the means test as applied under this act is somewhat severe. The amount that the veteran or his widow or orphan receives is set out in two schedules to the act. At the present time the maximum allowance of an unmarried veteran or a widow is $70 a month, and his total maximum ceiling of income, including the allowance, is only $1,080 a year. A married veteran living with his wife may receive $120 a month, and his ceiling of total income, including the allowance, is only $1,740. I am sure all honourable senators who are veterans will agree with me when I say that both the allowances and the ceiling certainly call for an amendment.

The limitations on what a veteran or his widow may own are also somewhat severe. A veteran may be the owner of a dwelling house, not exceeding $8,000 in value; if he is married he is permitted to have personal property to the extent of $2,000; and if single, personal property to the amount of $1,000. He is also allowed to have interest income not exceeding $25 a year, and he is entitled to certain casual earnings.

I would point out that each year a veteran or a widow who receives an allowance under this act has to complete, certify by affidavit and file a form sent from the department on which is listed in the most careful and detailed way every possible check on income.

Honourable senators will recall that recently we passed in this house an amendment by which old age pensioners will be entitled to draw their pensions and reside outside Canada. If old age pensioners, who are in good circumstances, are entitled to that extension, no one would disagree with me when I say that the veterans are more than doubly entitled to any allowance or assistance in that respect.

It has come to the attention of the department over the years that a number of veterans and widows who have qualified for the allowance and now have to live in Canada find it desirable for reasons of health to be with their families who live outside the country for longer periods than the act now allows. The families of many of these persons reside in the United Kingdom or the United States, and the pensioners are anxious to spend their declining years with their families. However, they do not want to be a burden to them; they feel they would like to pay their way. If this amendment passes they will have the benefit of receiving their allowances outside Canada. It was with this thought in mind that this proposed amendment was brought forward. This bill will permit the payment of allowances to veterans and widows who absent themselves for periods longer than the present maximum of six months.

It is further provided that in order to receive payment of an allowance a recipient need not return to this country. In order to ensure that this flexibility of residence may apply to bona fide Canadians and not to those persons who may have lived for many years in other countries, the bill provides that in order to continue to receive an allowance outside Canada a recipient must have resided continuously in Canada for at least 12 months before his departure. This provision is a reasonable one as it will continue to make the allowance available to the veterans and widows for whom it was originally intended.

Honourable senators are aware, as I mentioned before, that the people who receive this allowance are subject to a means test. The maintenance of this principle outside Canada will of course introduce administrative problems. However, the necessary arrangements are now being worked out by the War Veterans Allowance Board. It is proposed that before any recipient leaves Canada he will be fully acquainted with all the matters relating to the continuance of payments while he resides elsewhere. The board wishes to ensure that no recipient shall be under any misapprehension with respect to the continuance of the means test and the necessity of providing the board with full information on any changes in marital status or other related circumstances.

In the 1957-58 session this act was amended to provide, among other things, that Canadian residence requirements under the act for a former member of the forces of His Majesty or His Majesty's allies or associated powers be reduced from 20 to 10 years where the service was in any war concluded on or before August 31, 1921. This seems an appropriate opportunity to establish a corresponding Canadian residence qualification for those who, during World War II, were members of His Majesty's forces or allies, in order that they may be entitled to allowances under the act on a basis similar to that now available to veterans of earlier wars.

The final section of this bill provides that the act shall come into force by proclamation. The reason for this is that the allowances are paid on a monthly basis, and it is intended that the act will come into force on August 1, 1960, so as to give the Department of Veterans Affairs a little time to set up the necessary administrative machinery.

I might advise honourable senators that this bill was considered by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of the House of Commons, where it received the approval of the entire committee. At that meeting a delegation from the Canadian Legion, headed by Mr. D. L. Burgess, the immediate past president, presented a brief. In speaking of the bill we are now considering, he made this comment, as reported at page 268 of the record of the committee:

> We would like at this time to commend the Government in respect of the amendments contained in this bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. We believe that the result of these changes will be of considerable benefit to many recipients.

If the bill receives second reading, and it is the wish of honourable senators, I shall move that it be referred to our Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. If honourable senators have any questions or if I can supply any information, I shall be happy to do so.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am in complete accord with the provisions of this bill. I only wish it had gone further and made the benefits available to others who are entitled to them.

I shall have several representations to make to the department when the bill is before the committee, and therefore I am glad that the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. White) proposes that it be referred to committee.

There are still a number of persons who rendered valiant service to our country during both world wars who continue to be deprived of the benefits of this legislation. I am sure my honourable friend will not object if I say the legislation was brought into Parliament and put on the statute books by a former Liberal administration, and that it was, if not sponsored, at least wholly supported by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who has always taken a great interest in veterans' affairs.

I am glad this bill is before us because it brings veterans' allowances in line with pensions generally. A week or so ago we passed in this house an amendment to the Old Age Security Act whereby those who have attained the age of 70 years and have resided 25 years in Canada after the age of 21, may reside elsewhere and continue to receive the old age pension. The provisions in this bill are not exactly the same as those in that measure, but this bill does provide that those who served in either or both world wars may now leave this country and receive their allowance. It would be a gross oversight, and in my opinion a gross injustice, if this benefit were not given to the veterans, after having been extended to old age pensioners generally. Therefore, the bill will receive my full support.

The honourable senator who introduced this bill and who explained it so clearly pointed out that he thought the provisions should be more generous. I will go along with him in that respect. I also feel that deserted wives, who receive no consideration whatever under the provisions of the act, deserve consideration. At the present time, if a man in receipt of a war veterans allowance deserts his wife and family he continues to get the allowance while his wife and his family get nothing. Is that fair, honourable senators?

Reference was made a minute or two ago to the schedules to the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952. I call attention to schedule A, section 1 (d), which states that a married veteran not residing with spouse, and without child or not residing with child, is entitled to $70 a month. No matter whether his wife deserts him or whether he deserts her, he gets $70 a month.

Then, under the same schedule in section 3 (c) a married veteran not residing with spouse and residing with child—that is to say, a married veteran who is not living with his wife but who is living with one child—is entitled to $120 a month. Of course, if his wife has deserted him there can be no complaint, but if the veteran has deserted his wife and is living alone and his wife is residing with the child, he will get his $70, and the wife will get nothing.

That is my complaint, honourable senators, and I think it is something which the department should look into. Further consideration should be given to it. Why should a man be able to desert his wife and, if he takes one child with him, get $120 a month, whereas if he deserts his wife and leaves the child with her he gets $70 and his wife and child get nothing?

There is a provision in the Pension Act under which the amount of the cheque can be divided if a husband and wife are not living together, and a portion can be paid to the wife for her support and the support of her child. For some reason or other that provision is not in the War Veterans Allowance Act, and I hope that when this bill is before the committee we shall have an explanation of why it is not. I am sure that most honourable senators will support me when I say that the deserted wife of a war veteran who is receiving the war veterans allowance should receive much more consideration than she is getting at the present time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

RAILWAY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-61, to amend an act to amend the Railway Act.

He said: Honourable senators, when this bill was being considered on second reading a few questions were asked with respect to such things as accidents and injuries, and I undertook that when I moved third reading of the bill I would, if at all possible, give honourable senators all the information that was requested. Honourable senators will find those questions in Hansard of June 23.

The Board of Transport Commissioners does not know of any collisions which have occurred between a motor vehicle and a train bearing reflective markings; neither has it received any report of a collision having been averted by the presence of such markings.

Every collision at a level crossing involving personal injuries is investigated by the board in order to ascertain the cause of the collision. Where the board considers that the crossing should have protective devices, it conveys its views to that effect to the city, town, municipality or Department of Highways which has jurisdiction over the highway. If no objections are received, the board issues an order for installation of protective devices. If objections are received, the board considers them and makes such order as it thinks best under the circumstances.

The other, and more frequently used, method is an application requesting protection at a crossing. The request may be initiated by an individual, a coroner's jury or other party, but in most cases it is made by the highway authority. Each such application is investigated by the board and determined on its merits.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL TORONTO TERMINALS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I thought order No. 8, for the second reading of the Canadian National Toronto Terminals Bill, would follow order No. 2 on today's Order Paper. It was at the top of the Order Paper at the last sitting, and I asked that it stand until today. This is another Government bill which has to go to committee, where officials of the railway company probably will be present. On that account I shall appreciate it very much if honourable senators will allow the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), who will explain this bill, to go ahead with it today so that it may be sent to committee early next week.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill C-72, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the city of Toronto.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like, first of all, to thank you for giving me the privilege of proceeding with the motion for the second reading of this bill at the present time.

Honourable senators, this bill is entitled an Act respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the City of Toronto. The proposed facilities will consist of an automatic electronic hump freight marshalling yard which will have a length of approximately 3½ miles and a width of one-half mile. This yard will be located in the township of Vaughan and will be serviced by two access lines. The one from the east will branch off from the present C.N.R. line near Pickering, and the one from the west will join into the Oakville subdivision of the C.N.R. near Malton. As presently planned these two access lines will total approximately 34 miles in length. In addition the project includes a diesel shop, car repair shop, cleaning facilities and various other related services, and the cost of construction of all these facilities is estimated at $87 million.

It is a well-known fact that the present freight terminal facilities in the Toronto area are greatly overtaxed and for a number of reasons these facilities in their present location cannot be expanded.

Accordingly the management of the railway believes that the construction of the proposed marshalling yard and these facilities in what is now open country outside the limits of the City of Toronto is the proper solution with respect to the expansion of freight terminal facilities in that area. The management has come to this decision not only after a study of the present conditions but also after a study of the foreseeable needs of freight traffic for the next 20 to 25 years in and about the City of Toronto.

In the course of its studies the railway also found that if it proceeded with the enlargement only of its present facilities the expenditure would be just as heavy as the cost of this project and no marked improvement would take place in the handling of freight cars.

Moreover, it should be pointed out that this particular project is an essential part of a general program initiated by the Canadian National Railways with respect to yard construction which is now well under way at various points throughout the entire system in Canada. All of this has been undertaken with a view to improving the operating efficiency of the system as a whole. The full benefits to be derived from the capital investment which is being made in the other locations throughout the system will not be fully realized until the Toronto marshalling yard and access lines have been completed.

The railway proposes to commence its construction program during the present year and hopes to have it completed during the year 1964.

As I have stated previously, the estimated gross capital expenditure for the project is $87 million. However, from this amount there should be deducted a sum of between $5 million and $6 million which represents the estimated approximate salvage value of property which will become surplus as a result of the construction of the new marshalling yard and other facilities. This property is located within the boundaries of the City of Toronto proper. Furthermore, I am advised that the ultimate annual saving in operating expenses is estimated to be approximately $7 million. All honourable senators will realize that this represents more than a fair return on the investment.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Did my honourable friend say the annual saving?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, the annual saving. That is the information given to me. However, I think I ought to mention several additional savings and benefits which it is expected will accrue to the Canadian National Railways. These savings and benefits are difficult to assess in terms of exact figures, but I am advised that they may amount to several millions of dollars.

First of all, the reduction in the handling time of freight cars should substantially improve freight deliveries. Shippers will thereby receive better service and therefore will be more apt to increase their shipments over the railway.

Secondly, there will be a considerable reduction in terminal delays, and this again will assist in improving the service.

Thirdly, the establishment of this marshalling yard should accelerate the opening up of large new industrial areas, which areas will have railway service readily accessible as a result of the construction of the new marshalling yard and the new access lines.

In order to finance construction of the entire project this bill provides authority for temporary loans to be made by the Government to the Canadian National Railways, and further for the Government to guarantee the securities which the railway will eventually issue. In clause 5 of the bill a ceiling of $100 million is placed upon the loans and the guarantees to be given by the Government. The amount of $100 million represents roughly 17½ per cent over the estimated cost of the project. That is put in there for the purposes of providing a cushion just in case the estimate of $87 million is too low.

The Government feels this measure is a desirable one from the point of view of correcting a very congested situation which exists today with respect to the freight service in and about Toronto and for the improving of the service to be given by the Canadian National Railways.

I suggest, however, that in addition the project deserves special encouragement as one which is designed to improve the operating efficiency and economy of the entire Canadian National Railway system and which will result in a benefit to the population as a whole.

Honourable senators, when the bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications, at which I would hope to have present Mr. N. J. MacMillan, Q.C., Executive Vice-President of Canadian National Railways, Mr. J. L. Cann, Project Director, who is in charge of the entire project, and Mr. J. D. Hayes, General Superintendent of the C.N.R. for the Southern Ontario District. I hope they will be present to give evidence and answer questions.

If honourable senators desire to learn more about the project before the bill is examined in committee I would refer them to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 23, of the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines of the other place. Those proceedings contain 40 pages of evidence given before that committee, and I think every possible aspect of the entire project is covered there.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I suggest to my honourable friend that it would be very useful if a large-scale map of the Toronto area could be displayed when this bill is before our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will keep that in mind, but may I point out to honourable senators that in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 23, of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Railways and Canals and Telegraph Lines, dated June 14, 1960 they will find a map at the back. However, I shall speak to C.N.R. officials who will be coming to attend the committee meeting and ask them to bring a large-scale map.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator inform us whether any objections had been taken by the township of Vaughan to the placement of this hump yard in that vicinity?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In the original plan the C.N.R. desired to place the marshalling yard rather close to the village of Concord, I believe in the township of Vaughan. There were objections to this, so the railway took, I believe, 25 people from the township of Vaughan down to look at a marshalling yard which the Pennsylvania Railroad has in the state of Pennsylvania. When they arrived they found that a model town had been built almost up to the marshalling yard and that the yard operated in a very quiet manner. Nevertheless, the residents of the village of Concord felt that the marshalling yard should be moved farther west, and I understand the railway has moved it a distance of between 2,100 to 2,500 feet farther west than the original location. I further understand that all the objections which were raised by the Planning Board Council and the various ratepayers' associations in the township of Vaughan have been satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator tell us what will be the avenue for trucking from the yard down to the city?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes. The yard passes across Highway 7. Part of it is north of Highway 7 and part of it is south of that highway. Trucking can go along Highway 7 either over to Highway 400 and then in by Highway 401, or it can go east and then down Keele street or Jane street or Bathurst street.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: West?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, yes, one of them is west—Dufferin or Bathurst or Yonge street. I understand that the main purpose of this yard is for the handling of full carloads to marshall them into trains, but nevertheless facilities will be there to handle local freight by trucks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will the honourable senator tell us if there were other objections than those which he stated came from the township of Vaughan? Apparently the proceedings in the committee of the other place were quite protracted, and I cannot understand why this should be so if there were not other objections.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No doubt there were objections from other people and individuals. There were many objections, because when a project like this is undertaken certain people lose their homes, which are expropriated. People do not want a thing like this close to their homes, so no doubt there were many objections when this matter was heard by the committee. No matter where they put it, the railway company would have objections. It feels it has the proper location, but there are objections to it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-470, for the relief of Shirley Edith Rich Henry.

Bill SD-471, for the relief of Helene Lepine Greig.

Bill SD-472, for the relief of Marion Adelaide Smith Berube.

Bill SD-473, for the relief of Sheila Ethel Mitchell Martin.

Bill SD-474, for the relief of Margaret Hunt Tibbo.

Bill SD-475, for the relief of Simone Laramee Desroches.

Bill SD-476, for the relief of Ethel Bannister Thomas.

Bill SD-477, for the relief of Leo Antonio Gianfrancesco.

Bill SD-478, for the relief of Mary Spalton Humphries.

Bill SD-479, for the relief of Lise Des-Rosiers Eccles.

Bill SD-480, for the relief of Nicola Salvatore Veri.

Bill SD-481, for the relief of Noreen Elizabeth Cassidy Pineo.

Bill SD-482, for the relief of Marie Therese Barolet Cayer.

Bill SD-483, for the relief of Iris Nellie Armstrong Wedge.

Bill SD-484, for the relief of Lucien Carbonneau.

Bill SD-485, for the relief of Peter Borbely (Annulment).

Bill SD-486, for the relief of Joseph Pierre Claude Aubin.

Bill SD-487, for the relief of Vladimir Ignatjev.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

INCOME TAX BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson for the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, regretful though it may be, it is now time to return to the business of tax collecting after my honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has had the opportunity of carrying you on a program of expenditures. Of course, as we know, it is always easier and more enjoyable to spend money, especially if we do not feel too clearly that we are contributing to those expenditures, as we do when the tax collector comes around and exacts a portion of our income. Yet however happy you may have felt over this program, we now have to come to the reality of how the money is provided for these various things that are done. May I say at the outset that I do not propose to deal with all the amendments which are contained in the bill before us. Some of them are so matter of fact and a few are expressed so clearly that we do not need to spend much time on them. Whatever the formalities are, we shall get them in committee. A few of the amendments involve some change of principle, and I thought I should discuss those for a few moments.

Since this seems to be the hunting season so far as suggestions regarding income tax are concerned—and one was made here last evening—I have one to propose now before I get down to the business of the meeting, and that is that some consideration should be given to this fact. At any time when the taxpayer is indebted to the Government for income tax and he does not pay it as promptly as he should he is charged interest, and at any time when he has overpaid in accordance with the provisions in the statute he is entitled to a refund, plus interest, but the interest rate on the refund is substantially lower than the interest rate charged against him for not paying as promptly as he should.

Another aspect that has struck me as being unfair is that when we introduced the system of instalment paying of taxes during the war—the Ruml Plan, I think it was called—the taxpayer in certain categories other than salaried employees was required to estimate his income, and therefore his tax, for the year and to pay by instalments in four quarters, and any balance on April 30 of the next year. Well, conceivably, a man in almost any profession may find himself in periods during the year when business is slack and therefore income is not as great as at other times of the year. So when he makes an estimate or if he bases his income tax for the current year on what it was last year he is at some stage, as a result of estimating for the whole year, prepaying a tax which, if it were collected exactly on the amount of income he had earned in that period, would represent a substantial overpayment. The effect of it is of course that the Government is getting the use of the taxpayer's money for that period of three months, six months, nine months and twelve months whereas formerly taxes were paid on the 30th of April of the year following the taxation year.

I suggest for the consideration of the Government that thought should be given to that point if this method of instalment payment of taxes is going to be with us for all time, as I would think it is. I think it has many advantages; it is not quite so painful having to pay in four instalments as it would be if you had to pay the lump sum on the 30th of April in the following year. I think in fairness to the taxpayer he should receive some consideration for providing the money for the use of the Government on the basis on which he does. Now, remember, if I estimate my tax for the current year rather than take the basis of the previous year's income and tax, and my estimate is low because, perhaps, the fourth quarter is much better than I anticipated, I find when I get my assessment that I have been assessed interest because the instalment payments regularly due over the period of the year have not conformed percentagewise to the total of tax that at the end of the year can be determined on the basis of my full year's income.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is it not a fact that if you base the estimate on your previous year's income and pay instalments accordingly, and your current year's income proves to be much higher, no penalty is imposed for underpaying your tax each quarter?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes. Likewise, if I pay on the previous year's income and my income in the current year is less I have lost the use of a certain amount of money for the year.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right, but in the other case you have the use of the extra money.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Now, may I come to what I call the business of the meeting.

There are certain sections of the bill that I propose to deal with, and the first is section 1. This brings in some aspects of the estate tax and succession duty that may be paid on a pension benefit or a death benefit or a benefit under a registered retirement savings plan, and it proposes, on a formula which I shall explain, to say that some portion of the annual payment by way of pension that may be received will not be regarded as income in that year by the person so receiving that benefit. I think it is intended to be some sort of compensation to meet the objections which were taken very strenuously in the Senate and in the Senate committee when the Estate Tax Bill was before us several years ago. You will remember that at that time an amendment was proposed and carried here, and the bill with that amendment was presented to the other house. The other house refused to accept it, and in the interest of securing an Estate Tax Bill which in so many ways was better than the existing Succession Duties Act the Senate did not insist on its amendment. But the compensation that is provided in this section does not go the whole way. If you recall the amendment which was made to the Estate Tax Bill—which, as a matter of fact, was moved by the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) in 1958—it provided that in the case of the valuation of a pension on which in the process of building up that pension the income tax on contributions by the employee to the pension fund were deferred, in arriving at a basis for valuation of that pension at the time of death of the person on whose death the pension would be payable there was inherent in the valuation the element of income tax which would have to come out of that as well as the value of the benefit itself. Our amendment was designed to remove the element of income tax before establishing the valuation of that pension.

To some extent there is compensation in this section of the bill in recognition of that factor. What this bill proposes is this formula, that you determine the amount of the estate tax that is payable or is included in your total of estate tax because of this benefit, and then you determine also the amount of succession duty in the province that is referable to the value of this benefit that has been included for succession duty purposes. You add the two of them together and then you put them over the value of the benefit and you get a fraction, and then you apply that fraction to each annual payment that is received by the beneficiary of that pension. If the fraction should happen to be one-sixth, and the annual payment was $600, then there would be one-sixth of $600 that would not be regarded as income in that year, and therefore the income that the taxpayer would have to account for on that very rough illustration would be $500 instead of $600.

I should point out that while that is aimed at relieving or compensating for having imposed an estate tax and succession duty on the valuation of a benefit, an element of tax which must be paid over the years, it still does not deal with the difficulty that we felt existed. That difficulty was that the estate is called upon to pay an estate tax on the valuation of a benefit or of a pension which has built into it at that time an income tax liability as well as the value of the money that will be received and kept by the person entitled to it. All it does is to give back in each year as long as the pensioner lives a portion represented by this formula as some refunding, I suppose, of the amount of estate tax and succession duty that was added by reason of the basis of valuation that is prescribed in the Estate Tax Act.

You will remember that in the Estate Tax Bill which we had before us last week there is a provision that goes a very short distance. All it does is to provide for revaluation and possible refund of estate tax if there is a change in circumstances within a period of four years. An example would be the remarriage within that period of a widow who was entitled to a pension that had been valued on the basis of her life expectancy, a pension, say, of the type that would be terminated as far as she was concerned, if she remarried within a period of four years. That amendment indicates the proper spirit. I might say, though, that it indicates a very slow and plodding approach to the problem, and it is not the kind of approach that is likely to provide very much relief. The only thing I can say is that it seems to indicate a good intention. If the department keeps that up, maybe some time we will stand up here and say, "Well, you finally got through—slowly, it is true—and we commend you for finally recognizing the merit in the proposal that we made when the bill came in in 1958."

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, we are making progress.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes; even the turtle does.

Next I want to refer very briefly to section 6, because this bill is going to committee. For the life of me at the moment I have difficulty in understanding why the change is made in the language. On the right-hand side of page 5 of the bill you will see the wording of this section in the present act. I may say this is dealing with taxable earnings in Canada of a non-resident person. It reads as follows:

(a) the part of his income for the year that may reasonably be attributed to the duties performed by him in Canada or the business carried on by him in Canada,

The amendment proposed is this:

his income for the year from all duties performed by him in Canada and all businesses carried on by him in Canada,

For the life of me I cannot appreciate the difference in the language. I know some of the words are different and the order of presentation is different, but why that is done I cannot understand. If it is done only in the interest of having a more pleasing sentence, I do not think that is enough at this stage to justify a change in the income tax law and in the draftsmanship to which we have become accustomed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am always in favour of simplification.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Does my friend think one version is a simplification as against the other version?

The next section that I wish to deal with, in a more serious way, is section 11 on page 8 of the bill. This is a section on which I asked the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) a question last evening. This amendment proposes a change in the wording and in the basis of the principle for determination of what are associated companies.

Now, I do not like to weary you with this matter, but if you would look at the explanatory notes opposite page 8 you will see that the present law for determination as to whether or not one company is associated with another is set out. I should preface this by telling you that the reason for this is a provision in the income tax law under which a company may secure a lower rate of tax on the first $25,000 of income subject to tax. But in order to prevent the subdivision of a great many companies so that you would have many operations and many companies with incomes up to $25,000 or $50,000, an elaborate rule was worked out as to the conditions under which a company may qualify for the $25,000 of taxable income at a lower rate.

That indicates what is meant when the expression "associated companies" is used. And apparently this rule that was devised has been in the statute ever since that provision for a lower rate of tax was brought in some years ago. It was based on the ownership of shares held, in the main. As can be seen from the explanatory notes opposite page 8, the present subsection (4) reads:

(4) For the purpose of this section, one corporation is associated with another in a taxation year if, at any time in the year,

(a) one of them owned directly or indirectly 70% or more of all the issued common shares of the capital stock of the other, or

(b) 70% or more of all the issued common shares of the capital stock of each of them is owned directly or indirectly by

(i) one person,

(ii) two or more persons jointly, or

(iii) persons not dealing with each other at arm's length one of whom owned directly or indirectly one or more of the shares of the capital stock of each of the corporations.

I suggest, honourable senators, that this is exactly the kind of language that my friend, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) subscribes to. This is simple, this is direct, this is not confusing at all, and it is entirely objective. That is, you look at this set-up, and there it is, the rule of ownership. But what have we come into now with the proposed amendment?

This subsection is to be repealed. Section 11, which repeals subsection 4 of section 39 of the act, enacts a new subsection (4) as follows:

For the purpose of this section, one corporation is associated with another in a taxation year if, at any time in the year,

(a) one of the corporations controlled the other,

Now, what is the meaning of that? I asked my friend the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) last evening, and he seemed to be surprised that I should ask such a simple question on such a simple matter that appeared to be so clear. But what do they mean by "controlled"? Do they mean share control? Do they mean control by agreement? There are many different ways in which control may be had. There is also a type of control which is known as effective control, a well-known expression. That is to say, you may have less than 51 per cent, less than the majority of shares, and yet you can have effective control of a company, having regard to the number of shares that are out. You can sometimes have effective control with as little as 30 per cent of the shares of a company and year after year you can select your board of directors and run the affairs of the company. Therefore, I ask what does it mean?

I find the word "control" in relation to certain features of the Income Tax Act is defined. But in its definition it is tied into those certain features of the act, and I cannot look at the act generally to determine what is "control".

Then I go on to read these words:

(b) both of the corporations were controlled by the same person or group of persons,

I can understand that definition partially but not entirely, because the word "controlled" still bothers me.

If we go down to paragraph (d) we find the complication develops. We see, for instance, that two companies are associated companies if at any time during the year,

(d) one of the corporations was controlled by one person and that person was related to each member of a group of persons that controlled the other corporation, and one of those persons owned directly or indirectly one or more shares of the capital stock of each of the corporations.

It is a little more complicated. Then if we look at the definition of "related", which I find in section 139 (5) (a) of the present Income Tax Act, we see that for individuals it means blood relationship or relationship by marriage; but for corporations I find a whole list of rules set out, and they are more or less similar to the rules stated here. So I am still faced with the puzzle of trying to find out what this new language means in relation to its use in defining "associated companies".

If I may for a moment turn to page 9, I find a saving provision. That provision gives a little leeway, but it also leads to more confusion. My suggestion to honourable senators is, don't read it. I will try to explain it to you. I got lost a half dozen times part way through my reading of it. However, I think the effect of the saving provision is this: if, for instance, a bank has made a loan to an industrial company and is not too sure that the loan is going to be paid, or that the operations of the company are not being as well carried on as they should be, the bank then looks for more security, and the additional security it takes may be a transfer of ownership of shares. Now, if you did not have the saving provision, in those circumstances the bank and the industrial concern might be associated companies, and that would possibly present some complication.

So you have on page 9 a saving provision under which, in certain circumstances—even though the facts may fit the definitions in section 11 as to what are associated companies—it is specifically provided that a company which, in the circumstances set out on page 9, might be associated with another company, is not to be regarded in law as being associated. One of the purposes of the distinction is that as set out in subsection 6(b) on page 9 of the bill:

the chief purpose for which the controlled corporation was at the particular time so controlled was the safeguarding of rights or interests of the controller in respect of

(i) any loan made by the controller...

When you get down there you see what the exception is. But that exception only increases the extent and scope of the definition of the words "controlled" and "control".

In the interests of clarity, surely we should be able to work out some definition if the rule of control is to apply, and surely we can express it in simpler terms. I warn honourable senators who are lawyers that one effect of this proposed change in the law is that of reducing the share requirement, in order that two companies may be associated, from an ownership of 70 per cent of the shares to at least an ownership of 51 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Are you not stimulating litigation?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), as usual, has made a very interesting comment. It is quite likely that the effect of this may be to stimulate some litigation, which I am sure will be satisfactory to the Tax Appeal Board and our courts. It would give them an assurance of work, and it might also be of interest to lawyers. However, I am speaking in the interests of the taxpayer, and I think the taxpayer should have as clear a statement of the law as it is possible to give him. I think that when we are changing something that is so objective and so simple to something that has much broader implications we should try to achieve as great a degree of clarity as we can.

The next section I want to refer to is at pages 10 and 11 of the bill. It is section 13, and here again we have a simple change in language. This deals with amendments to section 41 of the act, and the title of that section of the act is: "Rules applicable to all taxpapers" and the sidenote is "Foreign tax deduction".

May I point out to you, honourable senators, that at the bottom of page 10 you will see the amending words underlined, being "any income or profits". If you look on the pages opposite pages 10 and 11 you will see what the law is at present. What is being done is to change the expression "the tax" to "any income or profits tax". That is being done in two places as set out in subsections (1) and (3) of section 13.

What the implications of that are I confess I do not know. Later on in the bill, on page 12, I find in subsection (7) of section 13 that I am supposed to get some enlightenment because a definition is given. Subsection (7) of section 13 reads:

A tax paid by a taxpayer to the government of a country other than Canada for a taxation year may, subject to prescribed conditions, be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to be an income or profits tax paid by him to the government of that country for the year.

What does that mean? What it says is that any income or profits tax that a person may pay to a government of some country other than Canada is an income or profits tax. Why change the words "the tax" which occur in the present statute in section 41 to the words "any income or profits tax"? If there is some purpose in making the change then certainly we should know of it. If it is a purpose that is likely to change any incidence of tax or is likely to reduce the amount of a foreign credit I think we are entitled to know, so that we can consider the implications and decide whether that is a proper thing to do in the circumstances.

The next amendment I want to speak about is contained on pages 13 and 14, in section 16. This is an amendment which I say, in all seriousness, is very, very puzzling. We have in the present Income Tax Act section 56, which is a provision under which a civil penalty may be imposed on all taxpayers who wilfully evade or attempt to evade the payment of income tax. The present section 56 is not set out in the bill, but I will read it so that you will understand the point I am making:

> Every person who has wilfully, in any manner, evaded or attempted to evade payment of the tax payable by him under this part for a taxation year or any part thereof is liable to a penalty, to be fixed by the minister, of not less than 25% and not more than 50% of the amount of the tax evaded or sought to be evaded.

You will notice that the significant words there are:

> —who has wilfully, in any manner, evaded or attempted to evade—

Section 16 of the bill that is before us proposes to add a subsection (2) to section 56, and that subsection (2) is to read in the following manner:

> Every person who, knowingly, or under circumstances amounting to gross negligence in the carrying out of any duty or obligation imposed by or under this act, has made, or has participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, a statement or omission in a return, certificate, statement or answer filed or made as required by or under this act or a regulation, as a result of which the tax that would have been payable by him for a taxation year if the tax had been assessed on the basis of the information provided in the return, certificate, statement or answer is less than the tax payable by him for the year, is liable to a penalty of 25% of the amount by which the tax that would so have been payable is less than the tax payable by him for the year.

How do you distinguish, honourable senators, between something done "wilfully" and something done "knowingly, or under circumstances amounting to gross negligence"? If it is done in circumstances amounting to gross negligence, or knowingly, the civil penalty is 25 per cent. If the evading is done wilfully in any manner, or is attempted, the penalty is 25 per cent to 50 per cent. What is the yardstick for determining when you apply subsection (1) and when you apply subsection (2)?

There is no standard formal definition of "gross negligence" under which we can safely operate. Many judges at different times have said that gross negligence is a very great degree of negligence, but how are you going to determine when there is gross negligence and when there is wilful evasion? Secondly, what is the difference between "knowingly" and "wilfully"? If I knowingly assent to a return which understates my income the circumstances would certainly have to be very greatly elaborated for the minister to be able to distinguish between "knowingly" and "wilfully", and to say that it was something done other than wilfully.

I recognize that there is language in section 16 which is more elaborate than the language in section 56 of the statute, but the end result in each case is that you end up by misstating the amount of tax.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Might I suggest that the word "wilfully" implies there is an intent to deceive. That is, the will to do it is there. That is the old law. The new subsection is apparently a provision in regard to any mistake that is made by a person who knows the facts, or who should know them, and who in some way misinterprets them or fails to add up a column of figures correctly, or does something of that kind, as a result of which he pays less tax than he is legally obliged to pay.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Stupidity at a premium.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, stupidity at a premium.

Something very questionable is being added here. It is quite right to impose a penalty on somebody who wilfully perpetrates a fraud on the department, but to punish a person who merely makes a mistake that he should not have made, unless he is grossly negligent, is a long step in the wrong direction.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am glad that my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) interrupted, for it just shows the complications that are likely to develop with respect to the interpretation of these words. My honourable friend immediately assumed that there is no distinction between negligence and gross negligence, but the bill uses the words "gross negligence". In looking up text books as to the interpretation of "gross negligence" I find, for instance, in Sanagan and Drynan's Encyclopedia of Words and Phrases—Legal Maxims, Canada, that in some Ontario cases the expression has been defined as:

> "Gross negligence" means that want of reasonable care, skill, and expedition which may properly be expected.

In the same volume I find another rather interesting approach, where it states:

> The courts are now resolved to ignore mere verbal distinctions between different degrees of negligence as defining the true measure of liability and to pay regard to the degree of diligence which the situation assumed by a person demands, rather than to his carelessness.

So you have that wide range of meaning, and I must conclude that adding the word "gross" is intended to point to an ultimate degree of negligence. I have difficulty in distinguishing between that ultimate degree of negligence and the doing of something wilfully. I know that in the Criminal Code the expression "knowingly" is very often used in relation to certain offences, and we have the wording that is well known to lawyers about mens rea being an essential element of the offence, and that has been freely interpreted at times as meaning "knowingly" and also "wilfully".

What I am directing the attention of this honourable body to is the difficulty that is going to be presented with regard to interpretation if you have two sections with this language. Obviously the taxpayer in trouble would be searching all the legal authorities, annotations and dictionaries to establish that what he did was gross negligence and not anything wilful, but the determination is in the hands of the minister who is administering the statute. How is that interpretation going to apply when he is looking at the meaning now proposed as against his present ability to apply it to the "wilfully" section when he has a range there of from 25 to 50 per cent?

Under the present section, which speaks of wilfully attempting to evade tax, what are the factors which influence the minister in one case to fix the penalty at 50 per cent of the amount of the tax evaded or sought to be evaded and in another case to fix it at 25 per cent? There must be a range of culpability that makes him decide that a particular case is not as bad as it could be and therefore he fixes the penalty at, say, 25 or 35 per cent.

When the minister has to set off against that another subsection which contains the words "knowingly, or under circumstances amounting to gross negligence" and under which the penalty is 25 per cent, my suggestion to this house in all seriousness is that the difficulties of interpretation are going to be such that it would be preferable to have one section which completely spells out the situation for a civil penalty. I am not questioning the propriety of having a civil penalty. It is already in the law and you have a range now of 25 to 50 per cent, but why bring in another section which confuses the interpretation?

There are several other sections in the bill dealing with personal corporations. They are ameliorating and qualifying and deal with non-resident investment corporations. I do not propose to take up your time to discuss them.

I think I should direct your attention to the fact that under section 29 of the bill, on page 20, some of the penalties are lightened in respect to failure to withhold tax. This section deals with three different kinds of situations. One is where an agent has received a payment on behalf of some non-resident entitled to the money. The obligation has been on the agent receiving that money to withhold a tax. This subsection now gives him justification for withholding it as between himself and the person who is entitled to the payment.

This section also provides that a person who has failed in his duty to withhold the tax on amounts going to a non-resident is liable to pay the tax on behalf of the non-resident, but the new subsection (5) gives him the right to demand repayment from the non-resident of any tax so paid. At the present time the penalty imposed on a person who has failed to deduct or withhold the tax on amounts paid to non-residents is 100 per cent of the amount that should have been deducted or withheld, but section 30 of the bill reduces the penalty to 10 per cent.

The last item I wish to talk about is section 33(5) of the bill, which is found at page 23. This section attempts to define income source. That sounds very complicated, but I should start off by telling you that this section owes its origin, I believe, to a case that recently went to the Supreme Court of Canada. The judgment upheld the position of the company as against that of the minister. The citation is Interprovincial Pipeline Company v. The Minister of National Revenue (1959) S.C.R. p. 763 and following.

To assist honourable senators in understanding this section, may I just take a few minutes to present the facts of this case?

The Interprovincial Pipeline Company owned and operated a crude oil pipe line running from Redwater, Alberta, to a point on the international boundary south of Winnipeg and from a point on the international boundary near Sarnia to a point near the City of Toronto. The connecting link in the United States was owned and operated by Lakehead Pipe Line Company Incorporated, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Interprovincial and having its head office at Superior, Wisconsin.

I understand the reason for this was that the United States requires pipe line companies, as well as other types of companies, to be corporations of that country.

The Interprovincial Pipeline Company had no office or place of business or permanent establishment in the United States and carried on no business there.

For the purpose of the construction of the pipe line Interprovincial raised all the capital, the greater part of which was borrowed from the public who purchased bonds and debentures.

Lakehead did no independent financing. It borrowed from Interprovincial and that company took from its subsidiary, that is, Lakehead, interest-bearing demand notes and bonds. Interprovincial also made certain investments in United States Treasury Bills pending the need for these funds for construction purposes. Consequently in the years 1950-54, inclusive, Interprovincial received substantial payments of interest in the United States from its subsidiary and the Treasury Bills. The United States withheld 15 per cent. This is their withholding tax which, under the convention, is the same as we have in Canada.

The question at issue was this: Was Interprovincial entitled under section 38(1) of the 1948 Income Tax Act to a tax credit for this withholding tax for these years?

The minister disallowed the deduction on the basis that Interprovincial had no profit from the receipts of interest from United States sources, having paid interest on its own borrowing to an amount equal to or in excess of these receipts and these interest payments having been recognized as deductible expenses.

Now, remember in that connection that Interprovincial borrowed the money in Canada with the obligation to pay interest in Canada, and did so. It lent this money to a United States subsidiary which used it for any purposes of payment and it paid interest to the Canadian company, but the United States company took a United States withholding tax off the interest. In the Supreme Court it was held that on the law as it stood at that time Interprovincial was entitled to a credit for the withholding tax because there was no statutory basis for the minister's saying that interest and profits were interchangeable words. Arising out of that I think you have this new section 139(1)(a), the purpose of which is to deal exactly with that situation and to have the right to a credit for withholding tax paid to another country on a right basis. You will notice the language of the section:

> For the purpose of this act,
> (a) a taxpayer's income for a taxation year from a business, employment, property or other source of income, or from sources in a particular place means the taxpayer's income computed in accordance with this act on the assumption that he had during the taxation year no income except from that source or those sources, and was allowed no deductions in computing his income for the taxation year except such deductions as may reasonably be regarded as applicable to that source or those sources and except such part of any other deductions as may reasonably be regarded as applicable to that source or those sources.

In effect, if this section had been in force at the time the Interprovincial case was on the go the minister's treatment of the question would have been the proper treatment, because what he was saying was: True, the Canadian company only had income by way of interest from the United States, but it had incurred some expenses in Canada that were reasonably referable to that source of income in the States, and therefore even though you paid withholding tax on the full amount of the interest in the States—because the United States does not recognize Canadian expenses as deduction from U.S. income —the United States income must be reduced by the amount of the expense that can be reasonably regarded as applicable to that income, and then the credit that you got is only the percentage of withholding tax and not the entire withholding tax paid.

I tried to work out a formula to illustrate that point and put it in writing just to illustrate how this thing works out.

Two things are comprised: section 41, which is the section dealing with foreign tax credits, and then section 139.

An example of the calculation of the foreign tax credit is as follows: Suppose "X" company has a net profit in 1960 of $90,000 from all sources. Of its revenue, $50,000 in interest is received from sources within a foreign country upon which a withholding tax of $7,500 is imposed. An additional $25,000 in dividends is received from a corporation in the foreign country more than 25 per cent of the voting stock of which is owned by the "X" company. A further $3,750 of withholding tax is imposed on these dividends. "X" company receives a further $75,000 in interest from sources within Canada. All its investments were acquired with the proceeds of a bank loan, the interest on which amounts to $60,000 annually.

In working out the foreign tax credit you find this. The foreign tax credit under section 41(1) is calculated as follows: Taxable income equals the revenue consisting of $50,000, plus $25,000, plus $75,000, making a total world income of $150,000. You subtract from that the interest expense as apportioned under the requirements of the statute, namely, $50,000. The world income is $150,000, as above, but as far as Canada is concerned only $125,000 of that is subject to consideration in Canada, as $25,000 of United States dividends is non-taxable in Canada. You put 125,000 over 150,000 and you find what is chargeable in Canada for the money that you borrowed, and that is deductible. For Canadian income purposes you subtract the $25,000 of United States dividends, because they do not bear any tax. So you then come to taxable income in Canada of $75,000, and you proceed to calculate your tax on that and you come up with a tax of $30,250. The amount that was paid in the United States withholding tax, except the tax paid on the dividends which you cannot take into your calculation at all, is $7,500.

Now you want to see whether under Canadian law you are entitled to deduct the withholding tax or some other figure. On the formula you take the foreign income minus the exempt dividends, that is, the foreign income of $75,000 less exempt dividend income from the United States, which is $25,000, and also the portion of the United States expenses $25,000, and you put that over world income, which is $150,000, minus $50,000, minus $25,000, and multiply it by $30,250, and you get $10,083. Therefore, your foreign tax credit being the lesser of $7,500 or $10,083, in this particular case you are allowed to take a credit for the withholding tax of $7,500.

I would call your attention to this, that the foreign tax credit diminishes as the numerator in the fraction I have illustrated above approaches zero. In other words, the greater the amount of expense that Canada can allocate to the United States income, the lower is going to be the amount of the foreign credit. Yet the only rule we have for determining it in the language used on page 23 of the bill, in subsection 5 of section 33, is:

> ...deductions as may reasonably be regarded as applicable to that source or those sources.

Now we see the extent to which the minister's interpretation went even before this change in the law was being proposed, because in the Interprovincial Pipeline case he said that the interest paid in Canada on the money borrowed in Canada was an item of expense that was referable to the income by way of interest received from the United States company by the Canadian company which lent that money. Now, how far does it go? Does this business of expenses that may be reasonably recorded as wholly applicable to that source cover all the various types of promotional expenses in Canada in relation to an operation that may be going on in Canada and the United States? Does it cover indirect expenses which may be partly allocable to the United States? I do not know. I have not enough information to be able to assess exactly what is intended to be the scope of this amendment. All I can do is to point out what I think are the risks inherent in it and to say that in the International Pipeline case we know the position that the minister said he had the right to take under the law. In that case he regarded Canadian expenses as being properly referable and allocable to United States income for the purpose of reducing that income and by doing that he reduced the income in the International Pipeline case to such an extent that income and expenditure balanced out, and therefore International Pipeline was entitled to no credit on the withholding tax paid in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Have you any observations to make as to the justice of that?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The observations I am making at the moment are addressed to the attempt to ascertain the scope of it and how far is it intended to go, and what are its ramifications. But as to the justice of it, I have found—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: "There ain't no justice".

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —I have found that justice in the abstract—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Careful, now.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —is not too moving a consideration in the question of the application of taxing provisions to income and to deductions. I think there are sources of income, and there are formulae worked out to get at an element of that.

It bothers me a bit to learn that a company in Canada borrows money, contracts to pay interest on it and then loans that money in the United States and receives income from it, but the income it receives is subjected to a withholding tax in the United States. In relation to operations which a Canadian company or individual might carry on elsewhere—say in the United States—I have the feeling that as a general principle of law the costs of that operation and of earning that income in the United States would be recognized as against his income in the United States; in other words, he would bring home his income and bring home his expenses. But to find that he has no expenses which are recognized in the United States so that they can be offset against United States income, to find that expenses in Canada are allocated for the purpose of determining what portion of foreign tax he is going to get credit for in Canada, indicates an extension of the principle and qualification of the rule, to the extent of the rate of Canadian tax he will be allowed as deduction in respect of taxes paid in the other country. That has always been put forward as being the general rule. But if you are going to import these artificialities, if you are going to create something as an expense of doing business in another country which does not appear in the balance sheet of the operations in that other country and is not reflected as a charge against income and a reduction of taxes in that other country, it is certainly going a long way on the road to artificiality, as I call it, in reaching out for income tax revenue.

For that reason I shall be much interested to get the explanations. I have indicated clearly for those who want to read what I think the difficulties are. The chief difficulty at the moment is that one is not able, in my opinion, from my reading of the section, to determine the scope or extent of application of the principle that seems to me embodied in this particular section.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, this bill has been very ably presented by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) and it has been very thoroughly and learnedly analysed by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), so my remarks will be brief.

I think I should say something about clause 1 of the bill. As the honourable senator from Toronto said, this clause deals with the same subject-matter that the Senate dealt with two years ago in its consideration of the Estate Tax Bill. At that time I moved an amendment to the bill for the purpose of eliminating a double tax on pensions and annuities, a duty on the estate under the Estate Tax Act and a tax under the Income Tax Act. At that time we made five or six amendments to the Estate Tax Bill, and all were accepted by the other place except this one amendment dealing with the taxation of pensions and superannuation benefits. Clause 1 of the Income Tax Bill deals with that same subject-matter, and my main purpose in rising is to compliment the Government, particularly the Minister of Finance and his taxation advisors, to the extent that they have now removed the element of duplication of taxation that was in our minds at that time.

The fact that it is being done under the Income Tax Act instead of under the Estate Tax Act, as the honourable senator from Toronto has pointed out, still leaves some anomalies, one might say, in so far as the double taxation feature is concerned.

I may recall that when the Estate Tax Act was before us it was apparent to the majority in this house that pensions were being taxed in full, at their full valuation, without any allowance being made for the fact that when those pensions were received by the widow or the other beneficiary, they were also going to be subject to an income tax. No allowance was made in the valuation for estate tax purposes for that liability. The Estate Tax Bill was the only bill before us, and the only way in which we could deal with the double taxation was to amend that bill. Our amendment went to the other place. It was rejected for three reasons. The first and apparently the primary reason stated was that the result of our amendment would be to create a discrimination in favour of a particular type of asset.

The fact that an amendment is now being made to the Income Tax Act, whereby an allowance is made against the income tax for the estate tax that has already been paid, means we were correct in our view that instead of there being a discrimination in favour of that class of asset there was actually then existing a discrimination against it, and this amendment before us now is for the purpose of eliminating that discrimination. Therefore, I think the Government and its taxation officials are entitled to be complimented for having found in the two years that it is possible to eliminate that discrimination to some extent, at any rate.

Now it is true that if one could find a way of dealing with this in the first instance when one is dealing with the estate tax, some of the objections which the honourable senator from Toronto mentioned would not arise. The way it has been done here is that year by year as the recipient receives his or her pension an allowance is made against the estate tax which has already been paid.

This does rough justice. In other words, the pensioner who does not live out his normal life expectancy does not receive back the full measure of benefits against the tax that has already been paid. On the other hand, the pensioner who lives beyond his life expectancy will receive back that amount and more. That of course is what happens under any taxation system where we have to deal with expectancy of life. One can only deal with citizens on an average basis, and consequently there will be injustices in individual cases. So a formula has been found to remove the discrimination through the Income Tax Act.

It seems to me a formula might also be found that would give at least as much rough justice, and probably be somewhat fairer to the taxpayer in determining his liability in the first instance when the estate tax is applied, instead of assuming that the pension is going to be paid in full, taxing it in full, and then in effect using the Income Tax Act to refund the tax.

It is as least within the realm of probability, I would think, as the estate taxation authorities gain experience with this method under the operations of the Estate Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, that a still better method may yet be found, possibly under the Estate Tax Act, for giving an even greater measure of justice than this bill affords.

Certainly, I think it only right, in view of the fact that the Senate took the stand it did two years ago, that we should acknowledge the action of the Government and of the Minister of Finance in proposing this amendment at this time.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, may I say a word on one phase of this bill, particularly with reference to clause 11, a provision in this bill which will change the initial basic rate of taxation of many of the smaller and lower-income corporations.

Companies have a lower rate of taxation on profits up to $25,000 and over that the rate heavily increases. Under the act as it now stands, where a controlling shareholder or an association of shareholders has a controlling interest of not over 70 per cent of the shares the lower basic rate applies. But, by the change, if a shareholder has a control of 51 per cent of the shares the profits of the company are, in effect and for the practical application of taxation, pooled with the company or companies which the majority shareholder and his associates also control. The smaller shareholders in those circumstances lose the benefit of the lower rate of taxation on the annual income up to $25,000.

Big corporations will not be materially affected by this change. But I think its effect would be unfair to small companies, and particularly to investors in locations where the smaller operations are carried on. To change the percentage of holdings from 70 per cent to 51 per cent would, I feel, be most unfair to the minority shareholders. In ordinary business practice somebody must of course control a company. But the amendment seems to place the small shareholders in an unfair position, by having the earnings on their equity lessened by the higher rate of taxation on other companies very indirectly associated.

I know of many small companies with widespread shareholders. This provision with respect to the 51 per cent would unquestionably subject those companies to a higher rate of taxation than they are paying at the present time. I appreciate that there has to be some limit, and I regard 70 per cent as not unreasonable. To bring it down to 51 per cent, which is a bare control, is unfair to the small shareholder.

One cannot conceive of a large corporation breaking up its operations into separate companies in order to take advantage of the lower tax rate, because the cost of operating several companies would more than offset the savings by reduced taxation on the first $25,000 of income of each company.

I repeat, honourable senators, I regret this proposed change to the Income Tax Act, because I feel it would put very many minority shareholders in small companies at a distinct disadvantage. Small companies need more encouragement, rather than the greater prejudice to their operations which this change would bring about.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTIONS FOR CELEBRATION—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's Centennial Year 1967, and suggesting that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future.—(Honourable Senator Crerar, P.C.).

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand over until tomorrow. Our colleague from South Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) would like an opportunity to discuss item No. 6 on the Order Paper. So, with very great pleasure, I shall make way for him, and trust to the kindness of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that item No. 5, standing in my name, on today's orders will be placed pretty near the top of the Orders of the Day for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 22, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, although the hour is getting fairly late, I would like to address a few remarks to this inquiry.

Firstly, I wish to join other honourable senators in acknowledging our debt to the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) for introducing this subject for debate in the house. Any discussion in either of the houses of Parliament in regard to the subject-matter of foreign trade is of vital importance to our economic well-being. That truth is placed in proper perspective when we recognize that while the foreign trade—that is, commodities exported and imported—of our southern neighbour, the United States, represents only about 7 per cent of that country's total output or gross national product, our percentage of trade with other countries represents 31 per cent of our gross national product. So I repeat, honourable senators, that foreign trade is of tremendous importance to Canada.

Consequently, and also because of our geography and the very nature of our resources relative to our population, we simply must export to live. Indeed, any time our export trade falls off we in Canada feel the pinch immediately. But, while it is a commonplace to say that we must export to live, it is likewise just as true to say that if we now abandon the tariff network and the nature of the trading relationships that we have been in the course of developing for over 100 years—yes, since before Confederation—our economy will be affected adversely.

You may wonder why I made such an obviously true and simple statement. I do so merely to emphasize the reason for the also obviously true and simple statement, or inference, made in this house on June 8 last by the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) to the effect that Canada's trade and tariff policy is now, and has been for a long time, removed from party politics, or at least it is in all important essentials a bi-partisan policy.

I cannot see how any student of Canadian trade policy who wants to be objective, constructive and reasonable, can deny that while in office a difference, if any, between the parties on this subject-matter has been other than the difference between tweedledee and tweedledum. I will try to illustrate the truth of this important fact as I go along.

Traditionally we are a great exporter of raw or semi-finished material, but we are also a great manufacturing country, the large majority of whose factories were not built where they are just because of natural or low-cost advantages possessed by them; rather because from the very beginning of the development of this country it was rightly decided that if we did not have factories and industries in Canada we would merely be hewers of wood and drawers of water. In other words, the development of certain trading policies for Canada during the last 100 years has resulted in the prosperous and powerful nation that we are today.

The fact is that while we have succeeded in developing strong and competitive export industries, we have also developed a number of successful and efficient secondary industries. As I see it, therefore, if we can be said to have a national policy in regard to foreign trade, that policy is to maintain a reasonable balance between these two broad facets of our economy, namely, an equitable balance between our primary and our secondary industries. The former implies a low-tariff economy, and the latter means adequate tariffs on competing products from abroad.

This also must be said of our policy in these matters, that, whether right or wrong, the public of Canada has never allowed, and I am sure will not allow, any political party or any Government to depart very far from the moderate middle-of-the-road tariff policy which has been in the course of development for, as I have said, about 100 years.

One point I want to make as clear as I can is that we are not a high-tariff country such as is the United States. That country's policy, as I understand it, is and always has been one of high tariffs and exclusiveness. That means, generally, that in that country whenever any producer, either primary or secondary, is threatened with a competing product from outside its borders, such producer is prima facie deemed to be entitled to a first chance at the United States market for such commodity, and is protected in that market according to this philosophy. Indeed, I think that this is the primary reason for the continuous imbalance in our commodity trade with the United States with which we have been faced during the last decade or so, in particular, and, in fact, with which we have been faced during all our existence.

In Canada, on the other hand, we are plagued with a continuing "viewing with alarm" in regard to our foreign trade. Secondary industry lays a continuous claim to higher import duties or other restrictions, pleading that otherwise it cannot survive, and the exporter of primary products is in continuous opposition to such demands for additional protection for secondary industry claiming that thereby he would be harmed.

As I see it, because these two broad segments of our economy are approximately in equal balance politically, any Government of this country must of necessity tread a wary path between the points of view represented by them.

In the broad field of Canadian business and industry there exist three very powerful groups or organizations, each of which represents a point of view in regard to Canada's trading policies. These groups are, first, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—I do not put these groups as first, second or third in order of importance—second, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce; and third, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association is interested in at least maintaining the moderate tariff structure that we have, and, indeed, generally presses for higher customs duties against imported manufactures. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture generally takes an opposite view to that of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in tariff matters; and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, representing as it does all segments of Canadian industry, trade and commerce, including, indeed, a good share of agricultural representation, adopts generally a middle course in these tariff matters. It preaches moderation in tariff matters, representing as it does both primary and secondary producers as well as other commercial and trading interests in this country.

These three national organizations are powerful influences in the creation of public opinion in Canada concerning our external trading relations, and that is one reason why I say that no Government, no matter of what political stripe, could make radical changes in our foreign trading pattern without a great deal of public discussion and debate and, perhaps, a violent upheaval of public opinion.

With this background of our foreign trade policies, as I see them, I want to take issue with this "viewing with alarm" which is indulged in by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), and to a lesser extent by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert). On the other hand, I want to agree with both honourable senators completely when they suggest, first, that it is in our national interest to prevent a trade war from developing between the two sides of the Atlantic; and, second, that it is important for us to become associated—and I presume they mean more specifically to negotiate—with our European allies in matters of trade.

When referring to our European allies they mean, no doubt, the countries of the so-called Inner Six and Outer Seven, with particular emphasis on the United Kingdom as being the most important country in the latter group.

The honourable senator from Shelburne also suggested that we should first say to the United States: "We cannot continue to buy from you unless you give us, progressively, a better chance to sell to you not only primary products but secondary products also." In my opinion, in any approach to the United States along those lines we would be talking to a deaf ear, and the United States would look at us with a blind eye, and, indeed, a cold eye. We have made too many pilgrimages to Washington not to know that. Recent experiences with the United States regarding the export of such primary products as crude oil and copper and zinc should give us ample warning of the difficulties involved in selling to that country anything except the things it needs, and hence wants to buy from us.

At this point I might refer to the remarks made by the Prime Minister just a few days ago when he spoke to the Governors' Conference in Montana, when he again reminded the people of the United States of these unpleasant facts.

There was a time when the United States tariff lobby consisted exclusively of the manufacturing interests of that country. But today the tariff lobby in the United States consists of every sizable group of producers, primary as well as secondary, and from producers of oil to producers of hogs. True, the United States became a partner in GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—but it did so while trading from great strength, namely, from a high tariff position, while we entered GATT from a moderate tariff position. Consequently, even under GATT our friends the Americans have enormous trading advantages over us.

I come now to what I especially want to say in this debate, and that is that in my view the present Government is neither blind nor idle in regard to happenings in the field of world trade, but it does not believe that the solution to current trading problems is to enter into special trading blocs or alliances with special groups of countries.

Let me outline briefly current developments in respect of Canada's position in international trade. Firstly, in the last two years there has been gratifying progress toward elimination of discriminatory trade barriers erected against imports from dollar countries after the war by the inconvertibility of foreign currencies. Within the past 15 months sterling and other European currencies became convertible, resulting in Canadian exporters now finding readier access to world markets than at any time since the war. Figures that I will give in a moment will, I hope, verify this welcome fact.

Two international agencies have to a great extent been responsible for this favourable development, namely, GATT and the International Monetary Fund. The Canadian Government has taken a major part in the work of these two organizations in creating expansion of world trade on a fair and equitable basis. For example, the last meeting of GATT was held in Tokyo last November, and I believe it to be a fact that the Canadian delegation was particularly active in the general drive to abolish discriminatory trade restrictions throughout the world, to open up agricultural markets and to find a solution for problems created by sudden increases of low-priced imports from low-wage Asian sources. In respect to the International Monetary Fund you will recall that a year ago Canada made a very substantial contribution to the general increase of the resources of the fund so that the fund might better accomplish its objectives in the field of international trade.

I wish to re-emphasize that, in regard to both these agencies, Canada has in the past and is now taking an important part in developments which contribute to the removal of unreasonable trade barriers throughout the world and the consequent development of increasing multilateral trading.

On this point may I quote from a speech made by the Honourable Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance, to the British Columbia Chamber of Commerce and the Vancouver Board of Trade in Vancouver on May 16 last:

> The promotion and expansion of our export trade has been fostered consistently and vigorously by this Government ever since we took office. Through the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference . . .

That is the conference held in Montreal a couple of years ago.

> . . . through our frequent discussions with the United States Government, through our active participation in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and through many other activities we have endeavoured to strengthen our trade links, widen our export opportunities, and protect the interests of Canadian producers and exporters.

79955-1—59

I wish now to refer for a moment to the emergence of the two trading associations in Europe, namely, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven.

Despite potential or possible danger which might be involved to Canadian trade with the countries within these groups resulting from the formation of these trading blocs, I think that we as Canadians should look upon these European developments as an important step in the removal of national trading barriers. I do think that is similar to the position taken by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) in this house a few days ago. Nowhere in the world had economic nationalism reached such absurd proportions as among these neighbours on the continent of Europe, and I would think it seems only reasonable to us as Canadians to applaud the steps being taken by these European countries, which are definitely steps toward a freeing of international trade in their particular areas.

As far as Canada is concerned, nearly 30 per cent of our total exports go annually to Western Europe; $500 million-worth to the Inner Six and $900 million-worth to the Outer Seven, principally to the United Kingdom. It is understandable, therefore, that we should be concerned lest the regional trading arrangements these countries adopt should result in inward-looking and discriminatory practices. We must admit that it would be ironical, indeed, if the virtual elimination of currency discrimination against exports were to be followed by a new form of discrimination brought about for different reasons, but equally destructive of mutually profitable trading relations.

Consequently, as is well known to us all, steps have been taken by Canada to put forward the Canadian point of view to these European countries and to safeguard Canadian interests. I believe it to be the policy of our Government to attempt to get the European groups to extend to other countries, including Canada, on a most-favoured-nation basis, the internal tariff reductions provided for under the treaties which set up these regional trading groups. If these arrangements of the Inner Six which specially affects Canadian interests should be prejudiced by the groupings which I have referred to.

Honourable senators, I wonder if I might give just one example of the trading arrangements of the Inner Six which specially affects Canada? There are six countries involved: Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands, and Luxembourg. This example is in regard to wheat. Prior to the Treaty of Rome by which this group was organized these countries had various rates of tariff on imports of wheat. The tariff of the Benelux countries was nil. The tariff of Germany was 20 per cent, and the tariff of France and of Italy was 30 per cent. The common tariff of the Inner Six in respect of wheat is now 20 per cent. So the result of the formation of this group in respect to our opportunities to sell wheat to them is as follows. The Benelux countries consist of approximately 15 million people. With respect to that 15-million market the tariff has been raised from nil to 20 per cent. In regard to Germany it remains as it was before. However, Italy and France, who have between them a population of approximately 95 million people, have now reduced their tariff against foreign wheat from 30 to 20 per cent. These facts therefore indicate a considerable advantage tariffwise to Canada in respect of the export of wheat to this area.

Hon. Mr. Reid: France is exporting wheat now.

Mr. Thorvaldson: Oh yes, France is a great exporter of wheat; but all these countries are very big importers of Canadian wheat not just because they want to buy wheat, but because we have hard wheat, and they have not got hard wheat. As my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) said yesterday, it would of course be very unfortunate for Canada if France should produce a great deal of hard wheat.

Hon. Mr. Euler: She is doing it now.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The reason we sell a large amount of wheat to other countries, as we do today, is that they need it for mixing purposes. The market for 1959 was very considerable. Anyway, there is an example of this grouping having resulted in what would apparently be an advantage to this country in respect to our exports of wheat. So much for that.

The Canadian Government's views and reactions toward the emerging trade blocs in Europe have been expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I quote from a recent speech made by him to the French Chamber of Commerce in Canada in Montreal as follows:

> In respect of these developments to date, we are particularly concerned with what has taken place in Europe or what may develop in that area in the future. Over the past two years, I have spoken on this subject on many occasions both at home and abroad. Moreover, I have discussed it personally with most of the ministers of commerce of the Six and Seven. On these occasions I have expressed a degree of sympathy for the broad political and economic objectives of European integration. I have, however, made it abundantly clear at all times that these sentiments are conditioned by the understanding that the new trading blocs would prove trade creating and not trade diverting.

Also, in regard to these matters, the Minister of Finance on May 17 last, addressing the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, spoke in these terms:

> I have stated that Canada's international economic policy is founded on principles of multilateralism; that we seek to safeguard our own commercial interests in a manner consistent with these principles and our obligations to those international institutions designed to preserve them; and that we seek to expand our trade and economic interests in and through an expanding world economy. Accordingly, as developments in regional European trading arrangements have appeared to threaten these concepts, we have followed what has been familiarly characterized as "the problem of the Six and the Seven" with vigilant concern.

Then he continued to outline the steps being taken by the Canadian government pursuant to its vigilant concern regarding these European trading developments, including the meeting early in the year in Paris with members of the Six and the Seven, and at which the United States was represented.

I would also like to quote the following significant statement made in the speech of the honourable Minister of Finance at Vancouver recently:

> In addition to playing an active part in the current discussions of the trade problems emerging from the creation of the two European groups, we are participating with the European countries and the United States in studying how the Organization for European Economic Co-operation may be reconstituted and adapted to meet the present needs for economic co-operation and so as to enable Canada and the United States to participate as full members of the organization.

Honourable senators will recall that the O.E.E.C. was the organization formed pursuant to the creation of the Marshall Plan, for the purpose of organizing the objectives of the Marshall Plan, back in 1947.

Continuing from the quotation:

> We have declared ourselves ready to become members of such an Organization and we are doing our part to ensure that the Organization will contribute to rather than detract from the work of the existing international institutions governing trade and payments—the GATT and the International Monetary Fund. This should ensure that the world-wide trading system we have all established so patiently and so successfully is strengthened, not weakened, and that the interests of countries which are not participating in these discussions will be protected.

In any event, it must be remembered that the countries of Europe, prior to these groupings, did not purchase from us nearly $1½ billion-worth of produce annually just because they liked us. They bought from us because we were able to sell them the goods that they wanted and needed at competitive prices. That condition is, of course, basic to any trading between nations. But I, for one, am convinced that the European countries involved in these trading networks will still need and will still buy the goods that Canada has for sale to them in such large quantities —at least as long as we remain reasonably competitive with other nations in our costs.

Let me say here that I agree with other senators who have stated so often and so truly that one of the great problems of this country is to remain competitive with other countries and not to let our costs of production run out of line with them.

Besides the steps that I have just referred to, Canada is also now participating with these European countries and the United States in studying how the Organization for European Economic Co-operation may be reconstituted and adapted to meet the present needs for economic co-operation so as to enable Canada and the United States to participate as full members of the Organization. This is what has been referred to as the Committee of Twenty. As I understand it, we have declared ourselves ready to become members of such an organization and we are doing our best to ensure that the Organization will contribute to, rather than detract from, the work of the existing international institutions concerned with trade and payments, namely, GATT and the International Monetary Fund. If successful, these steps should ensure that the world-wide and multilateral trading system that has been established throughout the last few decades is strengthened, not weakened, and, furthermore, that the interests of countries which are not participating in these discussions will also be protected.

To conclude, let me emphasize the point that I am making in regard to the two European trading blocs—the Inner Six and the Outer Seven. Nothing that they have done so far discriminates against Canadian trade or creates a barrier that did not previously exist.

Consequently, if present Government policies directed to the prevention of discriminatory practices by these countries or by these trading blocs should succeed—and I have high hopes they will succeed—then it is much too early for us to begin to negotiate for the formation of trading blocs comprising, say, ourselves and the United States, or even comprising all the countries to the west of the Atlantic Ocean, or any other grouping of nations whatsoever. Secondly, it is my firm view that Canada's true interest lies in the continued pursuit of the extension or multilateral trading throughout the world through the instrumentality of GATT. Also we should recognize and applaud the results achieved through the International Monetary Fund in the removal of world-wide currency restrictions which have till recently been so damaging to world trade.

For the reasons indicated by these remarks, I am now convinced also that attempts to implement the economic provisions of the NATO agreement, limited as they would have been to NATO countries only, would have been a mistake. Surely the organization that has been created under GATT will prove to be a more effective, more general and more purposeful instrument than any trading system that might have been developed within the narrower confines of NATO.

Finally, may I add that for those who may be viewing the immediate future of our foreign trade with alarm, recent trading figures do not bear out this contention. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, in 1959 our international trade reached the highest figures on record, and the first four months of 1960, namely January to April, show an increase in commodity exports over figures for the same months of 1959 of 14.2 per cent, and in commodity imports of 4.1 per cent. As well as this large increase in total trade you will observe a considerable improvement in our former imbalance in our foreign commodity trade. Indeed, our adverse trade balance, compared to the same months of 1959 was reduced by one-half, and if the present trend continues for the remainder of 1960 our trade imbalance promises to be very greatly reduced.

Of additional interest also is the fact that in the period January to April 1960 sales of Canadian products to the countries of the Outer Seven bloc rose from $249 million in 1959 to $308 million for the same period in 1960, or by about 24 per cent, and Canadian exports to the countries of the Inner Six bloc increased from about $90 million in 1959 to some $102 million this year, a gain of about 14 per cent.

Honourable senators, despite all our worries about the cost-price squeeze, which I admit is real and not fictional, and our concern for the trading actions of other countries, our trading position today, as shown by the only barometer that we have, namely, the figures, is amazingly favourable.

It is in the nature of things that the future always seems misty and doubtful. But of this I am sure, that if Canadians continue to show imagination, vigour and initiative in their economic affairs similar to these qualities that they have shown in the past, a continuing improvement in both the volume and the pattern of our foreign trade may be looked for.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, debate adjourned.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to ask for leave to revert to inquiries, owing to the fact that I now have an answer to the inquiry by the honourable senator from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith) regarding Defence Production contracts.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACTS AWARDED IN NOVA SCOTIA, 1956-59

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What was the value of Defence Production contracts awarded during each of the fiscal years 1956-1957, 1957-1958, 1958-1959 to persons and companies in Nova Scotia, in respect of
   (a) Aircraft (manufacture, maintenance and alterations);
   (b) Electronic equipment (manufacture, maintenance and alterations);
   (c) Ships (construction, maintenance and alterations);
   (d) Other construction, works and purchases?
2. What was the total value of the contracts awarded to each person or company in Nova Scotia for (a), (b) and (c) above for the fiscal years 1956-1957, 1957-1958, 1958-1959?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: The answer to the honourable senator's inquiry is as follows:

1. In determining the net value of Defence Production contracts awarded in respect of each of the categories requested, the net value of contracts placed with all firms included in the industrial classification by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics was used. The "net value" includes the value of amendments which increased or decreased existing contracts as well as the value of new contracts issued. From 32 to 43 per cent of the annual value of contracts placed in Nova Scotia was placed through a district office in Halifax. It is not practical for the department to maintain precise statistics on the provincial distribution of its district office contracts because of the very large number of documents involved. However, as the vast majority of these contracts are received by local firms, the amount placed by the Halifax district office is a good measure of the value of such contracts placed in Nova Scotia. This value, combined with the value of head office contracts placed in Nova Scotia, has been used in arriving at the following figures.

	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59
(a)	$ 6,020,261	$ 3,737,401	$ 4,936,134
(b)	1,038,354	1,044,307	1,316,750
(c)	10,184,613	7,080,443	11,266,737
(d)	12,199,803	11,158,706	12,669,421

2.

	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59
(a) Enamel and Heating Products Limited, Amherst, N.S.	812,829	90,012	190,020 cr*
Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited, Dartmouth, N.S.	5,207,432	3,647,389	5,126,154
(b) E.M.I.-Cossor Electronics Limited, Halifax, N.S.	1,038,354	1,044,307	1,316,750
(c) Wm. Collings & Sons, Limited, Halifax, N.S.	21,234	32,295	54,297
Ferguson Industries Limited, Pictou, N.S.	1,200,938	1,287,484	413,088
Halifax Shipyards Limited, Halifax, N.S.	7,926,924	5,020,674	10,030,894
T. Hogan & Company Limited, Halifax, N.S.	171,607	126,665	115,693
Lunenburg Foundry & Engineering Limited, Lunenburg, N.S.	403,932	60,496	274,096
North Sydney Marine Railway Company Limited, North Sydney, N.S.	34,064	159,593	156,597
Purdy Brothers Limited, Halifax, N.S.	337,825	253,371	192,502
Sydney Engineering & Dry Dock Company Limited, Sydney, N.S.	88,089	139,865	29,570

*The value of new contracts and increasing amendments to contracts received by Enamel and Heating Products Limited in 1958-59 amounted to $104,980. This was more than offset by decreasing amendments totalling $295,000 against contracts received prior to 1958-59.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the Motion to Adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would remind honourable senators that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will meet again tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock to consider the Income Tax Bill with income tax department officials. The committee may also deal with the War Veterans Allowance Bill which was referred to it this afternoon.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 30, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Lionel Choquette, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine presented Bill S-36, to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable senators, this is another Government bill that I am introducing in the Senate. In case honourable senators wish to know something about the contents of the measure, I may say that it is a very short bill containing three sections. One would place the possession of a Hornet Survival Rifle on the same basis as the possession of a sawed-off shotgun or rifle. Another amendment would permit evidence at a preliminary hearing to be taken by a sound recording apparatus where such an apparatus is authorized by provincial legislation for use in civil cases.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-68) intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved:

That, for the balance of the present session, Rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

He said: Honourable senators, a motion in the same words was made by me on June 25 last year. It is a motion that is usually presented at this stage of every session.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I recall that a similar motion has been passed every year about two weeks before the close of the session. I hope we can take it from what the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has said that he expects Parliament will prorogue in about two weeks.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is my hope.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The rules to which the honourable leader referred specify the notice required for certain motions. Honourable senators will recall that under Rule 23 two days' notice must be given of a motion for any of a number of purposes, including the second reading of a bill. That is the most important provision of Rule 23. We have not been following it very carefully this session although we have required at least one day's notice. Only in unusual circumstances do we proceed with the second reading of a bill on the day that it is read the first time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think this is done only with supply bills. There has been two days' notice of the motion for second reading of all other bills, I believe.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My recollection is that that notice was not given in the case of one other bill.

I do not like to see the rule by-passed. As far as I am concerned, I am satisfied on receiving one day's notice of the second reading of a bill, and I do feel that in practically all circumstances, except when a supply bill is brought in, we should receive at least one day's notice.

Rule 24 requires one day's notice of a motion for the third reading of a bill, and that we have generally followed.

Rule 63 states that no bill shall be read twice the same day. There are other provisions in Rule 63 which I will not read.

I feel that these rules should be followed throughout the session and, although I am not objecting to this motion, I would point out that if we pass it we shall still have the power to decide whether we should proceed with the second reading of a bill the same day it is read the first time, and whether we should give a bill third reading the same day it receives second reading.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Is notice necessary before that can be done?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Notice will not be necessary if the motion now before this house carried. But, notwithstanding this motion, in any instance when we are asked to give third reading to a bill the same day it is read the second time, we could say we are not prepared to proceed with third reading that day. If a motion is made for third reading that day we could adjourn the debate until the next sitting.

My suggestion to the honourable leader is that he do not take advantage of this motion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think I ever have done so, and I do not intend to change.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am glad to know that. I do not recall that my honourable friend ever has taken advantage of the motion and I should not think he would, but there is always that temptation.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I think I ought to join in this discussion. I occupied the position which my honourable friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) now occupies, that of Leader of the Opposition in this house, longer, I think, than any other member of this house. I was Leader of the Opposition for nearly 12 years.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I interrupt to say that I do not expect to equal my honourable friend's record.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We would be glad if you surpassed it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I am just going to tell you what happened in the 12 years I occupied that position. In each of those years the honourable Leader of the Government moved a similar motion to the one which has now been moved —as I search my memory I cannot remember one single session in which he did not do so— and, being anxious to go home at that stage of the session, like most senators were, I always said, "Amen". I never raised any objection, or point of order, or questioned whether we were within or without the rules. In the last two weeks of the session it made no difference to me, and I think the situation is the same today as it was then.

This has been a long session. We have had some disappointments: some of the bills which we sent to the other house were not handled very nicely over there. However, it is up to the house to decide what it will do. In the past we got along very well with respect to the business in the closing days of the session. I can speak only for the 12 years when I was Leader of the Opposition. During that period if the then Leader of the Government suggested that certain things should be done, I always agreed to them. It did not seem to me that I should raise any objection; I saw no purpose in doing so. After all, we are just a big family working together, trying to do the best we can for the dominion of Canada. I feel that this is one time we could show that we are not all politicians in this house.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, there is only one occasion on which we are supposed to say "Amen", and that is when you, Mr. Speaker, have finished the prayers. I do not see why that word should be used in any debate. Are we not free in this house? Do we need any remonstrance from any of your colleagues about the time that is alloted to each senator in this house? It is up to each one of us to decide what he has to say and when he shall say it, and how long he shall take, provided he is within the standing orders and rules of the house.

I am not to be remonstrated with by anyone, except by you, Sir, for anything I have to say in this chamber. Why should anyone dare to make a remonstrance to any one of us? Can you imagine it! I would like the Canadian citizens to be here and listen to a speech such as the one I am answering now. They would be shocked. People from the University of Manitoba would be shocked more than anybody else, because they would be so disappointed, so sorry. They would say: "How is it that one of our brightest students, one who has cherished his alma mater to such an extent, should speak like that in the Senate? Is it owing to the teaching that was given to him in the great University of Manitoba? Can we approve of that? Is it not shocking?" I would then tell them it has occurred only once and that I hope he will not make the same speech again.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I do not see any ground for excitement in regard to this motion. It is the usual one that is brought before the house at this stage of every session, although perhaps it is a little early on this occasion. But I would suggest to the Government that it is unnecessary. If the Government thinks the motion is necessary and desires to have it passed, then I am not going to object very strenuously. But is it necessary?

Rule 63 says that no bill shall be read twice the same day. That is the rule, and it is a good rule. It is a good rule whether we are at the beginning of a session or at the end of a session. We often set it aside, but we do so by unanimous consent. I fancy that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has never yet asked for the privilege of having a bill—other than a supply bill—read twice the same day, and I feel sure there will be no change in that respect during the remainder of the session. Perhaps in the last week or so he may require a motion of this kind approved, but at the moment let us leave the rules as they are and not read bills twice the same day.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We will not do so unless it becomes necessary when we are very near the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is better to maintain our forms rather than to pass something that looks to be arbitrary, even though we know that it would not be used arbitrarily. My suggestion to the Government is that this motion be allowed to stand on the Order Paper until there is some evidence that it is required, and that until then we proceed under the rules in the usual manner.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, I agree with everything said by my honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), but I do remind him of some speeches he made to the effect that this motion is a necessity. It is a necessity that arises from delay on the part of the Government in bringing in its bills. If Government bills were introduced earlier in the session there would not be this unseemly rush.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not agree with that. This has happened ever since I have been in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am referring to the delay on the part of all Governments, and nobody has protested more vociferously about that than my honourable friend from Winnipeg. I remember getting up at one time and suggesting to him that next session we should warn the Government we would block everything unless it got its bills in at an early date.

This is an evil that has existed, but which should not exist. Whether it is the Liberals or the Conservatives who form the Government, there is still this delay. That is the reason for this motion, and I think the motion will have to be made as long as there is the practice of delaying the bringing in of legislation until the last minute.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, if the motion is passed I will insist that an explanation be given us when it is actually enforced.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to presentation of petitions:

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, of the Army Benevolent Fund Board, pursuant to section 13 of the Army Benevolent Fund Act, Chapter 10, R.S. 1952, together with the report of the Auditor General relating thereto, as required by section 11(1) of the said act. (English text).

Report of the Canadian Maritime Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 13 of the Canadian Maritime Commission Act, Chapter 38, R.S. 1952. (English text).

ESTATE TAX BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, for Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, moved the third reading of Bill C-65, to amend the Estate Tax Act.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time I wish to make one observation. I am not opposing the bill or objecting to its passing at this time, but I do want to mention that evidence was heard before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce with respect to this bill. It was very interesting evidence. But it has not yet been printed, so honourable senators who were not present in committee when it was given are as yet unable to benefit from it. I submit to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), that when rather technical and difficult-to-understand bills such as the Estate Tax Bill and the Income Tax Bill have been dealt with in committee and the evidence has been reported verbatim we ought to have the evidence before us on the third reading, because that is our last opportunity to make any observations on the bill.

I do not suppose there is anything that can be done about this at the present session, but I do ask that that be kept in mind. If it is not, I shall have to make an objection at some future time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. R. B. Horner moved the third reading of Bill C-64, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Fred M. Blois, for Hon. John G. Higgins, moved the third reading of Bill C-70, respecting the International Development Association.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, for Hon. Lionel Choquette, moved the third reading of Bill C-74, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate may I first of all commend the proposal contained in this resolution and congratulate the six or seven members who have already spoken in the debate, for to me at least it has been one of the most interesting that I have heard for some time.

I consider trade to be the very lifeblood of a nation and I realize that a Government can do only so much with tariff changes. I realize too that the cost of manufacturing goods, the cost of labour and the cost of selling goods can complicate and interfere with their ultimate sale. It is well known that the cost of producing our goods has increased greatly over the past 12 years. It seems strange to me that labour denies having been in any way responsible for this rise in the cost of production. At the same time the manufacturers, while not going to that length, generally try to dodge the blame by saying, "Costs have increased so much that we have had to increase the price of our goods."

We can speak about tariff agreements and such things, but to me one of the most important problems facing us as a trading nation is the price of Canadian goods now being sold on the market. I have one comment to make regarding the remarks addressed to this house yesterday by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). I do not agree with what he said in the middle of his speech about higher tariffs imposed by the United States. I too have done some research on this matter, but I do not come to the same conclusions as he does. Speaking about the United States, he said:

That country's policy, as I understand it, is and always has been one of high tariffs and exclusiveness.

If you look over the present United States tariff and compare it with what it was five years ago you will find that the duties on many, many items are even below the duties on the same goods entering Canada. That fact is well worth mentioning. This is information I gathered in my research into tariff items in the United States as compared with tariff items in this country.

I trust that honourable senators from the eastern and central provinces will not take amiss something I would like to say as one who comes from the western province of British Columbia. Ever since I have been coming to Ottawa I have noticed that the people of Ontario and Quebec, and also those in the Maritimes, turn their faces solely toward Europe when considering trade. They seldom turn around and look to see the possibilities of trade in the Pacific area. If you carefully read the inquiry under discussion you will find that it pinpoints Britain and continental European countries, but says nothing about the Pacific area. China once had a great trade with Canada, and that trade could be redeveloped. I think it is mere foolishness for us to stand up and say that just because China has turned communist we should not trade with her, especially in view of the trade agreement with Russia that we passed in this house recently without any opposition. But I have a warning to give about trading with Russia. I am one of those who firmly believe that the Soviet will employ any useful device, including trade, to wreck the democracies. I would be wary of trading with Russia, for it is one country which could, if it desired, use trade to the detriment of another. How demoralizing it would be for us if Russia were to build up trade with us on one or two particular trade items and then suddenly say, "We are not going to take your products now." We have seen that sort of thing happen. Need I remind the honourable senators of the uranium problem that arose a while ago just because the United States decided that two or three years from now it would stop taking our uranium? Honourable senators will recall the march made on Ottawa by people from the Elliot Lake district because of this, and that problem is still with us.

I also wish to point out to honourable senators that British Columbia sells 70 per cent of her products abroad. The other 30 per cent is used in the province and the rest of Canada. When I was a member of the House of Commons I pointed out that British Columbia was one of the best markets Ontario had. At that time we were buying about $68 million-worth of goods produced in Ontario, and it in turn was buying only some $7½ million from us in British Columbia. We did not complain about it, for we needed those goods from Ontario. However, I want to point that out to the people of the central provinces so that they will know that this country is to some extent quite divided in its thoughts and aspirations regarding trade.

In regard to the trade treaty with Russia, I sincerely trust we will not start to take her oil. I listened, as all honourable senators did, to the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) when he referred to Canada's great heritage of oil. We also have heard or read what has been said in the other place by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources when extolling the great north and trying to make people believe that the great north country is a new heaven and a new earth. I would like to ask him, or any honourable senator, what it will mean to us if we spend millions in developing roads and resources up there and then cap the oil wells and import oil from Russia.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Are we going to import oil from Russia? I have not seen that day yet.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It was stated three weeks ago that under the agreement she would take wheat from us in return for oil. It is true that this information has not so far been given out officially, but that is what I obtained from a report in the press. Probably a decision on the matter has not yet been made, but the report did mention oil. Why can we not bring our oil by pipe line from Alberta to Montreal, instead of spending $78 million to bring it in from another country? We are doing just that, and that country, Venezuela, put up a tariff against our agricultural goods. After all, practically all the oil is controlled by the United States. The evidence is all around us. In my opinion, manufacturers are very much to blame, too, but of course they do not accept the blame.

I recall that some years ago the public was complaining that every year the automobile was being made bigger and bigger, and the reply by the automobile companies was, "That is what the public want." And who, may I ask, started the trend to the smaller car? To my mind, it was the manufacturers in this country. They went to Ireland and Britain, and to other European countries, put up plants and built cars. It was United States capital entirely that built these cars overseas. The people of Britain and Europe were more sensible than we were, and the remarkable thing about it was that they were only building one or two styles of cars then. Here, however, the companies were turning out as many as 20 or 30 different styles from the one factory. Then they asked "Why can't we compete with other countries?" So the flood of smaller cars started to come from Britain and Europe. A large percentage of cars comes from American firms which also control the Canadian manufacture of cars. They were the ones who started the small-car trade and now they are squealing to high heaven for a tariff against these cars from overseas. In other words, they are saying: "This competition is killing us and shutting off our market. Keep out these foreign cars and we can live and prosper." Surely some responsibility must be accepted by the heads of these corporations. I realize, as I am sure other honourable members do, that there are only certain things a government can do. After all, surely industry has some concern for the welfare of the public. It can win out if they will only act wisely.

When I began searching for information in preparing for this speech, I did not realize how many agreements there are now in force regarding trade. Nearly every country has entered into trading agreements. I found that most of these agreements are identified by letters of the alphabet, and it is difficult indeed for the average layman to know from the initials just what an agreement is about.

For the benefit of those interested, I thought I would place on the record some information giving the definitions of these various trade bodies. First of all, GATT. I understand there are 39 countries in GATT, and I was interested to learn that when we make an agreement with another member country to reduce tariffs, all the countries under GATT have to do the same. Surely it is some protection for us to know that under GATT, for instance, if we go to the United States, or it comes to us, and we agree to reduce a tariff, all the other GATT countries also get the benefit. Likewise, countries in Europe under GATT may ask for the same concession. E.C.M. means the European Common Market and represents what is termed the Inner Six. E.F.T.A. represents the European Free Trade Association, or the Outer Seven. E.C.S.C., European Coal and Steel Community. E.E.C., European Economic Community. O.E.E.C., Organization for European Economic Co-operation, one of the earliest organizations set up in Europe.

Even the Latin countries have now formed a free trade organization among themselves, called E.C.L.A., or Economic Commission for Latin America, representing five countries, namely, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua. Last year those countries imported goods to the value of $5,400 million. That is quite a trade. We are not doing much, if anything, to get in on that trade, and I think it is time for us to examine the situation.

I have already mentioned China which, with a population of 650 million, used to do considerable business with Canada. In days gone by it amounted to $75 million annually. Now that business is practically nil. As to trade with Japan, I noticed that some manufacturers in Ontario squealed to high heaven about Japanese goods coming into Canada and undermining our trade. Protection was given to manufacturers in Ontario, by the Government, and to some extent that deprived us in British Columbia of the opportunity to obtain really first-class goods at lower prices than were charged for similar goods from Ontario. So we are penalized in British Columbia to that extent. It seems to me that the tariff policy rotates principally around the two provinces and that the other provinces have to go out and fight on their own. British Columbia has done that, and I say so without fear of successful contradiction. That province's industry grew up in spite of all that, and she is taking a prominent part in the trading markets of the world and not asking the Government to shut out the trade of other countries, as some manufacturers in Quebec and Ontario do.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I wonder if the honourable senator would feel the same about imports of lumber.

Hon. Mr. Reid: There has been some lumber or plywood coming in from Japan. I do not know what we would do if it were allowed a freer entry. Plywood is coming in from Japan now. We trade freely with that country. Japan is now taking our iron ore. The big steel combines would not put up a steel works in British Columbia, so we were denied that iron ore market by the cartel of steel manufacturers in the east. I can prove that, because I had something to do with this matter in the early days of my life as a member of the other house.

I think it will be to the advantage of all honourable senators if I put on record a statement showing what our total trade is and what the important goods are that we sell abroad. I will not go into too much detail.

Our total trade deficit last year was $589 million. That is, we imported $5.5 billion and our exports were about $5 billion.

The three leading exports of Canada go to the United States. That country took from us last year goods worth $3,108 million. The United Kingdom, our next best customer, took $788,618,000. Our third most important customer was little Japan, with a hundred million people and supposed to have a poor standard of living in comparison with ours. She bought from us goods valued at $140 million and our purchases from her amounted to $130 million.

On our trade with the United States last year we had a deficit of over $500 million.

Hon. Mr. Euler: How much did we buy from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Reid: We bought goods worth $3,829 million.

It is interesting to note that the trading countries total 128. I did not realize there were as many trading countries as that in the world. Of that number, 34 are commonwealth countries and 94 are foreign countries.

What are the important exports on which we depend to keep the prosperity of the Canadian people up to the present standard?

The principal exports are: wheat and flour, $465 million; wood and paper products, $1,516 million; uranium, $312 million—mostly all to the United States. May I say here that it will be a big loss to Canada, of course, if and when the United States cuts off its purchase of uranium from us. The other principal exports are: fish and fishery products, $155 million, $103 million of which was sold to the United States; iron ore, $158 million, most of which was shipped to the United States, and petroleum, $75 million.

In the meantime millions have been and are being spent in the great northland, and we are finding new sources of oil all the time, but as soon as we find them we cap the wells. They may come into production in some future generations if supplies in other countries run low. But we should not boast too much about it. The point is that we are not using that oil and will not use it when a market like Montreal is using some $75 million-worth of oil a year from Venezuela.

And here is a strange item. This was news to me, and must say I hope we do not increase our production of this product. Canada sold $78 million of whisky to foreign countries. I was amazed when I read that and in order to be sure I looked at it twice.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is probably double that figure. It is far better selling it abroad than here.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It nearly all went to the United States market. Some of it went to 90 other countries, but not much. What we sold to the United States amounted to $72 million, leaving $6 million to be divided among 90 countries—just a little drop to each.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I assume it was rye whisky that was exported.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Did any of it go to Scotland?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Don't they want good whisky there?

Hon. Mr. Reid: They might accept rye whisky, but you could not sell the Scots foreign whisky, at least I don't think so.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You did not mention any manufactured goods.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I thought that the figures I gave were enough for this debate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Whisky is a manufactured product.

Hon. Mr. Reid: The goods that I listed are practically all raw materials: wheat and flour, wood and paper, aluminum, iron ore, petroleum, fish and fishery products. I do not know in what classification you would put whisky.

As I mentioned a few minutes ago, the sponsor of this inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson) seemed to direct it to the benefit Canada would derive if she joined the Inner Six and the Outer Seven countries. So I made a little analysis of the Six and Seven countries to find out what our trading situation would be, and I found it very interesting.

First of all, the Inner Six have a population of 170 million people; the Outer Seven have a population of 88.5 million. That makes a total of 258 million people in 13 countries. One of the 13 countries is Great Britain, for she is a member of the Outer Seven. Great Britain has a population of 58 million. Now, let us compare the total trade figures. Great Britain's total trade with Canada was $1,385 million, and our total trade with the other 12 countries—those of the Inner Six and Outer Seven minus Great Britain—was $767 million.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Do those figures include both exports and imports?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes; I am referring to the total trade. Canada sold to the United Kingdom roughly $788 million-worth of goods and bought back $596 million-worth, leaving a balance in our favour of $192 million.

As I looked over these figures I thought we should perhaps strive to get closer to Great Britain if possible, rather than concentrating on the Inner Six and Outer Seven, because until the two groups join no one can tell whether it would be to Canada's advantage to join them or not.

There is a little difference between the set-ups or agreements of the Inner Six and the Outer Seven. The countries in the Outer Seven have an agreement with themselves, and they are looking toward all-out free trade among the seven countries over a period of years. There is in their set-up one redeeming feature, namely, that one country can make a deal with another in the group of Seven to reduce tariffs, irrespective of the other six countries. Individual agreements can be made.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: You mean, with the other five.

Hon. Mr. Reid: No. I am speaking of the Outer Seven.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: If two out of the seven make an agreement, that leaves five.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am speaking of the seven countries in the E.F.T.A.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: You said, among the seven.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Among the E.F.T.A. group of seven each country may make a separate deal without having to consult the others.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: A separate deal with Canada?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No; Canada is not yet one of the seven. I am speaking of the seven now under agreement, and if Canada joined them she would then have the advantage of which I speak.

With the Inner Six, if a tariff is changed with one country it applies to all the countries. That is the bone of contention between the two groups. Great Britain is in the Outer Seven, where she can make any tariff agreements she likes with another country without drawing the others in to do likewise. The Inner Six group stands out because of the distinction I mentioned.

I place these facts before the house so that honourable senators who are interested may have them when they are dealing with this subject. I have little more to say, honourable senators. I did want to take part in the debate and so draw my views on the matter to the attention of the Senate and to the powers that be.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask a question? We know the advantages accruing to the Inner Six. What advantages do the group of Seven have by being together?

Hon. Mr. Reid: The group of Seven have agreed among themselves that, over a course of ten years or so, they will have complete free trade among themselves in respect of certain goods. In other words, there would be no more tariffs. That may be one point that is dangerous to Canada, for if Great Britain, a member of the Seven, makes an agreement with these countries to accept their goods into Great Britain free, that will be to the disadvantage of Canada. For instance, it is possible that Great Britain could buy her lumber elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It is being done now.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That would be injurious to this country.

Honourable senators, I thought it wise to point out to this house, and possibly to the Government, that while there seemed to be a good deal of merit in the argument presented by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), no one can emphatically say that Canada's joining the Inner Six or Outer Seven would be of great advantage to us. I repeat my opinion that if we cannot get more trade with Great Britain and with certain other countries, I would like to see our manufacturers and our Government look more to the great populations of China, Japan and the South American continent. That continent is a land that could flow with milk and honey, a land that is slowly coming forward. Its people are earning a little more now, and as they begin to prosper they will in turn be able to buy our goods.

I should like to make one comment with respect to Venezuela. That country has shut out Canada's produce while we are taking some $78 million-worth of Venezuelan oil and landing it in Montreal. We should be developing a pipe line of our own into Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: From Edmonton to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Reid: But evidently the Americans who control that situation cannot or do not want to see eye to eye with what I have suggested.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN NATIONAL TORONTO TERMINALS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt for the second reading of Bill C-72, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the city of Toronto.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, this bill was explained on second reading yesterday by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) in his usual competent way, and then some questions as to the objections to the proposed railway freight yard and access lines were asked by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

I can well understand the objections that have been raised. I am reasonably familiar with the area in which this freight yard will be built and through which the access lines will pass, for I spend some time nearly every weekend in the eastern part of the area and see markers indicating where the eastern access lines will pass. It is very pleasant countryside, made up of farms and suburban properties. In some places it is very beautiful. Undoubtedly, that countryside will be less pleasant and less enjoyable when this freight line has been built and when the freight yards to which the line will lead are built. It is no wonder that objections have been raised by people whose properties are either going to be taken from them or are going to be damaged, and also by those people who will suffer from damage to what we might call the amenities of life when this line goes through.

Those who suffer damage will no doubt be compensated in dollars, but nevertheless the area itself will not be as pleasant an area as it is at the present time.

However, I think the question before us in this house is twofold. The first part of the question is whether the project itself is needed, is desirable and will be an economic operation. If the answer to that is in the affirmative, then the second part of the question is whether this is the best location so as to minimize the damage to the persons affected by it, and to prevent, as far as possible, impairment of the beauty of the countryside.

I have done what the honourable senator from Hanover suggested: I have read the proceedings before the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. That committee had before it as witnesses the executive officers of the Canadian National Railway Company, and I must say that on both the points I have mentioned, which I think are relevant, the evidence of these officials is very strong and very convincing. No doubt we shall have an opportunity of hearing them ourselves, and if there are any questions still in our minds we should endeavour to resolve them at that time.

Before the committee of the other place there were, apparently, no witnesses representing those who might be objecting to the line. There were as members of the committee members of the House of Commons representing constituencies through which the line will pass, and the officials of the railways were subjected to some very searching and pertinent questions, particularly by one member whose constituency is affected.

Judging from the objections it would appear that those making them were mostly concerned with the question of location. They agreed, with respect to the main purpose of the yard and the line, on its desirability, but they felt the line should go elsewhere and that the yard should be located in some other place. That, of course, is natural, but if the line passed through some other area another group of objectors would feel aggrieved in the same way.

It does appear that over the period of a year since the announcement of this project was first made, and during which a great many objections were raised, officials of the railway have sat in with the groups who were objecting, in an endeavour to meet their objections. They have moved the yard itself to some extent, and they have made other changes. Even if they have not satisfied the objectors it would appear at the moment, at any rate, as if the objectors are reconciled to the project. The railway officials indicate that it has the approval of Metropolitan Planning Commission and that no strong objections have been heard since January of this year.

Those who are familiar with Toronto—and no doubt most honourable senators are —know about the maze of railway tracks which exists in the southern part of the city by the lakeshore, and particularly around Bathurst Street. The information given by the officials of the railway is that more than 500 trains and engines cross Bathurst Street in 24 hours. There is a congestion of traffic there which means great delays in the movement of freight and expensive handling, and it is a situation which will have to be cleaned up in some way or another. Having canvassed the possibility of extending the existing lines and yards in the south part of the city by the lakeshore, where the traffic now pours in from both the east and west and also from the north, the conclusion reached by the officials of the railway is that it is no more expensive to build a completely new and modern yard on the outskirts of metropolitan Toronto. Such a yard will render more efficient service, will last for a much longer period of time, and will take better care of the expansion of the city of Toronto as it grows north, east and west, than would any alteration of the existing yards. That is the reason for the movement of this freight handling facility from the present location to a location north of Toronto.

The yard itself and the manner of handling it are very modern. Apparently the railway has taken advantage of the latest technological knowledge on the subject and of automation, and it is rather fascinating to read a description of how this hump, as it is called, is used, taking advantage of the force of gravity, in the marshalling of these freight trains. The operators of the yard have closed television circuits so that the movement of trains in various parts of the yard can be seen. Messages are sent by pneumatic tubes from one part of the yard to another. Punched cards are dropped into electronic machines, and a miracle-mind goes to work to direct the movement of the cars, the switching of the cars, the speed of the cars and the putting together of freight trains.

As I say, it is very fascinating to read about it, and it occurred to me while I was doing so that if the model railway builders get around to making a toy model of this freight yard it will be a great boon to all of us who are grandfathers because we will then have something to give our grandchildren and to play with ourselves. However, this particular original will cost a great deal more than most grandfathers can afford to pay. As the honourable senator from Hanover has said, the cost will run to about $87 million.

We are concerned that a Government railroad, in spending $87 million, should spend it wisely and efficiently. Here again the evidence of the railway officials is that the savings expected to be effected by this capital expenditure will be of an order sufficient to take care of depreciation on the capital investment, which means in effect a return of the capital investment plus 6 per cent interest on it, and over and above those two items there will be effected a saving of at least $2 million per year. Undoubtedly if those hopes are realized it is a very proper and excellent thing for the railway to be doing, and we should approve of this bringing up to date and modernizing the operations of the railway and introducing economies in the process. But as this is a case where we see an operation in which automation is coming into existence, we in this house are concerned with its effect on employment and manpower. That is the subject of an inquiry we are making and it is rather interesting to pass some observations on that aspect as it applies to this bill.

While the operation is in the course of construction there will be an increase in employment. The construction itself will effect that, and it is anticipated that something like $21 million in wages will be paid out in connection with actual construction of the yard and the lines. When it is in operation, however, there will be a saving in labour; that is to say, it will take less labour per hour per unit of operation. On the other hand, there will be more productivity of labour as a result of the use of these machines, but the expectation of the officers of the railway is that this will not involve any laying off of men. In other words, during the years of construction, and having in mind the ultimate operation itself, there will be no laying off of personnel even though the operation itself when in effect will be requiring less labour per unit of operation.

I think that pretty well sums up the purpose of the bill. It seems to me it is something that we can well support, certainly in principle on second reading, and look forward to hearing the evidence given by officials as to the further details we will undoubtedly want to ask about.

It is an example of the Government-owned railway under the management of Donald Gordon and his associates doing what I think we all want it to do, keeping expanding on an efficient basis, using modern knowledge and techniques and every opportunity of making economies and savings. We should encourage that objective.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, I rise only to ask a question for my own information on something that perhaps I should know. I take it that as a result of this legislation the freight traffic will be removed from the lakefront so far as the Canadian National Railways is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I understand it will not remove all the traffic, but its main purpose is that most of the traffic coming into Toronto will be directed in the first instance into the freight marshalling yard.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It occurs to me that this would be a great relief to the motor vehicle traffic entering Toronto from both ends of the metropolitan area. Is it a fact, however, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will still handle its freight business on the lakefront? Could my friend give the house any information in regard to that?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: My understanding is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not now using the lakefront for its main freight traffic. It runs north into West Toronto. I think that company is also building a freight yard at Agincourt. The project outlined in this bill will relieve the passenger train service to some extent in the southern part of the city.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Before the motion is passed I would like to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, our other great railway system in Canada, is thinking along exactly the same lines as the Canadian National Railways. As the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) has stated, that company is building, north of Toronto at Agincourt, a yard very similar to the one provided for in this bill. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is a bit more fortunate than the Canadian National Railways in that it will be able to use certain of its present railway lines as access lines and so will not have to spend the huge sums that the C.N.R. will be spending on access lines. When both yards are completed they will reduce very considerably, though not entirely eliminate, the freight business on the Toronto lakefront. There is no doubt that there will be a tremendous improvement in the lakefront area after both these hump yards are fully completed and in operation.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The western part of Toronto has been mentioned. At what point do the railways divert the traffic to the north?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: At the present time there is a bridge at the foot of Bathurst Street and at that point the lines divert to the north and into the Niagara Peninsula. That is the diversion point.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTIONS FOR CELEBRATION—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's Centennial Year 1967, and suggesting that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future.—(Honourable Senator Crerar, P.C.).

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it is late in the afternoon and I really feel ashamed to ask for further indulgence of the house, but I observe that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and his honourable deskmate (Hon. Mr. Brunt) are showing some signs of weariness and, in looking around the house, I fancy there are others in the same condition. So I shall ask that this item be placed on the Orders of the Day for Wednesday next, following the preliminaries that will occupy our attention when the sitting begins. I would be prepared to speak on Tuesday evening, but I am looking forward with some anticipation to a discussion at that time on a subject very remote from many honourable senators' consideration but one in which our honourable colleague from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) is greatly interested, margarine. If the house will agree to my request I shall feel eternally in its debt.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The order stands.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to the order for motions:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, the 5th day of July, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 5, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 5, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, as required by section 13(1) of the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act, 1946. (English and French texts).

Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, Chapter 120, R.S. 1952. (English text).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 30, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, in rising to support the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) in debating this subject which he brought before the Senate, may I say that it seems abundantly clear, from the comments that have been made in this debate by the very large number of honourable senators who have taken part, that while there is quite naturally some divergence of views on the question, the matter of Canada's trade relations with other countries is unquestionably recognized as one of the most important problems facing our nation today. I have listened to all the speeches in the debate, and although they are too numerous for me to comment on them individually, I would like to compliment the honourable senator from Shelburne for bringing this before the Senate, and all other honourable senators who have taken part in this interesting and thought-provoking and, I think, very timely discussion.

There was a time, and not so long ago, when in a debate on a subject such as this no woman's voice, nor woman's views, would be heard. It was universally considered that problems of this kind were of no interest to women and that their solution should be left to their fathers, brothers and husbands who had superior knowledge of such subjects. However, the superior male knowledge has not yet been able to solve satisfactorily many of our national problems, and women now feel that they should make their contribution toward finding the answers. Because they realize that the decisions of the Government regarding problems of trade affect their homes, the prices they pay for food and clothing—it is acknowledged that they do most of the buying—and the opportunities of employment for their husbands and for their adult children, women are taking an especially keen interest in our government policies regarding trade, both internal and external.

We all know that Canada, as one of the great trading nations of the world, is highly vulnerable to changes in the volume of world trade and to changes in international trading conditions—much more so than is the United States. While our secondary industries have shown a notable and a very gratifying expansion through the past ten years, it nevertheless remains a fact that, for the foreseeable future, a continued expansion of the Canadian economy will depend heavily upon our achieving an ever-increasing volume of exports, which will probably be in the form of the basic products of our forests, our farms, our mines and our fishing industries.

While we must continue to place our main reliance upon the export of raw materials and semi-processed goods, there seem to be sound grounds for the belief that, if given a satisfactory environment, our secondary manufacturing industries could become increasingly important in our export trade. Certainly the progress made in recent years in a number of our secondary manufacturing industries suggests that if given an appropriate opportunity and broadened markets, Canadian management and Canadian workmanship could compete satisfactorily and successfully in world markets.

If we think in terms of the future, and take for granted that we are spared the catastrophe of a third World War, there seem to be very strong grounds for the belief that there will be a very great increase in world trade over the next ten to twenty years. World political problems and world tensions tend to complicate the outlook, and world political decisions will undoubtedly result in entirely new trading arrangements. However, honourable senators, it is certain that the scientific achievements which have taken place in recent years and those in prospect for the future, coupled with increasing productivity in the industrial nations and the prospect of vast new markets in Asia and Africa, which were mentioned by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) on Thursday last, suggest a rapid rise in the standard of living throughout the whole world and a very substantial increase in trading between nations in which we Canadians should have an opportunity to participate.

However, in the process of this evolution it is imperative that important changes in trading conditions and trading arrangements will have to be expected. With nations as with individuals, opportunity knocks but once. Hence, in the circumstances it would seem vital to Canada's progress that we make every effort now to seize our opportunities and consolidate our position in world trade on a realistic basis.

The post-war resurgence of Western Europe in recent years has been, as we all know, the dominant feature of world economy. Not only has trade among these Western nations themselves increased, but they have gained a significantly large part of world exports from the other non-communistic countries. This has naturally had its impact upon Canada, and the movements toward closer economic integration in the form of the Inner Six and the Outer Seven could have implications which Canadians cannot afford to ignore.

The European Economic Community, or Common Market, which is generally referred to as E.E.C., or the Inner Six, includes, as honourable senators know, the six countries of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands. These countries form a compact geographical and industrial group in Europe, a market of 165 million people. E.E.C. came into existence by the Treaty of Rome on January 1, 1958. In this treaty the six countries agreed to eliminate tariffs and quotas, and to permit the movement of industrial products within the area. The reduction of trade barriers is scheduled to occur through a series of steps at the start of each year, and the task is to be completed within a 12- to 15-year transitional period.

Over the period in which the internal trade barriers are to be eliminated, the tariffs of the member countries against third countries are to be made uniform. Thus, at the end of the transitional period the E.E.C. will be a complete customs union with a common tariff to all outside countries and with no internal tariffs. For the most part, the common external tariff on non-agricultural products is to be the average of the present national rates; however, for certain commodities, rates have to be negotiated. This treaty also makes special provision for the problem of agriculture, and each country may continue to aid its own agricultural producers through subsidies and quotas until a co-ordinated policy for the whole common market can be developed.

Because of my special interest in social welfare, other policies outlined by the Treaty of Rome for the members of E.E.C. which I find interesting are those that refer to regulations covering labour and welfare. In order to place the industries in the six countries on an equal competitive footing, regulations regarding hours of work, pensions, social security and welfare payments in all six countries are to be harmonized.

Honourable senators, with the formation of E.E.C. the other members of the Organization for European Economic Co-operation which, as you have been told by other honourable senators, was set up in 1948 and is generally called O.E.E.C., and which is made up of the United Kingdom, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland, Portugal, Iceland, Ireland, Greece, Turkey and Spain, with Yugoslavia associated with them, sought to find means of participating in the trade advantages of the common market without committing themselves to the degree of political and economic integrations envisioned by the Six. However, they made very little progress in this direction, and in November 1959 the European Free Trade Area Treaty, which is also known as E.F.T.A., was signed at Stockholm, setting up what is known as the Outer Seven, comprised of the United Kingdom, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland and Portugal. The European Free Trade Area is concerned primarily with freeing trade in industrial goods only. Internal tariffs are to be gradually eliminated in the schedule which it is hoped will be synchronized with that of the common market.

While the advantages of closer political and economic co-operation in Europe are many, not the least being the possible and, we hope, probable, elimination of old rivalries, the development which is taking place seems clearly to have implications in respect to Canada's overseas markets.

I listened with a great deal of interest on Wednesday last to the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), and although I appreciate his valuable contribution to the debate and congratulate him on his splendid speech, I am afraid that in this fast-changing world I cannot view the future of Canada's international trading position with the complacency that seems to be implied in his remarks. It seems reasonably obvious, as I have pointed out, that new international trading arrangements which could vastly influence our foreign trade are in the course of development, and I find it difficult to subscribe to the view that it is much too early for us to begin to consolidate our position. Surely, honourable senators, this is the time to negotiate. Is it not quite possible that later, in attempting to negotiate with the Inner Six or the Outer Seven, we shall be confronted with still more difficult circumstances when their trading practices have been definitely set and established interests have been consolidated? It will be much harder for us to make an entry then.

Working within the framework of international organizations is certainly one approach, but if we do not assert ourselves, if we do not show initiative in the matter of trading arrangements, it seems to me we may find ourselves in the not too distant future in circumstances where it will be much more difficult for us to negotiate. In so far as the United States is concerned, I think that history will bear me out that the United States has not always been unapproachable, and on the present world scene I do not think we should write off the possibility of closer co-operation with it in the future.

The honourable senator from Winnipeg South stated the situation in respect to the importation of wheat into the Inner Six group and suggested that the Canadian situation had not been injured. Let us hope this proves to be the case, but the situation is that whereas we formerly had free entry of our wheat into the Benelux countries, which form three of the Inner Six, we are now confronted with a 20 per cent tariff on wheat imports by all members of the Inner Six. On the other hand, I certainly doubt very much that the decline from 30 per cent to 20 per cent in the tariff on wheat entering France and Italy will greatly stimulate the sale of wheat to those countries, especially in view of the fact that the hard wheat which France formerly needed from Canada is now being grown in France itself.

It is gratifying, I am sure, to all Canadians that our export trade has so far this year shown an upward tendency, but in the present world state I certainly do not think that this can be taken as grounds for too much complacency.

Thinking in terms of the current concern about Canada's large foreign trade and payments deficits, perhaps I may be permitted the following brief comments in closing my remarks.

For several years now we have had a large deficit which has stemmed mainly from rapid expansion of Canada's economy. However, I would like to point out that as recently as 1953 Canada's foreign trade was still following its traditional pattern, which was a substantial deficit with the United States, offset at least in part by a surplus with overseas countries. The overseas surplus in 1953 amounted to just over $460 million, of which more than one-third was in trade and services transactions with the principal countries of continental Western Europe. Somewhat less than one-third of this was in transactions with the United Kingdom. In 1959, however, the overseas surplus was replaced by a deficit of more than $200 million—a net worsening of nearly $700 million. This was more than twice the increase in Canada's deficit with the United States in the same six years. Clearly, as I said before, the economic developments in the world have brought about and are bringing about very important changes in the pattern of economic trade.

While I have barely touched on some of the broader aspects of Canadian trade, it seems to me the evidence is very clear that every effort should be made at this time to achieve closer economic co-operation on as broad a base as possible, and particularly with the United States and the two European trade blocs.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pratt, debate adjourned.

EXCISE TAX BILL

STANDING COMMITTEE'S REPORT CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—BILL REPORTED WITHOUT AMENDMENT

Pursuant to an order of the day, the Senate went into committee to consider the report from the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-73, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. Lionel Choquette in the Chair.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (C-73) intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 22, 1960, examined the said bill and now report the same with the following amendment:

Page 6: after the line reading: "Maple syrups; corn syrup; table syrups; molasses;" insert a new line as follows: "Margarine;".

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill C-73, intituled "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act," be not concurred in and that the said bill be reported without amendment.

He said: Honourable senators, I think for the benefit of those who were not here during the sessions of 1946, 1947 and 1948 I should give a brief summary of the background in connection with this margarine question. The manufacture, sale and possession for sale of what was then known as oleomargarine was prohibited by the Dairy Industry Act, chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

In 1946 this fact was brought very forcefully before the Senate by the honourable gentleman from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) when he introduced a bill to amend the Dairy Industry Act, which bill, had it passed, would have legalized the manufacture, sale and possession for sale of oleomargarine. However, although he gave a fine display of eloquence and presented many facts the bill did not get second reading. In 1947 he tried again. I commend him most highly for his efforts, but for a second time his bill did not receive second reading. In 1948 he submitted his bill again and although it did not receive second reading, his diligence resulted in something being accomplished. He introduced in the Senate this resolution:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the Government should, immediately after prorogation of the present session of Parliament, refer to the Supreme Court of Canada for the opinion of that court the question of the constitutional validity of that part of the Dairy Industry Act, chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, which prohibits the manufacture or sale, or having in possession for sale, or offering for sale, oleomargarine, margarine, butterine or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream.

The purpose of the motion was to ascertain whether or not that part of the Dairy Industry Act was ultra vires of the dominion. The resolution was passed by the Senate and acted upon by the Government of the day, and in the fall of 1948 the reference was made to the Supreme Court of Canada. Judgment was handed down by that court to the effect that prohibition of the manufacture, offer, sale, or possession for sale, of the goods mentioned is ultra vires of the Parliament of Canada. Since that time, honourable senators, the manufacture of margarine in Canada has been going ahead by leaps and bounds.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I interject a remark at this point? The Government appealed to the Privy Council, which upheld the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am sorry if I did not go far enough. The honourable senator from Waterloo states that the Privy Council upheld the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. After that, as I have said, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, which eventually became margarine by name, went ahead by leaps and bounds. I understand that margarine is now sold in practically all the provinces except—did I hear someone say Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Mr. Gouin: Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Monette: It is sold in Quebec, too.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think honourable senators will realize that this large quantity of margarine is sold in competition with butter. Last year 152 million pounds of margarine were sold in Canada, which was half the number of pounds of butter sold in that year. The excise tax is 11 per cent.

I would like to mention that when this bill was before the Senate for second reading the honourable senator from Waterloo referred to the fact that although margarine was an edible food, quite palatable, and greatly in demand, the sales tax had never been removed from it, and that purchasers were paying this indirect tax under the Excise Tax Act. Then the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and I admit I was taken quite by surprise when the honourable senator from Waterloo introduced in committee an amendment to the Excise Tax Act, which amendment has been read here this evening. Honourable senators, to this amendment I am opposed, and a little later on I shall state my reasons.

The revenue from this tax, according to the evidence given in the committee, is between $4 million and $5 million.

In spite of the fact that the manufacture of margarine became legal in 1948 or the beginning of 1949, the Government of that day did not remove the sales tax. It had some eight years in which to do so, but during that time apparently it decided that it was not ready to remove this tax from margarine. The present Government came into power in 1957, and it has had some three years in which to consider removing the tax, but has not done so. Apparently for both these Governments it was a matter of policy.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Was it a matter of policy or politics?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: A matter of Government policy.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I thought you said politics.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Let us say that both are right.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: May I ask the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if the Senate has authority to make the suggested change, which it seems would disturb the balance of ways and means?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am coming to that. I have given only a short introduction to what I am going to say.

Honourable senators, to my knowledge no complaints to any extent have been received from consumers. I see my honourable friend from Waterloo shake his head, but I will leave the answer to him. The tax is less than three cents a pound and margarine is half the price of butter. In other words, a consumer can buy two pounds of margarine for the price of one pound of butter. In some grades of margarine he can buy three pounds for the price of one pound of butter. I have seen margarine advertised at that price.

Honourable senators, I maintain that no one is suffering from this small tax. The dairy industry of Canada considers the tax helpful and, I am told, is unalterably opposed to removal of the tax.

I do not intend to go into the constitutional aspect of this matter to any extent. Of course, I could refer honourable senators to the preamble to the British North America Act, and to sections 53 and 54 of the British North America Act having to do with money bills, but I am not going to quote from the act. I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I do not intend to deal at any length with the constitutional aspect of the case. I could quote from Bourinot, and from speeches of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and other prominent parliamentarians and lawyers, but I will not do so. Honourable senators know what has been said in the past on both sides. However, I do wish to point out that when the budget for the fiscal year 1960-61 was being presented by the Minister of Finance it was not anticipated that any new items would be exempted from the sales tax. To amend the bill as suggested would result in the balance of ways and means being disturbed to the extent of between $4 million and $5 million, the approximate amount of the sales tax on margarine. The tax, I understand, is 8 per cent general tax and 3 per cent for old age security.

Now, whether the Senate has or has not the power to adopt such an amendment as is now before the committee is not in my opinion the main issue, but rather it is whether the Senate should—and I emphasize should—amend the bill now before us in such a way that the balance of ways and means will be disturbed and threatened. I go further than that and say that it has been the long-standing policy of the Senate not to do so. I know that is the opinion of quite a number of senators in this chamber at the moment. I have heard the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) express the same opinion on quite a number of occasions.

It is my hope, honourable senators, that my motion will receive the unanimous approval of the Senate, that the committee's amendment will not be concurred in, and that the bill will be reported for third reading without any amendment.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, as the villain in the piece, and as I have already made my views well known on the second reading of the bill, perhaps I might be forgiven if I make a few more comments with regard to the matter of exemption of margarine from taxation.

I want to thank my friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for his kind references to myself. We have been pretty close friends for a long time and I can remember very well that he usually supported me in my efforts with regard to margarine. I quite recognize also that times have changed, and I do not blame him at all for taking the position he has taken, because politics and public office bring with them certain responsibilities and even changes of conduct, if not of conviction. I am pretty sure that the great majority of the members of this chamber are in favour of the principle which I am advocating, but for reasons upon which I will touch in due course they do not voice their convictions.

I am glad my friend is not going to make a feature of the constitutionality of the bill. He said he is not a constitutional lawyer. Well, I am not a lawyer at all, and if the bill is going to be debated on those grounds I would much prefer to see it debated by the learned members of the bar. He puts the matter almost entirely on the score of what it is advisable to do—whether it is the proper thing to remove this tax or to maintain it —and it is on that basis that I want to speak about it.

On second reading I gave my reasons why I think the tax on margarine should be removed. That tax amounts to 11 per cent, or, as my honourable friend has said, three cents a pound.

One need only read the list of food products in the bill to realize that there is a principle there, that foods, being a vital necessity, and perhaps the main necessity in the lives of the people, are properly exempt from tax. It is unquestionably true that margarine is a good food. It is not only nutritious, it is inexpensive and it has been a boom to millions of people in this country who with large families cannot afford to buy butter.

Now, if there is a definite principle established that foods should be exempt from sales tax, what possibly good reason can anyone give why margarine should be made an exception to the general practice?

Two weeks ago when I spoke on the subject I said that the tax on margarine initially was an accident and has continued by design. When sales tax was imposed a good many years ago there was no such thing as legal margarine; therefore it could not possibly appear in the list. When it was made legal it was omitted from the list, I think then by design, because of the pressure exerted by a certain group, which have the right to do so in their own interests. This amendment seeks to remove that discrimination.

There is another discrimination in our statutes, rather a peculiar one. Perhaps most members know that the people of Newfoundland have margarine, have coloured margarine, and they do not pay the sales tax on it. I should modify that statement. They do pay the sales tax, but by what I call a back-door method the sales tax is remitted to them from the federal treasury, and so they are free from sales tax.

My friend tries to make a considerable point of the fact that the revenue from the sales tax on margarine is about $5 million. We all remember a certain well-known public man who on one occasion said, "What's a million dollars?"

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is $5 million.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am coming to that.

"What's a million dollars?" My friends opposite made very good use of that statement, which was not intended to show indifference to extravagance, and it helped them very considerably in the winning of the last election.

My friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) remarked, "This is $5 million." I would almost say, except that my statement might be misinterpreted: What is $5 million, compared with the hundreds of millions of dollars that are being wasted by this Government and were wasted by the former Government by way of defence costs which are not justified because the weapons we are producing and making do not defend us in any case? So while $5 million is a substantial amount, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in saying that it was a loss of revenue to the country also thought of the fact that it means that much saved to the consumers in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How do you know it would be passed on to the consumers?

Hon. Mr. Euler: There would be enough competition to ensure that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It never has been done.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is the tax for only one year. During the 10 years or so that margarine has been subject to sales tax, how many millions of consumer dollars have been spent that shouldn't have been spent, had margarine been on the same basis as other foods.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I interrupt my honourable friend? I looked up the record, and I find that I voted against his margarine bill on two occasions.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the leader what he did on the other occasion? However, I am not questioning him. I know he usually gave me very good support, just as I gave him support on bills he introduced. In both matters we failed. Usually I am not very successful with the legislation I propose in this house. But I have a little hope that, with a new Government, which professes to be doing everything for the good of the public and promised to reduce taxation, here is an opportunity for it in a small measure to live up to the promises made.

I should like to correct one other statement. My friend the Leader of the Government stated that he was surprised when I introduced my motion in the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to remove the sales tax on margarine. I think he will recall that I crossed the floor of the chamber and told him that that was what I was going to do. He did not like it, but I did it just the same. So, my friend is incorrect in his statement.

The real objection—and let us not deceive ourselves—to the removal of the sales tax from margarine is that it is desired to place as many obstacles as possible in the way of the sale of margarine and to promote the sale of butter. Honourable senators will not deny that that is the case. In fact, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) said as much just a moment ago.

The same is true of the ban on colour in margarine. Eight provinces still prohibit the colouring of margarine. There is only one motive for doing that, namely, to discourage housewives from buying margarine by making it necessary to do the colouring in their own kitchens, with all the mess and work that are involved. I think this attempt to discourage housewives from buying margarine is not meeting with great success. However, that I say is the real reason for the ban on colouring, and the same reason applies to the objection to removing the discriminatory sales tax.

Strangely enough, the objection comes—and I know whereof I speak—from members who are really free traders. They object to tariffs on goods coming into this country to compete with Canadian goods—for example, agricultural implements.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is no duty on agricultural implements.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No, but I remember the time when there was.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Surely you can't hope to get away with that.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There was a time.

Hon. Mr. Euler: We are not going to quarrel about that; my friend is quite right.

The point I am getting at is the inconsistency of being opposed to protection against foreign goods and in favour of protection for one Canadian industry against another Canadian industry. Could anything be more inconsistent? There is no other commodity manufactured or produced in this country that is protected against a competitor in this country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Tell me about it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Soft drinks bear a sales tax, while powdered drinks bear no sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Euler They are the same business.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Both are for the same purpose.

Hon. Mr. Euler: They are not competitive at all, and they are not foods.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are in the same position as margarine and butter.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Both are produced by the same firm.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, they are not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What about hard drinks?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: My friend asked for an example, and I gave him one.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It is an example, such as it is, but it is not a food.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What does my friend mean by "hard drinks"?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They all bear tax.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It would be just as consistent for the people who produced wood for fuel to have opposed the use of coal; later, coal was superseded by oil, then oil by natural gas, which is gaining ground every day, and in due course I suppose we shall heat by atomic energy. The world is progressing all the time, and I think it utterly illogical and unfair—I stress the word unfair—to discriminate against one product in favour of another, both of which are produced in this country.

I have spoken already about the motive behind the sales tax on, and the prohibition of the colouring of, margarine. I would say, I think without successful contradiction—and there have been a good many plebiscites taken with regard to it—that if the people of Canada were permitted to vote as to whether they desired to have margarine coloured in the factories or the sales tax removed, they would vote 80 per cent in favour of the removal of the sales tax and of the ban on colouring of margarine.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would not people generally vote to remove a tax?

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is begging the question, and there is no point to it at all. We are forgetting the millions of consumers who pay the tax. An old saying comes to mind: "The greatest good to the greatest number."

One more reference, and I shall be through. In this matter the motives are, to some extent at least, political. I am not trying to give offence to anyone. I knew perfectly well when I introduced a bill for the legalization of margarine in Canada on three occasions, unsuccessfully—and I want to thank my friend the Leader of the Government for the compliment he paid me in that respect—that some senators believed, according to their right, that the Government of the day did not want the enactment of a measure to legalize the sale of margarine. That being the feeling of some members of this chamber, many who I believe were in fact in favour of the principle of the sale of margarine voted against it because the Government did not wish the bill to pass this chamber and go to the House of Commons, there to embarrass the elected members who were afraid of the votes of a minority when they went to the elections. That may to some extent be the case now. I do not know.

Let me make a personal reference. Before I entered this chamber I had been a member of a political party and of a political Government, but I came here with the thought in my mind, and I still have it, that when one enters this house he should come with pretty much of an open mind, with the idea and intention of dealing with questions on their merits. That is what I would like to see the senators do with this amended bill. Why not let it go to the House of Commons, and let the members of that house take the responsibility of voting on it? They can throw the amendment out if they so choose. I have never heard of the members of the Commons doing much for the Senate, except criticize it. Therefore, I say, why not let this bill go to the Commons and let them take their own responsibility and not again take shelter behind the protective arms of the Senate?

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I have just one comment that I wish to make. The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) made reference to an arrangement with the province of Newfoundland. The phrase he used, but which he may not have meant to be as bad as it sounded, was that by an under-cover arrangement the sales tax on margarine is adjusted. I would like to say that there is no such thing, I am sure, as an under-cover arrangement between Newfoundland and the federal Government.

In this particular case, the manufacture and sale of margarine in the province of Newfoundland were made the subject of special consideration while the terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada were being negotiated. It was written into the terms of Union that, in Newfoundland the manufacture and sale of margarine would not be impeded, and at the present time that is how it stands. That is a matter which was negotiated and agreed upon between Canada and Newfoundland at the time of Union.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, I did not use the word "under-cover". I said it seemed to be a back-door arrangement. Maybe that means the same thing, but I was not casting any aspersions on the good province of Newfoundland. If there is to be any criticism it should be of the dominion Government for making that sort of an arrangement.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: It was one of the conditions of Union and was neither an under-cover nor back-door matter.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words, and point out to the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) that his main argument when he introduced his measure for the removal of the ban on the sale of margarine, as I remember it, was that the tax revenue that the Government would receive from it would be very considerable.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No, never.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes, I remember that distinctly.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No, no. Would the honourable senator give me a reference to that?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I will find it for you, and I certainly can find it because I remember it very distinctly.

First of all, we must ask ourselves the question: Are milk, milk powder, ice cream and butter necessaries for the children of this country? Are they just ordinary run-of-the-mill foods that can be stored away? As a matter of fact, we are storing milk powder to a greater extent than was ever possible before, but the source of that milk powder is fresh milk which is obtained by a seven-day-week and a fifty-two-week-year operation, with no relaxation, whereas, on the other hand, a large margarine factory may operate one month a year, one week out of each month, or two days a week, and produce enormous quantities of this product which is sold, as the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) pointed out, at very reasonable prices at present in spite of the small tax.

One of the major ingredients of margarine is rape seed oil. In western Canada last year the farmers were receiving 4 cents a pound for rape seed, and a large part of that rape seed goes into manufacture of margarine.

Canada has undertaken many great burdens, and we should not deprive the Government at this time of the revenue from this sales tax.

While I agree with the honourable senator from Waterloo when he points out that margarine is a food, I must say that it is an extraordinary case. The whole Canadian home is built around dairy cattle. Many men and women who are leaders in their communities had the responsibility, when they were children, of bringing in the cow to the barn and of caring for it. In what way can you compare that to a huge vat of oil, 75 per cent of the contents of which is comprised of vegetable oils and other oils which are imported? It is not a fair comparison, and I, for one, cannot support the resolution to withdraw the tax.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I find myself in a very undesirable position. I agree with much of what the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) has said. I think we must all agree that he presented his case today in an excellent manner. I do not recall any senator having spoken more clearly and fairly. I think we all admire him for the stand which he has taken over the years in respect to margarine. He has been sincere. He desires to have margarine sold at as low a price as possible so that as many people as possible can buy it. We all have the greatest respect for him, and for the stand which he has taken, and I can go, as I say, a long way with him in his remarks tonight.

Unfortunately, maybe, I am on the record as to how I feel about disturbing the balance of ways and means. I find I am not as good a parliamentarian as is the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). Apparently, he can take a stand on a subject at one time and now take a different stand.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: To what is my honourable friend referring?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am referring to the time when the question of margarine was first discussed in this house and when, as I understand it, the honourable Leader of the Government supported the honourable senator from Waterloo.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am on the record as to the way I voted. I looked it up, and I voted against him.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Not always.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It was my understanding that you voted against the honourable senator the last three times, but you did not refer to how you voted on the previous occasions. If I am wrong I shall be glad to withdraw my remarks, but I notice that the honourable Leader of the Government is smiling.

In any event, I have taken a stand in connection with the disturbance of the balance of ways and means. I have said that I believe that so far as possible the balance of ways and means should be preserved and that the Senate should not upset the calculations of those charged with the making of them and with the preparation and initiation of the measures designed to bring them into effect. That is the stand I have taken. As I say, although I agree with a great deal of what the honourable senator from Waterloo has said I cannot go back on what I have said on previous occasions. I believe in what I have said previously, and no matter what stand the honourable Leader of the Government may take, I am going to be consistent.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have the greatest respect for the integrity, the consistency and, usually, the opinion of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I follow him in most matters, and we agree, at least in principle, on most of the things that are discussed in this chamber. However, as a constitutional lawyer I am impelled at the moment to disagree with his stand in respect to the right of the Senate to act in a matter of this kind. I appreciate, of course, his desire not to upset the honourable gentlemen in the other place in their calculations, and not to require them to spend a little more of a stub of pencil on figuring them out again. That is a very kind attitude on his part, but it is not sufficient to nullify—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I assure my honourable friend that that is not the reason for my stand.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps it is not entirely to ease the burdens of the gentlemen in the other place who figure out our finances. Very well. In that case let us be free to exercise the rights which the Constitution gives to this body to deal intelligently with matters of this kind. There has been a great deal of very light talk about what our rights in this chamber are and what they are not when financial questions are concerned.

I have in my hand a report by our brilliant Parliamentary Counsel, Mr. E. Russell Hopkins, entitled Financial Legislation in the Senate. Mr. Hopkins quotes from the great authority upon which this house has acted on many occasions, a report submitted a number of years ago by the late Senator W. B. Ross. Mr. Hopkins writes:

> Senator W. B. Ross submitted the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on May 15, 1918, and incorporated therein a memorandum prepared by Messrs. E. Lafleur and Aimé Geoffrion. The conclusions of the committee were clear and concise. In its view, the powers of the houses are equal with respect to legislation, including financial legislation, except that money bills must be originated in the House of Commons: the Senate is therefore not competent to introduce amendments raising a tax or appropriation, since this would be tantamount to introducing a money bill.

But it can reduce these amounts. Mr. Hopkins quotes the language of Senator Ross' report delivered to this house in 1918:

> The Senate of Canada has and always has had since it was created the power to amend bills originating in the Commons appropriating any part of the revenue or imposing a tax by reducing the amounts therein, but has not the right to increase the same without the consent of the Crown.

That is, we have a right to amend money bills but not to increase appropriations or taxes without the consent of the Crown. As far as that is concerned, neither has the Commons, because when the Government brings in a money bill it is with the consent of the Crown.

Mr. Hopkins goes on:

> The committee's conclusion was that the mere recital in the preamble to the British North America Act—

To which my honourable friend the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has just referred—> to the effect that the federating provinces desired a constitution "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom" could not over-ride the plain intendment of the operative sections of the British North America Act, which limit the legislative power of the Senate only to the extent as therein stated.

Now, what was stated in the British North America Act? It is to be found in section 53 of the act. This is the limiting section so far as we are concerned, and it is the only limiting section which you find in the act. Section 53 reads:

> Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

Let me read it again:

> Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost,

—two things only—

> —shall originate in the House of Commons.

Let us get in our minds clearly that this is the one limitation on the powers of this house. I say to you as a lawyer of some years' standing that we have every right and every authority to apply our minds to problems of this kind and to reduce the tax if we think it is wise in the public interest to do so.

Mr. Hopkins quotes as follows from Berriedale Keith's Responsible Government in the Dominions:

> There is no other provision limiting the power of the Senate with regard either to finance or to general legislation.

Then in his report Mr. Hopkins writes:

> The so-called "Ross Report" was adopted unanimously by the Senate as a whole on May 22, 1918. Since then it has been re-stated many times in the Senate and remains in the record as the official view of that body.

Now, honourable senators, let us apply our minds to this measure without doubt and without fear with respect to its constitutional aspects. As to the merits of this question let me say that I come from one of the great industrial centres of this country. I feel I directly represent a very large number of the consumers of Canada, and in the House of Commons I represented a constituency in that great centre of population, the city of Toronto. So I think I know something about the people of my region and of the rest of Canada as well, and I am concerned about their health and well-being. I know that margarine is the food of the poor. A few cents on the price of margarine mean a great deal to a large proportion of the people to whom I have referred. I call your attention to the fact stated by the Leader of the Government that 152 million pounds of margarine were consumed last year by the people of Canada. An excise tax of 11 per cent is not something to shrug off or to look upon lightly when it is placed upon the food of those who buy the cheapest food consistent with the health of their families. I remember very well the discussions that took place in this house on two or three occasions when we debated the question of margarine. We were told that dire consequences would follow the manufacture, sale and consumption of this food. It is true my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) told us that it was a healthful food. Well, I haven't heard of anybody dying of margarine poisoning since this item of diet has been subject to free sale among our people, as it is, except in certain provinces, and there it is sold anyway.

I quite appreciate and sympathize with the views of the dairy industry. It is, of course, taking care of its own financial interests, but I have no sympathy with those who would hog-tie the consumers of this dominion for the financial interests of those who run butter factories.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Who would get the most benefit from a reduction, the manufacturer or the consumer?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The consumer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: How do you know?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Because there is the freest of competition among the manufacturers of margarine, and competition sets the price in a general way. Sometimes competition is circumvented, not infrequently by the policy of honourable gentlemen opposite who propose tariffs and advocate taxation of this kind. Sometimes there are cartels and monopolies which interfere with free competition, but the basic principle upon which prices are regulated is competition. You might as well tell me that the impost of 11 per cent would not increase the price as tell me that taking off the 11 per cent would not decrease the price. Of course it would.

An Hon. Senator: It is not subsidized.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, it is not subsidized; it stands on its own feet. I would object if the boot were on the other foot, if in this house there were those who were trying to advance the sale of margarine at the expense of butter. I object to hog-tying the consumer at any time, limiting his powers of choice and forcing him to buy something that he doesn't want by some financial or physical arrangement. I am a free trader in this as in all matters, and I am strongly in favour of reducing the price of margarine to our poorer consumers, to everybody who uses it—and their name is legion—by removing this 11 per cent tax. I trust the majority of this house will agree with the senator from Waterloo and sustain his amendment.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), in his remarks dealing with the report before the committee, outlined the historical facts of the controversy which for years has surged around the manufacture and sale of margarine. It is not necessary to refer to that. I am bound to say I am at a loss to understand why, on the basis of fairness and equity, anyone in this house would wish to continue this sales tax on margarine. Margarine is a food, and it is a healthful food. There may have been, fifty years ago, opposition on the ground that oleomargarine, as it was then called—because at that time it was made wholly from animal fats—was not a healthful food. There is no question that the conditions at that time under which it was manufactured were often very far from sanitary, just as the conditions under which butter was then made were often very far from sanitary. However, with the improvements in health regulations, sanitation and inspection, margarine today is just as healthful a food as a human being can consume. In fact, there are medical authorities who argue that margarine made from vegetable oils is even superior to butter.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They are called unsaturated vegetable oils.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There are arguments both ways on that.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But, as many honourable senators are aware, the argument is advanced by many doctors that animal fats contain the substance known as cholesterol.

Hon. Mr. Horner: There are other prominent doctors who argue that there is nothing to that at all.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How do you argue?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My good friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) has displayed a bit more than his ordinary impetuosity at this moment.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are displaying a bit.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I did not say that there were not other doctors who took the contrary view. My point was that there are eminent doctors who hold this point of view that I enunciate, and I still stand by that statement.

Hon. Mr. Horner: All right. I don't agree with it.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is all right. I have not the slightest objection to my honourable friend's disagreeing with me. As a matter of fact, we often find ourselves on common ground, particularly when I visit him in his room.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: On freight rates.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I come back to the fact that margarine is a healthful food. Now, there is no question that the price at which margarine can be purchased is on the whole less than half the price paid for butter. Take the people of limited means, who may have families to support and to buy food for. Why should they not enjoy the fullest possible advantage in the purchase of a healthful food? Why should they have their cost of this food item increased by 11 per cent sales tax, when every other food is exempt?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Not every other food.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I put it not only to the common sense of this house, but also to its fairness: Is that a reasonable position to take? I submit that it is not. The real fact is that from the very beginning of this controversy over margarine—or oleomargarine, in the first instance—behind it has been the principle and incidence of protection to the dairy industry and to dairy farmers. There is no question about that at all. The late Mr. Motherwell, who brought the matter up in the early twenties, made no bones about the fact that he wanted to protect the dairy industry.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Or that he was a free trader.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I say to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake and to all other honourable members of this house that I am not going to stand up in my place in Parliament and advocate that the duty should be removed from shoes, for instance, for the poor people of this country, or from the agricultural implements the farmer uses—

Hon. Mr. Horner: They are exempt.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —and at the same time argue that it is a justifiable thing to impose this protective principle in this way. At any rate, I hope to be consistent in that respect. The argument, it seems to me, is unanswerable on the basis of fairness and equity to the people of this country.

I am not going to discuss the theory that removal of the sales tax from margarine would disturb the balance of ways and means. I think the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) dealt very effectively with it. As a matter of fact, I have always believed, and I believe now, that the powers of the Senate in respect of legislation are co-equal with the powers of the House of Commons excepting in one respect, that bills that impose taxation or bills for the expenditure of money must originate in the other house. But to say that a money bill, a bill imposing taxation, is sacrosanct and that when it comes to this house it cannot be touched, is against the experience of this house.

Let us go back and get a resumé of what was said by those who considered and debated this problem in this house in years past. Take the opinion of the late Senator Ross, given in 1918, to which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity referred. That was based on an opinion from two of the most eminent constitutional lawyers in this country, the late Aimé Geoffrion, and the late Eugène Lafleur. I think our colleagues in the house who belong to the legal profession will not dispute my statement that those two gentlemen were among the most eminent lawyers on constitutional matters in this country; and as far as I am concerned, honourable senators, I am prepared to take their opinion on this matter, that we have the power to deal with money bills. We can reduce taxes when a bill of that nature comes to this house from the other place. We cannot increase taxation nor can we initiate new taxes, but we can reduce them, and we can reduce expenditures. And if I may venture an opinion to the house, it is that we do not act often enough in respect of these matters. To make a fetish out of the idea that it is beyond the powers of the Senate to reduce taxes or expenditures is wholly a mistaken idea. If there still lingers any doubt about that in the minds of the Government let them submit a stated case to the court and find out just what our authority is in that respect. There is nothing in so far as I understand it, and heaven knows I am not a lawyer and never pretended to be one, not even a—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: A sea lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That's it; I am not even a sea lawyer. But I am confident that I have not overstated the case.

To come back. I think that in the past, when another Government was in power, we in the Senate may sometimes have taken the attitude of refraining from embarrassing our friends on the other side of the fence. Well, that is not my view of the responsibilities of the Senate. I gravely suspect that that is the ruling motive behind the criticism of this legislation now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, if I am mistaken, I will apologize.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If your argument were carried to the extreme, no Government could possibly bring down a budget and finance its operations.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It would interfere with ways and means all the way through.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The Senate would never do that. But that is a different thing altogether from reducing a tax on an essential element of food in this country. There is no comparison. In any event, the function and responsibility of the Senate, indeed the plain duty of the Senate, is to act quite independently of any other authority and to judge the issues that come before it on the basis of fairness and equity, and of what is in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, may I be allowed just one remark? I am afraid the unsigned letters the honourable senator and I have been getting have affected him rather seriously.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words. Somebody suggested we might be making trouble for the other house. Well, I would not spend too much time on that issue because I think the members of that house are quite able to take care of themselves. I do not think we need to worry about them.

What I am worried about are the farmers of this country, farmers who keep cattle, who milk cows and send the milk to the factory and so on. I know them from my early days. I was born and raised on that kind of a farm, and every Saturday I would go with so many pounds of butter and some eggs in a basket to sell to merchants three or four miles away.

We have had a lot of elections in Manitoba since 1948 and I have never heard a single candidate in one of them say that he was in favour of oleomargarine. They will talk about it when they are in the legislature, but when they get back before the people seeking election they never say boo. In an election the issue of oleomargarine could carry the city of Winnipeg itself, which elects seven or eight members, but that issue could not carry the country where the farmers live. We in this house have to recognize that our farmers need protection and help more than any other class in the community. They are the backbone in the matter of giving employment to the country as a whole, and only by our support of them will this country get out of the fight it is in, because we are going to have to fight Russia, and China too, not in a shooting war, but on tariffs.

The honourable member from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) told us that oleomargarine is made out of ingredients shipped into this country, and that the profits go to the manufacturers. They would make 11 per cent additional profit if the sales tax were removed, because they could continue to sell their product at its present price, which includes the tax.

I want to say to my fellow senators in this house that I am not interested in any fight between the Senate and the House of Commons, because we would certainly get the worst of it. The people are not so enthusiastically in love with the Senate as with the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Croll: They are not much in love with the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Haig: That is all right; you can have your opinion, but I am telling you the situation as I see it. I have run in a good many elections and I know something about elections. I was elected four times in the whole city of Winnipeg. I know that although the issue of oleomargarine is debated when the legislature is in session, it is never raised in an election.

The candidates keep as quiet as mice about it, because they know that the majority of the people of Manitoba would not stand for that kind of thing. We want to give our farmers a chance to make a living in this country. That is fundamental. That is what the people of Manitoba think, no matter what my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) says. He was a member of the cabinet and he could have had the law changed if he had wanted to. But he never did. I have been here 25 years and I never heard of any legislation being brought forward by him to do that very thing. A bill was introduced here in 1948. He was in this house at that time. It was up first in 1945, I think.

Hon. Mr. Euler: My honourable friend says the majority of the people of Manitoba are against margarine.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Then how is it that two months ago the Manitoba Legislature had a tie vote on the colouring of margarine?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I am saying that never has the question been raised as an election issue.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Somebody must have raised it or it would not have come to a vote.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The question of the sale of margarine was never raised; it was just whether margarine should be coloured.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Yes, I know that.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I can understand the people voting for the colouring of margarine, because when they serve the stuff they want you to think you are eating butter. The colouring would help it. But when you see that stuff you know it isn't butter.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Try it on hot toast and you will find out.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The legislators were not voting on the sale of margarine, but on the colouring of it. I challenge my friend from Churchill to name me a place where margarine was raised as an election issue in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Will my honourable friend permit me to speak for a moment? I think it is true that the question was not discussed at elections, because it was not an issue. There were other more important matters. When my friend refers to my position in the house, he is wholly mistaken. He referred to the year 1945. I cannot recall that the question was dealt with in 1945.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He was not here in 1945.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Indeed I was here in 1945.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I repeat, oleomargarine was not an issue in the Manitoba elections, because anybody who introduced it knew it would mean his political death to do so.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I interrupt?

Hon. Mr. Haig: No; I will deal with my friend when I am finished.

The province of Manitoba is not the largest dairy province, but it is perhaps next to Ontario and Quebec. Dairying is of course important in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island also. But we raise large quantities of cattle in Manitoba and dairying is the backbone of the farming industry there.

Nobody need accuse my friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) of voting any other way than he should vote. He sat beside me in opposition for a long time, and if he had voted the wrong way we would have run him out. We sat together for 12 years—and my friend the present Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) knows that is a long time. He has only been in that position two years, and he thinks it is pretty long.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The longest two years I have ever experienced.

Hon. Mr. Haig: When we were in opposition I used to accuse my friend the present Leader of the Government of bossing me, and he accused me of bossing him. But at least we always agreed when it came to voting. We sometimes took counsel with the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner).

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: And all three were wrong.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Now I will answer my friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck).

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask my honourable friend how many million pounds of margarine are sold each year in Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I don't know how much is sold there.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I can say it is a very large amount. The farmers eat it too.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Of course we have a large sale of butter in that province; it is one of our paying industries.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I refer to margarine, not butter.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I don't know about margarine. There is no factory in Manitoba making margarine, that I know of. Perhaps my friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) can tell me if that is so.

I want to say one further word. I think we ought not to make an amendment to this bill and challenge the House of Commons on it and start a fight among its members. If we want to challenge the House of Commons we should start a fight on some issue that means millions of dollars to the people of Canada as a whole, and not to a mere segment of the population. This question affects only the dairy industry.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It affects all consumers.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I have sufficient confidence in a fellow called Diefenbaker to believe that he won't take any challenge. If he decides to amend the bill, he will do so; if he decides to let it go, he will let it go. He may decide to accept the challenge of the Senate, but I do not want to challenge the House of Commons on this question. It is too small to make a fight over. It is a matter on which fundamentally we do not agree. Some of us think we should not permit the sale of margarine. We think we should help our butter farmers in Canada to sell their product. We may be wrong, but I cannot forget what I learned as a boy. When I was six or seven years of age I went to town every Saturday morning on Molly's back with a basket of butter and eggs on my arm, sold the produce and brought home the goods my mother told me to get. There I learned my first lesson in business. I am not a very good businessman yet, but I know that two and two always make four.

My point is that we should vote this amendment out. There is no fundamental issue at stake in it. My honourable friend from Waterloo says there is an issue. But I say there is no demand, no campaign, no request to deal with it. For that reason I think it is a serious mistake to challenge the House of Commons on it.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: May I say to my friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that the poorest people and the hardest working people in Canada are the farmers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They buy margarine themselves.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: I know some of them do. Probably no people need to buy margarine more than farmers do. But most farmers have a few cows and sell a little butter. They are hard-working people; they don't know what holidays are; they work seven days a week, 365 days a year, and know nothing about a 40-hour week. The cows have to be milked on Sundays and holidays the same as on any other day. I say the farmers are the most deserving and the hardest-working people of Canada, particularly the dairy farmers.

As regards the question whether the average person can afford to purchase margarine, I might say that when this subject came up several years ago I made a study of it. I visited many people in the cities and I found there were very few people who could not afford to buy margarine. I found that most of the people who bought margarine were not poor at all. They were using it for cooking or were trying to save a little money. At the same time, I found that those people could afford to buy two or three packs of tailor-made cigarettes a day and to drink high-priced and high-taxed liquor without any trouble at all. So I am not concerned about these so-called poor people in the cities who work only forty hours a week or less and make two or three times as much as the farmer. They have a pretty easy time of it. I know many of them. The people who need protection more than anyone else are the dairy farmers of Canada, and I feel that we should give them a little support.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I would like to give my views on this question. In all fairness to the sponsor of the amendment, the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), I spoke to him about this question and I told him that I had changed my mind. I told him that privately, because in years gone by I was strongly opposed to margarine for, like the previous speaker, I thought it was against the interests of the farmers, and I know that farmers have a very difficult task making a living.

However, as a lawyer, I would submit to some of my honourable colleagues a constitutional question, which was debated by some honourable senators, especially by my good friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). My question is as to the right of the Senate to amend money bills. The authority of constitutional law has been upheld by other honourable senators, and also by the late Aimé Geoffrion and Eugène Lafleur, who were two of my professors at university and for whom I shall always hold great respect.

Another aspect of constitutional law has come to my mind. For instance, in the House of Commons, of which I was a member for quite a few years and whose rules I have studied—not as well as my good friend who sits next to me (Hon. Mr. Vien), who was Deputy Speaker of that house for many years—in that house any legislation that affects the expenditures of this country must be moved and placed before the house by a member of the Government, a minister. No private member of the House of Commons has the right to bring in a bill that would affect the expenditures of this country. I believe I am right in saying that, and I think that this rule should apply here.

Of course, I agree with the authorities that in this chamber we have not the right to introduce a money bill to increase the expenditures, but we have the right to reduce expenditures. In this case, by the adoption of this amendment, we would reduce the taxes and thereby reduce the revenues of this country, but we would also relieve some of the burden on the taxpayers.

What I am asking myself and the other members of this honourable house is this: Are the rules that apply in the House of Commons not binding in this house? I submit the question for what it is worth. I am under the first impression that the rules of the House of Commons should be applied here, and that the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is entitled to move an amendment to reduce taxes imposed on the taxpayers of this country.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I would like to say just two things. I do not think it is necessary in what I am going to say to discuss the constitutional aspect of the question. I have only to ask myself: Is it advisable to vote in favour of the motion which has been made by the Leader of the Government?

In my own case, I represent the constituency of Huntingdon, which is the leading dairy constituency in the province of Quebec. In those circumstances, as a representative of those dairy farmers, I think it is my duty to protect as much as possible the producers of butter, and therefore I should not help put the manufacturers of margarine in a still more favourable position than they are in at present.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I hesitated to enter this debate until I heard the senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) speak.

I wish to state first of all that I agree with what was said by the honourable senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh) when he pleaded the plight of the farmer. He made out a good case. I understand that under the present governmental farm policies the income of the farmers has fallen by some $50 million so far this year. That is a very serious matter. I was not too impressed by the argument made by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when he said that the former Government had for eight or nine years allowed the tax to remain, and that the present Government had had only three years in which to perpetuate the mistake.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Of course you did not say that. I am saying that. I am adding just a few words to indicate what you meant.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do not attribute that statement to me.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You made the statement that the present Government had been in office for only three years.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What did you say?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I said the previous Government had been in power for eight years, had considered the matter and had not taken the tax off; and that the present Government had been in office for three years and had not taken it off and that, therefore, it must have been Government policy to leave it on.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Exactly. I did not suggest that you said anything other than that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It sounded as if you did.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not agree with the tax when the last Government imposed it for eight or nine years, and I do not agree with it now. In effect, what my honourable friend has said is that the present Government is perpetuating the mistake of the last Government.

I had not originally intended to speak in support of the committee's amendment. I am driven to it now, driven to it by the arguments that are being presented here tonight. When the legislative authority of this chamber is questioned, then it is time to take a stand.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Who questioned it?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The honourable Leader of the Government very wisely did not do so, but other eminent members have raised the question.

I took occasion to look up our powers this afternoon. I understand it is agreed that the Senate has special responsibilities as a custodian of provincial rights; that it has a right to amend money bills if such changes have the effect of decreasing an appropriation or reducing a tax. That is what I understand the law to be. Shall I remind the house that a year ago we dealt with the Estate Tax Act—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It was two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Croll: In any event, we made some amendments to the Estate Tax Act at that time. I did not support the amendments, but for an entirely different reason, which I stated. I thought that the large estates would benefit to a great extent. If I recall correctly, that question of constitutionality was not raised at that time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Quite properly so, for it did not interfere with the current budget of the Government at that time.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But when it went back to the other place, if you read the Commons Hansard of that day you will see the Minister of Finance said it was unworkable and it interfered with ways and means. I am rather amazed when I hear talk about how badly the farmer fares here. I don't know a great deal about farming, but I know that butter sells for 70 cents, the farmer has a support price of 64 cents, and he buys margarine at 30 cents. He doesn't do too badly at all on the deal. I am told by the margarine people that some of their best customers are farmers.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You were told that?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What is the authority?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I think that is generally known to be a fact. It is important to know that there is a growing acceptance of margarine in this country. The honourable Leader of the Government told us that the production amounted to 152 million pounds, being up 4½ per cent from the year previous, whereas butter was down 4 per cent from the year previous, and this despite the artificial handicaps put in the way of margarine. First of all there is the 11 per cent sales tax on margarine which is not on other basic foods, including butter. Then, the colour must be added to margarine in every province except Newfoundland and British Columbia. I realize we cannot do anything about the colouring but, as the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) pointed out, we can do something about this discriminatory tax. I don't think that a drop of 3 cents a pound will improve the competitive position of margarine with butter but it will to some extent benefit the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Every reduction in the price of a commodity improves its competitive position. It can't help but do so.

Hon. Mr. Croll: There isn't much of a competitive position if one product is selling at 30 cents and its so-called competitor is selling at 70 cents.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And you want to reduce margarine by another 3 or 4 cents.

Hon. Mr. Croll: When I say it is necessary to do that, those of you who are aware of the fact that the cost of living, according to the most recent report has gone up, during the month of May—

Hon. Mr. Haig: How much has it gone up?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Not a great deal, but it is starting on its way up. It doesn't go up very quickly, but the important thing is that it has gone up and not down. The reason for that is the rise in food costs. The house should appreciate that margarine production can help the farmer. Soya beans are used in the manufacture of margarine and the soya bean industry in this country is becoming important. At the present time we import some soya beans. The rape and sunflower seeds in the west are becoming part of an industry of great importance. The farmer can make himself a profitable crop, he can diversify, and he can strengthen the national economy by producing these things that are necessary for margarine when it is sold in far larger volume than it is at the present time. As the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and others have said, it is the people's food and it should be exempt in the same way as butter is. If they want to colour it pink or yellow or any other colour they should be permitted to do it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Or red.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, red, if they like. It is amazing how acceptable it is to the people and not acceptable to public officials. That is very difficult to understand.

The edible oils industry is becoming important in this country, and it ought to be increasingly important not only to the farmer but to the consumer. I have already said that the soya bean industry in Ontario is a $12 million industry.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is the first time you have said that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I saw a press report a few days ago that in the west the crop of rape seed in the last decade increased from 1,000 acres to 600,000 acres, and that in the next decade another million acres now growing wheat will be diverted in that fashion. I am not responsible for that statement. If anyone wants to know what newspaper I read it in I shall be glad to give the information. I haven't got it here with me.

I suggest it is time that we gave the people in the margarine business a chance to see what they can do by way of expanding their production instead of stifling the market and denying to the people generally an equally good product at a price that they can afford to pay. That has been the great appeal margarine has had: it has been a good food that people can afford to buy.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I wish to add just a word or two to what has already been said in favour of the amendment as reported from the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. In the past I have been identified, I think on every occasion, with the cause of furthering the manufacture, distribution and consumption of oleomargarine. As I contemplate this list of foods which is embodied in the bill to amend the Excise Tax Act, I wonder why oleomargarine is left in the invidious position in which it is placed in relation to these other foods.

Many other foods do not begin to compare in volume of consumption with oleomargarine.

I regard the constitutional excuse for not adopting this amendment as not deliberate, possibly, but I think in reality it is a thinly-veiled disguise for the special privilege of a deeply-entrenched dairy industry in this country. In that connection, I am very sorry that my honourable colleague from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) is not here this evening to repeat the strong castigation that he made the other day in committee. I think he spoke with a great deal of conviction, and I certainly share in every way in what he had to say about the entrenched character of the Dairy Council and the dairy industry in this country, which is enjoying benefits by reason of government subsidy for its products. The manufacturers of oleomargarine, on the other hand, are meeting all competition in an open and free market for the benefit of the consuming public of Canada. In these days, when we are witnessing the rapid growth of unemployment and depression, with economic problems besetting our people, every possible reduction in costs of living should be effected as far as we are able to do so. It is a reasonable suggestion to ask that oleomargarine be included with the other foods which are free from the 11 per cent tax which is imposed upon it.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I merely want to make a very brief comment on this matter. From a study of the schedule to this bill it appears, as the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) has said, that practically all basic foods are exempt from sales tax. It seems, therefore, unreasonable that margarine, a food of the poor, as the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) termed it, is not also listed among the items exempted in the schedule. Margarine is not only a good basic food, but it is so good that many doctors prescribe it in place of butter in diets for patients with certain diseases.

Knowing that the people of the province of Newfoundland are not obliged to pay sales tax on margarine, I took time to read the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada, which set out that there shall be no restriction on the sale of margarine in Newfoundland. I think it was very wise of the people of Newfoundland to insist that this provision be included in the Terms of Union. I certainly would not want to see them deprived of this privilege. However, it seems to me a very strange situation when a law that is passed by the federal Parliament applies unevenly throughout the provinces of Canada. I do not advocate that the people of Newfoundland should have to pay the tax on margarine, but I do advocate that the people of the other provinces should be on the same footing and exempted from paying the tax on margarine.

Honourable senators, I support this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Question!

Hon. Mr. Horner: Question!

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, I have listened with a good deal of attention to the speeches that have been made this evening.

I must say, as a former Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole in the House of Commons, I had a responsibility, just as had the present Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) when he was Speaker of that house, in giving rulings on certain matters that came before the Chair. When a question arose as to removing an item of revenue we always had to rule it out of order, unless some other item were substituted therefor which would produce the equivalent of the item removed. I sat in that house with my colleagues here, the honourable Senator Euler, the honourable Senator Crerar, the honourable Senator Roebuck and the honourable Senator Croll, and I do not think any one of them will dispute the fact that that was always required of the Chair.

The honourable Senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) referred to the memorandum of Mr. Lafleur and Mr. Geoffrion. Now, I am not a lawyer, but I try to sum up these things from a sensible standpoint. His interpretation of that report is quite different from mine. In summing up their report they said:

> Under the circumstances we are of the opinion that the Senate of Canada may amend a money bill originating in the House of Commons as fully as the House of Commons can do. Of course, the powers of the Senate are limited to the same extent as those of the House of Commons by the fact that money bills must be recommended by a message of the Governor General.

That is, money bills must be introduced by a minister of the Crown.

My interpretation of that is that we in the Senate can do what the House of Commons can do. Somebody else may put a different interpretation on that altogether. When you interpret that as it is, you ask yourself, what can the House of Commons do? The House of Commons can reduce expenditures. You could have a $110 million expenditure, and a private member could move to reduce that to one dollar. No private member could move for any expenditure or for the removal of an item of revenue, without substituting something in its place.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I do not like to interrupt, but may I ask a question right there? The senator has just stated that no item of revenue can be removed without substituting something else. Well, how in the world can a private member substitute something else? Does my friend mean by the imposition of a tax—which could not be done at all?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Well, the simple answer is that a private member cannot do it. He cannot substitute anything. That is the rule. My friend should know that as well as I know it.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But it is impossible to substitute, you say?

Hon. Mr. Golding: I know it is; and that is why he cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask the honourable member a question? This point has bothered and puzzled me. Does he maintain that it is beyond the compass of the House of Commons to reduce a tax proposed by the Government?

Hon. Mr. Golding: The House of Commons can do anything. It can throw out a whole budget. But to be in order you cannot remove an item of revenue without substituting something else for it. You can throw out the whole budget speech, and you can defeat the Government; and you can throw out anything here in the Senate, if you wish to do so.

My honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) speaks of this item of $5 million, but the principle involved is that if you can remove an item of revenue of $5 million you can remove an item of revenue of $500 million, or five times that, if you wish to do it.

Now, let us consider the propriety of taking an action of that sort. I cannot imagine anything that would create more dissension between the two Houses of Parliament than to have one house destroy the efforts of the other. The Minister of Finance brings down his budget, he estimates his expenditures as so much, and he estimates his revenue at so much. Then this Excise Tax Bill, a revenue bill, comes over here, containing a number of free items. I doubt if ever before there was a move by the Senate to inject a revenue item into a list of free articles, and my opinion is that it is an improper thing to do. I voted against the amendment in committee and I shall vote against it now. In doing so I think I am voting for the harmony which must exist between these two houses, and I think I am on solid ground.

There has been some discussion about the situation in which the farmers find themselves. I happen to have been raised on a farm and I know something of what it is to milk cows seven days a week and all that sort of thing, and you can take it from me that the farmers are having a tough time right now. And I want to say this, that if the farmers are buying margarine, which I know they are, they are doing so only from an economic standpoint. They sell their butter at as high a price as they can get and buy the substitute because of their economic situation, and I think my honourable friend from Waterloo will agree with that.

I was home over the weekend and was shocked at the appearance of the spring crops there. I was talking to one couple who got on the train at my home town of Seaforth—they were over at Zurich, which is a good farming district—and they told me that the farmer they visited will not have any crop this year but hay. That is the situation the farmers are in.

There are other segments of our economy that are being helped with tariffs and with other things, and we do not find too much fault with them. I think my honourable friend from Waterloo, while he was Minister of National Revenue, imposed a general tariff of 45 per cent on furniture, which is a pretty high tariff, but he felt that those people were entitled to some protection and he gave it to them. And, incidentally, he did not lose any votes on that issue, at least not in his own constituency of Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I did not make the law on tariffs.

Hon. Mr. Golding: That is what I am telling you. Honourable senators can look it up and see for themselves.

So, if the Government intends to give the farmers a little assistance I say all the better for them. I hope they do get this assistance and that the Senate will vote the amendment down.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Question!

The Hon. the Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Brunt, that the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill C-73, intituled "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act", be not concurred in and that the bill be reported without amendment. What is your pleasure? Those in favour, please say Yea.

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Chairman: Those not in favour, please say Nay.

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think the Yeas have it.

The Hon. the Chairman: Will the Yeas please stand?

Hon. Mr. Vien: Mr. Chairman, I think you should explain what the question is about.

The Hon. the Chairman: I have read the motion. It is that the amendment made to the bill by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce be not concurred in and that the bill be reported without amendment. Those who are in favour of that motion are the Yeas. I would ask the Yeas to please rise.

Hon. Mr. Vien: That is, those who are not in favour of the amendment recommended by the committee?

The Hon. the Chairman: Yes.

Will the Nays now please rise?

Motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine agreed to: Yeas, 32; Nays, 15.

Bill reported without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the second reading of Bill S-36, to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-36, which is to amend the Criminal Code, contains only two important clauses. Clause 3 is merely consequential and in keeping with the change proposed by clause 2. As can be seen by the explanatory notes to the bill, the proposed new section 85(1)(a) is the same as the present section 85(1). The new paragraph (b) of section 85(1) has been added by way of amendment to make it unlawful to have in one's custody or possession, > a rifle having a barrel less than twenty inches in length and a butt or stock that can be folded, telescoped or shortened.

The prohibition is similar to that in the present section 85(1) with respect to a sawed-off shotgun or sawed-off rifle.

The purpose of the amendment is to make it unlawful to have in one's custody or possession a Hornet Survival rifle. It was considered by the Department of Justice that by reason of its compactness, muzzle velocity, and ease of concealment, possession of this weapon would be conducive to and might well facilitate the commission of crimes, and that its possession should be prohibited. This conclusion is supported by expressions of opinion from law officers in the larger metropolitan areas, and as well from provincial authorities.

The Crown Assets Disposal Corporation had sold a number of Hornet Survival rifles which had been used by the Royal Canadian Air Force. This weapon was advertised as not requiring police registration. The Minister of Justice in November last year, as soon as the situation was brought to the attention of the Minister of Defence Production, issued a press release explaining the reasons for the proposed amendment. The Crown Assets Disposal Corporation arranged for the return of and reimbursement for all Hornet rifles held by dealers or returned by dealers to the public. It is expected that the introduction of this amendment will accelerate the return of these weapons by the public to dealers from whom they were purchased or to the various R.C.A.F. depots, upon a fair price being paid by way of reimbursement. The dealers will be reimbursed by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, plus handling charges.

It has been ascertained that to date 1,224 rifles have been sold to the public and 1,577 are still in the hands of dealers.

We come now to clause 2 of the bill. The effect of this proposed amendment is to permit evidence to be taken by means of a sound recording apparatus where it is authorized by provincial legislation for use in civil cases.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Is this to be used in criminal cases?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: With the passage of this amendment it will be permitted to be used in criminal courts. Up to the present only two provinces, namely, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia, have the recording apparatus which is being used in the civil courts. The province of Saskatchewan has its court rooms so well equipped with the apparatus that the province has asked that the Criminal Code be amended to permit its use in criminal courts.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In preliminary hearings.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: And, as well, to be used throughout any trial.

Subclause 2 of the proposed amendment is to make clear that the transcription and certification of the mechanical record is to be carried out, and the transcript is to be used in accordance with the scheme of the provincial legislation.

Clause 3. The effect of this amendment is to provide for the mechanical recording of evidence at a jury trial by reference to the procedures specified in section 453 of the Criminal Code. Its purpose is to make the provision uniform with respect to sections 471 and 708(3), and is consequential upon the amendment to section 453. As I said at the outset, this amendment is required as a result of the change proposed in clause 2, so that it will not be out of step with the other related sections.

Honourable senators, this is not a complicated bill, and I see no necessity, unless it is the wish of some of my honourable friends to do so, for sending it to a committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, there is very little comment required on the two important sections of this bill. I am in favour of both of them, but I do think the bill should go to a committee.

The first section, which prohibits the possession of a sawed-off shotgun or rifle, is undoubtedly in the public interest, because the shortened or collapsible gun, the gun with a short barrel, is capable of doing great damage and may be used in holdups. It is more readily concealed than is the normal rifle or shotgun. Therefore, I think we are thoroughly justified in prohibiting its use. I know of no good use to which it can be put. It is entirely for criminal and anti-social purposes.

Honourable senators, I do wish we could do something about the control of firearms generally. As my honourable friends know, I have a country house, and know something about the country, I am glad to say, in a very happy way. There I see boys shooting guns off in a most nonchalant way. I recently came across some little boys of 8 or 10 years of age shooting at a bird on a telephone wire, with the bullets going into the air and falling nobody knows where. Last summer I had a pet goat tethered out in front of my house. I came home one afternoon and found the goat apparently very ill and suffering great pain. A farmer friend of mine joined me in looking at the animal. We thought it had a stomach ache. It was dead in the morning. I found it had been shot through the stomach. In all probability the author of that wound never knew he hit the goat. It was probably the result of a high-powered rifle being shot into the air. The bullet might just as readily have killed one of the children as it did my goat.

The indiscriminate use of firearms is dangerous in our communities. I would be in favour of legislation which would restrict it. If we could keep guns in the hands of responsible people who know the danger of them and are trained never to point a gun at a person, or discharge it in a way it might do damage, we would accomplish something very useful. I am in favour of this clause, and by all means let us pass it.

The next subject, that of mechanical reporting, is of course of great interest. Reporting by a system of shorthand has worked very well in the past. I do not think there is any objection to it whatsoever, but it is unfortunate that the younger men of today avoid the very large amount of study and labour necessary to qualify them for that difficult work. The fact is, therefore, that our courts are finding it increasingly difficult to secure reporters. With the advance of mechanization and the invention of more and more gadgets we are being forced to equip our courts with mechanical means of reporting.

At the same time, I hope that the provinces will take very great care in respect to the systems they adopt. A mechanical recorder that takes down everything that is said and all the sounds that occur in a court room would not be satisfactory. It is a necessary provision that the evidence that goes into the record shall be strained through the human mind, and not transcribed verbatim in a slavish manner. The record should contain only that portion of the talk which is of interest and which is pertinent to the subject. That part should be selected and recorded, and the other parts excluded. No machine can do that. That is why our present reporting system is so satisfactory. It is not slavish. It is not absolutely verbatim as to all the sounds that occur. It intelligently picks out those portions of it which are required to be recorded, and it is those portions only which are typed.

I do think that if a mechanical system is used it should be something into which a trained reporter speaks, with the machine recording either by magnetism or by the cutting of some kind of a record. A system such as that would work, I think, but that is for the provincial Attorneys General and their staffs to decide. I throw this out as a suggestion, however, that from my long experience in the courts I am confident that a mechanical all-inclusive recording of all the sounds that occur in a court room will not be satisfactory. We must make progress and, therefore, I am in favour of giving the law enforcement officers of the provinces the privilege of using a mechanical means of reporting the proceedings in both our criminal and civil courts as they may see fit and to the best of their good judgment.

I am in favour of both these clauses. They are good clauses. They are not objectionable in any way, but nevertheless I think this bill should go to a committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—ORDER STANDS

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges. 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wonder if the honourable senator would be prepared to go ahead with this order tomorrow afternoon as the first item on the Order Paper. It is two weeks since I moved the motion, and the session is progressing. I would like to make sure that plenty of time is given to honourable senators who wish to make speeches pertaining to this matter, and for that reason I think the debate should be continued tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, if the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) can arrange this with the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), I have no objection. Honourable senators will probably recall that on Thursday last the honourable senator from Churchill allowed a certain order to stand on condition that it would be called first tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Order Paper does not indicate that.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator from Churchill yielded the other day on condition that the order which stands adjourned in his name would be called first tomorrow. If the honourable Leader of the Opposition would agree to proceed in second place, that might be a satisfactory compromise.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I might agree to proceed first if the honourable Leader of the Government can make satisfactory arrangements with the honourable senator from Churchill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will try to arrange things in the best possible manner so as to suit everybody.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed who is to proceed first?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is agreed that item No. 4 on today's Order Paper will be called first tomorrow, if arrangements can be made with the honourable senator from Churchill; if not, the item in which the honourable senator from Churchill is interested will be first on the Order Paper, and today's item No. 4 will be second.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand the Order Paper will probably be made up tonight. May I suggest that the order in which the honourable senator from Churchill is interested appear first, and that the order with respect to the tenure of judges follow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That will be satisfactory.

The Hon. the Speaker: If at the sitting tomorrow the honourable senator from Churchill consents to proceed second, then the honourable Leader of the Opposition will be first.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 6, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Acting Secretary of State of Canada showing that the Honourable John Michael MacDonald has been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

Hon. John Michael MacDonald, of North Sydney, Nova Scotia, was introduced between Hon. Mr. Aseltine and Hon. Mr. Blois; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the Honourable Senator MacDonald had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-71, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without any amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. White moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill S-36, to amend the Criminal Code, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without any amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Choquette moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. James Gladstone, Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs, presented the second report of the committee.

The report reads as follows:

Tuesday, July 5, 1960.

The Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian Affairs make their second report, as follows:—

The Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian Affairs was reconstituted by those Houses of Parliament on March 15 and March 9 respectively, to continue the examination and consideration of the Indian Act and Indian administration in general begun during the 1959 session of Parliament.

Your committee has held 41 meetings and has heard 61 witnesses, including representatives of Indian bands and organizations, provincial Governments, church authorities and other organizations and groups listed hereunder:

1. Dominion Abitibi Band, Quebec;
2. St. Regis Band, Quebec and Ontario;
3. Indian Association of Alberta;
4. Indian Advisory Committee, Province of Ontario;
5. Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada;
6. Federation of Saskatchewan Indians;
7. Nishga Tribal Council, British Columbia;
8. Aboriginal Rights Committee of the Interior Tribes of British Columbia;
9. The Canadian Catholic Conference;
10. The Anglican Church of Canada;
11. The Co-operative Union of Canada;
12. The Board of Home Missions of the United Church of Canada;
13. Saddle Lake Band, Alberta;
14. Blackfoot Band, Alberta;
15. Blood Band, Alberta;
16. Government of Saskatchewan;
17. Six Nations Confederacy, Ontario;
18. Union of Ontario Indians.

Included in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, as appendices thereto, are 73 written submissions received by your committee from Indian bands, provincial Governments, church authorities and other organizations and groups interested in the welfare of the Indian Canadian.

It was evident early in the sittings that it would not be possible to hear all those who wished to make oral presentations, or to enter into a detailed examination and consideration of the Indian Act and to suggest amendments thereto. However, from evidence which has been given before your committee, it is apparent that one provision of the act, the compulsory enfranchisement feature of section 112, is opposed by virtually all the Indians and many non-Indians. It has created a barrier of distrust of all efforts designed to encourage the Indians to improve their position and assure more control over their own affairs.

Your committee believes that removal of this barrier will go a long way in convincing the Indians of the genuine desire of Parliament and the Government to further their advancement on the basis of mutual co-operation and trust and is of the opinion that its early removal is most desirable. In these circumstances, while the general study of enfranchisement of Indians must be left for further consideration, your committee unanimously recommends that at the first opportunity the Government introduce legislation to remove the compulsory enfranchisement provision from the Indian Act.

Your committee unanimously recommends further that immediately after Parliament reassembles next session, a similar committee be reconstituted to continue and complete the hearing of representatives of Indian and other organizations, departmental officials, and also review the Indian Act.

Your committee wishes to express its appreciation to all those representatives of Indian bands, Indian organizations, provincial Governments, church authorities and other organizations and groups for their valuable contribution to the deliberations of the committee and also for the information and assistance tendered by the Minister, the Honourable Ellen Fairclough, Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the Director of Indian Affairs, the Director of Indian and Northern Health Services, and other departmental officials.

A copy of the committee's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence is appended.

All which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES GLADSTONE
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Gladstone moved that the report be considered at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL TORONTO TERMINALS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (C-72) intituled: "An Act respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the city of Toronto", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hugessen, report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen reported that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had considered Bill C-72, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the city of Toronto, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

LAND USE

COMMITTEE MEETING POSTPONED

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to mention the postponement of a special meeting of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada which was called for tomorrow at 12 o'clock. I would ask honourable senators who are members of that committee to ignore the notice. A further notice will be given.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's Centennial Year 1967, and suggesting that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future.—(Honourable Senator Crerar, P.C.)

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, last evening when the business of the Senate for this afternoon was being discussed I said that if at all possible I would like to proceed with the debate on the resolution with respect to the retirement of judges as the first order this afternoon, but as the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) had adjourned the debate on the inquiry of the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron), and as that was the first order for today, it was suggested that I see the honourable senator from Churchill and talk the matter over with him. I am happy to say he has most graciously agreed to let Order No. 1 stand until next Wednesday. He was ready, willing and able to proceed today, but was most pleased to co-operate and do that which, probably, I should not have suggested.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, at the request of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) I agreed—whether graciously or ungraciously, I shall not say—to let this order stand, because it is not a matter of urgent importance at the moment. Being of a very accommodating nature, I desire to do all I can to help the honourable Leader of the Government overcome some of the difficulties in his work, and I gladly make way for the debate regarding the retirement of judges which, as everyone recognizes, is a very important matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands for one week.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 21, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges. 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am indeed fortunate in that it falls to my lot to be the first member of the Senate to take part in the regular business of today, because it is my privilege as a Macdonald to welcome another MacDonald to the Senate. There are now four of us, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will not be confused whenever any one of us wishes to propose a motion or to speak. I can say to our new senator that we are all very happy to have him with us. I know nothing of his background, except that he did not belong to the same political party to which I belonged. I also know that he had a long and distinguished career in the Legislature of the province of Nova Scotia. He will, therefore, bring to bear on the consideration of matters in this house the experience he gained in that Legislature. I trust he will have here a long, interesting and useful career. I am very glad to welcome him to the Senate.

Honourable senators, the proposal before the Senate today is that a humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen to the end that the imperial Parliament will pass on amendment to our Constitution, the British North America Act.

In the first place, let me point out that we are not dealing with a bill here. Most legislation comes to this house in the form of a bill and most bills have already been passed by the other house when they come to us. We may then approve of them in whole or amend or reject them. When we amend a bill it is sent back to the other house, whose members will accept or reject our amendment. To deal with any case in which a Senate amendment is rejected by the other house and insisted upon by the Senate, there is a procedure for a conference of representatives of both houses.

As I say, what we have before us now is not a bill. It is a resolution, and it is in exactly the same words as the resolution which was recently passed in the House of Commons, but this is a distinct motion on our own behalf as the Senate. What we do here does not return to the House of Commons for approval any more than what the other house did comes to us for approval.

I thought I should emphasize this fact so that we would know we are acting on our own responsibility, which ends in the Senate. We are dealing with the Constitution of our country. I think of the Constitution as being similar to the foundation of a mighty building, and I would remind honourable members that no one alters or tampers with the foundation of a mighty structure without being sure that what is done will not weaken the superstructure but, rather, will strengthen it.

May I also remind the house that we are not amending the British North America Act. We cannot amend our Constitution in every respect, but in the British North America Act we are empowered to amend certain legislation of our own and to bring into effect certain legislation of our own. The British North America Act, if it is amended, will not be amended here but in the United Kingdom. What we are doing is humbly approaching Her Majesty praying that she will be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend our Constitution. If we approve of this address we know that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to place such a measure before the Parliament of the United Kingdom and that the Parliament will grant our request.

I have said, honourable senators, that we cannot amend our Constitution in every respect. But why, I ask, should we not be able to pass legislation with respect to the tenure of superior court judges? The federal Government has full control over their appointment, their pay, and their removal, so why, under the 1949 amendment to the British North America Act, should we in this house not be able to pass legislation with respect to their tenure of office? It is true that the Canadian Bar Association has requested that the age of retirement of superior court judges should be 75 years, but I remind honourable senators that the Canadian Bar Association did not ask that that should be done by an amendment to the British North America Act. Oh, there are those who feel that an amendment such as this should only be done by an amendment to the Constitution. The Honourable Stuart Garson, former Minister of Justice, was of that opinion, and there are many others who share his view. Many outstanding, competent, renowned, eminent lawyers, well versed in constitutional law, are sure that this should be done in Canada, and there are other equally emiment lawyers who take another attitude. When there is this difference of opinion, I say that the Government should go to the Supreme Court of Canada and get its opinion.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The Supreme Court of Canada can state whether in its opinion the Parliament of Canada has that right.

The Canadian Bar Association, meeting at Hotel Vancouver, in Vancouver, on September 4, 1959, passed the following resolution:

> Resolved that the Canadian Bar Association reiterates its recommendation for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years, and suggests that the question whether Parliament has, under the British North America Act No. 2, 1949, power to amend the Constitution of Canada to so provide be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada.

When that resolution was passed Parliament was not in session. The Government could have made that reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, but it did not do so then. Parliament assembled on January 15, 1960, and while Parliament was in session the Government could have made that reference. The opinion would have been given, and we would have known now whether or not we had to go to England to get this change in the law respecting tenure of office of superior court judges. It is clear that the Government has had plenty of time to do this, but it has done nothing about it. The Government evidently felt it was not important enough during the past six months to make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine this very vital question. I say there is absolutely no excuse for the delay.

However, the point I wish to make is that we should never go to another Parliament and humbly pray that it should amend our Constitution if we have the power to make the amendment ourselves. We who boast of being a free and independent nation within a group of nations which go to make up the Commonwealth of Nations, cannot by our own action change in every respect our own Constitution. It is a most striking fact, and I emphasize this, that, as most honourable senators know, Canada is the only nation in the Commonwealth of Nations which cannot amend its Constitution, and therefore we remain in a subservient position to the British Parliament.

Honourable senators, the other day when the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) was speaking I stated that I inferred from what he said that a measure would soon be brought down in Parliament whereby our Parliament would be enabled to amend our Constitution in every respect.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I didn't say that. I said I hoped.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend did not say that. I was wrong when I said so. However, he should not be put out about it, because it was his leader, the Prime Minister of our country, who said it, and I think he should be flattered that I mistook the Prime Minister's words for his own. What the Prime Minister said was this:

> It is to be hoped that the time will not be too long delayed when we will arrive at a point where we will be able within our own country to arrive at a basis for the amendment of our Constitution agreeable to all and within the constitutional limits of sections 91 and 92.

That has been reiterated by the Minister of Justice. All I can say to them is, the sooner it is done the better.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I wonder if the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) could tell us how it can be done.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, the Prime Minister will tell us how it can be done. I have every confidence in his words, when he says that he hopes that day is not too far distant. It is not my place at this time to say how it can be done, but when that time comes, and if it ever should become my responsibility to say how it will be done, I will be only too happy to do so. I am not prepared to discuss that point any further at this time. I do not mind interruptions, but I do not think this intervention has particular reference to the matter under debate.

Now let me come to the resolution itself. There are two aspects to this resolution. One proposes that judges of the superior courts, whether appointed before or after the passing of this resolution, should be retired at the age of 75.

The other proposal is that as far as judges of the county and district courts are concerned, who are now retired under the County Courts Act at the age of 75, the provision for their retirement should be taken from the County Courts Act and brought into the British North America Act.

I will deal with the first matter which I mentioned, that is the question regarding the retirement of superior court judges at 75. I have already said that the approval of the Canadian Bar Association has been given to this proposal, and in fact representations have been made over the years by the Canadian Bar Association in its support. Approval of the proposal has been obtained from the Governments of all the provinces. When I say Governments, I would refer honourable senators to the letters which have been written by the Attorneys General of the provinces, and I take it that when the Attorney General of a province writes a letter he is speaking for the Government.

I should also point out that this very resolution was approved by the Legislature of the province of Quebec and by the Legislative Council of that province in the exact terms in which we have it today.

The Canadian Bar Association, as I have said, has been making representations over the years. I do not intend to read all these representations. They go back to 1936, when a proposal was made regarding the retirement of judges and for the payment to them of their full salaries after retirement. There is quite a memorandum with respect to that matter dated May 4, 1937. Honourable senators will see these letters and these resolutions in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Canada for June 29, 1960, at pp. 602c and following.

At the midwinter meeting of the Council of the Canadian Bar Association, at Montreal, in 1944, a resolution was passed as follows:

> That each judge of the supreme courts of the provinces whether heretofore appointed or hereafter to be appointed, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 75 years, or immediately if he has already attained that age.

On September 3, 1949, at Banff, at the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, a resolution was presented by W. S. Owen, K.C., who subsequently became President of the Association. The preamble to the resolution reads:

> Whereas it is in the interests of the proper administration of justice that judges of all Courts be retired at the age of 75 years, . . .
>
> Now therefore be it resolved that it is the considered opinion of The Canadian Bar Association that judges of all Courts should be retired at the age of 75 years.

On September 22 of the following year, 1950, there was a joint meeting of the Canadian and American Bar Associations at Washington. A resolution was passed at that time also that judges of all courts be retired at the age of 75 years.

Then there is a letter from the office of the President of The Canadian Bar Association at Vancouver, written June 13, 1952, by J. A. Clark to Mr. Garson, in which Mr. Clark said:

> I presume that it would require an amendment to the British North America Act to provide for compulsory retirement other than Supreme Court of Canada and county and district court.

Notice that, honourable senators: J. A. Clark, President of The Canadian Bar Association, in Vancouver, on June 13, 1952 said he presumed there would have to be an amendment to the British North America Act with respect to the retirement of all judges, except judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and of county and district courts.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What year was that in?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That was on June 13, 1952.

Then there is a letter written on January 23, 1953 from Quebec by André Taschereau, who I believe subsequently became President of the Canadian Bar Association and is now a judge of the Appeal Court of Quebec. It is interesting to note what he said in writing to Mr. Garson:

> I entirely share your opinion to the effect that compulsory retirement of judges of provincial superior courts is not possible unless the British North America Act is amended accordingly.

There is one opinion of a judge who thought there should be an amendment to the British North America Act with respect to the retirement of superior court judges. He goes on to say:

But I do hope that, in a not too distant future, our Constitution may be so amended as I believe, with many others, that, though there are some notable exceptions, most of the judges, after the age of 75 years should, in the best interests of the administration of justice, be replaced by younger men.

I am sure that Mr. Justice Taschereau, now that he is on the bench, still shares the opinion which he gave on January 23, 1953.

I do not want to delay honourable senators too long. There is another resolution of the Bar Association, dated September 12, 1953.

Then there is a letter from D. Park Jamieson, who was President of the Canadian Bar Association in 1955. He wrote on March 10, 1955 to Mr. Garson, enclosing a resolution, passed on September 12, 1953, which asked the Government to take such steps as may be necessary to bring about the retirement of judges at the age of 75. I would ask honourable senators to notice the last two paragraphs of his letter.

This subject was again considered at the Mid-Winter meeting of the Council of the Canadian Bar Association last week and I was instructed to report to you upon the result of our inquiries and to urge upon you that action should be taken to bring about the retirement of judges at the age of 75 years.

I have found that the members of the association all across Canada consider that this matter is an urgent one and that, in the interests of the administration of justice, action is required thereon.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What is the date of that letter?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: March 10, 1955.

I should perhaps refer to the resolution passed at a meeting held in Montreal on September 8, 1956:

Resolved that the Canadian Bar Association recommend that the Government take such steps as may be necessary to bring about the retirement of judges at the age of 75 years.

Then there is the resolution to which I have already referred, which was adopted at Vancouver on September 4, 1959, reiterating the recommendation of the Canadian Bar Association for compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years, and suggesting that the Government find out as soon as possible whether Parliament has the power to amend the Constitution to bring this about.

Honourable senators, at the present time when a judge retires he receives a pension equal to two-thirds of the salary which he received in 1955. On this question I must come to a decision, and give my own opinion, as to whether judges should be retired at the age of 75. At the present time judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, by an amendment passed to the Supreme Court Act in 1927, are required to retire at 75; and judges of the county courts, by a provision of the County Courts Act, are required to retire at the age of 75. The judges of the provincial superior courts are not required to retire because of age.

So we have in Canada two provisions with respect to retirement of judges. The judges of our highest court, the Supreme Court of Canada, must retire when they attain the age of 75 years, and the judges of the lower courts, the county courts, must retire at that age.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do the judges of the Exchequer Court not also retire at 75?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I should add that the judges of the Exchequer Court also retire at that age. But the judges of the superior courts retire when they feel so inclined, or when they are removed from office, which is seldom done. We cannot be right in both provisions: judges either should be retired at the age of 75, or they should not be retired at 75. Are we wrong when we say the judges of the highest court should retire at 75, and that the judges of the county courts should retire at that age? I do not think so. I think we are right in both those instances. If that is so, we cannot also be right in retaining judges of the superior courts of the provinces on the bench after they attain the age of 75.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No one quarrels with that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I don't know. I certainly don't quarrel with it, and I am glad my friend sees fit to agree with it.

I would point out again that the provinces have asked for this amendment. The Canadian Bar Association has asked for it. Mr. Lapointe, back in 1927, asked for it. The Right Honourable R. B. Bennett asked for it; and Mr. Garson, when he was Minister of Justice, asked for it.

I agree with the viewpoint of the provinces, the Canadian Bar Association, and those distinguished parliamentarians whom I have mentioned. The only question which arises is, should we retire judges who have been appointed for life, or should this amendment refer only to judges to be appointed hereafter?

Honourable senators, from what I have read to you, you must realize that the members of the Canadian Bar Association feel that this is an urgent matter. They did not specify it for future appointments, but said that something must be done now. It is true that the judges of the superior courts, when appointed, were appointed for life. But it is the opinion of lawyers who practise before the courts every day that such a provision should not continue in effect.

I feel with them that a change must be made, but in making that change we must be fair with the judges who are being retired. The question that bothers me is to what extent we should go in trying to be fair to the judges who are being retired. Shall we be fair to them if we approve the provisions of the Judges Bill, which will be considered in this house in the near future?

As I have said, at the present time when a judge retires he receives a pension equal to two-thirds of the salary which he received in 1955. Even though this is a non-contributory pension, many feel that a pension of that amount to a judge who is compulsorily retired would be grossly unfair. That was the attitude taken a few days ago by the Opposition in the other house. If honourable senators will look at the Votes and Proceedings of that house they will note that a motion to strike out the reference to judges already on the bench was moved, but did not carry. I would point out to honourable senators that when that motion was made by the Leader of the Opposition he did not know what the provisions were with respect to pensions in the proposed amendments to the Judges Act. He said he thought it was unfair to retire judges compulsorily under the provision of the Judges Act by which they receive two-thirds of their 1955 salary. I am not saying it was on account of representations made by the Leader of the Opposition at that time, but it is to be noted that after he spoke on his motion a bill to amend the Judges Act was brought down which would increase judges' pensions considerably.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think the amendment was prepared before he spoke.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know whether it was prepared before or not, but it is a fact that after he spoke the pensions of judges to be retired under the proposed resolution were increased.

Probably honourable senators will be interested to know that since 1955 judges' salaries have been increased by $2,500. Judges' pensions will, therefore, be increased by a little over $1,600. The salaries of judges of the superior courts are now $16,900, so that upon retirement at 75 a judge will receive two-thirds of that amount, namely $11,266.

There are some who contend that a judge appointed prior to the passage of this resolution should on retirement receive a pension, not of $11,266 per annum, but an annual retirement allowance equal to his salary of $16,900. The Opposition in the other house took that attitude, and the method adopted it that house to bring the pension of a judge forced to retire at 75 into line with his salary was the motion to strike out the reference to judges appointed prior to the passage of this resolution.

I am not in any way disapproving of the method that was followed in the other house, but I do not think that method should be followed in this house. The amendment moved in the other house was defeated. It would be useless for us to move a similar amendment here, because I am sure it would also be defeated. The result would be that the proposal to retire judges at 75 would be defeated, and I feel it would not be in the interests of the country to defeat that proposal.

In my opinion the method to be adopted in this house is to make representations when the Judges Bill comes before us. I realize, honourable senators, that we are powerless to pass an amendment to that bill which would increase expenditures, but we can make strong representations. I feel that is the only thing we can do. I do not feel we should defeat this resolution with respect to the retirement of judges, and therefore, in my opinion, we have only one alternative, namely, to put pressure on when the Judges Bill is before us. That is what was done in 1927. Honourable senators will recall that in that year the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, then Minister of Justice, brought in legislation by which judges of the Supreme Court of Canada were retired at the age of 75. The Right Honourable R. B. Bennett took the attitude that there was a contract with the judges and that their retirement should not be effected in that way. Mr. Lapointe resisted that attitude, the bill passed, and some judges of the Supreme Court of Canada were retired that year on a pension based on two-thirds of their salary.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is it not true that only a few were involved? In this instance there are many hundreds.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know that that affects the principle. There are not many hundreds involved. Indeed, there are only 168 judges in the superior courts now, of whom only 12 are over 75 years.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was referring to all judges.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The point I am making is that in 1927 Mr. Lapointe resisted the appeal for the payment of judges' salaries by way of pension to those who were being retired. But representations continued to be made to him by way of proposals for amendment of the Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) did not mention this when he was speaking the other day.

In 1930 an amendment to the Judges Act provided that judges who were compelled to retire should receive their full salaries for the balance of their lives.

Honourable senators, I have stated how I feel about this matter. I do not think there is any other method that we could adopt at this time with respect to the retirement of judges than what is proposed here, and if the resolution is adopted those of us who feel that retired judges should receive not two-thirds of their salaries, as they are entitled to under the present law, but their full salaries for the rest of their lives, should do our utmost to see that they get it.

Now let me turn to the second part of the humble presentation to Westminster. It provides that judges of the county and district courts who are now retired at 75 by virtue of the County Courts Act should be taken out from under the County Courts Act, enshrined in our Constitution, and put for all time to come under the British North America Act, so that if at any future time Parliament wished to deal with the age of retirement of district and county court judges it would be required again to make a humble address to Her Majesty praying that the United Kingdom Parliament amend the British North America Act.

Can any honourable senator think of a more retrogressive step in our march toward complete control of our own affairs? Is this not complete abnegation? Here we are on the eve, I hope, of the day when we can amend our own Constitution in every respect; here we are, taking pride in our maturity and our nationality, and in our right to let our voice be heard in the councils of the world, and at the same time we are making a humble address to Her Majesty that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom which would add to the provisions of the British North America Act and thereby give to the imperial Parliament even more power over our affairs than it has at the present time. We take pride in the progress we have made over the years from the days when we were a colony to the present time when we are a nation, but, honourable senators, by adopting this proposal we shall be moving backward instead of forward; we shall be reversing our progress; we shall be taking a retrograde step. Instead of continuing our progress from colony to nation, it may well be asked if we are not now going from nation to colony.

Since 1882 judges of the county and district courts appointed under the provisions of the County Courts Act have retired according to the provisions of that act. The age of retirement at first was 80 years, but in 1912 it was fixed at 75 years, and judges of the county and district courts have been retired at that age ever since. The honourable Leader of the Government said in this house the other day there was some doubt in the minds of constitutional lawyers as to whether the Government had power under this act to retire judges of the county and district courts at 75 years of age. I wonder, and I ask him, who those constitutional lawyers were or are. Certainly one of them was not the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe.

Let me go back to the bill that was passed in 1927. The then member for Simcoe, Mr. Boys, a member of the Opposition—honourable senators will find this reference at page 1080 of the House of Commons Hansard of 1927—asked Mr. Lapointe this question:

> Is there any special provision in the British North America Act with respect to the retirement of county court judges?

The then Minister of Justice replied:

> No.

Mr. Boys went on to ask:

> Is it suggested that such legislation was ultra vires?

The then Minister replied:

> No, not at all. Section 99 applies only to the judges of the superior courts.

He went on to add:

> There is nothing in the British North America Act preventing us from dealing with the tenure of office of county court judges.

I have read a number of letters which were written by the Canadian Bar Association with respect to the retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years, and there is not one request from the association to have judges of the county courts included in the provisions of the British North America Act. That body has never questioned the right of Parliament to retire judges at 75 years under the County Courts Act. The county court judges themselves meet annually year after year, and not once have they raised this question; not once have they suggested that it was not within the power of the Government of Canada to retire them under the County Courts Act at 75 years of age.

I have made a complete search, and I have not been able to find any article or written opinion of any lawyers, constitutional or otherwise, who has questioned the right of the federal Government to fix the retirement age of county court judges. From the first appointment of county court judges, in 1882, up to the present time, no one to my knowledge, except the present Minister of Justice, has questioned the regularity of the provisions regarding their compulsory retirement at 75 years of age.

But even if there is some uncertainty as to the present legislation, which I certainly am not admitting, but rather am denying, is that any reason why on the eve of the repatriation of our Constitution we should strengthen the legislation of the imperial Parliament with respect to county court judges? After almost 80 years of no question as to the regularity of the present legislation, surely we can wait until the time when —to use the words of the Prime Minister— "we will be able within our own country to arrive at a basis for the amendment of our Constitution".

Honourable senators, I have very little more to say. I have referred, probably too fully, to both aspects of this resolution because I feel that it is a very important resolution. The portion of the resolution which troubles me most is this portion which will give the imperial Parliament more power over the legislation of Canada than it has today. If the Government does feel that a change is desirable, even if not essential, let us not go to the imperial Parliament at this time; rather, let us wait until the day, which the Prime Minister has said is not far distant, when we ourselves can amend our Constitution.

In conclusion, I repeat that the proposal to enshrine in the Constitution the provisions respecting the retirement of district and county court judges is a backward and most regrettable step, and one which the Government of this day should not advance and should not ask us to accept.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in his opening referred to the new Senator MacDonald and said that there are now four senators of that name. I remember when there were four MacDonalds on the bench of British Columbia, and I was appearing before the Privy Council when the reasons for judgment of one or more of this number were being considered. Lord Shaw said: "How many MacDonalds have you on the bench out in British Columbia?" I told him that we had four. "It is a lucky province", he said. So I congratulate our new member and I congratulate ourselves upon having another MacDonald in our ranks.

I have listened with keen interest to my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and I have read with the same interest the speech made by the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). I regret I cannot agree with all my own leader has said, but I get consolation from the fact that I can agree with what the Leader of the Liberal party for all of Canada said in the other house.

This is an extremely important matter that we are considering and as far as I am concerned I feel that the principles involved here—and they have not all come out yet—are among the most important to affect the obligations of honourable senators in the 23 years I have been a member of this house.

This resolution proposes to do three main things. It is a petition addressed to Her Majesty, not to confer any authority on this Parliament to deal with these problems but rather to have legislation laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom affecting and amending our Constitution. It does three things which we must consider here. By implication it challenges the right of our Parliament to deal with the age limit for county court judges because, to use the expression of my honourable leader, that right is now proposed to be enshrined in the legislation of the United Kingdom. I would think it more appropriate to say that it proposes to take control of the age limit of county and district court judges out of the Parliament of Canada and freeze it in that part of our Constitution which still remains in the exclusive power of the British Parliament.

The resolution also deals with the age limit of superior court judges and proposes that they shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 75 years. Let there be no mistake about this. As far as I am concerned, and as far as any honourable member to whom I have talked is concerned, there is no challenge about this as to future appointments. Apparently it is something that the public wishes. The wonderful organization of which I was once president, the Canadian Bar Association, has evidently received a status in this house that I never knew it to have before, because we are told it is in favour of this resolution. The Attorneys General and the province of Quebec are in favour of it. The resolution goes further and provides that this amendment shall apply retroactively and constitute a breach of the solemn contract with the judges.

There is still another thing it does, and I am going to talk at some length about this a little later but I want to get the picture before you as I see it now. I think most honourable senators will recall that only 11 years ago, in 1949, we asked the imperial Parliament to pass, as it did, an amendment to our Constitution which I have no doubt gives us the power today to deal in our own Parliament with the age limit for judges. I am going to develop this at some length and cite the authorities as I see them in that connection. So I say that not only are the rights in connection with our dealing with county court judges unnecessarily frozen into the imperial Parliament, but I have no hesitation in saying that the same thing is being done in regard to superior court judges.

I agree with what my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) said about interfering with the understood law in regard to county court judges. I hope that before I get through he will agree with me that the same thing applies to superior court judges, but I am not so sure I am going to succeed, for at times he can be very stubborn.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And my honourable friend can be very convincing.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, I need to be sometimes.

If my speech reads as well as I hope it will I shall send copies of it to certain people. In order that these people will not have to read other speeches I will state for the record that this proposal makes provision for the future appointment of judges of the superior, district and county courts and that they shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 75 years, that it contains a retroactive provision so that the retirement age of 75 will apply to judges who have already attained this age upon the coming into force of this law, and that it proposes to embody the power of fixing the retirement age of county court judges, which has always been recognized since 1912, and possibly before that, as being within the right of the Parliament of Canada.

I wish to explain to my colleagues who are not lawyers that we have three classes of judges to consider. First, the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. These judges do not come within the provisions of the Constitution in regard to superior court judges. Section 99 deals with the judges of the superior courts. In my province, that means the Supreme Court of British Columbia and the Court of Appeal for British Columbia. Other provinces designate them by other names, but they are all included in the general term, the superior courts, which means the higher courts in each province. Section 99 says:

> The judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

There is no question about it, therefore, that good behaviour is the only determination, unless there is an address of both houses, and that would apply only to cases of incompetence or misbehaviour.

At the time of Confederation there was no Supreme Court of Canada, and section 101 is the only section that provides for it:

> The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance, and organization of a general court of appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

That section provides for what was subsequently done by our Parliament, the creation of the Supreme Court of Canada and of the Exchequer Court. It follows, therefore, that the Supreme Court of Canada is entirely a creature of our own Parliament; and our own Parliament has always had full jurisdiction in regard to appointments to that court and the tenure of office, whether until 75 years of age or any other age. There has never been any question about that, because there is no limitation at all of that in the British North America Act.

County court judges are classed with superior court judges in only one provision of this act, namely, section 96:

> The Governor General shall appoint the judges of the superior, district and county courts in each province, except...

The exceptions given are not material. Of course, when a section says "Governor General", that means the Governor General acting on the advice of his ministers.

In the foregoing provision there is not a word about the tenure of office of county court judges. Section 99 provides that:

> The judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

There is not a word there about tenure of office in regard to county court judges, and every lawyer who knows anything about it has always considered that means it has been part of the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament. If there is any doubt about it, honourable senators, it would be sensible not to refer the matter to Great Britain, but to go across the road just a little way to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: We have a statute in British Columbia, and there is a similar federal statute, known as the Constitutional Questions Determination Act. Frequently, the provinces submit questions to their courts of appeal, and there is a final appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. In federal matters, the Government of Canada has, under its Constitutional Questions Determination Act, the power to refer the questions directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. The court's decisions are binding on Canada. Make no mistake about that. In some years, few months go by but the Government refers questions of that kind to the Supreme Court of Canada. If this question can be referred, why has that not already been done? I am going to ask the same question a little later on about the superior court judges.

Honourable senators, have I made it clear that we have three types or classes of judges? We have the Supreme Court of Canada and the Exchequer Court, which are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the dominion, and always have been; we have the county court judges, of whom there is not a word about age limit in our British North America Act; and we have the superior court judges, concerning whom section 99 provides that they are appointed for life during good behaviour. Let us keep that in mind.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my honourable friend a question?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I think he stated that the appointment of supreme court judges is within the power of the Parliament of Canada. Can they not be appointed by the Executive?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Oh, yes, of course. The Executive may appoint, but Parliament gives the power.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But the appointments do not have to be ratified by action of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Would the honourable senator allow me a question?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I understood him to say with regard to the third class of judges, that is, superior court judges, that he includes within this class judges of the court of appeal as well. Would the honourable senator state if there is a distinction in his mind between judges of the Superior Court, as we call it in the province of Quebec, which is the highest trial court, and judges of the province's court of appeals, called the Court of Queen's Bench? Would he consider that the judges of both courts come within the category of superior court judges?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would think so. I would prefer to accept the opinion of my honourable and learned friend himself or of my honourable and learned friend next to me (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) on that question. However, I think that is right. The same thing applies in British Columbia. We have the Supreme Court, as we call it. I think it is unfortunate that name has not been changed, because that is our trial court. Then we have the Court of Appeal of British Columbia, which is also a superior court. The judges of both courts come within the term superior court judges. They have always been, and still are today, appointees for life during good behaviour. There is no question about those facts, and no one in this house, certainly none of the lawyers here, will dispute them.

Honourable senators, I now approach what I think is a most serious problem—I know it is to me, when I consider my own views —and that is, should there be a retrospective provision—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Do you mean a retroactive provision?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Whichever term is used, it means the same thing; they are both right. However, for the benefit of my honourable friend—should there be a retroactive provision which would, in my submission, constitute a deliberate breach of a contractual obligation on the part of the Government of Canada?

Honourable senators, I do not want to labour these questions but I may have to come pretty close to doing that to make my points clear.

The first thing we want to ask ourselves is, what does the judges' commission say? I have a copy of a commission here, in blank. For purposes of this discussion I consider this a very valuable document. Instead of the name of any judge we will use that name familiar to lawyers, John Doe, and we will suppose that John Doe is being appointed to, let us say, the Supreme Court of British Columbia or the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Now, let us see what judges are given—and this has been given to several judges since the new Government came into power. Here is the signature of the Governor General. It is done in the name of Her Majesty, Elizabeth II, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and her other Realms and Territories, Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith.

What is the next thing on this commission? The Great Seal of Canada. Lawyers will tell you that documents under seal are the most solemn kind of documents that can be made. Lawyers will tell you, and you really don't need to be told, that a document under the Great Seal of Canada is the most binding kind of an obligation that can be imposed on the nation.

Over at the left is the signature of the Attorney General of Canada. The Attorney General of Canada happens to be the Minister of Justice. Don't forget that word "justice" when considering this matter or if you ever have any occasion to look up the argument he has made on this matter. The signature of the Minister of Justice, Mr. Fulton's signature, has been on these commissions since the present Government came into office. I will read the commission:

To John Doe, Esquire, one of Our Counsel learned in the Law, of the city of—Let us say—Chilliwack, in the province of British Columbia.

Know you that, reposing special trust and confidence in your loyalty, integrity and ability, we did on the first day of July in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine and in the eighth year of Our Reign constitute and appoint you, the said John Doe, to be a Judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

Now, listen to the next paragraph, and you cannot get away from this:

To have, hold, exercise and enjoy the said office of Judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia with all and every the powers, rights, authority, privileges, profits, emoluments and advantages unto the said office of right and by law appertaining during your good behaviour.

There you have it, "during your good behaviour", which means for life unless he commits some offence that justifies his expulsion.

In testimony whereof we have caused these Our Letters to be made patent and the Great Seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed.

Witness: Our Right Trusty and well-beloved Counsellor—Member of Our Order of the Companions of Honour, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

At Our Government House, in Our city of Ottawa this first day of July in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine and in the eighth year of Our Reign. By command, Secretary of State of Canada.

I invite any lawyer who ever had experience in constitutional law to tell me if there is any more solemnly executed document than that. And I invite him to say if there is any document in existence that can more solemnly bind a nation than that commission.

And what are we doing? I am jumping ahead but it comes in well here. What are we doing? We are not asking Her Majesty to give us the power to do our own dirty work in breaking this contract; we are asking Her Majesty and the Parliament of Great Britain to break the contract. I wonder just what Her Majesty and her advisers will think if this petition goes through and they have before them a request for legislation that on its face is an absolute breach of this solemn document executed in the name of Her Majesty. For we are petitioning her in the name of that same majesty, Her Majesty, to take steps to have this contract broken.

What justification is offered for that? Have honourable senators heard any speeches in this house or read any expressions of opinion in the other house that justify on the ground of necessity the presentation of an address to Her Majesty praying that this solemn contract should be broken? I have not found any.

I will not quote from the speech made by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when he introduced this petition because most of you heard it. I cannot find any justification for this petition there. He goes back into ancient history—ancient for our purposes—to 1927, and as the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has already stated, in 1927 the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, with the absolute jurisdiction that the Canadian Parliament had over the Supreme Court of Canada, brought in legislation that limited the ages of judges already appointed to the age of 75. In my submission that constitutes a breach of confidence, and that is about the only justification for this petition that I can find offered in my honourable friend's speech. He did not tell you that three years later Mr. Lapointe realized what an injustice he had done, and in 1930 he brought in legislation which, in so far as it was then possible to do so, cured that situation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I mentioned that.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes, I know you did.

I am always glad when I can find something on which my friend and I are still in complete agreement. I looked up the debates of 1930, in which Mr. Lapointe declared that he had seen the error of his way and acceded to what the Opposition, including Mr. Cahan and Mr. Bennett, had said.

I must say that I am a little bit amused at my honourable friend's thinking that, because Mr. Lapointe saw the error of his way, that is a good assurance that in due time Mr. Diefenbaker also will see the error of his way. I should have thought that if he were going to do that he would have done so at this very time when there is an amendment pending to the Judges Act that does not meet the situation. I shall speak more fully about that later on.

I took my own notes from Mr. Lapointe's speech in the records in the library. I refer first to the 1930 Hansard of the House of Commons at page 1777, where Mr. Lapointe's speech is reported. I read from my notes:

Bill provides an annuity equal to his salary at the time he ceased or ceases to hold office—

That would be under the act of 1927.

—may be granted to a judge of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court who held office March 31, 1927 and continued to hold office while 75 years of age. He stated—

And listen to these words:

—that when the 1927 act was passed some members felt that it was not fair to deprive them at the age of 75 of part of their salary as they had been appointed for life, and that the least we could do if compulsory retirement was desired was to respect what my honourable friend called a contract—

He is referring to his honourable friend, Mr. Bennett.

—or agreement to give them an allowance equal to their full salary. I must say that I have been reconsidering the matter. I have found that there is much force in that contention. The proposed legislation will provide for pensions equal to their salary.

I do not recall that my honourable friend included that in the information that he gave this house when he moved this resolution.

Honourable gentlemen, I submit to you—and to the honourable ladies in this house, even more so—that there is no finer type of statesman than the man who, having been attacked, frankly comes forward and says, "You were right and I was wrong", and makes an amendment. Mr. Lapointe made the only amendment he could make on his reconsideration, that was as to salary. There were other things he could not do.

I know judges whom I admire, who are approaching or are already at 75 years, whose lives are given to the public service as judges—and let me say there is no more noble or finer calling a man can have than that of a judge. They accepted appointment not merely for the salaries they would receive. I know, in fact, of appointment of persons to the bench whose judicial salary is not half what they were making in the practice of law. So, salary alone is not the compensation. But this was all Mr. Lapointe could do at that time. The damage had been done. Now we are considering the question before the damage is done.

We should remember the pride that comes from a useful occupation; pride in a high calling and a responsible office is meritorious. A man who has the profession of a judge has that pride, yet you would take him and chuck him out as rubbish. You can't make compensation for that kind of treatment.

I am getting to a position where—if I may refer to my position as a member of this house—I have not the least interest in my salary as a senator. By the time I pay for my accommodation and that of my wife at the Chateau Laurier, for extra taxis that are required, for my travelling expenses from Vancouver to Ottawa, and add the loss of business that is bound to result from absence from my office, and the extra income tax that results when my Senate salary is combined with other income for taxation purposes, I find that I would be a mighty lot better off financially if I were not a member of the Senate and did not receive one dollar from it. But, honourable senators, I have a great pride in being a member of the Senate. I think a senatorship is one of the highest offices, if not the highest, that any man or woman in the dominion of Canada could desire. If I were unceremoniously chucked out of this house on the ground of old age—and I suppose senility goes with it—I would be so angry that I would want to kick the building over. I would regard that treatment as an insult, and no payment of money could compensate for it. Similarly, if I were a judge and had given my life to judicial work, I would if so treated feel the same way. Every senator here will appreciate the situation.

Let us turn to these statutes that my friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) went over so sketchily. We know what happened in 1927. I have not yet read what Mr. Bennett and Mr. Cahan said at that time. Let me say, I thought a great deal of Mr. Bennett. When I went west from New Brunswick, he came to Regina from Calgary. He was the Leader of the Opposition in the old Territorial Government. I had heard a good deal about Dick Bennett, a boy from New Brunswick who had made good in the west. I aspired to the belief that it might happen to me some time. He came down there and took me under his wing as another New Brunswick boy, and I think he got a lot of enjoyment out of helping another young fellow from the east and letting him see what Dick Bennett had done. We used to go for long walks on the prairie.

Before Mr. Bennett left Canada a dinner was given for him at the Vancouver Club, and I was honoured in being asked to make the address. I put my heart into that speech. I said that the only thing I was afraid of was that I was saying so many good things about Mr. Bennett he might think I was saying, in effect, "Sorry you must go; here is your hat."

Honourable senators, that is beside the point. However, in a minute I am going to read some of the things Mr. Bennett said, but I am going to read them out of the mouth of Mr. Lapointe in 1933. You see, there are three occasions: 1927, 1930 and 1933. Mr. Bennett in 1933 was Prime Minister of Canada. One of the members of his Government brought in a bill with respect to judges, with a fantastic sort of provision, to the effect that if a judge did not terminate his office at the age of 75 his salary would be taken away. It was a kind of retirement by blackmail. The same question, that of breach of contract, came up at that time. But by this time Mr. Lapointe was in the clear; he had made his confession, he had admitted his wrong and he had rectified it in so far as he could. He challenged Mr. Bennett. In Mr. Lapointe's opinion Mr. Bennett was no longer on the side of justice, and that is why I say I have no doubt he quoted with approval what Mr. Bennett said in 1927 and which had been the basis of Mr. Lapointe's conversion in 1930.

My honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) said that we are doing pretty well by these judges. We are giving them two-thirds of their salary as at the time they retire. I used to argue with Mr. Garson that I could not see any sense, and I do not see any now, in having the pensions of judges based not on their salaries at the time of retirement, but on the salaries they got when appointed. Perhaps I am not entirely accurate with respect to the figures, but I am so far as the principle is concerned. The basing of pensions on the salaries of judges at the time they retire is the only sensible and decent thing to do. There should not be any credit given for putting the axe to a man who had a contract.

I will go on with what Mr. Lapointe said in quoting with approval Mr. Bennett's remarks made a very few years before:

"That judge undoubtedly has a contract with the state which entitles him to receive a salary for life or until such time as he resigns."

And at page 2952, the Right Hon. gentleman said:

"I think the Government would be well advised to consider whether or not, in all cases of this kind where a contract has thus been amended, the judge should receive full salary."

On the same page my Right Hon. friend added:

"I think we must have regard to the terms and conditions under which the original contract was made. Although it may seem out of the ordinary that a judge should draw full salary when he is retired compulsorily, nevertheless, good faith and morals—"

I call the attention of the house to those words:

"—good faith and morals, in my judgment, impose upon us that obligation, and it is an obligation which we should not lightly disregard."

Later on he said:

"I do not believe that the Canadian people would approve of our departing from the general principle that the Government must, as in times past, have respect for the sanctity of a contract made between a servant of the Crown when he entered the employment of the state."

I am going to deal a little more fully with that when I come to these slapdash resolutions that were put through by the Canadian Bar Association.

Honourable senators, that bill attempting to break the contract by denying the salary was killed in the Senate. Mr. Bennett carried it in the House of Commons, but it was rejected in this house. Does this Senate have less sense of its moral obligations as well as of its contractual obligations than the Senate of Canada had in the year 1933? So much for that.

I would ask you, and I will not tire you with the details of it, to contrast what we are asking the imperial Parliament to do with what it has done. It would not stultify itself with the kind of things we are asking it to do on our behalf. There are provisions in Great Britain and I invite my honourable friend the Leader of the Government to look them up and tell this house what they are. As I understand it, there is an option provision there.

I had the privilege this summer of meeting in Vancouver with Lord Morton, who was on a world trip. He and his wife had a day in Vancouver and they were good enough to spend it with me and my wife at our home. He said: "I have just retired, but I expect to continue doing a great deal of work in the House of Lords and the Privy Council." There is some sense to that. Provisions could be worked out. If instead of this thing being fired at us holus-bolus, without any opportunity of our considering it in committee, there could be provisions made to give the judges a choice of what they want to do after retirement it would be a much better arrangement. A provision could be drawn up so that the provincial chief justices could call on them for further service when there was a rush of business before the courts.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Is it voluntary retirement in the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I do not know. I am asking my honourable friend to look into that.

We are not entitled to go to the House of Commons, but we are entitled to try to find out what the Minister of Justice has told Parliament and the people of Canada, and has told the Senate. What justification is there and what need is there for this, as I call it, flagrant breach of contract? One of Mr. Fulton's arguments is in connection with the present section 99 of the British North America Act, which reads:

The judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour—

As I understand him, he does not dispute that that means for life, and that "good behaviour" means the opposite of bad behaviour.

—but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

There is nobody who disputes that that address can only be invoked where there is disability or misconduct justifying a judge's being put off the bench. There have not been many such cases in Canada over the years. He has termed that a dreadful process. I do not know whether that is so or not. For instance, in the case of a man who owns much property and suffers a mental sickness, you may apply to the courts to have a committee look after his estate, and that is done without any terrible or dreadful process. It is not a nice thing to do, but the really unfortunate thing is that the poor man is in that state. If we had a judge in that condition I cannot see why that remedy should not be applied to him, and

I think any judges bordering on that same condition—I am not aware of any in Canada at the present time—would soon be stampeded into resigning.

Mr. Fulton's theory, as I follow it, is that we now have power to remove judges of the superior courts, that under section 99 of the British North America Act they —shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Mr. Fulton suggests that all we are doing here is to bunch the superior, district and county court judges together and say that they all should retire at 75, that reaching that age is itself an offence. I know many judges and I am sure that they are at their very best between the ages of 75 and 80. If I were on the bench I would be inclined to think that my performance between 75 and 80 would be better than at any other time in my life. I would have more sense, more restraint and more sympathy than a lot of the young fellows who are impetuous and want to push the older ones out.

As I understand Mr. Fulton's position, we will claim they are all incompetent at 75 and throw them out. I cannot imagine a more insulting argument against those judges who are 75 or approaching 75 and who are in their prime and giving their life and energy in the cause of justice.

I am told Mr. Fulton cited as an authority Reilly v. The King, a well-known case that went to the Privy Council in 1934 on appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada. Reilly was a Liberal and perhaps that is one thing that was against him. The case, which is reported in (1934) 1 Appeal Cases, 179 and 180, is very important. Mr. Reilly had been appointed to a position on the Federal Appeal Board, and his appointment was extended for a further term of five years. Then the federal Parliament in its wisdom decided to abolish the Federal Appeal Board. This left Reilly without a job and consequently he sued the Government for damages. The Privy Council held that Reilly did not have a contract, but that when a man is given a public contract for a certain appointment and Parliament in its wisdom decides that that position is no longer in the public interest, it does not have to keep the appointment open merely to provide that person with a job. There is a complete distinction between that case and the present one. In the case of Reilly v. The King, Mr. Justice Orde, who was a judge ad hoc at that time, wrote the judgment in the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Justice Maclean was the judge in the Exchequer Court which first tried the case. Let me read what Lord Atkin, who was a great judge in England, said in his judgment:

Maclean J. concluded that the relation between the holder of a public office and the Crown was not contractual. There never had been a contract: and the foundation of the petition failed. Orde J.'s judgment in the Supreme Court seems to admit that the relation might be at any rate partly contractual; but he holds that any such contract must be subject to the necessary term that the Crown could dismiss at pleasure. If so, there could have been no breach.

Their Lordships are not prepared to accede to this view of the contract, if contract there be. If the terms of the appointment definitely prescribe a term and expressly provide for a power to determine "for cause"—

This provision I have read to the house in section 99 as it now exists.

—it appears necessarily to follow that any implication of a power to dismiss at pleasure is excluded. This appears to follow from the reasoning of the Board in Gould v. Stuart.

That was another earlier case before the Privy Council.

On page 180 Lord Atkin says this:

But the present case appears to their Lordships to be determined by the elementary proposition that if further performance of a contract becomes impossible by legislation having that effect the contract is discharged. In the present case the office held by the appellant was abolished by statute: thenceforward it was illegal for the executive to continue him in that office or pay him any salary: and impossible for him to exercise his office. The jurisdiction of the Federal Appeal Board was gone. The position, therefore, seems to be this. So far as the rights and obligations of the Crown and the holder of the office rested on statute, the office was abolished and there was no statutory provision made for holders of the office so abolished. So far as the rights and obligations rested on contract, further performance of the contract had been made by statute impossible, and the contract was discharged.

No such condition exists here. No court is being abolished. These men will be put out of office by a deliberate provision, if this resolution carries and the Parliament of the United Kingdom accepts it. I am not at all sure that the United Kingdom Parliament will accept it, because I feel sure that some of the men I know over there, and about whom some of you have read, will be shocked at the idea that we are asking them to legislate for us in a way they would not do for themselves, and that is to break a contract.

I want to come now to the argument that has been somewhat laboured by my honourable leader this afternoon about the support that this resolution has got from two very distinguished bodies, one of which is the Canadian Bar Association and some of its past presidents. I know some past presidents who do not agree. I happen to be one of them. I will not bother naming others, for they might not wish me to. First of all, let us consider the support given by the provinces. There is on file Mr. Fulton's letter to each Attorney General, and their replies. I found these in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of February 16 last, and I wrote to our Attorney General in British Columbia. I say "our" not in the sense that I lay any claims on him, but that he is the Attorney General. Incidentally, I was at one time the Attorney General for British Columbia. I have no complaints about the present Attorney General, Mr. Bonner. He is young, and he is conscientious. Like myself, he was appointed in his forties, but much earlier in the forties than I was.

On February 18 I wrote to Mr. Bonner, and I want to put on record this letter and his reply. My letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Attorney,—

I note as an appendix to the "Votes and Proceedings" of the House of Commons on February 16, that the correspondence of the Minister of Justice with the Attorneys General of all the provinces, relative to amending the B.N.A. Act to provide for the retirement of Superior and County Court Judges at the age of 75, is published.

The notice of motion in the Senate "Votes and Proceedings" by the Senate Leader of the Government in connection with this subject, has as paragraph (2) a provision as follows:

"A Judge of a Superior or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this Section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 75 years or upon the coming into force of this Section, if at that time he has already attained that age."

That is the retroactive provision. My letter continues:

There is nothing in the Minister of Justice's letter to the Attorneys General indicating any such breach of statutory contractual obligations with presently existing judges who have been appointed for life, under the Constitution.

Nor was there a single suggestion there about what compensation he would make if it was done.

No doubt your attention has already been called to the difference between this motion and the proposal made to you and the other Attorneys General, and you may feel it desirable yourself to deal with this difference between the bill and the proposal which received your approval. However, the matter is now before the Senate and the House of Commons.

As the senior-ranking member of the British Columbia Bar next to yourself, as a past Treasurer of the Bar Association, as well as a senior Senator, I feel that it is appropriate to enquire as to your position on this new proposal. I cannot believe that you will give countenance to any such breach of a statutory contract and, more particularly, to the proposed action of the Canadian Parliament—not only itself to commit such a breach, but to ask Her Majesty The Queen and the Parliament of the United Kingdom also to be a party to this flagrant breach.

Whether you are disposed to explain your position and views to me or deal with it in such other manner as you consider advisable, I feel sure that the Government of British Columbia will not be a party to such a shocking proposal.

The consideration of a provision relating to subsequent appointments is, of course, a very different matter, as to which I offer no comments.

On March 9 I received a very nice letter from Mr. Bonner. I am reading it for only one purpose. I want honourable senators to ask themselves: Does he challenge my suggestion that Mr. Fulton's letter did not make any express provision for retroactive legislation? That is the point I would like honourable members to follow. Mr. Bonner's letter reads as follows:

Dear Senator Farris:

Shortly after receiving your letter of February 18 in connection with the proposed amendments affecting judges, I had an opportunity of informal discussion with the Honourable the Minister of Justice when he was in Victoria on Columbia River matters.

I bet he showed him my letter, too.

I expressed to the minister your views on this subject and feel it would be useful if you would take the opportunity to have an informal discussion with him yourself in Ottawa.

I do not know how much use there would have been in that.

The position of the provinces who have, I believe, entirely endorsed the principle of retirement at 75, . . .

That is true. But they had not endorsed the principle that it should be retroactive to affect contracts.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that in the letter?

Hon. Mr. Farris: For my friend's sake I will read it again:

The position of the provinces who have, I believe, entirely endorsed the principle of retirement at 75, is complicated by the resolution of the Canadian Bar Association to the same effect.

In my words, not in the words of the letter, that is not a suggestion that that provision or principle endorses also a breach of contract. I am going to read some authorities on that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I did not understand.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Fine. I am glad my honourable leader interrupted, because everyone will understand now.

The letter concludes as follows:

I will be in Ottawa on the 29th and 30th of this month and will be pleased to have a discussion with you on this question at that time, if convenient to yourself.

Unfortunately I was not here at that time, and although I saw Mr. Bonner later on other matters he never asked my opinion on this, and I did not think I was called upon to do more than I had done.

Honourable senators, I will now read letters which appear on page 6 of the appendix to the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of February 16 of this year. First is a letter from Mr. Fulton to Mr. Bonner, dated October 7, 1959:

Dear Mr. Bonner:—

I have to refer to my letter of August 19 last which reads as follows:

"Many representations have been made in recent years that the necessary steps should be taken to provide for the compulsory retirement of judges of provincial courts.

As section 99 of the British North America Act, 1867, provides that judges of the superior courts held office during good behaviour, an amendment to the British North America Act would be required to provide for compulsory retirement of the judges of these courts. There is a provision in the Judges Act (R.S.C. 1952, c. 159 s. 26) requiring that judges of county and district courts be retired upon reaching the age of 75. However, there does appear to be serious doubt as to the constitutionality of that provision, . . .

He does not tell him where that doubt arose.

. . . and it would appear to be preferable that any provision in the British North America Act for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges should also be made to apply to county and district court judges.

I have therefore been authorized to seek the approval of the Governments of the provinces for the proposal that a request be made by the Government of Canada for an amendment to the British North America Act by the United Kingdom Parliament providing for the compulsory retirement of judges of the superior, district and county courts, in each province, upon reaching the age of 75.

I should appreciate being advised whether your Government approves of this proposal and to inquire whether you expect to be able to let me have a reply thereto in the near future.

Yours sincerely,

original signed by

E. D. FULTON.

Mr. Bonner's reply, dated November 4, 1959, is as follows:

Dear Mr. Fulton:

In reply to your letter of October 7 regarding the compulsory retirement of judges at age 75, I wish to advise that the Government of this province is prepared to agree to an amendment of the "British North America Act" in this connection.

I may say that I agree wholeheartedly with this recommendation and would go further to suggest that if it is not possible to secure the unanimous consent of all ten provinces that the act be made applicable to those Provinces who have expressed approval of the legislation through their Executive Council.

I say, honourable senators, that that document confirms what I wrote to Mr. Bonner, that there is nothing there to make it clear whether the Government here intended to do what they have done in the present resolution, and that is put in an express provision making it retroactive. That was not in the letter that he sent to these Attorneys General, not a word of it, and Mr. Bonner—he is the only one I can speak for—never challenged my statement that that was so.

This question of retroactive legislation in relation to how documents and statutes are to be determined has been considered many times by our courts, and in my opinion the most authoritative judgment on that question has been made by the man who was considered as one of the great judges of Canada, Sir Lyman Duff, who was a member of the Supreme Court of Canada for years and later its Chief Justice. That court is entirely within the control of Parliament, and when he became 75 years of age, Parliament, including this Senate, extended his term of office for five years by act of Parliament. When those five years expired Parliament extended it for another year—although according to Mr. Fulton's theory he would have been bunched in with any judges who were incompetent at 75—and my information is that his term would have been extended still further, but he did not want to stay any longer.

Now let us hear what Sir Lyman Duff had to say on retroactive legislation that we are talking about. I am referring to a case that was heard in the Supreme Court of Canada, based on an act that was passed in Ontario which provided:

No action shall be brought to charge any person with the payment of a commission or other remuneration for the sale of real property unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought shall be in writing separate from the sale agreement and signed by the party to be charged therewith or some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized.

This sale had already taken place, but the action had not been brought until after this legislation was passed, and the question was whether in that ambiguous language the prohibition extended to an action brought after the enactment of the legislation but in connection with a contract executed prior thereto.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: What is the citation?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Volume 61, Supreme Court Reports, page 413. The parties were Upper Canada College, Defendant-Appellant, and F. J. Smith, Plaintiff-Respondent. The judgment of Mr. Justice Duff—it was rendered before he was Chief Justice—appears on page 416. He said:

The principle which in my judgment governs this appeal can be stated in the language of—

Then he cites an authority. And, mark you, now we are considering a petition which would include an official document like Mr. Fulton's letter, and an official document like the Canadian Bar Association's resolution as to whether the proposed amendment was intended to be retrospective or not. The passage he cites is from a judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, in the case of Phillips v. Eyre, which was heard away back in 1870. The passage is as follows:

Retrospective laws are, no doubt, prima facie a questionable policy, and contrary to the general principle that legislation by which the conduct of mankind is to be regulated ought, when introduced for the first time, to deal with future acts, and ought not to change the character of past transactions carried on upon the faith of the then existing law.

Then he quotes the law in Latin, and I think I ought to ask my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) to make the translation.

The passage continues:

Accordingly, the Court will not ascribe retrospective force to new laws affecting rights, unless by express words or necessary implication it appears that such was the intention of the legislature.

I venture to say, honourable senators, if the proposed amendment were in the words of Mr. Fulton's letter and had no more reference to retrospective legislation than that letter has, that that decision would apply and the amendment would be held to be only prospective.

Mr. Justice Duff goes on:

—and the rule that statutory enactments generally are to be regarded as intended only to regulate the future conduct of persons is, as Parke B. said in Moon v. Durden, in 1848, "deeply founded in good sense and strict justice" because speaking generally it would not only be widely inconvenient but "a flagrant violation of natural justice" to deprive people of rights acquired by transactions perfectly valid and regular according to the law of the time.

Now, whose opinion are you going to take? Are you going to take that of the greatest judge we had in Canada, according to the way Parliament regarded him, are you going to take the opinions of these distinguished judges who over the ages have laid down the foundations on which Mr. Justice Duff's decision was based, or are you going to take the opinion of Mr. Fulton? But before you take the opinion of Mr. Fulton I suggest you read what he had to say.

On page 419 Mr. Justice Duff refers to another distinguished English judge, Chief Justice Erle, whose judgment in Young v. Adams was approved by the Privy Council. Following is an extract from Chief Justice Erle's judgment:

Those whose duty it is to administer the law very properly guard against giving to an act of Parliament a retrospective operation unless the intention of the legislature that it should be so construed is expressed in plain and unambiguous language; because it manifestly shocks one's sense of justice that an act legal at the time of doing it should be made unlawful by some new enactment.

I would like to have had this judgment at the time I was attending the last meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, but I regret that I did not. I seemed to be more interested in the social end of the meeting. If I had had this judgment with me I would have attended the sessions and read these sections.

There you are, honourable senators; that is the unchallenged authority in Canada on that question.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What is the date of that case?

Hon. Mr. Farris: 1921.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Parliament did not see fit to follow that in 1927.

Hon. Mr. Farris: They saw the error of their ways. And, honourable ladies and gentlemen, I would remind you of an old saying:

While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

I am not saying that Mr. Lapointe was a vile sinner, but he admitted his error and made a correction. I have no doubt that he afterwards read that judgment.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my honourable friend a question for information? If, as he says, the ten Attorneys General of the provinces interpreted the letter to them as dealing merely with the retirement of judges appointed in the future and not in retrospect, have any of them as a matter of fact protested since that time that the actual resolution as introduced goes beyond what they understood the letter to mean?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I don't know. I can speak for Mr. Bonner. He did not protest; he just evaded the issue.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This resolution has been on the Order Paper since January 17.

Hon. Mr. Farris: And I wrote two days afterwards to Mr. Bonner. I ask my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to produce something from Mr. Bonner in which he expressly stated that he understood the letter to mean that we are going to break our contract with the judges and not give them full compensation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is there any letter to the contrary?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Good heavens, have we got to have the recommendation of the Attorneys General to avoid the issue? I fail to see it.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Is there a possible alternative explanation that the Attorneys General understood Mr. Fulton's original letter as including judges already appointed?

Hon. Mr. Farris: If they did, they were not very good lawyers, because they did not give consideration to the well-known Upper Canada College case judgment by Mr. Justice Duff.

May I now cite the Quebec case, which is an important one. Here I understand that the Legislature endorsed unanimously the resolution in its present form. Why wasn't the resolution in that form sent to all the Attorneys General and put up to them? Mr. Fulton did not think it was good enough to send to England, owing to the fact that the retroactive aspect is not expressly stated there. We must regard the attitude taken by the province of Quebec with great respect. But there are others in that province who take a different view. It is interesting to note that Mr. Rivard wrote his letter informing Mr. Fulton of the decision some six days before disappearing from office, and he was sending the decision of a Legislature that no longer existed. What a new Legislature in that province would do, I do not know, but that is the fact.

Now let us look at the resolution of the Canadian Bar Association. The association had many committees sitting at different times and different places. Some of its members were sailing in our beautiful harbour of Vancouver, while others were playing golf.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They meet in a number of places other than Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. Farris: They are unfortunate enough to have to do that.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They are meeting in Quebec City next summer.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is another charming place.

I would expect that if this resolution were set over at this time the report from the Canadian Bar Association on this question, when it is properly put up to them, would be quite different. I would be on hand to do my little part—and I still have some standing as a past president of that association.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Quite; but there would be some opposition.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Let us come to the resolution passed last fall, which I think I can find in Mr. Diefenbaker's speech in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It was tabled in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Gouin: It is at page 4903 of the House of Commons Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I thank my honourable friend.

Referring to page 4903, I read:

> Resolved that the Canadian Bar Association reiterates its recommendation for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years . . .

That does not say that it includes those who are already appointed. I say, if the resolution in that form had been put in our resolution here and passed to England, the judges of Canada would not have hesitated for a moment to follow the decision of Mr. Justice Duff and say that it is not retroactive.

The resolution continues:

> . . . and suggests that the question whether Parliament has under the British North America Act No. 2, 1949, power to amend the Constitution of Canada to so provide be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Why was that not done? My honourable leader has asked that question. As a matter of fact, he opened with it, and I am going to say a little more about it in a minute. However, I made some inquiries about how, not in ancient times but in very recent times, this resolution materialized. I called up Mr. Arthur Kelly, a well-known practising lawyer in Toronto who has been within the last four or five years President of the Canadian Bar Association. I said to him over the long-distance telephone: "I understand this question of retroactive provisions came up before the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association", and he replied that it had and that he took an active part in the discussion. I asked him if I could quote him, and he said: "Certainly, I am on record. I took an active part in opposing that retroactive provision. The retroactive part was defeated by a small majority in the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association, but when the mid-year meeting was held last year our resolution was changed, and this one, which afterwards went to Vancouver, was substituted for it." I asked him why that was done, and he said: "Well, I think mostly that our lawyers had come to the conclusion that we were so long in trying to get any legislation out of the Government that we had better take what it has given instead of getting nothing at all." The fact is, honourable senators, that the Ontario branch, of which my honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) is such a proud member, struck out a proposal in regard to retroactive legislation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Did it pass a resolution to that effect?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I understand so.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Have you a copy of it?

Hon. Mr. Farris: No; all I have is what Mr. Arthur Kelly gave me over the telephone.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What the honourable senator is saying is correct.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am telling you how I got it, and it was only a couple of days ago that I did get it. I did not think there would be any argument about it.

Then I made inquiries as to what happened in Vancouver. It came to the association's first committee. As I am a past president there I have some entrée, and I was able to find out what went on. I made inquiries and learned that the first committee that dealt with it had the information on it all typed out, and anybody who wants to question it can probably get that record. I obtained it also over the telephone. All it did was to decide that this resolution which had come down from Montebello, where the mid-year meeting was held, should be put to the general meeting. There was no discussion. It came before the general meeting of the convention just before its adjournment, when everything was going with a whoop, and it went through as I read it to you with no discussion. No one raised the question of retroactivity. It was not discussed. Whether this means everybody was wiser than the judges are, and knew that it included retroactivity, I do not know, but I know it is a mighty slim document on which to ask this house to change its opinion.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Was not the meeting of the Ontario Bar Association held after the meeting at Vancouver?

Hon. Mr. Farris: No, not according to Mr. Kelly.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, the mid-winter meeting of the Ontario Bar Association was held in February or March, and this resolution at Vancouver is dated September 4, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I know it is, but the other meeting was before that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, the Ontario Bar Association's mid-winter meeting was subsequent to September 4, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Very well. That is not the way I understood it, but I may be wrong. If that is so I think it strengthens my position that notwithstanding this resolution that went through at Vancouver—if my honourable friend is right, and he may well be—the Ontario Bar, according to Mr. Arthur Kelly, a past president and an active practitioner in Toronto, overruled it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What did they do with the resolution? Did they send it to the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I do not know. If there is any doubt about that I suggest you call Mr. Arthur Kelly. He is the man who told me, and he said I could quote him as to it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I can tell you what happened to it. It was sent to the council, as the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) has said, and the council did not endorse it.

Hon. Mr. Farris: With respect to sanctions from the bar, the fact is that the bar of the largest English-speaking province in Canada did not sanction this thing. So, if you have any doubts in your own minds and consciences about the justice of this, then to what degree is this slapdash way in which it was dealt with by the Canadian Bar Association going to change your conviction?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If there was anything done which was slapdash it was done in the Ontario section which passed a resolution and did nothing about it. The Canadian Bar Association at least sent its resolution to the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Mr. Kelly told me he was present when they discussed this matter. I understood that it was before the meeting at Montebello, and it was carried there by a small majority that it should not be retroactive. I asked him if I could quote him and he said: "Of course you can, because I am on record already."

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not question the correctness of your statement. I am concerned with the fact that they did nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It was passed on to the council, and the council turned it down. That is all the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) is saying.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Would the honourable senator state in what year the meeting was held at Montebello?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: 1960.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am talking about 1959, when they met in Vancouver. I will telephone Mr. Kelly after this discussion and find out a little more about it. It is my stupidity, if I have it incorrectly, not his.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are right except for the dates. The facts are correct.

Hon. Mr. Farris: My next submission in regard to this, honourable senators, is that everything about this legislation is wrong—everything.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is one fell sweep of the broom.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I have been too long in the practice of law and in politics to make a statement like that without having something with which to back it up. I will do that, and then I will leave it to your fair-minded judgment as to whether I have not, at least, made a reasonable case.

I say the Government should have acted on the recommendation of the Canadian Bar Association and submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of whether or not the Canadian Parliament has power under the British North America Act amendment of 1949 to determine the retirement age of judges of both the superior and county courts. We have heard about the county courts, but if it is true that that amendment of 1949 conferred jurisdiction in regard to the judges of the superior courts on the Parliament of Canada, then this petition requests the taking out of our jurisdiction something we already had and the freezing of it in the imperial Parliament, and all the emotion that was revealed in my honourable friend's speech about the inequity, and about our going a step backward, applies more strongly to the superior court judges and the recommendation of the Canadian Bar Association than it does to the county court judges.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a matter of opinion.

Hon. Mr. Farris: In my opinion, for what it is worth, the cause in favour of the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament as to superior court judges is just as strong as it is with respect to county court judges. If I had the opportunity of doing so, in the event of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, I would without any hesitation so argue. If the Canadian Bar Association is to be taken as seriously as the Government apparently thinks it ought to be taken, then its suggestion that this be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada ought to be followed. There is no doubt about what the association suggested, and its suggestion was not idly made. So we are entitled, on the basis of the opening remarks of my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), to look at the amendment of the Constitution in 1949.

I have here a consolidation of the British North America Act and amendments from 1867 to 1952. I would like to explain to honourable senators who are not lawyers that the distribution of legislative powers, provincial and dominion, are found in sections 91 and 92 of this act. Section 91 deals with the powers of Canada and section 92 contains sixteen provisions as to the exclusive powers of the provinces. The first provision as to the powers of the dominion, under section 91, concerned public debt and property. I suppose when the words "public debt" were inserted the drafters anticipated the present Government's being in office. But quite seriously, that provision has been moved down now and the first provision that now comes within federal jurisdiction is the one I am going to read in its entirety, for it goes to the very root of the complaint made by my honourable leader. Incidentally, I am sorry that the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) is not present, for he has strong ideas about this county court question and I am wondering whether he has given sufficient consideration to the same matter in connection with superior court judges.

Section 91 states:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces; and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,—
>
> 1. The amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada, except as regards matters coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces, or as regards rights or privileges by this or any other Constitutional Act granted or secured to the Legislature or the Government of a province, or to any class of persons with respect to schools . . .

My honourable friends from Quebec will all understand without question that this legislation could not possibly apply to schools. The provision goes on:

> . . . or as regards the use of the English or the French language or as regards the requirements that there shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada at least once each year, and that no House of Commons shall continue for more than five years from the day of the return of the Writs for choosing the House:

The remainder is all in regard to that matter. So for the only possible exception to the general application of this act you have to go to section 92, the provincial section, and look at what the provisions are there. You can take my word for it—and I am sure my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) will agree with me—that the only one that might apply is paragraph 14:

> The Administration of Justice in the Province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts, both of Civil and of Criminal Jurisdiction, and including Procedure in Civil Matters in those Courts.

Honourable senators, this argument is one that needs careful consideration, and as it is now a few minutes short of 6 o'clock, I will, with permission of the house, adjourn the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, debate adjourned.

EXCISE TAX BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill C-73, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I would like to advise the house that we shall probably have royal assent tomorrow afternoon at approximately 5.45.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to inquire from the Government whether any pictures will be taken of the house during royal assent. I raise the question because on the last occasion we had royal assent very few senators were present. Royal assent was unexpected and many senators had gone out on other business or had left for their homes. Some had been attending a committee and did not know that royal assent was to take place. I think it was most unfair that a picture should have been taken of the Senate in session when most of the seats were vacant. The picture did not fairly represent the usual attendance in this house.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 7, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

7th July 1960

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today the 7th July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. Joly de Lotbinière
Assistant Secretary to the
Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report on the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, Chapter 286, R.S. 1952, as amended by Chapter 45 of the Statutes of 1953-54. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had further considered Bill S-19, to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, lines 19 and 20: Strike out "town of Provost, in the province of Alberta" and substitute therefor "city of Prince Rupert, in the province of British Columbia".
2. Page 2, line 1: Strike out "Alger" and substitute therefor "Algar".
3. Page 2, line 7: Strike out "George" and substitute therefor "Gerhard".
4. Page 2, line 10: After "John" insert "Michael".
5. Page 3, line 3: After "churches," insert "schools and".
6. Page 4, line 8: Strike out "real or personal," and substitute therefor "real, personal or mixed,".
7. Page 5, line 3: Strike out "real or personal," and substiute therefor "real, personal or mixed,".
8. Page 5, line 17: Strike out "real or personal," and substitute therefor "real, personal or mixed,".
9. Page 5, line 42: Strike out "real or personal," and substitute therefor "real, personal or mixed,".
10. Page 6, line 18: Strike out "board of directors" and substitute therefor "Board of Trustees".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. George S. White moved the third reading of Bill C-71, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the third reading of Bill S-36, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL TORONTO TERMINALS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill C-72, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the city of Toronto.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinfater set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges. 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, after I got through wiping my brow last evening one of my good friends in the Senate said I made a very good speech, but that I talked too long. I am conscious of that, but I was confronted with this position, that I felt I was making the kind of speech that I would make in a court of appeal, with this qualification, that I did get in a little hot air that I would not have been able to get in in a court of appeal. With that exception, I felt that my speech was the kind of argument that the Senate would receive, not on any emotional grounds, but as a court would consider it. That being so, I could not restrict my remarks very much more than I did.

May I say also that as this discussion goes on, if you do not see me here you will know that tomorrow morning I shall be leaving for home, for I shall feel that all I can say has been contributed to this discussion, except my vote. My good friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has agreed to give me my pair. I do not think that was done altogether to speed the parting guest, but rather in the spirit of good friendship, and I appreciate it very much.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Can you be persuaded to stay?

Hon. Mr. Farris: If I can, I am prepared to have the pair cancelled, but otherwise it can stand, because I think my friend can assume that I will not change my views in this case.

When we adjourned yesterday afternoon I had undertaken the proposition that everything was wrong about this procedure. Having in mind the friendly advice I received last evening, I may curtail what I have to say, but I shall certainly not be restricted in what I think. First, I submitted that the procedure was wrong in connection with the county and district courts, that before any decision was made or action taken which would freeze this jurisdiction within the imperial Parliament we should make sure, with respect to the method we adopt in this country, what the law is. The simple way to do that is to refer it under the Constitutional Questions Determination Act to the Supreme Court of Canada. I have no more to say on that. It seems to me so obvious that no argument is required.

Next I discussed the point in regard to superior court judges, and I say the same criticism applies to the Government's procedure in regard to superior court judges because of the amendment made in 1949 to our Constitution by the imperial Parliament.

You will remember I read the amendment. First I read the old provision that is still in section 91, which gives to the dominion power in relation to all matters except those specifically assigned to the provinces, which are listed in section 92. The amendment in regard to our powers is the new clause which I read yesterday. I think it is difficult for a layman to follow—indeed, it is difficult even for a lawyer, when reading it the first time. It says:

91. . . . the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,—

Then the new paragraph 1 is the amendment:

1. The amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada, except as regards matters coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces, . . .

and other things which I read yesterday and do not need to read again because we are not dealing here with any of those matters. The only question is, do we come under these classes of subjects which this act assigns exclusively to the Legislatures?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: What act are you referring to?

Hon. Mr. Farris: The British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Is it No. 2 of 1949?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: 1949, yes.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is not the same act under which we brought Newfoundland into Confederation.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: The Newfoundland amendment was No. 1, and this is No. 2.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Section 92, paragraph 14, relates to administration of justice in the province, and so on, but we cannot possibly come under that because section 99 of the British North America Act provides:

The Judges of the Superior Courts shall hold Office during good Behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

So we cannot possibly be under section 92. That being so, it is my considered opinion as a lawyer—and I have discussed it with many lawyers in whom I have great confidence and they all agree with me—that under the amendment of 1949 we have complete jurisdiction to change our Constitution in any matter that does not come under section 92, which lists the powers vested in the provinces.

I may be wrong in that, honourable senators, because lawyers do disagree and cases come to the courts with not only the lawyers but the judges disagreeing. But I say to you without any hesitation that there is, in my opinion, a strong case, the very strongest case, that we have today jurisdiction to amend our Constitution to take in the power to affect or change the tenure of office of judges. Now, if that be so, it would be just as retrograde an action to send that question over to the imperial Parliament as it would be to send over the question of the age of retirement of county court judges.

I think it would be a most lamentable thing for this Parliament to pass a resolution asking the imperial Parliament to make an amendment in regard to section 99 when that is, in my opinion, not necessary. The serious thing about it is this, that if we pass this resolution and the British Parliament acts on it, that will be a repudiation of the law passed in 1949, and the power that we were then given and do have today to amend our own Constitution in matters of this kind will be lost.

Not only do I offer that advice, but the Canadian bar has offered that advice, and in the resolution which I have read the association suggested that this question be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada in view of the 1949 amendment to our Constitution. I did cast some reflections on the Canadian Bar Association in regard to the retroactivity question because I do not think the association fully considered that, but it set out in black and white its recommendation that the Government submit this question to the Supreme Court of Canada. As I stated yesterday, the Government has the fullest jurisdiction to do that. Time after time it has referred constitutional problems to the Supreme Court of Canada.

If that is done we shall be no worse off than we are now, but if the view I am offering is right—and I flatter myself that I am a lawyer of some experience in this country, and I have gone to plead before the Privy Council as often as any practising lawyer in this country—if I am right, and if the men who join me in that view are right, then we would do a terrible thing if we sent this over to the imperial Parliament at the present time. We would be going back to colonialism; we would be asking the imperial Parliament to do that which we ourselves have had full power to do since 1949.

I am cutting out a lot of what I had intended to say, owing to the good advice I received from some senators about speaking too long yesterday.

I want to come now to the regret I expressed that my honourable and learned leader in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) disagreed with our national leader in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege: what I stated yesterday was that I thought the method that was adopted in the House of Commons was not the method which should be adopted here.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, if that is not a disagreement I don't know what it is.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I explain? I stated that the method that was adopted there was the moving of an amendment, which was voted on and defeated, and it was obvious that if we moved a similar amendment and sent it over to the House of Commons it also would be defeated.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would say that we would not then have a joint address from both houses.

But my friend went further than that. He said that the Honourable Mr. Pearson, when moving his amendment, did not have before him the new Judges Bill and so did not know that these judges who may get the kick-out—I use that term advisedly—he did not know they were going to get another thousand dollars a year that they would not have got before.

Well, honourable senators, as one of Mr. Pearson's supporters I must say that, he having taken a stand on principle and having got a registered vote of the other Liberals in the Commons, I cannot conceive for one minute that he would change his stand on the principle for a lousy thousand a year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no suggestion to that effect.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Read Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no suggestion whatsoever of that.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Read Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would ask the honourable gentleman to refrain from referring to the debates of the other place, in accordance with a well-known rule.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to refrain from doing so. I was trying to discuss, not the debates of the other house, but the speech of my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

I regret the position that my leader has taken in this house for two reasons. I say this in a friendly way, because my Leader and I have been friends for many years, and I hope we can so remain.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: But I am disappointed for two reasons. First, I am disappointed because the motion that Mr. Pearson made in the House of Commons was not moved by the Leader of the Opposition here (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). Probably that was for a political reason. Let me say that while I am not entirely above political considerations, I would not go as far as Sir John Macdonald did when he said that the time he wanted the support of his friends was when he was wrong. But I do say that we Liberals in this house, and we Conservatives in this house, who have a high regard for the principles that we are enunciating, should consider these matters over and above political considerations.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think the honourable gentleman should impute motives. The motive he is imputing is incorrect, in any event, but he should not impute motives at all.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am extending the highest motives to all concerned.

The Hon. the Speaker: I do not think the honourable senator who is addressing the chamber is imputing to the honourable Leader of the Opposition motives of a partisan character. He appears to be doing the very opposite: he is calling on honourable senators on both sides of the house to conduct this debate in a non-partisan manner.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am suggesting that our motives should be as I am going to state them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. The honourable gentleman has imputed a motive to me.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not imputing any motive to my friend. In my opinion his motives are wrong, and I have the right to state what in my opinion are the motives that are against us.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend cannot impute a motive to me. That is a well-recognized parliamentary rule.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable gentleman who is addressing the chamber has made an appeal to both sides of the chamber that there be no partisan motives in this debate. He has made no personal reference to the honourable Leader of the Opposition.

I think both honourable gentlemen should continue to be very good friends.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Mr. Speaker, the fact is, and I am going to put it on the record, that I am not questioning any motive on the part of my friend the leader on this side. But I do regret that he does not see things in the way I do. I regret that he does not see them in the same way, as far as I can find out, as the Leader of the Liberal party in Canada sees them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are right in the first proposition and wrong in the second.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Let me give my reasons very briefly. Let us forget all political considerations whatsoever. The duty of a senator, in my judgment, when a principle is involved, is to rise above mere political considerations. My conception of the duty of a senator is tied in with my ideals as a lawyer. For nearly 60 years I have practised law, and for 23 years I have been a senator. As a practising lawyer it has been my pride and inspiration that I have been in a profession in which the struggle for justice has been uppermost.

At the conclusion of my term as President of the Canadian Bar Association, 20-odd years ago, I chose as the subject of my closing address before the annual meeting, "Justice of the Courts". In that speech I stated—it is quite long, but do not fear, I am not going to quote much from it.

An Hon. Senator: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Farris: As reported at page 75 of the Proceedings of the Canadian Bar Association, 1938, I said this:

> When a lawyer speaks to lawyers about justice, it is necessary to define his subject with exactitude. Justice has its source in equality and is in itself an absolute principle. Justice in this sense is infinite in its nature and only Divinity is capable of administering absolute justice. Justice as we are dealing with it is justice as administered in the courts. Even when we win our cases we are not prepared to think of our judges as God-like institutions. We recognize that they are only human in their nature. Yet I would remind you that we are told that man is created in the image of God. Human justice, therefore, at its best, is an image of Divine justice. As that image most approaches absolute justice, so has man reached his highest achievement.

Honourable senators, I would like to couple that with my conception of my duties as a senator, which are, as I have said, tied in with my ideals as a lawyer. As a senator I have strong convictions as to why the Senate was created, and why it exists and is justified today.

The Senate was created as a non-elective body for the protection of minorities, and as a bulwark against legislative injustices or the tyranny of majority rule. I understand, though I have not seen it, that the Prime Minister has declared that his proposed Bill of Rights is the conscience of Canada. I don't know yet what is in the bill, but I do say that unless it has in it a declaration of the sanctity of contracts, the sanctity of contracts made by Parliament, then it is a mighty wobbly conscience of Canada.

Democracy was defined by Lincoln as government of the people, by the people, for the people. This does not mean government of the majority, by the majority, for the majority. In practice there is bound to be a conflict between actuality and theory, because you cannot run a government without having majority rule. But the concept of the Senate, as I understand it, is that we are here to see that no rights of minorities, whether contractual rights or provincial rights or otherwise, are ruthlessly set aside.

Let me point out this to honourable senators: it is to our judges that we look for the honest administration of justice, which of course includes the recognition and enforcement of contractual rights. Honourable senators, I ask you in all seriousness, can we demand from our judges any higher sense of moral duty than we as a nation extend to them? What hypocrisy it would be for a senator in one breath to proclaim with pride the justice of our courts and in the next breath to say, in effect, to hell with our contractual obligation to the justices! Could a senator be so cynical as to hold on high this solemn document which I read to you yesterday, under the Great Seal of Canada, signed by the Governor General of Canada, made in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, signed by the Secretary of State, and to say that it is nothing but a scrap of paper?

Honourable senators, when we adjourned yesterday I intended to move an amendment in the same words as the amendment that was moved by Mr. Pearson in the House of Commons, but I have changed my mind about that. I have another resolution, and I want to thank the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) for suggesting it. I am proud to give effect to the suggestion he has made, because I have thought for many years while sitting as a member of the Senate that the Honourable Senator Crerar's record in Canadian life has been as high and as fine as that of any man.

I will read you a preamble to the amendment I am going to move, although this will not form part of my amendment:

> Whereas the proposed petition if made effective would take from the Canadian Parliament its present control in regard to the age limit of the county court and district court judges, and
> Whereas the petition if made effective would make certain that the amendment to the Constitution made in 1949 no longer vested in the Canadian Parliament—

Keep that in mind, honourable senators. If, as many lawyers suggest, we have that power now, this resolution that we are asked to adopt would take it away from us and give it back to the imperial Parliament, so that colonialism would be re-enforced in a way which is not in the interests of the people of Canada, and not in accordance with their wishes. Let me read that again:

> Whereas the petition if made effective would make certain that the amendment made to the Constitution in 1949 no longer vested in the Canadian Parliament powers to amend the Constitution so as to fix the age limit of county and district court judges but would enshrine—

I think that is the word that was used yesterday—

> —but would enshrine that power in the Parliament of the United Kingdom—

Therefore, honourable senators, I beg to move as an amendment to this resolution, seconded by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard):

> Be it resolved that the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada that pursuant to its powers the following questions be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada at its next sitting:

—and the next sitting of the Supreme Court of Canada is, I believe, at about the end of next September.

One: Has the Parliament of Canada jurisdiction to determine the age limit of county and district court judges?

That is a simple question, and the answer is Yes or No. If we have that power, then why are we shovelling it away from us? If we have not got that power, then let us find out so that we do not have to depend on the opinion of Mr. Fulton to that extent.

Two: Has the Parliament of Canada under the provisions of class 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act the power to amend the Constitution to give the Parliament of Canada the jurisdiction to repeal, amend or modify section 99 of the British North America Act to give to the Parliament of Canada power to determine the age at which judges of the superior courts presently existing or hereafter appointed shall retire?

Be it further resolved that pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now under consideration.

The Government is assuming we have not that power, and that is why it wants to ask the imperial Parliament to amend the act, but there is no evidence for that at all. I say, and other lawyers say, there is some doubt about that. The Canadian Bar Association, in the submission sent to the Government last fall, suggested that this question be submitted for answer to the Supreme Court of Canada. The association had a real conviction that at the most this is a mighty debatable question. If it is debatable, then why in the world is there any hesitation in asking the Supreme Court of Canada to settle it? If the Supreme Court of Canada says that we have that jurisdiction, then all the legislation that is needed can be dealt with here by this Parliament and not by a humble, creeping petition to Her Majesty as the head of the Government of the United Kingdom; it can be dealt with by the Parliament of Canada.

Let me read that question again:

Has the Parliament of Canada under the provisions of class 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act—

That is the section I read to you last night.

—the power to amend the Constitution to give to the Parliament of Canada the jurisdiction to repeal, amend or modify section 99 of the British North America Act to give to the Parliament of Canada power to determine the age at which judges of the superior courts presently existing or hereafter appointed shall retire?

Be it further resolved that pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now under consideration.

I have great pleasure in moving that amendment.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering whether this is an amendment at all. It seems to be another resolution.

Hon. Mr. Farris: No; I am moving that we stand this resolution over for the time being.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am just raising a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Farris: We are not trifling with this question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am under the impression that this is not an amendment to the resolution actually under debate. It reads: "Be it resolved . . .", which at the inception indicates a new resolution:

Be it resolved that the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada that pursuant to its powers the following questions be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada at its next sitting.

One: Has the Parliament of Canada jurisdiction to determine the age limit of county and district court judges?

Two: Has the Parliament of Canada under the provisions of class 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act the power to amend the Constitution to give to the Parliament of Canada the jurisdiction to repeal, amend or modify section 99 of the British North America Act to give to the Parliament of Canada power to determine the age at which judges of the superior courts presently existing or hereafter appointed shall retire?

Be it further resolved that pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now under consideration.

I think I will defer my decision on this, but my first impression is that this is not a proper amendment to the resolution under consideration.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Honourable senators, am I not right in saying that this amendment would be in order if we changed the position of the paragraphs so that the last paragraph became the first? The effect of the amendment would then be that the resolution of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), be not now concurred in and that no action be taken on it until a reference has been made to the Supreme Court of Canada and a decision thereon handed down.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, even if the last part of this resolution or motion for amendment were put first I do not think it would make it any the more valid. The last paragraph reads as follows:

Be it further resolved that pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now under consideration.

As I read it, this is clearly a motion that no further action be taken on the main resolution before the Senate. We cannot simply discontinue debate on a resolution that is actually before the Senate. Some action has to be taken, whatever this action may be. I do not think the Senate has power to drop the matter simply on a resolution which is not an amendment and which does not refer to the first resolution, and which does not even mention that it is an amendment to the first resolution. There is nothing in this so-called amendment which refers to the resolution actually before the Senate, with the exception of the last three lines which merely propose that no further action be taken by the Senate pending a decision by the Supreme Court.

As I said at the outset, I will defer my decision, but my first impression is that this is not a proper amendment to the resolution under debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, speaking to the amendment, may I suggest to His Honour the Speaker that in considering his decision he might recall that the motion colloquially referred to as the six months' hoist is very analogous to the resolution that has just been submitted to us. It is proposed by this resolution that the Senate defer action until some indefinite time rather than to a precise time, as provided for in the six months' hoist procedure. There is not a great deal of difference in principle between the two, and the six-months' hoist procedure is thoroughly established.

The Hon. the Speaker: I do not believe that the six months' hoist is a recognized procedure. It is the result of certain decisions that might be taken by either the House of Commons or the Senate but I do not think there is any qualified procedure in either house which may be called the six months' hoist. When you have a situation which results from no action being taken then there is what we might call in the courts a prescription, and as a result the legislative measure in question on which there is no decision taken by either this house or the other house, is killed; but I believe it is not a procedure which is provided for and recognized in either the Rules of the Senate or the Rules of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I say a word?

The Hon. the Speaker: I might call upon our constitutional lawyers to give their opinion on the legality of this amendment. I would be glad to hear from them on this point of order before I render my final decision. The honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) has the floor.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, it appears to me that the resolution submitted by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) lacks a degree of clarity. I would suggest it could be put in order beyond question of doubt if it were based on a request by the Senate that further consideration of the address be deferred until these questions have been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada and an opinion has been obtained from that court. May I suggest it is not essential that this address be passed immediately. Although it has been passed by the other house, it seems to me we could pass it at the next session of Parliament and still conform to all the requirements. The matter of obtaining an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada is one of very great significance indeed, and I suggest that if the honourable senator from Vancouver South had said that the determination of the present discussion be deferred—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That would not be an amendment.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Of course it would. We could simply move that further consideration by the Senate of the address be deferred until we get an opinion from the Supreme Court on the points mentioned. It does seem to me that that is perfectly in order, and I make that submission without arguing the merits of the proposal.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I interrupt my honourable friend to ask a question? Has this house the power to ask the Supreme Court of Canada to give an opinion on these points?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: We are not doing that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what you are suggesting.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No, I am not. We are recommending that the Government do it. The Government of Canada has at various times referred matters to the Supreme Court for an opinion as to their validity. I maintain that if the resolution were adopted in that form we would not be giving the six months' hoist to the address but would simply be deferring action upon it until we obtained an opinion from the court on these points.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to study the proposed amendment, but from what I have heard I would say it does not amend the motion before the house in any respect. There may be some other way of doing what the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) suggests, and I have no hesitation in saying that I am quite in sympathy with his suggestion. In my speech I said—and I am on record in this respect—that this matter should have been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. But when we come to the question of procedure we must act according to the Rules of the Senate. I repeat, the wording of the proposed amendment, as I recall it, does not amend the motion before the house in any respect whatsoever.

The Hon. the Speaker: I do not believe it is a proper amendment because it would resolve that the Senate recommend to the Government of Canada that two questions be submitted to the Supreme Court. How can that be tied in with and construed as an amendment to a resolution containing an address to Her Majesty praying that a measure be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend the British North America Act?

There is nothing in this so-called amendment which would in any way affect or modify the substance-matter of the resolution actually before the Senate or have the effect of typing the two together. It envisages a completely different and distinct procedure by which everything with respect to the resolution actually under debate would be held up, in order that the Government may consider the recommendation made by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris).

Unless convincing arguments to the contrary are presented to me, I would rule that the amendment of the honourable senator from Vancouver South is not a valid and legal amendment to the resolution actually before the house. The debate is, however, still open.

Hon. Gray Turgeon: Honourable senators, although I am not a lawyer I would like to make a few comments in this debate. I am in agreement with the proposal to eliminate the procedure of presenting a humble address to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty cause a message to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of certain provisions respecting superior, district and county court judges of Canada. I am wondering if it would be proper at this time to move that the address to Her Majesty be amended by eliminating in the proposed paragraph 2 of Section 99 the reference to district or county court judges. That paragraph reads:

> A judge of a superior, district or county court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age.

It is argued that this Parliament has the power to determine the retiring age of district or county court judges, and with that I agree one hundred per cent. I think the proper procedure would be—and this is only a suggestion—to move that the new paragraph 2 of Section 99 be eliminated from the proposed address to Her Majesty, and if that were done the debate could continue on the other provisions of the resolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable senator moving another amendment?

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not moved an amendment. I am making a suggestion.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think we had better dispose of the first so-called amendment before considering a second.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Am I to understand that we shall have until Tuesday to consider this matter? I do not have a copy of the amending resolution before me. I have only just heard it, and it is out of the question for me to try to discuss it now. I also suggest that Your Honour's ruling would be accepted with more grace if the decision were delayed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not see how I can agree to delay the matter until Tuesday. If we do not proceed with the debate now we will probably have to sit tomorrow and again on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There is no suggestion of our not proceeding with the debate. An honourable senator has moved an amending resolution, which is being held in abeyance. In the meantime, the main resolution is before us, and there is no reason why the debate should not proceed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Of course not.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought His Honour the Speaker had ruled that the amendment was out of order.

The Hon. the Speaker: No; I stated that I would defer my decision. My personal impression was that it was not a legal, valid or proper amendment to the resolution, and I called on counsel with vaster experience than I have in constitutional matters to try to enlighten me. However, I will defer my decision in any case, and I believe it is quite constitutional and legal to proceed with the main debate in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Certainly.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, I gather that it is in order for me to proceed with the debate on the main resolution.

If I may project briefly what I plan to say about the resolution now before us, I must in all honesty and sincerity say that the substance of my criticism does not hinge upon my opposition to equating the tenure of office of all our judges and having the superior court judges also retire at age 75, which proposition seems fair and acceptable and equitable, all things considered. What bothers me, then, is not the substantive goal, with which I am in agreement, but the means which are being taken by the present Government to achieve this goal. In other words, I am complaining not about what this Parliament is setting out to achieve, but how we are asked to do it. Although the substantive goal, which is the retirement of superior court judges at age 75—which I claim is the only substantive point of the debate—is a desirable end, of what national significance I cannot say, yet in this case this desirable end does not justify the means that are being utilized to achieve this goal; and it is here that our dilemma or difficulty lies.

I must confess that I am fascinated by the unseen implications of this humble address, and I keep asking myself this question: Why did the Government choose to solve this problem at this particular stage, in this particular way? Quite properly, the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) challenged the Government to explain the justification for this course of action, not only with respect to its constitutional aspects but with respect to its retrospective or retroactive features. He referred to some of the substantive reasons that have been advanced in support of this resolution. He examined these most exhaustively.

Perhaps it would be useful to honourable senators if I reviewed briefly the three basic reasons which the Minister of Justice advanced in justification of what he termed the urgency of this address. These may be found in the House of Commons Hansard, for June 14 last, beginning at page 4902. The honourable the minister dealt first with the requests that have come from people outside the House of Commons and from the provinces, that is, from people who are concerned with the position of the judiciary. These requests he documented as no fewer than eight submissions from the Canadian Bar Association, dating back to 1936, and ending in a resolution of September 4, 1959, which last resolution deals only with the retirement of the superior court judges and with the submission of this question to the Supreme Court to check whether Parliament now has the power to settle the question under British North America Act No. 2, 1949. In the minister's own words:

> ... there have been no fewer than eight submissions from the governing body of the Bar of Canada urging that the Parliament of Canada take action to deal with this problem ...

and please note these words:

> ... and to provide for a retirement age of judges of the superior courts at 75 years.

Then the minister explained the efforts that have been made over the years to find some method of achieving this result, that is, the retirement of superior court judges at 75. As I understand his further explanation, these attempts to provide for this compulsory retirement of superior court judges at age 75 —with the consent of the provinces and by an amendment of section 99 of the British North America Act—were unsuccessful. Then the minister said that we must act now because for the first time in the history of this problem the ten provinces have given agreement that this proposal should now be put forward as a constitutional amendment to section 99 of the British North America Act.

Please note that nine of the provincial consents are from the respective Attorneys General and one in the form of an address of a provincial Legislature, which raises a very interesting constitutional problem with respect to the form which this provincial consent should take. I do not intend to pursue this fascinating problem at the present time.

Now, I submit that all this still does not tell me anything about the specific reasons which motivate this course of action. But for this provincial consent to which I have referred, have we been given any evidence about inadequate or poor performance of our superior courts judiciary and why these changes are needed now so urgently?

Have we been told why the Government did not refer this problem-matter of the retirement of superior court judges to the Supreme Court for a ruling as to the constitutional competency of this Parliament to provide for this retirement by our own internal constitutional change by virtue of the powers vested in us by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949?

Have we been told why district and county court judges are being brought within this novel constitutional entrenchment or freezing, but for some vague statement that there is some kind of constitutional cloud hanging over our long-established and unchallenged practices?

Have we been told why this proposed legislation is retroactive and in direct variance with what happened back in 1930, or with what happened in 1959, when the United Kingdom Parliament passed similar but not compulsorily retroactive legislation respecting the retirement of its judges at age 75?

And in this connection, honourable senators, with the more adequate pension provisions that are going to be provided for retiring judges, how do we know how many of the present judges may not voluntarily retire if and when they are no longer able or willing to carry on, perhaps even before they reach the age of 75, without trespassing upon our solemnly and freely undertaken contractual obligations—and I use that term "contractual" not in a legalistic sense but rather in a moral context of our duty and obligation as custodians of the good faith of the Canadian people unto those who have agreed to serve them as superior court judges? I believe that there will be more voluntary retirements than we may think—for each judge, as he reaches age 75, will not only act with judicious wisdom as he considers this wish of the Canadian Parliament, but he will indeed be subjected to signifiant moral and psychological pressures on behalf of retirement, through voluntary choice and responsible volition.

The problem of our procedural tactics in this house bothers me too, and I feel impelled to ask this question: Why did the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) not proceed much earlier with this address, which has been sitting on our Order Paper for how many months? For you see, the timetabling followed has placed the Senate face to face with what one might call a fait accompli because the address passed by the House of Commons is now presented to us as a kind of intergovernmental treaty, which presumably we must either accept as is or not accept at all.

Let us assume that we are not faced with a fait accompli and that the members of this honourable house, having assessed the procedural issues at stake, wish to make amendments which they consider beneficial. Now suppose these amendments are accepted in this house, then we could face an anomalous parliamentary situation. Failing House of Commons agreement to our amendments, we would then have two addresses and not a joint address. Suppose that each house sent forward its own version of the address! You will remember that the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) stressed that the resolution before us is our own; it is separate, and it is independent.

I have a strong feeling that the timetabling of this resolution in this house has placed us in an invidious dilemma, a procedural dilemma which may be characterized by the trite phrase "Heads I win; tails you lose!" I do not know why this should be so, and I protest most vigorously.

Now, if we do not accept the resolution for reasons which are at least worthy for serious consideration, we shall be accused of voting down an acceptable substantive proposal providing for the retirement of superior court judges at age 75. "And what is wrong with that," we shall be asked, "especially since nine provincial Governments and one provincial Parliament have agreed?"

So I want to repeat, this desirable end does not justify inadequate or unacceptable means.

Furthermore, what have the ten provinces specifically agreed to? I am asking this question because I sincerely believe that the argumentation concerning the "residual doubt" about the present retirement provisions for district and county court judges is akin to the proverbial splitting of hairs, and in this context I have every right to split a few hairs of my own, and this I shall do.

Please note that the letter of the honourable the Minister of Justice to the ten provinces asks for and gets approval of only one substantive change, to amend section 99 of the Constitution to provide for the compulsory retirement of provincial judges at age 75. That is all. It said nothing overtly about making this retirement legislation retrospective or retroactive in nature, although one could argue, perhaps, that this could be inferred from or implied into this correspondence. This intergovernmental correspondence certainly said nothing about providing for the impeachment of county and district court judges by way of an address of both Houses of Parliament, which constitutional addition is being made in the address we are now considering.

Reading the provincial replies, I can claim, with justification, that there was provincial concurrence to the retirement-at-age-75 proposal, but there was no specific discussion of nor was there concurrence in the changes this house is being asked to approve in the proposed new section 99 (1) of the British North America Act, in respect to the impeachment of district and county court judges, nor with respect to retroactivity, and on this point I am in substantive agreement with the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris).

When this resolution was moved in the very first instance it was inferred that this legislation was exactly on a par with the legislation which was introduced in 1927 and which amended the Supreme Court Act. Now, since Parliament passed subsequent legislation to amend and to correct the retroactive and breach-of-contract features of the 1927 legislation, the present legislation which is to result in legislative action by the British Parliament is not on a par: first, because it involves action by another Parliament; and secondly, because its retroactive features mean that we are being asked to abrogate what can be interpreted as a contractual obligation between the people of Canada and the superior court judges who are now holding office under a patent whose meaning is very clear.

This problem of retroactivity has perturbed me a very great deal, although I recognize that this Parliament is being asked to make more generous pension provisions for all judges who are henceforth to be retired, at a certain age and for other reasons. I am not prepared to defeat this resolution on the principle of retroactivity, although, personally, I would rather not see this retroactive principle included in the resolution. Whatever problems we are trying to resolve through the compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75—and I stress again that these problems have not really been adequately explained to this or to the other house—I believe that these problems will be resolved more naturally and without injecting this retroactive element, by stating clearly the wishes of the Canadian people that superior court judges should henceforth retire at the age of 75 years, just as other judges do.

I would like to refer honourable senators to the Canadian Bar Review, volume 12 of 1934, which records an address by the Right Honourable Sir William Mulock, a very eminent jurist. Under the title "Independence of Judges", Sir William discussed the retroactive features of the legislation of 1927 and of 1933, which last bill was defeated in this house. I do not wish to quote from this discussion, but I bring it to the attention of honourable senators.

I can accept the proposition that there can be no real dispute in general concerning the retirement of all judges at 75 years, especially when this principle now applies in practice to the district and county court judges and to the judges of our federal courts. Yet, to me there is something wrong in principle and dangerous in practice to have this Parliament agree to apply this legislation to previously appointed judges on a retroactive basis, when their patents as judges provide for lifetime tenure. Of all the institutions in our country, Parliament should be most jealous and most zealous about preserving the sanctity of contracts entered into on its behalf by the Government of Canada.

It is interesting to note that the British Parliament passed in 1959 the Judicial Pensions Act, being 8, Elizabeth II, chapter 9. Section 2 of that act provides for the retirement of judges at 75. I quote:

> Any person who holds an office listed in the first schedule to this act shall vacate that office on the day in which he attains the age of 75 years.

However, section 3 (1) states:

> The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any person who holds an office listed in the First Schedule to this act at the commencement of this act, unless he elects that those provisions shall apply to him . . .

I must add that I suspect that this objectionable feature of retroactivity in the proposed imperial, and not Canadian, legislation does have a relationship to, and threatens, if it does not actually violate, the basic principle of the independence of the judiciary. I find it difficult to believe that the fundamental independence of the judiciary can be maintained if at the desire of the Government, and with the concurrence of Parliament, the term under which judges are appointed can be amended from time to time, and be made to apply to judges already holding office. Surely judges appointed for life, or for any other term, are entitled to rely upon the word and good faith of Government that such appointments will not be tampered with. In this context, Parliament has an obligation.

Honourable senators, let us consider the constitutional implications and anomalies of the proposed joint and humble address. To me these are fundamental, and they form the basis of my objection to this address in this form.

When the Right Honourable the Prime Minister introduced the motion to amend the British North America Act by a joint address to Her Majesty, he pointed out that there was nothing unusual in the course being followed, and furnished the house with fifteen precedents, dating back to 1871, and ending with the amending act of 1949 which, as you know, gave power to the federal Government to amend the Constitution of Canada except in a number of matters which have been very well described by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris).

To me it is significant that when the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, was under debate in Parliament the then Conservative Opposition moved an amendment to defer action on the resolution until the whole problem of amending the Constitution could be resolved by a constitutional conference. I am wondering why a similar deferral was not considered by the Government before action was taken to proceed with this address, and to resolve a problem area about retirement of judges, which is certainly not more important than the act of 1949—and which, I believe, can be settled at home, using the constitutional amending powers of the federal Parliament accorded to us by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949. In this context, concurrence of the provinces, as already expressed, is helpful as an expression of approval.

It is equally significant, honourable senators, that the Prime Minister indicated that he regarded the present constitutional amending position of Canada as a political paradox and inconsistent with Canada's independent and sovereign status. So I ask, how much more of a paradox are we making it by this address?

Throughout the discussion in the other house there was apparent the basic realization that Canadians generally would like the power of constitutional amendment repatriated to Canada. There was expressed a firm belief that this repatriation was not only long overdue but was a desirable objective which would be supported by an overwhelming majority of the members of Parliament.

It is therefore natural for a lay person like myself to ask why the Government of the day, besides expressing in rather vague terms its belief in having this done some time, and some how, would not have used the occasion of taking some remedial action to settle the problem of retirement and removal of provincial court judges, to announce its firm intent to call a constitutional conference to resolve the whole problem of amending the constitution, here at home.

There is no need, honourable senators, to give a summary of the history of the constitutional changes which have occurred since 1867, nor to discuss the means which have been used to effect these changes. We know that some of these very significant changes were brought about informally through changing conventions. We know, too, that judicial interpretation has played a very important role in Canadian constitutional history. There have been legislative acts, and we have had formal amendments.

What I do wish to underline is that the formal procedure of amendment of the Constitution is superior to all other means, because through its higher authority it can override all other means. In other words, formal amendment of the Constitution is the ultimate authority and the final arbiter of all disputes. Therefore, how, when and by whom this formal amendment is to be initiated and finally exercised is of tremendous import to the national union, and to each constituent part of this federal union.

We are soon to celebrate the centenary of this federal union, I hope, as a completely sovereign and independent nation, in practice and in theory. No one would question the fact that we feel, we speak, and we act as a nation that is fully self-determined and fully sovereign. However, because our written Constitution contains no provision for its own amendment—and this fact has made the problem of formal constitutional amendment in Canada more complex and more difficult than in many other federal unions—and because we have never been able to resolve our difficulties and our fears regarding some sensible formula which would enable Canadians to fully and completely amend their own Constitution exclusively through their own governmental instrumentalities, we still have to seek some—and I repeat "some"—of these amendments from the Parliament at Westminster, which is the purpose of this humble address. This motion or this resolution shows that the federal element and the very heart of our Constitution is still immune from purely Canadian alteration, because the necessary amendment must be made by a legislative act of the imperial Parliament.

This joint address to resolve the problem of retirement or removal of judges begs the much larger question which has been put to me many times, especially by young Canadian students. They ask me: "Senator Wall, if we are truly independent and sovereign, why can't we change our own Constitution ourselves?" Because Canada has long been a sovereign nation, this continuing practice of a joint address by the two houses to the legislature of another, and equally sovereign, nation is an anomaly which may be termed incongruous, and even a bit humiliating. It may be argued that in actual practice the existence of this anomaly does not cripple our federal system, and there are many who would argue that it has certain protective values. Yet, I believe that Canadians generally regard it as high time that responsible representatives of the provinces and of the union should work out a suitable plan which would repatriate to Canadian soil the final authority for any necessary constitutional amendments.

We have not done so because we have been unable to find a mutually agreeable formula for making these formal amendments to our Constitution, but it seems to me that after 93 years of living together and mutually solving very difficult questions on a friendly and co-operative basis, we should be able, because we are willing, to find suitable answers to this aspect of what most Canadians feel should be a national sovereignty undiluted and constitutionally complete.

This problem is resolvable, and will be resolved if and when a firm decision is made to do so. I sincerely regret that the Government has not taken the initiative to round out this aspect of our national development, which is a question of much greater interest and significance to all Canadians than the substantive question involved in this address. Perhaps we should be adressing ourselves to this larger problem rather than repatriating to the imperial Parliament an additional little segment of our national constitutional sovereignty, which is being done, in theory and in practice, by section 1 of the address.

Honourable senators, what is the situation that is ostensibly being remedied by this joint address? We begin by asking: How are district, county and superior court judges appointed? Under section 99 of the British North America Act, judges of the superior, district and county courts in each province shall be appointed by the Governor General —period.

How are the services of these federally appointed judges terminated? That is the next sequential question; and you know that under section 99 the judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and the House of Commons. Their appointment is termed, by the Constitution so far, as being for life.

Now what have we done about other judges who also are federally appointed? Because the British North America Act is silent about the removal of district or county court judges, the Parliament of Canada has enacted on its own authority, and without the concurrence of the provinces, by section 26 of the Judges Act, that county or district court judges who have attained the age of 75 years shall be compulsorily retired.

What else have we said about these federally appointed judges? By sections 31, 32 and 33 of the Judges Act, Parliament on its own authority, and without the concurrence of the provinces, has provided for procedure to terminate the services of all judges upon certain grounds.

Honourable senators, in what other way do we terminate the services of judges? To answer this question I have to beat the gun, so to speak, and refer to clause 3 of Bill C-78, which is on the Order Paper, entitled "An Act to amend the Judges Act". Since this bill is now before us I assume it has passed the other house. By clause 3 wide powers are being given to the Governor in Council regarding the payment of pensions on voluntary or compulsory retirement of all judges. This new clause is applicable to all judges and not only at age 75, but, indeed, prior to age 75.

I want to refer you, honourable senators, to the proposed new section 23 (1) (c) of the Judges Act, as set out in clause 3 of Bill C-78. It provides that the Governor in Council may grant an annuity to, among others:

> a judge who has become afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, if he resigns his office or by reason of such infirmity is removed from office.

I point out that there is no definition of the word "infirmity". This infirmity may be physical, this infirmity may be moral, this infirmity may be emotional—this infirmity, at this point, may be given whatever definition I choose to give it, unless it is later clarified. And this provision for compulsory retirement of any of our judges who become afflicted with some permanent infirmity has not been arrived at by concurrence of the provinces. We are doing it on our own authority.

This very important question naturally arises in this context: Was provincial concurrence obtained for these termination arrangements and for these other new changes which I am talking about? If so, when? How? If not, then even this Bill C-78 tells us what about the legislative competencies of the federal Parliament with respect to both the appointment of judges and the termination of their services? Does this not mean that the constitutional power of the appointment and the sequential termination of judicial services of all judges rests exclusively in the Parliament of Canada?

This Parliament has already provided for the compulsory retirement of all judges, except superior court judges, at age 75. This Parliament has already provided, by sections 31 to 33 of the Judges Act, and will provide by the new section 23 of the proposed amendments to the Judges Act, that all judges are subject to removal or termination of their services by certain procedures and for certain reasons connected with the public good. Has there been concurrence by the provinces in these arrangements?

All that is needed to make everything equal, proper and very legal is to amend the Constitution to provide for the retirement of superior court judges at age 75. That is all. And I believe very sincerely, as does the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), that this can be done at home by the constitutional amending powers granted to this Parliament by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949. I ask this question: Why did we place this act upon our statute books if it was not to meet problems of this kind? What is it there for?

I see no reason for this humble address; nor do I see any real need to freeze into the Constitution the retirement age of district and county court judges, which to me is a superfluity; nor do I see any point to having district and county court judges apparently protected further by providing that they shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Honourable senators, it is interesting to note that the honourable the Minister of Justice

"played upon" this terrible procedural means of inquiry by a commission—I am speaking now of section 31 of the Judges Act—of a report to the minister, of action by the Governor in Council, and of the laying of reports before Parliament. The minister intimated that to his knowledge this means had never been used because it was so painful. I wonder how the joint address procedure of removal of judges included in this address will be less painful or more pleasant to apply? Why will this kind of public debate procedure by both houses of Parliament be less terrible if we have to remove a judge? If the procedure outlined in sections 31 to 33 is so distressing and unworkable, and if we wish to change it, we can change it at home by amending the Judges Act. Furthermore, and here I am subject to correction, I have been given to understand that the joint address procedure of removal of judges has also never been used—well, almost never—perhaps because it is equally painful, although the threat to use this procedure or the procedure under the Judges Act may well have been used to force judges to resign.

As I understand the situation, if this address is accepted by both houses and if sequential legislation is passed by the imperial Parliament, there will now be three means of removing district, county and superior court judges prior to their retirement age of 75. The first, by action of the Minister of Justice and the Governor in Council under the new section 23 of the Judges Act; the second, by action under sections 31 to 33 of the Judges Act; and the third, by action of the Government in submitting to Parliament an address. Since the last two procedures are equally distressing and painful, and since we have been told they are almost never used, the case of the Minister of Justice that somehow this is an improvement rather falls flat on its proverbial face. Past history indicates that neither of the last two procedures will be used except perhaps in terrorem. I fail to see what improvement we are talking about.

What are the other reasons being advanced for this change? Because under the British North America Act, section 92(14) the provinces are given exclusive authority over the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the provincial courts, the Minister of Justice argues that there is some kind of "residual doubt" as to the authority of Parliament to have enacted section 26 with respect to the compulsory retirement of district and county court judges at age 75. So he wants to remove this "residual doubt" by including district and county court judges in the same constitutional ambit as the superior court judges.

I am not quite certain about the exact meaning of this phrase "residual doubt", and I have asked myself how long has this compulsory retirement age clause been in the Judges Act, and how many judges have been retired under its provisions and whether there has been one occasion when the constitutional validity of these provisions has been questioned or seriously held in doubt.

I understand that we have had some 57 years of successful experience with this compulsory retirement section of the Judges Act, for in 1903 the retirement age was set at 80, and in 1913 it was set at 75. Now this gloomy cloud of "residual doubt" suddenly arises to plague us, and we must hurry to the imperial Parliament to help us resolve something which I have every right to claim does not exist.

I believe I have the right to argue that not only is there no pressing necessity to include in this address district and county court judges, but that the intent of Parliament to retire superior court judges at age 75 can be effected under the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, without asking the British Parliament to do it for us. At any rate, I believe the urgency being argued is not so pressing that the suggested reference to the Supreme Court of Canada cannot be made. Nor do I believe that the provincial consents for this substantive change with respect to superior court judges will be withdrawn while the suggested reference is made to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, this kind of reference could spare us the humiliating embarrassment of repatriating to the United Kingdom still another segment of our Canadian Constitution and adding to, rather than subtracting from, the contractual constitutional powers which presently reside in London. If there is some residual doubt about this Parliament's power to act with respect to superior court judges, I humbly suggest that the first place to try to resolve this doubt is at home, and not by lumping everything into a constitutional amendment—in 1960, seven years before our hundredth national birthday—and asking the British Parliament to resolve for us what I believe is resolvable at home. I am concerned about this voluntary loss of even a little bit of Canadian parliamentary sovereignty, because we are reversing the historic trend to our more complete independence and less-fettered sovereignty. My contention is that the case for our proceeding in this way has not been satisfactorily proven.

I believe that the attention of Canadians generally will not be distracted from this basic premise, namely, that constitutionally we are making a retrograde step, for we are diluting our sovereignty at a time when our efforts should be directed to the repatriation to Canada of the right to amend our own Constitution. To me, this is the nub of the whole issue, and it does great psychological damage to my vision of Canada's greater nationhood, on the very threshold of our national centenary. However, the Government has chosen to proceed in this way, that is, by asking us to repatriate to the imperial Parliament an element of this Parliament's constitutional jurisdiction—especially over the district and county court judges, who are being unnecessarily included in the projected legislation, and over the superior court judges, whose retirement age may be fixed by a purely Canadian amendment to the Constitution under the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949. I protest most strenuously against this procedure, for I believe that the compulsory retirement of superior court judges, which is the substantive issue against which I do not argue, can be settled at home.

I contend that what we should be dealing with is not a humble address to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom, but rather an act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867-1952, respecting the retirement of superior court judges at age 75, an act which we can initiate and process here in Canada. For what, honourable senators, and I ask you that again, is the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, about and for? By not using this constitutional right which this Parliament acquired in 1949 for the very kind of purposes that this address is now trying to achieve, we are showing a constitutional ineptness, and I believe we are making a retrograde step. I tend to agree with the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) that we are in a sense repudiating the very power that we wanted to get in 1949, and which we have now.

In conclusion, may I summarize my position thus: I am in agreement with the substantive proposition that superior court judges should retire at age 75, and I believe that this provision will meet with general Canadian support, but I am not in agreement with the means that have been taken by this Government to attain this substantive goal, and I repeat once again my firm belief that in this case the end does not justify the means.

I am not prepared to go along with the address in this form, first, because it has unnecessarily included into its constitutional ambit district and county court judges, which to me is a very expensive constitutional superfluity; and secondly, because no one has proved to me the necessity of presenting to Her Majesty this humble petition, for I believe that if the retirement of superior court judges does necessitate a constitutional amendment, then this amendment may be made by us here, at home.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian Affairs, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. James Gladstone moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, at this time I wish to present an interim report on the work of the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs for this year. As you know, the committee was established in 1959. At that time we did not have time to examine many submissions or hear very many delegations. Instead we were more concerned with contacting the various Indian and non-Indian groups so that we would be prepared for this year.

At the time of adjournment of the committee for 1960 we had tabled approximately 90 briefs and had examined 20 delegations. These included 13 Indian groups and seven non-Indian groups. The latter were made up of provincial government agencies, church groups, and organizations such as the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada.

I believe that the whole committee has been favourably impressed by the overall quality of the submissions and the sincere efforts which are being made to bring the Indian problems before us. It has been particularly heartening to see how many of the Indian delegations have been able to conduct themselves so capably in outlining their people's problems. This is a clear indication of the progress which has been made among the Indians since the last joint committee in 1946-48. At that time lack of education was the main factor preventing many of the bands from clearly stating their cases.

There have been a number of points repeated again and again by the delegations. Most important has been the need for improved education, that coming generations may be more able to look after themselves in our modern society. I believe many of the delegations recognized the great strides already made in this field within the past decade. There is much still to be done.

At this point, I add the personal observation that the time is rapidly approaching when all Indian education should be handled directly by the federal Government in a manner that is comparable to the handling of non-Indian communities. Although the missionaries have contributed much to the development of my people, many of our reserves have reached the point where education could be handled more effectively as a non-church enterprise. In addition, this would give the missionaries more opportunities to concentrate on the religious and parochial problems of Indians, young and old.

The fear of section 112 of the Indian Act, dealing with compulsory enfranchisement, has been revealed in a number of the submissions. However the joint committee was reassured by the Honourable the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on May 11 that this section will be removed or revised.

The extension of the federal vote to my people is another matter that has been mentioned, but here again the Government has already taken action in this field. The assurance of the Prime Minister that none of my peoples' treaty rights will be affected by the vote has been a major factor in the acceptance of the vote.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator a question regarding the report? Did I rightly hear him say that in so far as the enfranchisement of Indians is concerned assurance was given by the minister in charge of Indian affairs that the law would be changed? According to the report, there evidently has been a great deal of protest against giving Indians the vote. Did I correctly gather from what the honourable senator said that he has been given assurance by the minister that that will be looked into?

Hon. Mr. Gladstone: From observations on my recent trip back home, I would say many of the Indians have altered their minds since they were reassured by the Prime Minister and the minister that none of the treaty rights would be endangered by having the right to vote.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Question.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.40 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for the relief of Joan Emily Wills Meehan.

An Act for the relief of Vivian Phyllis Steine Skolnik.

An Act for the relief of Erwin Thomas Steppan.

An Act for the relief of George William Douglas Edmonds.

An Act to incorporate Northern Pipe Line Company.

An Act to incorporate Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act to incorporate Western Surety Company.

An Act to incorporate The Wawanesa Mutual Life Insurance Company.

An Act respecting The Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company.

An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

An Act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near the Town of LaSalle, in the Province of Quebec.

An Act respecting the International Boundary Commission.

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1960 to the 30th day of June, 1961, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

An Act to amend An Act to amend the Railway Act.

An Act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

An Act to amend the Estate Tax Act.

An Act respecting the International Development Association.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

An Act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

An Act respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of certain railway terminal facilities at and in the vicinity of the City of Toronto.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to the order for motions:

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, July 12, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 12, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 12, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-76, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-82, respecting the Department of Forestry.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the Department of External Affairs for the year ended December 31, 1959, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of External Affairs Act, Chapter 68, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to sections 22 and 23(1) of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, Chapter 42, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report relating to the Administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 41(2) of the said act, Chapter 111, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

VOTES ON CANADA'S PROPOSAL RE TERRITORIAL LIMIT AND FISHING ZONE

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

With respect to the 1960 Conference on the Law of the Sea:

1. How many nations voted—

(a) for; and

(b) against the Canadian compromise proposal of a six-mile territorial limit and an additional six-mile fishing zone under Canadian control?

2. How many nations abstained?

3. How many, and what were the NATO nations which voted—

(a) for;
(b) against; and
(c) abstained?

4. How many, and what were the nations of the commonwealth which voted—

(a) for;
(b) against; and
(c) abstained?

5. Who was the leader of each of the NATO and commonwealth nations represented?

6. How many NATO or commonwealth nations were not represented?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: The following answer has been received from the Department of External Affairs:

The proposal voted on at Geneva was sponsored by both Canada and the United States.

1. (a) fifty-four;
(b) twenty-eight.

2. Five.

3. (a) fourteen; Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.
(b) one; Iceland;
(c) none.

4. (a) nine; Australia, Canada, Ceylon, Ghana, Malaya, New Zealand, Pakistan, South Africa, United Kingdom.
(b) one; India;
(c) none.

5. Commonwealth Countries:

Australia—Sir Kenneth H. Bailey, C.B.E., Solicitor General of the Commonwealth of Australia;

Canada—George Drew, High Commissioner to the United Kingdom;

Ceylon—Sir Claude Corea, Ambassador, Permanent Representative of Ceylon to the U.N.;

Ghana—E. O. Asafu-Adjaye, B.A., LL.B., High Commissioner of Ghana in the United Kingdom;

India—Shri. A. K. Sen, Minister for Law;

Malaya—Mohamed Suffian Bin Hashim, Solicitor-General;

Pakistan—M. S. A. Baig, Ambassador to Switzerland;

New Zealand—Robert Q. Quentin-Baxter, Deputy Permanent Representative to the U.N.

United Kingdom—John Hare, M.P., Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food;

Union of South Africa—M. I. Botha, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Switzerland;

NATO Countries:

Belgium—Joseph Nisot, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plenipotentiaire Honoraire de S.M. Le Roi des Belges, Conseiller Juridique a la Delegation Permanente Aupres de l'Office Europeen des Nations Unies;

Denmark—Dr. Max Sorensen, Professor of Law at the University of Aarhus, Counsellor to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on matters of International Law;

France—André Gros, Professeur des Facultés de Droit, Conseiller d'état en Service Extraordinaire, Jurisconsulte du Ministère des Affaires Etrangères;

Germany—Peter H. Pfeiffer, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plenipotentiaire;

Greece—A. Vlachos, Delegue Permanent auprès de l'Office Européen des Nations Unies;

Iceland—Gudmund Vr. I. Gudmundsson, Minister for Foreign Affairs;

Italy—Francesco Mameli, Ambassador, Vice-President of the Council for Diplomatic Claims;

Luxembourg—Ignace Bessling, Delegue Permanent auprès de l'Office Européen des Nations Unies et du Bureau International du travail;

Netherlands—W. Riphagen, Legal Adviser, Ministry of Foreign Affairs;

Norway—Oscar Christian Gundersen, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary;

Portugal—Dr. Albano Nogueira, Minister Plenipotentiaire, Directeur General Adjoint des Affaires Economiques et Consulaires du Ministère des Affaires Etrangères;

Turkey—Feridun Cemel Erkin, Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plenipotentiaire;

United Kingdom—See above;

U.S.A.—Arthur H. Dean, Ambassador.

6. None.

CANADA COUNCIL

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR NATIONALS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES

On the notice of inquiry by Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

What is the amount of each of the fellowships for nationals of foreign countries enumerated in the Categories described as 8*a* and 8*b* of the Second Annual Report of the Canada Council?

What is the particular object of each of these fellowships?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I would ask the Government to be diligent in answering this inquiry, which has been on the Order Paper for a month and a half.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—MOTION AMENDED—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 7, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges.
30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is with a certain diffidence that I rise today to address this house on the resolution now before us, in view of three powerful, comprehensive addresses that have already been made to you. It is not necessary for me to attempt to repeat the marshalling of evidence as has been done by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in most capable form, in the masterly address by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and in the very fine argument presented by the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall). A further discussion of that nature is unnecessary and so inadvisable, but, at the same time, I feel it is essential on my part to state my own personal position in connection with this matter; and, of course, if I can simplify the problem before us that too would be of some service.

This resolution, like Caesar's Gaul, can be divided into three parts. May I state what I think the resolution means in the three divisions into which it naturally falls? We humbly pray that Her Majesty the Queen will induce the Parliament at Westminster on our behalf to legislate in respect of Canadian domestic affairs to these following effects:

No. 1: That the retirement of Canadian judges of the district and county courts for misconduct or incapacity be no longer governed, as it has been in the past, by the Judges Act of the Canadian Parliament but instead by a provision inserted in the British North America Act of the imperial Parliament at Westminster, so that thenceforth we could vacate the offices of such judges only by addresses of the Senate and House of Commons, that is, by parliamentary impeachment. That is the first division.

No. 2: That the terms of office of Canadian district and county judges be no longer governed by the Judges Act of the Canadian Parliament, as it has been in the past, but that it be placed beyond our legislative competence and fixed at 75 years of age by authority of the Parliament of Great Britain, by amendment to the British North America Act, an imperial statute which can be changed by us only by address of both Houses of Parliament to Her Majesty the Queen.

No. 3: That Canadian judges of superior courts who now are appointed for life during good conduct, by virtue of a provision of the British North America Act, shall retire at the age of 75 years by virtue of an amendment to that imperial statute. That is how I read this resolution.

I think it might be well for us to realize, as we think over this resolution, that when the British North America Act was enacted in 1867 by Queen Victoria, by and with the consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal and the Commons at Westminster—not here —Canada was then just emerging from the status of a Crown colony. It might also be borne in mind in a general way, as we think about this matter, that the British North America Act itself at that time conveyed to the people of Canada a very limited local autonomy. Our foreign affairs were conducted from an office at Westminster. Now the situation is vastly changed. Canada has, subsequent to the British North America Act, acquired a national status, and it is pertinent now to observe that the parliamentarians who passed the British North America Act in the first place, and those who amend it today, although they do so only on our request, did not and do not live in Canada. They are not responsible to Canadian electors. They sit in assembly on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, some thousands of miles away. They can be approached only by an address by both houses of this Parliament to Her Majesty the Queen. Consequently, in view of these changes and facts, any transfer of powers from the Canadian Parliament, and therefore the Canadian people, to imperial jurisdiction is a serious crippling of Canadian autonomy. As a Canadian, that appeals to me as serious beyond measure. Let the substance of the matter be ever so small, the principle involved is atrocious.

A half century ago the Parliament of Canada enacted in the Judges Act that district and county court judges should retire at 80 years of age. Later the retirement age was changed to 75 years. The important fact is that the Canadian Parliament exercised the power of setting the retirement ages of the judges of these courts very many years ago.

Hon. Mr. Bruni: Do you know the date when the change was made from 80 to 75?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, it was just shortly after. The exact dates do not matter much. What counts here is that for nearly half a century we ourselves have exercised that jurisdiction. And in addition the Parliament of Canada exacted that our judges might be retired for misconduct or for incapacity by the Governor in Council and not necessarily by the tremendous proceeding of parliamentary impeachment, which was not required.

The Judges Act has been in force now for all those years. It has been acted upon and is fully established. Judges have been removed from office from time to time, not always by direct action of the statute. I can remember two cases where they were removed because of the statute; they voluntarily retired in consequence.

During all that period, honourable senators, no one has questioned our authority to act in that way and no one has challenged the constitutionality of the Judges Act—no one has until just recently, when the Minister of Justice and the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) mentioned doubts in connection with the matter as a justification for the resolution at present before us.

Now, honourable senators, it does seems to me to be truly ridiculous that we in this Parliament should petition the Queen to ask the United Kingdom Parliament to legislate with regard to powers which our Parliament already possesses. That looks to me to be just silly. It is more than ridiculous. It will certainly tend to bring us into contempt among the statesmen on the other side of the ocean and certainly it will do no good to ourselves. But more than that, it will constitute a repudiation by this Parliament, guided by this Government, of the powers conferred upon us by the original British North America Act. It will be an abdication of our constitutional right, it will be a reversion to a colonial status and a retrograde step in every respect.

Honourable senators, as you know, I am first and foremost a Canadian, but not a little silently all around me, "And so am I." I am first and foremost a Canadian, and not a little Canadian, however. I am not referring to my own stature. I am referring to "little Canada". I am not a Canadian of "little Canada" status nor am I a Canadian of colonial thought. All my adult life I have stood for the autonomy of Canada and for the control of our own domestic and foreign affairs by our own people and by our own Parliament. And just reminiscing, honourable senators I have rejoiced, as most of you have, if not all of you, in the declaration of the Imperial Conference of 1926 that Great Britain and her dominions are autonomous communities equal in status in no way subordinate one to the other in any aspect of their domestic or internal affairs, and equally I rejoiced later on in the Statute of Westminster that carried into law the spirit of the conference of 1926 in what was called the Balfour Declaration.

I believe in Canada as a nation, and I have observed with an infinite satisfaction over the years Canada's development in nationhood and her status among the nations of the world. Nor am I the first of my family to entertain such sentiments and such views. I have in my hand a book that has been on my family shelves for more than 100 years, entitled The Colonies of England, written by the Right Honourable John Arthur Roebuck, Q.C., for whom, by the way, I was named. The real purpose of this book is to set forth a plan of federation of the colonies with the fullest and widest of local autonomy. This book was published in 1849, long prior to the actual accomplishment of Canadian Confederation. I perhaps should apologize for a discussion of personal matters, but I am sure I shall be pardoned in so kind an audience as this, if I trespass in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you. It makes clear my own position, because what I intend to say is so much in point.

As I have said, the book was published in 1849, and its main purpose was to advocate a Canadian Constitution which was almost duplicated by the one we adopted in 1867. And, by the way, it included Newfoundland, and not only the colonies or the provinces which were at that time in existence—Upper Canada and Lower Canada, the Maritime provinces, and a bit of a settlement in British Columbia—but also the great Northwest, as we later on named it. My uncle described this as one of the most fertile territories in the control of the Crown, and he said that were all these provinces unified and given a central administration with local self-government, the then "wild west" would become the Germany of North America. By that he had reference to the fertility and productiveness of the German people.

For many years before and after the rebellion of 1837 my uncle advocated in annual speeches in the British House of Commons that the existing and future provinces of British North America should be federated and given the fullest control over their own affairs. As long ago as 1834 in that house he drew a vivid picture of the mismanagement, misgovernment, corruption and tyranny about which the settlers at that time were so furiously complaining, and he moved for a committee to inquire into the affairs of the Canadas. The request was granted, so far as Lower Canada was concerned, and the committee did make its inquiry. Information which it obtained was of conditions so evil that the British Government refused to allow the committee's report to be made public.

John Stuart Mill, whom you all know as the great political economist, in his autobiography says of John Arthur Roebuck:

> He was the first to commence, and for years to carry on almost alone, the contest for the self-government of the colonies.

Mr. Roebuck envisaged a mighty nation on the north half of the North American continent, the result of a confederation of provinces existing and to be created, as Canada is today, with an organization, a freedom and autonomy such as he preached and advocated.

After the rebellion of 1837 a bill was introduced into the British House of Commons to annul the Constitution of the Canadas. Mr. Roebuck happened to be out of Parliament at that time, and he petitioned Parliament to be heard. He was given audience at the Bar of the House of Commons, and there he defended the colonies. He recounted their just complaints, and he asked for reforms which would remove their grievances, reforms by way of self-government. The bill was passed in the House of Commons, and sent to the Lords. Mr. Roebuck then petitioned the House of Lords for the privilege of addressing their lordships on the question of the Canadas. His petition was granted—a most unusual thing to be done—and in December 1838 he presented an 83-page address to as many as, the records say, 150 peers and a large delegation from the House of Commons. Once again the bill was passed. As a result of the arguments which he presented on the facts which he recounted and which he so well knew, there arose among the British people at that time a sentiment with regard to the Canadas which would never have existed had it not been for his efforts.

Mr. Roebuck at that time was recognized as the leading parliamentary authority on Canadian affairs, and in 1838, when Lord Durham came to Canada, commissioned by the British Government, to inquire into the grievances of the colonists and to suggest methods of reform, he asked Mr. Roebuck for a memorandum. One was given; I have a copy of it. He was far ahead of the thought of his times. The plan which he laid before Lord Durham was almost a counterpart of the Confederation of today.

On reaching Canada Lord Durham made a proclamation in which he suggested the principles of what was known at that time as the Roebuck plan. Roebuck warned Durham that there were forces in the colonies that would oppose any reformation of a democratic character. This is what he said:

> A small body of persons in Canada, as elsewhere, desire to rule over their fellows without responsibility. The sinister interests in Canada are those of the minority seeking to domineer by force or by fraud over the suffering majority.

It seems unfortunate that Lord Durham did not heed that warning, and that he allowed himself to be frightened off by the privileged governing clique of that time and its controlled press. As you remember, he recommended the union of the two provinces, which was a tragic mistake and ended in most regrettable failure. The result was that Lord Durham delayed Confederation of the Dominion of Canada as we know it for more than 25 years.

Speaking some years later in connection with a motion regarding the Hudson's Bay Company, which was asking for further powers which my uncle strongly opposed, Mr. Gladstone remarked that in matters relating to British policy in North America Mr. Roebuck "has frequently been the expositor of truths, at an early date, which although not at once acknowledged have subsequently obtained complete recognition".

One such truth which he advocated for many years, and almost single-handedly, was the inspiring benefits which could accrue to the empire from confederation of the provinces of North America under a democratic constitution of freedom. That has been thoroughly and completely recognized.

But, I am sorry to say, there are still some who doubt the full measure of our nationhood, and who tend to backslide, shall I say, in this matter of Canadian autonomy.

I take this position on my own account, but that is not all. It is part of my own tradition. My uncle was the first architect of our structure of government, and we Canadians can thank him more than any other statesman for the constitutional freedom and autonomy which we have so long enjoyed. He was the original Father of Confederation.

And now, honourable senators, in the closing years of a long life of Canadian national service, with that record of my own and with such a family history, am I now to reverse the trend of a hundred years and actually vote for a measure to transfer control of Canadian domestic affairs to the Parliament at Westminster?

Let me tell all little Canadians and all those colonial-minded gentlemen who might knowingly—and I emphasize the word "knowingly"—advocate such a course that I would rather be dead than be guilty of such a betrayal. Let the chips fall where they may. I will not vote for this resolution.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to compliment most sincerely the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) upon his very eloquent address. He has evoked what he called his family history, but at the same time it is our own history, and in doing so he has shown to us the various steps through which we have gone in order to win our autonomy and our sovereignty.

My own remarks will be much less eloquent and they will, to a great extent, be of a technical nature. First of all, I want to say a word about retroactivity. If the present amendment to section 99 of the Constitution is adopted, judges now appointed as well as future judges will be compelled to retire when they celebrate their three-quarters of a century anniversary. In the United Kingdom an act was passed in 1959 limiting the age of judges to 75 years. It must be remarked that under section 3 of that British act there is a special exemption in favour of the judges already appointed. In Great Britain they are not obliged to retire. They simply have the option of availing themselves of the Pension Act if they choose so to do.

Honourable senators, what does this prove? It proves that in Great Britain the rule of law still prevails, and that it is scrupulously respected. Great Britain is always anxious to respect contracts and vested rights. We speak of the sanctity of contracts, and that expression is in no way exaggerated. I wish to add that I know of no country where the administration of justice is superior to that in Great Britain.

Honourable senators will remember the maxim which we have inherited from the old Roman law Pacta Sunt Servanda, namely, agreements, whether they be private contracts or treaties, must be complied with. By the present motion the British Parliament is asked to introduce a retroactive provision in the British North America Act; to any judge appointed before March 1, 1961, which is the proposed date of the coming into force of this amendment, if it is sanctioned, London, at the request of Ottawa, will say: "In virtue of section 99 of the British North America Act you were appointed during good behaviour. Your commission stated in black and white that your appointment was for life unless there is misbehaviour or incapacity on your part." I wish to remark here that section 99 merely reproduces section 37 of the Quebec Resolutions, which declared also that the tenure of judges would be for a lifetime.

I have taken the trouble of reading the Confederation Debates, and I must say that on this subject I did not find very much which can throw light on our debate. Everybody seemed agreed at the time that judges should be appointed for life so as to secure their independence. Some of the Fathers of Confederation wanted the judges to be appointed by the provinces instead of by the federal Government, but I need not go into those details. That matter has been settled, and, in my opinion, concerning superior court judges it has been settled in the right way. But now it is proposed that we say to the judges that when they become 75 years of age, even if they are capable of performing the duties of their office, their contract is amended and they must retire. I want to be frank. I admit quite willingly that in what I would consider to be a normal case it is time that a judge should retire when he reaches the age of 75 years. There are exceptions to that rule and I have known, as have my confrères of the Quebec bar, some judges who were more than 75 years of age who were still very remarkable.

I want to make a distinction between a senator and a judge. A judge of the superior court sits alone and, even if he is 75 years of age, he has full responsibility and does not have the advantage which we have here of being able to discuss matters among ourselves and even, at any given moment, to change our opinion because of what our colleagues have said.

I am not pleading a case. I want to try to find what is in the common interest, but at the same time I want to respect what I would call the fundamental principles of law and justice.

Those judges who have already been appointed, as well as future judges, will, upon their compulsory retirement, receive two-thirds of their salary. That may be, after all, a fair pension. In any event, it represents quite a sum of money. But what I am worried about is section 3, which will amend the present section 23(1)(d) of the Judges Act to the effect that the pension which I have just referred to is granted, first, to judges who hold office for at least ten years. There are two alternative conditions. The first one is quite clear. The second one is that the pension will be granted to judges who hold office when the new Judges Act—the bill will be considered by us in a few days—comes into force and becomes operative after promulgation by the Governor General in Council.

I do not know whether there are any judges in what I would call the vacuum category to which I have just referred. I know that some of my confrères of the Montreal bar were appointed at the age of 68 and will become 75 after only seven years of service; consequently, if this first condition of a 10-year tenure of office applies, they will not qualify for any pension, as far as I can tell. If I am wrong I am ready to be corrected.

The other alternative is that, if I understand the clause correctly, the judges will receive an annuity of two-thirds of their salary if they become 75 years of age after the act comes into force which, I would imagine, will be March 1, 1961, the same date as it is proposed that the amendment to the British North America Act shall come into force. There may be judges in a similar position to that of a very good friend of mine who has not had 10 years in office and who may very well reach 75 years of age before the coming into force of this act. I want, without any improper intention, to point this fact out to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) so that something may be done to remedy an apparent injustice to those judges who will not have 10 years of service and who will become 75 years of age before March 1, 1961, or whatever date section 3 of the Judges Bill comes into effect.

The pension I have mentioned is a fair one, but nevertheless it deprives judges now appointed of one-third of their salary. That is something that was given to them under a contract under the Great Seal signed by the Governor General, the Minister of Justice, and the Secretary of State, providing that they would be entitled to their full salary during their whole life or as long as they were not incapacitated. In this respect I would like to refer my honourable colleagues to Hansard of the House of Commons, 1960, page 4892, column 1, where reference is made to the annuity equal to their full salary which was granted to judges of the Supreme Court and of the Exchequer Court who have been retired compulsorily in virtue of the 1927 statute.

As to the 1927 statute I merely want to quote the remarks of the Right Honourable Mr. Bennett who, by the way, was always exceedingly kind and courteous to all lawyers, including myself. These remarks were reported in the Commons Hansard of 1927 at page 1556 and were reproduced in the Commons Hansard of 1960 at page 4892. Mr. Bennett said that such judges compulsorily retired should draw their full salary because:

> ... nevertheless good faith and morals, in my judgment, impose upon us that obligation and it is an obligation which we should not lightly disregard.

Mr. Bennett added that he did not believe:

> That the Canadian people would approve of our departing from the general principle that the Government must—as in times past—have respect for the sanctity of a contract made between a servant of the Crown when he entered the employment of the state ...

On that point Mr. Bennett had the very great merit of converting Mr. Lapointe. He did not accept Mr. Bennett's opinion in 1927, but the conversion came three years later in 1929-30. Then legislation was introduced to grant full salaries to judges who were affected by the retroactive effect of the 1927 legislation.

In 1933 a very good friend of mine, who had been at Oxford with me, the late Maurice Dupré, then Solicitor General, introduced a bill with respect to the salaries of judges when they reached the age of 80 or 75. The bill was passed in the other place, but it was killed in the Senate. If I remember correctly, it was suggested that the amount of the judges' salaries be reduced to one dollar. It was not a very fair way of proceeding. As a lawyer, I think it is my duty to remind honourable senators that in some cases retroactivity in itself becomes a monstrosity. I do not suggest that it is so in this case, that we sacrifice or slaughter the old judges who are now exercising their duties.

I remember very well when I entered the law faculty, the first legal rule we were taught was this principle of non-retroactivity. It is formulated at the very beginning of the Code Napoléon. I now quote article II of this code:

> La loi ne dispose que pour l'avenir, elle n'a pas d'effet rétroactif.

In English this means, "The Law disposes only for the future; it has no retroactive effect." That principle, of course, has been affirmed again and again through the courts, by the Supreme Court of Canada, and by the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal of the province of Quebec. The principle is so evident that our codifiers in 1865 did not insert in our Civil Code article II of the Code Napoléon; they were of opinion that it was not even necessary to reproduce it. It is borrowed from Roman law and has always been recognized, to the best of my knowledge, in all systems of legislation. There are people who always insist upon the differences between English common law and French civil law. There are differences, of course, but when you come to certain basic principles of justice, they are the same in the English common law and the French civil law, though expressed in different language.

So the codifiers remarked that this rule of non-retroactivity was correct. Migneault, in his Droit Civil Canadien, volume 1, page 66, precisely reproduces those remarks.

I wish to add here that in an appendix to our Minutes of the Proceedings for June 29 last, at page 602k, it will be found that at its Vancouver meeting in 1959 a resolution was adopted by the Canadian Bar Association suggesting that judges of the superior court retire at 75, but also suggesting that the question of constitutional amendment be submitted by way of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. That resolution, which also is reproduced in the appendix to the Minutes, contains no request for a retroactive effect to be given to the age of retirement of the judges of the superior court. The same is true of all the letters which were received by Mr. Fulton from the various Attorneys General, and which are reproduced in the appendix to our Minutes of the Proceedings of June 16, at page 560c and following.

Honourable senators, as you know, our Quebec Civil Code is to us a sacred book, something like a bible, because it reproduces the old custom of Paris. Of all the commentators on our code, the jurist who enjoys the greatest authority is the Honourable P. B. Migneault, who was for many years a member of the Supreme Court of Canada. I would like to translate a few remarks from Migneault's Droit Civil Canadien, volume 1, page 66:

> If laws applied to the past, if a right legitimately acquired might be taken away, there would no more be either any civil liberty, nor any security; the life, fortunes and honour of private citizens would be deprived of any guarantee, they would forever be put in question: society could not possibly exist.

Of course, I admit at once with Migneault that, constitutionally speaking, we can give retroactive effect, or retrospective operation, as you sometimes say in English, to law, but as Migneault says at page 67, paragraph 2—I translate again:

It is well understood that the lawmaker may enact retroactive laws. If the lawmaker abuses that power, if he exercises it in an unjust and inhuman way, the law decreed may without doubt be criticized, but as long as such law has not been abrogated, it must be obeyed.

The real test of retroactivity, whether it is unjust in some cases, in some cases monstrous, or whether, after all, it be perhaps justified in the common interest, is whether or not it takes away some vested rights from somebody, because law is there to enforce rights and not destroy them, otherwise it would be anarchy, it would no more be a society in which justice prevailed.

Migneault then distinguishes "vested rights" from what he calls weak and vague expectations. In volume 1, at page 69, paragraph 2, he says:

Vested rights are rights already acquired at the time of the promulgation of the act and must be respected.

By acquired rights, Migneault means strong expectations, on the realization of which citizens are justly entitled to rely. In other words, as he says in the last paragraph on page 68, volume 1:

It cannot be assumed that a new act governs the consequences of previous facts, that it destroys expectations which citizens have lawfully entertained in virtue of the previous legislation and on the fulfilment of which they firmly rely. Such retroactive effect would be unjust and by the grievances which it would cause concerning private interests, it would create disorder in society. The lawmakers must naturally be presumed to respect expectations, the destruction of which would be a source of disaffection and trouble.

Honourable senators, the author whom I have consulted most in my legal career is Baudry-Lacantinerie. In his Précis, volume 1, Nos. 48 to 49, he distinguishes between "interest" and "rights," and I believe that such words are now more commonly used with respect to this matter. Baudry-Lacantinerie affirms:

Private interest must give precedence to general or social interest, but acquired rights prevail over general or social interest.

From the larger treatise of Baudry-Lacantinerie, Traite de Droit Civil, third edition, volume I, I wish to translate two or three paragraphs:

No. 126: A previous law governs alone the legal acts which have been definitely accomplished while such law was in force and it governs also all their consequences; the new law cannot have any effect on them.

No. 127. Nobody can pretend to suffer a real prejudice by this extension of an act, as long as it does not take away from him any vested right.

I pause to say that the increases in the salaries of judges granted at various times did not of course take away from them any vested rights; they conferred in their favour some additional remuneration for their future services. As a matter of fact, the salary increases took into consideration the increased costs of living and loss of purchasing power of the Canadian dollar, and personally, I believe, put them pretty much in the same position as they were in before.

I resume quoting from Baudry-Lacantinerie:

A new act is without effect, its power must cease when it meets with an actual right sanctioned by the previous act under the rule of which it originated. By affecting prejudicially such a right, the new act would be a cause, not of progress, but of disorder; any security would be excluded from dealings and the act would become obligatory before even it begins to exist; this would be unjust and contrary to common sense and also to the very principles of the promulgation of laws.

And, in the next paragraph Baudry-Lacantinerie states:

No. 128: An act becomes retroactive when it hurts vested rights, because what had been acquired, before it, is taken away by such act and lost by the party who had acquired such right.

That principle that statutes should not be retroactive is recognized in English common law as it is affirmed in French civil law.

From Maxwell, On the Interpretation of Statutes, sixth edition, I wish to cite the following two short extracts wherein he discusses the retrospective operation of statutes, which is an expression equivalent to retroactivity. At page 381, I read:

Upon the presumption that the Legislature does not intend what is unjust rests the leaning against giving certain statutes a retrospective effect.

Maxwell here cites the Institutes, ii, at page 292:

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non praeteritis.

Which, translated, means:

A new law ought to regulate what is to follow, not the past.

Those acts are construed as operating only in cases or on facts which come into existence after the statutes were passed, unless a retrospective effect be clearly intended.

Following this first quotation I want to quote from Maxwell again, at page 391, which is an even more significant extract:

No rule of construction is more clearly established than this: That a retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair an existing right or obligation, otherwise than as regards matters of procedure, unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment.

Maxwell cites a good many English cases.

Now, honourable senators, the purpose of the motion before us is to ask the imperial Parliament to repeal section 99 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

The Judges of the Superior Courts shall hold office during good Behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

That expression "during good behaviour", as we have already seen, has always been interpreted as meaning a life tenure.

The effect of the amendments now before us would be, first of all, to introduce at the beginning of what will be paragraph 1 of section 99, the words, "Subject to subsection (2) of this section", and this subsection (2) is the section where we find the 75-year limit. And in line 2 of that same paragraph 1 we see that instead of simply the words, "superior courts" they have added also, "district and county courts".

In other words, the contemplated amendments to the British North America Act would apply, not only to judges of the superior courts—and in the province of Quebec this means our court of first instance, which is the superior court. It was at one time called the Court of Common Pleas. We have besides that our Court of Appeal, or our Court of Queen's Bench, sitting in appeal. We find county court judges only in the other provinces. I am unable to find in the province of Quebec any district or county court; in the old times there was a circuit court, but it has been abolished. So, I need not say anything about that. The judges of the county courts, like the judges of the superior courts, would become removable only on a joint address of both houses of this Parliament.

Honourable senators, for many years we have had in the Judges Act, R.S.C., (1952) chapter 159, sections 32 and 33. Those sections provide for the dismissal by the Governor in Council of county court judges for misbehaviour, incapacity resulting from old age, or infirmity. To make county judges removable only upon a joint address of both houses, I submit no amendment to the Constitution appears to be necessary. It would have been sufficient to amend sections 32 and 33 of the Judges Act. If the Government had any doubt, or what has been called a residual doubt, as to the validity of the sections which I have just mentioned, the question of their constitutionality should have been submitted by way of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I shall discuss this question in a moment.

Section 26(1) of the Judges Act now provides for the compulsory retirement of county court judges upon attaining the age 75 years. By the statute of 1903, chapter 29—that is what I would call a very old story—the age limit was set at 80 years, and it was advanced to 75 years by the statute of 1913, chapter 28. No proceedings, to the best of my knowledge, have ever been taken to contest the constitutionality of such age limit of county court judges. It was said that some doubt had been expressed, but particulars have never been supplied to give support to that vague remark.

Again, I want to say that if the Government is not absolutely satisfied as to the validity of those provisions, which are about half a century old—that is quite a long time, honourable senators—it would be logical to refer the whole matter to the Supreme Court of Canada. If by its judgment the court declared intra vires the provision fixing the compulsory retirement of county judges at 75 years, that would be final and there would be no possible discussion on that point. On the contrary, if an adverse decision were rendered, then and then only would a question of a constitutional amendment arise.

I submit that the present petition is absolutely premature. Moreover, it places us in a position of putting in doubt everything that has been done since 1903. If we go to London we ask the imperial Parliament to do something which presumably we have not the right to do. If we have the right to do it ourselves, there is no reason now why we should undertake that additional pilgrimage. For my part, I do not like to see Canada as an eternal pilgrim to the Old Country. I have no prejudice whatever against the Old Country; my position is that we are perfectly able to settle this question here. If we have the power to do so, there is no reason for our going to London. If we believe we do not have the power, we can first submit the question to the Supreme Court of Canada. If that court decided that a constitutional amendment is necessary, I would not come at once to the conclusion that it is necessary to present a humble petition to Her Gracious Majesty. By virtue of the amendment to the British North America (No. 2) Act of 1949 I am convinced that we have the right to amend here our own Constitution as to section 99. Section 91(1) of the British North America Act, 1867, as amended by the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, states in a few words that it is only in matters assigned exclusively to the provincial Legislatures that such amendments cannot be made in Canada. Of course in the present case the subject-matter, far from being assigned exclusively to the Legislatures, is a matter which belongs to the federal authority, to the Canadian Government, which appoints the judges, not only of the superior courts but also of the county and district courts.

Honourable senators, if you look at the various resolutions which since 1936 have been adopted by the Canadian Bar Association, the most recent resolution is that which was adopted at the Vancouver meeting held in September 1959, which reads:

> Resolved that the Canadian Bar Association reiterates its recommendation for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years, and suggests that the question whether Parliament has, under the British North America Act No. 2, 1949, power to amend the Constitution of Canada to so provide be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada.

There is not one word in that resolution concerning county court judges, or whether it is a question of amending the Constitution to cover the retirement at 75 years of county court judges, or to cover the point of having such judges removed only upon a joint address of the two houses of the Canadian Parliament. The previous resolutions, which are reproduced in an appendix to our Minutes of the Proceedings of June 29, 1960, contain no reference to county court judges.

So I submit that if an amendment is to be made, it could be done in virtue of the British North America Act, as amended in 1949. If anyone has any doubt as to the validity of such amendment, I submit that clearly the proper way to proceed would be to apply by way of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. If this had been done at an earlier time—and I would remind you that the resolution of the Canadian Bar Association is dated September 4, 1959, ten months ago—we would have had a judgment rendered by this time and we would know exactly where we stand.

Personally, I do not see how there can be any hesitancy about the power of the Canadian Parliament to deal with a question which concerns judges. I regret very much indeed that we are asked to go to an outside Parliament, to apply to the Mother of Parliaments for her decision on a matter which, in my opinion, we possess complete jurisdiction. Thus, the present address seeks to replace the Canadian Parliament by the British Parliament in respect to something which up to date has always been considered as being within the exclusive jurisdiction of this Parliament. No previous Government has ever taken that attitude. Frankly, I believe it is inspired by an old-fashioned colonialism, and is absolutely inconsistent with the Statute of Westminster. Instead of repatriating our Constitution, we are now asked to expatriate a little more of it to Great Britain, and to pray—and I find that the strangest thing—to pray for the limitation of our sovereignty. Indeed, our behaviour here is without any precedent. For more than fifty years we have been able to deal with our county court judges, and in this year of Grace, 1960, this motion would set back the hands of the clock of history, to accomplish what I cannot call a progressive step or even a conservative step. It is a retrograde step. This motion would abandon to London a part of our hard-won autonomy and, I want to add, it is a strange preparation for the celebration of the centenary of Confederation in 1967. I am opposed to such a gesture of colonial dependency.

I accept this principle of retiring future judges of our superior courts upon their attaining the age of 75 years, and I consider this to be in the common interest of Canada. I cannot agree, however, with the ways and means which have been chosen to attain that purpose. We are told in philosophy that the end does not justify the means. This amendment by the imperial Parliament may be necessary for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges, because the terms under which they were appointed are contained in black and white in section 99 of the British North America Act. If that is so this motion should be at least amended and restricted to such superior court judges. I cannot vote for it in its present form.

However, honourable senators, I want to congratulate the Government upon first obtaining the consent of all the Attorneys General of the provinces to an amendment fixing the age of retirement of superior court judges at 75 years. I am exceedingly glad that such consent was obtained, and I believe it is a good sign for the future; but in the correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Justice and all the provincial Attorneys General I have seen no reference to an amendment making county court judges removable only upon a joint address of the Senate and House of Commons. Thus, in the future this age limit of judges and the process for the removal of county court judges will require for modification the consent of the imperial Parliament until a wholly Canadian method of amending our Constitution has been agreed upon. Nobody knows when this will happen. It has been said that it is not this Parliament alone which should determine the retirement age of judges of provincial courts, but under the Judges Act it was the Canadian Parliament alone which determined the retiring age as early as 1903. If anybody has any doubt whatsoever as to the capacity of this sovereign Parliament to fix such an age limit for county court judges, then a constitutional amendment should be sought, conferring upon the Parliament of Canada the right to determine within its discretion such retirement age. Our Parliament should be able to decide whether judges should retire at 65 years of age, at 70 years, at 80 years or at any other age. Thus, our Constitution would not be expatriated and subjected by an increased degree to the jurisdiction of an outside Parliament until a purely Canadian method for a constitutional amendment is finally devised.

When a purely Canadian method for constitutional amendment is finally agreed upon, it must be only Canadian authorities which will be vested with the power of amending the Constitution. Why is that principle not acted upon now? If the Government takes the position that the consent of the Attorneys General of the various provinces must be asked—and this is something to which I personally have no objection—it would be easy to insert in the amendment something to the effect that the consent of the Attorneys General of the provinces, or the majority of the provinces shall be obtained, or that the consent of the Legislatures of the ten provinces of Canada, shall be obtained, if the Government believes that it is better to have all those additional precautions. Surely nobody could ask for more guarantees than those which I have just mentioned.

In other words, if any power is needed, such power should be conferred once and for all upon Canadian authorities. It is very fine, and even touching, to express a desire to repatriate and take back home our Constitution. Such intentions are praiseworthy, but we are asked to do precisely the contrary. There is an old saying that deeds mean much more than words. In the present case we are very far from taking a step forward in the direction of constitutional autonomy. We are going back to pre-Confederation days, and we are giving to the British Parliament rights which it has not enjoyed since 1867. We are asking an outside Parliament to take away from us some legislative powers which belong to Canada, and which have always been exercised by Canada. We are obliging ourselves to undertake in the future some more of those pilgrimages to London which are not now required.

The resolution prays, moreover, that the Constitution be amended with retroactive effet. Therefore, we request the Parliament at Westminster to violate a fundamental principle of law. Honourable senators, if our Constitution can be amended retroactively where judges are concerned, a day may come when an application will be made for other amendments having such retroactive effect.

I want to use as my concluding words a quotation from Mr. Justice Mignault which is found in volume 1 of Droit Civil Canadien at page 66, and the truth of which I have tried to prove in my remarks. Again I translate:

> If laws applied to the past, if a right legitimately acquired might be taken away, if an act done when it was lawful might afterwards be punishable, then there would no more be either any civil liberty or any security; the life, fortune and honour of private citizens would be deprived of any guarantee; they would forever be put in question; society could not possibly exist.

Honourable senators, once people begin to put aside a basic principle of law and of justice, such as the non-retroactivity of a statute, we are obliged to ask ourselves when and where such a course stops. Nobody can be sure of what the future holds in store for us when there is a violation of some essential rights and when, moreover, we give away part of a hard-won sovereignty.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, so much has been so well and eloquently said that I should not have to detain you for very long, but the matter is important and I should like to put some observations on record, at any rate.

First of all, may I pay a special compliment to the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). His address today was one of the most powerful and moving I have heard in this house, and I think we are all indebted to him for his contribution to this debate.

I should like to pay a tribute to our judiciary and to our administration of justice as we have had it in Canada. We have been blessed with a very high standard of administration of justice and, while there may have been exceptions, on the whole we do not need to go far afield to compare our record with that of other countries to realize that in Canada we have had a very high standard. It is, of course, in the minds of all of us that this standard be preserved as a bulwark of democracy.

Having said that, I do agree with the general principle of the amendment proposed in the address whereby a retirement age for judges be set at 75 years, subject to the qualification that I do not agree with the principle of retroactivity. Although we have had a high standard of administration of justice in the past, times are changing and we have greater activity, greater expansion; and, on balance, I think the advantages of a retiring date outweigh the disadvantages, and it will help in the administration of justice in Canada if we set a compulsory retirement age of judges at 75 years.

But there are two points that disturb me in the address. The first is the retroactive feature that I have mentioned, and with which I will deal later, and the other is the application of the proposed amendment to county court judges. This matter has been so fully covered by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), that I do not need to labour it any further, but there is one quotation I would like to put on record that I do not believe has appeared as yet. I refer to what was said by the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen in May 1933, in dealing with a bill to amend the Judges Act at that time. On this subject of county court judges he said:

> We make appointments to the county court bench by virtue of our inherent power as a sovereign state, and as such we can change directly and without restraint the conditions of appointments and the term during which the appointee shall hold office.

Nothing has happened, in my view, to make that eminent opinion less valid now, and it is a retrograde step to go back upon it.

The other matter on which I wish to speak is the retroactive effect of this address in so far as serving judges are concerned. My own view is that there is a principle at stake here and that it is wrong to apply this compulsory retirement age to serving judges.

I think we should make the provision elective; that is to say, adopt the principle established by the Parliament of the United Kingdom last December and allow existing judges to elect whether they will retire on the proposed pension or stay in office.

A number of arguments have been put forward by those who ordinarily might agree with the principle that I have enunciated to justify the retroactivity in this particular case. It has been said that because the appointment was by statute it is not a contract and therefore could be changed by statute. There is no doubt about the power under the British North America Act, if amended, to change the terms of tenure, but it is the propriety and the wisdom and the rightness of the change that concerns me. For example, we hear these days of Fidel Castro expropriating the property of non-nationals. He has that power unquestionably, but it is the exercise of that power and the circumstances under which it is exercised that make it either good or bad. To me in this particular case it is a bad principle to adopt because we are dealing with the tenure of office of judges and the administration of justice.

The question whether there is a contract with the judges, I think, is not particularly relevant. There certainly is an obligation, and it is certainly a breach of faith to alter the terms upon which judges were appointed. Contracts can, of course, be changed by law, or the law may permit contracts to be broken. We are familiar with the circumstances under which breaches are allowed: for example, where a mistake has been made or where the safety of the state may be at issue or where frustration may take place. But none of these circumstances are at all applicable to the situation with which we are dealing here today which, in effect, is to change the terms of an appointment largely on a basis of expediency.

One reason advanced is that because some judges have had their salaries increased since they were appointed therefore they must recognize that their tenure of office can also be changed. With all due respect, I find that is an argument which I cannot follow, either in law or in equity. It would be as though an employer hired an employee on a contract for five years at $10,000 per year, and after one year the employer increased the employee's salary and then a few months later discharged the employee, saying that because he had accepted the increase in salary he must therefore accept the change in tenure. In other words, if a person gives a benefit he is entitled to strike a blow. With that I do not agree, either in law or in equity. In addition to that, of course, there is the point that because of inflation the salaries of judges have changed in terms of the purchasing power of the dollar, and also that there has been a general increase in the salaries of civil servants and people in business, and that the increased salaries have applied to the position and not to a particular individual.

A new appointee would have received exactly the same salary as a judge who had already been in the position. So I don't think there is any validity in the suggestion that, because judges were appointed when salaries were lower and their salaries and pensions have since been increased unilaterally by the Government, therefore they have recognized the right of the Government unilaterally to alter the tenure of their contract. I would also say that there is, of course, no objection to the change in the tenure if it is accepted by the judges, or by any judge. That is why I think it should be on the elective principle. If a judge chooses to retire under the provisions of the amendment at age 75, and to accept the pension, that is perfectly in order. It is toward those judges who might wish to stay on and who are capable of staying on that we should follow the principle of not breaking faith.

I have heard it said that the pension is fair and adequate and that judges should therefore be satisfied with the purpose of compulsory retirement. On the whole, as to future appointments I would say it is fair and adequate, but whether it is fair and adequate to those judges who already hold their positions is a different matter, and the best way of determining that is to leave it to their election. Those to whom it is fair and adequate will accept, and the others will by staying on show that it is not in their case a fair and adequate pension.

The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), in introducing the resolution, referred to the precedent set in 1927 with respect to the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not agree with the precedent set at that time, but if one reads the statute of 1927 with the statute of 1930, one cannot quarrel with the action that was taken in the two years. It will be remembered that in 1930 Mr. Lapointe, after taking a sober second look at what he had done in 1927, was courageous enough to admit his error and to acknowledge that the Leader of the Opposition, the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett, was right. Therefore in 1930 he corrected the error made in 1927.

The two pertinent remarks which I should like to appear on the record and which deal with the two pieces of legislation, are these. In 1927 Mr. Bennett, speaking on the retirement of judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, said:

> What we are doing now involves a breach of contract between the individual who holds office at the present time and the state, because his patent of office declares that he shall hold office during life or good behaviour.

Then in 1930 Mr. Lapointe, referring to those remarks said, as appears in the Commons Hansard, at page 1778:

> I did not agree with my honourable friend at the time, but I must say that since I have been reconsidering the matter I have found that there is much force in that contention; and for those judges who were then members of the court, and they are very few indeed, the law will provide an annuity equal to their salary.

I do not think anyone can quarrel with that courageous change in attitude which gave to those judges presently retired the full measure in tangible terms of what they were entitled to. To me, however, even more relevant to the situation we are dealing with today is the precedent set in 1933. In many respects, it was quite similar to the way we are dealing with this matter at the present time.

Honourable senators will recall that a Conservative Government was elected in 1930, replacing the former Liberal Government, but there was a majority of Liberals in the Senate. In the spring of 1933 a Government bill was introduced by the Solicitor General to provide that a judge of the superior court could voluntarily retire at 75 years on a pension equal to two-thirds of his salary, but that if he did not so retire his salary would be cut by one-third, so that he would receive only the same amount for working as a judge as he would get for not working at all. It was an ingenious scheme to do indirectly what the Government did not feel it could do directly. The Government recognized that it could not change life tenure of office, but felt that it could change the salary. The Government took the opposite point of view from that I outlined a few minutes ago, the view of some that if you could change the salary you could also change the tenure. The Government apprently felt it could not change the tenure but that it could change the salary. In effect, the bill was designed to do indirectly what it is now proposed we do directly, that is to compel the retirement of judges at 75 at a pension of two-thirds of their salary, accomplishing this by force of a reduction in salary. In the House of Commons the bill was opposed vigorously by Mr. Lapointe and others. It was carried on a recorded division, and it was interesting to me to see that some of those who voted "on the side of the angels" and against the bill are now in this house today. Nevertheless, it carried in the House of Commons.

In the Senate the bill was sponsored by the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen. It was attacked by the then Leader of the Opposition in this house mainly on the grounds that it should not apply to existing appointments. And Senator C. P. Beaubien said:

> I repeat, the most striking feature of this measure is its crying injustice. The state should respect its contract with individuals.

He said further, as reported in the Senate Hansard of May 15, 1933, at page 507:

> I think one serious objection to the bill would be removed if it were made to apply to future appointments only.

Sir Allen Aylesworth, a former Minister of Justice, said, as appears at page 510:

> Whether or not there is any actual contract as to salary, I do say that it would be nothing else than a breach of good faith on the part of Parliament to make this bill apply to judges already appointed.

Again, he said:

> I say it constitutes, if not an absolute breach of contract, at any rate a breach of good faith.

Senator Dandurand said, as appears at page 530:

> If the measure as it stands were made applicable only to judges appointed in the future no injustice would be done,...

To the everlasting credit of the Senate, the bill was defeated by the Senate on second reading.

It is interesting to observe the sequence of events. It is generally supposed that the Senate is not as closely attuned to the mind of the public as are the elected members of the House of Commons. But on matters which have not been directly at issue before the electorate it may well be that senators are at least equally able to take the pulse of the public. Certainly no dire consequences ensued when the Senate turned down that bill in 1933. On the contrary, the election of 1953 resulted in a change in government. I believe that every member of the House of Commons who voted against the Judges Bill in 1933 and who ran for Parliament in 1935 was re-elected. In the light of history the action of the Senate was fully justified.

Just a word about the correspondence with the Attorneys General of the provinces. As has been mentioned, the correspondence says nothing about the application of the amendment to sitting judges. In the light of that correspondence, the Minister of Justice could just as readily have eliminated the retroactive effect of the amendment. I am satisfied that such action would have been fully justified by the consents given. After all, the matters of the appointment, salaries, and pensions of judges are all clearly subjects of federal jurisdiction, and the consents of the provinces are simply part of the present method of procedure for amending the Constitution. They cannot be said to justify nor to condemn the application of the amendment to existing appointments.

I say the same is in effect true with respect to representations from the Canadian Bar Association. I have been a member of that association for many years. I was on its council for a long time. My own recollection is that it is mainly the principle of the retiring age with which the association was concerned, and not its application to those who had already been appointed for life. I am completely satisfied in my own mind that if a right of election was given to sitting judges the general feeling of the bar of Canada would be on our side.

Now a word as to the precedent so recently established by the British Parliament last year, and which the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) mentioned. Their act, the Judicial Pensions Act, was passed in December 1959. They have had the same question before them for a much longer time than we have in Canada. They have had commissions going back as far as 1913 dealing with tenure of office of judges and the question of the retirement age. These commissions have recommended over the years that there be a compulsory retirement age.

The Bar Council of England made a similar recommendation, but nothing was done until last year, when the Attorney General, Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller, brought in a bill to establish a fixed retiring age of 75. The important section, section 2, reads as follows:

> A person who holds an office listed in the first schedule to this act shall vacate that office on the day on which he attains the age of 75 years.

Then section 3(1) cures the retroactive effect, and this is the type of provision I think we should have with respect to our judges in Canada. It says:

> The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any person who holds an office listed in the first schedule to this act at the commencement of this act, unless he elects that those provisions shall apply to him,

Then it goes on with provisions not relevant to the point I am making.

In the discussion in the House of Commons and the House of Lords with regard to the retroactive effect it seemed to be taken for granted on all sides unanimously that it was not proper to interfere with the existing appointments. No one disagreed with that proposition.

The Solicitor General, Sir Jocelyn Simon, said:

> There has been a long established principle that in amending legislation one should respect the legitimate expectations of people who are at present in office when there is a change in the conditions of service.

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Kilmuir said in the House of Lords, speaking of the effect of that bill:

> It is entirely for him to decide whether he wishes to take advantage of the new scheme. Otherwise the retiring age may not be applied to existing judges. I am sure Your Lordships will agree with that principle. They have taken office on the basis of no retiring age, and unless they want to come into the scheme, it should not apply to them.

There are some who may fear that if the retirement of existing judges was on an elective basis, it would keep on the bench for many years judges who should retire. If the pension provision is fair, and I think it is, on the whole, fair, I think many judges, and probably the majority of judges, will elect to accept the pension and to retire. As to those who might not so elect, we now have power to deal with them if they are not able to perform their duties. It is true that power has not been used—

Hon. Mr. Euler: How would you do it?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: There is a provision in the act for appointment of a commission to inquire into the ability of a judge to perform his duties.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would that not be a very embarrassing procedure?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: It may have been in the past, but this situation changes the whole picture. In the first place we will now have a general retiring age of 75, which is applicable to all new appointments. In the second place, you will find that most judges, in my opinion, would retire at 75, so that the onus would bear very heavily on any judge who continued after 75 and whose ability to perform his duties was questionable.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But in case a judge would not retire when it was evident to everyone that he should retire, what action could be taken to force him to retire? I am thinking of the mechanics of the situation.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: There is a provision in the Judges Act for appointment of a commission to inquire into the status of a judge. I am speaking now subject to my recollection and subject to correction, but I believe the procedure is that if the commission finds he is not able to carry on, his salary is reduced to $1. It may be that someone else can answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But any impeachment of him would have to be passed by the House of Commons and the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And all those proceedings would be very embarrassing.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Honourable senators, if I may add at this point, the bill to amend the Judges Act has in it a section which makes it very simple for the minister to decide that a judge is no longer competent to fulfil his duties, because it would be against the public interest to retain him in office, or something like that, and he could be retired on a pension.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But it would still be embarrassing.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If he refused and insisted on continuing to sit, what then?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I think that whatever the situation may have been in the past it has now been changed because of the adoption of the general rule, and, as I say, because the onus would bear very heavily on any judge who was not able to continue to perform his duties but who thought that he should not retire.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, as I said at the outset, there is a matter of principle at stake. Just as the precedent in 1927 has been used to justify this much undue action in 1960, so will the precedent that we establish, if we establish it now, of altering the terms under which these appointments were made, be used to justify almost any interference with existing rights or contracts in the future.

The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) read you the judges' patent of office. Do not let us tear it up as if it were, to use the infamous words used when Germany violated its treaty with Belgium, "only a scrap of paper". There is more than a piece of paper involved in this. There is a principle at stake. What I think we should do is to amend the resolution to give the right of election to existing judges. If we do this we shall keep faith with those who now hold their appointments and in addition shall keep faith with ourselves.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this has been a hot afternoon and I want to continue the debate, but may I ask you all to be good enough to consider it to be six o'clock. Perhaps I might add that I understand there are several honourable senators who expect to be here this evening to continue the discussion but who might be prevented from doing so if we did not rise now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, if it is agreeable I would suggest that the Senate instead of reassembling at 7.30 p.m., according to the rule, meet at 8 o'clock.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: If I may say so, I did think there was a ruling to be made and I expected that would be done this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: At 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Personally I would like to have it before 8 o'clock.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am prepared to make a ruling at this time.

Honourable senators, on Thursday last, July 7, the debate was resumed on the main resolution introduced by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for a humble Address to be presented to Her Majesty the Queen, in terms which I understand are familiar to honourable senators. During the course of that debate the Honourable Senator Farris moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bouffard, as follows:

> Be it resolved that the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada that pursuant to its powers the following questions be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada at its next sitting.
>
> One: Has the Parliament of Canada jurisdiction to determine the age limit of county and district court judges?
>
> Two: Has the Parliament of Canada under the provisions of class 1 of section 91 of the British North America Act the power to amend the Constitution to give to the Parliament of Canada the jurisdiction to repeal, amend or modify section 99 of the British North America Act to give to the Parliament of Canada power to determine the age at which judges of the superior courts presently existing or hereafter appointed shall retire?
>
> Be it further resolved that pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now under consideration.

Honourable senators, I would emphasize the words "pending action by the Government".

At that time I indicated very clearly that my first impression was that the motion was not a proper or valid amending motion.

Further study of the motion has reaffirmed that opinion, and I think the following reasons will convince honourable senators that my first impression—and I gather it was your impression too—was the right one. This is a matter of considerable importance, and I have considered it very carefully.

The motion now under consideration is, in the apt words of Sir John Bourinot, of a dilatory character in that it provides in its final paragraph that "pending action by the Government on the foregoing suggestions", namely, to submit certain questions to the Supreme Court of Canada, no further action be taken by the Senate on the motion now being considered by the Senate.

Honourable senators, the governing provision in the Rules of the Senate of Canada is Rule 44, which reads as follows:

> When a question is under debate, no motion is received, unless to amend it; to commit it; to postpone it to a certain day; for the previous question; for reading the Orders of the Day, or for the adjournment of the Senate.

That is the framework or the scope of an amendment in the Senate.

I have examined the motion in the light of the provision in question, to determine whether or not it falls within the list of permissible motions in the present circumstances. In the first place, as I indicated the other day, I do not consider that this is by any stretch of the imagination a motion to amend the main resolution, namely, to alter its substance, to change or otherwise modify its wording in any way, but that, rather, it is clearly a dilatory motion—that is, one which is designed to delay the passage of the main resolution. As I see it, the only basis upon which this motion would be acceptable is on the ground that it is a postponing motion. However, the Rules of the Senate are clear and concise, and to the effect that the only motion of this character which is permissible is one which postpones consideration "to a certain day".

Honourable senators will recall that the so-called motion to amend was for the purpose of putting off or postponing the debate until, first, the Government had decided to follow the suggestion made and, secondly, that the Supreme Court of Canada had rendered its decision on the reference which the Government may decide to make. Therefore, there was no postponment of a motion "to a certain day."

The contingencies provided for in the so-called amending motion under consideration are, as I see it, such as to preclude any possibility of certainty as to the day to which consideration of the main resolution would be postponed.

Some honourable senators have mentioned the so-called "six months' hoist", and on reflection and further study I agree that in respect of bills it is an acceptable amendment. On the other hand, I must remind honourable senators that the "six months' hoist", as its colloquial name implies, would defer consideration of any bill under consideration to a day "six months hence". It is true that the practical effect of the so-called "six months' hoist", if carried, is to kill the bill. Therefore, in my opinion any similar proposition would likewise have the effect of killing the resolution moved by the honourable Leader of the Government, the Honourable Senator Aseltine.

In view of what I have said, I feel impelled to rule the amendment out of order, and I so rule.

I now call it 6 o'clock. The Senate will rise now, to resume at 8 o'clock this evening.

At 8 p.m., the sitting was resumed.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 511 to 514.

He said: Honourable senators, these are the reports of the committee which sat this morning and which were not ready for presentation at the beginning of the sitting this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, with leave I move that these reports be adopted now. They are the final reports. There is nothing very special in them. One has to do with withdrawal of a petition, and the others deal with cases, two of which were tried this morning.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, if these reports are the last ones to be considered I have just one observation to make about the divorce bills. In the House of Commons a suggestion has been made, and a motion has been sponsored, to refer these bills to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is elementary that the Parliament of Canada has been empowered by the Constitution to have jurisdiction over marriage and divorce. It is there in black and white in the Constitution. It is surprising that some members of Parliament have made that move, but, on the other hand, what would be interesting and useful and practical for the country, and more satisfactory for the litigants—I mean those who apply for a divorce—would be a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the validity of the divorces granted by the provincial courts in Canada. That is a question which deserves the utmost consideration. There is no possible doubt about the legality of the divorces that are granted by an act of Parliament, but if the provincial divorce courts in Canada have not been legally constituted the result would be that all divorce applications would come to Parliament, all 8,000 of them, and it would be necessary to double the number of senators just to deal with them.

It seems to me strange that in this country everybody takes everything for granted because it has been done in a certain way—the wrong way—for a long time. We follow each other on the Indian trail—the judges, the lawyers, the litigants, everybody—with no imagination, and everybody is afraid to go to the core of the evil. It is just as bad as when a doctor who has a diagnosis to make opens the body of his patient and sees he has nothing to do. He puts in new sutures and tells the patient: "You are all right; you are well. You can eat what you want."

This is the position of the law in the matter of divorce in Canada, and I challenge anyone to say the contrary. The judges know that, but they are not called upon to give their opinion. Many lawyers are afraid to talk to the judges about it, and everything remains as it is. This is the position. I am not going to make a long speech about it tonight. If I were I would have many things to say, but as these are the last divorce bills that will come before us I wanted, before the end of the session, to draw the attention of the Senate and the Parliament of Canada and the country to the seriousness of this situation.

There is a way to correct the situation, and it is by the transfer of the jurisdiction in the matter of family rights to the provinces. It is a point that has been raised. The matter has not been solved, but there has been progress because it is now possible to make this speech and have it listened to, and that would not have been possible five years ago. That is progress. How long it will take to remedy the situation I cannot tell, because I am not a prophet and I do not pose as such. This is a very serious problem and it is of the utmost importance that it should be considered by the Government of this country and by each provincial Government. The matter has been brought to their attention, and I hope that they will receive the suggestions with an open mind.

Reports adopted.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from this afternoon the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest and, indeed, I might almost say of fascination to the debate that has been carried on so far in this house on this resolution with respect to judges. Last week we had a very interesting address, with which, I might say, I thoroughly agreed, from my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), and we had in addition a most lucid and thoughtful speech by the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall). In addition there was a really outstanding performance by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris). Today we have had clear and cogent addresses from the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard), and we have had a really outstanding masterpiece from the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I use the word masterpiece designedly, honourable senators. I knew that my honourable friend was a painter in water colours but I did not know that he could paint such an eminently attractive verbal picture of a period relating to the early history of our country as he did this afternoon. My honourable friend referred to his well-known uncle, the Right Honourable Mr. Roebuck, who for a great number of years in the middle of the last century sat in the British House of Commons as member for Sheffield, I think it was. I just want to add in a personal way one little note. During the first part of his political career the Right Honourable Mr. Roebuck sat in the British House of Commons with my grandfather, and during the later part of his political career he sat in the British House of Commons with my father.

Honourable senators, the discussion on the resolution now before us divides itself rather naturally into three distinct parts, and each of those parts has been discussed by most of the speakers who have taken part in this debate. The three parts that are referred to are the following: first of all, as to the necessity or the wisdom of including county court judges in the resolution; the second and the much broader question, which was discussed by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin), as to whether this resolution is necessary at all; and the third, as to whether it is right or just to require a superior court judge now on the bench to retire at the age of 75—that is the retroactivity question, as some honourable senators have termed it.

I propose to discuss each of these three topics, the first two of them quite shortly, while to the third I expect to devote a larger amount of time.

With regard to the first of these questions—Is it necessary or is it wise to include county court judges in this resolution?—We are told by the Minister of Justice that doubts have arisen as to the powers of the Parliament of Canada to require a retiring age for county court judges. I do not need to repeat to the house the argument on this subject that was advanced by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris). He mentioned sections 96 and 99 of the British North America Act in that connection and he showed quite conclusively, I think, that at any rate by implication the power of this Parliament to deal with the term of office of county court judges cannot be contested.

In point of fact our Parliament has dealt with these county court judges and has provided a mandatory retirement age for them for the last 57 years. I took the trouble to look up the first occasion upon which this Parliament provided a mandatory retirement age for these judges. It was in the act 3 Edward VII, chapter 29, which was assented to on October 24, 1903. Section 2 of that act begins as follows:

> Every county court judge who has attained the age of 80 years shall be compulsorily retired . . .

Incidentally, honourable senators, I would like to point out that that legislation of 1903 applied to all county court judges, whether those on the bench at that time or those to be appointed in the future. For 57 years this Parliament has proceeded on the basis that it had the authority to do that. Now the Minister of Justice tells us that doubts have arisen as to the right of this Parliament so to provide. If I were the Minister of Justice and had that question been brought before me I would have dealt with it in a very different way from the way in which the present Minister of Justice has dealt with it. In the first place, if any of my advisers had come to me and suggested that what had been considered to be legal for over 50 years was now doubtfully legal I would have said that unless there was a very serious and grave doubt about the matter it would be much better to leave it alone and let sleeping dogs lie. I would have considered that if I were to raise this question on the possible unconstitutionality of this matter after over 50 years, I would be casting a reflection not only upon Parliament but upon all my predecessors in the office of Minister of Justice, many of whom were very distinguished men.

If in spite of that I had been reasonably satisfied there was a very serious doubt as to the constitutionality of what had been going on for 57 years, then I would have said: "Well, here is an instrument right at hand by which I can have this doubt solved. Here is the Supreme Court of Canada, a body clothed with the power to determine constitutional questions that are referred to it by Government. I will ask the Supreme Court of Canada whether what has been done in the past is constitutional." And only if its reply were unfavourable would I think for a moment of going to the Parliament of Westminster.

The present Minister of Justice has not followed that policy. He tells us that there is a doubt about the constitutionality of this provision. He does not tell us how serious that doubt is or who has raised the doubt, but what he has done is this: he has flouted our Supreme Court and he has gone immediately grovelling to the Parliament at Westminster to cure his troubles. That is an attitude of colonial dependency and of a national inferiority complex which I had hoped that we in this country had outlived. I think it is most deplorable, and if in the course of this debate any honourable senator moves an amendment to the resolution to strike out any reference to the county court judges, I shall be very happy indeed to vote for such an amendment.

Dealing with the broad question as to whether this resolution is necessary at all, or whether in fact the act of 1949 amending the British North America Act gives this Parliament the power to do what we are seeking to do without reference to the provinces and without reference to the Parliament at Westminster, I was much impressed with the argument of the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and with the argument of the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin). The 1949 amendment to the British North America Act gives this Parliament the power to amend our Constitution in any way not directly connected with the exclusive powers of the provinces under section 92 of the act. What we are seeking to amend here is section 99 of the act. So that at first sight it would seem that we are in no way interfering with the rights of the provinces, and that this Parliament has the right to amend our Constitution in that respect regardless of any other authority whatsoever. I must confess, however, that there is a little more doubt in my mind on this question than there is on the question of the county court judges, because though it is true that we are only seeking to amend section 99 of the British North America Act, nevertheless, paragraph 14 of section 92 of the act, dealing with the exclusive powers of the provinces, does give the right to the provinces to govern,

> The Administration of Justice in the province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts . . .

It might be argued with some cogency that the time of retirement of judges of superior courts of the provinces has some relation to the administration of justice in the province, and that therefore any proposal to change the time of their retirement is one which in some degree falls within that paragraph of section 92 and requires the approval of the provinces.

I think that this Government should have followed the advice of the Canadian Bar Association, given at its meeting in Vancouver last September, and have sought the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada as to the precise extent of the powers of this Parliament in that connection. However, the Government has taken the opposite view. It has chosen to assume that there is some doubt as to the rights of the provinces, and it has gone ahead on the basis of obtaining the consent of all the provinces and is seeking to get an amendment to the British North America Act from the Parliament at Westminster.

I do not altogether blame the Government for doing that. Of the two courses that were open to it, I think it probably took the wrong course; but with this Government that does not surprise me. In any event, I suppose from its point of view there was some advantage in taking the course it has taken, some political advantage, in that it can now pose as the defender of the rights of the provinces. Well, I am willing to grant it whatever advantage it may think it has achieved by that. But as regards the amendment that was moved by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), which His Honour declared to be out of order, seeking to refer this whole matter to the Supreme Court for its consideration, had that amendment been declared to be in order, and had I been called to vote upon it, I should have felt impelled to vote against it, because in my view this question of the retirement of our superior court judges at the age of 75 years is quite an urgent one; it is one that, in my opinion, needs to be dealt with, and needs to be dealt with without delay, and I would have been opposed to the further delay that would have been involved in referring the whole matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, honourable senators, I come to the third part of this discussion, that part of the resolution now before us which extends the obligation to retire at the age of 75 years to superior court judges who are now on the bench, sometimes referred to as the retroactive feature of this proposal. Here I must frankly say that I disagree with the views that have been expressed on this subject by the honourable senators from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) and Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard). And honourable senators will give me the credit for having a good deal of courage in getting up openly and saying that I disagree with three such solid experts as those.

Let me deal first with this question of contract. The honourable senator from Vancouver South devoted the major part of his speech to this subject. He argued with great force and eloquence that to make these requirements applicable to existing judges would be a violation by the Crown of a solemn contract with these judges, a contract by the terms of which they were appointed "during good behaviour", that is, for life. The whole root and basis of his argument was that of a contract, a contract by which the Crown agreed to appoint these judges for life.

In support of his argument, the honourable senator read the form of commission from the Crown appointing one of the judges of one of our provincial superior courts. He made a great point of that document. He read the whole text of the commission. He told us who signed it; he told us who sealed it. At the conclusion of his talk on that subject, we had a very vivid idea of what that document was. Upon listening to the wording of that commission, and reflecting upon it afterwards, one thing was, to my mind, at least, perfectly clear. Whatever that document is, it is not a contract. A contract is signed by both parties to it. This document is not so signed. A contract is made for a consideration which is expressed in the instrument. This document makes no mention of consideration. In fact, the commission appointing a judge, which was read to us last week, bears a rather striking resemblance to another document that was read to this house on the same day last week by the Clerk at the Table. I refer to the commission appointing our new colleague from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald) a member of this Senate.

Both of these documents partake of the same nature. In my view neither of them is a contract. In their essence both of them are unilateral actions of the Sovereign in the exercise of the royal prerogative appointing the individuals designated therein to the respective public offices therein described. Her Majesty, having exercised her royal prerogative by appointing a named individual as one of Her Majesty's superior court judges, the Parliament of Canada then steps into the picture. It is for the Parliament of Canada to see that the individual so appointed shall receive a salary commensurate with the dignity and importance of his position. This, Parliament has done in the Judges Act. Here again there is no question of contract. The judge receives the salary that the act provides for him. What the amount of that salary shall be and for how long he shall continue to receive it are questions which involve factors both of equity and of public policy. In determining these questions Parliament is supreme.

Let us see for a moment how Parliament has dealt with this question of the remuneration of judges of the superior courts during the last few years. By the Judges Act of 1946 the salary of these judges was fixed at $12,000 per annum. By an amending act of 1951 this salary was raised to $14,400 per annum. By a further amending act of 1955 this salary was further raised to $16,900 per annum.

At the present session we are being asked by a further act amending the Judges Act to improve the position of these judges further, not, indeed, by increasing their salary but by an increase of their pension on retirement from two-thirds of the salary which they received prior to the 1955 amendment to two-thirds of the increased salary they are receiving when they retire, with a corresponding increase to their wives who may survive them. This increase in pensions will apply to every present judge who will be required to retire at 75 years under the resolution now before us, regardless of the length of time which he has served on the bench.

Here again, there is no question of contract. Parliament has not contracted with these judges to increase their salaries or their pensions. Indeed, if you claim there is a contract between Her Majesty and these judges, then you would be forced to admit that the judge who was appointed before 1950 had agreed, by that contract, to serve as a judge for the rest of his life at a salary of $12,000 a year, in which case Her Majesty would be perfectly justified in holding him to his contract and refusing him any increase whatever.

I have rather laboured this matter of contract, honourable senators, because the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) founded his whole case upon it. With much deference, I take the view that that foundation is radically defective. I have been a good deal strengthened in that view by the case which the honourable senator from Vancouver South himself cited in the course of his argument, the case of Reilly v. the King. That case was considered by three courts, the Exchequer Court, the Supreme Court of Canada and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I have read with care the decision of each of those tribunals.

Honourable senators remember what the Reilly case was about. Mr. Reilly was a gentleman who, in the 1920's, was appointed a member of a body called the Federal Appeal Board which was constituted under legislation in existence at that time. In the year 1928 he was reappointed as a member of that board for a period of five years. In 1930 Parliament repealed the legislation under which that board had been constituted, the board ceased to exist, and Mr. Reilly found himself out of a job. He thereupon sued the Crown on the basis that he had a contract with the Crown to serve for five years, that that contract had been broken by the Crown not be expatriated and subjected by an inmaining three years of his salary. That case was heard in the first instance in the Exchequer Court of Canada by Mr. Justice Maclean. Many honourable senators will remember the honourable Mr. Justice Maclean. He was a most distinguished judge who, if I remember rightly, at the end of his life was the President of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. Justice Maclean considered the question of the relationship between the Crown and a man whom it appoints to public office, and this is what he said:

> The settled principle of law is that public office is a distinctive thing and is not contractual in its nature. Public offices are either judicial or ministerial. Judicial offices are now generally held during good behaviour, while ministerial offices are determinable at pleasure . . . American law is to the same effect. Mechem

—he is an American authority—> on Public Offices and Officers, p. 4, says:

> A public office is never conferred by contract, but finds its source and limitations in some act or expression of the governmental power.

Then coming back to the particular case of Mr. Reilly, Mr. Justice Maclean said this:

> The fact that here the appointment purports to be for a term of five years does not make it any more a contract than one made to continue during good behaviour.

Well, having lost the case in the Exchequer Court Mr. Reilly appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court in its judgment, which is to be found in the 1932 volume of the Supreme Court Reports, reached substantially the same conclusion as Mr. Justice Maclean. Mr. Justice Orde rendered the judgment, and in his judgment he considered too the nature of the relationship between the Crown and a man whom it appoints to public office, and asked himself the question: Does that constitute a contract? This is what he said:

> I find it difficult to see in what way the appointment of the appellant to be a member of the Federal Appeal Board under the Pension Act as it then stood differed from many other appointments to offices under the Crown. It was urged during the argument that the earlier negotiations or communications between the minister and the appellant > which culminated in the order in council authorizing the appointment, constituted, by way of offer and acceptance, a contract binding upon the Crown. But the circumstances leading up to the appointment did not differ materially from those which must accompany most appointments to public offices, and I cannot see how they distinguished this appointment from any other.

—that is Reilly—

>
> There is, of course, in every appointment to public office a contractual element in that the Crown, in effect, promises to pay the salary or other emolument fixed by law for services performed. But this in no respect affects the Crown's prerogative right, unless restricted by statute, to dismiss the servant at any time without liability for damages or further compensation.

Having lost the second time before the Supreme Court, Mr. Reilly then went to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the judgment of that tribunal on his case is to be found in the 1934 volume of the Appeal Cases.

In giving its judgment on his case, the Privy Council adopted a practice which it was rather fond of adopting when it felt disposed to do so—it dodged the issue. Lord Atkin, who rendered the decision of the Privy Council, said that he did not feel called upon to comment upon the statement of law made by Mr. Justice Maclean, and he referred to—here I use his own words—"this contract, if it is a contract". He said that there were some contractual elements about it, and then he went on to decide the case on other grounds altogether. A more delicate example of judicial sidestepping has seldom come my way, honourable senators. It really reinforced the satisfaction which I have felt for some years, that legal matters arising in this country are no longer subject to the jurisdiction of that particular tribunal. I suggest that in view of the nebulous, the doubtful, and the evasive position of the Privy Council, we are thrown back upon the very clear statement of law set out by Mr. Justice Maclean and agreed to by our Supreme Court.

Founding myself on those statements, I affirm that the appointment and term of office and remuneration of judges is basically not a matter of contract at all. Initially, as I said, it is a matter of exercise of the royal prerogative, and thereafter it is one of equity and public policy, which is the responsibility of this Parliament. So I say, honourable senators, that this question must be decided not on the basis of contract, but on the basis of equity and of public policy.

Now, it goes without saying that this Parliament must act fairly toward the men who have accepted and now hold the high and important office of a superior court judge. The question we have to ask ourselves—and I am not trying to evade it in any way, shape or form—is this: Is it fair to these men who now hold Her Majesty's commission "during good behaviour", to change that condition and to require them to retire at the age of 75 years?

To answer that question I think we should take a look at the man who accepts a superior court judgeship, and consider what is his position, and what are his ambitions, and what is his state of mind at that time.

The vast majority of our judges are appointed at ages ranging from 45 to 65 years. The case which the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) mentioned this afternoon of a man being appointed at 68 years is, I think he will agree, very much out of the ordinary. I can cite no statistics in support, but as an informed guess I would suggest that the average age of appointment is 55 years or perhaps a little younger. What are the considerations that are present in the mind of such a man when he accepts an appointment as a superior court judge?

On the one hand, he will reflect that he is giving up the practice of his profession, and this will usually entail a sacrifice of income, and sometimes a very considerable sacrifice indeed. On the other hand, there are three favourable factors which will have influenced him in reaching his decision. In the first place, he will have achieved economic security. He knows that as long as he remains a judge he will receive an adequate, if not a generous, salary. He knows that when he retires from the bench he will receive a pension reasonably proportionate to what his salary was, for as long as he lives. He knows that if he is married, and if his wife survives him, she will receive a pension for the rest of her life. In other words, he will have achieved reasonable security for himself and his family.

In the second place, he knows that he will be holding a position of dignity, of honour and of esteem in the eyes of his fellowmen.

And in the third place, he will be accepting the responsibility and the challenge of public service to his country in a position that is second to none in its importance to our democratic way of life, and to the rule of law on which that way of life has its foundation.

Honourable senators, perhaps I may be allowed to digress here for a moment. I have mentioned these two considerations in the minds of my hypothetical judge: the esteem of his fellowmen and the opportunity of public service. Does that not show how very wrongminded are those people who tell us that in all actions of human life mankind is actuated solely by economic motives? That, I think, is one of the fundamental fallacies of the Marxist philosophy.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators will themselves know of instances of men from every walk of life who have been actuated by conditions and considerations far removed from the consideration of money or economic advantage, by motives that are sometimes of the very highest character. After all, honourable senators, does it not come back to this old and very wonderful statement that we were taught from our Bible when we were very young, that man does not live by bread alone?

And now to come back to my hypothetical judge. I suggest, honourable senators, that one of the last considerations that is present in that man's mind, if indeed it is present at all, is what is going to happen to him, 10, 20 or 30 years hence when he reaches the age of 75 years, and that for a very good reason. Human life is uncertain, and no man of middle age can tell whether he will reach the age of 75 years, or, if he does, what his physical or mental condition is likely to be at that time.

Let me put the idea I am trying to express in another way. It is this: I do not believe that there is a single judge now on the bench of any of our superior courts who, in the face of the legislation we are considering, could go to the representatives of the sovereign and say to them: "Had I known that you were going to change the conditions of my appointment and make me retire from the bench at 75 I would not have accepted the appointment."

I will go further than that, honourable senators. Let us suppose that one of these judges on accepting his appointment did have in mind what his position was going to be when he reached the age of 75 years, and let us suppose—and it is a logical supposition to make—that he paid particular attention to those words in his commission which proclaim that he is appointed "during good behaviour". As a judge he would clearly be familiar with the British North America Act. He would realize that the words "during good behaviour" which appear in his commission were copied from section 99 of the act, which reads as follows:

> The judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour—

He would reflect that that act, like all other acts, is subject to amendment from time to time as public policy dictates, that it has in fact been amended many times already, and that it is sure to be amended again. Furthermore, that man would know that the judges of the Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court and of the county and district courts are now required to retire at the age of 75 years. He would also know that the desirability of amending this very section 99 of the British North America Act to make the same rule applicable to judges of the superior courts has been under active discussion for years. And he would probably be familiar with the resolutions on that subject passed from time to time by the Canadian Bar Association and other similar bodies. Indeed, honourable senators, if this man inquired more deeply into the matter he would realize not only that section 99 would likely be changed during his tenure of office but that the change would affect himself personally, retroactive though it might be, because he would realize that our Parliament has already twice done precisely that thing, first of all in 1903 in connection with the county court judges, and again in 1927 in connection with the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

So, I say, honourable senators, that if any of the present judges of our superior courts gave any consideration at all to this matter at the time of their appointment they would have immediately and inevitably realized that regardless of the terms of their appointment it was quite possible, and even likely, that the future development of public policy might require them to retire from the bench when they reached the age of 75 years. If you like to put it this way, they would realize that that was an occupational hazard of their new position which they accepted when they accepted appointment to the bench.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that there is nothing inequitable in our now requiring our present superior court judges, as well as those who will be appointed in the future, to retire from the bench when they reach the age of 75 years, and, indeed, from the point of view of public policy it is obviously desirable that they should all be treated alike. If you were to exempt our present judges from the rule and make it applicable only to judges appointed in the future, what would be the result? For the next 25 or 30 years you would have on the superior court bench of each province two classes of judges, those who are compelled to retire at the age of 75, and those who are not. You will agree, I am sure, that that would be a most undesirable state of affairs, and one which might well lead to a good deal of friction and ill-feeling.

It is interesting to speculate as to the view which is taken of this matter by the men most directly affected, namely, the present judges of our superior courts. Do they feel that they are being made the victims of what the honourable senator from Vancouver South termed a deliberate breach of a contractual obligation on the part of the Government of Canada? Here, of course, I can only speak for my own province of Quebec. As honourable senators are aware, I am for this year the Bâtonnier Général of the province. I would have thought it likely that if any of our judges felt he was being victimized in this way he would have communicated with me in my dual capacity as Bâtonnier Général and as a member of the Parliament of Canada which is called upon to deal with this resolution. I can only say I have received no such representations.

A few weeks ago I had an opportunity of meeting—in a social way, it is true—all the judges of the Superior Court of the district of Montreal. Had any of them actively felt they were being wronged in this way I would have supposed they would have told me so. None of them said a word to me about the matter. Indeed, two or three members of our bench with whom I have discussed this matter have taken an entirely different view. They have expressed their approval of the principle that they should retire at the age of 75 years, and the only question they have raised, and very naturally raised, is as to the amount of their pension or retiring allowance.

That, of course, is a very important question for them, and it is an important question for this Parliament from the point of view of public policy. But I point out to the house that that is not the matter we are discussing under the terms of the present resolution. This resolution has nothing to do with pensions or retiring allowances. All that we are discussing at the moment is the propriety or otherwise of making the retirement age of 75 applicable to judges now holding office. The question of the retiring allowance which these judges should receive will come up only when we discuss the bill to amend the Judges Act. That is also on our Order Paper.

As I have said before, this Parliament must act fairly to our judges, and we must be particularly careful to see that our present judges who were originally appointed "during good behaviour", but who will now be required to retire at 75 years of age, are fairly, and even generously, treated in the matter of their retirement allowances.

I have spoken about our Quebec judges. Perhaps honourable senators will be interested in knowing whether the bar of the province of Quebec has shown any signs of supporting the position taken by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin). The answer is, shortly, no. The bar of my province acts through the General Council of the bar which contains representatives elected by the lawyers of every judicial district in the province, and which meets four times a year to discuss matters of general interest to the profession. The resolution that we are now discussing was tabled in both houses of this Parliament in January. Since that time the General Council of the bar has met twice, once in April and once in June. I was present throughout both meetings and not a word was said about the matter at either of them.

As the Senate has been told, the Government has obtained the approval of the Legislature of Quebec to the proposals embodied in this resolution. That approval is contained in two resolutions, both of which are to be found in the appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of June 16. One resolution was passed by the Legislative Assembly, the Lower House, and the other by the Legislative Council, the Upper House, and both were unanimous.

It should be noted that both these resolutions were passed after the resolution which we are now discussing, which includes the retroactivity feature, had been tabled in this Parliament. So the members of the Legislature must have known what was involved. All I can say, therefore, is that if this retroactivity feature is, as the honourable senator from Vancouver South has claimed, a deliberate breach of a contractual obligation on the part of the Government of Canada, that fact appears to have escaped the notice of the judges who have expressed their views to me. It has escaped the notice of the General Council of the bar of the province of Quebec, and it has escaped the notice of both houses of the Legislature of that province.

In the legislation passed by this Parliament in 1903 we made a retirement age of 80 years—subsequently changed to 75 years —applicable to all county court judges, both those holding office at that time and those to be appointed in the future.

In 1927 this Parliament passed similar legislation with respect to the judges of our Supreme Court. By the resolution now before us all that we are doing is to ask the British Parliament by an appropriate amendment to the British North America Act to do precisely the same thing with regard to the judges of our superior courts.

I yield to no man in my respect for the sanctity of written contracts but, I repeat, no question of contract is involved here. What is involved are equity and public policy. As to public policy, I agree with the Canadian Bar Association that the administration of justice in this country will be better served if our superior court judges are required to retire at the age of 75, like their colleagues of the Supreme Court, the Exchequer Court and the county courts. As to equity, for the reasons that I have tried, however inadequately, to express this evening, I believe that this proposal satisfies the equities of the situation. I shall, therefore, vote in favour of this part of the resolution and I shall do so with a clear conscience.

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, before speaking on this resolution I should like to congratulate Senator J. M. MacDonald, Q.C., on his appointment to the Senate as the honourable senator from Cape Breton. Senator MacDonald is a well-known Nova Scotia counsel learned in the law and he has practised with real distinction at the town of North Sydney. I am quite sure that he will add considerably to the debates of this honourable body and will make a really worth-while contribution to our deliberations. I know I speak for everyone here in expressing the earnest hope that the honourable senator from Cape Breton, the newest appointee to this house, will live for many years to enjoy and assist in the work of this honourable body.

I have a few further remarks that I should like to make before speaking on this resolution, and I should like to address them to the honourable gentleman from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). I sat and listened this evening to his speech with the keenest of interest and with rapt attention. I have been a member of the Senate since October 14, 1957, and I do not believe I have ever heard a speech in this chamber to equal that given by the honourable senator from Inkerman tonight. It was a well-reasoned and logical speech and I can only say I feel sorry for those present who now have to listen to me speak in my hesitant fashion.

Honourable senators, under the proposed amendment to the British North America Act it is hoped to have compulsory retirement for judges of the superior or supreme courts at the age of 75, and to confirm the retirement of district and county court judges at the same age. To do this it is deemed that a constitutional amendment is necessary, and for that reason it is proposed that an address be presented to the Parliament of Westminster.

There are three relevant sections of the British North America Act as originally passed and as amended between the years 1867 and 1952 which relate to this matter. Section 99 provides that judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour and can be removed by the Governor General on an address of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

Section 92(14) gives to the provincial Legislatures exclusive powers concerning the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the provincial courts, both with respect to civil and criminal jurisdiction and including procedure in civil matters in these courts.

Finally, section 91(1) gives to the Parliament of Canada the right from time to time to amend the Constitution of Canada in so far as such amendment affects matters which come exclusively under the federal jurisdiction. This section does not give to the Parliament of Canada the Legislative authority to amend its Constitution with respect to any matter which concerns the rights of the provinces or with respect to matters affecting both the rights of the federal Parliament and the Legislatures of the provinces.

It is clear that the judges of the superior courts or the supreme courts having been given a tenure of office during good behaviour, the Parliament of Canada could not legislate in this matter without first amending the British North America Act. The view presently held by many is to the effect that Parliament on its own cannot amend section 99. Thus the federal Government's proposal at the dominion-provincial conference held in 1935 was that if an amendment procedure were agreed upon section 99 would be one which would require the concurrence of the Parliament of Canada, and the Legislatures of two-thirds of the provinces having 55 per cent or more of the population of Canada. The report of the subcommittee appointed following that conference reached the same conclusion in 1936.

At the constitutional conference, which was held during September of 1950, the view of the federal Government was that section 99 of the British North America Act was partly a provision which concerned fundamental rights which required unanimous agreement before it could be amended and partly one which concerned Parliament and one or more but not all of the provincial Legislatures. I might state that this view was shared by the Governments of the provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia and Newfoundland. The Government of Quebec, however, considered that this was a provision which concerned Parliament and one or more but not necessarily all of the provincial Legislatures, but did not refer to it as one which concerned fundamental rights. The Government of Manitoba considered this section as a provision which concerned Parliament and all the provincial Legislatures. I might state that the Government of the province of Alberta took the same view. Finally, the province of Prince Edward Island considered that this was a provision which concerned the provincial Legislatures only. Honourable senators will readily see that it was impossible to secure unanimous agreement on section 99 of the British North America Act at the 1950 conference.

The arguments in support of the view that the Parliament of Canada would not have authority to amend section 99 unilaterally seemed to be the following:

(a) The words "Constitution of Canada" as found in section 91(1) must be construed in the same way as the words "Constitution of the Province", as found in section 92(1). This would mean, in effect, that the federal Government, as well as the provincial Government, would have authority to amend its own internal machinery. However, it would not be given authority to amend the British North America Act in a way which would somehow affect the division of powers between the provincial and federal Governments or in a way which would touch somehow on a matter in which the other authority, namely, the provincial Government, would have some interest. This restricted conception or meaning of the words "Constitution of Canada" was the one which was, in effect, adopted by the Liberal Government, and by the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent himself, when the matter was discussed in the House of Commons during the year 1949.

(b) Further, section 99 would be one which would deal indirectly with the administration of justice, which is a matter coming under provincial jurisdiction. Now, a judge holds office during good behaviour, and therefore if you propose to remove him at the age of 75, this is a matter which has some implications with respect to the administration of justice and is a matter with which the provinces become concerned or have an interest in. It would therefore appear that an amendment which so closely affects the provincial courts should not be initiated except with the consent of all the provinces. I might point out that this was the view taken by Mr. St. Laurent when he was Minister of Justice, in 1946. I believe the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) quoted from Hansard of the other place, and I am asking permission of this honourable body to be allowed to give a quotation from the same source. If, however, honourable senators do not wish to hear it, I will skip over it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In what year was this?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am referring to the House of Commons Hansard for June 21, 1946.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This discussion took place during the debate on Mr. St. Laurent's estimates, when he said, as appears at page 2711:

—I will deal with the two basic questions which the honourable gentleman put to me. One was this: Is it still the opinion of the Minister of Justice that an amendment to the British North America Act, which would provide power to retire judges at a stated age would require the consent of the provincial legislatures? To that my answer is, that notwithstanding the vote of last night, I persist in that view. I attempted to make it clear in that debate that I considered there had been allocation of jurisdiction and that this Parliament had no right to deal with matters which had been allocated to the provincial Legislatures, and that when there was joint responsibility if any change was to be made that would affect such control as the provincial Legislatures and Government have under the Constitution, their consent would have to be obtained.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would it have to be the consent of all the provinces?

Mr. St. Laurent: In my opinion, it would have to be the consent of all the provinces that would be affected thereby. I consider that they have been given jurisdiction, sovereign powers, which they get not from this Parliament but from the imperial Parliament, and it is their jurisdiction: so we cannot take it from them without their consent, any more than if we wanted to take from a Legislature of a state of the American Union some of its powers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Every province would be in that position.

Mr. St. Laurent: Every province would be in that position in my view—

It has been stated that section 99 does concern fundamental rights, and as such should not be amended except by unanimous agreement between provincial authorities and the federal authorities, and then only on an address to the Queen requesting such amendments. As previously stated by me, this was the view taken by the federal Government at the 1950 federal-provincial conference. It was also the view taken by several of the provincial Governments. All of this can be ascertained if honourable senators will make a study of the report of the federal-provincial conference which was held during the year 1950.

In my opinion, and in the opinion of many of the law officers of the Crown, the proper procedure to be followed is not by a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, but rather by directing an address to Her Majesty the Queen praying that the British North America Act be amended.

The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) referred to the matter of the retirement of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Exchequer Court at the age of 75 which was brought about by legislation passed during the year 1927. Subsequently, during the year 1930 legislation was passed whereby all judges who were appointed prior to 1927 would on their retirement receive as a pension their full salary. The honourable senator from Vancouver South stated that as a matter of principle judges who are appointed for life should not be retired at the age of 75. If such is the case, the 1927 legislation and the 1930 legislation should not have been passed. The legislation passed in 1930, as sponsored by the late Right Honourable Mr. Lapointe, did not in any way affect the principle of retiring judges at the age of 75, but only increased their pension, so that the pension would equal their salary at the time of retirement.

I believe that the legislation as passed in 1927 was proper legislation, and that the principle of the retirement of judges at age 75 was clearly established at that time. It was established, I believe, as a good principle, and I can see no reason why this principle cannot be carried forward so that it will apply to all the judges of the provincial supreme and superior courts as well as judges of the Exchequer Court and the Supreme Court of Canada.

I might point out that puisne judges who retired under the 1927 legislation received their salaries as pensions, and this amounted to $12,000 a year, and a retiring chief justice retired on a permanent pension equal to his salary in the amount of $15,000. Under the proposed amendment to the Judges Act all puisne judges will receive a pension of $11,266.67, and all chief justices of provincial courts will receive a pension of $12,333.33. Both of these proposed pensions are, in my opinion, very generous in amount and I do not feel that any judge of a supreme or a superior court who will be compelled to retire at the age of 75 will suffer in a financial way when the new schedule for the proposed pensions goes into effect.

In fact, all judges who were appointed prior to the year 1946 will receive a pension in an amount which exceeds by more than $2,200 the salary which they received at the time of their appointments. Furthermore, under the proposed increases in pensions the chief justices of the various provinces appointed prior to 1946, will receive a pension which exceeds the salary they received at the time of their appointment by an amount in excess of $2,300.

Honourable senators, I understand that this motion has been on the Order Paper of this honourable body and the other place since January 17 of this year. Wide publicity has been given to it and I have never heard directly or indirectly, or even a rumour, of any objection from any judge of the supreme or the superior courts with respect to it. I discussed the matter with five judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario within the past three weeks. None of them complained about having to retire at age 75. Some of them expressed the wish and the hope that the Government would make it optional for them to retire at age 70. It is my opinion that generally judges of the supreme or superior courts have no objections to compulsory retirement at age 75 and, after all, honourable senators, these are the persons who are directly and vitally affected by this motion, and I feel quite sure that official objection would have been made to it if the judges as a body were opposed to it.

With respect to that part of the resolution dealing with the retirement of judges of the county and district courts at the age of 75, as all honourable senators know, county and district court judges do now retire at this age, and the question has been asked why this should be included in this resolution. I can only state that some doubt has been raised as to the validity of this section in the Judges Act which provides for a compulsory retirement of all district and county court judges—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Who raised the doubt?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It has been raised in the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are not raising it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes I am, and I will tell you why in a moment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: When did they raise it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In the Ontario Statutes, from the year 1869 until the year 1955 there have been provisions dealing with the tenure of office of county and district court judges. Originally it was provided by the Legislature of the province of Ontario that these judges should hold office during pleasure. Later it was provided that the judges should hold office during good behaviour, subject to removal by the Lieutenant Governor for inability, incapacity or misbehaviour.

Finally, this provision was repealed—not, however, in 1903, when the dominion Parliament passed legislation compelling county and district court judges to retire at the age of 75, but in the year 1955. So, from 1903 to 1955 we have had two tenures of office for county and district court judges. The dominion legislation says they must retire by age 75.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Eighty.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, in 1903 it became 75.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, 80.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With that confusion they were well retired, were they not?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Did you have these judges retire at 80 or at 75, as fixed later by the Parliament of Canada, or did you let them stay there and hold office during good behaviour, subject to removal by the Lieutenant Governor for inability, incapacity or misbehaviour?

It will therefore be seen that for a considerable period of time there were two concurrent statutes dealing with the same subject-matter. At present, county and district court judges retire under the provisions of the Judges Act at age 75. As I have said, doubt exists as to the validity of this, and in order to clear up all doubt and misunderstanding for all time it has been decided to include this in the address which is being presented to Her Majesty the Queen.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Was there any doubt between 1869 and 1955?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think there was doubt during this period but it may not have been raised.

I realize that this is quite a fine distinction. Nevertheless, it is felt by the Government that in order to remove all doubt and to firmly establish that judges of the county and district courts should retire at age 75 this should be included in the present address.

Now I do not propose to say anything further with respect to this resolution itself. However, I have an amendment which I propose to move, but before moving it I would like to point out that the present Government has no desire to cause any embarrassment to any judge of the supreme or superior courts who has attained the age of 75 and who is now sitting on the bench, by asking him to retire on the first day of September next. It feels that a longer period of time should be given the judges in order for them to retire properly and without embarrassment or complications. I therefore move, seconded by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), that the motion be amended by striking out paragraph No. 3 at the end thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(3) This act shall come into force on the first day of March, 1961.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is the same amendment that was moved in the other house?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, it is exactly the same.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Brunt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Thorvaldson, that the motion be amended by striking out paragraph 3 at the end thereof and substituting therefor the following:

3. This act shall come into force on the first day of March, 1961.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am not opposing the amendment, but I do not think the Government is being quite as magnanimous to the judges as the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has suggested. I think the fact is that if this address is passed by both houses of Parliament, it cannot possibly be approved by the British house by the first day of September 1960, and that is the reason for the extension.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Each of us is entitled to his own opinion.

Amendment agreed to.

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard: Honourable senators, I do not wish to participate at any length in the discussion on this resolution.

I had the pleasure of hearing the speech of the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), and that of the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), who have each expounded the question in an outstanding manner and raised all the points that may lead us to decide whether we should vote for or against the resolution.

As has been said by all honourable senators who have spoken on the resolution, there are three points to be discussed. The first relates to the county and district court judges. I find that the policy of the Government with respect to these judges is very inconsistent. The Government has dealt with the matter over the past almost 60 years, and it has never been contested. Some persons may have raised a question as to whether the Government had the right to do what it did, but as a matter of fact it has been done for more than 50 years without any serious objection or attack on the part of anyone.

I think all honourable senators will agree that the question before us now is this: Is it worth while, in so far as county and district court judges are concerned, to go to the Parliament at Westminster and have our Constitution amended, thus giving them a power they do not have at the present time, just for the purpose of getting rid of a doubt which has existed in the minds of only a few people, but which policy, as I have said, has been carried on for almost 60 years without serious objection?

The second point concerns superior court judges. Without repeating all the arguments put forward by the honourable senator from Vancouver South and the honourable senator from Inkerman, I say that undoubtedly the Government has the right to deal with this matter without going to Westminster.

The question that arises in my mind is this: In view of the fact that these questions have been raised over many years, and doubts have existed in the minds of some people, why has the Government not asked the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether this Parliament has the right to deal with superior, county and district court judges without going to Westminster? Was it not worth while to do that? I say it undoubtedly was, because if we now go to Westminster with this resolution it will mean that from now on it will be impossible to deal with the tenure of office of judges without going back to Westminster.

Suppose that in some years hence it is found that in the public interest judges should be retired at 70 or 72 years of age, we will have to go back to the Parliament at Westminster and get permission to do so, a concession which as a matter of fact that Parliament has refused its own judges. In England the law has been amended to give the judges already holding office the option of retiring at 75 years of age. Now if we go to Westminster on the question of our county and district court judges, we will give that Parliament the right to deal with a subject on which it never had jurisdiction before, and if in the future we want to change the law in this respect, we shall have to go back to Westminster. I think it is neither dignified nor the desire of the Canadian people to give more power to Westminster and less to Canada.

As my honourable friend from Inkerman said a moment ago, this is an indication of an inferiority complex and a colonial dependence, which we all desire to get away from. That is why I say, if it is not necessary to send this resolution to Westminster, why send it? There is only one way to deal with the matter. The Government should ask the Supreme Court of Canada whether we have the right to amend the law in this respect, and we should act according to the decision of that court.

Some honourable senators have raised the question of time. Well, this matter has been before the Senate since the month of January. Had the Government then asked the Supreme Court of Canada for its opinion on the matter it would have been dealt with by that court in February, and in all probability the judgment of the court would have been rendered by this time and we would have known what our powers in the matter are.

I say that even if the Government were to submit this question to the Supreme Court of Canada at the present time, it would be considered by that tribunal next September, and I am sure that before January 1, 1961—which would be two months before the date stated for the coming into force of the act asked for in this resolution—the Government would know exactly what the power of this Parliament is and whether it is necessary to go to Westminster. So I say, despite the fact that the amendment proposed by the honourable senator from Vancouver South has been ruled out, it seems to me that it would be a good policy on the part of the Government to submit the question to the Supreme Court.

The third point raised is as to the question of the retroactive effect of this proposed amendment upon the judges of the superior courts. We could discuss this matter for a long time. We could raise many legal questions which might be decided one way or the other by different courts of justice. My impression is that the proposition which is made by the Government to any member of the bar when he accepts the position of judge is a clear-cut contract. It is not the commission that gives the contract; it is the conditions of the appointment. The salary has been fixed by law; the pension has been fixed by law; the term of office has also been fixed by law, and fixed not only by federal legislation but by the British North America Act.

Some say that a member of a commission who is appointed either during pleasure or during good behaviour, or, say, for ten years, can be removed from that position without any damages being awarded to him. I say that the judges of the superior courts have been protected from that treatment by the British North America Act which says that a judge of the superior court cannot be removed except by an address from the Senate and the House of Commons. Consequently, the judges of the superior courts are protected from removal by the provision that they cannot be removed unless there is impeachment, which has never been invoked since Confederation.

I say there is a contract which fixes the salary, the pension, and the kind of work that the judge has to do. The fact that there is no consideration expressed in the commission does not matter at all. What is the consideration a judge gives in return for the salary he is to receive and the pension that is voted for him? He gives his services every day of the week, and every week of the year. He has to obey; he has to go on the bench; he has to judge and render judgment. That is the consideration for the contract he has received from the Government.

The honourable senator from Inkerman said that if it was a contract a judge would be bound to work for the salary which was fixed at the time he was appointed. I suppose a judge of the superior court appointed in 1920, for instance, when the salary of a judge of that court was $9,000 would, if it was a contract, be obligated to work for $9,000 until he died. That is perfectly correct. But the Government, in order to find good judges and to prevent the judges who have already been appointed from resigning, has had to increase salaries as the cost of living went up. The Government knew it could not obtain judges for the superior courts for $9,000 a year. It knew very well that it could not get judges of the superior courts at the present time for a salary of $12,000 a year unless it was ready to take second-rate or even fourth-rate lawyers. If the Government wanted to have a good man on the bench it certainly had to pay him. Never before have I heard that an employee who has been engaged for 10, 15, 20 or 25 years is breaking his contract because in the course of his employment his employer increased his salary because the cost of living had gone up. He is employed. He has a contract, and if he gets an increase in salary because of either the work he is doing or of the rise in the cost of living, that does not break the contract nor cause it to cease to be a contract.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Will the honourable senator permit a question? On the basis of the argument of the honourable senator, what about the case of a judge who was appointed in a province where there were no divorces to be heard by the court upon which he was appointed to sit, and then suddenly it is decided that that court will have jurisdiction to hear divorces? Could that judge then say: "You are breaking my contract. When I took this position there were no such things as divorce actions to be heard, and I refuse to hear them."?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I say that has nothing to do with the contract. When he is appointed a judge he is appointed to judge every matter that comes before the court under the law. When the law says that such matters are to go before the superior court then the judge of the superior court is bound to hear them. It does not change the contract at all, because he knew at the time of his appointment that matters to be submitted to the superior court, or matters to be submitted to the circuit court, or matters to be submitted to the magistrate's court, might vary in the course of his employment.

The situation is similar to that of a man who is employed in a factory. I do not think the employer breaks his contract because the manufactured output is increased by one-third or one-half, or there is a new machine installed. The same argument applies to a judge. If a judge does not like the kind of work he has to do he can resign.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How can he resign if he is appointed for life?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: He can resign because the law provides for it. He is allowed by the law to resign, and if he does his contract is not broken because in accordance with his contract he has the right to resign.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask a question? Does my honourable friend agree with the decision in the Reilly case, or does he distinguish it from this case?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I distinguish the Reilly case very definitely, because in that case Reilly was not appointed for life. He was a lay employee. He was a member of the Federal Appeal Board. He was not even appointed during pleasure; he was appointed for a fixed period to give his judgment in matters to be determined by the law, and when the law decided there were no further matters to be decided by that board it was abolished, and there was no more contract.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That applied whether his tenure of office was up or not?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes, whether his tenure of office was up or not. And if the appointment is during pleasure, I do not think there is any difference.

I now come to the third situation, which I find the worst of all. The resolution, if passed, will give the Parliament at Westminster a jurisdiction which it does not have at the present time, or, in any event, it is very doubtful whether it has it or not. It might very well be that the Parliament at Westminster would say in answer to the demand which is made by Canada: "We have no jurisdiction in the matter." If it does not say that, and it adopts the resolution, it will then be clear that in the future it will have jurisdiction over judges of our superior courts as to their tenure of office; and quite evidently it will also have jurisdiction over county and district court judges as to their tenure of office, which to my mind is something it does not have at the present time, so why give that jurisdiction to it?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: When at the present time, we have the means of preventing that, why go and kneel down before the Parliament at Westminster?

There are two ways of going about this. First of all, the Government can go to the Supreme Court of Canada and find out whether we have jurisdiction to deal with the matter. If the Supreme Court decides that we have such jurisdiction, then it is not necessary to go to Westminster. That question could be decided within the next two or three months. The present situation has prevailed for 93 years now and nobody has felt any the worse for it. In order to avoid giving Westminster additional jurisdiction, can we not wait for two or three more months to have this question decided? It seems to me to be very unreasonable to proceed in the manner outlined in this resolution. What is the hurry? Why go so fast? After spending nearly a century with this situation can we not wait a few more months and avoid giving a jurisdiction to Westminster which it has not got now and which may not be necessary?

Should the Supreme Court of Canada decide we have not got jurisdiction, then what should be the demand made by Ottawa to Westminster? Should the request be formulated in the way in which this resolution is expressed at the present time, giving Westminster more jurisdiction than it now has and Canada less? I would say no. In my opinion the resolution to be sent to Westminster should be one that would give less jurisdiction to Westminster and more to Canada. What would be the effect of that resolution? The Canadian Parliament now has the right to amend its Constitution in all matters which do not pertain to exclusive provincial jurisdiction. That is all right, but why not go one step farther? It may take many years before we can agree with the provinces as to ways and means of amending our own Constitution with respect to certain matters over which section 92 gives the provinces exclusive jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would that not be an interference with provincial rights?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: No. I say the demand that we should make to Westminster is that, pending the time when the dominion and the provinces can agree on amending our Constitution completely, whenever an amendment is requested which may affect provincial rights, if such amendment is unanimously approved by the provinces, then we should have the right to amend our Constitution in that respect. Everyone seems to be in agreement with this. If we were to follow this procedure what would we be doing? We would be taking away some rights that now belong to Westminster and taking them upon ourselves. But this is not what is proposed to be done here.

It seems to me that the views of most honourable members are not at all favourable to giving Westminster more jurisdiction and Canada less. Well, I have suggested a way of doing it. Let us ask the Supreme Court of Canada if we have jurisdiction to amend our Constitution in this respect, and if we have let us do it ourselves without going to Westminster. If we have not got that jurisdiction, then let us put before Westminster a resolution that is not going to give them more rights but one that will give them less rights and Canada more, and let us get permission to amend the Judges Act in the way we want to amend it, for we have the unanimous consent of all the provinces to do so. That is the manner in which it should be done. Even with the unanimous consent of the provinces we cannot amend our own Constitution. Why not? It does not seem to me to be reasonable that if each province in Canada and the federal Government agree on an amendment we should not be able to make that amendment ourselves. I quite understand that if the amendment affected provincial rights and we had no agreement on the matter we should have to go to Westminster, but at the present time even when there is complete agreement between the federal and provincial Governments we still have to go to Westminster and ask, "Would you give us permission to do this?"

So instead of giving them more power we should give them less and the resolution should be to the effect that the Canadian Parliament be given full power to amend Canada's Constitution, even if the amendment concerns provincial rights, subject to the condition that such amendment be unanimously concurred in by all provinces, and pending the time when the dominion and the provinces can come to an agreement as to ways and means of amending our own Constitution.

In this way we would be able to bring about the amendment to the Judges Act as requested and we would not be kneeling down before Westminster and saying, "Even though the dominion and provincial Governments have agreed to this amendment we have to come and ask your permission to make it."

Honourable senators, I am not going to move any amendment in this respect tonight, but if such an amendment is moved I certainly shall vote for it. I am sorry that I will have to vote against the resolution before the house, for I am not in favour of the kind of amendment to the British North America Act that is proposed. It is this point that bothers me the most, that we have to ask London to do things we should be able to do ourselves, particularly things which are of a relatively minor nature, when one considers that our country has the right to appoint its own Governor General, that it has a Queen of Canada, that it has extra-territorial rights and that it has diplomatic rights to deal with all countries in the world. Why should we have to go to London to ask whether we should retire our judges at 75 or any other age? It seems ridiculous to me. Something is wrong with the whole thing. We should at least take away from London the power it has at the present time to do certain things and take more power unto ourselves. I think Westminster would be ready to agree that we should be able to amend our Constitution at any time. I believe they would like to get rid of this question of amending the Canadian Constitution. Honourable senators, these are the points that I wanted to place before the house tonight.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators will recall that at the commencement of this sitting I introduced Bill C-76, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act. I am advised that this bill should be dealt with as soon as possible in view of the fact that certain people are retiring, and the bill does not go into effect until it is assented to. For that reason, I would like to have the second reading of this bill proceeded with as the first order of the day tomorrow afternoon, and as the second order the continuation of the debate with which we have been dealing today. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 13, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Tenth Interim Report of the International Commission for Supervision and Control in Vietnam for the period February, 1959 to January 31, 1960 (French text), and Summary of the aforementioned Report (English and French texts).

Report of the Canada Council for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act, Chapter 3 of the Statutes of 1957. (English and French texts).

Report of the Royal Commission on the Great Slave Lake Railway, Volume I, dated June 1960. (English and French texts).

INCOME TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-68, to amend the Income Tax Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with the following amendments:

1. Page 14: Strike out subclause (1) of clause 18 and renumber subclauses (2) to (4) inclusive of clause 18 as subclauses (1) to (3) inclusive respectively.

2. Page 15: Strike out lines 19 to 22 inclusive and substitute therefor the following:—"(4) This section is applicable to the 1960 and subsqeuent taxation years."

3. Page 17: Strike out subclause (2) of clause 24 and renumber subclause (3) of clause 24 as subclause (2).

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be considered?

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move adoption of the report. I do so in order that I may explain the amendments which have been made.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce sat on three occasions to consider the provisions of the bill amending the Income Tax Act. In connection with the portions of the bill which the report recommends be struck out, the discussion was full and complete, and the departmental representatives who were present asked permission to go back to the minister to state the views of the committee. As a result, the minister agreed that in the circumstances the first subsection of section 18 should be withdrawn in the interest of trying to develop something that would have greater clarity and would prevent situations that might develop by reason of the wording of the amendment. May I just explain?

Section 18 deals with the position of a trustee who is transferring property to a beneficiary, and in this bill it was proposed that that transfer of property shall be deemed to be a sale at the then fair market value. The effect of that is, as I think I indicated when I was speaking on second reading, that when the trustee acquires the property the value at which he acquires it is the value at the date of death. It may well be that at the time he comes to transfer the property to the beneficiary the property has increased substantially in value, so if it is deemed to be sold to the beneficiary at the time of transfer there is some part of the purchase price which would be subject to recapture in the hands of the trustee, and which would have to be brought into income, and income tax is paid on it to the extent that capital cost allowances had been taken on the property while it was in the hands of the trustee. We pointed out the difficulties that were created by that position, because there already was a provision in the Income Tax Act under which, as the trustee takes capital cost allowance in a year, the benefit of that capital cost allowance taken in the year might, to the extent of the share of the income that each beneficiary was getting in that year, be deducted by him from his income that would otherwise be subject to tax, and it was unfair to expect him to be able to look to the trustee for the recapture, because the trustee may have no moneys with which to take care of it. We pointed out the situations which could develop. There were a number of others, technical ones, which I do not think it is necessary to go into here. After going through that at several meetings of the committee the income tax officials attended again this morning and one of them advised us as follows:

The Minister of Finance has instructed me to report that he has carefully re-examined this subclause of the bill in the light of the concern expressed by a number of honourable senators and that he now proposes to withdraw subclause (1) of clause 18 so that it may receive further study. Accordingly the Minister of Finance requests the committee to move the following amendment:

That is the first amendment set out in the committee's report.

The next question that was dealt with by way of amendment was in connection with section 24 of the bill. This section deals with a situation where you may have a company which is holding and developing oil leases or oil properties and is entitled to certain deductions and expenses which it may carry forward in the way of development expenses. The provisions of section 24 were designed to this end, that if you had that situation and such a company sold its assets to a new company—the old company would then be called the predecessor company and the new company would be called the successor company—the consideration had to be exclusively the shares of the new company. We raised some objections in our discussion on that point, saying that it is difficult to conceive that an operating company could possibly be in a position where it did not have at least some small current liabilities, and they would be an additional consideration. We asked the departmental representatives who were there, "Would it take away from the successor company the benefit which is enjoyed of bringing forward these expenses?" The representatives agreed that it would have that effect. They did admit that what they were really trying to get at were such liabilities as might be expressed in the old company in terms of funded debt, and you can see how if it had some funded debt and took it forward into the new company it might be able to take development expenses forward there and possibly we would have a very interesting situation.

The other objection was in connection with the application of section 24. The bill said merely that the section applies to 1960 and subsequent years. We wanted to know, first, does it apply only to acquisitions of property in 1960 after the bill becomes law, or does it apply to any situation, even a situation where the property was acquired before 1960 but which in the year 1960 would be in conflict with the bill? Well, that was another problem that posed itself and that question was taken back to the minister. This morning the departmental representative reported to us:

> As directed by this committee, I have reported to the Minister of Finance the suggestion of some honourable senators that an amendment should be made to clause 24 to ensure that subclause (2) thereof, which adds the word "exclusively" in two places, should apply only to property acquired after 1960.
>
> I have also reported to the Minister of Finance the observations of the chairman of the committee that the effect of this subclause may be to change the law so that it will stand in the way of many transactions in the future where the company to be acquired has liabilities other than bonds or debentures.
>
> Both these points raised by honourable senators have been carefully considered by the Minister of Finance. I am instructed to report that in view of the fact that the only purpose of the proposed amendment was to clarify the law in accordance with past administrative practice and in view of the fact that some concern has been expressed that its effects may go beyond this purpose the Minister of Finance now proposes to withdraw the subclause.

There was an amendment made and the subclause was withdrawn.

There was another section which we dealt with at these meetings and it had to do with the redefinition of sources of income. That is section 33, and I refer particularly to page 23 of the bill. The redefinition of sources of income arises out of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Interprovincial Pipeline case, and paragraph (b) of subsection 5 deals with the point and is intended to overcome the effect of that judgment.

We were concerned, and so indicated to the departmental representatives, that first of all the amendments went beyond the scope indicated in the budget resolution on this point. We felt that the budget resolution confined the application of sources of income definition to sources of income of Canadians in other countries and expenses properly applicable against those, and sources of income in Canada for foreigners, some persons outside Canada. We felt that was the scope of the budget resolution. We had indicated, I think fairly definitely, that we were seriously thinking of making a change so as to make it clear that the application was confined to that sort of situation. Finally, after discussion this morning, and after hearing the statement of the minister on the point, we agreed that we could pass the amendment in the form in which it was, having regard to the statement which the minister made, and I think I should read to you what that statement was. It reads:

> This subsection provides a new definition of income from a particular source and income from a particular place. The revised definition serves two purposes. Firstly, the old provision is not at all clear as to how one determines business income from a particular country if the business operates branches in more than one country. For this reason the definition is divided into two parts or paragraphs. Paragraph (a) of the proposed new subsection (1a) tells how to determine income from a particular source in the sense of a business or employment being a single source regardless of its geographical scope. Then paragraph (b) provides for dividing up, geographically, the income from a business or employment if the business or employment is carried on in more than one place. This geographical division has no significance if the business or employment is wholly within one country.
>
> Therefore, it has no real significance except for the purposes of (1) determining the income in Canada of a non-resident person and (2) determining the income of a resident of Canada from sources in another country for purposes of foreign tax credit.
>
> Although, theoretically, paragraph (b) might be used to determine a person's income for each Canadian province, those figures would have no significance for purposes of the Income Tax Act. They would always have to be added together again and any loss in one province deducted from the profits in others in order to arrive at income for the purposes of the Act. The division of taxable income for purposes of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements is made on an entirely different basis authorized by sections 33 and 40 of the Income Tax Act.

The second purpose of the amendment is to ensure that all amounts deductible in computing income must be deducted in computing the income from one or more of the sources on a reasonable basis. The question of what is a reasonable basis is usually one upon which taxpayers and the Department of National Revenue can agree but, in some few cases, it may have to be settled by the courts.

Under the old definition, the Supreme Court of Canada held that interest was a statutory deduction that could not be said to be "related" to a particular source of income.

That is the effect of the Interprovincial Pipeline case.

The effect of the new provisions is that all such statutory deductions (with a few exceptions listed in paragraph (1b) that obviously have no connection with earning income) must be allocated on a reasonable basis. Thus, if it can be shown that borrowed money was used to earn income from a particular source or a particular country, the interest paid on that borrowing must be deducted in computing income from that source or place.

This new definition must, unfortunately, be lengthy and somewhat complicated. After very careful study I have come to the conclusion that I cannot propose any amendment to this part of the bill.

I hope that honourable senators will see their way clear to accept this part of the bill in its present form.

We discussed again this morning the provisions of that section in the light of the minister's statement and the apparent limitation which the statement puts upon what theoretically might be the more extended application of the section, and it was the view of the committee that in the circumstances we were justified in accepting the statement of the minister. I think the view was expressed that the minister, who is a responsible minister of the Crown, having made a statement in these terms, we could not conceive that a situation would develop in relation to its application where some different view on its interpretation might be urged by the department. Whether we are to be criticized or not, that was the decision we made, and therefore there is no amendment in relation to section 33.

Several other sections were carefully discussed, and I mention these only briefly so that you may appreciate that the committee was really probing.

One section to which I referred on the second reading of the bill had reference to gross negligence and the penalties that are provided in the bill where a taxpayer has shown gross negligence in the preparation of a return; in such circumstances a civil penalty is provided with a maximum of 25 per cent on the tax not paid as a result of such gross negligence. The question had been raised, as you will recall, that there seemed to be some conflict between that and the present provisions in the statute for civil penalties where there is wilful evasion of tax in a return or in information filed. There the penalty ranges from 25 to 50 per cent. The provisions are drawn in such a way, and we were told that this is the intention of the department, that the old section providing for a penalty of from 25 per cent to 50 per cent will be applied so long as any cases come forward which fit the circumstances of the section up to the date that this new section becomes law. On and after that date, in relation to the filing of statements and the furnishing of information in the preparation of which there may be gross negligence, the new section with the reduced penalty will apply, and both subsections will go forward as subsections (1) and (2) of section 56 in the future. At some date in the future—I suppose it might be a matter of four or five years hence, when it appears that there are no more cases likely to come forward—the old section will be repealed.

There were a few other sections which were discussed and upon which the committee secured considerable clarification. There is a good verbatim report of the committee's proceedings available which I think honourable senators can read with interest and, possibly, with some educational benefit.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And financial benefit, too.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill (S-25) intituled: "An Act to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges", report as follows:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate. I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

LAND USE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, Chairman of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada, presented the second report of the committee.

The Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada make their second report as follows—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Tuesday next.

For text of report see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1060-6.

DIVORCE

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill SD-488, for the relief of Elizabeth Fairnington Gaul.

Bill SD-489, for the relief of Rolande Mercier Perreault.

Bill SD-490, for the relief of France Andree Joly Smith.

Bill SD-491, for the relief of Marcelle Schipper Brian.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved, with leave, that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA COUNCIL

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR NATIONALS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

What is the amount of each of the fellowships for nationals of foreign countries enumerated in the categories described as 8*a* and 8*b* of the Second Annual Report of the Canada Council?

What is the particular object of each of these fellowships?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, in respect of this inquiry, I am informed that paragraph 13 of the Canada Council Act states precisely the council is not an agent of Her Majesty. Paragraph 23 of the act clearly specifies the manner in which the council is to report to Parliament annually. It will be recalled that the annual report of the Canada Council is reviewed each year by both houses of Parliament and that on June 9 of this year such a review was made by the Standing Committee on Finance pursuant to a reference of the report to that committee by this house. Neither the Canada Council Act nor any other legislation lays any duty upon the council to report to Parliament otherwise.

In so far as these questions are concerned, the Government does not have in its records the information requested, and has no power to direct the council to furnish that information.

PRIVATE BILL

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF CANADA—REFUND OF FEES

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move:

That the parliamentary fees paid upon the Bill S-19, intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada", be refunded to Messrs. Maclaren, Laidlaw, Corlett & Sherwood, solicitors for the petitioners, less printing and translation costs.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-76, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act contains a number of amendments to which the Government has been giving consideration for some time. The most important of these are designed to provide a substantial improvement in the value of the basic benefits available to most civil servants who will be contributing to the Superannuation Account on and after its coming into force. In conjunction with these, other amendments will provide for adjustments to the rates of contribution, while other amendments make provision for improved benefits to smaller groups of persons or are designed to facilitate the administration of the act.

On June 20 the Minister of Finance tabled three reports in the House of Commons which had been submitted to him by the Chief Actuary of the Department of Insurance on the actuarial valuations of the Superannuation Account, the Public Service Death Benefit Account and the Regular Services Death Benefit Account. It was necessary for the Government to receive the actuarial valuations of the various accounts maintained for the purposes of this act before the nature of the amendments thereto could be determined in the light of their actuarial implications.

Honourable senators will recall the passage of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act during the last session of Parliament. This dealt with the upward adjustment of lower pensions of civil servants who had been retired for a number of years, and so this bill does not contain measures relating to any general pension increase for retired civil servants. It does, however, deal with the many requests which have been made seeking an improvement in the basic benefit formula for those who have not yet retired.

The basic benefit formula applicable to most civil servants who contribute to the Superannuation Account provides for a pension equal to the number of years of pensionable service up to 35 years, multiplied by 2 per cent of the average salary received by the pensioner over the period of ten consecutive years in which his salary was highest. The representations which the Government has received have sought a reduction in the 10-year average salary formula and thus an enhancement of the value of benefits received. Accordingly, it is proposed to introduce amendments which will establish the formula on the basis of the best consecutive six-year average instead of the previous ten-year average. This change will place the formula applicable under the Public Service Superannuation Act on the same basis as that now available to new members of the regular armed forces and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under their superannuation statutes. The uniformity in the basis of benefits throughout our superannuation legislation thus achieved, and which has heretofore been lacking, will represent a major advance for civil servants and a major improvement in administration.

The Public Service Superannuation Act provides pension benefits comparing favourably with those of most private plans in Canada. It has been generally recognized in the Civil Service that under a plan of this nature, where the costs are shared by civil servants and by the Government as employer, it is only equitable that the cost of major improvements in the benefits should also be shared. Thus the improvement proposed in the benefit formula is coupled with an amendment which provides for an increase in the male contribution rate from 6 to 6½ per cent of salary. No increase in the female contribution rate of 5 per cent is to be made. A corresponding increase will be made in the matching contribution by the Government. Thus the overall rate of contribution will be 13 per cent for male employees and 10 per cent for female employees.

This aspect of the bill was the subject of a great deal of discussion before the special committee of the House of Commons which was established for the purpose of considering it. The Chief Actuary of the Department of Insurance gave testimony which indicated that, if the experience over the past ten years were to repeat itself, the additional contribution provided would not cover the full value of the improved benefits. For that matter, a progressive increase in salary levels at half of the rates which has been experienced in the past decade would probably provide additional benefits which were worth more than the increase in contributions. Honourable senators will appreciate that this is a difficult matter to forecast and the rates chosen will have to be examined in the light of actual experience, but the Government is satisfied that all the increase will be required to cover the cost of the additional benefits provided.

The additional cost to the Government in a full year will be, it is estimated, $2½ million, based on salary rates in effect as of January 1, 1960. I should point out that there will be some small upward revision of this figure to take account of salary increases granted or contemplated in 1960. The change from the ten-year average to the six-year average in the basic benefit formula will increase the value of benefits available under the Superannuation Act by $21 million as of January 1, 1960. Again, there will be a small increase in this amount to take account of salary increases granted or contemplated in 1960.

Before leaving this aspect of the bill, I should also mention the effective date of the increases in both benefits and contributions. In so far as benefits are concerned, the increase will apply in the case of persons who become entitled to annuities or annual allowances from the time of royal assent. There has been a good deal of discussion over choosing some earlier date, but this always presents the impossibility of choosing one date over another without penalizing the person who retired the day before the date which is chosen. After very careful consideration, the Government has felt that the cut-off date must be the date on which the amending bill becomes law. In so far as the increase in contribution rates is concerned, certain procedures have to be carried out, and it is left to the Governor in Council to proclaim the day on which these shall come into force.

The other proposed major change in the benefits relates to the supplementary death benefit provided under Part II of the act. At present this commences to decrease after age 60 and disappears entirely on retirement or at age 70, whichever is the later. An amendment is proposed providing that every person with five years' continuous employment participating under Part II of the act will on his sixty-fifth birthday, either as an employee or as a pensioner if he was entitled to an immediate annuity on retirement, be credited with a paid-up $500 death benefit as part of his overall benefit protection.

The cost of this benefit will be borne entirely by the Government. It is estimated that this change will involve an additional expenditure of about $1½ million in the first full year and $500,000 annually thereafter, increasing with the growth in the number of participants.

Another measure of importance is one which will provide for alleviation in the conditions which require a reduction of pension during short periods of re-employment in the Civil Service. The present formula, which calls for a reduction in the pension after as little as one day of re-employment in many cases, will be replaced by another which calls for a determination based on the salary received in each quarter by a re-employed civil service pensioner. This will eliminate the majority of the pension adjustments which otherwise would have had to be made in the future.

Honourable senators, it is proposed that if and when this bill receives second reading it be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where witnesses from the Department of Finance and the Department of Insurance will be available to provide any further information that is required.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, my remarks on this measure will be brief. From the explanation given by our honourable colleague who has sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. White) it is quite evident that superannuation benefits are to be substantially increased. The new feature of death benefits—and I do think it is a new feature—is to be a charge on the public treasury. I have no doubt that my colleagues in this house are becoming a bit weary of my solicitude for the public treasury, but I think it may fairly be said that in our consideration of measures of this kind we always lean heavily to the side of generosity. Do not misunderstand. I am a believer in pensions. I am a believer in pensions for civil servants. I think it is reasonable that the Government should pay its fair share into a fund that will ensure a pension or an annuity to the civil servant when he or she retires. However, the actuarial calculations in the past upon which this fund could be maintained in solvency were wholly inadequate, and I would suggest to the honourable sponsor of the measure that when it comes before the committee he should have the officials present to inform the committee of the total contribution that the Government of Canada has made to this fund, say over the past forty years, in addition to the contribution it makes to match the contributions by the employees. We shall find that it is rather substantial.

I must say that I am losing faith completely in the ability of governments—and I am not speaking of the present Government or the one before it—to look after matters of this kind. Until the people commence to complain about taxation—and it must be said that the people of this country have been long-suffering in that respect—this spending will go on.

We have another illustration that is not dissimilar, and that is the sale of Government annuities. It would be an interesting exercise for the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) to confer a public benefaction upon the house by inquiring into and ascertaining how much would be required to make the annuities fund solvent.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have always understood that the fund was quite solvent at all times, but that the annuitant benefited from the fact that the cost of administering the fund was paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Ah, well, may I suggest to my honourable friend, in all kindness, that he inform himself upon that point, because several years ago, as I recall, not only did the cost of administration in the Annuities Branch run to about $1¼ million a year, but also it was clearly evident that there was not then an annuity being sold that would carry itself. The fund was not solvent, and the Government has the responsibility for that. Whether it is a Liberal Government, a Conservative Government, or any other kind of a Government, it cannot escape that responsibility. The annuities business was undertaken 60 years ago, or perhaps a few years more, when there was no opportunity for an individual who wished to buy an annuity to secure one. Insurance companies then were not handling annuities, nor was any other agency. It was the late Sir William Mulock who, when he was Postmaster General, conceived this idea and established the Government annuities system. It was primarily for the purpose of inducing people to save money and build up protection for their declining years—a very worthy thing to do, which in these modern days has fallen almost completely into disrepute.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, they still buy life annuities.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But my honourable friend will find that the annuities fund will require some bolstering up. That condition should be brought to an end, because today any person who wants to get an annuity has a dozen different avenues through which he can secure one, whereas he had none 60 years ago. If the Finance Minister is searching for places where he can economize, I would definitely suggest to him that avenue.

As I said a moment ago, I have no objection to annuities, but I do say that the Superannuation Fund, which I venture to suggest is not actuarially solvent, should immediately be put on a rigid actuarial basis, so that the contributions by civil servants and the Government will maintain the fund in solvency at all times and we would not have to come back later on to bolster it up from the treasury. I add one other suggestion, that when that actuarial report or test is made by the Government actuaries the Government should get an independent actuarial valuation from a company like the Sun Life Assurance Company, for example. Of course, all insurance companies have a very fine actuarial staff, and it would be useful and helpful to secure the judgment of the actuarial branch of one of these companies upon this important matter. The easy fashion in which we drift into situations of this kind is, when we consider their total magnitude, rather surprising.

I hope that when the bill goes before the committee we shall be able to get information on these points as to the present condition of the fund: Is it actuarially sound? If not, how much will be required to make it actuarially sound? Where will that money come from? Is there not any other source that it could come from but the treasury? Can we have an assurance that from this day forward the contributions by the Government and the employee will maintain the fund for all time in an adequate condition of solvency?

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

MOTION FOR ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN FOR AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES—MOTION FURTHER AMENDED AND AGREED TO

The Senate resumed from yesterday, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges. 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this section, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, before I proceed with my discussion on the merits of this resolution, may I first welcome to this chamber the most recently appointed senator (Hon. John M. MacDonald) and, as one who has spent some time in the Senate, assure him that he will find it very interesting, and I think he will find the company really good.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Another comment I wish to make before I get down to the business of the meeting is this: I have been wondering why the Senate was not consulted about the language and substance of the resolution which is before us. Certainly all the Attorneys General in the various provinces were consulted, but it would appear that we were handed a duplicate of a resolution which had been settled upon and introduced in the Commons.

Now, it may very well be that when legislation is initiated in the Commons the Government, which takes the responsibility for it, and those who are following out the instructions of the Government will settle the form of the bill, and after it goes through the Commons it comes to us and we are free to deal with it as we see fit. But this resolution is not in any sense a bill as we understand a bill which originates in the Commons. I do not see in this resolution any of the political implications that might ordinarily be found in some legislation, and I should have thought that the more desirable way of doing this would have been to consult with the Senate so as to try to reach some agreement on what the form of the petition and the presentation to the imperial Parliament should be, and possibly even to make it a joint address if that were possible.

Instead of that we are faced with a resolution in a certain form which has passed the House of Commons, and we may or may not pass it in that form. That may present some problems which will have to be resolved if any further action is to be taken.

I mention this in the beginning because we need not approach this question solely on the ground that we must conform to the form and substance which has been presented to us for fear that there may be some consequences that we do not want. Solutions can be found to anything, and if in the course of the progress of this resolution changes are made, well, whatever the consequences are, they will have to be resolved in the best way they can.

Coming down to the purpose of the resolution, I propose to follow pretty well the sort of presentation which my friend the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) made last night, but before doing so I should like to commend him very heartily for the quality of his presentation, and that goes even for some of the things he said with which I do not entirely agree. I respect his view, and it may well be that when I am through you will feel that his view is the better of the two. I hope not, and I will do the best I can to convince you that mine is a better view.

We start off by being in agreement, which is a good way. It softens the blow later on. We are in agreement on the question of the reference in the resolution to the tenure of office of county and district court judges. Why that is included in the resolution I do not know. I have not been able to work out any answer which satisfies me.

For a long period, possibly 50 or 60 years, we have proceeded on the basis that the federal Parliament had authority to control and limit the tenure of office of county and district court judges, and we did it under the Judges Act. But last night my friend the senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) suggested some explanation of why the tenure of office of county and district court judges was included in the resolution at this time. I notice his very careful language was that there was a doubt, and I think he seemed to imply that there was a doubt that was inherent in the subject-matter and apparently not particularly discovered until recently. Well, even doubts are not enough to entitle a jury to give the benefit of a decision to the accused rather than to the Crown. What must be found there is not a doubt but a reasonable doubt, and I am wondering whether the honourable senator from Hanover, who is a lawyer, was being very careful in his language when he said there was a doubt and did not say that there was a reasonable doubt.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I never make distinctions as fine as that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Except when it suits the purpose. Then they get very fine.

When we come down to a consideration of this question under the British North America Act we find the provision in relation to the appointment of county court judges in section 96, which says:

> The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

There is no reference in the Constitution to the tenure of office of county or district court judges. I think it is recognized as being an elementary common law principle that where the power of appointment is given, as this power of appointment is given, in the absence of any prescription as to tenure of office the appointing authority is the authority to impose the tenure of office. Therefore, in my view, when the Parliament of Canada provided in the Judges Act that county court judges should retire at 80—I think this was in 1903, and later the retiring age was lowered to 75—it was exercising its undoubted authority to do that job, and there has been no contest in relation to the exercises of that authority in all those years.

It is completely unnecessary, in my view, to include at this time the tenure of office of county court judges in any address to the imperial Parliament to deal with an age limit of 75. It has been dealt with in a way that has been accepted over all these years. I am opposed to this inclusion, because it is doing the reverse of what we should be doing at this time. That is, we should be addressing ourselves to trying to work out some method by which the place of domicile for the determination of any constitutional changes would be right here in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Therefore we should not be committing ourselves to anything that is not absolutely necessary within the limitations that we now have in the Constitution.

That is what I have to say about county and district court judges. Having said that, obviously if there is a motion to strike the reference to county and district court judges out of the resolution I shall support it. If there is not such a motion, then its inclusion in the resolution which is to go forward is such that I will have to vote against the resolution.

The next question is the age limitation to be imposed upon superior court judges. On the retroactive feature of that provision, making it apply to judges presently on the bench, I have this to say. I think most honourable senators who have been here for some time know very well what my view is with regard to retroactivity in any legislation. I am opposed to retroactivity in principle, with the sole exception that if in tax legislation the retroactivity is beneficial to the taxpayer I am in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You are all for it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So say we all.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And in any other legislation which has a retroactive feature beneficial to the citizen, I am in favour of it. But with respect to retroactive legislation affecting a group of persons who accepted their appointments under terms and conditions which did not include that feature, I am opposed to it.

That is a second reason why I would vote against the resolution. In voting against the resolution for that reason I may not find myself in a great majority. But I have been on the minority side of things before, and I expect I shall be again. It is refreshing once in a while to stand up and assert your views and be prepared to take the results that follow.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable senator permit a question? I should like to ask him if he considers there is any difference in principle between the retroactive feature of this subject-matter and the situation that existed in 1903, when the age limit for retirement of district and county court judges was established at 80 years, and later, in 1913, when the limit was reduced to 75 years?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think there are some differences, but let me say that even if there were no differences, as far as I am concerned it is a matter of principle, and that being so my position would be the same.

With respect to county court judges and the limit of their term of office on the bench in 1903, I should point out that the authority in the British North America Act at that time was simply an authority to appoint judges, and therefore Parliament had a clear right, without commitment of any kind, to fix the tenure at such term as it might desire, and to change it from time to time. Whether the making of it retroactive, which I assume was done in 1903, was justified or not, is a matter of viewpoint. I may say to my honourable friend if it were made retroactive I would have been opposed to it, had I been in a position to do so at that time. However, I do not think at that time my voice was strong enough or couud be raised with sufficient force that anybody would have paid any attention to it, certainly not for such purposes, though perhaps for other purposes I got attention.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am sure you must have.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: But on principle, two wrongs don't make a right.

There have been a number of instances in Canada in relation to the Supreme Court Act, which I thought was the question my friend was going to put to me. For instance, in 1927—

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The same thing applies.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —the provision was imposed retroactively upon judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. If my honourable friend is interested in seeing what were the views at that time of a very prominent citizen of Canada, whose views I am sure in many respects my friend would welcome every opportunity to support—

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I have read them, but I may not agree with them.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —he would see that there was a division of opinion at that time as to the retroactive feature of it.

Bad cases make bad law, and I think in the legislation of 1927 there was at least one bad case which, in my view, made bad law. In that instance the Government of Canada repented in 1930 and tried to make amends as best it could. I am not suggesting any monetary amends here. I am only saying that I am opposed to the principle of retroactivity.

The basis on which these judges came to the bench is very clear, and even if the judges came to me and said "We are prepared to accept this provision and to retire," it still would not affect my thinking or my view of the proposed approach to this question.

Remember, honourable senators, I am not putting it on the basis that it is a breach of contract, and that these persons have any right to claim damages for loss of position. I am not putting it on the basis that there is any constitutional impediment to the doing by the Government of Canada of what it proposes to do. I am putting it solely on the basis that retroactivity applied to an office such as a judgeship is wrong in principle; that judges who are already on the bench were appointed on a certain basis which they accepted under the then provisions of the British North America Act—and they still exist—under which the tenure of office is prescribed as during good behaviour, which is equivalent to a life appointment, with provision for removal in certain circumstances.

These men addressed themselves to a consideration of their acceptance of office in the terms of the laws as they then stood. I disagree with what my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) said last night, when he was considering retirement as a possible occupational hazard. It would appear now that it turns out to be an occupational hazard, but I should have thought the prime office carrying an occupational hazard would be membership of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You have never been a member of a municipal council.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would include any of the elective offices. But a person who accepts a judgeship on the basis of the provisions then contained in the British North America Act, knowing that under those provisions the only authority or change rested in the imperial Parliament—and that situation has persisted for a long time—I say is justified in assuming that he is entitled to remain in that office so long as he has the capacity to perform his duties.

Having said that, there are one or two other remarks which my friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) made last night which I should like to deal with. My friend disposed of the question as to whether there was a contract and a breach of contract summarily, in the sense that he determined that on elementary principles there was not a contract, and that therefore the proposition which was put forth by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), that it was a breach of contract, had no foundation in fact or in law.

There is no use discussing the matter on the basis of a breach of contract, because there is no remedy. Parliament has power to abolish an office, it has power to terminate employment, and no action can be taken for damages for loss of office. Therefore, to talk about a breach of contract in the ordinary legal sense is just wasting time. To talk about it in the sense of the moral or the equitable aspect is something else.

My friend in his remarks last evening referred to the case of Reilly v. the King, and, I am sure, as an obiter to his reasons for judgment in making the decisions he did on this resolution, he made some comment on the footwork of the Privy Councillors. I must say that they do show an excellent knowledge and perception of law, and I would add that my friend in his remarks last evening displayed an adroitness at least equal to that of the Privy Councillors. The Privy Council did consider the contract aspects in the Reilly case, and, if I may, I will read just a portion of the judgment:

> The petition of right is founded on averments that there was a contract between the suppliant and the Crown and that the contract had been broken.

That is very simple to understand.

> Both courts in Canada have decided that by reason of the statutory abolition of the office Mr. Reilly was not entitled to any remedy, but apparently on different grounds. Maclean J. (who was the trial judge) concluded that the relation between the holder of a public office and the Crown was not contractual. There never had been a contract: and the foundation of the petition failed. Orde J.'s judgment in the Supreme Court seems to admit that the relation might be at any rate partly contractual; but he holds that any such contract must be subject to the necessary term that the Crown could dismiss at pleasure. If so, there could have been no breach.

This is what the court says, and if it is adroitness then it is an adroitness that I admire, and I also admire the perception of mind that can make such a keen analysis.

> Their Lordships are not prepared to accede to this view of the contract, if contract there be. If the terms of the appointment definitely prescribe a term and expressly provide for a power to determine "for cause" it appears necessarily to follow that any implication of a power to dismiss at pleasure is excluded. This appears to follow from the reasoning of the Board in Gould v. Stuart. That was not the case of a public office, but in this connection the distinction between an office and other service is immaterial. The contrary view to that here expressed would defeat the security given to numerous servants of the Crown in judicial or quasi-judicial and other officers throughout the empire, where one of the terms of their appointment has been expressed to be dismissal for cause.

Here is where they come to the question:

> In this particular case their lordships do not find it necessary to express a final opinion on the theory accepted in the Exchequer Court that the relations between the Crown and the holder of a public office are in no degree constituted by contract. They content themselves with remarking that in some offices at least it is difficult to negative some contractual relations, whether it be as to salary or terms of employment, on the one hand, and duty to serve faithfully and with reasonable care and skill on the other. And in this connection it will be important to bear in mind that a power to determine a contract at will is not inconsistent with the existence of a contract until so determined.

But the present case appears to their Lordships to be determined by the elementary proposition that if further performance of a contract becomes impossible by legislation having that effect the contract is discharged. In the present case the office held by the appellant was abolished by statute: thenceforward it was illegal for the executive to continue him in that office or pay him any salary: and impossible for him to exercise his office. The jurisdiction of the Federal Appeal Board was gone. The position, therefore, seems to be this. So far as the rights and obligations of the Crown and the holder of the office rested on statute, the office was abolished and there was no statutory provision made for holders of the office so abolished. So far as the rights and obligations rested on contract, further performance of the contract had been made by statute impossible, and the contract was discharged. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that discharged means put an end to and does not mean broken.

That may be an adroit and skilful analysis, but certainly the contract feature is interwoven into the judgment of the Privy Council. I did not expect to have to deal with the point, but my friend raised it and felt that this case established a principle, or, at least, that the thinking of the lower courts did, but the Privy Council dealt differently with the contract aspect. It is true that the judgment did not proceed to a conclusion on the basis of contract, but I do not understand that there is any urging here that if there has been a breach of contract there is a right in the person who has been hurt by the breach of contract to make any claim in respect of it. It is only urged by me on the basis that, having regard to the circumstances under which an appointment was accepted and the state of the law at the time, when there is a change in the tenure of office subsequently to be made it should, in justice, not be made retroactive.

There was one other aspect that the honourable senator from Inkerman raised. He suggested that the appointment of a judge was not a matter of contract but, rather, the exercise of a royal prerogative. I may be wrong, but I am sorry that I cannot agree with that, because the Governor General is given the authority under the British North America Act to make the appointment. The terms of his Letters Patent under which he is appointed contain this provision in paragraph 4:

And We do further authorize and empower Our Governor General to constitute and appoint, in Our name and on Our behalf, all such Judges, Commissioners, Justices of the Peace, and other necessary Officers . . . as may be lawfully constituted or appointed by Us.

Now, as I see it, if there ever existed a prerogative right inherent in the position of the Crown, or of the Governor General, to appoint judges, that has been cut down by virtue of the statutory provision in the British North America Act. In that sense the prerogative, if there ever was a prerogative, has merged in this statutory provision, and under the Letters Patent constituting the Governor General the way in which he functions now in making appointments is to the extent that he may lawfully constitute and appoint judges. Whatever the relationship is, if it is not a contract and if it is not the exercise of a prerogative, I suppose at least we can say that the judge is not drafted. I would not say he is a volunteer to the office, but, at least, he willingly accepts the conditions of the office.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Is it an offer or a command?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I was just coming to that. When a lawyer is asked if he will accept an appointment to the Supreme Court of Ontario I cannot distinguish between calling that an invitation or an offer, and when he attends and is sworn in and accepts the responsibilities of his office it would appear to me, whether or not you call it legally satisfying the elements of a contract as they appear in the decided cases, that the judge and the Crown got together and reached an agreement under which one said: "I will make you a judge if you accept", and the other said: "I will accept the responsibilities", and as a result of that he became a judge. I am not too concerned about the terms. It has been said that a rose is a rose, no matter what name you call it. If as a result of what the Crown says, and if as a result of what the person who is approached says, they get together and the person approached becomes a judge and accepts the responsibilities of office, there has been an agreement of some kind. The only complaint I have arising out of that agreement is that in changing the tenure of office regard should be had to the terms and conditions under which the position was offered to the judge and under which the judge accepted it.

There is one other thing I want to mention and that is the constitutional aspect. I said earlier that as far as I am concerned there is no constitutional aspect involved in the question of whether or not the tenure of office of superior court judges should be limited to 75 years or any other age. The only constitutional aspect involved here is that it would appear the Canadian Parliament does not have the authority at this time to do this act itself and therefore it proposes to petition the imperial Parliament to do it. There has been some suggestion here—and there was even a motion, which was ruled out by His Honour the Speaker—that these questions be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. I am inherently opposed at this time to referring any of these questions, particularly questions involving an interpretation of the 1949 amendment of the British North America Act, to our courts for interpretations. I am afraid as to what the finding might be, for the wording of the 1949 amendment is one which gives me deep concern as to its scope because it does add a new clause to section 91 of the British North America Act, which is the section dealing with the powers of the federal Parliament. The new clause reads:

> The amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada, except as regards matters coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the provinces . . .

And then it goes on to deal with certain other exceptions.

If it is correct that section 91 deals with the powers that are exclusively enjoyed by provincial Legislatures, does it mean, then, that the Parliament of Canada may amend the Constitution not only in matters over which it is given exclusive jurisdiction by this section but also over matters in which there is concurrent jurisdiction between the provincial Legislatures and the federal Parliament?

I can envisage how complicated the problem would become if we were to submit this question to the courts for a ruling. I do not think this was intended. My reason for saying this is based on an examination I made of the proceedings of the Constitutional Conference of Federal and Provincial Governments held in 1950, at which time the Attorneys General of the various provinces met with the Attorney General of Canada to discuss an amending procedure for the Constitution of Canada.

This conference was held in two parts, the first in January 1950 and the second in September of the same year. In January a Committee of Attorneys General recommended that the provisions of the British North America Acts 1867-1949 and other constitutional acts be grouped under six heads, namely:

(1) Provisions which concern Parliament only.

The committee recommended that the amendment of these provisions should be made by an act of the Parliament of Canada only.

(2) Provisions which concern the provincial Legislatures only.

The committee recommended that they should be made by an act of the provincial Legislatures.

(3) Provisions which concern Parliament and one or more but not all of the provincial Legislatures.

The recommendation of the committee was that provision should be made for an amendment by an act of the Parliament of Canada and an act of the Legislature of each of the provinces affected.

(4) Provisions which concern Parliament and all of the provincial Legislatures.

As to this the committee recommended that an amendment should be made by an act of the Parliament of Canada and acts of such majority of the Legislatures and upon such additional conditions, if any, that might be decided upon.

Then we come to the fifth provision, which is a very important one:

(5) Provisions concerning fundamental rights (as, for instance, but without restriction, education, language, solemnization of marriage, administration of justice, provincial property in lands, mines and other natural resources) and the amendment of the amending procedure.

With regard to this the committee recommended that amendments should be made by an act of the Parliament of Canada and acts of the Legislatures of all of the provinces. The sixth and final classification was:

(6) Provisions which should be repealed.

That was the report presented by the committee of the Attorneys General at the January session of the conference and it was dealt with in the interim by a secretariat that was set up, and the results were compiled in the conference report of September.

In my submission one cannot read these provisions without appreciating that as early as January 1950, notwithstanding the amendment to the British North America Act in 1949 which seems to confer the broadest powers on the Parliament of Canada acting alone, this was not the view of the Attorneys General of the provinces and the then Prime Minister of Canada when they sat down and worked out a formula for approaching the various sections of the British North America Act with a view to making amendments.

My position is quite simple. On an issue such as the imposition of a compulsory retirement age limit of 75 years for superior court judges, I would be opposed at this time to referring to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of whether or not the Parliament of Canada may constitutionally do this without going to the imperial Parliament. By referring this question to the Supreme Court of Canada we might receive a judgment that would create a very disturbing situation so far as interprovincial and federal relations are concerned.

There seems to be a basis of approach in the report of the conference and, as a matter of fact, in September 1950, as a result of the briefs that were filed by the Attorneys General, out of 140-odd sections of the British North America Act the Prime Minister said that as a result of the views expressed by the Attorneys General there were still approximately 30 sections left on which a procedure for amending within Canada had not been resolved and agreed upon. I would rather see that sort of conference proceeded with than have any declaration made by the court as to what the 1949 amendment means. I would rather see these conferences held in an attempt to advance farther along the road to agreement, for there is less danger of encountering difficulties and objections if you stay away from getting court pronouncements. You might have to wait many years and you might have to undo a multitude of things in order to become the master in your own house and have the complete right to amend your Constitution in every respect. Because of the peculiar way in which we are set up in Canada, the rights of the provinces must be considered in adopting any procedure for amending the Constitution within Canada. To a substantial extent the provinces must be parties to the agreements that are reached and to the procedures that must be followed in order to achieve that internal or domestic amendment or change in our Constitution. It is only when we arrive at that stage that we can hope the parties will be able to sit down and possibly write a Canadian Constitution for and by Canadians. I think that is the ultimate that is desired.

I appreciate very much what the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) said last evening, and I agree with much of what he said in relation to this constitutional amendment. However, my overall view is that I am so disturbed over the possibility of a roadblock being thrown in the way of the orderly processing of relationships, federally and provincially, to the end that we may achieve a method by which we can have domiciled in Canada the authority to make our own constitutional changes, that I would object very strongly to any reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I think this particular subject-matter, relatively set in that larger background, is so completely unimportant that it would be most inadvisable for us to contemplate even the suggestion that the Government should make a reference of this question to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this resolution proposes an address concerning judges. I am prepared to enter into the spirit of it by first using a statement often used by judges—I concur in the judgment of my brother the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). I adopt both his reasoning and his conclusions. It is hard to improve on anything so good as his speech yesterday, and I am not going to attempt it. I have a few observations to make with respect to the resolution, on which so much has been said of great importance.

This resolution provides for an addition to the British North America Act—which is our Constitution—in the form of an express provision that judges of district and county courts hereafter shall be removable by the Governor General on an address of the Senate and the House of Commons. Their appointment heretofore has always been under a statute of this Parliament that dates back to 1882, a mere matter of 78 years. Their removal, and there have been very few instances, has brought no charge of partiality or undue publicity; in fact, it has worked satisfactorily.

The Government intends by this address to fix the age of compulsory retirement of district and county court judges so as to make it part of the British North America Act.

The Parliament of Canada has exercised the necessary legislative authority over the appointment of the district and county court judges for 78 years. Surely by this time it is confirmed by both precedent and practice. Furthermore, the judges have been subject to an act of this Parliament providing for compulsory retirement at the age of 75 years since 1913, a period of 47 years. We are free, and we always have been free, to amend our own statute dealing with conditions of employment of district and county court judges, since we first began to appoint them. Now in the year 1960, almost three generations after the passing of the Statute of Westminster, it is proposed by this resolution to incorporate into the British North America Act rights that belong to us without challenge. We ask why, and we are told that there are doubts about their legality in the minds of some persons in the Justice Department. Well, it is time that this doubtful doubt was resolved in favour of the people of Canada, and not Westminster. The doubting Thomases in the Justice Department cannot be allowed to write our Constitution. If we adopt what is presented to us today, a change in the tenure or conditions of employment of district and county court judges would in future have to be agreed to by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. We of our own free will and accord, if we pass this resolution in its present form, ask for limitation of our own powers which we have exercised almost from the birth of this country. We replace our Parliament, in this particular instance, with the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It seems to me that in this day and age only a man from Mars would suggest that. To me, it is unbelievable, unthinkable and unexplainable. Of course, by this time honourable senators will have readily come to the conclusion that I do not intend to support the address in so far as it pertains to district and county court judges.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The imagination of this generation—my generation, anyway—has been touched by a Bill of Rights. On the one hand, we are handed a bill of rights, which we welcome—I particularly welcome—and then we are asked to give up powers that belong to Parliament, send them across the sea to Westminster—powers, as I say, that we have exercised for 78 years—and to take what for me is obviously a backward and uncertain step into the realm of colonialism.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: We ceased to have colonial status in 1931. It was then that we undeniably gained equal rank with all other countries within the commonwealth, and the Statute of Westminster was the legal step that capped the arch. It declared us to be equal in status, in no way subordinate in any aspect of our domestic or external life. To pass this resolution in its present form would be to take a humiliating and retrograde step. It asks Westminster to do that which we have the right to do, and have always had the right to do. As for myself, I find it both distressing and humiliating that Canada should be the only dominion that has to turn to Westminster to amend its Constitution. Of all the members of the commonwealth—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Ghana, and Malaya—Canada is the only one which has not the right to amend its own Constitution.

How would you undertake to explain this to other members of the commonwealth who look upon us as the senior member of the commonwealth? How can you explain this to members of the United Nations who hold us in such high regard and respect and esteem? And yes, how can you explain it to the Canadian people—how can you explain to them or to yourself the proposition, so ably put by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) yesterday, that when all the provinces and the dominion are in full agreement on a matter of consequence to our Constitution we should still have to go to Westminster in order to obtain approval? No one would believe it and they would stare at you, almost to the point of asking you what kind of people govern this country that would stand for that sort of condition.

Now, if we are, as I believe we are, an independent country, the more often we assert that claim and the more often we put it into practice the better it will be. This is an opportunity that I am not going to pass up.

I got thinking about this matter last night. I was impressed by the speech made by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and by other speeches too. They kept bothering me and I got to thinking about the whole matter. I asked myself how it was that people did not get so involved and so wrought up about this thing as I was, and then some words came to my mind and I went to look them up. They are words that were spoken by a great Canadian, and some of you may immediately recognize who said them. They are:

> I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think is right, free to oppose what I think is wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country; this heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind.

I am sure that everybody knows these words were uttered by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of this country a week or ten days ago. These are very inspiring words. They moved me, and they moved me to do just what I propose to do. I ask you to remember particularly his words, "free to choose those who shall govern my country". I choose Canadians to govern my country. I am not going to be a party to liquidating, eroding or diluting our Constitution. Not through me will Canadians lose their independence and sovereignty. I am not prepared to repatriate to Westminster yet more power over Canadian sovereignty. I want what is still at Westminster to be returned to my country now or as quickly as possible. Certainly I intend to hold what we have, and in order to strike a blow for independence and for sovereignty and in the interest of protecting what we have at the present time I offer the following amendment.

I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Power, that the motion be further amended in the proposed section 99, as follows:

> That the words "district and county" be deleted from line 2 of subsection (1) and that the words "district or county" be deleted from line 1 of subsection (2).

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, it is probably true that we have had under debate in this chamber resolutions and bills which were more important than the resolution now under discussion, but in a long period of parliamentary life—some 20 years in the Senate, and a little longer in the House of Commons—I cannot recall a more brilliant debate, made, in large part, by men of high legal attainments. The debate has been on a high level, well reasoned, and moderate in the expression of opposing views.

Perhaps the debate has had that high standard because it was carried on largely by members of the legal profession. Therefore, so humble a layman as myself might well hesitate to inject himself into a discussion of that nature, and I do not intend to do so. There are, however, two aspects of the resolution which, to my mind, lend themselves to the application of ordinary good judgment, plain common sense and good Canadianism.

One aspect is the provision that judges of the superior court should retire at the age of 75 years; the other is that the British Parliament be requested to amend the British North America Act to the effect that this Parliament has the constitutional right to deal with our judges, as proposed, and to remove any doubt as to the course taken in the past. I shall deal with the compulsory retirement matter first.

The senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), who is not in the chamber today, contended very strongly indeed, and in impassioned language, that the appointment of these judges during good behaviour implied a contract that is good for life, and, therefore, if this resolution passed and the British North America Act was amended as requested the result would be a breach of promise—not in the way we often speak of it—a definite breach of contract, which in his opinion is entirely wrong and indefensible. I think there was only one other member of the Senate, namely, the senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard), who supported the argument that this was a contract and was incapable of being terminated in the way suggested here.

On the other hand, the senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) made an eloquent speech in this house last evening, a speech which I cannot adequately and fully describe. It was full of common sense, well prepared and reasonable in every respect. Yet he took the view exactly opposite that of the two previous senators I have mentioned.

My friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) today stated he was not in agreement at all with his colleague from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and did not regard the appointment of judges as a solemn contract.

I do not wish to make any invidious comparisons of speeches, because for the most part they were eloquent and brilliant. But I must say that I was particularly impressed with the views expressed by the senator from Inkerman. So, in the face of conflicting opinions of the two eminent lawyers I have just mentioned, I feel inclined to agree with my friend from Inkerman. After hearing his speech last evening—and I have heard him on many occasions before—I am not at all surprised that he is this year heading the bar of the province of Quebec.

I am proceeding on the assumption that this Parliament has not only the legal right, but the moral right, to retire judges at the age of 75 years. I am in favour of that part of the resolution. I reach that conclusion on the one definite principle that the public interest is the paramount consideration in this case.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: In my view, it is true in a general way that men at 75, and sometimes even at a lower age, find that both their physical and mental powers begin to wane. Of course, there are exceptions to that rule, but in a general way I believe it is true. Perhaps in saying that I am making a remarkable admission under all the circumstances, being myself above the magic and tragic age of 75 years.

Judges are in an unusually responsible and important position, as compared with any other officials in the country. The power of a judge in the administration of justice is so great, and has or may have such an effect on individuals, that surely it is an absolute necessity that he be competent to perform his duties in every way.

By the way, it strikes me as rather a peculiarity that for some three-quarters of a century we have been retiring county and district court judges at 75 years, and judges of the Supreme Court of Canada are subject to the same limitation, yet the same limitation is not placed upon judges of the intermediate courts. As I say, the limitation applies, on the one hand, to the judges of the highest court in the land, and, on the other hand, to the judges of the county and district courts.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It also applies to judges of the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I fail to see why we should not have uniformity in this respect among all judges.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I suggest that the explanation is that the control seems to be in the hands of the imperial Parliament. This is a very good illustration of the effect of our local affairs being in a distant Parliament rather than in our own.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Quite so. But, if it be desirable, as I think it is, that judges should be retired at 75 years, I am surprised that application has not been made to the Parliament in Great Britain to amend the British North America Act so that we might have uniformity in the matter of retirement of judges of all courts.

Since the judges themselves are not opposed to this retirement age—according to my friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), and I think he knows—and since the pension allowance seems fairly adequate and reasonable, and since I am sure the public would approve of retirement of all judges at 75 years, in the general public interest, I am in favour of that part of the resolution.

With regard to the proposal to ask the Parliament of Great Britain to change the British North America Act to ensure that the proposed legislation is constitutional, I feel this would be a retrograde step, and especially so with the inclusion in that act of the proposed provision respecting appointment of county and district court judges. For 57 years, as has been stated here—in fact, I believe it is longer than that—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Seventy-eight years.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Yes; for 78 years the Canadian Government has had the authority to make these appointments, and has made them, and no one to my knowledge has ever questioned its power to do so. Why abrogate that power now? The only person who has apparently raised the constitutional point is the Minister of Justice who is, perhaps, advised by his officials. But why make a change now? As the senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) so eloquently and forcefully asked last night, why increase the power of a Parliament in another country and, by the same token, diminish the power of our own Parliament? I think most of us would prefer that there be no Parliament, even the British Parliament, that could in any way whatsoever place us in a subordinate position with regard to our own affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Lawyers, notably, and courts like to be governed by precedents. I have not quite the respect for precedent that some lawyers seem to have, but apparently precedents very often make law, and surely the fact that a practice has been carried on for 78 years should in itself make the practice constitutional.

I am not going to get into a constitutional argument in this regard, but if I may make an analogy I would point out that practice or custom is an important factor in our language also. Words that are slang in their origin become through general use recognized words in the English language. Even the editorial writers of today are using the word "raise" as a noun when they mean an increase. That is offensive to me, but it has apparently been recognized because use makes it right. I do not think it will be very long before the word "guy" will become respectable. Another example is that today we use the expression: "It is me" instead of the correct but pedantic: "It is I." So, if there had ever been any doubt, which no one other than the Minister of Justice had, as to the legality of our appointment and retirement of county and district court judges, then surely 78 years of use have made our practice, if not legal, at least correct. I am, therefore, in favour of the amendment to delete the words "county and district courts" from the resolution by reason of their being unnecessary and contrary to our dignity as an independent nation.

While in conversation with our American friends from time to time I usually mention the fact, when they ask me questions with regard to our autonomy, about which they do not seem to have a correct idea at all, that I am proud of the fact that in recent years we have been to all intents and purposes an independent country, and that the only authority we acknowledge is the Queen of Canada, who is also the Queen of England. It is a little difficult to maintain that position when we find we still have to obtain permission from the British Parliament to do something which our boasted autonomy should permit us to do.

I would like to see the Prime Minister carry out very soon the implied promise he made when he expressed his hope of bringing about some method by which we could amend our own Constitution without any exception whatsoever. I wish he could receive the support of the provinces which is necessary, apparently, in that regard, so that the differences between the federal Government and the provinces would no longer have to be referred to the Parliament at Westminster but would be settled by the Supreme Court of Canada, the highest judicial authority in this country. Only in that way will we be completely autonomous.

I asked a question of one who ought to know, and he gave me an answer which I hope is correct. I asked: "What is the situation in Australia, which is constituted very much as Canada is, although Australia is composed of a number of states instead of provinces? Australia has a federal Government, and so, I think, has South Africa. Are these countries under the necessity of applying to the British Parliament for a change in their Constitutions?" The reply I received was that they have complete power and authority to change their Constitution in any way that they may find advisable.

I say that final disposition of disputes or differences between our provinces and the federal authority should be made by our own

Supreme Court of Canada. Surely, all Canadians should have confidence in the fairness, competence and objectivity of this highest court in the land and should not remain in the rather humiliating and subordinate position of preferring the power of another Parliament to that of their own. The colonial status that is implied in this part of the resolution is repugnant to me. Let us not recognize it any more than is necessary and endeavour to obtain the undoubted right to amend our Constitution in every respect, with no exceptions whatsoever.

In conclusion, I am going to make a suggestion which may startle the members of this house. I would even support complete repeal of the British North America Act and its replacement by a strictly Canadian Constitution that would preserve all the rights the provinces now have and thus ensure that we are masters in our own house.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, it is with much diffidence that I enter the realm of this debate. The discussion has been of a very high order. It has been marked by great clarity and much learning, as one would expect of discussion by men holding high positions in legal and other circles of Canada. It is thus almost with apology that I rise to try to dispel the feeling that the manner by which we are trying to put the resolution into effect is taking us back to the days of colonialism and subservience.

We have been told that the sovereignty of Canada will be impugned by sending this resolution to the British Parliament. I shall not take much time upon this point. I dealt at length with the sovereignty of Canada in my speeches of April 6 and May 12 of this year. I said then that the British North America Act must be read in the light of the Statute of Westminster, so that wherever the word "Queen" occurs in the British North America Act it should now read "Queen of Canada", whereas in 1867 it meant the Queen of England. Some weeks ago the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) claimed that section 56 of the British North America Act is derogatory to the sovereignty of Canada in that it provides for the forwarding of each act of the Canadian Parliament to the Queen in Council and that any such act may be disallowed within two years of its passing. Certainly this is the one and only section of the act wherein the Queen in Council means the Queen of England, and my learned and honourable friend from De la Durantaye was right in his contention. However, by the convention of the Imperial Conference of 1930, this section became obsolete, ineffectual and unnecessary. Like my honourable friend from De la Durantaye I feel that, although it is innocuous, it should be taken from the statute books, for at the present time it is not altogether what one may call a nice-looking or nice-sounding phrase to have on our statute books. Its appearance is against it.

The British North America Act was kept outside the ambit of the Statute of Westminster at the request of Canadian statesmen. Otherwise, keeping the act in force would be a direct antithesis of the purport and the real meaning of the Statute of Westminster. The reason for this request was that the British North America Act is the charter that regulates the relationship between the federal Parliament and the provincial Legislatures. It sets out the rights of the federal authorities and the provincial authorities. It is, in effect, a makeshift only and will exist until, and only until, Canada decides to ask for the repeal of the British North America Act and passes another act in its own Parliament which will form a new charter to regulate the rights and duties of the federal authorities and the provincial authorities. But while the makeshift exists, if Canada wants to repeal any section of the British North America Act it must request the British Parliament to do so. If the request is made, what happens? There is no doubt that the British Parliament regards itself only as a cipher, and what is requested is immediately granted. I hope I shall be pardoned for repeating what I said in my speech of May 12, as reported at page 579 of Hansard:

> There is not the slightest doubt that if Canada wants the repeal of the British North America Act carried out, or any amendment made, this will be done as a matter of course.
>
> Dawson, in his book, The Government of Canada, at page 148, explained the position clearly. In speaking of the situation brought about by the attempt at a Dominion-Provincial Conference in 1935 to provide a remedy for some change in the act, which was dropped because of the opposition of New Brunswick, he says:
>
> The scheme came to grief over the apportionment of clauses among the different amending authorities, which was, of course, the crux of the matter. It need scarcely be added that if a solution is found, the most relieved body will be the British Parliament. The present system imposes on it a thankless task, one in which it has no responsibility, but which may at any time expose it to criticism and attack from a dissatisfied province. "As a matter of mere legal machinery" said the British Solicitor-General with weary resignation, "it is still necessary, until some better method is evolved for amendment of the British North America Act, for the extension of the Canadian powers to be passed by this Parliament. But our Parliament, in passing such legislation, is merely carrying out the wishes of the Dominion Parliament and in that way the legal position is made to square with the constitutional position... We must operate the old machinery which has been left over at their request in accordance with their wishes."

I should be surprised if anybody thought that this showed any lack of sovereignty in Canada.

If we must have another charter setting out the respective rights of the dominion Parliament and the provinces, then let it be drafted, but it will be a difficult task and will take much time and statesmanship. There is no doubt that, according to the remarks I have just read, the British Parliament would welcome such a change. But let me add that those who talk easily and glibly about doing away with the British North America Act should realize that some other document must be drafted to take its place. There would have to be discussions as to whether all the provinces must unanimously agree with any proposed amendment or whether if one province disagreed it could prevent something that the other nine provinces wanted.

Those who drafted the British North America Act must have been men of first-class statesmanship, for that act has stood the test of time, almost 100 years, and it will be difficult to draft a charter to take its place. A change may come, but let it not come until some other effective and proper document is ready to take its place.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, I regret I was not here when the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) spoke on this resolution last week, but I have carefully read the speech in Hansard and it impressed me greatly. It was, in my opinion, one of the ablest speeches on such a subject I have ever read. The facts and data the honourable senator placed before the chamber with regard to this motion are very convincing. To prepare such an address, I know, took a great deal of time, research and hard work and I wish the honourable senator were here so I could congratulate him personally upon his most excellent contribution to this debate.

It is also my desire to compliment the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) upon his excellent speech of yesterday afternoon in which be covered the constitutional rights of Canada, and with which I agree.

It would seem to me that the passing of this motion in its present form would prepare the way for the breaking of a solemn understanding with our superior court justices now on the bench. It is all right for new appointees to the bench to be retired at 75, for they will know what their contract is when appointed, but those who are now there have a distinct understanding that they were appointed for life or as long as they could carry out their duties efficiently. I know that in the province I come from we have had to appeal to some successful lawyers to accept appointments as judges, for at the time they were appointed they were making a great deal more from the practice of their profession than the salary of a judge.

A judge, when appointed, takes a solemn oath. He has to set himself aside and lead a different life from the rest of us. He cannot mix up in business in any way. He has to break all business connections. In fact, even his right to vote is taken away from him. Therefore, he has nothing to say in the affairs of the country from a political standpoint. The great majority of judges have only their salary to live on, and they have to keep up a certain standard of living. None of the judges I know have been able to save any money. They have to buy a great many law books and to attend law society meetings in different parts of the country at their own expense. In return for setting themselves aside in this way they received a life appointment as a judge. Now to force their retirement at 75, when they are in good health and efficiently carrying out their duties, is not only breaking the solemn understanding they had when appointed, but for the most of them it means a sudden reduction in their standard of living. A compromise might be that if they are going to be forced into retirement at 75, they should at least be retired on full salary.

I understand it has always been in the power of the Government to retire justices if they have been incapacitated. I do not think the legislation which this resolution would prepare the way for is at all fair. As the present judges accepted appointment on a solemn understanding, and have fulfilled their part of it, the Government should certainly carry out its part of the bargain and not turn its back on them.

One of the greatest justices America ever had, if not the greatest, was Oliver Wendell Holmes of the Supreme Court of the United States, known as "The Great Dissenter". He sat on the bench until he was around 90 years of age, and his opinions on law were highly regarded everywhere; many of his judgments, handed down in his later years, are quoted time and again today. He trained quite a number of young lawyers, who afterwards were appointed to the Supreme Court of his country.

My own experience in doing business in many countries has been that a contract is a contract and should not be rejected or repudiated by either party without mutual consent. The very foundation of our commercial system is straightforwardness. In private business we have learned from experience that the keeping of one's word always pays off, and the breaking of one's obligations leads to disrespect and trouble.

I listened with great interest to the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) last evening in this chamber. His was a fine address, but one part I could not agree with and that was about written contracts. It is probably quite true that the superior court judges now on the bench have no so-called written contract, but differentiating between a written contract and a verbal understanding is splitting hairs. When we in the Senate were called to this honourable body we had confidence that we were appointed for life. The same applies to our superior court justices on the bench at present. They had confidence that they were appointed for life, and quite rightly so. If not, we all have been living in a Jack Daw's paradise since Confederation.

A very large portion of private business is carried on without any written contract at all. I would say one half is done on understanding and confidence. All stock exchange transactions are entered into verbally, Dealings with investment houses are somewhat the same. As to bank credit, a banker agrees with an individual or company that the bank will advance a line of credit of several thousands of dollars or a million or so. There is no written contract, but the bank will honour the borrower's cheques for the full line of credit unless there is a subsequent mutual agreement otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Don't you sign a note when you get money from the bank?

Hon. Mr. McLean: During the great monetary squeeze last summer I know a corporation that had a line of credit for several millions of dollars. As it had not used its full line of credit the bank contacted the company and asked what it wished to do. The bank could lend to deserving borrowers any balance not needed by the company, as money was extremely tight. Whatever was to be done would be mutual agreement. That is the way private business is carried on.

Surely superior court judges do not have to take second place to officials of Crown companies. All are paid with the taxpayers' money. Some officials of Crown companies receive double the salary of our justices or more, and we often hear it said that such officials cannot be retired before their contract expires, although I believe some have outlived their usefulness. Here I might say that age is not a safe measuring stick of one's efficiency or usefulness in any particular job. I have learned this from experience covering many years, and I feel strongly that this motion should be substantially modified before it is passed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Question.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, our Senate house is at present giving its attention to a most important question in relation to the proposed address to be presented to Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom for the enactment of an amendment to section 99 of the British North America Act. The substance of the whole question is aimed at determining that Canadian judges of the superior, district or county courts, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this act, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of 75 years, or upon the coming into force of this act, if at that time they have already attained that age.

Again, without much noise, as usual, our Senate is proceeding to fulfil a great national task in connection with the Canadian judicature toward maintaining throughout the country the high standard of judges to administer the law in the superior courts of all the provinces. In fact, we are actually participating in a most useful debate, and one of the most interesting that we have had in this branch of Parliament for many years. I am pleased to declare that I was much impressed all during this debate. I have learned to a large extent about many legal, constitutional and national aspects of the problem we are discussing. I have been impressed by the competency and the fairness of mind of all honourable members who spoke, and the great national usefulness of the Senate as one of the two legislative branches of the Canadian Government.

Hon. Mr. Power: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Surely, in the public opinion we do not suffer from a lack of criticism against our house. While considered criticism is a good thing in a democracy, the public may often not be sufficiently informed that this House of Parliament has in our national life a necessary function which it fulfils adequately. True, senators are not elected, and they are not directly responsible to a particular constituency. When they speak in this house they do not feel that they should do so as if they were on a public platform at an election meeting. They are freer to consider quietly and with reasonable serenity the merits, the real substance, of the questions submitted to them. Surely we are not here to defeat systematically the essence of the legislative proposals that the country has approved at general elections. Conversely, it is not expected from us that we should blindly approve, and particularly in all details, the legislation submitted by the Government. Our functions, to my mind, are, first, to seriously study every piece of legislation on its merits and, even when it is approved in substance, to oppose such particular features, clauses or expressions that could be inconsistent with or destructive of the main object of the matter under discussion.

The composition of the Senate is diversified indeed. We have here statesmen of long experience and long training, either in Parliament or in other phases of public life. We have professional men of great knowledge in the medical, scientific, engineering, economic and other fields, all able to give proper and cogent advice on technical or economic questions in debates before the house or committees, and as well in preparatory work and discussions. We have lawyers and barristers of special training and ability and of corresponding reputation from all provinces, who are able to discuss all the legal aspects, and, may I say, difficulties and intricacies resulting from a great mass of legislation, public as well as private, that is continuously developing in our Parliament. We have also a great number of successful businessmen who, possibly without claiming to have university degrees, have had long experience in business, and therefore in dealing with many kinds of human problems. Moreover, I will not fail to mention as a very important part of our body the senior senators, men of wide experience who may not speak often, but who in private consultation and discussion with other senators rarely fail to give the sound advice of wise men.

I am happy that this very important and brilliant debate has given me the opportunity to remind and emphasize for Canadians at large the very sound and useful role, not sufficiently known indeed, played by the Senate in the legislative direction of our country.

Honourable senators, since this motion has been on the Order Paper I have considered trying to participate in a substantial way in this debate. Unfortunately, owing to some matters of a private nature which detained me for quite a time and prevented me from keeping up my usual attendance at our deliberations, I was too late to try to make preparation worthy of this honourable assembly as well as of the fascinating subject-matter we are now dealing with. Happily enough, I have come to realize during these last few days, in following the very substantial and interesting speeches by honourable senators, that the numerous questions involved in the proposed address have been completely and satisfactorily covered, so that every Canadian may be fully informed on the problem at issue.

In referring to the speeches which have been delivered here, and in order to avoid repetition of what was so ably said, I beg the indulgence of honourable senators if I refer to only one of those speeches, that of the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). The honourable senator is close to me. He is a prominent member of our Quebec bar and, as honourable senators know, he was this year unanimously elected Bâtonnier of the bar of Montreal. Shortly afterwards he was further elevated at the bar and elected Bâtonnier Général of the whole province of Quebec. As we are all aware of his great knowledge of civil, commercial and constitutional law, and of his intellectual stature, fairness and unbiased mind, we are not surprised that he delivered yesterday such a clear and convincing pronouncement on all the essential topics of the question now at issue.

Being myself a former Bâtonnier Général of the province of Quebec bar, I am very happy to declare that I am in full agreement with the honourable senator from Inkerman on almost all the essential points of his speech. I have no hesitation in saying that, through his masterly interpretation of those difficult and fascinating questions of our constitutional law, he has brought great honour on the whole bar of our province of Quebec and has once more done justice to his great reputation as a legal counsel and legist. I hasten to add here an expression of my satisfaction in listening to the very interesting and diversified speeches of all honourable senators.

I wish to mention also that not only myself, but another barrister here, the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), is also a former Bâtonnier Général of the Quebec bar, and undoubtedly appreciates the very high esteem in which the honourable senator from Inkerman is held by his fellow barristers of our province.

I now come to the question at issue, and I shall try to be brief. Firstly, as to the opportunity of reducing the tenure of office of judges to the age of 75 years, there seems to be no real issue on that point, though in some speeches it has been said that it is unfair to retire judges who are still alert. That may apply perhaps in most cases, while in others it may not. It may even be that some younger judges are not alert. Judges cannot be classified solely by age. Therefore, I appeal to the good sense and experience of honourable senators by saying that we have to fix an age limit for retirement. In the past it was fixed at 80 years. Today, for the Supreme Court of Canada and some other courts the retiring age is fixed at 75 years. I feel that at this time, with the ever-increasing burden of work placed on judges, the proposal before us is a reasonable one, and we should find a way to fix retirement at the age of 75 years.

The speeches we have heard reveal that in all provinces there is a desire to terminate the careers of judges at the age of 75 years. Moreover, it has been a subject of constant recommendation by the Canadian Bar Association. That organization, fully informed as it is, may be said to have no authority under our Constitution to amend laws even about our judiciary. As far as the administration of justice generally is concerned, one could say that they are not the only persons who are interested. It could be said, without giving offence, that the first interest resides in the public at large, which is directly represented by parliament. However, no one would contend that the importance of the consistent recommendations of the Canadian Bar Association, whose members are trained and experienced advisors, and are barristers pleading before the courts, should be minimized.

My second topic is with respect to jurisdiction in the matter of courts and the appointment of judges. Sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act deal with the respective matters which are assigned exclusively to the Parliament of Canada and to the provincial legislatures. It is clear, and it has been emphasized in the debate, that paragraph 14 of section 92 contains a provision which gives exclusive jurisdiction to the provinces to make laws in relation generally to the administration of justice in the provinces, including—and I ask honourable senators to please note these words: " . . . including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts". These words are very wide and comprehensive. There could hardly be any broader power than this, which is in respect to "the constitution maintenance and organization of provincial courts". There could be no clearer implication than that as to the power to organize and maintain the establishment and functioning of courts. In that respect there can be no possible dispute. I contend that the appointment of judges is part of the constitution, maintenance and organization of courts of justice, and under that section that right belongs to the province.

It has been said that, despite the provision to which I have referred, there are other sections of the act which apparently give authority to the federal Parliament. If I may, I shall proceed with matters in the order in which I have arranged them, and return to that point.

I now pass on to section 91 which assigns certain powers to the federal authority. Paragraph 27 of that section contains these words:

> The Criminal Law, except the Constitution of Courts of Criminal Jurisdiction, but including the Procedure in Criminal Matters.

I suggest, honourable senators, these words are so precise and particular that there can be no doubt that this is an exception to the general rule under paragraph 14 of section 92 giving the residual, or the general powers, to the provinces to constitute, organize and maintain courts.

I should now call your attention, honourable senators, to those six sections under the heading "VII—Judicature", namely sections 96 to 101 inclusive. They clearly indicate to me that they are only particular exceptions to the general rule assigning to the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces the constitution, organization and maintenance of superior courts in the provinces.

Being exceptions, those articles should be construed and interpreted restrictively.

Section 96 provides that:

> The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

While a general direction of the law can be applied generally, here we have our exception to the general rule respecting the assignment to the provinces exclusively of the legislative power to organize and maintain provincial superior courts. But the exception is restricted to the appointment of judges.

The next section of interest to us on this occasion is section 99, which is the subject-matter of the resolution now before us. It reads:

> The Judges of the Superior Courts shall hold Office during good Behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

It does not say that tenure of office during good behaviour means appointment for life. Some of my statements may cause surprise, but I shall explain later. The text of the act says that judges "shall hold office during good behaviour". It has been stated, and it is a matter for discussion, that such an appointment may not be properly regarded as a permanent appointment.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I interrupt my honourable friend? Might we take it that good behaviour ceases at the age of 75 years, and then we could reconcile the two?

Hon. Mr. Monette: Good behaviour may cease at 75 or 80, or even at 55 years. If a judge ceases to have good behaviour at the age of 55 or 65 years, can it be said that he is still carrying on under his appointment? I submit he is not. If we are to interpret that according to the text, it means that the moment a judge does not maintain good behaviour he is no longer justified in holding the appointment. Then, what is the power that can take that appointment away? If no other remedy is given, then the Government could cause an investigation to be made to discover if such judge is maintaining good behaviour; and if the investigation proves that he is not, the Government of the day could make a decision on the facts and declare that such person is no longer a judge.

Section 99 goes on:

> ... but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Here it is provided that judges can be removed on an address. But shall they be removed for lack of good behaviour only, or does that mean that any judge could be removed on an address for any reason? Do not fail, honourable senators, to read that again. It says that the judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons. This must mean an addition to the case of good behaviour. I am taking the words strictly, and that section could be taken to mean that although they are holding their office and maintaining good behaviour they are subject to being removed by the process indicated in that section. I am not saying we should take that view; I am just indicating the doubts that exist in the sections of the act.

Section 100 speaks of salaries, allowances and pensions of the judges which are to be fixed by the federal Parliament. The resolution before us does not deal with that. It is sufficient to remark, as was remarked before, that when we come to fixing pensions of judges who are retired before their death, then it will be for Parliament to consider what pensions they are entitled to. Indeed, Parliament has passed the Judges Act, and in that act we find what is the allowance or pension that is to be given to judges when they are retired.

On that I wish to conclude and submit that those sections 96 to 101 do not make a clear exception to the fundamental rule of class 14 of section 92, which gives the provinces exclusive jurisdiction as to the constitution of courts, the maintenance of them and the seeing to it that they are well organized and able to proceed with their task.

Another point is as to whether there is a contract. It was argued on both sides that there is a contract, and that there is not a contract. The last speaker on that point very eloquently and clearly contended that it is not only the written contract that we should consider. I agree that there may be a contract without any writing, and, happily, I do not remember having heard any senator saying that there should be a written contract. I agree that if there were all the elements of what we call a contract, or a final understanding—even an oral one—that would be sufficient for discussing the question.

But, is this a contract? I admit that in the circumstances of the appointment of judges there are some elements that pertain to a contract, but not all the elements. A contract is an understanding arrived at between parties on a number of topics on which all the parties completely agree. Therefore, there should be full agreement between the parties to the contract, and as to all the points mentioned or involved in the contract.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a question? Could a judge sue for his salary? Could a judge, if he were not paid for some reason or other, take action for the recovery of his salary?

Hon. Mr. Monette: That is an important question. If the honourable senator does not mind I will deal with it in the process of my speech. If I appear to forget it, I hope he will remind me.

I would first like to enunciate the basis of my argument. A contract is some agreement between two or more parties who all agree consciously on all the points that there are in the contract. With respect to the appointment of a judge there is not what I would call an invitation, but there is a command issued by the state which is represented by the authority of the Government. A command is given to a man in the community to come, and that man accepts. He can refuse, but it is a command. It is a command coming from the high authority of the state to come and fulfil a function created by the public legislation of the state. It is not a contract of hiring. Are we suggesting that it is a mere contract of hiring a man, or an employee? Is a judge an employee? When he is appointed, and if he wants to accept the appointment, he is not at liberty to discuss terms and conditions.

First of all, judges are appointed under sections 96 and 99, and they are appointed not by Parliament but by the Governor in Council. It is the Governor in Council who appoints the judges of the superior court of any province. The Governor in Council is the authority, but is he the authority to give the judge instructions as to the way he should execute his duties? Not at all. Has the Governor in Council the authority to tell the judge what he has to do? Not at all. He appoints him to fulfil a function in an institution of public order which is created by the province under class 14 of section 92, not by the federal authority.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask again: Has Parliament the right to tell him what to do?

Hon. Mr. Monette: No; Parliament has a right to remove him for reasons given in the Constitution. He is not dependent on any instructions from either of the houses of Parliament, or the Government, but if he fails to maintain good behaviour he is subject to the remedies provided for in the Constitution. He is still the master of the extent of his work and the way he does it, under the laws of the province in which he is appointed. There are provincial laws under and according to which judges exercise their functions, but the provincial Government is not a party to any so-called contract for the appointment of a judge.

I do not intend to delay the house at this time, but I would point out that a judge is not an employee. He is not a contractual party with the Government, but he is one who has been chosen by the Government alone. He may have endeavoured to seek appointment, but it is the Government alone which appoints. The terms of employment are not discussed but are settled by public law in both the federal and provincial jurisdictions.

Like others who have spoken, I do not believe there is any contract here and I would advise honourable senators not to minimize the functions of our judges and reduce their status to that of employees or to that of co-contracting parties. Judges are high officers, appointed to important positions in the administration of justice in this country.

As an illustration I would refer to my own appointment to the Senate. Before doing so I would assure my honourable colleagues that I at no time sought appointment to this house. As you all know, sometimes it happens that before a person is appointed to the Senate he has been in conversation, either directly or indirectly, with some minister. These conversations sometimes occur but there is never a complete understanding on the appointment. The expectant person remains in the waiting until he learns that he has been given the command. In any event, such conversations do not alter the fact that when a man is summoned to the Senate it is a command.

I never hoped, even after the success of my party in the second last general election, to be appointed to this august assembly. As a matter of fact, I always felt the Government would rather appoint people for their present usefulness rather than for anything they may have tried to do in the past. In this I am sincere. Around the time of my appointment I had gone into the woods for a long holiday, some 24 miles beyond normal means of communication. The newspapers had mentioned my name along with many others as being prospective nominees for appointment to the Senate, and my wife was aware of this. But I was not hopeful. While I was in the forest my wife received a communication requesting my presence in Ottawa. She endeavoured to get in touch with me, but to no avail. She was then requested to see if someone could possibly find me so that I could be in Ottawa the following day. My wife understood the urgency of the message and finally was able to communicate with me, and as a result I came to Ottawa the next day, the very day Parliament opened, and was sworn in as a senator. There had been no preliminary discussions and certainly no contractual understanding. I was simply summoned by command.

In dealing with the matter now before the Senate, the so-called sanctity of a contract should not, in my opinion, enter into the discussion. Quite properly the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Huggessen) has explained, as other honourable senators have done, that, purely on a basis of fair play, there should be some understanding under which serving judges who are to be retired will be compensated. There should be some understanding so that they would not be put out of office without sufficient notification and without adequate compensation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Such as the Government of 1930 did.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I suppose so, yes. I have not had time to review all the issues involved; I am merely speaking my mind and saying that we should be fair to the serving judges who are to be retired. At the same time I think it is the considered opinion of each province that the retirement age of judges should be fixed at 75 years. In order to accomplish this we have to pass a law. Then it becomes a question of whether such an amendment to our Constitution rightfully lies in the hands of the federal authority alone or in the hands of the federal and provincial authorities together, or whether it remains in the hands of the imperial Parliament at Westminster. Is not all this sufficient for us to recognize that there are doubts about these questions? Is it not sufficient to mention, as many have done, that in the case of doubt as to the respective meanings of sections 92 (14), 96 and 99 of the British North America Act, section 92 should prevail? Is it not enough to say that we have to extend in some way the meaning of the words used in those exceptions created by sections 96 to 99 inclusive, if we want to conclude that we can by-pass the provinces in trying to amend our Constitution? I do not feel that way.

I agree that the Supreme Court of Canada would have authority to decide this question in law. But would it do so without causing the provinces to be impleaded? Would it do so if it felt as we feel that the provinces have an interest or clear rights? I maintain they have these rights and can say, "We want these courts to be maintained and we consider the appointment and age of judges as being the most essential part in maintaining the courts."

The provinces have the right to a voice in this matter and the Government of the day has felt they would be deprived of this right unless it took the action that is contemplated in this resolution. I do not quarrel with honourable senators because of the stand they have taken in this matter, and certainly we should never venture to make amendments that might later be declared to be unsound. But we should not venture to ignore the provinces in seeking an amendment to our constitution, and I think the Minister of Justice has acted properly in framing this resolution as it exists. I feel it is a good one. I feel that although it was opposed in some ways in the Senate, the lack of partisanship shown all the way along in the debate by all senators here justifies us in hoping that this resolution will be adopted.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear. Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: It has been moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Haig, that an humble address—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Power, that the motion be further amended in the proposed section 99, as follows:

That the words "district and county" be deleted from line 2 of subsection (1), and the words "district or county" be deleted from line 1 of subsection (2).

Is it your pleasure to adopt the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Carried.

Some Hon. Senators: Aye.

Amendment agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the main motion, as amended?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As amended, carried.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion, as amended, agreed to, on division.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's Centennial Year 1967, and suggesting that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future.—(Honourable Senator Crerar, P.C.).

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, I do not propose to speak to this inquiry. I have to go home tomorrow evening. I do not know what procedure should be followed now in regard to this order, but if the Clerk of the house can conveniently put my speech aside for the time being, I shall gladly accept his action.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I take it that the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) does not intend to speak to the inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then I move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I wish to make a statement with regard to the business for tomorrow. Owing to the fact that we have dealt with everything on the Order Paper except items No. 4 and 5, I would like the first order for tomorrow to be the second reading of the Department of Forestry Bill, after that the second reading of the bill to amend the Judges Act. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Agreeable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Is it intended that the Judges Bill should go to committee after it has received second reading?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have been sending most of the bills to committee. I do not think there is any objection to that procedure.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I might say it is not likely that the Judges Act will be proceeded with until late in the afternoon, and in all likelihood I shall adjourn the debate on second reading, or someone else probably will do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Which means that it would not go to committee—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It would not go to committee tomorrow; but after that I will insist that the bill go to committee. I have a few suggestions to make, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would you be willing to proceed with your speech on Friday?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It will be impossible for me to be here on Friday. As a matter of fact, I have an engagement in Hamilton tomorrow night which I must keep.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wish to get the Government legislation advanced as far as possible, as I have heard rumours that prorogation might take place about the end of next week. I do not want to be behind with the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You will catch up quickly.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We shall proceed tomorrow, then, with the Department of Forestry Bill, and then commence the debate on the Judges Bill. I do not think it will be necessary to sit this evening.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

799551-1—67½

APPENDIX

(See p. 1038)

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON LAND USE

Wednesday, July 13, 1960

The Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada make their second report as follows:—

1. ORDER OF REFERENCE

The following resolution was adopted on February 11, 1960, by the Senate:—

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to consider and report on land use in Canada and what should be done to ensure that our land resources are most effectively utilized for the benefit of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people and, in particular, to increase both agricultural production and the income of those engaged in it;

That the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Barbour, Basha, Bois, Boucher, Bradette, Buchanan, Cameron, Crerar, Emerson, Gladstone, Golding, Higgins, Horner, Inman, Léger, Leonard, MacDonald, McDonald, McGrand, Méthot, Molson, Pearson, Power, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland), Turgeon, Vaillancourt, Wall and White;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical and clerical personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the four preceding sessions be referred to the committee.

A steering committee was appointed as follows:—

The Honourable Senators Pearson, Chairman; Bois, Deputy Chairman; Basha, Cameron, Inman, McDonald, Smith (Kamloops), Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland) and Wall.

Following the work of the inquiry at the last session in which the focus was directed toward the problem of the small uneconomic farm unit and especially with the social consequences thereon, the committee continued to confine its attention to ways and means of helping this segment of the economy in Canada. The committee does not intend to restate its findings relative to the small farm problem in Canada but wishes to refer you to its report on July 8, 1959 for a full account. The views of the committee in this complex section of land use under its term of reference are brought together in this report. The submission of a final report of the committee is planned during the next session when the many briefs on the broader areas of land use and some other related aspects will be explored to round out the full scope of the terms of reference.

One of the recommendations in the last report of the committee (Printed Proceedings No. 12, July 8, 1959) resulted in the sending of a delegation by the Canada Department of Agriculture to the United States "to study and report on the Rural Development Program" in that country. The delegation consisted of Dr. J. F. Booth, A. E. Barrett, S. F. Shields and R. A. Stutt, a group of highly qualified men.

The study was made in the fall of 1959 and the delegation reported at the first and second meeting of the committee of this session (Printed Proceedings No. 1 and 2, March 3 and 10, 1960). The report is very comprehensive and ably drawn up. It has been praised by persons in the United States concerned with rural development as one of the fullest and most objective studies of the program. To all senators who have an interest in land, and people in rural areas, be it agriculture or forestry, this report is recommended for most serious contemplation.

The committee then decided, with this background of information dealing with the operation of the United States Rural Development Program, to make a brief inquiry into some of the comparable fields of activity in Canada whether undertaken by federal, provincial or local governments, public bodies or private citizen groups. These fields were industry and labour, forestry, recreation and tourist trade, education, leadership, public problems as well as agriculture. Some of this work was presented at previous sessions. The information at hand enabled the committee to get a brief but broad picture of present programs and sources of help to improve conditions in rural areas. This was particularly covered in the case of activities under the direction of various federal departments. The same procedure used in previous sessions of the committee was adopted and witnesses were invited to describe activities of their respective department or agency.

In addition to the information presented by the delegation of the Canada Department of Agriculture, two experts in the Rural Development Program in the United States appeared before the committee on March 31, 1960 (see Printed Proceedings No. 5). These men were Paul V. Kepner, Deputy Administrator, Federal Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C., and Sherman Weiss, Northern Area Resources Development Specialist, Hayward, Wisconsin. They corroborated the analysis made by the Canadian delegation and added further explanation and personal experiences on the operation and accomplishments of the program.

One important and final link in the agenda of the committee for this session was not completed. It was planned to bring representatives of the extension services in each province under the Agriculture or Education Departments of the provincial Government or the universities to Ottawa to describe their extension programs, problems, and plans for improvement and expansion; also to obtain their views as to the appropriateness of an approach similar to that taken under the Rural Development Program in the United States. This action was not carried out, however, at this time.

A total of nine meetings were held at which 22 witnesses were heard. These witnesses were supported by 11 other persons at six of these different meetings. A total of 236 pages of evidence was presented to the committee.

THE RURAL DEVELOPMENT APPROACH TO IMPROVEMENT OF CONDITIONS IN LOW-INCOME AREAS

The program is a relatively recent attempt to carry out a national policy of farm, industry and community development in disadvantaged rural areas. Through the program the national administration is able to increase the usefulness of all the many regular technical and financial assistance programs. This is accomplished under the auspices of local area committees and in which the local people are organized under local leadership and contribute time, resources and talents. The emphasis of this particular approach is on self-help with aid from federal and state Governments and private bodies. Common problems are solved by all elements of society in a community uniting in a fact-finding analysis and action-type process. In this process, inventories and studies are made of the resources of the community, the results of the studies are brought forward and discussed by all concerned, plans are formulated and considered, and action programs are undertaken. In all these stages, federal and state Governments and private bodies act in a supporting role.

Two fundamental facts are basic to the concept of rural development in the United States. While it is possible to expect some increase in farm income and to improve living conditions through developments with agriculture, it is pretty well accepted that the best opportunities for area economic development are found in fields outside the agricultural economy. This follows partly from the limitation of agricultural resources in the counties chosen for rural development but mainly from the higher economic activity and employment possibilities, and income-generating effect of other resources development. Secondly, due to increased output of agricultural products per worker resulting from technological and scientific advances less people are needed on farms. This makes the need for development of gainful employment opportunities in other fields imperative if serious underemployment conditions are to be avoided. These two conditions are also applicable to the situation which prevails in Canada and the extent to which farm families are able to supplement their incomes from non-farm sources depends largely upon the availability of job opportunities.

The responsibility for rural development in an area rests with local people therein although the selection of the pilot counties was made by state departments. This was done to focus the efforts of the federal and state Governments and others on the dire need for improvement in these counties and to get the program underway. All the research, technical, advisory help and financial assistance under the regular programs were directed to these areas. In this process the key link is the co-operative federal state extension service. The extension agents are in a position to supply the state committee services that help to lay the groundwork for discussion, help implement committee decisions and improve co-ordination among the various agencies and organizations.

As previously mentioned the principal avenue to facilitate the program is the formation of county or area development committees. These are really planning groups of local citizens within the local communities such as farmers, businessmen, bankers, county officials, professional men, church leaders, educationalists, youth and so on. In essence, these committees are not too much different from any community charitable and promotional organizations except that they are co-ordinated with federal and state organizations and agencies in the furtherance of development and assistance programs. They serve to direct attention to basic economic and social needs, to co-ordinate and unite the efforts and objectives of all elements in society and to bring the rural and urban sections of the population together as a team.

Local chambers of commerce and other groups of this type in the United States often perform the tasks of county and area committees, at least the duties of specific subcommittees, such as industrial development, tourist trade, marketing and so on. Where these exist they are usually utilized within the general framework of the local rural development organization.

A similar position was pointed out in the brief of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce (Printed Proceedings No. 6) with regard to the work of the local chambers in Canada. It was indicated that 54 per cent of the local chambers in communities in the 5,000-or-less population category currently had industrial development committees; 48 per cent had tourist committees; and 40 per cent had agricultural committees. Many of the chambers and boards have developed the area of rural-urban co-operation. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce believes that "the resourcefulness of individual freedom and individual enterprise is the true way of ensuring the highest possible standard of living for the whole Canadian people." The report of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce concludes with a statement of support in the concept of rural development in these gratifying remarks.

> ... when the problems of the rural community come to be better defined, the Chamber of Commerce movement, both at the national and particularly at the local level, will be ready and willing to make a contribution to the solution of these problems. We believe strongly that the individual should always be given the opportunity to help himself and that by joining with others in his community, a considerable contribution can be made, with the concomitance of greater maturity, greater self reliance and greater initiative.

A resource development program along the lines of the Rural Development Program would be difficult to achieve, if not nigh impossible in the United States, without the widespread and extensive means of reaching the people through the co-operative federal-state extension service. This service is the third phase of a well-conceived and developed federal-state arrangement to provide the people in the United States with useful information on subjects connected with agriculture. It joins the educational program developed through the state experimental stations to provide an outstanding degree of integration and co-operation of assistance to people in rural areas. These are financed on a joint basis with a very large share provided by the federal Government. In the case of the extension service the local counties contribute part of the costs along with the federal and state Governments. At the present time throughout the entire country the federal Government contributes about 38 per cent of the cost of extension and the balance is shared between the state and the county on a three-to-two basis.

This arrangement assures that the people are provided with the latest findings and services of the federal and state Governments. The account found in the report of the delegation to the committee (Printed Proceedings No. 1) gives an indication of the work of the county extension agents to matters of organization, encouragement to local participation, passing along of research information, providing of secretarial and other administrative support. Since the launching of the Rural Development Program additional funds have been provided by the federal Government so that rural development agents can be employed to facilitate the expanded duties of the county extension offices. While the main role of an extension agent is to provide leadership, technical counsel and guidance, the rural development agent is in a little different position in that he represents all the federal agencies that have a contribution to make to the program.

The experience in the United States shows that the subcommittees of the main county or area development committees are most effective when formed to deal with specific matters. They develop more interest and involve more people who are directly concerned with the projects. This creates a real personal feeling and desire to achieve the objective. The various types of subcommittees vary with the problems of the area and the desire and decision of the local people to do something to alleviate the conditions. In general they deal with specific tasks in agriculture, industry development and promotion, tourist trade, education, health and welfare and community facilities and many other and varied fields. The report of the delegation which outlines the United States Rural Development Program shows that all elements of the population in the counties with unfavourable physical or declining resources have been able to find a common cause and reason for improvement, and the businessmen, bankers and professional people have combined with farmers in a broad attack on the problem. Mr. Paul V. Kepner, Deputy Administrator of the Federal Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, summed up this important attainment in these words:

> Perhaps the most fundamental, although somewhat less tangible than other more specific accomplishments, is the development of awareness on the part of the local people that if they collectively go about appraising their local problems and devising remedial measures, they can do much to improve their welfare. This has been accompanied by a dedication to do whatever is necessary to attain their own determined objectives.

The report lists projects to encourage small business development; the expansion of forestry operations; the creation of additional resort areas, parks and recreational facilities, the building of highways, access roads and improved waterways; as well as projects to improve agriculture. All of these and many others have created work in the community, provided income from the sale of products and use of facilities by people outside the immediate communities, and enabled a higher level of living for the residents.

Tangible evidence of progress and accomplishments indicated by Mr. Kepner was as follows:

(a) the establishment of new small industries or expansion of already existing ones, thus providing new employment opportunities and increased incomes not only to those directly employed but also to support industries and other activities and services in the area.

(b) industrial training courses have been started in some rural high schools better to prepare the youth of the area for employment outside of agriculture. This is not in replacement of vocational training in agriculture, but in addition thereto. Some out-of-school training courses have been provided for adults to equip them to obtain industrial type employment, either locally or elsewhere, on either a part-time or full-time basis. Definite programs have been undertaken to encourage youth to continue their formal education with gratifying results.

(c) recreation and tourist facilities and services have been improved in several areas, not only for the benefit of local residents, but to attract a greater percentage of the growing tourist business to several of these areas which have a wealth of natural attractions for tourists.

(d) needed agricultural marketing and service facilities have been established, thus permitting more effective and economical handling of locally produced agriculture commodities. This has permitted the introduction of some specialty crops in some areas and expansion of commercial production of certain standard crops in others.

(e) reforestation and improved forestry management has been very extensively developed in natural forestry areas, thus improving the income from this important crop.

(f) the Extension Service and other agencies have intensified their efforts to be of assistance to farmers on small units to the end that they are being enabled to make better use of such agricultural resources as they have available to them or can acquire. Likewise, residents of these areas are tending to make greater use of such assistance than previously.

(g) agricultural programs of the various agencies of the department have been modified better to serve the long-time needs of these particular areas and small farmers.

(h) The Department of Labor—and this is a very substantial development—is exploring ways in which their labour placement and counselling service can be adjusted to be of greater service to the underemployed people of these areas, and in turn to the nation.

(i) The Small Business Administration is doing an effective job in providing financial, consultative, and training services to small industries in rural areas, thereby helping to provide additional employment opportunities and increased incomes. Probably of equal significance, however, was the technical assistance and counsel provided small businessmen and development groups in these rural areas.

(j) a noticeable tendency is evident to make more extensive use of existing public facilities and services, such as public health facilities and services and the Social Security Program, which prior to the inauguration of the Rural Development effort were not utilized by a large percentage of the residents of these areas.

The United States experience indicates clearly that the services and aids provided under the regular government programs are more effectively applied in counties and areas when rural development committees exist. These are noted for a wide range of things such as conservation; co-operatives; credit; employment assistance; extension education; financial aid and social services for people who cannot support themselves; forestry; agriculture; health and sanitation; social security, Indian programs; industry development; marketing improvements research; vocational training; and water resources development.

The process under the Rural Development Program is (1) one of local people of an area recognizing a need, (2) focus of local interest upon the larger concept of a total community, which includes all aspects of the economy as well as agriculture, and (3) involvement of every agency and person in accomplishment of the objective.

The organizational set-up at the national level is of a loose nature and the main reason for this seems to be to avoid a policy of direction from the top and to assure the availability of all technical and financial features of the programs in all the departments. It also provides an atmosphere of co-operation for various federal and state people at local levels. This is an extremely interesting concept for rural development where the responsibility for the different duties of government are divided between federal, provincial and local bodies. Without this concept the tendency would be to work separately and probably in isolation.

In summary, it might be stated that three main approaches are used under the program to improve conditions in low-income areas of the United States. First, economic and social betterment is being sought by emphasis on total area development. The range of activities goes much beyond the traditional framework of agricultural policies, programs and extension services. As a matter of fact in the low-income areas major emphasis is now largely directed to non-agricultural fields such as forestry, industry and labour, tourism and recreation, education, public problems and leadership. Secondly, the services of government departments and agencies have been co-ordinated, redirected, refashioned and focussed on rural development through direct lines of communications of state and local committees so as to hit at the places of need. From an administrative point of view this has been one of the biggest benefits of the Rural Development Program. Under this new arrangement through contacts with members of the whole community, the extension service now also serves the wider needs of other non-agricultural and development problems of the community. The placing of additional rural development agents in the pilot counties has allowed the expansion of these services by the motivation of local effort through the various subcommittees. Thirdly, a basic tenet of the Rural Development Program is the belief that local people can do things to help themselves if they are provided with motivation, leadership and financial aid. This is being done under the guidance of the federal-state extension service and the help of many community-minded leaders. A principal advantage of uniting local people for team effort is the harmonization of the needs in the community with the capabilities of the people and other resources.

The study of the Rural Development Program in the United States indicates that a wide variety of projects are underway in low-income areas with the purpose of utilizing the land resource to best advantage, improving the income levels of those who wish to remain on the farm, a widening of the economic base and creation of additional job and income opportunities, and to assist and prepare a large section of the people on inadequate farm units for the adjustment to non-farm occupations. In the short time the program has been underway it appears that much has been accomplished to improve the welfare of the people.

The Honourable Alvin E. Hamilton, Minister, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, outlined for the committee plans for a program of papers and discussions at a "Resources for Tomorrow" Conference relative to land and water use and conservation in Canada (Printed Proceedings No. 4). The purpose of this conference is to set out the principles and machinery at hand by which appropriate policies might be established to guide and carry out a program of development of all renewable resources. The minister pointed out that there was a definite connection between the work of this committee and the objectives of the "Resources for Tomorrow" Conference. The connection arises in part from the fact that agriculture and land use will receive extensive consideration at the conference and, in this, the reports of the investigations of the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada will play a significant part.

The particular circumstances of the small farm problems of a large section of Quebec, particularly the Eastern Townships and the Gaspé Peninsula, were described to the committee at this session by Dr. J. R. Pelletier, Superintendent of the Experimental Farm at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière. The importance of forestry as compared with agriculture from a land use standpoint was noted as well as the lack of industrial development in this section of the province. Stress was laid on the need for reforestation and improved forest management and cutting practices; agricultural cropping and cultural practices including rotations; and the joint development of forestry and agriculture on individual farms, as income from either use alone is usually insufficient for family needs.

With regard to the possible establishment of a rural development program in Canada, the observations of two federal departments which appeared before the committee are pertinent and reassuring. Part of the brief of the Canada Department of Labour (Printed Proceedings No. 6) dealt with the problems of people in low-income areas and briefly outlined a procedure which is similar to the one used in the United States Rural Development Program. In this connection Dr. Haythorne said:

> In considering resources utilization in an area, a critical and full examination of what there is to work with in an area is essential. An active involvement of the people directly concerned should also be secured. There are important prerequisites before it can be known whether people should be moved elsewhere or not. It is a matter essentially of examining the basic physical and human resources and the prevailing conditions in these rural areas where low incomes prevail across the country, and then developing co-ordinated plans, where it is sound to do so, to help these areas through reorganization of their farms, through the development of other industries, through training and other programs. With such an approach, it might be said with some confidence, that it is sensible for a positive program of redevelopment to take place in this area, or that it would be advisable in the interests of all concerned to have fewer human resources devoted to agriculture and that steps should be taken—on a practical basis and with active co-operation of all the people concerned—to have these human resources shifted elsewhere.

It was pointed out in the brief of the Canada Department of Trade and Commerce that "the major crux of the study (of the Senate committee) lies in the agricultural field and the opportunities open to younger people to engage in agriculture and in this connection we are faced with economic trends in agriculture, which are moving more to urban rather than rural development". The contributions of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Economics Branch, the Small Business Branch and the Industrial Development Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce to a rural development program in Canada were noted. It was indicated that the initiative in co-ordination of a rural development program would probably lie in the field of agriculture and the role of the Department of Trade and Commerce in any plans would be to assist more efficiently industry and commerce throughout Canada.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Whereas there is a need of elimination of problem areas in Canada where farm businesses are small, productivity low and incomes inadequate for family requirements:—

The committee recommends,

(1) (a) That further research be undertaken to define more clearly the nature of the problem in low-income areas and to pinpoint their location.

(b) That a Federal-Provincial Rural Development Program be instituted to deal with areas of greatest need.

(2) That in implementing such a program the provincial Governments participate on a co-operative basis; such co-operation to include the principle that both provincial and local authorities assume major responsibility for the identification of problems and needs of local areas and the initiation, planning and development of appropriate action programs.

(3) That the Federal and Provincial Governments co-operate in assisting any such program with financial and technical assistance, said financial assistance to be provided through a cost-sharing agreement.

(4) That the Federal and Provincial Governments provide for a larger farm-management service and expansion of educational facilities with particular emphasis on leadership to ensure a prompt dissemination of the research results to those farmers who will be most benefited therefrom.

(5) That there should be some form of co-ordination of Federal Departments of Agriculture; Northern Affairs and National Resources; Health and Welfare; Labour; Trade and Commerce; Fisheries; Forestry; and Citizenship and Immigration with regard to activities under a Rural Development Program.

(6) That the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use be reconvened at next session of Parliament to study water conservation, drainage, forestry, encroachment of cities and industrial areas on agricultural lands and also invite the Extension Services of the provinces to describe their Extension Programs, problems and plans for an improvement and expansion; also obtain their views as to the appropriateness of an approach similar to that taken under the Rural Development Program in the United States. All which is respectfully submitted.

ARTHUR M. PEARSON,
Chairman.

APPENDIX

List of witnesses appearing before the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use in Canada.

THIRD SESSION, 24th PARLIAMENT, 1960

Printed Proceedings No. 1

Canada Department of Agriculture

Mr. S. C. Barry, Deputy Minister

Dr. J. F. Booth, Director, Economics Division

Mr. A. E. Barrett, Assistant to the Director General, Research Branch

Mr. R. A. Stutt, Head, Land Economics Unit, Economics Division

Printed Proceedings No. 2

Canada Department of Agriculture

Dr. J. F. Booth, Director, Economics Division.

Mr. A. E. Barrett, Assistant to the Director General, Research Branch

Mr. R. A. Stutt, Head, Land Economics Unit, Economics Division

Mr. S. F. Shields, Regional Director, Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration

Printed Proceedings No. 3

Waterloo University College, Waterloo, Ontario

Professor Ralph R. Krueger, Ph.D., Chairman, Department of Geography

Printed Proceedings No. 4

Federal Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources

The Honourable Alvin E. Hamilton, P.C., Minister

Mr. E. A. Cote, Assistant Deputy Minister

79955-1—68

Printed Proceedings No. 5

Co-operative Extension Service, United States

Mr. Paul V. Kepner, Deputy Administrator, Federal Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.

Mr. Sherman Weiss, Northern Area Resources Development Specialist, Hayward, Wisconsin.

Printed Proceedings No. 6

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce

General R. Holley Keefler, Chairman, Executive Council

Mr. W. J. McNally, Manager, Policy Department

Mr. J. S. Whyte, Chairman, Agricultural Committee

Mr. R. F. Richardson, Manager, Organization Service Department

Federal Department of Labor

Dr. George V. Haythorne, Assistant Deputy Minister

Mr. Ross Ford, Director, Training Branch

Mr. William Thomson, Director of Employment Service, Unemployment Insurance Commission

Federal Department of Trade and Commerce

Mr. James A. Roberts, Deputy Minister

Mr. C. V. Parker, Director, Agriculture Division, Dominion Bureau of Statistics

Mr. Morgan Mahoney, Assistant Director, Small Business Branch

Mr. Basil Hayden, Director, Industrial Development Branch

Mr. A. D. Holmes, Director, Prices Division

Mr. V. J. Macklin, Director, Economics Branch

Printed Proceedings No. 7

Experimental Farm, Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, Quebec

Dr. J. R. Pelletier, D.Sc.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 14, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine tabled:

Report of Northern Canada Power Commission, including the Auditor General's report on the accounts of the commission, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 24 of the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, Chapter 196, as amended, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-76, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

Hon. George S. White moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: May I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if this bill is likely to receive royal assent this afternoon? If that is possible, I feel that arrangements therefor should be made convenient to all concerned. I understand that if the bill is not assented to this afternoon a number of civil servants will be penalized by the delay. We have a splendid group of men and women working for the Civil Service. This superannuation arrangement has been agreed to, we have expedited the passing of the bill through this house, and I do trust the royal assent can be given this afternoon.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: In reply to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), I wish to say that I have been trying since early this morning to arrange for royal assent at 5.45 this afternoon, but have not yet been able to complete arrangements. At the moment I cannot state definitely whether we shall have royal assent today or not, but I should know by 4 o'clock or thereabouts.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then any delay is not, I take it, on the part of the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, no. It is not the responsibility of the Senate at all. I have advised the Minister of Finance that his bill has received full attention, and I have also advised the people who usually arrange for royal assent. It cannot under any circumstances be blamed on the Senate if there is no royal assent today.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

NINTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's ninth report:

Your committee have examined the expenditures and revenues of the Senate for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, and have found them correct.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I would like the report to be considered today, and I move that it be adopted. I might state that this is the usual report that is made to the Senate near the end of each session. The accounts were examined very closely by a subcommittee composed of the Honourable Senators Beaubien, Basha, Horner, Isnor and McLean and when the accounts were discussed today at a meeting of the Internal Economy Committee the Honourable Senator Isnor went over the various items. All his criticism was of a very constructive nature and the entire committee were quite satisfied with the accounts.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I desire to take this opportunity to praise the whole staff of the Senate, from the Clerk downward, and I include all the personnel—the Clerk Assistant, the Black Rod, stenographers, messengers, everybody. We are fortunate in having in the service of the Senate men and women who have a high sense of duty and who miss no opportunity to be useful to all of us. To some elder—if I may use that word—public servants who are in the employ of the Senate and are soon to be retired, I extend my praise. I have never missed an opportunity to do so because I have a profound admiration for them. They are always ready when we call them; they are gracious, and they do everything as it should be done. Among those who are retiring soon, and about whom I must say a word, are Mr. Jennings, the head of the char staff, and Mr. Facto, of the char staff, who used to come here in the early morning hours to see that the offices were properly cleaned. I wonder if honourable senators know how the work is done. The charladies come in the morning and do their work, which is supervised by men like Mr. Facto, who come in at 6 o'clock in the morning and go around the offices to see if the work has been properly done. That gentleman and the others I have mentioned are praiseworthy, and it is a matter of justice to say publicly how highly we regard them and how deserving they are.

Report adopted.

TENTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's tenth report:

Your committee recommend that the usual supply of stationery, etc., which has been selected by your committee with due regard to usefulness and economy, for use of the senators in their rooms and desks in the Senate chamber, be supplied according to the lists approved by your committee and deposited with the Clerk of Stationery, and that the distribution be made in a way similar to that of the present session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I would move that the report be adopted today. In support of the motion I would state that the matter of stationery and office supplies has been looked into by a subcommittee composed of the Honourable Senators Basha, Dessureault, Horner, McLean and Vien. The Honourable Senator Dessureault made a report to the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

As I have heard no complaint about stationery supplies from any honourable senator during this session, I presume that all have been looked after in a proper manner.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I rise again, to say that for a time after my coming to the Senate I had to complain about the manner in which the stationery was dealt with. Now I must say that it is being handled in a first-class way and I wish to pay a tribute to my honourable colleagues who are members of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts and of the subcommittee. They have realized that the needs of each one of us are different owing to the quantity of the correspondence that individual senators have. Here, again, I must compliment my honourable colleagues who look after that. They have done a very good job, and I am most satisfied, and I include in that compliment Mr. Lay, the Chief of the Stationery Branch.

When speaking on the previous report I forgot to mention a promotion that has been given to Mr. Martin, the carpenter. For a long time Mr. West had his shop in the office that I occupy now and which has been made quite comfortable. Mr. Martin worked for a long time under Mr. West, and he was qualified for the promotion that he got.

I understand also that Mr. Jennings will be replaced by a man who has served under him and who has done a very good job, and who is qualified to be the chief of that branch.

Today, honourable senators, being the 14th day of July, is a nice day to say the good things that we have to say about those with whom we live, and I include my honourable colleagues.

Report adopted.

ELEVENTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's eleventh report:

Your committee recommend that during the coming recess of Parliament the Honourable Senator Aseltine, Leader of the Government in the Senate, and two senators to be named by him from time to time, be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted today. I believe it is the intention of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to appoint one senator from each side of the house to serve with him while the Senate is not sitting so that housekeeping and other problems that may arise in connection with the Senate when it is not in session can be properly looked after.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, it is very dangerous to start giving names. I omitted to mention Hansard. Our Hansard is pretty good, and the work that is being done in that office is quite stupendous when there is taken into consideration the reporting of the countless divorce cases and the proceedings of other committees, et cetera. Very seldom do we have to mention an error for correction, and therefore: Praise to Hansard, too.

Report adopted.

TWELFTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's twelfth report:

Your committee recommend that Mrs. Agnes Jolly, retired charwoman, be granted a service gratuity of $87.50.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that this report be considered and adopted today. For the information of the house I might state that Mrs. Agnes Jolly, a charwoman, retired on July 1 this year on account of ill health, and the gratuity which it is contemplated to pay to her is based on this formula: $2.50 for each year of sessional employment and $5 for each year of annual service. This amounts in all to $87.50.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why did you not make it $100?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Unfortunately, there is a formula which we have to follow, hence the gratuity amounts to only $87.50.

Report adopted.

[Later:]

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I should like to direct a question to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts (Hon. Mr. Brunt). I recall that we discussed other important matters in committee this morning, and one is of particular interest to the Senate staff. Does the honourable senator intend to report to the Senate on that matter?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The point referred to by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) concerns increases in salaries for Senate employees in eleven different categories. The reports in connection with these increases will be rather lengthy and a bit on the technical side. We have not yet had an opportunity of preparing those reports, and when they are ready I shall want to make an intensive study of them. For that reason it is not proposed to present them until Tuesday of next week. I can assure all honourable senators that the delay in presenting these reports to the Senate will not in any way delay the date upon which the increases in salaries will become effective.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the second reading of Bill C-82, respecting the Department of Forestry.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is the creation of a federal Department of Forestry. The new department will bring together the Forestry Branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which is responsible for general forest research, forest products research, and other matters; and the Forest Biology Division of the Research Branch, Department of Agriculture, which is responsible for research in forest entomology and forest pathology. A major reason for establishing the proposed new department is to bring together the research activities now conducted by these two departments.

There are not many people who realize the importance and size of our forest industries and the tremendous possibilities that exist for increasing still further the contributions they make to our economic well-being. I intend to present some figures which might help honourable senators to understand the need for this new department and also the importance of our forest industries.

In 1957 the net value of our forest products was $2,200 million, and of that production 65 per cent, or goods to the net value of $1,400 million, were exported. This represented 30 per cent of the total value of our domestic exports. In other words, almost one-third of all exports, including agricultural products, furs, fish, minerals and manufactured goods, was represented by products of the forest industries.

In regard to employment, work in the woods and in plants manufacturing wood products—sawmills, pulp and paper mills, and wood- and paper-using industries—is equivalent to 350,000 man-years annually. Approximately 230,000 people are employed on the manufacturing side, and jobs in the woods average about 120,000 annually. It is important to note, however, that the labour effort in the woods is in fact distributed among a far larger number of men, since many people find part-time employment in woods work. The opportunity for such seasonal part-time employment is especially valuable to many farm workers and others, such as workers on road construction whose alternative employment is also seasonal. I might say that the greatest part of the seasonal employment in the forest is in all the provinces except British Columbia, in which province there is almost continuous work in the forest.

Another point that might be interesting to honourable senators is the importance of forest products to the railroads. Annual carloadings of forest products approach 650,000 or about 17 per cent of the total carloadings in the country. I hope to be able to show that there are very good prospects that carloadings will probably increase very substantially over the next 15 or 20 years.

The Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects estimated that, during the period 1954-1980, the output of logs and sawn lumber in Canada would increase by about 50 per cent. It also estimated an increase of 92 per cent for rough pulpwood during the same period. Last September a committee called together in Rome, Italy, by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations studied the prospects for increasing world demand for paper and paper products. This very competent committee, made up of representatives of sixteen countries, came to the conclusion that the use of paper and paper products in the world would increase from 56 million metric tons in 1955 to 134 million metric tons in 1975. In the earlier years Canada supplied about 16 per cent of the world's needs for these products.

If she is to maintain her position she will have to produce and market 14 million metric tons by 1965—a 50 per cent increase—and 21 million metric tons by 1975—an increase of 123 per cent over the base year. This will mean, among other things, a very substantial increase in the quantities of wood that the forests will be called upon to supply, and it can be clearly seen that Canada, without any further delay, should take immediate action to improve forest management and protection, so that the increased drain on the forests can be maintained without causing forest devastation. With the help of proper farm management in the United States that country has shown a net increase of 3,486,000 cubic feet of forest growth every year.

It is felt that the Department of Forestry should be established now to improve the flow of new knowledge which can be obtained by research and which will be of benefit to provincial forest administrators and industrial forest operators, and also to give all possible assistance to industry and the provinces in other directions. And farm wood lots, at present a small part of the forest production, could, under proper supervision, become a very large asset to the country.

The United States has 786 million acres of forest area, while Canada has 1 billion 32 million acres, roughly 246 million more forest acres than the United States. In the United States there are 489 million acres classed as productive forest area, and on this basis it operates a $7 billion forest products industry. Against this, Canada has 634 milion acres of productive forest area—145 million acres more than the United States —and, as I said before, the products of this forest industry are valued at $2 billion 200 million per annum. Comparison of these figures indicates the tremendous possibilities for increasing our output and building a very much greater industry than Canada now supports.

The dominion Government at present employs only 92 forestry officers on general forest research, about 170 officers on forest entomology and forest pathology, and 59 officers on forest products research. By comparison, the latest figures from the United States indicate that its federal Forest Service employs 698 officers on general forest research, 164 on forest entomology and pathology, and 127 officers on forest products research. There does seem to be a strong connection between the much greater effort on forest research being made in the United States and the much more intensive use it is making of its forests as a source of new wealth.

The Minister for Northern Affairs and National Resources has drawn attention to the seriousness of annual forest fire losses in this country. Over the years the provinces, which carry the chief responsibility for fire protection, have made tremendous strides in improving their forest fire-fighting organizations and the techniques of fire control. Nevertheless, the records show that in spite of the efforts of federal and provincial forest authorities, the forestry profession, the Canadian Forestry Association, and others, to impress on the public the need for care with fire in the woods, there has been a most disturbing constancy in the number of fires occurring each year during the past two decades. About 20 per cent of all fires are caused by lightning and at present there is little we can do to control this danger, but the remaining 80 per cent of the fires are caused by people. It is evident that very great efforts must be made to increase public awareness of the danger from fire and, as will be seen from the bill, it will be a function of the new minister to co-operate with other agencies in bringing this serious matter to public attention.

It would be possible to elaborate at great length on the significance of forestry in our national economy and the need that exists for better co-ordination of the federal Government's own forestry activities and improvement in co-operation between the federal, provincial and industrial partners in forest management and protection. I believe, however, I have said enough to carry conviction that the creation of the proposed new Department of Forestry will have results of very great benefit to all parts of Canada, and will stimulate research and the application of research findings. Canada has the resources of land and forest to maintain industries much larger than the present ones, and to maintain them in perpetuity. I therefore permit myself to hope that all honourable senators will feel able to support the bill which is now under consideration.

I would like to draw to the attention of honourable senators a series of charts which I have before me. Copies of these charts may be found in Hansard of the other place for July 11 last. Honourable senators may not be able to see chart 5, which I hold in my hand. It shows Canada's exports of wood, wood products and paper at roughly $1,400 million, while her imports of wood products are shown at only about $250 million. At the other extreme, exports of iron and products stand at about $700 million or $800 million in value, while imports stand at nearly $2 billion. On the other hand, chart 6 shows a very favourable balance of trade in wood and wood products of roughly $1,250 million, whereas the iron and steel industries, at the other end, show nothing but an unfavourable balance.

The bill is divided into three parts. Clauses 3 to 6 are in Part I. Clauses 3 and 4 have reference to the setting up of the department, and I think you will find they are self-explanatory.

Clause 5 states the duties, powers and functions of the minister extend to and include all matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction relating to the forest resources of Canada—that refers to the dominion of Canada only and has no reference to the provinces.

Clause 6, subclause (1)(a) states:

> Subject to section 5, the minister
>
> (a) shall provide for the conduct of research relating to the protection, management and utilization of the forest resources of Canada . . .

That is obligatory. The Canada Forestry Act used the words "may provide".

The words "subject to section 5" were added in the other house as an amendment to the bill, so that the provisions of clause 5 would control clause 6. This was done so that the jurisdiction of the provinces would not be infringed upon.

Subclause (1)(b) states that, subject to section 5, the minister > may undertake, promote or recommend measures for the encouragement of public co-operation in the protection and wise use of the forest resources of Canada.

I might say that this bill is based mostly on the Canada Forestry Act. The provisions of that act were used in drafting the bill.

Part II of the bill, headed "Forest Experimental Areas", comprises clauses 7 to 11. Clause 7 revises section 3 of the act, and drops the words "national forest".

Clause 8 is the same as section 5 of the act except for the addition of the words in line 7, namely:

> . . . and management, including the disposal of timber and other forest products . . .

Clause 9 of the bill was amended in the other place by prefacing the clause with the words, "Subject to section 7 . .". These words were added to protect provincial jurisdiction and prevent encroachment by the federal Government. Clause 9 adopts section 7 of the act, with the following exceptions. The words "national forest" have been dropped throughout the various paragraphs. In paragraph (d) the word "thereon" has been altered to read "therein". In paragraph (f), the words "in connection with" replace the word "for" in the act.

Clause 10 of the bill corresponds to section 9 of the act, with minor exceptions. The present section 9 reads:

> Every person who violates a regulation is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment.

The words "a regulation" are changed to read "any regulation", and the words "a fine of not more than" are changed to read "a fine not exceeding".

Clause 11 contains the same provisions as section 10 of the act, without change.

Part III of the bill, headed "General," is new. It comprises clauses 12 to 18. These clauses are necessary in order to tie in the present set-up of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Agriculture with the new Department of Forestry.

Clause 12 requires the submission to Parliament of an annual report on the operation of the department.

Clause 15 adds "The Minister of Forestry" to the Salaries Act.

Clause 16 adds "Department of Forestry" to Schedule A of the Financial Administration Act.

Clause 17 repeals the Canada Forestry Act.

Clause 18 provides that the Department of Forestry Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, may I at once say that I regard this legislation as a long-overdue recognition by the federal Government of the fundamental importance of the forests and the forest industries in the economic life of this country, and I want to give the Government full marks for it.

Every chapter of Canadian history directly or indirectly contains some reference to our forests and the part they have played in the growth and development of this country. Canada's timber industries permeate the Canadian economy to such an extent that it would be difficult to find a village, town or city where some unit of these industries is not playing an important and highly needed role. In addition, taxwise these industries contribute substantial revenue to the federal administration, the provincial Governments and the municipalities within which they operate.

And not unimportant is the fact that through their industrial activities and the money they distribute through their production and sales processes, they also contribute actively to many other industries and commercial enterprises.

In earliest times our forests provided pine spars and pine timbers for His Majesty's navy, lumber for the sinews of war, and pitprops for the coal mines. Now they support our present pulp and paper and lumber industries, which, with other wood exports, contribute more than any other industry in balancing Canada's international trading position. As the honourable gentleman from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson) has indicated, the value of these exports last year was upward of $1,500 million.

Now, honourable senators, where do these forest products come from? They come from an annual crop of wood amounting to about 3,300 million cubic feet, of which about 45 per cent comes out in the form of logs, 45 per cent in the form of pulpwood, and the balance in fuel wood, posts, piling and mine props. This annual crop is harvested from a forest area which comprises 66 per cent of the land area of the 10 provinces and 47 per cent of the total area of Canada. Of this forest area it is estimated that about 71 per cent is presently accessible and operable. The timber of the accessible area is estimated at about 368 million cubic feet, of which 75 per cent is softwood and 25 per cent hardwood. About 80 per cent of this forest land is held as provincial Crown lands, and the balance is divided equally between the federal Government and private ownership.

This annual crop of 3,300 million cubic feet supports a forest industry which consists of 130 pulp and paper establishments, 6,300 sawmills and 4,000 wood-using plants, and employs, as my honourable friend has indicated, approximately 350,000 persons. It is the greatest single component in the economy of this nation. It is first in employment, first in wages paid, first in freight load and first in new capital investment.

The first job before us is so to manage and conserve for future use our forest stands by prudent and scientific forest management and proper utilization, and by guarding them from destruction by insects and fire, that the annual crop will not only be maintained but will be increased without depleting our national asset. Here, honourable senators, I might mention that we have been training foresters for that job. We have four forestry schools in Canada: at the University of British Columbia, Laval University, the University of New Brunswick and the University of Toronto. These schools last year had an enrolment of 767 students. I think there are at present in Canada about 1,900 foresters, employed by provincial and federal Governments and by industry.

It might be interesting to honourable senators if I demonstrated just what can be accomplished and what the potential is through proper forest management. I hold in my hand a summary of a forest management plan on lands owned and managed by the University of New Brunswick, consisting of a block of 3,640 acres, of which 3,300 acres are in a productive forest area. In 1914 this area contained 17,000 cords of wood, or an average of 5.20 cords per acre. Between 1914 and 1958, 34,714 cords were cut from this area and during the same period the inventory of standing wood on the area increased from the original 17,000 to 48,000 cords, or 14.55 cords per acre. That is a striking example of what can be done by proper forest management and utilization.

My honourable friend from Lumsden has given figures to show why our forest crop must be increased, and I do not wish to repeat them. In 1957 the Gordon Commission estimated that by 1980 there would be an increase of 50 per cent in the demand for lumber and 92 per cent in the demand for pulpwood. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, with its worldwide representation, meeting in Rome last fall, estimated that the use of paper and paper products between the years 1955 and 1975 would increase by 140 per cent. As my honourable friend stated, Canada supplies at the present time 16 per cent of the world consumption. If we are to meet the challenge of the future, as indicated by these figures, Canada will have to double her export of lumber and related products in the next 15 years.

As honourable senators know, Crown lands are under the administration of the provincial Departments of Lands and Forests. To them, together with industry, must fall the first and foremost responsibility of assuring the future of Canada's forest industry. Industry and government must work together.

When I speak of industry I am thinking of labour as well as management, for only by intelligent co-operation of management and labour can the industry advance and meet world competition. But this advance must be along the road of scientific and enlightened techniques and processes, and the function of the federal Government must be to provide comprehensive research, as well as technical aid, through which knowledge is obtained, which is a prerequisite to industrial advance; and, in addition, it must assist the provincial authorities and industry in guarding the forest domain against disease, insects and fire hazard. This must be the function of the new Department of Forestry. The federal Government has, of course, been doing a good job along this line.

The Canada Forestry Act, passed in December 1949, repealed the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act of 1927. It did three additional things, namely: (1) It established national forests or experimental areas. (2) It authorized the establishment and maintenance of forest products laboratories. (3) It enabled the minister to introduce agreements with the provinces for the protection, development and utilization of forest resources. That act has been administered in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

The forestry branch, under the direction of Dr. J. D. B. Harrison, a distinguished graduate of the University of New Brunswick, has been doing excellent and useful work within the limitation of the resources which were available. Under him is a staff of 449 persons, of whom 248 are permanent officials, and included among them are 92 graduate foresters. The Forest Research Division operates through seven districts and conducts five Forest Experimental Stations.

The Forest Products Laboratories Division, with a staff of 187, of whom 157 are permanent, is under the direction of Colonel J. H. Jenkins and has done most effective and useful work. Although limited in resources and facilities, the laboratories have made a great contribution, and industry is most appreciative of the work which has been carried out there. Studies and experiments in timber mechanics, plywood, containers, preservatives, wood utilization, seasoning, wood anatomy, bark utilization and sawmill waste are some of the research projects on which the laboratories have been working. The minister promises that the scope of these divisions will be widened, and has planned to double the research effort in the next five years, all of which will be warmly welcomed by the industry.

The pulp and paper industry does its own research. It maintains the Pulp and Paper Institute of Canada, in which the industry spends about $5 million per year.

In the Department of Agriculture the forest entomology, pathology and biology section, dealing with insects and forest diseases, has been doing an excellent job. In our province of New Brunswick since 1952 more than 6 million acres of forest lands have been sprayed with DDT, at a cost of more than $12 million, to arrest the spruce budworm which threatens the destruction of our balsam, fir and spruce. This was a co-operative effort between the federal Government, the provincial Government and industry operating under the name of Protection Limited. They have been obliged to continue spraying operations over an area during this past season.

This legislation will create a Department of Forestry in which all these divisions which I have described will function. There has been a feeling in the forest industry for a long time that it has been neglected by the federal Government. Over the years there have been a good many submissions from the industry. The last one was made in May 1959, when the Canadian Lumbermen's Association submitted a brief to the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Mines, Forests and Waters. Associated with it were eight trade associations, namely the Maritime Lumber Bureau, the Quebec Lumber Manufacturers' Association, the British Columbia Lumber Manufacturers' Association, the Quebec Province Wholesale Lumber Association, the Wholesale Lumber Dealers' Association of Canada, the Maritime Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, the Ontario Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, and the Western Retail Lumber Dealers' Association. Their brief pointed out, among other things, that the federal Government collects a revenue of about $200 million from farmers and spends over $100 million annually in support of agriculture. The revenue from forest resources is also over $200 million, and expenditures run to about $10 million per year. That has been the grouse on the part of the lumber industry of this nation for years.

Honourable senators, while adequate wood reserves are most important, there is a danger of complacency in an economy of plenty for as one looks into the future it is apparent that Canadian industry faces a severe test. The Scandinavian and European mills can buy wood in Canada—they are actually doing it now—ship it to Europe, convert it to pulp and paper products and sell it in a competitive market. Logs at European mills cost much more than comparable Canadian wood, yet the lumber is in competition with ours in the United Kingdom market. They are able to do this by the use of most modern equipment and methods and, of course, a lower standard of manufacturing costs.

Moreover, there is another factor. In the Scandinavian countries—and this is something for our national Government to bear in mind, particularly when it is discussing our trading relations in the future—wood industries are so important to the economy of the state that the Government's taxation policies are designed to permit them to sell their products in world markets. In other words, the Government's taxation policies are actually based on the wood industry.

In addition to that, of course, there is the threat of southern pine in the south of the United States which has enticed many of our pulp and paper manufacturers to go down there where they can get a cheaper wood, a wood that grows much more rapidly than our spruce, and where the working conditions and the manufacturing processes are cheaper than they are in Canada. We have lost a great many manufacturers to the southern states over the years. And let it be remembered that it is through research that methods have been found of making newsprint out of that wood in the south which is in competition with newsprint made from our spruce in Canada.

So, I say to the Canadian industry and to governments and to everybody who is interested, that the handwriting is on the wall. We have the wood—all kinds of it—and we have the kind of wood to make a first quality product. We have such people as top-grade scientists, management personnel, and the best of labour. Our opportunities are boundless.

I feel that the bill now before Parliament is a step in the right direction, and that it will be productive of greater progress along the road to greater knowledge through research.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I would like to participate briefly in this discussion on the proposal to set up a new forestry department. I have some interest in the matter because years ago, in happier times, I had the administration, in the Department of Mines and Resources, of the federal contribution to the development of our forest industries.

I listened with very close interest to the presentation by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Pearson). He outlined at some length the great contribution that the forest industry has made to the economy of Canada, but he scarcely touched on how the proposals embodied in this bill would supplement or improve that contribution or add to the usefulness of this industry in our dominion.

My honourable friend from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) fell somewhat into the same error. Those of us —and there are many—who keep informed in some fashion about the development of our forest industry and the contribution it makes to our economy are well aware that it is a great industry. I venture to say that most people in British Columbia are well acquainted with the importance of the forest industry to that province. A similar statement would apply to other provinces as well. What I should have liked to hear from the sponsor of the bill was information as to what the present Forestry Branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources is doing. And I would have found the address of my honourable colleague from Northumberland-Miramichi more interesting had he stated in some detail the values and benefits which he expects to be derived from this legislation.

Forestry is an important part of our economy and I think that fact is generally recognized across Canada. Certainly the pulp and paper people in both eastern and western Canada recognize its importance. Newspaper articles on its value have been published regularly and we require little information on this point to supplement what we already have. But so far it is not clear to my mind —and this is what bothers me—how this proposed department would improve the forest industry. The honourable gentleman from Northumberland-Miramichi stated this was the most neglected industry in Canada. Well, during the period when I was a member of the Government I found that theme had a very general application. I suspect that the farmers of western Canada today feel that their industry is the most neglected, and I am quite certain that the textile manufacturers are convinced they are at the bottom of the scale in this respect. But that kind of thing is no evidence of a need for this legislation. This year's estimates for the Forestry Branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources amount to about $6½ million. I would ask honourable senators to bear in mind that this amount is to cover research work and the like, for the federal authority does not control forest resources except in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, and there these resources are very limited. I understood my honourable friend from Northumberland-Miramichi to say that the federal Government received something like $200 million in revenue from the forest industry and contributed only $10 million to it, and he compared this with agriculture, from which the federal Government got $200 million against expenses of $100 million. I am not quite certain how those figures are arrived at.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Neither am I.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The provinces control all the timber and all our forests and they derive the revenue from these sources. The federal treasury gets indirect revenue from what may be called a stimulation of an expansion of our economy through the utilization of various products, and particularly their export. But that has a general application to all phases of our economy.

The honourable senator who sponsored the bill spoke about the number of forestry officers employed by the dominion Government. I made a calculation that at the present time the Forestry Branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources employs about 480 full-time employees, and some 260 seasonal employees, presumably in the summer months. That represents a substantial personnel, and an annual expenditure of $6½ million is a very considerable amount.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Did the honourable senator hear the comparative figures with reference to forest service employees in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am not just sure what application they would have. It would be just as interesting to know the number of forest service employees in Russia or Sweden. What I am pointing out is that the administration of most of our forest resources is in the hands of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Is that not true of agriculture also? Yet there is a federal Department of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I shall have a word or two to say about that in a minute.

The provinces have the administration. I think there is a place for the federal Government in this business of forest administration, but I would like to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that in forestry, agriculture and fisheries we are doing some work that is similar to that done by all the provinces, and if we examine closely we find overlapping in practically every instance.

That brings me to the point mentioned by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Pearson) in his interjection a moment ago. There should be a broad differentiation between what the provinces do and what the federal Government does, and I think that differentiation should be on this basis: that the federal Government undertake the research work, which would be available to all the provinces, and the provinces do the practical investigation work. The provinces have experimental farms. I think the dominion Government has experimental farms in almost every province. The federal Government has a large parks system. Many of the provinces are getting into the parks system. Thus there is much duplication of effort, and unfortunately very often there is rivalry between provincial Government employees and federal Government employees. My view is that it is not necessary to set up a new Department of Forestry. It would mean the appointment of a minister, with all the paraphernalia and accoutrements, and all the civil servants associated with that office. That is bound to increase expense. What is needed is a good director of forestry—and I think we have a good one—who can supervise two or three things. First, research work. A great deal of useful research work has been done, perhaps in co-operation with the provinces, on a fire protection system.

When I was in the department, shortly before the outbreak of war, I had discussions with the province of Alberta leading to the protection of the east slope of the Rocky Mountains. Fires had devastated much of this area and when the forest were destroyed great floods occurred in the spring, causing damage and erosion. After the season passed the floods dwindled to streams. I am glad to say that work of protection was resumed after the war, and I understand it is pretty effectively carried on now by co-operation between the dominion Government and the province of Alberta. In the estimates there is a vote for the individual who is the dominion representative on the board.

I think the general field of forestry research should be left to the federal Government, because what the central Government does in this field is of value to practically every province. There is no need for each province to carry on its own research work. There is the problem of how this work could best be done. My honourable friend from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) spoke of a large block of productive forest land managed by the University of New Brunswick. The land contained many thousand cords of wood per acre in 1914. A great many thousands of cords were cut in succeeding years, yet by 1948, owing to good management, the number of cords of wood per acre had increased to nearly three times that of 1914. That is the sort of thing that counts. Whether or not research can best be done through the universities, there is no question that it is of tremendous importance.

Another matter of very great importance is the preservation of forests. For instance, more than 20 years ago a good deal of consideration was being given to the ravages of the spruce budworm in the Maritime provinces.

I have not been closely in touch with this development since, but I understand that means have been found, through spraying with chemicals, of eradicating this trouble. Research in those directions is all to the good. However, I submit that it is not necessary to go to all the additional expense that would be involved in creating a new department to have this research effectively carried on.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: As a matter of fact, it has been pretty effectively carried on in the past. The dominion Government has co-operated with the provinces in the control of insects. It has co-operated in the matter of research. For the life of me, I cannot see how the appointment of a minister—who would need a deputy minister and a number of other salaried officials, with a lot of paraphernalia—could add one iota to the effectiveness of what is being done at the present time.

Since I hold, very modestly, certain views on the spending proclivities of this Government particularly, I must say that I cannot see the need of this bit of window dressing —because it is nothing more—that we are asked to approve today. I should say that the first job of Parliament at present is to economize wherever it can, to spend only where we are going to get results, where we are going to add to our assets. If any honourable senator wants to examine the total amount that is taken in at all levels of government out of the taxpayers' pockets, he can come to no other conclusion than that we are already pretty close to the danger point. If the experience of other nations is any guide for us, I think we should realize that. I confess that I cannot find myself enthusiastic for this bill. In regard to forestry, we have been doing excellent work. The progress that the industry has made, as placed before us so clearly by our colleagues, at any rate, is a measure of evidence that we have not been lax or failed altogether in the past.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, I should like to say just a few words in connection with one or two of the statements made by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). While I have great admiration for him, I find at this time that I must come to the defence of the Departments of Agriculture, provincial and federal. He stated that there was great overlapping of services between the provincial and federal Departments of Agriculture and other departments. I should like to take exception to that statement. I happened to be in a position of administration in the Department of Agriculture in my province for a great number of years, and I recall distinctly that when the Rowell-Sirois Commission was hearing evidence the question of overlapping of services came up in every province. As I recall, Mr. Sirois himself said that there was very little overlapping between the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture. As a matter of fact, he made the statement that there was no overlapping of services in my province. I think it is set out in the British North America Act that federal jurisdiction in the field of agriculture is confined to research, experimentation, inspection services and the administration of national acts, whereas the provincial field is confined almost entirely to that of education and extension services. I would not want the idea to go abroad that there is any degree of overlapping of existing services by the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture, because I do not think such duplication exists.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I also should like to say a word or two on this subject for the purpose of referring to certain views that have just been expressed. In the first place, we must remember that in this bill we are dealing with a great industry, the greatest manufacturing industry in Canada. It is true that, as the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) said, the setting up of a new department will be more expensive than the operating of a subsidiary service. However, we make a great mistake if we confuse expenditure which is actually an expense with expenditure which is an investment. If we set up a department whose sole function will be to concentrate on the development of the forestry industry of Canada, instead of having the services split between two other departments, it should be well worth while. Research, foreign trade facilities and so forth really constitute an investment whereby the money comes back to the people of Canada. Certainly this great forestry industry of ours deserves the concentration which it can only receive, as far as the federal Government is concerned, through establishment of a department for that purpose.

When the honourable senator says forestry and forest areas are primarily provincial and not national, I think he is wrong. In relation to the subject before us I do not for the life of me see that there is any difference between forestry and agricultural, mineral or any other natural wealth. Each province certainly has these resources, but we are dealing here with a national policy for a national industry, and I think it is time that we did have this proposed concentration within the federal Government for the development of this great industry of Canada.

As the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) mentioned, technical changes are taking place in the development of forest products and so forth. Such changes are taking place not only in the paper and newsprint industry. Forest products are entering into all phases of industry today. For example, consumer packages in the stores and so forth right down the line originate with forest products. It is a great developing trade in the world, and unless Canada can gear itself by research and development to the countless additional uses which are constantly becoming available throughout the world for forest products, then Canada is simply going to be left far behind other countries.

As far as I am concerned I prefer to regard this bill as providing a new department to replace the present split-up services, and thus creating a paying asset rather than, as was suggested a moment ago, just another expense.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

INCOME TAX BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John G. Higgins, for Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson, moved the third reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-488, for the relief of Elizabeth Fairnington Gaul.

Bill SD-489, for the relief of Rolande Mercier Perreault.

Bill SD-490, for the relief of France Andree Joly Smith.

Bill SD-491, for the relief of Marcelle Schipper Brian.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: With leave, I move the third readings now.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have been informed that royal assent will take place this evening at about 8 o'clock. His Honour the Speaker has not yet received notice to that effect, but it will be forthcoming. I trust that all honourable senators now present will attend so that we may have a proper quorum. I would therefore move that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell, at approximately 7.45 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 7.45 p.m., the sitting was resumed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

14th July 1960

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Wilfred Judson, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 14th July, at 8 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

E. Joly de Lotbinière,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-83, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wilfred Judson, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Wilfred Judson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

An Act respecting Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to the order for motions:

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, July 19, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 19, at 3. p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 19, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-80, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-81, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the Board of Broadcast Governors for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 19 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter 22, Statutes of 1958. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 36 of the Broadcasting Act, Chapter 22, Statutes of 1958, and section 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Secretary of State of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of the Secretary of State Act, Chapter 77, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Civil Service Commission of Canada for the calendar year ended December 31, 1959, pursuant to section 4 of the Civil Service Act, Chapter 48, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1960, Wednesday, July 13, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's report No. 516 and moved, with leave, that the said report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, when presenting some reports from the Divorce Committee last week, I stated that they dealt with the last cases for this session, but one more case has turned up. It is one that was adjourned in order to allow the parties to perfect their proceedings if they wished to, and they have done so.

Report adopted.

FINAL REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the 517th report of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

He said: Honourable senators, I now have the last report of the Divorce Committee for the session.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is that a promise?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: This is what I might term the annual report, in which I, on behalf of the committee, sum up and give the statistics for the year and, if you will permit, make some comments of my own.

This has been a long and tedious session for the Divorce Committee. We have had more cases on the docket and have tried more than in any previous session of which I have knowledge. I think I may safely say it has been the largest docket in history. The proceedings have been most difficult, owing to the fact that our reports have not been followed as I would have liked to see them followed by the other place, and, as a consequence, a great deal of tension has existed.

Moreover, it is most difficult to conduct judicial proceedings, as they should be conducted, with a single eye to doing justice between the parties, when the tribunal is subject to continuous controversy in newspapers and elsewhere. I am sure that anyone who has tried to do justice between parties will realize the difficulties the committee has faced during this long term in endeavouring to do justice in no less than 492 cases, which is the number of petitions we heard and recommended.

Honourable senators, I now come to the details of the committee's 517th report. During the current session of Parliament 609 petitions for divorce were presented to the Senate and dealt with by the committee, as follows:

Petitions heard and recommended	492
Petitions heard and rejected	7
Petitions withdrawn	15
Petitions not disposed of	95
Total	609

Last session 85 cases remained undisposed of, so the figure of 95 for this session remains in about the same proportion.

Of the petitions recommended, 486 were from petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec and 6 from petitioners domiciled in the province of Newfoundland. Of the 486 petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec, 161 were husbands and 325 were wives. Of the 6 petitioners domiciled in the province of Newfoundland, one was a husband and 5 were wives.

Of the petitions heard, 13 were opposed at the hearings; and of the 13 cases opposed at the hearings, 6 were rejected.

The main, or general, committee met 54 times during the session on 54 separate days. The general committee divided into subcommittees for the hearing of evidence in support of petitions, and these subcommittees held 139 meetings.

In 6 cases, where the petitioner pleaded hardship on account of straitened circumstances in respect to the payment of the full parliamentary fees, the committee recommended a partial remission.

The fees paid to Parliament for bills of divorce heard and recommended during the present session amounted to $102,655.

In the event that all bills of divorce recommended by the committee, now in various stages before Parliament, receive the royal assent, the comparison of dissolutions of marriage granted by Parliament in the last ten sessions is as follows:

1952	312
1952-53	282
1953-54	378
1955	402
1956	356
1957 1st session	338
1957 2nd session	187
1958	319
1959	353
1960	492

Of the 492 bills for this session, between 400 and 450 are at present on the Order Paper of the House of Commons. Presuming they are passed—and I have every confidence they will be passed, except those cases against which objections may be raised and sustained—the total for this session will be the largest by a considerable margin for any single session during this period.

Statistics covering the number of divorces granted in Canada during the years 1955 to 1959, both inclusive, are as follows:

	1955	1956	1957	1958	1959
Canada	6,031	5,890	6,688	6,279	6,222
Newfoundland	1	5	6	7	1
Prince Edward Island	7	1	2	1	6
Nova Scotia	253	230	250	220	215
New Brunswick	181	215	206	150	221
Quebec	401	351	519	311	351
Ontario	2,509	2,472	2,873	2,776	2,595
Manitoba	337	314	305	292	301
Saskatchewan	237	221	242	281	276
Alberta	627	685	726	743	836
British Columbia	1,483	1,502	1,559	1,498	1,420

The figures for 1960 are not yet available. Honourable senators may find some significance and interest in the fact that Newfoundland had 1 case in 1959 and this year had 6. The total for Quebec last year was 351, and please bear that figure in mind when considering the fact that there were 2,595 cases in Ontario. In a comparison between these sister provinces, Quebec seems to me to stand up fairly well. Those who would destroy the present system of divorce might bear these figures in mind. I am not in favour of divorce. I do not like it. It is a remedy that should be accepted only as a last resort. It may be of some significance that in 1959 Parliament granted only 353 divorces, while the courts of Ontario granted 2,595; of Manitoba, 301; of Saskatchewan, 276, and of Alberta, 838.

It seems to me I have heard more by way of discussion with regard to our proceedings from British Columbia than from any other province. British Columbia courts granted 1,420 divorces last year. Those gentlemen from British Columbia who are concentrating their attention upon the Senate and its divorce proceedings might do well to cast their eyes homeward.

The national divorce rate per 100,000 population granted in Canada in 1959 was 35.7, divided as follows:

Newfoundland	0.2
Prince Edward Island	5.9
Nova Scotia	30.0
New Brunswick	37.5
Quebec	7.0
Ontario	43.6
Manitoba	34.0
Saskatchewan	30.6
Alberta	67.3
British Columbia	90.4

The rate of divorce in British Columbia is by all means the higest percentagewise in the whole dominion of Canada.

The following statement shows a comparison between the number of divorces granted to husbands and wives respectively in the years mentioned.

	Husbands	Wives
1955	2,357	3,674
1956	2,279	3,611
1957	2,701	3,987
1958	2,569	3,710
1959	2,459	3,763

All of this is respectfully submitted by myself as chairman.

Honourable senators, with your kind indulgence I would like to make a few additional comments. In the first place I wish to pay tribute, as I have done several times in the past when presenting similar reports, to those persons who have served us so faithfully during the session. I refer to the employees of the Committees Branch, which is headed by Mr. Harvey Armstrong, Chief Clerk of Committees; to Mr. John A. Hinds, Assistant Chief Clerk, Mrs. Bertha Anderson and Miss Edith Wray, secretaries, and the clerks of the branch, with whom you are familiar: Mr. James MacDonald, Mr. Fred Fortier, Mr. Gerard Lemire, Mr. George McIntosh and Mr. Alexander MacFarlane. I know these men and women have been only doing their duty, and are paid for it, but that is not the whole story. These officials, who throw themselves into the work with real interest, who apply their minds to it, and are so helpful on all occasions, do more than just the duties required of them, and I think virtues of that kind should be appreciated by honourable senators. I appreciate them. I think it is fitting that on some occasions, at least, we recognize that they are alive and doing good work for us.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I pause here just a moment, honourable senators, to say a word about our Hansard staff, without which the Divorce Committee could not operate. The Hansard staff reports not only the Divorce Committee but also the debates in this chamber, as well as certain proceedings of other committees. I would like to pay to them a well-earned tribute. Theirs is an exacting and laborious profession, so much so that it is difficult to find recruits in young men and women willing to undergo the severe and lengthy training necessary to qualify for this work. A knowledge of shorthand, of course, is required, and a facility in its application to match the speed of a speaker. In addition, they must possess a large vocabulary, an extensive knowledge of orthography and of English, and a broad familiarity with literature. A good reporter I submit, honourable senators, is a highly educated gentleman. Our staff is all that which I have mentioned. I have been chairman of the Divorce Committee since 1953, and I do not remember a single occasion upon which a correction has been required in any report of the committee by a petitioner or a witness whose words have been recorded.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: A pretty good record.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Now, I am not to be heard to say that no mistakes have been made, but it is a pretty good indication of the accuracy of these men, when I say that nobody has complained to me, in my hearing or to my knowledge, during all those years.

I was rather intrigued, if that is the right word, by this quotation from Walt Whitman:

> My foothold is tenoned and morticed in granite.
> I laugh at what men call dissolution,
> And I know the amplitude of Time.

That can be said by every one of these men who make the permanent record of the activities of this chamber and its committees. They laugh at dissolution; their work will last—nobody knows how long, perhaps for a thousand years.

"It was not until 1909 that the British Parliament undertook to employ its own reporters, and to publish its own debates. In Canada, Parliament established its own Hansard staff in 1880, exactly 29 years before the mother of Parliaments in Great Britain had inaugurated a system of official reports of its proceedings.

"Members of Parliament who participate in debate have learned to cultivate and respect the patience and unselfish devotion of Hansard's staff of editors and reporters. It is not generally known that much more literal, and therefore more voluminous, transcription is given to speeches in the House of Commons than in the Senate. The fact that members in the Commons invariably address much of their remarks to their constituents as well as to their opponents across the floor of the house is taken into practical consideration by Hansard.

"In the Senate, the editor of Hansard has always exercised the art of condensation upon the speeches of honourable senators in a degree that is never approached in the Commons. Very little repetitious rhetoric is permitted to adorn the pages of Senate Hansard. Thus, a useful measure of economy is effected in the curtailed consumption of white paper and printer's ink.

"But, in both houses members have learned to appreciate the regard for good English which is practised by the editors of Hansard. The late Lord Oxford, when he was Mr. Asquith of the British House of Commons, once referred realistically to the fine discretion of the Hansard editor as follow:

> I believe indeed that the verdict of most parliamentary speakers would be that the kindly sponge of sympathetic oblivion is often to be preferred to the cruel fidelity of the verbatim report.

"Incidentally the use of this quotation from Mr. Asquith, one of the great contributors of all time to British Parliamentary debate, prompts the use of another reference. Michael

MacDonagh, a veteran parliamentary reporter, in his book The Reporters' Gallery, said:

> Indeed, few members of Parliament in my time were so correct and finished in diction that it would be presumptuous on the part of the reporter to pretend to make their language fresher or more forcible. In these I would include Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Mr. Asquith, Mr. Churchill, Mr. John Redmond and Lord Hugh Cecil.
>
> Curiously enough, the two most powerful intellects that have been in Parliament in a long time, Mr. Balfour and Lord Morley, habitually clothed their original and profound reflections on political questions in sentences lax, loose and disjointed.

"One often wonders how many of our present generation in the Canadian Parliament would stand up under the cruel fidelity of the verbatim report'."

I will not tell honourable senators where I got all these references, but they are true, and I adopt them as my own in paying the best tribute I can to the excellent work, the helpful character, the accuracy and friendliness of our reporters on Hansard. I should include in the reporters I have mentioned, Mr. Basil Lake, Chief of the Reporting Branch, Mr. Graydon Hagen, Assistant Chief of the branch and senior reporter, Mr. Thomas Hubbard, Junior, Mr. Kirk Crockett, Mr. Fred Lawrence, Mr. Victor Lemire, Mr. George Baker, Mr. Aurèle Chenier, and Mr. Belleau, the translator. I might perhaps take the opportunity of adding to them my own secretary.

Honourable senators, there is another matter that I wish to bring before the house. I find it necessary, or at least advisable, to ask for two amendments to our rules. I give notice now that I will move to amend the rules. Let me explain. When it was not required by our rules to name the co-respondent—the co-respondent was unnamed in most cases—it was necessary to give public notice of the application which might involve the co-respondent, and therefore our rules, for quite a long way back, have required that an applicant for divorce publish his application in the newspapers. This kind of advertisement required by us to be placed in the newspapers would be highly libelous, were it not for the fact that the applicant can hide behind the Senate. Here is somebody of the city of Montreal and so on who gives notice that at the following session she will apply for a bill of divorce from her husband, and names him, salesman, of the city of Westmount, district of Montreal, province of Quebec, on the ground of adultery. Were I to publish a charge that some man or woman was guilty of adultery, something which I had not proved, I would be liable to heavy damages. I am sure the courts would frown on such a statement in the public press and award high damages in consequence.

Just let us think about it for a moment. Here is a man who wishes to get rid of his wife who is, of course, a member of a family and probably has a mother and father living, a sister and so on, and suddenly there appears in the daily newspapers the accusation against this woman, that she has been guilty of adultery. Can one imagine the weapon that is placed in someone's hands if he wishes to do injury to his spouse? What an opportunity we present him with to publish far and wide in the daily press that his wife has been guilty of adultery, of which he may not have any proof whatsoever! And we join with him in that outrage.

This advertising is utterly of no use or value to anyone, or so little that, in my judgment, after a long experience with it, I think it can be disregarded. The only persons who value the advertising and object to our dropping it are the lawyers who practise before us. If anyone would like to see some samples, I have three notices here in one paper, by one lawyer. At the bottom of each, in large capital type, is the name of the lawyer for the applicant, with his address.

Now, I believe in marriage. I like to advertise marriage but I would not like to advertise divorce. Why should I say to women in town that Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Brown are applying for divorce, and suggest and continue to suggest day after day in the public press that she may obtain relief from her troubles simply by getting a divorce; and if she fears there might be any difficulty about that, why, here is the lawyer's name, just go and see him.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: For how many years has it been necessary to publish these notices?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As far as I know, it has always been necessary, and the reason, I think, is that when Parliament is asked to pass a private bill whereby property or various kinds of other rights of individuals might be put in jeopardy, the rules of the Commons and of this chamber have required that the private bill be advertised. That is all right; I have no desire to interfere with that. But to advertise divorce continually in the public newspapers is, in my judgment, not in the public interest.

I think all honourable senators—certainly all the members of my committee with whom I have discussed this, and I have discussed it with them all—are unanimous in their opinion that we should no longer require that kind of thing. So I give notice now that I will move that the Rules of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Rule 107. Strike out "of any nature whatsoever" and substitute "other than Bills of Divorce".

2. Rule 136. Strike out Rule 136 and substitute the following:

"136. Every applicant for a Bill of Divorce shall give notice of his or her intended application in accordance with subjoined Form A, and shall specify therein from whom and for what cause divorce is sought."

3. Rule 137. Strike out "two months" and substitute "one month".

4. Rule 139. 3. (e). Strike out "thirty days" and substitute "fifteen days".

5. Rule 141. Strike out "by the evidence of the publication of the notice as required by Rule 136, and".

6. Form E, paragraph 5. Strike out "thirty days" and substitute "fifteen days".

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable gentleman if in a case where it is impossible to effect personal service there is provision for advertising so that the respondent or defendant may receive notice that application is being made?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. It is now provided that the name of the co-respondent must be given in the petition. When the name of the co-respondent is not given or is not known it is necessary for the solicitors to make an application to us for the privilege of proceeding without naming the co-respondent. In such cases the matter has so far been dealt with in my room by me personally. The application is made and I make an order for substitutional service, for advertising, if necessary, or whatever the circumstances seem to require, so I see no liability of injustice to anybody in this matter.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You do not fear that a respondent or defendant would not have notice of an application?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We will not proceed with one of these cases unless both parties have been notified. The respondent certainly, as well as the petitioner, is notified by the solicitors, and an affidavit of service of the notice upon him must be filed with our clerk before we proceed. If the co-respondent is not known, and an application is made for the privilege of proceeding without notice being served upon him, then is the time to advertise it; and that should be left, I think, to the discretion of the committee, usually acting through its chairman.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: If I may interrupt, I think what the honourable senator has outlined is exactly the procedure we have in our province of Saskatchewan. There is absolutely no advertising unless a party cannot be personnally served, and in that case the court may order that service be made by way of advertising in a daily newspaper.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I thank the honourable gentleman for giving me that information. I may say that the same practice prevails in the province of Ontario. Under the rules in Ontario there is no thought of any advertising whatsoever. I can go further than that. I think I can definitely state that in not one single province in the dominion of Canada where a divorce court operates is there any requirement for advertising.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You are quite right as to that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: None of our courts require it, and certainly it is a surplusage here in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do not the rules of the other place provide for advertising with respect to all private bills?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am not referring to them.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, but I am asking, do they not?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes; both in the Commons and the Senate public notice of private bills is required, particularly where individual rights, property rights and that kind of thing are affected; and corporations and so on making application for incorporation are required to advertise that they are applying to Parliament. I am not proposing any interference with that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do the rules of the other place not provide that petitions for divorce bills shall be advertised?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not specially. They require that petitions for all private bills be advertised.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Wouldn't that include divorce bills?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That would include divorce bills, of course, but my conclusions were that we are the dominant chamber in this matter of divorce. We try the cases, we see the parties, so I think we should lead the way and the other house could follow.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But a change in the rules could not be effective until the other place agreed to it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it could. We do not need to require the advertising of divorce petitions that has been done in the past, and I would like to get free of it. The other house could do what it liked, but I fancy it would follow us in this respect and not require divorce petitions to be advertised, although petitions for other private bills are advertised.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is it not possible that if divorce petitions were not advertised the other house might object to passing the bills?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I see no reason why it should object on that ground. If the other house thinks advertising is required, it can have it done. It now requires it to be done.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, with permission of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) may I make a comment? There is one very good reason why there would be no objection to it in the House of Commons, namely, that the press gives little or no publicity to divorce cases in this country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think publicity is given to them in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Where publicity is given, these matters are probably regarded somewhat differently.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not see any difficulty in that regard. The other place draws its own rules, and if it requires advertising, it can have it done. It should not affect what we decide to do. If it does not choose to follow the Senate in that regard, then its advertising will be done as it has in the past.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As I understand the situation, if we do away with advertising, the other place will require it to be done before proceeding with the bills.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Advertising is required under the rules of that house now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So there are two advertisements?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That house usually relies on the advertising required by the Senate. However, there is nothing in the rules of that house necessitating that it follow us in the matter of advertising. The responsibility is on the members of that house.

Honourable senators, I have been driven to my conclusion in this matter by reason of the fact that respondents are accused of an offence of this kind, and not a very nice offence, long before it is proved, and in many of the cases that come before us it is never proved. Notwithstanding that, the accusation against the respondent stands in the public press, be that person a man or a woman.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will such a change in rules as suggested mean that the advertisement must appear in the Canada Gazette?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It makes no difference with respect to the Canada Gazette.

There is one more point I wish to bring before the house. At present our rules provide that two months shall elapse between the date of personal service of a petition upon the respondent and co-respondent, and the trial of the case. That time is too long. The courts require a much shorter time. Thirty days, it would seem, would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Ordinarily it is 15 days.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the court rule. The requirement of an elapsed time of two months is cumbersome and has bothered us a good deal in bringing cases on for hearing. I would like to see it reduced to 30 days.

Further, with respect to notice of contestation, I should think that 15 days would be sufficient for a respondent to make up his or her mind whether or not to oppose the petition. I give notice to amend the rules to this effect.

Honourable senators, I thank you for the moral support that you have given my committee during this current session and for the many commendations which we have received from time to time.

May I make mention of the attendance by the members of the Standing Committee on Divorce? It has been all that a chairman could possibly ask. Long and burdensome as the work of the committee has been, we have never been short of a quorum. As usual, I pay my chief compliment and take my hat off to the Honourable Senator Golding, who, with 54 meetings, met with us 54 times.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I wish also to mention the Honourable Senator Bradley—and I share his attendance record—who attended 53 days; the Honourable Senator Gershaw attended 52 days, and the Honourable Senator Barbour 51 days. Those honourable senators are in what I might call the "50-day class". The Honourable Senator Taylor (Westmorland) was unavoidably absent for a period of time, but nevertheless is in the "40-day class", and the Honourable Senator Kinley attended 35 days.

Honourable senators, I am most grateful to these gentlemen who have served with me with such faithfulness, devotion and concentration to the work in hand. I feel the committee has done very good work indeed.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, may I say a few words of congratulations to the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and to the hard-working members of that committee. Having been a more or less faithful member of the committee for some 20 years—in many of which I did not miss a sitting—I know something of the onerous work it is called upon to perform. I feel that we are most fortunate in having the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity as chairman of this committee, and with him these honourable senators who serve so faithfully. Because of its regular meetings—during the early part of the session it meets every day from Monday to Friday and sometimes on Saturday—it is a most demanding committee. I would not want this report tabled without congratulations being extended to the chairman and the members of the committee, the members of the staff, the reporters and all others who have taken such a common part in the work done during this session. They have done a good job, and I am sure we appreciate their faithfulness.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to associate myself with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in commending the chairman (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and all the members of the Divorce Committee for the very faithful service they have rendered not only to the Senate but to the country during the present session and previous sessions.

As the honourable Leader of the Government has said, this is trying work; it is exacting work. It requires senators who serve on this committee to be in Ottawa on days when the Senate is not sitting. We who are not members of the committee owe a great debt of gratitude and appreciation to those senators who are prepared to take on this work. Most of us come here on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and then go back to our other duties, but the members of the Divorce Committee are here on Mondays and Fridays, as well. If they were not here on those days the work before the committee could not be completed within the session. We cannot give to the members of this committee any greater consideration than the rest of the senators receive. All that we can offer them is an expression of our very great appreciation of the services they are rendering in this respect.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is ordered that this report lie on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Gray Turgeon, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-82, respecting the Department of Forestry, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Mr. Pearson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

THIRTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's thirteenth report:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their thirteenth report as follows:

Your committee have in obedience to the order of reference of June 14, 1960, considered the following report of the Civil Service Commission—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You are not going to deal with it today?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Croll: And the report will appear in the record?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

FOURTEENTH REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the committee's fourteenth report:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their fourteenth report, as follows—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

For text of reports see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1095-7.

DIVORCE

BILL—FIRST READING

Hon. Arthur Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bill:

Bill SD-492, for the relief of Norman Edward Fulford.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

STATEMENT ON FUND

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, there is a matter to which I would like to make reference. On Wednesday last the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) made the following statement:

> It would be an interesting exercise for the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) to confer a public benefaction upon the house by inquiring into and ascertaining how much would be required to make the annuities fund solvent.

I made the necessary inquiries, and I found that the premium rates used prior to the year 1948 proved to be inadequate to cover fully the payments which were being made out of the annuities fund, because of the increase in the life of the average participant. Consequently, transfers have been made from time to time from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to cover this deficiency. From the year 1909 to the 31st day of March, 1959 the amount transferred totalled $30,143,025. I have here a table showing the amount that was transferred in each fiscal year, and with permission of honourable senators I will place it on Hansard:

Fiscal year	Am't transferred to maintain reserve
1909-1930	$ 502,000.00
1930-1931	108,644.72
1931-1932	261,939.35
1932-1933	289,435.39
1933-1934	184,237.98
1934-1935	146,057.46
1935-1936	271,826.73
1936-1937	540,831.72
1937-1938	8,941,195.84
1938-1939	nil
1939-1940	379,006.95
1940-1941	111,425.22
1941-1942	616,981.58
1942-1943	497,790.26
1943-1944	32,180.49
1944-1945	257,288.00
1945-1946	293,797.96
1946-1947	977,069.58
1947-1948	331,856.85
1948-1949	11,408,468.42
1949-1950	1,255,771.76
1950-1951	615,757.59
1951-1952	940,138.44
1952-1953	743,616.59
1953-1954	98,911.57
1954-1955	371,520.69
1955-1956	CR.115,042.21
1956-1957	CR.759,714.82
1957-1958	1,184,466.48
1958-1959	157,565.39

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would the honourable senator mind giving us the amounts for, say, the last three years?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will give them for the last two years, and later on you will understand why I do not do so for the third year. In the fiscal year 1957-58 the amount was $1,184,466.48, and in the fiscal year 1958-59 it was $157,565.39.

I might point out that for the fiscal years 1955-56 and 1956-57 there were surpluses of $115,042.21 and $759,714.82, respectively. This meant that for these two fiscal years transfers were made from the reserve fund of the Canadian Government Annuities to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The process was reversed. This was brought about by a lower than normal death rate for each of these years. It should be pointed out that during the fiscal years 1937-38 and 1948-49 a new set of mortality tables was adopted to make adequate provision for the increased life of the average human being and the average participant, with the result that there have been no mortality losses of any kind on any annuities sold subsequent to the year 1948. In other words, all annuities that have been written commencing with the year 1948 now appear to be on a sound actuarial basis. I think they will continue on a sound actuarial basis until such time as the life span of the average person is extended.

Finally—and this is for the purpose of information only—I would like to point out that on March 31, 1959 there was in the reserve fund of the Canadian Government Annuities the sum of $1,105,825,076.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I wonder whether it would be possible to give the figures in constant dollars. Let me say that many years ago, I believe in the late twenties or early thirties, I bought an annuity for my wife for which I paid $16,000 in cash. The Government will repay me in money that will not have more than one-half the purchasing value of the money I paid then, and notwithstanding that some people have been kicking about the rate of interest, it has been the most valuable investment I know of on the part of the Government, taking money at high purchasing rates years ago and repaying later at reduced purchasing rates. The Annuities Branch is taking money now at rates of purchasing value which in all probability are higher than those of the money with which the debt will be repaid in years to come.

If these figures were given to us in constant dollars they would present a much different story.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am afraid an actuary would have to prepare the figures in constant dollars. I do not think I am capable of doing it.

LAND USE

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, at this time I wish to take into consideration the second report of the Special Committee on Land Use in the Senate, a copy of which you will find as an appendix to Senate Hansard of July 13, 1960.

First, honourable senators, I wish to extend my appreciation to all those who assisted in the work of the committee during this present session of Parliament. I would like to mention the work done by the committee from the Department of Agriculture which was sent to the United States to gather evidence and make a report on the Rural Development Program in that country. This committee was made up of four highly-qualified men: Dr. J. F. Booth, Director of Economics; Mr. A. E. Barrett, Assistant Director, General Research Branch; Mr. S. F. Shields, Regional Director, P.F.R.A., and Mr. R. A. Stutt, Head, Land Economics Division, Administration Branch.

The Department of Agriculture should also be commended for acting so promptly on your committee's recommendation and making it possible for this committee to proceed with its work.

I also wish to give a word of appreciation to all the clerical staff who worked so well during the session in taking reports and publishing the proceedings, and also to the Senate Committees Branch for its good work.

Finally, I appreciate the time taken by all 22 witnesses who prepared briefs for presentation.

Honourable senators, as everyone knows, a large segment of agriculture is having difficulties in trying to keep their heads above water, let alone trying to keep up with the standard of living which many of us enjoy in other vocations. Not too long ago agriculture was our principal renewable resource. Now as you know the Land Use Committee in its report made on July 16, 1959, showed how badly this large segment of our farmers are faring; getting less and less of the national income as their cost of production goes up.

The Department of Agriculture's committee of four reported back to the Land Use Committee, as indicated in the committee's printed Proceedings Nos. 1 and 2, of March 3 and 10, 1960. Before I explain or give you the highlights of this report, let me draw your attention to these figures: 44 per cent of 4.7 million farms in the United States produce 91 per cent of the farm product sales by value. The remaining 56 per cent of the nation's farm sales of agricultural products are so small they have little effect on the total output and marketing. Since these farmers sell little, they gain little from price stabilization programs. They necessarily must depend on off-farm jobs for their cash income. Thus you can see that the United States has a small farm problem comparable to ours, and it decided to try something to help out this situation. In 1955 the United States launched a plan called the Rural Development Program. This program was developed and put into action in 1955 by federal and state co-operation in setting up a number of widely-scattered pilot programs.

The first approach to setting up a pilot program was made by the state. In setting up such a program it located some of the most underdeveloped, uneconomic and underemployed counties. All local organizations in a county or area were called together, the federal and state authorities co-operating. Some of the organizations called together or asked to send representatives were: chambers of commerce, churches, school bodies, businessmen, forestry associations, local government bodies and agriculture associations of various kinds.

The work at these meetings in the various pilot counties was to tabulate first of all the problems of the area or county. Secondly, having done this they then set out all their assets: lands—total acreage in the county, arable, cultivated, pastures, forested; soils; rivers, lakes, industries, businesses, churches, schools, roads, et cetera.

The next order of business was to arrive at some specific effort which would overcome a certain problem. A subcommittee was formed to handle this specific program. The emphasis, however, was always on the local people helping themselves to accomplish this, and stress was laid on the need of leadership in every county that was undertaking this scheme. This is most essential: leadership and self-help are the outstanding features of the Rural Development Program. The federal and state authorities only come forward with technical research and financial assistance.

The problems vary with countries and people, so much so that no general pattern can be set for all countries. However, two fundamental facts are basic in the concept of rural development in the United States. First, because of increased output per worker resulting from technological and scientific advances, fewer people are needed on farms. Second, opportunities for area economic development are mostly to be found in fields outside agriculture. These two facts made it imperative to develop other fields than agriculture. That is why off-farm work has been stressed so much.

Local people can direct attention to basic, economic and social needs of their area better or more quickly than outsiders. Then again, local people, by determining to solve their problems, preserve the freedom of the individual and give pride of accomplishment.

It would have been very nearly impossible to inaugurate a resource development program in the United States but for the assistance and co-operation of the Federal State Extension Service. This service is most essential to a well-developed federal-state arrangement to provide the people with useful research information. You might also say the Extension Service assists in development of leadership, also in passing along research information providing administrative support to local subcommittees.

Experience in the United States shows that local subcommittees are most effective when formed to deal with specific matters. In general, they deal with agriculture, wood lot development and promotion of industry, tourist trade, education, health and welfare, and community facilities, roads, water and many other varied fields of endeavour. In brief, the fundamental accomplishment in the Rural Development Program is the awareness engendered in the local people of their own problems and the setting about co-operatively to overcome them.

Mr. Paul N. Kepner, Deputy Administrator, Federal Extension Service, Washington, D.C., in his brief to the Land Use Committee, said tangible evidence indicated progress and accomplishments in the following fields:

1. New small industries or expansion of some already in existence.

2. Industrial training courses added to agricultural in rural schools.

3. Recreation and tourist facilities.

4. Needed agricultural marketing and service facilities established.

5. Reforestation and improved forestry management.

6. Extension services and other agencies have intensified their efforts to be of assistance to farmers.

7. Agricultural programs modified to better serve the long-time needs of these particular areas and small farmers.

8. The small business administration is providing financial, consultative and training services to small industries in rural areas.

In short, the rural Development Program is:

(1) local people recognizing a need; (2) focusing of local interest upon a concept of a total community; (3) involvement of every agency and person in accomplishment of an objective.

At the national level the organization is of a loose nature. This tends to avoid the policy of direction from the top, yet there is an atmosphere of co-operation all the way down the line. The basic tenet of the Rural Development Program is that local people can do things to help themselves, thus maintaining the freedom of the individual through a self-help program. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that there is a great variety of problems extending from end to end of the country, and not any one solution set up by a senior government can overcome all the problems.

That, honourable senators, is, in brief, an outline of the report of the committee from the Department of Agriculture. I strongly commend anyone who is interested in the agricultural problems of Canada to read this report in full. Your committee, while it did not quite finish what it had set out to do this session, nevertheless hopes to finish its program of discovery during next session.

The committee had briefs from some of the other departments of Government, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and Dr. J. R. Pelletier, D.Sc., Superintendent, Experimental Farm, Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, Quebec.

Great good can come out of this Rural Development Program and I see no reason why a similar program cannot be initiated in Canada.

In Canada our farm organizations, instead of becoming mere pressure groups, should take a new hard look at their possible contribution to increase farm income. I feel our farm organizations can give our Governments a lead in setting up a similar development program. If certain municipalities would start a rural development program, I am sure they could get help in direction and technological assistance from the Extension Service in their province.

Honourable senators, in closing, I would like to draw your attention to some of the recommendations made by your committee and attached to its report:

Whereas there is a need of elimination of problem areas in Canada where farm businesses are small, productivity low and incomes inadequate for family requirements:—

The committee recommends,

(1) (a) That further research be undertaken to define more clearly the nature of the problem in low-income areas and to pinpoint their location.

(b) That a Federal-Provincial Rural Development Program be instituted to deal with areas of greatest need.

(2) That in implementing such a program the provincial Governments paritcipate on a co-operative basis; such co-operation to include the principle that both provincial and local authorities assume major responsibility for the identification of problems and needs of local areas and the initiation, planning and development of appropriate action programs.

(3) That the federal and provincial Governments co-operate in assisting any such program with financial and technical assistance, said financial assistance to be provided through a cost-sharing agreement.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor: Honourable senators, basing my motion on the assumption that this report is not now to be disposed of, on behalf of the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) I move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland), for Hon. Mr. McDonald, debate adjourned.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Henri Courtemanche moved the second reading of Bill C-83, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving second reading of this bill, C-83, an Act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons, I would like to make the following short observations.

The bill before you is a consolidation of the Canada Elections Act, which includes all the amendments proposed, together with two amendments made in the other house. These two amendments made similar modifications to clauses 18 and 25 by replacing the word "and" by a comma and adding after the word "Manitoba" the following words: "and New Brunswick and in every electoral district where it should be done in the opinion of the Chief Electoral Officer".

As honourable senators are aware, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the other house has carefully discussed the establishment of a permanent list of voters, absentee voting, proxy voting and the lowering of eligible voting age from 21 to 18 years. May I add that no amendments to the law in these respects were proposed.

Honourable senators will recall that advance polls were open to a very few special classes. The new bill would permit all voters who have reason to believe that they will not be in their polling divisions on election day to vote in advance.

Also, the new bill extends the voting time by one hour, to give a better opportunity to certain categories of workers to discharge their duty as electors.

79955-1—69

Most of the other amendments are operational, designed to facilitate the task of the Chief Electoral Officer in discharging his duties under the act.

As I intend to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further study, we shall have an opportunity of discussing these details with the Chief Electoral Officer when the bill is under consideration there.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, this bill is primarily one for the other house and I do not intend to take up a great deal of the time of this house in discussing it. I do feel however that elections are not only of interest but are also the concern of all, and any suggestions we can make in this house toward ensuring that elections are carried on fairly and as inexpensively as possible I feel we should make.

Before referring to the act, may I say that I am glad the bill has been sponsored in this house by the honourable senator from Rougemont (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche). He came to us at the beginning of this session and we gave him a welcome then. We are happy that he is taking an active interest in the work of this house and we know he will contribute much to it.

As I said, we are all anxious to make sure that there is fairness at all times in elections, that is to say, that neither party gets any political advantage from the election machinery. I think that is true at the present time. I recall—it must be 25 years ago, at least—when the Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King proposed that instead of one enumerator in each subdivision there should be two enumerators: one appointed by the party whose candidate led the poll in the previous election, and the other appointed by the party who came second in that election. That was a revolutionary idea, I must say, among the Grits of that day, of whom I was one. We thought we were giving too great an advantage to the other side, but it has turned out not to be so, and today it is accepted as a matter of course that in the enumeration there shall be two enumerators, one from each side, to make sure that the name of every qualified elector is on the voters' list. And I think I can say that both parties are anxious that that should be done. In fact, all parties are anxious that that should be done.

It has occurred to me, although I have noticed no unfairness, that a change might be made in the rural constituencies. Honourable senators will recall that in the rural constituencies there is just one enumerator and he is appointed by the returning officer. Now, I have never known of any place where there has been unfairness; I know of no examples where a name has been left off.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is there an appeal from this list?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes; if the name is left off there is an opportunity to have it added later on.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is also provision for the person to vote on voting day by being vouched for.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In the rural districts, also, the name can be added to the list by the voter making an affidavit on that day. I am not suggesting there is unfairness in that respect, but it has occurred to me that it might bring about a better balance if in the rural ridings the deputy returning officer was appointed by the party whose candidate led the poll in the previous election and the clerk was appointed by the other party, so that in charge of each booth there would be a representative from each party.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What if there were four parties represented?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What if there were four parties when the enumeration was being made? I think the same procedure should be adopted in connection with the deputy returning officer and the clerk in the rural ridings as is followed in the urban ridings.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It would cost too much.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It would not cost a cent more.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You would have to pay another man.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. My proposal would be that in the rural ridings on election day the deputy returning officer's name would be recommended by those supporting the Government of the day and the clerk would be recommended by the second party.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, I thought you were referring to the preparation of the lists.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. It is merely a suggestion to bring about a balance in the rural ridings comparable to the balance in the urban ridings.

I am not suggesting that in the urban ridings the clerk should be appointed by the other party; this suggestion is limited to the rural ridings. It is merely a suggestion, so that there would be no question whatsoever as to any unfairness in the polling booth.

Another matter which gives me great concern is the cost of elections these days. I know that when I first ran, in 1926, it cost me a lot of money, but if I were running today it would cost me four or five times as much.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Does the honourable senator refer to official costs?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I myself only knew of the official costs at the time, but I was told afterwards there were other costs.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Of course, the dollar was worth much more then.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In any event, the overall cost is becoming so great that I wonder how anyone is bold enough to offer himself as a candidate. In most circumstances unless you are wealthy you have to rely to a great extent on your friends, and that is not too desirable a situation. And the cost is increasing all the time. To begin with, radio is expensive, and on top of that we have television, and I do not know what else there is. Now it is permissible to have tea parties, something which was never heard of in the old days. It will now be legal to advertise and to invite people to come to have tea and cake.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is cheaper than a beer party.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I see some honourable senators speak with greater knowledge than I.

Honourable senators, I am sure we all agree that elections are now becoming a luxury which few can afford. The reason for the high cost is the time that elapses between the announcement of an election and the election day. I would point out that the lapse of time today is greater than it was 25 or 30 years ago. This is a fact, notwithstanding the additional means we now have of informing electors of the issues of the day. We have radios, television, faster motorcars and quicker communications of all kinds.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And good roads.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, good roads and, as I said, faster cars.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald (Queens): What about the chicken suppers?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The chicken suppers too can be worked in quite well within, say, 30 days.

Let me emphasize that despite the improved means of transportation and communication it takes longer to hold an election today than it did 25 or 30 years ago. Under the present law an election cannot take place within less than 60 days from its announcement. Forty-nine days must elapse between the time the enumeration commences and election day. It takes an additional week to appoint enumerators, which would bring the time up to 56 days, plus a probable additional four, making a total of 60 days. It is this lengthy period of time which makes the conduct of an election an expensive undertaking. If the time could be cut in half, I do not say it would reduce the expense to the same extent, but it would certainly be considerably less. Why can we in Canada not have a permanent list of electors?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We tried it once.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: True, it was tried once in 1934, but it was only half tried. The machinery was set up, but it was never put into effect. Because it was not properly tried it was a dismal failure, but that is no reason why it should not be attempted again. I urge that it be tried again.

Honourable senators, from inquiries I have learned that Canada is the only country in the commonwealth which requires electors' lists to be made up after the writs are issued. Great Britain has a permanent voters' list, and elections take place within a period of three weeks.

I know there are difficulties to be met in providing a permanent list. At one time it occurred to me that a permanent list might be set up by the federal Government in co-operation with the provincial Governments, and the list could be revised yearly or half-yearly. But I find there are difficulties in the way of such a scheme, because the qualifications for voters in the provincial elections are not the same as in the dominion elections. As I recall, in the province of Saskatchewan citizens may vote at the age of 18 years, and in British Columbia and Alberta I believe the age is 19 years. There is also a difference in the residential qualifications as between dominion and provincial elections. Some provinces require that voters have a residential qualification of two years, while others require one year.

However, I do not think that these difficulties should stand in our way. I feel that Canada should no longer remain the only country in the commonwealth in which it takes not less than 60 days to hold an election. I know it would be expensive to set up a permanent list of electors, but I believe it would be worth while. If that is not done, the time will come when only wealthy people may get elected to Parliament. My suggestion, honourable senators, is for a permanent voters' list.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this bill offers some improvements over our present law. It would extend the time of voting by one hour. It would provide for an advance poll, which would be of great advantage particularly to those of us who live in industrial areas.

I am disappointed that the bill does not reduce the age qualification of voters from 21 to 18 years. I have been a supporter of that view for a great many years. I supported it in the House of Commons while I was there, and I believe I have reason for speaking in favour of it now. Legislatively, in other respects, we treat our young persons as adults at a much earlier age than we do under the Canada Elections Act. For instance, at 18 years of age young people can buy firearms, drive automobiles, be in sole control of aircraft, and undertake the responsibility of marriage and parenthood which, in these days, is a heavy responsibility. At 18 young people are considered old enough to bear arms, and the law says they are sufficiently responsible for their own actions that they may be hanged. Yet we do not permit people of that age to vote in our federal elections.

I see no reason why we withhold from our young people the democratic right to vote until they reach the age of 21. I believe the young people are better educated today than in earlier years; certainly they have more opportunities to learn. They have the benefit of new means of communication, such as the radio, television and the press. If we gave them permission to vote at the age of 18 I think we would increase their awareness and widen their perception, and that in consequence they would have a continuing interest in public affairs.

Not enough people vote in our elections. My own view is that we should have obligatory voting in Canada. Australia has what it calls "compulsory voting". I prefer the term "obligatory voting", because a citizen has an obligation to discharge his responsibility. In Australia 95 per cent of the voters turn out at election time; here, we are lucky to get a 75 per cent turnout. Of course, some adults cannot vote because of sickness or other disability, but I think we ought to have a law making it a responsibility for all others to turn out at the polls. I do not suggest they be assessed a large penalty if they fail to vote, but I think it would be well if the lists were checked and those who did not vote were made to explain before some tribunal their reason for not voting. In many cases they might have a perfectly good reason for not voting, but now with the advance polls people cannot give one reason they used to give, that they were out of the district on election day. People who fail to vote ought to be made to excuse themselves—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Whether or not they are informed?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Informed on what?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On the issues of the day.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Those who voted against me were never informed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What about the elector in the rural riding?

Hon. Mr. Croll: He is on the list.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would you penalize him for not voting? He is entitled to vote even though his name is not on the list.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not understand.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In a rural riding your name does not have to be on the list to enable you to vote. If my name is left off I can be vouched for and I can vote. Now, what happens if I cannot go out and vote?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The only way we can reach the rural voter is through a permanent list. As a matter of fact, that may be one of the drawbacks, but the problem is not as serious in rural areas as it is in industrial areas. Most of the people in the rural areas make it their business to get out and vote, and, of course, it is easier for them to do it because they are allowed to swear in, so to speak. In our industrial areas the neglect and reluctance to vote should be a matter of concern to all of us.

I think an obligatory form of voting would actually reduce the cost of elections which is now becoming very prohibitive. My honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) talked about the cost of elections as one who has been through many of them. I always smile to myself when I see the list that is printed after each election showing how much money was spent by each of the candidates in their ridings. The honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) caught the point very quickly when he spoke of the official spending, but those of us who have been through the political wars realize how unrealistic—and I say that in kindly terms—those returns are. The cost is becoming almost prohibitive. I think something has to be done. I think we must, in some way, do something in order to provide for a modest ceiling or restriction on spending. We may have to limit spending to an amount based on the number of voters in the riding, as is done in Britain. There the candidate is told that there are so many names on the list and he or she is allowed to spend only so much money, and no more than the amount named may be spent, directly or indirectly. If more is spent it is considered to be a very serious offence.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: During the three weeks of the election only. They can spend what they like before the three weeks.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, but they consider that the money spent before the three weeks does not do the trick. Our candidates usually spend their money between the time the writ is issued and the time the election takes place, and not very much is spent before that period.

We are reaching in this country the stage that has been reached in the United States, where only the Kennedys and the Rockefellers can afford to run for office. We must take care to avoid that, because soon only their counterparts in this country will be able to run.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What about the Nixons?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The Nixons are not running yet.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They will be next week.

Hon. Mr. Croll: They will not finish anywhere near the Kennedys.

I have said what I have to say with respect to the 18-year-olds and the obligatory voting requirements. May I close by just saying this, that the 18-year-olds are older than we think. The only way I can prove that is to to suggest that you speak to your 18-year-old grandsons and granddaughters and see what you can learn from them.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I ask the honourable senator a question about the 18-year-old electors? It is true that they have learned much more than we had at their time of life, but does the honourable senator feel they have more wisdom? At that age they are entitled to buy and have firearms, but are they thereby encouraged to improve our society or faced with a greater temptation to do wrong? They are entitled to own automobiles and to run automobiles at an even younger age, but is that a good thing? If it is, I have not noticed it in my own province. The young men in charge of automobiles and trucks are the most dangerous drivers on the road. They have no natural feeling that they are doing something very wrong and imprudent when they travel at great speed on approaching intersections. I wonder if my honourable friend's experience in this respect has been the same as mine.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I share my honourable friend's opinion to the full, but I suggest that this country has to be consistent.

Hon. Mr. Monette: By abolishing the right to drive at that early age?

Hon. Mr. Croll: We have to be consistent, because there are two classes of people who seem to be on the wrong end of the stick in this country—those who are under 21 and now, as I see it, those over 75. I am trying to make a case for both ends at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask this question? Has my friend considered the fact that these young drivers are all new drivers? Their high accident rate may be due not so much to their youth as to the fact that they are inexperienced drivers. Were they much older but still new drivers they might have the same high accident rate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I did not intend to take part in this discussion, but what has been said about youth gives me inspiration. Out of the mouths of babes comes the truth.

About ten years ago at the invitation of Mr. Sydney Smith, then the President of the University of Toronto, Mr. B. K. Sandwell, of Saturday Night, and four members of Parliament addressed a group of, perhaps, two thousand students in the Convocation Hall of the university. The Conservative party was represented by Mr. John Diefenbaker, who has become Prime Minister of Canada, and Miss Macphail was there for the C.C.F. Mr. Hughes Cleaver, then the member for Halton, was there for the official party and I represented the nonconformists. I suggested then that young men and young women of 18 should be given the franchise because when they were in the army they had that franchise, and those who were not in the army in times of peace were supposed to be as intelligent as the others. It seemed to create a very favourable impression among the young people and their parents at that time.

We must not judge the new generation only by the young men who steal cars and drive in a haphazard manner. They are the minority. The majority of young men and young women of today could be compared favourably with the young men and young women of the previous generation or of the generation before that. They are serious and they are taught quite a number of matters that were not on the curricula of our days—I say curricula because there were many. They have something that is lacking in older generations. It is enthusiasm. Fortunately there are some exceptions among older people. Some who are no longer in the prime of youth may get enthusiastic for noble causes and fight for them, but enthusiasm is much more common among the youth. It is not necessary to quote any names, but Pitt was Prime Minister of England before he had grey hair and long whiskers. He was in his early twenties. I could cite quite a number of other examples of that kind. I will not insist, for you, my honourable colleagues, know of those facts that belong to history perhaps much better than I do.

But I appeal to you. I was surprised when that motion was defeated recently in the House of Commons. I expected that the young people would be given the franchise, and it would be the best means of encouraging them to take more interest in politics. At the present time so many people are indifferent. They do not care about what is going on at Ottawa and in the provinces. They are not interested in that. The women read the newspaper advertisements about the big stores and men generally are readers of the sports page. Their interest ends there. That is their reading and that is their brain food, and if reducing the age for the franchise were a means of interesting the young in what happens in politics, it would be pretty beneficial to the country.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Does the honourable senator suggest that these young people would not read the sports news in the papers then? Does my honourable friend say the older people spend most of their time doing that?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No, that is not what I say. I say that some people, principally men, read mostly the sports pages. If they have a college education it should give them a true picture of politics. It all depends on their professors, naturally, but there are other means of being informed than by reading only the papers. That is my point. If young people read only the sports page in the papers it does not mean that they are not serious at work and that they do not gather useful information and practical instruction at school. They read the sports page as a relaxation, but if they were given more consideration with regard to the franchise I am sure it would be beneficial to them and, therefore, beneficial to the country at large.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, on behalf of the honourable senator from Rougemont (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche), I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether he expects that the Chief Electoral Officer will attend our committee meeting? I ask this question because I would like to have his opinion, if he feels free to give it, with respect to the possibility of establishing permanent voters' lists. I hope he will be present and will give his views on this. He may not feel free to state whether he is in favour of it, for that is Government policy, but he could give us some information as to the cost and the procedure which would be necessary in order to establish permanent voters' lists.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I cannot answer that question right now but I will do my best in that direction. In the hope that we shall have present everybody who is necessary to deal with the points which have arisen, I suggest that a meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee be held tomorrow morning to deal with this fully.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Mr. Chairman, I do not object to that suggestion of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), but I think it should be predicated on the assumption that Mr. Castonguay will be there.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I cannot guarantee that he will be present.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Then why have a meeting of the committee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There are other witnesses.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I quite agree that it is advisable, and I feel necessary, that Mr. Castonguay, the Chief Electoral Officer, should be present, and I hope the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) can arrange for his attendance. If not, we could hear other witnesses tomorrow and then adjourn until the Chief Electoral Officer can come.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is quite in order.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette, for Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTIONS FOR CELEBRATION—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's Centennial Year 1967, and suggesting that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future.—(Honourable Senator Macdonald, P.C.).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand for one week.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1085)

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL ECONOMY AND CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS

Tuesday, July 19, 1960

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their thirteenth report, as follows:—

Your committee have in obedience to the order of reference of June 14, 1960, considered the following report of the Civil Service Commission:—

1.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION
CANADA

June 10, 1960.

To the Honourable the Members of the Senate:

The Civil Service Commission has the honour to submit the following report.

Treasury Board Minutes 562066 of March 28, 1960, and 564488 of May 12, 1960, copies of which are attached hereto, authorized salary revisions for a number of general classes in the Civil Service, effective April 1, 1960, and May 1, 1960, respectively.

Under the provisions of Sections 62 and 11 of the Civil Service Act, and in accordance with the policy and provisions of the above-mentioned Treasury Board Minutes, it is recommended that the revisions provided for the general classes in the Civil Service be applicable to the positions classified as such in the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,
Sam Hughes,
Chairman.
Ruth Addison,
Commissioner.
Paul Pelletier,
Commissioner.

Mark R. Drouin,
Speaker of the Senate.

2. The revisions provided in the above report for the general classes in the Civil Service and applicable to the positions classified as such in the Senate are as follows:

(a) Effective April 1, 1960—

Confidential Messenger

From:	$2790	2910	3030	3150
To:	2850	3000	3150	3300

Clerk 4

From:	$3570	3720	3870	4020
To:	4050	4200	4350	4500

Principal Clerk

From:	$4080	4230	4380	4530	4680
To:	4620		4800	4980	5160

(b) Effective May 1, 1960—

Cleaning Service Man

From:	$2550	2670	2790	2910
To:	2850	3000	3150	3300

3. Your committee recommend that the report be approved.

All which is respectfully submitted.

W. R. Brunt,
Chairman.

Tuesday, July 19, 1960.

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their fourteenth report, as follows:—

Your committee recommend the adoption of the following revised rates of compensation:—

1. Executive Assistant:

(a) That the rate of compensation for the Executive Assistant and Private Secretary to the Leader of the Government in the Senate be increased as follows:

From: $7000 per annum
To: $8000 per annum

(b) That the rate of compensation for the Executive Assistant and Private Secretary to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate be increased as follows:

From: $7000 per annum
To: $8000 per annum

Effective June 1, 1960.

2. Senate Secretaries: Continuing Temporary.

(a) That the rate of compensation for the Secretary-stenographer to the Leader of the Government in the Senate be increased as follows:

From: $375 per month ($4500 per annum)
To: $400 per month ($4800 per annum)

(b) That the rate of compensation for the Secretary-stenographer to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate be increased as follows:

From: $342 per month ($4104 per annum)
To: $367 per month ($4404 per annum)

(c) That the rate of compensation for the Supervisor, Senate Stenographic Pool, be increased as follows:

From: $342 per month ($4104 per annum)
To: $367 per month ($4404 per annum)

(d) That the rate of compensation for the Senior Bilingual Stenographer be increased as follows:

From: $333 per month ($3996 per annum)
To: $358 per month ($4296 per annum)

Effective April 1, 1960.

3. Senate Stenographers: Continuing Temporary.

That the graduated range of compensation for continuing temporary stenographers be increased as follows:

From:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $278 per month ($3336 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $298 per month ($3576 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $315 per month ($3780 per annum)

To:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $303 per month ($3636 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $323 per month ($3876 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $340 per month ($4080 per annum)

Effective April 1, 1960.

4. Senate Stenographers: Sessional.

That the graduated range of compensation for sessional stenographers be increased as follows:

From:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $278 per month ($3336 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $298 per month ($3576 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $315 per month ($3780 per annum)

To:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $303 per month ($3636 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $323 per month ($3876 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $340 per month ($4080 per annum)

Effective April 1, 1960.

5. Debates Amanuenses: Sessional.

That the graduated range of compensation for Debates Amanuenses be increased as follows:

From:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $335 per month ($4020 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $355 per month ($4260 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $375 per month ($4500 per annum)

To:

1st Session of employment at the rate of $360 per month ($4320 per annum)

2nd Session of employment at the rate of $380 per month ($4560 per annum)

3rd Session of employment at the rate of $400 per month ($4800 per annum)

Effective April 1, 1960.

6. Parliamentary Confidential Messenger, Committees Branch (Temporary)

That the rate of compensation for Mr. George McIntosh, continuing temporary Parliamentary Confidential Messenger, Committees Branch, be revised and increased as follows:

From: $275. per month ($3300 per annum)

To: (Graduated annual)
3150 3300 3450 3600

Effective July 1, 1960.

7. Confidential Messenger: Continuing Temporary.

That the rate of compensation for Confidential Messenger (Continuing Temporary) be increased as follows:

From: $260. per month ($3120 per annum)

To: (Graduated Annual)
2850 3000 3150 3300

Effective April 1, 1960.

8. Confidential Messenger: Sessional.

That the rate of compensation for Confidential Messenger (Sessional) be increased as follows:

From: $250. per month ($3000 per annum)

To: (Graduated annual) (at the rate of)
2850 3000 3150 3300

Effective April 1, 1960.

9. Cleaning Service Man: Continuing Temporary and Sessional.

That the rate of compensation for Cleaning Service Man (Continuing Temporary and Sessional) be increased as follows:

From: $247. per month ($2964 per annum)

To: 2850 3000 3150 3300

Effective May 1, 1960.

10. Constable, Senate Protective Service: Continuing Temporary.

That the rate of compensation for Constable, Senate Protective Service, be revised as follows:

From: $3396

To: 3390 3540 3690 3840

Effective July 1, 1960.

11. Pages: Sessional.

(a) That the rate of compensation for Chief Page be increased as follows:

From: $132. per month ($1584 per annum)

To: $139.50 per month ($1674 per annum)

(b) That the rate of compensation for Page be increased as follows:

From: $117. per month ($1404 per annum)

To: $124.50 per month ($1494 per annum)

Effective April 1, 1960.

All which is respectfully submitted.

W. R. Brunt,
Chairman.

79955–1—70

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 20, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the National Capital Commission covering the period January 1, 1959 to March 31, 1960 and Report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1960 pursuant to section 85(3) and section 87, respectively, of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture Act, Chapter 66, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Agricultural Stabilization Board for the year 1959-60, pursuant to section 14 of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, Chapter 22 of the Statutes of 1957-58. (English text).

Agreement between Canada and Italy for air services between and beyond their respective territories. Signed at Rome, February 2, 1960. (English and French texts).

Exchange of notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of Denmark renewing for a period of four years the aircrew training agreement between the two countries. Signed at Copenhagen, March 25, 1960. (English and French texts).

Exchange of notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of Norway renewing for a period of four years the aircrew training agreement between the two countries. Signed at Oslo, April 6, 1960. (English and French texts).

Exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America concerning the final disposition of the CANOL facilities. Signed at Washington, March 31, 1960. (English and French texts).

Air Transport Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Republic of Turkey. Signed at Ankara, May 21, 1960. (English and French texts).

Exchange of notes between Canada and Norway concerning the organization of the "Canada-Norway defence science information exchange project". Signed at Oslo, May 24, 1960. (English and French texts).

Declaration on the provisional accession of Tunisia to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Signed by Canada May 24, 1960. (English and French texts).

Declaration on relations between contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the Government of the Polish People's Republic. Signed by Canada May 24, 1960. (English and French texts).

International Telecommunication Convention. Geneva, 1959. (English and French texts).

North American Regional Broadcasting Agreement. Washington, D.C., 1950. Entered into force April 19, 1960. (English and French texts).

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Stanley S. McKeen, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-83, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without any amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Courtemanche moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EXCHANGE STABILIZATION FUND

REPORTED SALE OF AMERICAN FUNDS FOR CANADIAN EXCHANGE—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, it is reported in the press that during the month of May the Bank of Canada, through the Exchange Stabilization Fund, sold $101 million of American funds for Canadian exchange, thus supporting the Canadian dollar.

In view of this report, I shall inquire of the Government on Wednesday next as follows:

What is the net amount of American funds sold by the Exchange Stabilization Fund during the month of May?

What were the reasons for the sale?

What were the effects of this sale on the premium of the Canadian dollar?

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson moved the third reading of Bill C-82, respecting the Department of Forestry.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

LAND USE

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson for adoption of the second report of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada.

Hon. John A. McDonald: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) for his courtesy in adjourning this debate yesterday on my behalf. Those of us who left the Maritimes on Monday in order to be in attendance in this chamber yesterday afternoon found that our train was late, and by the time we got to Montreal the Ottawa trains had left.

I wish to take this opportunity of extending a cordial welcome to our two most recent members who have come from the province of Nova Scotia. These gentlemen have set a really fine example in first-class citizenship. One has been very successful in business and has taken an active part in public affairs. The other is a highly respected lawyer and comes to us directly from the Legislature of Nova Scotia, where for some years he has been one of the chief lieutenants of Premier Stanfield. These new senators possess fine qualities of heart and mind which, together with their experience, have enabled them to render public service of a high order. I am sure I voice the sentiments of all here when I wish them many satisfactory years in continued public service as members of the Senate of Canada.

I would like to compliment the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson), Chairman of the Special Committee on Land Use, on his progress report. It contains much worth-while material, and its recommendations deserve our serious thought. I would also like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the good work done by the technical adviser to the committee, Mr. Ralph Stutt, and by the Clerk of the committee, Mr. James D. MacDonald.

This is probably the last progress report the Special Committee on Land Use will make. I hope that if the committee is reconstituted at the next session it will be able to bring down its final report, which I am sure will contain many valuable recommendations. If in the eyes of the Minister of Agriculture and his staff it would lend prestige and confidence to the committee and its work—and I do not mean to indicate they have not had such confidence—I for one would be glad to give way on the committee to a newer member of the Senate. It will be remembered that when this committee was set up after the last general election there were not many members sitting in this house to the right of His Honour the Speaker. That memberhip has increased now and it would not do any harm if the committee were brought into better balance by having more of those honourable senators included as members. I wish now to give expression to some thoughts that have come to me while studying the problems of the farmers. I may say that some of these thoughts date back to the time that I was more closely associated with agriculture that I am today.

The farmers of this country have been and are very grateful for the assistance they have received from federal and provincial Governments, through their technical staffs in research and education. For the benefit of those who may not be familiar with the educational work in the departments concerned I may say that research is generally understood to be the field of the federal department, whereas education is the field of the provincial departments. When attending dominion-provincial conferences we used to try to keep that line of demarcation quite clear, so that both the federal and provincial departments would not be doing the same work; we wished to keep duplication of services to the minimum.

The annual dominion-provincial agricultural gatherings have contributed to the progress that has been made by our farmers across Canada. If it had not been for the delegates associating at those dominion-provincial conferences and learning of the problems in the different areas, I doubt that our farmers would have enjoyed as soon as they did such benefits as have come from the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, the feed freight assistance and the marshland improvement. The wartime Rehabilitation Committee of the House of Commons that was set up under the chairmanship of our honourable colleague from Cariboo (Hon. Mr. Turgeon) made a notable contribution.

In expressing appreciation to our Governments for their progressive and most helpful policies, we are not unmindful of the hopeless positions our farmers would have found themselves in had it not been for the trained staffs of federal and provincial agricultural departments. For the future welfare of Canadian farming in this age, when science must play a leading role, I think that our Governments must be increasingly more generous in making funds available so that everything possible will be done in research and education, and that the useful knowledge so gained will be promptly and clearly demonstrated to our farmers.

In dealing with the major problems that your Land Use Committee has studied for the last two sessions, I prefer to use the term "uneconomic farm units problems" rather than the shorter title "the small farm problems", for certainly in the Atlantic area some of the uneconomic units are not small farms for that area, and most of the largest farms in the Maritimes are small compared with the better farms in the Prairie provinces. Small farms are not necessarily uneconomic units. I think some people have the impression that a farm to be successful must be a large farm. That is not true. Where good growth is assured a large acreage is not required for success. Many farms that are small in size are successful economic units when managed by industrious and experienced farmers in the production of poultry and pork products and in the growing of small fruits and vegetables, but we do have larger farms that may be uneconomic because of marginal or submarginal soils on which the most capable farmers would find it difficult, if not impossible, to make a satisfactory living. The Minister of Agriculture for Nova Scotia, in his submission before the committee, proved this point very convincingly from his personal experience. I can remember well when he started on a small farm which was quite heavily mortgaged. Unfortunately, he paid too much for the farm and it was difficult for him to make a success. However, as soon as he got land with better soil and sufficient acreage he became unusually successful. He has made an outstanding success in several branches of farming, including the production of quality beef.

Professor Wright, associate professor on farm management, has defined the uneconomic farm problem, in contrast to that of the commercial farm, as one where the resources in agricultural activity are inadequate to permit a scale of operation which could normally provide a standard of living satisfactory to the operator and his family.

There are three types of so-called small farms, and, too often, uneconomic units. One is the residential type. That is a farm which is used mainly as a place of residence for the owner and his family and on which there is little commercial agricultural activity. The second is a unit where much of the operator's time is spent away from home and where more than 50 per cent of the total income of the owner is derived from employment other than farming. The third type is where the farmer depends largely on farming for a living for himself and his family. It is on this third type that the Land Use Committee has been centering its study during the past two sessions, with the hope that we might make a contribution toward solving some of the problems concerning these, too often, uneconomic units. There are about 120,000 of these uneconomic units in Canada.

Every thoughtful person must, or at least should, be willing to give support to the encouragement of independent family-sized farms. Where are there more wholesome surroundings in which to live and educate a family than in a good farming community?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: "There has been no formula yet devised that can measure the contribution of the family farm to the social, moral and spiritual fibre of society," was stated in a recent brief of the Ontario Farmers' Union.

Mechanization of farming has caused a great reduction in the number of farms, and quite properly an increase in acreage per farm. There are only half as many farms in Nova Scotia as there were in 1911, and in the Maritimes nearly half the land that was once cultivated has been turned back to nature, while the acreage under cultivation in Quebec and Ontario has shown a steady decline over the past 18 years. Only in the Prairie provinces has the cultivated area increased, and 12 per cent of the farms on the Prairies have merged with larger units.

We would not wish, if we could, to stop the change that is taking place due to mechanization and new techniques, but this is causing one of the main problems, that of how to get the credit for our farmers to buy the necessary equipment and the acreage that would justify the expense of the heavier equipment. As honourable senators understand, it does not pay a farmer to buy this expensive equipment unless he can grow enough extra crop to justify the heavy expenditure. That is, he has to keep those machines working a certain proportion of the time producing cash crops or else the expenditure is a loss to him in the end. I have known of some farmers who have purchased expensive equipment but because they could not increase their production sufficiently to pay for the extra expense, in the end they unfortunately lost out and some of them had to mortgage their farms. I know of one case where this problem was solved by two friendly neighbours having sufficient acreage to justify the purchase of the heavier equipment. With the purchase of tractor, harrows, plow and truck they were able to dispose of most of the horses and no trouble arose, as they adopted a system of sharing the use of the heavier machinery.

Many of the better farmers have already added to their acreage so that they could increase their production and justify the expenditure for the equipment. There are very many others who urgently require money at low interest rates to buy both additional land and machinery.

Farmers' wood lots, if properly managed, may be a continuing source of revenue. I am sure one honourable senator sitting on my right here also believes in that. I heartily agree with that view. I do not know where there is any better investment possibility than in purchasing growing wood lots. The establishment of a Department of Forestry to co-operate with the provincial Departments of Lands and Forests should be a sound and progressive move. Farmers who find themselves on marginal or poor soils, and where too often the wood lots have been slaughtered in a determined effort to give their families a living, would, I think, be well advised to follow the advice of a capable farm manager in the employ of the provincial Department of Agriculture. I have known of farmers needing extra money for their families in order to sustain a satisfactory standard of living and having to borrow from the money markets or from some person living in the town or city, and as happens too often they are not able to meet the payments. Then in such a case the creditor goes in and seizes the wood on the farm wood lot, and often it is all cut down, leaving nothing but some small trees, which are blown over when a strong wind comes, so that many years elapse before that land can produce anything again.

In some instances it is possible to make economic units from uneconomic units by reasonable applications of lime and fertilizers. In other cases, unproductive farms can be made to produce a reasonable standard of living by a change in the production of products. In other instances, I have seen such a situation remedied by the purchase of some better land nearby. Finally there have been occasions where the farmers and the farm management officials have regrettably agreed that it would be best to go to a better farming community; or in cases where, for one reason or another, the farmer would be happier and more successful in giving a better standard of living to his family in other work, that he then should apply for a position in some other industry.

The Land Use Committee members have had the opportunity to give preliminary study to the splendid report of the delegation selected to study rural development as it has been and is being carried out in parts of the United States, where economic farming conditions are very similar to those found in some farming communities in Canada. We have reason to hope that further study of the benefits of this United States rural development plan may encourage our most progressive and successful extension services of the provincial Departments of Agriculture to make a determined effort to render for some of our farming districts the outstanding services which have been made available in our neighbouring country. Our committee was told that the Rural Development Program in the United States was an earnest attempt to improve unfavourable conditions of life and work of the families in rural communities and particularly those living on uneconomic farm units, and that after three years of operation activities under the Rural Development Program are now going forward in some 200 counties and in 30 states.

The program has three major objectives: (1) to help families that have the desire and ability to stay in farming, given the necessary tools, land and skills; (2) to widen the range of off-farm job opportunities(3) to help rural people enjoy more opportunities for adequate training and improved help.

If honourable members of this house could read this session's committee report No. 5, which contains the submissions of Mr. Paul Kepner, Deputy Administrator, Federal Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, and Mr. Sherman Weiss, Northern Area Resources Development Specialist of Hayward, Wisconsin, they would understand why members of our own committee were impressed with what has already been accomplished in some farming areas in a comparatively short time under this rural development plan. Until a better rural development program is instituted it would seem that one of the most valuable contributions that the provincial Government can render is to supply capable farm managers along with their well-trained chemists and extension workers to help to solve the uneconomical farm unit problems.

There are submarginal lands with poor soils, far away from markets, that should be kept for the growing of trees. The Crown Lands Departments of the provincial Governments have been rendering a service by buying these lands, and in time they will again produce valuable wood products. Prospective farmers would be well advised to consult with the provincial Department of Agriculture to ascertain where the best soils are located and their proximity to market for the products that they propose to produce. In doing so, they will avoid the mistakes that have been made by many.

I believe that it is most important to stress the value of agricultural education. We are indeed fortunate in having first-class agricultural colleges in Canada, and I hope that in the near future we can encourage many more of our best young farmers to take the practical courses, even though it has to be done by increasing financial aid for board and tuition. It would be a sound investment of public money if the right class of students will take the courses. Short courses in agriculture and the 4-H Club work are also invaluable aids.

Twenty-five or 30 years ago a person could purchase and equip a farm for $6,000. Today it will cost $15,000 to $20,000 to purchase and equip an economic family farm unit. It would seem to be good business for federal and provincial Governments to make funds available to capable farmers so that they could produce economically our Atlantic provinces' requirements. To do this we would have to increase production from our farms annually by 130,000 head of cattle and 400,000 hogs.

Federation of Agriculture spokesmen have done well to remind those in authority that: (a) transportation costs must be kept as low as possible; (b) the farmer should receive a greater share of the consumers' dollar, and (c) it is very important that the farmers' cost be kept at a minimum.

The cost-price squeeze is causing farmers and farm workers to take up other occupations; but for those remaining on farms I hope that we can rehabilitate them with the needed agricultural education, experience and will to succeed to become successful farmers and leaders in their communities. To do this the Honourable Mr. Haliburton, Minister of Agriculture in Nova Scotia, suggested the creation of a special authority to study the implications and to evolve a policy by which adjustment could be carried out. Such an authority, Mr. Haliburton said, could be set up under the federal Department of Agriculture in such a way that it would work in close co-operation with the provinces.

Could we not follow Mr. Haliburton's suggestion a little further and have the Illustration Farms Branch, or some such organization of the federal Department of Agriculture, select in each province one or more of what many would describe as presently uneconomic farm units and, by the application of sound principles in agriculture, demonstrate that these uneconomic units could be made profitable farming units? For instance, in the province of Nova Scotia I would like to see a presently uneconomic farm unit selected in the eastern part of the province and a similar one in the western part and, with the co-operation of the owners of these farms, have proper farm management officials, using the most approved scientific methods, show how these uneconomic units could be changed into farms that would sustain a reasonable standard of living.

I think that a great service could be rendered many Maritime farmers if the provisions afforded to western farmers under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act could be expanded to cover all parts of Canada. Whereas in the west the problem is to take water into the soils, our problem is to drain it out and to keep certain of our rivers from overflowing and washing away some of our best agricultural land. Rivers draining some of our best agricultural land are in some instances crooked, and oftentimes too there is rock or other obstruction in the river beds preventing the easy flow of the water. Under such circumstances the water backs up, especially in the spring of the year, and overflows, and in many cases prevents the farmers from getting on to their land early in the spring. By using the provisions of the P.F.R.A. these valuable lands could be properly drained.

May I also stress the importance of lowering our transportation costs? Our primary producers, and industrialists too, of the Atlantic area should be given the right to compete in the central Canadian market by having a fixed minimum freight rate. In this connection it would seem only fair that the eastern part of the province of Quebec should be included as a part of the Atlantic area.

I believe that our Government should be putting forth every effort possible to assist in retaining present export markets and in discovering new markets. I wholeheartedly endorse the resolution of the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson). It certainly is vital for us to retain our export trade. We wish success to the delegations from Canada and the United States as they travel this week to Paris for a 20-nation meeting which will try to reach agreement on a draft convention for the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, as the successor of the Organization for European Economic Co-operation.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bois, debate adjourned.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the second reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to implement an arrangement with the Government of the United States to co-ordinate the control of marine pilotage on the Great Lakes. This is being done in the interests of safety of navigation on those waters.

Honourable senators will remember that in January 1959 I introduced in this chamber a Government bill, known as Bill S-3, the purpose of which was to amend the Canada Shipping Act. It contained provision for a new Part VIA dealing with Great Lakes pilotage, which contained proposals very similar to those contained in the bill before us. Honourable senators will remember also that that bill, after receiving second reading in the Senate, was sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which, under the able chairmanship of the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), spent many days examining into the matters contained in the bill, heard many witnesses, and later brought in a report to this house. The bill received third reading and was passed in the Senate on March 4, 1959. It then went to the House of Commons, but was not proceeded with in that chamber because the Americans had not decided what they were going to put into their law with respect to pilots. The State Department of the United States, and the Department of Commerce representing the United States Seaway Authority, generally were in agreement with the Canadian view; but the United States Coast Guard, which had direct responsibility for marine safety, proposed a bill which would require a pilot to be on board at all times. The Canadian view was that pilots were required only in the designated waters, namely, the dangerous waters, and were not required in the open waters of the Great Lakes. That was the basic difference, and it had to be ironed out before any measure of this kind could be proceeded with.

Finally, honourable senators, both countries agreed to the provision that is now in the present bill. Section 375B makes it possible for a ship's officer to navigate his ship in the open waters if he can meet certain minimum qualifications. Because this subject was dealt with in considerable detail a little more than a year ago, it is my intention to give only a relatively brief outline of the background of the proposed legislation and some explanation of its provisions.

The opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway raised new problems of navigation. Whereas formerly the Great Lakes were cut off from the sea except for comparatively small vessels, now very large modern ships enter in considerable numbers. Because the masters of these ships, as a rule, are not familiar with the Great Lakes rules of the road, which differ considerably from the international rules, the need for some governmental control in the interests of safety of navigation has been recognized, and as a result of consultations between Canada and the United States a co-ordinated system of pilotage has been agreed upon. The Congress of the United States has already adopted legislation for the purpose of implementing these arrangements, and this bill is designed to implement the arrangements so far as Canada is concerned. I have here a copy of the United States bill, which was passed early this month. It is not exactly in the form of our bill, and I will explain why a little later on.

It is quite obvious, of course, that because of the international character of the Great Lakes it is essential that any system of pilotage be co-ordinated between Canada and the United States. The discussions which took place between representatives of both Governments resulted in certain agreements and arrangements, the most important of them being as follows:

1. That compulsory pilotage be provided for in those waters of the Great Lakes which, because of their restricted and dangerous character, make it necessary in the interests of safety.

2. That in other than "designated" waters it will not be necessary to carry a pilot, provided a ship's officer has certain special minimum qualifications, including a knowledge of the Great Lakes rules of the road, a knowledge of the English language sufficient to permit effective use of radio-telephone, and some limited local knowledge of the waters to be traversed.

3. That "designation" of the "international" waters of the Great Lakes in which ships' courses cross the international boundary will be determined by agreement, and "designated" by both countries;

4. The designation of "non-international" waters will be the subject of consultation between the two countries and will be made by each in respect of its own waters.

5. Great Lakes vessels, both Canadian and United States, will be exempt from pilotage requirements, because they do not need pilots.

6. Each country agrees, on a reciprocal basis, that pilots of the other may operate in its waters.

7. That there shall be an equitable distribution of work between Canadian and United States pilots.

8. That there shall be continuing consultation between the two Governments in respect of such matters as the number of pilots to be registered on each side, tariffs to be charged for pilotage services, organization of pilotage services on both sides on a co-ordinated basis in the interests of efficiency and economy, and so forth.

Hon. Macdonald: Where is that provided in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was just saying that this was the agreement that was reached between the two countries when they were consulting with regard to these matters. I did not say it was in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is there an agreement which has been tabled in that connection?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, there is no written agreement. The consultations were held between the two Governments by officials of the departments, and these were the things they discussed and agreed upon.

Perhaps I should explain at this point that while the bill before us and the United States legislation which was passed recently by Congress are designed to achieve a co-ordinated plan for Great Lakes pilotage, the form of the legislation in the two countries differs considerably. There are a number of reasons for this, among them being the fact that while in Canada Part VI of the Canada Shipping Act deals thoroughly with the whole matter of pilotage there has not been, up to the present time, in the United States any federal legislation dealing with pilotage in a similar manner. Therefore, while in the case of the United States it has been necessary to enact legislation that will cover all aspects of pilotage as it will function in the United States waters of the Great Lakes, on the Canadian side it has been necessary to make provision only for those matters which are additional to or differ from the provisions at present in part VI of the Canada Shipping Act.

With that preliminary explanation I would like to deal briefly with the various clauses of the bill, for I think it will help honourable senators to understand more easily just what the legislation contemplates.

Clause 1 will add a new section 356A. As indicated in the explanatory notes in the bill, this is necessary for the purpose of implementing the reciprocal arrangement with the United States regarding the mutual recognition of the other's pilots in its own waters.

Clause 2 covers the matter of Great Lakes pilotage and its purpose is to complement the United States legislation which has already been adopted.

Section 375A is a definition section and is self-explanatory. I come now to section 375B.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Before the honourable Leader of the Government proceeds to deal with section 375B, would he be good enough to tell us whether the two Governments have arrived at any agreement as to what are to be the designated waters for the entire trip up the St. Lawrence to the Great Lakes for which a pilot would be necessary?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I believe in a general way they have been designated as the waters from St. Regis, Quebec, west to Kingston, Ontario, and the waters connecting Lake Erie and Lake Huron, and the waters connecting Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: And the Welland Canal?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, it would be a designated area.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not quite clear about the so-called agreement between the two countries. Is this an agreement entered into with the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and is it in writing?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has anything to do with this at all.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Where is the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There is no written agreement. There were consultations between the officials whose names I gave at the outset of my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There was a conference and this is more in the form of a gentleman's agreement, I take it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, and subject to consultation from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And, of course, to the two bills, the American one and the Canadian one.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, they dovetail.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I suppose each would agree that it would try to put through its own Parliament such legislation as might be necessary to implement those parts of the agreement required to be implemented by legislation?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There will be regulations, which I shall explain later on, dealing with these different matters. I do not look for any trouble or difficulty. They have spent almost two years now in trying to iron out these difficulties, and the passage of the American bill early this month was a great help. The United States seems to be anxious to co-operate in every way possible.

Section 375B(1) is the substantive portion of the proposed amendment and provides that in respect of vessels over 250 gross tons there shall be the following requirements in respect of pilotage: (a) in "designated waters" a registered pilot—Canadian or United States —will be required; (b) in respect of other than "designated" waters a registered pilot will be required unless there is on board a ship's officer who has certain qualifications to be prescribed by Governor in Council regulations.

Section 375B(2) would authorize the minister to grant exemptions in certain special cases. Examples of these would be Government ships, both Canadian and American—in other words, those ships belonging to the Government of Canada and those belonging to the Government of the United States.

Section 375B(3) complements a similar provision in the United States bill and exempts lake vessels, both Canadian and United States, from the pilotage requirements of this new part. At the beginning of my remarks I stated briefly what those qualifications would probably be.

Section 375B(4) provides a satutory exemption in the cases indicated; that is, when a registered pilot is not available and the master has been so informed by the Deputy Minister of Transport, or when the vessel is in distress or in circumstances making it necessary for the master to avail himself of the best assistance he can find. The United States legislation has a similar provision and these exemptions would be recognized on a reciprocal basis.

Section 375B(5) and section 375B(6) are important. The purpose of these two subsections is to incorporate in our bill provisions in respect of reciprocity similar to those in the United States bill. Subsection 5 provides that the authority given to United States registered pilots in respect of designated waters, and to other persons holding United States licences in respect of other than designated waters, will be extended only so long as similar recognition is given by the United States to Canadians. Subsection 6 provides that the exemption given to United States vessels by Canada will extend only so long as the United States gives similar exemptions to Canadian vessels.

Section 375C(1) sets out those matters on which the Governor in Council may make regulations, including designation of waters, qualification and registration of pilots, qualifications of ships' officers to entitle them to operate in other than designated waters, and so forth.

Section 375C(2) authorizes the minister, pursuant to the Canada-United States arrangement, to fix the number of Canadian pilots.

Section 375D provides for certain penalties.

Clause 3 of the bill provides that the act will come into force on proclamation.

Honourable senators, before I close my remarks I would like to say that when this bill was before the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs in the other place, on July 5 last, Mr. Jean Brisset, Q.C., appeared for the Shipping Federation of Canada, Incorporated. I will read from the report of the committee's proceedings a statement made by him:

> We want to say right here that we support the legislation that is before you today. We will have certain amendments to suggest, but we support this legislation, as we supported the parallel legislation which became law, I am reliably informed, last Thursday in the United States, when it was signed by the President; the Great Lakes pilotage bill.

Mr. Charles J. Gélinas, counsel for the Fédération des Pilotes du Saint-Laurent, who, I believe, also appeared before our committee, told the House of Commons committee:

> In the name of the federation I wish to express our satisfaction with the bill which now is being presented to you for study.

Honourable senators, I think that what we tried to do in January, February and March 1959, when our committee was dealing with this matter, has had some beneficial results in that it helped the Government of the day to make what may be called, and what I believe is, a reasonable arrangement in so far as pilotage on the Great Lakes is concerned.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, we are grateful to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for his very clear explanation of this bill. I have only a few words to say about it. I think it is a great advance upon the bill with which we in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications struggled so long, and in the end so ineffectually, in the early months of last year. The two reasons why it is an advance, I think, are these. In the first place, in the beginning of 1959, with respect to pilotage on the Great Lakes, we were introducing legislation in the void, so to speak. We did not know at that time whether similar legislation would be introduced in the United States, and we were legislating on the assumption—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There was a bill in the United States at that time, was there not?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Oh, yes. As a matter of fact, the situation in the United States at that time was very uncertain, because, as my honourable friend remarked, there were apparently two completely diverse points of view in the United States with respect to the pilotage that would be required on the Great Lakes. The State Department apparently took the same view as our own authorities, that pilots would be necessary only in the designated waters, that is, in straits and other dangerous places, but that it was quite useless to provide for pilots in the open waters of the Great Lakes where there is clear navigation in many cases for hundreds of miles. On the other hand, the United States Coast Guard organization took a completely different view, and at that time we were informed it was quite likely that the United States Congress would follow its view, which was that there should be pilots on every ship traversing the Great Lakes from one end to the other all the time—not only one pilot, but two pilots. Our Government took a very dim view of that suggestion because, as honourable senators realize, it would have involved an enormous increase in the cost of operating vessels, say from Montreal to Chicago, if you had to have a full staff of pilots for that whole trip, including the open waters of the Great Lakes. Well, since that time, as my honourable friend has explained, the United States Congress has come round to the view that was always taken by our own Department of External Affairs and by this Parliament, that pilots were in fact required only in these particular designated waters; and as my honourable friend has said, that is provided for in this bill.

There is another reason why this bill is —I do not say an improvement upon the bill introduced early in 1959, but one that I think will be more easy to carry through this Parliament. That reason is that the 1959 bill included some completely extraneous matter having nothing to do with pilotage on the Great Lakes—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Treaty matters.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen:—introduced by the Government to alter conditions on the lower St. Lawrence which had existed for many years. Honourable senators who attended the meetings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications at that time will recall that during the many days of meetings of that committee we had an audience sitting in the back of the room, a large number of these pilots who operate the ships not only between Montreal and Quebec but between Quebec and Father Point, who raised very serious objections to what was proposed at that time in that bill. As honourable senators will see, there is nothing of that sort in the present bill, so the general conditions for the passage of this bill from those two points of view are much better than they were in respect to the bill we considered last year.

My honourable friend referred to certain representations that were made on this bill before the committee of the House of Commons. I understand that there are still some representations to be made by various interested parties before us.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, are there?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: And I assume my honourable friend proposes to send the bill to committee, where those representations can be heard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not know there were any other representations to be made, but if there are, under the circumstances—

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am advised that some of these people intend to propose an amendment which is acceptable to the Government. That is only private information. Anyway, I think we should be in a position to hear representations, if indeed anyone wishes to be heard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In that event, would it not be possible to give the bill second reading today, and have it go to the committee tomorrow morning? Or would that be too soon?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I understood the honourable senator from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) wishes to speak on the bill. I do not know if he is ready to proceed this afternoon, but if he is we could probably arrange to have a meeting of the committee on Transport and Communications tomorrow.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, it was suggested to me that I speak on this bill. However, I saw the bill only at noon today and know little about it, except that it refers exclusively to the lakes. I come from the Atlantic provinces, and of course I am not directly interested in the subject-matter of this bill. I think it is generally conceded that it is a necessary bill. Last year we dealt with a similar bill at extended meetings of the Transport and Communications committee, and although we passed the bill in committee and in this house it was rejected in the other place, on the ground that it was considered to be premature and that the Americans were not ready to agree to what we had done. The Americans were in favour of compulsory pilotage on the Great Lakes, but they were largely controlled by their marine service on the lakes. It appears that they have now come to the conclusion that they will agree with us and allow compulsory pilotage in the restricted areas of the Great Lakes, and that on the open waters of the Great Lakes the captain, if he has special qualifications, may pilot his ship, but if he lacks such qualifications it will be necessary to have a pilot on board.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Or an officer who is qualified.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: He will have on board a registered pilot to give him advice. Under Canadian law I think the captain is master of his ship, and he will keep control of his ship notwithstanding that a pilot is on board.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I do not think it need be a pilot; he can have an officer on his ship.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Yes, if he has an officer who is qualified he need not have a pilot. But that officer must know English, because communication is maintained by radio telephone along the St. Lawrence Seaway and on the Great Lakes. He must possess also a knowledge of local rules and conditions for sailing on the lakes. The pilotage requirements apply only to ships of 250 gross tons or more.

One point mentioned was that lakers do not require a pilot. I do not know just what is meant by lakers, but they are probably large ships operating in the lakes. However, information as to this will be available in commitee.

The bill provides that Canadian pilots are to come under the Civil Service of Canada, whereas American pilots will operate under private enterprise. I am not quite sure how that arrangement will work out in regard to the rights of Canadian pilots, but information on this also can be obtained when the bill is in committee.

The fact of the matter is that the Americans want rights in our waters and we are to have rights in their waters for our pilots. There has to be reciprocity, and we cannot have reciprocity until the agreement has been concluded, which will not be done until this concurrent legislation is passed. I am quite sure that it will be passed, so there is no need to worry on that score.

Another point I wish to mention is that I am sure the shipowners and the people of Canada are vitally interested in the costs of operating through our waterways. We are told that the cost of operating on the waterways is quite high. These are further matters that will be brought out in the committee.

Last year there was considerable discussion about the pilotage districts of Quebec and Montreal. However, this bill excludes those districts altogether. For that reason I do not believe there will be as much contention from that part of the country as there was last year when the other bill was before Parliament.

We must have reciprocity with the United States for pilots on the St. Lawrence waterway. I think it should go further and that we should have reciprocity in their ports. American ships have more privileges in our ports than we have in theirs. For instance, an American ship can load in one port and go to another port in this country, whereas a Canadian ship does not have the same privilege on the American side. These are things that should be pressed for settlement in the future.

I think this bill is a step toward co-ordination, and at the same time toward the protection of the Canadian merchant marine, which is in a sad condition at this time.

The bill does not contain any provision for termination of the agreement. As I understand it, the Americans will do certain things as long as we do certain things. However, this is only a beginning.

Wide powers are given to the Government to make regulations by order in council. I will say that the Government must have wide powers in matters of this kind, because conditions change fast and we are here dealing with a foreign country. Statute law is almost too static to govern matters of this kind successfully.

Let us hope that this bill will be passed by Parliament, that it will be a good workable bill, and that it will impress the Americans. The record of our discussions in the Transport and Communications Committee last year must have impressed them.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am pleased that the bill is to be referred to committee today. While the discussion was going on I was wondering what provisions for pilotage are at present in effect along the St. Lawrence deep waterway and on the Great Lakes. Apparently no mutual provisions are in effect at the present time. Nevertheless, the ships seem to be proceeding satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There are some, but at the moment I cannot tell you what they are.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no mutual arrangement; that is to say, there is not in the two countries any reciprocal legislation on this matter.

I notice that this measure will come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. I think it is in the interests of both countries that the bill should come into effect as soon as possible, and that is why I am pleased that the bill is going to be studied by the committee right away.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, we shall try to arrange for a meeting of the committee tomorrow morning at 10.30.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Fred. M. Blois moved the second reading of Bill C-81, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

He said: Honourable senators, before I attempt to explain this bill may I be permitted to express my thanks to the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) for the very kind remarks he made regarding the two senators from Nova Scotia who have been appointed to this honourable body during the present year. He made special reference to the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald). I may say that I have known the honourable gentleman for many years and had the privilege of knowing very well indeed his late father, who was a member of the Harrington cabinet in Nova Scotia in the thirties. Thus our new colleague has been well trained in strict Tory ideals, which I realize serve well in this house, and I am sure that he will carry out his duties in a completely non-partisan manner. On behalf of every Nova Scotia senator—and I believe I can say of all senators—I welcome him here. I wish to say to him that if he receives the very kind consideration and support that

I have received from all members of this chamber he will find his stay here most happy indeed.

Honourable senators, I will now deal with Bill C-81, which is an act to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

This bill is a measure to extend the provisions for freight rate reductions contained in the Freight Rates Reduction Act that was passed last year by Parliament, and known as Bill C-38. The bill received first reading in the Senate on May 19, 1959, and second reading on June 9, after which it was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. This committee examined the bill thoroughly and reported the same without amendment on June 17, 1959, and it received third reading on June 18.

For the benefit of the new senators and to refresh the memories of all honourable senators, perhaps I should give a brief resumé leading up to last year's Bill C-38.

The Railway Association of Canada and certain of the member companies applied to the Board of Transport Commissioners for permission to increase rates by 17 per cent, covering class and commodity rates, which are non-competitive, including rates by joint rail-water routes. This increase was authorized by the board on November 17, 1958, by its Order No. 96300.

The decision of the board was appealed by eight provinces to the Governor in Council, and while the Governor in Council recognized the need of the railways for the additional revenues which would thereby be attained, and did not disallow the increase, it was the view of the Government that a means of granting some relief from the increase should be devised.

As an interim measure designed to alleviate the burden of the authorized increase in rates the Government last year introduced Bill C-38, which provided for a subsidy not to exceed $20 million over a 12-month period to be paid to the companies that were subject to the board's Order No. 96300, as reimbursement for such reductions in rates as were ordered by the board under its Order No. 98424, dated July 10, 1959 and effective August 1, 1959.

The rates to which the reduction applies are the normal class rates and commodity rates on which the 17 per cent increase was applied on December 1, 1958, and which were in effect when the act came into force.

Class rates are the maximum rates that the railways can charge, and they apply to about 8,000 articles in the Canadian freight classification. High-class manufactured articles are the principal articles shipped at class rates.

Commodity rates are lower than the class rates; they apply on bulk commodities and other articles which are shipped in large quantities, such as steel, sand and gravel, lumber, pulpwood, fruits and vegetables, ores, cement, woodpulp, newsprint paper, canned goods, sugar and so forth.

The reduction does not apply to subnormal rates which the railways have been compelled to publish by the force of competition, such as competitive rates and agreed charges. The reduction also does not apply to the statutory Crowsnest Pass grain and flour rates, nor to international rates between Canada and the United States, nor to export and import traffic which is carried at lower rates in competition with United States ports.

Honourable senators will be interested to know the reductions in freight rates that were accomplished under the legislation. The board requested the companies to reduce, effective August 1, 1959, the 17 per cent freight rate increase to 10 per cent on the rates affected.

Some honourable senators may be wondering how the Government arrived at the amount of subsidy of $20 million and the reduction in freight rate increase from 17 per cent to 10 per cent. In explanation, I would advise that the Railway Association of Canada was able to supply the Government with the figures showing the total revenue received from class and commodity rates the previous year under the old rates, and also the expected revenue that would be received by the 17 per cent increase on a similar volume of freight carried. Therefore, it was a relatively simple matter to figure that $20 million would allow a decrease from 17 per cent to 10 per cent. Subsequently, as figures of traffic actually carried became known, the Board of Transport Commissioners found that a further reduction of 2 percentage points could be made with the $20 million for approximately the last three months of the period, and this additional reduction was ordered by the board under Order No. 101055, dated April 27, 1960, effective May 2, 1960, which now reduces the 17 per cent rate increase to 8 per cent.

Honourable senators may be interested in the figures on which the board based the further reduction of 2 percentage points. The claims for reimbursement recommended by the board for payment for traffic carried by the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific in the first eight months commencing August 1, 1959 were approximately $6,500,000 for the Canadian National and $4,500,000 for the Canadian Pacific—a total of $11 million.

There is a time lag of about two months in the filing of claims by the companies, and the effect of the reductions on traffic for the last four months of the period will not be known until several months later. It is quite possible that the reductions may fall somewhat short of using the whole of the $20 million, because actual traffic volume of the 12 months may differ from what has been estimated. As I have already stated, the initial 7 percentage points reduction was made principally on the basis of traffic estimates of the railways given in the 17 per cent case. The further reduction of 2 percentage points was made when it became apparent that actual traffic carryings of the kind affected would be less than had been estimated, for a number of reasons, including fluctuations in volume and kind of traffic, and also transfer of traffic to competitive and agreed charge categories.

As I have said, the reduction was for a period not exceeding one year, and it will expire on July 31 of this year unless provision is made for an extension. The purpose of this Bill C-81 is to extend the provisions of the Freight Rates Reduction Act for a further period not exceeding nine months from July 31. The amount of $20 million to reimburse the companies for one year's reductions is being increased by $15 million to $35 million for a period not to exceed one year and nine months.

The Royal Commission on Transportation is still engaged in its exhaustive investigation of the railway situation, and the relief that was provided by means of the Freight Rates Reduction Act is accordingly being continued by this bill.

As I have said, last year's bill was thoroughly examined by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The principles and purposes of this bill are the same as those of last year's bill. I have indicated what has been accomplished to reduce freight rates under it and the reasons why the legislation is being extended, and I think I have explained the bill and its purpose fully, without taking up too much of the time of the Senate in doing so.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, it would almost appear as though today is Nova Scotia day.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a good kind of day.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: First, we heard the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald), who presented a fine picture of land use. We then had an interesting discussion of the Shipping Bill by the honourable senator from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley), and we have just heard an excellent speech by the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And now we are going to hear from the distinguished senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor).

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would like to join with other senators in extending a welcome from one Nova Scotian to the other Nova Scotians who have recently been made members of this chamber. I have known the sponsor of this bill, the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois), for between 40 and 45 years in a business way as well as in a political way. I have always found him an exceptionally fine person, both in business and on the other side of the fence in the political arena.

Like the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants, I too sat in the Nova Scotia Legislature with the father of the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald), who recently joined us. If the son is as good a man as the father was, then we have a very, very fine new senator.

Honourable senators, we have had the background of this bill fully explained to us, and I do not think I need to go over the various facts outlined, although, perhaps, I might be allowed to repeat one or two.

The bill was presented in the other house in June. It went to committee, was unanimously approved there, and received its third reading on July 18. As already stated, its purpose is not only to increase the amount of the subsidy by an additional $15 million, but also to extend the period from 12 months to not more than 21 months. That is the principle and the object of this bill.

When it was before the committee of the other place Mr. Knowles, one of the members of the Board of Transport Commissioners, appeared as a witness and gave figures to justify the request for this increased amount. He said that the railways had estimated that $281 million-worth of normal traffic would occur during the year 1959, and that 7 per cent of that is roughly the amount asked for. The honourable sponsor of the bill here (Hon. Mr. Blois) showed that the moneys required were in connection with class and commodity rates and not competitive rates.

I was interested in this, because in looking at the last annual report of the Canadian National Railways I find that 79.7 per cent of the total revenue came from freight. I read also that there has been a considerable increase in their freight revenue this year, and I wonder what further effect this assistance will have. It was also noticeable that while the Canadian railways were asking for this increased assistance with respect to freight rates the railways in the United States had made no such request. From a business point of view one would ask himself whether we are operating as efficiently as are the railways in the United States. If anyone wonders whether I am correct in stating that there was no general freight rate increase in the United States, I may say that this statement is made in the report of the Canadian National Railways for 1959, on page 9.

While I certainly have no objection to this bill as it stands, it would appear that the C.N.R.—I am speaking particularly of the Government railway—might well look into its financing as it applies to freight rates. It has made extensive additions to its freight handling facilities, and today it is marshalling trains of 100 to 150 freight cars, and in some cases 200 freight cars, compared with trains of 50 or 60 freight cars of a few years ago. All that must naturally lessen the percentage of the overhead cost of doing business.

I am also wondering—and I cannot help saying this—what effect the St. Lawrence Seaway is having on the freight business of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. As honourable senators will recall, the American railroads, at the time of the investigation when the St. Lawrence Seaway project was being introduced, wondered what effect it would have on their business, and they presented briefs protesting against certain of the toll charges because of their effect on their revenues.

These reports are always interesting to read, and it is to be noted that in 1959 the freight revenue of the Canadian National Railways was $28 million higher than in the previous year.

There was another point that struck me as I read the report with this bill in mind. That was whether we were getting a true picture of the financial position of the Canadian National Railways, taking into consideration the subsidies. I do not think in any part of the financial report you will see a credit against the freight costs of this amount of $20 million plus the additional $15 million. I bring that to your attention, honourable senators, so that if this bill is referred to the committee we might have that point brought up and an explanation given by the witnesses.

Paragraph 9 of the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for 1959 reads:

> Prominent among the company's efforts to provide better service to shippers was an expansion of facilities for the handling of piggyback traffic. Between Montreal and Toronto, the number of trailer-carrying trains was doubled, thereby providing shippers with two convenient departure times from each terminal.

I read that because I know the sponsor of the bill, like myself and others from the Maritimes, is particularly interested in better freight service to and from our part of the country. This clearly shows that the moneys being spent are to a large extent again being used in the central markets of Canada, particularly between Montreal and Toronto.

Honourable senators, the bill has been so clearly covered that I do not think I need add anything, except that the freight revenue per ton per mile of the C.N.R. in 1959 was the second highest since 1935, a period of 25 years. Only once did we have a higher freight revenue per ton per mile than we had in 1959, and still our railways come before the Board of Transport Commissioners and ask for an increase of 17 per cent. I quite appreciate why the Government hesitated to grant this 17 per cent increase, and I think it should be looked into further before it is put into effect.

I would ask the honourable senator who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Blois) whether it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Blois: That is my intention.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, July 5, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

> 1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through
>
> (a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and
>
> (b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.
>
> 2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, the subject of Canada's future participation in reciprocal trade agreements is of vital importance to us. These agreements are taking on new forms among many countries of the world. The newest form, and what is now before us for consideration, is the grouping of countries with the main objective of establishing free trade between themselves.

The two groups in Europe, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, as they are termed, are in all probability the beginning of world-wide movements of such groupings.

By introducing this subject in the Senate the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) rendered a very valuable public service. I hope there will be a continuation of interest in this matter, not only in this chamber but throughout the country generally. We have had many speeches here which have reflected a close study of this subject, and I think we can say we have at least made a beginning in establishing public interest in this very vital movement.

There is a great need for highly specialized research and study into this whole matter, and no time should be lost in formulating and promoting a national policy in Canada for our international trading. There are many vital issues involved which affect people in all branches of industry and citizens generally. I think more publicity should be given throughout the dominion to this movement which is going to affect world trading relations, and which naturally has a distinct bearing on the livelyhood of people in Canada and everywhere else.

I am aware that we have not been standing still on these matters of foreign trade relations. Our Department of Trade and Commerce, through its officials at home and abroad, has been negotiating agreements of one kind and another throughout the years. It is not my purpose now to review the operations in the various organizations with which Canada is associated. I shall, however, mention something about one or two of them.

A feature of the charter of the United Nations Organization in 1945 was the setting up of special agencies for development of international trade. Probably the most outstanding one that came into being at that time was the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, known as GATT. In 1949, when NATO was formed, the second article of the treaty sought to eliminate conflict over international economic policies and to encourage economic collaboration. As we know, that did not work out very effectively, but GATT has at least faced up better to its objectives, notwithstanding the many waivers to its provisions, which are sometimes called the escape clauses. I think the person who originated that term should go down in history as one of the world's great compromisers. However, GATT has done some effective work and in recent years it has been helpful in increasing trade between Canada and the United Kingdom and other countries. The committee of GATT holds meetings twice a year, generally in Geneva, but the last time it met in Tokyo. These constant meetings of GATT do help in clarifying the trading problems of many countries.

It is generally conceded that the Common Market policy of European countries is not by its nature contrary to the provisions of GATT. It is of extreme interest to us all, I am sure, that a committee representing 21 countries, including those of the two European groups, as well as Canada and the United States, is working to reconcile the competitive interests of these European groups. The conflicting interest cannot be reconciled, however, without very close and continuous relationship being maintained on a wide international basis. For instance, the members of the Group of Six are working together toward closer political ties as well as trade connections, but in the Group of Seven the future political relationship is not a predominant factor. The matters of trade are the sole consideration at the present time of the Group of Seven.

Then again the Six are to have a common agricultural policy. The Seven do not now envisage this possibility, but if they should later do so it will cause a lot of concern in this country and the United States.

For the purpose of the record, I should mention the countries comprising these two groups. The Inner Six consists of France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg. The Outer Seven consists of the United Kingdom, Austria, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland.

A recent report from the Washington correspondent of the Financial Post states that Canadian and United States farm products might be adversely affected because of the new protectionist proposals now being considered by the Inner Six. In this connection, the United States has $1 billion of farm products at stake and Canada has $200 million. It is only natural in this day of national trade barriers, with the United States and Canada being leaders in artificial protection to industry, that counter-protection is being set up. The correspondent went on to say—and this is the gist of his remarks—that as it stands now, if some of the proposals within the Common Market group are implemented they will drastically affect United States and Canadian exports of wheat, feed grain, tobacco, salted fish, and other products.

The trend toward economic integration among the free nations of Europe will have a very great significance to Canadian trade, involving as it does a European population of about 300 millions. This is one of the changes of thought and relationship among nations which just cannot be ignored by any nation, and probably least of all by Canada.

We think of the United Kingdom as one of the outstanding international trading countries of the world, and so it is. The relative importance of foreign trade to Canada is very similar to that of the United Kingdom. In 1958 Canadian exports amounted to the equivalent of 15.5 per cent of our Gross National Product. In the United Kingdom exports equalled 14.8 per cent of the G.N.P., only fractionally less than that in Canada. Canada's imports amounted to 15.9 per cent of G.N.P., and those of the United Kingdom to 16.7 per cent.

It may be of interest to mention a comparison of Canada's foreign trade in 1958 with that of the two groups of European countries which are under consideration in this matter. In relation to the Gross National Product, the export value of the Common Market Group of Six was 18.5 per cent, and of the Outer Seven, including Great Britain, 19.1 per cent. The value of imports of the Inner Six was 20.1 per cent, and of the Outer Seven, 24.4 per cent. Canada's dependence on foreign trade is therefore not very dissimilar from that of the European countries concerned. The fact that those countries see the urgency of the need for cultivating a freer trade among themselves, and ultimately free trade, should certainly be of great significance to us. A fact of tremendous importance in this matter is that commodity exports account for about $300 of the per capita income of Canadians.

Now, where should we look for the most helpful trading associations? Perhaps in many places. One thing we can be sure of is that higher and higher tariff walls and restrictions under such measures as revaluations to impose dumping duties, and so forth, will, in sum total, catch up on us and become a national poison.

By no means can we pass over the need for cultivating closer mutual trading relations with the United States. I know we feel frustrated at times by the attention given by Washington to the clamour of trade interests which would clamp down on many of our products going there. We should not, however, allow our impatience to influence us against a long-range policy of working more closely together. We are so much more dependent on foreign trade than is the United States that we should plug harder and harder to get closer to it in trade matters. That country has a population ten times ours and a far greater variety of products than we can hope to turn out, because of differences in climate and natural resources. The dependence of the United States on export trade is far less, because its exports total the equivalent of only 3.7 per cent of total national income, while ours is 15.5 per cent; and its imports are only 2.9 per cent, compared with our 15.9 per cent.

At this time it is most important to have the views of organizations and persons most qualified to speak from experience —and I repeat "from experience"—on the grouping of European countries for their foreign trade development. We know the thinking from the British side pretty well, because Great Britain is a participant in this grouping, although she has a great fear that two rival groups of Europe may develop. Lord Dudley Gordon, a past president of the Federation of British Industries, speaking in Montreal recently, made an appeal for Canada and the United States to avoid taking sides with one unit against the other. There is reason, he said, to be hopeful that a basis for unity between the two will be found. The alternative to unity will be the loss of many of the uncommitted countries of the Free World to Communism. The uncommitted countries, he said, can only be kept free by a united Europe, supported by Canada and the United States. He is reported to have expressed strong views on the great help the United Kingdom will derive from being able to negotiate foreign trade in co-operation with other countries of Europe.

What is the thinking in the United States on this matter? Because of our economic ties, that is of the very greatest importance to us in Canada.

Recently, a close examination of this European movement was made by top-level organization in the United States and I found its report on the Common Market project most interesting. I feel that some quotations from that report will be interesting and helpful to us in this important world issue. First, I shall tell you of the organization itself. It is the Committee for Economic Development, whose members are men right at the top in all branches of industry, banking and insurance, as well as in appropriate departments of universities and welfare organizations. Their committees on International Economic Policies, as well as on Research, number over one hundred persons, most of whose names and the organizations they represent are familiar to us all, and in fact are known throughout the world. It can be regarded as a most authoritative body to advise on matters relating to national economic policy of the United States. Their enumeration of some of the main provisions of the Common Market Agreement I shall mention as a useful background for their findings:

(a) Tariffs, quotas and other barriers to trade among the Six will be gradually eliminated over a twelve- to fifteen-year transition period.

(b) Over the transition period a uniform tariff schedule will be created by the Six to apply to imports from the rest of the world.

(c) Restrictions on the movement of services, labour, capital and business enterprises among the Six are to be abolished and payments are to be freed.

(d) The members are to co-ordinate monetary and fiscal policies.

(e) A common agricultural policy is to be established.

(f) Two Investment Funds are to be established, one to operate in Europe and the other to operate in the colonies and associated territories. They are intended to channel capital from the more advanced areas to the less developed regions of the community and its dependencies.

(g) A Social Fund is to be established to relieve possible economic injuries to workers resulting from trade liberalization.

They also enumerate the main features of the Outer Seven agreement to explain the differences between the two European organizations. While their findings as to the principles involved are most favourable, they do not by any means discount the difficulty of reconciling some of the conflicting interests.

I shall now quote from their report which was recently published and which gives some conclusions arising from their investigations. The report is contained in a book entitled The European Common Market and its Meaning to the United States.

(1) The European Economic Community is one of the most important undertakings of the twentieth century, and its establishment could be a watershed event in history. It could be the first step in a major new advance towards freer economic exchange, or it could be a step toward the creation of new regional barriers, more dangerous and more durable than present barriers.

(2) A great contribution of the Common Market may be that it forces us to re-think current doctrines and current practices for the organization of world economic relations. It has become increasingly doubtful whether present doctrines or practices are realistic.

(3) We do not have, and we badly need, a realistic philosophy for a world in which the relations among national economies are not determined and cannot be expected to determine entirely by the operation of free international markets in goods and capital. The newly established European Common Market, and the difficulties encountered by way of extending some of its features to the rest of Western Europe, illustrate the need for a new philosophy.

(4) The objective of the Common Market is to increase the efficiency and raise the income of the area chiefly but give greater scope to competition. We are confident that this objective will be achieved. To the extent that it is achieved, the rest of the world will benefit.

(5) The most constructive way to tie the Common Market into the world economy would be to reduce world barriers to trade substantially. To take the initiative in such a move should be the main responsibility of the United States to the Common Market.

I think that is a most significant remark coming from, as I say, one of the outstanding organizations in the United States competent to speak on this matter. I will take the liberty, honourable senators, of making a few further quotations which I think are applicable to this. The report continues:

(6) Nothing would be more valuable in preventing the new economic regionalism from degenerating into a new economic isolationism than a new United States initiative for the reduction of trade barriers.

The chief lesson of the Common Market may be that it shows us once more and dramatically that the world is in motion—on the economic front as on others. Our responsibility and our policy should be directed to the increase of opportunities for other nations to achieve development within the framework of a free world trading system. To the extent that we are able to do this we increase the likelihood that other nations will choose the route of multilateral trade rather than protectionism. Access to the United States market can be the link holding the free world economy together.

The quotations which I have just read do not by any means cover the whole range of recommendations, as well as the reservations, in the report. They do, however, in my judgment, give an overall view of where very prominent figures in industry and professions in the United States stand on this issue.

With respect to our own position, I personally feel that those conclusions are sound and in principle can be regarded as applicable to Canada. The movement of economic grouping of nations at this stage represents a very distinct world trend. We should unquestionably keep in very close association with that movement, bearing in mind that an interlocking of economic relations of the countries of the free world is of vital importance in this day and generation.

At this time also we should not lightly pass over existing arrangements for simply an ideal of future relationship.

While, as I say, Canada should keep in very close with these grouping-of-nations movements for the promotion of trade in Europe or elsewhere, we must first of all continue to develop our existing trade relations to the greatest possible extent through mutual tariff concessions and other means. I cannot think of any area where those relations are more important than right on the North American continent, with the United States and also with certain of the commonwealth countries in the East and in the West, where through generations a favourable atmosphere has been created.

The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) said recently, in speaking on this subject, that because of the distance from coast to coast the cultivation of trade in the Pacific areas is of vital importance to the western provinces, as is the trade in the Atlantic regions to the eastern provinces. That is undoubtedly true, in terms both of imports as well as exports. As an example, I might say that were it not for the sales to the West Indies, thousands of Newfoundland fishermen would have to discontinue fishing.

I am sure we are all interested in the recent statement of the Honourable the Minister for External Affairs that a Latin American division is being set up in his department, and that at the forthcoming conference of the Organization of American States an observer will be present from Canada. I entirely agree with his opinion that we should develop a broader Western Hemisphere outlook than we have at present.

Within our Department of Trade and Commerce there has been built up over the world a most valuable organization for the servicing of Canadian trade internationally. The degree of success that organization can achieve depends chiefly on the situation within Canada itself. It depends also on the attitudes within Canada.

The loudest voices we hear in Canada today are voices of fear. I say this very deliberately —they are voices of fear. We fear that if we do not keep on piling up higher and higher tariffs our manufacturing industries will suffer. But industry is bound to suffer if there is an increasing fear of competition. Competition should be welcomed as the greatest stimulus to efficiency, enterprise and resulting employment.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: That is not a visionary outlook. It is a realistic one, because behind closed doors, locked up with high tariffs, industry can just fall asleep. Within industry, both management and labour simply must co-operate more closely to keep costs more competitive with other countries than at present. That co-operation is essential for the very existence of our foreign trade as well as for the advancement of our domestic economy.

We should be able to forget the term "secondary" as it is applied to industry. We are in the habit of attaching that word to industries which produce articles chiefly for local use because they are made from imported materials. Some of the greatest exporting countries in the world use mainly imported materials in their manufacturing. The real answer to the unemployment problem is the development of industries that will market their products in more countries of the world. The answer is certainly not to keep more and more products out of this country; such a policy will compel us to export less and less.

The voice of fear over the amount of investment capital coming into Canada seems to be getting louder and louder. Where would we be now without the previous inflow of foreign capital? We can well ask ourselves, how far down the economic drain will we flow in the future without it? Foreign investment capital is behind the great development of our mineral, forestry and other natural resources. Some of our very largest manufacturing industries came about that way. We often forget that along with the flow of capital into Canada comes the result of industrial research and of modern methods which have cost billions of dollars to create in other countries of the world. Without it industry could not even get a start. Industrial research is now causing greater changes in manufacturing industry than ever before.

I would mention one other such fear. It is the fear of coming under the economic domination of the United States. That is the most meaningless fear of all. Our neighbour has ten times our population, it is true, but I think that is all in our favour. Let us try to share in their wealth and prosperity and take a pride in growing up alongside them.

As I said in the beginning of this talk, the world is changing. The economic outlook of countries over the world is changing rapidly. Only a few years ago the economic grouping of countries such as is now taking place was not even dreamed about.

Canada, with its great resources and its vast expanse for future development, has everything to gain by gearing itself to a wide and practical participation in these economic relationships.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, for Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 21, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m. the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-80, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without any amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen reported that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had considered Bill C-81, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without any amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Fred M. Blois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, July 26, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC COAST

AIRCRAFT AND VESSELS AVAILABLE FOR SEARCH AND RESCUE DUTIES

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. How many aircraft and vessels in each department of government were available for air-sea search and rescue duties, on the Atlantic coast, in—

(a) 1957; and

(b) 1960?

2. What change, if any, has been made since 1957 in the terms and conditions of the "coast guard" service, on the Atlantic coast, rendered by these vessels and aircraft to fishermen in distress at sea?

3. What change, if any, has been made since 1957 in the communication system, on the Atlantic coast, with respect to search and rescue operations?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have received the following answers to this inquiry:

Answer by Department of Fisheries:

1. With reference to Part 1 of the question, all vessels operated by this department on the Atlantic coast, subject to their capabilities for such work, are available. In 1957 in the Maritime provinces, the department operated 24 vessels and in Newfoundland 12. In 1960 in the Maritimes area 26 vessels are being operated and in Newfoundland 13.

In Newfoundland the department also charters helicopter and aircraft services for transportation. If these facilities were required, they could be made available through the authorities responsible for search and rescue.

2. No information.

3. No information.

Answer by Department of Mines and Technical Surveys:

1. The Canadian Hydrographic Service had 6 vessels operating on the Atlantic coast in 1957 and in 1960. This number included 2 chartered vesels in 1957 and 3 in 1960.

2. The only significant change of which this department is aware is the appointment of Marine Co-ordinators to instruct Government ships in search and rescue procedures, check necessary equipment and make recommendations.

3. There has been no change in the communication system on the Atlantic coast. The hydrographic vessels report their positions to the Maritime Commander, Atlantic, usually on a basis of once per week when remaining in a particular area and oftener or as required when a change is made in the area of operations.

Answer by Department of National Defence:

1. (a) 1957	(b) 1960
3 Canso	2 Canso
2 Dakota	2 Dakota
3 Otter	4 Otter
1 Helicopter	2 Helicopter
3 Lancaster	3 Lancaster

Ships of the Royal Canadian Navy located in distress areas are called in when required to assist in search and rescue operations.

2. To be answered elsewhere.

3. Since 1957 the R.C.A.F. has improved the high frequency communications facilities at Halifax. A similar improvement program is underway at Torbay and will be completed by September 1960. A voice liaison telephone circuit has been installed between the Halifax Rescue Co-ordination Centre and the Boston Search and Rescue Control Centre. This circuit in turn gives access to other communications systems serving the Atlantic seaboard and facilitates co-operation between Canadian and American search and rescue services.

Answer by Royal Canadian Mounted Police:

1. (a) One aircraft and 4 vessels suitable for deep sea search and rescue, and one aircraft and 5 vessels suitable for coastwise searching.

(b) One aircraft and 4 vessels suitable for deep sea search and rescue, and one aircraft and 5 vessels suitable for coastwise searching.

2. No information.

3. No information.

Answer by Department of Transport:

1. (a) In 1957, there were 7 Department of Transport ships normally available for search and rescue duties in the Eastern area. From time to time any one of 6 other ships based on Quebec might be in the Eastern area and available.

(b) In 1960, there are 10 Canadian Marine Service ships normally available for search and rescue duties in the Eastern area. From time to time any one of 7 other ships based on Quebec might also be in the Eastern search and rescue area and available.

2. A Marine Co-ordinator for Search and Rescue took up his duties on the east coast in June, 1960. This officer is now actively engaged in surveying the situation and making recommendations for improving the marine arrangements. This officer, though an officer of the Department of Transport on the staff of the Director, Marine Operations, will co-ordinate the search and rescue work of all Government-owned ships.

3. To be answered elsewhere.

DIVORCE

MOTION FOR AMENDMENTS TO RULES—WITHDRAWN

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Rules of the Senate be amended as follows:

1. Rule 107. Strike out "of any nature whatsoever" and substitute "other than Bills of Divorce".

2. Rule 136. Strike out Rule 136 and substitute the following:—

"136. Every applicant for a Bill of Divorce shall give notice of his or her intended application in accordance with subjoined Form A, and shall specify therein from whom and for what cause divorce is sought."

3. Rule 137. Strike out "two months" and substitute "one month".

4. Rule 139. 3. (e). Strike out "thirty days" and substitute "fifteen days".

5. Rule 141. Strike out "by the evidence of the publication of the notice as required by Rule 136, and".

6. Form E, paragraph 5. Strike out "thirty days" and substitute "fifteen days".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt this motion?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, evidently there is some objection to adoption of this motion. There are just two comments I wish to make prior to any questions that may be asked or any remarks that may be made by other honourable senators.

First of all, may I say that I am endeavouring to clear this matter with the other house and I do not think there will be any difficulty in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Has the honourable senator considered Rule 96 of the House of Commons with the appropriate people in that house?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Their Rule 96 appears to be exactly the same as our Rule 107.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Both deal with publication of notices of applications to Parliament for private bills generally, whether introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons. What concerns me is whether we should change the rule at all with regard to publication in the Canada Gazette. I would like the honourable gentleman to deal with that in his remarks.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I assume that is only as to publication in the Canada Gazette. I see no real purpose to be served by such publication. It has no purpose as an index of what we do, for we publish in our statutes a list of all the divorces we grant, and our Committees Branch has a thorough index of all the cases, their records, and so on. I do not see that any advantage is gained by publication of notice in the Canada Gazette.

Now, some questions have been asked during the interval with regard to notice to the respondent. I cannot say that we never proceed without notice to the respondent, but I can say that practically we never do. The only time there is any waiving of the regulation that the respondent must be notified is when a husband or wife, most likely a husband, has been guilty of adultery and then disappears and the wife does not know where he has gone. The very fact of his disappearance should not set aside our jurisdiction nor rob her of her right to a divorce on the ground of his marital offence. When such circumstances arise an application is made, which I usually hear in my own room, for permission to proceed without serving the respondent. In that case the practice, as in the courts, is to order that service be made upon everyone who is known to have any connection with the husband—as, for instance, his relatives, his father and mother, brothers and sisters, if they are known; persons at the last place where he boarded, his former employer, and every other person or place from whom or at which knowledge of his whereabouts might be obtained.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I suppose in a case of that kind if you deemed it advisable you might order an advertisement?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was going to say that, and if advertising was not required under the rules of the other house that would be the natural order to make. I submit that in such an unusual situation the house may very well rely upon the common sense of the officials who are running this "divorce mill". The chairman usually handles that kind of thing as an interlocutory matter, that is, something which precedes actual trial, and a report is made to the committee as to what happened. There is always a record kept on file, and it is brought before the subcommittee that hears the evidence, so there is no likelihood at all of a bill of divorce being passed without the respondent having due knowledge of that fact. It is only on a very, very rare occasion, when circumstances such as I have described arise, that an order is made to permit proceedings to continue without service upon the respondent. I thought this was very fully discussed on the last occasion. I have nothing further to add at the moment.

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, I am strongly opposed to this motion. If the motion passes in its present form, one set of rules relating to divorces will be applied in the Senate and an entirely different set of rules on this particular matter will be applied in the House of Commons. That will lead to confusion, since every petitioner will be in doubt as to which set of rules he should comply with. Should he comply with the amended rules of the Senate, or with the present rules of the House of Commons? I feel that the proper course to pursue is for our Divorce Committee to meet with the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons and agree on any changes that both committees consider necessary. In that way the rules of the two houses would remain uniform, and I think it is most important that they should.

I am sorry to have to disagree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) with respect to publication of the notice in the Canada Gazette. At first I was of the opinion that publication in the Canada Gazette might be dispensed with. However, I do not feel this way now. If honourable senators will make inquiries they will find that the Canada Gazette is distributed right across Canada and is read rather extensively. People in every province get the Canada Gazette. If anyone is interested in a divorce bill that is where he will find the notice published. It is in this publication that he will read about it. A person in British Columbia, northern Alberta, or Saskatchewan in all probability will never read a notice published in a Montreal newspaper or in a Newfoundland newspaper, but there is a definite possibility that he will read it in the Canada Gazette.

I do not think we should dispense with the publication in the Canada Gazette, but even if we decided to do so it would still be necessary to publish notice of the petition in the Canada Gazette, under the rules of the House of Commons.

Under the next proposed amendment the interval between the service on the respondent and co-respondent and the consideration by the committee would be shortened from two months to one month. With this I do not agree. I think an interval of two months is quite short enough. If we keep on in this way it will be so easy to apply for a divorce here that we shall probably end up with 2,500 petitions in a year, equal to the annual number of divorces granted in Ontario. We are making divorce easier and easier, and I do not think we should do that. We have a good set of rules here and I think we should keep them and follow them.

Let us look at what might happen if we agreed to the proposal that the period within which notice of opposition must be given shall be reduced from 30 days to 15 days. A respondent in northern Newfoundland or in Labrador or the Northwest Territories may have to be served, and I suggest that if the time is cut down to 15 days there will not be enough time to file an answer. Thirty days is a short enough period.

I think it would be a great mistake for this honourable body to make these changes since in my opinion they would only lead to confusion.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is the honourable senator aware that there were only two divorce petitions from Newfoundland this year and none from the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But it may be necessary to serve a party in these distant places. If there was only one case from Newfoundland my argument would still apply. If we change our rules there will be two sets of rules—one set in the other place and a different set in the Senate. Which set would be followed? Nothing would be gained by making these suggested changes to the rules.

If our Divorce Committee would sit down with the committee of the other place which considers divorce petitions there and go over the rules—maybe some others should be changed—and come up with a uniform set of rules, I think it would be more satisfactory for all who may be concerned with divorce.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I wonder if the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) would consider holding this motion over and not proceeding with it today.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That would be agreeable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I notice that Standing Order No. 95 of the other house provides:

> All applications to Parliament for private bills, of any nature whatsoever, shall be advertised by a notice published in the Canada Gazette; ...

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Isn't that Rule No. 96?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may be No. 96 now. I am reading from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, in which it appears as Standing Order No. 95. The rule continues, under clause (C):

Paragraph (C) on page 287 of Beauchesne, reads as follows:

> When the application is for the purpose of obtaining for any person or existing corporation any exclusive rights or privileges or the power to do any matter or thing which in its operation would affect the rights or property of others: in the particular locality or localities in which the business, rights or property of others may be specially affected by the proposed act.

That would include applications for divorce.

It does occur to me that if we changed our rules in this house with respect to divorce, and in accordance with that change notice did not appear in the Canada Gazette and in the local newspapers, in such case some members of the other house might take the attitude that since its rules had not been carried out it should not proceed with the legislation. If that happened the divorce situation would be quite confusing.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It would be intolerable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: For those reasons I would suggest that perhaps our honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) should not proceed with this motion today, but should give us a little more time to consider it.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) could adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have no axe to grind in this matter at all. My only desire is to carry on the work of the committee effectively and well.

With regard to the likelihood of confusion, may I say that the rules which we adopt here apply to the hearing of cases here. It must be remembered that these rules are observed by lawyers, who are not easily confused in carrying on business of this kind, as members of the public might be. The rules which apply in the other house do not apply to us. So a solicitor who comes before us observes our rules, and when he goes before the committee on the other side he observes the rules of that house. There is no confusion in that respect, and there is no attempt to make our rules exactly the same as those of the other house from start to finish.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask a question? If the rules of the other place are left as they are, with respect to the lapse of two months for personal service and so on, what does a solicitor do? Does he comply with those rules?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He complies with our rules when he is before our Standing Committee on Divorce.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: But he would have to comply with the rules of the other place in order to get before the committee of that place.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. When a bill passes this house it goes to the other house, where it is referred to a committee. There is certainly no attempt on the part of this house to tie our rules in with those of the other house. We are not the tail of their kite, by any means. It is sufficient if we do our work effectively.

With regard to the shortening of the time in which notice shall be given, it might happen that a person had to be served beyond the Arctic circle. If that happened, and that person did not have time to reply within the required period, we would hear him at any time up to the trial of his case. The suggestion of the 15 days' notice is in accordance with what courts generally allow.

If the respondent fails to file notice of contestation within 15 days we are under no obligation to serve him with the other papers. But if he gives us notice in any form whatsoever that he intends to contest the case, he may be heard right up to the last moment.

My honourable friend shakes his head. But I am stating a fact.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If a layman received a notice which stated that he had 15 days in which to do something, and it was impossible for him to do it, what would his interpretation be? He would conclude that after the 15 days he was debarred from doing anything. He would not know of his own knowledge that the Senate Divorce Committee would allow him latitude with respect to filing an answer.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The courts do not allow as much as two months for personal service. They give 30 days, and we are suggesting a change accordingly.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to engage in a controversy with my friend with regard to our proceedings in the committee. If anyone objects to the proposals, I do not propose to push them. I am quite ready to delay the matter until we have resolved our differences, and in a matter of this kind we should be able to work them out amicably. If we are not unanimous in our decision, perhaps further discussion would be in order. There is nothing sinister about this matter on either side, and I am quite prepared to delay its consideration.

If it were possible to come to an understanding with those in charge of these matters in the other place, would my honourable friend be satisfied?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Quite. If the two committees could get together and propose the same changes, I would be quite happy to go along with them.

I hope my honourable friend appreciates that there is nothing personal in my remarks in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I certainly do not look upon this as a personal matter. Indeed, I have no interest in divorce; I would be happy to be rid of it. My only interest is to try to do the job assigned to me—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You are doing an excellent job.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: —and I am sure that is the view of all members of the Divorce Committee.

I hope my honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) agrees with my objections to the publication of the charge of adultery against people who may perhaps be entirely innocent, and who may come and prove their innocence before the proceedings are concluded. I think our course of action in this respect has been outrageous, and I wonder why we have tolerated it so long. These matters often run along year after year with no one paying much attention to them. But, in my view, it is time we stopped allowing a man who wants to spite his spouse to hide behind the Senate and charge her with adultery in the public press.

As to the proposed change for shorter notice, I believe it would help a little, but that is not a serious matter. What is serious is the publication of the charge of adultery. It does involve unnecessary expense but, much more than that, it is not in the public interest that we continue to insert in the public press applications for divorce. As I remarked the other day, I would like to advertise marriage as much as I can. I am sure anyone who thinks over this matter would not wish us to continue advertising divorce. The public press is printing too much about it now, as we note from what has been happening in recent days. Let us not be guilty of placing before those who read the newspapers more and more about divorce. That is not, I think, in the public interest.

So far as the Canada Gazette is concerned, I do not think advertisement there will serve any purpose, but let us continue it if that is the desire of the house. I feel it is a waste of money, but, as I say, I am not pressing my recommendation. I have no axe to grind or anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We know that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What shall we do? Shall we adjourn the matter sine die?

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, it is with much hesitation that I rise to speak against some of the conclusions or suggestions of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). First, I should say, that the Standing Committee on Divorce enjoys a good reputation for fairness and honesty. I have been here for three years, and I have been interested to observe the processes and attitude of the members of this committee. I have had occasion to mention my satisfaction with the fairness and the prudence with which divorce petitions are studied by the committee, in whose work I cannot participate.

In view of the possibility that in the future there might be a study as to whether only one house of Parliament should deal with divorce petitions, I am profoundly interested in the maintenance of the good reputation of the Senate as a body dealing with those matters.

As to the allowance of 30 days for the filing of a reply by the respondent and co-respondent, I agree with what the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) said. Thirty days is not too long. In the province of Quebec, which is a large province, we allow six days in ordinary cases, but if people live farther than 50 miles away from the court house, or wherever the tribunal which is going to hear the case is sitting, an additional day is allowed for every additional 50 miles. That appears to me to be sound policy. As has been said, there are long distances in this country, and although people might go to some extraordinary expense in order to be on time, I think, generally speaking, it would not be fair to reduce that period of 30 days. I do not say the idea suggested is unfair in itself, but I do not think any period shorter than 30 days is sufficient.

I am much in favour of maintaining the requirement of publication in the Canada Gazette, because there is a substantial distinction between divorce proceedings and actions in separation as to bed and board. When we are considering actions in separation we are considering a matter that affects only the family concerned, namely, the husband and wife, and also their children, who are already aware of the situation or who will be made aware of it when they are old enough to know. No third party could possibly be affected. But when a marriage is going to be dissolved it may well happen—and it has happened, I think, many times—that a third party, a man or a woman, falls in love with a divorced person without knowing that that person is divorced. Of course, we cannot be sure that an advertisement in the Canada Gazette will become the common knowledge of everybody in Canada, but it seems to me that there is a very good chance that it will come to the notice of a member of the family, or people in the vicinity, or friends and relations. That will be sufficient, because when it is observed that a new courtship is developing the innocent party will soon learn of the true situation.

In view of that I think we might omit publication of the notice in the ordinary newspapers and maintain the requirement for advertisement in the Canada Gazette, although the nature of the allegations in the petition need not be included. I think it will prevent many disasters such as have occurred in the past, where one party to a marriage is ignorant of the fact that the other party is a divorcee.

The excellent reputation of the Senate's Standing Committee on Divorce will be taken into account if, possibly in the future, consideration is given to conferring upon one house of Parliament exclusive jurisdiction to grant divorces, not by way of passing bills of divorce, but by rendering final judgment on petitions for divorce.

If the Senate were by one general act of Parliament constituted a body with jurisdiction to receive petitions for divorce, to make investigations in regard thereto, to hear the parties and witnesses, to consider the evidence, and then to decide whether to grant the petitions or not, no private act of Parliament would be necessary or useful. Those decisions would, by virtue of the general act, be particular decisions rendered by the then full authority of the Senate alone.

The authorities, not only in my province but in other provinces, have considered for many years that the granting by the imperial Parliament to the Parliament of Canada of authority to deal with the subject-matter of divorce meant that this authority could be exercised by Parliament itself by passing general laws, and that there is no necessity of a private bill or law for each case.

Private bills from the provinces which object to establishment of divorce courts within their boundaries have been before this house and dealt with on their merits after a hearing of the evidence by a Senate committee in the first instance, and in most cases by that committee exclusively. In view of that fact it is felt that if divorce, to which some religious authorities object, remained in the hands of our branch of Parliament by virtue of a general act, the Constitution would not be violated. I feel that there would be a greater safeguard against a continuing increase in the number of divorces if these divorce petitions were decided by our Senate body, if and when vested with the full authority so to do under a general act of Parliament to that effect, than if they were considered by ordinary courts. I feel that as long as divorces are to be granted to persons domiciled in my province of Quebec many people there would be satisfied to have the authority to dissolve marriages remain in the federal Parliament, but vested in the Senate alone, by and under the terms of a general law to that effect. If at some future time this authority were limited to the Senate, which would grant petitions but not pass private divorce acts, I feel there is a good chance that such a solution would be accepted with peace and harmony throughout the country.

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, I want to say just a few words in connection with this matter. I feel that the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has made a good, practical suggestion which should be accepted. The Senate Standing Committee on Divorce discussed the proposed amendments and unanimously approved of them. Nevertheless, we have to work in harmony and co-operation with the House of Commons, and we should always keep this in mind no matter what legislation we are dealing with. I agree with the chairman of our committee, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). He is quite willing to go along with the suggestion that the two committees get together in an attempt to work out some agreement that will be satisfactory to all. I think that is a practical way to deal with our problem.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I am bound to say a few words about this subject. One thing that induces me to do so is my recollection of certain things that happened when the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) and I used to speak at joint meetings on the hustings.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Which turned out to be most favourable to my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: As if this were a joint meeting, I must contradict my honourable friend by saying that things turned out most favourably for him, for while I was spending my time here and neglecting my law practice he built up a reputation as one of the most eminent lawyers in Canada.

But let us come to the question at hand. My honourable friend feels that notices of applications for bills of divorce should be published in the Canada Gazette and local newspapers. He pointed out that an awkward situation might develop if a husband or wife discovered, after their marriage, that one of them, when single, had been involved in a divorce. In supporting this view may I relate an experience I had as counsel? A client of mine married an American woman who declared to the officiating clergyman, a priest, that she was a widow. When it turned out to be a bad union my client became suspicious that his wife was not a widow at all. We went to Vermont and other places where she had lived, and at Montpelier we discovered that she had been divorced twice. I then instituted an action for an annulment of my client's marriage, which I eventually obtained quite easily.

My honourable friend suggested that perhaps in the near future the Senate would be given exclusive authority to grant divorces. That would mean a considerable change from the present practice, and if I am not mistaken it would necessitate an amendment to our Constitution, for which we would have to go against the convictions of my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). We would have to apply to another Parliament to obtain such an amendment. May I suggest that if any change is to be made it should be one whereby divorces would be taken out of the hands of Parliament. Our Constitution gives the Parliament of Canada authority to delegate its powers concerning divorce to another body, which would represent Parliament. Some years ago I had the opportunity of studying this matter with a distinguished Montreal lawyer. Religious authorities were consulted about it and they were almost convinced that, although they did not agree with the principle of divorce, as long as it is provided for in the Constitution there would be no objection to having the power to grant divorces, which is now vested in the federal Parliament, delegated to another body. The body we had in mind was the Exchequer Court of Canada.

I suggested on the floor of this house once before, and I would like to repeat the suggestion now, that serious thought should be given to removing divorce from Parliament. I would suggest that at the next session of Parliament the Government consider setting up a committee to study the possibility of delegating the powers of this Parliament in divorce matters to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I rise to support all the points in the motion of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), particularly that part referring to advertising. I do not think we should require notices of applications for divorce to be advertised in the public press. There are cases where petitions for divorce are eventually not granted. In his final report the other day the chairman disclosed that there were seven such cases during this past session. This means that the charge against the respondents in those cases, as outlined in the advertisements, was not proven. According to British law those persons are not guilty. However, the reputation of any man or woman who is named in a newspaper advertisement as the respondent in a divorce case is smeared.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Would the honourable senator allow me to make a brief explanation? Perhaps I did not make my position quite clear. I am not in favour of publishing in the public press or the Canada Gazette the grounds for the divorce, but I am in favour of publishing simply a notice that a divorce is being sought, so that the public will know of that fact.

Hon. Mr. Horner: There is only one ground for divorce.

Hon. Mr. Monette: But I think the ground for the divorce should not be stated in the notice.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: I think the problem might be largely solved if the ground for the divorce was not mentioned in the advertisement. I still think, however, that an advertisement in the public press stating that someone is seeking a divorce from his or her spouse leaves in the mind of the public a smear against the person from whom the divorce is sought, even though the ground may not be mentioned. Subsequently, if the petition is rejected—and this session we have rejected seven—and there is no public notice that the case was not proven, a smear will cling to that person named in the advertisement all through life. The only way to remove that possibility is by not having such an advertisement published in a newspaper. Personally I have no objection to a notice appearing in the Canada Gazette if the ground for the petition is not stated. I can see the reasonableness of it.

I agree with the suggestion of the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) that a meeting between the Senate Divorce Committee and the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee of the other place might be a very good idea, and if the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) agrees, I will follow him in the matter. I do hope that if such a meeting of committees takes place they will decide that no such advertisement shall be permitted in the public press.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do honourable senators agree that this debate shall stand?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was going to make another suggestion, Your Honour. I think I shall withdraw the motion.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I was going to move adjournment of the debate, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The proposition has been put to me that I call a meeting of the two committees. How soon that can be arranged, I do not know. However, in view of the debate that has taken place, and the expression of opinion that I have heard from several honourable senators, whose opinion I highly respect, that we should continue to require notice in the Canada Gazette, I have no objection. I do object to mention of the ground in the Canada Gazette, and my friend says he is not insisting on that at all, but would be satisfied with a notice of application for a bill of divorce. That is all right, I will go along with that. In that case, an amendment will have to be made to my motion.

Then there is the question of how long a period there should be between the service of the petition and the actual trial of the case. I felt that one month was long enough, but if somebody thinks it is not—

The Hon. the Speaker: At this stage, I must warn the honourable senator that if he speaks a third time, he will certainly close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I will willingly drop that point. I think it would be better to introduce an amended motion. Therefore, with consent of the house, I withdraw the motion at the moment, but without prejudice to my right to bring it up again. Perhaps when I do so we shall all be agreed upon it.

Honourable senators, I ask for leave to withdraw the motion.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

THIRTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE APPROVED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the thirteenth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the committee, moved that the report be approved.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May we have an explanation?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes; I was just about to give one.

If honourable senators will refer to page 660 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Tuesday, July 19, I think it will be much easier to follow the explanation.

I think all of us are aware that the Civil Service Commission for many months has been making a close study of salaries and wages paid in commerce and industry and comparing them with wage scales in effect for employees in the public service. As a partial result of this survey the commission has submitted for consideration a report to the Treasury Board authorizing salary revisions for a number of general classes in the Civil Service. Some become effective on April 1 this year and others on May 1. Among them are the following grades in which the Senate has employees, but none of whom may benefit until, in compliance with section 62 of the Civil Service Act, the Senate has approved or ratified the action of the Treasury Board. The effected classes are as follows: Confidential messenger, Clerk 4, Principal Clerk, and Cleaning Service man. There is set out in detail the present scale of wages paid, and the proposed increases. In all, we have in the Senate two confidential messengers, two clerks of grade 4, one principal clerk, and one member of the cleaning staff, who will be affected by this increase. These six employees will, if this report is adopted, receive an increase amounting to $2,190 annually.

If further information is desired in connection with this report I shall be glad to try to answer any questions.

Report approved.

FOURTEENTH REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourteenth report of the Standing Committeee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the committee, moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, this report affects eleven different classes of employees of the Senate, and I intend to refer briefly to each class. I will give the number of employees and the amount of money involved; then if there are any questions I shall endeavour to answer them.

The first class benefited is that of Executive Assistant. This item, I think, is self-explanatory. It is provided that the salary for executive assistants in the Senate shall be increased from $7,000 per annum to $8,000. There are two executive assistants involved, so that the total increased annual cost to the Government will be $2,000.

In recommending these increases for our sessional services your committee went a bit further and took into consideration some additional classes which were not considered by the Commons.

The second class is Senate Secretaries. These particular secretaries are being granted an increase of $300 per year; in other words, $25 per month. The total number of employees involved is four, with the result that the additional annual cost to the Government will be $1,200.

The next class to be dealt with is No. 3, Senate Stenographers, continuing temporary. On page 662 of the Minutes of the Proceedings the present salary scale is shown, with the proposed scale. Each person in this class will receive an annual increase of $300, and as there are at present in this particular class a total of eight employees the annual increase in cost to the Government will amount to $2,400.

Class No. 4 refers to the Senate Stenographers, sessional. These employees have been granted a similar increase of $25 per month. There are 18 employees in this particular category but they are not full-time employees and, on the basis of six-months employment in each year, the annual increase in cost to the Government will be $2,700.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire if employees in the class which has just been referred to come under the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: But they do enjoy the benefit of unemployment insurance?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, they do, but they are not under the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: At the end of the session they start to draw unemployment insurance because they have been laid off, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: For how long?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: For as long as the Unemployment Insurance Act provides. I have not made a study of the act. There are certain rules and regulations laid down under the act which provide for the amount of the weekly payment of unemployment insurance, depending on the length of time the recipient has been employed. We have no control over that in any way.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: If they are good stenographers they won't remain unemployed for very long.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Good stenographers are very scarce.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Class No. 5, Debates Amanuenses, sessional, is described on page 662. There you will find the increases set out, and these are to be effective as of April 1 last. There are six employees in the group and for an average employment of six months the annual increased cost will be $900.

Class 6 is Parliamentary Confidential Messenger, Committees Branch, temporary. The purpose of this recommendation is to provide annual increases for the incumbent or holder of that office, a practice that is now followed in the other place. This employee has diversified duties, such as operating the Addressograph machine and the Verifax copying machine and acting as court crier for the Divorce Committee. He has had three years' service in the present position. The annual cost to the Government for this increase will be $150.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He is a very good employee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, a very good employee and a very faithful one.

Class No. 7 is Confidential Messenger, continuing temporary. The present rate of pay for this class is $260 a month, or $3,120 per annum. You will note in the Minutes that the graduated salary arranged for the classification "confidential messenger" is $2,850, $3,000, $3,150, $3,300 which, it is proposed, should be made available to these employees of the Senate. The total number of employees involved is nine, and the estimated annual increased cost is $1,620.

Class No. 8 deals with Confidential Messenger, sessional. Sessional messengers are now in receipt of pay in the amount of $250 a month, or $3,000 per annum. It is recommended that the same graduated range of salary be applied to this class as to the continuing temporary. There are at present 13 employees in this particular group, and on the basis of six months' employment each year the estimated additional cost to the Government is $975 per annum.

Class No. 9 relates to Cleaning Service Man, continuing temporary and sessional. This class of employee is now paid $247 per month, or $2,964 per annum. Effective May 1 the official rate of pay for this group is $2,850, $3,000, $3,150, $3,300. The recommendation is that the new rating should be applied to the Senate service. There are 11 continuously employed and 4 on a sessional basis. The estimated cost of this proposed increase is $2,646 per annum. I know I can say, honourable senators, that the cleaning staff which we have in the Senate is the best to be found anywhere. They do an excellent job in keeping our offices clean and tidy, for which we are all very thankful.

Class No. 10 is Constable, Senate Protective Service, continuing temporary. The proposal here is that the Senate temporary constables be put on the same basis as those of the other place; that is, they should be put on the basis of the graduated annual rates provided by the Civil Service Commission, which in this case are as follows: $3,390, $3,540, $3,690, $3,840. The number of temporary constables, exclusive of constables employed in the Senate, is five, and the annual increased cost to the Government is estimated to be $750. The object here is to have the application of the annual increment principle for meritorious service apply. I think our constables are second to none.

Class No. 11 deals with our page boys. The proposed change here is that the salary of the Chief Page shall be increased from $132 to $139.50 per month, and that the salary of the other page boys be increased from $117 to $124.50 per month. The estimated annual increase in the cost to the Government is very small, $90.

The foregoing proposed changes in remuneration relate to a partial list of Senate services, namely, six permanent or classified employees, 40 continuing temporary employees, and 47 sessional employees, a total of 93 employees. The annual cost of these increases is estimated at approximately $18,000.

The total strength of the Senate staff is at present 169, comprising 42 permanent or classified employees, 57 continuing temporary employees and 70 sessional employees. This leaves 76 positions still to be dealt with in respect to increases. Most of these are permanent, and will be dealt with by the Civil Service Commission and by the passage of the usual order in council by the Governor in Council. However, there are certain temporary employees still to be dealt with, and if these persons are not given their increases before Parliament prorogues it is the intention to have the intersessional authority of the Senate deal with the matter and not leave it until Parliament reassembles next year.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask the honourable senator what is the total cost of the recommended increases?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: $18,000 annually.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I have been doing a little arithmetic and I wonder how that amount is arrived at.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is supposed to have been calculated from the figures I have given, though it may vary $100 either way.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I make the total sum $20,741.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You gave larger increases.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does my honourable friend's total include the figure of $2,190, which was in the first report?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That amount should be deducted from your total. The $18,000 I mentioned applies only to the second report.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Would my honourable friend explain what steps are taken by the commission to relate these salaries and increases to similar positions in the business world? I understood him to say that the awards were the result of an equation of the positions in the public service with similar posts in the business world.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am sorry, I do not have that information available for the honourable senator. I took as a fact a statement that the Civil Service Commission had made a study and had compared salaries paid in industry and commerce with those paid by the Government, and that in the light of this comparison these recommendations were made. I have no idea of the facts on which the commission related the public service salary scale to the industrial and commercial scale.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: If I may suggest, I believe it would be of vital interest to the public to have such an explanation given at an opportune time. Whether it be done by way of an answer to a question on the Order Paper or by some other method, I am sure it would be enlightening to the public.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would it be satisfactory to my honourable friend if I inquired from the Civil Service Commission what was done and had its report, if not too lengthy, printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That would be quite satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Provided it is not too bulky a document, I shall have this done.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Thank you.

Report adopted.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Henri Courtemanche moved the third reading of Bill C-83, respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to add my congratulations to those already offered to the senators who have recently joined us in this chamber, and to extend to them a warm welcome and best wishes for a happy sojourn in the Senate.

Rising to speak on the inquiry introduced by the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) with regard to the desirability of reciprocal agreements with the Twenty-Nation group, I wish to say that it has been very interesting to listen to the excellent speeches which have been given by a number of honourable senators on this subject of Canadian foreign trade problems. They have been informative and also provocative. I feel that a special tribute should be paid to the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) for the excellent speech recently delivered by her in this chamber on the international trade situation. It was particularly comprehensive and showed a most intelligent understanding of the subject under debate.

Personally, I feel that on the question of foreign trade it does not necessarily follow that what is good for one part of Canada is good for all of Canada. So before any resolution is adopted which would benefit some areas of this country it should be determined that it does not adversely affect other areas. Inasmuch as the Senate was constituted as a body for wise and sober deliberation, to ensure that the rights of all Canadians were respected and guaranteed, it is the function of this house to consider all eventualities which might result from adoption and implementation of this proposal.

The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) responded admirably in this connection and gave honourable senators a clear and factual picture of the international trade situation as it affects the Pacific Coast of Canada.

In fact, I believe that in introducing this discussion the honourable senator from Shelburne had in mind the gleaning of expressions of opinion from as many parts of Canada as possible. It was his hope that honourable senators would each present the viewpoint of the area he or she represents, so that all members of this chamber would have before them a complete and detailed picture of the hopes and aspirations of all citizens of this country regarding foreign trade.

There seems to me to be a disposition to emphasize continued economic growth without any specific reference to the nature of growth or to the national purpose involved. We need to have a clearer understanding of values and a distinction between assets and liabilities, without the stigma of welfare tendency which is first in many people's thoughts today. In short, our main purpose, if we aspire to world leadership, must be the achievement of an economy that can stand on its own feet. Good Western trade relations and true co-operation are necessary for real and lasting prosperity. However, we must still face the fact that Western Europe's economy is progressing more rapidly than ours, and it is a mistake to wait too long to seize whatever opportunities are within our grasp.

If Canada cannot increase her exports to the United States she must seek markets elsewhere, either in Great Britain or other countries of the Outer Seven or Inner Six, or look to the countries farther south. To compete with nations across the Atlantic would, no doubt, mean lowering our tariffs, but perhaps that would not be such a bad thing, for history has shown that England's times of greatest prosperity were after she opened her ports to free trade with all countries. Even the Atlantic provinces, which were formerly colonies and which were recently described by Mr. Gordon in his report as depressed areas, thrived under free trade. The ships built by these provinces sailed the oceans of the world, and their products were known as well in New England, the West Indies and England as they were at home.

It has been said that the people of the Maritimes are by tradition free traders, and for obvious reasons. The natural pull of our commerce is north and south. It is made so by our geographical situation. There is a heavily populated area on the Atlantic seaboard of the United States, and there are low-cost water routes by which it can be reached. But, on account of Canada's tariff system and the tariff reprisals on the part of our trading partners, we have had to find our markets in central Canada. The high freight rates and long hauls add greatly to the cost to the consumers in those markets, and also to the cost of the manufactured goods brought back to the Atlantic provinces.

In the realization that the Atlantic provinces, while being four political units, formed one economic unit, the provincial premiers met from time to time to discuss their common problems. Out of these meetings grew the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, which was officially constituted in 1954 as a non-profit, non-political organization to study and assess the resources of the Atlantic provinces, and especially to co-ordinate the efforts of all organizations, agencies and individuals working for greater prosperity and sustained economic growth in every area of the four provinces. It is a voluntary organization and is the first Canadian experiment in extensive economic co-operation on a regional basis. It aims to assist the people of these provinces to develop their own resources and skills through co-operative effort, and it strives for the economic growth not only of the Atlantic provinces but of Canada as a whole.

It is said that the European Common Market is not commercially isolated from the rest of the world. As a trading unit it is the world's largest importer, and it is the most advanced on the way to economic integration. Let us not forget that with its low labour costs and high productivity it can procure markets all over the world, provided always, of course, that there is full co-operation among the member countries.

However, the United States is still Canada's best customer. Canada sells 60 per cent of its exports in that country. It is true that a great portion is in raw materials, but then that is what we have most of to sell. This has created a common interest in world trade organization, and has placed Canada with the United States in promoting the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—commonly known as GATT—and the International Monetary Fund. Canada's trade position with the United States is a natural one on account of geography and economics, and not because of any prejudice against other countries.

We have beyond the United States, in the Latin American countries, a great and important potential for a new era of co-operation in international trade. Canada has been sending trade missions to these countries, and very favourable reports of the purchasing potential of the Latin Americans have been presented to Parliament.

Certain questions, however, arise in my mind in connection with any new trade agreements into which Canada might enter and the effect of such agreements on the trading situation of the Atlantic provinces. What would be the situation with respect to our fish going to the Inner Six and Outer Seven countries? Norway and Iceland are the big competitors with regard to processed fish. Why can we not compete favourably with these countries? What is our potato situation in relation to that of the United States? I understand that there is a good market, if developed, for potatoes in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, Prince Edward Island has already successfully experimented with the sale of potatoes in that country.

Our export of lumber has decreased greatly in the past few years. Why have we lost a large percentage of the markets for raw and finished lumber? Would new agreements restore this industry to its former prosperity? One wonders also what happened to the apple trade of the Annapolis Valley which, in the past, was a flourishing trade with England. Are we failing to develop and maintain our trade with countries which we have aided and helped to develop, such as India?

In the speeches on this topic of international trade interesting statistics have been quoted regarding the balance of payments in foreign exchange. It was generally shown that Canada had a trade deficit with the United States which was only recently liquidated by a surplus achieved in trade with other countries. Essentially, in speaking of exports of various products we now include payment for the services of Canadians who worked on these products. That is to say, the wages of Canadians are being paid in foreign currencies.

I submit that the same end is obtained in the tourist industry, and I must speak about it. For example, receipts from the tourist industry in 1959, converted into Canadian currency, amounted to $393 million, but Canadians spent in other countries $593 million —a difference of $200 million. In fact, one can readily name a number of countries which amass no small portion of their foreign exchange from tourists. This is also true of many parts of Canada and I therefore express the hope that any future trade agreements will also provide free convertibility of currency so that travel will entail no stringent financial regulations to prevent tourists from coming to Canada.

Are we making sure that we are doing our best to provide attractive facilities and real value in accommodation for our visitors? Canada is now behind some countries in this respect. I would mention Mexico as a top contender for the United States tourist trade. We had a revenue of only $341 million from United States tourists last year, in comparison with Mexico's $345 million. In fact, United States tourist-spending in Canada is down 26 per cent from what it was in the immediate post-war period. I would, therefore, most strongly advocate Government support for a flourishing tourist industry in Canada. This would keep many Canadians employed in areas which may not be sharing in the prosperity of the manufacturing areas.

We should not waste time trying to see what lies dimly in the distance but do what lies clearly at hand now.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, on behalf of the Whip on this side of the house, the honourable senator from Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Taylor), I move adjournment of the debate. I believe it is his understanding that other honourable senators wish to speak on this subject.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Golding, for Hon. Mr. Taylor (Norfolk), debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

BILL—SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of Bill SD-492, for the relief of Norman Edward Fulford.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time, and passed, on division.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 26, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 26, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Copy of Order in Council P.C. 1960-975 of July 15, 1960, approving the revised capital budget of the National Harbours Board for the calendar year 1960, copy of said budget appended thereto, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952.

First annual report, 1959-60, of the Board of Trustees of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Fund to aid in research on the diseases of children. (English and French texts).

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved the third reading of Bill C-80, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FREIGHT RATES REDUCTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Fred. M. Blois moved the third reading of Bill C-81, to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA'S CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTIONS FOR CELEBRATION—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, May 25, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Cameron, who called attention to Canada's Centennial Year 1967 and suggested "that appropriate steps be taken to mobilize the resources of governmental and non-governmental agencies in making this celebration an occasion to mark the achievements of the past and to plot a course for the future".

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it was unfortunate that before leaving for Winnipeg the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) did not have an opportunity to speak on this subject which was placed on the Order Paper by the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron), in which he called the attention of the Senate to the necessity of preparing now for the appropriate recognition of the celebration of Canada's centennial year, 1967. I am sure that the contribution of the honourable senator from Churchill to this debate would have added much to the very worthwhile speeches which have already been made. When he learned that his speech would interfere with the business of the Senate which was planned for the day on which he had intended to speak, he graciously gave way, in order that business which seemed more pressing at the moment could be completed. However, it is unfortunate that we did not have the benefit of his remarks at that time. It was then that I adjourned the debate, not for myself, but rather for the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron), who had introduced the subject. I felt that honourable senators would have been only too pleased to accord him the privilege of making a few remarks to close the discussion. Unfortunately, the honourable senator has been suffering from a severe ailment, caused no doubt by overwork, which has prevented him from being present at our sittings during the past month or so. I have been in touch with him throughout this period, and am pleased to state that although he is far from well he is making excellent progress, and his doctors assure him that he will be with us next session, when he will once again take an active interest in the work of this house, to which he has already made an outstanding contribution. I am sure we shall all welcome him back.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators will recall that the honourable senator from Banff made certain suggestions with respect to the need for greater support of education by the federal Government. He has asked me to state that he had no intention of raising any constitutional issue, as he realizes fully that the responsibility for education at the elementary and secondary level is, and must remain, that of the provinces. In his opinion, however, this does not preclude the imperative necessity of the federal Government's supporting universities and technical education and a scholarship program to a much greater extent than has ever been done before. Indeed, he contends that if Canada is to maintain her position in the present-day world the federal Government will have no option but to do this. In fact it is doing so at the present time by grants to aid technical education and for scholarships. It is true that in most instances this is done indirectly, but in doing so the federal Government is not going beyond its powers.

The honourable senator from Banff also asked me to refer to the matter of costs. It was obvious, honourable senators, while he was speaking, that a number of senators felt that if his suggestions were put into effect the cost to the treasury would be fantastic. I have reread the honourable senator's speech and I find that he makes it clear that the success of the Centennial will be in exact proportion to the extent to which we are able to mobilize the resources of non-governmental and voluntary agencies. I would emphasize the words non-governmental and voluntary. In other words, he suggests that we should mobilize the enthusiasm and resources of private individuals, of business firms and of community organizations of all kinds. If we are successful in doing so they will do a large part of the necessary work to ensure the success of local projects.

He then went on to the second aspect of that program, which has to do with the planning now for federal, provincial and municipal buildings. This money will be spent between now and 1967. The object, of course, will be to have a very substantial program of buildings started as soon as possible and brought to completion for the Centennial year. By giving a little more careful attention to the planning and to the nature of these buildings the work can be carried out without in any way increasing the normal annual expenditure for capital works.

Another suggestion made by the honourable senator from Banff to mark the National Centennial was to the effect that a national centre be built in Ottawa for the performing arts. He feels very keenly that if Ottawa is to fulfil its function and its destiny as a national capital worthy of its name, it is high time that funds should be provided from the federal treasury to provide one of the essential of any national capital. But it is not only at our capital that centres for the performing arts should be erected. Similar facilities could be provided in our national parks, especially at Banff, where there is a great need for a theatre and a convention hall. Centres of this type could be provided, not entirely at the expense of the federal Government, but as a joint effort between the provinces and the federal Government.

Honourable senators, I have brought to your attention a few of the suggestions made by the honourable senator from Banff. I am sure that you will all agree that they are worthy of the careful consideration of the committee which is being set up to direct the manner in which we shall recognize the one hundredth anniversary of Confederation. Other worth-while suggestions have been advanced by honourable senators who have spoken in this debate. I have reffered only to the proposals made by the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron), because unfortunately he is unable at this time to do so himself.

Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity to commend all those who have taken part in this debate. I am sure that many of the proposals advanced here will find favour with the national, provincial and local committees which will make the final arrangements for the Centennial year and for the great celebration which will take place on July 1, 1967.

Debate concluded.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

PREMIER OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND COLLEAGUES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I know it is not customary to refer to the galleries, but I trust honourable senators will agree with me that I should not allow this occasion to pass without bringing to the attention of the Senate the fact that we have some distinguished visitors present this evening. I refer to the Honourable the Premier of Newfoundland and two of his colleagues. I am sure that we deem it an honour to have them with us, and we extend our very best wishes both to them and to the people of their wonderful province.

LAND USE

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, July 20, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson for adoption of the second report of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada.

(Translation):

Hon. Henri C. Bois: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to review the report and recommendation of the Special Committee on Land Use tabled recently in this house by the senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson). The report is indeed a comprehensive one, and I wish to congratulate its author.

I feel that it would be more useful to limit myself to one part of the report only and to discuss it with you.

On page 243 of report No. 8, we find the following remarks:

(Text):

Two fundamental facts are basic to the concept of rural development in the United States. While it is possible to expect some increase in farm income and to improve living conditions through developments with agriculture, it is pretty well accepted that the best opportunities for area economic development are found in fields outside the agricultural economy. This follows partly from the limitation of agricultural resources in the counties chosen for rural development but mainly from the higher economic activity and employment possibilities, and income generating effect of other resource development. Secondly, due to increased output of agricultural products per worker resulting from technological and scientific advances less people are needed on farms. This makes the need for development of gainful employment opportunities in other fields imperative if serious under-employment conditions are to be avoided. These two conditions are also applicable to the situation which prevails in Canada and the extent to which farm families are able to supplement their incomes from non-farm sources depend largely upon the availability of job opportunities.

(Translation):

I think it might help the ordinary reader of the report if I were to give some explanation at this point. It does happen quite often that the lack of agricultural resources is such that all hope of making a living on the farm must be abandoned, but does that necessarily mean that conditions will never change? It is hard to say. Remember the sandy stretches in some parts of Ontario and Quebec which, when cigarette tobacco farming was introduced, lifted their owners from near poverty to easy circumstances.

No one can foresee the practical results of intelligent and continuing research. For instance, the introduction of the soybean has meant and still means hundreds of millions of dollars not only to the farmers of the United States but to several classes of industrial workers and to American trade.

We should take into account, firstly, the possibility of improving farm revenue through the introduction and generalization of better techniques, which can often remedy certain problems to the point of changing a miserable concern into a paying proposition, and secondly, foresee and fully appreciate the advantages to be obtained from certain community works.

As an example of what can be done, I would like to quote from the testimony of Dr. J. E. Pelletier, former superintendent of the Ste. Anne de la Pocatière Experimental Farm, as it appears on page 10 of report 7 of the committee's proceedings.

This is what Dr. Pelletier has to say concerning grass farming.

Grassland is nothing more than a larger part of the farm acreage being kept in green crops, and it necessitates less plowing. Not only is grassland good for the soil and animals, but it is also good for the farmer. I could quote you here lots of figures which indicate that we could produce feeds as needed is our dairy farming at much lower cost with grassland crops than with grain crops for instance. Thus, from a good pasture we obtained one ton of feed at a price of $6 to $7; hay cost $10 to $12 per ton and grain $16 to $18 per ton.

It is surprising how good farm crops improve soils, even those of the forest category. With respect to crops we generally consider what is above the ground because it can be seen, but how little we think of what is below ground level. The organic matter, for instance, which is the blood of the soil, can be increased or reconstituted by some of the green crops, and well-managed meadows and pastures.

In 1937, when I was a student in Wales, at the University of Aberystwyth, I saw some of the work going on there that induced me to think in terms of grassland. There, also, I met the Director of Grassland Research for New Zealand, which is the grassland country par excellence. All this knowledge has been used in planning the research program of our Experimental Farm, and that has since brought great dividends.

Besides grassland reforms we must also promote progressive reforestation schemes, and in that foresters have a great many good "recipes".

On this grassland concept of farming, I could give you a lot of statistics to illustrate how it raises the fertility of our soil and improves its physical condition.

I glanced the other day at some reports with respect to work done at West Virginia University with respect to underground organic residues left after the crop removal. For instance, we think of timothy as being almost the only grass we have for hay and pasture, but there are many others. There is brome grass, for instance, which when compared to timothy would leave in the ground seven times more organic debris. This, in decaying, will aerate the soil, will favour greater bacterial activity, and permit greater water retention. These are some of the advantages of grassland farming that we cannot ignore when dealing with podsolic or forest soils which are generally open, coarse and fragile.

My third suggestion would be to raise the level of fertility of our soils. As mentioned before, our soils have been cultivated for three centuries. We have a maritime climate with high total and high intensity rainfall which at times washes out the richest parts of the soil, including mineral food, which goes down the rivers. That should be prevented. Comparing Quebec with Ontario, for instance, we in Quebec apply 31 pounds of fertilizers per acre of improved land, as against Ontario's 68 pounds. Of the total Canadian consumption of fertilizers Quebec uses one-fifth, whereas Ontario uses three-fifths.

Associated with these three major farming reforms would be the need of pilot demonstration farms to prove our recommendations before generalizing them, because there is such a diversity of farms and soils. On that I refer particularly to grassland, or long lays, and fodder rotations which are the same thing. We should also introduce small farm machinery, if that is possible. After all we have had small automobiles and they are not so inefficient. The question is: Can we have smaller machinery for smaller farms? This has bothered me for nearly a score of years, and when living in the Near East I saw implements that encouraged me to continue thinking that way. Evidently, in that domain the first thing to do is to embark on some research related to the problem. Perhaps our engineers do not see it this way, but it seems to be a field where at least some exploration can be made.

Again, I repeat that agriculture and forestry have to coexist because we have nothing else to draw our subsistence from, and either one alone will be insufficient. With respect to these two leading rural pursuits we must think in terms of coexistence just like they do in Sweden, which is the home of such an economic concept of rural economy. In fact, it was my privilege to see it in action when visiting that country in 1953. That visit made me realize fully that the eastern Quebec district was almost the Sweden of Canada.

I apologize to the house because the quotation is somewhat lengthy, but if Dr. Pelletier had wanted to go into some detail and give a complete picture of all that could be done, his testimony would have lasted much longer than the half hour allotted to him.

At any rate, I might add that reasonable re-arrangement and judicious extension of the farms in some areas would often suffice to increase their chances of success.

As an example of what I call community works, I would mention drainage. On thousands of farms production is reduced simply because surplus water, lying on an impervious subsoil, keeps the topsoil too wet.

Before the committee, one of the witnesses, using maps to illustrate, as cases of poorly drained lands, the counties of Soulanges and Vaudreuil in Quebec, pointed out the tremendous progress which might be made simply by building drainage ditches.

From the Ontario-Quebec boundary to Vaudreuil, there is a large plain of poorly drained but fertile farm land. Good drainage would at least double agricultural production in that area.

And what about the removal of stones and pebbles which in large districts where the soil is fertile render farming economically impossible. There are, however, efficient machines to remove stones and pebbles and which are not too costly for farming or municipal groups.

It must be recognized, however, that such works, to be carried out rapidly and profitably, require provincial or federal help. But they are not impossible and would contribute enormously to the economic rehabilitation of large farming areas. That is why I find the following remark somewhat pessimistic:

(Text):

While it is possible to expect some increase in farm income and to improve living conditions through developments with agriculture, it is pretty well accepted that the best opportunities for area economic development are found in fields outside the agricultural economy.

(Translation):

It is no doubt true under certain conditions, but I do not think it applies generally to the conditions prevailing in the underdeveloped areas of eastern Canada.

There still remain some possibilities of successful farming, even in the areas which, at first sight, would seem less favoured. The problem is to find a way of re-establishing them.

I have here the case of a typical corner of eastern Quebec, a district which is not particularly favoured.

I got my information from the first issue, vol. 17, of the magazine Agriculture, published by the Quebec agriculturists guild. This study was made in 1958, in accordance with the generally accepted rules in connection with such types of works.

It was found that the first and second parishes were far ahead of the third, fourth, fifth and sixth parish. I am inclined to attribute their advance to their seniority; in other words, the present farmers are taking advantage of a number of improvements brought about by their fathers and forefathers.

There is no great difference in the soil, its composition and topography, between the two groups of parishes; in the latter group there still remains a possibility of expanding the acreage of crops.

Here are the facts:

TABLE 1

DISTRIBUTION OF GROSS PRODUCT BY PARISH
(per 100 farms) (1)

Parishes	Class of gross product								Average per parish
	$1,200 and under	1,201 to $2,000	2,001 to $3,000	3,001 to $4,000	4,001 to $5,000	5,001 to $6,000	6,001 to $7,000	Over $7,000
No. 1	5	—	20	10	30	5	10	20	$5,100
2	13	—	20	20	—	7	20	20	5,500
"north" %	9	—	20	14	17	6	14	20	$5,280
No. 3	28	33	11	6	—	17	5	—	$2,450
4	9	46	18	9	18	—	—	—	2,600
5	60	30	—	10	—	—	—	—	1,200
6	37	9	18	18	9	—	—	9	2,900
"south" %	33	30	12	10	6	6	2	2	$2,320

(1) The gross product is the total amount in dollars of all the animal and vegetable agricultural products sold or consumed by people on the farm, of the variations in livestock inventories and in inventories of farm products.

TABLE 2

DISTRIBUTION OF FARM INCOME BY WORKER
(per 100 farms) (2)

Parishes	Number of workers per class of net income						Average per worker	Average per farm
	$500 and under	501 to $1,000	1,001 to $1,500	1,501 to $2,000	2,001 to $2,500	Over $2,500
No. 1	5	5	25	35	10	20	$2,150	$2,470
2	13	7	27	20	13	20	2,572	2,575
"north" %	9	6	25	28	12	20	$2,285	$2,515
No. 3	22	45	11	22	—	—	$1,000	$1,235
4	9	55	27	—	9	—	1,040	1,210
5	30	20	30	20	—	—	880	615
6	18	27	37	—	—	18	1,420	1,280
"south" %	20	38	24	12	2	4	$1,115	$1,115

(2) The net farm income is the difference between the gross product and the expenses actually paid during the 300 year and which include equipment and building depreciation. The income per worker is the remuneration of days work by the operator and his family.

I will let you draw your own conclusions.

Under such conditions, it is inevitable that the young people should leave the farm. A strong percentage of the population of that district which extends mostly to the south, from Montmagny to Gaspé inclusive, are emigrating.

The importance of this population movement is considerable. In its fourth issue for 1960, L'Actualité économique gives certain figures.

In 1959, there were about 400,000 people in this district, 52.3 per cent of whom were not yet 20 years old in 1956.

The sad part of it is that these people can no longer find employment in their own district, although mining developments on the North Shore seem to absorb quite a number of them. Farming has always produced good and, I might say, intelligent men.

Quite naturally, these young people choose the most profitable occupations and stay with them as long as they remain so. The worst of it is that these departures are neither prepared for nor carried out methodically. To correct such a situation would require longer attendance at school and professional guidance to discuss the talents or skills of the young boys and girls whose departure is foreseen. Otherwise, our youngsters from rural districts are relegated to inferior jobs when they come to town, while strangers—whom we are pleased to welcome—take over the more profitable occupations.

That is why I am so pleased with the suggestion contained in the report in this respect.

One aspect of the greater problem of improving the farmer's living conditions lies in the processing and sale of farm products.

Production is not an end in itself, because there are few farm products that can be marketed as such. Most of them have to be harvested, classified, packaged, often processed, and finally marketed at the proper time and place.

In the past, all those activities were carried out by experts or so-called experts, until one day, the farmer, spurred by need, started wondering if he could not do away with those too numerous and too exacting middlemen and thus keep for himself the profit that the latter would have pocketed. That is what agricultural producers have done by forming co-operatives and that is probably what they will keep on doing.

I would add that the scope of those associations is not limited only to the sale of the products, but covers the purchase of products needed by the farmers in their work.

Another aspect of the report is that it suggests a method of work which goes from bottom to top, if I may express myself that way, and which requires the co-operation not only of those who are primarily concerned, the farmers, but of all the members of the rural community.

Undoubtedly, that is a promise of success. Obviously, initiatives will have to be inspired, directed and supported, but their implementation will have to be mainly, if not wholly, the responsibility of local groups. By appealing to all people of good will and to all kinds of skills, success will be easier to achieve.

Let us not make the mistake, however, of thinking that one single solution can be found to remedy all the problems facing agriculture. Ways of improving farming are as varied as they are numerous.

In order to succeed, it will be necessary to resort to experts in fields which are at first sight, unrelated, for instance, to engineers, sociologists, forestry engineers, agronomists, businessmen, members of the legal profession and politicians. That is the only way that we can hope to do something useful.

(Text):

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words before the report of the Land Use Committee is adopted. I have lately travelled through some very fine land. As honourable senators know, I am particluarly interested in the land. I might say that I am very proud of the job that I could do with a walking plow nearly 70 years ago.

A great deal has been said in this chamber about scholarships, and they are necessary. I should like to point out that in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta—I am not sure if there is a similar practice in Quebec and Ontario—a prize of $1,000 is donated to what they call the master farmer. The degree of efficiency of operation of the farm, the layout of buildings and the farmer's home are all taken into consideration by the judges. In driving through beautiful country I have often noted that, to my way of thinking, the land was not being utilized to the extent of one quarter of its maximum possibilities.

The honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson), Chairman of the Land Use Committee, told me the other day that his father had been associated with the settling of people coming from south of the border to the Canadian Prairies. I suggested to the honourable senator that there was a good opportunity for anyone who could get an option on some land not too far from the city, land of the kind that south of the border is being valued at nearly $300 an acre and that can be bought here for $100 an acre. However, I think that perhaps a little greater glory should go to the man who can make two blades of grass grow where one grew before. In the past we have had eminent men —Sir Charles Saunders was one—to whom the world owes a tremendous debt for what they accomplished in producing various types of grains and grasses. In that connection, I would suggest that the Government of this country do all it can to instil into the minds of the youth of this country a deep pride in agriculture, and to impart the idea that it is a constructive occupation and that the farm is a delightful place on which to live and raise a family. It would be a good idea if the federal Government, or the provincial Governments, if you wish, gave a prize, or perhaps several prizes, to master farmers, or perhaps granted an award to a chief farmer or a man who makes the best use of his land. I think that eventually the most difficult problem facing the world will be the production of adequate food, and I am convinced that in Canada, both in the east and the west, we are not making all the use that could be made of our land resources. I am thinking of a European who worked for me a great number of years ago. He and I were once passing a place where a bachelor farmed 500 acres. He said to me, "Why don't you buy that place?" I told him that the land lacked moisture, to which he replied, "You could dig a well anywhere here and get water, and in my country this farm would support 500 people."

Honourable senators, how long are we going to be able to hold on to this great heritage of land and wide spaces, while people in other countries are carrying earth in baskets up on to ledges and making paths around the mountains in order to grow some food to eat? If we do not use our land to better advantage, how long do you suppose we are going to be allowed to waste it in these modern days?

Honourable senators, those are just a few thoughts that I wanted to express before this report was adopted.

(Translation):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I do not want to let the discussion come to an end without saying a few words about the excellent speech made by the senator of Montarville (Hon. Mr. Bois).

I have known the senator for some time, ever since he became an agriculturist in the province of Quebec, and in the eastern townships in particular, when the late Senator Adélard Godbout operated a large farm there. I know that the senator from Montarville not only studied agriculture as a career, but that he has a natural taste for farming and a real desire to serve the community by addressing the farmers and endeavouring to make them understand his ideas and change their production methods. I have seen him at work and am not a bit surprised by the speech he has made tonight and which I know will be very useful to the province of Quebec.

The speech he made, the thoughts he expressed and the suggestions he advanced in order to enlist the honourable senators' support of his publicity campaign, all that will be to his glory and will bear witness to his patriotic mind. His remarks will, I am sure, meet with the approval of his numerous friends who sit on the left of our Speaker as well as those who sit on his right. All these suggestions will be useful to the province because they will show that there are various ways of escaping routine.

I do not wish to labour the point, but I would feel remiss if I did not mention the speech of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). However, I feel that I am less qualified to comment on his remarks and I will just point out that on certain occasions we meet western farmers who can express their convictions with a tremendous amount of vigour and success.

Coming back to the honourable senator from Montarville, I wish to congratulate him on his fine speech. He deserves our recognition even more so, in view of the turmoil that we are going through in the post-war period, when a great number of farmers cannot resist the temptation of changing their occupation. I hope his speech will be widely publicized throughout all parts of the province.

(Text):

Report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the house adjourns may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) what legislation he expects to have for the Senate tomorrow? There does not appear to be much on the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have been following the proceedings in the other place from 9 o'clock this morning trying to ascertain what legislation we are likely to receive. I was hoping that by 6 o'clock we would have the Combines Investigation Bill here and give it first reading late this evening, but it will not come over before tomorrow.

I should like to mention the fact that the Senate has gone ahead with its work and completed consideration of practically everything that has come before us, including not only legislation initiated in this house but legislation received from the other place. It will not be our fault if we have not a great deal of work to do tomorrow. It is possible that later this week there will be an interim supply bill, and we also expect in the near future the Bill of Rights.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How near?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is all the information I can give the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 27, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

MANPOWER AND EMPLOYMENT

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Léon Méthot, Chairman of the Special Committee on Manpower and Employment, presented the second report of the committee:

The Special Committee of the Senate appointed to study and report upon the trends in manpower requirements and utilization in Canada, make their second report, as follows:

1. Your committee feel that as a prerequisite to the inquiry considerable statistical information must be gathered, and have formed a small research team of persons qualified in labour economics to carry out the necessary studies under the direction of Professor John J. Deutsch.

2. To reduce the cost of the inquiry and expedite the work of the committee, the co-operation of various government departments has been sought and obtained.

3. National organizations representing the major components of the Canadian economy have been requested to make separate studies of their particular problems in order to present well prepared information and advice to the committee.

4. In view of the time required for the preparation of the studies referred to, it is not considered possible to hear witnesses in the time available prior to prorogation. Your committee therefore recommend that they be reconstituted at the earliest possible date following the opening of the next session of Parliament.

All which is respectfully submitted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this report be taken into consideration now and adopted.

In moving adoption of this report, I would like to make a few remarks with respect to it. The report itself is, of course, self-explanatory, but some details of the work we have been doing might be of interest to the Senate.

Early in our proceedings it became apparent that we must be armed with considerable statistical information in order to appreciate and properly question the many witnesses who would eventually appear before the committee.

To obtain this information, to conduct the necessary studies in depth, and to translate the material into a form we could visualize and make use of would, we found, require a research team to work under the direction of our consultant, Professor Deutsch.

Perhaps the most pressing problem with which we have had to deal has been the obtaining of the services of people with the highly specialized skills required to form the team. Such people, we have found, are busy, expensive and scarce. However, I am now able to report that the nucleus of the team has been formed, three members having started work the week before last. These members are at work here right now.

The first function of these men will be the designing of questionnaires which will be used with a view to obtaining information of a type not now available concerning unemployment. The questionnaires will then be taken by members of our staff to centres to be selected in various parts of the country where, through the co-operation of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, interviews will be held with people seeking assistance. As a matter of fact, I understand these questionnaires will be printed in many languages and sent to every Unemployment Insurance Commission office in Canada, and afterwards those centres selected by the active personnel will be especially visited and persons in that area who are seeking unemployment insurance will be questioned. The questionnaires will be drawn in such a way as to preserve the anonymity of the individuals, and it is expected that information will be more freely given than would otherwise be the case.

I do not wish to burden the Senate with the many ramifications of our problem, so I will conclude by saying that selected personnel from Government departments will be available to us on loan as the need arises. Those who are at present working in Ottawa with us are communicating with the different departments to obtain the necessary information that they need. We propose to study American and United Kingdom methods of dealing with chronic unemployment areas, and special attention will be given to the question of seasonal unemployment.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, we are all very pleased to hear the report of the Chairman of the Special Committee on Manpower and Employment (Hon. Mr. Méthot). We have had a very harmonious steering committee. We have been fortunate up to this time, and I hope we shall so continue, in having unanimous decisions. After discussion we have agreed that certain things should be done and now we ask for your endorsement.

One thing we found out, even in the steering committee, was that there is no unemployment among qualified people. We have been doing our very best to try to find qualified people to do the kind of a job that we want done, but mostly they have already been spoken for. We have had to fall back on the government staff. They in turn have been very helpful. We have even suggested that we require certain named people who are key people in the department, and after a little prodding they have come across. They say, "All right, your need this time is greater than ours."

As we got into it we realized the immensity of the task we had undertaken. It is a problem that seems to be growing in importance, and we were impressed with the fact that we must not fail this chamber and the country by omitting to come up with some sensible solution to it.

We were very much struck by the cost of unemployment. Whether it be measured by material losses, by human suffering, or by wasted skills, it is too high for this country to pay. We can leave the development of our natural resources for future use, but the creative activity of our people, once wasted, cannot be recovered. It is lost for all time.

Those of us who lived through the thirties, and that includes all of us here—perhaps I should not include the honourable lady members—did not completely understand the unemployment enigma of those days. That was a problem of mass unemployment. Today, unemployment is something different. Instead of mass unemployment, we have what we call class unemployment and spot unemployment. Severe though they are, they do not attract attention, because they hit some areas harder than others and the effect is not the same across the country. It is difficult to attract attention for those areas that are adversely affected.

Honourable senators, let me take a minute or two to indicate the kind of problem this committee, and later this house, will have to deal with. Persons who are familiar with unemployment break it down into certain categories. What is called cyclical unemployment comes as a result of cycles in business activity, resulting in disruption of employment. The workers may return to their jobs later, but there has nevertheless been a loss caused by layoffs.

The next category is known as structural unemployment, which is caused by a decline in local industries and a change in productions methods. Perhaps the best illustration of changes in methods would be the automation that developed in the automobile industry and in the changeover from steam locomotives to diesel engines.

The category called frictional unemployment is that in which you have a job vacant in a certain area and a qualified man to fill it in another area, and the two have to be matched. That matching process may take some time, but usually it is accomplished. Perhaps the National Employment Service would be the best organization to deal with such a matter.

Further, we in this country are plagued with seasonal unemployment, particularly in the construction industry. An additional difficulty comes about as a result of changes in style and design in the automobile industry, though that is a bit less troublesome than it was in a day that I can remember well.

Honourable senators, in addition to all of these categories we have still another, and it is a special one, that of the older worker. Of course, we have the young men who are coming up and looking for jobs. Also women are working in industry in large numbers, and they are essential. Then, we have the special problem of the unskilled workers, and of the men with special skills which have become obsolete.

I can tell you, honourable senators, that the more we considered this unemployment problem in committee, the more frightened I became, and the less hopeful I was of our being able to reach a quick solution. Whether this committee, after its study, will be able to suggest a solution, I do not know, but I do know that the method of going about it is the right one. We are getting good leadership from the chairman, and on this very active subcommittee we have good men working. If we cannot suggest a solution, at least we shall be able to make known the problem which will have to be faced by the country.

I speak from what little knowledge I have. Without knowing the details, as I see it this problem is bound to involve public action, and by that I mean Government action, on a very large scale. Even a stopgap solution in the early days will, I think, involve the spending of very large sums of money. But, in my view, in the end this will be much cheaper than allowing unemployment to continue.

Honourable senators, I just wanted to let this house know the problem which will face it when we come back here next session, and also some of the steps that are being taken by the committee, with the consent of the Senate, in order to enable it to give this problem the very best study possible.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am pleased that the Chairman of the Special Committee on Manpower and Employment (Hon. Mr. Méthot) has made a report on the work that has been done by the committee so far. I had hoped that there might have been some constructive suggestions for relieving the present situation. We are now in the month of July and there is still considerable unemployment in Canada. It is true that, according to the latest figures, the number of unemployed is down from the total for the previous month, but at the same time it is considerably higher than the total for the same month last year. Unemployment is not becoming less as time goes along but, on the contrary, it is increasing. The problem which was with us in January last is with us to an even greater extent in July.

As honourable senators know, the months of July and August are the period of highest employment in this country. If there are more unemployed now than there were at the same time last year, the prospects for the future are not too bright.

Unemployment is a very grave problem, and one which I have no doubt is causing the Government great concern. This committee has been set up with one aim in view, as was suggested by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and that is to assemble all available information to enable the Government to bring forward solutions for relieving the present situation. The aim is not to create problems for the Government, but rather to ease existing problems and thereby give more employment. It is a very worthy aim and we shall all be anxious to carry it out.

I listened with interest to the report of the chairman. No doubt the committee is going about its work in the right way and a mass of material should be available when we reassemble next session. It is unfortunate that this material could not be available in, say, October so that the problem could be tackled then. However, I do not suppose the committee would hold back any information it may have obtained at that time if it could be of assistance to the Government. It will not be bound to hold back all the information until Parliament reassembles. It is true there could be no report to Parliament, but if this group of three or four specialists procures any information which would assist in solving the unemployment situation in the fall I hope it will not hesitate to hand that information over to the Government. I wish to make it abundantly clear that so far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for all honourable senators—our one aim is to relieve the distress which results to everyone in our country when there is great unemployment.

I have noted with interest that it is the intention of the Government to propose that this committee be set up again next session. But even if the Government did not do this I think the Senate would take it into its own hands to reconstitute the committee. However, there will not be any problem in this regard, because the Government is going to go along with the suggestion.

Honourable senators will recall that the establishment of a committee such as this was suggested in the Senate on January 27 last. If the committee had been set up at that time we would have had a different report today, but it was not set up until some time in May, four months later.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Easter recess intervened.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, but this group of three or four could have done some work during the Easter recess. I do not think there was any excuse whatsoever for the delay in setting up the committee. If it was a good idea on May 10, it was an even better idea on January 27. Had the committee been appointed then we could have had by now a report containing helpful suggestions to the Government.

I trust that the committee will be reconstituted shortly after Parliament convenes next January. One of the first things this house should do at that time is to get the committee working. In that way we can be of service to the country and to the Government.

Report adopted.

EXCHANGE STABILIZATION FUND

SALE OF AMERICAN FUNDS DURING MAY

Hon. A. Neil McLean inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

In view of press reports that, during the month of May 1960, the Bank of Canada, through the Exchange Stabilization Fund, sold $101 million of American funds for Canadian exchange, thus supporting the Canadian dollar:

1. What was the net amount of American funds sold by the Exchange Stabilization Fund during the month of May 1960?

2. What were the reasons for the sale?

3. What were the effects of this sale on the premium of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I have the following answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry:

1. $101,500,000.

2 and 3. The operations with respect to the Foreign Exchange Control Fund which have been carried on recently were completely in accord with the method of operation carried on by the Bank of Canada on behalf of the Minister of Finance ever since this Government came into office, and prior to that time by the former Government. There was no change in policy nor in the basis of operation. These were simply normal operations carried out with a view to reducing the fluctation in the exchange rate from day to day.

PARLIAMENTARY BUSINESS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with may I be permitted to put on record some figures indicating the number of printed pages that every member of Parliament, both in the Senate and in the House of Commons, has to read during a session? The Canadian people are not familiar at all with the work of Parliament and they do not imagine how exacting it is. In the first place there are the bills, which are the purpose or raison d'être of the sittings of Parliament. Leaving aside the bills that have not passed the House of Commons we have, not counting approximately 600 divorce bills—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You do not read them, do you?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: —we have had so far this session 36 Senate bills and 81 bills that have passed the House of Commons. Many other bills have been sponsored in that house but have not reached the final stage there.

It is difficult to give the pagination of all these bills because each bill is paginated separately, but to give an idea, Bill C-83 of the House of Commons, to amend the Canada Elections Act, contained 259 pages. That was one bill. The reading of the contents of bills is often very difficult and requires a lot of care, because sometimes the phraseology of the law is not as good as it should be. It is not always as clear as spring water.

The Senate Hansard, for 76 sittings, has 1,134 pages.

The Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate contain 681 pages. In addition there are the Routine Proceedings, Orders of the Day and lists of meetings of committees, which are paged in Roman numerals, the total of which I am unable to state as it would take too long to count them.

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had a report on Bill S-25, 60 pages.

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications had a report on Bill C-72, 21 pages.

The Special Committee on Land Use in Canada, a most valuable committee whose deputy chairman, the honourable senator from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Bois), made an excellent speech on the subject last night, had eight sittings, and the reports of its proceedings run to 250 pages.

The Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian Affairs had 15 sittings, and its reports total 1,417 pages.

The report of the Standing Committee on Finance dealing with the Canada Council, contains 23 pages.

The Standing Committee on Divorce produced approximately 600 reports, averaging 10 pages each, a total of 6,000 pages.

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, dealing with Bill C-68, had three sittings, and its reports thereon total 77 pages. And on Bill C-65 it had 16 pages.

All this printed material from the Senate totals 10,350 pages. And this excludes Senate bills.

The material from the House of Commons is still more considerable. The Orders of the Day have no continuous pagination. There is an issue of these orders for each sitting day throughout the session.

The Commons Hansard, for 133 sittings contains 7,017 pages. Naturally, to be informed about the legislation, a member of the Senate should know what is said in the House of Commons, and this necessitate a lot of reading.

The Votes and Proceedings, with Notices of Motions and Questions and lists of committee meetings, total 836 pages.

The Special Committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act, three sittings, 116 pages.

The Sessional Committee on Railways, Air Lines and Shipping—this is the C.N.R. committee—four sittings, 382 pages.

The Special Committee on Research, seven sittings, 298 pages.

The Special Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, eight sittings, 540 pages. And the committee has not yet made its final report.

The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, 10 sittings, 296 pages.

The Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, 12 sittings, 629 pages.

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, dealing with Bill C-58, the Combines Investigation Bill, 13 sittings, 769 pages.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs, 15 sittings, 360 pages.

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts, 15 sittings, 534 pages.

The Standing Committee on Estimates, 18 sittings, 524 pages.

The Standing Committee on Mines, Forests and Waters, 19 sittings, 399 pages.

The Special Committee on Defence Expenditure, 26 sittings, 625 pages.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, 20 sittings, 607 pages.

The Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, dealing with the Jacques Cartier Bridge, 1,454 pages.

This makes a total of 15,386 pages for these publications from the Commons. Added to the figure I gave for the Senate, 10,350, it means that the total pagination of some of the publications of Parliament—some only—is 25,736 pages, excluding departmental reports, reports from the Crown companies, reports under the Combines Investigation Act, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

It is a good thing to publicize the work that is done by each individual member of Parliament. Sometimes one hears the complaint that the attendance in the Senate and in the House of Commons is not at its full, but the number of the publications and the size of them ought to command the attention of the public, as indicating the tremendous work that is done by the Canadian Parliament. This applies to both the House of Commons and the Senate, because the members of the House of Commons have to inform themselves on what is going on in the Senate by reading our publications, just as we have to inform ourselves by reading House of Commons material.

I leave it at that as a matter of thought for those who say that Parliament is doing nothing, that members of Parliament are idle and do not do their duty. I thought it was my own duty to put those figures on record for the information of my fellow Canadian citizens.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I presume the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is about to move adjournment of the house. If so, may I be permitted to ask him what the order of business will be for tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators will remember that before we adjourned last evening I stated that we were right up to the minute in so far as our work in the Senate is concerned and were waiting on certain legislation from the other place. So far as I know, there is very little legislation left to come to the Senate this session. It consists of the Combines Investigation Bill, the Bill of Rights, and the final supply and supplementary estimates. We still have to deal with the Judges Bill, and can do so as soon as we are informed that the two resolutions for amendment to the British North America Act have been made to more or less coincide. That is the extent of the business yet to be completed. In addition, of course, there are estimates of several departments still to be dealt with in the other place.

The Combines Investigation Bill was reported out of committee in the other place this morning and I understand it will be given third reading tomorrow morning. If we receive the bill in this house tomorrow, immediately after it is given first reading I will propose that the debate on second reading commence forthwith, in the hope of completing the debate by Monday evening, so that if it is necessary for the measure to go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce it can be dealt with by that committee on Tuesday. We would then be ready to consider any further legislation that may come to us.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I suggest to the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that if we are to meet on Monday, why could we not adjourn today until then?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand that a number of senators wish to speak on the Combines Investigation Bill. If we adjourned today until Monday it would be impossible to explain the bill and complete debate on second reading in time for the bill to get to committee on Tuesday morning.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 28, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Copy of the preliminary verbatim report of the Public Proceedings of the Dominion-Provincial Conference, held at Ottawa, July 1960. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Monday next, August 1, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I wonder if my honourable friend could give us any indication of the work that is likely to come to us during the rest of the session.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I regret to report that the legislation we expected today has not materialized. I am informed we are not likely to receive the Combines Investigation Bill from the other house until some time Monday. As I said yesterday afternoon, we are right up to the minute with our legislation, so we necessarily have to adjourn today. I hope we shall be able to deal with both the Judges Bill and the Combines Investigation Bill on Monday and refer the Combines bill to committee, if necessary, some time on Tuesday. There will also be either interim supply or final supply for our consideration on perhaps Tuesday or Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I hope my honourable friend is not expecting us to complete the debate on the Combines Investigation Bill on Monday evening. We have not got the bill yet.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I had made arrangements to have 50 copies in English and 30 copies in French of proofs of the amended bill distributed this afternoon if we had been able to proceed with the second reading. I understand that those copies have already been received or are on their way from the Printing Bureau. I hope, therefore, to be able to give a copy early this afternoon to any honourable senator who wishes one. I do not think we necessarily have to complete our debate on second reading of the bill Monday evening. We could make a start that evening and perhaps complete the debate early on Tuesday, and then refer the bill to a committee later that day or perhaps in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, August 1, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, August 1, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

1st August 1960

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Charles Holland Locke, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 1st August, at 8.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

E. Joly de Lotbinière.
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

The Honourable Charles Holland Locke, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Charles Holland Locke, a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

An Act respecting the Department of Forestry.

An Act respecting the franchise of electors and the election of members of the House of Commons.

An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

An Act to amend the Freight Rates Reduction Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

THE CONGO

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS REQUESTING JOINT APPROVAL OF PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN FORCES IN UNITED NATIONS OPERATIONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons informing the Senate that that house has adopted a resolution approving the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo, and requesting the Senate to unite with that house in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words: "Senate and".

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, this is the first intimation I have had that this resolution would come before the Senate for approval. I do not think any of us have seen the resolution and I would ask that if possible a copy be made available to each honourable senator before the resolution is considered.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think that is a fair request. Is that agreed upon?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Agreed.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. William R. Brunt tabled:

Revised estimates of expenditure and budget of the National Battlefields Commission, approved by Order in Council P.C. 1960-998, dated July 21, 1960, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952.

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, 1960, Wednesday, July 27, 1960, and the Consolidated Index and Table of Amendments for the period January 1, 1955 to June 30, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

NOTICES OF INQUIRY

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO REDUCE COSTS OF ELECTRICAL ENERGY IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I give notice of the following inquiry for Wednesday next:

I will ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make a statement of the progress that is being made under the special program of assistance by the federal Government to reduce the costs of electrical energy to industry in the province of Nova Scotia.

INDUSTRIAL WAGES IN NOVA SCOTIA AND ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, I give notice of another inquiry for Wednesday next:

I will ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make a statement as to how the scale of wages and salaries presently paid in steel manufacturing, textile manufacturing and shipbuilding, together with those employed in the generation and distribution of electrical energy in Nova Scotia, compares with the scale of wages and salaries currently paid in like industries in the province of Ontario.

May I say to the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that I realize that it may take some time to obtain this information. If Parliament should prorogue before the information is supplied I suggest that it might be forwarded to me.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Agreed.

LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I also wish to give notice that on Wednesday next I will inquire of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Brunt) as to when the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is to be named a member of the present administration.

JUDGES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-78, to amend the Judges Act.

He said: Honourable senators, before speaking to this motion I want to take a few moments to express my thanks for the welcome given to me by the members of this chamber. It was a kind welcome; it made me feel at ease in new and strange surroundings; it made me feel that I was at once accepted as a colleague by all members. I may say I was not greatly surprised to be welcomed by the senators from the province of Nova Scotia, as it is well known that we are inclined to be a somewhat clannish people. I was however, surprised, though delighted and gratified, by the warm words of welcome expressed, both in this chamber and without it, by honourable senators. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all honourable senators, for making my appearance here such a happy experience, and I assure you I deeply appreciate it.

Honourable senators, I come to the bill before us. During the past number of years a bill has been introduced pretty well each year to amend the Judges Act. Usually the amendment is to provide for appointment of additional judges and payment of their salaries. However, Bill C-78 goes further than the usual amendment, and I think what it does might be divided into four parts. First, it provides for appointment of four additional puisne judges of the Superior Court of Quebec, and also provides for payment of their salaries. Secondly, the bill changes the method of payment of travelling allowances to judges. Thirdly, it provides for payment of pensions to judges upon attaining the age of 75 years and retiring from the bench. Fourthly, it improves the present law relating to payment of pensions to judges and their widows.

Perhaps, honourable senators, I could speak for a few moments on each of these four points I have mentioned.

In the province of Quebec, I understand, legislation has been passed which provides for appointment of six additional judges to the Superior Court. I understand that after this legislation was passed some discussions took place between the Government of Quebec and the Department of Justice and agreement was reached whereby four additional judges would be appointed at this time. This was done to see whether or not with the appointment of these four additional judges the work of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec could be carried on in an expeditious and efficient manner. I also understand that if it is found that the appointment of four additional judges for that province is not sufficient, then consideration will be given to the appointment of two more.

The second matter dealt with in the bill is that of travelling and other expenses of judges in attending sittings of the court. The proposed changes are contained in paragraph (b) of clause 2 of the bill. This provides for payment of reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred by a judge in attending to his judicial duties in a place other than where he is by law obliged to reside.

Under the present law judges are allowed $12 a day for such expenses if the sitting takes place in a city and $8 a day if the sitting is in a place not a city. In special circumstances these rates can be increased to $15 and $12 a day, and for the purpose of the act a place with a population of less than 5,000 is deemed not to be a city. Apparently this arrangement has not proven to be satisfactory as experience has shown it is not possible to establish a fixed rate throughout the whole of Canada. So the method proposed is to reimburse judges for their actual out-of-pocket expenses, and this amendment so provides.

Honourable senators will note that subclause (2) of clause 2 of the bill repeals subsection (6) of section 21 of the Judges Act. This section requires that the accounts for travelling expenses of judges in Quebec be certified by the Chief Justice of that province. There appears to be no reason for this and it is proposed to repeal this provision.

I come now to the third division I have used in discussing this bill. Honourable senators will note that the payment of pensions to judges upon attaining the age of 75 years and retiring from the bench is covered by clause 3 on page 2 of the bill. This provision corresponds to section 24 of the present Judges Act. However, the present act is restricted in that it is confined to judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Exchequer Court of Canada, and the courts in the Territories. The provisions of the Judges Act relating to annuities for superior and county court judges are somewhat different. Under the proposed amendment to the British North America Act judges of the superior court will also cease to hold office on attaining 75 years of age, and paragraph (d) of clause 3 provides a uniform retiring annuity to all judges retiring at the age of 75 years, which is similar to that presently in effect in regard to judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Exchequer Court. In this paragraph (d) the requirement is for a minimum of 10 years in judicial office. However, an exception is made in the case of a judge now holding office. A judge presently holding office who has retired on attaining the age of 75 years by reason of the proposed amendment to the British North America Act will be eligible for a full pension regardless of the length of time he sat on the bench.

My fourth division of the bill relates to the payment of pensions to judges and their widows. These changes are contained in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of clause 3 of the bill and in clause 6 of the bill.

At the present time, under section 23 of the Judges Act, a judge who has continued in office for 15 years may be granted a pension if he resigns his office. However, section 30 of the same act provides no pension shall be paid unless the Governor in Council is of the opinion it was in the public interest that such judge resign his office. It is felt that a judge who has served for at least 15 years and who has attained the age of 70 should be able to retire on pension without the implication that his resignation is in the public interest. Clause 5 of the bill repeals section 30 of the Judges Act in which these restrictions exist.

Paragraph (b) of clause 3 of the bill deals with the case of a judge who has held office for at least 15 years but who has not attained the age of 70 years and who wishes to retire on pension. Under this bill the Governor in Council must be of the opinion that the resignation is conducive to the better administration of justice or is in the national interest. Under the present Judges Act, judges of the county court could retire under certain circumstances. Now it is proposed to make 15 years the minimum term of all judges regardless of the court in which they sit, as there appears to be no valid reason for making any distinction.

Paragraph (c) of clause 3 of the bill provides the Governor in Council may grant a pension to a judge who has become disabled, regardless of his length of service. This does away with the requirement that such resignation must be in the public interest.

Clause 6 of the bill repeals section 8 of An Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act, being chapter 48 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1955. This particular section refers to pensions for judges which were related to their salaries, as such salaries were, prior to the salary increase granted to judges in 1955. By this amendment pensions for judges and their widows will be based on their actual salaries, which of course takes into account the increase granted in 1955. And paragraph 2 makes this section broad enough to include all judges who have retired on pension after July 11, 1955, the widows of such judges, judges now sitting and all judges who will be appointed in the future.

Honourable senators, I do not know if there is much I can usefully add at this time. I would expect there are points on which more information may be desired and which could be discussed in greater detail in committee, and I propose to move at the proper time that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Honourable senators, I thank you for the kind attention you have given to me on this my first speech as a senator.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the Combines Investigation Bill, which I expected would have reached us this evening from the other place, has not yet arrived. As the debate on the Judges Bill has been adjourned, that completes our work for this evening.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, August 2, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Later this day.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RE SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's fifteenth report:

Your committee recommend that a simultaneous translation system be installed in the Senate chamber; that the Department of Public Works be requested to make the installation; and that the Department of the Secretary of State be requested to provide the translators required for the operation of the system.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) for the second reading of Bill C-78, to amend the Judges Act.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, at the outset may I compliment the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald) on his first speech in this house. It was appropriate that as a lawyer his first speech should be on a bill in connection with judges. Traditionally, Nova Scotia has given the rest of Canada some of its best judges, as well as some of its best lawyers and teachers of law. It is rather interesting to me to note that since I came to this house this is the first occasion on which a member of the bar of Nova Scotia has been appointed to the Senate. I am very happy to welcome the senator from Cape Breton in both capacities, and to express the hope that we shall hear from him in this house many times in the future.

The honourable senator divided the Judges Bill into four parts. However, I think it is fair to say that the main purpose of the bill is to increase judges' pensions, and it might be described as complementary to the resolution adopted by this house for an address to Her Majesty the Queen requesting an amendment to the British North America Act to provide for the compulsory retirement of superior court judges at the age of 75 years. The bill has been standing on our Order Paper ever since we amended the original resolution for the address. It now comes forward for second reading after the other place has had the opportunity of considering the amended address and has rescinded its original address and passed a new one identical with the address as it passed this house, eliminating county court judges from the original provision. The sequence of events shows how the two measures are tied together, and I think it is a fair deduction to make that the increase in judges pensions provided under this bill would not have now been made if it were not for the decision that superior court judges should be compulsorily retired at the age of 75 years. My own view is that the increase in pensions should have been made in any event, regardless of the compulsory retirement feature. I think a mistake was made in 1955 when judges' salaries were increased but no corresponding increase was made in judges' pensions, and this measure now corrects that error.

The pension authorized by this bill is a fair and adequate one. I still hold to the opinion that I expressed in the debate on the address, that the compulsory retirement of sitting judges is a breach of faith and that they should have been allowed to elect to retire. But having said that I would add that most sitting judges should agree that this pension now provided is fair and adequate and therefore they would have voluntarily elected to retire at 75 on this pension if they had been given that option.

Accordingly, I am fully in accord with this bill and will support it. However, I cannot refrain from contrasting the treatment accorded to judges under this bill with the pension provisions about which I spoke on a previous occasion in this house, namely, those made for our federal legislators. In my remarks on March 31 last I said that the present pension provisions for members of the House of Commons were inadequate and ungenerous, and I repeat that statement. The allowances that we are making by this bill for judges are in sharp contrast with what we do for members of the House of Commons, our cabinet ministers, and particularly for the holder of the highest public office in the gift of the people of Canada, the Prime Minister.

Let me put the facts on the record.

Superior court judges now receive a salary of $16,900 a year. The pension under this bill is two-thirds of that amount, namely, $11,266 per year during life, and if a judge dies leaving a widow she will receive $3,750 during the rest of her life. The pension is non-contributory; that is, the judge makes no direct contribution to it at all. He may receive that pension even though he has served as a judge for only 10 years; if he has served 15 years he may receive that pension at the age of 70. If he is a chief justice, and therefore receiving a higher salary than $16,900, his pension will be proportionately higher.

Now let me turn to the other side of the picture and compare those pensions with the provisions made for our federal legislators and ministers. In the first place, to be eligible for a pension a member must have served in at least three Parliaments—he must have been elected, re-elected and again re-elected, thereby proving his electors had confidence in him. Unless he has been elected three times he gets no pension whatsoever. The pension is contributory. The member contributes 6 per cent of the first $4,000 of his indemnity, and the pension he receives is calculated at the rate of $180 for each year of service. The maximum pension that he can receive is $3,000 a year, and in order to receive that amount he himself will have had to contribute a total amount of $4,000, and his period of service in Parliament will have had to amount to at least 16⅔ years. Such maximum pension of $3,000 is reduced to $2,340 a year when the recipient becomes 70 years of age. That is to say, the old age pension is integrated into the member's pension, whereas judges get their old age security pensions over and above the judges' pensions. So the true comparison at age 70 or over is between a pension of $11,266 for a judge and a pension of $2,340 for a legislator, with a judge's widow getting $3,750 a year, an amount in itself more than the legislator receives, while the widow of a member of Parliament gets nothing.

Now, I realize that there are differences between the two positions. Some may wish to point out that a judge holds a full-time position, that he must give up his law practice in order to go on the bench, whereas in theory, a member of Parliament can still practice law, or medicine or carry on a business. They might also point out that the administration of justice is so important and so vital to the country that we must seek to have our best lawyers accept positions on the bench, and therefore the remuneration, including pension, must be attractive. I do not accept these arguments as validating the extreme discrimination against members of Parliament.

I need not elaborate on the answer to the question as to whether a member of Parliament has a part-time occupation. Anyone who has sat in Ottawa from last January until now knows that, whatever may be the theory, the fact is that being a member of the House of Commons is a full-time occupation, an expensive occupation, and all too often a thankless one.

As to the need to get good men for the judiciary, we must remember that our democratic system has three branches of Government: the executive, the legislative and the judicial, all equally important. They form the three pillars of our social structure. To make that system function best we must have the best men available in all three branches. It is important to have good men on the bench to interpret the law. It is surely equally important to have good men make those laws. It is in the interests of the people who are being governed that the rewards offered for those who are to govern should be sufficient to attract the best men possible. We see the need for this in the case of the judiciary. We seem reluctant to open our eyes to the same need in the case of the legislators. By any fair standard of comparison the scale is heavily weighted in favour of the judges, and the pensions of federal legislators are unjustifiably low and should be substantially increased.

It is not sufficient to say that a man does not have to be a candidate for Parliament unless he wishes to be—that he makes the choice of his own free will, and that he knows what will be the rewards, or the lack of rewards, when he throws his hat in the ring. The crux of the matter is that the importance of governing this country, of making the laws under which we are to live, the responsibilities which these delegates chosen by the people must carry, warrant a remuneration sufficient to attract the best available candidates and to encourage the most public-spirited citizens to be willing to accept those heavy and important duties and responsibilities.

Since I spoke on this matter in this house on March 31 last there has been one interesting development that I should like to mention. The province of Ontario has passed legislation dealing with the indemnities and pensions of members of the provincial Legislature. It has enacted a new pension plan, under which members contribute 6 per cent of their indemnities, but providing much greater benefits than the federal scheme. The maximum pension is $5,000 per year, and as there is no decrease when the recipient reaches 70 years of age it is more than twice as large as the $2,340 received by a federal member. To obtain this pension the member of the Legislature has to serve the same period of time as the member of the Commons, namely, 16⅔ years.

In addition, and I think this is very important, under the Ontario plan the widow of a member of the Legislature is entitled to an annuity equal to one-half of the pension to which the member was entitled.

Furthermore, the pension is geared to the salary in the case of cabinet ministers, whereas in the federal pension scheme all members are on the same basis and a cabinet minister or a Prime Minister gets exactly the same as a private member of Parliament. Under the Ontario plan the pension of a cabinet minister can run as high as $11,000 a year, and that of a Prime Minister as high as $13,000 a year. This principle of pensions graduated to wages or salaries is almost universal in pension plans for employees of businesses and the Civil Service in Canada and elsewhere and it is extraordinary that it is not in effect in the federal plan.

I believe these pension provisions made by the Ontario Legislature were acceptable to the people of that province. Certainly I neither heard nor read criticisms. No doubt one reason this problem has not been better managed at Ottawa is the fear that because the legislators would have to vote these benefits for themselves they might be accused of being selfish or grasping. I think that idea is a mistaken one. The case is too strong, too clearly right, too justifiable in the interests of the people for any government or any legislators to hesitate to support it and to implement it. I feel certain that public opinion will endorse this view.

The strongest argument I can make is to compare the way our federal pension plan applies to our former Prime Minister, Mr. Louis St. Laurent, with the treatment he would receive if, instead, the Ontario plan were applicable to him. He served as a member of Parliament for over 16 years, he was a cabinet minister for over 15 years and he was Prime Minister for over 8 years. For his services as a member of Parliament he is entitled to the maximum pension of $2,340 a year. For his service to the country as Minister of Justice, Minister of External Affairs and as the leader of this country he receives no pension whatsoever. If the present pension plan of the province of Ontario were applicable to such a record of service the pension would be $13,000 a year, and on his death his widow would receive $6,500 a year.

It is a startling contrast. We pride ourselves on being a great country. In this case we can hardly pride ourselves on being a grateful country.

I have previously mentioned that the United Kingdom as long ago as 1937 provided a pension for its Prime Minister, and that in 1959 the United States established a pension of $25,000 a year for its President, who, as we all know, cannot serve for more than eight years, and may serve for only four years. Honourable senators may be interested to know something more about the pensions for members of the United States Congress. To start with, their salaries are $22,500 a year, compared with the indemnity of $8,000 and the expense allowance of $2,000 to our House of Commons members. They contribute 7½ per cent of their salaries for the pension benefit, compared with our 6 per cent on the first $4,000. The pension is equal to $562.50 for each year of service, with a maximum pension of $18,000 a year, and the member of Congress may receive a pension after only five years of service. After 16⅔ years of service the pension would be $9,300 a year, compared with our $3,000—or $2,340 after age 70. So I would summarize the comparison by saying that the United States pension is at least three times as beneficial as is our federal plan.

Apropos of judges' pensions, it is interesting to note that all but one of the Prime Ministers of Canada since 1900 have been lawyers—Laurier, Borden, Meighen, Bennett, St. Laurent and the present Prime Minister—with only Mr. King to break the chain. I mention those names for this reason: everyone knows that, had they not gone into public life but stayed in private practice, they were eminently fitted by their knowledge of law and of practice and by their talents to hold judicial appointments. Instead, they chose public life, a life of service to the people of Canada. Do we consider that in making that choice they did something that made them less worthy than judges to receive tangible rewards for their services? Surely, the answer is "No". Surely, this is something that we have overlooked, but surely the time has come to rectify the oversight.

I might be asked, "What do you think the pension should be?" It is not for me or for us in this house to answer that question specifically. But this much we can and should say. On the basis of the amount of time involved, the distances from home and the greater responsibility, the pensions for federal legislators should be larger than those provided for provincial legislators in Ontario.

At the recent Dominion-Provincial Conference the Prime Minister of Ontario asked the federal Government for a very substantial additional grant because of the needs of the province. I think Mr. Frost would agree that even before he received one dollar toward this additional grant it would be only right that the legislators at Ottawa should receive at least the equivalent of the pensions which the Ontario members and ministers now enjoy.

Presumably it is too late this session to do what I suggest. I sincerely hope that the next session will see the passing of an act to remedy the discrimination.

I am glad to support this bill, but it cries out for a companion measure. We are now doing justice to the judges. Let us also do justice to our lawmakers.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, at the outset I would like to join with the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) in congratulating our new colleague from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald). It was my privilege to be the first member of this house to extend a word of welcome to him. At that time I said I was sure he would contribute greatly in the near future to the work of this house, and my prediction was borne out last night when the honourable senator made his first address in this chamber.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale said that some of our best lawyers and best judges come from the province of Nova Scotia. I presume he had in mind, among others, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. I am sure the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Rosedale would agree that some of our best senators too come from Nova Scotia. He mentioned the fact that, with the exception of the late Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, all the Prime Ministers of Canada during the present century have been lawyers. But I would like to point out that Mr. King was an honorary member of the bar of the province of Ontario, and as a matter of personal satisfaction I might mention that my own daughter was called to the bar of Ontario on the very same day he was made an honorary member.

I agree wholeheartedly with everything the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale has said with respect to the inadequacy of the pensions now being paid to ex-members of the House of Commons. He said they were inadequate and ungenerous, and I would add the adjectives meagre, scanty and unrealistic. He pointed out that being a member of Parliament at Ottawa is a full-time occupation. This is so much so that it practically prohibits a member from resuming his business successfully should he not be returned to Parliament after having served here for any length of time. There is no doubt that if a lawyer is sitting in Parliament at Ottawa his clients are not going to wait indefinitely for his return. The same thing applies to doctors and men in practically every field of endeavour. There are few members of Parliament who can arrange to have their business or professional affairs carried on satisfactorily during their absence. If a member of the House of Commons happens to retain his seat for quite a few years and stays here until he reaches the age of 70 it is almost impossible for him to resume the business in which he was occupied before he entered Parliament, and in such a case he must rely almost entirely upon his pension, which amounts to the great sum of $2,340 per annum.

I was surprised to learn the amount of pension for which members of the Ontario Legislature will be eligible. I think it is a fair pension and I am not criticizing it in any way. I was impressed to hear that the province had tackled the question and had come up with this amount. The honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale said, if I followed him correctly, that anyone who had been a member of the Legislature for 16 years would be entitled to a pension of approximately $5,000 a year. Just compare that with the pension provided for a member of the federal Parliament. I know that the members of the Legislature have important duties to perform. A great deal of their time is taken up with the business of their constituencies at home when the Legislature is not sitting. However, it is most unusual for the Legislature to sit for more than six or eight weeks annually.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Six weeks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Compare that with our long session. We came here on January 15. The length of the present session is not unusual. So far this session has lasted probably a week or two weeks longer than the last one did, but by and large we sit here from six to eight months a year, and it is a full-time occupation. There is no doubt that the work of a member of the Legislature is much lighter than the work of a member of the House of Commons, and that a member of the Legislature is in general required to spend relatively much less time away from home. I do not think there is any doubt that the whole question of the payment of pensions to members of the House of Commons should be reviewed. The honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale referred to the fact that the Legislature did not hesitate to review the pension question. I do not think this Government will hesitate to review it. I criticize the Government often, as honourable senators know, but it faces up to some issues and I think it is prepared to face up to this one. One thing I can say is that in doing so it would have the wholehearted support of the members of this house.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale also referred to the fact that a former Prime Minister does not receive a pension as such. It is true that he is paid a small pension as a former member of Parliament, but we do not recognize in any way the public service that a Prime Minister has rendered to his country. When his term of office ends he goes out. Of course, he is respected by the people. We have great respect for the two Prime Ministers who formerly were in Parliament, namely, the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen and the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, but we have not recognized them in any special way. Great Britain, the United States and Australia give special recognition to the former heads of their governments, but in this forward-looking Canada we are so taken up with the things of today that we forget the services rendered by distinguished statesmen in years gone by. Irrespective of the meagreness of the present pension paid to former members of Parliament, I think we should show some recognition of the public service of ex-Prime Ministers by granting them a reasonable pension. I strongly support all that the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale said, both in respect to pensions generally and to ex-Prime Ministers.

Now, honourable senators, let me refer briefly to the bill. I approve everything that is in the bill, but I do not think it goes far enough. I have been in complete accord with the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale up to the present moment, but I am not going all the way with him. So far as the judges who are to be appointed in the future are concerned, I think, to use the honourable senator's own words, the pension provisions of the amending bill are fair and adequate, but I do not think they are fair and adequate with regard to the judges who are being compulsorily retired. Unlike the honourable senator, I thought that all judges upon attaining the age of 75 years, or who have already attained the age of 75, should be retired, and even after listening to the eloquent addresses of some honourable senators in this house my view has not changed in that respect. I still think it is in the interest of the administration of justice in Canada that all judges, whether heretofore or hereafter appointed should be retired at the age of 75. Having said that, I would add that I think the judges who are being compulsorily retired should get some special treatment. There is one precedent for giving these judges special treatment, and there is only one precedent on which we can go. I well recall the fact that in 1927—we heard it said so often in the debate on the resolution for amendment of the British North America Act—the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada were compulsorily retired at the age of 75 and they received the same pension as other judges; but we were also told, and this is the precedent, that in 1930, with the approval of the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable MacKenzie King, the then Minister of Justice, the Honourable Ernest Lapointe, the then Leader of the Opposition, the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett, and the Honourable C. H. Cahan, the pension was increased to the amount of the salary which the judges had been receiving at the date of retirement.

Honourable senators, it has been argued in this house that there was no contract with the judges, and I am inclined to that view. However, there was an understanding—I will go along with the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale to that extent—on the part of every judge that he would stay on the bench for the rest of his life. Now the judge is being told that he should leave the bench at 75. I do not think he should get just the same treatment as is to be given the judges who are appointed hereafter. It would not cost the country a great deal of money to be fair in this matter. I understand there are twelve judges who are being retired on account of having attained the age of 75 years. The difference between their salary and pension is, we will say, roughly $6,000. Thus it would cost a total of $72,000 yearly during the lives of these judges to give them the treatment which I think they should receive.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would they not then get preferred treatment over the other judges who were appointed for life and who would not be retiring until some time in the future? I do not think you can consider only the twelve judges who are retiring this year; you have to look at all the judges who are now on the bench. Should they not all be entitled to the same treatment?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no difference of opinion between the honourable gentleman and myself in that respect. It is true that other judges will become eligible for retirement as time goes on. There are in all 168 judges now sitting on the bench in the superior courts, but they will not all be eligible for retirement in one year; it is likely that for a number of years, probably five or six or seven—I don't know how many years —about twelve judges would be receiving their full salary but not actually sitting on the bench. The total annual cost would be $72,000. There could then be no question about our Government and the people of Canada being fair with those who had been appointed to this office.

Honourable senators, if it were in my power, when this bill gets to committee I would not hesitate to move an amendment to that effect, but as honourable senators know such an amendment would be impossible under our Constitution. All I can do is make a strong appeal to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to bring these representations to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I would hope it might be possible for the minister himself to come to the committee meeting, when I would be prepared to make these representations to him.

I think we should end for all time this question as to whether there was fairness or unfairness in summarily retiring these judges. Honourable senators may not be prepared to go along with me as far as I have gone, but that is the way I feel about this and I still hope the Government will do something about it.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) and that of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

The bill refers to judges, and mention was made of the address that was passed by the Senate for an amendment to the British North America Act. The Senate in its wisdom decided to modify the resolution as received from the House of Commons and some members of that house who are not always generous in their statements about the Senate complained bitterly that the Senate had taken such a course. That is a matter which I cannot understand. When the Senate adopts legislation which comes from the House of Commons without amending it, a group of members of Parliament complain that the Senate is doing nothing; but when the Senate takes action, and very sensible action, they complain that the Senate is usurping their rights and prerogatives. It is not very logical. There should be more harmony between both houses of Parliament, and the members of the House of Commons should rejoice when the Senate brings to their attention possible improvement to the legislation. We are here for that.

The people in this country expect every honourable member of this house to speak at full liberty according to his own beliefs on any matter that he feels like speaking on. Very often I have met people who did not agree with what I had said but who congratulated me just the same for having said it, because they believed in the freedom of each public man to express his own thoughts and beliefs whenever the occasion occurs. The Senate passed a resolution for which you, honourable colleagues, deserve to be commended, because you did not act as rubber stamps for legislation that was submitted to this house. We have made a change, and a practical one, a change that is in accordance with the best constitutional traditions.

Now, with regard to the retirement of judges at 75, my honourable friend from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) at first objected to the retirement of judges at that age, and one of our colleagues made a lengthy speech in which he gave the same status to the members of the bench as to his most prosperous clients—he treated the judges as if they were the British Columbia Power or some other organization of that kind. The judges are very different from those concerns and they should be compared rather to King Solomon than to such financially powerful companies.

As to the retirement of judges, the law is changed. Until the resolution is approved by Her Majesty's Government the judges will remain in office during good behaviour, which may mean physical capacity. According to the dictionary, behaviour has a meaning of comportment. If it is argued that a judge should be retired because his behaviour is not satisfactory, it may mean because of a decline in his memory, a decline in his physical faculties, a decline for which he could not be held responsible. Honourable senators, I want to be well understood about this because I have great respect for the judges. And at this point I must compliment also our new colleague from the breezy province of Nova Scotia, the new senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald), who did so well in sponsoring this bill yesterday. There was nothing offensive toward the bench in what has been suggested and done by this chamber. This is to satisfy the minds of all judges.

I might mention a gentleman who died not long ago, Mr. Justice Laurendeau, who, when he left the bench, became solicitor for the city of Montreal. He seemed very happy in that position. I could mention numerous other examples in the province of Quebec. We meet these gentlemen, and they look much happier and less worried than when they were on the bench. This is the experience of a lawyer who has occasion to speak to them at times.

We had a request—a most unusual request, because it came from all the Attorneys General for the provinces, and the whole bar association—asking for the retirement of judges at 75. I have privately made the suggestion that all the judges of the superior courts should be appointed and paid by each province, because they sit on provincial courts, although at the present time the judges who sit on those courts are appointed and paid by the Government of Canada. I find it remarkable that those who have authority to come to the Government and to ask for a change in the Constitution and for new legislation have agreed together; they have come to Ottawa; they have been listened to by the Government.

Although I consider myself a Liberal by conviction, I must congratulate the Government for having agreed to the request from the Attorneys General of the provinces, without exception, and from the bar association. What is the use of having an association of the members of the bar if it is not listened to by the Government when it makes a request of such importance? It takes courage for the members of the bar, who have to appear before the judges, to make representations of this kind.

Until now it has been very satisfactory. The address to Her Majesty's Privy Council has been passed and there will be good results. My honourable colleague who spoke before me agreed that under this new legislation the judges will be treated very fairly, as they deserve to be treated, and they will have no reason to complain.

The question was raised that the Parliament of Canada should change the provisions concerning judges without making another request to the imperial Parliament. We have reached maturity and it is time for us to act. That is a point of view. I am sure that in due course it should bear fruit. But let us not forget that the British North America Act was passed in such a way that it shall not be amended except by the imperial Parliament. This is why on many occasions Governments of every political leaning have gone to London to have the Constitution amended. Honourable colleagues, I remember the reason why the Liberal party fought the social legislation that Mr. Bennett brought in in the last year of his Government. It was precisely because it was not constitutional, that the British North America Act had not been amended to provide for unemployment insurance, et cetera, et cetera. We used that argument during the campaign, and with some success, naturally. This is why one of the first moves of the Liberal Government was to go to London to ask for a change in the Constitution, after the Bennett legislation was declared ultra vires by the Privy Council.

But the earth turns and we are making progress. I hope that sooner or later the problems concerning amending of the Constitution will be ironed out and solved. Then everything will be for the better in Canada, and as everyone wishes it to be.

But speaking of the judges, I have great respect for them, for most of them. You may agree, honourable colleagues, that it is not a question of age, that age is a relative thing. Seventy-five years may be heavy on the shoulders of some, but not so heavy on others. We have here in the Senate some very good examples of men who have attained four score years and who are still young hearted, able bodied, able mentally, and just as good as young men. On the other hand, there are some judges who should be retired at the age of 67—I can name one —and there are a few others who should never have been appointed. But, unfortunately, they are there and they are to be suffered.

Mind you, honourable colleagues, this is the exception. One may challenge the Minister of Justice not only to sponsor an order in council to retire judges, but to complain of a judge who is not mentally fit to sit on the bench. There would be general protest. People would call him a dictator. It would be impossible for him to take action. Do you agree with me, honourable colleagues? Do you see the Minister of Justice taking action to superannuate a judge, regardless of his age, who is not physically able to sit on the bench? Therefore this is the reason why the Attorneys General and the Canadian Bar Association have come to the conclusion that an average age of retirement must be established, and they have decided on 75 years. It is ten years more generous than what is provided for civil servants. Mark you, honourable senators, civil servants have to be retired at 65. When a civil servant is given an extension of one year or two years it is a special favour because the individual concerned has done particularly good work and cannot easily be replaced. Therefore, by being superannuated at 75, judges are better treated than civil servants. But it seems that once the judges will be informed of what is being done for them now, they will all be satisfied.

There is another question that I wish to bring up. It is a delicate matter and may cause some honourable colleagues to blush, although it is nothing that could be offensive to any one of you. It is that in all that was said on behalf of judges, former Prime Ministers and members of the House of Commons, one class of legislators was forgotten by the honourable gentlemen who spoke before me. Did you realize when listening to their able speeches that 50 gentlemen and two ladies who sit here now have been forgotten? The honourable senators don't count. Let's give a better pension to this one or that one. I have no objection to that, provided we have our share. Charity begins at home, and I cannot understand how you, my honourable colleagues, are so much subdued that you are shy to speak about it.

I remember that during a discussion in the House of Commons I said that the member to my right was not a man of big means. I said to those in front of me and to my deskmate that we were alike, and my deskmate said: "It is true but don't say it. It might embarrass me."

Some of our honourable colleagues have been well endowed, thanks to their industry, with this earth's goods. I do not envy them, but how is it that when mention is made of a pension it is always for others and never for us? Take, for instance, the income tax on our travelling expenses. I remember the time when I was a member of the House of Commons. I had been there 31 years—for 20 years at $4,000 a year, and when Mr. Bennett was in power it was less 25 per cent for tax deduction, so it was reduced to $3,000. Afterwards it was increased to $6,000 and then to $10,000. How is it that the members of the Senate cannot have a status of equality with the members of the House of Commons? We are in full sympathy with them. The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), who was there for 37 years, also knows the hardships of the members of the House of Commons.

It was very generous and kind of the honourable senator from Toronto-Rosedale (Hon. Mr. Leonard) to raise the question, but if legislation is to be brought in for the purpose of increasing the pension for members of Parliament and providing pensions for their widows, let us hope at least that we will not be forgotten. We deserve as much recognition as anyone else in the legislative body. The judges are well looked after. So much the better. If the former Prime Minister will be well looked after, so much the better. The members of the House of Commons well deserve to be looked after, because their's is a dog's life. They cannot practise their professions, they cannot look after their business or their trade, for they are tied here. They do not like to feel that summer is going rapidly while they are still here discussing some matters which could be called futilities. I never meet anyone who does not regret that the Parliament of Canada is still sitting in the month of August—on the second day of August—and who does not sympathize with all parliamentarians.

Now I come to my conclusion. It will be simple. My conclusion, honourable senators, is that whenever any new piece of legislation is brought in by the Government for the benefit of former or actual members of Parliament, it should be for all members of Parliament, the members of the Senate as well as those of the House of Commons.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this has been a most interesting discussion on the bill to amend the Judges Act, a discussion which, perhaps to some extent, has gone beyond the bounds of the bill itself, but has been nonetheless interesting for that.

My only reason for rising—and I am rising to discuss only certain particular sections of this bill itself—is that the bill purports to deal with the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec, and I think that some voice should be heard from the province of Quebec on that part of the bill before it receives second reading. As will be seen, section 1 of the bill provides for an increase in the number of puisne judges of the Superior Court of my province from 51 to 55. We are told that of those four additional judges, if appointed,—and the authority for that is a statement by the Minister of Justice—three are to be for the district of Montreal and one for the district of Three Rivers. I can only say, so far as the judicial district of Montreal is concerned, that the appointment of certainly not less than three additional judges is amply justified by the increasing amount of work that comes to our Superior Court in Montreal, and by the fact that the existing judges, hard though they try, are finding it impossible to keep up with the cases that come before them and are falling into arrears year by year. I am quite sure that my honourable friend the senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) will agree with me on that. So as far as that section of the legislation is concerned, relating to the three additional judges for Montreal, I can heartily commend it to the favourable attention of the Senate.

There is just one further section which I think deserves some attention, and that is section 2, amending section 21 of the act, in relation to the expenses of superior court judges while they are away from home on their judicial duties. That affects us in the province of Quebec, particularly in connection with the Court of Appeal, which sits alternately in the cities of Montreal and of Quebec and whose sittings require judges from each of those cities to travel quite often to the other city and to spend several days in that other city at a hotel. Under the legislation as it now stands, which dates back for many years, a judge who has to travel and spend time away from his home entirely in that respect can claim his moving or transportation expenses, and in addition, for every day that he is away, if in a city he can claim $12, or $15 in special circumstances prescribed by the treasury board. Well, under modern conditions, honourable senators, you can imagine what happens to a judge from Montreal who has to go to the city of Quebec for four or five days and put up at the Chateau Frontenac there, and finds that all he can charge for a room and three meals is $15 a day. That of course shows how very ancient this legislation is, and that it was designed for times which no longer exist. The amendment proposed under the new section 21 is that such a judge shall be allowed his reasonable travelling and other expenses—which of course he has to justify, and which in the case I have mentioned he will be able to justify—while living away from home at a hotel in a manner consistent with his dignity as a judge. I think my honourable friend from Mille Isles would agree with me on that.

In those two respects, honourable senators, I must say that I heartily commend this legislation.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, as a member from Quebec, I think I should say a few words, even if I do not bring any new aspect to the attention of honourable senators. My bâtonnier (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) has just spoken on some particular features of this bill with regard to Quebec. The first one is the fact that three additional judges are provided for the district of Montreal and one for the district of Three Rivers. I fully agree that we need more judges, for not only are our judges in arrears with their work, but it is always on their mind that those arrears are accumulating. I am sure honourable senators will appreciate that it is burdensome and embarrassing to our judges to be unable to accomplish all the work that is assigned to them. Sometimes we may feel that a judge is inclined to expedite the hearing of a trial and not listen too attentively or long enough to arguments of counsel, because he is always obsessed with the idea of the continuation of a system that does not work efficiently toward the administration of justice.

Honourable senators, I am fully in accord with our bâtonnier. As usual, I wished to listen to his wisdom before I dared to express my views. He referred to the reimbursement of judges for travelling and other expenses incurred in attending court away from the place where the law obliges them to reside. Heretofore travelling and other expenses were based on a fixed rate per day, and this new amendment will change that so as to reimburse judges for reasonable travelling and other expenses. I think that is a good amendment. To my mind it is proper that judges should be reimbursed for their real expenses, provided of course we pay attention to the word "reasonable". This term "reasonable" is inserted to allow those who approve the payment of these expenses to use their own judgment to a certain extent. After all, a judge is not a labourer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The bill says "actual".

Hon. Mr. Monette: A judge is expected to stay at a hotel that is in keeping with his dignity. Any expenses that he would pay for such accommodation would be his actual expenses. The question of whether or not he could have stayed at a smaller and cheaper hotel is eliminated, because the treasury official who has to pass on the bill is given the right to approve the payment of reasonable expenses. I would say that this is a lot fairer not only to the judge himself but also to the public, as in many cases the public may be inclined to feel that where there is a fixed allowance per day that will be paid whether it is really spent or not.

I have a few remarks now to make about the pension itself. The main question here is not whether judges should be retired at the age of 75. Everybody in a position to judge agrees on that. All the Attorneys General of the provinces agree on that. The Canadian Bar Association, which is composed of barristers who plead before the courts, is in general agreement on that. With so many in agreement on the retirement age I will not try to elaborate on that point. However, there is a more delicate question, and that is the question of the pension. If the bill passes as it is now, any judge who will be retired by the effect of the law will be entitled to a pension, the amount of which is claimed by some to be fair enough. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) mentioned for the second time what he claims is a great unfairness in this matter. He said that these judges were appointed for life, that is, during good behaviour, and now they are being compulsorily retired, as he put it.

Well, I am not in agreement on that, and without offence I would state that the word "compulsorily" is perhaps a stronger word than facts justify. It is my opinion that every judge appointed to the bench was aware at the time of his appointment that conditions under which he would be called upon to serve might change from time to time, and that, though the appointment is made by order in council, these conditions are determined by Parliament. I would draw attention to the fact that there was no complaint by judges when their salaries were increased. Should I say that it was compulsory for the judges to take the increased salaries?

I have held conversations with some judges in the city of Montreal whom I know very well and they have suggested that maybe there is an element of unfairness in the provision for compulsory retirement at 75, but nobody has spoken about it in a way to make me feel that it is shocking to them.

Perhaps they thought, and this is the way I understood them, that it would be fair if those already on the bench, who will be retired through the effects of the general law, which everybody agrees to be fair, continued to receive their full salaries for the rest of their lifetime. What could we say to that? I honestly feel that at the time of their appointment judges know that they are appointed under conditions as to remuneration and work that will come under review from time to time by Parliament itself.

There are other considerations which were not mentioned. For instance, some judges may feel that at the age of 75 they are still capable of doing their judicial work with full efficiency. That is a very relevant question. The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) told us that there are some judges whose fitness to be a judge would, if it had not already disappeared totally, be impaired gradually before they reached the age of 75. On the other hand, there are in all provinces judges whose mind has remained keen beyond the age of 75, and in many cases beyond the age of 80. There is nothing we can do about these variations and that is why we have to strike an average of 75. Otherwise, what could be done to determine that some judges should be retired at 75 even though they felt well able to continue to perform their work, but that others should be retained in service as long as they wished to work beyond the age? I contend that nobody could decide this question satisfactorily to all concerned. Therefore, with great respect to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), whose speeches are always inspiring, I feel that if it is the consensus of both houses of Parliament that judges should be retired at the age of 75 they cannot take it as an affront to them.

I do not think we break faith in making them subject to this new legislation, as they have been subject to the benefits of previous legislation. I am quite sure that the great majority of the judges in my province, if not all of them, will understand that this is a relative situation, in which no real decision or remedy could be taken that would prevent some of them from perhaps feeling they were unjustly treated. I think they will all approve of it. In this day when there is an increased volume of work placed before the courts, some judges may tire before reaching the normal retirement age of former years when the office was not so demanding. Therefore, I feel no judge will complain of the provisions of this legislation as applied to him. The measure has been discussed in both houses and the subject thoroughly debated on the resolution which was considered earlier. Therefore, I feel I should approve this bill as it comes before us.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few words to the debate on this bill, especially as to one very important and material point which would affect certain judges who have held their positions for a number of years and who, it has been said, were appointed to serve during good behaviour. I just want to record my opinion on this point. Personally, I think it is very important for members of Parliament to support the principle that the words and conditions of a contract are sacred, especially when one of the parties to the contract is the Parliament of Canada. I feel very strongly on that point, and I see no justification for Parliament's failing to keep sacred the words of one of its contracts.

When Parliament appoints an individual to a charge, especially to a judgeship, and guarantees him that if he fulfils his duty he will receive his emolument during good behaviour, that means for life unless he is incapacitated or does not do honour to his office. Today the same Parliament which made the provisions under which judges of the Superior Court were appointed is saying to those judges: We ask you to allow us to withdraw our promises made to you.

Honourable senators, this reminds me of a very serious question that arose during World War II. Prior to 1939 there was in this country the general opinion that the chief of the Liberal party, the very distinguished, respected and unique figure, the late William Lyon Mackenzie King, and his cabinet had promised during the previous election that there would be no conscription of manpower for military service. Whether he was right or wrong, it is not my purpose to discuss the merits of the question today. But the promise was made, in Parliament and out of Parliament. Then after war was declared and the situation became serious, according to the reports received from overseas, it was felt, because of strong pressures or as a matter of conscience, that the promise given should be withdrawn. What did Mr. King and his cabinet do? They had passed in Parliament a bill requesting the people of this country to allow them to be relieved of their promise. We had a plebiscite and the matter was dealt with in that way.

Honourable senators, in my humble comprehension of public life, that was the proper way to settle such a question. Only those who were affected by the promise made were able to free Mr. King and his cabinet from the promise.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Was that when he forced people to enlist voluntarily?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: My friend is joking, and of course I don't mind a little joke.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I think you are straying far from the purview of the bill before us. I do not think it is a proper time, in the last stretch of the session, to revive the conscription issue. I would ask honourable senators to restrict their remarks to the terms of the bill before us.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I respect Your Honour's decision. Nevertheless, if there is an example to be given of a circumstance in which the sacred word of Parliament should be fulfilled, or a release obtained from the interested parties, I think this is the best example. However, let us return to the main issue. I agree that the example I have given may not be a proper subject for discussion. My point is that Parliament having promised, indeed having guaranteed, to those persons who accepted a judgeship that they were appointed for life, it is only those judges thus affected who should be consulted in the matter.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, I of course bow to the decision of His Honour, and do not rise in respect to that matter. May I ask my honourable friend when was a promise made to the judges, and in what terms were they guaranteed that their salaries would not be changed from time to time in accordance with the mood and the wisdom of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: That guarantee was given by the terms of the letters patent of their appointment. I am not talking about increases in salaries or indemnities, but as to whether or not the judges were appointed for life.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Pardon me. My question is: In what terms and where was the promise made to new judges who were appointed that there would never be a change in their remuneration?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I think it is very clear in the terms of the British North America Act. The judges were appointed during good behaviour. To our knowledge that means for life except in case of sickness or misconduct. Consequently, these judges were appointed for life, and now the Parliament of Canada is ready to change all this and say to them, "You were appointed for life, but even if you are in good health—"

Hon. Mr. Monette: Is the honourable senator opposed to this bill as far as the question of retirement at the age of 75 years of age is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: After listening to my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) I begin to suspect that the sympathy he referred to in his speech is not so profound with respect to judges who are already appointed. But I would ask him to be good enough to let me proceed. He has said that he is reluctant about the bill because it alters the length of time during which judges can sit if they remain in good health and are able to carry out their duties properly. I thought when listening to the very distinguished bâtonnier of the Montreal bar, the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), and my equally distinguished colleague and compatriot of Laprairie (Hon. Mr. Monette), that they were sympathetic to those who are actually affected by this law; but I am the more so because I believe in the sanctity of a contract. When a contract is entered into by two parties there is only one thing that may change it without an amendment. According to British parliamentary practice, after which we pattern our own system, only the custom may change it. My good friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) will recall that before the Code Napoléon came into existence the laws of France were based on custom: Coutumes de Paris, Coutumes d'Orléans, and so forth. In Great Britain the system of law has been based on custom also. In the case of county court judges and district court judges the custom established in Canada some 78 years ago was that the Canadian Parliament had the right to force them to retire at 75 years of age; but no custom has been established in the case of superior court judges and appeal court judges. Consequently, I think that, in all fairness to these judges, we should adopt and follow the precedent established by the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe and as suggested by the Right Honourable Mr. Bennett. In 1927 Mr. Lapointe brought in legislation that limited the ages of supreme court judges already appointed to the age of 75. They were to draw two-thirds of their indemnity upon retirement. Later Mr. Bennett described on the floor of the House of Commons what a great injustice Mr. Lapointe had done to the judges of the supreme court, and Mr. Lapointe, realizing this fact, acceded to Mr. Bennett's point of view and the law was amended so that the judges would remain retired but would be paid a full indemnity.

Hon. Mr. Croll. That was three years later.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What makes you think this present legislation will not be corrected three years later?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Or three weeks later.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I would like it to be done now.

It has been pointed out by my good friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and others that Mr. Lapointe yielded to the opinion of Mr. Bennett in granting a full indemnity to those judges who had already been retired. We should do likewise with the judges of the superior and appeal courts. Consequently I want to register my protest against the bill as it stands today. I do not want to see on our statute books any law whereby Parliament breaks a contract, for in the future members of both houses of Parliament might use is as a precedent.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

THE CONGO

APPROVAL OF PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN FORCES IN UNITED NATIONS OPERATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the following message from the House of Commons:

Resolved,—That it be resolved by the ... House of Commons:

That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo, and that this house do approve the same.

Ordered,—That a message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this house has adopted a resolution approving of the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo, and requesting their Honours to unite with this house in the approval of the same by filling up the blanks in the resolution with the words: "Senate and".

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the said resolution by filling up the blank spaces left therein with the words "Senate and".

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I was under the impression that the Senate would approve a resolution that it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo. Now we are merely asked to approve a motion to insert the words "Senate and".

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, to "approve the participation of Canadian forces . . . . "

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This was the procedure adopted when we sent an address to Her Majesty offering congratulations on the birth of a prince.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: At that time we joined in the congratulations to her Majesty.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It was exactly in this form.

Honourable senators, I shall be as brief as possible, as time is passing quickly. I think I learned in my college days that the Latin expression is tempus fugit.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Give us the facts.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators are aware of the serious situation which developed in the Republic of the Congo early in July, shortly after it had gained its independence. It will be remembered also that the republic gained its independence on June 30, 1960 after some 80 years, during which it was a colony of Belgium. A mutiny among the Congolese soldiers of the Force Publique rapidly spread through the Congo, and violence and disorder became so general as to threaten the existence of the state. This happened within a very short time after the Congolese gained their independence. Belgium, which had granted independence to the Congo on June 30, was obliged to use its military forces to try to restore order and, in any event, to protect the lives and property of Europeans residing in the country. Most of this violence was directed against Belgian nationals. Accordingly, there was a large-scale exodus of Europeans, which added to the difficulties facing the Congolese Government, which had been much dependent on European administrators and technicians for continuing the essential services of government.

The Congolese cabinet, on July 10, appealed to Dr. Ralph Bunche, representative of the Secretary General in the Congo, to arrange for United Nations technical and administrative assistance to the Congo for the purpose of reorganizing its administration services. In view of the seriousness of the situation, the United Nations Secretary General returned from Geneva to New York on July 11 and began consultations with representatives of various Governments, including those of the independent African states.

On July 12 and 13 the United Nations received an urgent appeal from the Congolese Government to send United Nations military forces to the Congo, where there had been fighting between the Force Publique and Belgian troops. Because of a breakdown in distribution services, there was danger of an acute food shortage in some of the larger centres, including Leopoldville, which has a population of about 400,000, of whom between 23,000 and 25,000 are whites. On July 13 the Secretary General informally drew the whole situation to the attention of members of the Security Council, and that same evening the council met in formal session to consider the Congo situation. This was done at the request of the Secretary General. In opening the meeting of the council the Secretary General explained his three-point program, which called for a relatively long-term program of technical assistance, which in the early stages would involve administrative assistance to the Congolese authorities in reorganizing their internal security forces which had been very much disrupted by the mutiny and the removal of the Belgian officers. In addition, there was need for a short-term stopgap arrangement for meeting the emergency situation in the Congo through the establishment of a United Nations military force, composed mainly of contingents from French-speaking African states. This force would be used to restore order and protect property and the lives of the people. Finally, there was to be an emergency program for the supplying of food to take care of the food shortage. The Secretary General asked the Security Council to support this program of assistance to the Congo.

On July 14 the Security Council adopted a draft resolution, proposed by Tunisia, which authorized the Secretary General to take the necessary steps. I have here a copy of that resolution, but I think it will be sufficient if I explain briefly what it is all about. It also called upon Belgium to withdraw its troops. The vote was 8 in favour, none against, with 3 abstentions, namely, the United Kingdom, France and China, which had some doubt about the clause calling for the withdrawing of Belgian troops.

A second session of the Security Council took place on July 20 and 21 in response to pressure to have Belgian troops withdraw quickly and in order to hear a progress report of the Secretary General on the development of the United Nations operations in the Congo. On the afternoon of July 21 the Security Council adopted another resolution, this time submitted by Ceylon and Tunisia, which called upon Belgium to implement speedily the earlier call for the withdrawal of Belgian military forces and commended the Secretary General for the prompt action taken to carry out the constructive elements of the earlier resolution. The Secretary General, honourable senators, had acted with dispatch and efficiency, and to meet the need for technical assistance he had arranged for the loan of military officers serving in Palestine within the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, known as UNTSO. Five Canadian officers were among the group selected. They had volunteered for service in the Congo, and from the early days of the United Nations operations there they have been serving with great distinction. The Secretary General also made rapid arrangements for moving contingents into the Congo to form the United Nations force under the command of General Von Horn, of Sweden, who was formerly the Chief of Staff of UNTSO in Palestine.

Honourable senators will be interested to know that according to latest reports the United Nations now has more than 11,000 men in the Congo. There are infantry units from Morocco, 2,465; Ghana, 2,412; Tunisia, 2,151; Ethiopia, 1,860; Guinea, 741; Liberia, 225.

In addition to these, two white battalions went to the Congo, one from Ireland, composed of 678 men and one from Sweden composed of 620 men. An African unit from Mali will arrive shortly with a total of 568 men.

For the most part, therefore, honourable senators, it is these African battalions that are being used to maintain order among the Congolese people. The administrative and support troops are being drawn from non-African countries like Brazil, Canada, India, Norway and Yugoslavia, and an air component of the forces has been established in which a number of officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force will play an important part.

To assist General Von Horn in establishing his headquarters staff, contingents serving with the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East have been loaned to the general. Five Canadian specialists who are also volunteers were among the UNEF officers selected. As in the case of the UNTSO officers, this lending was made with the approval of the Canadian Government.

Honourable senators will also remember that to meet the food shortage the Secretary General appealed to various countries for gifts of foodstuffs which could be easily transportable. Canada rose to the occasion and offered to airlift 20,000 pounds of canned pork and 20,000 tons of whole milk powder, and these commodities were airlifted to Leopoldville by four R.C.A.F. North Star aircraft. In response to a further request from the Secretary General the Government put these four R.C.A.F. aircraft at the disposal of the United Nations for a 30-day period to operate in the airlift from Pisa to Leopoldville.

On July 15 the Secretary General inquired whether the Canadian Government would be in a position to provide signal personnel and equipment. After Canadian army officers had had an opportunity to explore this inquiry in detail with the appropriate United Nations officials the Government decided, on July 28, to provide a Canadian contingent of men of the armed services which would include about 200 signal personnel and a small headquarters detachment for administering the needs of the Canadian contingent. Arrangements for selecting and concentrating and dispatching signal personnel and equipment are going forward and Parliament is now being asked to approve the action taken in this regard. As honourable senators know, a resolution was introduced in the other place on the first day of August to this effect. I have no doubt that this honourable body will wish to take corresponding action in order to ensure that the Government will be in a position to make this valuable contribution to the United Nations forces which I have been attempting to describe.

The significance of this whole matter is the role of the United Nations in the Congo, which cannot be fully measured at this time, but there is no doubt that it has far-reaching implications for the Congo and also for Africa and for the United Nations itself. Success in the Congo might lay the groundwork for many operations of the United Nations in Africa, especially as regard to the peaceful parts of the program. I would like to say further that success in the Congo and in Africa might establish the United Nations as a strong influence for peace in the world. On the other hand, failure in the Congo might have more serious consequences for the United Nations. It is therefore with these profound implications in mind that I commend to this honourable body the motion now before us.

Perhaps I should say a word about the constitutional aspect. Honourable senators will remember that during the Middle East crisis, in November 1956, the Government of the day, headed by the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, passed an order in council whereby the Government was authorized to send some 2,500 officers and men to take part in the United Nations Emergency Force. Parliament was not in session at the time, and I understand, and I hope I am correct in this, that a special session was called for the purpose of considering the matter covered by this order in council. Parliament which then assembled ratified the arrangements which had been made under an order in council by Canada with the United Nations. This time we are in session and it is not necessary to pass any order in council. We therefore have it in our power to deal with this matter in the usual legal manner.

I commend the resolution to this honourable house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I am still somewhat concerned about the form of the motion, ". . . that the Senate do unite with the House of Commons". The motion reads: That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the said resolution by filling up the blank spaces left therein with the words "Senate and".

This motion does not refer to any resolution, and it does not say that we approve of any particular resolution. It may be in a form which was adopted previously, but in the records of this house no reference will be made to the particular resolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I agree to a certain extent with the remarks of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). This motion does, however, imply that we are uniting with the House of Commons in the said resolution; it also implies that a resolution was adopted by the House of Commons. But it does not make clear to honourable senators the substance of that resolution.

I would suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that he might agree to change his motion to read as follows:

> Moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Monette:
>
> Resolved, that it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo;
>
> That this house do approve the same; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house that the Senate have adopted the said resolution, and have filled up the blanks therein with the words: "Senate and".

I think, honourable senators, that would be more comprehensible. It certainly would cover the substance of the resolution passed by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that agreeable to the honourable Leader of the Government?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That point had not occurred to me. I have in my hand the resolution which was passed in the other house, and it appears to be the same as the one now before us. However, I am agreeable to do anything that will bring the matter properly before this house.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, on the point of order now being discussed, I must say I find it difficult to agree with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that there is anything wrong with what is being done here. It seems to me very simple: the resolution refers in identical terms and conditions to what was done in the other place.

The Hon. the Speaker: But those terms are not in the motion. The motion reads as follows:

> ... that the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the said resolution by filling up the blank spaces left therein with the words "Senate and".

There is nothing in the motion that sets out the substance of the resolution that was adopted by the House of Commons, and that is the basis of the objection by the honourable Leader of the Opposition. The substance of the resolution passed in the other house is not clearly stated. Therefore, the members of the Senate are justified in complaining that they are not enlightened by the motion that has been made by the honourable Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is the resolution not contained in the Orders of the Day of this house?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We are dealing with your motion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The order reads:

> That it be resolved by the ... House of Commons: That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian Forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo, and that this house do approve the same.

And we go on from there.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But we are dealing now with the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: The debate is on the motion moved by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine).

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: We are not discussing a motion in the House of Commons.

The Hon. the Speaker: We cannot debate a motion that is before the other house or that is merely on our Orders of the Day. We are debating this particular motion moved by the honourable Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I agree with the proposed amendment, in order that the matter may be put properly before the house.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: You agree with the motion as suggested by His Honour the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we all agree that we have before the house today a very important resolution, and it is not likely that there will be much difference of opinion about it. I say that this resolution will probably be adopted here in the same form as approved by the House of Commons, without any change whatsoever.

The problems with which the new Republic of the Congo is faced, we all must admit, are very severe, and I fear if they are not resolved in the very near future they may have far-reaching effects.

Honourable senators will recall that when the Belgian administration and many businessmen withdrew from that country the Congo suddenly found itself propelled into a position of national responsibility without having its own trained and experienced personnel, and with a serious shortage of qualified native administrators.

The Congo, as the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has intimated, recognized its weaknesses and its needs and went to the United Nations for assistance. The United Nations, as has been said, promptly offered that assistance, and Canada, as a member of the United Nations, has now come forward and expressed its willingness to do its share. Our contribution at the present time, as I understand it from newspaper reports, is to consist of 500 signallers and supply personnel. These persons will serve in the United Nations Congo Force. The approval of Parliament to that proposal will be given when we join with the House of Commons in adopting the resolution.

Honourable senators, I said that the United Nations acted promptly, and in that respect I wish to commend the actions of Dag Hammarskjold, the Secretary General. Hardly had the Security Council risen after approving the sending of the emergency force, than the Secretary General was on his way to the Congo. There, by his skill, tact and wisdom, he assured the people of that country—which I might remind honourable senators is located right on the Equator—that the peoples of all parts of the world, in the north, south, east and west, have united to assist the Congo to become a prosperous and peace-loving nation. I cannot commend too highly the Secretary General for his outstanding work and dynamic action in this grave international emergency.

Honourable senators, I also wish to commend our own Government for the action which it has taken, and in which it had the wholehearted and enthusiastic approval of the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, a man who, you will recall, introduced the motion to set up the emergency force, to which the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) referred, during the Suez crisis. The Leader of the Opposition in the other house is highly regarded by all, irrespective of political persuasions, for his sympathetic understanding and his wide and highly respected experience in matters of this kind. I was particularly pleased when I noted that he had given his wholehearted support to this motion. I was also pleased that the same wholehearted support was given the motion by the Leader of the C.C.F. party.

Honourable senators, I can only wish that the Government had acted more promptly in this matter. I am not criticizing the Government for what it has done, but let me say that when I read a week ago that little Ireland, a country which has never claimed to take a prominent part in the work of the United Nations—as many Canadians have claimed Canada has done—was going to send a force to Africa, I asked myself, what is Canada going to do? That was about a week ago. Then when I saw on television pictures of the troops from Ireland, numbering 650, actually boarding the plane to leave on the trip, I almost gave up hope that Canada was going to take any action.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have had officers there for some time. They were drawn from the forces in the Middle East.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But up to now Canada has not taken any action to send troops. Little Ireland sent 650 troops to the Congo a week ago while Canada sat back contented to have a few officers go there to make some inquiries.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Was not the original idea to send only coloured troops into the Congo and then it was decided to send white troops as well?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friend may be right, but I don't know how the troops from Ireland would qualify under the category he has mentioned.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Some people might also doubt the wisdom of sending Irishmen to make peace.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Many members of this house might agree with the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). But I am happy that the Government has now made this move, belated as it is, and it will certainly receive my wholehearted support.

The house may be interested to know that on Saturday last it was my privilege to meet the Premier of the new Republic of the Congo, Mr. Patrice Lumumba, at a luncheon reception which His Honour the Speaker arranged. It was a fine display of the friendliness the people of Canada feel toward Mr. Lumumba, and he appreciated it deeply. I had a conversation with him, and while he spoke French and I did not follow everything he said I understood him sufficiently to know that he appreciated his reception in Canada. He is a man with a heavy burden on his shoulders. Only 32 years of age and with no experience in the affairs of government, he has suddenly taken over grave responsibilities. During the luncheon he delivered an address in which he made it understood that neither he nor the people of his country are communists and that they have no intention of becoming the vassals of any communist country or, in fact, of any other state. His address was most impressive and reassuring. I can only say in conclusion that I hope that these new-found friends who have spoken so highly of Canada will become a prosperous, happy people and a respected member of a great peace-loving family of all the nations of the world.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as usual I suppose I shall stand quite alone in the remarks that I propose to make. But that is not very important. I am delighted, of course, to know that we are sending food and supplies to a people in distress. I am also delighted to know that we are playing a part in the efforts of the United Nations which, in its good judgment, is sending troops into the Congo. I am not prepared, however, to join in the round of enthusiasm and joy with which we are entering into this enterprise. I am inclined to be a little more thoughtful and wonder just where we are going. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has said that our action has far-reaching significance, both for the Congo and for the United Nations. I cannot help but dampen my enthusiasm by wondering what that significance amounts to. The Congo has been ruled by a ruthless autocracy for many years, and I have no doubt that abuses of the worst character have been in evidence there over past decades. Finally there has been a release of tension by those who have been holding the populace down and the result has been a burst of lawlessness, and so on. I would like to know just what it is the natives of the Congo are rebelling against. I have not been told that. I cannot think they are just enjoying lawlessness, murder and rapine. There may be some of this but it should be short-lived and not difficult to suppress. But what is behind it? Are these people rebelling because over the years they have been dispossessed by their rulers of the natural resources of their country and left landless to struggle for their place in the sun? What is the reason? Men don't rebel easily. Usually circumstances could not be worse with them when they take up arms and rebel.

I am just wondering what we are doing. Are we sending troops to the Congo to hold down the people for years to come? How long are our troops to remain in the Congo? I have heard it suggested they will be there for years. For what purpose? Are we introducing a precedent? Are we to send troops in the future to all places where governments are being overthrown by rebellion? I could name quite a number of situations of a somewhat similar character in South America where the only way to get rid of the ruling forces is to rebel. Sometimes that is the one weapon left in the hands of a suppressed people to rid themselves of their conquerors and oppressors. If there is another rebellion in South America, which has had a crop of rebellions right along, are we to join with others in sending troops to suppress the rebellion and support the Government of the day, be it good, bad or indifferent? Where are we drifting? We have had rebellions right in this country of ours, and not very long ago at that. I am just wondering, when the Papineau and Mackenzie rebellion took place against suppression and a corruption of government which we now all deplore, how much good it would have done to Canada had outside troops entered our country to suppress the revolution. Would any lasting good have been accomplished? Would we have come out of our difficulties more rapidly? If our Irish friends, for instance, who are going to the Congo and are being so highly commended for doing so, or people from any other country in the world, had crowded in here with arms and ammunition to suppress the revolution, just what would have been the lasting result of that action? I know it is not popular at all to be thoughtful in times of enthusiasm, and particularly in times of military enthusiasm, but I must say that while I am not ready to vote against the sending of our men into the Congo—because I feel that it is necessary to protect the women and children, and the men as well from the lawlessness that has been reported—it must, however, be in emergency and nothing more. I for one am not prepared to see our young men spend some years in the Congo holding down its people in the interests of any Government—I don't care what it may be. Our young men have their lives to live here in Canada, not on the Equator holding down a Negro population.

Honourable senators, I intend to vote for this resolution, but with this reservation, that I hope we shall know more about the situation in the future than we know now; that we shall know why this disruption is taking place and that we shall not take part in the operations for any great length of time, unless the circumstances thoroughly justify our participating as a police force from outside holding down a protesting population. Let us cool off our enthusiasm, and send these men perhaps for the moment as an emergency, but let us be very careful indeed that we are not taking part in the local struggles of a people who are making their way to freedom by the ending of suppression.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I have just a word to say. This whole business illustrates, to my mind, what I have been preaching all my life: co-operation. The strength of co-operation is now seen in the United Nations Organization.

When men of good will get together to protect the culture which they believe to be the best, it is readily seen what results can be obtained. When each member nation of the United Nations does its small part a power is created that is strong enough to save the world.

We were in Europe, my colleague the Honourable Senator Robertson and I, when this crisis broke out and the shock was terrific. The worst shock came when we heard that the communists wanted to seize the Congo to spread their doctrine all over Africa.

But the United Nations acted rapidly and the step we are taking today is meant to save humanity as a whole, with its principles, its doctrines and its way of life.

Those who imagine that the United Nations is nothing but a forum for discussion see today that it does more than talk. It has acted with wisdom and, as long as it can effectively implement this solidarity and spirit of co-operation between peoples, it can save the world.

That is why I wholeheartedly endorse the resolution.

(Text):

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has given a warning for the future. I take it that it will be for the better. I will oppose this resolution for the same reason that I opposed the sending of troops to South Korea, when we were told that the war in Korea would be over soon, that it was just a skirmish that was going on in that area in Asia. However, the war lasted for two years. Many Canadians were killed and we got no benefit from it. I wonder what benefit we would get from sending troops to the Congo to act as policemen. This is why I oppose this resolution flatly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) agree to change the motion?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, I agree.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Monette:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the participation of Canadian forces in the United Nations operations in the Congo;

That this house do approve the same; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house that the Senate have adopted the said resolution and have filled up the blanks therein with the words: "Senate and".

Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is nearly 6 o'clock. Would it be in order for me to suggest that we rise now until 8 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: According to the rule, unless it is agreed otherwise, the house would reassemble at 7.30. Will that be too early to resume?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This is a special night for some of us.

With leave of the Senate the Honourable the Speaker called it 6 o'clock and left the Chair until 8 o'clock.

At 8 p.m., the sitting was resumed.

The Senate resumed the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette for the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators will recall that a similar bill, known as Bill C-70, was introduced in the other place during the final days of the 1959 session of Parliament. All the clauses in Bill C-70 were struck out in the other place save and except clause 4, which dealt with fishing agreements made in the province of British Columbia. Bill C-70, consisting of this one clause, was then passed by this honourable body on the last day of the sitting of Parliament last year. In clause 4, as passed last year, this particular section relating to fishing agreements in British Columbia was to remain in full force and effect until the 31st day of December this year.

Honourable senators will find the identical section set forth in clause 23 on page 12 of the present bill and they will note that there has been only one slight change made in this particular clause, namely, that it is now to remain in full force and effect until the 31st day of December 1961. I do not intend to make any further comment with respect to this particular section.

The present bill contains many changes from last year's bill. I do not propose to deal with the present bill section by section, but rather to make a few general observations with respect to the changes which are contemplated and which will be brought about by the passing of the present bill.

First of all, there are a number of substantive amendments, that is, amendments affecting the offences as they are spelled out in the law. In short, they deal with the amendments and provisions relating to conspiracy and several amendments with respect to the matter of unfair trade practices.

Secondly, there are a group of amendments which deal with procedural matters. These relate in particular to the new jurisdiction which it is proposed to confer on the Exchequer Court of Canada, an amendment permitting the issuing of a restraining order stantive amendments, that is, amendments without a conviction, and the further provision requiring that the commission must make certain additional specific findings where it appears that a combine has existed. I would refer honourable senators for an explanation of this to section 9 at page 3.

Thirdly, there are amendments consolidating related provisions of the Criminal Code and the Combines Investigation Act.

Fourthly, there is a group of amendments which might be called consequential amendments. These are represented in particular by new definitions resulting from a consolidation of the legislation and a certain number of amendments dealing with changes in the cross references.

Finally, among others there are amendments consolidating the related provisions of the Criminal Code and the Combines Investigation Act which ensure the uninterrupted continuation of the law as set out in section 411 of the Criminal Code.

First of all I would like to deal briefly with the procedural amendments. These are probably the most far-reaching. This bill provides that, with the consent of the accused, criminal proceedings under Part V of the act—I would refer honourable senators to page 6—criminal proceedings can by clause 19 be launched in the Exchequer Court. And further, clause 19 of the present bill grants to the Exchequer Court all the powers and jurisdiction of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction under the Criminal Code and under this act. However, the important thing to bear in mind with respect to this particular amendment is that the accused must consent to the trial of the criminal offence in the Exchequer Court before this court can deal with it.

In passing it might be pointed out that clause 19 further provides that all such trials shall be without a jury, and any appeal from the Exchequer Court lies directly to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The bill further provides that the Government, without the consent of the accused, can proceed in the Exchequer Court if such proceedings are not of a criminal nature and are instituted for the sole purpose of obtaining restraining orders or orders for dissolution of the corporation which has been charged. This right is granted under the powers which are conferred upon the Attorney General of Canada by section 31, as found on page 5 of the bill, and by operation of clause 19 of the bill as set out on page 10. Briefly, section 31 gives to the Attorney General of Canada the right to proceed in a superior court of criminal jurisdiction for the purpose of obtaining orders of restraint and of dissolution.

Clause 19, on page 10 of the bill, confers on the Exchequer Court of Canada the entire jurisdiction of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

The next amendments which I propose to deal with will, if accepted, eliminate the definition of a combine in the present law. The definition is replaced with the wording of section 411 of the Criminal Code, which has been used for nearly all of the recent prosecutions. Section 411 of the Criminal Code is united with the proposed new section 32 and is deleted from the Criminal Code.

In the new section 32, on page 6 of the bill, an indictable offence is defined in paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of subclause (1). Those definitions are clear, and I do not think they require any elaboration by me.

For further clarity the proposed bill spells out seven forms of business co-operation which are allowed and which provide a defence to a charge of conspiracy. I would refer honourable senators to page 7 of the bill, subsection (2) of section 32, paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g). However, it should be pointed out and emphasized that under subsection (3) of section 32, none of the definitions apply,

> ...if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement has lessened or is likely to lessen competition unduly in respect of one of the following:
>
> (a) prices,
> (b) quantity or quality of production,
> (c) markets or customers, or
> (d) channels or methods of distribution,
>
> or if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement has restricted or is likely to restrict any person from entering into or expanding a business in a trade or industry.

The matter of advertising is dealt with in this bill, and the clause about misleading advertising in last year's bill, which was not proceeded with, is now modified as follows.

Under section 33c, found on page 9 of the present bill, honourable senators will note these words:

> Every one who, for the purpose of promoting the sale or use of an article, makes any materially misleading representation to the public, by any means whatever, concerning the price at which such or like articles have been, are, or will be, ordinarily sold, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

This, however, by clause 2 of section 33c does not apply to,

> ...a person who publishes an advertisement that he accepts in good faith for publication in the ordinary course of his business.

The next amendments I would like to deal with, and which are covered by this particular bill, are the retail price amendments, with respect to loss-leader, a term which is mentioned throughout the bill. I refer honourable senators to clause 14, on page 9 of the bill. The new amendment with respect to these two matters is substantially the same as the one which was proposed in the bill last year. This amendment also removes from the former draft the requirements that certain things were done persistently, and instead it substitutes this phrase, namely, "making a practice of" for the former expression "persistently" except in the subsection dealing with disparagement of worth as outlined in paragraph (b) of section 14.

The intention of this particular section is to prevent a producer from exerting pressure on a retailer to sell at a price stipulated by the producer. One particular field in which this section has worked harshly is where retailers use brand names of quality products as loss-leaders. For example, a product would be advertised and sold at a price substantially below its cost in order to attract customers into the retailer's shop. While the public gains in the short run from the cut in price, the producer and his other distributors suffer from this undercutting of their market, and in the long run the loss-leader seller might bludgeon out a monopolistic control of the trade.

The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission studied the problem of loss-leaders in 1959 but at that time did not consider it a serious threat. However, the Government now appears to have taken a different view. What the amendment does is to permit a producer, by refusing to sell to a retailer, to punish the retailer who persistently sells this product as a loss-leader. This amendment also permits discipline where a retailer has indulged in the practice of disparaging the producer's product in his advertising or has rendered persistent bad service in connection with the product. In all probability the producer had this right before this amendment was proposed but now a specific statement assures the producer of this definite right.

Another matter dealt with is that of advertising allowances. The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission published a study in 1958 on discriminatory pricing practices in the grocery trade, indicating that by way of advertising allowances large-scale retailers were obtaining an advantage over their smaller competitors. This finding coupled with the report of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads of Food Products in 1959, that promotional costs were adding unduly to food prices, has resulted in this new section 33(b) relating to advertising allowances.

In exchange for carrying out a certain type of advertising campaign for a particular producer, the retailer would qualify for a discount or a rebate off the price of the product sold to him by the producer. Under section 33 (b), as found on page 8 of the bill, the large retailer is not to be allowed any greater proportion of discount than the ratio of the total value of sales bears to the total value sold to a smaller competitor.

The amendment restricts the first abuse, namely, discrimination between purchasers. However, it provides no assurance that the amount spent on advertising will fall off, except that the larger retailer will now have less of a spread to spend on advertising.

The last matter I would like to deal with is mergers and monopolies, and for a definition of these terms I would refer honourable senators to paragraph 2 of clause 1 of the bill.

The definition of both "merger" and "monopoly" in this paragraph is so plain that I do not think I have to elaborate in any way. Honourable senators will note that the words are separately defined and the respective definitions include these words: "is or is likely to be lessened to the detriment or against the interest of the public", and "are likely to operate it to the detriment or against the interest of the public".

It is felt that with the new definitions no court would be likely to make a conviction merely on the ground that competition was lessened, without taking into consideration whether the public interest is harmed. It is felt that the courts should now deal with mergers or monopolies by standards which are more like those to be applied to combines. This would mean that public detriment would have to be shown before a conviction could be made.

One other point about the new definition of a merger is that it applies to vertical as well as horizontal groupings. Acquisition of the source of supply or the sales outlets is involved just as much as the acquisition of a competitor.

This changed view with respect to mergers is the thing that gives special importance to the new proposed role for the Exchequer Court to which I referred earlier. Under the present bill the Attorney General will have the sole discretion to go to the Exchequer Court, if he merely wishes to ask for an order of restraint or an order of dissolution of a merger that has already been made, instead of prosecuting the parties. Under the present act the Government cannot do this; its sole remedy is that of prosecution. This bill now proposes that the Government will be able to ask for a breakup of mergers already made and entered into if the Government judges them to be against public interest but to have been made in good faith. The Government would be able to ask the Exchequer Court to rule whether any merger or monopoly, or perhaps even a combine, was to the public detriment or not, and the Exchequer Court could make a decision on straight economic grounds without the odium of a criminal prosecution.

Finally, if such cases occurred often enough it is believed that the Exchequer Court would soon build up a body of jurisprudence defining the public detriment, and business moves which must now be either ignored or prosecuted would be judged by experienced judges on straightforward economic grounds.

Honourable senators, I do not propose saying anything further with respect to the bill, except that when it receives second reading I shall propose that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I understand that a number of associations, individuals and corporations desire to appear before our committee to make extensive and full representations with respect to various clauses of the bill. Further, there is no doubt in my mind that a number of amendments to the bill will be suggested by those people who make the representations. I know that I express the thoughts and wishes of every senator present today when I say that the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate will give the fullest consideration to all the representations which are made to it.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I think we can thank the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) for his lucid explanation of the various parts of this rather complicated bill; but I do not think that from listening to him any honourable senator would have derived the idea that this measure has been one of the most controversial and most bitterly fought in the whole history of this session. My honourable friend was the acme of sweetness and light, and I am afraid that, though I am enlightened, I shall not be able to follow him entirely in that direction.

This bill contains no matters of general principle. It is like so many other amending measures that we have before us—the only general principle which it involves is the principle that we need some amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. So there is no use my attempting to deal with any matter of general principle. The only thing to do is to refer to the more important sections of the bill and to discuss them as indeed was done by my honourable friend from Ottawa East. This bill reminds me rather of the story about the curate's egg. A nervous young curate, who went to breakfast with his bishop, was given a bad egg, and the bishop said to him, "I am sorry, Mr. Jones, I see you have a bad egg before you." To which the curate replied, "Oh, no, my lord, it is good in parts." Well, this bill is good in parts, but I must add that in other parts I think it has a very malodorous smell indeed.

There are four principal changes, in my view, which this bill proposes to make in the present Combines Investigation Act. Of two of them I approve, of two of them I disapprove, and those are, to my mind, the bad parts of the egg.

The first important change that this bill proposes is one which was mentioned by my friend from Ottawa East. It is designed to bring into the Combines Investigation Act those provisions of the Criminal Code which have the same effect as certain sections of the Combines Investigation Act and that, to my mind, is all to the good. At the present time the law of this country against combinations in restraint of trade is found in two statutes: sections 32 and 34 of the Combines Investigation Act set out the crimes which the act is designed to cure, and similarly, sections 411 and 412 of the Criminal Code set out the same kind of crimes against the community that we generally understand as being part of the things which the Combines Investigation Act is supposed to cure. In the present Combines Investigation Act honourable senators will see large numbers of references to sections 411 and 412 of the Criminal Code. The bill before us eliminates those references but brings into the act and consolidates in the one act these two sets of provisions, and it provides for the continuity of proceedings between one act and the other act, I think, in a completely adequate way. Understandably a good many of the amendments to the present act which will be found in this bill result simply and solely from this process of consolidation. I think that is a wise and a useful step.

The second way in which this bill seeks to change the present act is in respect of section 32, which deals with offences in relation to trade. The basic part of the bill which defines these offences in relation to trade is subsection (1) of the proposed new section 32, and that subsection (1) is taken practically verbatim from section 411 of the Criminal Code: It says:

> 32. (1) Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person
>
> (a) to limit unduly the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article,
>
> (b) to prevent, limit or lessen, unduly, the manufacture or production of an article, or to enhance unreasonably the price thereof,
>
> (c) to prevent, or lessen, unduly, competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, storage, rental, transportation or supply of an article, or in the price of insurance upon persons or property, or
>
> (d) to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any article,
>
> is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

That section has been in the Criminal Code in the same wording for many years, and there have been a very large number of prosecutions under it and a great deal of jurisprudence has grown up on it.

Let us see what the Government proposes to do with respect to this section. It proposes to insert as subsection (2) of section 32 a statement of things which are not offences under subsection (1). Subsection (2) reads:

> (2) Subject to subsection (3), in a prosecution under subsection (1) the court shall not convict the accused if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relates only to one or more of the following:
>
> (a) the exchange of statistics,
>
> (b) the defining of product standards,
>
> (c) the exchange of credit information,
>
> (d) definition of trade terms,
>
> (e) co-operation in research and development,
>
> (f) restriction of advertising, or
>
> (g) some other matter not enumerated in subsection (3).

I will come to subsection (3) in a moment.

Now, after having set out the crimes in subsection (1) and defined them very fully, what is the need for going on in subsection (2) and saying what is not a crime? It is an extremely strange way of drafting a statute. It is bad draftmanship. To my mind there are potential dangers about it to which I propose to refer in a moment.

No one has ever supposed under the old statute, section 411, that an exchange of statistics or of credit information, or of co-operation in research or of any of these other items, constituted a crime under section 32 (1), the former section 411 of the Criminal Code. No one has ever been prosecuted for doing any of these things which are set out in the new subsection (2).

Hon. Mr. Monette: Will the honourable senator allow a question? Subsection (2) says the court shall not convict if, in the words of paragraph (g), the alleged offence relates to "some other matter not enumerated in subsection (3)." Will the honourable senator let me have his views on that?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am coming to that in a few minutes, if my honourable friend will bear with me.

As I say, no one has ever been prosecuted for doing any of the things that are mentioned in this new subsection (2). It is a most peculiar way of proceeding. It is as if someone sought to amend the definition of murder in the Criminal Code by saying: provided that no man shall be deemed to be guilty of murder if—(a) he speaks angrily to his wife or, (b) threatens to throw his mother-in-law out of the house or, (c) spanks his children—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —or, (d) does not kill anybody.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: —or, (d) does not kill anybody. I thank my honourable friend.

What is the reason for inserting this extraordinary provision of what is not a crime in the middle of a definition of what is a crime? Apparently it stems from a submission made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to the old MacQuarrie Commission in 1950. I quote from their submission:

> It is submitted that it should be possible to specify a number of things which are not to the detriment of the public and which businessmen may consequently do without being liable to prosecution under the act. To the extent that this could be done, it would reduce the area of uncertainty which at present covers practically the whole field, so far as joint action with competitors is concerned and would be a real forward step.

We are told by the Minister of Justice that it is desirable to insert this subsection (2), this definition of non-crimes because in some cases manufacturers fear they might be prosecuted if they did the things that the subsection authorizes them to do.

I take leave to express the strongest doubt about that statement. As I say, there has never been a prosecution for doing any of the things set out in subsection (2). The minister himself admits, at least by implication, that this subsection is unnecessary. He made a rather extraordinary statement to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce of the other place, which appears at page 687 of the proceedings. I quote from the report:

> Mr. Fulton: On subsection (2), I have explained in the house that it has been represented to us by responsible businessmen—in my view and in the view of those who advise me, with some justification—that the law, in its interpretation and application by the courts in the jurisprudence which has been built up, has raised, in their minds a concern that the combination part of the combines legislation is so far-reaching and throws the net so wide that they may not get together and have consultations, even for purposes which everyone here, I am satisfied, would recognize to be innocent and desirable purposes, for fear that by coincidence or otherwise they might later be charged with having effected a combination as a result of those meetings and consultations.
>
> We said to them,—

This is the minister talking.

> —"We think you are exaggerating. Your fears are not really well founded because if you did confine your activities, and could establish you were confining them to one of these desirable purposes, you would not be prosecuted." They said, "Well, you may say that, but we are not certain; and, furthermore," they said, "you may be a reasonable person now but your own views might change."

So the minister himself admits that this subsection is really unnecessary, and in fact all that one can really take from it is that the subsection has been inserted for the sole purpose of being a sedative for the shattered nerves of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

If that were all, honourable senators, perhaps one could afford to ignore it and forget about it, but I do not think that this subsection is really quite as harmless as that. I wonder if it is good public policy to spell out these innocent activities in the act. Some of these trade combinations against which this legislation is designed have been shown to be pretty ruthless in their methods, and I am rather inclined to think that if you give them an inch they will take an ell.

The kind of danger that is to be apprehended from this sort of insertion in the legislation is well set out, I think, in a quotation from an American authority, a book entitled Monopoly and Free Enterprise by Messrs. Stocking and Watkins, in which they describe exactly the danger of the proposed amendments. This is the quotation:

> Trade associations frequently engage in a variety of activities some of which are perhaps innocent or even wholesome when considered separately but which together tend to curb competition and restrain trade. Standardization of products and cost accounting methods, for example, may eliminate waste and lower costs, but it also helps insure uniform prices among trade rivals. Exchange of information on the credit of customers may help reduce bad debts, but it may also serve as a basis for boycotting "undesirable" customers. Statistical reporting on prices, output, sales, shipment, stocks and the like may aid producers in independently formulating sound price and production policies, but it may also afford a basis for a tacit understanding to stabilize prices and curtail output.

I think it only fair to say that the Government has seen that danger and has attempted to deal with it by the subsection following subsection (2), about which my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) asked me a question a minute or two ago. It has said in subsection (3) that subsection (2)—that is the non-crimes subsection—does not apply if the non-crimes have the effect of lessening competition unduly in respect of one of the following:

(a) prices,
(b) quantity or quality of production,
(c) markets or customers, or
(d) channels or methods of distribution,

or if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement has restricted or is likely to restrict any person from entering into or expanding a business in a trade or industry.

It seems to me that this subsection simply adds to the confusion. We have the crimes defined in subsection (1), the non-crimes defined in subsection (2), and the exceptions to the non-crimes defined in subsection (3).

As I have said, subsection (1) is taken from section 411 of the Criminal Code; it has been on our books and has been interpreted by the courts for years. I do not think the Government ought to attempt to confuse the issue by bringing in two subsections, both of which to my mind are completely superfluous and unnecessary, and simply making the act more difficult for the courts to interpret.

Now, the third matter in which this bill attempts to change the present act, is the matter of resale price maintenance, on which a great deal of controversy has been aroused in the other place and in the country. As honourable senators will remember, the prohibition of resale price maintenance was first introduced into this act after a bitter parliamentary fight which lasted over the Christmas season in the year 1951. It is section 34 of the present act. I say, I think without any question as to being right, that this section has resulted in many cases of lower prices to the general public.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: It is amended by section 14 of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes. I have not come to that yet. I am dealing with the section in the present act, which is section 34. This section starts out by defining a dealer as including any manufacturer or supplier of an article or commodity. Then it says that no dealer shall make a contract with any retailer under which the retailer has got to resell articles sold to him by the dealer at a price specified by the dealer, or at not less than a minimum price specified by the dealer, or at a markup or discount specified by the dealer, or at a markup not less than a minimum markup specified by the dealer, or at a discount not greater than a maximum discount specified by the dealer.

Then it goes on to say that no dealer shall refuse to sell or supply an article to any retailer because that retailer has refused to resell the goods to the public at a minimum discount or a minimum price or a minimum markup specified by the dealer, or has resold or offered to resell to the public any of these articles without conforming to the requirements of the dealer in that respect. It concludes by saying that every person—that is every dealer—who violates this provision is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable on conviction to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to both.

In other words, section 34 as it reads now leaves a retailer, once he has purchased goods from a manufacturer or wholesaler, absolutely free to resell those goods to the public at any price that he may choose or that he can get for them. The manufacturer or wholesaler has no control over the retail price.

Let us see the amendment to this section 34 that is proposed by the Government in this present bill. It is, as my honourable friend from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) said, to be found in section 14 of the bill, on page 9. It adds a new subsection (5) to section 34 of the bill, providing:

Where, in a prosecution under this section, it is proved that the person charged...

That is the manufacturer or the wholesaler.

...refused or counselled the refusal to sell or supply an article to any other person, no inference unfavourable to the person charged shall be drawn from such evidence if he satisfies the court that he and any one upon whose report he depended had reasonable cause to believe and did believe

(a) that the other person...

That is the retailer.

...was making a practice of using articles supplied by the person charged as loss-leaders, that is to say, not for the purpose of making a profit thereon but for purposes of advertising;

(b) that the other person...

That is the retailer.

...was making a practice of using articles supplied by the person charged not for the purpose of selling such articles at a profit but for the purpose of attracting customers to his store in the hope of selling them other articles;

(c) that the other person was making a practice of engaging in misleading advertising...

And so on. And paragraph (d) talks about the other person making a practice of not providing the level of servicing that purchasers of such articles might reasonably expect.

In other words, this amendment reintroduces in some degree the control by the manufacturer or wholesaler of the price at which the retailer shall resell to the public the goods supplied to him, and it does it in a very effective way. If the retailer makes a practice of reselling these goods as loss-leaders or at a loss to himself for advertising purposes, his supply of these can be cut off by the manufacturer or by the wholesaler. That is a very powerful weapon in the hands of the manufacturer or the wholesaler, and all he has to do is to say that he believes, or that someone whom he believes has reported to him, that the retailer has been engaged in these practices of loss-leading or loss-selling.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does the subsection not provide that he must have reasonable cause to believe? A report would hardly be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, reasonable cause, but you can have a good deal of reasonable cause. Take the case of two retailers in a small town, one of whom engages from time to time in the practice of selling off goods at a loss. His opponent, who does not do that, reports to the manufacturer, and on the basis of that report, which the manufacturer believes, the manufacturer can cut off retailer No. 1 from the supply of these articles. The point about that is that it is in the hands of the manufacturer alone. It is private justice, if you like to call it justice. It is justice exercised by the manufacturer or wholesaler in his own interest against the unfortunate retailer.

What about the general public? They seem to have been forgotten in this mass of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and so on. Why should the general public be deprived of the advantage of buying goods more cheaply from one retailer than from another? For the reasons that I have tried to give, this section was bitterly and strongly opposed in the evidence given before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce of the other house. It was opposed by very important organizations, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, representing the farmers, and the Canadian Council of Consumers, representing many hundreds of thousands of housewives throughout the country; and by an organization representing many thousands of automobile-servicing and gas stations throughout the country who said that this section, if enacted, would put them even more under the thumb of the big oil companies and the big automobile parts companies than they are at the present time.

It was also opposed by a number of economists and professors from various universities, including Carleton, Queen's, Saskatchewan and McGill. I think a summary of the basis of the opposition from the economists is to be found in a few words from a statement made by the Professor of Economics at Queen's University, Dr. Skeoch. This is what he says about the amendments to section 34:

> The proposed amendments to section 34 are apparently based on three assumptions: (1) that the ban on resale price maintenance is fundamentally sound and desirable but (2) that certain practices have developed under section 34 which have been damaging to the small distributor and others, and (3) that the manufacturers should be given the power to restrain such practices by refusing supplies to dealers engaging in them.
>
> In fact, however, it can be demonstrated that the proposed amendments will effectively eliminate the ban on resale price maintenance, will provide no effective protection, either short run or long run for the small dealer, will open the door for discriminatory practices, will strengthen the position of the large distributor who controls private brands, will place in the hands of the manufacturer a degree of control over the final price of his products that is denied to other groups in the economy, and finally, is based on a profound misunderstanding of the way in which business is conducted.

Needless to remark, honourable senators, this Government has paid no attention to the complaints of the consumers or to the criticisms of the experts.

Let us see if we can find a practical example of how this famous amendment would be likely to work out in practice. Honourable senators will recall that it allows as a defence to the manufacturer or wholesaler the finding out that the retailer has been engaged in the practice of using articles supplied by the manufacturer or wholesaler as loss-leaders or of selling such articles not at a profit but to attract customers to his store in the hope of selling other articles. Well, let us think up some sort of an example. I suggest to my honourable friends that they might get into their automobile some day and take a drive through the city and look at the various gas stations that they pass on their way. At a few of those gas stations they will observe a large wire receptacle several feet high filled with a lot of rubber balls, of attractive colour and design, called beach balls. On this receptacle they will see a notice written, "One of these free with every $4 purchase." What you do, of course, is go into that service station, buy $4 worth of gasoline, get a beach ball free, and give it to your children to play with when they go to the beach or perhaps on the lawn at home. To simple-minded people like you and me, honourable senators, that would seem to be quite a harmless and innocent transaction. But not to this Government—oh, no! What is it that the owner of this service station is doing? Firstly, he is using those beach balls as a loss-leader, not for the purpose of making a profit but for the purpose of advertising. Secondly, he is giving away those beach balls, not with the purpose of selling them at a profit—for he does not sell them to anyone, he gives them away—but for the purpose of attracting customers to his store in the hope of selling some other article. Of course, this Government feels the manufacturer of the beach balls must be protected against having his product thrown on the market in this way, and the owner of the rival service station across the way, who does not happen to have any beach balls to give away to his customers who buy gasoline, has to be protected against this unfair competition. So under the proposed amendment to section 34 the manufacturer of the beach balls will be entitled to go to service station operator No. 1, and say to him, "No more beach balls for you, my friend, unless and until you agree to sell them to the public for at least 10 cents each"—or whatever the price may be.

I ask myself, I ask the Government, what in the world does it think it is achieving by legislation which is going to have such fantastic results as these? Whom does it think it is protecting? Oh, we have had a good deal of sententious eloquence from the Minister of Justice about protecting the interests of the small merchant. I discount those statements very much indeed. I do not believe that the small merchant is going to be protected by this sort of thing at all. Whom will the Government protect in the example that I have given? I suppose you could say that to some extent it is protecting the rival service station operator across the street from having beach ball competition against him; but the real protection it is giving is to the manufacturer of the beach balls. Now, honourable senators, I am not concerned with protecting the manufacturer or protecting the rival retailer. The people this Government has forgotten to protect are Mr. John Q. Public and his wife and family—the ordinary consumers in this country.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It has forgotten to protect the great mass of Canadian consumers. My honourable friend from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) spoke about loss-leaders and he admitted quite frankly what is a fact, that in 1959, only a year ago, the committee which inquired into that matter decided that it was not of sufficient importance to require legislation. I say why should there not be loss-leaders? Why should there not be sales below costs? The general public are the people who are going to benefit from them. Our economy is an economy of free competition, and I say that the general consumer is entitled to every benefit that competition in trade, in commerce, in manufacturing and everything else can give him, including the benefit of loss-leaders and sales below cost, if and when they occur.

Honourable senators, the whole of this legislation, this Combines Investigation Act, has been built up on the supposition that the consumer has got to be protected in a competitive economy, and therefore that mergers and things of that kind are not allowed. I say that this amendment violates the whole principle of the act; it brushes aside the interests of the consumer, which is the interest which the Government really should be considering. The Government pretends to be acting in the interests of the small retailer, but I do not believe it is. In fact, if this section proves to be of any use and benefit at all it will be to the manufacturer and the wholesaler. No wonder that the section has been opposed so strenuously by such large bodies of consumers as appeared before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons. Mark my words, honourable senators, if this section comes into effect, and if it has any force at all, it will hurt the general consumer of this country.

I said when I began, I think, that this bill reminds me rather of the curate's egg, and I must add to that that this proposed amendment is one of the most obnoxious and malodorous parts of the egg.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: May I ask the honourable senator one question? I want to come back to the example of the man who goes to the service station and is told that if he buys four gallons of gas he will get a baseball—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Beach ball.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I beg your pardon. We haven't many beaches in Newfoundland, so we haven't many beach balls. Why could that man not buy his four gallons of gas at a reasonable price instead of being forced to buy a beach ball also? He is forced to buy a beach ball, because if he purchased his four gallons of gas at the ordinary price he would not get a beach ball, would he?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: There is no change in the price of the gasoline. He could buy gasoline for exactly the same price across the street, but in the one case he is given a beach ball and in the other case he is not.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: The man who gives the beach ball away for nothing must be selling below a reasonable price and will go bankrupt eventually.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is his right.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, it is his right to go bankrupt if he wants to, but I think what will happen is that he will attract more purchasers for his gasoline.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is what will happen.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Then he is not selling at a reasonable price.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: There is no price attached to the beach ball. The beach ball is given away free.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: But the man across the street, who is not giving a beach ball away, must be charging too much for his gasoline.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That might be the case in Newfoundland, but that I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Oh, no, we are not as naïve as that in Newfoundland. The man who sells the four gallons of gasoline and gives away the beach ball must be making a small profit because he gives the beach ball for nothing while the other man must be making a bigger profit.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend can make a speech later on.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I am sorry I cannot follow the argument. Pardon me.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, there is one section to this bill which relates to export trade, and that is section 32, on page 7. Honourable senators will remember that subsection (1) of section 32 defines the crime of combining in restraint of trade, and subsections (2) and (3) I have already discussed. Then there is a new subsection (4), which says:

> (4) Subject to subsection (5), in a prosecution under subsection (1) the court shall not convict the accused if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relates only to the export of articles from Canada.

That, I think, is an extremely useful modification of the existing legislation. There are very sound reasons, to my mind, why the prohibition against combining to fix prices and markets and so on in domestic markets should not apply when Canadian producers and manufacturers get together to export to other countries. After all, this legislation is designed, as I have said, to protect the domestic consumer, and when you come to discuss export trade in these days you have got to realize that a very large proportion of the export trade of the world, particularly in communist countries, is carried on on a basis where the Government itself is the only trader. Well, you can imagine how difficult it would be for a whole series of individual manufacturers in Canada if faced with competition from an enormous Government unit like Russia which is able to make its own arrangements without combining, so I think it is a valuable thing that the Government has realized in this new amendment that these restraints or prohibitions against combining in the domestic trade should not apply to export trade. Indeed, there is a very good precedent for that in the United States. The United States has had for quite a number of years an act—I think it is called the Webb-Pomeroy Act—which specifically exempts sales outside of the United States by manufacturers in that country from the very stringent restrictions of the Sherman act and of other anti-trust legislation. So I think it is all to the good that this amendment should be inserted.

Of course it does entail certain dangers. If you allow people to combine for export trade they may in the very nature of things start talking about domestic trade as well, but the Government has recognized that possible danger and it has inserted a new subsection (5) immediately following subsection (4) which in effect says that the manufacturers will not get the benefit of subsection (4) if as a result something happens in the domestic market which injures domestic trade.

The only comment I have to make on this export trade amendment is that I do not very much admire the way the Government approached it. If it was proposing important amendments to this important act, the Combines Investigation Act—and it has been doing this for months and in fact for a year, because it introduced a preliminary bill last session—you would have thought that one of the first things it would consider would be the protection of the export trade of the country, putting our manufacturers in the same position in that respect as are the manufacturers in the United States, under the United States legislation to which I have referred. But when the bill came before us this session it contained no reference whatsoever to export trade. A large number of hearings were held by the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other place and it was during those hearings that a number of people made representations to the committee that export trade should be excluded from the act. Those were the fisheries association, the manufacturers of base metals and the lumber producers, all of whom are engaged very extensively in the export trade, and I do not need to underline to this house how extremely important our export trade is in the general scheme of our economy.

As a result of these representations an amendment was moved in the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other place by the members of the Opposition to exempt export trade from the provisions of the act. The Government, through the Minister of Justice, refused to accept the amendment, though the minister said he was keeping an open mind on the subject, and it was only a few days ago, after the Commons committee had concluded its laborious and lengthy investigation and the bill had gone back to the House of Commons, that the minister finally brought in this beneficial amendment with respect to export trade. Well there is joy in heaven over one sinner who repenteth, and I do not suppose it matters how soon or how late he repents. The minister has now repented and we have at last got into the bill this final amendment which I think will be of great benefit to our export trade.

Honourable senators, I am afraid I have spoken at unconscionable length. Those are the four sections of the bill which seem to be the most important. The first is the consolidation feature, with which I thoroughly agree. The second is the definition of non-crimes, which I think is perfectly stupid. The third is the attempt to bring back in by the back door resale price maintenance, which I have already described and to which I am opposed. The fourth is the loosening up of the bonds by which our export trade was formerly bound under this legislation.

If the bill goes to committee—and I understand the sponsor has said it will—I shall be very interested to hear the explanation by the Minister of Justice, if he appears before us, of the second and third points to which I have referred in my remarks this evening.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, first I want to commend the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Choquette) for his very calm and unimpassioned presentation of the effect of the amendments. Just how calm and unimpassioned it was one can judge after hearing the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and his very brilliant analysis of the bill, and the few things that he found in it on which he could express his agreement, and those things in it which he says are malodorous and should be removed from the bill.

I am not going to be very far apart from the honourable senator from Inkerman in what I have to say tonight. Since some of what I have to say about the bill cannot be exactly classified as praise, probably something which I think is good in the bill should be mentioned first.

The bill does provide a procedure for enjoining parties by injunction from the continuance of trade practices that may be in violation of the act without taking a prosecution. In other words, we are paralleling more closely the procedure in the United States. Heretofore we have had in the statute only the provision that at the time a conviction is made in a proceeding for an illegal combination, an injunction might be obtained at that time from the judge who recorded the conviction; or, subsequently, an application might be made. By the bill we now have the additional provision under which this injunction process may be sought without any conviction having been obtained or without any proceeding, which would in the ordinary way lead to a conviction, having been taken. That honourable senators will find on page 5 of the bill, subsection (2) of section 31, about half way down the page. The bill also provides that this injunction may be sought either in the Exchequer Court or in the superior court of criminal jurisdiction in any of the provinces. I commend the Government for that procedure. But I am not sure that there are many more provisions in the bill about which I shall be able to express agreement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Don't be so generous.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: On the question of exports, to which my honourable friend from Inkerman has referred, I agree with him that specifically exempting exports from the scope or operation of the Combines Act is an advisable thing in the circumstances of trade as we find it in the world and, secondly, in the circumstances, that production for export is a field by itself. Therefore, the provisions for the elimination of combinations that might adversely affect the freer interchange of goods within the country are not called into play where one is manufacturing goods solely for export.

Having said that, and having recognized that as being a sound principle, I throw out this doubt: I wonder whether, in any event, export trade and combinations for production of goods for export would come within the scope of the Combines Act. I go further to say that even with the specific statement that export trade is exempt, even where the producers are in combination, the section as we have it in the bill does not go far enough. It gives and it takes away. May I point out what I mean. It gives in the sense that subsection (4) of section 32, on page 7 of the bill, says:

> Subject to subsection (5), in a prosecution under subsection (1) the court shall not convict the accused if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relates only to the export of articles from Canada.

That is a general statement and I agree with it. I think it would be advisable to have it included in the combines law, if it stopped there. But in subsection (5) we have the restrictions or conditions attached to what would otherwise be the full scope or operation of this section. Paragraph (a) of subsection (5) says subsection (4)—that is the exemption—does not apply if the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement has resulted, or is likely to result in a reduction or limitation of the volume of exports of an article.

Now, to me there seems to be a contradiction there. A combination of producers settling on a method of production and marketing for export in the world today would face the problem of meeting price rather than fixing a higher price. How can you put a limitation of this kind on the purpose of a combination for the development of export trade, where if there is a reduction in the volume of the exports of the article you can be charged, if there is a combination under the provisions of the Combines Act?

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask a question as to the conditions under which exemption is allowed in respect of manufactured goods for export? If it were found that because of trade combinations the price of certain goods was set too high, that would justify the control, would it not?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I appreciate what my honourable friend has said, but the only answer I can give is that I cannot conceive of manufacturers getting together in a combination, going through the motions of developing an export trade and setting a price which would result in selling less, rather than more, of the articles exported. It just does not make sense to me.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It has happened.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If legislation were passed on the basis of everything that might happen, or if we legislated against all the foolishness that could take place we would have an even larger volume of law than we have now.

Paragraph (b) of subsection (5) of section 32 says that subsection 4 does not apply if the alleged conspiracy, etc., has restrained or injured or is likely to restrain or injure the export business of any domestic competitor who is not a party to the conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement.

This is the one that takes all the meaning, scope and effect out of the exemption that has been provided. The only kind of combination to deal with export trade that could escape the effect of that paragraph would be a combination that included every person who was manufacturing for export. If there was one less than the full number of manufacturers for export, and the combination had settled on a price which was lower in order to be able to sell their goods for export, and by reason of their combination they were able to sell at a lower price than the manufacturer who stayed out of the combination, that very fact would disqualify them from the exemption. I say, therefore, that the only kind of a situation that would qualify for this exemption on exports would be one where every person who was in the manufacture of the article for export subscribed to that plan.

Paragraph (c) says subsection (4) does not apply if the conspiracy, etc.

has restricted or is likely to restrict any person from entering into the business of exporting articles from Canada.

This, of course, is sheer speculation. First of all, you have the field of known manufacturers for export. If you have less than full membership in the plan you cannot qualify for the exemption. But (c) goes further and says that even though you have them all in the plan, if there is still another manufacturer in Canada who may be entering into the business of exporting, and he is likely to be restricted from entering the field of exporting because of this combination, then the combination is not entitled to the exemption.

Then paragraph (d) says subsection (4) does not apply if the conspiracy, etc.

has lessened or is likely to lessen competition unduly in relation to an article in the domestic market.

To me that last paragraph is completely unnecessary, because if there is any combination in relation to the manufacture or production of any article for the domestic market in Canada it comes under the general law of the Combines Act, and as such it is a violation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is put in for greater clarity. You cannot criticize that.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) suggests that this provision is put in for greater clarity. I suppose a statement of the obvious makes for greater clarity, but this is even more than a statement of the obvious. It has no relation to export trade at all, and if it touches on domestic trade it is already caught under the general provision of the law.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I interrupt to ask a question? Does my honourable friend recall any action or prosecution under the existing act of a combination for export?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. There may be some in the future.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It has always been legal to exploit the foreigners, hasn't it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No; just to compete with them.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) made a very gratuitous remark. I suppose it depends on which shore of Canada you are looking from. I had thought that the principle was that Canada as a country has domestic trade and export trade and that since we must export to live it is good business for Canada to take whatever steps it can to export and live.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Sure.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: So far as the comment about exploiting the foreigner is concerned, there is nothing more dangerous than catchwords, and my honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina has just indulged in one, as he does sometimes when I am speaking. If I were as smart as he, perhaps I would use them when he is speaking. Nobody exploits the foreigner.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Correct.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Canada sells goods on the export market if those goods can meet competition from other countries on the basis of price and quality, and sometimes even then agreements among certain countries make it difficult for Canada to compete. So if the comment about exploiting the foreigner was only facetious, then I smile at my honourable friend and say that no harm has been done; but if it was intended to put a barb under the saddle I can tell him he was to some extent successful. But I have answered him and that is that.

May I come to the next point? We have several of what I call meaningless provisions which have been built up as window dressing in the bill. One is what is called promotional allowances. I can understand that where there are four or five companies which are large purchasers of an article, the manufacturer might give certain promotional allowances to one company and different amounts to the others, thereby favouring the operations of one as against the others; but under this bill—and if you don't follow the formula laid down here you have committed an offence—in giving promotional allowances to any purchaser of goods you establish a relationship between the promotional allowances and the dollar value of the sales to that particular purchaser. The manufacturer, in selling to any competitive purchaser, must follow the same formula and give the relative percentage.

There may be some value in that as it applies to big operators but you can never urge it as being beneficial or advantageous to the small businessman, because the allowance he would get in relation to his total purchases would be relatively insignificant. As a matter of fact, I would venture the statement that in many cases the amount the small businessman would get as a result of this provision for promotional allowances would be such that if he were obligated to spend it on advertising it would be of little value to him. It sounds great. It sounds as though by this legislation the Government was proposing that in the field of promotional allowances the big buyers and the little buyers were going to be treated in the same way. But you are really treating them in about the same way as if you gave one person an elephant and another person a baby rabbit. To attempt to justify the promotional allowances as being a vigorous step to protect the small businessman is just meaningless and unrealistic.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: How would you draw the line between the large corporation and the small one with respect to promotional allowances? How would you define the difference between the two?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not that I want to avoid answering my honourable friend's question, but I think promotional allowances should not be dealt with in legislation of this kind because they do not enter into the price at which the product is sold. Let us say that I am a manufacturer. I sell my product to you and I give you an allowance if you do certain advertising; in other words, I pay for the advertising that you do. In those circumstances, while it gives a benefit to the large buyer, and there may be some favoritism as between one group and another, I do not think it is the sort of thing that can reasonably enter into the scheme and scope of the Combines Act at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Of course, the small merchant can always use whatever he gets to help pay for his advertising. He may not get enough to pay the entire cost of advertising.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend is surely not that naïve. Does he think they are not concerned with money in all these cases? They will pay for so much advertising because they are interested in seeing their goods sold.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, they can pay it to the advertiser who has the small man's business.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Of course they could, in theory. That is a beautiful theory, but when you have a small businessman the percentage relationship would produce such a small amount in dollars that the advertising would be insignificant.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a matter of opinion.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is not a matter of opinion; it is a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, it is a matter of fact. I do not think it is something upon which you would wish to form an opinion, but rather that you would examine the facts. You will be able to get figures on this when the bill goes to committee.

The other thing I wanted to speak about in this same realm is the question of loss-leaders, to which the senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) referred. I have two points of view in relation to the so-called loss-leaders. One is that the only provision made in this bill relating to what is called loss-leaders is in relation to sales by a manufacturer to a retailer. In connection with those sales the manufacturer is not committing an offence under the statute if he refuses to sell further goods in the event of certain conditions to which my friend referred. There are many, many cases where manufacturers sell to middlemen. They sell to the wholesaler, and the wholesaler sells to the retailer, and the retailer does exactly the same thing as he would when he buys an article from the manufacturer; that is, he may use it as a loss-leader. In that case, if a middleman comes in there is no application of this exemption in relation to loss-leaders, and the manufacturer, who presumably is the one who inspired the enactment of this provision, gets no benefit from this section unless he sells directly to the retailer.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does my friend recall that that point was discussed in committee of the other house?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am not aware that it was. It could have been, because there was a large volume of evidence, and while I tried to read it all I do not pretend to have kept it all in mind. However, it is quite clear that this loss-leader provision on page 9 of the bill only provides an exemption from prosecution to the seller, who is the manufacturer, where the buyer of the article used it as a loss-leader. Now, the wholesaler does not sell to the public; it is the retailer. If we look at the conditions to which my friend from Inkerman referred, that the misbehaviour, so called, of the retailer, would entitle the manufacturer to refuse to sell him any further goods, we find that the language is so diffused and so confusing that I wonder how it would be possible to come to any conclusion. Let me read from section 14, subsection (5):

> ...if he satisfies—

That is, the manufacturer.

> —the court that he and any one upon whose report he depended had reasonable cause to believe and did believe
> (a) that the other person—

That is, the retailer.

> —was making a practice of using articles supplied by the person charged as loss-leaders, that is to say, not for the purpose of making a profit thereon but for purposes of advertising.

Now, supposing you do not have the case my friend used as an example, where they are giving away beach balls, but something is charged for a so-called loss-leader. Then we are involved in all the calculations to determine whether or not in relation to that particular transaction some profit has been made or no profit has been made. In order to arrive at that properly, since every person in business does some advertising and it is a legitimate cost of his business, you should reflect the advertising value in a lower price for that article as part of the cost. When you start doing all those calculations you can see the difficulties that are going to arise in attempting to prove that the retailer was using this particular article not for a profit but for advertising.

Hon. Mr. Horner: In other words, you would need a lawyer like my honourable friend, and then you would not complain.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Of course, I know how much my friend loves lawyers. He has been circumscribed in recent years, though, in his comments on lawyers. This is the sort of comment I have not heard from him for a number of years. We have him boxed in, for there are so many close to him in the field of law now that he has to be very careful in what he says. However, when my friend says, "You would need a lawyer", I point out to him that first of all you need a manufacturer; secondly, a merchant; thirdly, a lawyer; and, fourthly, on this set of circumstances, an excellent accountant.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: When we come to subparagraph (c) in section 14, I think it is the only legitimate condition we have in dealing with this question of loss-leader. That condition is that the other person, that is, the retailer, was making a practice of engaging in misleading advertising in respect of articles supplied by the person charged. I agree that is a legitimate condition. However, I also say that I think there would be a right in the manufacturer, without any legislation, to go after any person who is doing misleading advertising in relation to his goods.

Paragraph (d) is completely puzzling. The manufacturer may get this exemption from prosecution for refusing to sell if the retailer made a practice of not providing the level of servicing that purchasers of such articles might reasonably expect from such other person. That is really the ultimate. That is getting to the nth degree as to what the level of servicing is. Servicing may vary in different localities, and people in some localities may be prepared to pay less for an article and look after the servicing. Some may gamble on the fact that there may be some servicing, while others may be lucky and get a little service.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Most manufacturers specify if such servicing is required.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is a matter of contract. But that is not what this says. This says that the retailer made a practice of not providing the level of servicing that purchasers might reasonably expect.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would not a purchaser reasonably expect what a manufacturer specified?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. Why would he expect it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, I do. When I buy a new car I expect it to be serviced—for 4,000 miles or four months.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The same holds good for a television set.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Whatever they specify—a tube is good for a year.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: So far as paragraph (d) is concerned, my friend is entitled to his opinion. He may be that reasonable man in law around which all legislation and all decided cases proceed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: But I am dealing here with a factual situation. How we are going to distinguish between these two categories? Here, for instance, is a merchant in one locality, say the city of Toronto, giving a certain amount of service in connection with articles he sells. There may be another in some other part of the town giving more or less service, and there may be a merchant somewhere else giving no service. They are all selling their product at different prices. How are you going to apply this in different circumstances? This language is too diffuse, unrealistic, and, as a matter of fact, practically impossible to apply; and therefore I say the exemption becomes more or less similar to that of the dummies they put in the window of a store for dressing—it looks well, reads well, but you cannot use it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That is true of a lot of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes. I am not talking only of store windows; there are a lot of other things, too.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I could tell you another story.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, and I could match it.

The next thing we come to is the provision with respect to the Exchequer Court. I was very much interested to hear my friend who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Choquette) explain the great value in naming the Exchequer Court as an additional court. He used language which suggested that you would have all the ability of the Exchequer Court harnessed so as to assist in building up a body of jurisprudence on what is meant by "detriment to the public".

The difficulty that I see in combines law at the present time, quite frankly, is that the judgments of the Supreme Court are so clear cut that there is not even room to wiggle under them. It is not a matter of needing more jurisprudence; it is a matter of whether or not the addition of the Exchequer Court as a court that may hear and entertain injunction motions and may also hear cases which are being prosecuted will provide better administration of justice. The only authority which the federal Parliament has in this regard is found in section 101 of the British North America Act, which reads:

> The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding ... from Time to Time, provide for the ... establishment of any additional Courts for the better Administration of the Laws of Canada.

Now remember that in combines legislation we are dealing with criminal law, and under the British North America Act the constitution of courts for the administration of criminal law is left to the provinces, under section 92. The place where the federal Parliament gets authority to establish an additional court with criminal jurisdiction must be section 101 of the British North America Act, but it must satisfy the condition that the additional court is required for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

I do not wish to cast any reflection on the Exchequer Court of Canada, but having regard to that court as presently constituted and to the functions which it performs when adjudicating between the Crown and the subject, and considering the superior courts of criminal jurisdiction in the provinces, which administer the criminal law, and also the combines law which is part of the criminal law, and the jurisprudence that we have been building up in those criminal courts, it would be difficult for me to say and it would be equally difficult to accept a statement that the naming of the Exchequer Court as an additional court under this act is for the better administration of the laws of Canada. I am helped in that in so far as any prosecution is concerned, for even if the Exchequer Court is set up to entertain prosecutions you can only bring a criminal prosecution into that court with the consent of all the accused.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Only when a criminal offence is involved.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I say you can only bring a criminal prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act into the Exchequer Court with the consent of all the accused. That seems to put some limitation on the functioning of this additional court, which cannot be justified on the basis that it is for the better administration of justice. It must be borne in mind that it is only when it is in the opinion of the accused that there will be better administration of justice in the Exchequer Court, and if they elect to have their trial in the Exchequer Court, that that court acquires jurisdiction. It seems to me to create an anomalous situation.

When this bill becomes law the parties may go to the Exchequer Court on injunction proceedings. Why we would need to go to the Exchequer Court rather than to the courts which have been doing the job for years, is difficult for me to understand. You may try to assure me that it will lead to better administration of justice, but in my opinion at the moment it would not have that result.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It would lead to a more expeditious administration of justice. You could go to the Exchequer Court, and if you lost there you could go directly to the Supreme Court of Canada and your case would be disposed of most expeditiously. Otherwise you would have to start a trial in the superior courts of criminal jurisdiction, then go to the appeal court and then to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If my honourable friend is concerned with dispatch or expedition, he could provide in the bill that an appeal can be taken from the superior court directly to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am sure my learned friend would object very strongly to that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would that be a better administration of justice?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I appreciate what my friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has said. I do not consciously intend to be curt. with him in answering his question, but I think I am giving him the kind of answer justified by the kind of question that he asked when he alluded to the advantage of appealing from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court. In my reply I pointed out that you could get the same result if you eliminated the provincial courts of appeal, and you would have one trial and one appeal, whereas in the procedure as it exists now there is a trial, an appeal, and then a further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. As my friend said, it is more expeditious; you learn faster what the answer is and you get your judgment that much sooner.

I question very much the value of bringing the Exchequer Court into this picture at all. My own feeling has been that the superior courts of criminal jurisdiction have functioned very well in all matters that come under their charge. They have functioned particularly well in the administration of the combines law. It might be suggested that the addition of the Exchequer Court is a reflection on the ability of the other courts to administer the combines law as it should be administered. In other words, the provision of an additional court, the establishment of which must have for its basis a better administration of justice in Canada, forces me to the conclusion that superior courts of criminal jurisdiction have not up to the present time been giving the kind of administration that this kind of law deserves. I may say that I am not prepared to accept that conclusion.

Hon Mr. Monette: May I ask a question? What has the honourable gentleman to say as to the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of either the federal or the provincial authority? Is it for the federal or the provincial jurisdiction to establish courts to deal with this subject?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I thought I had dealt with that point, but may I repeat that the constitution of criminal courts is a matter which belongs exclusively to the provinces, and the only authority that the federal Government has to establish additional courts is the authority which we find in section 101 of the British North America Act. It is under that authority that the bankruptcy courts, the admiralty courts and so forth have been established. That must be the authority under which the Government is now seeking to bring in the Exchequer Court, and that is why I say that surely we must have evidence that it can administer justice better. How is that provided? Sometimes the preamble of a bill contains a recital indicating a necessity for such an additional court. But we have no such recital here; we have just a straight provision in the bill that the Exchequer Court is to have jurisdiction, and we are left to assume that the basis of it is for the better administration of justice. The conclusion follows that the administration of justice is not good enough now and we must appoint the Exchequer Court to provide better administration.

There were two other things that I wanted to mention briefly. You will excuse me if I take a minute or two and talk about a position I took in a matter some years ago.

I have not spoken about resale price maintenance as such tonight, and I have not done so because of the prohibition that has been in the law since 1951. All we are doing here is dealing with an amendment to the section having to do with resale price maintenance. Therefore, I did not regard it as being the proper place to discuss whether the prohibition of resale price maintenance has met the promises that were urged when it was enacted. However, I cannot help making this reference—and I am sorry the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) is not in the chamber, because of his earlier remark about saying something although he might be alone in saying it. That has been my position too.

In 1951 when resale price maintenance was the issue, and before any legislation was introduced or any indication was given as to what the legislation was going to be, I spoke on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne on the question of resale price maintenance, and in that speech I took a strong stand against it. While I do not propose to read to you what I said at that time, there are one or two points I might mention. First, that prohibition of resale price maintenance would not help the small businessman, even though it was urged at the time that it would. I think subsequent events have shown that it has not helped the small businessman. The small businessman's difficulties develop through large-volume buying by the bigger purchasers of the commodities. Therefore, if you are going to look at the question in the narrower compass, and not at the broad picture as it affects John Q. Public, which the honourable senator from Inkerman mentioned, in that narrower view the small businessman is better off. I said in that earlier speech, and it is still my view, that the small businessman was better off with resale price maintenance than he is with the prohibition of resale price maintenance. Without the prohibition, his ability to make resale price agreements and the exact agreements as made by the manufacturers with the larger purchasers would put him, notwithstanding his small stature, in a position of some equality.

I urged that position at the time in the Senate, and I was a voice crying in the wilderness. When the bill came here, it passed without a voice being raised in support of the position which I took.

Resale price maintenance is now an accomplished fact. I indicated on that earlier occasion that over the years I thought a lot more legislation, conditions and restrictions might have to be evolved once you adopt the principle of resale price maintenance. Now we are looking into the field of loss leaders, for one.

The other point I want to mention—and I trust my honourable friends will bear with me—is simply this. I had intended to make this the whole subject of my remarks: it is a principle to which I have been giving thought for some time, namely, that the basic principle and scheme of our combines legislation is outmoded and antiquated, and it is time we adopted a different principle.

Let me tell you why I think the legislation is outmoded. There have been many inroads into the field of free economy and free competition since our combines legislation came into force, and what the courts have found as the basic principle in that legislation has been trimmed down. The economy has proceeded in so many different directions and the field of free enterprise and free competition has been cut down to such an extent that it is time we found another principle which would provide absolute protection for the consumer and would prevent the exploitation of him by dealing with the situation before an offence is committed, rather than 15 or 20 years afterwards.

Now, I am not propounding an idea of my own. I intend to tell you about the system in England, and it will take only a few minutes.

First, let us understand what is our own basic principle. It is this: the offence under our law is to limit or lessen unduly the manufacture, production, supply or storage of goods or articles by a conspiracy. Our courts have determined what is meant to limit unduly. The latest determination by the courts in that respect may be found in the Howard Smith Paper Mills case, (1957) S.C.R. I do not intend to read the report, but let me summarize what it says. The courts have said that the meaning to be given to unduly limiting is this: if the combination of producers is so substantial that it virtually arrogates to them the field in which they are operating, then that is a combination which unduly limits or lessens competition.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Even though the price has gone down.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The courts have said that evidence to show that the result of the combination was a lowering of the price, and therefore a benefit to the public, is not relevant and is inadmissible. Once that basic fact is established you are not permitted under the law—I would say legislated by the courts, because the statute does not say that —to adduce evidence in that respect.

Now, England has what is known as the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, under which there is a registrar and a court made up of judges selected from various courts in England and Scotland and some laymen. By law each agreement of producers which imposes a restriction on any members of that group, and the price at which they sell goods, or the terms etc., must be filed with the registrar. The registrar examines it, he refers it to the court, and the court then makes a determination as to whether or not the restrictions are detrimental to the public interest.

In England they have six or seven rules for determining whether or not something is in the public interest. Those rules are simple and clear. Having laid down those rules they go on to say that the court must be,

> . . . satisfied that the restriction is not unreasonable having regard to the balance between those circumstances and any detriment to the public or to persons not parties to the agreement (being purchasers, consumers or users of goods produced or sold by such parties, or persons engaged or seeking to become engaged in the trade or business of selling such goods or of producing or selling similar goods) resulting or likely to result from the operation of the restriction.

After having satisfied themselves that the restriction does not offend against any of the rules, then you must add up all the pluses in favour of the restriction as being in the public interest, and you weigh that in the balance as against the question of any overriding detriment to the public. Then, if there is any balance in favour of maintaining the agreement, the court will make an order that it is a good agreement. Otherwise, they will make an order that it is detrimental to the public. If the court makes an order that an agreement is detrimental to the public, and if you persist in carrying that agreement into operation, then of course you are in contempt of court.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask a question just for information? I presume that all the agreements in England must be in writing?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a condition precedent. You could not have an oral agreement in that country.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would just point out that all agreements must be deposited with the registrar. Therefore, if you had an oral agreement, a memorandum of it would have to be produced and filed. If you did not produce the agreement you would take the risk of being subject to prosecution for violation of the act. If you produced the agreement and it was declared to be detrimental to the public interest, and you persisted, you would then be subject to prosecution for contempt of court.

Might I just illustrate one of these conditions? The manufacturers might say that the restriction is reasonably necessary, having regard to the character of the goods to which it applies, in order to protect the public against injury in connection with the consumption, installation or use of those goods.

These are conditions—and I have just read one of them—which the manufacturers must meet in order to have the court say that the agreement is not detrimental to the public interest. That is a simple procedure and it is more in accord with present-day conditions. We have many encroachments on our economy. I could enumerate many of them, such as floor prices, marketing schemes in the provinces, and provisions in the Defence Production Act under which a person makes a contract to produce goods for the Crown and is given a statement of allowable costs, and when he has completed the job the department can then determine his percentage of profit. Even though he may have charged 7½ per cent the department may determine that 5 per cent is sufficient. So you have all these supervening encroachments in the field of economy. If time permitted I could enumerate many more, but with the knowledge you have I think you can accept my statement that they exist.

In my view it is time we sought to enact legislation which would assure absolute protection to the consuming public, but we should do it on a basis of acting before rather than after the event. We have that principle in our security laws. Why can't we have it in relation to combinations? I think it would be a more sensible approach. It would give better protection to the public, and it would make procedures more certain so far as manufacturers are concerned. They may act on advice, and 15 or 20 years later they may find themselves in a prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act. This could not happen under the rules I have outlined with respect to the Restrictive Trade Practices Act of England.

I have thrown this suggestion out in brief form, for at this late hour I have not wanted to take too much time. I was greatly pleased when the sponsor indicated he was going to ask that the bill be referred to committee, for there are many questions that should be answered.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the explanation of this bill by the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette), and we have had a clever analysis of the bill by two leading members of this chamber, the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden). I feel we are going to have an interesting time in committee, for we are told that many competent witnesses are to express their views.

Not too much can be gained by debating the matter further at this time, but I observe one section of the bill with which the honourable senators from Inkerman and Toronto did not deal. I refer to section 11, which reads:

> Section 29 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
>
> "29. Whenever, from or as a result of an inquiry under the provisions of this act, or from or as a result of a judgment of the Supreme Court or Exchequer Court of Canada or of any superior, district or county court in Canada, it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that with regard to any article there has existed any conspiracy, combination, agreement, arrangement, merger or monopoly to promote unduly the advantage of manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the public, and if it appears to the Governor in Council that such disadvantage to the public is presently being facilitated by the duties of customs imposed on the article, or on any like article, the Governor in Council may direct either that such article be admitted into Canada free of duty, or that the duty thereon be reduced to such amount or rate as will, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, give the public the benefit of reasonable competition."

Honourable senators, I will not say anything further about this section now but in committee I would like to hear the able lawyers tell us something about it, for as a small manufacturer in Nova Scotia I have suffered because of this kind of thing during the course of my company's business. I am pleased to see this provision in the bill and I am waiting to hear it explained.

There is another feature of the bill in which I am much interested. I would like to know exactly what the word "unduly" means as it is used on page 6 of the bill under Part V, Offences in Relation to Trade, where it says:

> Everyone who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person
>
> (a) to limit unduly the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article,
>
> (b) to prevent, limit or lessen, unduly, the manufacture or production of an article, or to enhance unreasonably the price thereof,
>
> (c) to prevent, or lessen, unduly, competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, storage, rental, transportation or supply of an article, or in the price of insurance upon persons or property, or
>
> (d) to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any article,...

These things you cannot do unduly. Does that mean you cannot do them more than is necessary? I am not quite sure. Anyway, it seems to me that there is a little protection here that we might investigate.

I have noticed that no person can lay an information about any of these things and have the matter dealt with as in an ordinary lawsuit. There has got to be an investigation by the director and the commission, and it might even go before the minister. It seems to me that when you get into that kind of an investigation, if a complaint is laid it has to be pretty sound, because the minister of the Crown has good advisers and the investigation officers are generally men of experience. Therefore, before the thing comes out in the open it has been well investigated, and perhaps they do try to protect people as much as they can.

I notice that the matter may be taken to the highest court in the land. I am glad of this, for when a matter goes to the Supreme Court you get justice from the highest possible tribunal. It seems to me that this procedure provides another protection for the public.

The honourable gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) spoke about servicing. This is very important. I know in my business where engineering skill is required we rely on servicing as a big benefit and advantage to our customers.

Honourable senators, this is not a new bill. It is like an old friend. I remember it was before Parliament when I was in the House of Commons. Loss-leaders and matters that are called interferences with trade and unfair benefits are moot subjects. They have been discussed before and it seems to me that this bill now before us is a little better than bills of a similar nature that came before us previously. I believe that this bill affords greater protection than its predecessors. It is said that there is no jury in these combines cases, but I think that applies only when corporations are charged. It can readily be seen that as a rule corporations would not prefer trial by a jury.

One question that occurs to me is, why is it that in British Columbia the agreements between fishermen and the other interests are removed from the act? That exemption does not apply to any other part of Canada. It may be good or it may not; I hope it is good. However, if it is good for British Columbia, perhaps it would be good for Nova Scotia also and the east coast of Canada generally. Down our way the fishermen are on shares and are partners in the enterprise. They are quite successful. I note that British Columbia fishermen also are quite successful, and it appears to me that we should find out why they contract out from under this act. I am told that when they were represented here they looked after their case very well. I think that matter should be discussed in committee.

Honourable senators, I am not going to say more, because the act will not come into force until a day is fixed by order in council and the present act will likely remain in force for quite a long time. However, I should like to add that I do not think we have come to any new conclusions on this matter of loss-leaders. I may say that it is very humiliating to me that I cannot go to my neighbour who is a friendly competitor and say: "We are losing money. Why can't we agree to work together on prices and service?" It seems to me that that is done all over the country. I would not be surprised if the big institutions do it; otherwise I cannot see how they can come so close in the things they do.

I am reminded of the statement attributed to Sir John A. Macdonald: "Don't write a letter—never destroy one." The President of the United States was credited with the statement that the least government is the best government. I think if we leave this country to free enterprise and let business alone a bit, and let people stand on their own feet, it would be for the good of our country. Most men can protect themselves in business. Of course, there are monopolies and there is big business. These need direction and some control, but usually they do add to the success and progress of a nation. I think industry should be allowed to go along its way, that people should be allowed to work where they wish, and that industry should be enabled to make a profit on its merits. I hope our country will still allow the person who works and achieves to earn his reward in accordance with what he produces.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable senator if when he was speaking of his neighbour he was referring to the drug business?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: No. I am not in the drug business.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Because if so, I can't imagine any drug business not making a profit.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I thank you for the compliment.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Honourable senators, I beg leave to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was wondering if anyone else wished to speak on the bill this evening. If possible I should like to get it before the Banking and Commerce Committee tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I can speak now, if the house wishes, but it will take me 45 to 50 minutes to do so.

Some Hon. Senators: Go ahead.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I too would like to speak on this bill this evening, too, but not at the end of a 45 minute speech.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Let the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) speak first.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I certainly hesitate to take part in this debate after listening to the brilliant speeches of those who have preceded me—the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Choquette) and my colleagues from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) and Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley). However, I do have a special interest in this bill, and I would like to say a word or two about it.

My special interest is in clause 14 of the bill, which amends section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act. I should like to see clause 14 eliminated altogether, if this bill is to become law. To me this is the bad part of the egg referred to by the honourable senator from Inkerman. The amendments contained in clause 14 are considered by many people to be contrary to the best interests of the Canadian consumers, as was proved by the large number of witnesses before the committee in the other house who opposed this clause.

All the people of Canada are consumers, from the smallest child to the oldest citizen, and any legislation contrary to the interests of consumers affects adversely the general public.

Resale price maintenance is now prohibited by section 34 of the act, as was pointed out by the honourable senator from Inkerman, and this prohibition of resale price maintenance is considered by many who have given serious study to the problem to be in the best interest of consumers generally. Of the large groups which have studied this problem, one which is in favour of retaining the prohibition of resale price maintenance and is opposed to the provisions of clause 14 is the Canadian Association of Consumers. This association, which is dedicated to the good of consumers, was organized thirteen years ago, as I well remember, for the National Council of Women assisted in its organization. As provincial president of the Council of Women in New Brunswick at that time, it was one of my pleasanter duties to arrange for the organization of the group in my own province. The Canadian Association of Consumers now has a large membership in Canada, as mentioned by the honourable senator from Inkerman, and practically all of its members are deeply interested in and very knowledgeable about consumer problems. I might say that the Canadian Association of Consumers continues to have the support of the National Council of Women and 16 other national women's organizations. The president of the association gave evidence before the committee of the other house, and I hope it will be possible for her to give evidence to the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee, for I am sure her arguments against the passing of clause 14 will be found very convincing by honourable senators.

The amendments that are proposed in clause 14 of the bill before us would provide loopholes in the ban on resale price maintenance and certainly make it easier for resale price maintenance to creep back into our economy. They would make it much more difficult, and perhaps impossible, to secure convictions against suppliers who appear to be indulging in this practice. It is true that the amendments in clause 14 do not eliminate the ban on resale price maintenance, but certain pricing, advertising and servicing practices are brought under control by the amendments, and it would seem that thereby the ban on resale price maintenance will lose its effectiveness.

I am glad to know that the honourable senator who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Choquette) intends to have it referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee for study. I hope that, late in the session though it is, the Canadian Association of Consumers and any other groups desirous of appearing before the committee and presenting their views will be permitted to do so. These amendments if passed will have very far-reaching effects. They certainly deserve thorough study, and I am sure that if they receive this from honourable senators much additional protection will be provided for Canadian consumers.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, we have before us what is really the first major revision of the combines investigation legislation since 1952, at which time, as a direct result of the interim report of the MacQuarrie Commission the former Liberal administration amended the act to put a legal ban on resale price maintenance and to make other changes.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues the debates which this significant strengthening of the act then engendered, and especially the attitude and the arguments of the spokesmen of the Conservative party, who claimed that this ban on resale price maintenance would have a crippling and chaotic effect upon the independent retailer.

The present Bill C-58 has produced a tremendous amount of discussion and evidence in the other house and in the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, running to approximately one thousand pages. All this I have read as carefully as possible and I have attempted to make a sincere appraisal of the basic issues that are involved. Thinking of the general public interest, especially in terms of the expectations and the needs of the average Canadian whose economic and other interests must to me be primary, I have no hesitation in stating my belief that Bill C-58 in its present form is ill-advised in several of its substantive sections, and about these I shall speak at some length.

I further believe that the case for the incorporation of these ill-advised sections has not been adequately proved, especially in view of the evidence that was presented to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Because I feel rather keenly about my obligations as a senator to look carefully at all evidence and at all discussions so that I may give any new legislation the second sober appraisal, I think I would be remiss in my obligations if I did not register my opinions as vigorously as possible, if I did not plead for and work for further substantive amendments, and finally, owing to lack of what I believe to be the necessary amendments, if I did not vote against Bill C-58 in its present form.

Honourable senators may indeed disagree with the position I am now stating, but that is how I feel and how, in response to my conscience, I must act. The honourable senator for Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) dealt with some of the beneficial sections of this legislation and has criticized severely others. I recognize some of these beneficial sections, sections like 33 (b) which attempts, I think inadequately, to deal with the problem of equity in promotional allowances, and section 33 (c). And as the honourable senator from Ottawa East (Hon. Mr. Choquette) pointed out, there is now an attempt to improve the administration of justice in respect to this legislation by employing the services of the Exchequer Court. I also recognize that some beneficial amendments have been agreed to by the Government since the bill was first introduced, and I am pleased that these changes have been made.

There is in clause 1 (2) (f) a clarification of the definition of the word "monopoly" to make it clear that rights or enjoyments of any interest derived under the Patent Act or any other act of Parliament will not be deemed a monopoly situation. This particular aspect was somehow overlooked in the shuffle.

Secondly, statutory right is given to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, and the statutory right of the director to apply to the minister to get legal counsel is retained, with all that this means in having these statutory requests to be a matter of public record. Frankly, the original intent to leave this at the discretionary power of the minister perturbed me a great deal and I am pleased that this very evident blunder was corrected.

Thirdly, there has been included in clause 12 new paragraphs (2a), (2b) and (2c) to provide the right of appeal from an order of prohibition or dissolution. In this connection I might note that I still fail to see why the words "has done" have been included in subsection (2) of this clause 12 making it possible for the court to issue an order that a criminal offence which has been committed be not repeated. Is this not an inherently dangerous principle?

Continuing with my enumeration of these beneficial amendments, honourable senators, I point out that in clause 13, new section 32, on page 7 two new subsections, (4) and (5), have been added to give some measure of statutory protection to various agreements or combinations for export trade purposes only. How this will work in practice is hard to know. To what extent harmful influences may osmose or creep into the domestic field is difficult to estimate, but the change on balance seems reasonable and desirable and time will show how this new protection to exporting industries will function, provided we can differentiate the many factors that are inevitably involved through continued study and appraisal.

I have listened with fascination to the very brilliant explanation of the apparent inconsistencies in the act, and I am now pointing out subsection (5) of this clause 14, which is on page 9—the rather brilliant discussion of the apparent inconsistencies in this subsection by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden). I recognize the import of his very pertinent observations, and I hope they will be taken into account when the committee meets.

My last reference to beneficial amendments concerns the disappearance of paragraph (e) of clause 14 (5). I refer to page 9 of the bill. We now have only paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d). Paragraph (e) stated that a supplier could withhold supplies to a dealer if he unfairly disparaged the value of the articles supplied—whatever that meant, and however that was to be measured or adjudicated. I shall make further comments about section 14 at a later stage of my presentation.

Worth while as these amendments are, they do not touch the roots of my critical attitude to this legislation. Before I explain what is the substantive core of my opposition to the bill in its present form, I would like to make these additional preliminary observations.

I agree with opinions expressed in the other house and presented to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, that this major revision of our combines legislation might have involved a substantial extension of the legislation into the rapidly expanding services sector of our economy. Honourable senators will note that the definition of "business" in section 1(1)(aa) does not foresee this extension. I respectfully submit that the Government should continue to give this services sector problem careful attention and study.

Speaking strictly as a layman, and reflecting the opinions of many Canadians who have discussed this problem with me, I draw to your attention the fact that no significant changes have been made in the punishments for infractions of the combines legislation. I refer you to clause 13 of the bill, and in particular to the new section 31A (2), and to section 33. Surely it is a matter of record that the imprisonment punishment is not being used, and that the fines which have been levied over the years have not been unduly onerous to the corporations which have been found guilty of deliberately breaking the law, even when one adds to these the ancillary costs to the companies involved. The latest fines of the pulp and paper companies is an interesting example, when one considers the probable benefits which accrued to these companies during some seven years of illegal contravention of the combines legislation. Many ordinary Canadians feel that these punishments do not fit the seriousness of the crime when compared to the size of the firms involved and the nature of the benefits which may have been enjoyed because of illegal collusive behaviour. Acidic remarks are often made that these punishments are somewhat akin to paying a kind of license fee, and I have been asked why Parliament does not give some direction to the courts to stiffen these penalties.

At this point, I feel that it is important to refer to the testimony of non-governmental experts—economists, law professors, etc.—who contend that there has been an inadequate check and study of the merger problem. These experts claim that mergers may lead to monopoly situations through what is called price leadership or other means, and they point to the breweries case to show that we are apparently thinking now in terms of virtually a complete monopoly.

Professor English of the Department of Economics of Carleton University stated his opinion in these words:

> The amendments make no effort to deal with this problem. While it must be admitted that there are great difficulties in finding a legislative solution, the important point for a critic of Bill C-58 is that the amendments proposed neglect the one area of Canadian legislation where recent judicial interpretation has shown a possible weakness in the law.

Professor Maxwell Cohen, Acting Dean of the Faculty of Law at McGill University, discussed the three important court cases dealing with the merger or monopoly situation, namely, Rex v. Staples, Rex v. Eddy and Regina v. Breweries, and indicated that the type of facts available to the courts in these three cases were so different that it was difficult to evolve any general principle of law that now exists in this field.

Dean Cohen's considered suggestion was phrased in this question:

> ...whether the time is not right to explore with much greater care and sophistication the whole problem of merger policy, and the type of law which ought to apply in that area where we have so little experience, and where the judicial process has been unable as yet to make serious contribution.

Professor Cohen pointed out that last year's amendments to the combines legislation—Bill C-59, a copy of which I have on my desk—contained a section which listed certain matters which would be regarded as legitimate defences to merger situations. He indicated his approval of the fact that these did not appear in the present bill and stressed that it was perfectly clear to his mind that there is a degree of uncertainty as to the direction in which merger law should go, and he wondered whether the Bill C-58 should tamper altogether with the present provisions.

I believe this quotation fairly summarizes his position:

> I merely am suggesting that this is a very complex and difficult problem and it involves much understanding of what is happening to the modern corporation and it involves a great understanding of the changes in the day-to-day operation of the affairs of corporations, to problems of vertical and horizontal integration. Therefore I wonder whether there is any reason at all to experiment even in this modest way before we begin to explore the situation.

Dr. L. A. Skeoch, Professor of Economics, Queen's University, dealt with the same problem of definitions of mergers and monopolies, and pointed out that:

> ...the way in which a "merger" is defined makes it very doubtful that the subsection would apply to what is known as "conglomerate" mergers; that is, mergers between firms in different trades or industries. Such mergers present problems in public detriment that are often of a subtle, long-run character, particularly in a country such as Canada where "economic power" tends to be concentrated in fewer hands than is the case in larger economies.

The evidence of these neutral observers and students of our combines legislation prompts me to bring this problem area to the attention of the honourable senators, and to express the hope that the Government will continue to study the merger-monopoly question with vigour and assiduous care. Putting it bluntly, it appears that we cannot rest on our current laurels for we are not out of the woods by any means.

I have also examined the historical development of our anti-combines legislation, beginning with the first experimental provisions in the Criminal Code introduced by the Conservative Government back in 1889 and 1892. This historical analysis, which is well known to all honourable senators, is illuminating and instructive both with respect to the traditional attitude of the two major political parties to anti-combines legislation and administration, and to the continued and unrelenting attempts of big business to blunt the effectiveness of combines legislation.

It is to the second aspect that I wish to speak briefly, for most assuredly this historical overview tells us a great deal about the attempts made to destroy or to dilute the effectiveness of what has been essentially Liberal-sponsored anti-combines legislation, primarily through the courts. Beginning with 1910 when the Laurier Government introduced the first anti-combines act, the Liberal party has traditionally insisted that there must be free competition in prices and markets. All acts which lessen competition were regarded by the Liberal administrations as unlawful, and throughout the years Liberal Governments have vigorously and successfully enforced this concept of combines control, although this enforcement proved to be increasingly difficult from the point of view of both legislation and administration.

Big business has persistently challenged the act in the courts. After the enactment of new anti-combines legislation in 1923, the Liberal Government successfully instituted the first major inquiry and prosecution in the Western Fruit case, 1925. The attack upon this legislation in the 1920's took the form of trying to prove that in seeking to deal with prices and compensation the Criminal Code and the anti-combines act were really concerned with problems involving "property and civil rights", which is an exclusive provincial jurisdiction under heading 13 of section 92 of the B.N.A. Act. Consequently, this section of the Criminal Code and the anti-combines act were unconstitutional and ultra vires. In 1929 the Liberal Government referred this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada, which ruled that both laws were criminal and therefore within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament under heading 27 of section 91 of the B.N.A. Act.

The next major test came in the Proprietary Articles Trade Association case, where it was found that a combine was operating and a conviction was obtained in the lower courts. The case finally ended in the Privy Council, which body confirmed the Supreme Court's judgment of 1929.

Then came the famous Container Materials case in 1942. Convicted in the lower courts of operating a combine, the company appealed the case to the Supreme Court on what was essentially a much more subtle and intangible argument. In effect, the case apparently rested on the fact that the Criminal Code spoke of "undue" lessening of competition, to which the honourable senator from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) referred. So there may be lessening of competition and undue lessening, and so there may be good and bad combines. Fortunately, the appeal was dismissed. Perhaps the last major case of interest in connection with this unrelenting effort of big business to temper if not to destroy the effectiveness of anti-combines legislation came in the 1957 decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Fine Papers case.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would the honourable senator permit me to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Surely.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Why do you call it an attempt by big business to destroy the Combines Act just because business found it necessary to defend itself in the courts? Do you mean that phrase realistically or not?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Yes, I mean that phrase realistically. As I understand it, the argument presented by the appellants was that there was keen competition in all phases of the business except price. What happened with price was not collusive agreement but what was termed "price leadership". All companies apparently followed the lead of one company, but this was not undue restriction of competition. The Supreme Court confirmed the conviction.

Of great significance to me, as a lay student of these matters, are the clear-cut explanations of what is the basic philosophy of the jurisprudence that has grown up over the past three decades.

I want to make just one reference from the Canada Supreme Court Reports, 1957. The judges ruled unanimously and I want to refer to the written judgment of Mr. Justice Taschereau, and I quote:

> I wish however to add a few observations concerning the necessity of showing detriment to the public, and as to the meaning of the word "unduly" found in s. 498 (1) (d) of the old Criminal Code, under which the charge is laid.
>
> It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that the offence is not complete, unless it has been established by the Crown beyond a reasonable doubt, that the agreement was detrimental to the public, in the sense that the manufacture or production was effectively lessened, limited or prevented, as a result of the agreements entered into. It has also been suggested that there is no offence, if it is shown that the acts complained of were beneficial to the public. With these submissions I entirely disagree. Conspiracy is a crime by itself, without the necessity of establishing the carrying out of an overt act.

I could give quotations from other judgments which are basically the same.

As I understand this, under present liberal law a combine is guilty if in the judgment of the court it conspired to do anything which unduly lessened competition. Apparently, even if the combine did nothing specifically detrimental to the public good, if it conspired then it was guilty. In other words, actual or specific damage by combines to individuals or the public in the form of prices, quantities, quality or markets was not a factor. If there was proof of conspiracy, the combine partners were guilty. It is the conspiracy and not the specific, actual injurious acts which constitutes the crime.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It is not that at all; it is conspiracy to lessen competition. That is a complete offence, not just a conspiracy.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Well, I am speaking as a layman, and that is the way I understand it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am speaking as a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I wish to bring into this context, then, part of the statement of Mr. Justice Batshaw given at the Court of Queens Bench, Montreal, June 15, 1960:

> The two elements of agreement and common design are thus essential ingredients of the crime of conspiracy. The mere concurrence of intention is not enough. It requires the announcement and acceptance of the intentions. But as soon as the parties come to such an arrangement, the conspiracy is born, even if they never committed any overt act towards carrying it out. The offence is complete as soon as the parties have agreed to the common design.

His judgment finds no specific damage and he places no dollar value on losses or gains to farmers or companies.

After its thorough investigation of our combines legislation, the MacQuarrie Committee report stated:

> The courts have been at pains to explain not only that they are not required by the legislation to find specific detriment but that they would not be apt instruments to make such a finding.

And further, pointing out that public injury would be very difficult to prove because of a wide variety of impinging factors, the MacQuarrie report states:

> The very existence of the combine usually served to eliminate all basis of comparison by which the reasonableness or the reverse of the prices established by the combine can be measured.

I am not trying to belabour this point, but to me it is very fundamental. As I understand our anti-combines legislation, we have not worked out a series of carefully worded prohibitions of a specific nature, to be administered by special courts such as the British Restrictive Practices Court, to which the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) referred; but rather we specifically prohibit certain undesirable practices about which there is general agreement, and we rely on a prohibition of restriction of competition per se. For years we have carefully avoided a listing which the business community is so anxious to win, and thus we have avoided rigidity in the law, and have avoided, also, the search by business for new legal loopholes which would invite extended litigation. Nor has our law accepted the concept that specific detriment must be proved. We have simply said from past experience, amply fortified, I must say, by a great deal of evidence, that Canadian-owned and foreign-owned corporations have attempted to set up illegal combines—we simply say that this past experience proves that the mere existence of certain practices introduces rigidity into our economic structure, and apparently always leads to potential or actual interference with the benefits of competition. The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) pointed that out from a study from which he read. Believing that our society should leave to private enterprise most economic functions on the premise that there will be thus a wide dispersal or decentralization of decision-making regarding production, services, distribution and what have you, we set up anti-combines law to guarantee, as far as we can, that this dispersal or decentralization will not be frustrated by business interests that wish to be protected from the pains and uncertainties of competition. Quite frankly, when anti-combines legislation is criticized by business, I always have the suspicion that the extent of this criticism bears some lineal relationship to the success this legislation has in providing this decentralization and this freer competition.

This brings me to my first major area of criticism and opposition to the present wording of the bill we are considering, namely, clause 13, which amends section 32(2) of the act, and lists the defences which will protect business from prosecution for the so-called beneficial co-operation purposes: to exchange statistics, to define standards, to exchange credit information, to define trade terms, to co-operate in research and development, to restrict advertising. Then there is a catchall for some other matters not related to prices, etc., in (3).

Because no evidence has been given that any companies have been prosecuted or convicted for any of these new defences, and because no evidence has been produced to show that this specification of beneficial co-operation and combining is really needed, I am in substantive agreement with the many expert and impartial students of this problem that the spelling out of the specific reasons for which it will now be legal to consult and to agree will provide an effective umbrella or smoke screen behind which will be conducted other agreements to suppress competition, even though we have tried to safeguard ourselves from falling into this difficulty by providing that additional provision, subsection (3). I believe that these new defences will open the door, psychologically and practically, to other forms of collusive behaviour which will not be in the public interest, simply because bitter experience has shown that when some businessmen get together, for apparently legal purposes, other things seem to happen. They have happened in the past; they will happen again. I believe, too, that the present law, as presently administered, provides adequate defences to which businessmen are entitled, and we do not need to spell these out. Let the onus of proof remain where it is, and where it should be, on those who get together.

Many witnesses appeared before the Standing Committee of the other house to warn of the dangerous implications of this new change. I will mention some by name: Professor Cohen, Professor Britnell, et al., who sent a written submission; they are from the University of Saskatchewan, Professor Skeoch, and others. I note that the Minister of Justice claimed that somehow this subsection (2), that is, the one which provides the defences, would benefit the consumers and the general public, but this was merely a generalized statement, and I fail to see any proof. The minister also claimed that all this was doing was to make abundantly clear to the businessmen what their position is. I believe that businessmen already know what their position is, and it is abundantly clear that impartial observers feel that not only is it not necessary to perform this clarification ritual but that it manifestly opens the door to new dangers. I remain unconvinced that these seven new and to-be-legalized loopholes will not undermine the practical effect of subsection (1). I believe that no company has ever been prosecuted for the first six practices, and the only reason for listing them is to encourage such liaisons and make it easier for more sinister relationships to be more conveniently practised. The seventh loophole, a sort of catchall basket clause, subject as it is to subsection (3), perturbs me a great deal. I believe that it gives a very broad escape hatch, as if the Government, having enumerated all conceivable ways of beneficially combining or co-operating, ran out of ideas and put in a basket clause to provide for new and more interesting reasons for companies and businessmen to get together. I believe that subsections (2) and (3) should be deleted from the bill.

Into this context, and before discussing clause 14, dealing with legal reasons for suppliers withholding supplies, I must draw your attention to clause 12 of the bill, and especially to the words "has done" which you will find on page 5, line 24. I have been told that this apparently innocent provision may greatly encourage the formation of combines, mergers and monopolies because it provides an escape without conviction for an offence that has been committed. I fail to understand why the courts should now be given power to issue a restraining or dissolution order without conviction where the offence has been committed. How can we explain to the ordinary Canadian citizen that when a criminal offence has been committed we shall no longer automatically institute criminal proceedings, as is done for ordinary people, but we shall permit an alternative and, to me, a kind of civil action procedure? Are we not introducing here a new and dangerous principle which really means this: In some cases, when an offence has been committed, the courts may, on motion of the different Attorneys General, simply issue an order that it be not repeated? Are we not giving psychological and even practical encouragement for groups of companies to experiment in getting together? Is this not a civil remedy for what is already proven to be a criminal act? What is its constitutional position? Furthermore, why should we be giving discretionary power to the Attorneys General in cases where laws have already been contravened and so judged by the courts? Why should the Government not prosecute in cases where arrangements have already been made contrary to the act, and leave unchanged the 1952 provision that the courts may grant an injunction to prohibit anything in the form of a combine or merger that is about to be or likely to be done in contravention of the act? This would still enable the courts to rule whether any planned merger or monopoly was to the public detriment, without making this power retroactive to offences already committed. I simply fail to understand how we may explain to the Canadian public the purpose or the equity of this new change in clause 12.

I wish now to speak about clause 14—that is the part which has been discussed tonight —new subsection (5). This is the subsection which provides four legal excuses for the withholding of supplies. The fifth one, dealing with the unfair disparagement excuse, has now mercifully been taken out. I hope that we will mercifully take out the other four.

I believe that the consumer or the general public is entitled to have the greatest degree of efficiency promoted by free competition in all stages of production and distribution, and this new subsection does tinker or tamper with competition in distribution. Whatever be the expressed intent of this new subsection, I believe that it will lessen competition at the retail level especially, for it will penalize those retailers who may evolve new, more efficient and less expensive retail practices. I believe that the present amendment to this section will lead to downward and upward pressures for resale price maintenance—downward by the manufacturers and wholesalers, who will now be armed with a legal right to exert pressure; and upward by retailers, who will be putting pressure upon distributors and manufacturers because they believe that they are subject to painful competition on the part of those retailers who are simply exercising their common law right to direct their own marketing policies and practices as they deem best suited to their consumer trade.

In blunt and sincere terms I state my belief that subsection (5) will go a long way to reinstituting an indirect form of resale price maintenance and will also go a long way to meeting the fervent hope of some representatives of the Canadian business world that this Parliament should totally lift the legal ban on resale price maintenance, and thus permit the supplier to administer the prices directly and openly.

I reject as specious the arguments which do tax my credulity very severely, that suppliers must try to protect the consuming public from its own foolishness and be prevented from making free choices between real and spurious bargains. Why should any supplier of goods limit my free choice—that is what is going to essentially happen—to purchase from a variety of retailers, thereby choosing by my own volition the kind of servicing I may desire? What we need more than anything else is not the introduction of a variant or hybrid type of indirect price maintenance, but rather a strengthening of our legal protective devices to prevent false or misleading advertising, in all its external forms, and I do hope sincerely that the new section 33(c), in clause 13 of the bill, will provide this additional protection. It is not the business of Parliament to provide an indirect but henceforth an apparently legal pricing structure to subsidize marginal operators or to protect them from what has been termed painful competition. For that will be the result of these relief-type amendments. We are dealing here with the dilution of a rather basic principle, namely, that interference with competition should be under public and not private supervision or control.

There has been a great deal of talk about the dangers and evils of loss-leader selling and that this is one of the basic reasons for this change. As a matter of fact, and my opinion is confirmed by more expert students of this problem, I believe that this loss-leader problem is almost like a bogey which has been heavily overdramatized by some associations and some manufacturers to build up a case, and objective inquiries made by the director and the commission demonstrate that the number of cases where such loss-leader selling occurs—by that I mean selling at less than the cost and thus without any profit, however you may define the word "profit"—is small.

I repeat, that the number of such cases is so small, so sporadic, and so unproven as not to make it a serious problem even for measurement, let alone for the formulation of a major social policy, which is what this subsection is doing.

Dean Cohen summarized in these words his opposition to what he termed this partial opening of the door to resale price maintenance on the grounds of fairness, which grounds of fairness he claimed were not substantiated by evidence of objective need. He said:

> Now the result will be to allow the cutting off by a vendor of a purchaser on the ground that the vendor had reasonable cause to believe that these events were taking place as set out in clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d); which events in clauses (a), (b), (c), and (d) are in any case extremely difficult to define.... Where no urgency, why risk this change? To administer the introductory clause suggests, it seems to me, the possible emergency of gossip and informers which will not make any constructive contribution to the business community.

Dealing with the probable effects of subsection 5, Professor English of Carleton University made this interesting observation:

> In the first place he—

That is the supplier.

> —will not be likely to act unless a considerable group of small retailers puts on sufficient pressure to make it worth while for him to interrupt his relations with a chain. If it does become worth while the action will amount to the administration of a private law based on hearsay. The effect can only be to raise or maintain prices to consumers and what is more important it may, if effective, remove from the consumer his freedom of choice between retail outlets. Whether the consumer wants a low-priced product without services or a higher-priced product is surely not the business of the manufacturer—or, I might add, of the Government. In particular the idea that the manufacturer should be permitted to determine "the level of servicing that purchasers might reasonably expect" is an intrusion upon their freedom.

Presenting a brief which had been approved by four of his colleagues, Dr. L. A. Skeoch, Professor of Economics of Queen's University, made this summary statement about the proposed changes to section 34 of the act:

> Altogether we consider the legislation unsound in principle; it is manifestly unfair to adopt legislation which will prove to be enforceable only in certain trades. This consideration raises the wider issues as to why the Government should empower certain sectors of the economy to enforce prices which will yield a profit over cost whilst denying the same right to other groups, such as farmers. Again, we consider the principle of requiring sales at cost plus reasonable profit "unsound and dangerous", but we do not see how the principle can be adopted in one field and denied in others.

In a letter to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, Professors Gordon and Brewis, state bluntly:

> In spite of the expressed intention of the framers of Bill C-58 that the prohibition of loss-selling shall not be regarded as a reinstatement of resale price maintenance—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask the honourable gentleman, is that a quotation from the other place?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is it not out of order to read from the Hansard of the other place?

Hon. Mr. Wall: It may be out of order to quote from the record of a committee, but it has been done in this house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the honourable gentleman is entitled to read from any such report.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am not sure that he is entitled to read from the report of a committee of the other place.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hansard of the other place is the record of the proceedings that take place in the House of Commons. The report from which my honourable friend is reading is not a report of the proceedings of the House of Commons, but of the proceedings of a committee of that house. It has always been a recognized rule that the reports of the committees, outside of the house, do not constitute part of Hansard and can be referred to in this house. If the honourable gentleman were quoting from Hansard of the other place, I would agree with the honourable gentleman from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) that he was out of order. But, as I say, he is not quoting from Hansard of the other place.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) is quoting from the proceedings of a committee of the House of Commons. I am under the impression, though I have not studied the point, that in the traditions of this chamber he should not refer to any proceedings of the other house which took place during the present session.

Further, if an honourable senator quotes from evidence given before a committee, in all fairness to the subject-matter under discussion he should also quote from witnesses who testified on the other side, contrary to his view. In other words, if one is to give a true impression of the testimony given before a committee of the other place, he should quote not only the evidence of witnesses who testified in favour of the conclusion to which he has come, but also the evidence of witnesses who were adverse to this conclusion.

However, I am not sure that it is proper in this chamber to quote extensively in reading a speech which is substantially made up of quotations from proceedings which took place in a committee of the other place. I doubt that it is proper.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I hope, Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, that you will not make a ruling to that effect tonight.

The Hon. the Speaker: No. I bow to the greater experience of the honourable Leader of the Opposition, (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), who was for some time Speaker of the House of Commons. I defer my decision on the point.

I understand that the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) is nearing the conclusion of his speech. Throughout his speech I have been wondering whether or not he was out of order, but no objection was raised. With that admonition, I would ask him to refrain from quoting extensively from reports of proceedings of a committee of the other house. Let him give his own opinion, not the opinion of other people.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure I cannot object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I stand to be corrected, and subject to further instruction.

Honourable senators, if I may, I shall complete the quotation I had started to read, and I shall paraphrase other quotations.

Professors Gordon and Brewis, in a letter to the chairman of the committee, said:

> In spite of the expressed intention of the framers of Bill C-58 that the prohibition of loss-selling shall not be regarded as a reinstatement of resale price maintenance, we believe that such prohibition will in fact have this effect, and in our opinion the public interest will not be served thereby.

Much the same opinion came from five members of the University of Saskatchewan, who were members of the Economics and Political Science staff, and who presented a written brief.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Are the various quotations which he has given tonight from the committee reports all on one side of the question, namely, from persons who were against the bill, or has he also quoted any persons who were in favour of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: They are hard to find.

Hon. Mr. Wall: They are hard to find. I have read the reports of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: All of them?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Their considered statement was that they felt this amendment which provides for these defences would strengthen the manufacturer in his dealings with the distributor, weaken competition among distributors, and bring ultimate loss to the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Most of these men were professors, were they not?

Hon. Mr. Wall: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Theorists, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Wall: That is a statement you could infer but which I cannot accept. Step by step, honourable senators, these expert students of economic problems—and as such I believe they are—

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Just students.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wall: —demolish the case or the inclusion into this bill of subsection (5). The problem of loss-leaders is proved sporadic and not justifying legislative action; the arguments about business failures in the retail and wholesale sectors of our economy are disarmed by statistical evidence; and indeed, the whole case for these defences for refusing supplies is assessed soberly by these trained economists and found to be wanting because they believe that it will bring to us indirect forms of resale price maintenance.

Let me hasten to add—and now I am not speaking about theorists—that representatives of associations who may be considered to reflect general public opinion have gone on record as being especially opposed to these particular amendments because they fear that they will reinstitute resale price maintenance. I am referring to the Canadian Association of Consumers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the Co-operative Union of Canada.

Honourable senators will have noted that because there had been so much talk about unfair competition practices through loss-leader selling, the Liberal Opposition in the other house moved an amendment to clause 14 whose effect would have been to delete these defences and to make loss-leader selling an offence. The second paragraph of this amendment listed exemptions which would protect a retailer from conviction if he was selling broken or discontinued lines, if he had an end of season clearance, etc.

I must confess that I was greatly intrigued when the Minister of Justice took strong objection to these exceptions, and he pointed out that most of these exceptions were matters of opinion and that there was no certainty in their defences. He said:

> The whole thing is in the area of opinion. There are no criteria which are capable of being reduced to legal language by which you could measure the definition of loss-leader.

That is fine. I agree with that and yet, honourable senators, with no more adequate criteria for a similar practice of loss-leader selling, as in subsection 5(a) and for other ill-defined practices of attracting customers and using misleading advertising and not providing the level of servicing which the customers of such articles might reasonably expect, this Parliament is being asked to give legal protection to suppliers who discontinue the supplying of their retail or other outlets through a system of private commercial regulation. I believe that no valid case has been made for the apparent rush for these specific amendments, and the Minister of Justice can hardly blame those who twit him about his criticism of the former Government for its apparent rush to place a ban on resale price maintenance. I too believe that there is nothing especially urgent about the passing of Bill C-58, although it does contain many useful amendments which I can support. But really what is so pressing about all this that we must rush into substantive changes on the basis of inadequate information and proof?

Honourable senators, I end with this final summation. Although this bill has been presented to us as an instrument for greater clarification and strengthening of present anti-combines legislation—and true in many of its amendments the bill does not make beneficial changes—I believe that its principal result will be a blunting and a dilution of the effectiveness of this very important instrument to prevent restrictive or anti-competitive practices, especially through changes found in clauses 13 and 14. Because of my conviction that this basic and undesirable result would follow the acceptance of Bill C-58 in its present form, I would be remiss in my responsibilities if I did not voice my vigorous criticism of the bill's weaknesses. I need hardly repeat that I am unable to support it in its present though amended form. Thank you, honourable senators, for your patience.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Choquette, seconded by the Honourable Senator Higgins, that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, for Hon. Mr. Choquette, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I understand that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce (Hon. Mr. Hayden) wishes to hold a meeting of his committee tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable chairman informed me he could not hold it at 10 o'clock. I suggest we meet at 11 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I presume the notices will be sent out but it will be either 10 or 10.30, according to the notice.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Or 11 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, August 3, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report from the committee on Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

CIVIL SERVICE

METHOD OF RELATING SALARIES TO RATES PAID BY OTHER EMPLOYERS

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with there is a matter to which I should like to refer. On July 21 last, when I was presenting a report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts recommending salary increases for certain classes of employees of the Senate, the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) directed the following inquiry to me:

Would my honourable friend explain what steps are taken by the commission to relate these salaries and increases to similar positions in the business world?

By "commission" the honourable senator meant the Civil Service Commission. At the time I advised him that I did not have this information but would make an inquiry of the commission. I did this and I have now received from the commission a general memorandum in answer to the honourable senator's question.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Will you read it?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The memorandum is two pages long. I ask leave of the Senate to have it printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

For memorandum, see appendix to today's Hansard, p. 1194.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DESIRABILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH TWENTY-NATION GROUP—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, July 21, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Robertson, who drew to the attention of the Senate:

1. The desirability of Canada's entering into reciprocal trade agreements with the countries of the Twenty-Nation group who are presently examining ways and means of achieving closer economic co-operation, and in particular with the U.S.A., and the two European trade blocs, the Inner Six and the Outer Seven, for the progressive removal over a period of years of trade obstructions in order that our ability to trade profitably will be maintained and increased through

(a) the progressive reduction of our costs of living and production; and

(b) the progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

2. That by becoming closely associated economically with their 500 million peoples, we will remove the tragic possibility of Canada's becoming isolated from the great modern currents of trade and commerce. By our precept and example we will contribute to removing the possibility of a trade war developing between the two sides of the Atlantic, a development that the Soviet Union fervently hopes for and which might well enable the communist world to accomplish economically what they have failed to do militarily.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, I wish to sincerely compliment the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) for calling the attention of this honourable body to world trade conditions as they affect Canada. The honourable senator gave us one of the most excellent addresses on this subject that I have listened to in this chamber for a long time, and I fully realize what a lot of time and study it took to prepare such a fine and informative address. I regret I did not have an opportunity to speak in this debate previously.

The honourable senator from Shelburne several times called attention to the European economic organization of the Inner Six and the Outer Seven nations of Europe which have declared war, so to speak, on economic trade barriers among themselves and are putting their ideas into action. Only last Friday Chancellor Adenauer of Germany met with President Charles de Gaulle of France and gave his blessing to a European cabinet to co-ordinate the policies of France, West Germany and the other four members of the Common Market of Europe with a combined population of 165 million people —nearly as large as the population of the United States—and with steadily increasing purchasing power. The idea seems to be to form the United States of Europe, and it may quite well be that Canada, if nothing is done, will simply be on the outside looking in over formidable trade bars.

One part of the honourable senator's proposal attracted my special attention. That is paragraph (b):

> The progressive reduction of specific obstacles to our exports that may presently exist, and to guard against the creation of new ones.

To this I think we can all fully agree. We all know international trade is a two-way street, but such trade must be on an equitable and mutually profitable basis to achieve full success. To place a penalty on exports and a premium on imports—and that is what Canada has been doing the last few years—means exports are curtailed and imports encouraged and thus we create increased unemployment at home and an increased deficit trade balance with foreign nations abroad. It is elementary that there can be no other answer when such policies are pursued. As our deficit trade balance increases, so will unemployment.

Last year, as we know, the premium on the Canadian dollar, chiefly caused by the heavy borrowing of funds in New York—several hundred millions a year—rose to over 5 per cent, which cost Canadian exporters $250 million.

The honourable senator from Shelburne mentioned in his speech that manufacturing costs are higher in Canada than in the United States. Of course they would be, owing to our financial policy. Exporters had to pay 1 per cent more for carrying inventories than their competitors in the U.S.A. did, and also had to pay 5 per cent exchange, which adds up to 6 per cent. During the early part of this year strong representations against this obnoxious premium on the Canadian dollar were made to the Department of Finance by the Canadian Exporters' Association, the Canadian Fisheries Council, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. The Department of Finance gave a very sympathetic ear and stated the premium was a worry, but it would take a considerable amount of the taxpayers' money to get rid of the undesirable premium; however, it promised to do whatever it could to alleviate it. So when the budget was brought down in another place in April the Minister of Finance made a very statesmanlike statement that the borrowings of the federal Government in the domestic money market would be reduced to a near minimum this year, thus leaving the way open for the governments on the lower level, such as provincial governments, municipalities, etc., to borrow much more freely in Canada instead of borrowing so many hundreds of millions in New York annually, which, as stated, had been the chief factor in driving our dollar to a very substantial premium. This statement was extremely well received by these governments on the lower level, also very favourably by business and industry. Speculators in Canadian dollars, and there were many, took the hint and sold their holdings of Canadian dollars and got out of the exchange market, as they were quick to realize that the demand for Canadian dollars on the New York Exchange market to satisfy Canadian loans would logically decrease the dollar premium very substantially, if not wipe it out. Now every point the dollar premium goes up costs exporters of the country $50 million on a per annum basis.

Subsequent to the minister's budget statement the Canadian dollar premium declined steadily in New York from April onward until it reached 1 per cent. It did not fluctuate; the trend was steadily downward, which trend was a great assistance to the international trade of Canada. Then suddenly, without any known sensible reason, as far as I can see, the Bank of Canada withdrew over $100 million from our gold reserve, which is really a collateral for our paper money and foreign debt, and spent this large withdrawal in the exchange market to buy up Canadian dollars at a time the Canadian dollar needed no support, as it had not even gone to par. The result of this uncalled-for action by the Bank of Canada, was that the premium on our dollar was driven up to over 2¼ per cent. Whether the Bank of Canada made or lost money in the exchange market in connection with this mysterious transaction, I do not know, but I do know it has cost the exporters of Canada between $8 and $9 million to date.

Earlier this year the figures showed the Bank of Canada had some $800 million in American funds on hand, convertible into gold, which when the premium on our dollar was 5 per cent showed a paper loss of $40 million, depending of course on what the bank paid for the American funds, so in selling a hundred million of American funds for Canadian dollars our dollar was around 101 or thereabouts. The bank may have got out of the transaction fairly well, but why should the export trade of the country have to sacrifice several million dollars on account of this fantastic transaction? The Bank of Canada neither toils nor spins, as far as real wealth is concerned—it lives off the taxpayer; whereas exporters produce real wealth from our land, sea and forests.

On the editorial page of the Toronto Globe and Mail of July 6 the editor states that an article published in the paper on July 2, taken from a letter written by the Société Génerale, a highly respected French bank established in Paris in 1864, criticized this transaction of the Bank of Canada, and the article was described by our federal Department of Finance as misleading propaganda based on total ignorance of Canada. Well, investors throughout the free world will decide who is right. For my part, I have no hesitation in stating that the severe criticism by the well-known French bank and the Globe and Mail of this very unwise transaction in the exchange market by the Bank of Canada was more than justified.

Our national reserve which is, as stated, the collateral behind our money and foreign debt, was raided or depleted by over $100 million at a time when our foreign obligations were increasing by the billion, and the 100 million Canadian dollars which were bought to support and drive the premium on our dollar upward were conveniently transferred to the consolidated fund of the Government. This amount could, of course, be spent to cover deficits or pay current expenses, which would be straight inflation, as the money in the reserve fund is dormant and not in circulation, being held for emergencies, but when transferred out of the fund in this roundabout way and spent for current needs there would be no new production or services to offset such new purchasing power.

I might say that during the period in May when the Bank of Canada started manipulating the exchange market our dollar was receiving substantial support from some loans being raised in United States dollars and by a special flow of European investments. In the opinion of high monetary authorities in Europe, had this official support not been given by the Bank of Canada our dollar would have gone to par, which has been officially recognized as a desirable national objective, for a non-premium dollar is absolutely essential to our international trade. It has been stated by our federal financial authorities that a great deal of the taxpayers' money would be needed to keep our dollar at par. This statement is certainly inconsistent, for now we see a huge sum of the taxpayers' money used to stop a natural trend of our dollar down to the par level. The use of the taxpayers' money in this senseless way is absolutely detrimental to the international trade of Canada. And it can be well said, as some of our international financial critics have pointed out, that Canada has inadequate reserves of gold, or money convertible into gold, to continue using our gold reserves to support a natural declining dollar. There is an obvious risk that foreign investors may take a serious view of such a situation.

Some weeks ago the federal Finance Minister was asked about reports that the Bank of Canada operated in the foreign exchange market to support a natural drop in the premium on our dollar as compared to American dollars. He was quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail of July 6 last as stating that the national stabilization fund, which I might say is part of the reserve fund, merely had operated in a normal way to reduce fluctuations from day to day in the value of our dollar. This argument hardly holds water. Anyone who will look up the word "fluctuation" in the dictionary will find it means a going up and down. This was not the case at all when the Bank of Canada took action. The dollar was going steadily downward on its way to par and there was no excuse as regard fluctuations for the Bank of Canada to tap our needed national reserves and throw over $100 million of our taxpayers' money heedlessly in the exchange market to reverse a natural downward trend which was so desirable to our foreign trade.

I have long been interested in greater development of international trade between all nations. Unnecessary impediments that hold up such trade are out of place in these days, as foreign markets for a country like Canada are hard to get and very competitive.

At the meeting on Tuesday of last week of the Dominion-Provincial Conference, Finance Minister Fleming stated it was the desire of the Government to lower the premium on our dollar, also to see lower interest rates, and I know he was entirely sincere in this statement.

A few days ago I made the following inquiry in this house:

1. What was the net amount of American funds sold by the Exchange Stabilization Fund during the month of May 1960?

I received the following answer:

$101,500,000.

My inquiry contained two other questions which were answered very unintelligently. They were:

2. What were the reasons for the sale?

3. What were the effects of this sale on the premium of the Canadian dollar?

I received the following reply, which came from the Department of Finance:

2 and 3. The operations with respect to the Foreign Exchange Control Fund which have been carried on recently were completely in accord with the method of operation carried on by the Bank of Canada on behalf of the Minister of Finance ever since this Government came into office, and prior to that time by the former Government. There was no change in policy or in the basis of operation. These were simply normal operations carried out with a view to reducing the fluctuation in the exchange rate from day to day.

As you will all realize, this reply evades my questions, which I asked in good faith, as I know it is in the public interest that the light of day be thrown on this mysterious, secretive and very questionable exchange transaction of the Bank of Canada. This unintelligent reply smacks of ivory tower practices by people who seem to have the idea they should rule the economy of our country by divine right with little or no regard for the representatives of the people.

The transaction I have discussed and questioned reminds me of what might be labelled "frenzied finance," as it ended up in a substantial loss to our national monetary reserves. In sound finance our national reserves should be closely related proportionately to our fast-rising financial obligations abroad instead of being needlessly weakened for no good purpose.

Debate concluded.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the house I would like to announce that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce is to sit immediately after the house rises for further consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code. It is probable that the committee will meet this evening as well.

HON. NORMAN McL. PATERSON

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, before the Senate adjourns may I call attention to the fact that one of our colleagues, the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is celebrating a birthday today? I should like to take this opportunity to wish him a happy birthday.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Thank you.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

79955-1—76

APPENDIX

(See p. 1190)

CIVIL SERVICE

MEMORANDUM FROM CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION IN REPLY TO INQUIRY BY HON. MR. LAMBERT RE METHOD OF RELATING CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES TO RATES PAID BY OTHER EMPLOYERS

The Civil Service Commission, in recommending salary rates for Civil Service classes, is guided by three basic principles:

1. Salaries in the service should be comparable to salaries paid by outside employers for similar work;
2. Salaries in the service should be such as to attract the right kind of men and women to the service and to keep them in it; and
3. Salaries for the various classes of employment in the service should bear appropriate relationships one to the other.

The first of these three principles is regarded as the key principle in arriving at salary recommendations. The commission compares Civil Service rates of pay with those rates paid on the outside for similar work. Information on outside rates is obtained through the commission's Pay Research Bureau.

There are, naturally, a limited number of Civil Service classes which can be directly compared with occupational classes found outside the service. These classes are carefully described in terms of characteristic duties, required qualifications, hours of work, and other working conditions. Clerks, Stenographers, Typists, Telephone Operators, Duplicating Equipment Operators, Cleaning Service Men, Watchmen, Storemen, Maintenance Craftsmen, Draftsmen, Engineers, Chemists, Economists, Auditors, Geologists, Hospital Nurses are examples of the Civil Service classes which afford comparison with occupations commonly found outside the service.

In its surveys the Pay Research Bureau obtains from a selected group of outside establishments a list of the actual rates paid to employees in each class the described duties and qualifications of which match reasonably well with similar classes in the service. The establishments surveyed are selected with a view to achieving a cross section representative of the various industries and regions of Canada. Accordingly, the rates reported by the Pay Research Bureau include rates from all provinces and most of the industries in which conditions of employment are reasonably comparable. The industries represented in the bureau's surveys include banks, insurance companies, municipal services, railways, public utilities, telephone companies, printers and publishers, retail trade, food processing companies, manufactures of automobile equipment, steel and iron, electrical appliances, chemicals, petroleum and oil products.

The data on rates of pay, together with relevant information concerning conditions of employment, are then carefully examined by the commission with a view to arriving at a rate that is representative of outside rates, taking into account any significant differences in conditions of employment between the service and outside establishments.

Before arriving at its actual recommendation for particular classes, the commission examines the relative internal values of the classes concerned and considers the possible consequences of any changes in salary relationships. Account is also taken of the commission's recruiting experience and of the number of separations from the service in particular classes. The process described above relates to Civil Service classes which have counterparts in the business world. For salary survey purposes such classes are called "key" classes. Although there are relatively few "key" classes, a large proportion of the total Civil Service population is found in them. Salary rates for the large number of remaining classes must be reached by relating them to the rates found appropriate for the "key" classes. For example, the salary range for a class characterized by the same level of skill, and the same working conditions, as a "key" class will be set at the same level as the salary range for the "key" class. Differences in levels of skill and responsibility and in working conditions are evaluated and translated into appropriately higher or lower salary ranges.

Civil Service Commission of Canada
August 1960.

THE SENATE

Thursday, August 4, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Copy of Order in Council P.C. 1960-1047, dated 2nd August 1960, appointing Mr. Vincent Wheeler Bladen, of Toronto, Ontario, a Commissioner under Part 1 of the Inquiries Act, Chapter 154, R.S. 1952, to inquire into and report upon the situation of, and prospects for, the industries in Canada producing motor vehicles and parts therefor.

JUDGES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-78, to amend the Judges Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

Hon. John M. MacDonald moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered Bill C-58, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

Hon. Lionel Choquette moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, before the bill is read the third time I should like to say a few words, in view of the fact that on the motion for second reading I raised certain points and voiced certain criticism of some provisions of the bill.

Since that time we have had a very full hearing in committee. What might be called contentious sections, which in the other place had provoked considerable debate and controversy, were dealt with in a very large way in the course of our committee discussion. Those sections were stood in the first instance and gathered together, and the Minister of Justice was invited to attend and answer questions concerning them, which he did.

I should tell you that during the course of the hearing in committee there were motions directed toward the changing or elimination of some provisions of the bill, and votes were taken.

In the course of the debate on second reading I raised certain questions. I would not want honourable senators to get a notion that I raise questions and then do not try to be satisfied on the points raised, or that if I do accept what the bill contains with reservations I do not state them. Let me state my reservations now. I said on second reading that to a very substantial extent the bill was a meaningless sort of thing, contributing little if anything to the general law in relation to combines. I did say that one very meritorious provision in the bill was that for enjoining combinations in restraint of trade without the necessity of first instituting a prosecution. I did discuss the extension of the jurisdiction to prosecute in criminal cases, and also to refer applications for injunction to the Exchequer Court of Canada. On this second point I expressed some concern, having regard to the British North America Act and the authority under which the federal Parliament could act.

In committee we had an opportunity for full discussion and the views of the minister were expressed to us in that regard. There can be no question about the authority of the federal Parliament to create additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada. I suppose, in one sense, if you provide additional facilities for the hearing of cases it might be said that those additional facilities do or may have the effect of contributing to the better administration of the laws of Canada. Therefore, I press that question no further.

I raised several other points in the Senate. One had to do with the provision in relation to exports; another had to do with the provision in relation to loss-leaders, and still another had to do with promotional allowances.

The loss-leader provision, section 14 in the bill, is one which provoked considerable discussion and led to the proposed elimination of the section. We were told in committee by the minister that this section provided for conditions under which a manufacturer who is charged with a violation of the prohibition against resale price maintenance might have a defence if he raised the question of the conduct of the retailer in practising loss-leader selling. The minister stated, in answer to a question which I raised, and which was subsequently asked by other honourable senators, that this so-called defence added nothing new to the law, that even if section 14 were not there and these conditions were absent from any combines legislation there still would be available to a manufacturer so charged the right to raise as a matter of law, and as an answer to the charge, those things which are set out in section 14 as conditions under which he might give a complete answer to a prosecution for refusing to sell to a retailer on the basis that the retailer had refused to maintain prices.

In connection with the provision in relation to exports, after hearing all the evidence, including that given by the minister, I think the conclusion must be that, quite apart from anything in this bill, the general law of Canada provides that in export trade manufacturers may combine if they conduct themselves in such a way that they are operating only in the export field and are not affecting unduly the domestic market or interfering unduly with the desire or right of any other person who wants to get into the export business. We were satisfied, and the minister agreed, that within those limitations one did not need this provision in the Combines Investigation Act in order to combine with other manufacturers or producers for the purpose of setting prices and terms in dealing with export markets.

In the light of that situation I think my statement to this house on second reading is reinforced. It seems to me there should be some limit to what are called clarifications. These may be considered as clarifications of the existing law or of the codifying of the existing law, although I do not think I can call it a codifying because that would be collecting in one basket all the law, but the anomaly here is that even though certain so-called defences are set out as being available under these sections dealing particularly with loss-leaders, it is not exhaustive of the rights of defence which constitute an answer to a charge of violating the resale price maintenance section. Any defence which constitutes an answer is available to you whether it is included in the list of qualifications or conditions that are set up in section 14 or not. That was thoroughly discussed this morning, and in the opinion of the Minister of Justice that is correct.

I feel that in substance I was justified in saying that much of this bill is of the character of consequential amendments by reason of moving sections 411 and 412 of the Criminal Code into the Combines Investigation Act. These so-called clarifications, which add nothing to the substantive law in relation to combines, comprise three-quarters or more of the bill. The meritorious substantial things in the bill are the ones in relation to injunctions, to which I referred, and possibly the provision for additional facilities for the trial of charges which are laid against persons for violating the Combines Investigation Act. I have been trying to assess in my own mind, therefore, whether or not I was wrong in describing the bill as meaningless and saying that what had really been set up was a show window full of poor or dummy merchandise in a form which looks attractive. I still have that feeling in regard to the legislation. The only thing I can say is that in clarifications such as you have in relation to section 14 on loss-leaders it is possible, in stating defences under subsection (2) of the new section 32 in answer to a charge of combining to lessen competition, that these provisions may enable those who are concerned with the application of the act, from the point of view of possibly being investigated, to delimit more clearly the extent of the area within which they might operate without stepping over the boundary line and becoming subject to a charge for violation of the act. Another way of saying it is that the clarifications, while they add nothing to the law, may be ameliorating to those people who feel that they ordinarily live in terrorem of the Combines Investigation Act. They may feel that they could move one foot forward slightly more with some assurance more or less that in that movement they are not stepping over the boundary line, whereas up to the present time there has been an absence of any indication of what are the definite and emphatic limits beyond which they could not move.

Be that as it may, the work of the committee is done. As far as I am concerned, I have had my day in court at this stage of the matter. I still feel that we dealt with it properly on second reading, the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) and myself, in pointing out the situations under the bill and in being provocative for the purpose of getting a complete and full understanding. And I will say this, that from the indications we had in committee there certainly appeared to be a full and complete understanding of the scope and effect of the bill. All of which is to the good. I only hope that the administration, with the additional provisions which are in this bill, will keep the picture of the main purpose of combines legislation fully before them so that there will not be encroachments on the outer rim of the picture that might have the effect of delimiting the scope of their investigatory powers, and that they will still bear in mind that the real purpose of combines legislation is to prevent the things which are prescribed under the act, and that these clarifications are not a signal or invitation for those who might otherwise feel in terror of taking certain steps that they can now more freely take them. I hope the alertness of the administration will remain and persist with due regard to the rights of the general public which is carrying on operations that may in some way or another bring it within the scope of this legislation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the Honourable Senator Choquette, seconded by the Honourable Senator Paterson, that this bill be read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDING INSTALLATION OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION SYSTEM IN SENATE CHAMBER ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. William R. Brunt moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts recommends installation of a simultaneous translation system in the Senate chamber. This system has been installed in the chamber of the other place for some time. When the matter was referred to this committee a special subcommittee was set up, composed of His Honour the Speaker, the Honourable Senator Drouin, and the Honourable Senators Veniot, Wall, Méthot and myself, Our Speaker, Senator Drouin, was chairman of the subcommittee and Senator Wall was the secretary. A number of meetings were held, and a great deal of work was done in obtaining all the necessary data and information required with respect to the installation of an efficient and proper system in this chamber. The chairman of the subcommittee, His Honour the Speaker, is the person best qualified to make to this honourable body a full report as to what the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts has agreed upon. I am not going to say more, but will let him give us his report on this matter.

The Hon. the Speaker (Hon. Mr. Drouin), left the Chair.

Hon. Lionel Choquette in the Chair.

Hon. Mark R. Drouin: Honourable senators, I think I will take my gloves off. I must say that from where I stand now you seem much more formidable than when I am sitting in the Chair, from which I can talk ex cathedra —and you haven't too much to say about it. I know I am exposing myself but, this being my first venture down here on the floor, I know that honourable senators will be indulgent.

As the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has told you, I was appointed chairman of the subcommittee to decide, first, whether the installation of a system of simultaneous translation in this chamber would be advisable. I must say that at the very first meeting of this subcommittee, on the 25th of May, we were unanimous in deciding that it was certainly advisable to have a simultaneous translation system in this chamber just as there is in the other place.

First of all, we considered that it is a question of principle. Canada is a bilingual country where everything else is translated and we could not see why in this chamber, where the law originates in many instances, or where it finishes in other instances, a simultaneous translation system should not be installed and made available to all honourable senators. It took just one meeting to reach unanimity on that first term of reference, and I trust that honourable senators will agree with your subcommittee.

The second question we were asked to decide was whether such an installation in this beautiful chamber of ours would somewhat mar it or disfigure it or cause it to lose some of its aesthetic beauty. This point we were not competent to judge, although we think we are men of some taste, so we consulted engineers from the Bell Telephone Company and the Northern Electric Company. Our main consultations were with Mr. Gardner, of the Department of Public Works, whom I consider to be not only a most competent architect but also quite an artist. We had, I believe, three meetings with him. He was positive that his department could do a wonderful job in blending the woodwork of the two booths that would be necessary for the interpreters into the general appearance of the chamber and the anteroom without in any way disfiguring our chamber, and he came to the conclusion that the best place to instal the booths would be in the south corner of our anteroom.

The wood to be used and the carvings to be made would be exactly the same as the wood and the carving in the antechamber and in this chamber. He was sure we could benefit by the experiences of the other house. He said he could improve on the soundproofing and ventilation of the booths. He told me that I could assure honourable senators that the system would not in any way mar the appearance of the chamber or the antechamber or deprive us of any space to speak of. The booths might come in the line of vision of two or three guests at the opening of Parliament, those seated in the two south corners; but, as honourable senators know, at the openings of Parliament the Commons are summoned and during an important part of the ceremony members from that house are standing behind the bar and they obstruct the view of guests seated in the anteroom.

In Mr. Gardner's opinion a good job can be done. Accessibility of the booths for the interpreters would be perfect in the anteroom, and that is where he recommends that we instal them.

We then went into the cost of such an installation, which was the third term of reference, and I must say that we were rather pleased and surprised to learn that the cost of installation would not exceed $1,000. We consulted with Mr. Daviault of the Bureau of Translations, who told us we would need only three translators whereas in the House of Commons they have seven; therefore the interpretation organization would cost us only three-sevenths of what it actually costs the House of Commons. These three interpreters whom we would use would not be solely employed on the work they would do here. They also would be used in the House of Commons and as translators in Mr. Daviault's Bureau for Translations. So when not occupied here their time would not be wasted. As a matter of fact, the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) and myself estimated that they would be working about 15 to 18 hours a week in the Senate and the rest of the time, about 18 hours or 20 hours, they would be working for Mr. Daviault doing translation for the bureau, which I understand needs extra help anyway. Their salaries are generally around $6,000 to $7,000 a year. So you have a good idea of what the installation would cost.

We got in touch with the Bell Telephone Company.. At first they were not overeager to accept this work, but they said that if the Senate expressed a desire for them to do the job they would do it. It is a matter of policy for them now not to go into intercommunication installations. That apparently is not a business that they should be in and they decided they would not do any more of it. But considering that the amplifying system here was installed by them and that both systems would have to be technically integrated they decided to do the job if honourable senators decided it should be done.

There is not much to add. We all feel that it is very important to have a translation system here. I personally think we should instal one.

In Parliament it is not a matter of making speeches, then relaxing and awaiting a translation two or three days later and then responding by another speech. We are debaters, and the debate is much more effective, and much more expeditious if we can understand one another, here, right away, while the speeches are being made and the debate is going on.

Honourable senators, in all justice to both languages and the bilingual character of this country, and as chairman of your subcommittee, I think that we should have simultaneous translation in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you advise the members of this chamber as to the amount of the monthly rental. I think you have overlooked this.

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes. Honourable senators, I must tell you that the cost for the operation of this translation system would be $300 per month, payable to the Bell Telephone Company, on a rental basis and generally on a five-year contract. The rental agreement is made between the Bell Telephone Company and the Public Works Department. That would be the charge during the session. During the recess the monthly charge would be half of that amount, namely $150 per month. So if we sat seven months the rental charge would be $2,100, and during the remaining five months of recess the monthly rental charge would be $150. I believe that the cost of installation and rental to be paid by the Government to the Bell Telephone Company for the facility of simultaneous translation is very small indeed considering the advantages which would be derived from such a system.

(Translation):

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I myself will try to speak French. My first words will be to congratulate the Speaker upon his maiden speech in the Senate.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I have just congratulated His Honour the Speaker on his maiden speech in the Senate. Although we miss him in the Chair, we believe that he adds greatly to the debates by sitting among us. I assure him, however, we do not want to lose him as our Speaker.

I am quite in accordance with the proposal of the committee that we instal a simultaneous translation system, and I voted for it in committee. There have been some excellent speeches made in this chamber in the French language, most of which the English-speaking senators could not follow. I am fortunate enough to understand sufficient French to follow discourses in that language, but I do so with a great deal of difficulty and I miss a considerable amount of the substance. I hope that when the system is installed I shall, by listening more frequently to French, become able to follow the speakers in that language with greater facility.

I have one concern about the installation of this system. It will make it so easy for us to understand honourable senators speaking in the French language that we will not bother to learn that language. I warn my colleagues of the temptation to follow the easier course. On the other hand, for those of us who are interested in learning the second language, it will afford us an opportunity of hearing translations every day. That I think will be all to the good. After all, this is a bilingual country, and in Parliament the two languages are equal. Therefore, we should be able to follow the remarks of a speaker in either of the official languages. But I repeat my warning to my English-speaking colleagues against the attitude that it will no longer be necessary for us to try to comprehend a speaker in the French language.

And let me say to my French-speaking compatriots, I hope you will not give up the use of your excellent knowledge of the English language. It is most noticeable that French-speaking senators who come to this house quickly acquire a knowledge of the English language sufficient to carry on an ordinary conversation, and practically all of them quickly become sufficiently competent to make speeches in English. I wish I could commend my English-speaking compatriots for a similar zeal in learning the French language.

Honourable senators, I hope the installation of the simultaneous translation system will result in our better knowledge of both languages and contribute toward making Canada a truly bilingual country.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, with all due respect to His Honour the Speaker, I think I should say that I disapprove of this proposal, which I opposed when it was before the Internal Economy Committee. I disagree with what His Honour the Speaker stated to the effect that the mechanical installation of the system would not disfigure the chamber. If the installation involves having a gadget hanging from the ceiling in this chamber, as in the other house, it will certainly have a disfiguring effect.

The members of the House of Commons attend at the bar of this house on only a few occasions and few or no members of the public attend such ceremonies as the swearing in of new senators.

As the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has said, we enjoy hearing French-speaking senators express themselves in the English language. I only regret that I cannot do as well in their language.

The information I get about the experience of the members of the House of Commons with simultaneous translation is that they are not entirely satisfied with it. It is believed that the system has retarded the progress of young English-speaking members in gaining a knowledge of the French language. I have been greatly impressed with the rapid progress French-speaking senators make in their grasp of the English language after they come to this chamber.

Honourable senators, I have one further thought in this matter. I think we get carried away with the idea that we in the Senate must have everything the House of Commons has. Now it is proposed that we engage three expert translators for this new system. Indeed, these men have to be experts, or the translation will be only a hop-skip-and-jump affair—I have had some experience in this respect—and you finally give up and take the gadget off your ear.

To return to my thought as to our needs in this chamber differing from those of the House of Commons, may I add that the members of that house are elected and they may seek re-election. Therefore, every member must be alert as to everything that is going on there. We in this chamber are not in that position. I think I am safe in saying that we have plenty of time to wait for a printed translation of a French speech. It is of no great importance that we be able to answer immediately what has been said in the other language.

Honourable senators, I feel that this installation in the Senate is an unnecessary expense and will not benefit anyone a great deal. Furthermore, I am satisfied that it will disfigure this chamber.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I support this proposal, first on the basis of principle and, secondly, after hearing my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) speak French, I want a translation quickly.

The real reason for my rising at this time is that yesterday an amendment to the Bill of Rights was adopted in the other house providing that it is a fundamental right of the citizen to have an interpreter. At the moment that may not seem to be a fundamental right, but on reflection one must agree it is a very necessary right in this country. It is gratifying to know, even before that bill reaches this house, that the facilities for carrying out one of its provisions will already be here.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, since it was my privilege to work with four of our honourable colleagues in trying to adjudicate this problem, and having consulted with the experts who have given freely of their time and technical advice, I feel I must associate myself with the thoughts and ideas expressed by the chairman of our committee, His Honour the Speaker, concerning the general desirability and advisability of installing in this chamber a simultaneous translation system. Although I recognize the import of the statement made by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) that there is a considerable difference in the functions of the two chambers, I believe I am sound in my thinking that in a very practical way the simultaneous translation system will give equitable treatment to the two official languages of Parliament in this chamber.

The honourable gentleman from Blaine Lake suggested there might be some disfigurement of the chamber as a result of the installation of this system. May I assure the house that this possibility was uppermost in our minds. So that honourable senators may understand better what is to be done, I may say it is proposed that two translation booths be installed in the antechamber and that the only evidence of them in this chamber will be a window behind which the translators will sit.

The members of the committee actually sat in the spot designated for the translation booths to determine how many people would in any way have their vision obstructed if the screens at the end of the chamber were down while guests were here on some special occasion. Our estimate was half a dozen people at the most.

The problem concerning the staff of translators weighed rather heavily with us because we realized they would not be actually engaged in translating in this chamber for many hours during the week. We feel we worked out a satisfactory arrangement whereby there would be a pooling of translators so that when they are not engaged nere they will be at work in the other chamber or in the Bureau for Translations. Therefore, the translation costs which will directly fall upon this chamber will be relatively small. Certainly the installation of the system at a cost of $1,000 and the monthly rental seemed to be reasonable. I heartily support this move.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I believe it fitting that a French-speaking senator, a Canadian like all of you, should say a word in this connection.

I am one of those who have most insisted on the installation of a simultaneous interpretation system in the interest of justice; the action taken by the committee is not only a matter of courtesy and good will, but it is also a matter of justice, and I wish to thank the members, and especially His Honour the Speaker.

(Text):

Honourable senators, I cannot agree with the comments made by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), particularly with reference to the installation of translation booths. Later today or perhaps tomorrow we shall be asked to give consideration to Bill C-79, for the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. I think we should address ourselves to a question of that magnitude before we argue over some trivial item such as installing a translation booth in the Senate chamber.

The honourable senator from Blaine Lake suggested that this system might hinder French-speaking senators from increasing their knowledge of the English language. Well, this argument works both ways and if it is bad for us then it is bad for our English-speaking confrères. I think we would be accomplishing much if we were to develop greater co-operation and exchange between the two official languages of this chamber.

Sometimes after I have delivered a speech in English some honourable member who is learning the French language will say, "I think it would have been better had you spoken in French." As honourable senators know, one cannot translate exactly into another language what he is thinking in his native language. I think it would be well to have a greater interchange of our two official languages.

(Translation):

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the good work you have done. I also want to thank the senator for Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) and all those who have helped in the implementation of this project. Thank you all in the name of my fellow citizens.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, as the English-speaking representative of my province, I deem it my duty, a very pleasant duty, to support this report enthusiastically.

Mr. Speaker, you have given us your report on the installation of the system of simultaneous translation in this house.

I believe, as do those who spoke before me, that a question of principle is involved. This is a bilingual country and each one of us is entitled to make his speeches in his mother tongue.

For my part, I am very fortunate, as I can understand my colleagues whether they speak French or English, but there are others who are not as fortunate as I.

The only thing I would like to add is this: when the simultaneous translation system is installed in this house, we will much oftener have the pleasure of hearing senators express themselves in the beautiful French language.

(Text):

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, I trust that this translation system is not being instituted for the purpose of getting a number of English-speaking senators on their feet to speak French. I know that in every such case there must be a presumption that the member taking the floor knows what he is talking about, but there is no presumption that his French-speaking listeners understood what he is saying. Of course, there are some exceptions, but they are rare.

As to our French-speaking colleagues, they articulate perfectly. Strange to say, it seems to the rest of us that they speak in English far more slowly than in French, and they utter each word so clearly that we can follow them sometimes much better than English-speaking senators. Our French-speaking colleagues also seem to have a good choice of words. Their English is so well expressed that I think they improve our knowledge of the language. It would be very unfortunate if a high standard of expression in English were lost to us by reason of our French-speaking senators speaking only in French. I might say that, as a rule, there is a difference between the quality of the French spoken by English-speaking senators and the quality of the English spoken by French-speaking senators. That remark is like an axiom, the truth of which is so apparent as to be instantly admitted.

(Translation):

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, the attitude of our good friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) reminds me of an incident which occurred at the Quebec Legislature in the days of Sir Lomer Gouin, the father of our distinguished senator from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin). One of the members of the Legislative Assembly was a very good fellow, as far as character was concerned, but he had never gone further than the primary school. Well, one day, seeing that the debate was dragging on, at the end of the session, Sir Lomer Gouin introduced a bill one day ahead of schedule. The member in question was quite anxious to know why Sir Lomer had done that, because he wanted to speak on that bill. So he asked the Speaker why the honourable the Premier had introduced the bill one day ahead of its scheduled examination on the Orders of the day. Sir Lomer replier by quoting the following proverb: "Si vis pacem, para bellum." Failing to understand, the member asked his neighbour: "What is he saying?" Without a moment's hesitation, the neighbour gave him this rather dubious translation: "Si tu veux que ça passe, fais la belle".

Angered by that reply which was supposed to have been translated by his neighbour, the member protested vigorously against what, he felt, was an insult on the part of Sir Lomer Gouin. If he had had the benefit of a translation system such as the one which is now proposed, he would not have raised this storm in a tea cup.

(Text):

To demonstrate the importance of having a simultaneous translation system in this house, let me say this. If we had such a system and someone dared to attack the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), the honourable senator would not need to ask his neighbours what was said, for he would have an immediate translation of it by means of the system.

Honourable senators, as one who is a lover of freedom and justice for all races, and especially the two principal races of this country, I am all in favour of this new method of simultaneous translation, and I take this opportunity of paying my compliments to all those who succeeded in making the arrangements, particularly His Honour the Speaker.

(Translation):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I consider it somewhat of a duty to say a few words, even if they are of no importance. The moment is well chosen and this is a glorious day!

Apparently, we have decided to install a simultaneous translation system in this house and everybody is happy about it.

(Text):

Everyone is pleased with the idea, and I think there is much to justify it.

May I say to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) that the remarks he made are not without justification. Simultaneous translation may not provide a better opportunity than now exists for any member of this house to improve his knowledge of either the English or the French language. Instead of trying to follow a speech being made in other than our native language we shall be more likely to depend upon the translation. I do not think, therefore, that bilingualism will be improved by installation of the system in this house.

May I remind honourable senators that the Constitution permits the use of both languages in Parliament. Any honourable member is free to speak in either language or in both, and certainly there is a good opportunity for those who are not familiar with both languages to become so.

However, I think that simultaneous translation has a purpose superior to that of assisting members of Parliament to improve their knowledge of a language. The main function of Parliament is to deal with legislation, and therefore our first duty here is to understand what is said. When we say something that we consider to be important, we feel that we must express ourselves so that we can be clearly understood. If simultaneous translation will help French-speaking senators and English-speaking senators to understand more clearly what is being discussed, it will greatly increase the usefulness of our debates on legislation. The principal advantage of a simultaneous translation system is that it will make it possible for every senator to understand immediately what is being said in French or in English and enable him to respond immediately if he so desires. It will facilitate and increase the opportunity for any senator to speak in either language and thus will further the aims and functions of the Senate, as it does those of the House of Commons.

It is quite noticeable that some honourable senators are proficient in the two languages. His Honour the Speaker is one and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is another, to mention only two. They can understand what is being said in either language. But once we have a simultaneous translation system, if at any time they do not feel disposed to follow a speech in the language in which it is being delivered they may tune in on the translation system and hear it in the other language. I am sure we were all edified by the example given us this afternoon by the honourable Leader of the Opposition. We are all aware of his ability to follow a speech in French, but after the installation of the translation system he may prefer to listen to French speeches translated into his own language through the translation system. However, there is nothing we can do about that.

I should say that the main reason why the decision of our committee must be approved is that the simultaneous translation will enable all legislators in this house to have a better understanding of subject-matters while they are being discussed and therefore to form an earlier and perhaps a sounder judgment than is possible under existing conditions.

(Translation):

Hon. Jean François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this goodwill discussion has the charm of solemnity, and I am very happy to add mine to the congratulations offered by those who spoke before me to the people who are responsible for the implementation of the project and who spoke so well this afternoon.

As to my collague from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), he enjoys the esteem and, I might say, the affection of all his collagues. If he sometimes differs with us—and it is deliberately that I speak French—it is only to express slight variations of opinion but on the whole he easily comes around to the general opinion held by his colleagues.

(Text):

Now, honourable colleagues, I will take this opportunity to tell you why I so often use the English language in this house. It is because my first experience in speaking here was saddening. The first words I spoke in this chamber were in French, but I had some difficulty in the reporting, so since then I have used mostly the English language when addressing you. I notice that there has been great progress in the reporting of French speeches and I give credit to whom it may concern. I hope that when we get a simultaneous translation system the necessity of having a correct French report of French speeches will be considered as important as it is and will not be overlooked.

Now, after commending everybody, starting with His Honour and all others who have spoken, and including our honourable colleagues of the English language who spoke French so well, may I add another suggestion? It was made by my honourable colleague from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) last year, and there was a little bit of criticism about it in the press, but he was right. He suggested that if we are to beautify this chamber we must remove these ugly pictures from the walls, as was suggested a long time ago—those sad, ugly pictures which in French we would call chromos and croûtes —and instead construct galleries around the chamber. I am sure that the simultaneous translation system will attract a larger number of people to the Senate, and I suggest there should be hearing aids all along the gallery to give them an opportunity to follow the debates.

Now, to conclude, I have one word to add: It is that the simultaneous translation system will be most useful when controversial issues happen to be brought before this chamber. Then, if someone speaks French and says something that does not satisfy the mind or the opinion of my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) he will be in a position to answer him at once, in English.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, seconded by the Honourable Senator Wall, that this report be now adopted.

Hon. Mr. Horner: On division.

Report adopted, on division.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-79, an Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I deem it an honour and a privilege to introduce in this house what has so long been referred to as a Canadian Bill of Rights.

This bill deals with a subject-matter which, next to life itself, human beings of all ages have been concerned with, namely, the freedom of the spirit. Throughout recorded history, all effort at human progress has been associated with the magic word "liberty". This yearning of mankind for freedom has been immortalized in many famous phrases and writings in many languages, but by none more so than by the words of the famous patriot Patrick Henry, spoken in 1775, when he said:

> Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death!

So I repeat, honourable senators, I deem it an honour and a privilege to introduce this bill in the Senate of Canada.

As honourable senators will have observed, the full title of Bill C-79 is "An Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms", and is more briefly cited as the Canadian Bill of Rights. As you are also aware, the principle of the bill received unanimous approval on second reading in the other place; and without knowing it to be the fact, I have no doubt that the bill received unanimous approval on its final passage in that house a few moments ago.

Its major provisions are guarantees of freedom of religion, speech, association, the press, of the individual's right to life, liberty and security of person and property, and of his right to the protection of the law without discrimination as to race, national origin, colour, religion or sex. It bans torture or degrading punishment, assures arrested persons of the right to know the charge against them, and the rights to counsel, habeas corpus and a fair and public trial.

The proposal for the enactment of a Bill of Rights for Canada is not new. It has been under discussion, not only in Parliament but throughout Canada for a great number of years. It has been discussed and debated in innumerable forums, and special mention might be made of the continuous reviews of the proposal over the years by the Canadian Bar Association and, indeed, generally, by lawyers and others throughout the length and breadth of our country.

But perhaps the most deep-rooted interest in this subject-matter has been evinced by our so-called ethnic groups, meaning thereby, generally, descendants of those who were not of British or French origin—those who consequently, could not be expected to have the confidence of others in the great and historic documents of the past, such as Magna Carta, the Petition of Right, the Habeas Corpus Act, the Bill of Rights, as well, indeed, as in those civil rights and freedoms that are deemed by tradition to be handed down to us by virtue of our status as subjects of the British Crown.

Furthermore, in recent years not only has this subject-matter been discussed and debated in Canada; interest in the subject of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms has been world-wide. In its charter the United Nations affirmed its—I quote:

> Faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small.

Actually, one of the purposes for which the United Nations was created was to achieve international co-operation:

> in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

All members of the United Nations pledged themselves to take joint and separate action to achieve that purpose. Since the United Nations charter is a treaty, Canada accepted a legal obligation to do this. As is well known, these provisions in the United Nations charter do not, however, have any legal effect within Canada until they are embodied in statute law.

In 1945, when the charter was drawn up in San Francisco, proposals were already being made that an International Bill of Human Rights should be drafted. Subsequently, when the United Nations came into being, it established a commission on Human Rights, whose first main task was to draft such a bill. The commission began its work in January 1947. Almost two years later, on December 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Out of 58 nations represented there, 48 voted their approval of the declaration; none voted against, eight abstained and two were absent.

The first international Declaration of Human Rights was therefore adopted without a single dissenting vote. It consists of 26 articles and covers personal, civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. These 26 articles do not have the force of binding rules of law either in international relations or in the domestic law of any of the States which approved them, but they represent the aspirations of the common men and women of this age.

They are a statement of what ought to be and represent a challenge and a goal. In most parts of the world that goal is tragically far removed from actual conditions. But the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights is an inspiration to us as well as to others and it forms the background to the fight which the present Prime Minister has been waging for a bill of rights in Canada.

As is well known, the present is not the only occasion upon which the Canadian Parliament has dealt with the subject of civil liberties. May I briefly review the other times when Parliament, and particularly the Senate, has interested itself in this problem. During the session of 1947 the Government of that day introduced a resolution which established a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to consider human rights and fundamental freedoms in so far as Canada's obligations to the United Nations was concerned, and also the position in Canada of such rights and freedoms.

A similar resolution was at that time passed by the Senate and the committee was duly constituted under the joint chairmanship of the Right Honourable Mr. Ilsley and the Honourable Senator Gouin. This committee met a number of times during the session of 1947 and heard evidence from various governmental officials. However, it was decided by the committee that there was not time to hear all the representations which it desired, and therefore no final report was submitted but rather a suggestion was made that the committee be reappointed at the next session to resume consideration of the task assigned to it.

Consequently, during the session of 1948 another resolution to establish a Joint Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms was proposed and the joint committee met again to consider, among other matters, the desirability of a bill of rights for Canada.

Further evidence was presented to the committee by governmental officials and written representations were made by various interested groups, after which the committee presented its final report. In its report, however, it recommended against the introduction of a bill of rights at that time. The final report is recorded at page 672 of Senate Hansard for the year 1948.

In 1950 the Senate established a special committee charged with the duty of dealing with human rights and fundamental freedoms. The mover of the resolution establishing this committee was the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), and he became its chairman. This committee met during the session of 1950 and received written and oral presentations from a variety of persons and associations. I submit that the findings and report of this committee are especially pertinent to the subject-matter of this bill. The committee reported great public interest in a bill of rights and expressed the opinion that such a bill would be desirable. The committee held the view that the preferable form of a bill of rights would be one which was incorporated into the Constitution of Canada, namely, the British North America Act. However, it voiced qualifications in respect of this form and set out the difficulties in the following language taken from the Senate Hansard of 1950, page 589:

> The enactment of a national bill of rights, however, presents difficulties. In Canada, because of her history and the harmonious association of peoples of different races, language and religion, respect for provincial rights as they have been defined in the past is essential. No informed person with any sense of responsibility would suggest that the dominion parliament forcibly invade the provincial jurisdiction. Concurrence, therefore, is an essential requisite to constitutional progress.
>
> This difficulty may not be insuperable, but there is also another presently existing but, it is hoped, passing obstacle. The British North America Act is a statute of the Imperial parliament at Westminster, and objection is now taken by Canadians to legislative intervention by an authority beyond our shores and not of our own election, even though such action is taken at our own instance. Such a request by Canada to the United Kingdom parliament would have the appearance at least of a surrender of sovereignty.
>
> For these reasons, your committee is of opinion that it would be wise to await the time, which we hope is not far distant, when prospective dominion-provincial conferences will have worked out a method for the control within Canada of the Canadian Constitution, and agreement has been reached as to incorporation in the Constitution of a national bill of rights.

I cannot help but express my deep admiration of the language used and the thoughts expressed in the statement that I have just recited. The committee made a suggestion for immediate action in these terms, and I quote again from the Senate Hansard, page 589:

Your committee therefore recommends that, as an interim measure, the Canadian parliament adopt a declaration of human rights to be strictly limited to its own legislative jurisdiction. Such a declaration would not invade the provincial legislative authority, but it would nevertheless cover a very wide field. While such a declaration would not bind the Canadian parliament or future Canadian parliaments, it would serve to guide the Canadian parliament and the federal civil service. It would have application within all the important matters reserved to the Canadian parliament in section 91 and in other sections of the British North America Act. It would apply without limitation within the Northwest Territories.

Such a declaration of human rights adopted by the Canadian parliament would solemnly affirm the faith of all Canadians in the basic principles of freedom, and it would evidence a national concern for human rights and security. Judges would recognize the principles of such a declaration as part of Canada's public policy, and subsequent parliaments would hesitate to enact legislation violating its revered principles. To adults it would convey a feeling of security, and children would memorize its terms with pride.

The next step in regard to a bill of rights for Canada was taken by the present Prime Minister at the session of 1952 when he introduced a resolution urging that consideration be given to the advisability of introducing a bill or declaration of rights. This resolution was debated at that time in the other place but the resolution was not approved by the house. I would like at this time to read what I deem to be a very pertinent paragraph in an editorial of the Winnipeg Free Press during that debate in answer to those who maintained that paper charters are no substitute for the will of freedom; and I quote:

But they are important as expressions of that will. They are important because they gain a hold on men's minds. They form, as it were, a bench mark on the structure of man's experience; become a part of his past, his traditions of life, and condition his thought of the future. Charters, even though they express no more than a hope, have a way of striking roots in the human heart. They are of the spirit as well as of parchment. No one will deny that the influence of Magna Carta—the Great Charter—has far exceeded its actual provision.

Canada, which has as much freedom as any nation in the world, should not hesitate to proclaim its own faith by establishing it in law.

I would also like to quote a couple of paragraphs from a speech made by the present Prime Minister in the House of Commons as reported in Hansard of the 1952 session, volume 1, pages 720 and 721. I quote these words because I think they summarize as well as any words can do the real purposes of a bill of rights:

Someone may ask what a bill of rights would do. A bill of rights would deny the right of any majority to interfere with my serving God as my conscience demands. It would deny the right of any Government to interfere with my right to speak or write so long as I did so within the law. It would deny discrimination against any person because of his race or colour...

A bill of rights would re-define the landmarks of liberty, which are almost erased as a result of the pathways of war becoming the permanent highroads of peace. It would give positive evidence that when Canada at the United Nations Assembly two years ago, accepted the universal declaration of human rights, that acceptance was a dedication of the Canadian people not only internationally but nationally as well. It would make Parliament more careful before passing laws that would have the effect of suspending or interfering with freedom. It would mobilize the spiritual things of life without which neither nations nor men can live a full and abundant life. Above everything else, it would make Canadians freedom conscious.

On September 5, 1958 the Prime Minister introduced in the other place Bill C-60, which was in terms somewhat similar but not identical with the Bill C-79. Bill C-60 was introduced during the dying days of the session, and after leaders of each of the Opposition groups had the opportunity of giving their views on the bill, it was left over to another session to allow interested persons and groups to give to the subject-matter further thought and to make representations for the improvement of the bill. We have now arrived at the final step in this process, namely, the bill presently under consideration here.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But not the final step.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. I will modify that, and say the final step—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At the moment.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: At the moment, yes. Under other circumstances I might proceed to digress upon the contents of the bill, upon the form of language used, upon the question of whether or not it is more desirable that an act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms should be enacted in the form of an amendment to the British North America Act, instead of as an act of the Canadian Parliament such as this one is. However, that facet of this subject-matter was thoroughly thrashed out and debated by the Senate committee of 1950 and its recommendation in that regard is, as I have already quoted, a matter of record. Also, I might discuss the problems occasioned by the fact that we live under a federal constitution, as a result of which there are necessary limitations to the scope of a purely federal enactment. However, I have no doubt these phases will be discussed by others in the course of the debate on the bill.

Honourable senators, the idea of the inevitable march of freedom has, at some times in history, been taken for granted. It was assumed that by some natural law one nation after another would introduce some form of representative government modeled on the Mother of Parliaments and that in due time freedom would be universal.

You may be familiar with the lines of Tennyson:

> A land of just and old renown,
> Where freedom slowly broadens down
> From precedent to precedent.

Unfortunately, this optimistic expectation has not been justified by the march of events. Our democratic form of government has in many countries gone entirely out of fashion and has been replaced by the rule of a dictator or a tyrannical clique. And even in Canada we seem at times to have been attracted by the illusion of the efficiency of government wartime controls and have become impatient with the relatively slower democratic processes. It has, among other things, been the evidence of this trend which has led thinking men to advocate clear-cut legislation to guarantee our personal liberty in place of our vague traditions.

Honourable senators, I submit to you that the aim and purpose of this bill is to enact a statute which will define in clear and precise language the fundamental rights and freedoms of all Canadians; a statute which will clearly authorize and assist the courts to protect those rights and freedoms; a statute which will also set a limit to executive authority to interfere with or abridge those rights and freedoms.

This act will be a great landmark in the history of our country—something that we shall be able to refer to as a Canadian Magna Carta.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, many years before I read the resolutions on the Order Paper of the House of Commons by the present Prime Minister and by the former leader of the C.C.F. party on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, many years before the charter of the United Nations was signed in San Francisco, many years before the Treaty of Versailles was signed which exemplified the saying of President Wilson about the self-determination of minorities, we had been taught in school that Thomas Jefferson had written a declaration which was called the Bill of Rights of the United States, and I have learned since that quite naturally the United States is the country where the larger number of people speak of rights, and where rights are so little put into practice or respected.

In the bill that was sponsored by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons, I notice it refers to several freedoms. The first clause reads as follows:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have always existed and shall continue to exist the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,
> (a) The right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
> (b) the right of the individual to protection of the law without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex;
> (c) freedom of religion;
> (d) freedom of speech;
> (e) freedom of assembly and association; and
> (f) freedom of the press.

The freedom of the press dates back to the July Revolution in France in the 1840's. There is no difference between the freedom of the individual and the freedom of the press, but nowhere in the bill is any mention made of the obligations that are correlative to the rights spoken of. I am rather surprised that the most important of all freedoms has not been put in first place. It is freedom of religion. I want to appeal to the intelligence, the spirit of fairness, the patriotism and the good faith of my colleagues, and I treat this question on the highest ground.

I consider that legislation with regard to freedom must have a practical result. All that has been said about this bill may have been beautifully said, but the law will have no sanction; it is just a wish that is father to the thought.

When our Constitution, the British North America Act, was sponsored in the House of Lords, by Lord Carnarvon, on February 18, 1867, he said this about the Senate. This is from page 560 of the Hansard of that day:

> There are ... two broad principles to be kept in view in the creation of a colonial chamber (the Senate): first, that it should be strong enough to maintain its own opinion, and to resist the sudden gusts of popular feeling; secondly, that it should not be so strong that it should be impenetrable to public sentiment, and therefore out of harmony with the other branch of the Legislature. These are conditions difficult under the most favourable circumstances to secure; but they are complicated in this instance by a third, which has been made a fundamental principle of the measure by the several contracting parties, and the object of which is to provide for a permanent representation and protection of sectional interests.

The question that I want to submit to you, honourable colleagues, is whether the freedom of religion comes under federal or provincial jurisdiction. At the present time there is a trend in jurisprudence to the effect that freedom of religion is a federal domain, but those who have said so have overlooked the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886-87.

From the date of Confederation until the publication of those Revised Statutes, the first dominion statutes after Confederation, there has been no meeting between federal and provincial authorities to separate their own jurisdictions, their respective jurisdictions. The first time that there was a division of powers was in a table that was published as an appendix to the said Revised Statutes of Canada and it was entitled, "History and Disposal of Acts". This said table of acts passed prior to Confederation by the different provinces now comprised in the dominion of Canada, and of acts of the dominion of Canada, shows how much of each is in force and how each has been dealt with. Consolidated Statutes, Canada, 1859. This is a reference to chapter 74, Rectories, and it was indicated as "provincial". Appendix No. 1, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, Volume II, at page 2321. This was not mentioned in a provincial statute—it was the Parliament of Canada that had decided that legislation concerning rectories was provincial.

Now, honourable senators, we must not overlook the fact that the first time that a statute was passed in Canada to guarantee the freedom of religion, it was in the preamble of the legislation concerning the abolition of clergy reserved in Canada. The whole statute was considered provincial and it naturally included the preamble.

I hope that my learned honourable colleagues who are members of the legal fraternity—I will go farther and say I hope that all of you, honourable colleagues—will follow my argument. I intend to speak just as if I were arguing a case in court and establish, I hope to your satisfaction, that freedom of religion comes under provincial jurisdiction. I will try to make my remarks as short as possible but it is precisely because I have the utmost respect for each one of you that I do not want you to make a faux pas in voting for the bill which is presently before this chamber.

Now, I wonder what is your opinion about this suggestion that our civil law comprises all legislation which is special to the citizens of the province, if we speak of the provincial, and of all the country at large if we speak of federal legislation. In the régime of the Union the jurisdiction of the Legislative Assembly was wider than the actual jurisdiction of the provinces, and due precautions were taken in the British North America Act to safeguard the rights of the provinces. One of the most important sections of that act is section 129, which should be put ahead of sections 91 and 92, because it established what legislation already in force belonged either to the Parliament of Canada or to the provincial Legislature.

I admit that section 129 has been wrongly and neglectfully drafted, but if another interpretation is given that the powers of each body are not respectively exclusive, it would be just as well to strike out sections 91 and 92 because they would have no meaning whatsoever.

This matter is so important that I want to take the liberty of drawing to your attention sections 91 and 92 of the B.N.A. Act. Section 91 is headed "Distribution of Legislative Powers—Powers of the Parliament", and it reads:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively—

Mark you, exclusively—

> ...to the Legislatures of the Provinces, and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive—

Mark you exclusive—

> ...Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,—

The section concludes as follows:

> And any Matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section shall not be deemed to come within the Class of Matters of a local or private Nature comprised in the Enumeration of the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

Now, I turn to section 92—Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures.

> 92. In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,—
>
> 12. The Solemnization of Marriage in the Province.
>
> 13. Property and Civil Rights in the Province.

My next submission is that the B.N.A. Act of 1867 has not at all affected and has left intact all the laws that were in force in the province of Quebec and in the other provinces, except those expressly assigned to the federal jurisdiction in virtue of section 91.

Then I must return to what I said in the first place. Chapter 175 of Statutes 14 and 15 V., 1851, has remained provincial legislation; the last revision of the Quebec Statutes took place in 1941, and chapter 307 of 1941, concerning freedom of religion, refers to the Quebec Revised Statutes of 1925, chapter 198, section 1. That section refers to the Revised Statutes of Quebec of 1909, section 4387. That section refers to section 3439 of the Revised Statutes of Quebec, 1888. That section refers to the first section of chapter 74 of the Revised Statutes of United Canada, and that section refers precisely to the preamble of Statutes 14 and 15 V., chapter 175, section 1, an act concerning rectories.

So, you have the complete chain that goes back to the origin of the law, which means that in virtue of the most important section of the B.N.A. Act, section 129, the province of Quebec has kept as its own law the legislation concerning freedom of religion. I am greatly surprised that the matter was not brought to the attention of the justices of the Supreme Court when a case was argued before them in 1953.

I will go further. The province of Ontario took the same steps as the province of Quebec in the Revised Statutes of 1877 and 1887 of Ontario, although that legislation was dropped afterwards; but in studying the legislation, in making legal research, one must go back to the origin of each piece of legislation. Moreover, one can peruse the whole series of dominion statutes and will not find any piece of legislation concerning freedom of religion before this bill was brought before the House of Commons. It means that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario have kept that legislation as their own, and Ottawa has not incorporated legislation of the kind in the dominion statutes.

Another matter which must be submitted to your kind consideration is that freedom of religion is a civil right, unquestionably so, and as according to the Constitution civil rights come under provincial jurisdiction it is very clear that freedom of religion must come under provincial jurisdiction.

I could speak at much greater length about those matters but I will try to summarize as briefly as I can what I have to say to establish the case. I read a very interesting article by Mr. Bernard Schwartz, published in the New York Times Magazine of August 25, 1957, part of which reads as follows:

> It is the real relationship that exists between the work of the highest tribunal and public opinion that makes criticism of specific court decisions fruitful. Mr. Dooley notwithstanding, the high bench may not immediately follow the election returns. Yet the justices are extremely sensitive to informed criticism and normally seek to keep in tune with the common sentiment of the community.
>
> Proper criticism of a particular decision is an appeal to the intelligence of a future day, when a later decision may correct the error into which the critic believes the court has been betrayed.

What is the protection of freedom of religion and of other liberties and rights of any private individual if it is not that of the tribunals, that of the courts of the country, whose duty it is to protect the minorities as much as possible? I am very sorry to say, and with due deference, that there have been some considerations of the court which were completely out of place and which were due if not to ignorance at least to the overlooking of historical facts with which all Canadians are familiar. I will refer to the case of Saumur v. City of Quebec. It was a case involving the Witnesses of Jehovah. Chief Justice Kerwin, at page 321 of the Supreme Court of Canada Reports (1953), vol. 2, said:

> It appears from the material filed on behalf of the appellant that Jehovah's Witnesses not only do not consider themselves as belonging to a religion but vehemently attack anything that may ordinarily be so termed but in my view they are entitled to "the free exercise and enjoyment of (their) Religious Profession and Worship."

Honourable senators, for one who agrees with freedom of religion I contend that a religion must be something positive. One may worship God or Jehovah, but he must worship. He must pose a positive act, and those who deny all beliefs, all religions, cannot be considered as having a religion. That is my contention and I do not see the logic of the Chief Justice in saying precisely that those people "do not consider themselves as belonging to a religion but vehemently attack anything that may ordinarily be so termed..." and so on. How could anyone on the highest court of the land reason in such a manner? He goes on:

> The Witnesses attempt to spread their views by way of the printed and written word as well as orally and state that such attempts are part of their belief. Their attacks on religion generally, or on one in particular, do not bring them within the exception "so as the same be not made an excuse for licentiousness or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the Province."

I must say that in the French text two words were used instead of the word "licentious" in English. In English only one word was used, while in French there was a substantive with an adjective, namely, license outrée.

The Chief Justice goes on to say:

> While several definitions of "licentious" appear in standard dictionaries, the prevailing sense of that term is said to be "libertine, lascivious, lewd." To certain biblical expressions the pamphlets, etc., of Jehovah's Witnesses which they desire to distribute attack a meaning which is offensive to a great majority of the inhabitants of the province of Quebec...

The Chief Justice admits it.

> But, if they have a legal right to attempt to spread their beliefs, as I think they have, > the expressions used by them in so doing, as exemplified in the exhibits filed, do not fall within the first part of the exception. Nor in my opinion are their attacks "inconsistent with the peace and safety of the province" even where they are directed particularly against the religion of most of the province's residents. The peace and safety of the province will not be endangered if that majority do not use the attacks as a foundation for breaches of the peace.

—Imagine!—

Naturally, it is a very good thing for the peace of this country that that report is far from widely read not only in the province of Quebec but throughout Canada.

How is it that the Chief Justice took that wrong meaning of the word? There are several meanings of the word "licentiousness". It is defined as follows:

> The state or character of being licentious.

The first definition of the word "licentious" is the following:

> Characterized by or using licence; marked by or indulging too great freedom; overpassing due bounds or limits—"licence" is defined: "Unrestricted freedom of thought and action, especially the abuse of such freedom; freedom misused in contempt of law and decorum; rejection of legal and moral control; libertinism.

It is important in studying any piece of legislation to consider the time when the legislation was enacted. What was the state of mind of the Canadian people in Montreal and in Toronto in 1851? In 1849 there were riots. Parliament was burned in Montreal. Lord Elgin's carriage was smashed, and it was not at all a matter of being libertine, lascivious and lewd. They were disorderly, and the word employed by the statute describes precisely the kind of disorder and riots which occurred at the time.

What was the text of the preamble? I am reading from page 328. It was enacted:

> That the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, so as the same be not made an excuse for acts of licentiousness, or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the province, is by the Constitution and laws of this province allowed to all Her Majesty's subjects within the same.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I ask the honourable senator from what text he is reading?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am reading from (1953), 2 Supreme Court Reports, page 328. This is the legislation of 1851, the main part of the preamble of the Rectories Act.

I regret very much, and I feel rather humiliated when I say so, but it is because the Chief Justice of Canada ignored the history of our country and did not take the trouble to look at the records that he gave a wrong interpretation of an essential word in the law. It is quite offensive.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would point out to the honourable senator that that is very strong language to use when referring to the Chief Justice of Canada. I would request the honourable gentleman to refrain from making such statements. He can make his point without going into personalities. I would ask him to be careful. It is fitting in this house that we show due respect to the Chief Justice of Canada and the Supreme Court, and all other judges and courts of this country. I am sure that the honourable gentleman's remark was a slip of the tongue.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Your Honour, I withdraw all the words that are not parliamentary. I was just expressing the feelings I had in my heart, but I will change the sentence by saying it is unfortunate that the Chief Justice of Canada overlooked the history of this country to give a wrong interpretation to an essential word in the act.

I will continue with the judgment of Chief Justice Kerwin—he was not the Chief Justice at that time—at page 323:

> In my view the right to practise one's religion is a civil right in the province under head 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act just as much as the right to strike or lock-out dealt with by the Judicial Committee in Toronto Electric Commissioners v. Snider.

There is a great difference between freedom of religion in the province of Quebec and the Toronto strike. My contention is that the power of the province of Quebec to legislate on freedom of religion does not come from section 92 of the British North America Act; it comes from section 129, which refers to legislation that was enacted before Confederation. This is another point that was not brought to the attention of the court. But we have this admission from the Chief Justice. According to him freedom of religion is a civil right, and therefore it must be a provincial right, and he quotes some precedents to conclude:

> For the same reason I also think that freedom of the press is a civil right in the province.

All civil rights. Then he proceeded to make his case in favour of the Witnesses of Jehovah, in contradiction of a statement that freedom of religion is a civil right.

And one judge, who is no longer on the bench, Mr. Justice Rand, gave a judgment, parts of which could not be understood. I will read a page of his judgment in that case and I challenge anyone to understand anything in it. Let us hope that with the new justices the Supreme Court will take different views with regard to matters of such importance. Here is the quotation from Mr. Justice Rand, at page 329 of the same report:

> The only powers given by sec. 92 of the Confederation Act which have been suggested to extend to legislation in relation to religion are Nos. 13, Property and Civil Rights, and 16, Matters of a merely local or private nature in the province. The statutory history of the expression "Property and Civil Rights" already given exhibiting its parallel enactment with special provisions relating to religion shows indubitably that such matters as religious belief, duty and observances were never intended to be included within that collocation of powers. If it had not been so, the exceptional safeguards to Roman Catholics would have been redundant.

He goes on to say:

Strictly speaking, civil rights arise from positive law; but freedom of speech, religion and the inviolability of the person, are original freedoms which are at once the necessary attributes and modes of self-expression of human beings and the primary conditions of their community life within a legal order.

Within a legal order. He continues:

It is in the circumscription...

Mark you,

...of these liberties by the creation of civil rights in persons who may be injured by their exercise, and by the sanctions of public law, that the positive law operates. What we realize is the residue inside that periphery. Their significant relation to our law lies in this, that under its principles to which there are only minor exceptions, there is no prior or antecedent restraint placed upon them: the penalties, civil or criminal, attach to results which their exercise may bring about, and apply as consequential incidents. So we have the civil rights against defamation, assault, false imprisonment and the like, and the punishments of the criminal law; but the sanctions of the latter lie within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion. Civil rights of the same nature arise also as protection against infringements of these freedoms.

That legislation "in relation" to religion and its profession is not a local or private matter would seem to me to be self-evident: the dimensions of this interest are nationwide; it is even today embodied in the highest level of the constitutionalism of Great Britain; it appertains to a boundless field of ideas, beliefs and faiths with the deepest roots and loyalties; a religious incident reverberates from one end of this country to the other, and there is nothing to which the "body politic of the Dominion" is more sensitive.

That is his judgment. There is no argument. It is just sentences put together which are all impossible to understand.

And now, honorable senators, I must read to you some extracts of the evidence of witness Covington, who returned to Quebec recently for a case which has been decided by the Honourable Mr. Justice L. P. Lizotte. I will read from his judgment. Here is what Covington said, as found at pages 345 and 346. His evidence was related verbatim by the former Chief Justice:

Do you consider that writing such books with such insults against another religion, in fact the religion practised by the people of this province or city, a proper means of preaching the gospel?
A. I do.

And he adds:

...history abundantly attests to the fact that the Roman Catholic Hierarchy has had part tacitly in the wars between the nations and the destruction of nations.

And a little further on there is this:

Q. Do you consider it necessary for your organization to attack the other religions, in fact the Catholic, the Protestant and the Jews?

A. Indeed. The reason for that is because the Almighty God commands that error shall be exposed and not persons or nations.

Then the court asks the question:

Q. You are the only witnesses of the truth?
A. Jehovah's witnesses are the only witnesses to the truth of Almighty God Jehovah...
Q. Is the Roman Catholic a true Church?
A. No.
Q. Is it an unclean woman?
A. It is pictured in the Bible as a whore, as having illicit relationship with the nations of this world, and history proves that fact, history that all have studied in school.

And further on the witness declares:

If obedience to a law of the state or nation would compel them—the Witnesses of Jehovah—to thereby violate God's law, they will obey God rather than men.
Q. Notwithstanding the laws of the country to the contrary?
A. Notwithstanding the laws of the country to the contrary.

One cannot understand that the Chief Justice has given judgment in their favour. If those extracts from the evidence of the star witness of the Jehovah Witnesses were spread among the Canadian people, not only Catholics but Protestants and Jews, they would protest very warmly and they would not stand for such insults to them whose only error would be to believe in God and worship him without offending the beliefs of their neighbours.

I will digress for a moment to give you another suggestion. What is liberty? What is a right? Liberty cannot be unlimited. A right cannot be unlimited. My liberty ends where my neighbour's starts, and it means that if I am free to act I must not interfere with my neighbour's freedom. It is unfortunate that there is nothing to protect the liberty of the other fellow in the legislation that is before us. This matter has been studied objectively and upon its merits. If there are to be any more judgments of the kind, it will be impossible to consider the highest tribunal of the country as protection for the rights of the Canadian citizen.

I will not insist upon the erroneous judgment given by Mr. Justice Estey, who has gone to a better world, or refer to Mr. Justice Locke, whose judgment is self-explanatory. But what is very important to know is that in the first instance the case of the Witnesses of Jehovah was dismissed. They wanted to have nullified a by-law of the city of Quebec, dated some time ago, because it forbade them to distribute tracts in that city without a permit of the chief of police. In the King's Bench—la cour d'Appel—with the exception of one judge, whose mind was deformed because he had previously acted mostly as a Crown Attorney, the four other judges upheld the judgment of the court of first instance.

Then in the Supreme Court of Canada, four judges decided to dismiss the case of the Witnesses, while five judges stood for it. Does legal criticism exist in this country? When you have a judgment of more than 100 pages, there are few lawyers who have time to look at it with a magnifying glass and take notes of the contradictions that appear on almost every line. Therefore, it is taken for granted. But the trouble is that it creates jurisprudence although it is without foundation. For a hundred years, from 1851 to 1953, it was understood by all that religion was a provincial matter. Then the Supreme Court changed it.

There were other cases too. There was one in which the municipal autonomy of the city of Montreal was infringed. There was the case of Birks v. City of Montreal and it continued with the Padlock case and that of Roncarelli. I point out that this erroneous jurisprudence applies not only to the province of Quebec, but to New Brunswick, to Ontario, Newfoundland and all the other provinces. The rights of those provinces with regard to legislation concerning freedom of religion have been denied by the Supreme Court of Canada. Unless it changes its jurisprudence, there will be no province of Canada that could validly legislate on freedom of religion. That is the conclusion one must reach on that judgment and the jurisprudence that follows it. Some judges seem to be blindfolded—they follow one another as the Chinese walk in line each holding on to the hair of the man in front.

In the important judgment that was given by Mr. Justice Lizotte at the city of Quebec on July 25 he had the courage to stand by his convictions, which were based on the best interpretation of the law, and state that freedom of religion is a civil matter. The memorandum which I am quoting from in a brief, summary fashion, I deemed it my duty to send to no less a person than the Minister of Justice, to inform him about the legal wanderings of some jurists on the bench. As a lawyer of the province of Quebec and a senator of Canada I considered it was my duty to inform the guardian of justice in my Parliament.

As you know, honourable colleagues, in virtue of the law you have the right to challenge a judge; and when you do so it is done in virtue of the law and precedents. As a rule when a judge is challenged he immediately leaves the bench, without question, considering it part of his dignity to do so, and asks one of his brother judges to replace him on the bench. One Toronto lawyer challenged one of the judges of the Supreme Court. The judge who was challenged rose to go, but the Chief Justice told him to stay and he did so, although he did not take part in the registering of the judgment. That lawyer whose crime was to have challenged a judge was sentenced to a fine of $2,000 or 60 days in jail. According to my information the Chief Justice did not consider that sufficient. He wrote to the Law Society of Upper Canada to ask for the disbarment of that lawyer, and apparently he was answered, "Don't you think he has had enough with a fine of $2,000 or 60 days in jail?" That shows animosity. Therefore, what is the protection in virtue of the legislation that is before us to prevent similar occurrences in the future? It is not necessary to be a lawyer to understand it. One should be worried when the protection that we expect from the courts is so frail.

Here is the judgment of Mr. Justice Lizotte. It is a long judgment and I will not read it, but in it he says that he regrets to be unable to follow the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court in the matter of freedom of religion because it is a civil right. This is most important. It shows courage. It shows dignity. It shows convictions. I have never complimented a judge upon a judgment that he has rendered, but I must say that it is an honour to the bench that such an event of importance should occur at times.

Honourable senators, in conclusion I must bring to your attention something that was done by men who lived a long time ago, men who are dead now, and how they succeeded in having freedom of religion respected in this country. I will speak first of one who was very close to me, my father, Charles-Eugène Pouliot, M.P. for Témiscouata, and some of his liberal colleagues and friends: Charles Angers, M.P. for Charlevoix, H. G. Carroll, M.P. for Kamouraska and later a solicitor general, a judge and a lieutenant-governor; P. A. Choquette, M.P. for Montmagny, afterwards a judge and a senator; Henri Bourassa, M.P. for Labelle, who was my father's deskmate in the Commons until my father died; Dr. Romuald Fiset, M.P. for Rimouski, later on a senator, the father of my former colleague, Sir Eugene Fiset, who was a lieutenant-governor of Quebec; Francois Langelier, M.P. for Quebec Centre, who later became Chief Justice; W. L. Fauvel, M.P. for Bonaventure, and Rodolphe Lemieux, M.P. for Gaspé, who became a cabinet minister, a Speaker of the Commons and a senator. I could speak of many others. They suffered very deeply in their hearts because they were unfairly treated by some members of the clergy on account of the Manitoba school question during the election of 1896. At that time sentiment was so high that some people could not perform their religious duties because they were accused of being guilty of supporting Sir Wilfrid Laurier. When they went to the confessional they were asked, "Are you in favour of Laurier?" and if they said "Yes" the confessor shut the window and the penitents had to go elsewhere to do their duties. Many of them had to go from Trois Pistoles to Rivière du Loup, 30 miles east, to do their Easter duty and their devotions. These people I have mentioned were faithful Catholics. My father prepared a memorandum with supporting affidavits, of which I have the duplicate copies, which was addressed to the Holy Congregation of the Propaganda in Rome. His Holiness Pope Leo XIII sent Monsignor Merry Del Val, afterwards Cardinal Merry Del Val and Secretary of State of His Holiness Pope Pius X, who was made a saint by the Church, to make an investigation. He held his head in his hands and wept when he heard the witnesses telling about all the difficulties that they encountered on account of their political beliefs, because they were Liberals. On his report an apostolic delegate was sent to Canada to see that there was no more trouble of the kind in this country, and the first apostolic delegate who came was Monsignor Falconio, later Cardinal Falconio.

May I be permitted to mention a personal incident? My great uncle, my godfather, and my best friend, who died many years ago—he was my first parish priest, the Reverend Father Blais—invited me to go with him to the wharf at Rivière du Loup to meet the apostolic delegate. I presume that it was as a reparation for the wrongs suffered by my deceased father. I went there and on the return I sat with my uncle and a friend of my father's, Monsignor Dugal. I had the honour to sit in front of Monsignor Falconio, the apostolic delegate, in the carriage that was bringing him from the wharf to the town. My father was dead, but the result of what he had done by preparing with his colleagues of the House of Commons that memorandum which was carried to Rome by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and which brought an investigator of such high standing, the Apostolic Delegate, was that all parties benefited, not only in the province of Quebec, but in the whole of Canada. That was done for the freedom of religion of all. It was done by men who are now dead, who are forgotten, whose names do not tell you much, but who had looked into the future and wanted to ensure the freedom of all those who have been and who will be in public life in Canada, for all our fellow-Canadians.

Honourable senators, I should say many other things, but it is nearly 6 o'clock. I thank you for having listened to me. If I told you the experiences I have had under this roof because I expressed myself freely, and how some persons whom I had recommended for positions in this building had to suffer because I expressed my own personal opinions, you would be shocked. I will keep it for some future occasion. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. McGrand: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Before we call it six o'clock, I will suggest that we do now adjourn, to reassemble at eight o'clock this evening, not 7.30.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

With leave of the Senate, the Honourable the Speaker called it six o'clock and left the Chair until eight o'clock.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief statement before the business of the evening commences. The Minister of Justice will be able to come to a meeting of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce tomorrow at 10 or 10.30 o'clock to deal with the Bill of Rights, and I was hoping on that account that we might be able to finish the debate this evening. The reason why we should meet in the morning is that it is the only time that the minister will be available until probably Saturday.

Hon. Fred A. McGrand: Honourable senators, I will not delay this debate very long. I am not learned in the law and therefore I am unfamiliar with constitutional problems. I will approach this discussion from the viewpoint of the man on the street. The average citizen is conscious of his freedoms. He knows that they stem from great principles of Government laid down in the past and obscured by time: The Charters of our Liberties given by Henry I to his barons; in the next century another group of barons forced King John to sign the Magna Carta; the Provisions of Oxford, when Simon de Montfort forced his brother-in-law, Henry III, to accept the principles of advice by council; the Grand Remonstrance and the Petition of Right in the days of the Stuarts. These were principles of government rather than acts of Parliament. They were reactions to the infringement on freedom of the individual by the monarchy.

The Normans did not bring democracy to England and the Stuarts believed in the divine right of kings.

James I, the first in the Stuart line, believed in the divine right of kings. On his way from Stirling to London to be crowned he ordered a suspected thief to be hanged without further investigation. Early in his reign he said:

> I am the husband—and the whole Island is my lawful wife; I am the head and it is my body. I am the shepherd and it is my flock.

It was necessary from time to time to lay down principles of government when the authority of those who governed clashed with the rights of the people over the freedom of the individual in a society less organized than it is today. As time lapsed and the encroachments on freedoms were renewed, it was necessary to renew and reaffirm the freedom of the individual in a changing civilization. The promises of a Norman king at the demand of Norman barons written in the Norman language was for Normans and not for Anglo-Saxon and Celtic inhabitants of England. They were for Norman barons who spoke French. It was 300 years before these principles began to apply to all Englishmen.

The freedoms we enjoy today came to us by special acts of Parliament—abolition of slavery and the slave trade, the reforms in child labour, the right of a working man to sue his employer, the right to vote, and the right to organize trade unions—they came to us long after the charters referred to were a matter of history.

Serfdom was not abolished by a single statute. It passed away gradually. Serfdom went out and freedom came in. They passed each other at the place in British history where human dignity became more precious than property.

Responsible government in Canada was not established by a single act. It came gradually over a period that saw repeated conflicts between the governors and the legislatures and a riot that burned the Parliament buildings.

Trial by jury, the justices of the peace and their successors are old institutions. They settled disputes between individuals for many years and it is equally true that new causes of conflict arise between individuals as they pass from one era to another.

Most of our struggles over fundamental freedoms have originated between the forces of government and the masses. It is, therefore, right and proper for this nation to renew its concept of freedom from time to time as it exists between individuals, between employer and employee and between the individual and the Government.

The man on the street has been told that this could be done by two methods: (1) by embodying it in the Constitution and (2) by an act of Parliament. But he is more concerned about his freedoms than the method of defining them.

The late Right Honourable Mackenzie King said of the British Constitution:

> It is partly unwritten; it is partly written. It finds its beginnings in the lore of the past; it comes into being in the form of custom and tradition; it is founded upon the common law. It is made up of precedents, of magna chartas, of petitions and bills of rights; it is to be found partly in statutes, and partly in the usages and practices of Parliament. It represents the highest achievement of British genius at its best. No one has ever seen it; no one has ever adequately described it; yet its presence is felt whenever liberty or right are endangered, for it is the creation of the struggle of centuries against oppression and wrong. It embodies the very soul of freedom itself.

The origin of our freedom is as vague and difficult to define as the British Constitution that grew up beside it. This may be the time to re-write the definitions of freedom of the individuals that are threatened by the prejudice of class, creed and colour. It is as difficult to evaluate freedom as it is to estimate the human personality.

A few weeks ago several persons while visiting Canada were denied lodgings because of their colour. The matter came up in the House of Commons, and the Prime Minister gave his opinion that the redress of such racial discrimination lies within provincial jurisdiction. Yet, these are the freedoms that the new Bill of Rights must spell out in no uncertain language.

As the proposed Bill of Rights stands, how would it affect the ordinary citizen in New Brunswick? In that province, a child's birth is registered under provincial law. At the age of six he attends school and his education is provided for by the New Brunswick School Act. During his lifetime his health is looked after by the New Brunswick Health Act. He is married under provincial law. Disputes with his neighbour are settled in the New Brunswick courts. His will and property are disposed of by provincial statutes. His death and burial are registered by provincial law and his grave is protected by provincial legislation. If, by chance, a New Brunswicker is a victim of racial or religious discrimination, he is told by the lips of the Prime Minister that his redress is in provincial courts. So, in what way will this Bill of Rights influence the lives of New Brunswickers?

Most of our charters of freedom followed great upheavals in British history. Responsible government in Canada followed the rebellions in Upper and Lower Canada. This Bill of Rights has been called a "beacon" that will guide future legislation. It has been called a "litmus paper" that will keep before Parliament for future purposes the provisions of this bill.

The great charters of the past talked of freedom rather than gave it. In spite of them, the majority of the people continued to live in misery and without freedom. At the beginning of the 19th century there were nearly 200 crimes that demanded the death penalty. At the middle of the 19th century an Englishman was sent to Van Diemen's Land for the crime of skating on a private pond. About the same time—during the potato famine—an Irish labourer was sentenced to the same place for stealing a cabbage and a few parsnips from an absentee landlord.

During the winter of 1830, a few months before the introduction of the Reform Bill, the hungry field workers in the counties south of the Thames marched in a riotous manner demanding a wage of half a crown a day. What was the penalty? Three of them were hanged and 400 were sent to Australia as convicts. All of this was centuries after the great charters of freedom were proclaimed. And everyone familiar with the history of trade unionism in England will remember the victims of Peterloo and the Tolpuddle martyrs.

The freedoms we have came slowly and, by acts of Parliament, the right of the working class to form trade unions and bargain collectively with their employers. Had it not been for the zealous reformers of the early 19th century who carried the torch of human dignity, who fought for the right to literacy, the right to compensation for an injured worker, the right of association to organize for improvement of working conditions, the working class would be little better off today than it was in the middle of the last century. The bold and courageous men who laid the foundations of the trade union movement made great contributions to society. It gave labour a place in industry and the working man the means to buy the products of his skill.

It seems strange that this Bill of Rights does not mention the freedom to work. Along with the freedom from discrimination of race and colour, the freedom to work offers the greatest challenge of this period. Any man on a job who contributes by his skill to the success of his employer has a right to a fair share of the profit. He has the right to freedom of association, to join with his fellow workers to form a union to protect his rights and he has an obligation to his fellow workers to contribute in the form of dues to support the union for the purpose for which it was organized.

The right of any group to organize to overcome their problems is an undeniable right under the freedom of association. The right to associate for such purpose—or not to associate—should be a basic freedom. Every person should have the right to join the union of his choice or not to join. Compulsion to join a union or lose his right to employ his skill violates the most basic freedom—the right to work.

Which came first? The right to work or the duty to unionize? Primitive man, when the family was the only unit of society, toiled to acquire goods before he entered into association with his neighbour. The right to work is as fundamental as the right to eat. One's first obligation to his community is the payment of his poll and property tax. They are collected by law under the charters of our responsibility and are as old as the charters of our liberty. The law carries penalties for delinquent taxpayers but does not carry the penalty of denying them the right to work.

Should a union demand from a worker a portion of his pay under the penalty of losing his job?—a penalty that the oldest form of government, the municipality, does not demand from a delinquent taxpayer.

It is rumoured that a new political party may emerge in Canada composed of those of socialistic tendencies and with trade union members. It is also rumoured that this party will receive financial support from dues paid by union members. New parties are not unusual. There have been labour parties in the past, and there have been farmers' parties and there have been parties dear to the heart of the manufacturing industry. But there was always the freedom of choice. A farmer, a labourer, a fisherman, or a manufacturer could support the party of his choice with a personal donation. There is no doubt that the old parties or our new parties have been supported financially by those who believed in their principles.

A working man pays his dues to his union to support it in the cause for which it was created—to gain a fair share of the profits of industry. It is only fair and just that he should contribute. It is a different story if a share of his dues is diverted to support a political party in which he has no interest. His freedom of association is violated. He should not be compelled to support a political party other than the one of his choice. One of the proponents of the new party has stated that civil servants should march with organized labour.

A distinction should be drawn between those in trade unions and those in the Civil Service. In the trade union the bargaining agent for labour sits down with the bargaining agent for management to share in the profits of industry. The employers of the civil servants are the taxpayers. The taxpayer has no profit to divide with employees. His bargaining agent is the elected representative in Parliament, who is elected by the majority of people in his riding. He represents no class, no creed, no colour. His duty is to secure for all his constituents the benefits of our productivity and to protect our heritage of freedoms.

If the civil servants march with labour they must integrate with labour and march on the same marching orders. At what level of the Civil Service will integration stop? Will the civil servant be expected to contribute through dues to a party designed to control Parliament? Civil servants are removed from party strife. They vote as they please. They are not involved in a conflict between management and labour for a share of profits. If they are urged to pay dues to a union, and a part of this money goes to buttress a political party, they are forced into the realm of partisan politics.

If a New Brunswicker is refused work because he will not pay a portion of his dues to support a party for which he refuses to vote, will he hear from the lips of the Prime Minister that it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction? What about the rights of the working man who refuses to permit a portion of his dues to go to the support of a party dedicated to a closed shop in industry and government service? Any party financed by compulsory dues cannot be otherwise than totalitarian in outlook.

Is it possible that in this century some one with the same views of government as James I could say: "All Canada is my lawful spouse. I am the shepherd, and all Canadians are my flock"?

A Bill of Rights for Canada is not complete without a firmer definition of this essential freedom—the right to work.

The working class of England won their freedom from the tyranny of the landlord in the first half of the 19th century and from the tyranny of capitalism in the second half of the 19th century. Is it possible that the right of freedom won in the closing years of the nineteenth century will be lost in the later years of the twentieth century?

All power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely.

All those who seek power try to control the administration of government. The absolute monarch refused to recognize Parliament. The privileged classes in the Hanoverian period controlled Parliament by the purchase of rotten boroughs. It was the reformers of the 19th century that made Parliament an instrument of justice.

Parliament will always be the voice of those who control it. The great landlords controlled Parliament during the reign of the Georges and stifled reform because it might increase the land tax. The working man became a force in politics when the first labour member, Keir Hardie, wore his cloth cap among the silk top hats in the House of Commons. Parliament took on a new look.

It has become a workshop of the nation where the complaints of every group and class are debated and, at least, partially settled. It works well that way. Let us hope that no clique-representing class will ever again control Parliament. Remember the words of Winston Churchill:

If we open a quarrel between the past and the present, we shall be in danger of losing the future.

There is a better way of sharing the profits of industry between shareholders, labour and management. A worker who gives his skill to a company for most of his lifetime has an interest in the company that does not register when he punches the time clock. There is more there than his hours of work. The company that has his skill could do well to have his voice.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McGrand: He is more interested in the future of the company that he has worked for when times were good or bad than the shareholder who buys stock when the company is prosperous and sells it when profits decline. The personal interest that goes with one's work well done is never spelled out on a pay cheque or a stock certificate.

The man who possesses skill and the man who directs it have more in common than some would have us think. It is within the purview of government to promote profit-sharing in industry. It may help to save the freedom to work.

The man on the street has read in the papers, listened on the radio and television, and discussed with his neighbours the Bill of Rights. By now he knows that it is not protected for all time by being placed in the Constitution, but subject to change by future acts of Parliament. He knows that most of his freedoms are under provincial jurisdiction and he knows that they came by special acts of Parliament or came to us as the common law of England through the unwritten constitution of England. He knows this bill of Rights was introduced in Parliament on July 1—and appropriate day for patriotic utterance but, for practical purposes, it would have been equally appropriate to have it introduced on April 1. If it is a "litmus paper" for Parliament, let it record accurately the legislation to follow in its wake. If it is a "beacon", let it give light. As it stands now, it is a vote of confidence in the freedoms acquired in the past.

Hon. John M. MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the addresses which have been given so far, and I do not know that there is very much I can usefully add to the discussion. However, there are a few remarks I would like to make and I assure you that they will not take long.

This bill is generally recognized as a most important one, and rightly so. It is important because its subject-matter is important to all Canadians, dealing as it does with human rights and fundamental freedoms.

We claim these rights and these freedoms as our own, yet they were not won by us. We did not have to earn them. We received them as an inheritance from our past and we accept them as part of our heritage. Of course all Canadians value and cherish these rights and freedoms. Yet quite often there is a tendency to take them for granted, to accept them as something we are accustomed to and, perhaps since we are accustomed to them, not to appreciate them as we should.

I doubt if it occurs very often to the average Canadian that these rights and freedoms he enjoys could ever be lost, or be abridged or diminished in any way; yet such things can happen, and such things happen not only by deliberate choice, as it were. I do not think for one moment that any Government or any department of Government, or any commission or body of Government, would ever deliberately embark upon a policy to make a regulation, the main object of which was to diminish or take away any of these rights. Yet I believe there is a danger that such might be done indirectly in the pursuit of some other objective, and probably an objective which is good in itself.

The Government in Canada has become a vast and complex organization. It could happen that in the name of efficiency, in the name of a better or more simple form of administration, the rights we now have would be abridged, or diminished, or lessened until they were gone. There are people who feel it is difficult to administer the vast field of social welfare and at the same time not to infringe on some rights or some freedoms. One can see and appreciate that point of view, yet I think it can be safely assumed that in the years to come there will be new and enlarged fields of social welfare and the problems will tend to become more difficult.

Yet, honourable senators, our rights and freedoms must be fully protected and preserved. Since these rights and freedoms were handed down to us, I feel it is our obligation to preserve them and to preserve them in full, whether an attack upon them might come from deliberate policy or some indirect pressure.

This bill spells out what we consider to be our rights and freedoms so far as the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament extends. It is a valuable addition to our laws. Henceforth the ordinary citizen of Canada, either native born or naturalized, can very easily learn at least what the federal Parliament considers to be his rights and freedoms, so far as its jurisdiction extends.

Apart from that I believe this bill serves another very useful and worth-while purpose. It has already been the means of focussing public opinion on this matter of rights and freedoms. It has raised discussion and debates; it has caused people to examine anew the fundamental principles on which we base our rights and our freedoms. There are some who believe it would be better not to have a bill of rights, feeling as they do that our present law gives adequate protection. But in general it has been acknowledged that this bill is beneficial, though there is disagreement as to just what it should contain. I think that the fact that there has been disagreement on what the bill should contain is further evidence of the need for the bill. If learned men, men of great knowledge and ability, cannot agree upon just what are our rights and our freedoms, how then can it be expected that the ordinary, average citizen of Canada would understand them? This bill at least will enable him to know the basic fundamental principles in a form he can understand.

Apart from its value as the law of Canada, I feel this bill is also of great educational value in itself. As we know, it deals only with matters within the jurisdiction of the federal Government yet some of our rights are under exclusive provincial jurisdiction. The discussions which have taken place about these two jurisdictions must have brought strongly to the attention of Canadians that there are these two fields of government and plainly indicates to them that one cannot encroach upon the other.

I believe that it is fair to say that a great many people do not know or, if they do know, they do not understand this division of responsibility. When they refer to Government they make no distinction between the Government of, say, Halifax and that of Ottawa. In fact many people seem to be under the impression that the federal authority is in some way superior to the provincial authority and has some supervisory capacity over it.

Again, honourable senators, there is a body of opinion which holds that a bill of rights should include all rights, those under provincial as well as federal jurisdiction. It is a fact that provincial bills of rights are necessary. Provinces have to pass various laws relating to discrimination. In the province of Nova Scotia we feel we have a fair record in that regard, but certainly we are not perfect.

It may be of interest to honourable senators to know that back in 1758 the first Legislative Assembly was constituted in the province of Nova Scotia, the first in what is now Canada. In 1820 the island of Cape Breton was annexed to the mainland of Nova Scotia, and in the election of members to the assembly from that island one of those elected was Lawrence Cavanagh. Mr. Cavanagh was a Roman Catholic, and he felt that he could not in conscience take the oath of office which was required of members; consequently, he did not take his seat. This was brought to the attention of the British Government of the day and, to make a long story short, the result was that that part of the oath to which he objected was removed and he was able to take his seat in 1822. So in so far at least as members of the assembly of Nova Scotia were concerned, Roman Catholics could be members of that body a good many years before they could sit in the House of Commons in England.

In the industrial areas of Nova Scotia there are many people who were not born in Canada, and there again we have got along fairly well together in a good spirit of toleration. Yet in spite of our belief in toleration, and much as we dislike discrimination, in the last few years the Legislature of Nova Scotia found it necessary to pass a fair employment law and a fair accommodation law to prevent discrimination. It was actually a shock to us to find that it was necessary to pass such laws, but the actual cases which arose made it absolutely necessary. So I am convinced there should be provincial bills of rights in the provincial field of jurisdiction under the legislatures.

May I say in passing that the rights in the provincial field are perhaps closer to the people. So that perhaps silence would not be taken for consent, may I say that I strongly disagree with the honourable senator who preceded me (Hon. Mr. McGrand) in his remarks on the right-to-work laws. I do think that in negotiations between an employer and a union, if what is called a union shop is written into the contract, it certainly should be an obligation on all those who work for that employer to belong to that union. I think it is a case where the right of the individual to work is limited by the right of his fellow workers to work, and to strive to improve their working conditions. I do not intend to discuss that point further at this time.

79955-1—77

I feel that the question of a bill of rights in the provincial jurisdiction is a matter for the provinces, and I am not convinced that one bill of rights which includes those rights under the provincial jurisdiction would be better than separate bills. I am not convinced that it should be incorporated as an amendment to the British North America Act, unless a method were worked out whereby not only could the act be amended in Canada, but that when amended in Canada it would be with the participation of the provincial Legislatures and not only with the approval or consent of provincial Governments to federal legislation.

Honourable senators, I believe this bill is a real step forward, a real accomplishment. It shows that this Parliament is alive to the need of protecting our fundamental rights and freedoms and that it is determined to do so.

I would like for a moment to pay tribute to those persons who have over the years worked for a bill of rights, members of Parliament and others. If I may be pardoned for saying so, one of those persons, and certainly not the least, is our present Prime Minister.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I can best express my views by first saying that I am one of those who are deeply stirred and excited by both the concept and the reality of a bill of rights. As one who has for many years been an advocate of a bill of rights for Canada, I regard what we are doing today, in endorsing the present Bill of Rights, as a significant landmark in a continuing journey, a journey that in fact has no end, for the protection of human rights is not something that can be secured today forever more but must be constantly reviewed in the light of changing factors.

During most of my tenure in the House of Commons I had a resolution on the Order Paper dealing with Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. The Present Prime Minister was generous enough, when he introduced his Bill of Rights in 1958, to associate my name, as well as the name of Mr. M. J. Coldwell, with the bill.

Other resolutions with different wording, but with the same objective, were placed on the Order Paper by the present Prime Minister and by Mr. Coldwell, who was then Leader of the C.C.F. party. For many years, I think every year, we debated one or other of these resolutions, and while we could claim to have alerted public opinion we made no progress, legislatively speaking, until 1958. I do not wish in any way to detract from the credit that is due to the present Prime Minister, for he is doing what I wish my party had done. A bill of rights is the age-old cry of a citizen for justice, and it is hard to achieve in a simple operation. It is a complex process which must take into account, as I have already said, both the constant and the changing factors. We should think in terms of a beginning rather than a single achievement. I look upon this Bill of Rights with all its imperfections as a useful landmark in the continuing journey of freedom. This bill is the beginning, and if you regard it from that standpoint it is not without value. It is a praiseworthy attempt to strengthen human rights, though much of its phraseology is vague and ambiguous, as perhaps it is bound to be in a bill such as this. A great deal more will have to be done to make the bill a real landmark in the history of the fight for civil, political and economic rights.

The majority seldom need constitutional protection of their rights. It is the minority, the dissenters from majority opinions, who stand in need of a reaffirmation of their freedoms within the law. No statute guarantees free speech in Canada today. Speech is free so long as majority opinion is not offended. No statute guarantees freedom of the press. If all the interpretations that have been given at various times of what constitutes libel, sedition, blasphemy and obscenity were to be applied at one time, a newspaper could say no more than that it might rain tomorrow.

Freedom of worship is guaranteed by no laws. When religious worship is confined to conventional services in conventional churches, it is tolerated, but it would be hard to convince a Jehovah's Witness that he had freedom in all parts of Canada.

In its simplest terms, a bill of rights gives the individual the same protection of the courts in maintaining freedom that the courts afford governments now in imposing their will on the individual citizen.

I made a certain statement on other occasions and I was taken to task for making it in the House of Commons some years ago. As a matter of fact, it was used by the then Minister of Justice when he attempted to refute arguments that I made in favour of a bill of rights. The statement I made was that it is an undeniable fact that basic freedoms are more highly cherished and more secure in Canada than in most other countries. But we cannot afford not to write these human freedoms into our Constitution and proclaim our belief to the world. It would be naive to believe that a bill of rights on the statute books would end all abuse, but its presence in our Constitution would help to create an atmosphere of respect for the human personality. Certainly it would not provoke abuses. It would go a long way in eliminating racial discrimination that not only defies a basic principle, but wastes the skills of a large sector of the population.

We in Canada have waited a long time for a bill of rights. The British House of Commons passed a bill of rights protecting civil liberties in 1689. The United States wrote the Fifth Amendment into their Constitution in 1791, and the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868. It is 271 years since the British enacted their bill of rights and 169 years since the Americans acted. We have had enough time to think it over. I am satisfied that the Government has come to the proper conclusion in presenting this Bill of Rights. I am also satisfied that the Canadian people approve of the bill.

We have had a mandate from our people since the day our forefathers marked their ballot. It is well to see that this Bill of Rights is being considered in the light of modern concept.

I said I was stirred and excited with the bill. I approve of it. I did not say it was a perfect bill nor that a perfect bill could be drawn. I think it is inadequate in that it does not provide that Parliament should have the right to amend its own Constitution. Instead of being a mere statute of Parliament, the bill should be incorporated in the Constitution to enshrine and enrich it. Some effort should be made to obtain the co-operation of the provinces to make the bill all-inclusive.

At the recent Dominion-Provincial Conference the Government was urged to move boldly toward an amendment to provide solid constitutional guarantees of the rights of Canadians. The Government said that it had not previously consulted the provinces. I was a little taken aback when the Government refused their invitation. I think it missed the boat. It may never have such a good opportunity again. Some provinces will, of course, be offended. Some will magnify their differences and in the interval the act may be interpreted in such a way as not to be so appealing to the provinces.

I was pleased when yesterday the Prime Minister promised that a committee of Parliament would be appointed to study, assess and review annually the encroachments of freedom. That should be a joint committee. This watch-dog committee will be as important as any other standing committee and its task will be one of great concern to the people of Canada.

We have heard speeches here this evening about other freedoms. I am not going to get into that debate. I will leave that for another date. However, there are other freedoms that this bill does not protect: Freedom from want, freedom from unemployment.

Every person willing and able to work should be able to find work at good wages and under decent conditions with reasonable security. I do believe there is an inherent right to social security. Freedom from economic insecurity, freedom of trade union association and collective bargaining, and freedom of education. The education of Canadians can be vital and decisive equipment for the survival of freedom. What is more, it would fully equip our people to govern themselves intelligently.

Honourable senators, there are other speakers to follow, and I think that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has indicated that we wish to finish the debate tonight. I prepared a long speech in my mind. I could go on, but I am not going to. Let me say just this: Freedom cannot be divided into segments. If our citizens are to be wholly free they must be given a bill of rights which covers the intangible as well as the tangible. These rights—the fulfilment of the Canadian promise to every citizen—are the great issue of our times. I have had, as I indicated to you, a long political love affair with the purpose of the bill, namely, human rights and fundamental freedoms. With all its imperfections, I shall welcome the bill on the statute books as the law of the land. From the day it becomes law it will behove all of us to improve it, to make it more meaningful, realistic and workable. It may be a small step, but it is a step in the right direction.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am sure you have all been impressed with the magnificent address just delivered by my deskmate from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll). He has mentioned something about what is not in this bill. I think it is well to realize that this is not a bill of economic rights. If it were, I suppose one of the first items in the bill would be the right to free trade. What more fundamental freeedom is there than the right to trade, to exchange products of one's labour with other people? Had it been a bill of economic rights, it would have included the fundamentals of life; it would have guaranteed to the newborn baby his right to share in the blessings of the Divine Creator of all things. But this is not that kind of a bill. It has not even been discussed in that connection. This is a political bill of rights.

Honourable senators, the first words I had planned to utter in addressing myself to the second reading of this bill were of congratulations to the Prime Minister for the tangible results which this measure shows of his long advocacy of a bill of rights. Of course, there has been some criticism of the bill. It is open to criticism, but whatever may be said of its detail, the fact remains that it is a parliamentary recognition of respect for the individual and of an attempt to safeguard his rights as such. It is that overwhelmingly, and beyond all question of dispute. I suppose one could scarcely overestimate the importance of the subject-matter of a bill of this kind. Civilization itself is based on a recognition of human rights. Without such recognition, of course, chaos reigns and the law of the jungle prevails. May I say to my colleagues on this side of the house that respect for the individual is the fundamental concept of the liberal philosophy.

When the Prime Minister authorized the drawing of this bill I think he caught a glimpse, at least, of human equality. One must visualize a picture before he can paint it, and recognition is a prerequisite to observance. If, therefore, I appear critical with respect to some phases of the measure, please bear in mind my strong commendation of its parliamentary recognition of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and of the author of the present bill. The Prime Minister spoke, I think, as early as 1942 on this subject, and I venture to predict that he will be remembered for this measure perhaps after all his other accomplishments, and perchance his shortcomings, have been forgotten.

I think it is also important for us to remember that the Prime Minister is not the only one who has served this cause in the Parliament of Canada. My honourable deskmate from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) has already mentioned Mr. M. J. Coldwell, who represented the C.C.F. party in the Commons; he is not now a member of that house, but there remains a memory of his actions in this cause for he was as aggressive as anyone else in the house in that regard. Of course, I am happy to recall the great contribution made to the movement that has brought forth this bill by my honoured deskmate and by other Liberals as well. His contribution has been outstanding, so much so that when he spoke in the Commons on the matter the Prime Minister had the grace to recognize the honourable senator's contribution. I would like also to pay tribute to the men and women outside of Parliament. I could name many of them, but that would not be fair to those I failed to mention—men and women who have served this cause ably with patriotism and devotion.

Above all, honourable senators, I think it is most important that we senators continue to bear in mind the great part played by the Senate of Canada, ourselves, in connection with the movement leading up to the passing of this bill. In 1948, as my friend from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) mentioned this afternoon, we appointed members to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to consider human rights and fundamental freedoms. I had the honour to be a member of that committee, and the report is signed by the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin) as chairman of the Senate section. My honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) was one of the members of the Commons section of the committee. I would like to read two paragraphs from the committee's report:

> In making this report your committee wishes to state its belief that Canadians enjoy a large measure of civil rights and liberties. That they must be maintained is beyond question. But to attempt to define these rights and liberties in statutory language is a task not to be undertaken lightly.
>
> But whatever steps be advocated by way of statutory enactment or otherwise to preserve human rights and fundamental freedoms Canadians must never fail to recognize that the ultimate and effective safeguard of those rights and freedoms lies in the people themselves, and in a resolute and effective public opinion.

I thoroughly agreed with that sentiment that there is a necessity for an informed and effective public opinion to bring about good legislation, and on March 20, 1950 I moved:

> That a special committee

—not a joint committee, but a special committee of our own house—

> be appointed to consider and report on the subject of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, what they are and how they may be protected and preserved, and what action, if any, can or should be taken to assure such rights to all persons in Canada.

That committee, honourable senators, sat for two sessions. It heard a large number of witnesses and engaged in a profound and exhaustive study of the subject-matter referred to us. On the 27th of June 1950, it presented a report to the Senate which you will find in the Senate Hansard for 1950 at page 587.

And strange too, shall I say—because this was ten years ago, and public sentiment in the matter had not developed so far then as it has now—the report was adopted unanimously by this house. I submit to you that that document should live in the history of Canada as one of the Senate's most notable documents. I give great credit to the Prime Minister for his contribution to this movement with regard to human rights and fundamental freedoms and I am sure he will not object if we take some credit to ourselves. There is plenty of credit to go all the way round.

Moreover, I look upon this bill, as does my friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and others as just one step in the upward struggle for civil rights and fundamental freedoms. Certainly it is not the last word in legislative endeavour. The very fact that it has been amended several times since its original introduction in the Commons is an indication that it is in a period of growth and is not by any means a final enactment. Nor, honourable senators, is it the first step in Canadian legislation designed to protect the rights of individuals and minorities.

And my friend from Toronto-Spadina need not be pessimistic about the slowness with which Canada has progressed in this matter. I know it takes a long time to bring some subjects to fruition, but let us not forget that our British North America Act in some of its phases is itself a bill of rights and the provisions of that act with regard to individual and minority rights have been of the utmost importance in the development of the Canadian nation in harmony and in freedom. For instance, the British North America Act adopts as Canada's fundamental law the principles of the British Constitution. That is fairly wide, for I think you will all agree with me that at that time Britain was considered the freest nation upon earth. I say at that time, because today I think Canada is the freest nation upon earth. And in addition to what I have said about adoption of the broad principles of British Constitution, the B.N.A. act assured us annual Parliaments, periodical elections, the right of minorities to separate schools, and the use of both French and English languages. There are other points as well, but those were the outstanding ones and they are not to be forgotten today.

Since the introduction of this bill there has been considerable controversy as to whether further civil rights legislation should be enacted as an act of Parliament, or as a further amendment of the British North America Act. It is my opinion that the Constitution is the place for fundamental law such as this, but, honourable senators, I am opposed to having any authority across the sea or beyond our own borders impose our freedoms on us. It will be time enough to consider stating our fundamental basic law when we are able to amend our Constitution ourselves.

I, too, honourable senators, disagree to a certain degree with the procedure that has been followed in the introduction of this bill. I would have commenced the movement not with a bill at all, not with a dry enactment of Parliament, but with a declaration of rights rather than a bill of rights, the declaration to be followed at a later date by the careful dry process of legislation. That is what occurred in the United States.

First there was the Declaration of Independence, and then the legislation which formed the Constitution. First there was the broad statement in these noble words:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

What a broad, magificent statement that is! One would not find such a statement in a bill, but only in a declaration.

The inspiring Declaration of Independence was unhampered by legal technicalities or considerations of conflicting jurisdictions between state and federal powers. The legal enactment known as the American Constitution was hammered out at the Philadelphia Conference as long afterwards as 1787, to be followed later by a series of amendments to the Constitution, known as the American Bill of Rights. Let me give an example of what that bill contained.

Article 1. Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peacefully to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Article 14. ...no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

These are fine and inspiring words.

The procedure of first making a declaration, setting forth the broad principles upon which we can all agree, to be followed later by the enactment of legislation necessary to make it effective, was advised by the Senate's Special Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms in 1950.

I suggest to my fellow senators that it is most desirable that we in the Senate be familiar with the memorable work of that committee. I appeal particularly to those honourable senators who were not members of this house in 1950 to bear with me if I read a few paragraphs from that report of peculiar significance at this present moment. A portion of the report was read by my honourable friend from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), but I am sure you will agree with me that at least part of it will bear two readings. I quote:

As a result of its inquiries your committee is assured that there are a very large number of persons in Canada who are deeply interested in the subject of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and that much thought has been devoted by our citizens to the subject. That every man, woman and child has rights is generally accepted as axiomatic, and that such rights should be protected is a conviction as universally held.

Your committee also agrees with this view, holding that every human being, irrespective of mere classifications on account of race, creed, sex, caste or colour, and other like distinctions, has rights which flow from his divine creation. The Brotherhood of man results from the fatherhood of God, and a fundamental equality among men necessarily follows. Such rights are not created by men be they ever so numerous for the benefit of other men, nor are they the gift of governments. They are above the power of men to create. They may be violated by men, not with impunity. They should be recognized, and every care should be taken to preserve them inviolate. Individuals, communities and governments do wrong when they attempt to take such rights away or to disregard them. The invasion of the rights of an individual is wrong irrespective of how many share in the guilt, and though the wrong be at the instance of government.

The increase in population, industrial development and intellectual progress, together with the tragic experience of two great wars, have created new needs and made apparent the necessity for the reaffirmation of old truths. The false ideology of the Nazis, Fascists, and Communists based on autocracy and disregard of the rights of the individual, has strengthened our conviction that the way of life of the western world is based upon respect for the rights of the individual and also strengthened the conviction that governments are properly servants, not masters of the people. Men's thoughts throughout the western world have turned to the subject of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The report goes on to speak of the work of the United Nations, the Atlantic Charter, and the "Four Freedoms" message. Canada was a signatory of that charter. It speaks too of the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights as one of the greatest documents of modern times.

I read further from the report:

Canada is just commencing her life as a nation. The British North America Act gave to the colonies which it federated a limited autonomy. The imperial Parliament remained in control and our external relations were retained completely in the hands of the United Kingdom authorities at Westminster. Gradually, however, over the years, the statesmen of Canada have cast off, step by step, Canada's colonial limitations, so that Canada has in the fullness of time achieved a complete and unfettered national status, together with a high place in international affairs. Just recently we have given final appellate jurisdiction to our own courts, and the dominion parliament has assumed control of the Canadian Constitution in matters within the jurisdiction of the dominion parliament. At the present time representatives of the dominion and provincial parliaments are endeavouring to work out an agreed procedure for control of the constitution in all respects. This is the final step in the legalistic recognition of Canada as a nation of equal status with all other nations within the British Commonwealth of Nations.

This is then the very time for Canada to decide the basis upon which this new nation is founded. With an astounding unanimity Canadians have individually decided that Canada shall be a land of the free. That here men shall live in the rule of law, in security of person, and that none shall oppress. Equality of right is basic in Canadian thought and must be assured in Canadian law, so that men may live confidently, in self respect, associating freely and expressing their thoughts without fear. This is the free, self-respecting, manly nation which Canadians have envisaged, and this is the time to nail the emblems of law, liberty and human rights to our mast-head. This is the very moment in which to decide the basis of our nationhood, to guarantee human rights and fundamental freedoms to all our citizens, and to proclaim our principles to the world.

The enactment of a national Bill of Rights, however, presents difficulties. In Canada, because of her history and the harmonious association of peoples of different races, language and religion, respect for Provincial rights as they have been defined in the past is essential. No informed person with any sense of responsibility would suggest that the dominin Parliament forcibly invade the provincial jurisdiction. Concurrence, therefore, is an essential requisite to constitutional progress.

Your committee therefore recommends that, as an interim measure, the Canadian Parliament adopt a Declaration of Human Rights to be strictly limited to its own legislative jurisdiction. Such a declaration would not invade the provincial legislative authority, but it would nevertheless cover a very wide field.

A Canadian Declaration of Human Rights could follow in its general lines the Preamble and certain of the articles of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights subject to the reservations expressed by the Canadian delegates at the United Nations. It would declare the right of every one in Canada to life, liberty and personal security, the right of equal treatment before the law, to fair trial, to freedom from arbitrary interference with one's privacy; family, home and correspondence, to freedom of movement, to a nationality; to obtain asylum from persecution; to found a family, to own and enjoy property; to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; to freedom of opinion and expression; to peaceful assembly and association; to take part in the government of the country directly or through representatives chosen at periodic elections by universal and equal suffrage. The declaration would also state that every one in Canada has duties to our Community and is subject to such limitations as are determined by law, for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and of the general welfare and good government of Canada. Finally, the declaration would specify that none of its provisions may be interpreted as tending to permit any group or person to engage in activity aimed at the destruction of the rights and freedoms of the people of Canada.

Such a Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the Canadian Parliament would solemnly affirm the faith of all Canadians in the basic principles of freedom and it would evidence a national concern for human rights and security. Judges would recognize the principles of such a declaration as part of Canada's public policy, and subsequent Parliaments would hesitate to enact legislation violating its revered principles. To adults it would convey a feeling of security and children would memorize its terms with pride.

Honourable senators, I beg your pardon for reading at such length but this is a statement by the Senate of Canada, not by any individual. The members of this house at that time unanimously adopted it and it was a stepping stone toward the progress that I hope we are making at this time as well. It was adopted ten years ago.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Is my honourable friend the author of it?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I refuse to answer on the advice of counsel.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think he is.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: It is good anyway.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As long as it gets by, I do not care who wrote it.

I want to call your attention to the fact that the great documents of human history are not statutes. They are not laws promulgated by kings or parliaments. Take, for instance, one of the first and greatest of them all, the Decalogue. That was not a statute; it was thundered by Moses from the mountain. It assured mankind who observed it, or the nations which observed it, fundamental things such as the rights of parents to be honoured by their children, of citizens not to be murdered and not to have their property stolen, and it inaugurated in Palestine the rule of law with a divine sanction. The effect of that declaration is simply beyond all calculation, for it has affected the lives and conditions of millions of people for at least 3,000 years.

Take the Magna Carta. My honourable friend from Sunbury (Hon. Mr. McGrand) referred to it tonight. That was an agreeement between the king and the barons, but what about its effect upon human history? It is beyond all calculation. It was not until the Confirmato Cartarum of Edward I in 1297 that it was made law by the simple expedient of providing that judgments repugnant to the principle of Magna Carta should be null and void. Here is section 39 of that outstanding document, the Magna Carta, which has played such a part in our thinking and ideology.

No free man shall be captured, or imprisoned, or disseised, or outlawed, or exiled, or in anyway destroyed, nor will we go against him or send against him, except by the lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

That was written in 1215. It has been a treasured document of the British people and all those who derive their inspiration from them.

Take the Declaration of Independence. That was not a statute, and yet who can measure its influence on the law of America, yes, and on the world and on the thought of all mankind? That is why I expressed disappointment when this bill was first presented. I thought that a great opportunity was being missed in that it was not preceded by some sort of general high-sounding declaration. This is what we said in our report:

What is required in Canada is one grand and comprehensive affirmation, or reaffirmation, of human rights, equality before the law and of security, as the philosophical foundation of our nationhood, that will assure continually to each Canadian that he is born free and equal in rights and dignity with all other Canadians, that he cannot be held in personal slavery, or arbitrarily arrested, that he will always be presumed innocent of any offence until proven guilty, that he has freedom of thought, conscience, expression and movement, and so on through the Universal Declaration. Thus will Canadians know of their freedom, exercise it in manly confidence and be proud of their country.

Well, we have not proceeded in that way. I think we missed a grand opportunity in not having this bill preceded by a declaration. The bill is a legislative enactment which must necessarily be couched in the language of statutes and all the technicalities of an act of Parliament, as well as having regard to the distinctions between our jurisdictions.

Honourable senators, I do not propose to indulge, at this time of the night at all events, in any criticism of the individual details of this bill. That has already been done at great length in the other place, and possibly others will do so here as well. If there are any doubts or ambiguities in the measure the courts, as has been suggested, will take care of them in due season. However, I cannot pass the details of the bill entirely without an expression of regret at the complete repeal of all that this bill states about human rights, in the event of war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended. I thought we were rising above the barbarities of the War Measures Act. I thought perhaps this movement for freedom, and so on, would relegate that to the past, for it is in times of war, honourable senators, or fear of war or insurrection that the rights of the individual are most in danger. It is then that we need some comprehensive protection of the individual. While the bill purports to make the War Measures Act more susceptible to parliamentary control than in the past, it actually gives approval to the act, for it makes clear that the act is still subject to be invoked. I wish the Government had taken their courage in their hands and recommended the complete repeal of that act. I wish, too, that when the Prime Minister was considering this bill he—with his flair for the grandiloquent statement—had sat down and written what was in his heart. I think he could have penned a statement that would have been historical, and its importance would have been enhanced by the fact that it flowed from the pen of a Prime Minister of Canada. Instead of that, he instructed the lawyers of the department to draw this bill, and what we have, of course, is a lawyer's bill and not a people's declaration of freedom and of right. I say the Prime Minister could have done so because I have in my hand an excerpt from his speech of July 1, 1960, and from which my friend on my right (Hon. Mr. Croll) quoted some time since. It appears in the latest edition of Saturday Night:

I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I think wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country. This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind.

That is the kind of declaration that we should be approving this evening, and we could have followed it next session with a bill—a dry subject of legislation; but in the meantime we would have inspired our people, we would have given them something to memorize and to be proud of. Yet while I am pointing all this out, because it is deeply in my own mind, I intend to support this bill, and I do support it enthusiastically, for I, too, as well as my friend from Toronto-Spadina have spent many hours in the development of this movement, and I am glad to see us taking this step forward, this parliamentary recognition of the rights of the individual.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, at this late hour I must apologize for speaking. I understand that tomorrow will be a full day in this chamber, and therefore it is necessary to be as brief as possible, and perhaps to abstain when it is not necessary to speak. I do not feel I can contribute much to this discussion, and were it not for some points that I think I should elaborate upon, and were it not for the fact that it was suggested at the time of adjournment that I should speak, perhaps I would have abstained.

My main purpose in offering a few remarks now is that, apart from the merits of the bill, there has been serious discussion by a very able member of this house on the question of whether or not the provinces, and the provinces alone, have jurisdiction in the matter of civil liberties or human rights, especially as related to the freedom of religion. Although I appreciate the force of the remarks which the honourable gentleman made and the courage with which they were delivered, and their very important conclusions, I beg permission to disagree on some points, and that is why I feel that those remarks should not be allowed to pass without comment.

I shall try to express my views in a moderate way, and perhaps I should add that I shall speak without passion and with respect for all those who have their own opinions, and also for the institutions that have been mentioned, including the Supreme Court of Canada and other institutions of great merit that were mentioned, and which no other institution or man could parallel.

Honourable senators, may I first compliment the other house on the enactment of this Bill of Rights, so called. Without offence, may I say that although the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) stated that he supports the bill very enthusiastically, it seems to me that his enthusiasm was a little—I will not say suspicious, but possibly sarcastic, in view of his criticism that the bill was not preceded by a declaration of rights and did not include words that had been uttered elsewhere in other circumstances. It is difficult to attain the eloquence or to match the literature and words of other peoples as to a bill of rights. We should not even attempt to draft a document such as this for all nations in exactly the same form and words.

Now we have our own Bill of Rights and on reading it the wording sounds very good. This bill can hardly be called a piece of legislation. Of course it is in the form of a bill, and we call it a Bill of Rights, but fundamentally it is more a document of recognition, a declaration of rights. The title of the bill says that it is an act for the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Then there follows a preamble which expresses the idea of the Bill of Rights in terms that make it more of a document of recognition than a piece of legislation. The preamble reads:

> The Parliament of Canada, affirming that the Canadian Nation is founded upon principles that acknowledge the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions;

Those are not bad words. They are not the dry words that were alluded to and that we find in pieces of legislation proper.

The preamble continues:

> Affirming also that men and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law;

That also is not so bad as an enunciation of a principle.

The preamble goes on:

> And being desirous of enshrining these principles and the human rights and fundamental freedoms derived from them, in a Bill of Rights which shall reflect the respect of Parliament for its constitutional authority and which shall ensure the protection of these rights and freedoms in Canada:
>
> Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

That preamble in three paragraphs is not badly worded. In fact, it is very well worded. I think that with these expressions in its Bill of Rights Canada should not be afraid that it may not compare favourably with a bill of rights of any other nation.

This bill has received words of commendation from a great number of people. Many people thought, some years ago, that it was just an ideal that would be difficult to achieve. But they now find, and I think we are all in agreement with them, that Parliament has produced an excellent Bill of Rights.

Up to now we had no mention of such fundamental liberties in federal legislation, as was pointed out by the honourable member from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). In our Constitution we have some particular guarantees specially expressed, but this Bill of Rights is a general expression of fundamental liberties. Not all the fundamental liberties are provided for in this bill. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity has correctly mentioned that it does not purport to provide for fundamental rights as to trade, commerce, industry, and so on. As a first charter it starts with the rights pertaining to the human person.

Section 1 of the bill states:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,

Here again we see that the bill is a recognition and a declaration of human rights. I say this is a declaration of rights, and between this and other declarations there is only a difference of words. We call ours a Bill of Rights. Others would have preferred to have called it a declaration of rights. I contend that this Bill of Rights is a declaration of rights and a recognition of rights. This is set out in the bill as a recognition of the following human fundamental freedoms, namely:

> (a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;

I would venture to say that this wording compares very favourably with the wording on many other such declarations.

The bill goes on to recognize other freedoms as follows:

> (b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;
> (c) freedom of religion;
> (d) freedom of speech;
> (e) freedom of assembly and association; and
> (f) freedom of the press.

I think that is an enumeration of the most important freedoms relating to individuals that has ever been conceived up to now. It would be difficult to express in more appropriate language any of these ideas as to the liberty of the subject in relation to his religion, his right to free speech and other topics already mentioned.

As will be noted from what I just read, paragraph (c) recognizes the freedom of religion.

The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) drew the attention of the Senate in strong and vehement terms and with great conviction to the contention that rights in connection with religion belonged to the provinces and the conclusion to be drawn from his remarks is that the Bill of Rights is unconstitutional. He did not say it in that way but that is the conclusion that I would draw.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Monette: No; I will admit the honourable senator did not use the word "unconstitutional".

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: You are certainly wrong.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I admit I may be wrong, but I concluded that, by affirming that freedom of religion is a matter that is within the jurisdiction of the provinces, in virtue of the Constitution, the honourable senator clearly meant this Parliament had no jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my honourable friend will permit me: What I said was that the jurisdiction over freedom of religion belongs to the provinces in virtue of all the statutes.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I admit, sir, I could be wrong. But in this particular instance my understanding was in accord with what was said.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Do not invite me to make another speech.

Hon. Mr. Monette: What I have to say now is about the freedom of religion. Section 92 of the British North America Act does not speak in terms of freedom of religion or the right to legislate in matters of religion, nor does section 91 of that act. It is only by implication that one could claim that "property and civil rights" would include religion, and that it would belong to the provinces. Others may feel that the words "peace, order and good government," found in section 91, would embody religion and be within the jurisdiction of Parliament. At the moment I am not taking one side or the other, because the source of the jurisdiction in such matters goes back much farther.

I agree with my honourable friend from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) that section 129 of the British North America Act has a bearing on the matter. That section provides for the continuance after 1867 of existing laws in the then three provinces: Canada—which then comprised the present provinces of Quebec and Ontario—New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Section 129 reads:

> Except as otherwise provided by this act, all Laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the Union

—that is at the time of Confederation—

> and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and all legal Commissions, Powers, and Authorities, and all Officers, Judicial, Administrative, and Ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively, as if the Union had not been made;

So, by the first part of that section, all laws existing in Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia before Confederation shall continue, with this proviso:

> subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Legislature of the respective Province, according to the Authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act.

The crucial question is whether the Parliament of Canada or the legislatures of the provinces would have jurisdiction to amend the previous law, if one existed, about freedom of religion. One did exist, and it has not been amended up to the present time. It has in fact remained entirely unamended. Irrespective of sections 91 and 92 of the Act of Confederation, but by virtue of section 129 only, it has remained in force as if the act of Union had never existed.

My honourable friend from De la Durantaye referred to the law of 1852, enacted by Parliament—

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my friend will permit me, it was passed in 1851 and received royal sanction from Queen Victoria in 1852.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I am not dividing the authority of the law. It became law in 1852.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I am now referring to the statute of 1852, reproduced for some time after Confederation in the revised Statutes of Quebec, and I am reading from page 372 of the 1957-58 Senate Hansard:

> Whereas the recognition of legal equality among all Our Religious Denominations is an admitted principle of Colonial Legislation—

That is included in the preamble, and as my honourable friend has said, the preamble forms part of the act.

> —And whereas in the state and condition of This Province to which such a principle is peculiarly applicable—

"This province" means both Ontario and Quebec.

—it is desirable that the same should receive the sanction of direct Legislative Authority, recognizing and declaring the same as a fundamental principle of our civil policy; be it therefore declared and enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Canada...That the free exercise and enjoyment of Religious Profession and Worship, without discrimination or preference, so as the same be not made an excuse for acts of licentiousness, or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the Province, is by the constitution and laws of this Province allowed to all Her Majesty's subjects within the same.

That law is still in force and was not interfered with by any section of the Act of Confederation, and the proper authority to amend it has not yet been determined. So, as it stands it is the clear law of the country that religious professions and religious freedoms are matters that neither the provinces nor the federal authorities could touch, except by way of amendment, and no amendment has been made as to that particular freedom.

I submit that we cannot get out of that. The matter was raised in the case of the Jehovah's Witnesses in Quebec. These people were advancing a creed of their own. They claimed they had Christian views but those views were different from the views of other Christian religions, and indeed the views of other religions. In Quebec the Jehovah's Witnesses had been attacking the Roman Catholic religion quite vigorously, and the provincial Legislature enacted laws authorizing municipalities to pass bylaws to stop them from distributing their tracts in the streets. These tracts not only were concerned with explaining their creed, but I think it can be agreed that they were considered as bitter attacks on the Roman Catholic Church. Acting under the bylaws of the City of Quebec the police went and seized these tracts from the Jehovah's Witnesses and arrested some of their sect. There followed a court action which ended before the Supreme Court of Canada. I myself, and I think my honourable friend from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) knows it, was of the opinion that these tracts were offensive to such a degree that they could sow hatred and discord among the citizens of Canada, according to the wording of the act of 1852:

That the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, so as the same be not made an excuse for acts of licentiousness, or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the Province,...

The Supreme Court of Canada rendered a decision and it was not based on whether the jurisdiction in the matter of freedom of religion belonged to either the provincial authorities or the federal authorities, but on fact. The majority of the judges recognized that the law of 1852 had enunciated the principles of the freedom of religion but acknowledged that advantage should not be taken of that freedom in order to offend other people or other religions in such a way as to break the peace among Her Majesty's people.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If my honourable friend will permit me I will ask him this: Had he been on the bench of the Supreme Court in 1953 with Mr. Justice Kerwin would he have given the same decision as that given by Mr. Justice Kerwin and his other colleagues, Mr. Justice Estey, Mr. Justice Locke, Mr. Justice Rand and another?

Hon. Mr. Monette: I understand well the question of my honourable friend, but I am not here at the moment to say what I would have judged had I been elevated to a position of which I was not worthy. The fact is that the majority opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to that case was that the tracts in question were not offensive. As a humble citizen I am not of that opinion, just as the honourable senator from De la Durantaye is not of that opinion. During my first session in the Senate there was a debate on that matter and I said at that time that the case had been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada and I did not want to be involved in a harsh criticism of the highest tribunal in our land.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My honourable friend has only to say nothing if he does not want to enter into any discussion.

Hon. Mr. Monette: My honourable friend from De la Durantaye has quite properly said certain things. We can all say things quite properly and with due regard for the people or institutions involved, but it is a fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is the highest tribunal in the land and I respect its decisions even though I might have a different opinion. My opinion is that the law of 1852 was the only binding one and that it gave unrestricted freedom of religion to all citizens of the then province of Canada, Quebec and Ontario. But it did contain a restriction, and only one, in that no citizen could take advantage of such a full freedom in order to abuse the liberties of other people or to do anything licentious which would have the effect of creating discord and breaking the peace among the citizens of Her Majesty. On a question of fact the Supreme Court of Canada decided that these tracts were not so licentious as to do this.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Would my honourable friend permit me to interrupt? Does he know that Chief Justice Kerwin, then a puisne judge, was the only one to come to that interpretation as to licentiousness?

Hon. Mr. Monette: I will come to that.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am listening closely.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I do not deny that, but I cannot say everything at once and so I am proceeding in an orderly manner, I think. I have said there was a law that was not to be touched by the Parliament of Canada or by the provinces other than by an amendment, and such was never passed. As I have said, the majority opinion of the court was that these tracts were not offensive. The Honourable Mr. Justice Kerwin, who has since become the Chief Justice, did not see in those tracts of the Witnesses of Jehovah anything that was likely to affect the peace and to sow discord among Canadians. I remember on that former occasion stating that I abided by the court's decision, although I personally felt that the tracts were so offensive that if they had been directed against some good Englishman or Scotsman in this house he would have jumped to his feet upon reading them. At any rate, the court gave its decision based on the facts presented to it. I may be of another opinion, as is my confrère from De la Durantaye, feeling that these tracts were offensive and detrimental to the peace and good order of our citizens.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I agree that my honourable friend can express his opinion freely and say anything he likes. I have no objection to that. That is his right. But I do not want him to impute to me any views that I do not have and that I have never expressed. This I say once for all, and if the honourable senator is not satisfied I will speak on third reading of the bill and correct all the wrong things said, or if not then, at the next session.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I have not expressed anything but the fact that the law is thus and so, and that as regards these tracts I was of the same opinion as the honourable senator. Do not impute any bad sentiment to me. I know the honourable gentleman is prompt in speech. I have great respect for him. May I in justice say that he is very brilliant in this house.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I say so; but sometimes one should not be so prompt in qualifying the speech of another without exercising a little restraint before his nerves get too far out of control.

The decision of the Supreme Court has never challenged the authority of the act of 1852 under the union of Parliament, which granted this freedom of religion to Canada. On the contrary, the majority of the judges of the Supreme Court granted that this act of 1852 was still in force. It was because some people of the province of Quebec were arrested under the municipal bylaw that the Supreme Court declared illegal the actions or procedures that had been taken by the province. There was no decision about the law, except to maintain that in our provinces, that is, in Quebec as well as Ontario, we were still granted freedom of religion, solely by virtue of the act of 1852, when full liberty of religion was granted subject to that one objection I have mentioned. In view of that, I think we cannot blame the Bill of Rights for having simply recognized, as it does, that there exists, as there always has existed here, a number of liberties, since 1852, and particularly full liberty of religion. Therefore, on that point I cannot see how we could challenge the propriety of this Bill of Rights, which recognizes the existence in Canada of full freedom of religion and declares that it shall be maintained, which I think is proper. With the spirit of freedom that exists throughout the country at this time, and with the good disposition of everyone toward the rights, feelings, religions and language of others, I do not think that we should try to amend the act of 1852 in relation to freedom of religion.

Honourable senators, I thank you for listening to me so long with patience. I sincerely apologize to the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I know he does not need my apology; nevertheless I apologize if in the strength of my conviction I have said things that have been taken as offensive but that are supported by the text of the law and the decisions of the judges.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I realize the hour is late and I assure you that I shall not detain you very long. However, I should like to make a few comments on this bill, for I too have for years been greatly interested in the matter of human rights and have given it some study, though certainly not anything like that of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll).

I wish to join with others in complimenting the Prime Minister for introducing this measure. I do so without intending any sarcasm, although I may be suspected of this, if I may adopt a phrase used by the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). I may make some critical remarks; nevertheless I think the fact that the bill has been introduced is a big step forward in Canadian progress, and I think the Prime Minister should be given great credit for introducing it. If Canada is to have a Bill of Rights, however, I think it should be formally embodied in our Constitution after a conference between the provincial and federal Governments. It is true that in 1950 a Senate committee after much study recommended that because of constitutional difficulties an interim measure should be passed by the Canadian Parliament. However, honourable senators are not bound by such a recommendation today. A Senate committee sitting now, ten years later, after so many changes have taken place in Canada, might come to the conclusion that it is possible to incorporate a bill of rights in our Constitution, and I think that every effort should have been made to do so before this bill was introduced into either of the Canadian Houses of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, it is quite likely that I am slower in grasping the purport of legislation than many of my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, no.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Well, I must be, because it seems to me that it is impossible for this house to give adequate consideration to this important matter when it is introduced into our house in the dying days of the session. It seems to me that to rush such a bill through the Senate without adequate consideration is to show little respect for either the Senate or for the subject-matter of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There is no reason why we should not stay for a week to debate it if anybody wants to.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators know that would be a most unpopular move. I do not see how this house can give sober second thought, as it is supposed to do, to a bill which we have not even had time to read since it was introduced here.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have been considering this for two years now, on and off.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: We did not know what amendments might be made before the bill reached us, or what form it would be in.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may have been considered at the honourable gentleman's caucus perhaps, but certainly not here.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not want to curtail the debate at all. It is quite agreeable to me to debate this for two weeks, if you want to do so. I will stay here.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: To give the proper consideration and respect to a bill such as this, it seems to me we should not receive it at all at the present time but we should leave it over for study by the Senate and by a committee of the Senate, thus assuring ample time for the hearing of witnesses early next session. There are many things in this bill that I should like to have an opportunity to study, and many people whose opinions I would like to hear. Although the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) says he is willing to stay here another week, I am afraid he might find it difficult even to collect a quorum.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A completely impractical remark by the leader.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, my feeling is that in a Bill of Rights for Canada the preamble should refer to our own historical Canadian background and the reasons why we in Canada want and need such legislation. I would suggest that a preamble such as was suggested to me by a friend who has given a great deal of thought and study to the matter of Canadian constitutional law would be much more suitable than the preamble to the present Bill. With permission of the house, I will read the suggested preamble, because it expresses the sort of sentiment that I think should be incorporated into a bill of rights:

> Whereas the three provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were united into one Dominion under the name of Canada in the year of Our Lord 1867, with a Constitution similar in its principles to the Constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;
>
> Whereas the Constitution of the United Kingdom is established in large part upon historic documents of high renown, in which great principles of Order, Justice and Freedom have been enunciated and made secure;
>
> Whereas in recent years those great principles of Order, Justice and Freedom have been placed in the greatest jeopardy;
>
> Whereas those principles have been preserved for the people of Canada at the cost of many thousands of noble and heroic lives; and
>
> Whereas it now seems fitting that those great principles of Order, Justice and Freedom should be proclaimed in Canada anew, as a memorial to those glorious dead and as a perpetual illumination to all present and future living:

Therefore be it enacted by Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Honourable senators, it seems to me that it is certainly against tradition, and a violation of the freedom of debate and proceedings in Parliament, to give a minister of the Crown, as is done in section 3 of this bill, the power to comment on or pass on any bill introduced into or presented to the House of Commons other than in a manner that is available to any other member of the House of Commons. Members who know their constitutional history realize that it is only as a consequence of a constitutional convention that a minister of the Crown is also a member of Parliament. That is because Parliament itself requires him to be. Yet section 3 of the bill places the Crown, through one of the ministers of the Crown, in the very improper position of commenting on the business of the house. I therefore feel that the following words in line 5 on page 3 of the bill:

—and every bill introduced in or presented to the House of Commons...

should be omitted.

I submit section 6 of the bill would be much more appropriate as an amendment to the War Measures Act. It is not concerned at all with any broad principles of human rights or fundamental freedoms and I consider that it certainly has no place in a bill such as this.

However, honourable senators, the feature of the bill that disappoints me most is that it refers only to rights and does not say anything about the corresponding responsibilities and duties of citizens.

Reference has been made in this debate to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, besides declaring the rights of human beings, also states that everyone has duties to the community. Article 29 of that Declaration says:

Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the freedom and full development of his personality is possible.

Honourable senators know, I feel sure, that for years I have worked for the recognition of women's rights in Canada. In the course of this work I have addressed many women's organizations, and I have pointed out that if women expect to be granted rights they must be prepared to accept the duties and responsibilities that go with those rights. I think if Canadian citizens expect to have rights they must accept the duties and responsibilities that go with the rights, and these duties and responsibilities should be stated in the present bill.

As the bill stands it seems to me to convey the idea that there is an essential antagonism between the freedom of the individual and the activities and purposes of the state. This, I think, is really wrong. The interest of the individual and of the state should be the same, and if this bill is to pass the house it should, in my opinion, have added to it these words or other words having a similar meaning:

All rights and freedoms pertaining to the people of Canada are accompanied by duties and responsibilities to the people and Government of Canada.

I trust that the committee to which this bill is to be referred will consider the suggestions I have made.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Horner, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

JUDGES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-89, to amend the Judges Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I should like to say that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will meet tomorrow morning at 10.30 to consider the bill to which we have just given second reading. I also wish to thank honourable senators for the interest they have taken in this measure. A considerable number of honourable senators have spoken on second reading and in that way have facilitated the sending of the bill to the committee within a reasonable time.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, August 5, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE ARTHUR MEIGHEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, like most of you I was shocked and grieved by the sad news received this morning of the sudden death of the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, P.C., Q.C., B.A., a former Prime Minister of Canada and a former Leader of the Government in the Senate. Less than a month ago—to be exact, on the 16th of June—I took it upon myself to send him a congratulatory telegram on behalf of his former colleagues in the Senate and many friends in the Senate on the occasion of his 86th birthday, and on the 23rd of June I received from him a letter in which he stated:

> Please convey to the members of the Senate my sincere thanks for their kind birthday greetings. I was truly honoured to receive such a message.
>
> My very best wishes for the continued success of all the members.
>
> Yours sincerely,
> Arthur Meighen

I knew the late Right Honourable Mr. Meighen more or less intimately for the past 50 years or so, and I was indeed sorry to hear of his sudden death. We all knew he was in failing health, but even under these circumstances news of death is always shocking.

For 23 years Mr. Meighen was a member of the House of Commons, and for 10 years a member of this honourable body. He was twice Prime Minister of Canada. He was Leader of the Government in the Senate from 1932 until the Government changed in 1935, and after that he occupied the position of Leader of the Opposition in the Senate until he resigned from this house in 1942. During the years from 1934 to 1942 I sat behind the distinguished gentleman in this chamber. It was a real privilege to be here with such a great man. Little did I think at that time that one day I would occupy the position I now hold in the Senate.

The Right Honourable Mr. Meighen was an enthusiastic believer in the Senate, which he regarded as one of the bulwarks of our parliamentary system. He was particularly impressed with the work done by Senate committees in dealing with legislation that came from the other place as well as that which originated in the Senate, and he praised the Senate on many occasions in both Canada and the United States. I never saw anyone who could analyse a bill so skilfully as he could, and it was a revelation to watch him work in Senate committees, where he would sit on one side of the table, with the late Senator Dandurand on the opposite side. They were two illustrious parliamentarians.

Mr. Meighen was a man of high principles, honest and unafraid in expressing his views. He had a brilliant and a questing mind and was regarded by his contemporaries as one of the finest orators in Canadian parliamentary history.

In his death we have lost another great Canadian. I know we all mourn his passing and wish to express our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Meighen and the other members of his family.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the country is indeed poorer for the loss of the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen. It is given to few Canadians to occupy the position of Prime Minister, and if only for the reason that he had held that high office we would be today regretting his passing. But Arthur Meighen was much more than a former Prime Minister: he was a man of superb intellectual powers, a scholar, a lawyer of note, and one who at all times made the maximum use of his endowments. The late Mr. Meighen was unquestionably one of the most accomplished speakers ever to adorn the Parliament of Canada. His mind was orderly, his logic was clear, and he had an almost unparalleled ability to present his thoughts in forceful and incisive language which will remain an ornament to the pages of our proceedings as long as they exist. He was fearless in debate, and devastating in the cut and thrust of the ordinary parliamentary exchange. He was a man of the most solid integrity, an example to all who would hope to make a contribution to our country and public life. We in this house today mourn his loss, not only as a former Prime Minister, but as a former Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and a former Leader of the Government and of the Opposition in this house. He sat here for approximately thirteen sessions, and led his followers on both sides of the house with that distinction and ability which had come to be the hallmark of his parliamentary career.

The Right Honourable Arthur Meighen was, as the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has said, indeed a great Canadian. Many honourable senators will no doubt have read the collection of his speeches, which he entitled Unrevised and Unrepented. They are eloquent in full measure and demonstrate his skill with words and his logic of thought. They are, as he said, unrevised. Mr. Meighen's presentation was always of such brilliance that there was very little need of revision. His character was such that he had no need to repeat. Others might and did frequently disagree with him, but that fact never swayed him from his purpose, which, according to his own lights and the context of the circumstances in which he found himself, was always directed toward the advancement of Canada, which he loved so well and served so brilliantly.

I join with the Leader of the Government in his expression of sympathy to Mr. Meighen's widow and the other members of his family.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, although the late Mr. Meighen was born in the province of Ontario and spent his early years, including his student years, in that province, nevertheless, during the fullness of his power and eminence, and during the most important part of his public career, he was a citizen of my province, Manitoba. He came to Manitoba in 1898, at the age of 24, and was called to the bar of that province in 1903. As far as I know, the late Mr. Meighen remained a member of the bar of Manitoba until the time of his death. When he began practising law he very soon came to the forefront of the lawyers in Manitoba, even though he practised in what was then a comparatively small community, namely, Portage la Prairie. I am sure that if he had remained at the bar instead of entering politics he would have become one of the leaders of the bar of this country.

As has been mentioned by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), Mr. Meighen was an outstanding debater in the Senate. I have heard it said that he was probably the greatest debater in the Parliament of Canada since Confederation. I have also heard it said, and I believe it to be true, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was probably the greatest orator since Confederation.

Mr. Meighen also was an eminent student of the classical English literature of the nineteenth century and, as is well known, he was one of the great Shakespearean scholars in Canada. Also, of course, he was throughout his life a keen student of public affairs.

There are some things that perhaps are not generally thought of in regard to the late Mr. Meighen. He was a warm-hearted friend, and although a fighter to the finish he nevertheless had a kindly feeling toward his opponents. For instance, I know it is a fact that he and one of his, shall I say, chief detractors or opponents, the late J. W. Dafoe, always remained good friends. I understand also that in the great days in the Senate when Mr. Meighen was leader on one side and Mr. Dandurand, another great Canadian, was the leader on the other side, despite the cut and thrust of debate they remained throughout warm and close personal friends.

If I were asked what was Mr. Meighen's greatest task within Canada, within our own borders, I would say that it consisted in the completion of the amalgamation of the bankrupt railways of Canada in the years 1917 to 1920, which became the Canadian National Railways system. To my mind, the successful achievement of that task was just as essential for national survival as was the winning of the war, in which we were engaged in those years.

Also, if I were asked what was his greatest achievement in other fields, I would say that it was his strong and successful stand against renewal of the Anglo-Japanese alliance at the Imperial Conference of 1921. I think there is no doubt that the stand he took at the time change the course of history of the world, certainly up to the attack on Pearl Harbour.

Mr. Meighen was the only resident of Manitoba who has become a Prime Minister of Canada, and in his death my province has suffered the loss of one who was by all odds its most distinguished citizen. I join with others in expressing sympathy to his widow and family.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, as one who sat for many years on the opposite side of the House of Commons from the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, and as one who rarely shared his political views, perhaps I should be permitted to say that, after a long career in politics, I consider he was the greatest parliamentarian of my day. He was perhaps not the greatest orator. There was nothing of the demagogue, nothing of the backslapping politician, about Arthur Meighen. He sought perhaps not so much to persuade as to convince by sheer power of of reasoning. His was a brilliant mind; he could analyse any matter of policy or any other question that was put before the house, in the shortest possible time and deal with it concisively and powerfully.

Since we occasionally reminisce here, perhaps I might be allowed to refer briefly to what I thought then and still think was an extraordinary feat. During the election campaign of 1921 Mr. Meighen was touring the country, and among other places visited the city of Quebec, the constituency which I then represented. In that constituency and throughout at least all that section of the province of Quebec feelings were running extremely high against Mr. Meighen on account of his connection with certain legislation which was not popular in the province at that time. There was a very large meeting in the drill hall in Quebec City. I would say that 75 per cent of the audience understood hardly any English, if any at all. Two or three speakers who had taken the hustings previously to Mr. Meighen were to all intents and purposes howled down. They were unable to finish their speeches. Mr. Meighen rose and addressed himself to that audience, which, as I said, was composed mostly of people who barely understood the English language. He held their attention by sheer force of character and the strength of his personality. He answered interruptions, he quelled those who jeered at him. There was no attempt at great eloquence—it would not have been understood. Here was a man entirely surrounded by opponents, fighting back and giving as good as he got whenever he was interrupted, with wit and strength, fearless as could be, overwhelming his opponents and overawing that crowd which could easily have degenerated into a mob. When, after three-quarters of an hour, he finished a most eloquent speech, the audience was listening to him with almost religious attention. That he did not receive the votes of the people in that audience is not a matter of account, but that he was able by that which was in himself, his inner courage, to stand before such an audience and talk to them in that way was a feat such as has not, in my day at any rate, been repeated in Canada.

Arthur Meighen was distant in many ways, but he had human feelings, and those of us who got to know him outside the halls of Parliament came to admire, respect and esteem him. I am glad to have been one of those.

(Translation):

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I should like to speak French on this occasion. I know that I will not be as readily understood, but I feel it is my duty to speak in the language of the province of Quebec.

Before making my own observations on the late Mr. Meighen, I wish to congratulate the honourable senators who have already spoken in praise of that great statesman.

Honourable colleagues, I would like to draw your attention especially to the speech which has just been delivered by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). His speech did not surprise me. I spoke with him and I know the high esteem in which he held the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen because of his righteousness. I know how much regard the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) had for that man of sterling character, endowed with an indomitable will, that man who was equalled by some but surpassed by none.

I support that testimony of one of Mr. Meighen's former political opponents, a testimony which I would have been proud to give myself although I could never have been as eloquent as my honourable colleague, and I know that his words will be well received by the province of Quebec even though the latter did not always give to that great politician the confidence he deserved.

As far as I am concerned, I was a member of the party which he represented in such a dignified manner. I was a candidate in 1911 and again in 1930. I was defeated on the issue which was referred to by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) and which we can call by its own name, now that it has become a dead issue: conscription.

As a sequel to the remarks of the honourable senators who spoke before me, I can state that it was that issue which prevented Canada from taking full advantage of the talents with which Senator Meighen, the former leader of the Conservative party, was endowed, of his great resources and, consequently, of all the things which Canada could have received but did not receive at that time.

He was a pioneer. Mr. Meighen did not consider as true or reasonable the policy which was advocated in the province of Quebec mostly by eminent and sincere men, the policy which really consisted in contending that one can declare war on a powerful enemy and say to him: "Listen, gentlemen, we are declaring war on you, but we are truly a remarkable country. We are declaring war but we will wage war only with volunteers and if, at any time, we do not have enough volunteers and cannot keep up our defence, while we are still at war, well then, you had better go back home!" That is really what the following statement amounted to: "We are declaring war, but only those who volunteer will go to war, so that when we run short of soldiers, you had better go away."

If I am expressing myself in rather forthright terms I wish to apologize. But 46 years and 21 years have now passed since those memorable events: minds have broadened, the mistakes that were made then would not be repeated today. The world has now taken cognizance of itself in all its parts. We know immediately what is happening elsewhere and we know that we can no longer challenge other peoples and even less declare war upon powerful empires, such as the German empire was at the time, without being ready to wage war. At the present time, with the constant danger of war hanging over our heads, we know that it is no longer possible to declare war and to stay comfortably at home, to declare war in Europe but to order mobilization to defend our territory only. We know full well that, even if we do not declare war, at any moment, at any time, a bolt can come from the blue, directed from any corner of the earth.

That is why I pay tribute to all the members of this honourable house. I am not insinuating that such thoughts remain in men's minds to this day. What we should do is to think it over before declaring war because, once it is declared, there can be no quibbling as to the means to be resorted to. If we want to escape extermination, we shall constantly have to do everything in our power to be ready to defend ourselves adequately; otherwise, we are courting defeat.

I hope I will be excused for having spoken as I have, but I do want to pay tribute to this man who, like many others today, was a true patriot, a statesman who, while he may not have been perfect, was a great and noble man, to whom it never occurred that, after having declared war, it was possible to retire from the front line and risk the terrible consequence of defeat.

I want to pay tribute to the great politician who, because he was so straightforward and so direct, was accused, perhaps not without reason sometimes, of having on occasion lacked the necessary flexibility to consider the possibility of a compromise. He was too forthright to hide his thoughts, too forthright to say the contrary of his thought and, because he was ahead of his time, he gave the impression of wanting to wage war without necessity, of wanting to send young men to war and to their death without proper justification. Some people in the province of Quebec helped to deepen that impression by stating that we had no business sending our young men to war against Germany on behalf of England; in order to reinforce the statement it was even said that we had no business defending France. It was because of such opinions that the people came to believe that Mr. Meighen was a warmonger. It was even claimed publicly in the province of Quebec that he was anxious to see French Canadian blood flow.

Those statements were made, but I am not imputing them to anyone. I was very young at the time, young enough to believe some of those things for a while. But my opinion changed, quite some time ago. I could no longer believe that anyone would declare war upon his neighbour while saying to him: "Listen, if I weaken, I shall take to my heels."

Honourable senators, I have said what I wanted to say, in the name of a certain minority of French Canadians. I have had the great honour of knowing the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen and I think I can appreciate his views and his character. I also believe that I can speak for many other French Canadians who, because of their frame of mind at that time, were not fair to him. I want to speak in their name also because they were all in good faith at the time. Today, we can make amends and let me say, to the honour of my province, which I do not claim to represent, and on behalf of a great many of my fellow citizens who have not always shared his views, that we have lost a great Canadian, one of the greatest of our time. I also wish to offer to Mrs. Meighen and her children, all of whom I know, my deepest condolences and those of all the members of my family.

The Right Honourable Arthur Meighen did not accomplish what he had dreamed of doing for all Canadians, but it is comforting to hear the tributes paid to him by the honourable gentlemen of both sides of the house in such eloquent, fair and generous terms, and in particular, the moving panegyric of the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power).

(Text):

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, as one of the few members of the Senate who sat in this chamber when the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen was Leader of the Government here, I should like to say a few words at this time. I recall his amazing ability in paying tributes on an occasion when a colleague had passed away. I often recall the words he used when the late Senator Pat Burns was taken by death. He outlined Pat's early struggles and how he ultimately acquired great wealth through his packing plants and huge cattle ranches. He went on to say that Pat was a rare character who had escaped the abuse often heaped on a person who has become successful and acquired property.

I would say that this afternoon the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) delivered an oration that was most appropriate for an occasion of this kind. I am sure it was the equal of any we have heard here.

Honourable senators, along with all who have spoken I should like to convey my sympathy to the widow and family of the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity to thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for his kind words about the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, and especially for his reference to Mr. Meighen's great integrity and forthnight mind.

(Translation):

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I have no hesitation on an occasion such as this in joining with all my honourable colleagues in expressing my sympathy to the family of that great statesman the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen.

To my mind this is not the proper time to debate the political opinions of so great a Canadian citizen as the one who has just passed on. Over and above political matters and the affiliations of each member, we find the personality of the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen so well brought to light by those who spoke before me.

I have personal memories of that great citizen. While I was a student, in 1911 or 1917, I came to Ottawa hoping to find a job that would make it possible for me to study law. I had been told by the member for my district at the time, the late Roch Lanctôt, who was also the representative of my honourable friend from Mille Isles (Mr. Monette), since we are from the same community, that Mr. Meighen was in favour of nationalizing and amalgamating all government-owned railways. It may have been in 1917, and I believe my friend the honourable senator from Gulf (Mr. Power) recalls that period of Canadian politics. So I was waiting for Mr. Lanctôt to introduce me to someone who could help me with my project. While I was speaking with Mr. Lanctôt, Mr. Meighen came out of the Chamber and Mr. Lanctôt was kind enough to introduce me to him. Then Mr. Meighen said: "You have a very generous member of parliament—he is willing to sell the C.N.R. for one dollar!" And at the time Mr. Lanctôt contended that nationalizing the railways was a bad policy. I might add that, to a certain extent, if the Canadian National Railways had been sold for one dollar Canada would have saved millions of dollars. But that is beside the point.

In 1917 I had the privilege of coming here to the press gallery and hearing the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen speak with forceful persuasion, self-assurance and all the other great qualities of one of the most brilliant parliamentarians I have known. Having heard him, I asked Mr. Lanctôt what he thought of Mr. Meighen and he said that he was one of the greatest debaters in the Parliament of Canada. He recognized as I did that only the eloquence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier could rise above Mr. Meighen's.

Therefore, I join with the previous speakers who have expressed so eloquently their sympathy to that great man's family.

However, before I resume my seat, I would like to ask my distinguished colleague and compatriot from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) if he could not when he revises his speech, try to alter slightly the opinion he has just expressed, namely, that he met with opposition on the conscription issue.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Who? Senator Meighen or myself?

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: The honourable senator from Mille Isles just said that he was a candidate at two elections and that a campaign was waged against him on the conscription issue. I would be most happy if my learned colleague could rectify that statement, since I am sure that that is not what he meant. However, let me finish; my learned colleague will then be able to set me right if I have misunderstood his statement.

In 1911 the honourable senator from Mille Isles was a candidate against Roch Lanctôt, who was Member of Parliament at that time, and, if my memory serves me well, the honourable senator from Mille Isles presented himself under the nationalist ticket and the conscription issue did not come up at all at that election. When he was a candidate against me, in 1930, the war had been over for twelve years and the main issue of the campaign was the question of New Zealand butter. Therefore, I would ask him to set the record straight in regard to his statement concerning the attitude he took during the elections in which he participated.

Before I conclude, I would like to ask the Senate's forgiveness for introducing that topic on so solemn an occasion, but since I am the one who waged a political campaign against my distinguished colleague from Mille Isles, I felt it was my duty to enable him to correct any mistake he may have made.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, I will be brief. I do not think my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dupuis) interpreted my statements correctly.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: That is the purport of your statements.

Hon. Mr. Monette: No. I meant that the campaign was waged in the province of Quebec and that I was a candidate at that election. However, I did not impute to my opponent the statements he claims I made. I do not wish to go into that subject at this time because I feel that it is out of place. However, in reply to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dupuis), it was not my intention to imply, and I do not think I did, that in 1930 a campaign was waged against me and that I was defeated on the conscription issue, still less in 1911. I spoke of a general campaign; I do not think things would be handled the same way today.

(Text):

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Report of the National Film Board of Canada, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 20(2) of the National Film Act, Chapter 185, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. J. J. Connolly (Ottawa West), Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-79, respecting the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: If honourable senators will permit me I will make a few remarks on this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Has there been a motion for third reading?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What I have to say has to do with the report.

I rise to protest against our receiving a measure of this importance so late in the session. The report of the committee I concur in. There was nothing else we could do but report the bill without amendment. It is not practicable at this stage of our session to try to improve the bill, to add anything to it or take anything away from it. Now, that is not right. We should have had considerable time for discussion and perhaps improvement of this measure. Our reporting of it is not to be understood to mean that we approve it in every word, either what is there or what is not there. We reported it because we could not do anything else.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is there a motion for third reading?

The Hon. the Speaker: Not yet.

Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I would like to make a few remarks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion for third reading should be made and then debate can follow.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Was I not in order in speaking? I thought the motion was to adopt the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: I try not to make rulings having retroactive effect. The honourable senator has spoken. Another honourable senator wishes to speak, but before we hear him there should be a motion for third reading.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Perhaps before the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) speaks he will permit me to say a few words. I do not wish to speak first if he would like to precede me.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate all those who have taken part in this debate. I thought we had an excellent debate last night.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There was not unanimity. In fact, on two occasions there were strong expressions of differences of opinion between honourable members. However, I think we would all support the phrase that is attributed to Voltaire:

I disagree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

It is quite in order that honourable senators should disagree with one another and express their disagreement. In the past such disagreement has not always been between members on different sides of the house. On the contrary, there has frequently been open disagreement between those of us who claim allegiance to the same political party. I think that is all to the good, especially in this house.

This measure is entitled "An Act for the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms," and the short title is the "Canadian Bill of Rights". All I can say, honourable senators, is that I wish its provisions were as all-inclusive as its grandiose name suggests.

I wish to express my agreement with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) in his objection to the lateness with which this bill has been presented to this house. It was also objected to last night in strong terms by the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson). I think the three of us are expressing the view of most honourable senators that the bill was introduced too late for us to give it proper consideration.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The bill was introduced into the Commons on the first of July, some 35 days ago.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will come to that point in a moment. I think the bill was worth all the debate it provoked in the 35 days that it was in the other house, but it certainly was entitled to debate in this house for more than two days.

Honourable senators will recall that the first bill along these lines was introduced into Parliament by the Prime Minister in September 1958. That first effort was withdrawn. In September 1959, in an appearance before the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association at Vancouver—at which some honourable members were present—the Prime Minister stated:

> It is my intention to have the measure to provide for a Bill of Rights introduced early in the next session of Parliament.

That is, early in the present session of Parliament.

In spite of this undertaking and in spite of the well-known fact—and I understand this is very reliable information—that the bill was drawn up and in proper form to be presented a very short time after Parliament met, which was in January, its introduction was delayed until July 1, in order to take advantage of the celebration of our national holiday. Now, honourable senators, while I have no quarrel with the general object of associating the Bill of Rights with our country's birthday, it seems to me it would have been much better to follow a course of action which would have allowed for introduction of the bill not necessarily on the date suggested by the honourable member for Sunbury (Hon. Mr. McGrand), but on a date early enough to permit proclamation of the bill on July 1. There was plenty of time to have taken that procedure. But of course this is only another example of the confusion and uncertainty resulting from the introduction of bills in this house very late in the session.

As was mentioned a moment ago by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), the Bill of Rights was introduced in the House of Commons on July 1. It was debated there for a long time; then it went to committee, where it was further debated and where at least 20 witnesses were heard. The consideration of basic rights and freedoms is surely one of the most important tasks to which Parliament can address itself, and I am discouraged to think that the Senate could not give this bill the consideration it deserved.

Honourable senators may say that the bill was considered in committee this morning and we had ample opportunity of discussing the bill. Discussing the bill with whom? Discussing the bill with the Minister of Justice. I might say the minister was very courteous, he was not rushed for time, he gave careful consideration to all the questions that were asked of him and I do not think we could have asked any more from the minister this morning. I believe I can say on behalf of all the committee that we appreciated his attendance there while others were asking for him in the house, and we were delighted with the manner in which he discussed this bill with us. But I regret, honourable senators, that we did not have time to call witnesses. Oh, you might say, witnesses were called before the committee of the other house and we could have read the reports. But we could not question the witnesses, as we have the right to do. Had we done so, we might have received further suggestions to make to the Government.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask the honourable senator a question? What witness could we have called to the Senate committee meeting who knew more about the subject-matter of this bill than does the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck)?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I quite agree with my friend's observation. I cannot think of anyone, either in this house or outside it, who knows more about the subject-matter of this bill than the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, but there are other people who have different views.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They would only confuse the issue.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: They might confuse my honourable friend, but unfortunately I did not have an opportunity of being confused. We did not have an opportunity of hearing their views expressed. My honourable friend may be completely satisfied with his knowledge of this whole question; indeed, he may feel that he is so well informed that he does not need to hear anybody else's views. I am not in that position, and there are other honourable senators who feel the same way. This is a big and an important question for the people of Canada. Surely there is not a member of this house who would say he or she knows all about the subject and does not want to hear the views of anyone else. But we have had to accept the situation and get along without the expression of views of other people.

I compliment the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), upon his splendid speech of last evening, and upon the study that he has made of this question and the wonderful leadership he gave when the matter was before a special committee of the Senate in 1950. I feel also that this bill might have been introduced in the Senate. I need not remind honourable senators that this house has in its membership men and women of great distinction and learning, who are better equipped perhaps than any other group in Canada to give non-partisan and scrupulously careful thought to a measure of this nature. I remind you again of the contribution made by the deliberations of the committee in 1950. Therefore, I say that this bill might well have been introduced in the Senate; and, since it was not to be introduced here, it at least could have been considered by a joint committee of the two houses. That was the original intention of the Prime Minister, but there seemed to be an about-face in his attitude with regard to the method by which this bill would be handled.

Honourable senators may recall that at the meeting of the Canadian Bar Association in Vancouver last year the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 94 of the proceedings of the association, that he intended to have the measure to provide for a bill of rights introduced early in the current session. That was not carried out. He also said he intended—and these are his exact words: " . . . to have it submitted to a committee of both houses of Parliament". In other words, he intended to refer it to a joint committee. I feel that had the Prime Minister's original intentions been carried out the legislation might well have been in better form than it is. Nevertheless, honourable senators, I can assure you—and you will not be surprised—that in spite of my criticisms I intend to give general support to the bill, although with reservations.

There have been a great many criticisms of the bill, most of which were made in the other house and in the special committee of that house. I do not propose to take the time of the Senate to review all that took place in that house and in the committee. Witnesses appeared before the committee in response to hasty summonses. In fact, I feel this whole matter has been rushed through Parliament much too quickly.

Professor Frank Scott, of the Faculty of Law of McGill University, said that he would rather have no bill of rights at all than the proposed bill. My friends will say that view was expressed before the amendments were passed. Let me point out that a great many of the amendments were made at the suggestion of the Opposition in the other place. However, I am not sure that the amendments entirely meet the proposals put forward by Professor Scott. In any event, we all agree that Professor Scott is an eminent and a well-informed person. He said that he " . . . feared that the bill, if passed now, would delay acceptance of something better later."

The Canadian Bar Association has had grave misgivings about this proposed bill of rights. I do not intend to read what was said at the association's meetings, nor do I intend to refer to the brief that the association presented to the special committee of the other house. Those of us who are lawyers, and others, know that the bill does not meet with the views of members of the bar association.

The Canadian Labour Congress has deep misgivings about this bill. The president, Mr. Claude Jodoin, who spoke for that association with its membership of more than a million persons across Canada, said that a bill of rights ought to be binding upon both the federal Government and the provinces. He hesitated to think that we would consider going on with it as a federal undertaking.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Surely the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) knows the answer to that question. It is a simple proposition.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know the answer to it, but I will come to the question later.

Mr. Jodoin felt, and he is entitled to his opinion—and, I say, he is speaking for a million people across Canada—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He is speaking for an association which is made up of that vast number of persons.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He is giving his own opinion.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He was at least speaking for the executive of that organization composed as it is of a million or more people across Canada and, I repeat, he is entitled to his opinion. He said that this bill should have been held back until a bill could have been brought forward that would have been inclusive for all Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: He is entitled to his opinion, but he is not entitled to force that opinion on Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not saying he is forcing his opinion on Parliament. I say he is entitled to his own opinion.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And the bar association is entitled to its opinion, as are Professor Scott and others who have expressed themselves. But we can only read what these people have said; we cannot question them. I do not agree that this is the way in which the Senate should carry on its business.

Honourable senators, the general background of the desirability of legislation in the field of human rights has been discussed for many years by thoughtful Canadians, some of whom take the view, as do strong supporters of this bill, that it is desirable to lay down in the law a redefinition of existing rights in declaratory form. Others have suggested that basic rights and fundamental freedoms under the British system of government are better protected by the courts. They say it is unwise to legislate in this field, as any statement of rights, in statutory form, may tend to limit the interpretation of the courts in the event that new rights, not necessarily anticipated at the time of the enactment of the statute, may arise and give the courts room, whether they wish to have that room or not, to state that because some proposition urged as a right is not in a bill of rights, therefore it is not a right.

Some lawyers may be inclined to feel that our rights are better protected by courts than by the legislature. Whether or not this is so is perhaps an arguable proposition, but it is a question on which there is such a wide difference of opinion that I feel it could have been discussed at some length in our committee had it come to us earlier in the session. We should have had an opportunity of bringing the proponents of these various ideas before our committee to find out on what grounds they based their opinions.

There is another proposition which has not been particularly canvassed. I refer to the view that a declaratory enactment of this kind is of little use for the reason that the establishment and protection of rights may depend much more on the support and intent of the populace in general, and on their representatives in either the legislative, executive or judicial fields. In brief, this position can perhaps be summarized by pointing out that many an autocratic and undemocratic state has written into its constitution a bill of rights which has had little or no effect in terms of the protection of the society concerned because of a lack of the democratic process in itself.

In discussing this particular suggestion, I need only remind honourable senators that one of the best examples of a bill of rights in existence today—under another name, of course—is that which can be found in the constitution of the U.S.S.R.; and it would be ridiculous to suggest that the populace of that country enjoys, in any degree, parallel rights and liberties to those enjoyed by citizens of Canada, which to date has not got a bill of rights. But that is no reason, in my opinion, for saying that Canada should not have a bill of rights. Indeed, we should have one and we should write into our law a definition of existing liberties.

Honourable senators, I do think it is desirable to pass a bill of rights in the most comprehensive nature possible, and this brings me for a moment to a consideration of the special problem with which we are faced in Canada, operating, as we do, under a federal system. I take it that we in this chamber for the most part agree with my proposition that it is in the best interests of our country that we should have a bill of rights, but I think we would all be happier to pass one whose application was not restricted to matters under the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament. Surely everyone will agree that it would be much more desirable in a constitutional system such as ours, in which responsibilities are divided between federal and provincial jurisdiction, to have an overall bill of rights, acceded to by both the federal Government and the provinces, which would cover the broad general field of rights much more adequately than this present enactment can possibly do. In that regard I would refer honourable senators to an article appearing in the Canadian Bar Review of March 1959, written by Professor Bora Laskin of the University of Toronto.

Honourable senators, it may be that until a short time ago it would have been difficult to obtain the consent of the provinces to an appropriate amendment to the British North America Act, and when this bill was conceived it might have been thought impossible to get that consent; but events of recent weeks have surely proved that there is now a very good chance of agreement being reached. I wonder why this bill was not held up until such agreement could have been reached. I am fearful that it may be felt that, as we will have a federal bill of rights, we should not proceed to enact a general bill of rights for the whole country. The attitude might be, "Let us see how it works for a while." There may be some merit in that and I am not really too severe in my criticism, but I would have been happier had the bill been held up for at least one year to ascertain whether something could not have been accomplished in respect to a joint measure.

Honourable senators will have followed with interest the proceedings of the recent Dominion-Provincial Conference and the important contribution made to those deliberations by the Honourable Jean Lesage, Premier of the province of Quebec. I would like to draw attention once more to an exceedingly significant declaration made by Mr. Lesage on the opening day of that conference, when he dealt with the general question of the protection of rights. Mr. Lesage had this to say:

(Translation):

We have noted that the federal Parliament is at present studying a Bill of Rights which we certainly hope does not extend beyond the field of federal jurisdiction. It seems to us that we have here a magnificent opportunity to discuss this problem and to see if we cannot agree on a joint declaration of human rights that could be embedded in our Constitution.

The Government of the Province of Quebec therefore proposes that this important problem be discussed immediately in a preliminary manner in order to ascertain whether it should be studied more thoroughly when the conference resumes its meetings.

(Text):

Subsequently, honourable senators, other provinces made suggestions along similar lines and it seems to me that if ever in the past there was a doubt about the possibility of a joint approach to this problem, significant steps have been taken toward the resolution of those doubts. I feel, therefore, that the bill before us can stand considerable improvement. I am not at all sure that we are accomplishing much in passing it in its present limited form, but I have every reason to hope that a far broader enactment can be passed after consultation with the provinces. To put it in a nutshell, I suggest that the enactment of Bill C-79, restricted as it is to matters under federal jurisdiction, will not advance the cause of human rights substantially. The real advance will come after joint action with the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I hope your optimism is justified.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I sincerely hope so. I have great confidence this can come about, but I doubt the efficacy of the present measure. Nevertheless, honourable senators, I cannot see that it will do much harm...

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I know ten thousand people in western Canada who don't know the difference between the federal jurisdiction and the provincial jurisdiction, who would agree with this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, it is no compliment to my colleague's ten thousand friends if they do not know the difference between the federal and the provincial jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I mean they do not pay any attention to that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He is speaking of the Conservatives.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There may be ten thousand of them there—I don't know—but no doubt he was speaking for them.

Honourable senators, I repeat that I cannot see that the bill will do much harm, and to the extent that it provides encouragement for thought in this type of legislation, I welcome it, restricted though it may be.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, let me state at the outset that I intend to support this bill, although I wish to make a few observations on third reading. I was unable to speak yesterday on second reading, and I feel that some things need to be added to the record.

I associate myself with the criticisms expressed by honourable senators concerning the timetabling which brought this important piece of legislation to us at this late stage of the session. I too believe that a better bill might have resulted if the timetabling had been different, generally, to allow more time for study and debate, and if the members of this house had had either an opportunity to serve on a joint committee to study the measure or an opportunity to hear and to question witnesses in the Senate committee. It is very important to keep this new legislation in its proper and true perspective. In other words, we should address ourselves, and also call upon the Canadian people to address themselves, to the important question of what the bill is and what it is not; or, to put it in other words, what the bill does and what it does not do.

I might begin by pointing out that during committee consideration the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) asked this general but substantive question, which I paraphrase, I hope correctly: What new rights and what new freedoms are being provided or guaranteed in the present bill? The Minister of Justice, in effect, said "None". I am stressing this, not in a sense of criticism, but to make abundantly clear that this bill confers no new rights on Canadians—no rights which they do not now possess through common law or by virtue of existing federal statutes, as now confirmed by long-established and accepted jurisprudence. In other words, in so far as rights and freedoms can be guaranteed at all, without placing limitations on the powers of Parliament itself, these rights and freedoms already exist.

Now, in this context I am addressing myself to clause 1, and reminding honourable senators of the contribution of the honourable senator from Sunbury (Hon. Mr. McGrand). May I point out that clause 1 lists the rights and freedoms. The four freedoms listed are: freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and association, and freedom of the press. These are not absolute freedoms. Each of those freedoms is limited, to some extent. For example, my freedom of speech is limited by laws dealing with libel and defamation. My freedom of assembly is restricted by that part of the Criminal Code which deals with unlawful assembly. While I am talking about freedom of assembly, I regret that the word "peaceable" was not inserted in that particular context.

Now, because these freedoms which are enumerated are not absolutes, and because they have the normative effect of a declaration—a "beacon", I believe, was the term used in this house—I would respectfully suggest that this listing of freedoms might have sounded far better as a declaration if it had specified an additional freedom, namely the freedom to work.

It is also clear, honourable senators, that Parliament can dilute any of these rights and freedoms that are listed in clause 1. Parliament can abrogate them because its power is supreme, subject to certain limitations, as we all know, such as the powers conferred on provincial legislatures, the present inability of this Parliament to amend all parts of the Constitution, guarantee of two languages, the obligation to meet annually and to dissolve every five years, and so on. But it is clear to me, as a lay person, that Parliament can take away or further curtail any one or more of the rights and freedoms by another bill, just as it has the power to pass the present and mainly declaratory statute.

In order to keep this part of the perspective clear, namely, what the bill is not, I must place on the record these two additional observations. First, I want to read section 18 of the Interpretation Act, which applies to this bill:

> Every act shall be so construed as to reserve to Parliament the power of repealing or amending it and of revoking, restricting or modifying any power, privilege or advantage thereby vested in or granted to any person, whenever such repeal, amendment, revocation, restriction or modification is deemed by Parliament to be required for the public good.

Secondly, paragraph 5 of clause 6, to be found on page 4 of the bill, does provide the Government and Parliament with a very useful instrument to kind of write themselves out of the binding strictures—if there are any really effectively binding—of the proposed new statute. It is true that is for emergency purposes only, but the statutory provisions are there for all to read.

I want to note at this stage that in committee the minister stated or strongly intimated—and I believe all honourable senators were pleased to hear it—that the Government intends to revise the War Measures Act probably at the next session of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Only to consider it.

Hon. Mr. Wall: All right, only to consider it. I want to place that on the record in that context.

Now, having established that no new rights or new freedoms are being provided by clause 1 of the bill, it is well, I repeat, to keep in proper perspective, and to compare, if you will, clause 2 of the bill which deals with the construction and the application of every law of Canada so as not to abrogate, abridge, infringe, or authorize the abrogation, abridgement or infringement of, any of the already existing rights and freedoms herein recognized and declared, and they are specified in paragraphs (a) to (g) of clause 1—it is well for us to compare these with section 15 of the Interpretation Act, plus the jurisprudence which has been built upon it. Section 15 of the act reads:

> 15. Every act and every provision and enactment thereof, shall be deemed remedial, whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of any thing that Parliament deems to be for the public good, or to prevent or punish the doing of any thing that it deems contrary to the public good; and shall accordingly receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the act and of such provision or enactment, according to its true intent, meaning and spirit.

Now clause 2 of the bill, subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g) simply spell out what it is that the federal acts are to be construed not to transgress, and what these paragraphs do is simply clarify by greater specification what is already included in section 15 of the Interpretation Act. Time alone, honourable senators, will tell how effective this additional specification will be.

Nothing in these specifications is new. I venture to make the observation that, acting under section 15 of the Interpretation Act, no court would ever construe a federal act in such a way as to deny detained persons any one of these rights: arbitrary detention, imprisonment or exile. Incidentally, in that context I wonder how we could exile a person if nobody wanted to receive him. Where would we send him? To Antarctica? I continue the recital of these rights: the imposition of cruel or unusual treatment or punishment; to deprive a person who has been arrested or detained of the right to be informed promptly of the reason for his arrest or detention, and so on.

Then, honourable senators, one last right, which was inserted by way of an amendment, simply says that a Canadian, if he cannot understand the language in which the proceedings of a tribunal or board is being conducted has a right to have the assistance of an interpreter. I remember a very dear friend of mine, who served as an interpreter in the courts many years ago when I was very young, told me that the courts always insisted that there be an interpreter in cases where the defendant does not know the language of the proceedings. For what else, honourable senators, does established jurisprudence do now than interpret federal statutes in this remedial sense, with the judges instructed by this section to give the federal laws such fair, large, and liberal construction and interpretation as will best meet the general public good?

Having said this, I wish to say that with the many important amendments that have been added to the present bill, and with the declaratory preamble to which I personally would have preferred to add a few words to make clear that the rights and freedoms spelled out in clause 1 are inherent, inalienable and God-given—for greater clarity and for more dramatic declaratory effect and to make more abundantly clear that these rights and freedoms exist prior to the state —I believe that the bill as we now have it is considerably better than it was in its original stages and that it will have an educational and normative effect of considerable value. Perhaps its benefits will be greater than we presently can visualize, and it may well become a kind of beacon in the years that lie ahead.

Certainly, I agree with the Honourable the Minister of Justice that it will have the effect of making all legislators, all members of the executive and all administrators at the federal level keep a watchful eye on the sections of this very important act as they draft, amend or administer legislation. I agree most heartily with the minister, who told us in committee that he believed that no subsequent Parliament would dare to introduce legislation which would expressly operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, as provided in the opening lines of clause 2, for then there would be a public awareness and a consciousness and an ensuing public and legislative or parliamentary debate into which no sensible Government would wish to enter.

I believe that this very important legislation will do much, and I commend and compliment the Right Honourable the Prime Minister for initiating, sponsoring and guiding this bill through the other house. My compliments extend to all who have helped to strengthen the bill and eventually pass it in this form, and especially I would like to express my appreciation to the honourable the minister who appeared before our committee. My congratulations also go to my colleague from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) who sponsored this bill with such eloquent fervour and conviction.

There are some aspects of this legislation which might be further refined and strengthened, and I humbly and respectfully suggest that perhaps at some future session the Senate might well undertake this very interesting and worth-while task. I am expressing a hope which may prove to be quite realistic.

There are some who feel, and I confess that I belong to this school of thought, that with more study perhaps a way could have been found to make this an act to amend the British North America Act with respect to the recognition and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. This course we could have taken by virtue of our powers for amending the Constitution with respect to federal matters alone. I point out that clause 5(3) of this bill says that Part I will extend only to matters coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

In this context it would have been possible for us to have passed an act to amend the Constitution with respect to these rights and freedoms. But I recognize too that this may have been prevented further pending—and I hope immediately pending—developments regarding the projected constitutional conference and probable federal-provincial bill of rights.

This bill gives an interesting lead to the provinces, some of which have led the federal Government in this respect. This lead, or substantiation of the lead, that has already been initiated by some provinces with respect to a bill of rights may bring fruitful results in a joint bill of rights imbedded in the Constitution, or in additional provinces passing their own bill of rights.

On balance, recognizing what the bill does do and what it does not do, I believe all honourable senators heartily support this most important legislative project as a significant declaration and formulation of rights which Canadians everywhere and at all times should enjoy. We all hope that it will do what the average Canadian has been led to believe it can do for him, slowly and evermore surely, but always in the direction of the better safeguarding, and the evermore effective refinement of our democratic freedoms, rights and their attendant societal obligations.

In many ways this is a memorable day, and we are all pleased that we have been privileged to participate in making our humble contribution to it.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, as a layman, may I be allowed to express my opinion on this question, in the light of the discussion and arguments exchanged concerning this bill?

This morning in committee, the gentleman from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) addressed the following question to the Minister of Justice: "Are there any rights in this act which are not protected by ordinary laws?" The minister's answer was in the negative.

Did not our colleague from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) claim that it was nothing more than a consolidation?

Hon. Mr. Monette: I did say that it was a consolidation of the human rights recognized in the bill and that those rights should be preserved. A machinery is thereby set up to allow Parliament to watch over these rights constantly so that none of them are lost.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: That is it. Yesterday, the senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) told us that before any laws ages ago by God himself, to Moses, on the mountain, the charter of human duties. The senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) also mentioned that this bill should have included the words "human duties". If every one observed the great charter of appeared to protect human rights and liberties, a first charter had been handed down human duties there might perhaps be no necessity for a bill of human rights, because each one of us, knowing his duty, would respect his neighbours' rights, and the world would become a much better place in which to live. Unfortunately, when such respect is lacking and when each man claims to have rights but no duties, there is no law in the whole world that could make men behave with righteousness.

Well, it seems to me that the first thing to do would have been to draw up a bill of duties to complement the bill of rights. That would have made the world of tomorrow better than that of today.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Would the honourable gentleman allow me a question? Did I understand him to say that before passing laws to regulate the conduct of a country's citizens, their rights and obligations, we should have waited until all men who are descended from Adam—and, as such, imperfect—had become perfect enough to recognize those rights too?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: That is exactly what we should do. Man should be told of his duties and then of his rights. But if nobody is willing to fulfil his duty, what is going to happen? One flows from the other; they cannot be separated.

I intended to make a digression but as the senator from Blaine-Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) is not here, I shall abstain.

(Text):

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, I do not intend to detain the house more than a few minutes.

First, may I say with all frankness that this is one bill about which I cannot work up any enthusiasm. I have long been of the opinion that it is simply a declaration of the rights and freedoms that we already have and have enjoyed throughout our lifetime. As far as I am personally concerned, I know of no additional rights or freedoms that I require that I do not already have and enjoy.

May I say that I admire the frankness and honesty of the minister in discussing this problem with us this morning. I had some questions to ask of him, and he gave straightforward answers. I expressed my own opinion that the bill gave us no new rights, no new freedoms, that it was a declaration of what we already have.

I put this simple question to the minister: What additional rights or freedoms will we have under this bill that we do not already have? His answer was straightforward: None. That is the answer I expected him to give me, and it confirmed my suspicions in the matter, that we have the same rights and freedoms now, before the bill is passed, that we shall have after it is passed.

The committee of the House of Commons held lengthy discussions on this bill and I have read a considerable portion of their reports. The bill received unanimous approval in the house on second reading, and throughout the committee proceedings the principle of the bill seemed to meet with general approval but its details were questioned by a good many witnesses. Nevertheless, the bill will be enacted and we shall have to wait and see how it operates, whether for our benefit or otherwise, but I imagine the courts will be called upon to determine certain things contained in it.

I have nothing more to say and I thank honourable members for having listened to my few remarks.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I wish to take this opportunity to make a few brief comments. In the first place, I think in all fairness we should acknowledge the validity of the criticism made by some honourable members as to the late arrival of this bill in the Senate. This is indeed unfortunate, for it would have been preferable had we been able to devote more time to it. As I said earlier this afternoon, the bill received second reading in the House of Commons on July 2 and I was certainly hopeful all along that it would be sent here without too much delay.

During the last ten to fifteen years we have all read a great deal about the subject-matter of human rights and fundamental freedoms, but for myself I have never seen a finer document on the subject than the report of the Senate's Special Committee of 1950 on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. That document contained all the common sense and idealism in regard to this subject that one could wish for. I do not feel that enough credit has been given to the report of that committee, and particularly to the quality of the work and the tremendous energy and wisdom put into it by its chairman, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). It is one of my regrets that we did not have more time to devote to this general subject-matter and especially that we did not have an opportunity in committee to read and reread the report of that special committee. Many of us have read newspaper accounts of the evidence given before the House of Commons committee on this bill and we have read the verbatim reports of the committee discussions, but I do want to emphasize that practically all phases of the subject-matter were covered thoroughly in the 1950 Senate Committee's report to which I have referred. If the committee of the House of Commons had only accepted as its witness the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity instead of most of the other witnesses that came before it, this bill would have been sent over here much sooner than it was.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And probably in much better form.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I agree; and I want to repeat that we just do not recognize to the full what a great champion of human rights and fundamental freedoms we have in this house in the honourable senator to whom I have just referred.

I want to thank the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) for the remarks he made in regard to the work of our Prime Minister in respect to this subject-matter, beginning as it did many years ago and culminating with the third reading of this bill in the Canadian Senate today. And so, once again, I want to pay tribute—and I think I am speaking on behalf of all honourable senators—to the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) for the outstanding work he has done in this important cause down through the years.

In conclusion, may I say that I hope we are all aware that the passing of this bill by the Senate today is a landmark in the legislative history of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Thorvaldson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Pearson, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Golding: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Did I hear "On division"?

Hon. Mr. Golding: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed on division.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, August 6, 1960, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John M. MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-89, to amend the Judges Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is a very short one and will take only a few moments to explain. Its purpose is to authorize salary for one additional judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Prince Edward Island, and thereby increase the number of judges from three to four. Apparently the necessary legislation was passed by the Legislature of that province a good many years ago. For some time the situation has been somewhat awkward in that province, in that appeals from a single judge could be heard by only two judges, and if for any reason one of them was unable to act the appeal had to be heard by a single judge. The situation was perhaps aggravated in 1956, when an amendment was passed to the Supreme Court Act which in effect meant that appeals without special leave were limited to cases where the amount involved was over $10,000.

I understand that the province also proposes to abolish the position of Probate Judge and to transfer probate jurisdiction to the Supreme Court.

The additional appointment provided for by this bill, I understand, has been requested for some time by the Law Society of Prince Edward Island and has been formally requested by the Government of that province.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: I move the third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, that completes all of the legislation we expect to receive at this session of Parliament. The only business we shall have to deal with before prorogation will be interim supply, or perhaps final supply, and supplementary estimates. I have made all possible inquiries and I feel we shall be on the safe side if the house adjourns now, to resume tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Before the house adjourns, perhaps I should call the attention of the leader to the fact that there are still four inquiries on the Order Paper yet to be answered. It might be possible to obtain the answers to those inquiries.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was referring to legislation only. These inquiries have been forwarded to the appropriate quarters. I am not sure how long it will take to get the answers, but if it should happen that the answers are not obtainable before Parliament prorogues I shall see that they are forwarded at the earliest possible moment thereafter to the honourable senators who asked the questions.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Saturday, August 6, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Copy of an exchange of notes with respect to the Canadian Government's proposals regarding the provision of wheat flour for emergency stockpiling in the United Kingdom, dated 5th August, 1960, between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Canada. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Monday next, August 8, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Has the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) given up all hope of prorogation this evening?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In answer to the inquiry of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) I should like to say that I remained here in the building last night until after the proceedings of the other place were concluded, at which time I thought there was a possibility of prorogation this evening, but when I arrived here at 9 o'clock this morning and made further inquiries I was told, on the best authority that I was able to obtain, that there is no hope of prorogation today and we shall not receive either an interim or the final supply bill today. There is no alternative, therefore, but to adjourn for the weekend. I regret that under the circumstances that is the only report I can make now.

Motion agreed to.

NOVA SCOTIA

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO REDUCE COSTS OF ELECTRICAL ENERGY

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson, pursuant to notice, asked the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to make a statement on the progress that is being made under the special program of assistance by the federal Government to reduce the costs of electrical energy to industry in the province of Nova Scotia.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the information requested, which I ask leave to place on Hansard:

Statement of payments made to August 1, 1960, under authority of The Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act to the Province of Nova Scotia

	Thermal Plants	Transmission Facilities	Coal Subventions	Total
Fiscal year 1958-59	—	—	$ 1,130,776.25	$ 1,130,776.25
Fiscal year 1959-60	2,489,972.87	2,962,643.92	1,025,966.90	6,478,583.69
Fiscal year 1960-61 (to Aug. 1-60 incl.)	98,547.70	277,989.67	143,425.82	519,963.19
	$ 2,588,520.57	$ 3,240,633.59	$ 2,300,168.97	$ 8,129,323.13

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I thank my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for his prompt answer to my inquiry.

BANK OF CANADA

OFFICE PREMISES

Hon. A. Neil McLean inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

If a Crown company, namely, the Bank of Canada, has adopted a policy of erecting office buildings far beyond their needs and retaining real estate agents to rent many thousands of feet of office space in competition with private investors in office buildings.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

The Bank of Canada requires special facilities in the form of vaults which make it impossible to rent suitable premises.

The bank's premises also need to be located reasonably close to the main offices of chartered banks and financial houses. Land values in central locations are such that it would not be economic for the bank to erect a building of one or two storeys which would be sufficient only to meet the bank's present requirements as well as those of the Industrial Development Bank. The Board of Directors of the bank has therefore decided where appropriate to erect a building with a certain amount of rentable space to help carry the costs necessitated by the location and other special factors and to allow for future growth needs.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE ARTHUR MEIGHEN

TRIBUTES—ADDRESS ON THE SENATE PRINTED IN HANSARD AND MINUTES

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I ask the indulgence of honourable senators at this time to enable me to share in the distinguished tributes which were made here yesterday in memory of the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen. Owing to a slight indisposition I was unable, with great regret, to take my seat in the house yesterday. My offering now will be brief and will assume mainly the form of a suggestion.

I had the privilege of sitting in this chamber for a great deal of the time that the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen was leader here, and before that I had known him for many years. He was the last of a group of distinguished friends who graduated in the same year from the University of Toronto, with many of whom I also had very friendly relations although I was junior in years to most of them. Mr. Meighen's death marks the passing of that distinguished group, whose names I am sure would be known to most people here. While I could never have been rated as an intimate follower of his I always had a profound admiration of his talents, which were reflected so eloquently in the records of both houses of Parliament for 35 years.

The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) yesterday expressed warm and eloquent appreciation of Mr. Meighen's parliamentary record which, like his own, was established over a long period of distinguished service.

As was said by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), most of Mr. Meighen's speeches in Parliament and outside have been preserved in the volume entitled Unrevised and Unrepented. But, in in my opinion, there is one of what might be called his occasional addresses which was not included in that book and which was one of the most valuable contributions that he made during his career. It was an address on the Senate of Canada delivered before the Canadian Club in Montreal in 1937, and edited and reproduced for publication in the Queen's Quarterly magazine, of Kingston, in the summer of that same year.

Typed copies of that address have already been distributed through the Clerk of this house to many senators, but I am going to ask honourable senators to consent to having that address embodied in the Senate Hansard of today as a fitting memorial to one of our great leaders, and in addition as a service to our present and future members who from time to time may have need or occasion to consult it in connection with discussions relating to the status and functions of this branch of Parliament.

It is not too much to say that that address of Mr. Meighen represents the most classic and most authoritative statement upon the status and working operations of the Senate that can be found anywhere. One may conclude by saying it also suggests that the ten years that he spent as a leader in this chamber represented one of the most important and valuable periods in his long career of public service; a period which, in the interest of Canada, might well have been continued beyond the span of ten years.

With leave of the Senate, I move that the address of the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen on the Canadian Senate, made before the Canadian Club of Montreal, as it appeared in the Queen's Quarterly, Summer 1937, be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I have the indulgence of the chamber for a few moments in connection with this motion?

I have been one who since my appointment to this chamber has been most interested in trying to fix in my own mind, and perhaps to help fix in the minds of some portion of the public, the place occupied by a second chamber in our parliamentary system. For instructional purposes my source material, and I think the source material of all of us who are bound to be interested in this field, is in the work of men who have performed in this theatre with distinction. Certainly the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen is foremost among them.

The motion by the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) to place on the records of this house today a speech by the late Mr. Meighen is not only a fitting memorial to the work done here by Mr. Meighen, but it will provide an invaluable document for use in this honourable Senate. I would go further, and express my hope that today's Hansard may have wide circulation throughout the country.

Let us agree at once, the position of this chamber before public opinion is not what it should be. Perhaps that may be because of something that Mr. Meighen at one time pointed out—a phrase which may indeed be contained in the address to which my honourable friend has referred—that this chamber is "not a theatre, but a workshop". That is what it must be, if it is to fulfil the function for which it was intended.

Honourable senators, I welcome more than I can say the proposal which has been made by the honourable senior senator from Ottawa.

Motion agreed to.

For text of address, see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1249-53.

VISIT TO UPPER CHAMBERS IN EUROPE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I ask the indulgence of the house on this occasion to deal with a further matter? As you know, I have been out of the country for about five weeks, during which time I had a unique and interesting trip which I frankly confess was a holiday trip. It involved no business at any time.

During my tour I visited six Senate houses in four different countries. That may seem a remarkable statement. Let me explain. In the northwest corner of the Forum Romanum there are the remains of the old Senate house which has been described as and perhaps truly is, the Grandmother of Parliaments. It was the place where Cicero hurled his quo usque at Catiline. It was the place where mighty Caesar fell. It was the place to which Augustus came down from the Palatine just across the Sacra Via where indeed, he was born, to lay the foundation of an empire which lived for 500 years in the west and 1,500 years in the east.

But what is also interesting there is the Italian Senate in Rome, where I had the distinctive privilege of attending a sitting. The chamber had before it a motion to allow a debate on uprisings which had taken place in various parts of Italy over the previous weekend. The motion, which had come from the Left, was very strongly worded. However the President of the chamber, Mr. Speaker, ruled it was most important, particularly toward the end of the current session, that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture be dealt with. He declared the motion out of order and said the question could not be debated. The Left quietly stood up, bowed, and as quietly stole away—much as we would do in deference to you, Sir.

There is but one Senate building that I know of in France, and I had the opportunity of seeing it. As many senators may know, it is in the Luxembourg Palace. I came to the building unheralded, unsung, and certainly unannounced, on the day after the French national holiday. That chamber, like the Chamber of Deputies, was adjourned for the weekend. I was told there were no visitors allowed. However, I asked if it made any difference that a member of the Senate of Canada would like to see the building. It made all the difference in the world, and I was given a complete tour of this very fine chamber with its magnificant library, where the names of many distinguished men who sat there, such as Victor Hugo and others, are preserved on plaques on the desks where they did their work.

I was later shown through the chambers of the deputy leaders. Marie de Medicis, in her day, was responsible for the decoration of these rooms, and they are most magnificent.

Shortly after that I visited the Irish Senate in Dublin, on the day the Dáil debated and approved the proposal to send a detachment of troops to the Belgian Congo on behalf of the United Nations. The members of the Senate all agreed that it was another great day for the Irish. They said it was most fitting that such a contribution should be made by a nation like Ireland, peace-loving —in the official sense—a small nation, but one which has sent men and women to all parts of the world, a nation notably without imperialistic ambition. It was most interesting to hear the debate conducted there that day. The Irish chamber is much smaller than our own. Most of the membership is elective, although ten or eleven appointments are made by the President of the country. Its members speak in the same detached way as we for the most part do here.

Quite by accident I stumbled upon a Senate chamber called the House of Lords which was in use in Ireland at the time of Grattan's Parliament, before 1800, and has been preserved intact. It is in the building now occupied as headquarters by the Bank of Ireland, and is a most magnificent and beautifully proportioned room. They have two beautiful tapestries, protected by linen coverings. I greatly admired them, and when I asked what they depicted I was told that one portrayed the siege of Londonderry and the other, the Battle of the Boyne, whereupon I said, "You can re-cover them any time now."

The other Senate chamber I had an opportunity to visit was the British House of Lords, where through the kindness of the Lord Chancellor, Viscount Kilmuir, I was able to sit on the floor of the house with my wife just outside the bar. It was an exceedingly interesting day. It was the first time that the Earl of Home entered the house as Foreign Secretary. It was also the day that Lord Hailsham first sat in the House of Lords as Leader of the Government. It was also the day upon which the Lords debated the new Constitution to be given Nigeria. It brought to my mind the reports of the debates of 1866 or 1867 when the Lords considered a similar measure in respect of this country. During the course of the debate the Leader of the Opposition, Viscount Alexander of Hillsborough, and indeed Lord Rea, Leader of the Liberals, commended the Government most highly on its appointment of the Earl of Home as Foreign Secretary. They referred to his magnificent qualities of mind and heart and to his capacity for his new and onerous post. I think, however, it was Lord Rea who produced the bon mot of the day when he said that the Lords were saying "ave atque vale"—"ave" to the new leader of the Lords and "vale" to the old, which, as he said, might be loosely translated "Hailsham and farewell".

The Senate adjourned until Monday, August 8, 1960, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See pp. 1246-7)

THE CANADIAN SENATE

By

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE ARTHUR MEIGHEN

(Reprinted from the Queen's Quarterly, Summer 1937, vol. 44, pp. 152-163, being a revision of a speech Mr. Meighen had made before the Canadian Club in Montreal.)

There are a few countries—and no major country—to which there is not a second chamber. They are all constituted somewhat differently, but the reason for each is based on the same considerations. In England, in France, in Germany, and in the United States, in Italy and even in Spain, the restraint of a second chamber has been deemed wise by those who founded the constitutions of those respective nations.

In this Dominion, away back beyond the period of its birth as a Confederation, our provinces had second chambers known as Legislative Councils. These were thought necessary because the responsibilities of those individual provinces were then akin to the responsibilities of nations. After we became one, the Legislative Councils of the several provinces fell away until now there is but one left—that in the Province of Quebec. The explanation is first that, after the surrender of the larger section of their sovereignties, questions that still remained for the deliberations of Legislative Assemblies were such as could be dealt with by one body alone; but more importantly for this reason—that the limited functions of these Assemblies with the residue of powers now remaining were not so great as to fail to afford quite ample time for their careful and mature consideration and discharge.

In this Dominion it was the Fathers of Confederation who saw to it that there should be an upper house, and they defined its place briefly but clearly at the Conference of Quebec which was held two years before Confederation was accomplished. It was there determined that this chamber should be established, that it should be a nominative chamber, and that its composition should be based upon the territorial principle and should not be in proportion to population.

There are criticisms and always will be that the nominative system, with appointments exercisable by the Crown on the advice of the Government of the day, is foreign to the spirit of democracy and to the genius of our people. In that connection it is well to recall that for eleven years prior to Confederation the nominative system had been abolished and the elective system adopted in the Legislative Council of Upper Canada; therefore, it was after eleven years' experience of the nominative system that the latter was chosen by the great men of that time. Later will be discussed the propriety of that choice and the unwisdom of changing it now.

It will be kept in mind that the composition of the Senate was put—on a motion, it so happened, of a statesman from New Brunswick—wholly on the basis of territory; the three Maritime Provinces who were coming in then to obtain twenty-four of the seventy-two seats; Lower Canada, Quebec, to have twenty-four, and Ontario twenty-four. Later the West was added and, irrespective of population, the West was given twenty-four seats as well. This is emphasized so that it may be clear that there were special responsibilities attaching to that Joint Parliamentary Trustee, called the Senate. Our Maritime Provinces declined to enter Confederation if the control of Canada's parliament was to be wholly in the hands of a majority, because under those circumstances they felt their views would be swept out of effect by the larger populations of our mid-continent areas. Lower Canada also insisted on the territorial principle, and that principle is still the basis of the Senate's composition. From this it is clear that there devolves upon the Upper House a duty of having special and peculiar regard to minority and sectional rights in Canada, to see that the majority exercising its full force in the representative chamber, where population controls, is not permitted to ride over the proper rights and privileges of minorities. Or to put the point in another way: the Senate has the particular duty of standing guard over the Constitution as it applies to all sections of Canada, of making certain that provincial rights are maintained inviolate, that the relationship which the British North America Act established between the provinces on the one hand and the Dominion on the other hand is respected, whatever may be for the time being the arbitrary action of a bare majority.

When one passes from this phase, there is no special function in the sphere of legislation which the Senate possesses which is not equally shared by the Commons of Canada.

Sir George Ross tried to impress, in a book published twenty years ago, that Senators were particularly vested with an obligation to hold inviolate responsible government in the Dominion—inviolate as against Imperial domination. There is very little substance in such a claim, for the reason that when you have a battle won for nearly a hundred years, you will do better to consider it won and not be continually trying to win it over again. Neither the Senate nor the Commons has in practical affairs any very heavy obligation in respect of responsible government.

The Senate is not a representative chamber; its personnel does not spring directly from the spoken word of the people; yet it is as much a chamber of the people as is the House of Commons. Its members do not come from any special class or caste, as in some lands; they come from the ranks of the people; they have the popular sympathies and popular interests at heart. The Senate was constituted by the people through the Fathers of Confederation, and ratified by the vote of the country because, in the belief not just of a few but of this whole Dominion, it was in their interests that there should be a review of Commons legislation, with special protection of minority, sectional and territorial rights. Of all these delegated duties the Senate is the Trustee; most of them it shares with the Commons and has responsibility just as direct as has that House, and it should make it a duty hour by hour to live up to the full standards which were doubtless in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation and which today are as vital to Canada as they were at that time.

What are the limitations of the Senate?

There are those who say: "You should be very chary about reversing the will of the elective chamber; in fact, if you do so more than once or twice, you should prepare for your demise. You are not elected and, therefore, you have not the same rank and status as those who are elected." There probably was reason for not making the Upper House in this country elective. If it were so, then the Senate of Canada would become in large degree a reflection of the Lower Chamber, and it would be necessary for members so to conduct themselves, each in his own groove, so as to ensure, first of all, the favourable opinion of that special constituency from which the member comes, and secondly, the dependable co-operation and support of the party to which he belonged and does belong. If those considerations are to be in the minds of members of the Senate, they never can discharge properly the functions which are theirs, nor can the Senate in these circumstances be more than a mere replica of the Commons, and its performance will became a wasteful repetition of the debates and controversies which take place in the other chamber.

In a word, we might as well have two Houses of Commons, one of which would be redundant, as to have an elective Senate.

Some say there should be other reforms; for example, that members of the Senate should be chosen by different bodies. These ideas have been debated for many years, but beyond the suggestion that a limit of age might be applied, there is not any which has made very much appeal, or which did not carry within its compass a danger of detracting from the Senate's value in the discharge of those special powers, functions and duties for which that body was created.

If I were asked what the Senate should do in respect of measures; by what outstanding, clear and easily understood principles it should be guided, this would be the answer.

Where there is a mandate for legislation which comes before the Senate; where such legislation was clearly discussed and placed on the platform of the successful party in an election, then only in most exceptional circumstances should there be any attempt or desire on the part of the Upper House to refuse to implement a mandate by its concurring imprimatur. No one, however, who has thought the subject out can say under no circumstances should legislation coming to the Senate from the Commons, though clearly supported by a popular mandate in an election, fail of support in the Second Chamber. It has been plainly and tersely enunciated by Sir John Macdonald, by George Brown and by Maritime statesmen, as well as by Taché of Quebec, that the Senate's duty, or one of its duties is to see not only that wise legislation, having for its purpose nothing but the public good, is allowed, irrespective of mandate, to become law, but in certain conceivable events to see to it as well that the public of Canada, which may at one election have endorsed extraordinary proposals, has opportunity, if such proposals are of a particularly dangerous or revolutionary character, to think the subject over again; in a word, that the Senate may, under certain circumstances, be allowed to appeal from the electorate of yesterday to the electorate of tomorrow.

It may be asked whether there is any chance of such a contingency arising. Cast your eyes westward, where under the influence of drought and depression, and under the influence of other urgings not usually brought to bear on public matters, the Province of Alberta departed in the last provincial contest from long-tries and tested principles of finance, to embrace what is undoubtedly a mere mirage. If such a step were taken by this whole Dominion under similar circumstances, I wonder if a chance to think the subject over once more, and to make certain that the judgment of the electorate of Canada was a deliberate judgment and one to be sustained, should not as a bounden duty be granted. Such a contingency may not arise; but it never can be laid down as a rigid rule that even a mandate is universally obligatory upon the Upper Chamber or that it would be its duty in all circumstances to acquiesce blindly in any measure. It is enough to emphasize the fact that there is authority behind a popular mandate which the Senate never can ignore, and that only under very special circumstances should the chamber, even for purposes only of delay, fail to comply with an electoral judgment.

The great mass of legislation has, however, no relation to any special dictum of the people in an electoral contest at all. The great mass of legislation springs from circumstances of the hour. Something has to be done, in the judgment of the administration, and the administration works out its solution in such a manner as it deems fit, and submits that solution to Parliament. There is no question of a mandate at all in the case of at least ninety-eight per cent of the measures which come to either House. In respect of legislation of this kind, I would not go so far as to aver that the Senate should in all cases have no regard to the wishes of the Commons, but only to its own viewpoint. If it is a subject naturally within the purview of government, something to do with administration; if it is a reflection in a bill of what the Government should be and feels itself best suited to handle, and if it does not affect positive principle going to the root of our institution, then I would say that even though it was thought a better way might be devised, even though it was thought that on a balance of merits the Bill failed, it would be wiser for the Senate, if it can, after making such remedial amendments as will improve the measure, to allow the Government to have its way.

Many a time I have considered, and a majority in our house have agreed, that some problem demanding solution was being timidly shelved by referring it to a Royal Commission—a favoured practice of our time; whereas it would be much better if the matter were wrestled with by the Government itself and some method found by the administration to meet the necessities of the hour. Though in such a case much can be said for a reference back, the Senate does not take that course. It tries to put the legislation into the best form it can for giving effect to what the Government wants done; it tries to make it, as far as care can make it, practical, proper, and fair to all concerned, and then it lets the legislation pass.

As regards private measures, steps have been taken lately to encourage introduction of these in the Senate; indeed, great advantages are now obtained by their introduction there, and the effect is likely to be that private measures are largely going to be initiated in the Upper House. This course is, I think, in the public interest.

There may be reforms in other lines that could be effected. It would be of advantage if Ministers, whose seats are in the House of Commons—though they do not necessarily have to be—had access to the Senate, if desired, when legislation coming from the department of the Minister desiring access is under review in our Chamber. If entrance to the Upper Chamber were possible on the part of Ministers, it would add to the efficiency and harmonious working of our system of parliamentary government.

There is another development which has come in recent years. There are more bills both public and private being initiated in the Upper Chamber than at any time in the past. It is a too prevalent opinion that the proper place for initiation of legislation is in the Commons alone. Doubtless the larger volume must always be first submitted there, and especially legislation which is the outcome of an election mandate. But there is an increasing body of public business which has to be dealt with session by session, which does not go to even the fringe of politics, but has to do, say, with the regulation of commerce and finance; such things, for instance, as amendments to insurance laws; the establishment, for the first time in this Dominion, of shipping laws; and matters of that sort. Such subjects can be presented first to the Senate, and now most frequently are so presented. There is thus given to these measures a care which, on account of pressure of time and other complications, the Commons is incapable of giving. There is only one class of legislation which, in point of law, must be initiated in the lower chamber, and that is such as has to do with taxation of the people, or such as creates a charge on the Treasury. It is not certain, indeed, that the limitation in law is even as restricted as it has been thus expressed. However, whether it be so circumscribed or not, that Senate would be very ill-advised which thought to encroach upon the territory which I have just defined. Far better that subjects which fall within the domain of taxation and charges upon the Treasury should have their initiation in the Commons, as is the case in England. Whether or not this is the law in Canada, it ought to be the practice in Canada.

The Senate is worthless if it becomes merely another Commons divided upon party lines and indulging in party debates such as are familiar in the Lower Chamber session after session. If the Senate ever permits itself to fulfil that function and that alone in the scheme of Confederation, then the sooner it is abolished the better. This pratice is not to be deprecated in the House of Commons. If we are going to have a democracy, the practice must continue. There have to be parties and party manoeuvres; there have to be conflicts and controversies innumerable in variety and wearisome in length. The great scheme of bringing sections together, letting each see the viewpoint of the other, has to be worked out in the representative chamber. Sometimes we are too impatient and critical of governments in allowing what seems inordinate time for discussion of public business. That discussion is good, but it is not the function of the Senate. Members of the Second Chamber must get away, lift their minds far from those hard-drawn lines of party, or they cannot serve their country. They have to make up their minds to give every government fair play and not to stand in the way of legislation unless they are convinced it must be defeated on its merits, and that the consequences of failure to defeat it would be serious; nor to stand stubbornly in the path of any Government unless it is brought there in their judgment to serve the ends of party by largess in this or some other part of the dominion rather than the true interests of the nation. The Senate, too, has to see to it that legislation which is initiated in the Upper House is put in the very best form possible so that it may be found to meet those real needs for which it was designed, and so that when it leaves its hands it is going to be an instrument of business and not merely a brooding place for litigation, to become, in due course, a paradise for lawyers. It is the business of the Senate as well, on receipt of a measure from the other chamber, first of all to study the principle behind it, and in every case to study it with a sympathetic mind, and, unless there is grave reason for resisting it, to devote its best efforts to improve the measure in its detail, and then to give that measure's passage its full support.

The task of the Senate in the practical working out of the business of Parliament is to see that every measure, when it passes from its hands, is a place of legislation well done. To this end our Chamber sits but a short time each day. Rarely does it sit throughout the period fixed for both Houses. It adjourns when its work is done so far as concerns the recording and explaining of decisions arrived at, and repairs to its committees, and mainly to two major committees, the one presided over by the Rt. Hon. George P. Graham and the other by Senator Frank Black of New Brunswick, for detailed study of bills. This study and review it grinds away at day by day for several hours, and often into the night. Its labours include the rearrangement, very often the recasting, and nearly always the re-expressing of Bills and resolutions—the former sometimes of enormous dimensions.

It is before these committees that the public is heard. Hearing the public—that is, all interested from any angle in the measure under review—is only one function of the Senate, but a very necessary and important function. If it makes itself a debating society, this duty, so vital if our work is to be well done, could never be discharged. It is our part to make sure that conflicting interests from every end of this country have an equal hearing, so that everyone concerned has opportunity to express his view and tell us that this or that provision is not going to work, and why. Thus, all contentions and all arguments are advanced before a bill takes its final form. This system has been developed very successfully with the full co-operation of both sides of the house, because there still are sides, though they do not stand out very strongly. This is the service the Senate has tried to render, and on this record and this general scheme of procedure it is best discharging its duty to the people of our country.

There is between the place each House should occupy in Canada a distinction fundamental and imperative. The House of Commons is and must be the forum of debate. It must be there that champions of conflicting policies meet and struggle and decide their issue. There is the arena where young ambition goes; there he enters the lists and flashes his sword in battle with his peers; it is there that leaders of public opinion, and those who aspire to lead, mount the rostrum and brave the storm, the hustle and the hurricane, the arrows of a hundred foes in front, and the scowls of critics behind; there they press on in the measure of their talents and their courage to the glittering prizes of our public life. The House of Commons is the place where West and East each finds out what the other wants; where races blend their thinking; where classes learn, or ought to learn, by contact and conflict, that they are all of the same clay and need pretty much the same laws. It is the melting pot of the nation.

The Senate has a more prosaic task. Its duty is to see that great principles upon which the dominion has reposed are carefully reflected in its Statutes, to design legislation so as to meet the realities of business, to review and temper proposals of the other house so as not unnecessarily to discourage enterprise or restrict the area of employment; to oppose the ravages of partisanship from whatever source they come, and at least to give public opinion time and opportunity to be deliberate and to be understood; to be governed not so much by emotional appeal or fleeting spasms of popular fancy, but to listen to the accountant, the operator, the employer, the employee and the unemployed, and to make sure that legislation when finally passed will work with fairness and facility. The Second Chamber should be a workshop and not a theatre. For this function the Senate was created, and this function it must with thoroughness and fearlessness perform.

There are things, though, which it cannot do. Some time ago a prominent and popular Canadian, a man of opposite political association to myself, said: "I am thankful in these days for the Senate! No matter what wild and extreme radicalism may sweep the country, the Senate will stand firm; it will save the ship." This surely is worth saying and remembering:—The forces of wild and extreme radicalism must be met right out among the ranks of our people, in their houses and meeting places—there the power of reason and common sense must be applied, the lesson of long experience must be taught, or nothing will save the ship. Surely we have learned from tragedies in other lands that the tide of a mad, militant and persistent majority never can be stemmed. It must not become a majority. If in this country the trade of politicians is to be what has been too often, to fatten on the fruits of class hatred, class envy, class animosity, to reap a harvest in votes by fanning these dangerous fires, then do not depend on the Senate or anything else to hold in place the foundations of democracy, because it may be too late. There are those who believe that dire things can happen even in the presence of fair and equitable laws. It certainly is not too much to say that they can more easily take place when territory is large and the distances are great, when the population derives from a multitude of races and when the forces of sanity and industry are selfishly indifferent and at the same time divided.

What the Senate can do is to devote its energy within its own sphere to making laws practical and sensible, to give the best possible chance to workers and especially to the humblest workers, to encourage the upward climber and to attach a wholesome penalty to voluntary idleness, to remember always that there is nothing so vital to the common weal as security to life and property, and to offer no countenance to dishonesty and confiscation.

THE SENATE

Monday, August 8, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Copy of the Canadian edition of the Report of the Commonwealth Education Conference, held at Oxford, England, July 15 to 28, 1959. (English and French texts).

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, August 9, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Further Supplementary Estimates (3) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961. (English and French texts).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators will remember that I told the house on Saturday last that the full legislative program for this session had been completed and disposed of in the Senate, and that the only remaining business would be supply—either an interim supply bill as well as the final appropriation bill or the final appropriation bill alone. Yesterday I thought that perhaps we would receive one or other of those bills today, but I am now obliged to inform the house that there is no likelihood of this. However, it is hoped we shall have information late tonight and that tomorrow we shall know definitely just when an appropriation bill will be before us.

Honourable senators, in the circumstances I am obliged to move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

August 10 - 1960

THE SENATE

Wednesday, August 10, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

BILLS PASSED BY COMMONS WITHOUT AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to return certain divorce bills and to acquaint the Senate that these bills had been passed by the Commons without amendment.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say a word at this time? I regret that the chairman of the Senate Standing Commitee on Divorce, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), is not present to hear this announcement. I am sure that he and all the other faithful members of the committee will be pleased to know that these bills have been passed by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Monette: After long consideration.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know how many of the bills were given lengthy consideration, but they have all been before that house for some time. I am aware of the fact that the chairman and members of the committee which dealt with the matter gave careful consideration to every application for divorce and in each instance it was only after mature consideration that a decision was reached to recommend or refuse the passage of a bill.

I am sure I can say on behalf of the honourable chairman of the Senate Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that he appreciates the support given him by the members of the committee. On behalf of the Senate, may I say that we are pleased that their efforts have not been abortive.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine tabled:

Ordinances of the Northwest Territories, assented to on July 16, 1960, as required by section 15 of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter 331, R.S. 1952.

Annual Report of the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, pursuant to section 90 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, Chapter 50 of the Statutes of 1955. (English text).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I think I can fittingly quote the old saying:

Hope springs eternal in the human breast.

There is every hope that the appropriation bill will reach us early this evening. That is the information which I received just a few moments before entering the chamber. Under these circumstances, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell, at approximately 8 o'clock this evening.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to inform you that we definitely shall receive the appropriation bill this evening—I hope within a short time. I would ask honourable senators to remain close at hand so that we may deal with the bill promptly when it arrives. In view of the fact that there will be only a limited number of printed copies of the bill available, I would suggest that honourable members bring with them into the house their copies of the supplementary estimates that were tabled and distributed some two or three weeks ago, and the further supplementary estimates that were tabled and distributed yesterday. I might add that we expect to receive the appropriation bill momentarily, perhaps within fifteen or twenty minutes.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.20 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 6

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-90, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1961.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I move that the bill be read the second time now.

Honourable senators, this bill, when it is passed, will be Appropriation Act No. 6, 1960. Previous appropriation acts passed during the session were: Appropriation Act No. 1, which granted full supply for the full supplementary estimates 1959-60. Appropriation Act No. 2, which granted interim supply for the months of April and May, in the amount of $603,488,902.52. Appropriation Act No. 3, which granted full supply for final supplementary estimates of 1959-60. Appropriation Act No. 4, which granted interim supply for the months of June and July, based on both main and supplementary estimates, in the sum of $600,946,640.92. Appropriation Act No. 5, which granted supply for further supplementary estimates for 1960-61 in connection with Chilean relief, in the sum of $1,600,000. If those items are added together it will be found that we have already voted for 1960-61 $1,206,035,543.44.

Appropriation Bill No. 6, now before us, will grant the balance of the main estimates for 1960-61, as reduced in the other place, amounting to $2,334,958,326.56, particulars of which will be found in Schedule A to the bill. It will also grant $10 million, being the balance of the supplementary estimates of $15 million that were brought before us in Appropriation Act No. 4, which included $5 million of that amount. Then the bill votes the whole of further supplementary estimates, No. 2, in the sum of $65,025,485. These items have been in the hands of honourable senators for quite some time and will be found in Schedule C to the bill. Finally, the bill votes further supplementary estimates No. 3, for $43 million, which I shall explain a little later.

That makes the total amount to be voted by this bill $2,452,983,811.56, and when this bill has been passed the grand total of estimates and supplementary estimates voted to date will be $3,659,019,355 even.

Before proceeding further I should like to say that this bill is in the same form as the final appropriation bill we passed last session, and it gives more or less detailed information with respect to all the items.

Also included in the bill is authority to borrow an additional $500 million, which, in addition to the $1 billion which the Governor in Council was authorized to borrow in the first interim bill, makes the total amount the same as last year, namely, $1,500 million.

Every year the supply bills contain new authority to borrow money for public works and general purposes of government by the issue of Canada Savings and other bonds and treasury bills. Authority granted by Parliament in recent years for these purposes was as follows:

1955-56, $1 billion
1956-57, $1.5 billion
1957-58, $1 billion
1958-59, $2 billion
1959-60, $1.5 billion

Honourable senators may also want some information as to the total statutory estimates and the total amount to be voted for the whole year. The 1960-61 estimates, as reduced in the other house, including budgetary expenditures, old age security payments and loans, is as follows.

The main estimates total $6,428,859,635. Then there are the supplementary estimates of $15 million, which I mentioned a short time ago, of which $5 million has already been voted, leaving a balance of $10 million. Further supplementary estimates, No. 1, in connection with Chilean relief, amounted to $1,600,000. Further supplementary estimates, No. 2, which were distributed some time ago, were for $65,025,485, and further supplementary estimates, No. 3, totalled $43 million. This makes a grand total of $6,553,485,120, of which $2,894,465,765 is statutory and does not have to be voted.

The remainder has to be voted, and is made up as follows: Main estimates, $3,534,393,870, and the supplementary estimates which I have mentioned—$15 million, $1,600,000, $65,025,485, and $43 million—making a total of $3,659,019,355. The last figure is the total amount to be voted in this fiscal year.

Honourable senators, before I conclude my remarks I should perhaps mention a few of the larger supplementary estimates. On page 2 of the supplementary estimates No. 2 honourable senators will see Vote 511, which has to do with the purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, $1,500,000. I also call attention to Vote 513, which has to do with the purchase and transfer of wheat flour to assist in the establishment of strategic stock piles of food supplies in member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council prescribes, $6 million.

Vote 514 is to reimburse the Agricultural Commodities Stabilization Account for canned pork donated to international relief agencies, in the sum of $2,703,559.

The biggest item in these further supplementary estimates No. 2 is the sum of $25 million to be voted, subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, for the payment of salaries, wages, and other paylist charges. I understand this has to do with the salaries of civil servants.

Vote 544, under the Department of Public Works, covers the expenditure of $4,570,000 for the purchase of and alterations to the United States Embassy building in London England. That is at the bottom of page 6. There is a further explanation in the details on page 17, where it says:

London, England—purchase of, and alterations to, American Embassy building.

There are a number of smaller items which I do not intend to deal with at this time. However, I do wish to make an explanation with respect to Vote 576, which appears in the further supplementary estimates No. 3 and has to do with agriculture. This vote will cover the payment of an amount, as a higher return for wheat used for human consumption in Canada, to western grain producers to be distributed on the following basis, namely, $1 per cultivated acre up to a maximum of 200 acres per farm in accordance with regulations of the Governor in Council, $42 million.

I might say for the information of honourable senators that some 20 farm commodities are supported under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, and wheat is not one of them. In addition, farmers who do not live in the Prairie provinces also receive freight assistance on the carriage of feed grains from the Prairie provinces to their provinces. It is the opinion of the Government, therefore, that some type of assistance is required to balance things off. In other words, the assistance must be balanced so that the wheat farmers of the Prairie provinces will be placed more or less in the same position as the farmers in the other parts of Canada who have their commodities stabilized under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Honourable senators will remember that the farmers and representatives of organizations of the Prairie provinces marched on Ottawa some little time ago and made a demand for deficiency payments for the crop years 1956-57, 1957-58 and 1958-59, as well as for the present crop year. It was estimated by the Government that if this request had been granted the total cost to the treasury would have been some $325 million. In the end the Government could not see its way clear to grant these deficiency payments, fearing this would not be the best solution and that it would tend to increase the growing of wheat by the Prairie farmers. I am told also that it would result in 35 per cent of the farmers receiving about 14 per cent of the payments and the remaining 65 per cent of the farmers receiving 86 per cent.

A suggestion made from time to time by farmers and others is that we should institute a double-price system in Canada, based on the export price at which wheat is sold to import countries and the domestic price, which would be higher and would approximately cover the amount of wheat consumed domestically in Canada. It will be remembered that in 1958 we voted some $41 million or $41½ million for the purpose of making acreage payments so as to give the farmers, who thought that this double-price system would be of help to them, something that would tend to take care of the price-cost squeeze in which they found themselves.

Honourable senators, I am of the opinion that the present payment will be of great help to the wheat farmers of the Prairie provinces. At the present time a farmer is required to obtain a quota book before he can sell any of his grain at the local elevator to the Canadian Wheat Board. In this quota book the cultivated acreage of his farm is shown, and he is only allowed to market his wheat as and when quotas are set up. Usually there is a quota of 300 bushels, called the initial quota, for each farm to start with. After that the farmer will be allowed to market one bushel per specified acre, and later on another bushel per specified acre, until by the end of the crop year he has marketed six or seven bushels per specified acre. As I have said, 225,000 farmers have quota books, on the average, but 125,000 of these farmers have cultivated acreage of less than 300 acres; they are small farmers. It will be seen that these 125,000 farmers will get over one-half of these acreage payments when they are made. It is the opinion of the Government, and I am also of the same opinion, that it is fairer to handle the matter in this way rather than by granting deficiency payments, which would increase the production of wheat and would not help the small farmer at all but would give the larger farmers, who make up 65 per cent of the total number, 86 per cent of the money.

Honourable senators, a short time ago we thought we were going to have a very large crop in the Prairie provinces. I regret to report that we have had from four to six weeks of very warm weather, with high winds and practically no rain. Crops have deteriorated to such an extent that in some areas where the land is light the crops have been cut for feed, and in other places the heads have not filled properly, and it is only in the very heavy land that there will be anything more than what we call an average crop. It is my opinion that this acreage payment will be of great help to those farmers.

Another item in supplementary estimates No. 3 has to do with the purchase of flour to be given to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine refugees in the Near East as a contribution to World Refugee Year. This is another vote of $1 million, making the total of the supplementary estimates No. 3, $43 million.

Honourable senators, that is a brief explanation of the bill, and I submit these remarks for your consideration.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I hesitated to rise immediately, because from the remarks of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) I was under the impression that his followers were going to spend the rest of the night discussing this $42 million item. According to a news report I heard over the radio this morning the members of the other house spent all day yesterday discussing this item, and the fact that the Leader of the Government devoted at least half of his time this evening to the item seemed to indicate that a number of his followers would add further explanation. Why so long was taken on this item, I do not know. I would remind the leader that an explanation never explains why an explanation is necessary. We are discussing billions and billions of dollars, and he has devoted all of his time to this—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, no. I spent only a few minutes on this item.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I timed my honourable friend, and half his time was taken up with this one item of $42 million.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I don't agree.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is a very important item.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of course it is a very important item, but surely there are other very important items before us. However, we are not going to hear a great deal more on this subject, and he may have deemed his explanation was necessary. I am sure we are all grateful to him for the information he has given us on that one item. I can only say that I am sorry he did not give an equally full explanation of the rest of the expenditures.

The Leader of the Government rolled off references to billions of dollars as if he were talking of thousands of dollars, or should I say hundreds of thousands of dollars. He spoke as if it were an every-day occurrence to spend a billion dollars. That is a huge sum of money. However, do honourable senators realize that tonight we are approving the expenditure of over $7 billion? This is the largest expenditure by any Government in Canada in either wartime or peacetime. It is an all-time high so far as expenditure is concerned. I know my friends are not smiling at what I say, because they are aware, as I am sure the country is aware, that every dollar of that $7 billion has to be raised by taxation, which means that there are more taxes being paid into the federal Government today than ever in the history of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We are a growing country, too.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friends may ask, "How do you arrive at the amount of $7 billion?" Well, let me say this first. I am not going to take up much time of the house in discussing this bill at this late hour of this late day in the session, but I should like to put on record the fact that expenditures in Canada have gone up continuously annually since this Government came into office.

In 1956-57 the total expenditures by the Government of Canada were $4,769 million. In 1957-58 they went up from $4,700 million to $5,008 million. In 1958-59 the increase was another half a billion dollars to $5,508 million. In 1959-60 expenditures by the Government rose to a figure of $5,6449 million.

My friend said to me a minute ago that this is a growing country. It is a growing country, but I am afraid the per capita indebtedness is far outgrowing the increase in population of this country.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What about the gross national product?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This year the total expenditure has increased by almost $1 billion. That is rapid growth, certainly, in expenditure, to $6,553 million. A moment ago I said that our expenditures this year will be over $7 billion. We must take into consideration that old age security payments for this year will amount to $590 million, so the total expenditure by the Government this year including the old age security payments will amount to $7,143 million.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If the honourable senator will refer to the statement which I read, he will see that the total amount included budgetary expenditures, old age security payments and loans, at $6,553 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am afraid my friend has not included old age security pension payments. If he will look at the estimates which were tabled in this house for the year 1961, he will see that in addition to the payments set forth in that book there is the sum of $590 million, which is not included in the amount of $6,553 million which he has given.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I beg to differ with the honourable gentleman. The old age security payments are included in that amount. I have it definitely stated here to that effect, that the main estimates include budgetary expenditures, old age security payments and loans. The total is $6,428 million-odd, and it includes the old age pension payments, which are statutory.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am afraid my friend is mistaken, but he can check his figures and I will check mine. But for the sake of argument let us accept his figures. We are still faced with the fact that the expenditures this year are increased by $1 billion. Can my friend contradict that statement? Indeed he cannot. I say more money is being spent this year than ever before in the history of Canada. I go further and say that the percentage of increase in expenditures this year is greater than has ever taken place in Canada.

Honourable senators, these are statements of fact which should give all of us concern, and certainly should give the Government some concern. I know we are a growing country, but we cannot let our expenditures get too far ahead of us. We cannot let our expenditures get so far ahead of us that a burden of debt will hang as a millstone on generations to come. We do not want to get into that position, but I fear we are drifting toward it. I mention these matters to give us at least something to ponder.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Will the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) permit me one question? He mentioned a few minutes ago that there were two prices for wheat, one the domestic price and one the export price. Can he tell me whether the domestic price is higher or lower than that for export?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: At the present time the prices are the same.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I thought we paid a higher domestic price.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, so many commendatory remarks have been made about our new colleague the senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacDonald), in welcoming him to this chamber, that anything I might add would be superfluous. Nevertheless, I am happy to express my agreement with all that has been said in that regard. Actually, I do not think my honourable friend could be other than deserving of this commendation and be a worthy son of a very distinguished father. The Honourable Joseph MacDonald from North Sydney was a member of the Nova Scotia Government and sat in the Legislature of that province when my honourable friend from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) and I were there, many years ago. He was one of nature's noblemen and a friend of everyone. I am happy to see his son is a worthy descendant.

In one respect, however, the new senator from Cape Breton has been a grevious disappointment to me. In his political days he was known as a highly efficient organizer, on which account his political friends were grateful and his political opponents were fearful. But it was not only in politics that he displayed good organizing ability. Like all true Cape Bretoners, he took an intense interest in the Gaelic Mod. I knew that his legislative duties on this occasion would make it impossible for him to attend that annual gathering. But I was sure that with his well-known efficiency and organization he would keep his finger carefully on the whole situation. You will appreciate my amazement, honourable senators, when I tell you that I read in a Nova Scotia newspaper that when the pipers were marching to greet the guest, a very distinguished Scotsman, they were led by no less than a Murphy.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The good old Irish.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I don't know how my honourable friend from Cape Breton will explain this. My only theory as to the cause of the lapse is that he has been associating too much with the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) who sits near him in this chamber. The sole remedy I can suggest is that he take a turn next session on this side of the house. I would guarantee to shield him from the contamination of the Connollys and the Powers, and if, in due course, he liked it well enough here I would be happy to extend to him a most cordial invitation to stay.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Surely the honourable senator is not suggesting we adopt a third language in this chamber, namely, the Gaelic.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, just before I went overseas, in June, I drew the attention of the Senate to a matter in which I was deeply interested, international trade, and I asked honourable senators to participate in the discussion. I did not ask for support of my inquiry, but I hoped it would not be ignored. Honourable senators, it was not ignored. Some twelve or fifteen senators participated with varying views. I want to thank them for their interest. I want to thank also those who would have spoken had circumstances not made it impossible, and I am grateful to all honourable members of the Senate who gave the matter such careful attention.

This is one of those matters in which there may be, in my belief, revolutionary changes in the not far distant future. One honourable senator said it is well that the matter be thoroughly discussed from all its angles, and with this view I am heartily in accord.

I do not intend at the moment to direct attention to the statistics that have assumed such fanastic proportions, because I am not at home with them and I leave them to others who are more conversant wtih them, but I do want to direct attention to one matter that is indirectly associated with the spending of these huge sums of money that we have been referring to tonight, and that is the question of how we can earn them. In that respect, and not allied to my inquiry, I want to refer particularly to the amazing extent in which public opinion in the United States has travelled recently. It has travelled far and fast. I need not say to this house that I have no inside sources of information, but from my own deductions and from what I have heard I am convinced that as soon as the next presidential elections are over, since both parties have publicly obligated themselves in their platforms to take a lead in organizing economic unity in the western world, the United States will move to form an Atlantic common market in which the two groups in Europe and the United States will be members and which Canada and the Latin American countries of South America will be invited to join. It goes without saying that that would undoubtedly have a tremendous effect on the trade of all countries concerned.

When I made my few remarks on the inquiry which I presented to this house in June I never dreamt that opinion in the United States would travel so far and so fast. Yet, on the other hand, when I began to think of it, I was not surprised, for in recent months, and indeed years, there has been a very large body of growing opinion to the effect that the United States would have to offer more leadership to the Western world in that respect because of the economic offensive which the Soviet Union is waging now and waging on the very doorstep of the United States.

The honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) recently told us about the interest displayed by American businessmen in this respect. This did not surprise me at all. Honourable senators will remember that it was the manufacturers of Britain and continental Europe who took the lead in forming common markets to get into larger trading areas. Under existing circumstances it is utterly impossible for manufacturers to produce economically in small areas and their only hope is to move into larger ones. That is what some 300 million Europeans have done by dividing into two groups. Without having any inside information I am suggesting that the United States is about to consider a similar move.

Honourable senators, I should like to support the remarks of the honourable senator from St. John's West with one specific instance. I met once, and have since corresponded with, a very prominent American businessman, Mr. William L. Clayton, who was at one time Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs in, I believe, the Truman and the Roosevelt administrations. He is the head of the largest cotton brokerage firm in the United States, namely, Anderson, Clayton and Company. He recently appeared as a witness before the Houston Committee on Foreign Relations, which has been considering the absolute necessity of the United States' concerning itself about the growing domination of Russia in these undeveloped areas. He referred particularly to what had happened in Europe under the common market and the Six and Seven, and I would like to quote an excerpt from his speech as reported in the Houston Post:

> Thus, there are 13 of the most important countries in Western Europe now committed to bring about free trade within their respective groups in ten to 12 years.
>
> The deplorable aspect of the situation is that these countries are not working together as one group, but as two groups. If these two groups continue on their diverging ways, the very important trade relations which their respective countries now have with each other will be seriously impaired. Moreover, the unity of the West will be gravely threatened.
>
> Leadership of the highest order is needed to bridge the differences between the Six and the Seven.
>
> Only the United States is in position to furnish that leadership, and the United States can only do it by joining in a movement to make a free trade area out of the 20 OEEC countries, including the United States and Canada, now associate members of the OEEC. With a provision in the agreement inviting other free world countries to join, we would then have built the foundation for economic unity throughout the free world.
>
> There is probably no other way to obtain such unity, and without it, there is grave danger that most of the 100 poorer countries of the world will eventually drift into the communist camp.

It is apparent to anyone following United States press reports that the American State Department has been showing a growing interest and concern in this matter. Honourable senators will recall that a year ago, realizing the differences of opinion and the possibility of open trade warfare between the two groups in Europe, the American Under Secretary of State went to Europe and set in motion a new organization to attempt to bridge both sides of the Atlantic.

As reported in Parliament just a few days ago, a new organization has been brought into being in which Canada and the United States are to be members. What the result will be remains to be seen, but those movements are all in the same direction. I think the most dramatic thing occurred in the conventions of the two political parties in the United States. The Democratic party did not surprise me much, because both Senator Kennedy and Senator Johnson had been very positive in their support of movements and action along this line. The most influential man outside of those two candidates in the Democratic party is undoubtedly Adlai Stevenson, who is mentioned as possibly the next Secretary of State, should the Democrats win. He has been repeatedly campaigning for closer economic relations between the Atlantic community, and probably largely as the result of his action, and of that of others who thought as he did, the Democratic platform includes a specific plank directed to that question:

> To our friends and associates in the Atlantic Community: We propose a broader partnership that goes beyhond our common fears, to recognize the depth and sweep of our common political, economic, and cultural interests.

I do not think there is the slightest doubt as to what the viewpoint of the Democratic party will be. However, honourable senators, I suggest that the most dramatic changes took place in the Republican party. The best way I can refer to it is to quote a dispatch sent by the veteran newsman James Reston to the New York Times before the Republican convention concluded:

> So much has been said this weekend about the disagreements between Vice President Nixon and Governor Rockefeller that very little attention has been paid to one very remarkable item of agreement in their Saturday morning communiqué. This was their support of the idea that the United States should take the lead promptly in transforming the present system of defence alliances in the North Atlantic and the Western Hemisphere into "confederations".
>
> "The Vice President and I reached agreement", Governor Rockefeller's statement said, "on the following specific and basic positions on foreign policy.
>
> "The vital need of our foreign policy is new political creativity—leading and inspiring the formation in all great regions of the free world, of confederations, large enough and strong enough to meet modern problems and challenges.
>
> "We should promptly lead toward the formation of such confederations in the North Atlantic community and in the Western Hemisphere."

And then Reston's own comments:

> It was this remarkable paragraph, among others, that sent the Conservative Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona into orbit around the Chicago Tribune tower here yesterday, and helped create a tumult within the divided foreign policy subcommittee of the Republican National Convention.

Nixon adhered to the policies that he and Rockefeller agreed on, and after a bitter battle in committee the Rockefeller proposals were agreed to, and incorporated in the platform.

I say that because it was most dramatic, and actually it has added a new word to our North American language, the word "Goldwater". From now on that word will mean a personification of economic nationalism, an idea of one's living only for himself, entirely unmindful of what is happening in the rest of the world. The word will indicate that, no matter in how high regard Senator Goldwater personally may be held.

Throughout both conventions there was growing evidence of the impatience of the American public because of the fact that the United States has seemed to be always trailing the Soviet Union and always having to respond to Soviet initiative. I suggest that in the United States today this drastic proposal to which both parties have committed themselves arises basically from the idea that the United States at long last should take a definite initiative, and I believe that no American President will be able to ignore that feeling. It comes too from the fact that the spectre of Khrushchev hovers over Cuba, Mexico and the rest of Latin America.

I would suggest, honourable senators, the situation as respects public opinion of the United States is not unlike that which existed before the North Atlantic Treaty came into existence, when Czechoslovakia disappeared behind the Iron Curtain. This is a real issue for the United States. I suggest to this house that we are on the eve of the United States taking the lead in forming a common market on both sides of the Atlantic, involving some 500 million people, with invitations to Canada and Latin America to join. I predict that as respects Latin American countries the United States has no intention of waiting until the horse is stolen before locking the door.

In my June speech in this house I referred to a statement which was questioned, although not seriously, by Mr. Clayton of the United States, whom I have just mentioned. I sent him a copy of my speech. He replied, thanking me for it, and saying that he agreed with my point of view and was advocating that the United States do as I was suggesting for Canada. However, he did question my citation from the views of a group of businessmen, that cost of production in Canada was 35 to 40 per cent higher than in the United States. He said he could hardly credit that statement—that it just could not be so. Mr. Clayton is a very prominent and able man. It occurred to me that if he had doubts about what I had said, someone else also might question it. I am frank to admit that I used as my original source the Montreal Gazette, but I have since gone to the original source. I have in my hand a booklet entitled Barrier to Trade between Canada and the United States, published by the Canadian-American Committee sponsored by the National Planning Association (U.S.A.), and Private Planning Association of Canada.

The joint chairmen of the committee are Robert M. Fowler, President, Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, and R. Douglas Stuart, Chairman of the Board, the Quaker Oats Company, one time ambassador to Canada.

Its members include such persons as Donald Gordon, Chairman and President, Canadian National Railways; H. H. Hannam, President, Canadian Federation of Agriculture; Claude Jodoin, President, Canadian Labour Congress; W. A. Mackintosh, Vice-Chancellor and Principal, Queen's University; R. E. Powell, Honorary Chairman, Aluminum Company of Canada, Ltd.; James Stewart, Director, Canadian Bank of Commerce; G. F. Towers, Ottawa, Canada; and J. R. White, President, Imperial Oil Limited.

I quote from a paragraph on page 3 of the pamphlet, which reads:

> Both Canadian and U.S. secondary manufacturing industries have been developed primarily to serve the domestic markets. Since the U.S. market is some 15 to 20 times as large as the Canadian market, U.S. manufacturers can obtain much greater economies of scale (larger production runs, more specialization in machinery and labour, and lower costs of overhead and distribution). Largely as a result of this one factor, the average cost of manufacturing in Canada, excluding such primary industries as pulp and newsprint where scale is no problem, run some 35 to 40 percent higher than in the United States. Although lower wages in Canada provide some offset to this productivity differential, it is easy to appreciate why the volume of manufactured imports from the United States is so great in spite of the Canadian tariff.

I wrote to my friend and said: "I don't wonder that you raised the question. How is it possible for our manufacturers to compete under those circumstances?" The answer is this: first, that they pay labour 25 per cent less than the American scale, although, undoubtedly the cost of living is higher here than in the United States; secondly, they charge the consumer a large part, if not all, of the difference. But in addition to that, there is such a variety of production today that it is simply impossible to supply the consumer with his choice, and that process means growing competition from without.

I suggest to you honourable senators, that this problem of cost of production in Canada is one of the most serious problems that our economy has to face. In the debate which took place on my inquiry, as I remember it, there was not one single reference to the first basic reason that I gave for the idea that we should, by a progressive reduction of tariffs, just as the European countries are doing, get our cost of living down, and I say this to you honourable senators, that to my knowledge there is no person in Canada, in the Government or elsewhere, who has suggested as good an alternative. No one, as far as I know, has suggested any alternative.

There are only pious hopes that costs of production will go down. But they are steadily climbing, and the differential between our costs and those of our European competitors will steadily increase. I cannot see how people in authority, or any others, can see what the future holds for us in those circumstances.

There are some people who suggest that a depression will be the only way of getting costs down and then, perhaps, labour will be forced to take less pay. We are paying labour less in Canada by 25 per cent than it is being paid in the United States.

My honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) shakes his head. Those are the figures of the Canadian Labour Congress; they are the figures that are generally used. My honourable friend has no other figures to give. He can shake his head as much as he likes, but let him give me some figures. I will go further and say that in my province of Nova Scotia the wages are lower than the Canadian average.

Hon. Mr. Horner: In the United States the production per man-hour is greater than ours.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I am saying that basically Canadian industry, according to the figures, pays wages which are 25 per cent less than the wages the Americans pay. My honourable friend may not like it, but it is a fact.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I don't believe it.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I have no definite figures as to the wages paid in Nova Scotia in relation to the Canadian average, but I have a question on the Order Paper asking for them. It is generally understood that incomes in that province—I am not suggesting that these are industrial incomes, for I do not have those figures—are about 25 per cent less than those in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. That is the price you have to pay, and I suggest that this situation cannot continue indefinitely. Our only alternative is to get into a mass market progressively over a period of years, just as the European countries have been doing. This policy of ours is as antiquated as the horse and buggy. This fact is generally recognized elsewhere. The manufacturers in Britain, Germany and France have moved in that direction, and now the Americans are apparently doing the same.

Undoubtedly the question will arise whether Canada will join the Atlantic market, if invited to do so. Personally I believe the arguments for doing so are much more in favour than against. I believe it is the only chance for secondary industry to survive and prosper. Right now our economic future faces serious problems. Payrolls are steadily diminishing and there is growing unemployment. How are these problems to be met? There are only two ways. We could raise tariffs high enough to keep competition out, or change the whole method of manufacturing in exactly the same way as the European countries have been doing and get into mass production markets. I believe the primary and secondary industries have everything to gain. Consumers would undoubtedly enjoy a lower cost of living, for while the rate of increase has been less in the last 12 months, it has maintained its upward trend by something between 1 and 2 per cent. After careful reflection, I would say that Canada should join the common market if invited to do so. I argued recently that we should initiate action along these lines ourselves. If the European countries, together with the United States, are progressively reducing their tariff barriers between themselves, Canada would be isolated if she did not join with them. I would warn that this will not be achieved without encountering some wide difference of opinion, but our party leaders are generally in favour of it in principle. The present Prime Minister expressed approval of it in days gone by. I know this because I was associated with him in an endeavour to have the economic clauses of the North Atlantic Treaty implemented. But I want to remind you in all seriousness that the United States is not the only place that has its "Goldwaters". They exist in this country as well, and I suspect they are very influential. I can tell you the arguments that they will use against joining the Atlantic common market, but whether they will prevail or not remains to be seen. These people will say, "We want to keep our sovereignty; we are making no alliances with any country or any group of countries." They will also say, "Other people only buy our products when they want them, and can come and get them and pay for them." They will say, moreover, that if any group of countries make arrangements between themselves and effect mutual reductions in tariffs, Canada will make treaties with those countries to secure the benefits without reducing her own tariffs. We must be free to protect our own industries, in the words of one I quoted—"even if we scrap the commonwealth preferences and our participation in GATT in the process".

Finally, the "Goldwaters" will use this old cliché, that if our industries are not protected we shall become hewers of wood and drawers of water. This is supposed to strike terror into our hearts. Upon my word, every time I hear that expression I see red, but some people seem to enjoy using it and others seem to enjoy listening to it.

Perhaps sooner than we believe, the United States will, for the reasons that moved her to take the revolutionary step she did when she signed the North Atlantic Treaty because of the fear of common aggression in the military field, embark on just as revolutionary action in the economic field; and, as one of the speakers said during the recent debate, it is well that public discussion take place in regard to it.

Honourable senators, I have done my part to draw attention to possible developments. I may be wrong in my prediction, but I am convinced that it is in the cards. The spectacle of Khrushchev, with his foot in Cuba today, and probably in Mexico tomorrow, and other Latin America countries the following day, is something that concerns the American public to the point where some action is demanded. The result of such action will be my predicted Atlantic common market, which Canada will have to decide to join or remain outside.

Of course, honourable senators represent various areas, and know the circumstances that exist in those particular areas. For my part, however, coming as I do from the Atlantic provinces, I say in no uncertain terms that Canada's joining of an Atlantic Common Market, in my opinion, presents the greatest opportunity the Atlantic provinces have had since Confederation, and I intend to urge citizens of those provinces to exert their influence on their respective national political organizations to see that this opportunity does not slip through their fingers. The opportunity for secondary industry to thrive instead of slowly dying, for agriculture, fishing, and forestry to secure profitable water-borne markets through lower costs of production, is worth fighting for. All in all, our maritime geographical position can become an asset rather than a liability. All consumers can secure gradual relief from the steadily rising cost of living. Truly, the rapid rush of world events is opening up new vistas for Canada. No part of Canada stands to gain more than Nova Scotia and the other Atlantic provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PROROGATION

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa
10th August 1960

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Mr. Justice C. H. Locke, in his capacity as Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 10.50 p.m. today, the 10th August, 1960, for the purpose of proroguing the Third Session of the Twenty-Fourth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your obedient servant,

E. Joly de Lotbinière,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor-General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Charles Holland Locke, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Judges Act.

An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

An Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

An Act to amend the Judges Act.

An Act for the relief of Enid Grace Pascoe Dawson.

An Act for the relief of Julianna Catharina Mehilercsik Jutras.

An Act for the relief of Helen Kurtzman Bernard.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Jean Gillies Harris Cooke.

An Act for the relief of Evelyn Annie Macleod Vaillancourt.

An Act for the relief of John Thomas Francis White.

An Act for the relief of Helen Frances Estelle Kearney Freeman.

An Act for the relief of Omer Therrien.

An Act for the relief of Helen Elisabeth Millar Ramshaw.

An Act for the relief of Larry Orsa.

An Act for the relief of Brenda Mary Pardy Thacker.

An Act for the relief of Lily Schucher Cohen.

An Act for the relief of Anna Margaret Laurie Cannon Stevenson.

An Act for the relief of Roger Vermette.

An Act for the relief of Rose Vosko Ribkoff.

An Act for the relief of John Gilbert Oakley.

An Act for the relief of Earl Bernard Lapierre.

An Act for the relief of Marie Rose Nicola Lapenna McLaughlin.

An Act for the relief of Delema Grace Mullin Simon.

An Act for the relief of Earle James Andrew Aspell.

An Act for the relief of Marie Simone Louisette Bellemare Lafond.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Lebherz Denig.

An Act for the relief of James William Neilan.

An Act for the relief of Donna Lois Marchand Silverman.

An Act for the relief of Leo Proulx.

An Act for the relief of June Laura Welby Leger.

An Act for the relief of Dorothy May Kenny Mulcair.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Kathleen Graham Lane.

An Act for the relief of Hubert Shirley Quartz.

An Act for the relief of Claudine Fernande Yvette Thibaudeau Tarride.

An Act for the relief of Mary Pirie Wood Hunnisett.

An Act for the relief of Marine Tony Jakovich.

An Act for the relief of George Henderson.

An Act for the relief of Jean Ludger Villeneuve.

An Act for the relief of Robert Marcel Castets.

An Act for the relief of Sarah Mary Shirley Collins Stewart.

An Act for the relief of Stella Jean Dunn Breitman.

An Act for the relief of Klari Margo Farkas Bodo.

An Act for the relief of Vera Eileen Rath Croucher.

An Act for the relief of Rena Kanofsky Perzow.

An Act for the relief of Pearl Thorne Chipman.

An Act for the relief of Joan Ethel Brooks Clarke.

An Act for the relief of Ann Aaron Regenstrief.

An Act for the relief of Eleanor Agnes Overall Cannon.

An Act for the relief of Betty Zaracoff Ferstenfeld.

An Act for the relief of Kenneth Alan MacKenzie.

An Act for the relief of Honoria Evelyn Day Matthew.

An Act for the relief of Rene Georges Clement.

An Act for the relief of Mary Eva Sheila Redmond Beards.

An Act for the relief of Geraldine Anne Mary McElligott Parsons.

An Act for the relief of William Gordon Jack.

An Act for the relief of Eileen Coates MacPherson.

An Act for the relief of Maria Lozinsky Truby.

An Act for the relief of Willie Pomerleau.

An Act for the relief of Patricia Frances Turley Raustis.

An Act for the relief of Mary Jean Olive De Vouge Tremblay.

An Act for the relief of Dorothy May Vallis Odell.

An Act for the relief of Jimmy D'Abate.

An Act for the relief of Mary Semenyshyn Shuch, otherwise known as Mary Semenyshyn Shuck.

An Act for the relief of Monique Bauset Malo.

An Act for the relief of Rivka Fridman Nimrod, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Nimrod-Lothan, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Hebel.

An Act for the relief of John Frederick Alfred Webster.

An Act for the relief of Mary Prukker Wigmore.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Rudolph Beauchemin.

An Act for the relief of Georges Delrue.

An Act for the relief of Marie Claire Georgette Cronier Brault.

An Act for the relief of Marie Therese Louise Forest Morin.

An Act for the relief of Donat Savoie.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Arthur Andre Sicotte.

An Act for the relief of Stanley Wellington Burton.

An Act for the relief of Hannah Bitensky Bidner.

An Act for the relief of Katherine Elizabeth Moore Shaw.

An Act for the relief of Mary Margaret Young Doulton.

An Act for the relief of Iris Margaret Leslie Sankey Jolliffe.

An Act for the relief of Mary Glen Keirstead Routliffe.

An Act for the relief of Helen Balacan Berinbaum, otherwise known as Helen Balacan Berne.

An Act for the relief of Morris Arthur Bergeron.

An Act for the relief of Erica Theresa Schockner Giwertzman.

An Act for the relief of Boris Moses Ovrutzky.

An Act for the relief of Mac Ravitsky.

An Act for the relief of Timothy David Rudston Thomason.

An Act for the relief of Anne Smilovitch Portnoff.

An Act for the relief of Violet Sandra Miller MacKenzie.

An Act for the relief of Reva (Rita) Hutkin Agoston.

An Act for the relief of Jean Ann Brown Craig.

An Act for the relief of Frances Malofy Marzitelli.

An Act for the relief of Georgette Malick David.

An Act for the relief of John Priestley.

An Act for the relief of Caroline May Alexander Clements.

An Act for the relief of Ellen Schwarz Blok.

An Act for the relief of Nijs de Vos.

An Act for the relief of Lucien Girard.

An Act for the relief of Emilia Arcoragi Fisher.

An Act for the relief of Michael Kaluta.

An Act for the relief of Andre Marsolais.

An Act for the relief of Jozefa Lukasiewicz Bielicz.

An Act for the relief of Beverley June Russell Ehrhardt.

An Act for the relief of Edith Hirsch Distelman.

An Act for the relief of Lise Johanne Carreau Wolczecki.

An Act for the relief of Charlotte Stilman Shulman.

An Act for the relief of Gail Rabinovitch Golden.

An Act for the relief of Marie Rose Lucette Durocher Di Iorio.

An Act for the relief of Nelson Cyr.

An Act for the relief of Ivy Baldwin Collier Wright.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Alain Jean Guy Berube.

An Act for the relief of Shirley Loraine Knodell Burke.

An Act for the relief of Rene Lassonde.

An Act for the relief of John Pastor.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Dunn Hepburn Sanderson.

An Act for the relief of Maurice Sykes Ward.

An Act for the relief of Clark Alvin Graham.

An Act for the relief of Noeleen Natalie Adams Lamond.

An Act for the relief of Harry Gillman.

An Act for the relief of John Philip Bowers.

An Act for the relief of Carl August Christensen.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Joan Marsh Wolfe.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Ann Tuppen McIntosh.

An Act for the relief of Dorcina Doris Dubuc Clark.

An Act for the relief of Gerald Healey.

An Act for the relief of Marlene May Myles Robinson.

An Act for the relief of Phyllis Louise Clements Harris.

An Act for the relief of Anne Olivia Sinclair Fuller.

An Act for the relief of Viola Mabel Stead Cole.

An Act for the relief of Patricia Ann Shirley Howell.

An Act for the relief of Lillian Juanita Sheppard Simpson.

An Act for the relief of Ivy Winifred Grace Arthur Birks.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Ruth Aird Barwick.

An Act for the relief of Diane M. L. Turner Hammond.

An Act for the relief of Dorothy Craven Masse Perrett.

An Act for the relief of Helen Landau Shuster.

An Act for the relief of Fagy Litner Selinger.

An Act for the relief of Pearl Shedlack Dubin Birnbaum.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Szczepanski.

An Act for the relief of Magdalena Beata Landau Weissler.

An Act for the relief of Frantisek Sladek.

An Act for the relief of Kathleen Beatrice Title Levy.

An Act for the relief of Helen Caroline Coleman Lewchuk.

An Act for the relief of Marie Paule Andree Mercier Rowney.

An Act for the relief of Alexander Leslie Mittler.

An Act for the relief of Beatrice Jean Madsen Rockburn.

An Act for the relief of Emma Strachan MacInnes Creery.

An Act for the relief of Vira (Vera) Kotyk Marsden.

An Act for the relief of Shashi Kumar Pande.

An Act for the relief of Ethel Georgina Pottle Pallen.

An Act for the relief of Marilyn Shendelman Kagan.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Vinet.

An Act for the relief of Martha Dammel Reiche Domnauer.

An Act for the relief of June Isabella Adamson Hogan.

An Act for the relief of Wincenty Strzelczyk.

An Act for the relief of Janina Rodzoch Nowak.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Ruth McLellan Kennedy.

An Act for the relief of Hazel Ina McEwing Hickey.

An Act for the relief of Marie Marthe Alberta Ladouceur Parenteau.

An Act for the relief of Olga Gokler Crisan.

An Act for the relief of George Graham Thresh.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Arthur Porcheron.

An Act for the relief of Paul Drolet Massue.

An Act for the relief of David Byrne Kieran.

An Act for the relief of Nina Finkelstein Anshell.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Leo Roger Latendresse.

An Act for the relief of Norma Rosalie Parsons Turgeon.

An Act for the relief of Maria Reichinger Lehnen.

An Act for the relief of Marie Cecile Leda Vezeau Leger.

An Act for the relief of Rose Mary Dubeau Pietrinferno.

An Act for the relief of Daniel Edward Napasney.

An Act for the relief of Pauline Mary Ann Irene Patry Gaudreau.

An Act for the relief of Rose Ella Katherelos Parry.

An Act for the relief of Gwendolyn Marion Mizener Nassif.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Ernest Coutu.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Berube.

An Act for the relief of Maria Hocheder Weber.

An Act for the relief of Sherrill Ordidge Glandsdorp.

An Act for the relief of Bronislaw Kulawik.

An Act for the relief of Pauline Sornin Barrett.

An Act for the relief of Sandra Maxine Shoore Sheydwasser.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Maclaren Harris.

An Act for the relief of Irmgard Poikonen Horvath.

An Act for the relief of Estelle Labelle Baxter Robertson.

An Act for the relief of Alphonse Yared.

An Act for the relief of Andre Lamothe.

An Act for the relief of Rita Hamel Labranche.

An Act for the relief of Lionel Boucher.

An Act for the relief of Eliza Boudreau Filion.

An Act for the relief of William Leslie Baillie.

An Act for the relief of Pauline Handji Edelstein.

An Act for the relief of Molly Brenda Stein Butterman.

An Act for the relief of Laurette Biron Valade.

An Act for the relief of Viviane Hirsch Montmartin Gadbois.

An Act for the relief of Grace Kara Forshaw.

An Act for the relief of Gloria Helene Stotland Titleman.

An Act for the relief of Armand Simeon Lavictoire.

An Act for the relief of Audrey Mary Crosbie Morris.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Tabah Tomy.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Irene Diakur Mendel.

An Act for the relief of Florence Beryl Kellam Weinstein.

An Act for the relief of Marie Esteie Caprari.

An Act for the relief of Olive Bowes Schofield.

An Act for the relief of Jeanne Beauchemin Arpin.

An Act for the relief of Jean Claude Bilodeau.

An Act for the relief of Robert George Butler.

An Act for the relief of Helen Harpes Avon.

An Act for the relief of Sonia Slovsky Coppel.

An Act for the relief of Shirley Huberman Schreiber.

An Act for the relief of Paulette Goldberg Slepp.

An Act for the relief of Richard Austin Evans.

An Act for the relief of Marion Mary Treen Frosst.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Mary Whiteman Rogers.

An Act for the relief of Vera Arlene Perry Locke.

An Act for the relief of Beatriki Bourboulis Angelidis.

An Act for the relief of Jessie Margaret Cross Joly.

An Act for the relief of Guy Labrosse.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Agnes Catherine Wilkinson Greenwood.

An Act for the relief of Jacques Cormier.

An Act for the relief of Mary Lorraine Little Copping.

An Act for the relief of Sylvia Trachimovsky Fox.

An Act for the relief of Kathleen Shannon Keene.

An Act for the relief of Jean Elizabeth MacCuaig Vinters.

An Act for the relief of Lucy Sekora Budnik.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Middlehurst Walker.

An Act for the relief of Patricia Shirley Rydberg Menzies.

An Act for the relief of Real Blier.

An Act for the relief of Viola Elsie Ann Johnson Anderson.

An Act for the relief of Margis Wellisch Ruszugar Hancz.

An Act for the relief of Janina Lukaszewicz Soloducha.

An Act for the relief of Arthur Woodbridge Dale.

An Act for the relief of Maria Jacoba Arens Mannens.

An Act for the relief of Gerard Henri Turgeon.

An Act for the relief of Nancy Jane Wyllie Wood Aylwin.

An Act for the relief of Yves Brodeur.

An Act for the relief of James Joseph Sceviour.

An Act for the relief of Leon Zygowski.

An Act for the relief of Neeltje Doruijter Van der Spoel.

An Act for the relief of Paul L'Heureux.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Daniel Bernardin Daigle.

An Act for the relief of Giovanna Intini Mancuso.

An Act for the relief of Eileen Williams Gushue.

An Act for the relief of Jean Eleanor Jackson Connell.

An Act for the relief of George Henry Basil.

An Act for the relief of Eileen Kathleen Astley Craig.

An Act for the relief of Edith Tobat Heinemann.

An Act for the relief of Davis Zave Garmaise.

An Act for the relief of Marie Frederique Raphaelle Mireille Fortier Kingsbury.

An Act for the relief of Franko (Franz) Stapinskyj.

An Act for the relief of Eva Facey Lund.

An Act for the relief of Joan Dunn Ostrosky.

An Act for the relief of Teresa Greco Caputo.

An Act for the relief of William Pinkerton.

An Act for the relief of Frank David Cousens.

An Act for the relief of Denise Baril Sarrazin.

An Act for the relief of Wassily de Krokhaleff.

An Act for the relief of Henriette Rioux Beaupre.

An Act for the relief of Lillian Olive Robertson Reinhold.

An Act for the relief of Myrtle Gertrude Lily Molloy Heany.

An Act for the relief of Kathleen Margaret Sinclair McKenna Roberts.

An Act for the relief of Marion Toba Wolfe Cohen Shapiro.

An Act for the relief of Marie Lucille Simone David Raymond.

An Act for the relief of Otto James Kerr.

An Act for the relief of James Justin Sims.

An Act for the relief of Sylvia Overland Katz.

An act for the relief of Blanche Brigitte Paulette Gagne Joly.

An Act for the relief of Carmel Duguay Mitchell.

An Act for the relief of Catherine Maureen Kelly Mavor.

An Act for the relief of Maria Ruland Reutter.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Victor Dupere.

An Act for the relief of Rose Polivka De Bom.

An Act for the relief of Vernis Clifton Christie.

An Act for the relief of Thomas Edward Imbleau.

An Act for the relief of Jean Guy Cardinal.

An Act for the relief of Marie Mathilde Charlotte Boisjoli Dore.

An Act for the relief of David Lloyd Tune.

An Act for the relief of Sybil Fenster Shaicavitch.

An Act for the relief of Lynda Marjorie Cowell Smith.

An Act for the relief of Alois Zisser.

An Act for the relief of Stanley Sepchuk.

An Act for the relief of Nadine Tudor Labreche.

An Act for the relief of Robert Gordon Stitt.

An Act for the relief of Philippa Jane Hutchins Tanton.

An Act for the relief of Julianna Barna Nadasdi.

An Act for the relief of Franciszek (Frank) Wyspianski.

An Act for the relief of Mary (Moira) Steel Taylor Maddison-Roberts.

An Act for the relief of Marie Evelyn Lindsay Slade.

An Act for the relief of Elsa Faiga Manace Grossman.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Armand Dube.

An Act for the relief of of Margaret Elizabeth Perkins Petrachuk.
An Act for the relief of Istvan Horvath.
An Act for the relief of Kathleen Margaret Manchios Kotsos.
An Act for the relief of Peter Zeppetini.
An Act for the relief of Jean Louis Beaudet.
An Act for the relief of Antoni Kubowicz.
An Act for the relief of Georg Zechanowitsch.
An Act for the relief of Sonia Kwas Cada.
An Act for the relief of Stanislaw Wroblowski.
An Act for the relief of Jean Ednah Hiltz Dewey.
An Act for the relief of Vera Jarvis Lahaye.
An Act for the relief of Claire Marie Marchand McGuinness.
An Act for the relief of Marie Denise Thaberge Duguay.
An Act for the relief of Marie Rita Doeneiges Trepanier Pelchat.
An Act for the relief of Darrell Ashley Conner.
An Act for the relief of Gladys Florida Allard Chenier.
An Act for the relief of Sonia Floomberg Schaffer.
An Act for the relief of Alice Marylyn Archibald Warren Wornell.
An Act for the relief of Doris Miller Burke.
An Act for the relief of Jacquelyn Gregory Bradley Walker.
An Act for the relief of Monica Carolyn Nolan McCullough.
An Act for the relief of Aime Albert.
An Act for the relief of Renee Helen Engel Graham.
An Act for the relief of Florian Poissant.
An Act for the relief of Mary Kathleen Potts (Wittingham) Barretta.
An Act for the relief of George Herbert Bissessar.
An Act for the relief of Leslie Robert Stickles.
An Act for the relief of Philippe Simard.
An Act for the relief of Estelle Caroline Lohnes Antilla.
An Act for the relief of Yolande Marguerite Delorme Houde, otherwise known as Yolande Marguerite Delorme Cyr.
An Act for the relief of Andree Edmonde Augusta Fontaine Barriere.
An Act for the relief of Eleanor Jean Mott Taylor.
An Act for the relief of Rose Van Embden Singer.
An Act for the relief of Jack Emile Chiarella.
An Act for the relief of Elaine Louise Robinson Solkin.
An Act for the relief of Gerald Onie Shannon.
An Act for the relief of Percival Verna Nathan.
An Act for the relief of Valerie Elsie Price Perrault.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Edmond Giroux.
An Act for the relief of Allen Dwight Westover.
An Act for the relief of Shirley Grace Edythe Sayers Sutherland, otherwise known as Shirley Seguin Sutherland.
An Act for the relief of Claire Ruth Rubins Lyons.
An Act for the relief of Stanislaw Przybyla.
An Act for the relief of Ian Church Wood.
An Act for the relief of Marie Hariette Claudette Boisvert Beaudry.
An Act for the relief of Arthur Edward Parker.
An Act for the relief of Owen John Lummis.
An Act for the relief of Ronald Norman Hogg.
An Act for the relief of Roy Walter Williams.
An Act for the relief of Barbara Doris Jennings Fitzgerald.
An Act for the relief of Christine Nancy Littleton Cohen.
An Act for the relief of Czarna Rose Lemkowicz Bialer, otherwise known as Czarna Rose Lemkowicz Bealer.
An Act for the relief of Kazimierz Romanowski.
An Act for the relief of Norma Katherine MacDonald McLean.
An Act for the relief of Diane Hawkins Edler.
An Act for the relief of Marcel Pouliot.
An Act for the relief of Gisele Raymond Vallee.
An Act for the relief of Madeleine Arbour Gauvreau.
An Act for the relief of Pierre Frederic Bruneau.
An Act for the relief of Nancy Virginia Webster Canning.
An Act for the relief of Annie Zilinskas Schneidereit, otherwise known as Annie Zilinskas Schneider.
An Act for the relief of Jean Paul Alfred Lebel.
An Act for the relief of Bernice Ellis Biltis.
An Act for the relief of Evagelia Karidi Tsitsos.
An Act for the relief of Barbara Raphael Salomon.
An Act for the relief of Richard Denis Giblin.
An Act for the relief of Fanny Hussey Baggs.
An Act for the relief of Lambly Dorothy Audrey Hage Lambert.
An Act for the relief of Paul Emile Raymond.
An Act for the relief of Doris Mary Luxford Devenish.
An Act for the relief of Beulah Benford Brown Lawrence.
An Act for the relief of Kathleen Walsh Cohan.
An Act for the relief of Francis Whiting Clark.
An Act for the relief of Joan Shirley Davies Herscovitch.
An Act for the relief of Eugena Grandmont Ladouceur.
An Act for the relief of Ivy Helen Gentles Bell Pull.
An Act for the relief of Herve Vaillancourt.
An Act for the relief of Madeleine Hermine Kelen Endrenyi.
An Act for the relief of Marie Jeannine Andree Boisclair Lafrance.
An Act for the relief of Peter Eric Bray.
An Act for the relief of Gerard Lafond.
An Act for the relief of Jessie Davis Hill.
An Act for the relief of Grace Ruth Goldenberg Goldberg.
An Act for the relief of Elsie Mae Freake Vardy.
An Act for the relief of Gisele Fortin St.-Laurent.
An Act for the relief of Pauline Anne Elizabeth Cunliffe Hebb.
An Act for the relief of Mary Violet Maloney Elm.
An Act for the relief of Gilles Jacques.
An Act for the relief of Bernice May Snow Oss.
An Act for the relief of Guy Grenier.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Mary Ryan Girvan Hollett.
An Act for the relief of Caroline Petryshyn Was.
An Act for the relief of Rhonda Lee Petersen Butt.
An Act for the relief of Alexandra Protonotarios Kingsland.
An Act for the relief of Frances Theresa Smith MacDonald.
An Act for the relief of Anna Soltysik Slawinski.
An Act for the relief of Wera Podkopaewa Kraska.
An Act for the relief of Ronald Mugford.
An Act for the relief of Ida Denis Matte.
An Act for the relief of Sterling Norman Woods.
An Act for the relief of Mary Wolloch Vineberg.
An Act for the relief of Lotte Wilhelmine Schwitzer Hornig.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Clare Haigh Marshall.
An Act for the relief of Claire Syrek Stolovitz.
An Act for the relief of Lucien Dubuc.
An Act for the relief of Aino Maria Leinonen Knudson.
An Act for the relief of Mildred May Ghenender Greenspon.
An Act for the relief of Gordon Lang Cheesbrough.
An Act for the relief of Charles Guy Comeau.
An Act for the relief of Frida Rosen-Deutcher Falovitch.
An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Giliaeff Jahn.

An Act for the relief of Myrna Ada Webber Neiman.
An Act for the relief of Ellery Gordon Duncan.
An Act for the relief of Sarah Wolman Rothman.
An Act for the relief of Dragan Baljak.
An Act for the relief of Glenda Ruth Warren Meades.
An Act for the relief of Robert Hugh Parker.
An Act for the relief of Catherine Hetty Dawson Gilbert Cathcart.
An Act for the relief of Sheila Alexandra Anderson Williams.
An Act for the relief of Georges Justin Goeury.
An Act for the relief of Gabrielle Labranche Bisaillon.
An Act for the relief of Maurice Joseph Martel.
An Act for the relief of Ula Geraldine Taylor Gauthier.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Veronica Stacey Abraham.
An Act for the relief of Colette Bauer Landau.
An Act for the relief of Margot Buerling Zich.
An Act for the relief of Barbara Helen Watson Coones.
An Act for the relief of Bertha Jacqueline Alice Sweetinburgh Glynne-Percy.
An Act for the relief of Alphonse Taghon.
An Act for the relief of Paul Morency.
An Act for the relief of Mary Jean Frances Collins Park.
An Act for the relief of Martine Simonne Georgette Krettly Lefebvre.
An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Davis Reed.
An Act for the relief of Raymond Faucher.
An Act for the relief of Alexander Bleziotis.
An Act for the relief of Ralph Gatis.
An Act for the relief of Diana Elizabeth Wilson Ronalds.
An Act for the relief of Parthenope Eftichidou Economou.
An Act for the relief of John Edward Anderson.
An Act for the relief of Claire Viger Marcil.
An Act for the relief of Denise Claire Lescarbeau Sarroino.
An Act for the relief of Carolyn Louise Atwood Leslie.
An Act for the relief of Sophia Kaloutsky Kachur.
An Act for the relief of Rosaire Armand Falardeau.
An Act for the relief of Philippa Osler Day.
An Act for the relief of Mary Rebecca Pittman Lawrence.
An Act for the relief of Frances Cohen Salsky.
An Act for the relief of Shirley Edith Rich Henry.
An Act for the relief of Helene Lepine Greig.
An Act for the relief of Marion Adelaide Smith Berube.
An Act for the relief of Sheila Ethel Mitchell Martin.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Hunt Tibbo.
An Act for the relief of Simone Laramee Desroches.
An Act for the relief of Ethel Bannister Thomas.
An Act for the relief of Leo Antonio Gianfrancesco.
An Act for the relief of Mary Spalton Humphries.
An Act for the relief of Nicola Salvatore Veri.
An Act for the relief of Noreen Elizabeth Cassidy Pineo.
An Act for the relief of Marie Therese Barolet Cayer.
An Act for the relief of Iris Nellie Armstrong Wedge.
An Act for the relief of Lucien Carbonneau.
An Act for the relief of Peter Borbley.
An Act for the relief of Joseph Pierre Claude Aubin.
An Act for the relief of Vladimir Ignatjev.
An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Fairnington Gaul.
An Act for the relief of Rolande Mercier Perreault.
An Act for the relief of France Andree Joly Smith.
An Act for the relief of Marcelle Schipper Brian.
An Act for the relief of Norman Edward Fulford.

The Honourable Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1961.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

SPEECH OF DEPUTY OF ADMINISTRATOR

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to close the Third Session of the Twenty-fourth Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The third session of this Parliament has been an unusually significant and useful one for Canadians. As you return to your homes I thank you for your work on behalf of the people of Canada.

Relations between nations of the world continue to cause concern. Several incidents have heightened tensions and aroused anxiety. Despite the sombre outlook, however, my Government continues to hope that reason may yet prevail in the Soviet world to the end that the differences between nations can be resolved. This will require energy, patience, strength and understanding. Canadians remain convinced that nothing must be left undone to assure real peace for our people and all men everywhere.

In the meantime, a responsible nation can do no other than contribute its part to the defensive strength of the free world. Canada remains under an obligation to provide forces for the defence of North America, to contribute to the North Atlantic Alliance and in support of the United Nations. You have made the necessary provision to meet these commitments. In the past few days you have approved the sending of a Canadian contingent of signalling and logistic personnel to be a part of the United Nations operations in the Congo.

The Prime Ministers of the commonwealth met together in London during May and reviewed the major international problems of the day and various questions of constitutional development within the commonwealth.

You have continued, at the increased level authorized last year, Canada's contribution to the Colombo Plan. You have also voted assistance for a program of aid to newly emerging nations in Africa, as well as further funds for the aid of the West Indies Federation. An appropriation for the first year of operations of the Commonwealth Scholarship Plan has been approved.

Canada's economic position in 1960 generally has remained good but the problems of employment in Canada, as in the United States, remain a cause for concern. You have authorized an expanded municipal winter works program for 1960-61. You have made increased provision for the training of unemployed persons in co-operation with the provinces. These measures, together with the steps taken to increase financing for housing construction and home improvement, will provide added employment in the forthcoming winter.

Agriculture in all its aspects has continued to receive the close attention of Parliament and the Government. Early in the session you enacted measures to help meet problems arising from unseasonable weather in the Prairie provinces which interrupted the harvesting of last year's grain crops. You have also taken concrete steps to provide assistance to the agricultural economy of western Canada.

A measure of great significance that you have enacted in this session has been the Act for the recognition and protection of fundamental human rights. At a time when the enemies of freedom everywhere mock the words of freedom you have set forth for all the world to see the declaration of Canadians that the dignity of the human personality shall be preserved in Canada in equality before the law without discrimination.

You have approved a measure to give Indians the right and privilege of the franchise in federal elections on a basis of equality with their fellow Canadians, but without any sacrifice of their traditional rights.

The Canada Elections Act has been revised.

You have approved an address to Her Majesty requesting the submission to the Parliament of the United Kingdom for an amendment of the British North America Act to establish a retirement age of seventy-five for judges of superior courts and you have made consequential amendments to the Judges Act.

A conference with provincial representatives has been arranged for the autumn to seek agreement on the means by which the Constitution of Canada can be amended in Canada in matters affecting federal and provincial jurisdictions.

You have amended the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to provide for the extension for the remainder of the period covered by the act of the increase in the share of the revenue from the personal income tax previously allocated to the provinces. Alternative arrangements have been approved in respect of the making of grants to universities in all parts of Canada.

In preparation for the revision of the financial arrangements with the provinces which expire in March 1962, a Dominion-Provincial Conference was held in the last week of July. The conference will resume its discussions in October.

Important amendments have been made to the Combines Investigation Act and related provisions of the Criminal Code which will give protection to the small businessmen of Canada.

The Public Service Superannuation Act has been amended to improve it in several respects. A revision of the Civil Service Act has been placed before you for consideration in advance of action at your next session.

Legislation has been passed to provide for the establishment of a Department of Forestry to have responsibility for all matters relating to the forest resources of Canada over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction.

You have extended the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for a further period of three years.

The Trans-Canada Highway Act has been amended to extend for three years the period during which payments may be made to the provinces for construction under the act.

You have approved measures which will enable for the first time the payment of pensions under the Old Age Security Act and the War Veterans' Allowance Act to be made to Canadians who choose to reside outside of Canada.

You have authorized extension of the operation of the Freight Rates Reduction Act to April 30, 1961.

New Trade Agreements with Australia and the U.S.S.R. have been approved.

Other measures enacted at this session include an Act to establish new C.N.R. terminal facilities in Toronto, the C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee Act, an Act to provide for Canada's membership in the International Development Association, Acts to incorporate Harbour Commissioners at Oshawa and Nanaimo, the La Salle-Caughnawaga Bridge Act, an Act to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland, a new Feeds Act and an Act respecting the International Boundary Commission.

You have also amended the Export and Import Permits Act, the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act, the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act, the Department of Justice Act, the National Housing Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Yukon Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Railway Act, the Canada Shipping Act and the Criminal Code.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the essential public services and payments for the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless, protect and guide our nation.

INDEX

Abbreviations

1r, 2r, 3r,	=	First, second, third reading
Amdts	=	Amendments
Com	=	Committee
Div	=	Division
M	=	Motion
Ref	=	Referred
Rep	=	Report
r.a.	=	Royal Assent

Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada bill. 1r, 175; 2r-ref to com, 263; rep of com-amdts adopted, 400-1; 3r, 435; r.a., 714

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne at opening of session
- Motion for (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche), 25-29; seconded (Hon. Mr. Blois), 29-32; agreed to, 348. Message of thanks from Governor General, 474
- Speakers:
  - Hon. Senators:
    - Aseltine, 79-86
    - Baird, 222
    - Bois, 268-70
    - Boucher, 109-11
    - Buchanan, 332-8
    - Burchill, 271-3
    - Connolly, (Ottawa West), 246-7
    - Gershaw, 123-6
    - Higgins, 165-70
    - Inman, 237-41
    - Irvine, 170-3
    - Macdonald, 52-59
    - McKeen, 282-91
    - McLean, 241-6
    - Pratt, 185-9
    - Reid, 144-8
    - Robertson, 91-97
    - Savoie, 256-63
    - Smith (Queens-Shelburne), 216-21
    - Sullivan, 131-8
    - Vaillancourt, 205-11
    - Wall, 343-8

Addresses
- To the Governor General
  - Requesting transmission of an Address to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, on the occasion of the birth of Prince Andrew, 197, 255
    - Message from House of Commons, 255
    - Message to the House of Commons, 197
  - Speech from the Throne—See Address in reply
- To the Queen
  - British North America Act
    - Motion for an Address to the Queen for amendment re tenure of office of judges, 12, 19, 47, 517, 717, 788, 834-9, 964-5, 968-86, 988-1002, 1005-19, 1020-34, 1041-58; proposed amendment to motion, 992, ruled out of order, 1018-19; further amendment, agreed to, 1030; further amendment, 1048, agreed to, 1058; motion, as amended, agreed to, 1058
    - See Judges
  - Congratulations to Her Majesty and to His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the occasion of the birth of Prince Andrew, 196-7
    - Message from House of Commons, 196
    - Message to the House of Commons, 197

Adjournments—See Senate

Administrator of the Government of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the—See Locke, Hon. Charles Holland

Agriculture
Agricultural Stabilization Board, operating loss, 467-8, 471, 481-2, 485
Atlantic provinces
Inclusion in Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, suggested, 1102
Co-operatives, 208-9, 270
Quebec organizations, 270
Cost-price squeeze, 44-45, 305, 1102
Eastern farmers, economic difficulties, 207-10
Edible oils industry, 959-60
Farm credit, lack of facilities for, 46, 50
Farm population, provincial statistics, 268
Feeds bill, 474-5, 490-6, 515-16, 525, 715
Fruit farming, depletion in Niagara district, 141-2
Harrington Tree Farm, 140
Income, farm operators, 83, 319-20
Inner Six, protectionist proposals, 1111
Maple sugar industry, 209-10
Marginal operators, difficulties of, 44-45
Nova Scotia apple crop, 44-45
Marketing irregularities, 45
Prairies
Hardships encountered, 306-8
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 42-47, 49-51, 76
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 33-42, 48-49, 76
Unharvested crops, 315-18
Problems, suggested solutions, 143, 208-9, 268-70, 305-6
Quebec, gross product and farm income, 1132
Report of Dr. J. W. Pelletier, Ste. Anne de la Pocatière Experimental farm, 1130-1
Research techniques, possibilities from, 1131, 1132
Royal Commission on Price Spreads, statistics on food products, 207-8
Surpluses, 207, 320-1
Food bank, international, 320-1
Uneconomic farm units problems, 1099-1100
Mechanization, 1100
Submarginal lands, 1101
See Land use

Alberta
Grain losses, 41
Mineral wealth, 337-8
Oil surplus, 869-70

Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill. 1r, 114; 2r, 148-50; ref to com, 150; rep. of com, 175; rep of com adopted-3r, 211; r.a., 488

Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill. 1r, 506; 2r, 529; ref to com, 531; rep of com, 676-7; 3r, 718, 738-41; r.a., 1003

Annulments—See Divorce

Appendixes to Hansard
Canada-United States Parliamentary Group, reports, 390, 403-18, 425-7, 499, 532, 545-8, 695-702
Rules formulated at Washington, January 1959, 403
Civil Service, method of relating Civil Service salaries to rates paid by other employers, 1194
Committee of Selection, report, 13-14
Committees, Standing
Subject-matters referred to standing committees of Senate in last ten years, 703-7
Commonwealth Prime Ministers, meeting of, first and final communiqués, 595-7 de Gaulle, General Charles, President of France, state luncheon, Ottawa, address by Prime Minister, 520-1; reply by General de Gaulle, 521-2
Divorce, private detectives, appearances before committee, 373-4, 453-5. See 450-2
Electric energy exports for 1959, 456
Governor General, Major General Georges Philias Vanier, installation of, address by Prime Minister, 15-16; reply by His Excellency the Governor General, 16-17
Internal Economy Committee reports, 1095-7
Land use, report of Special Committee, 1060-6
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, speech on the Canadian Senate, reprinted from Queen's Quarterly, 1249-53
Pilotage on Great Lakes, exchange of correspondence between officials of United States and Canada, 212-13
Prime Minister's visit to Washington, text of final communiqué, 765
University grants 1951-60, 708-11
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., speeches at unveiling of marble portrait:
Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough, 803, Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, Prime Minister, 803-4, Hon. Mark R. Drouin, 804-5, Hon. John Keiller Mackay, 805

Appropriation bills
No. 1. 1r, 292; 2r, 292-308, 311-25; 3r, 325-6; r.a., 327
No. 2. 1r, 437; 2r, 445-9; 3r, 473; r.a., 488
No. 3. 1r, 466; 2r, 466-73, 480-7; 3r, 487; r.a., 488
No. 4. 1r, 646; 2r, 646-9; 3r, 666; r.a., 715
No. 5. 1r, 757; 2r, 757-8; 3r, 758; r.a., 785
No. 6. 1r, 1256; 2r, 1256-64; 3r, 1264; r.a., 1269

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate
Addresses:
In reply to the Speech from the Throne, 79-86
To the Governor General requesting transmission of address to the Queen on the birth of a Prince, 197
To the Queen on the birth of a Prince, 196, 197
To the Queen, motion for Address re amdt to British North America Act in respect to tenure of office of judges, 12, 19, 47, 234, 517, 717, 788, 818, 834-9, 910, 972, 983, 993, 994, 995, 1030
Agricultural Stabilization Board operating loss, 467-8, 471, 485
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 292-8, 307, 308, 311, 324-5
No. 2, 445-6, 447, 448, 449
No. 3, 466-9, 470, 471-2, 473, 485, 487
No. 4, 646-7
No. 5, 757, 758
No. 6, 1256-9, 1260
Atlantic coast, aircraft and vessels available for search and rescue duties, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 1115-16
Australia
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 475
Prime Minister, Right Honourable Robert G. Menzies, invited to take seat on floor of Senate Chamber, 767
Bank of Canada, office premises, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1245-6
Bill of Rights, 1237, 1239
Correlative obligations and responsibilities, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 216
See 255-6, 350-2
Bills, public, suspension of rules, 933, 934, 935
British North America Act, motion for Address to the Queen for amendment re tenure of office of judges, 12, 19, 47, 234, 517, 717, 788, 818, 834-9, 910, 972, 983, 993, 994, 995, 1030
Federal-provincial correspondence to be printed in Minutes, 818. See 837
Provincial consents, 837
Resolutions of Canadian Bar Association, 837-8; to be printed in Minutes, 910.
Retirement age of judges, documents re, to be printed in Minutes, 910
Cabinet, inquiry as to when Leader will be appointed to (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Campground and picnic area developments, 295, 324-5
Canada Council
Report referred to Finance Committee, 625
Scholarships for nationals of foreign countries (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 1005, 1038

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1090
Canada Shipping bill, 1102-5, 1106, 1107
Pilots licensed in the United States, exemptions, 1104
Reciprocal provisions, 1105
St. Lawrence Seaway, consultations between United States and Canada, 1103-4
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 499, 532, 545-8, 676, 695-702
Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement, 515, 520-2
Notice of motion for approval of ratification of protocol, 834. See 899-904
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, television program "Close-Up", 626
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Golding), 759, 888-9
Canadian National Railways deficit, 468-9, 470
Canol pipe line system, purchase from United States, 295
Capital punishment, sentences and executions, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 340
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, interest rate, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 130
Chile, earthquake and tidal wave, appropriation for relief, 757
Citizenship
British subjects in Canada, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 856-7, 888
Status of High Commissioners to Canada, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 712
Committees
Meetings, witnesses, 63, 64, 103-4
Special committees appointed in last ten years, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 583-4
Standing Committees, 19
Subject-matters referred for report in last ten years, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 677, 703-7
Commonwealth Prime Ministers, meeting of, first and final communiqués, 583 595-7
Congo, motion that Senate unite with Commons in resolution of approval of participation of Canadian forces in U.N. operations, 1156-8, 1159, 1160, 1162
Constitutional aspect of Canadian assistance, 1159
Security Council efforts to restore peace, 1156-8
United Nations, role in conflict, 1162
Construction, building permits, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 489, 499, 516-17
Criminal Code bill, 933
Customs Tariff, rates of duties to be printed in Minutes, 818

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Defence
Department of Defence Production, contracts awarded in Nova Scotia 1956-59, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 932
Policy, 82
de Gaulle, General Charles, President of France, addresses at state luncheon, 517. See 520-2 Disarmament, Republic of China, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 90-91
Divorce
Bills, delay by Commons in passage of, 519
Committee
Appointment, 11
Services of members, 1084-5
Jurisdiction, 102
Private detectives, appearances before committee, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) 357, 373-4
Rules, 1083, 1116
Documents tabled, 9, 18, 24-25, 47, 52, 66-67, 77, 90, 105, 114, 139, 151, 198, 214, 232, 255, 266, 278, 308, 339, 349, 385, 400, 419, 437, 457, 474, 489, 499, 515, 523, 527, 532, 581, 623, 676, 716, 750, 758, 766, 787, 818, 834, 888, 910, 935, 988, 1004, 1035, 1067, 1079, 1098, 1128, 1141, 1195, 1235, 1245, 1254, 1255, 1256
Drug addicts, treatment in British Columbia, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Reid), 624
Economic prospects, 82-83, 85
Emergency sittings, authority to convene Senate during adjournment, 479-80
Estate Tax bill, 820
Estimates
Interim supply, 445-9
Undertaking that passage will not preclude further discussion, 446, 646-7
Replies to questions, 324-5
Supplementary, 278-9, 292-8, 307, 308, 311, 324-5, 1257-9
Tabled, 112
Exchange Stabilization fund, sale of American funds, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1137
Excise Tax bill, 947-8, 949, 952, 955, 958
Margarine, 947-8
Background of legislation in regard to, 947
Tax revenue, 947-8
Suggested removal, disturbance of balance of ways and means, 948
Farm cash income, 83
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 580
Feeds bill, 474-5
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 747-8
Forestry operations, 296
Governor General, addresses at installation, motion for printing of, 11. See 15-17

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Grain
Freight assistance, feed grain and other crops, 292, 294
Unharvested, federal Government assistance, 292-4
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., welcome on return after accident, 517
Great Slave Lake Railway, Royal Commission on, 296
Hampton site, London, England, sale to United States, 296-7
House of Commons, Sergeant-at-Arms, Lieutenant-Colonel W. J. Franklin, pension, 472
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 5
Ice-breakers, Government-owned, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 78
Immigration
Dr. Chung Wook Kim, deportation, inquiry (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 255
Refugees, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Wall) 233-4
Indian Affairs, Joint Committee, 328, 340-1; Senate members, 340
Internal Economy Committee, Civil Service Commission reports, 113, 786
International affairs, conferences, Senate representation, 201
International Boundary Commission bill, 787, 874
International relief agencies, estimates for, 471, 485, 757, 1257, 1258
Japanese Prime Minister, visit to Senate, 22, 23
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 178
Judges—See British North America Act
Land use
Committee appointment, 139-40; members, 139
Harrington Tree Farm, 140
La Salle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 568
Law of the sea, conference on, votes on Canada's proposal re territorial limit and fishing zone, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 1004-5
Library of Parliament, Joint Committee, Senate members, 19
Livestock slaughtered to control contagious diseases, compensation for, 292
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee to conduct study, 533-5, 539, 558
Special committees of previous years, 533-4
Subjects for consideration, 534-5
Marine services, 297-8
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1230
Meteorological service, forecasting of storms in Atlantic area, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 401

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 52
National Aviation Museum, 295-6
National Defence, Department of Automobiles, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson) 90
Expenditures, Atlantic provinces, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson) 115
Payments to civilian and service personnel in Nova Scotia, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 754
Withdrawal of forces from Aldershot, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 449
National Energy Board bill, 419, 439, 487
National Parole Board, representations for appointment of woman member, inquiry (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson), 308-9
NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization), Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson) 115-16
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 267
Newfoundland fishing industry, 84-85
Northwest Territories, loan to, 298
Nova Scotia
Electrical energy, federal Government assistance to reduce costs, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1245
Primary products, annual value 1957-58-59, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 712
Old age security payments, estimates for, 1259
Passports, applications since 1947 by British subjects, citizens of Canada and of commonwealth, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 788
Paylist charges, estimates for, 1257
Pilotage on Great Lakes, 198, 212-13
Polar Continental Shelf Project, 647
Post Office Department, appropriation for, 471-2
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 42-43, 45, 46
Loans to be given on expected grain delivery, 42
Payment and repayment formula, 43
Bank security, 43
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 33-37, 39, 40, 42
Unthreshed grain, 33
Prime Minister, visit to Washington, text of final communiqué, 758, 765
Psychiatrists employed by Department of Justice, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 523-4, 624-5
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1067
Railway bill, 806-7, 808, 810, 885, 886, 887, 914
Box cars in circulation, 887
Reflective markings and automatic protection installations, 806-7, 886

Aseltine, Hon. W. M., Leader of the Government in the Senate—Concluded
Railway bill—cont.
United States cars, 887
Grade crossing fund, extension of provisions, 806-7
Restaurant of Parliament, Joint Committee, Senate members, 19
Royal family, birth of a Prince, 196, 197, 255
Senate
Adjournment, motion rescinded, 689
Bills, public
Rule permitting explanation in Senate by minister from Commons, 103, 104
Business, 23, 24, 64, 65, 103-4, 139, 278, 279, 357, 390, 425, 487, 488, 506, 519, 594, 693-4, 722, 767, 816-17, 849, 855, 887, 987, 1034, 1058-9, 1077, 1134, 1144, 1244, 1245, 1255, 1256
Statutes of Canada, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 767-8
Steamship subventions, Maritimes, 472
Supreme Court of Canada, case of Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C., judges' notes and judgment, 216, 234, 255
Trade
Churchill, port of, advantages for wheat shipping, 84
Imports and exports, increase in, 83, 85
Japan and other countries, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 129-30
St. Lawrence Seaway, effect on freight charges, 84
United Kingdom, removal of restrictions, 83-84
Trans-Canada Highway, Port Mann to Abbotsford and Chilliwack, B.C., inquiry (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516
Unemployment
Insurance
Atlantic provinces, claimants for benefits, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 717
Fishermen's benefits, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 107-8, 255
Municipal incentive works programs, 81
Statistics, 82, 85
University grants, Quebec, 891, 892, 895
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 725
Western grain producers, payments to, 1258
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., speeches at unveiling of marble portrait, 787, 803-5
Winter works program, 294-5
Indian reserves, 294
World Refugee Year, Canada's contribution, 473, 1258

Atlantic coast
Aircraft and vessels available for search and rescue duties, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 1115-16

Atlantic provinces
Economic aspects
Economic Council, 1126
National Defence expenditures, relation to, 221, 592-3
Problems, suggestions for relief of, 221
Farm wood lots, utilization of, 30-31
Forest industry, 271-2
Unsatisfactory markets, 272
Merchant marine, disadvantages in competition, 590-1
National Defence Department
Expenditures
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 115
Withdrawal of forces, 592-3
Aldershot, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 449
Halifax, 593
Payments to civilian and service personnel in Nova Scotia, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 754
New Brunswick
Public health measures, 153
University of, forest management plan, 1072
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 9, 86-87, 97-100, 266-7, 281, 715
Nova Scotia
Defence Production, Department of, contracts awarded, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 932
Electrical energy, federal Government assistance to reduce costs, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Industrial wages in Nova Scotia and Ontario, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Legislative Assembly, 1217
Primary products, annual value, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 712
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, inclusion in, suggested, 1102
Prince Edward Island, car ferry and terminals, 486-7
Problems
Freight rates, 590, 616
Transportation, 241, 1102
Steamship subventions, 472
Tourist industry
Newfoundland, attractions unexcelled in Canada, 751
Nova Scotia, 30
Prince Edward Island, 238-41
Trade, new agreements, effect on, 1126-7
Trans-Canada Highway, 30, 186-7, 750-3
Nova Scotia, construction accomplished, 30
Unemployment, 221, 588, 589, 590-3, 615-16
Insurance
Claimants, 1957-60, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 717
Workers not covered by, 592
Lack of employment opportunities, 592

Atlantic provinces—Concluded
Unemployment—cont.
Nova Scotia, 592-3, 616
Newfoundland, 187
See New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island

Australia
Canadian market in, 654
Commonwealth trade
Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4
Economic and social progress, 217-18
Visitors from:
Prime Minister, Right Hon. Robert G. Menzies, 767
Senator Hon. Sir Walter Cooper and Private Secretary Mr. McGregor, 716

Australian Trade Agreement bill. 1r, 475, 2r, 500-4; ref to com, 504; rep of com, 527; 3r, 543; r.a., 785

Baird, Hon. A. B.
Absence due to accident, 308
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 222
Defence
DEW line, United States control of operations, 222
Lack of information on Government proposals, 222
Restaurant of Parliament, 21

Banking and Commerce Committee
Members, 13; reports, 128, 152, 173, 214, 215, 278, 400-1, 425, 475, 479, 666, 676-7, 734, 766, 818, 910-11, 933, 946, 966, 1035, 1037, 1067, 1098, 1115, 1190, 1195, 1235-43

Banks and banking
Bank of Canada
Exchange Stabilization Fund, reported sale of American funds for Canadian exchange, 1098, 1137, 1192-3
Office premises, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1245-6
Interest rates, 395-6
Loans to farmers, 49-50

Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 426
Department of Justice bill, 278
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 6
National Housing bill, 425

Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate—Concluded
Old Age Security bill, 818
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 43
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 34, 36, 37
Transport and Communications Committee, 47

Bilingualism, 53
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1145, 1197-1203

Bill of Rights
Canadian Bill of Rights, 1203-29, 1235-43, 1265
Documents on rights of mankind, effects on human history, 1222
Freedoms not protected, 1218-19
Freedom of religion, 1206-11, 1225-7
Jehovah's Witnesses, Saumur v. City of Quebec, Supreme Court decision, 1208-11, 1226-7
Unfair treatment by clergy of prominent men in past because of political beliefs, 1211-12
Rights of heritage, 1216
Senate Special Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1950), 1204-5, 1219-20, 1221-3
Chairman, Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, 1204
Struggle between government and masses over fundamental freedoms, 1212-14
Unions and rights of workers, 1214-15, 1217
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by United Nations, 1203-4

Bills, divorce
See Divorce
Individual names, pp. 1325-34

Bills, private
Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada. 1r, 175; 2r-ref to com, 263; rep of com-amdts adopted, 400-1; 3r, 435; r.a., 714
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company. 1r, 114; 2r, 148-50; ref to com, 150; rep of com, 175; rep of com adopted-3r, 211; r.a., 488
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada. 1r, 506; 2r, 529; ref to com, 531; rep of com, 676-7; 3r, 718, 738-41; r.a., 1003
British and Foreign Bible Society. 1r, 48; 2r, 73-74; ref to com, 74; rep of com-3r, 105; refund of fees, 115; r.a., 327
British Columbia Telephone Company. 1r, 198-9; 2r, 228-30; ref to com, 230; rep of com, 232; 3r, 256; r.a., 714
Canadian Public Health Association. 1r, 48; 2r-ref to com, 87; rep of com, 139; 3r, 153; refund of fees, 165; r.a., 488
Canadian Reassurance Company. 1r, 128; 2r, 160-3; ref to com, 163; rep of com, 214; 3r, 235; r.a., 714

Bills, private—Concluded
College of General Practice of Canada. 1r, 151; 2r-ref to com, 189; rep of com, 266; 3r, 281; r.a., 714
Convenient Credit Limited. (See Laurentide Finance Company).
Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company. 1r, 199; 2r, 249-50; ref to com, 250; rep of com, 266; 3r, 281; r.a., 714
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada. 1r, 198-9; 2r, 263-4; ref to com, 264; rep of com-amdts, 598-600; ref back to com, 600; rep of com-amdts adopted, 3r, 988; refund of fees, 1038; r.a., 1141
Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation. (See International Loan Company).
International Loan Company. 1r, 308; 2r-ref to com, 338; rep of com-amdt adopted, 400; 3r, 435; r.a., 715
International Savings and Mortgage Corporation. (See International Loan Company).
Laurentide Finance Company. 1r, 214; 2r, 264-5; ref to com, 265; rep of com-amdts adopted, 326; 3r, 332; r.a., 715
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. 1r, 151; 2r, 189-92; ref to com, 192; rep of com, 266; r.a., 714
Montreal Life Insurance Company. 1r, 105; 2r, 126-7; ref to com, 127; rep of com, 152; rep adopted, 173; 3r, 184; r.a., 714
Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada. 1r, 139; 2r, 163-4; ref to com, 164; rep of com, 215; 3r, 235; r.a., 714
National Sanitarium Association. 1r, 151; 2r, 192-4; ref to com, 194; rep of com, 266; 3r, 309; r.a., 714
Northern Pipe Line Company. 1r, 532; 2r, 571-2; ref to com, 572; rep of com, 623; 3r, 654; r.a., 1003
United Canada Insurance Company. 1r, 48; 2r, 87-88; ref to com, 88; rep of com, 128; 3r, 143; r.a., 714
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company. 1r, 339; 2r, 363-71; ref to com, 371; rep of com-authority to print proceedings, 425; rep of com-amdts, 623; rep adopted, 664-5; motion for 3r, 666; proposed amdt, 666-9, 677-8, 722-33, amdt neg, 733; 3r, 733; r.a., 1078
Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company. 1r, 649; 2r-ref to com, 693; rep of com, 734; 3r, 754; r.a., 1003
Wawanesa Mutual Life Insurance Company. 1r, 649; 2r, 692-3; ref to com, 693; rep of com, 734; 3r, 754; r.a., 1003
Western Surety Company. 1r, 527; 2r-ref to com, 559; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678; r.a., 1003

Bills, private
Filing of, extension of time for, 349, 489
Rules, suspension of, 230

Bills, public
Appropriation
No. 1. 1r, 292; 2r, 292-308, 311-25; 3r, 325-6; r.a., 327
No. 2. 1r, 437; 2r, 445-9; 3r, 473; r.a., 488
No. 3. 1r, 466; 2r, 466-73, 480-7; 3r, 487; r.a., 488
No. 4. 1r, 646; 2r, 646-9; 3r, 666; r.a., 715
No. 5. 1r, 757; 2r, 757-8; 3r, 758; r.a., 785
No. 6. 1r, 1256; 2r, 1256-64; 3r, 1264; r.a., 1269
Australian Trade Agreement. 1r, 475; 2r, 500-4; ref to com, 504; rep of com, 527; 3r, 543; r.a., 785
Canada Elections (Franchise to Indians). 1r, 339; 2r, 362-3; ref to com, 363; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 401; rep of com-3r, 479; r.a., 488
Canada Elections (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons). 1r, 1077; 2r, 1089-93; ref to com, 1093-4; rep of com, 1098; 3r, 1125; r.a., 1141
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement. 1r, 9; 2r, 59-62; ref to com, 63-64; rep of com-3r, 128; r.a., 785
Canada Shipping. 1r, 1079; 2r, 1102-7; ref to com, 1107; rep of com, 1115; 3r, 1128; r.a., 1141
Canadian Bill of Rights. 1r, 1203; 2r, 1203-29; ref to com, 1229; rep of com, 1235; 3r, 1235-43; r.a., 1265
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee. 1r, 786; 2r, 823-7; ref to com, 827; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 856; 3r, 904; r.a., 1003
Canadian National Toronto Terminals. 1r, 856; 2r, 914-16, 940-2; ref to com, 942; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 967; 3r, 988; r.a., 1003
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code. 1r, 1145; 2r, 1162-89; ref to com, 1189; authority to print proceedings, 1190; rep of com, 1195; 3r, 1195-7; r.a., 1265
Criminal Code (Capital Punishment). 1r, 18; withdrawn, 848
Criminal Code. 1r, 933; 2r, 962-4; ref to com, 964; rep of com, 966; 3r, 988; r.a., 1078
Customs Tariff. 1r, 786; 2r, 862-8; ref to com, 868; rep of com, 910-11; 3r, 936; r.a., 1003
Department of Forestry. 1r, 1004; 2r, 1069-77; ref to com, 1077; rep of com, 1085; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1141

Bills, public—Continued
Department of Justice. 1r, 175; 2r, 248; ref to com, 249; rep of com, 278; 3r, 309; r.a., 327
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance. 1r, 856; 2r, 906-8; ref to com, 908; rep of com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003
Estate Tax. 1r, 786; 2r, 818-23, 843-6; ref to com, 846; authority to print com proceedings-rep to com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003
Excise Tax. 1r, 786; 2r, 857-62; ref to com, 862; rep of com with amdt, 911; rep of com consid in com of Whole, 946-62; m that com amdt be not concurred in and that bill be reported without amdt, 947; agreed to, 962; 3r, 987; r.a., 1003
Export and Import Permits. 1r, 598; 2r, 654-6; ref to com, 656; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678; r.a., 715
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements. 1r, 580-1; 2r, 600-12, 626-9; ref to com, 629; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678-92; r.a., 715
Feeds. 1r, 474-5; 2r, 490-6; ref to com, 496; rep of com-amdt adopted, 515-16; 3r, 525; r.a., 715
Finance Charges (Disclosure). 1r, 349; 2r, 559-67, 656-64, 669-70, 741-9, 760-3, 775-8, 875-81; ref to com, 881; authority to print com proceedings, 1037
Freight Rates Reduction. 1r, 1079; 2r, 1107-10; ref to com, 1110; rep of com, 1115; 3r, 1128; r.a., 1141
Income Tax. 1r, 856; 2r, 904-6, 917-26; ref to com, 926; authority to print com proceedings, 933; rep of com-amdts adopted, 1035-7; r.a., 1141
Indian. 1r, 339; 2r, 357-62; ref to com, 362; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 401; rep of com, 475; 3r, 475-9; r.a., 488
International Boundary Commission. 1r, 787; 2r, 828-32, 846-8; ref to com, 848; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 874; 3r, 874-5; r.a., 1003
International Development Association. 1r, 834; 2r, 881-4; ref to com, 884; rep of com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003
Judges. 1r, 888; 2r, 1142-3, 1145-56; ref to com, 1156; rep of com-3r, 1195; r.a., 1265
Judges. (P.E.I.) 1r, 1229; 2r, 1243-4; 3r, 1244; r.a., 1265
La Salle-Caughnawaga Bridge. 1r. 568; 2r, 620-2; ref to com, 622; rep of com, 623-4; 3r, 638-9; r.a., 1003
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners. 1r, 52; 2r, 74-75; ref to com, 75; rep of com-authority to print proceedings, 106; 3r, 122-3; r.a., 785

Bills, public—Continued
National Energy Board. 1r, 419-22; 2r, 422-5; ref to com, 425; rep of com, 438-45; 3r, 445; authority to print com proceedings, 445; com amdts concurred in, 487-8; r.a., 488
National Housing. 1r, 375; 2r, 375-85, 391-9; ref to com, 399; rep to com-authority to print com proceedings, 425; 3r, 449; r.a., 488
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal. 1r, 9; 2r, 86-87, 97-100, 266-7; 3r, 281; r.a., 715
Northwest Territories. 1r, 598; 2r, 754-5; ref to com, 755; rep of com, 766; 3r, 767; r.a., 785
Old Age Security. 1r, 757; 2r, 779-82, 789-802; ref to com, 802; rep of com, 818; 3r, 840-3; r.a., 1003
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners. 1r, 9; 2r, 68-72; ref to com, 72; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 106; 3r, 122; r.a., 785
Prairie Grain Loans. 1r, 42; 2r, 42-47; ref to com, 47; rep of com, 49; 3r, 49-51; r.a., 76
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments. 1r, 33; 2r, 33-42; ref to com, 42; rep of com, 48; 3r, 48-49; r.a., 76
Public Service Superannuation. 1r, 1004; 2r, 1038-41; ref to com, 1041; rep of com-3r, 1067; r.a., 1078
Railway. 1r, 581; 2r, 806-10, 885-7; 3r, 914; r.a., 1003
Railways (pro forma). 1r, 3
Trans-Canada Highway. 1r, 581; 2r, 629-38; ref to com, 638; rep of com, 751-4; 3r, 760; r.a., 785
War Veterans Allowance. 1r, 818; 2r, 911-4; ref to com, 914; rep of com, 966; 3r, 988; r.a., 1003
Windsor Harbour Commissioners. 1r, 9; 2r, 67-8; ref to com, 68; rep of com, 105; authority to print com proceedings, 106; 3r, 117-22; r.a., 785
Yukon. 1r, 612; 2r, 735-8; ref to com, 738; rep of com-3r, 766; r.a., 785

Bills, public, suspension of rules, 933-5

Blois, Hon. Frederick M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 29-32
Appropriation bill No. 1, 304-5
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 1107-9
Basis of reduction, 1108-9
International Boundary Commission bill, 828-32, 847-8, 874
Boundary line, defining of, 829-30
Expenses of Commission, 831
Introduction to Senate, 5
Nova Scotia
Farm wood-lots, utilization of, 30-31
Tourist industry, 30
Trans-Canada Highway, 30

Blois, Hon. Frederick M.—Concluded
Railway bill, 886
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 629-35, 638
Below-standard portions, reconstruction of, 630, 631
Construction and commitments, provincial statistics, 632-4
National parks, highway financed by federal Government, 631
Review of act and financial record, 629-31
Unemployment, 29-30, 304-5
Study of problem should be undertaken by Senate, 304
Textile industry, 304

Bois, Hon. Henri C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 268-70
Agriculture
Co-operatives, benefits from, 270
Farm population, provincial statistics, 268
Prices, stabilization needed, 268
Problems, 268-70
Quebec
Farmers' organizations, 270
Gross product and farm income, 1132
Report of Dr. J. W. Pelletier, St. Anne de la Pocatière Experimental farm, 1130-1
Land Use Committee
On-the-spot studies suggested, 270
Report, 1129-33

Borden, Sir Robert
Advocated Canadian-born appointee as Governor General, 81

Boucher, Hon. William A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 109-11
Grain industry
C.P.R. subsidies, 110-11
Feed grain, 109
Saskatchewan development, 109-11
Trade, international, extension advocated, 111

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.
British and Foreign Bible Society bill, 105
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1031-4
Constitutional rights of Canada, 1033-4
Contractual rights, 1032-3
County and district court judges, 1031
Retroactive feature, 1031-2
Superior Court judges, 1031
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 598, 988
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 606, 608-10, 611
Background of tax-sharing arrangements, 606, 608
Quebec non-acceptance of grants, 608
Provincial right to collect and distribute taxes, 609-10

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.—Concluded
Manpower and employment, 535
Old Age Security bill, 792, 793, 797
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 40-41
University grants
Quebec
Discrimination alleged due to non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 889-91, 892-4, 896
Canadian Universities Foundation, 890
Need of lapsed funds, 890-1, 894
Provincial Government ultimatum to universities, 891-2, 893, 894-5
Notice of motion recommending that Government consider paying Quebec universities grants voted in 1952-56, 718; withdrawn, 873
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 729

Bradette, Hon Joseph A.
International affairs, Canada's role, 427-33
NATO, report on Washington meeting, 427-9, 430, 431, 432
France, position in event of war, 427-8
Russian threat regarding Berlin, 427-32
Unification of East and West Germany, vote suggested, 428
Operation "Agadir", 432-3
Tariff restrictions, 429

British and Foreign Bible Society bill, 1r, 48, 2r, 73-74; ref to com, 74; rep of com-3r, 105; refund of fees 115; r.a., 327

British Columbia
Boundary lines, hardships of surveying, 831-2
Drug addicts, treatment, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516, 624
Forest industry, 282-3, 286-7
United Kingdom market, 283
Russian competition, 283
Hydro-electric power, 145-8
Agreement pending between Canada and United States, 146, 147, 148
Columbia River, 144, 145, 147-8
Mica Creek dam, 145, 147-8
Flood controls possible, 148
Proposed diversion to Fraser River, danger to Sockeye salmon, 148
Point Roberts, 832

British Columbia Telephone Company bill. 1r, 198-9; 2r, 228-30; ref to com, 230; rep of com, 232; 3r, 256; r.a., 714

British North America Act
Amendment re tenure of office of judges, motion for an Address to the Queen, 12, 19, 47, 517, 717, 788, 834-9, 964-5, 968-86, 988-1002, 1005-19, 1020-34, 1041-58; proposed amendment to motion, 992, ruled out of order, 1018-19; further amendment, agreed to, 1030; further amendment, 1048, agreed to, 1058; motion, as amended, agreed to, 1058
See Judges
Canada's national status under, 507-9, 513-14
Commissions of judges (forms tabled at request of Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 234
Federal Government jurisdiction in provincial taxation, 627-8, 629

Broadcasting
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Expenditures, 794
French programs with large audiences in English-speaking localities, 53
Television program "Close-Up", interview of divorce co-respondent
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Golding), 759; further inquiry, 779, 888-9
Protest against, 600, 626

Brunt, Hon. William R., Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 528-30, 718, 740
Authorized capital, 530
Investments in Canada, 528-9
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 297, 323
No. 2, 447
No. 3, 469, 470, 471, 485
British and Foreign Bible Society bill, 73-74, 105, 115
British Columbia Telephone Company bill, 232
British North America Act, motion for address to the Queen for amendment re tenure of office of judges, 971, 972, 983, 984, 985, 1018, 1027-30, 1058
Amendment to motion, 1030; agreed to, 1030
District and county court judges, 1029-30
Pensions, 1029
Provincial consents, 1028-9
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1090, 1092
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 60, 62, 63, 64
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 402, 404-18, 426, 427
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 823-4, 825, 826-7
Auditors, 826-7
Authorized borrowings, 825-6
Capital expenditures, 824
Trans-Canada Air Lines, 824

Brunt, Hon. William R., Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate—Continued
C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee bill—Cont.
Contracts prior to July 1, 1961, 824
Preferred stock, right of purchase, 826
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 914-16, 942
Costs and financing of, 915
Location, 916
Canadian Public Health Association bill, 87
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 161
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1168, 1173, 1175, 1176, 1178
Committee meetings, witnesses, 63
Divorce
Petition on ground of desertion, 582
Rules re advertisement and service of petition, 1082, 1083, 1117, 1118, 1119
Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company bill, 250
Estate Tax bill, 819, 820, 823, 844
Excise Tax bill, 857-9, 862, 950, 954, 959
Sales tax exemptions, 857-8
Security provision, 857
Federal-Provincial Tax-sharing Arrangements bill, 611
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 560, 563, 659, 662, 663, 669-70
Statements of transactions, penalties from neglect to supply, 669-70
Freight rates, 590
Government annuities, statement on fund, 1086
Hugessen, Hon. A. K. Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, 524
Income Tax bill, 917
Indian bill, 360
Internal Economy Committee, reports, 215, 250, 251, 252-3, 254, 349-50, 372, 549, 572-4, 1067-9, 1085, 1095-7, 1122-5, 1145, 1197-8
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1145, 1197-8
Intersessional authority, 1068
Judges bill, 1149
Land use, 141
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 557, 618, 619
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd., bill, 190, 191
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 74-75, 106
National Energy Board bill, 419, 420, 422-3, 424, 438, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445
Board, work commended, 442
Electric power, 424
Licences for exportation of power, expiration of, 429, 438-9
Saving clause, 441-2
Tolls for transmission of gas, 423, 442

Brunt, Hon. William R., Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate—Concluded
National Housing bill, 379, 380, 382, 392, 394, 395, 396
Old Age Security bill, 790, 792
Orders and Privileges Committee, 3-4
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 68-72
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 49
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1041
Selection Committee, 4
Senate employees, method of relating salaries to rates paid by other employers, 1190, 1194
Senate Pages, hockey team, 79
Stationery supply, 1068
Trade, international, 937, 938, 939, 940
Oil imports, 937
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 634
United Canada Insurance Company bill, 88
Wabush Lake Railway Company, Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 339
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 67-68, 119, 120-1
Costs of administering harbour commissions, 120-1

Buchanan, Hon. John A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 332-8
Alberta and Northwest Territories
Mineral wealth, 337-8
Pioneering and research, 335-8
Currency premium, 335
Suggestion for study of international exchange by Finance subcommittee, 335
Exports, 335
Old Age Security bill, 798
Peace River power development, 290
Production costs, control by co-operation of labour and management, 334

Budget Speech, accommodation for senators in Commons gallery, 474

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 271-3
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 208
No. 3, 469, 470
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 502
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 979
Canadian National Railways deficit, 470
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1172
Customs Excise bill, 865
Department of Forestry bill, 1071-4, 1075
Estate Tax bill, 845
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 684
Forest industry, 271-3

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival—Concluded
Competition in foreign markets, 1073-4
Currency premium, effect on, 271-3
Stabilization fund, study suggested, 272-3
Export value of various products, 271
Maritime pulp and paper mills, 271-2
Markets unsatisfactory, 272
Potential through proper management, 1072-3
University of New Brunswick, 1072
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 45

Caisses populaires, 205, 385, 775, 776
Desjardins, Alphonse, founder of, 775, 776
Interest rates, comparisons, 776

Cameron, Hon. Donald
Canada's centennial
Suggestions for celebration, 457-64
Central agency to co-operate with provinces, 458, 459
Construction and development, 460-1
Education, 461-2, 512
National stocktaking, opportunity for, 457-8
Policies suggested for second century of nationhood, 464
Provincial exhibitions to tour dominion, 459
World's Fair would detract from Centennial, 458-9
Education
Elementary and secondary, responsibility of provinces, 512
Research projects, 462
University grants, requirements, 462
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 223-5
Education and the arts, role of Jewish people, 223-5
Gélinas, Gratien, "the father of Canadian theatre", 224
Joseph, Henry, one of founders of Canada's Merchant Marine, 223
Senate chamber, acoustics, 25

Campbell, Hon. G. Peter
Return to chamber after absence, 737

Campground and picnic area developments, 295, 324-5, 648
Expenditure questioned, 303, 648

Canada Council
Report referred to Finance Committee, 625
Authority to print com proceedings, 779
Scholarships for nationals of foreign countries, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 1005, 1038

Canada Elections bill (Franchise to Indians). 1r, 339; 2r, 362-3; ref to com, 363; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 401; rep of com-3r, 479; r.a., 488

Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons). 1r, 1077; 2r, 1089-93; ref to com, 1093-4; rep of com, 1098; 3r, 1125; r.a., 1141

Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill. 1r, 9; 2r, 59-62; ref to com, 63-64; rep of com-3r, 128; r.a., 785

Canada's Centennial
Suggestions for celebration, 457-66, 506-14, 574-9, 672-5, 1128-9
Arts, national centre in Ottawa, 1129
Central agency to co-operate with provinces, 458, 459
Construction and development, 460-1, 1129
Costs, 1128-9
Education, 461-2, 512, 1128
Necessity of federal Government support to universities and scholarship programs, 1128
National stocktaking, opportunity for, 457-8
Policies suggested for second century of nationhood, 464
Provincial exhibitions to tour dominion, 459

Canada Shipping bill. 1r, 1079; 2r, 1102-7; ref to com, 1107; rep of com, 1115; 3r, 1128; r.a., 1141

Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 390, 402, 403-18, 425-7, 499, 532, 545-8, 676, 695-702, 713
Reports, 403-18, 545-8, 695-702
Rules formulated at Washington, January 1959, 403

Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement
Motion for approval of ratification of protocol, 834, 899-904; agreed to, 904
Exchange purchases, value of, 900
Most-favoured-nation treatment, 899-900
Wheat exports, 900
Motion to print copy of protocol in Minutes, 515

Canadian Bill of Rights. 1r, 1203; 2r, 1203-29; ref to com, 1229; rep of com, 1235; 3r, 1235-43; r.a., 1265

See Bill of Rights

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—See Broadcasting

Canadian Citizenship Council, 510

Canadian National Railways—See Railways

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill. 1r, 786; 2r, 823-7; ref to com, 827; authority to print com proceedings—rep of com, 856; 3r, 904; r.a., 1003

Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill. 1r, 856; 2r, 914-16, 940-2; ref to com, 942; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 967; 3r, 988; r.a., 1003

Canadian Public Health Association Bill. 1r, 48; 2r-ref to com, 87; rep of com, 139; 3r, 153; refund of fees, 165; r.a., 488

Canadian Reassurance Company bill. 1r, 128; 2r, 160-3; ref to com 163; rep of com, 214; 3r, 235; r.a., 714

Canadian Trade Relations Committee
Members, 14, 48; report, 527

Canadian Welfare Council, recommendations re health insurance, 797

Canol pipeline system, purchase from United States, 295

Capital punishment
Criminal Code (Capital Punishment) bill, 18; withdrawn, 848
Sentences and executions, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 340

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
Interest rate on Government advances, 130

Chambers of Commerce
Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4

Chile, earthquake and tidal wave, appropriation for relief, 757-8

China, Republic of Disarmament, 90-1
Recognition of, 274

Choquette, Hon. Lionel
Acting Speaker, 77, 515, 621, 639, 786
Rulings and statements
Motion for third reading, rescinding of, 639
Quotation from statement made in confidence by Member of Commons, not permissible, 519
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1018, 1032
Chairman, Committee of the Whole House, 946-62
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1162-4, 1176
Advertising, 1164
Conspiracy charges, 1163
Criminal proceedings, 1162-3
Loss-leaders, 1163-4
Mergers and monopolies, 1164
Criminal Code bill, 962-3
Hornet survival rifle, possession prohibited, 962
Taking of evidence, 962-3
Customs Tariff bill, 862-5, 868

Choquette, Hon. Lionel—Concluded
Automobile parts, 862-3
"Man-made fibres", 862
Tariff changes, general effect of, 864
Textiles, 863-4
Divorce
Jurisdiction, 102
Petition on ground of desertion, 581
Excise Tax bill, 946
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 600-7, 678, 679, 683, 708-11
Income tax, personal, payments to provinces, 601, 604, 606-7
University grants, 602-5, 678, 679, 708-11
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 659, 877
International Boundary Commission bill, 830, 831
Quebec universities, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 893, 895, 897
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 677

Churchill, Port of Wheat shipments, advantages, 84

Citizenship
British subjects in Canada, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 856-7, 888
Passports, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 788
Status of High Commissioners to Canada, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 712
See Old Age Security bill

Civil Service Administration Committee
Members, 14

Civil Service Commission
Reports, 113, 215, 250-4, 349-50, 372, 549, 572-4, 786
Salaries, Senate employees, method of relating salaries to rates paid by other employers, 1124, 1125, 1190, 1194

Claxton, Hon. Brooke, the late
Family allowances, sponsor of, 798
Funeral of, 787

Coal—See Minerals

College of General Practice of Canada bill. 1r, 151; 2r-ref to com, 189; rep of com, 266; 3r, 281; r.a., 714

Columbia River—See British Columbia

Combines—See Trade Practices

Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill. 1r, 1145; 2r, 1162-89; ref to com, 1189; authority to print com proceedings, 1190; rep of com, 1195; 3r, 1195-7; r.a., 1265

Commissions, Royal
Canada's Economic Prospects, 556-7
Great Slave Lake Railway, 296
Price Spreads, 207-8, 209-10

Committee of the Whole House
Excise Tax bill, 946-62

Committee of the Whole House
Banking and Commerce—Members, 13; reports, 128, 152, 173, 214, 215, 278, 326, 400-1, 425, 475, 479, 666, 676, 734, 766, 818, 910-11, 933, 946, 966, 1035, 1037, 1067, 1098, 1115, 1190, 1195, 1235
Canadian Trade Relations—Members 14, 48; report, 527
Civil Service Administration—Members, 14
Debates and Reporting—Members, 14
Divorce—Members, 9-10, 12, 532-3; reports, 18, 32, 52, 67, 75, 78, 89, 90, 100-2, 105, 111, 114, 127, 152, 164, 165, 173, 194, 215, 230-1, 250, 254, 255, 308, 327, 349, 356, 372, 401, 436, 437, 473, 475, 489, 497, 516, 525, 532, 549, 559, 574, 581-2, 649, 677, 714, 716-17, 734, 749, 756, 758, 823, 873, 1019-20, 1079-80
External Relations
Members, 13; report, 874
Motion to authorize review of Canada's role in international affairs, 200-1, 352-6, 427-35; agreed to, 435
Finance—Members, 13-14
Immigration and Labour
Members, 14
Motion for review of Department's annual report, 386-9, 497-8, 525-6; withdrawn, 670-2
Indian Affairs—Members: Senate, 328, 340, Commons, 328, 349, 532, 779, 786; reports, 489, 996-7, 1002-3; quorum, 489
Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts —Members, 13; reports, 113, 215, 250-4, 349-50, 372, 549, 572, 786, 1067-9, 1085, 1095-7, 1122-5, 1145, 1197-1203
Land Use
Members, 139; reports, 175, 1038, 1060-6, 1087-9, 1099-1102, 1129-34
Motion to appoint Special Committee, 139-43; agreed to, 143
Library of Parliament—Members: Senate, 13, 19, Commons, 197; report of Librarian tabled, 5
Manpower and Employment
Members, 533; reports, 676, 1135-7
Motion to appoint Special Committee, 533-43, 550-9, 569-71, 585-93, 613-19; agreed to, 619
Miscellaneous Private Bills—Members, 13; reports, 105, 598, 988
Natural Resources—Members, 14, 48; report, 515, 1084
Orders and Customs—Members, 3-4
Printing of Parliament—Members: Senate, 13, 22, Commons, 197-8
Public Buildings and Grounds—Members, 14

Committees—Concluded
Public Health and Welfare—Members, 14; reports, 139, 266
Restaurant of Parliament—Members: Senate, 13, 19, Commons, 198, 419
Selection—Members, 4; reports, 11, 13-14, 19
Standing Orders—Members, 13, reports, 349
Tourist Traffic—Members, 14
Transport and Communications—Members, 13, 47, 48; reports, 105, 106, 175, 232, 255, 266, 425, 438, 445, 623, 750, 856, 967, 1115
Whole, Committee of the, 946-62

Committees, meetings of Witnesses, attendance of ministers or other officials, 63, 64, 91, 103-4

Committees, Special
Appointed in last ten years, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 583-4

Committees, Standing
Subject-matters referred for report in last ten years, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 677, 703-7

Commonwealth
Parliamentary Association, biennial conference, Australia, 180-3, 216-18
Canadian delegation
Senate representation, 216-17
Visit to Israel, 180-3, 219-20
Prime Ministers, meeting of, first and final communiqués, 595-7
Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4
See Trade

Conferences
Constitutional Conference of Federal and Provincial Governments (1950), 1046-7
International, Senate representation, 54, 201
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 426-7
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, 216-17
United Nations Assembly, 54
Law of the Sea, votes on Canada's proposal re territorial limit and fishing zone, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 1004-5
See International Affairs

Congo
Participation of Canadian forces in United Nations operations, request from Commons for joint approval of, 1141, 1156-62; agreed to 1162
Constitutional aspect of Canada's assistance, 1158

Congo—Concluded
Security Council efforts to restore peace, 1156-8
United Nations role in conflict, 1158, 1159

Connolly, Hon. Harold
Canadian Public Health Association bill, 87, 165
Head office, location of, 87
Real property holdings, 87
National Energy Board bill, 438
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 425, 623

Connolly, Hon. John J.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 246-7
Bill of Rights, 1235
British and Foreign Bible Society bill, 73
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreements bill, 60, 61
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, television program "Close-Up", 626
Customs Tariff bill, 863, 864, 865-8
European Common Market, 866-7
Canadian markets, effect on, 866-7
GATT,
Items affected, 865
Negotiations in, respect to, 866
Rates of duties, 818
Russia, stated threat to Western trade, 867
Trade policy, need for, 867-8
Estate Tax bill, 821-3
Double taxation, 821-2
Gifts, non-acceptance of, 823
Insurance policies, 822
Reassessments, 822-3
European Senates, visits to, 1247-8
Excise Tax bill, 859
Revenue from tax, 859
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 602, 604
Feeds bill, 492, 495-6
Analysts and inspectors, 495-6
Powers of minister, 495
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 660, 669, 718-21
Broad application of bill, 718-19
Credit, important item in economy of country, 719
Property and civil rights, provincial jurisdiction, 719
Retailers, burden imposed on by bill, 720
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 280-1
Competition to western Canadian oil, question of, 280-1
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1246-7
Montreal Life Insurance Company bill, 126

Connolly, Hon. John J.—Concluded
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 75, 106
National Energy Board bill, 423, 424
Property and civil rights of provinces, 423
Regulating authority for transmission of gas, 423
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 71-72, 106, 122
Ports within St. Lawrence Seaway, need for overall policy, 122
Power of disallowance, Canadian statutes, 576
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 36, 37, 41
Province House, Charlottetown, P.E.I., 246-7
Stepinac, Cardinal, the late, 329-30
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 367, 369, 370
Name of company, origin, 369, 370
Validity of project, question of, 370-1
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 67, 68, 105

Construction
Building permits, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 489, 499, 516-17
Canada's Centennial, suggestions for, 460-1, 1129
See National Housing bill, Housing

Convenient Credit Limited bill—See Laurentide Finance Company bill

Courtemanche, Hon. Henri, P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 25-29
Canada Elections bill, 1089
Economic prospects, 27-28
Forest resources, 28
Quebec, 28
Introduction to Senate, 18
Nuclear war, Canada's part as peacemaker, 26-27
Vanier, Major General Georges Philias, Governor General, tribute to, 26

Credit buying
Abuses in instalment buying, 747
Bonuses to lenders, 721-2
Expansion in, 560, 564-5
Advertising, misconceptions, 565-6
"Credit selling", 565
Interest rates, 560-6, 743
Tables of computation, 561
Mortgages, exploitation and misrepresentations, 562-3, 743
Property and civil rights, provincial jurisdiction, 719
Protection of borrowers needed, 167, 721-2, 742, 746-7
See Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill

Crerar, Hon. T. A., P.C.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 296, 301, 302-4
No. 2, 447-8
No. 3, 468, 469, 470, 472, 485
No. 4, 647-9
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 994
Camp sites and picnic area developments, 303, 648
Canada's Centennial, 926, 942, 1058
Canadian National Railways, deficit, 469, 470
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 162
Customs Tariff bill, 866
Department of Forestry bill, 1074-6
Overlapping of services between federal and provincial Governments, 1074-5
Preservation of forests, 1075-6
Department of Justice bill, 248
Estimates
Consideration of, Committee of the Whole House suggested, 647
Supplementary, 278, 279
Excise Tax bill, 859-60, 952-5, 956
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 580-1, 684-5
Feeds bill, 491, 493, 494, 496
Analysts and inspectors, appointment of, 491
Powers of minister, 496
Government annuities, 1040-1. See 1086
Government expenditures, 301-3, 447-8, 648-9
Postponements suggested, 648-9
Public demands for, 859-60
Indian affairs, Joint Committee, 341-2
Indian bill, 476
Discrimination in tax exemptions, 476
Internal Economy Committee reports, 250, 251, 253, 254
International Boundary Commission bill, 875
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 555-9
Canada's Economic Prospects, Royal Commission on, 556-7
Recommendations should be studied, 557
Private enterprise, taxation, 558
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 190, 191
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 106
National Energy Board bill, 419, 420, 421, 423, 444-5
National Housing bill, 497-8
Advances to C.M.H.C., method of, 398
Government assistance in housing, need for questioned, 397-8
Old Age Security payments, 301-2, 447-8
Polar Continental Shelf Project, 647, 648
Production costs, 868, 873

Crerar, Hon. T. A., P.C.—Concluded
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1040-1
Railway bill, 807-9
Level crossings, elimination of, 809
Senate powers in financial legislation, 954-5
Trade, international, 870-3
European Common Market, 870-3
United Kingdom problems of association with, 871-2
United States, free trade treaty of 25 years, suggested, 872
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 637-8
Rising costs, 637, 638
Unemployment
Insurance fund, depletion, 302, 557-8
Insurance principle, neglect of, 302, 304
Job-finding, responsibility in, 558
Regulatory powers might have to be assumed by Government, 302, 303-4
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 120, 121
Costs of administering harbour commission, 120, 121

Criminal Code—See Combines Investigation and the Criminal Code bill

Criminal Code (Capital Punishment) bill. 1r, 18; bill withdrawn, 848-9
Criminal Code bill. 1r, 933; 2r, 962-4; ref to com, 964; rep of com, 966; 3r, 988; r.a., 1078

Croll, Hon. David A.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 321-4
Bill of rights, 1217-19
Freedoms not protected, 1218-19
Incorporation in Constitution suggested, 1218
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 838, 976, 985, 1030, 1047-8
Constitutional aspect, 1047-8
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1091-2, 1093
Age qualification, 1091, 1092, 1093
Obligatory voting, 1091-2
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 63
Claxton, Hon. Brooke, the late, sponsor of family allowances, 798
Committee meetings—Witnesses, suggestion for attendance of minister or deputy, 63
Criminal Code (Capital Punishment) bill, 18, 352, bill withdrawn, 848-9
Divorce bills, 514
Estate Tax bill, 935
Excise Tax bill, 958-60
Margarine, increase in production, 959
Edible oil industry, 959-60

Croll, Hon. David A.—Continued
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 349, 559-67, 660, 662, 663, 875-81
Advertising, misconceptions of, 565-6
Constitutionality of bill, 876-9
Credit expansion, 560, 564-5
"Credit selling", 565
Interest rates, 560-6
An Act respecting Interest on Small Loans, opinion of Deputy Minister of Justice, 878-9
Tables of computations, 561
Mortgages, exploitation and misrepresentations, 562-3
Principles of bill, 561-2, 876
Health insurance, 797-9
Canadian Welfare Council recommendations, 797
Housing, tight money policy, 322
International affairs, 273-7
Communist China, recognition long overdue, 274
Germany, dangers from rearmament, 274-6
Krupp, Alfried, power in steel industry, 276
Middle East tensions, 273-4
NATO, 275, 276
Ten-nation committee on disarmement, Canada's role in, 273
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 175-8
Attainment of civil and political rights, 176
Contributions to Canadian life, 175-6, 177
Hart, Aaron, 176
Hart, Ezekiel, elected in 1807 to Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada, 176
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 539-41
Committee membership, 539
Unemployment, 540-1, 1135-6
Conditions to be studied in relation to, 540-1
National Housing bill, 394-7
Bank loans, 395-6
Construction, solution to unemployment, 397
Farmers, loans to, 395
Yearly housing requirements, 396
Old Age Security bill, 795-9
Background of bill, 795-6
Blind or disabled persons, 796
Income tax, 796-7
Residence requirement, 796
Social security measures, overall study needed, 798-9
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 49
Senate power to amend money bills, 958-9
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1199-1200

Croll, Hon. David A.—Concluded
Unemployment, 321-4, 539, 540-1, 1135-6
Categories of, 1136
Costs, 1136
Insurance fund, abuses, 323
Statistics, 322, 540
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 664, 665, 725, 726
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 117-20
Extension of boundaries, 117-20
St. Lawrence Seaway, 117-19
Small harbours, financial needs, 119-20

Crowsnest Pass Agreement on freight rates, 110-11, 470

Curling, Dominion and Scotch Cup Champions, 489-90

Currency—See Money

Customs Tariff
Automobile parts, 862-3
"Man-made fibres", 862
Textiles, 863-4
Rates of duties, to be printed in Minutes, 818

Customs Tariff bill. 1r, 786; 2r, 862-8; ref to com, 868; rep of com, 910-11; 3r, 936; r.a., 1003

Davies, Hon. W. Rupert
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 295, 297
No. 2, 448
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 60, 62
Manpower and Employment, special committee, 617, 618
Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada bill, 163
Old Age Security payments, suggestion for limitation as to income, 448
Restaurant of Parliament, 22

Debates and Reporting Committee—Members, 14

Decades, reckoning of, 66

Defence, 82
Defence Production, Department of, contracts awarded in Nova Scotia, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 932
DEW line, United States control of operations, 222
Disarmament, Republic of China, 90-91
Expenditures, 551, 773
Atlantic provinces
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 115
Relation to economy of, 187-8, 221
Pepperell Air base, suggestion for utilization, 187
Germany, dangers from rearmament, 274-6

Defence, 82—Concluded
Government proposals, lack of information, 222
Joint committee on, suggested, 57-58
Nuclear war, Canada's part as peacemaker, 26-27
Withdrawal of forces from Aldershot, 449
See National Defence, Department of de Gaulle, General Charles, President of France

Addresses at state luncheon, 517, 520-2

Department of Forestry bill. 1r, 1004; 2r, 1069-77; ref to com, 1077; rep of com, 1085; 3r, 1098; r.a., 1141

Department of Justice bill, 1r, 175; 2r, 248; ref to com, 249; rep of com, 278; 3r, 309; r.a., 327

Desjardins, Alphonse
Founder of Caisses populaires, 775, 776

Diefenbaker, Right Hon. John G., P.C., M.P., Prime Minister
Addresses:
de Gaulle, General Charles, President of France, state luncheon, 520-1
Vanier, Major General Georges Philias, installation as Governor General of Canada, 15-16
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., unveiling of marble portrait, 803-4
Visit to Washington, text of final communiqué, 758, 765

Disarmament, Republic of China, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 90-91

Divisions
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 773

Divorce
Bills, 78, 90, 102, 107, 108-9, 111, 115, 123, 127, 129, 130-1, 138, 143-4, 150, 152-3, 153-4, 165, 173-4, 184-5, 194-5, 199-200, 201-2, 231, 256, 279-80, 282, 309-10, 326-7, 339-40, 371-2, 385, 390, 435, 449-50, 479, 480, 490, 499, 505, 514, 518, 527, 543-4, 568, 569, 613, 693, 713-14, 717, 755-6, 758-9, 760, 787-8, 788-9, 832-3, 839-40, 875, 908, 916, 1038, 1085
Bills and reports, numbering of, 202-5, 236-7
Committee
Members, 9-10, 12, 532-3
Reports, 18, 32, 52, 67, 75, 78, 89, 90, 100-2, 105, 111, 114, 127, 152, 164, 165, 173, 194, 215, 230-1, 250, 254, 255, 308, 327, 339, 349, 356, 401, 436, 473, 475, 489, 497, 516, 525, 532, 549, 559, 574, 581-2, 677, 714, 716-17, 734, 749, 756, 758, 834, 873, 1019-20, 1079-80
Work of, 1084-5

Divorce—Concluded
Co-respondent, protest against interview of on C.B.C. television program "Close-Up", 600, 626; inquiry (Hon. Mr. Golding), 759, 779, 888-9
Delay by Commons in passage of bills, 519; passed by Commons without amendment, 1256
Detectives, appearances before committee, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 357, 373-4, 450-2, 453-5
Jurisdiction, 100-2, 154-60
B.N.A. Act, distribution of legislative powers, 155
Minority rights, 101, 159
Ontario, 156-7
Petitions, 10, 19, 47, 67, 77, 113-14, 308, 716
Contested, 113-14
Filing date, 10, 67, 489
Ground of desertion, Dorothy Nora Alice Hurst Earle, 581-2, 639-41
Rules as to publication of notice and service of petition, motion to amend, 1082-4, 1116-22; motion withdrawn, 1122
Statistics, 1080
Validity of provincial divorces, 1019-20

Documents tabled, 9, 18, 24-25, 47, 52, 66-67, 77, 90, 105, 114, 139, 151, 198, 214, 232, 255, 266, 278, 308, 339, 349, 385, 400, 419, 437, 449-50, 457, 474, 489, 499, 515, 523, 527, 532, 581, 623, 649, 676, 716, 750, 758, 766, 787, 818, 834, 888, 910, 935, 988, 1004, 1035, 1067, 1079, 1098, 1128, 1141, 1185, 1235, 1245, 1254, 1255, 1256

Drouin, Hon. Mark R., Speaker
Addresses
To the Governor General:
In reply to the Speech from the Throne—
See Address in reply
Message of thanks from Governor General, 474
Requesting transmission of an Address to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and the Prince Philip on the occasion of the birth of a Prince, 196, 197, 255
Message from House of Commons, 196, 255
Message to the House of Commons, 197
Australian guests of the Senate
Prime Minister, Right Hon. Robert G. Menzies, 783, 785
Senator Hon. Sir Walter Cooper and Private Secretary, Mr. McGregor, 716
Budget speech, accommodation for senators in Commons gallery, 474
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, documents tabled, 532. See pp. 545-8
Decades, reckoning of, 66

Drouin, Hon. Mark R., Speaker—Concluded
Internal Economy Committee
Civil Service Commission report, 113
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1197-8
Japanese Prime Minister, Hon. Nobuske Kishi, guest of the Senate, 23-24
Royal assent, notice, 66, 326, 474, 712, 782, 988, 1077, 1141, 1265
Rulings and statements
Amendment to motion for address to the Queen, re B.N.A. Act, 993-4, 995, 1018-19; ruled out of order, 1019
Bills
Amending of, 726
Explanation immediately after first reading, 151
May not be read third time except with leave; mover may explain after motion is stated by Chair, 874
Rule permitting explanation in Senate by minister from Commons, 103-4
Senate power to amend, 726
Third reading
Motion should be made, then debate can follow, 1125
Rescinding of motion, 639
Courts and judges, due respect should be shown in debate, 1209
Debate, though out of order, allowed to proceed unless objection made, 159-60
Estimates, discussion on point of order, 279
Form of motion for approval of participation of Canadian forces in U.N. operations in the Congo, 1158
House of Commons
Committee proceedings should not be quoted extensively and quotation should include evidence on both sides of question, 1188
Debates, reference to out of order, 991
Questions should be directed to senator making speech, 612
Quotation from statement made in confidence by member of Commons not permissible, 519
Senator may speak second time to elucidate point, 731
Senate
Accounts tabled, 77
Chamber, acoustics, 25
Prayers, exclusion of public, 767
Senators, new, introduced, 5, 18, 966
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., speech at unveiling of marble portrait of, 804-5

Drug addicts, treatment in British Columbia, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516, 624

Dupuis, Hon. Vincent
Appropriation bill No. 3, 472
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 993

Dupuis, Hon. Vincent—Concluded
Divorce
Jurisdiction, 157
Rules, 1121
Excise Tax bill, 957-8
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 605, 606
Hugessen, Hon. A. K., Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, 524
Indian bill, 477-8
Rights of first citizens, 477-8
Judges bill, 1154-6
Contractual feature of appointments, 1154-6
LaSalle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 620
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1234
National Energy Board bill, 441
Old Age Security bill, 799
Scholarships, 345
Senate right to amend money bills, 957-8
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate chamber, 1201
University grants, non-payment to Quebec universities of amounts voted in 1952-56, 897

Earle, Dorothy Nora Alice Hurst, divorce petition on ground of desertion, 581-2, 639-41

Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company bill, 1r, 199; 2r, 249-50; ref to com, 250; rep of com, 266; 3r, 281; r.a., 714

Economic conditions, 82-83, 85, 205-6
Atlantic provinces, 221, 592-3
National Defence expenditures, relation to, 221
Problems, suggestions for relief of, 221
Foreign investments in Canada, 28, 206, 852-4, 1114
Canadian money needed for developments, 28
Royal Commission on, 556-7
See Manpower and Employment, Unemployment

Education
Apprenticeships and technical training, need for, 587
National scheme suggested, 693
Business leadership to aid in advancement of, 652
Exchange of personnel, 652
Culture in universities, 509
Enrolments, 343-4; other countries, 343-4
Expenditures, 343
Federal grants, 345
Provincial decrease per student, 345
To date, 603, 708-11
National Advisory Committee on Educational Research—activities and financial requirements, 346

Education—Concluded
Parental responsibility, 259-60
Provincial right to collect and distribute taxes, 609-10
Religion in schools, 260-1
Research projects, 462
Russia, significance of scientific achievements, 258, 262
Scholarships, Government responsibility in, 344-5, 1128
Teachers
Qualifications, 261-2; salaries, 262
University grants
Canadian Universities Foundation, 890
Quebec
Discrimination alleged due to non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 889-98
Provincial Government ultimatum to universities, 891-2, 893, 894-5
Notice of motion recommending that Government consider paying Quebec universities grants voted in 1952-56, 718; withdrawn, 873
Provincial grants by institution, 1951-60, 807-11
See Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill

Elections
Age of voters, 1091, 1092-3
Compulsory voting, suggestion for, 1091-2
Costs, 1090-1
Rural constituencies, 1089-90
See Canada Elections bill (Franchise to Indians), Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons)

Electric power—See Energy

Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill. 1r, 856; 2r, 906-8, ref to com, 908; rep of com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003

Emergency sittings, 479

Employment—See Manpower and Employment

Energy
Electric power, 288-91, 424
Exports, 289, 456
Gas, transmission of Provincial rights, 422, 423-4
Tolls, 422, 423
National Energy Board bill, 419-25, 438-45, 487-8
Board, work commended, 442
Nova Scotia, costs, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142, 1245
Peace River development, 288-91; Wenner-Gren interests, 289-91

Estate Tax bill. 1r, 786; 2r, 818-23, 843-6; ref to com, 846; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003
See Taxation

Estimates
Interim supply, 445-9
Undertaking that passage will not preclude further discussion, 446, 646-7
Finance Committee, proposed reference to, 177
Replies to questions, 324-5
Supplementary, 278-9, 292-8, 307, 308, 311, 324-5, 1257-9
Tabled, 112. See p. 108

Euler, Hon. W. D., P.C.
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 528, 530-1, 738-41
Company name, significance of, 531
Discrimination against individuals and Canadian compagnies, 531, 738-9
Operational expenses of insurance companies, 739-40
Premium income, 740-1
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 501-2, 503
British preferential tariff, 502
British North America Act
Canada's national status under, 507, 508
Suggestion for strictly Canadian Constitution, 1051
Tenure of office of judges, amendment re, 976, 1018, 1048-51
Contractual feature, 1049
Uniformity in retirement of judges, 1049-50
Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement, 901-4
Coal purchases from Russia during strike in Wales, 901-2
Consultation in case of unfair trade practices, 903-4
Lumber, Russian exports to Britain, 902
Trade commissioners and producers, co-operation needed, 903
Value of exchange purchases under new agreement, 902
Wheat exports, 902
Uncertain market, 902
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 942
Defence expenditures, 773
Divorce bills, delay by Commons in passage of, 518, 716
Excise Tax bill, 858, 860-1, 862, 947, 948-51, 956, 957, 961, 962
Margarine, 860-2, 948-51
Colouring, 949
Food exemptions compared with, 861
Farmers' use of, 861
Tax, discrimination alleged, 861, 948-51
Expenditures of Government departments, 773
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 602

Euler, Hon. W. D., P.C.—Concluded
Freight rates, 590
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 535
Motions, procedure, 143
Railway bill, 810
Restaurant of Parliament, 21-2
Senate chamber, acoustics, 25
Trade, international, 772-5, 938, 939, 940
Free trade
Secondary industries, effect on, 772-3
United States, economic union with as alternative to free trade, 774-5
Russia, importance of co-existence with, 774

European Common Market—See Trade

European Senates, visits to, 1247-8

Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill. 1r, 198-9; 2r, 263-4; ref of com, 264; rep of com, 598-600; ref back to com, 600; rep of com-amdts adopted-3r, 988; refund of fees, 1038; r.a., 1141

Exchange Stabilization Fund, reported sale of American funds for Canadian exchange, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1098, 1137

Excise Tax bill, 1r, 786; 2r, 857-62; ref to com, 862; rep of com with amdt, 911; rep of com consid in Com of Whole, 946-62; m that com amdt be not concurred in and that bill be reported without amdt, 947; agreed to, 962; 3r, 987; r.a., 1003

Export and Import Permits bill. 1r, 598; 2r, 654-6; ref to com, 656; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678; r.a., 715

Exports, 83, 85, 282, 283, 335
Australian trade, 501, 504
Canadian currency, effects from premium on, 243-4, 246, 271-3, 335
Forest industry, 271-3
Export values of various products, 271
Maritime pulp and paper mills, 271-2
Unsatisfactory markets, 272

External Relations—See International affairs

External Relations Committee
Members, 13
Motion to authorize review of Canada's role in international affairs, 200-1, 352-6, 427-35; agreed to, 435
Report, 874

Fairclough, Hon. Ellen L., Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, speech at unveiling of marble portrait of Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, 803

Farming—See Agriculture

Farquhar, Hon. Thomas, felicitations on 85th birthday, 66

Farris, Hon. J. W. de B.
Bills, public
Rules
Explanation in Senate by minister from Commons, 103-4
Suspension of, 934, 935
British Columbia Telephone Company bill, 198-9, 228-30
Acquisition of shares, 199, 228-30
British North America Act
Amendment re tenure of office of judges, 12, 47, 517, 970, 974-85, 989-93; amendment to motion proposed, 992-3, ruled out of order, 1019
Contractual rights, 976-86
District and County Court judges, 974, 975, 976, 989
Retroactive feature, 976, 981, 984
Superior Court judges, 974, 975, 976, 989
Divorce, petition on ground of desertion, 581, 582-3
Excise Tax bill, 950
Feeds bill, 516
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 535
Senate, role of, 992
University grants, amounts voted to Quebec in 1952-56, 891, 897

Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation bill—See International Loan Company

Federal-provincial relations
Tax-sharing arrangements
Income tax payments, 601, 604, 607
Provincial grants to date, 603
Quebec
University grants
Colleges which have applied for grants, 601
Discrimination alleged due to non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 889-98

Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements bill. 1r, 580-1; 2r, 600-12, 626-9; ref to com, 629; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678-92; r.a., 715

Feeds bill. 1r, 474-5; 2r, 490-6; ref to com, 496; rep of com-amdt adopted, 515-16; 3r, 525; r.a., 715

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.
Bill of Rights, 1227-9
Delay in receipt from Commons, 1228
Embodiment in Constitution suggested, 1228
Minister of Justice, powers of, 1229
Preamble to bill, proposed, 1228-9
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, television program "Close-up", protest against interview of divorce corespondent, 600

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.—Concluded
Canadian Public Health Association bill, 153
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1180-1
Re-sale price maintenance, 1180-1
Divorce
Bills, 390
Rules, 1121, 1122
Excise Tax bill, 960
Margarine, tax-free in Newfoundland, 960
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 747, 748
Abuses in instalment buying, 747
Senate committee to study problem, suggested, 747
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 225-6
National Parole Board, representations for appointment of woman member, inquiry, 234, 308-9
New Brunswick, achievements in public health measures, 153
Old Age Security bill, 794-5
Trade, international, 944-6
Deficit in Canada's foreign trade, 946
Negotiations with Inner Six and Outer Seven, need for immediate action, 946
Secondary industries, importance to export trade, 944
O.E.E.C. (Organization for European Economic Co-operation), 945
Wheat, tariff on, 946
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., felicitations on receipt of honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Gallaudet College, 759

Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill. 1r, 349; 2r, 559-67, 656-64, 669-70, 741-9, 760-3, 775-8, 875-81; ref to com, 881; authority to print com proceedings, 1037
See Credit buying

Finance Committee—Members, 13-14; reports, 779
British Columbia strike, assistance, in settlement of, 433
International currency exchange, subcommittee for study of, suggested, 335

Firearms
Hornet Survival rifle, possession prohibited, 962, 963

Fire insurance companies, settlement of claims, 167

Fisheries
British Columbia
Sockeye salmon, danger from proposed diversion of Columbia River, 148
Newfoundland, 97-100
Fisheries Council of Canada, recommendations, 99-100
Inspections, 97-98

Fisheries—Concluded
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 9, 86-87, 97-100, 266-7, 281, 715
Sales, uncontrolled, 99
Salted fish, 98-99
Unemployment insurance, fishermen's benefits, 107-8, 116, 255

Flag, national Suggestions for, 510-11
Union Jack, significance in world history, 650-1

Forestry, 282-3, 286-7, 296
British Columbia, importance to, 282-3
Comparisons with United States, 1070
Competition in foreign markets, 1073-4
Russia, 283, 902
Currency premium, effect on, 271-3
Employment from, 1069
Exports, 271, 282, 283, 1069
Fire losses, 1070
Maritimes, unsatisfactory markets, 271-2
Nova Scotia, farm woodlots, utilization of, 30-31
Potential through proper management, 1072-3
University of New Brunswick, 1072
Quebec resources, 28
Wild-life, abusive practices, 168-70
See Department of Forestry bill

France
Controversy in regard to NATO command, 427-8
President, General Charles de Gaulle, addresses at state luncheon, 517, 520-2

Franklin, Lieutenant-Colonel W. J., retired Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Commons, 472, 483-4

Freedom of religion, 1206-12, 1225-7
Jehovah's Witnesses, Supreme Court decision, 1208-11, 1226-7
See Bill of Rights

Freight rates, 555, 1107-10
Feed grain and other crops, 292, 294, 315-17, 318-19
Maritimes, employment and business, effect on, 616

Freight Rates Reduction bill. 1r, 1079; 2r, 1107-10; ref to com, 1110; rep of com, 1115; 3r, 1128; r.a., 1141

GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), 356, 769
Negotiations on, 866
Tariff changes, 865
Work accomplished by, 1111
See Trade

Germany
Leadership in economic field, 355

Germany—Concluded
Military expenditures, 354
NATO, association with, 352-5
Rearmament, dangers from, 274-6
Krupp, Alfried, power in steel industry, 276
Russian threat of separate peace treaty with East Germany, 428-32, 433

Gershaw, Hon. F. W.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 123-6
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 504
Canada's Centennial, 464-6
College of General Practice of Canada bill, 151, 189
Divorce
Bills, 326-7, 499, 505, 908
Reports, 327
Farmers, Government aid to, 124
Health and welfare, 123-5
Accident toll, 125
Older citizens, accommodation problems, 125
State medicine, 126
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 7
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 222-5
Oil, western Canada, surplus, 869-70
Venezuela, exports to Montreal, 869-70
Restrictions on Canadian imports, 870
Trade, international, 869-70

Gladstone, Hon. James
Canada Elections bill (Franchise to Indians), 362
Indian affairs
Committee reports, 489, 966-7, 1002-3
Educational needs, 1002-3
Treaty rights, 358, 1003
Indian bill, 357-9, 478-9
Fears in relation to bill, 358

Gold
See Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, Minerals

Golding, Hon. William H.
Bill of Rights, 1242
Divorce
Bills, 173-4, 184-5, 194-5, 693, 832-3
Committee reports, 165, 173, 194
Petition on ground of desertion, 641-2
Rules, 1120-1
Television program "Close-Up", interview of divorce co-respondent, inquiry, 758; further inquiry, 779, 888-9
Excise Tax bill, 960-2
Farm income, 83, 961
Senate power to amend money bills, 961

Gouin, Hon. L. M.
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1008-14
Constitutional rights of Canadian Parliament, 1013-14
Retroactive feature, 1008-11
Superior Court judges, 1009-10, 1013
Pensions, 1009
Excise Tax bill, 958
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 678, 680-1
University grants
Quebec, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 897-8

Government
Deficit financing, 480-1
Expenditures, 144-5, 298-9, 302-4, 314, 648-9, 773, 793-4, 1074-5, 1076, 1259-60
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 794
Departmental, 773
Forestry, 1074-5, 1076
Unnecessary items, postponement suggested, 648-9

Government annuities, 1040-1
Statement on fund, 1086
Amount transferred to maintain reserve (1909-59), 1086

Governor General
Addresses to:
In reply to Speech from the Throne—See Address in reply
Installation of, address by Prime Minister, 15-16
Reply by His Excellency, 16-17
Requesting transmission of address of congratulations to the Queen and the Prince Philip on the birth of a Prince, 197, 255
Massey, Right Hon. Vincent, first Canadian-born appointee, 52-53, 81
Opening of Parliament, 1; Speech from the Throne, 1-3
Message of thanks for address in reply, 474
Prorogation of Parliament, Speech from the Throne by deputy of the Administrator of the Government, 1269-71
Royal Assent, 785
By deputies:
Judson, Hon. Wilfred, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 1078
Kerwin, Hon. Patrick, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, 75-76, 327, 488, 1003
Taschereau, Hon. Robert, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 714-15
See Locke, Hon. Charles Holland

Grain
Churchill, port of, wheat shipments, advantages of, 84
Feed grain and other crops, freight assistance, 110-11, 292, 294, 315-17, 318-19
Unharvested crops, 37-39, 41, 292-4, 314-18,
Wheat
Advantages of tariff arrangements in Benelux countries, 930
Exports to Russia, 900, 902
Uncertain market, 902
Payments to western producers, 1258-9
Tariff on shipments to Inner Six, 946
See Prairie Grain Loans bill, Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill

Grant, Hon. Thomas V.
Welcome on return after accident, 517-18

Great Slave Lake Railway, Royal Commission on, 296

Gross national product, in relation to trade, 1112

Haig, Hon. John T., P.C.
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 301-2, 306-8
No. 3, 469
Bills, public, suspension of rules, 934
Canada Elections (Franchise to Indians), bill, 362, 363
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 824-5, 827
Yearly deficit, 469, 824-5, 827
Divorce petition on ground of desertion, 642-4
Excise Tax bill, 955-7
Margarine
Dairy industry, effect on, 955-7
Manitoba, vote on colouring of, 956
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 686-8
Feeds bill, 494
Finance Charges (Disclosure) Bill, 760-3
Small Loans Act, provisions of, 761
Small loan companies, service to persons in low-income bracket, 761-3
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 7
Indian bill, 362
Manitoba, tax revenue, 306, 307
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 74
National Energy Board bill, 421-2, 443-4
National Housing bill, 383, 384, 396
Four-bedroom homes, problem of re-sale, 384
Prairie farmers, hardships encountered, 306-8
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 46
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 37-39

Haig, Hon. John T., P.C.—Concluded
Manitoba, disaster in unthreshed crops, 37-39
Restaurant of Parliament, 20-21
University grants
Quebec, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 891-2, 895, 896
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 726

Hampton site, London, England, sale to United States, 296-7

Harbours—See Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill

Harrington Tree Farm, 140

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.
Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada bill, 400-1
Appropriation bill No. 1, 293, 297, 325
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1041-7
Constitutional aspects, 1045-7
Constitutional Conference of Federal and Provincial Governments, 1046-7
Contractual obligation, 1044-5
County and District Court judges, 1042-3
Retroactive feature, 1043-4
Superior Court judges, 1043
Canada Elections bill, (Franchise to Indians), 401
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 128
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 161, 162, 163, 214
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1171-9, 1190, 1195-7
Exchequer Court added under act, 1175-7, 1195
Exports, exemption for, 1171-2, 1196
Loss-leaders, 1174, 1195-6
Principle of legislation outmoded and antiquated, 1177-8
Promotional allowances, 1173
Resale price maintenance, 1177
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 326
Customs Tariff bill, 910-11
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 907-8, 910
Estate Tax bill, 843-6, 910
Insurance proceeds, 843-4
Properties
Disposed of in consideration of annuity, 844
Situs of, 844-6
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 599-600
Excise Tax bill, 857, 858, 911, 962
Export and Import Permits bill, 666
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 602, 604, 666

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—Concluded
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 656-64, 669, 1037
Acts previously passed to protect borrowers, 657-9
Bonuses, 559-60
Definitions in bill, broad scope of, 656-7, 662
Interest, problems in calculations of, 657
Freight rates, effect on business and employment in Maritimes, 616
Income Tax bill, 905, 917-25, 933, 1035-7
Companies
Associated, determination of, 919
Development expenses, 1035-6
Duplicate taxation, estate tax and succession duties, 918
Foreign tax, 920, 923-4
Income sources, 922-5, 1036-7
Instalment payments, 917
Non-residents, 918-19
Penalties, 921-2, 1037
Property, 1035, 1036
Indian bill, 401
International Boundary Commission bill, 848
International Development Association bill, 910
International Savings and Mortgage Corporation bill, 400
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 613-19
Committee membership, 619
Government role in problem, 614-15
Montreal Life Insurance Company bill, 152, 173
Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada bill, 164, 215
National Housing bill, 396
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 49
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 48
Tax exemption period as encouragement to private enterprise, suggested, 616-17
Unemployment
Atlantic provinces, 615-16
Nova Scotia, 616
Insurance fund, 616, 617-18
Pensioners receiving benefits, 618
Seasonal, 615
United Canada Insurance Company bill, 128
Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company bill, 734
Wawanesa Mutual Life Insurance Company bill, 734
Western Surety Company bill, 666

Health and welfare
Accident toll, 125
Canadian Public Health Association bill, 48, 87, 139, 153, 165
Health insurance, 797-9
Canadian Welfare Council recommendations, 797

Health and welfare—Concluded
National Sanitarium Association bill, 151, 192-4, 266, 309, 714
New Brunswick, public health measures, 153
Older citizens, 125
State medicine, 126, 840-2
Canadian Medical Association resolution, 840
Government monopoly, restrictions imposed by, 841-2
Saskatchewan scheme, 840-1
United Kingdom costs, 840
Tuberculosis
Treatment record, 192-4; deaths, 193
Northwest Territories, 194
Yukon, medical services, need for consideration, 737-8
See Old Age Security bill, Social security

Higgins, Hon. John G.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 165-70
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 500-1, 502
Anti-dumping duties, 501
British preferential tariff, 501
Margins of preference, 500
Value for duty, determination of, 500-1
British North America Act
Canada's national status under, 513, 574-9, 1051-2
Tenure of office of judges, amendment re, 982, 990, 1051-2
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1169, 1170
Credit facilities, protection needed for borrowers, 167, 721-2
Estate Tax bill, 821
Finance Charges (Disclosure), bill, 721-2
Bonuses to lenders, 721-2
Fire insurance companies, settlement of claims, 167
Forestry and wildlife, abusive practices, 168-70
Hugessen, Hon. A. K. Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, 524
Internal Economy Committee reports, 254, 1201
International Development Association bill, 881-3, 884
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 881
Articles of agreement, 882-3
Canadian subscription, 881
Land use, 141
Newfoundland, eleventh anniversary of Union, 195
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 86-87, 267
Background of bill, 86-87
Power of disallowance, Canadian Statutes, 575-6
Railway bill, 807

Higgins, Hon. John G.—Concluded
Senate, role of, unappreciated, 165-6
Press tribute, 166
Statute of Westminster, 507, 513
Stepinac, Cardinal, the late, 332
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1201

High Commissioners to Canada, citizenship status, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 712

Hnatyshyn, Hon. John
Divorce rules, 1083
Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation bill (International Loan Company), 338
National Housing bill, 375-9
Interest rates, 376-7
Limited-dividend housing, 376, 378
Low-income eligible borrowers, assistance for, 377
Review of housing (1955-59), 376-7
Northern Pipe Line Company bill, 571-2
Western Surety Company bill, 559
Capital stock, 559

Horner, Hon. R. B.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 314-15
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1172
Curling, Dominion and Scotch Cup Champions, tribute to victorious rinks, 489-90
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 906-7, 908
Excise Tax bill, 951, 955
Margarine, 951
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 748
Land use, 1133-4
Scholarships or prizes for best use of land, suggested, 1133-4
Western Canada, availability of farm land, 315, 1133
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 569-71
High standard of living, 570
Demands for Government assistance, 570
Production costs, 570, 571
Vacant farms, utilization by immigrants, 571
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1233-4
National Energy Board bill, 423
National Housing bill, 382, 394, 398-9
Housing, Government responsibility questioned, 399
Old Age Security bill, 789, 790, 791, 794
Peace River Power development, 289, 290
Petitions for private bills, extension of time for filing, 349
Prairie farmers, assistance for unharvested grain, 314-15
Railway bill, 808-9, 810

Horner, Hon. R. B.—Concluded
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1199
Unemployment insurance fund, administration of, 315
Extension of benefits, 569-70

House of Commons
Pensions
Prime Ministers and other members, 482-4, 487, 1148-9
Sergeant-at-Arms, 472, 483-4

Housing
Advances to C.M.H.C., method requires consideration, 398
Bank loans, 395-6
Caisses populaires, 205, 385, 775, 776
Construction (1959), 85
Building permits, housing units, 489, 499, 516-17
Solution to unemployment, 397
Dwellings approved (1958-59), 381
Farmers, loans to, 395
Four-bedroom homes, 380, 382, 384
Re-sale, problem of, 384
Housing funds, distribution of, 391-4
Interest rates, 205, 206, 376-7, 378-9, 385
See Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill
Low-income groups, 377, 392-4, 399
Mortgages and loans, as social security, 384-5
Tight money policy, 322
Yearly housing requirements, 396
See National Housing bill

Howden, Hon. John P.
Death of, tributes, 5-9

Hugessen, Hon. A. K.
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill, 175, 211
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 676-7
Appropriation bill No. 1, 293, 294, 296
Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, election as, 524-5
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 983, 984, 1020-7, 1055
County Court judges, 1021-2
Quebec legislature, approval of, 1026-7
Superior Court judges, 1022-6
Contract, question of, should be decided on equity and public policy, 1024-6
Canada Shipping bill, 1104, 1105-6
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 915
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1165-71
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 265
Customs Tariff bill, 866
Divorce bills, numbering of, 204
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 907

Hugessen, Hon. A. K.—Concluded
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 598-9
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 602, 626-9, 681-2
Jurisdiction in provincial grants, 627-8, 629
Inequalities possible, 628
Quebec reaction to bill, 629
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 663 670
Indian affairs, Joint Committee, 341
International Development Association bill, 883, 884
Judges bill, 1152-3
Quebec Superior Court, puisne judges, additional appointments, 1152
Travelling expenses, 1152-3
La Salle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 622, 623
Matador Pipe Line Company Ltd. bill, 266
Northern Pipe Line Company bill, 623
Northwest Territories bill, 755, 766
Court of Appeal, establishment of, 755
Game, Territorial authority to deal with, 755
Treaty rights of Eskimos and Indians, 755
Pilotage on Great Lakes, 198
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1067
Railway bill, 807-8
Reflective markings on box cars, 807-8
Scholarships, 344
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 753
Contractual commitments, 1949-60, 753
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1200-1
University grants, Quebec, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 894-6
Provincial Government ultimatum to universities, 894-5
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 726-8
Amendments to, 726-7
Public interest, should receive consideration, 727, 728
Yukon bill, 766

Human rights and fundamental freedoms—See Bill of Rights

Ice-breakers, Government-owned, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 52, 78

Immigration
Act, need for examination into administration of, 389
Immigrants
Contribution to development of Canada, 497-8
Decrease in, 388-9
Jewish settlement in Canada, 175-83, 222-8, 247-8
Kim, Dr. Chung Wook, deportation, inquiry (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 255

Immigration—Concluded
Manpower and Employment study, relation to, 386
Refugees
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Wall), 233-4
Private sponsorship, 347
Canadian Welfare Council suggestions, 347-8

Immigration and Labour Committee—Members, 14
Motion that committee be authorized to review Department's annual report, 386-9, 497-8, 525-6; withdrawn, 670-2

Imports, 58, 83, 85
Australian trade, 504
Currency restrictions, penalties from, 243-4, 246
International trade, Japan and other countries, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 129-30
See Trade

Income Tax bill. 1r, 856; 2r, 904-6, 917-26; ref to com, 926; authority to print com proceedings, 933; rep of com-amdts adopted, 1035-7; r.a., 1141
See Taxation

Indian affairs
British Columbia, first Indian member in Legislature, 361
Canada Elections bill (Franchise to Indians), 339, 362-3, 401, 479, 488
Councils, Yukon Territory, election of members, 766
Discrimination in tax exemption, 476
Educational needs, 361, 1002-3
Indian bill, 339, 357-62, 401, 475-9, 488
Northwest Territories bill, 598, 754-5, 766-7, 785
Quebec, Caughnawaga Reserve, 360
Rights of "first citizens", 477-8
Treaty rights, 358, 1003
Winter works program, 294
Word "Indian", use of, 361-2
Yukon bill, 612, 735-8, 766, 785

Indian Affairs, Joint Committee,
Members—Senate, 328, 340; Commons, 328, 349, 532, 779, 786
Quorum, 489
Reports, 489, 966-7, 1002-3

Indian Bill, 1r, 339; 2r, 357-62; ref to com, 362; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 401; rep of com, 475; 3r, 475-9; r.a., 488

Industrial workers, wages in Nova Scotia and Ontario, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142

Inman, Hon. F. Elsie
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 237-41
Tourist industry, 237-41, 1127
Competition from abroad, 238
Prince Edward Island, 238-41
Historical attractions, 239-41
Transportation difficulties, 241
Trade, international, 1125-7
Atlantic provinces, 1126-7
Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, 1126
New agreements, effect on exports from, 1126-7
Deficit in, 1127
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., felicitations on receipt of honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, 759

Inquiries
Atlantic Coast, aircraft and vessels available for search and rescue duties (Hon. Donald Smith), 1115-16
Bank of Canada, office premises (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1245-6
Canada Council, scholarships for nationals of foreign countries, (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734,1005, 1038
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 390, 402, 499. See Appendixes
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, television program "Close-Up", interview of divorce co-respondent (Hon. Mr. Golding), 759, 779, 888-9
Capital punishment, sentences and executions (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 340
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, interest rate on Government advances (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 130
Citizenship
British subjects in Canada (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 856-7, 888
High Commissioners to Canada, status of (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 712
Conference on Law of the Sea, votes on Canada's proposal re territorial limit and fishing zone (Hon. Donald Smith), 1004-5
Construction, building permits (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 489, 499, 516-17
Defence Production, Department of, contracts awarded in Nova Scotia 1956-59 (Hon. Donald Smith), 932
Disarmament, Republic of China (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 90-91
Divorce, appearances of private detectives before committee (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 357, 373-4. See 450-2, 453-5
Drug addicts, treatment in British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516, 624

Inquiries—Continued
Electric energy in Nova Scotia, federal Government assistance in costs of (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142, 1245
Exchange Stabilization Fund, reported sale of American funds for Canadian exchange (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1098, 1137
Icebreakers, Government-owned (Hon. Mr. Isnor), 52, 78
Immigration
Kim, Dr. Chung Wook, deportation (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), 255
Refugees (Hon. Mr. Wall), 233-4
Industrial wages in Nova Scotia and Ontario, (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Leader of the Government in the Senate, inquiry as to when he will be appointed to Cabinet, (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Meteorological service, forecasting of storms in Atlantic area (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 401
National Defence
Atlantic provinces
Expenditures in (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 115
Forces at Aldershot, withdrawal of (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 449
Payments to civilian and service personnel in Nova Scotia 1956-59 (Hon. Mr. Smith), 754
Automobiles, non-military type owned by department (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 90
National Parole Board, representations for appointment of woman member (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson), 234, 308-9
NATO, Twenty-Nation Economic Committee (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 115-16
Passports, applications since 1947 by British subjects, citizens of Canada and of commonwealth (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 734, 788
Psychiatrists employed by Department of Justice (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 523-4, 549-50, 624-5
Special Committees appointed in last ten years (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 583-4
Standing Committees, subject-matters referred for report in last ten years (Hon. Mr. Poulit), 677, 703-7
Supreme Court of Canada, case of Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C. (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 234, 255
Trade, international, imports from Japan and other countries (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 129-30
Trans-Canada Highway, Port Mann to Abbotsford and Chilliwack, B.C. (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516

Inquiries—Concluded
Unemployment insurance
Atlantic provinces, claimants for benefits 1957-60 (Hon. Mr. Smith), Queens-Shelburne), 717
Fishermen's benefits, (Hon. Mr. Smith, Queens-Shelburne), 107-8, 116, 255

Interest rates
Bank loans, 49-50, 359-6
Caisses populaires, 205, 206, 385, 775, 776
Credit buying, 560-6, 743
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 349, 559-67, 656-64, 669-70, 741-9, 760-3, 775-8, 875-81, 1037
Housing loans, 205, 206, 376-7, 378-9, 385
National Housing bill, 375-85, 391-9, 425, 449, 488

Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts Committee—Members, 13; reports, 113, 215, 250-4, 349-50, 372, 549, 572-4, 786, 1067-9, 1085, 1095-7, 1122-5, 1145, 1197-1203
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1145, 1197-1203

International affairs
Canada's role—Motion to authorize External Relations Committee to review, 200-1, 273-7, 352-6, 427-35; agreed to, 435
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 390, 402-18, 425-7, 499, 532, 545-8, 676, 695-702, 713
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, biennial conference, 180-3, 216-18
Communist China, recognition long overdue, 274
Conference on law of the sea, votes on Canada's proposal re territorial limit and fishing zone, 1004-5
Conferences, Senate representation, 54, 201, 216-17
Germany
Israeli Premier, interview with Chancellor Adenauer, 352-3
Krupp, Alfried, power in steel industry, 276
Leadership in economic field, 355
Military expenditures 353-4
Rearmament, dangers from, 274-6
Viewpoint and reaction of NATO countries to, 353
Middle East tensions, 273-4
See NATO, Trade

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—See International Development Association bill

International Boundary Commission bill. 1r, 787; 2r, 828-32, 846-8; ref to com, 848; authority to print com proceedings—rep of com, 874; 3r, 874-5; r.a., 1003

International Development Association bill. 1r, 834; 2r, 881-4; ref to com, 884; rep of com, 910; 3r, 935; r.a., 1003

International Loan Company bill. 1r, 308; 2r, ref to com, 338; rep of com-amdt adopted, 400; 3r, 435; r.a., 715

International Peace Arch, 830

International relief agencies, 471, 485, 757, 1257, 1258

International Savings and Mortgage Corporation bill—See International Loan Company bill

International trade—See Trade

International Trading Organization (I.T.O.), 812

Intersessional authority, 1068

Irvine, Hon. Olive L.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 170-3
Canadian heritage, 171-3
Introduction to Senate, 5
Manitoba
Crops unharvested because of early snowfall, 172
Lisgar constituency, 172-3
Women, contributions to Canadian life, 172
National Capital Commission, 171
Northern development, 172
Old Age Security bill, 779-82
Absence from Canada, 780-1
Residence requirement, 780-1
Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company bill, 693
Wawanesa Mutual Life Insurance Company bill, 692-3

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill, 150
Appropriation bill No. 1, 297, 298
Atlantic ports, freight rates, disadvantages, 123
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 826
Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company bill, 249-50
Estimates, 279
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 566-7
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 1109-10
Financial position of Canadian National Railways, 1110
Freight revenue, 1109-10
St. Lawrence Seaway, effect on, 1110
Ice-breakers, Government-owned, inquiry, 52, 78
Internal Economy Committee reports, 113, 250-1, 1123, 1124

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.—Concluded
International Boundary Commission bill, 831
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 122-3
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 122
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 41
Railway bill, 806
Restaurant of Parliament, 19-20
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 753
Halifax by-passed, 752
Truro-Yarmouth, link needed for U.S. tourists, 752
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 365, 371, 723, 725, 726
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 118, 119

Israel
Canadians assisting in development of, 219
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Canadian delegation, visit to, 180-3, 219-20
Education, Tel Aviv, 180-1
Impressions of outstanding progress, 183
Middle East tensions, 219-20, 273-4
Trade potential, 183
University at Jerusalem, 182, 220; Canada House, 182

Japan
Kishi, Hon. Nobusuke, Prime Minister, visit to Senate, 22, 23-4
Trade, international, imports, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 129-30

Jehovah's Witnesses, Supreme Court decision, 1208-11, 1226-7

Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 175-83, 222-8, 247-8
Attainment of civil and political rights, 176
Contributions to Canadian life, 175-9, 223-7

Joint Committees
Indian Affairs, 328, 340-1, 349, 489, 532, 779, 786, 966-7, 1002-3
Library of Parliament 13, 19, 197
Printing of Parliament, 13, 22, 197-8
Restaurant of Parliament, 13, 19, 198, 419

Judges
British North America Act, motion for address to the Queen for amendment re tenure of office of judges, 12, 19, 47, 517, 717, 788, 834-9, 968-86, 988-1002, 1005-18, 1020-34, 1041-58; amendment to motion proposed, 992, ruled out of order, 1018-19; further amendment agreed to, 1030; further amendment, 1048, agreed to, 1058; motion, as amended, agreed to, 1058
Speakers:
Aseltine, 834-9
Bouffard, 1031-4

Judges—Concluded
British North America Act—Concluded
Speakers:—Concluded
Brunt, 1027-30
Crerar, 994
Croll, 1047-8
Euler, 1048-51
Farris, 975-86, 988-93
Gouin, 1008-14
Hayden, 1041-7
Higgins, 1051-2
Hugessen, 1020-7
Leonard, 1015-18
Macdonald, 968-75
McLean, 1052-3
Monette, 1053-8
Roebuck, 1005-8
Turgeon, 995
Wall, 995-1002
Bar Association, resolutions of, 837-8, 910, 1013
Constitutional implications, 998-1002, 1006-8, 1013-14, 1033-4
Contractual rights, 971-3, 976-86, 981, 984, 996-7, 1024-6, 1032-3
District and County Court judges, 974, 975, 976, 989, 970-3, 1006, 1014-15, 1021-3, 1030
Federal-Provincial correspondence and consents, 818, 837, 996, 997; to be printed in Minutes, 910
National status of Canada, 1006-8, 1154-6
Pensions, 1009, 1015, 1143, 1145-8
Comparisons with pensions for Prime Ministers and Members of Commons, 1146-8
Quebec legislature, approval of, 1026-7
Resignations by reason of permanent infirmity, 1000
Retroactive feature, 976, 981, 984, 996-8, 1008-11, 1015, 1017, 1031-2
Superior Court judges, 970-6, 989, 1009-10, 1013, 1022-6, 1031, 1142
Letters and resolutions in respect to, 970-1, 1013
Commissions, documents tabled, 234
Northwest Territories, judges and deputy judges, 754
Prince Edward Island, Supreme Court appointment, 1243-4
Quebec Superior Court, puisne judges, additional appointments, 1152-3
Retirement age, documents to be printed in Minutes, 910
Travelling and other expenses, 1142-3, 1152-3
Yukon, judges and deputy judges, 735

Judges bill. Ir, 888; 2r, 1142-3, 1145-56; ref to com, 1156; rep of com-3r, 1195; r.a., 1265

Judges bill (P.E.I.), 1r, 1229; 2r, 1243-4; 3r, 1244; r.a., 1265

Judson, Hon. Wilfred, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal Assent, 1078

Justice, Department of—See Department of Justice bill

Kerwin, Hon. Patrick, P.C., Deputy of Governor General
Royal Assent, 75-76, 327, 488, 1003

Kinley, Hon. John J.
Atlantic provinces
Freight rates, 590
Lunenburg, N.S., centre of shipbuilding industry, 587
Unemployment, 588, 589-90
Canada Shipping bill, 1106-7
Costs of operation through waterways, 1107 Pilots, 1106
Reciprocal provisions, 1107
Canadian currency, premium on, 588-9
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1179-80
British Columbia, agreements in respect to fishermen and other interests, 1179-80
Offences in relation to trade, 1179
Reduction or removal of customs duties, 1179
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 7-8
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 586-90
Unskilled workers, need for apprenticeships and technical training, 587
Women in industry, 588
Merchant marine, disadvantages in competition, 590-1
Unemployment insurance fund, depletion, 588

Kishi, Hon. Nobusuke, Prime Minister of Japan, visit to Senate, 23-24

Labour
British Columbia strike, assistance of Finance Committee in settlement of, 433
Management, conflicts with, 433-4
Problems, 283, 284-5
Production costs, 92-97, 211, 283, 653, 868, 874, 1114
Wages
Comparison with United States, 770-1, 1262-3
Industrial wages, Nova Scotia and Ontario, 1142
See Manpower and employment, Unemployment

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 530
Appropriation bill No. 3, 485

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.—Concluded
Canadian National Rilways Financing and Guarantee bill, 826, 827
Customs Excise bill, 865
Divorce rules, 1084
Excise Tax bill, 960
Dairy industry, Government subsidies to, 960
Margarine, support of amendment to remove tax, 960
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 748-9
Interference with normal relationship of buyer and seller, 748-9
Internal Economy Committee reports, 1124, 1125
Senate employees, method of relating salaries to rates paid by other employers, 1124, 1125, 1190, 1194
International Boundary Commission bill, 874
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1246
Address on The Canadian Senate, motion to print as appendix to Hansard, 1246; agreed to, 1247
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 74, 75
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 69, 72
Trade, international, 810-14
Agreements and conferences of recent years, 811-12
Economic recovery of European countries, 812
NATO position of today, 812-13
Twenty-Nation trade committee, approval of agreement to study tariffs, 813
Western hemisphere trade bloc, suggested, 813-14
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 68

Land Use
Agriculture problems, suggestion for overall act, 143
Atlantic provinces
Inclusion in Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, suggested, 1102
Transportation costs, 1102
Farmers, need for direct aid to, 208, 209, 210
Gross product and farm income of Quebec parishes, 1132
Harrington Tree Farm, 140
Land values, assessments, 312-13
Niagara peninsula, expected increase in industrial establishments, 141-2
Research techniques, possibilities from, 1131, 1132
Rural development, legislation for advocated, 321
Scholarships or prizes for best use of land, suggested, 1133-4

Land Use—Concluded
Ste. Anne de la Pocatière Experimental farm, report of Dr. J. W. Pelletier, 1130-1
Uneconomic farm units problems, 1099-1100
Cost-price squeeze, 1102
Mechanization, 1100
Submarginal lands, 1101

Land Use Committee
Appointment, 139-43; members, 139; reports, 175, 1038, 1060-6, 1087-9, 1099-1102, 1129-34
Press commendation of work, 140
United States, visit to, 142, 1087-8
Rural Development program, 1088

La Salle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill. 1r, 568; 2r, 620-2; ref to com, 622; rep of com, 623-4; 3r, 638-9; r.a., 1003

Laurentide Finance Company bill. (Convenient Credit Limited bill). 1r, 214; 2r, 264-5; ref to com, 265; rep of com-amdts adopted, 326; 3r, 332; r.a., 715

Leader of the Government in the Senate—See Aseltine, Hon. W. M.
Deputy Leader—See Brunt, Hon. William R.
Inquiry as to when Leader will be appointed to Cabinet, (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142

Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—See Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.
Deputy Leader—See Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille

Leonard, Hon. T. D'Arcy
Agricultural Stabilization Board, operating loss, 481-2
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill, 114, 148-50
Appropriation bill No. 3, 480-3
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1014-18
County Court judges, 1014-15
Pensions, 1015
Provincial Attorneys General, correspondence with, 1017
Retroactive feature, 1015, 1017
Elective provision suggested, 1015, 1017, 1018
Supreme Court judges, 1016
Canada Council, 779
Canadian National Railways deficit, 482
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 940-2
Costs, 941-2
Location and properties to be used, 940, 941
Operations of yard, 941
Deficit financing of Government, 480-1
Income Tax bill, 925-6
Duplicate taxation, estate tax and succession duties, 925-6

Leonard, Hon. T. D'Arcy—Concluded
Judges bill, 1145-8
Pensions, 1145-8
Provincial legislature, Ontario, pension plan, 1147
United States President, 1147
National Sanitarium Association bill, 151, 192-4
Expansion of services, 194
Treatment record, 192-4
Deaths, 1937-58, 193
Northwest Territories, 194
Pensions
Prime Ministers, Members of Parliament, 482-3, 1146-8

Library of Parliament
Joint Committee—Members: Senate, 13, 19; Commons, 197
Report of Librarian tabled, 5

Livestock slaughtered in control of contagious diseases, compensation for, 292, 318

Loan companies—See Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, National Housing bill

Locke, Hon. Charles Holland, Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada
Royal assent, 1141, 1265-9
Speech at prorogation of Parliament, 1269-71

Lumber—See Forestry

MacDonald, Hon. John J.
Bill of Rights, 1216-17
Rights of heritage, 1216
Unions and rights of workers, 1217
Divorce bills, delay by Commons in passage of, 518
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., welcome on return after accident, 518
Judges bill, 1243-4
P.E.I., additional judge of the Supreme Court, 1243-4
Nova Scotia, Legislative Assembly, 1217
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 70

MacDonald, Hon. John M.
Introduction to Senate, 966
Judges bill, 1142-3
Pensions, 1143
Superior Court appointments, 1142
Travelling and other expenses, 1142-3

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 52-59
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill, 149
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 529, 531

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 293, 296, 298-9, 300-1, 308, 324
No. 2, 446
No. 3, 466, 468, 469, 471, 483-4
No. 5, 757-8
No. 6, 1259-60
Australia
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 502-3, 504
Trade growth with Canada, 503
Prime Minister, Right Hon. Robert G. Menzies, guest of Senate, 767
Bilingualism, 53, 1198-9
Bill of Rights, 1235-9
Canadian Labour Congress, misgivings voiced by President, 1237-8
Delay in receipt of bill from Commons, 1236
Joint action of provinces and federal Government, desirability of, 1238-9
Bills, public, suspension of rules, 933, 934
British and Foreign Bible Society bill, 73
British North America Act
Canada's national status, 513, 968-70
Tenure of office of judges, amendment re, 19, 788, 836, 837, 838, 964-5, 968-74, 981, 985, 990, 991, 994-5, 1030, 1057
Contractual rights, 971-3
District and County Court judges, 973-4
Letters and resolutions in respect to, 970-1
Superior Court judges, 970-3
Canada's Centennial, 1128-9
Costs, 1128-9
Education, necessity of federal Government support to universities and scholarship programs, 1128
National centres for the arts, 1129
Canada Elections bill (Indians), 362
Waivers signed by Indians, 362
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of Commons), 1089-91, 1092, 1093-4
Election costs, 1090-1
Permanent voters' list, suggested, 1090-1
Rural constituencies, 1089-90
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 63-64
Canada Shipping bill, 1103, 1104, 1107
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 426, 427
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, French programs with large audiences in English-speaking localities, 53
Canadian National Railways deficit, 469
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 916
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 161
Chile, earthquake and tidal wave, appropriation for relief, 757-8

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1174, 1187-8
Committee meetings, witnesses, 64
Congo, participation of Canadian forces in United Nations operations, 1156, 1158, 1159-60
Form of motion, 1158
United Nations role in conflict, 1159
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 265
Debate procedure, 160
Bills, explanation immediately after first reading, 151
Decades, reckoning of, 66
Defence, suggestion for joint committee, 57-58 de Gaulle, General Charles, President of France, state luncheon, 517. See 520-2
Department of Justice bill, 248
Divorce
Bills passed by Commons without amendment, 1256
Committee members, services of, 1085
Petition on ground of desertion, 582, 644-5
Rules, 1083, 1084, 1117, 1118
Emergency sittings, 480
Estimates
Supplementary, 278, 279
Tabled in Commons earlier than in Senate, 108
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 600
Excise Tax bill, 950, 951-2
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 580, 581, 601, 602, 605, 612, 682-3, 691
Feeds bill, 516
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 562, 660
Franklin, Lieutenant Colonel W. J., Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Commons, 483
Government annuities, 1086
Government expenditures, 298-9, 1259-60
Governor General
Massey, Right Hon. Vincent, first Canadian-born appointee, 52-53
Vanier, Major-General Georges Philias, addresses at installation, printing of, 11-12. See 15-17
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 5-6
Indian Affairs, Joint Committee, 341
Indian bill, 359-61, 476-8
Income tax exemptions, 476-8
Percentage exercising franchise, 359-60
Quebec, Caughnawaga reserve, 360
Waivers in existence, 360
Internal Economy Committee reports, 251, 252, 1069, 1198-9
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate chamber, 1198-9

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
International Boundary Commission bill, 846-7, 848
Implementation by legislation after 35 years, 847
Treaty of 1925, 846-7
International conferences, Senate representation, 201
International Development Association bill, 884
Japanese Prime Minister, visit to Senate, 23
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 178-9
Contributions to Canadian life, 178
Nathan, Henry, first Jewish Member of Parliament, 179
Judges bill, 1148-50
Pensions for compulsorily retired judges, 1149-50
Land use
Committee, 140-2
Fruit farming, 141
Niagara peninsula, increased use of land for housing and industry, 141-2
LaSalle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 620, 622, 623, 639
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 535-9, 1136-7
Membership, 535
Witnesses, 537-8
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 190, 191, 281
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1230-1
Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada bill, 163, 164
Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill, 74, 75
National Energy Board bill, 419-20, 422, 423, 424, 438, 439-40, 442, 445, 487-8
Jurisdiction to pass bill, 439
Licences, expiration of, 439-40
Saving clause, 439-40
National Housing bill, 379-83, 395
Dwellings approved, 1958-59, 381
Four-bedroom homes, need for, 380, 382
Loans
Flexibility of regulations suggested, 382-3
Interest rates, 379, 382
National Sanitarium Association bill, 151
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 267
Old Age Security bill, 797, 801-2, 1259
Payments, estimates for, 1259
Resumption of payments after six months' absence, objection to phrasing of clause, 801-2
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Continued
Peace River power development, 291
Pensions
Members of Parliament, 483-4, 1148-9
Prime Ministers, 484, 1149
Pilotage on Great Lakes, 198. See pp. 212-13
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 43, 45-46
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 33, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 48-49
Method of payments, 37
Prime Minister, visit to Washington, text of final communiqué, 758. See 765
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1067
Railway bill, 885-6, 887
Accidents at level crossings, 885-6
Costs of automatic protection, apportioning of, 885
Royal family, birth of a Prince, 196-7
Senate
Business, 64, 65, 103, 139, 278-9, 1058, 1059, 1244, 1245
United Nations Assembly and other international conferences, representation at, 54
Tight money, 56-57
Municipalities, increased interest rates on capital expenditures, 56
Trade, international
Common market and free trade area, need for development, 58-59
Imports, restrictions on, 58
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 638
Unemployment, 55-56, 298-301, 535-8, 1136-7
Industrial workers, 300
Insurance fund, depletion of, 55-56, 538
Statistics, variance in, 299, 536, 537
Study by Senate committee suggested, 300-1
Winter works program, not a solution, 299
United Canada Insurance Company bill, 128
University grants, Quebec
Notice of inquiry (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), 873
Notice of motion (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), withdrawn, 873
Visitors in Senate Gallery
Premier of Newfoundland and colleagues, 1129
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 365, 366, 368, 370, 724, 725, 728, 729, 730, 731
Agreement between companies, non-production of, 728-9
Amendments, 730
Quebec and Newfoundland, attitude toward bill, 729-30
War Veterans' Allowance bill, 913
Married veteran living apart from wife, 913

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—Concluded
Western grain producers, payments to, 1259
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 68, 121
Yukon bill, 736-7, 766
Council, election of members, 736
Game ordinances, 736-7

Mackay, Hon. John Keiller, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario
Speech at unveiling of marble portrait of Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, 805

Manitoba, vote on colouring of margarine, 956

Manpower and Employment
Speakers:
Hon. Senators:
Aseltine, 533-5
Crerar, 555-9
Croll, 539-41
Hayden, 613-19
Horner, 569-71
Kinley, 586-91
Macdonald, 535-9
McLean, 555
Pouliot, 543
Robertson, 550-5
Roebuck, 541-3
Smith, 591-3
Canada's Economic Prospects, Royal Commission, 556-7
Demands for Government assistance, 570
High standards of living, 570
Production costs, 570, 571
Unskilled workers, need for apprenticeships and technical training, 587
Vacant farms, utilization by immigrants, 571
Women in industry, 588
See Unemployment, Manpower and Employment Special Committee

Manpower and Employment, Special Committee
Motion for appointment, 533-43, 550-9, 569-71, 585-93, 613-19; agreed to, 619
Members, 553; reports, 676, 1135-7

Maple sugar industry, 209-10

Margarine
Colouring, ban on, 949
Dairy industry, effect on, 955, 956-7
Edible oil industry, 959-60
Farmers' use of, 861
Foods exempted, comparison with, 861,948-9
Manitoba, vote on colouring of, 956
Newfoundland, manufacture and sale in, 951, 960
Tax
Discrimination in, 949, 950
Revenue, 947-8
See Excise Tax bill

Marine services, 297-8

Maritimes—See Atlantic provinces and individual names of provinces

Massey, Right Hon. Vincent, P.C., first Canadian-born Governor General, 52-53, 81

Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill. 1r, 151; 2r, 189-92; ref to com, 192; rep of com, 266; r.a., 714

McDonald, Hon. John A.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 294
Estate Tax bill, 820
Excise Tax bill, 859, 861, 862, 948
Freight assistance, feed grain, 294
Government aid, suggested restriction of requests for, 44
Land use, 1098-1102
Atlantic provinces
Inclusion in Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, suggested, 1102
Transportation costs, 1102
Marginal operators, difficulties of, 44-45
Uneconomic farm units, 1099-1100
Cost-price squeeze, 44-45, 1102
Mechanization, 1100
Submarginal lands, 1101
Meteorological service, forecasting of storms in Atlantic area, inquiry, 401
National Defence, withdrawal of forces from Aldershot, N.S., inquiry, 449
Nova Scotia
Coal mines, lack of markets and resulting unemployment, 44
Cornwallis-Annapolis Valley, apple crop Losses, 44
Marketing irregularities, 45
Prairie Grain bill, 43-45

McGrand, Hon. Fred A.
Bill of Rights, 1212-15
Struggle between government and masses over fundamental freedoms, 1212-14
Unions and freedom to work, 1214-15

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 282-91
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1098
Canadian currency, premium on, 283-4, 285-6
Electric power, 288-91
Peace River development, 288-91
Wenner-Gren interests, 289-91
Potential for export, 289
Forest industry, 282-3, 286-7
Exports, 282, 283
British Columbia, importance to, 282-3
United Kingdom market, 283
Russian competition, 283
Old Age Security bill, 794

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.—Concluded
Trade, 939
Decline in Canada's position, 283
Production costs, 283, 284-5
Business profits, 283
Taxation, 283
United States domination of Canadian industry, 285-6, 287-8, 291
University grants, 895

McLean, Hon. A. Neil
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 241-6
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 503-4
Bank of Canada, office premises, inquiry, 1245-6
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 1052-3
Contractual obligation, 1052-3
Exchange Stabilization Fund, reported sale of American funds for Canadian exchange, inquiry, 1098, 1137, 1192-3
Freight rates, 555
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 555
Money
Canadian currency, premium on, 243-6, 555, 588-9, 1191
Bank of Canada transactions, 1191-3
Borrowings from United States, 245-6
Stabilizing of dollar, importance of, 245
Lord Radcliffe Committee, report on United Kingdom economic system, 244-5
Tourist trade deficit, 246
Trade
Deficit trade balance, 1191
Distribution of products, problems of, 555
Exports and imports, 243-4, 246, 504
Comparison of leading nations, 242-3
Russia, rapid increase in economic power, 242

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tributes, 1230-5, 1246-7
Reprint from Queen's Quarterly of speech by Mr. Meighen on The Canadian Senate, 1249-53

Members of Parliament, pensions, 482-4, 1148-9

Menzies, Right Hon. Robert G., Prime Minister of Australia, visit to Senate, 767

Merchant marine, disadvantages in competition, 590-1

Meteorological service, forecasting of storms in Atlantic area, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McDonald), 401

Méthot, Hon. Léon
Appropriation bill No. 3, 484
Export and Import Permits bill, 645-6
War materials, necessity for continuing control, 654-5
Manpower and employment, report of Special Committee, 1135
Montreal Life Insurance Company bill, 184
Pensions, Prime Ministers, 484
United Canada Insurance Company bill, 87-88,128

Minerals
Alberta, 337-8
Coal
Nova Scotia, lack of markets, 44
Royal Commission on, 296
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 856, 906-8, 910, 935, 1003
Northwest Territories, 337-8
Oil
Russia, press report on imports from, 937
United States competition, 280-1
Venezuela, exports to Montreal, 869-70
Western Canada, surplus, 869-70
See Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, Matador Pipe Line Company bill

Ministry, The, according to precedence, iii-iv

Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee—Members, 13; reports, 105, 598, 988

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.
Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada bill, 163-4

Monette, Hon. Gustave
Bill of Rights, 1223-7, 1242
Freedom of religion, 1225-7
Jehovah's Witnesses, Supreme Court decision, 1226-7
Provincial jurisdiction in civil liberties and human rights, 1223
British North America Act
National status of Canada, 508
Tenure of office of judges, amendment re, 976, 1053-8
Contractual feature, 1056-7
Jurisdiction in courts and appointment and retirement of judges, 1055-6, 1057-8
Superior Court judges, 1054-5
Canada Elections bill, 1092, 1093
Age of voters, 1092, 1093
Combines Investigation and the Criminal Code bill, 1166, 1176
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 264-5
Divorce
Bills, numbering of, 204
Rules, 1119-20, 1121, 1122
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 611-12, 626, 689-92

Monette, Hon. Gustave—Concluded
Judges bill, 1153-4, 1155
Pensions and age of retirement, 1153-4
Travelling expenses, 1153
Land Use Committee, report, 1134
LaSalle Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 620-2, 623, 624, 638, 639
Costs, 621
Industrial development in vicinity of bridge site, 622
Legal aspects of bill, 620-1
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1232-3, 1234, 1235
Montreal Life Insurance Company bill, 126, 127, 184
Company name, English and French version, 184
Senate, role of, 1053-4
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate chamber, 1201-2
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 668

Money
Borrowings from United States, 284, 285-6, 287-8, 291
Canadian currency, premium on, 243-4, 246, 283-4, 285-6, 555, 588-9
Decimal system of currency, discussion at Commonwealth trade meeting, 652
Forest industry, effect on, 271-3
Exchange Stabilization Fund, reported sale of American funds for Canadian exchange, inquiry (Hon. Mr. McLean), 1098, 1137
Stabilization fund and international exchange, suggestions for study of, 245-6, 272, 335

Montreal Bar, Bâtonnier of, election of Hon. A. K. Hugessen, 524-5

Montreal Life Insurance Company bill. 1r, 105; 2r, 126-7; ref to com, 127; rep of com, 152; rep of com adopted, 173; 3r, 184; r.a., 714

Mortgages—See Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, National Housing bill

Motions, procedure, 143

Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada bill. 1r, 139; 2r, 163-4; ref to com, 164; rep of com, 215; 3r, 235; r.a., 714

Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners bill. 1r, 52; 2r, 74-75; ref to com, 75; rep of com-authority to print com proceedings, 106; 3r, 122-3; r.a., 785

National Aviation Museum, 295-6

National debt, interest on, 144-5

National Defence, Department of
Automobiles, non-military type owned by Department, 90
Expenditures in Atlantic provinces, 115
Forces at Aldershot, withdrawal of, 449
Payments to civilian and service personnel in Nova Scotia, 754
See Defence

National Energy Board bill. 1r, 419-22; 2r, 422-5; ref to com, 425; rep of com, 438-45; 3r, 445; authority to print proceedings, 445; Commons amdts concurred in, 487-8; r.a., 488

National Housing bill. 1r, 375; 2r, 375-85; 391-9; ref to com, 399; rep to com-authority to print com proceedings, 425; 3r, 449; r.a., 488

National Parole Board, representations for appointment of woman member, 234, 308-9

National Sanitarium Association bill. 1r, 151; 2r, 192-4; ref to com, 194; rep to com, 266; 3r, 309; r.a., 714

NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization), 95, 96-97, 274, 275, 276
Failure to act on Canada's advice to prevent trade rivalries, 771
France, position in event of war, 427-8
Germany, 352-5
Defence expenditures, 354
Leadership in economic field, 355
Position as of today, 812-13
Russian threat to Berlin, 428-32
Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, 115-16
Washington meeting, 42-49, 430, 431, 432
See International affairs, Trade

Natural Resources Committee—Members, 14, 48; reports, 515, 1085

Netherlands
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 9, 59-64, 128, 785

New Brunswick
Public health measures, 153
University of, forest management plan, 1072
See Atlantic provinces

Newfoundland
Boundary lines, Newfoundland-Quebec, 369-9
Fishing industry, 84-85, 97-100
Fisheries Council of Canada, recommendations, 99-100
Inspection, joint federal and provincial policy needed, 97-98
Salted fish, 98-99
Sales, lack of control, 99
Flag and colours, 449

Newfoundland—Concluded
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 9, 86-87, 97-100, 266-7, 281, 715
Pepperell Air Force base, closing, effect on economy of province, 187
Utilization of facilities in training of Canadian forces, 187-8
Premier J. R. Smallwood and colleagues, visitors in Senate Gallery, 1129
Tourist attractions, 751
Trans-Canada Highway
Industrial developments requiring access roads, 750-1
Sharing of costs, revision needed, 751
Special circumstances pertaining to Newfoundland, 186-7, 750, 751-2
Union
Eleventh anniversary of Act, 195
Term 29, lack of consideration of, 186
United States-Newfoundland relations, 187
See Atlantic provinces, Wabush Lake Railway Company bill

Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill. 1r, 9; 2r, 86-87, 97-100, 266-7; 3r, 281; r.a., 715

Northern Pipe Line Company bill. 1r, 532; 2r, 571-2; ref to com, 572; rep of com, 623; 3r, 654; r.a., 1003

Northwest Territories
Court of Appeal, establishment of, 754, 755
Game, territorial authority to deal with, 754, 755
Treaty rights of Indians and Eskimos, 755
Judges and deputy judges, 754
Loan to, 298
Tuberculosis, treatment of, 194

Northwest Territories bill. 1r, 598; 2r, 754-5; ref to com, 755; rep of com, 766; 3r, 767; r.a., 785

Nova Scotia
Apple crop
Losses, 44-45
Marketing irregularities, 45
Cost-price squeeze, 770
Defence production, Department of, contracts awarded in Nova Scotia 1956-59, inquiry (Hon. Donald Smith), 932
Electrical energy, federal Government assistance to reduce costs of, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142, 1245
Farm woodlots, utilization of, 30-31
Gasoline and sales tax, 753
Industrial wages, Nova Scotia and Ontario, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 1142
Legislative Assembly, 1217
Lunenburg, centre of shipbuilding industry, 587
Primary products, annual value 1957-58-59, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Smith, Queens-Shelburne), 712

Nova Scotia—Concluded
Tourist industry, Victoria Park, Truro, 30
Trans-Canada Highway, construction accomplished, 30
Unemployment, 590-3, 615-16
Defence expenditures, 115; withdrawal of, 449, 592-3
Halifax, 593
See Atlantic provinces

O.E.E.C.—Organization for European Economic Co-operation, 812

Oil—See Minerals

Old age security—See Social Security

Old Age Security bill. 1r, 757; 2r, 779-82, 789-802; ref to com, 802; rep of com 818; 3r, 840-3; r.a., 1003

Opening of Parliament—See Parliament

Operation "Agadir", 432-3

Orders and Customs Committee, appointment, 3-4

Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill. 1r, 9; 2r, 68-72; ref to com, 72; rep of com-authority to print, proceedings, 106; 3r, 122; r.a., 785

Pairing, 989

Parliament
Opening, 1; Speech from the Throne, 1-3
Prorogation, notice of, 1264-5; Speech of Deputy of Administrator of Government, 1269-71
See Address in reply

Parliamentary business, current session, record of, 1138-9

Passports, applications since 1947 by British subjects, citizens of Canada and of commonwealth, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 788

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL., birthday felicitations, 1193

Peace River, electric power development, 288-91

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M.
Acting Speaker, 856
Combines Investigation and the Criminal Code bill, 1173
Department of Forestry bill, 1069-71, 1075
Employment from, 1069
Export value of forestry products, 1069
Fire losses, 1070
Railroad carloadings, 1069-70
United States, comparisons with, 1070

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M.—Concluded
Feeds bill, 490-4
Analysts and inspectors, appointment of, 490-1
Fines, 493
International Boundary Commission bill, 830
Land Use Committee
Reports, 175, 1038, 1060-6, 1087-9
Recommendations, 1088-9
United States, report on visit to, 142, 1087-8
Rural Development Program, 1088
Old Age Security bill, 842
Railway bill, 886
University grants, Quebec, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 896

Pensions
Judges, 1009, 1015, 1143, 1145-50
Prime Ministers and Members of Commons, 482-4, 487, 1146-9
Provincial legislature, Ontario, 1147
Senators, lack of provision for, 1152
United States President, 1147

Petitions for private bills
Filing date, extension, 349, 489

Physical fitness, 131-8
Canadian Medical Association, observations, 136-7
R.C.A.F. program, 132
Tests, results of, 135-6

Pilotage on Great Lakes, exchange of correspondence between officials of U.S. and Canada, 198, 212-13

Pipe lines
Canol pipe line system, 295
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 151, 189-92, 266, 280-1
Competition to western Canadian oil, question of, 280-1
Northern Pipe Line Company bill, 532, 571-2

Polar Continental Shelf Project, 647, 648

Post Office Department, 471-2

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François
Bill of Rights
Correlative obligations and responsibilities, 216, 255-6, 350-2
Freedom of religion, 1206-11
Jehovah's Witnesses, Supreme Court decision, 1208-11
Unfair treatment by clergy of prominent men in past because of political beliefs, 1211-12
Bills, public, suspension of rules, 934
British North America Act
Canada's national status under, 507-9
Commissions of judges, 234

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François—Continued
Canada's Centennial, 506-13, 514
Canada Council, inquiry, scholarships for nationals of foreign countries, 734, 1005, 1038
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1093
Age of voters, 1093
Citizenship
British subjects in Canada, 734, 856-7, 888
High Commissioners to Canada, status of, 712
Committees
Special, appointed in last ten years, inquiry, 583-4
Standing, subject-matters referred for report in last ten years, 677, 703-7
Congo, participation of Canadian forces in United Nations operations, 1161
Construction, building permits, inquiry, 489, 499, 516-17
Divorce
Bills, numbering of, 202, 203, 204-5, 236, 237
Detectives, appearances before committee, 357, 373-4, 450-1, 453-5
Provincial jurisdiction over civil rights, 10-11, 100, 101, 109, 154-7
Legislative powers, distribution of, 155
Ontario, 156-7
Validity of provincial divorces, 1019-20
Education, 509-10, 512
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 606, 688-9
Flag, national, proposed design, 510-11
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 8-9
Income Tax bill, 906
Statutory expenses, tax payable by Senators but not by Members of Commons, 906
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 228
Judges bill, 1150-2
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 543
Motions, notices of, 216
National Energy Board bill, 424, 440, 445
Newfoundland flag and colours, 449
Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal bill, 266-7
Old Age Security bill, 799-800
Parliamentary business, current session, record of, 1138-9
Passports, applications since 1947 by British subjects, citizens of Canada and of Commonwealth, inquiry, 734, 788
Pensions for senators, lack of provision for, 1152

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François—Concluded
Press report, question of privilege, reported interview on External Affairs booklet, 329
Psychiatrists employed by Department of Justice, inquiry, 523-4, 549-50, 624-5
Royal assent, suggestion that Supreme Court judges act successively, 712
Senate staff, commendation, 1067-8
Stationery supply, 1068
Statutes of Canada,
Inquiry, 584, 767-8
Notice of motion for copies of orders in council concerning distribution of, 717-18, 788
Supreme Court of Canada, case of Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C., request for judges' notes and judgment, 234, 255
Trade, international, 814-16
Multilateral agreement cannot be profitable to Canada, 814-15, 816
South America, trade possibilities, 815
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1067-8
University grants, Quebec, non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 898-9
Provincial Government contributions to universities, 898-9

Power, Hon. C. G., P.C.
Indian Affairs, Joint Committee, 341
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1231-2
National Energy Board bill, 442-3, 444
Saving clause, 442
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 45
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 36
Restaurant of Parliament, 22
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 366, 367, 368, 369
Boundary lines, Newfoundland-Quebec, 368-9
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 67, 68

Prairie Grain Loans bill. 1r, 42; 2r, 42-47; ref to com, 47; rep of com, 49; 3r, 49-51; r.a., 76

Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill. 1r, 33; 2r, 33-42; ref to com, 42; rep of com, 48; 3r, 48-49; r.a., 76

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 185-9
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 62
Department of Forestry bill, 1076-7
Education, business leadership in advancement of, 652
Excise Tax bill, 951
Margarine, manufacture and sale in Newfoundland, 951
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 686

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.—Concluded
Freight rates, 590
Income Tax bill, 926
Small corporations, basic rate of taxation, 926
Unfair to minority shareholders, 926
International Development Association bill, 883
Newfoundland
Farm income, 83
Pepperell Air Force base, closing, effect on economy of province, 187
Utilization of facilities, suggestion for, 187-8
Problems, 186-7, 750-2
Tourist attractions, unexcelled in Canada, 751
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 750-3
Industrial developments requiring access roads, 750-1
Special circumstances pertaining to Newfoundland, 750, 751-2
Sharing of costs, revision needed, 750-1
Trade, international, 188-9, 650-4, 1110-14
Agricultural products, protectionist proposals of Inner Six, 1111
Foreign investments, 1114
GATT, work accomplished by, 1111
Gross national product in relation to, 1112
Production costs, 653-4, 1114
Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4
Australia, Canadian market in, 654
Canadian delegation, 651
Countries participating, 650
Currency, decimal system, 652
Exchange of young business personnel, suggested, 652
Food bank for underdeveloped countries, 653
Insurance coverage against political instability, 652
Problems arising from economic co-operation in other countries, 652
Relation of Canada's trade to commonwealth, 651-2
Tariffs, 188-9, 653-4
United States, Committee for Economic Development, 1112-13
European Common Market, report on, 1112-13
Union Jack, significance in world history, 650-1
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 723, 724

Prayers, Senate, exclusion of public, 767

Press and periodicals
Brantford Expositor—Interest rates, 56
Canadian Catholic Register—Socialism and welfare state, 841

Press and periodicals—Concluded
Financial Post—"The Nation's Business", Corporate earnings and savings, 583-4
Globe and Mail—
Commonwealth trade, 504
Land Use Committee, commendation of work, 140
Second mortgages, 563
Halifax Chronicle Herald—Education, need for "A Father Figure", 512
Le Droit—Spanish communist revolution, assassination of religious affiliates, 431-2
Montreal Gazette—
Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, Hon. A. K. Hugessen, 523
Labour and management, 433-4
West Germany, freedom to produce nuclear weapons outside own territory, 276
Montreal Star—
Currency premium, 245
Export markets, 335
New York Times—Israeli Premier, interview with Chancellor Adenauer, 352-3
New York Times Magazine—Viewpoint and reactions of NATO countries in regard to Germany, 353
Ottawa Citizen—
C.B.C. television program "Close-Up", interview of divorce co-respondent, 600
Israel, war threat from Arab forces, 219
Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François, reported interview on External Affairs booklet, 329
Ottawa Journal—Currency premium, effect on export trade, 271
Red Deer Advocate—Hog prices, 317
Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—Grain payments by federal and provincial Governments, 37
Saturday Night—Excerpt from speech of Prime Minister on freedoms, 1223
Toronto Globe—Offer from Spain to German steel industrialist, Alfried Krupp, to make weapons, 276
Toronto Star—
Canadian Medical Association resolution re Government controlled hospital legislation, 840
Credit buying, 564-5
Saskatchewan provincial hospital legislation, 798
Toronto Telegram—Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François, reported interview on External Affairs booklet, 329
Windsor Daily Star—Canadian Welfare Council recommendations for health insurance, 797

Price Spreads, Royal Commission on
Maple sugar industry, 209-10
Statistics on food products, 207-8

Prime Minister
See Diefenbaker, Right Hon. John G., P.C., M.P.

Prime Ministers and other Members of House of Commons
Pensions for, 482-4, 487, 1146-8

Prince Andrew, birth of (February 19, 1960), 196-7

Prince Edward Island
Tourist industry, 238-41
Historical attractions, 239-40
Transportation difficulties, 241
Car ferry and terminals, 486-7
See Atlantic provinces

Prince Philip—Address to Her Majesty and Prince Philip expressing congratulations on the birth of a Prince, 196-7

Printing of Parliament, Joint Committee—Members: Senate, 13, 22; Commons, 197-8

Private bills
Filing time, extension of, 349, 489
Rules, suspension of, 230
See Bills, private

Privy Council, principal officers, iv

Production costs, 92-97, 283-5, 334, 570, 653-4, 768-9, 868, 1114
Co-operation of labour and management necessary in control of, 334
Wages, 770-1
Relation to tariffs, 653-4, 1114

Prorogation—See Parliament

Psychiatrists employed by Department of Justice, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 523-4, 549-50, 624-5

Public bills
Rules, suspension of, 933-5
See Bills, public

Public Buildings and Grounds Committee—Members, 14

Public Health and Welfare Committee—Members, 14; reports, 139, 266

Public Service Superannuation bill. 1r, 1004; 2r, 1038-41; ref to com, 1041; rep of com-3r, 1067; r.a., 1078

Quebec
Boundary lines, Newfoundland-Quebec, 368-9
Divorce jurisdiction, 100-2, 154-7
La Salle Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 568, 620-2, 623-4, 638-9, 1003
Industrial development in vicinity of, 622

Quebec—Concluded
University grants, 602-12
Discrimination alleged due to non-payment of amounts voted in 1952-56, 889-98
Provincial Government ultimatum to universities, 891-2, 893, 894-5
Provincial right to collect and distribute taxes, 609-10
Universities which have applied for, 601
See Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 339, 363-71, 425, 623, 664-5, 666-9, 677-8, 722-33, 1078

Queen Elizabeth II
Addresses to:
British North America Act, motion for amendment as to tenure of office of judges, 12, 19, 47, 517, 717, 788, 834-9, 964-5, 988-1002, 1005-19, 1020-34, 1041-58
Congratulations on the birth of a Prince, 196-7
See Addresses

Questions—See Inquiries

Quinn, Hon. Felix P.
Legislation, delay in receipt from Commons, 420

Railway bill. 1r, 581; 2r, 806-10, 886-7; 3r, 914; r.a., 1003

Railways
Accidents at level crossings, 885-6
Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company bill, 114, 148-50, 175, 211, 488
Canadian National Railways
Deficit, 468-70, 482
Financial position, 1110
Financing and Guarantee bill, 786, 823-7, 856, 904, 1003
Auditors, 826-7
Authorized borrowings, 825-6
Capital expenditures, 824
Trans-Canada Air Lines, 824
Contracts prior to July 1, 1961, 824
Preferred stock, right of purchase, 826
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 856, 914-16, 940-2, 967, 988, 1003
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 1079, 1107-10, 1110, 1115, 1128, 1141
Freight revenue, 1109-10
Railway bill, 581, 806-10, 885-7, 914, 1003
Costs of automatic protection, 885
Level crossings, elimination of, 809
Reflective markings on box cars, 806-9
Signal devices, 809-10
Control by United States interests, 810

Railways—Concluded
St. Lawrence Seaway, effect on freight business of railways, 1110
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 339, 363-71, 425, 623, 664-5, 666-9, 677-8, 722-33, 1078

Railways bill (pro forma). 1r, 3

Refugees—See Immigration

Reid, Hon. Thomas
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 144-8
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 529
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 293, 294, 295, 324
No. 3, 470
No. 4, 646, 647
British Columbia hydro-electric power, 145-8
Agreement pending between Canada and United States, 146, 147, 148
Columbia River, 144, 145, 147-8
Mica Creek dam, 145, 147-8
Flood controls possible, 148
Power potential, 146
Sockeye salmon, danger from proposed diversion, 148
British North America Act
Amendment re tenure of office of judges, 578, 837
Canada Elections bill (Franchise to Indians), 479
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, inquiry as to discussions on Columbia River, 676
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, expenditures, 794
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 824
Customs Tariff bill, 863
Drug addicts, treatment in British Columbia, inquiry, 516, 624
Excise Tax bill, 858, 859
Government expenditures and debt, 144-5, 794
Indian affairs, 1003
Indian bill, 361-2, 475
British Columbia, first Indian member in Legislature, 361
Education, 361
Word "Indian", use of, 361-2
Internal Economy Committee reports, 252, 253, 254
International Boundary Commission bill, 829, 831-2
British Columbia, hardships of surveying, 831-2
Point Roberts, 832
LaSalle-Caughnawaga Bridge bill, 638-9

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Concluded
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 535, 619
National Energy Board bill, 419, 423
National Housing bill, 379, 399
Low income groups, 399
Old Age Security bill, 789, 790-4, 842-3
Citizenship should be qualification, 793, 794
Contributory systems in United States and Great Britain, 790-2
Increase in recipients, 790
Social security arrangements between United Kingdom and Canada, 792-3
Transitional clause, 842-3
Railway bill, 809-10, 886-7
Signal devices, 809-10
Control of by United States interests, 810
Trade, international, 936-40
Agreements and trade organizations, 937-8
Small car imports, 937
Statistics, 938-9
Liquor exports, 939
Russian oil, press report on imports of, 937
United States tariffs, 936
Western world, trade with should be developed, 936, 938, 940
Trans-Canada Air Lines, jet-engined passenger service, inaugural flight, 280
Trans-Canada Highway
Bill, 634
Port Mann to Abbotsford and Chilliwack, B.C., inquiry, 516
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 726
Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill, 121
Yukon bill, 736

Reporting, mechanical recording of evidence, 962-4

Restaurant of Parliament
Facilities of, 19-22
Joint Committee on—Members: Senate, 13, 19; Commons, 198, 419

Rights and freedoms—See Canadian Bill of Rights, Bill of Rights, Freedom of religion

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 91-97
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 305-6, 308
No. 3, 487
No. 6, 1260-4
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 63, 64

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.
—Continued
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 390, 425-6, 427. See 402, 403-18, 545-8, 695-702
Reports
Inquiry, 499, 568
Suggestion that reports be discussed, 568, 713
Canadian National Railways deficit, 469
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, interest rate on Government advances, inquiry, 130
Committee meetings, witnesses, 63, 64, 91
Conferences, Senate representation, 426-7
Disarmament, Republic of China, inquiry, 90-91
Electrical energy in Nova Scotia, federal Government assistance in costs of, inquiry, 1142, 1245
Estimates, reference to Finance Committee proposed, 117
Export and Import Permits bill, 655, 656
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 685-6
Industrial wages in Nova Scotia and Ontario, inquiry, 1142
International affairs, Canada's role, 352-6
NATO, 95, 96, 97, 115-16, 352-6, 553, 771
Failure to act on Canada's advice to prevent trade rivalries, 771
Germany
Israeli Premier, interview with Chancellor Adenauer, 352-3
Leadership in economic field, 355
Military expenditures, 353-4
Viewpoint and reaction of NATO countries to, 353
Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, inquiry, 115-16
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 247-8
Leader of the Government in the Senate, inquiry as to when he will be appointed to Cabinet, 1142
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 550-5
Unemployment, 550-2
Employment sources, 551, 552
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 191
National Defence, Department of Automobiles, non-military type, inquiry, 90
Expenditures, 551
Atlantic provinces, inquiry, 115
National Energy Board bill, 420
Nova Scotia, cost-price squeeze, 770
Pensions, Prime Ministers, 486
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 46-47
Farm credit, lack of facilities for, 46, 50
Prairie grain producers, problems need permanent solution, 305-6

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C. —Concluded
Recession, threat of, 93, 94, 97
Secondary industries, 551, 552
Foreign competition, 552, 554
Wages, 770-1, 1263
Soviet Union, rumoured visit of parliamentarians, 713
Standing Committees, proposed references, 116-17
Trade, international
Atlantic common market, suggestion of Hon. Lester B. Pearson, 768, 770
Competition from abroad, 94-96, 97, 552, 554
Delay in economic co-operation, 553, 768
Desirability of reciprocal agreements with Twenty-Nation group, 768-72
European Common Market, 94, 95
GATT and Commonwealth preferences, 356, 769
Imports from Japan and other countries, inquiry, 129-30
Production costs, 92-97, 768-9, 770-1, 1262-3
Russian threat to Latin America, 1262, 1264
United States
Association with to prevent trade war, advocated, 94-95, 96, 97, 770, 772
Possibility of move to organize common market, 1261-2, 1264
Republican convention, reported agreement between Vice-President Nixon and Governor Rockefeller on foreign policy, 1262
Unemployment, 305, 550-2
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 730, 731

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 530
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 292, 301, 311-14
No. 2, 446, 447
No. 3, 470, 471
Bill of Rights, 1219-23, 1235
Declaration of rights should have preceded bill, 1220-1
Documents on rights of mankind, effects on human history, 1222
Senate Special Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1950), 1219-20, 1221-3
Bills, public
Rules
Permitting explanation in Senate by Minister from Commons, 103-4
Suspension of, 934-5

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Continued.
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 836, 837, 838, 839, 994, 995, 1005-8, 1030, 1032, 1048-9, 1050, 1056, 1057
District and County Court judges, 1006
National status of Canada, 1006
Roebuck, Hon. John Arthur, early advocate of Confederation, 1007-8
Canada Elections bill (Franchise of electors and election of members of House of Commons), 1090
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 61-62
Conventions, should be presented in form of bill, 62
Canadian National Railways deficit, 470
Canadian National Toronto Terminals bill, 916
Canadian Public Health Association bill, 97
Committee meetings, witnesses, 103-4
Congo, participation of Canadian forces in United Nations operations, 1160-1
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 265
Criminal Code bill, 963-4
Evidence, mechanical recording of, 963-4
Fire arms, indiscriminate use of, 963
Divorce
Bills, 78, 90, 102, 107, 108-9, 111, 115, 123, 127, 129, 130-1, 138, 143-4, 150, 152-3, 153-4, 199-200, 201-2, 231, 256, 278-80, 282, 309-10, 339-40, 371-2, 385, 435, 437, 449-50, 479, 480, 490, 518, 527, 543-4, 568, 569, 613, 717, 755-6, 758-9, 760, 787-8, 788-9, 832-3, 838-40, 875, 916, 1038, 1085
Bills and reports, numbering of, 202, 203-4, 236-7
Committee
Members, service of, 1084-5
Reports, 18, 32, 52, 67, 75, 78, 89, 90 100-2, 105, 111, 114, 127, 129, 138, 139, 150, 152, 164, 199, 215, 230-1, 250, 254, 255, 308, 339, 349, 356, 372, 401, 436, 437, 473, 475, 489, 497, 516, 525, 532, 549, 559, 574, 581-2, 649, 677, 714, 716-17, 734, 749, 756, 758, 834, 873, 1019-20, 1079-80
Detectives, appearances before committee, 451-2
Jurisdiction, 100-1, 158-9
Minority rights, 101, 159
Petitions, 10, 19, 47, 77, 113-14, 308, 473, 716
Contested, 113-14
Filing date, 10, 489
Ground of desertion, 581-2, 639-41
Statistics, 232-3, 1080

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Continued
Divorce—cont.
Rules as to advertising of notice and service of petition, motion to amend, 1082-4, 1116-17, 1118-19; motion withdrawn, 1122
Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company bill, 250
Estimates, 279
Excise Tax bill, 857, 860, 952-3, 954, 956, 957
Margarine, 953
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 683
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 566, 659, 661, 745
Government annuities, 1086
Government expenditures, 314
Howden, Hon. John P., the late, tribute to, 6-7
Hugessen, Hon. A. K., Bâtonnier of Montreal Bar, 524-5
Income Tax bill, 921
Indian bill, 478
Internal Economy Committee reports, 251-2, 253-4
International Boundary Commission bill, 848, 874
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 226-7
Land values, assessments, 312-13
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 541-3
Natural resources, utilization of, 542
Ownership versus enterprise, question of, 541, 542
National Energy Board bill, 420, 421, 423-4, 440-1, 442, 444, 445
Licences, expiration of, 441
Saving clause in bill, 440
Transmission of gas, provincial rights, 422, 423-4
Old Age Security bill, 792, 842
Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill, 72
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 39, 40, 42
Railway bill, 808
Reflective markings, delay in completion of work, 808
Restaurant of Parliament, 20, 21
Senate
Powers in financial legislation, 952-3
Prayers, exclusion of public, 767
Tariffs, 314
Taxation, private earnings and corporations, 313, 314
Unemployment, 311-14
Causes need study, 312
Insurance, 311
Proposals to promote cure, 313-14
United Canada Insurance Company bill, 128

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Concluded
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 367, 368, 369, 370, 664, 667, 668-9, 677-8, 722, 725, 731-2
Newfoundland, protection of rights 367, 368-9
Yukon bill, 766

Roebuck, Right Hon. John Arthur, early advocate of Confederation, 1007-8

Royal assent, 75-76, 488, 714-15, 785, 1003, 1078, 1141, 1265-9
Notice of, 66, 326, 474, 712, 782, 988, 1077, 1141, 1265
Suggestion that Supreme Court judges act successively, 712
See Governor General

Royal Commissions—See Commissions, Royal

Royal Family—See Addresses

Rules—See Senate

Russia
Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement, notice of motion for approval of ratification of protocol, 834, 899-904; agreed to, 904
Coal purchases from Russia during strike in Wales, 901-2
Consultation in case of unfair trade practices, 900, 903-4
Correspondence re value of exchange purchases, 900
"Most-favoured-nation" treatment, 899-900
Trade commissioners and producers, co-operation needed, 903
Wheat, 900, 902
Uncertain market, 902
Forest industry, competition from, 283, 902
Oil, press report of imports, 937
Parliamentarians, rumoured visit, 713
Scientific achievements and economic power, 242, 258, 262, 774, 854-5
Threat of separate peace treaty with East Germany, 428-33

St. Lawrence Seaway
Effect on freight business of railways, 110
Financial needs of small harbours, 119-20
Overall policy for development of ports, necessity for, 122
See Canada Shipping bill

Saskatchewan
Grain industry, achievements in, 109
Hospital plan, 840-1
Pioneer development, 109-10

Savoie, Hon. Calixte F.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 256-63

Savoie, Hon. Calixte F.—Concluded
Education, 259-62
Parental responsibility, 259-60
Religion in schools, 260-1
Russia, significance of scientific achievements, 258, 262
Teachers
Qualifications, 261-2
Salaries, 262

Selection Committee—Members 4; reports, 11, 13-17, 19

Senate
Accounts tabled, ref to com, 77
Adjournments
Easter, 506
Motion for, rescinded, 689
Business, 23, 24, 64-65, 103-4, 139, 278-9, 357, 390, 425, 487, 488, 506, 519, 594, 693-4, 722, 767, 816-17, 849, 855, 887, 987, 1034, 1058-9, 1077, 1134, 1144, 1244, 1245, 1255, 1256
Chamber, acoustics, 25
Committee of the Whole House, 946-62
Conferences, international, Senate representation, 54, 201
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 426-7
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, 216-17
United Nations Assembly, 54
Debate procedure
Rulings and statements by the Hon. the Speaker
Bills
Amending of, 726
Explanation immediately after first reading, 151
May not be read third time except with leave; mover may explain after motion is stated by Chair, 874
Rule permitting explanation in Senate by minister from Commons, 103-4
Senate power to amend, 726, 952-3, 957-8, 961
Third reading
Motion should be made, then debate can follow, 1125
Rescinding of motion, 639
Courts and judges, due respect should be shown in debate, 1209
Debate, though out of order, allowed to proceed unless objection made, 159-60
Estimates, discussion on point of order, 279
Form of motion for approval of participation of Canadian forces in U.N. operations in the Congo, 1158

Senate—Concluded
House of Commons
Committee proceedings should not be quoted extensively and quotation should include evidence on both sides of question, 1188
Debates, reference to out of order, 991
Questions should be directed to senator making speech, 612
Quotation from statement made in confidence by member of Commons not permissible, 519
Senator may speak second time to elucidate point, 731
Divisions
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 733
Emergency sittings, authority to convene Senate during adjournment, 479-80
Internal Economy Committee reports, 113, 215, 250-4, 349-50, 372, 549, 1067-9, 1085, 1095-7, 1122-5, 1145
Salaries, method of relating salaries to rates paid by other employers, 1124, 1125, 1190, 1194
Intersessional authority, 1068
Officers and Chiefs of principal branches, xix
Pages, hockey team, 79
Parliamentary business, current session, record of, 1138-9
Prayers, exclusion of public, 767
Role of, 165-6, 992, 1053-4
Press tribute, 166
The Canadian Senate—reprint from Queen's Quarterly of speech by the late Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, 1249-53
Rules
Divorce, motion to amend, 1082-4, 1116-22; withdrawn, 1122
Private bills, suspension of, 230
Public bills, suspension of, 933-5
Staff, commendation, 574, 1067-8, 1081-2
Stationery supply, 1068
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1145, 1197-1203
Visitors:
Australia
Prime Minister, Right Hon. G. Menzies, 767
Senator Hon. Sir Walter Cooper and Private Secretary Mr. McGregor, 716
Japan
Prime Minister, Hon. Nobusuke Kishi, 23-24
Newfoundland
Premier, Hon. J. R. Smallwood, and colleagues, 1129

Senators
As at August 10, 1960—according to seniority, v-vii; alphabetically, ix-xi; by provinces, xiii-xvii
Deceased
Howden, Hon. John P., tributes, 5-9
New, introduction to Senate
Blois, Hon. Frederick M., 5
Courtemanche, Hon. Henri, P.C., 18
Irvine, Hon. Olive L., 5
MacDonald, Hon. John M., 966

Senate Chambers in Europe, visit to by Hon. John J. Connolly, 1247-8

Shipping—See Canada Shipping bill

Smith, Hon. Donald
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 216-22
Atlantic coast, aircraft and vessels available for search and rescue duties, inquiry, 1115-16
Atlantic provinces economic prospects
National Defence expenditures
Payments to civilian and service personnel in Nova Scotia (1956-59) inquiry, 754
Withdrawal of, 221, 592-3
Halifax, effect on, 593
Problems, suggestion for relief of, 221
Unemployment, 221
Employment opportunities, lack of, 592
Insurance
Claimants for benefits (1957-60), inquiry, 717
Fishermen's benefits, inquiry, 107-8, 116, 255
Workers not covered by, 592
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, biennial conference, 216-18
Australia, economic and social progress, 217-18
Canadian delegation, Senate representation, 216-17
Conference on law of the sea, votes on Canada's proposal re territorial limit and fishing zone, inquiry, 1004-5
Defence Production, Department of, contracts awarded in Nova Scotia, inquiry, 932
Education, vocational training for graduates, national scheme suggested, 693,
Israel, visit to, 219-20
Canadians assisting in development of, 219
University at Jerusalem, 220
War threat from Arab forces, 219-20
Manpower and Employment, Special Committee, 591-3
Membership, 591; report, 676
Nova Scotia, primary products, annual value (1957-58-59), inquiry, 712

Smith, Hon. Donald—Concluded
Trade, need for new approaches by Canada, 220
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 752, 753
Atlantic provinces, transportation costs, 753
Gasoline and sales tax, 753

Smith, Hon. Sydney J.
Columbia River, discussion by Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 676
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 39, 40
Tourist industry, deficit in, 635-6
Competition from United States, 636
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 635-7
Costs and delays in construction, 635

Social security
Blind and disabled persons, 796
Contributary systems, United States and Great Britain, 790-2
Old Age Security bill, 757, 779-82, 789-802, 818, 840-3, 1003
Absence from Canada, provision for payments, 780-1
Citizenship, should be qualification, 793, 794
Estimates for, 301, 302, 1259
Increase in recipients, 790
Older citizens, accommodation problems, 125
United Kingdom, arrangements with Canada, 792-3
See Health and Welfare

South America, trade possibilities, 815

Speaker, The
See Drouin, Hon. Mark R.
Acting Speakers
Pearson, Hon. Arthur M., 856
Choquette, Hon. Lionel, 77, 515, 621, 639, 786

Special committees appointed in the last ten years inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 583-4

Speech from the Throne
At opening of Parliament, 1-3. See Address in reply
At prorogation of Parliament, 1269-71

Stambaugh, Hon. J. Wesley
Appropriation bill No. 1, 315-18
Excise Tax bill, 957
Margarine, protection needed for dairy farmers, 957
Maritimes freight rates assistance, 318
Old Age Security bill, 798

Stambaugh, Hon. J. Wesley—Concluded
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 36, 41-42
Western farmers
Crops unharvested, 41-42, 315-18
Alberta losses, 41
Applications for assistance, procedure, 315-17

Standing Committees, 13-14
Subject-matters referred for report in last ten years, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 677, 703-7
See Committees under individual names

Standing Orders Committee—Members, 3-4

State medicine, 126, 840-2
See Social security, Health and welfare

Stationery supply, Senate, 1068

Statutes of Canada
Inquiry (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 584, 767-8
Notice of motion for copies of orders in council concerning distribution, 717-18, 788

Statute of Westminster, 507-9, 513-14, 584

Stepinac, Cardinal, the late, 329-32

Subsidies
Dairy industry, 960
Freight Rates Reduction bill, 1079, 1107-10, 1115, 1128, 1141
Grain, 110-11, 318-19, 470
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 856, 906-8, 910, 935, 1003
Steamship subventions, 472

Suez Canal, restrictions imposed on Israeli shipping, 273-4

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 131-8
Old Age Security bill, 840-2
Physical fitness, 131-8
Canadian Medical Association, observations, 136-7
R.C.A.F. program, 132
Results of tests, 135-6
State medicine, 840-2
Canadian Medical Association resolution, 840
Government monopoly, restrictions imposed by, 841-2
Saskatchewan scheme, 840-1
United Kingdom costs, 840

Superannuation, public service
Basic benefit formula, 1039
Cost to Government, 1039, 1040-1
Death benefit, supplementary, 1039-40
Re-employment, 1040
See Public Service Superannuation bill

Supreme Court of Canada
Case of Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C., request for judges' notes and judgment (Hon. Mr. Pouliot), 234, 255
Jehovah's Witnesses, Saumur v. City of Quebec, 1208-11, 1226-7

Tariffs—See Trade

Taschereau, Hon. Mr. Justice Robert, Deputy of Governor General
Royal assent, 714-15

Taxation
Estate tax
Bill, 786, 818-23, 843-6, 910, 935, 1003
Gifts, 819-20
Non-acceptance of, 823
Insurance, 819, 821, 822, 843-4
Property
Aggregate taxable value, 820
Disposals, 819, 844
Reassessments, 820, 822-3
Situs of, 844-6
Excise tax
Bill, 786, 857-62, 911, 946-62, 987, 1003
Sales tax exemption, 857-8
See Margarine
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 580-1, 600-12, 626-9, 666, 678-92, 715
Income tax
Bill, 856, 904-6, 917-26, 933, 1035-7, 1141
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 9, 59-64, 128, 785
Alimony payments, 61
Termination provisions, 60
Withholding tax, 60-61
Companies
Associated, determination of, 919
Corporation tax, 905, 906
Development expenses, 1035-6
Duplicate taxation, estate tax and succession duties, 821-2, 918, 925-6
Foreign tax deductions and credits, 920, 923-4
Income sources, 922-5, 1036-7
Instalment payments, 917
Insurance companies, tax on premium income, 740-1
Medical expenses, 905
Non-residents, 905, 918-19
Penalties, 1037
Pension and group insurance plans, 904
Private enterprise and corporations, 313, 314, 541, 542, 558
Exemption period suggested, 616-17
Production costs affected by, 283
Property
Date of acquisition, 1036
Transferred to beneficiary by trustee, 1035
Quebec tax, credit for, 905
Returns, statements or omissions, 921-3

Taxation—Concluded
Income tax—Concluded
Statutory expenses, tax payable by Senators but not by Members of Commons, 906

Taylor, Hon. Austin C.
Agriculture
Farm operators, net income, 319-20
Feed grain, freight assistance, 318-19
Free trade, protection for farmers, 320
Overall act to cover agricultural problems, suggestion for, 143
Surplus products could be sent to international food bank, 320-1
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 318-21
No. 3, 467, 468
Department of Forestry bill, 1076
Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company bill, 249
Feeds bill, 491, 494-5
Analysts and inspectors, appointment of, 491
Internal Economy Committee reports, 253
Land use, 321
Committee, 142-3
Cost price squeeze, 143
Rural development, legislation advocated, 321
Livestock slaughtered in control of contagious diseases, 318
Prairie Grain Provisional Payments bill, 40

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.
Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada bill, 263
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 739, 741
Appropriation bill No. 1, 300
Bill of Rights, 1203-6, 1236, 1237, 1238, 1243
International Declaration of Human Rights, 1203-4
Representations of previous years to deal with subject-matter, 1203-5
Senate Special Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 1204-5, 1243
Chairman, Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, 1243
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 837, 1032, 1049
Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill, 59-60, 61, 62, 63, 64
Alimony payments, 61
Termination provisions, 60
Withholding tax, 60-61
Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement, motion for approval of ratification of protocol, 899-901, 902; agreed to, 904
Correspondence between ministers re value of exchange purchases, 900

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.—Concluded
"Most-favoured-nation" treatment, 899-900
Unfair trade practices, 900
Wheat exports, 900
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 160-3
Capital stock, 160-1
Ownership, 161
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1184, 1188
Congo, participation of Canadian forces in U.N. operations, 1158-9, 1160
Customs Tariff bill, 866
Divorce
Newfoundland and Northwest Territories, 1118
Petition on ground of desertion, 582
Estate Tax bill, 818-21, 822
Double taxation, 821
Gifts, 819-20
Insurance policies, 819, 821, 822
Properties, 819, 820
Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada bill, 263-4, 1038
Income Tax bill, 904-5, 906
Corporation tax, 905, 906
Credit for Quebec taxpayers, 905
Medical expenses, 905
Non-residents, 905
Pension and group insurance plans, 904
International affairs
Canada's role, motion to authorize External Relations Committee to review, 200-1; agreed to, 435
Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd. bill, 189-92
Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, the late, tribute, 1231
Peace River power development, 290
Prairie Grain Loans bill, 50-51
Railway bill, 810
Trade, international, 927-31
Chambers of Commerce meetings, 929, 930
GATT and International Monetary Fund, 929, 930
Government efforts in expansion of export trade, 929-30
Primary and secondary industries, necessity for equitable balance, 927
United States, protection for producers, 927
Wheat, advantages of tariff arrangements in Benelux countries, 930
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 729, 730

Tight Money, 56-57
Housing, effect on, 322
Municipalities, increased interest rates on capital expenditures, 56
See Money

Tourist industry, 237-41, 1127
Deficit in, 246, 635-6
Competition from United States, 636
Newfoundland, attractions unexcelled in Canada, 751
Prince Edward Island, 238-41

Tourist Traffic Committee—Members, 14

Trade
Agricultural products, protectionist proposals of Inner Six, 867, 1111
Atlantic provinces, 1126-7
Australia, Canadian market in, 654
Australian Trade Agreement bill, 475, 500-4, 527, 543, 785 n
Canada-U.S.S.R. Trade Agreement 515, 834, 899-904
Canadian currency—See Money
Conferences and agreements, 811-12, 929
Deficit, 850-4, 946, 1191
Desirability of reciprocal agreements with Twenty-Nation group, 768-75, 810-16, 849-55, 927-31, 936-40, 944-6, 969-73, 1110-14, 1125-7, 1190-3
Speakers:
Crerar, 870-3
Euler, 772-5
Fergusson, 944-6
Gershaw, 869-70
Inman, 1125-7
Lambert, 810-14
McLean, 1190-3
Pouliot, 814-16
Pratt, 1110-14
Reid, 936-40
Robertson, 768-72
Thorvaldson, 927-31
Wall, 849-55
Distribution problems, 555
European Common Market, 58-59, 94, 95, 866-7, 870-3
Exports and imports, 58, 83, 85, 205, 242-4, 246, 271, 282, 283, 937-9
Comparison of leading nations, 242-3
Liquor, 939
Small cars, 937
Statistics, 938-9
Food bank for underdeveloped countries, 653
Foreign investments in Canada, 28, 206, 852-4, 1114
Forestry products, markets unsatisfactory, 271-2
Freight rates, 84, 555
GATT and International Monetary Fund, 865, 866, 929, 930, 946, 1111
Insurance coverage against political instability, 652
International balance of payments, 850-5, 927
Italian Economy, White Book on, 853
Japan and other countries, 129-30
Latin America, 815, 867, 1262, 1264

Trade.—Concluded.
Primary and secondary industries, 994, 1262, 1264
Foreign competition, 552, 554, 772-4
United States protection for producers, 927
Production costs, 92-97, 211, 283, 653, 868, 874, 1114
Russia
Economic power, 242, 744, 854-5
Grain exports to, 900
Oil, press report of imports, 937
Threat from, 283, 967
Tariffs, 111, 188-9, 314, 864
Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4
Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, inquiry (Hon. Mr. Robertson), 115-16
United Kingdom
Problems of association with European Common Market, 871-2
Removal of restrictions, 83-84
United States, 94-95, 96, 97, 770, 772, 884-5
Suggestion for free trade treaty of 25 years, 872
Venezuela, export of oil to Montreal, 869-70
Restrictions on Canadian imports, 870
Wheat, advantages of tariff arrangements in Benelux countries, 930
See Customs Tariff bill, Export and Import Permits bill

Trade practices
Advertising, 1163-4
British Columbia, agreements in respect to fishermen and other interests, 1179-80
Defences from prosecution, 1185
Exports, exemption for, 1171-2, 1196
Loss-leaders, 1163-4, 1174, 1187-9, 1195-6
Monopoly, definition, 1182
Offences in relation to trade, 1179
Penalties for infractions, 1162-3, 1182
Promotional allowances, 1173
Resale price maintenance, 1177, 1180-1
Withholding of supplies, 1186-7
See Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill

Trans-Canada Air Lines
Jet-engined passenger service, inaugural flight, 280

Trans-Canada Highway
Construction and commitments, 632-4, 753
Delays and rising costs, 635, 637, 638
Below-standard portions, reconstruction, 630-1
National parks, highway financed by federal Government, 631
Newfoundland
Costs, 186-7, 750-1
Sharing of, revision needed, 751

Trans-Canada Highway.—Concluded
Newfoundland.—Concluded
Industrial developments requiring access roads, 750-1
Special circumstances pertaining to, 186-7, 750, 751-2
Nova Scotia, 752-3
Construction accomplished, 30
Halifax by-passed, 752
Truro-Yarmouth, link needed for U.S. tourists, 752
Port Mann to Abbotsford and Chilliwack, B.C., inquiry (Hon. Mr. Reid), 516

Trans-Canada Highway bill. 1r, 581; 2r, 629-38; ref to com, 638; rep of com, 751-4; 3r, 760; r.a., 785

Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1145, 1197-1203

Transport and Communications Committee—members, 13, 47, 48; reports, 105, 106, 175, 232, 255, 266, 425, 438, 445, 623, 750, 856, 967, 1115

Tremblay, Hon. Leonard D.
Return to chamber after absence, 737

Turgeon, Hon. Gray
British North America Act, amendment re tenure of office of judges, 995
Currency restrictions, study by Senate suggested, 434
Department of Forestry bill, 1085
Finance Committee, assistance in settlement of B.C. strike, 433
International affairs, Canada's role, 433-5
Russia, threat of ultimatum to East Germany, 433
Trade, 434-5
Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, 435

Twentieth Congress of Federation of Commonwealth and British Empire Chambers of Commerce at Canberra, 650-4

Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, 115-16, 435

Unemployment
Atlantic provinces, 211, 615-16
Categories, 1136
Costs of, 1136
Employment sources, 551, 552
Government responsibility in finding jobs, questioned, 558
High standard of living, 570
Industrial workers, 300
Insurance fund, 311
Abuses, 323
Administration of, 315
Claimants for benefits, Atlantic provinces, (1957-60), 717
Depletion, 55-56, 302, 538, 558, 588

Unemployment.—Concluded
Insurance fund.—Concluded
Extension of benefits, 569-70
Fishermen's benefits, 107-8, 116, 255
Pensioners receiving benefits, 618
Principle of insurance, neglect of, 302, 304
Municipal incentive works programs, 81
Nova Scotia, 616; mines, 44
Proposals to promote cure, 313-14
Seasonal, 615
Secondary industries, 551, 552
Foreign competition, 552, 554
Statistics, 82, 85, 299, 322
Study by Senate, suggested, 300-1, 304, 323, 324
Textile industry, 304
Unskilled workers, need for apprenticeships and technical training, 587
Vacant farms, utilization by immigrants, 571
See Manpower and Employment, Special Committee

United Canada Insurance Company bill. 1r, 48; 2r, 87-88; ref to com, 88; rep of com, 128; 3r, 143; r.a., 714

United Kingdom
Commonwealth Prime Ministers, meeting in London, first and final communiqués, 583, 595-7
Forest industry, decline in market for Canadian products, 283
Lord Radcliffe Committee report on economic system, 244-5
Social security arrangements between Canada and, 792-3
Trade restrictions, removal of, 83-84

United Nations
Congo
Participation of Canadian forces in operations, request from Commons for joint approval of, 1141, 1156-62; agreed to, 1162
Constitutional aspect of Canadian assistance, 1158
Security Council efforts to restore peace, 1156-8
U.N. role in conflict, 1158, 1159
Twenty-Nation Economic Committee, 115-16, 435

United States
Atlantic common market, possibility of move to organize, 1261-2, 1264
Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, 390, 402, 404-18, 425-7, 499, 532, 545-8, 676, 695-702, 713
Canadian industry, domination of, 284, 285-6, 1114

United States.—Concluded
Economic co-operation with, 94-95, 96, 97, 774-5, 1112, 1113
Economic Development, Committee for, 1112-13
Report on European Common Market, 1113
Foreign policy, reported agreement between Vice-President Nixon and Governor Rockefeller, 1262
Insurance companies, discriminations in favour of U.S. and other foreign concerns, 738-9
Hydro-electric power, agreement pending, 146, 147, 148
Meeting of Prime Minister Diefenbaker and President Eisenhower at Washington, text of final communiqué, 758, 765
Pepperell Air Force base in Newfoundland, 187
Pilotage on Great Lakes, exchange of correspondence between U.S. and Canadian officials, 212-13
Production costs, 768-71, 1262-3
Rural Development program, 1088
See Canada Shipping bill, International Boundary Commission bill

University grants
Discrimination alleged due to non-payment to Quebec universities of amounts voted in 1952-56, 873, 889-98
Provincial Government ultimatum to universities, 891-2, 893, 894-5
Notice of motion recommending that Government consider paying Quebec universities grants voted in 1952-56, 718; motion withdrawn, 873
Provincial grants, by institution, 1951-60, 708-11
See Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill

U.S.S.R.—See Russia

Vanier, Major-General Georges Philias—See Governor General

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 205-11
Appropriation bill No. 3, 468, 471
Bill of Rights, 1242
B.N.A. Act, section 56, 509
Canada's Centennial, 672-5
Canadian Citizenship Council, lack of French-Canadian members, 673-4
Spirit of co-operation between all citizens, necessity for, 672-5
Congo, participation of Canadian forces in United Nations operations, 1161

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.—Concluded
Convenient Credit Limited bill, 265
Economic prospects, 205
Foreign investments in Canada, 206
Farmers, eastern, economic difficulties, 207-10
Co-operative formula, suggested solution, 208-9
Farm products
Chain store operations, effect on prices, 209
Royal Commission on Price Spreads, statistics on food products, 207-8
Maple sugar industry, 209-10
Surpluses, 207
Land Use Committee, suggested investigation to directly aid farmers, 207, 209, 210
Feeds bill, 515-16
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 775-8
Easy payment plans, need for protection of low income group, 775, 776
Savings, importance in family economy, 776-8
Small loans companies, profits, (1956-58), 777
Housing, 205
Caisses populaires, 205, 385, 775, 776
Desjardins, Alphonse, founder of, 775, 776
Four-bedroom homes, 384
Interest rates, 205, 206, 385, 776
Loans, as social security, 384, 385
Montreal Life Insurance Company bill, 126
Railway bill, 810
Royal family, birth of a Prince, 197
Trade
Competition from abroad, 211
Exports and imports, 205

Venezuela
Oil, imports to Montreal, 869-70
Restrictions on Canadian imports, 870

Vien, Hon. Thomas, P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 1, 325
Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill, 664, 667-8, 732
Conflict in sections of bill, 667-8
Motion to amend, 677, 732; amdt neg, 733

Visitors
Australia
Prime Minister, Right Hon. Robert G. Menzies, 767
Senator Hon. Sir Walter Cooper and Private Secretary Mr. McGregor, 716
Japan
Prime Minister, Hon. Nobusuke, Kishi, 23-24

Visitors.—Concluded
Newfoundland
Premier J. R. Smallwood and colleagues, 1129

Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company bill. 1r, 339; 2r, 363-71; ref to com, 371; rep of com-authority to print proceedings, 425; rep of com-amdts, 623; rep adopted, 664-5; m for 3r, 666; proposed amdt, 666-9, 677-8, 722-33; amdt neg, 733; 3r, 733; r.a., 1078

Wall, Hon. William M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 343-8
Allstate Insurance Company of Canada bill, 530, 531
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 293
No. 2, 446
No. 3, 472-3, 485
Bill of Rights, 995-1002, 1239-42
Commendation of Prime Minister on initiation of bill, 1141
Constitutional implications, 998-1002
Contractual rights, 996-7
Protest against time-tabling of resolution, 997
Provincial consents, form of, 996, 997
Resignations by reason of permanent infirmity, 1000
Retroactive feature, 996-8
War Measures Act, probable revision, 1240
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Ukrainian protest against program, 584-5
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 825-6
Canadian Reassurance Company bill, 162
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill, 1181-7, 1188-9
Defences from prosecution, 1185
Exporting industry, protection for, 1182
Loss-leaders, 1187-9
Monopoly, definition, 1182
Penalties for infractions, 1182
Withholding of supplies, 1186-7
Education, 343-6
Enrolments, 343-4; other countries, 343-4
Expenditures, 343
Federal grants to universities, 345
Provincial decrease per student, 345
National Advisory Committee on Educational Research—activities and financial requirements, 346
Scholarships, Government responsibility in, 344-5
Emergency sittings, 480
Export and Import Permits bill, 654
Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements bill, 605, 610-11, 612

Wall, Hon. William M.—Concluded
Feeds bill, 490, 492, 494
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 741-7
Constitutionality of bill, question of, 744
Protection needed for borrowers, 742-3 746-7
Second mortgages, interest charges, 743
Immigration
Motion that Committee be authorized to review Department's annual report, 386-9; withdrawn, 670-2
Act, need for examination into administration, 389
Committee work, 387
Immigrants, decrease in, 388-9
Refugees
Inquiry, 233-4
Private sponsorship, formula for, 347
Canadian Welfare Council suggestions, 347-8
Indian bill, 362, 475-6
Enfranchisement, suggested amendment withdrawn, 475-6
National Energy Board bill, 421, 423
Licences for exportation of power, expiry date, 421
National Housing bill, 378, 379, 391-4
Distribution of housing funds, 391-4
Low-income group, statistics, 392-4
Inability to benefit from Act, 392-4
Old Age Security bill, 800-1
Progressive "portability" to benefit all recipients, suggestion for, 800-1
Railway bill, 806
Stepinac, Cardinal, the late, 330-2
Trade, international, 849-55
Australia, comparison to, 851
Deficit, 850-4
Foreign investments, increasing control of Canadian industry, 852-4
International balance of payments, 850-5
Italian Economy, White Book on, 853
Russia, implications of increased productivity, 854-5
Trans-Canada Highway bill, 635
Translation system, simultaneous, Senate Chamber, 1200
University grants, Quebec, 896-7

War Veterans
Absence from Canada, payment of pension, 911, 912
Married veteran living apart from wife, 913
Means test, 911-12

War Veterans Allowance bill. 1r, 818; 2r, 911-14; ref to com, 914; rep of com, 966, 3r, 988; r.a., 1003

Wawanesa Mutual Insurance Company bill. 1r, 649; 2r-ref to com, 693; rep of com, 734; 3r, 754; r.a., 1003

Wawanesa Mutual Life Insurance Company bill. 1r, 649; 2r, 692-3; ref to com, 693; rep of com, 734; 3r, 754; r.a., 1003

Wenner-Gren, interest in Peace River electric power development 289-91

Western Surety Company bill. 1r 527; 2r-ref to com, 559; rep of com, 666; 3r, 678; r.a., 1003

Wheat—See Grain

Whips
Chief Government Whip in the Senate—See White, Hon. George S.
Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate—See Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L.

White, Hon. George S., Chief Government Whip in the Senate
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, biennial conference, 180-3
Department of Justice bill, 248-9
Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice, appointment of, 248
Divorce Committee, members, 9-10, 12
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 567
Immigration, 525-6
Israel
Education
Tel-Aviv, 180-1
University at Jerusalem, 182; Canada House, 182
Impressions of outstanding progress, 183
Trade potential, 183
Jewish settlement in Canada, bicentenary of first arrival, 180-3
Northwest Territories bill, 754-5
Court of Appeal, establishment of, 754
Game, Territorial authority to deal with, 754
Judges and deputy judges, 754
Public Service Superannuation bill, 1038-40
Basic benefit formula, 1039
Cost to Government, 1039
Death benefit, supplementary, 1039-40
Re-employment, 1040
Restaurant of Parliament, 20, 21, 22
Standing Committees, members, 48
War Veterans' Allowance bill, 911-13
Absence from Canada, 911, 912
Means test, 911-12
Yukon bill, 735-6
Advisory committee on finance, 735
Court of Appeal, establishment of, 735-6
Game ordinances, 735
Judges and deputy judges, 735
Justice of the Peace, remuneration, 736

Whole, Committee of the, 946-62

Wilson Hon. Cairine R.
Birthday felicitations, 108
Doctor of Laws, honorary degree from Gallaudet College, 759-60

Wilson, Hon. Cairine R.—Concluded
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill, 748
Immigration, 497-8, 528
Contributions to development of Canada, 497-8
Kim, Dr. Chung Wook, deportation, inquiry, 255
Resolution adopted at Progressive Conservative Convention, 498
Unveiling of marble portrait, speeches at, 803-5

Windsor Harbour Commissioners bill. 1r 9; 2r, 67-68; ref to com, 68; rep of com, 105; authority to print proceedings, 106; 3r, 117-22; r.a., 785

Winter works program, 294-5
Indian reserves, 294

Women in industry, 588

Women in public life, 803
Manitoba, contribution to Canadian life, 172
National Parole Board, representations for appointment of woman member, 308-9

World's Fair, 458-9

World Refugee Year, Canada's contribution, 472-3, 1258

Yukon
Advisory committee on finance, 735
Council, 736
Court of Appeal, establishment of, 735-6
Game ordinances, 735-7
Judges and deputy judges, 735
Justice of the Peace, remuneration, 736
Medical services, need for consideration, 737-8

Yukon bill. 1r, 612; 2r, 735-8; ref to com, 738; rep of com-3r, 766; r.a., 785

DIVORCE BILLS

Abraham, Margaret Veronica Stacey. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Agoston, Reva (Rita) Hutkin, 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Albert, Aime. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Anderson, John Edward. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Anderson, Viola Elsie Ann Johnson. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 449; r.a., 1267
Angelidis, Beatriki Bourboulis. 1r, 340; 2r, 371; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Anshell, Nina Finkelstein. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Antilla, Estelle Caroline Lohnes. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Arpin, Jeanne Beauchemin. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267

Aspell, Earle James Andrew, 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1265
Aubin, Joseph Pierre Claude. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Avon, Helen Harpes. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Aylwin, Nancy Jane Wyllie Wood. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267

Baggs, Fanny Hussey. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Baillie, William Leslie. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Baljak, Dragan. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Barrett, Pauline Sornin. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Barretta, Mary Kathleen Potts (Wittingham). 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Barriere, Andree Edmonde Augusta Fontaine. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Barwick, Barbara Ruth Aird. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Basil, George Henry. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Bazire, Marthe Turcotte. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Bealer, Czarna Rose Lemkowicz—See Bialer, Czarna Rose Lemkowicz
Beards, Mary Eva Sheila Redmond. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Beauchemin, Elizabeth Rudolph, 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Beaudet, Jean Louis. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1268
Beaudry, Marie Hariette Claudette Boisvert. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Beaupre, Henriette Rioux. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267
Belanger, Margaret June Barrie. 1r, 78; 2r, 103; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Bergeron, Morris Arthur. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Berinbaum, Helen Balacan, otherwise known as Helen Balacan Berne. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Bernard, Helen Kurtzman. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 1265
Berne, Helen Balacan—See Berinbaum, Helen Balacan
Bertram, Shirley Evelyn Ellis. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
Berube, Joseph Alain Jean Guy. 1r, 153; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Berube, Joseph Henri. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Berube, Marion Adelaide Smith. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Bialer, Czarna Rose Lemkowicz, otherwise known as Czarna Rose Lemkowicz Bealer. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Bidner, Hannah Bitensky. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Bielicz, Jozefa Lukasiewicz. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Bilodeau, Jean Claude. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Biltis, Bernice Ellis. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Birks, Ivy Winifred Grace Arthur. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Birnbaum, Pearl Shedlack Dubin. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Bisaillon, Gabrielle Labranche. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Bissessar, George Herbert. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Bleziotis, Alexander. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Blier, Real. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 449; r.a., 1267
Blok, Ellen Schwarz. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Bodo, Klari Margo Farkas. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Borbely, Peter. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269 (Annulment)
Boucher, Lionel. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Bowers, John Philip. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Brault, Marie Claire Georgette Cronier. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Bray, Francis Lawrence. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 109; r.a., 327
Bray, Peter Eric. 1r, 717; 2r, 755; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Breitman, Stella Jean Dunn. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Brian, Marcelle Schipper. 1r, 1038; 2r-3r, 1077; r.a., 1269
Brodeur, Yves. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Bruneau, Pierre Frederic. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Budnik, Lucy Sekora. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Burke, Doris Miller. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Burke, Shirley Loraine Knodell. 1r, 165; 2r, 194; 3r, 201; r.a., 1266
Burton, Stanley Wellington. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Butler, Robert George. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Butt, Rhonda Lee Petersen. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Butterman, Molly Brenda Stein. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267

Cada, Sonia Kwas. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Canning, Nancy Virgina Webster. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Caputo, Teresa Greco. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267

Cannon, Eleanor Agnes Overall. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Caprari, Marie Esteie. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Carbonneau, Lucien. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Cardinal, Jean Guy. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Castets, Robert Marcel. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Cathcart, Catherine Hetty Dawson Gilbert. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Cayer, Marie Therese Barolet. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Cheesbrough, Gordon Lang. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Chenier, Gladys Florida Allard. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Chiarella, Jack Emile. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Chipman, Pearl Thorne. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Christensen, Carl August. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Christie, Vernis Clifton. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Clark, Dorcina Doris Dubuc. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Clark, Francis Whiting. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Clarke, Joan Ethel Brooks. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Clement, Rene Georges. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Clements, Caroline May Alexander. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Clements, Mary Nisbet. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 488
Cohan, Kathleen Walsh. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Cohen, Christine Nancy Littleton. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1265
Cohen, Lily Schucher. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1268
Cole, Viola Mabel Stead. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Comeau, Charles Guy. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Connell, Jean Eleanor Jackson. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Conner, Darrell Ashley. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Cooke, Barbara Jean Gillies Harris. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Coones, Barbara Helen Watson. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269
Coppel, Sonia Slovsky. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Copping, Mary Lorraine Little. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Cormier, Jacques. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Cousens, Frank David. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267
Coutu, Joseph Ernest. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Craig, Eileen Kathleen Astley. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Craig, Jean Ann Brown. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Creery, Emma Strachan MacInnes. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Crisan, Olga Gokler. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Croucher, Vera Eileen Rath. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Cyr, Nelson. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Cyr, Yolande Marguerite Delorme—See Houde, Yolande Marguerite Delorme

D'Abate, Jimmy. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Daigle, Joseph Daniel Bernardin. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Dale, Arthur Woodbridge. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 420; r.a., 1267
David, Georgette Malick. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Dawson, Enid Grace Pascoe. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 1265
Day, Philippa Osler. 1r, 787; 2r, 833; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
De Bom, Rose Polivka. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
de Krokhaleff, Wassily. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267
Delrue, Georges. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Denig, Elisabeth Lebherz. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Desroches, Simone Laramee. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Devenish, Doris Mary Luxford. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
de Vos, Nijs. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Dewey, Jean Ednah Hiltz. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Di Iorio, Marie Rose Lucette Durocher. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Dilorio, Romeo. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Distelman, Edith Hirsch. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Domnauer, Martha Dammel Reiche. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Donnelly, Frank Gerald. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Dore, Marie Mathilda Charlotte Boisjoli. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Doulton, Mary Margaret Young. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Dube, Joseph Armand. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267

Dubuc, Lucien. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Duguay, Marie Denise Theberge. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Duncan, Ellery Gordon. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Dupere, Joseph Louis Victor. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267

Eccles, Lise Desrosiers. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916
Economou, Parthenope Eftichidou. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Edelstein, Pauline Handji. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Edler, Diane Hawkins. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Edmonds, George William Douglas. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1003
Edwards, Olga May Hospadaruk. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
Ehrhardt, Beverley June Russell. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Elm, Mary Violet Maloney. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Endrenyi, Madeleine Hermine Helen. 1r, 650; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Evans, Richard Austin, 1r, 339; 2r, 371; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267

Falardeau, Rosaire Armand. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Falk, Leonia Szafarz. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 327
Falovitch, Frida Rosen-Deutcher. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Faucher, Raymond. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Ferstenfeld, Betty Zaracoff. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Filion, Eliza Boudreau. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Fisher, Emilia Arcoragi. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Fitzgerald, Barbara Doris Jennings. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Forshaw, Grace Kara. 1r, 279; 2r, 309; 3r, 326; r.a., 1267
Fox, Sylvia Trachimovsky. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Freeman, Helen Frances Estelle Kearney. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Frosst, Marion Mary Treen. 1r, 339; 2r, 371; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Fulford, Norman Edward. 1r, 1085; 2r-3r, 1127; r.a., 1269
Fuller, Anne Olivia Sinclair. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266

Gadbois, Viviane Hirsch Montmartin. 1r, 279; 2r, 309; 3r, 326; r.a., 1267
Garmaise, Davis Zave. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Gatis, Ralph. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Gaudreau, Pauline Mary Ann Irene Patry. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Gaul, Elizabeth Farnington. 1r, 1038; 2r-3r, 1077; r.a., 1269
Gauthier, Ula Geraldine Taylor. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Gauvreau, Madeleine Arbour. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Gelinas, Marie Evelina Simone Lorette Charest. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Gianfrancesco, Leo Antonio. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Giblin, Richard Denis. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Gillman, Harry. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Girard, Lucien. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Giroux, Joseph Edmond. 1r, 568; 2r, 594; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Giwertzman, Erica Theresa Schockner. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Glandsdorp, Sherrill Ordidge. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Glynne-Percy, Bertha Jacqueline Alice Sweetinburgh. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269
Goeury, Georges Justin. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Golden, Gail Rabinovitch. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Goldberg, Grace Ruth Goldenberg. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Graham, Clark Alvin. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Graham, Renee Helen Engel. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Greenspon, Mildred May Ghenender. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Greenwood, Joyce Agnes Catherine Wilkinson. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Greig, Helene Lepine. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Grenier, Guy. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Griffiths, Hannah Margaret Burlie. 1r, 78; 2r, 103; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Grossman, Elsa Faiga Manace. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Groves, Shirley Veronica Hannah. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 327
Gushue, Eileen Williams. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267

Hamburg, Lily Cohen Turner—See Hamburger, Lily Cohen Turner
Hamburger, Lily Cohen Turner, otherwise known as Lily Cohen Turner Hamburg. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Hammond, Diane M. L. Turner. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266

Hancz, Margis Wellisch Ruszugar. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Harris, Margaret Maclaren. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Harris, Phyllis Louise Clements. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Healy, Gerald. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Heany, Myrtle Gertrude Lily Molloy. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Hebb, Pauline Anne Elizabeth Cunliffe. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Hebel, Rivka Fridman—See Nimrod, Rivka Fridman
Heinemann, Edith Tobat. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Henderson, George. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Henry, Shirley Edith Rich. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Herscovitch, Joan Shirley Davies. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Hickey, Hazel Ina McEwing. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Hill, Jessie Davis. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Hogan, June Isabella Adamson. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Hogg, Ronald Norman. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Hollett, Margaret Mary Ryan Girvan. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Hornig, Lotte Wilhelmine Schwitzer. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Horvath, Irmgard Poikonen. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Horvath, Istvan. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1268
Houde, Yolande Marguerite Delorme, otherwise known as Yolande Marguerite Delorme Cyr. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Hould, Marie Rita Dube. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714
Howell, Patricia Ann Shirley. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Humphries, Mary Spalton. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Hunnisett, Mary Pirie Wood. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265

Ignatjev, Vladimir. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 917; r.a., 1269
Imbleau, Thomas Edward. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267

Jack, William Gordon. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Jacques, Gillies. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Jahn, Elizabeth Giliaeff. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Jakovich, Marine Tony. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Jolliffe, Iris Margaret Leslie Sankey. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Joly, Blanche Brigitte Paulette Gagne. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Joly, Jessie Margaret Cross. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Jutras, Julianna Catharina Mehilercsik. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 1265

Kachur, Sophia Kaloutsky. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Kagan, Marilyn Shendelman. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Kalmin, James Joseph. 1r, 78; 2r, 103; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Kaluta, Michael. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Katz, Sylvia Overland. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Keene, Kathleen Shannon. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Kennedy, Margaret Ruth McLellan. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Kerr, Janet McMillan Sim Sinclair. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
Kerr, Otto James, 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3rd, 518; r.a., 1267
Kieran, David Byrne. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Kingsbury, Marie Frederique Raphaelle Mireille Fortier. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Kingsland, Alexandra Protonotarios. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Korman, Georgette Rosenberg. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
Kotsos, Kathleen Margaret Manchios. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1268
Knudson, Aino Maria Leinonen. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1268
Kraska, Wera Podkopaewa. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3rd, 760; r.a., 1268
Kubowicz, Antoni. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Kulawik, Bronislaw. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266

Labranche, Rita Hamel. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Labreche, Nadine Tudor. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Labrosse, Guy. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Ladouceur, Eugena Grandmont. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Lafond, Gerard. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268 (Annulment).
Lafond, Marie Simone Louisette Bellemare. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 143; r.a., 1265
Lafrance, Marie Jeannine Andree Boisclair. 1r, 650; 2r, 693; 3r, 714; r.a., 1268
Lahaye, Vera Jarvis. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268

Lalonde, Joseph Alphonse Yves Jean Gabriel. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130
Lamartine, Stella Jean Margaret Newman. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714
Lambert, Lambly Dorothy Audrey, Hage. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Lamond, Noeleen Natalie Adams. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Lamothe, Andre. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Landau, Colette Bauer. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Lane, Margaret Kathleen Graham. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Lanese, Margaret Estelle Eleanor Evans. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714
Lapierre, Earl Bernard. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1265
Lassonde, Rene. 1r, 165; 2r, 194; 3r, 201; r.a., 1266
Latendresse, Joseph Leo Roger. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Lavictoire, Armand Simeon. 1r, 280; 2r, 309; 3r, 326; r.a., 1267
Lawrence, Beulah Benford Brown. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Lawrence, Mary Rebecca Pittman. 1r, 788; 2r, 833; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Lebel, Jean Paul Alfred. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Leduc, Yvette Dubois. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Lefebvre, Martine Simonne Georgette Kretly. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269 (Annulment).
Leger, June Laura Welby. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Leger, Marie Cecile Leda Vezeau. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266 (Annulment)
Lehnen, Maria Reichinger. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Leslie, Carolyn Louise Atwood. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Levy, Kathleen Beatrice Title. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Lewchuk, Helen Caroline Coleman. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
L'Heureux, Paul. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Locke, Vera Arlene Perry. 1r, 339; 2r, 371; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Lummis, Owen John. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Lund, Eva Facey. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Lyons, Claire Ruth Rubins. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268

MacDonald, Frances Theresa Smith. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
MacKenzie, Kenneth Alan. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
MacKenzie, Violet Sandra Miller. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
MacPherson, Eileen Coates. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Maddison-Roberts, Mary (Moira) Steel Taylor. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Malo, Monique Bauset. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 154; r.a., 1265
Mancuso, Giovanna Intini. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267 (Annulment)
Mannens, Maria Jacoba Arens. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Marcil, Claire Viger. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Marsden, Vira (Vera) Kotyk. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Marshall, Margaret Clare Haigh. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Marsolais, Andre. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Martel, Maurice Joseph. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Martin, Sheila Ethel Mitchell. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Martz, Jean Brasgold. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714.
Marzitelli, Frances Malofy. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Massue, Paul Drolet. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 236; r.a., 1266
Matte, Ida Denis. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Matthew, Honoria Evelyn Day. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Mavor, Catherine Maureen Kelly. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Mazurette, Jacqueline Joly. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
McCullough, Monica Carolyn Nolan. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
McGuinness, Claire Marie Marchand. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
McIntosh, Barbara Ann Tuppen. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
McLaughlin, Marie Rose Nicola Lapenna. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1265
McLean, Norma Katherine MacDonald. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Meades, Glenda Ruth Warren. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Meehan, Joan Emily Wills. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1003
Mendel, Ruth Irene Diakur. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Menzies, Patricia Shirley Rydberg. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Mitchell, Carmel Duguay. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Mittler, Alexander Leslie. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Morency, Paul. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269

Morin, Marie Therese Louise Forest. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Morris, Audrey Mary Crosbie. 1r, 280; 2r, 309; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Mugford, Ronald. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Mulcair, Dorothy May Kenny. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265

Nadasdi, Julianna Barna. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Napasney, Daniel Edward. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Nassif, Gwendolyn Marion Mizener. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Nathan, Percival Verna. 1r, 568; 2r, 594; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Neilan, James William. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Neiman, Myrna Ada Webber. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Nimrod, Rivka Fridman, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Nimrod-Lothan, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Hebel. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 184; r.a., 1265
Nimrod-Lothan, Rivka Fridman—See Nimrod, Rivka Fridman
Nowak, Janina Rodzoch. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266

Oakley, John Gilbert. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1265
Odell, Dorothy May Vallis. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Ogilvie, Barbara Dolores Jones. 1r, 78; 2r, 103; 3r, 108; r.a., 327
Orsa, Larry. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Oss, Bernice May Snow. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Ostrosky, Joan Dunn. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 491; r.a., 1267
Ovrutzky, Boris Moses. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266

Pallen, Ethel Georgina Pottle. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Pande, Shashi Kumar. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Papineau, Louise Dupuis. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185
Parenteau, Marie Marthe Alberta Ladouceur. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Park, Mary Jean Frances Collins. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269
Parker, Arthur Edward. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Parker, Robert Hugh. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Parry, Rose Ella Katherelos. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Parsons, Geraldine Anne Mary McElligott. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Pastor, John. 1r, 165; 2r, 194; 3r, 201; r.a., 1266
Pelchat, Marie Rita Desneiges Trepanier. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Perrault, Valerie Elsie Price. 1r, 568, 2r, 594; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Perreault, Rolande Mercier. 1r, 1038; 2r-3r, 1077; r.a., 1269
Perrett, Dorothy Craven Masse. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Perzow, Rena Kanofsky. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Petrachuk, Margaret Elizabeth Perkins. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1268
Pietrinferno, Rose Mary Dubeau. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Pineo, Noreen Elizabeth Cassidy. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Pinkerton, William. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267
Poissant, Florian. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Pomerleau, Willie. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Porcheron, Joseph Arthur. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 236; r.a., 1266
Portnoff, Anne Smilovitch. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Pouliot, Marcel. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Priestley, John. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Proulx, Leo. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Przybyla, Stanislaw. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Pull, Ivy Helen Gentles Bell. 1r, 650; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268

Quartz, Hubert Shirley. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265

Racette, Militza Anich. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714
Ramshaw, Helen Elisabeth Millar. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Raustis, Patricia Frances Turley. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Ravitsky, Mac. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185. r.a., 1266
Raymond, Marie Lucille Simone David. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Raymond, Paul Emile. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Redfearn, George Barrington. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 327
Reed, Elizabeth Davis. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269
Regenstrief, Ann Aaron. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Reinhold, Lillian Olive Robertson. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267

Reutter, Maria Ruland. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Ribkoff, Rose Vosko. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Roberts, Kathleen Margaret Sinclair McKenna; 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Robertson, Estelle Labelle Baxter. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Robinson, Beverley Cowan Moore. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 109; r.a., 327
Robinson, Marlene May Myles. 1r, 199; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Rockburn, Beatrice Jean Madsen. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Rogers, Joyce Mary Whiteman. 1r, 339; 2r, 371; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Rohr, Sally Emden. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488.
Roll, Ruth Sherman. 1r, 78; 2r, 102; 3r, 109; r.a., 327.
Romanowski, Kazimierz. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Ronalds, Diana Elizabeth Wilson. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Rothman, Sarah Wolman. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Routliffe, Mary Glen Keirstead. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Rowney, Marie Paule Andree Mercier. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Roy, Gustave. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713

St-Laurent, Gisele Fortin. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Salomon, Barbara Raphael. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Salsky, Frances Cohen. 1r, 788; 2r, 833; 3r, 840; r.a., 1269
Sanderson, Margaret Dunn Hepburn. 1r, 165; 2r, 194; 3r, 201; r.a., 1266
Sarrazin, Denise Baril. 1r, 437; 2r, 480; 3r, 490; r.a., 1267
Sarroino, Denise Claire Lescarbeau. 1r, 787; 2r, 832; 3r, 839; r.a., 1269
Savoie, Donat. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Sceviour, James Joseph. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Schaffer, Sonia Floomberg. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Schneider, Annie Selinskas—See Schneidereit, Annie Selinskas
Schneidereit, Annie Zilinskas, otherwise known as Annie Zilinskas Schneider. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Schofield, Olive Bowes. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Schreiber, Shirley Huberman. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Selinger, Fagy Litner. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Sepchuk, Stanley. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Sevigny, Audrey Louise Bryan. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123
Shaicavitch, Sybil Fenster. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Shannon, Gerald Onie. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Shapiro, Barbara Steinberg. 1r, 90; 2r, 111; 3r, 123; r.a., 488
Shapiro, Marion Toba Wolfe Cohen. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Shaw, Katherine Elizabeth Moore. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Sheydwasser, Sandra Maxine Shoore. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Shuch, Mary Semenyshyn, otherwise known as Mary Semenyshyn Shuck. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 154; r.a., 1265
Shuck, Mary Semenyshyn—See Shuch, Mary Semenyshyn
Shulman, Charlotte Stilman. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Shuster, Helen Landau. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Sicotte, Joseph Arthur Andre. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Silverman, Donna Lois Marchand. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265 (Annulment)
Simard, Philippe. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Simon, Delema Grace Mullin. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 131; r.a., 1265
Simpson, Lillian Juanita Sheppard. 1r, 200, 2r, 213; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Sims, James Justin. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Singer, Rose Van Embden. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Skolnik, Vivian Phyllis Steine. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1003
Slade, Marie Evelyn Lindsay. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Sladek, Frantisek. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Slawinski, Anna Soltysik. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Slepp, Paulette Goldberg. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Smith, France Andree Joly. 1r, 1038; 2r-3r, 1077; r.a., 1269
Smith, Lynda Marjorie Cowell. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Snowdon, Donald. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 488
Sohn, Glafira Milczyn, otherwise known as Vera Milczyn Sohn. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 714
Solkin, Elaine Louise Robinson. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Soloducha, Janina Lukaszewicz. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Stapinskyj, Franko (Franz). 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267

Steppan, Erwin Thomas. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1003
Stevenson, Anna Margaret Laurie Cannon. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Stewart, Sarah Mary Shirley Collins. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Stickles, Leslie Robert. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Stitt, Robert Gordon. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Stolovitz, Claire Syrek. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Strzelczyk, Wincenty. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Sutherland, Shirley Grace Edythe Sayers, otherwise known as Shirley Seguin Sutherland. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Sutherland, Shirley Seguin—See Sutherland, Shirley Grace Edythe Sayers
Szczepanski, Joseph. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266

Taghon, Alphonse. 1r, 759; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269
Tanton, Philippa Jane Hutchins. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Tarride, Claudine Fernande Yvette Thibaudeau. 1r, 115; 2r, 138; 3r, 144; r.a., 1265
Taylor, Eleanor Jean Mott. 1r, 568; 2r, 593; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
Thacker, Brenda Mary Pardy. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Therrien, Omer. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Thomas, Ethel Bannister. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Thomason, Timothy David Rudston. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Thresh, George Graham. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Tibbo, Margaret Hunt. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Titleman, Gloria Helene Stotland. 1r, 279; 2r, 309; 3r, 326; r.a., 1267
Tomy, Joyce Tabah. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Tremblay, Mary Jean Olive De Vouge. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Truby, Maria Lozinsky. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Tsitsos, Evagelia Karidi. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Tune, David Lloyd. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267
Turgeon, Gerard Henri. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Turgeon, Norma Rosalie Parsons. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266

Vaillancourt, Evelyn Annie Macleod. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Vaillancourt, Herve. 1r, 650; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Valade, Laurette Biron. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267
Vallee, Gisele Raymond. 1r, 649; 2r, 693; 3r, 713; r.a., 1268
Van der Spoel, Neeltje Doruijter. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267
Vardy, Elsie Mae Freake. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Veri, Nicola Salvatore. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Vermette, Roger. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Villeneuve, Jean Ludger. 1r, 129; 2r, 150; 3r, 153; r.a., 1265
Vineberg, Mary Wooloch. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Vinet, Joseph Henri Marcel. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Vinters, Jean Elizabeth MacCuaig. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267

Walker, Jacquelyn Gregory Bradley. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Walker, Joyce Middlehurst. 1r, 340; 2r, 372; 3r, 390; r.a., 1267
Ward, Maurice Sykes. 1r, 165; 2r, 194; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Was, Caroline Petryshyn. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Weber, Maria Hocheder. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1266
Webster, John Frederick Alfred. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 184; r.a., 1265
Wedge, Iris Nellie Armstrong. 1r, 875; 2r, 908; 3r, 916; r.a., 1269
Weinstein, Florence Beryl Kellam. 1r, 280; 2r, 310; 3r, 327; r.a., 1267
Weissler, Magdalena Beata Landau. 1r, 200; 2r, 231; 3r, 235; r.a., 1266
Westover, Allen Dwight. 1r, 568; 2r, 594; 3r, 613; r.a., 1268
White, John Thomas Francis. 1r, 107; 2r, 127; 3r, 130; r.a., 1265
Wigmore, Mary Prukker. 1r, 152; 2r, 173; 3r, 185; r.a., 1265
Williams, Roy Walter. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268
Williams, Sheila Alexandra Anderson. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 788; r.a., 1269
Wolczecki, Lise Johanne Carreau. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Wolfe, Barbara Joan Marsh. 1r, 165; 2r, 195; 3r, 202; r.a., 1266
Wood, Ian Church. 1r, 583; 2r, 645; 3r, 654; r.a., 1268 (Annulment)
Woods, Sterling Norman. 1r, 717; 2r, 756; 3r, 760; r.a., 1268
Wornell, Alice Marylyn Archibald Warren. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268
Wright, Ivy Baldwin Collier. 1r, 152; 2r, 174; 3r, 185; r.a., 1266
Wroblewski, Stanislaw. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268

Wyspianski, Franciszek (Frank). 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267

Yared, Alphonse. 1r, 256; 2r, 277; 3r, 282; r.a., 1267

Zechanowitsch, Georg. 1r, 527; 2r, 544; 3r, 569; r.a., 1268

Zeppetini, Peter. 1r, 499; 2r, 514; 3r, 518; r.a., 1268

Zich, Margot Buerling. 1r, 758; 2r, 782; 3r, 789; r.a., 1269

Zisser, Alois. 1r, 479; 2r, 505; 3r, 518; r.a., 1267

Zygowski, Leon. 1r, 385; 2r, 435; 3r, 450; r.a., 1267