OFFICIAL REPORT

Thursday, January 14, 1960

OPENING OF THIRD SESSION TWENTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business:

The Senate met at 11 a.m.

Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

14th December, 1959

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that Their Excellencies the Governor General and Madame Vanier will arrive at the main entrance of the Houses of Parliament at 3.00 p.m. on Thursday, the 14th January, 1960. When it has been signified that all is in readiness, Their Excellencies will proceed to the Senate Chamber, where His Excellency will formally open the Third Session of the Twenty-fourth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, seconded by Hon. Mr. Brunt, the Senate adjourned until 2.50 p.m.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 2.50 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

At three o'clock His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and, that House being come, with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to open the Third Session of the Twenty-fourth Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

I am happy to greet you as we meet for the first time at the opening of our Parliament.

My appointment as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen in Canada is an honour which moves me profoundly. I invoke Divine help to guide and strengthen me that I may serve well the Parliament and people of Canada in carrying out the trust confided to me by the Sovereign.

We will long cherish the memories of the presence of our gracious Queen and of His Royal Highness among us last summer. The warmth of the welcome given them throughout the country is an expression of the loyalty, devotion and affection of all Canadians. Our attachment to the Crown is a great unifying force. It will be my earnest endeavour to foster a spirit of harmony and confidence in all, irrespective of race or creed, in the achievement of our mighty destiny.

My Prime Minister looks forward to meeting with the leaders of the other commonwealth Governments early in May. The commonwealth is in a state of rapid constitutional development. During the course of the year Nigeria is to become an independent member following those constructive processes by which the commonwealth has set a lead in peaceful evolution of new nations from dependent territories.

We welcome the spirit which has made possible the progress of the past year in meetings between the leaders of great nations and we believe that with wisdom and patience the series of meetings arranged to commence in Paris in May can bring about the results which all desire. Canada will be prepared to assist wholeheartedly by consultation, particularly in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, with those immediately involved in these efforts to achieve just diplomatic settlements.

A lasting peace between nations, founded upon understanding and tolerance, is the strongest aspiration of Canadians. The Government continues to regard as a primary goal the achievement of the greatest possible measure of controlled disarmament. Canada will devote every effort to discharging its responsibilities as a member of the ten nation disarmament committee. Some progress has already been made by those nations possessing nuclear weapons in preparing a treaty to discontinue the testing of such weapons and to establish a system of international control.

We are heartened by the unanimous approval given by the United Nations to the Canadian proposal to sample and analyse more widely and effectively the radioactive content of the atmosphere, soil and food. For this purpose necessary funds to enable Canada to take a leading part in this work will be requested.

It must be expected that the recent technological advances in the penetration of outer space will lead to further dramatic developments. Canada welcomes the opportunity to participate actively in the United Nations Committee intended to ensure that outer space is used only for peaceful purposes.

Economic and technical assistance to the less developed nations of the world continues to be needed both on humanitarian grounds and to provide the economic basis for peaceful and orderly progress in those nations. You will therefore be asked to continue programs of aid to other, less developed nations, particularly those in the commonwealth. You will also be asked to vote support for the program of scholarships and fellowships to be exchanged within the commonwealth adopted at the suggestion of Canada.

Substantial progress has now been made in finding a satisfactory basis for the development of the power of the Columbia River in co-operation with the United States and negotiations for this purpose have now been initiated with the Government of the United States. The results will be placed before Parliament for approval and for the authority to take the measures necessary to bring about the full use of this most valuable source of power. The Government of Canada remains ready to participate with British Columbia in the joint development of the potentials of this great river.

International trade is one of the chief bases of Canadian prosperity and must continue to be a major interest of this Parliament. The growing exports of various countries are presenting us with both increasing opportunities for trade and problems of competition. Developments of far-reaching importance to Canada's trade are now taking place in Europe and two of my ministers are in Paris today consulting on these subjects with representatives of other nations.

Canada's general economic position has greatly improved during 1959 and the prospects for 1960 are favourable. The recurrent problem of seasonal unemployment remains, however, but, apart from this, expansion in production and employment has been general across the nation.

My Government is pleased that its national development program has stimulated a large increase in northern exploration. Last year's discovery of oil and gas in the Yukon is being followed this year by a score of new exploratory wells over a wide area of northern Canada. Coupled with a revival of mining activity, this makes it evident that private enterprise is now active in the opening up of the north. New oil and gas regulations will emphasize opportunities for Canadians to participate in the ownership of these northern resources.

The securing to farmers of a fair share of the national income, through the maintenance of prices of farm products, has received constant attention and continues to be a matter of prime concern to my Government. Our farms have yielded surpluses which have necessitated a revision of existing measures to stabilize farm prices to ensure that their basic purpose is achieved without the wasteful accumulation of surplus stocks. The severe, unseasonal snow in the prairie provinces interrupted the harvest rendering necessary emergency legislation which will be considered at the earliest possible opportunity.

Legislation to provide for a Canadian Bill of Rights will be placed before you for your approval.

My ministers have had under consideration the enactment of a provision that would enable the establishment of a uniform retirement age of seventy-five for all judges appointed under the authority of the Parliament of Canada. Agreement has now been reached with all provincial Governments on this principle. You will accordingly be asked to approve a resolution leading to an appropriate amendment to the British North America Act, and you will then be asked to make consequential amendments to the Judges Act.

Bills will also be submitted for your approval to give added status and responsibility to the Territorial Councils of the Yukon and Northwest Territories and to improve the administration of justice in the territories.

Amendments to the Combines Investigation Act and the related provisions of the Criminal Code will be laid before you to clarify and improve this act and protect the interests of small business firms.

You will be requested to revise the Civil Service Act and a special committee of the House of Commons will be proposed for the consideration of the bill. Amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act will also be placed before you.

An amendment will be proposed to the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act to extend, for the two remaining fiscal years covered by that act, the increase in the share of the revenue from the personal income tax that is allocated to the provinces. You will also be asked to authorize, for any provinces which desire them, alternative arrangements in respect of university grants.

Legislation will be introduced to give Indians the franchise in federal elections. You will be invited to re-establish the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs.

You will be asked to authorize the establishment of a new department to be concerned with affairs relating to the forest of Canada and their most effective utilization and conservation, and to assume responsibility for other related resources.

You will be requested to extend for three years the operation of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

An amendment will also be proposed to the National Energy Board Act authorizing the temporary extension of the licences for the export of electricity until the board can conclude its urgent business on export of gas.

A proposal will be placed before you to extend the period during which payments may be made in respect of construction of the Trans-Canada Highway. You will also be asked to continue the operation of the Export and Import Permits Act for another three years. The repeal of the Newfoundland Fisheries Board Act will be proposed.

Measures will be placed before you to amend the Old Age Security Act and the Veterans' Allowance Act to establish a basis for the payment of pensions and allowances, respectively, to Canadians residing outside Canada.

You will be asked to authorize the establishment of harbour commissions for the harbours of Nanaimo and Oshawa, and to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act.

You will also be requested to revise the Feeding Stuffs Act and to amend the National Housing Act, the Expropriation Act, the Department of Justice Act and certain other statutes.

Members of the House of Commons,

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry out the services and payments authorized by Parliament. To assist you in this purpose, the Committee on Estimates will again be requested to review the expenditures of several departments.

You will be invited to re-establish the Special Committee on Broadcasting so that it may continue its consideration of broadcasting policy, particularly in the field of regulation and licensing.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the Commons,

May Divine Providence bless you and guide you in your duties.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, January 19, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that

Frederick Murray Blois, Esquire,

Mrs. Olive Lillian Irvine, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATORS INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following newly-summoned senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writs of summons, which were read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and were seated:

Hon. Frederick Murray Blois, of Truro, Nova Scotia, introduced between Hon. Mr. Aseltine and Hon. Mr. Emerson.

Hon. Olive Lillian Irvine, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, introduced between Hon. Mr. Aseltine and Hon. Mr. Haig.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that each of the newly-summoned senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present to the Senate the report of the Parliamentary Librarian to the Third Session of the Twenty-Fourth Parliament, 1960.

THE LATE SENATOR HOWDEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we take up the regular business of the Senate this evening I have a very sad duty to perform. Since Parliament prorogued on July 18 last we have lost a most distinguished member of the Senate of Canada in the person of John Power Howden, M.D. Today we meet to pay tribute to his memory.

Senator Howden was born in Perth, Lanark County, Ontario, and had he lived he would have arrived at the full age of 80 years on December 5 last. Although I also lived in Perth in the early nineties I did not meet the honourable senator at that time, no doubt because he left there at a very early age for the province of Manitoba, where he was brought up, educated and remained domiciled until the time of his death. However, I knew Senator Howden very intimately during the many years that he was a member of the House of Commons—I believe twenty in number—and during the fourteen years he was a member of this chamber. He was a very valued member of our Divorce Committee. I believe that he became a member of that committee immediately after he was sworn in as a senator; and he worked faithfully and well right up to the last moment. He was a man of excellent judgment: I know that when I was a member of that committee, and quite active there, I relied at all times on his good judgment. Anything he had to do, whether on that or any other committee, he did faithfully and conscientiously.

Senator Howden was an outstanding medical practitioner, dearly beloved in the province of Manitoba, particularly in the district known as St. Boniface, which is across the Red River from Winnipeg. He was also an outstanding public-minded citizen, and for the past 35 years served his country, both in and out of Parliament, in a most capable manner.

We mourn his passing, and I take this opportunity of extending to his sons and other relatives our deepest sympathy. I am sure that they will have many happy memories of him to sustain them in the difficult days that lie ahead.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it was my privilege to know the late Senator Howden during the last 25 years. He was a member of the House of Commons when I was first elected to Parliament. He had then been in Parliament for ten years, and I shall never forget the warm welcome he gave me upon my arrival in the house. Eighteen years later, when I came to the Senate, he was here to give me an equally warm and friendly welcome. During the first few years that I was in the Senate he helped me in many ways and made my life here enjoyable, interesting and profitable.

Senator Howden, as the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has said, was born in Perth, a short distance from Ottawa. He received his education at the University of Manitoba, from which he graduated as a doctor. He practised his chosen profession in St. Boniface and vicinity, where, I am told, he had a host of patients whose needs were his first consideration. It was not unusual for him to drive for miles in the depth of winter to attend the sick or the injured. Day after day, night after night, in fair weather and in foul weather, in winter and summer, he ministered to the ailing in his community.

Busy as he was with his profession, he found time to take an interest in the community life of his district; and he was elected mayor of St. Boniface in 1916. Subsequently, in 1925, he was elected to the House of Commons; he was re-elected in 1926, in 1930, in 1935 and in 1940. In 1945 he was summoned to the Senate, where he continued to take an active interest in the business of Parliament, which I know from my experience he had never neglected in the House of Commons, notwithstanding his busy life in his own community. Those of you who sat in this house with him longer than I did know of the part he played here, of the part which he took in the debates in this house and also in committees. As the honourable leader has said, he continued to be a very faithful member of the Divorce Committee, where he had a reputation for patience, thoroughness and fairness.

To sum up, I would say that the late Senator Howden was not only a skilled physician and surgeon but also a parliamentarian who contributed much to the work of Parliament, and I would emphasize that at all times he was courteous, kindly, understanding and essentially friendly. For these qualities above all he will be remembered with esteem and affection.

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I would add just a word or two to what the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) have said concerning our colleague who has passed away.

I knew Senator Howden, or Dr. Howden as we commonly called him, for at least 40-odd years. He was a man who really worked in order to attain his standing in the profession of medicine. He worked as a telegraph operator for the Canadian Pacific Railway at a place called Rennie, not very far from Winnipeg; he also worked on a ranch in Alberta, all in order to earn money to put himself through university and to obtain his degree as a medical doctor.

Dr. Howden never refused a call, no matter how far away it was or who called him, nor did he consider whether the patient had any money or not. I am sure that if a record was kept it will be found that hundreds of patients were treated by Dr. Howden, and treated well—because he was a master in his profession—who probably never had a cent to pay him or at any rate did not pay him.

During the last few years of his life Dr. Howden suffered some misfortunes. His second wife died very suddenly, and he really never got over the passing away of his companion. His son who was in the air force as an instructor, and who had a very promising future before him in that branch of the armed services, was killed in an accident, somewhere in Prince Edward Island, I think. Our late colleague found these misfortunes hard to bear and I am sure they hastened his passing.

I saw him a few times in the hospital, and I was there the day before he died, but unfortunately he was in a coma and did not recognize anyone, not even members of his own family. I attended his funeral, and was an honorary pallbearer. I am sure there were in the church at that time hundreds of people whom the late Dr. Howden had brought into the world, and they all had a very affectionate regard for him.

I wish to join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in extending to the family of the late senator, his two sons by a first marriage and his son by a second marriage, my deepest sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish I could adequately express on behalf of myself and my colleagues who are members of the Divorce Committee the sadness that has passed over us as a result of the death of our colleague the late Dr. Howden. As has already been said, Senator Howden was a very faithful servant of the people, and contributed greatly to the work of the committee of which I had the honour to be chairman. Dr. Howden was a man of great kindness, broadmindedness and understanding, and great responsibility. He was always present when there was a job to be done. In later years we always reserved a seat for Dr. Howden to the right of the chairman of the committee. He was a valued member of that body. But entirely apart from his services, he was valued by us personally. We loved him dearly.

Dr. Howden was a member of the House of Commons when I entered it in 1940, and he was summoned to the Senate on April 18, 1945, about the same time as I came here. In November of that year he became a member of the Divorce Committee, and from that time until his death he was a faithful attendant and a valued member. He will be sorely missed by us as long as we shall live.

Honourable senators, may I join with the others in this expression of condolence.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I have the honour of being a senator from the city adjacent to that of our late colleague. I knew Senator Howden almost from the time when he came to Manitoba. He was at the university at the same time as I was. His first wife was related to a brother-in-law of mine, and I knew him in that way. But I knew him particularly as a citizen of Manitoba.

I have often thought of Dr. Howden as exemplifying one of the great men portrayed in Ralph Connor's book Black Rock. A medical doctor of the character of Dr. Howden seems to enjoy a place in the community not enjoyed by persons in other classes. Dr. Howden was respected by the medical profession not only in St. Boniface, but in Winnipeg and indeed in all of Manitoba. He was well liked by the profession itself, which has always maintained a very high standard.

When I came to the Senate I was number 93 in seniority, and now I am number seven. During the intervening years I have seen many men and women come and go, and I realize what a great school this is for understanding human nature. Dr. Howden left a great impression on me, as I am sure he did on other members of this chamber. As a first-class doctor who loved his profession, he always wanted to help people to maintain good health; and whether patients had the money to pay him or not, he attended them anyway. I have talked to many of the medical men in Winnipeg, and they all agree that he was a great credit to his profession.

We have tonight tried to say what we can to give encouragement to the three sons of our late colleague. His eldest son, who succeeded him as a doctor, is a highly respected citizen of St. Boniface.

I have always been happy to have been acquainted with the late Dr. Howden, because I felt that I was a better man for having served with him. He had a quality of life which I always admired; a quality which perhaps I did not have, but I recognized it in him. I am sure we will long remember Dr. Howden as a great parliamentarian, because of his service on the council of the city of St. Boniface, in the House of Commons and in the Senate of Canada.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, Dr. Howden lived in the far west in the early pioneer days when skill and endurance were necessary to survive. Later he worked his way through the Manitoba Medical College, from which he graduated, paying his way as he went along. He chose to practice in the historic town of St. Boniface. There he had as patients relatives of the notorious Louis Riel, who had colour and magnetism and was so outstanding among his fellows of mixed blood. He treated this man's mother, who talked constantly of her brave son.

Near where Dr. Howden lived stands the great cathedral of St. Boniface. The Red River of the north runs by it, and many of the people live close to the water's edge, while their river lots run back through bush and prairie for two or three miles. In that atmosphere Dr. Howden served for nearly half a century; there his sons were born and educated, and there, as has been said, he had many sad experiences by the death of close relatives. The people of that district seemed to have some strange qualities, and Dr. Howden exemplified some of them. They worked hard; they were exposed to the cold north winds and to the heat of the summer, but when the shades of night were falling they always listened for the vesper ringing the bells of St. Boniface. As the poet Whittier said:

The bells of the Roman Mission
That call from their turrets twain,
To the boatman on the river,
To the hunter on the plain!

The concluding stanzas of the poem seem to reflect the philosophy of our departed friend:

Even so in our mortal journey
The bitter north-winds blow,
And thus upon life's Red River
Our hearts, as oarsmen, row.

And when the Angel of Shadow
Rests his feet on wave and shore,
And our eyes grow dim with watching
And our hearts faint at the oar,

Happy is he who heareth
The signal of his release
In the bells of the Holy City,
The chimes of eternal peace!

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, I wish to pay personal tribute to the memory of the late Honourable Senator Dr. John Howden. He and I served together in the Commons for a period, and we came to the Senate on the same day. We were sworn in on the same day, and we were seatmates for a couple of years until his hearing made it necessary for him to get a seat nearer the Chair.

He entered the House of Commons, as we were told, in 1925. A remarkable thing about the late Dr. Howden was that he was always successful in being elected to the House of Commons. This fact showed that he was truly esteemed by the people he represented, and those who knew him best. In the House of Commons he had a fine record of service and achievement, and here in this chamber, as we all know, he gave distinguished service.

Dr. Howden was a positive man. He could make up his mind quickly and firmly, and that intellectual strength carried through to the end of his service.

Those of us who are members of the Standing Committee on Divorce and who served with him over the years on that committee knew of his ability to delve into the human problems, the important human problems, with which that committee is concerned from time to time.

Job, in his admonition to his friends, said:

With the ancient is wisdom; and in length of days understanding.

I am sure that Dr. Howden had to a high degree that sympathetic understanding, and he was richly endowed with the cardinal virtue of charity, the greatest gift of all.

At 80 years of age he has finished his course and we all regret his passing. I add my tribute, and offer my sympathy to his family and his friends in their loss and bereavement.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, the late Honourable Senator Howden fully deserved the moving tributes that have been paid to him by both sides of the house. I sat with him for twenty years in the House of Commons, and for five years in the Senate, and my recollection of him is that from the first time he was sworn in as a member of Parliament in the other house he gave the impression of possessing all the kindness, the wisdom and the spirit of tolerance which is yours, honourable colleagues. In other words, as soon as he was a member of Parliament he behaved as if he was a senator. Very often did I have delightful and most instructive conversations with him at the table in the restaurant. That was the best time at which to speak to him about his experiences in politics, and always he had a kind word for those of whom he spoke.

The late Honourable Senator Howden will be greatly missed because he had so many friends, and had been helpful to so many people. I join with all those who have spoken in conveying my heartfelt sympathy to the members of his family.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, my dear colleagues, you all know that the Province of Quebec has, these last few months, suffered two tragic losses.

I would like to continue in French, but I believe that it is appropriate to tell my English-speaking colleagues what were the feelings of the Canadians who were present at the funerals of the lamented Mr. Duplessis and the lamented Mr. Sauvé.

Since the impressive funeral of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a crowd as large, as moved and as sad has very rarely been seen.

(Text):

I followed the funeral cortège that accompanied the body of the late Mr. Duplessis from that landmark of Quebec City, the Parliament Buildings, to the Basilica. It was quite a long distance, and there was a considerable number of people along both sides of the street. Often many people seem to be indifferent with respect to funerals, but on this occasion everyone gave the impression of being sorrowful, and the reason is obvious. Everyone must bow to death. Sometimes there is controversy during the lifetime of a public man, but after he is gone all criticism is a thing of the past, for the people realize that he was inspired by principles which deserve the respect of all. Mr. Duplessis was endowed with certain principles which he found necessary to hold for the survival of the province of Quebec. One of the reasons why I speak in English at the present time is to tell of my appreciation of the expressions of views of my honourable colleagues, made in this chamber, which views were similar to his as to the jurisdiction of the provinces in matters that effect the Parliament of Canada and the various provincial legislatures. It is not forgotten that Mr. Duplessis was Prime Minister of the province of Quebec for a longer period than was any of his distinguished predecessors. He was not afraid to say, on constitutional matters, that his principles were those of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Honoré Mercier, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Lomer Gouin and Alexander Taschereau. The future will show that he was right. There can be no greater tribute to any statesman.

Mr. Duplessis had as his successor one of his colleagues who was relatively young and on whom great hopes were founded. A fine man, he had been an officer who had a most distinguished military career, and the province of Quebec and the whole of Canada were stunned to learn of his untimely demise. Honourable senators, the life of any public man is very hard, and those of my honourable colleagues who have represented a constituency in the House of Commons or in any legislature know it. Sometimes it is difficult to belong to oneself and it is not surprising that at times the work is much more than a man can stand physically. Those two honourable gentlemen were great men and patriots. They were animated by public spirit and by love of their fellow citizens. As the Prime Minister of a province is the first citizen of his province, those two gentlemen deserve tribute in this chamber.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as a final tribute to the memory of the Honourable Dr. Howden I would now ask honourable senators to rise in their places and stand in silence.

Honourable senators stood in silence.

CANADA-NETHERLANDS INCOME TAX AGREEMENT BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, this evening I have four Government bills to present to the Senate for first reading. The first is Bill S-2, to amend the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act, 1957. The purpose of this bill is to implement the Supplementary Convention entered into between Canada and the Netherlands modifying the Convention between Canada and the Kingdom of the Netherlands for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income, signed at Ottawa on April 2, 1957.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES LAWS REPEAL BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill has to do with Term 22 of the Terms of Union. Now that the Statutes of Canada in regard to fisheries are in force in Newfoundland this Term 22 is no longer necessary.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

WINDSOR HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is merely to extend the boundaries of the harbour of Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What about the Bill of Rights? Are you going to bring that in?

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to establish a corporation to manage and develop a harbour at the city of Oshawa in the province of Ontario.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thursday next.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I beg to lay on the table some 27 or 28 reports, and I hope that on this occasion I may be excused from reading their titles. A full list of them will appear in tomorrow's Minutes of Proceedings and they will be available for all honourable senators to examine.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Reports of what?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: What are they?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Who makes the reports?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do honourable senators wish me to read them? There are 27 or 28 reports in all. The first is the Canada Gazette, containing statutory orders and regulations, the second is a report of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads of Food Products, the third is the Fifteenth Annual Report on the administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, the fourth—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

Hon. George S. White presented the first report of the Committee of Selection.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several standing committees for the present session make their first report, as follows:

Your committee have the honour to submit herewith the list of senators selected by them to serve on the Standing Committee on Divorce, namely:

The Honourable Senators *Aseltine, Baird, Barbour, Bradley, Burchill, Cameron, Croll, Emerson, Euler, Farquhar, Farris, Fergusson, Gershaw, Golding, Haig, Hnatyshyn, Hodges, Horner, Howard, Isnor, Kinley, *Macdonald, Roebuck, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Taylor (Westmorland) and Thorvaldson. (24)

Ex officio* members.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. White: With leave I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as chairman of the committee of last session, and one of those nominated for membership this session, may I offer the house some information which perhaps will be of interest at this time?

Divorce petitions filed as of January 19, 1960, number 375. That is one of the largest budgets we have ever had at this stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. Farris: How many petitions were there last year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I will give that figure in a moment. The number of divorce petitions that are ready for hearing is 200: these will be proceeded with immediately. Divorce petitions opposed are 25: if my memory is right, we had 20 last year.

It may be of interest to note that as of the opening day of last session 233 petitions were filed, whereas at the opening date of the present session 366 petitions had been filed. That is an increase of approximately 57 per cent. There were 449 petitions for divorce presented last session, and were we to accept as a criterion the 57 per cent increase I have just mentioned, it can be assumed that this session the committee will be confronted with approximately 705 cases. I do not anticipate that many, but it seems to me that we shall probably have the largest docket in the committee's history.

The time for filing petitions for divorce will expire on Wednesday, February 24, 1960.

It is expected that the Divorce Committee will meet on Monday next, and will continue to sit Mondays to Fridays inclusive in the three weeks following. After that it will meet on Mondays, Tuesdays and Fridays. Contested cases will be tried on Tuesdays, and if a case outlasts the day we shall hear it on days other than Tuesdays. So it will be seen that a large amount of work is prepared and ready for this committee. That is why I would join with the sponsor of this motion in asking that it be put through tonight.

The gentlemen who have been nominated are, without any change, those who sat on the committee last session. No one has been left off except our dear friend Dr. Howden, who is no longer with us. There are no new nominations. I hope, however, that we shall have some additions to the committee. I believe that another motion in this connection is to be made this evening; others will follow, and I trust that some further working capital, if I may so call it, will be added to the committee, for there have been times when we were shorthanded. We have, however, never turned down a case for lack of honourable senators to try it, nor do I believe that we shall have to do so this session.

I ask honourable senators to pass this motion tonight so that we may reconstitute the committee tomorrow and be ready for the cases on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Can my honourable friend tell me the reason for the increased number of applications?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have not heard the evidence yet. Probably I shall be able to supply that information at the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Might the great increase in numbers be due to inflation?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Nobody, as far as I know, is "inflated" yet!

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I appreciate the painstaking work that is being done by our honourable colleagues who are members of the divorce committee. They sit on this committee as a matter of duty, and for that they cannot be praised too highly. But in my opinion honourable members of the Senate should have the opportunity to make a much more profitable use of their talents. Recognizing the knowledge of constitutional law which each one of our senators has, I think they must realize that there is a way to deliver the Senate from the Divorce Committee. It is very simple: I wonder if honourable senators have thought of it. Not one has spoken about it.

Section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, states that divorce and marriage are exclusively—exclusively mark you—under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. If, on the other hand we look at section 92 of the same act, we see an exception—that the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction over the solemnization or celebration of marriage. And if we proceed further in the reading of section 92 it will be seen that jurisdiction over civil rights belongs to the provinces. I must humbly admit I cannot understand that provision in our Constitution. If the Government of Canada were to ask the Government of the United Kingdom to amend the Constitution so as to transfer jurisdiction—exclusive jurisdiction—of the Parliament of Canada over marriage and divorce to the provinces, then the provinces would have authority to establish divorce courts that would be not ultra vires.

Honourable senators, I submit this to you not in a formal way, but as food for thought. If honourable members of the Divorce Committee like to sit on that committee, well and good, but if—and I say this without any offence—they desire to serve the state better by giving more time to the study of legislation that is put before us, then they have only one thing to do, and that is to insist that the Government of Canada take the steps necessary to have the Constitution amended so that jurisdiction over marriage and divorce will be transferred to the provinces to rank among the other civil rights. And who will say that marriage and divorce do not come under the heading of civil rights? They are civil rights; they are part of family rights and are so called in all civilized nations. I say that it was unfair at the time of the drawing up of the Constitution to give jurisdiction over marriage and divorce to the Parliament of Canada.

My contention is that a change should be made in the Constitution. I would point out that the Prime Minister said very recently that he intended to take steps to change the Constitution so that any amendments to it can be made by Parliament with the consent of the provinces. That is a matter of the foremost importance. With that change, if the provinces desire to establish divorce courts they will be in a position to do so, and everything will then be regular and intra vires.

Therefore, honourable colleagues, I hope that you will consider this matter in due course. I do not expect that a decision will be taken at once. It is a matter for discussion.

I am proud of being a member of the Senate, and I am proud to have you as my colleagues; I do want you to give your best possible effort for the good of our country. You will be able to do it with more ease, with more facility, and with more joy if jurisdiction over marriage and divorce is transferred to the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, where it should have been in the first place.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt this report?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: On division.

Reported adopted, on division.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Senators mentioned in the first Report of the Committee of Selection as having been chosen to serve on the Standing Committee on Divorce during the present Session, be and they are hereby appointed to form part of and constitute the said Committee to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

Hon. Mr. White presented the second report of the Committee of Selection.

The Clerk Assistant (reading):

The Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several Standing Committees for the present session, make their second report as follows:

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

For text of report see Appendix "A" to today's Hansard, pp. 13-14.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. White: Next sitting.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ADDRESSES AT INSTALLATION PRINTED IN SENATE RECORDS

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Leader of the Opposition, as follows:

That the address of the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, P.C., Q.C., at the Installation of Major-General Georges Philias Vanier, D.S.O., M.C., C.D., as Governor General of Canada on September 15, 1959, together with the reply of His Excellency the Governor General thereto, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am pleased to second this motion.

It had been the custom over the years to have the addresses delivered on similar occasions appear in the proceedings of both houses. When the Right Honourable Vincent Massey was inducted as Governor General, for some reason or other the addresses delivered at that time were not included in the proceedings of either house. I have not been able to go through all the record, but I do find that the addresses given when Lord Alexander was inducted appeared subsequently as part of the proceedings of both houses. I think it is a very good custom.

This year it was my privilege and that of a number of honourable senators to be present on the very impressive occasion when General Vanier was sworn in as Governor General. On that occasion two very fine addresses were delivered. To those honourable senators who were not here I recommend these addresses as very worth while reading.

I have great pleasure in seconding the motion by the honourable Leader of the Government.

Motion agreed to.

For addresses see Appendix "B" to today's Hansard, pp. 15-17.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, January 21, 1960, I will move that a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that You may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted Addresses to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to tenure of office of Judges. 30 and 31. Vict., c. 3.

1. Section ninety-nine of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Tenure of office of Judges.

"99. (1) Subject to subsection two of this secton, the Judges of the Superior, District and County Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on Address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Termination at age 75.

(2) A Judge of a Superior, District or County Court, whether appointed before or after the coming into force of this section, shall cease to hold office upon attaining the age of seventy-five years, or upon the coming into force of this section if at that time he has already attained that age."

Short title and citation.

2. This Act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1960, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952, and this Act may be cited together as the Britsh North America Acts, 1867 to 1960.

Commencement.

3. This Act shall come into force on the first day of September, nineteen hundred and sixty.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable leader a question? As I followed the motion he read, it is proposed to make the amendment retroactive. Am I right in that understanding?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not prepared to debate it now.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I just asked a question.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The notice was handed to me just a moment ago and I have not had time to consider it.

DIVORCE

ADDITION TO COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Hon. George S. White, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Lambert be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Divorce.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX "B"

(See pp. 11-12)

ADDRESS BY THE PRIME MINISTER, THE RIGHT HONOURABLE JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER, P.C., Q.C., AT THE INSTALLATION OF MAJOR-GENERAL GEORGES PHILIAS VANIER, D.C.O., M.C., C.D., AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA, THE SENATE CHAMBER, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1959.

Your Excellency:

It is my privilege as Prime Minister to extend to you with pleasure and pride, on behalf of the government and people of Canada, best wishes as you assume office as Her Majesty's representative in Canada, the nineteenth governor general since confederation.

May I suggest to you, sir, that your first act be to express to Her Majesty, the Queen of Canada, the heartfelt fidelity, devotion and loyalty of the Canadian people, the evidence of which was so apparent during the recent visit of Her Majesty and Prince Philip to Canada.

Votre Excellence,

Ce m'est un privilège agréable et une source de fierté comme premier ministre de vous exprimer au nom du gouvernement et du peuple canadien des vœux sincères au moment même où vous assumez les responsabilités de représentant de Sa Majesté au Canada pour devenir le dix-neuvième Gouverneur général depuis la Confédération.

Comme votre premier geste, puis-je vous demander de transmettre à Sa Majesté la Reine du Canada l'assurance des plus fidèles et loyaux sentiments et du dévouement de la population canadienne, sentiments qui se sont d'ailleurs manifestés de façon si évidente lors de la visite mémorable de la Reine et du prince Philippe il y a à peine quelques semaines.

Les cérémonies d'aujourd'hui marquent un nouveau jalon et un nouveau progrès vers l'unité. Ces cérémonies soulignent l'unité essentielle, sans considération de race ou de croyance, non seulement les races qui ont fondé notre pays, mais de tous les Canadiens quelle que soit leur origine ou leur croyance religieuse.

This ceremony today marks another milestone in Canadian history and emphasizes the essential unity, without regard to race or creed, not only of the founding races, but also of the many other peoples who have come to our country.

I would like to say a word, too, about your gracious wife, Madame Vanier, whose devotion has meant so much, and whose grace is known to all of us.

As we meet here today, a meeting is taking place in Washington, D.C., the outcome of which causes mankind to build its hopes for new understanding, leading to the attainment of world peace with justice. Canadians have a message for mankind. We have been able to achieve national peace and well-being in Canada without regard to race because of our adherence to the traditions and the tried institutions of freedom, and the spiritual things without which nations no less than individuals cannot achieve greatness.

As we meet today and as one looks back in the retrospect of two centuries, one sees something of the great statesmanship and the wisdom of Great Britain. By the Quebec Act of 1775 she granted religious freedom to Canada—incidentally Your Excellency, the first time this was achieved among the countries now joined in the present commonwealth of nations—and as a result of that act she mobilized the hearts and devotion of French Canadians to the Crown and thereby contributed in such large measure to the maintenance and preservation of the Crown and provided for your opportunity to serve as her representative.

I think today of the tremendous developments that have taken place in our institutions, from Governor de Vaudreuil to you, sir. Our system of government, developed to meet the changing needs of a new country were graphically described by Sir Robert Borden when accepting the Speaker's chair from Westminster in 1921, epitomizing by his words the contribution of the French and the English to the building of our country. Sir Robert said:

> The parliamentary institutions which we hold as of right and not of grace were won by a common ancestry and through gradual evolution and development during the past five or six centuries. The man who summoned the first gathering that might be regarded as the forerunner of the commons house of parliament... was a Frenchman, born in France. Thus we can look back with satisfaction upon the fact that Saxon and Norman five or six hundred years ago stood side by side in the assertion of liberties that are ours today.

Out of the co-operation of the two founding races came responsible government and the development of the federal system. It also made possible the unity of different races and religions in varying geographical areas, not only in our own country but also as a basic foundation of the commonwealth of nations.

Your Excellency, we recognize your capacity to be Her Majesty's representative. You are fitted by years of eminence, by great talents, and by vast experience. In the field of diplomacy you have given long service to Canada as representative to the League of Nations and to other international conferences, as a secretary to the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom, and as Ambassador to France.

But I think of another group across Canada today, the veterans, "the old soldiers" of more than two score years ago, to whom you have become, while living, a legendary figure as the gallant commanding officer of the famed Van Doos, the Royal 22nd Regiment, the lustre of whose achievements is undimmed in the passing years.

With such a record, marked by consecration to the service of the Crown and to Canada, I can apply to you what was spoken of another by Lord Tennyson when he said, "great in council; great in war."

Your Excellency, you have always answered the roll call of duty. You are doing it again. I know I speak for Canadians in every part of this country that in the discharge of the high responsibilities of being the personal representative of Her Majesty the Queen you will do so with that distinction, devotion, and loyalty that have characterized your life.

REPLY OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE ADDRESS OF THE PRIME MINISTER IN THE SENATE CHAMBER ON THE DAY OF HIS EXCELLENCY'S INSTALLATION AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1959.

Mr. Prime Minister,

My first words are a prayer. May Almighty God in His infinite wisdom and mercy bless the sacred mission which has been entrusted to me by Her Majesty the Queen and help me to fulfil it in all humility. In exchange for His strength, I offer Him my weakness. May He give peace to this beloved land of ours and to those who live in it, the grace of mutual understanding, respect and love.

I shall have the honour to convey to Her Majesty the message of devotion and loyalty to which you have given expression on behalf of the people of Canada. The recent visit of our sovereign to this country, with His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, has made of the word loyalty a synonym of affection. The Queen has established with Canadians a bond personal rather than formal. Aptly does Shakespeare evoke this feeling in Henry VI: "My crown is in my heart, not on my head". Is it surprising that such a crown should find its way into our hearts as well?

We are deeply grateful, my wife and I, for the generous terms and the charming way in which you have welcomed us.

I am happy to pay tribute to my predecessor, the first Canadian Governor General. He had to blaze a new trail and well has he done it. During seven and a half years, never sparing himself, he has laboured with fortitude and devotion in the service of his sovereign and his country. His place is very high in the list of those who have had the honour to represent the Crown in Canada. From the bottom of my heart I thank him for the assistance and advice he has given me. I have no illusions about being able to equal his achievement.

We are indeed fortunate in being attached to the Crown which holds for the world a promise of peace. It is well to recall that the Queen is the symbol of the free association of member nations of the commonwealth and as such is accepted as its head. The total area of the commonwealth is estimated to be about fourteen and a half million square miles and its population something in the neighbourhood of six hundred and fifty million.

Canada forms part of this mighty far-flung commonwealth, which is composed of many races and creeds. What a power is there for good in the world, what a power to right many wrongs, to solve many problems, in amity, without recourse to arms. Does not the very thought of the commonwealth's potential action conjure up a vision inspiring in scope and grandeur?

You have drawn attention, Mr. Prime Minister, to the significance of this day. How right you are. Two hundred years ago, a certain country won a battle on the plains of Abraham; another country lost a battle. In the annals of every nation, there is a record of victories and defeats. The present sovereign of the victorious country, sovereign also of Canada now, returns to the same battlefield, two centuries later, and presents colours to a French-speaking regiment, which mounts guard over the citadel of Quebec, a regiment of which Her Majesty is Colonel-in-Chief.

And how is the battle of 1759 commemorated? By a monument, erected in 1828, to the memory of both commanding generals, who died in action. It bears the inscription in Latin: "Valour gave them a common death, history a common fame, posterity a common monument". Is there a better way to heal the wounds of war, to seal the bonds of peace?

The sixty thousand French Canadians of 1759 have become several millions. For two thousand years, more or less, the annals of history proclaim the fame and glory of Great Britain and France. The future of Canada is linked with this double fabulous heritage. Canadians of Anglo-Saxon and French descent, whose two cultures will always be a source of mutual enrichment, are an inspiring example of coexistence. They go forward hand in hand to make Canada a great nation, hand in hand also with Canadians of every origin, with their heritages, irrespective of race or creed. We are all God's children.

Each one of us, in his own way and place, however humble, must play his part towards the fulfillment of our national destiny. To realize how mighty this destiny will be let us lift our eyes beyond the horizon of our time. In our march forward in material happiness, let us not neglect the spiritual threads in the weaving of our lives. If Canada is to attain the greatness worthy of it, each one of us must say "I ask only to serve".

THE SENATE

Wednesday, January 20, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Acting Secretary of State of Canada showing that the Honourable Henri Courtemanche, P.C., has been summoned to the Senate.

CRIMINAL CODE (CAPITAL PUNISHMENT) BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-6, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to abolish capital punishment. This bill is identical with a bill which is now before the other house and which at two other sessions has been talked out there. I feel it is time that Parliament spoke out on this human problem. When the bill is called for second reading I intend to ask that it stand to await progress of the House of Commons bill. If that bill is passed I shall ask permission to withdraw my bill.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Wednesday, February 24.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck presented the first report of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

1. Your committee recommend that they be granted leave to sit during adjournments of the Senate, and also during sittings of the Senate.

2. Your committee also recommend that they be granted authority to appoint as many subcommittees as deemed necessary for the purpose of considering such divorce matters as may be referred to them by the committee and to set the quorum thereof, the subcommittee in each case to report their findings to the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Tomorrow.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is his intention to proceed tomorrow with the motion that stands in his name?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, it is not my intention to proceed with that for some little time yet.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand the Leader of the Government to say that he does not intend to proceed with it for some little time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not this week, at any rate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I hope the honourable leader will give the house ample notice when he does intend to proceed with it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On the Order:

Consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne at the opening of the session.—Hon. Senator Brunt.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand until tomorrow, and at this time I have pleasure in informing the house that the mover and seconder of the Address will be the Honourable Senator Courtemanche and the Honourable Senator Blois, respectively.

STANDING COMMITTEES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Committee of Selection which was presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, report adopted.

APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, at this stage of the proceedings I would ask leave to revert to motions.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the senators mentioned in the second report of the Committee of Selection as having been chosen to serve on the several standing committees during the present session, be and they are hereby appointed to form part of and constitute the several committees with which their respective names appear in the said report, to inquire into and report upon such matters as may be referred to them from time to time, and that the Committee on Standing Orders be authorized to send for persons, papers and records whenever required; and also that the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts have power, without special reference by the Senate, to consider any matter affecting the internal economy of the Senate, and such committee shall report the result of such consideration to the Senate for action.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That motion having carried, I would like to inform the house that we are having a short sitting today on account of the fact that all honourable senators are asked to meet immediately after adjournment in the committee room to the right of the chamber for the purpose of choosing the chairmen of the various standing committees, so that they will be in a position to hold meetings when required. I believe a notice to that effect is being distributed to honourable senators.

PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I have the permission of the house to revert to the order for petitions for the purpose of presenting a number of petitions for divorce? I have only 325 here, and if anyone finds that number too few I shall have some more to present in the very near future.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. Mr. Aseltine, with leave of the Senate moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table, to inform that house that the Honourable Senators Aseltine, Cameron, Fergusson, Fournier, Gladstone, Gouin, Irvine, Lambert, MacDonald, McDonald, Pouliot, Reid, Vien, Wall and Wilson, have been appointed a commitee to assist the Honourable the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the said Library.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. Mr. Aseltine, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table, to inform that house that the Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Beaubien, Fergusson, Hodges, McLean, Reid and White, have been appointed a Committee to direct the management of the Restaurant of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the said Restaurant.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, before the motion is put may I inquire from the Leader of the Government whether this committee has met yet, and if so whether it has made any changes with respect to the opening and closing hours of the restaurant? I have in mind particularly the closing of the restaurant all day Saturday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable Senators, I too would like to have that information. Present indications are that a retrograde step has been taken with regard to the restaurant hours. Honourable senators who do not remain in Ottawa over the weekends, as some of us are forced to do, perhaps do not realize how serious a matter it is to find, after having worked in the buildings on a Saturday morning, that the restaurant is closed against you. I think that honourable senators and members of the other house who stay in Ottawa over the weekends are entitled to service in the restaurant, and I trust that question will be given consideration by the committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I will ask the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White), who is a member of the committee, to answer the question.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, this matter was carefully considered at a meeting of the Restaurant Committee. I cannot say offhand how many senators were present, but there was a good turnout. The matter was thoroughly discussed, and the committee had before it a report covering the last three to five years showing the number of patrons of the restaurant for breakfast and for lunch. The average number present for breakfast on a Saturday did not exceed eight, and generally the number present for lunch was between 20 and 25 or 28. In many cases the number that turned up for breakfast or for lunch was fewer than the staff required to serve them. After very thorough consideration a motion was put and passed that the restaurant be closed on Saturdays.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It is not going to open on Saturdays?

Hon. Mr. White: No.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: When was the motion passed?

Hon. Mr. White: The record will show whether my honourable friend from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) was there or not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand that the Senate members of this committee were only appointed today.

Hon. Mr. White: This is not something that has been done this session. The meeting was held last session and the motion was made then. It will be very easy to get the record and to see who was there.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, the point is that this restriction affects senators who do not live in Ontario and Quebec. Senators from these two provinces, in the main, go home on Saturdays and Sundays.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The change would affect some from Ontario who stay in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Most senators from Ontario and Quebec go home for Saturdays and Sundays, but senators from the rest of Canada have to stay in Ottawa. Those of us who come up to the Parliament Buildings to work on Saturdays would have to go home for lunch and then come back here.

I have been a senator for a good many years, and I was at one time a member of this committee, but I became tired of sitting on it and had to get off. However, I think it is only fair that the people who live in those distant provinces should have something to say about what is done with the restaurant. I missed the opening of this session, but no committees have been authorized by the Senate until today. Therefore, the Restaurant Committee had no power to act at this session. It could act nominally, but its decision would have no binding effect. Before deciding to close the dining room on Saturdays the committee should have consulted honourable senators who live in the Maritimes and in the Western provinces and have to remain here in Ottawa over the weekends. If you give us transportation by air whenever we want to go home, I will be very pleased. We get two trips by air now, and it is very pleasant. On Tuesday morning this week I had my breakfast at home, and on Tuesday evening I made a speech in the Senate. I like that kind of an arrangement. When I go by train I waste two days. If after the meeting of the Senate on Thursday night you are able to fly home in eight or ten hours and stay there for the weekend visiting your family and friends—and, incidentally, do a little work at the office—there is no cause for complaint. Of course, honourable senators from Ontario would not do business on a Saturday because they know it is a holiday in the Senate and they should not work. That would apply also to those from Quebec. But, the rest of us, if we were at home on a Saturday and a Monday, might do a little work, and we would be able to leave there on Tuesday morning and be back here for the meeting of the Senate on Tuesday evening. That would be very convenient. I will take the risk of saying on behalf of the other senators from Manitoba that we are willing to ride in an aeroplane in order to have Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays at home.

I think the committee did not do its duty towards the Senate. No doubt the majority of the committee were from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. They did not realize that we chaps who live in the more distant areas of Canada have to put up with many hardships. We have to be absent for many weeks from our families, our businesses and our homes. I am a businessman in Winnipeg, and I will say quite candidly that I miss my business very much. Somebody from Winnipeg may say: "Well, you can resign, Haig. I know of a lot of people to take your place." But, after being here for twenty-five years, I do not like the idea of resigning in a minute.

I suggest that this matter be reconsidered, and that another committee be appointed with a membership which will include representatives of the Prairie and Maritime provinces, and that the restaurant be kept open on Saturdays, at least, if not on Mondays. If that cannot be done, then we ask the Government of Canada to provide transportation by air for senators from the Maritime provinces and from Manitoba so that we may go home for the weekends.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I have your permission to correct one statement that has just been made, namely, that the senators from Ontario are not in the same position as those from the Maritime and western provinces? The committee of which I have the honour of being chairman will be sitting on Mondays and Fridays for the next three weeks—in fact, it will be sitting every day for three weeks—and those of us from Ontario who serve on that committee are not in the favourable position described by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) of being able to go home on Thursday nights and come back on Tuesdays. We stay here. I could go home, but I am prevented from doing so by the work that is expected of me. I think that senators from Ontario who stay in Ottawa over the weekends are entitled to some consideration.

The fact that only a few persons have turned up at the restaurant for breakfast on some occasions indicates that a full staff is not required at that meal. You do not need to have all the staff there to serve eight.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: A skeleton staff would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. And when there are, as has been stated, only 25 or 28 persons present at lunch, you need only a staff sufficient to serve that number, not a staff sufficient to serve everybody in these buildings. It is merely a matter of better management to give us the service to which we think we are entitled, and which we certainly require. I say this on behalf of members of the Standing Committee on Divorce, particularly, because we are going to be here on Mondays and Fridays for weeks and weeks to come.

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, I should point out that the committee members from western Canada during the last session of Parliament are the same as now. There is one member from the province of Quebec—His Honour the Speaker—and I am the only member from Ontario. The other members from the Senate are all from provinces which are too far distant for them to visit over the weekends.

For the information of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) I will say that the dining room, up to the end of last session, did not have all its staff present on Saturdays; it was being operated by a skeleton staff. But the report presented to the committee showed that the cost of operating the restaurant on Saturdays was so much out of proportion to the revenue that the committee decided it should be closed.

I will be quite satisfied, honourable senators, at the first meeting of the Restaurant Committee, when the members from the House of Commons have been appointed, to have some honourable senators come and present their views to the committee. I am sure the matter will be given every consideration.

Hon. A. B. Baird: Has any pressure been put on the committee by the staff?

Hon. Mr. White: To close on Saturdays?

Hon. Mr. Baird: Yes.

Hon. Mr. White: Not as far as I know. There was nothing of that nature mentioned at the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Baird: It appears to me that the staff seemed to want a five-day week and that the committee was just pressured into it.

Hon. Mr. White: No. If there was any pressuring it was not done in committee. No representations or anything of the kind were made by the staff.

Hon. Mr. Baird: On Monday I had a cold plate dinner in the restaurant. Now, when was that cooked? It must have been cooked on Friday. Do you think that is palatable? Is it right that people should have to eat such food?

Hon. Mr. White: I am not the chef. I don't know when it was cooked.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Those are things that members on the committee should know a little about.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I suggest that the honourable senator from St. John's (Hon. Mr. Baird) be added to the committee.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, I am not personally concerned in the matter because I am one of those fortunate Ontario members who go home on Thursday night and return to Ottawa on Tuesday morning. I am wondering, however, whether this recommendation to close the restaurant includes the cafeteria?

Hon. Mr. White: No. I understand that the cafeteria has always been open on Saturdays during sessions and it will continue to be open on Saturdays.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Are the restaurant staff paid for Saturdays whether they work or not?

Hon. Mr. White: I would not care to answer that.

Hon. C. G. Power: Would the honourable senator who has been answering questions in connection with the restaurant be good enough to tell me whether decisions taken by the Joint Committee on the Restaurant last session are valid and effective this session?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a good constitutional question.

Hon. Mr. White: I will say to my honourable friend from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) that I will take notice of his inquiry.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. Mr. Aseltine, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table, to inform that house that the Honourable Senators Barbour, Blais, Bouffard, Bradette, Bradley, Choquette, Comeau, Davies, Euler, Isnor, McGrand, Pearson, Reid, Savoie, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Thorvaldson, Turgeon and Wood have been appointed a committee to superintend the printing of the Senate during the present session and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a Joint Committee of both houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN

INVITATION TO VISIT SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until tomorrow at 2.45 in the afternoon.

The reason for adjourning until 2.45 p.m. is that we expect to have a visit at about that time from the Prime Minister of Japan.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I have a word before the motion is passed? I understand that the Prime Minister of Japan will be coming to the Senate chamber tomorrow, but perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) might give the house some further information. I am sure it would be of general interest to honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I had intended that tomorrow afternoon, before the doors of the Senate chamber were opened, I would explain the details of the Japanese Premier's visit and ask for the unanimous consent of honourable senators to invite him to take a seat on the floor of the Senate. He will be able to spend only five or ten minutes with us. I understand that prior to coming to the Senate he will visit the House of Commons for a short time, and after leaving this chamber he will meet the Cabinet, and later on attend certain functions in the city. That is about all the information I can give the house now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask if the honourable Leader of the Government knows whether the Prime Minister of Japan will make an address in this house?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is my intention to welcome him to the Senate and to ask the honourable Leader of the Opposition to do the same. Then I will ask the Prime Minister of Japan if he would care to say a few words. If I may have the unanimous consent of the house now to invite him to take a seat in this chamber, I will not have to ask for consent tomorrow.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2.45 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, January 21, 1960

The Senate met at 2.45 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, you are probably aware that there are two important bills now before the other house having to do with the disaster which struck the three Prairie provinces last October when their crops were snowed under. These bills are of such importance that the other place has seen fit to postpone the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne to give them priority. It is quite possible that one of these pieces of legislation, Bill C-32, to authorize provisional payments for the 1959-60 crop year in respect of unthreshed grain in the Prairie provinces, may be passed there today, and that another bill, to provide short-term credit to grain producers in the Prairie provinces, may then be proceeded with. About the only object that we would have in sitting tomorrow would be to give first reading to these bills. So I would throw myself upon the mercy of the Senate and ask for unanimous consent to proceed on Monday night with their second reading. We shall have to adjourn, I believe, until Monday for this purpose so that, if necessary, the bills can go to committee on Tuesday, come back for third reading, and receive, later in the week, royal assent.

The Hon. the Speaker: Would the Honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) kindly suspend his remarks? The Prime Minister of Japan is waiting in the antechamber.

THE PRIME MINISTER OF JAPAN

GUEST OF THE SENATE

The Honourable Nobusuke Kishi, Prime Minister of Japan, was escorted into the chamber by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, and presented to and invited to take a place to the right of the Honourable the Speaker. Honourable senators stood until the Honourable Mr. Kishi was seated.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am very happy indeed to say how honoured and pleased we are to have with us in the Senate chamber this afternoon the distinguished Prime Minister of Japan, accompanied by his Minister of Foreign Affairs and other prominent members of his party.

We welcome you, Mr. Prime Minister, and all the members of your delegation most heartily, and on behalf of all of us I say that this visit will long be remembered by the members of the Canadian Senate as a very happy occasion.

We hope you will enjoy your visit to Canada and to our capital city. We also hope and feel that your visit to our country will be most informative and fruitful and will result in cementing the continued good will and friendly relations between our two nations.

We wish you and Japan well.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government has said, it is indeed a happy occasion for us to have in the Senate this afternoon the Honourable Nobusuke Kishi, Prime Minister of Japan. Mr. Kishi has been in Canada only a few hours, but even in this short time I am sure that he has found that Canadians are a friendly people and that we count among our friends the people of Japan.

There are many reasons for this friendship but there is one which is often forgotten and that is that Canada and Japan are close neighbours. Japan is a neighbour on our west and we, in turn, are an eastern neighbour of Japan. The Pacific Ocean separates us one from the other by some thousands of miles, but by modern means of transportation we are separated only by a few hours.

Canada and Japan share many interests and aspirations, but the greatest of all is our mutual desire for peace; and to this end we, in common with Japan and other peace loving peoples, will continue to exert our every effort.

As Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, I wish to join with the Leader of the Government in extending to you, Mr. Prime Minister, a very genuine and warm welcome. May we also extend to you the very best of good wishes for your personal health and happiness and for the general well-being of those whom you represent.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Nobusuke Kishi, Prime Minister of Japan, then addressed the Senate in Japanese.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, of course I understood every word the Prime Minister said, but to make sure I will read to the house an exact translation of his words:

I thank you very much for your warm words of welcome to us.

It is really a great pleasure and honour for us to meet you here in this solemn chamber which exemplifies the splendid traditions of Canada.

I believe with all sincerity that my visit to your country will undoubtedly deepen our mutual understanding and further consolidate the most cordial and friendly relations between our countries.

Mr. Prime Minister, you do us honour in visiting us on the floor of the Senate. We in the Senate do not bestow that honour on all our friends. We thank you for accepting the invitation to come here and say a few words and giving us an opportunity to see you and meet you. We are also very pleased indeed to welcome the Honourable Mr. Aiichiro Fujiyama, your Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Prime Minister, you have just come from Washington, where you signed with the American Government a treaty of security. Honourable senators, I think that gesture on the part of the American Government and the Japanese Government exemplifies and is a brilliant illustration of what can be accomplished by friendly negotiation. Mr. Prime Minister, I believe you were instrumental in bringing about the signing of such a treaty. We in Canada are indeed happy that the Americans and Japanese are again on friendly terms.

In 1952 you re-entered political life, and you brought together—which is a tremendous task—the Liberals and the Conservatives. We in the Senate have not accomplished quite so much. The Senate is a house which conducts its debates in a most friendly way and on a non-partisan basis. But we have not accomplished what you have. Perhaps by co-operation we could accomplish what you have done, but I fear it will not happen in the very near future. You have been Prime Minister of your country since 1957, after the Honourable Mr. Ishibashi resigned in your favour. We wish you long life as Prime Minister, and continued good relations with the American Government.

Mr. Prime Minister, perhaps you and I have something in common—a great distinction, I believe: we both played golf with President Eisenhower. I don't know how successful you were, but I did not show much skill at the game.

I wish also to greet the Honourable Mr. Aiichiro Fujiyama, your Minister of Foreign Affairs, who also has had a great career. Would Mr. Fujiyama care to rise at this time so that we may greet him?

(The Honourable Mr. Fujiyama stood and was greeted with applause by honourable senators.)

Mr. Fujiyama has been Minister of Foreign Affairs since July, 1957, and, although a newcomer to active political life, in his election in 1958 to the House of Representatives he received the second highest number of votes. Prior to becoming Foreign Minister he was one of Japan's most influential business leaders, an adviser to the Government on external economic problems, and president of both the Tokyo and Japan Chambers of Commerce and Industry. When he became Foreign Minister he resigned from executive positions—I would ask honourable senators to listen attentively to this—in 180 companies and other organizations. He is also a patron of the arts. His chief recreation is painting, and he plays golf.

We are happy to welcome you, sir, with all the other members of your delegation. We hope that very soon you will come back to Canada, visit us for a longer period of time and travel more extensively in our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Prime Minister of Japan then withdrew, while honourable senators stood.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, you heard what I said a few minutes ago immediately prior to the advent of the Prime Minister of Japan. I would like to know if what I have suggested is agreeable to the Senate, and if I am to be allowed to proceed with the second reading on Monday night next of the two bills I mentioned if, as and when they are received here.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would like it to be understood that there is no guarantee that the second reading will be concluded on Monday night.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the honourable leader if the granting of these moneys is so urgent that we need to meet a day earlier than usual?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In answer to the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) I will say that this matter is so important that the debate in the other house was adjourned so that the two measures could be proceeded with. I have been through the disaster area and I know something about it. It is just awful, and the people there need whatever help we can give them as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would one day make much difference?

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following reports:

Report of the Cornwall International Bridge Company Limited, for the fiscal year ended September 30, 1959, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, for the fiscal year ended

March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 11 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act, Chapter 4, Statutes of 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Report of the proceedings under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 6 of the said Act, Chapter 25, Statutes of 1957-58. (English text).

Report of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 95(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, Chapter 273, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Department of Transport, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 34 of the Department of Transport Act, Chapter 79, R.S. 1952. (English text).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Monday next, January 25, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE CHAMBER

ACOUSTICS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with may I inquire whether anything can be done to improve our voice amplification system? Yesterday I could not hear a word that was said at the other end of the chamber. It seems to me that we have spent a good deal of money on an amplification system that is not working satisfactorily. Whether it can be made to work I do not know, but it certainly could be looked into.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I would like to support the remarks just made by the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron). One of my colleagues sitting behind me has said, "I cannot hear the discussions in this chamber as well this session as I did last session." I was wondering whether the sound system we had last session has been discontinued or what is the matter. It is not as good as it formerly was and it should be improved.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You are not wearing a hearing aid.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I do not need one.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I say a word on this subject? I believe quite a few honourable members do not speak loudly enough. It is good exercise to speak loudly. The debate yesterday was conducted in very low tones and I could not follow half of it. I do not think the system is responsible but that honourable senators should endeavour to project their voices. It is just a humble suggestion I am making.

Hon. Mr. Euler: If I may say so, with all due respect to His Honour the Speaker, it is very difficult for me to hear him now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Well, something must be wrong.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche moved, seconded by Hon. Frederick M. Blois:

(Translation):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General to offer the humble thanks of this house to His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both houses of Parliament, namely:

To His Excellency Major-General Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, to whom was awarded the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of Parliament.

(Text):

The Hon. the Speaker put the motion, as read.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, for the enlightenment of many of the uninitiated in the mysteries of the French language, of whom I am one, may I ask that His Honour the Speaker put the motion in English so that we will know what we are voting on?

The Hon. the Speaker: I will translate it as I go along.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Courtemanche, seconded by the Honourable Senator Blois, that the following Address be presented to his Excellency the Governor General of Canada—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Dispense.

(Translation):

Hon. Henri Courtemanche: Honourable senators, at the outset of my first speech before this august assembly, may I pay tribute to our gracious Sovereign who, on the 1st of July last, celebrated with us in this capital city the anniversary of Confederation.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and His Royal Highness Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, as we know, spent the next six weeks travelling through the greater part of Canada before going to visit our neighbours to the South. Very few monarchs in the world enjoy, to the same extent, the affection of their subjects.

Everywhere, during this historic visit, our Queen and her husband were the object of enthusiastic and spontaneous demonstrations. I was particularly happy to learn that, according to many observers, it was in one of the cities of the province of Quebec, namely Three Rivers, that they received the most cordial welcome.

Her Majesty, indeed, has always shown the French-speaking population of Canada such understanding and friendship that she has won the heart of each one of us.

I would like, today, to wish our Sovereign good health. We all somewhat share the royal family's anxiety on the eve of a great event which, with the grace of God, will bring her a great joy, a joy in which we will be happy to join.

I must now confess, honourable senators, that it is not without a deep emotion that I rise to propose the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Just a few days ago, I was still a member of the other house. And now I have been conferred the signal honour, not only of becoming a member of the Senate, but also of proposing the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

May I give public expression to the gratitude I feel towards the person who has shown such confidence in me. It is most sincerely that I wish to thank the Right Honourable the Prime Minister for this great honour. In a few short years, the leader of the Canadian Government has become one of our ranking statesmen.

The responsibility placed on my shoulders is a heavy one indeed and if I have accepted it, honourable colleagues, it is because I know the atmosphere of good will and cordiality which pervades this Chamber and I am sure that you will not refuse me your indulgence, which I most humbly crave.

You may rest assured that I will endeavour to represent the electoral division of Rougemont as well as I can. I might add that I have long had a connection with that division, my mother having been born at St. Cesaire. Moreover, chance has ordained that this electoral division be represented at the Legislative Council of my province by a former member for the county of Labelle.

I would now like to pay tribute to His Excellency the Governor General, Major General Georges P. Vanier who, on the 1st of August last, succeeded the Right Honourable Vincent Massey. It was immediately upon her return from Canada that our gracious Sovereign was pleased to call His Excellency to this high function. He therefore became the second Canadian and the first French Canadian to represent the Crown in Canada and Madame Vanier, the first Canadian chatelaine of Rideau Hall.

The appointment of Major General Vanier, as we know, gave rise to most flattering comment on all sides. In the Paris newspaper La Croix, Wladimir d'Ormesson, of the French Academy, wrote that this appointment "testified once again to the care with which the Crown looks after the interests of each member of the commonwealth, to the realism and noble feelings with which the Queen fulfils this key function which is one of the oddities, as well as one of the safeguards, of our modern world".

"And the name Vanier", continued Mr. d'Ormesson, "is dear not only to all Canadians, but also to all Frenchmen. Major General Vanier is one of the highest, purest and most respected figures of our time".

As Secretary of State, I had the very great honour and signal privilege of accompanying from Montreal to Ottawa Their Excellencies the Governor General and Madame Vanier when they left the Canadian metropolis to make their official entrance into the Capital.

I shall keep an imperishable memory of the all too short moments spent in the company of this illustrious couple.

The Speech from the Throne which was read at the opening of the third session of the twenty-fourth Parliament contains a heavy legislative program.

What strikes me, however, at least in the first paragraphs of the speech, is the obvious and ardent desire that peace should reign among the different countries of the world. And in order that people may enjoy such peace and harmony in the four corners of the world, the Government of Canada will leave no stone unturned.

I might add that during the year which has just ended, Canada has had the opportunity of asserting herself on the international scene, both at the United Nations and at NATO. I believe that our country continues to display and to increase its prestige within the international bodies working towards the peaceful solution of differences and the passing of agreements likely to promote peace throughout the world.

Canada wants a lasting peace because we know very well that without it we will experience a disaster that will spare no single part of the world.

One would rather not give even a single thought to the kind of disaster that would result from a world war or even a limited war waged with nuclear weapons. Nations have devised means of defence and attack so deadly that today their main concern is to find measures in order that they will never be forced to resort to such weapons.

But peace alone is not enough. There is the question of atomic fall-out which is certainly one of the most disturbing at the present time and we are happy to learn that the proposal submitted by the Honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United Nations received unanimous approval. Canada's Government recommends the taking of samples which would be analysed as efficiently as possible for radio-active particles that are now present in the atmosphere and in the ground as well as in our food.

In a report submitted to the French Academy of Science, last October, five scientists: an American, three Japanese and a Frenchman—(Messrs. Linus Pauling, Hideki Yukawa, Shoichi Sakawa, Sin-Itiro Tomonaga and Jean-Pierre Vigier)—predicted that over a million people would die from radio-activity that has been given off so far by explosions of nuclear bombs. Moreover, they predicted that 1,250,000 abnormal children would result from this same deadly radio-activity.

Can it be that those people are exaggerating a bit? Maybe they are over-pessimistic. Nevertheless in Canada and the United States scientists are constantly examining food and soils lest there should be any dangerous amount of Strontium 90. We are told that until now we have been safe from that danger. But will the situation remain as it is now?

Reports that "there is no danger at present" are not lacking. It is however obvious that our poor human race, like a sorcerer's apprentice, runs the risk of being the victim of a power that it has released but can no longer control. Besides, the wish to restrain or abolish completely nuclear experiments often expressed by many statesmen, convinces that Canada is duty bound to do everything in order to have these experiments discontinued and in order that some kind of international control be established.

I know that our country is in a better position than any other country to play the part of peacemaker. Everyone knows that Canada has no axe to grind nor desire for aggrandizement. Our country has always lived on excellent terms with her neighbours. And up to now on the international scene Canada has shown a constant and unselfish devotion in serving the great cause of peace. There is therefore no reason to be astonished that throughout the world the general feeling is that Canada will exert a strong conciliatory influence at the Conference that will take place in Geneva next March when we will begin negotiations with the U.S.S.R. with a view to applying a policy of general disarmament. No one can work for a better cause than that of peace and good will.

And now, what about the economic situation in our country? The Speech from the Throne mentions an improvement during 1959 and expresses optimism for 1960. It refers to "favourable prospects". The Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce has confirmed this forecast in his "Review of Canada's economy in 1959 and outlook for 1960".

In regard to prospects for 1960, one can read in particular the following:

> What is presently known of investment plans for 1960 suggests that capital outlays by the business community will increase considerably. A stepped-up rate of expansion is indicated in the commercial sector, in manufacturing and possibly in some utilities also. The level of outlays in other fields of investment will depend in large part upon the physical and financial resources which they are able to command—
> "Prospective growth in both exports and investment will help to sustain the current upward trend of personal incomes and contribute to further strengthening in other market sectors. The consumer market in particular gives promise of continuing buoyancy in the period ahead.
> "These considerations suggest that total demands upon the economy are likely to continue to increase, resulting in a further expansion of output and employment. While productive resources have become more fully utilized over the past year, there is still a considerable amount of available capacity in most industries. In addition, manpower and plant capacity are growing steadily. In these circumstances, it would appear that a production increase of considerable dimensions could take place without giving rise to excessive pressure upon productive capacities. At the same time, it is important that demands be kept within the scope of available resources.

For his part, before the Canadian Club in Toronto a few days ago, the Minister of Finance gave us a warning which is thought provoking. He invited the Canadian people to avoid in this country the experiment of inflation which can only lead to disaster. A greater prosperity is ahead of us, but we must achieve stabilization of cost prices.

A steady rise of the latter might well have serious results. Moreover, the Honourable the Minister of Finance intimated that the Government will enforce the necessary restrictive measures to offset the latent threat of inflation.

Canada needs new capital to carry on its economic expansion. Last year 80 per cent of the billion dollars we needed came from the United States. One can understand why the Honourable the Minister of Finance is asking Canadians for their savings. It is absolutely necessary for us to take a larger share in the development of our own economy. Why lack confidence in our future when foreigners do not hesitate to invest millions and millions of dollars here?

With these reserves, we are justified in being optimistic. During his speech at the yearly meeting of the shareholders the Chairman and President of the Royal Bank of Canada said this:

> I believe that Canadians have the courage demanded by the march of events in the 1960's and the will to achieve the even richer promise of decades still to come. With our material blessings, these qualities are all we need to make Canada a leader and an example to all the eager young countries—in Latin America, in Africa, in Asia—which even now are, like us, striving to meet the great problems, and to achieve the even greater rewards, of a sustained, balanced, healthy economic growth in a tough, competitive world, but, let us fervently hope, an essentially peaceful economy of nations.

Among the innovations announced by the Speech from the Throne there is "the establishment of a new department concerned with affairs relating to the forests of Canada and their most effective utilization and conservation and to assume responsibility for other related resources."

Canadians will be gratified over such a decision. Let us not forget that almost half the land of Canada is still covered by forests. Let us not forget that our forests provide one eighth of our national income. Do we often realize that the trade in wood and wood products, newsprint especially, accounts for one third of our exports?

Many industries are dependent on forests, pulp, paper, and lumber being the main ones. In the House of Commons I used to represent the riding of Labelle, which, if I may be allowed to use such an expression, derives its livelihood from the forest. Therefore, I am quite familiar with this matter and I can assure you that the government's decision to establish a new department is a most timely one. The problem of forest conservation is very important and research in this field should be intensified. Research work will help to discover new products and by-products, the manufacturing and the trade of which will be a valuable contribution to the general prosperity of our country.

The province of Quebec, in particular, will look favourably upon any steps which may be taken by the federal Government, within the limits of its jurisdiction, in order to protect our forests and to promote their rational and profitable development. Quebec ranks first in Canada in regard to the production of pulp and paper, as well as in regard to the value of her forests and water resources which, as everyone knows, are essential to the logging industry. According to the figures supplied by the minister of Lands and Forests of that province last November, the logging industry has paid in 1958 over 250 million dollars in wages in Quebec, while the production of forest products exceeded 650 million dollars.

The creation of this new department is due to the initiative of our great Prime Minister, the Right Honourable J. G. Diefenbaker, who has made it part of his program. It will enable us to take care of the resources given us by Providence and to supply the logging industry of Canada with the scientific data it requires.

Honourable senators, I have asked for your indulgence and you have been kind enough to grant my request. Within my modest means, I shall endeavour to work for the greatness and the prosperity of our beautiful country, and for good will between the two leading races. Let us give our beloved country a truly Canadian soul which will result from the union of two philosophies, two religions, two cultures, two languages and two turns of mind. For our part, let us co-operate, and let our English-speaking fellow-countrymen do likewise, and I trust there will always be mutual respect and comprehension.

I shall conclude by quoting one of my illustrious predecessors in this house, Sir Thomas Chapais, who said:

> Let us have this union which is based fundamentally on justice, tolerance and liberty; justice which protects all our citizens and has only one law for minorities and majorities alike; tolerance which teaches mutual respect of national convictions and customs; liberty which guarantees to each the free exercise of his civil, political and religious rights.

Such union would make of Canada, honourable senators, a happy, prosperous and glorious country, a country—and here I paraphrase the words of Sir Thomas Chapais—preserved not by the governors or the statesmen, or by great men alone, but by the Canadian people. Our people have kindled the flame that is Canada's and have made it even more brilliant for us; we too shall pass on and shall leave this vale of tears, but Canada will remain, your Canada, our Canada.

Honourable senators, I have the honour to move the Address to His Excellency, the Governor General, in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

(Text):

Hon. Frederick M. Blois: Honourable Senators, in seconding the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne I would like to express my sincere thanks to the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for the high honour he has bestowed upon me. This honour, of course, was not to me, but to that grand old province of Nova Scotia, and particularly to my constituency of Colchester-Hants—and for the information of honorable senators I would state there is none finer in the province.

It is difficult for me, a new member of this honourable chamber, to discuss the various proposals which the administration intends bringing before Parliament at this session. But it does seem clear that they include a number of measures for extending more justice to various groups, and for instituting action in connection with subjects on which many people feel action was long overdue.

I would like to compliment the mover of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne for the very able manner in which he appeared to deliver his speech. I must say "appeared" for, unfortunately, I could get only a word here and there. It is my great loss that I do not understand the French language. However, one could tell from the faces of honourable senators who do know the language that it was appreciated.

Honourable senators will, I believe, agree that Canada and the whole world are going through a strenuous and trying period. It is going to require the best brains of all the world to work out a peaceful solution. Threats of war are still abroad, but I believe that the danger is not as great as it was one year ago. The meetings held by various heads of state and by the secretaries of state of the various nations, and the great work being carried on by the United Nations, are doing much to combat the danger.

The representatives of the Government of Canada have been doing their part. Their untiring efforts deserve the thanks of all Canadians. Our standing among the nations of the world has been growing through the years. May it continue to do so and may those carrying on the work be given the strength and health to continue.

All world governments are greatly concerned about disarmament, nuclear weapons and the danger of radioactive atmosphere, soil and food. Canada has taken and must continue to take a very active interest in these things. We are very vulnerable. Canada must get the best technicians available and be prepared to spend money where necessary, either on her own or in conjunction with other nations. I know that our Government will continue to give serious consideration to these problems.

Honourable senators, I would like to say something about the unemployment situation in our country. This same situation at present exists in practically all the countries of the world, but that does not help conditions in Canada. As honourable senators well know, our climatic conditions are blamed for a large part of our seasonal unemployment. Regardless of the cause, however, the situation is a serious one, causing worry to our Government, our industries, and even more to the unemployed themselves and their families. It has been estimated that the seasonal unemployment problem means a loss in wages of nearly $250 million during approximately a four-month period each year. This is a tremendous loss to the economy of the country, but much more serious is the dislocation of family life during that time.

It is my belief that this condition can be improved by the co-operation of governments, industry and labour unions. I do not think it is the sole responsibility of government. Not many years ago it was unheard of to see building construction being carried on in the winter months. Now it is a common sight. It is my belief that many kinds of work can be done during the winter months. First costs may seem higher, but I believe there are other considerations to offset this. As an example, it is a well-known fact that many contractors must pay their key men during the slack period. The interest on cost of machinery continues, as do taxes and other items. It is quite possible that such fixed costs would to a large extent offset the additional cost of winter work.

If I might be permitted to mention a personal experience: Some two years ago I approached a firm doing business in Nova Scotia and employing more than sixty men. At that time I was in a position to give them nearly two months' work during the winter if it could be done at summer prices. Previously we paid a winter bonus. I pointed out the savings I thought would accrue to them by keeping the regular staff together, and, more important, the benefit to the community, and particularly to the employees and their families. After some discussion the local manager agreed to take the subject up with his head office. Within a short time I had a visit from a vice-president of the company, with the result it was agreed to give the scheme a trial for one winter. Some problems developed the first year, but it was considered worthy of further trial last winter. I am pleased to say it is again being carried on this winter. All that was required was a little co-operation. I am not suggesting that all unemployment could be solved so easily, but I do think much could be accomplished along these lines.

I was more than pleased to hear the Minister of Highways for Nova Scotia, on the occasion of the annual dinner of the Nova Scotia Road Building Association a couple of weeks ago, suggest to them that they should consider their costs of winter work along the lines of the arrangement with the firm I have just referred to. The Minister of Highways went even further. He instructed his engineers to give immediate study to the situation and if possible do some construction work this winter, keeping accurate costs for comparison. The Nova Scotia Government, as you will see, is very much alive to the problem.

I would like to say something about the tourist industry, which is probably the most important and far-reaching of any industry in Canada. It affects each province in that it is a completely cash transaction and is bringing in what might be termed new money. It is an industry that is growing rapidly, but as yet some provinces have only scratched the surface. My own province of Nova Scotia is vitally interested, and well it might be, for it is one spot in which we can compete with all Canada. We have the scenery—beautiful hills and valleys, streams and lakes in abundance for fresh-water fishing, thousands of miles of coastline for deep-sea fishing, beautiful sandy beaches, and a climate which is the envy of the rest of Canada. With our newly paved highways—and more are being built each year—and with the assistance of the federal Government in connection with "Roads to Resources", Nova Scotia is truly a tourist paradise.

All Canadians can, and should, assist this important industry to grow. We can invite our friends from the United States and from other parts of the world to visit us, and when they come let all of us go out of our way to be courteous to them, and to be friendly. If we see a foreign licence plate on a car, and the occupants seem to be in doubt, then let us stop and offer our help. I have had many such visitors tell me how much they appreciate the friendliness and help of our people, and that they are coming back.

My home town of Truro has demonstrated this spirit of friendliness to such an extent that its good reputation is spreading far and wide. A few years ago it was decided to do some advertising about beautiful Victoria Park, which comprises over one thousand acres. Tourists had asked if a trailer spot could be arranged. A retired businessman, Mr. Will Smith, became interested and, with the aid of the town Board of Trade and other organizations, a trailer park and camping site was set up. During the past summer it was not unusual to see tourists occupying a couple of hundred trailers and tents enjoying the camping facilities night after night. Many people were back from the year before, and even more have stated they are returning next year.

In addition to the splendid facilities at the park there is the fact that Mr. Smith will be found there each evening welcoming our visitors; and it is even more interesting to note that he is there early in the morning to bid them good-bye and to invite them to come again. All of this is done without salary, his reward being the good done to his town and the grateful thanks of our visitors. If there were more "Bill Smiths" in Canada our tourist industry would grow beyond belief.

In connection with the tourist industry I think a word of thanks should be passed along to our newspapers, which, in my opinion, are doing a wonderful job in promoting this important industry. Much of it is done by way of editorials and other items for which the newspapers do not receive pay. I think the public generally takes the press too much for granted and does not give it the credit it deserves.

Perhaps I may be permitted to refer briefly to a few of the highlights in the Speech from the Throne which I think will be of particular benefit to Nova Scotia, and to the Atlantic provinces generally.

One of the most important is the proposed extension of the Trans-Canada Highway Act beyond its present date of expiration. This highway has meant, and will continue to mean, much to the province. We in Nova Scotia have between 15,000 and 16,000 miles of highway, and at the end of 1959 nearly 2,800 miles had been paved. I know honourable senators will not think I am speaking politically when I say that under the able leadership of the present Minister of Highways, the Honourable G. I. Smith, the present Government, with assistance under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, has in three years constructed and paved more mileage than any previous Government in ten years.

The establishment of a department in connection with forestry will, I believe, be a great help to our province. In the past forests have been considered basically a provincial responsibility, although the federal Government has assisted in research work and has, I believe, co-operated where possible. I trust the legislation to be introduced will give greater assistance to the province in the matter of effective utilization and conservation of the forests, including forest management and fire protection.

In many sections of Nova Scotia the farm wood-lot is now becoming very important.

Logs are being cropped for farm income in the same way as any other produce of the farm. The late George Dickey, with whom I sat in the Nova Scotia Legislature, and who was well known to some honourable senators here today, had for thirty years advocated this method of increasing farm income in the Stewiacke Valley of Colchester County. Quite recently I was talking with a farmer from that area who has followed this method, and he advised me it meant about $2,000 per year to him now, and that he had more lumber on his property than he had some years ago. In connection with these farm wood lots I believe the time has come when consideration should be given by the board responsible for making loans to farmers to include the farm wood lot along with the rest of the farm.

I was also pleased to see that legislation is to be introduced proposing the granting of the franchise to our Indians. Perhaps honourable senators are not aware that the Indians of Nova Scotia have the provincial franchise. We have quite a large reservation in the Colchester-Hants constituency. These people are excellent citizens. Many of the men are good craftsmen in masonry and painting and other trades. I know from personal experience that they are splendid guides on fishing and hunting trips. I trust the granting of the franchise will in no way interfere with those rights which they now enjoy.

Honourable senators, we Nova Scotians are very proud of our ancestry, being composed of French, English, Irish and Scots. From the French we get our love of home and family; from the English, our bull-dog spirit of fighting for those things we think are our just rights; from the Irish, our wit and our love of good, clean fun; and from the Scots our frugality and determination to get value for every dollar we spend.

With such a background, honourable senators, is it any wonder we are so proud of our province, and of our people who have gone out into far places of Canada, and abroad, and made a name for themselves and brought honour to their native province?

Many of our native sons have been bank presidents and college presidents, and heads of large industrial corporations in Canada and the United States. And, honourable senators, what other province can lay claim to three Prime Ministers of Canada out of the thirteen since Confederation? Perhaps, as an interesting sidelight, I should mention that all three have been Tories.

I can safely say that the Maritime provinces can lay claim to being the birthplace of the nation, and I can go further and state that the idea of the nation was conceived and born in Nova Scotia in 1861. Had it not been for the able statesmen we had in those years previous to 1867, I doubt that there would have been a confederation of the provinces which now make up our Canada—a country that has taken its place in world affairs.

We Nova Scotians are very proud of the fact that we were the first province outside of the United Kingdom to have responsible government. There may be some arguments as to this statement, some claiming that all the provinces of the then Canada had responsible Government at the same time, namely 1847-48. However, old records show that that great Nova Scotian, Joseph Howe, referred to the closing session of the Nova Scotia Legislature on April 10, 1841, as the first under responsible government.

Again that great statesman, Joseph Howe, as all honourable senators know, was responsible for the freedom of the press. We Canadians and all the free countries of the world owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to the press for what they have done in the past and what they are doing today. They do very much more than bring us the news of the world day by day. By their editorials they can, and do, mould public opinion to a much greater extent than many people realize. And it was Nova Scotian Joseph Howe who won for them the freedom of the press which makes possible today these editorial writings.

Honourable senators, we often hear Canada spoken of as a young country, and in comparison with the countries of Europe and Asia I suppose it is young. But I would suggest to you that Nova Scotia is old compared with central and western Canada. It was old when the Indians and the buffalo roamed where now stands the city of Calgary, and I suggest, most respectfully, that men born and educated in Nova Scotia had much to do with opening up our great central and western Canada.

To mention one or two of these great men, I would refer first to Sir Samuel Cunard, from Halifax, who built up the Cunard fleet of ships which meant so much to the trade of Canada. Then I would refer to Sir Sandford Fleming, also from Halifax, who did so much in building the Canadian Pacific Railway. And getting much closer to today, there was Edward Horne, the discoverer of Noranda, a discovery which really opened up the north and brought untold millions of dollars to Canada. It was my privilege to know this gentleman in his later years, and it was most interesting to listen to his stories of adventure. He was born, as I was, in Hants County and he returned there to spend many happy years before his death. During those later years he did much for his place of birth, helping agriculture, building a large school and assisting most generously in many good works. A number of close relatives reside today in his home village of Enfield.

Honourable senators, just to mention a few more things Nova Scotians were reponsible for and which have meant so much to Canada: in the field of aviation it is well known that the first heavier-than-air flight in the British Empire was made on February 23, 1909, by J. A. D. McCurdy, afterwards Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. The flight took place over the Bras d'Or Lakes at Baddeck, Nova Scotia—and, I might ask, where would you find a more picturesque and beautiful place?

In the realm of science, one of the world's greatest scientists, Simon Newcombe, was born at Wallace in Cumberland County. The inventor of the process for manufacturing coal oil, Dr. Abraham Gesner, was another great Nova Scotian.

In agriculture we are proud of the fact that the first wheat ground into flour in North America was at Annapolis Royal in the year 1610. Also, the first apple trees in North America were planted at Annapolis, in 1606. I think the honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald), were he in his seat now, would support me when I claim our apples have a flavour second to none.

Nor was it all work in those days, for we had the first social club in North America, in 1606. It has since been reorganized. I would like to extend an invitation to all honourable senators to visit Nova Scotia next summer, and I assure them that all the honourable senators from that province would treat them royally and recommend them for honourary membership in the oldest social club in North America.

Honourable senators, I have talked of the past record of Nova Scotia. You may well ask, what of the present and the future? I am delighted to report that our people seem to have taken on a new lease on life. Our provincial Government has assisted in setting up a company known as Industrial Estates Limited to assist new industry to get started in the province. We are active partners in the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, which is going all out to assist present business to improve and expand and to make our own people conscious of Atlantic provinces products.

Last Friday, January 15, there was held in the city of Halifax a conference of business and professional men, representatives of labour unions and municipal and Government officials, as well as economists and planning experts, called by the Mayor of Halifax to plan for the Halifax of 1980, with a foreseeable population of 300,000 persons. You may say this is fantastic and impossible, but many came away from that meeting with the idea firmly implanted in their minds that this could very well happen and that planning for it should receive prompt attention. I note by this morning's Toronto press that the great Toronto metropolitan area is also making plans for 1980. To my friends the honourable senators from the Toronto area, I would say I am sure Mayor Vaughan of the city of Halifax would be highly honoured to think the great city of Toronto was following his lead.

Why this new enthusiasm? Were I speaking outside this honourable chamber, I might express my opinion in a somewhat different manner than would be reasonable for me to express it here today. I sincerely believe what is happening in Nova Scotia is occurring all over our great country. Our Canadian people seem to have received a vital, vibrant lift that has been lacking for years. We apparently have reached the stage where we have faith in ourselves and in our country. We are now well started on the way to taking our rightful place in world affairs and the future of Canada is assured. With our fabulous natural resources, our industrial know-how, and the finest type of working men and women in the world, there is just no limit to what we may accomplish.

Honourable senators, it is with great pleasure that I second the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, moved adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the report?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: On division.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My motion is merely for the constitution of the committee. It has nothing to do with the passing of a divorce bill, and I do not think any honourable senator need oppose it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Well, it is his constitutional right!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh yes.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, January 25, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, January 25, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRAIRIE GRAIN PROVISIONAL PAYMENTS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-32, to authorize provisional payments for the 1959-60 crop year in respect of unthreshed grain in the Prairies provinces.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: With leave, I move the second reading now.

Honourable senators, there is a certain amount of urgency about this measure and another bill, C-35. In fact, in the other place the debate on the Speech from the Throne was adjourned to give these two bills priority. The urgency is such that I trust we shall be able to advance these bills as far as possible this evening.

Perhaps I should first sketch for honourable senators the reasons why this legislation is necessary.

In the late summer and fall of 1959 the weather in the Prairie provinces was simply terrible, and that condition of affairs is responsible for these two measures being brought before Parliament at this time. At the present moment there are more than 100 million bushels of unthreshed grain, some of it still standing, but most of it in the swath in the three Prairie provinces.

When the survey was first made there was very much more than 100 million bushels unthreshed, but in the central, west central and southern parts of Saskatchewan and in some parts of central and southern Alberta we were fortunate, in that we got ahead with our threshing again after the snow went away. It is true we threshed some of it a little damp before the snow came to stay. In the area where I carry on my operations I know of only two farmers whose grain has not been fully threshed. Personally, my own grain being threshed, I am interested only in this measure on behalf of the poor farmers in the other areas who are in desperate circumstances.

Perhaps the reason why we in the central part of the Prairie provinces were fortunate was that we had very little rain during the growing months and our crops matured quite quickly, so we had most of them threshed and under cover before the bad weather arrived. But in practically the whole of Manitoba, with which I am familiar, and in almost all the northern and eastern part of Saskatchewan the great bulk of the 1959 crop is unthreshed. The honourable senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh) is familiar with the situation in Alberta, but I can speak about conditions in Saskatchewan and Manitoba because I have seen them with my own eyes.

It is expected that threshing will commence in the spring, which is usually comparatively dry, and that it will be well under way by May 1; by that time the ground and grain should be dry enough for threshing.

I have known situations like this in past years, but nothing so extensive. I have had the experience of having flax stand uncut all winter, and when I threshed it in the spring I recovered most of it.

This legislation, honourable senators, is directed primarily to giving assistance to the producers in the Prairie provinces in the position which I have just explained. The scheme of the bill is almost identical with that of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which was passed in the fall of 1957, and which had to do with advance payments by the Canadian Wheat Board on threshed grain in store on the farms, which grain could not be marketed because the elevators were full and the farmers needed money to carry them through the winter.

Bill C-32 provides for advance payments, also by the Canadian Wheat Board, on wheat, oats and barley which have not yet been threshed. The legislation is, naturally, of a short-term nature because, as I said a few moments ago, the grain will be threshed early in the spring of 1960. Applications must be made to the local elevator agents prior to May 1 next, at which time it is expected that the threshing will be well under way. The 1959-60 crop year ends on July 31 next, and it is expected that these provisional payments will be fully repaid by that time. They are to be repaid out of one-half of the proceeds of the deliveries of each applicant from the time he makes his application and receives his money until such time as the crop year ends.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not like interrupting the honourable leader, but could he tell the house the total gross amount that any farmer can receive?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am coming to that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This legislation, honourable senators, contains most of the provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which I have mentioned previously, in that it makes provision for the necessary funds, and for the method whereby producers may secure the payments, and the basis upon which the payments will be authorized. In the procedure relating to repayment, the formula is almost identical with that under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

I would like to say something about the calculation of payments. They will be calculated on the basis of one-half of the unthreshed grain multiplied by 50 cents per bushel for wheat, 20 cents per bushel for oats, and 35 cents per bushel for barley. It is provided that one-half of the unthreshed grain must not exceed the quantity deliverable under a general six-bushel quota per specified acre less deduction of prior deliveries.

However, the quantity of threshed grain the applicant has in store will also be deducted, because a producer can secure an advance payment on his threshed grain under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. Payments under this new act will be solely on the unthreshed grain of the applicant.

I believe I have already indicated that the repayment provisions under this measure are quite similar to those under the act which was passed in 1957. One-half of the proceeds of all deliveries made by the producer after the date of his application for a provisional payment will be applied on repayment. The scheme operates as follows. In case one-half of the producer's unthreshed grain is less than he would deliver on a six-bushel general quota, the maximum provisional payment he can obtain is one-half of his unthreshed grain multiplied by 50 cents for wheat, 35 cents for oats and 20 cents for barley, less the deductions referred to.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: May I interrupt the honourable leader to ask him a question at this point? Am I to understand that in order to come under this legislation the farmer must have at least 50 per cent of his grain unthreshed?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, that has nothing to do with this legislation at all.

However, if the producer's unthreshed grain is more than his six-bushel general quota, then his maximum provisional payment under this legislation is the six-bushel general quota multiplied by 50 cents, 35 cents or 20 cents, respectively, less the deductions referred to.

I would also like to inform honourable senators that the maximum provisional payment on unthreshed grain is $1,500, which is equal to 50 cents a bushel on the quantity of wheat which a producer could deliver under a six-bushel general quota on a specified acreage of 500 acres.

As the advance will be made by the elevator agent, full particulars of the advance will be entered in the applicant's quota book, which is a permit he takes out at the beginning of each crop year and under which the agent marks the deliveries of wheat, oats and barley. Every time the farmer takes a load of any of these grains to the elevator it is marked in his quota book. Elevator agents are required to deduct one-half of the proceeds of future deliveries until repayment has been made in full, and as they get the money in they are required to forward it to the Wheat Board. I presume they would do that by sending the Wheat Board a cash ticket.

Under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act this has worked out most effectively and there have been practically no losses on advance payments made in the 1957-58 crop year; 99.9 per cent has been repaid. For the 1958-59 crop year, 99 per cent has been refunded. This, honourable senators, is an exceptionally good showing; and I should like to take the present opportunity to congratulate the elevator agents—whom we call "grain buyers"—on the manner in which, as agents of the Canadian Wheat Board, they have carried out this business. The grain buyers in my area are familiar with every farm. They know the number of acres in each kind of crop. Those acreages are entered in the quota book, in which also are entered the names of the people interested in the crops; and the agents, with their knowledge of production, yield, and the rest, are able to carry on this business most effectively. This endorsement on the permit book is the main safeguard; and, as I have said, that type of security has proved most effective. Under both acts there is an undertaking on the part of the producer to deliver grain in sufficient quantity to repay the advances when quotas are made available to them.

If and when this bill is enacted, a producer with threshed grain will be eligible, as in the past, to apply for a cash advance under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to a maximum of $3,000. A producer with unharvested grain will be eligible to obtain a provisional payment up to a maximum of $1,500; and a producer having both threshed and unthreshed grain may take advantage of both statutes, to a maximum of $1,500 for unthreshed grain, with an overall maximum of $3,000, provided of course that he has not on hand a great quantity of threshed grain, the possession of which would make quite a difference.

It is believed, honourable senators, that this new legislation will be welcomed by the farmers of the Prairie provinces, and will be the means of furnishing them with funds needed to carry on until such time as their wheat, oats and barley, now under the snow, have been threshed in the spring.

I could at this time go into all the sections of the bill, but that may not be necessary. It is hoped that the principle of the bill will be approved and that second reading will be given tonight, so that if necessary it may go to a standing committee of the Senate for consideration tomorrow.

I have already said that there is considerable urgency that this legislation shall be passed as quickly as possible. The time limit for the making of applications is May 1 next, and many farmers are in great need of funds to carry them over the winter period. Advances cannot be made until their applications have been prepared, received and processed. I know that honourable senators have a great feeling of sympathy for our farmers on the prairies. I feel that they will give the bill careful consideration and, if it seems good to them, will see that it becomes law as soon as possible.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has given a very good explanation of this bill. I would say that, no doubt, his exposition was quite clear, but I myself am not a farmer nor a grower of grain, and I must admit that there are some parts of the bill which I do not fully understand. So, for my own benefit and the benefit of other senators who are in the same position, I think the Senate should insist that the bill be sent to committee in order that we may get information which even city men can understand.

May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government whether oats are included in this measure?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Wheat, oats and barley.

Hon Mr. Macdonald: I mention oats particularly because oats are the staff of life, and I feel I should say so today—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Only for Scotsmen!

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —because today is the birthday of Robbie Burns. And although I do not fully understand the bill, I think you will agree with me, and with Robbie Burns, that "A man's a man for a' that."

A question I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government is whether to date any advances have been made by the Wheat Board on the 1959 crop period.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I don't know whether I understand the question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Probably I can clarify it and mention the reason I am asking it. The honourable Leader of the Government has said that there is great urgency to this measure, and that it applies to grain grown in 1959. Now, if no advances have been made on the 1959 crop, nobody has received any money.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is not the case. Under the act which was passed in 1957 advances have been made by the Wheat Board on threshed grain which is still on the farms and has not been marketed, but no advance has been made by the Wheat Board on unthreshed grain. Such advances, in fact, are the sole purpose of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would it be possible for the farmer to get some help in this direction from the Prairie Farm Assistance Act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That act is applicable only in case of a crop failure. These farmers are far from having had a crop failure; in fact it is believed that when the wheat crop in the northern part of Saskatchewan and some areas of Manitoba is threshed in the spring, it will yield 50 bushels to the acre. More rain fell there than on the central portions of the prairies, but all these big crops are under the snow, and that is why advances are needed. I am told that in fact there is not very much old grain in store in those areas, and that the farmers are entirely dependent on the newer crop for money to get them through the winter.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then, am I correct when I say that a grain farmer in the western provinces who has some grain threshed and on his farm can now obtain a loan under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, he gets an advance, not a loan.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He gets an advance?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. He has to pay it back.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Can he also go to the bank and get a guaranteed loan on the grain on his farm that has been threshed?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not until we pass the next bill. Bill C-35 deals with that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He will then be able to do that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now, is there any other loan that he can get under any act which is now on the statute book or is likely to be put on the statute book?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The only act which is now on the statute book under which he can get an advance on threshed grain is the statute that I mentioned as having been passed in 1957, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How much can he get under that act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Up to $3,000, if he has enough grain.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will he be able to get an additional $1,500 under this act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I explained that in the last part of my remarks. The maximum that he can obtain under both acts—this and the other one—is $3,000, so if he has enough grain to get a cash advance of $3,000 under the 1957 act, he cannot get any under this bill. Also, he cannot get any money under these acts, as I understand it, until he has retired any other advances.

Hon. Mr. Power: What clause covers that last provision you mentioned? The only provision as to that that I see here is that it is limited to $1,500. I read that the provisional payment to a producer shall not exceed $1,500. Perhaps later on the bill speaks of $3,000?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: It does. Clause 6, subclause 4, says that the aggregate of a provisional payment to a producer and advance payments under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act shall not exceed $3,000.

Hon. Mr. Power: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then, am I correct in saying that the western grain grower will be able to obtain an advance under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and under the bill which is now before us to a maximum amount of $3,000, together with a Government loan which he will be able to obtain under legislation which the Leader of the Government proposes to submit to this house in a few minutes?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No. These other advances have to be retired before he can get a loan.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wish to thank the Leader of the Government for his explanation. Honourable senators, I am sorry that I asked so many questions, but I thought the answers to them might make the legislation a little clearer for some of us who did not understand it at first.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Can the honourable gentleman give an estimate of the expenditure under this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I cannot do that. I have no estimate, because it is impossible to state how much these crops will produce, what the yield will be under the snow. I imagine that if there are 100 million bushels involved and a loan is made on every bushel it could be figured out.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable leader a question? When this help was proposed for the western farmers whose grain was under the snow, I understand that there was an agreement entered into between the federal Government and the western provinces.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: To the effect that the farmers would receive up to $6 an acre.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is $3 an acre.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Are you sure it is not $6 an acre?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is $3 an acre up to 200 acres.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Am I right in my figure?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will explain it.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Let me finish my question first, please. And am I right in saying that in order to qualify under this general scheme of so much an acre the farmer had to have 50 per cent of his crop unthreshed and under the snow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: More than 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: More than 50 per cent? Is that scheme in operation now?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand that scheme is working and has been working for some little time.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: And the provinces are paying their 50 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, and the federal Government is guaranteeing its 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I don't quite understand. Is that in addition to the provisions in the legislation we are now considering?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is in addition, yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that payment being made in accordance with a statute now in effect?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There is no statute covering that. The dominion made the agreement with the provinces, and I understand that the amount required to meet payments under that agreement will appear in the estimates as a supplementary estimate.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Have the provinces passed any complementary legislation?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not yet. The Saskatchewan Legislature is not in session.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: But the Prairie provinces are paying their share without having passed any legislation, as far as I understand. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is there any estimate of the amount involved?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is the dominion Government making these payments without the authority of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They are guaranteeing the payments.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The dominion Government is?

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: It promised to do so.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: It seems to be more than that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The provinces are making the payments in the meantime, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And the dominion Government has guaranteed 50 per cent of them?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what it said it would do.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Can the Leader of the Government give us any idea of how much money is involved on the part of the dominion Government?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I have no information on that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it seems to me to be a most unusual proceeding for the federal Government to make payments of this kind without coming to Parliament and getting authority for so doing. If the Government is doing that, why is it bothering to come to Parliament with this bill? Why doesn't it proceed in the same way with this bill? All I can say, honourable senators, is that it is a most unusual proceeding, and I am surprised that the Leader of the Government passes it off as if it were an everyday event and nothing for us to take exception to. I take great exception to it and I am sure that the people of Canada, both in the east and in the west, will take great exception to it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think so. Honourable senators, I would like to read an article that appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on this same point, which I received just yesterday. The article reads:

> It is true that the Prairie provinces are making substantial payments now under the federal-provincial acreage scheme. To suggest that there is a violation of the rights of Parliament because the federal Government, in a grave emergency, precommitted Parliament in the agreement with the prairie provinces is scarcely warranted. The federal Government's payment of its 50 per cent of acreage payments is, generally speaking, taken for granted. The federal authority's good faith is not in question in this particular situation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is just taken for granted by the present Government that this Parliament will put on the statute books whatever the Government wants put on. I am not objecting to the payments, but I am objecting to the method by which the payments are being made.

If this is an emergency the Government should have come to Parliament at the opening of the session and submitted to Parliament in the form of legislation the arrangements with the provinces respecting these payments. Why has the Government come to Parliament only with this so-called emergency legislation? It could have brought down in the opening days of the session similar legislation respecting the provincial agreements. But, no; it did nothing about them. In fact, we had to question the Leader of the Government very carefully to find out that these payments were being made. Now we are told, well, they are being made, and Parliament has no say in it.

All I can say is that I object most strenuously to the procedure and I still feel that the people of Canada as a whole will take the stand I am taking.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, the province of Manitoba is probably in the worst position of the three Prairie provinces. We have suffered more from the weather this year than ever before in the history of our province. I don't think you have the picture clearly. Let me give it to you. They won't let the farmer take last year's dry grain to the elevators, because they are shipping the wet grain to the driers in order to get it dry so that it won't heat. It is for that reason the farmer is not allowed to get his dry grain into the elevators. I agree with what the elevators are doing in that respect; it is the proper thing to do.

Let me discuss one case. I drove out to a farm some 20 miles east of Winnipeg where a man has a mixed farming operation on about 400 acres of the finest land that lies outdoors, land that ordinarily sells for $75 to $100 an acre. That man has some 26 cows from which he delivers milk to the dairies in Winnipeg. He said to me: "Mr. Haig, what I am going to do to get money to buy feed for my cattle? My feed is all under the snow. Is somebody going to lend me money?" Well, nobody is going to do that unless he happens to be in the Selkirk asylum.

There are dozens of farmers in my province in the same plight, and something has to be done for them.

The question about the part the provinces will play has been raised. Let me say that the senators from Manitoba feel—I am sure they all feel as I do—that this Government has done very well in getting the provinces to pay half the cost of assistance in this respect. This is a nation-wide disaster. It is not just one province that is involved, but three provinces. The same conditions could well apply to a disaster in any part of Canada. If, for instance, there was a disaster in the apple crop in the Maritimes, we would come to their assistance. We would not have the heart to refuse them. If you have never seen the type of disaster that has hit the Prairies, it is hard to tell you about it.

On Monday of last week a woman came to my office and told me her troubles. She said they had had little rain in the spring and the hay crop was light, and now their grain was under the snow. That woman milks six cows a day, and her husband drives the school bus to get a little money. She said if she could not borrow money to buy feed for the cows they would not give milk and the family would have no butter to sell and nothing to live on. She told me that she had been refused a loan by 12 others, that I was the thirteenth she had approached. She wanted to know what she was going to do. Well, what am I going to say to a woman in that situation? I know what you would say: anybody with a heart as big as an apple would say yes to her.

That is the position in which a great many people in the three Prairie provinces find themselves. And I would point out that these people are the backbone of our country. I drove through eastern Manitoba last year and saw grain lying on the ground under water. I saw sugar-beets under water. One farmer came out to me and asked, "Are you Mr. Haig?" I told him I was. He said, "Are you a senator?" I said "Yes." Then he said: "What are going to do for us? We have to have some help or we will be forced to move off our farms and go into Winnipeg, and the Government will have to keep us."

Honourable senators, that is the situation. I think instead of criticizing anybody we, as representing the federal Government, should be thankful that the provinces have come through and are paying half the cost. I would remind you that our provinces are not rich provinces; certainly Manitoba is not one of the wealthy provinces of Canada. The three western provinces are similar to the Maritime provinces in that respect. We need this legislation passed in order to keep our farmers on the land and give them a chance to try again. That is all I am asking for them, that we give them a chance. If this is the only crime that the Diefenbaker Government has committed in the past two years, or will commit in the next two years, I say, honourable senators, the people will not condemn them for it.

I can speak with some authority on this question, for, as I have said, I visited nearly all of Manitoba this fall. The situation as I describe it is general, with a few spots here and there that were not hit. But the fact is that the grain is cut and is lying on the ground covered with snow. The farmers can't even get on the land to cultivate their summer fallow for next year.

I am sure if we go into committee and the Minister of Agriculture comes there he will explain these bills sufficiently so that the dullest of us will understand. If you want to do that, then do it quickly in order that these farmers may have some relief. I am not a man who believes that the farmers should get everything in the world. I am a city man. I have been brought up in the city, but, at the same time, I know that the farmer is the backbone of the cities, and that if the farms fail the cities will fail also. I want to give them a chance. Here is one place where we, as Canadians, can do something which is really worth while for Canada.

The man in Alberta, the man in Saskatchewan and the man in Manitoba may come here and demand deficiency payments and all that kind of thing, but when they came here, I knew what they were up against. I knew the situation was bad. They could not get money from anybody. No one would lend them any money, and I am glad to see that the House of Commons has voted unanimously for these bills. That house put them through in no time at all.

I am not criticizing the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). He was quite fair in saying he did not know about this problem, and that is understandable. If you were to talk about coal mining I would not understand it; I would be lost. In this case the need is very great and relief is needed right now. If we do it now the farmers will get back to work next spring with ambition, especially the young men and young women. If we do not do something for them they will not stay long on the farms, they will drift away.

I ask you to adopt the suggestion of the honourable Leader of the Opposition and send this bill to committee. You will get the Minister of Agriculture there and he will tell you what they are doing, and also the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for wheat sales. For those reasons I would urge this house to let the bill go to committee tomorrow, and let us pass the bill as soon as we possibly can and so give the farmers of our country a little encouragement.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I congratulate the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) upon his usual eloquence and very forceful statements, but let me remind my honourable friend and the rest of the honourable senators here that the end does not always justify the means. That is a philosophy that has gone by. The honourable Leader of the Government has given us the impression, rightly or wrongly, that the Government, without authority, has made payments out of the public treasury for the relief of the farmers mentioned.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I did not exactly say that. I said that the provinces had been paying them, but that the federal Government had agreed to pay 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That, perhaps, is a little clearer, because if payments were made without authority I would join with the honourable Leader of the Opposition in condemning the act, no matter how great or good the motive might be. We do not have to proceed in that way. Governor General's warrants may be obtained in certain emergencies and there may be a payment without the consent of Parliament until Parliament meets, and perhaps there are other legal methods by which this can be done, but now, I understand, all the federal Government has done so far—and the honourable Leader of the Government will correct me if I am wrong—is to assure the provinces that it will ask Parliament for the grants necessary to reimburse the provinces a proportion of the money which they are now paying. Am I right in thinking that? Is that as far as the federal Government has gone?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I know only that the provinces are paying the money. I cannot go any further than that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Have you not already told us that the federal Government has promised to pay a proportion?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My only reason for making that suggestion is that I saw it in one of the western papers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But have you not caused us to understand that the dominion Government has promised to pay a proportion of the cost?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Or has the Government guaranteed it? What is the situation? My friend must know more about it than he has told us. Is it a guarantee or is it a promise to pay?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That has nothing to do with this bill. That is apart from this bill altogether. This bill has only to do with the making of advance payments on unthreshed grain. That other is an entirely different matter.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is different again. The matters which you say are being carried out now are under other legislation?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, there is no other legislation. The honourable leader has said there is no other legislation.

Hon. C. G. Power: It has to do with an emergency.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There is another bill to come?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, there is not another bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of all the messes I have heard brought to this Parliament this is the worst. Can my honourable friend make this clear? I do not want to go home tonight, and I do not want the newspaper representatives to go home tonight, with the idea that something illegal and improper has been done, even if that impression is obtained only from the inefficiency with which we are being told about this transaction. Cannot my honourable friend clear this up?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I say to the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that that transaction he is speaking of has nothing whatever to do with this bill.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): From what has been said I take it that this bill has nothing to do with the arrangement that has been made to grant assistance to a farmer who has over 50 per cent of his grain under snow and unthreshed and who, under the arrangement that has been partly explained here, can get $3 an acre for up to 200 acres or a total of $600.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If he has more than 50 per cent of his grain unthreshed.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Kamloops): Yes, I understand that, but can that same farmer get an advance under this legislation if he has already had assistance? Another question I have is: Is that acreage assistance repayable, or is it a disaster payment?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I understand it is just a disaster payment. The other money paid under this bill, as I have explained, is all to be paid back. It is a loan.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): For my own clarification I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government this question: Is it true that the Government of Canada at this moment has not paid out any money under this proposed legislation?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): Then, is it a fact that the dominion of Canada entered into an agreement with the provinces to provide 50 per cent of the money if the provinces would provide 50 per cent, and that until the legislation was passed the provinces would pay 100 per cent of it but that 50 per cent would be repaid?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That has nothing to do with this legislation at all. That is over and above, and in addition to, this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understood the honourable leader to say that it is not put in legislative form.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not know that I can answer that except that I have not heard of any legislation to that effect. I understand it will be in the Supplementary Estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I must say, honourable senators, I regret that the honourable Leader of the Government did not give us the full information when I asked him if there was any other legislation—probably I should not have used the word legislation—by which a farmer whose grain was under snow could benefit, other than the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and this bill which is now before us. He gave the house the impression there was no other payment.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I say you gave the house that impression.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I said there was no other legislation I knew of.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I take my honourable friend's word that he said there was no other legislation. I am not going to say he was deliberately misleading the house, but the house was misled as a result of that statement, for as it now turns out the farmers can get a payment of up to $3 an acre if more than 50 per cent of their grain is under snow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought everybody knew that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, apparently nobody knew it except the honourable Leader of the Government, and I do not think he is too sure of it himself. I can only repeat what I have already said. I am not objecting to payment to these farmers and I agree with the former Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Haig) as to what he said as to need, but I do object most strenuously to the procedure which is being followed by the Government. I repeat that if the Government was able to bring down within a week of the opening of Parliament this bill and the complementary bill which is about to come before us, why could it not bring forth the other bill instead of having kept it quiet and away from us?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What other bill?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Another bill with respect to the $3 an acre. Why could not the Government have brought that out at the same time? The Government has tried to keep it sub rosa, but now it has come up and we know that Parliament is being ignored so far as that is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I absolutely disagree with that. Honourable senators know what happened when acreage payment of $200 was made to each farmer in 1958. No bill was brought down for that. It was put in the estimates, and on the last day we met, in September 1958, the amount was voted and subsequently the money was paid out.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not recall when it took place, but two wrongs never make a right.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In 1958 the payments did not precede the authority to make them.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I do not know whether it would be legal for the Government to grant a subsidy of that kind to anybody. It may be, but at least before we vote on this matter we should know all about it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: We should know what amount is to be given to the farmers by the provinces and by the federal Government. We should know just what grants are going to be given so that we may judge this bill properly. In my opinion the Government should give us all the details of the various grants, payments, subsidies, loans, et cetera, that it is going to provide under this legislation and other legislation, or in the estimates. If any bargain has been made between the provinces and the federal Government, I do not say I object to it. It may be quite all right, but it seems to me that we should know all about it before we vote on this legislation. That is all I have to say at this time.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few comments at this time and I will try to stick to the provisions of the bill. I was just about to suggest that 90 per cent of the discussion so far has been on matters entirely outside this bill. I will agree with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that there is urgent need for this legislation and I would like to present the situation in Alberta, especially northern Alberta.

Conditions in the southern part of the province are somewhat similar to those in the area where the honourable Leader of the Government lives. Their harvest is from ten days to two weeks ahead of ours, and this year that was with fairly good weather. Most of the threshing has been done in that area, but I would say from Wetaskiwin clear north to Peace River the grain is at least 50 per cent unthreshed. In the district where I live it is about 65 per cent unthreshed, and about 50 per cent of it is uncut.

We do not use a binder any more in my district. If the grain was in stooks it would not be quite so bad, but because of labour conditions and modern machinery we use the combined harvester and the swather. It may be that honourable senators are not familiar with a swather. It is a sort of big binder that does not tie the grain in bundles. I have a swather which cuts a swath of 15 feet and puts the grain in a little area about three feet wide. We can cut from ten days to three weeks earlier that way. We can cut when the straw is green and it is good for cattle feed. A fairly large percentage of our grain is in the swath. This is particularly true of oats and barley, and the loss on oats and barley will be the greatest.

I have been farming for over 50 years now in Alberta, and this is positively the worst I have ever seen. The latter part of August and all of September was wet. It rained about every three days during this time, and later on we had snow. The land was wet and we couldn't get on it with our harvesters. We swathed part of our grain. I have about 50 acres of oats swathed and I think they will be a total loss. I am very doubtful that we will thresh any oats at all in the spring. For one thing, the crop was so wet that some of it had started to sprout before the frost came. I am speaking of the grain which was swathed earlier. If you try to pick up oats in the spring after they have lain out all winter, even if they have not been spoiled they will drop out of the hull and be lost. With barley the heads will drop off. I think 90 per cent of the oats and barley under the snow will be a total loss. The same is not true of wheat, however. Wheat is tough and straw is tough and the heads are tight and will hold the kernel. I once threshed wheat that was under snow all winter and the percentage of loss was not very great, about 10 per cent. Of course, that is loss enough, but it is nothing like total loss.

So there is urgent need for this legislation, which has nothing to do with the $600 advance some honourable senators have been talking about. This legislation is very similar to what was passed in 1957 with the same guarantees, the same method of giving it out and the same way of collecting it. It is not a handout in any sense of the word, for under the 1957 legislation, which provided advances to farmers, the loss was only one-tenth of one per cent, which is practically nil.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What did it amount to in dollars?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Somewhere around $30,000. It is infinitesimal, I think that is the right word.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is a good one.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: That is the loan I was speaking of.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What was the total loss and the total amount involved?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Speaking from memory, I think the loss was about $30,000, and the total amount involved was about $30 million.

Honourable senators will remember that in 1957, when similar legislation was passed, I brought up the fact that it discriminated against the oat farmer. What we should do is, discourage the wheat farmer. The loss is going to be greater in oats, and a payment of 20 cents a bushel on three bushels an acre—60 cents an acre—is not enough, though it is better than nothing. That is my objection to this legislation. The rest of it is good; I am all in favour of it; but as far as oats and barley are concerned the amount provided for should be at least doubled.

I suppose that other legislation will come along at some future time, and we shall be able to discuss the subject with honourable senators who ask about the $600 payment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Before the motion is put, may we understand that it is the intention of the Government that the bill shall go to committee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is the understanding.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I move, honourable senators, that this bill be referred to the proper standing committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Let us agree on that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee is not here this evening.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We can always get a chairman.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: As the bill involves money, why not send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRAIRIE GRAIN LOANS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-35, to provide for short-term credit to Prairie grain producers.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: With leave, I move the second reading now.

Honourable senators, this is the bill which I referred to in my remarks on Bill C-32; and I shall try to do better this time. I thought I was giving a pretty good explanation of the other bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We all did; and we are not qualifying that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act—the bill which was passed in 1957—all payments are made by the Canadian Wheat Board, which has power to make advance payments on wheat, oats and barley in store on the farm; but, in order to obtain that money, all persons whose names appear on the permit book, such as the producer himself, the man who owns the farm and maybe rents it to the producer, the vendor—who probably has sold the land on crop payments—and others having an interest in these crops, are obliged to sign the application or no advance will be given. As I understand it, the same principle applies to Bill C-32, to which we have just given second reading; but the payments under that measure, if and when it becomes law, will be made by the Canadian Wheat Board only on wheat, oats and barley, and only when all interested persons whose names appear in the permit book have given their consent. Sometimes it is quite impossible to secure these signatures. Perhaps they are away, or they do not understand. In such cases, under the provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and Bill C-32, the actual producer could not get any advance unless he could secure the signatures of all persons who were interested in the crop. Also, neither of the measures to which I have just referred makes any provision for advances to the actual producer of rye, flaxseed or rapeseed, so to take care of cases of that kind a further measure is required. So I am presenting for the approval of the Senate this bill, C-35, which provides for short-term bank credit to Prairie farm grain producers.

The short title is "The Prairie Grain Loans Act". It makes provision for a Government guarantee on short-term bank loans to Prairie grain producers who are in financial difficulties because of abnormal harvesting conditions during the current crop year. Under the proposed legislation loans will be available on the security of threshed and unthreshed grain, including wheat, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. As I have said, the Wheat Board has no power to make an advance payment on rye, flaxseed, or rapeseed. A producer of any of these crops may obtain a guaranteed loan at any time before June 1, 1960. In determining the amount of the loan to an individual producer, the banks will take into account the estimated value of the grain which the producer expects to deliver before the end of the crop year. The maximum loan to any one farmer will be $1,500 and the actual loan entitlement will be based on one-half of estimated deliveries that the applicant expects to make before the end of the current crop year. As to repayment, the borrower will be required to assign to the bank one-half of the proceeds from the sale of his grain after the loan has been made.

Under this bill the Government will guarantee each bank against losses up to 25 per cent of the aggregate of loans made where this does not exceed $150,000, and up to 20 per cent in respect of the total of loans in excess of $150,000. The ceiling on total guaranteed loans made by all banks will amount to $50 million.

This bill, providing for loans to the actual grain producer, complements the other proposed legislation authorizing provisional payments by the Canadian Wheat Board on unthreshed grain—wheat, oats and barley. Under the terms of the bank loans legislation, a producer may seek a loan not only on crops marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board, but also on rye, flaxseed and rapeseed, and the two measures taken together provide assistance to Prairie grain producers on a broad basis.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Will sugar-beet growers come in under this?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: I ask that because quite a number of them had their beets frozen in the ground.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, they do not come under this. This covers only the six kinds of grain.

The bill sets out the manner in which an actual producer can obtain one of these loans. As they are short-term loans, the application must be made before the first day of June, 1960. The producer goes to a bank with his permit book, which contains full information as to the size of his farm and the different areas in crop or in summerfallow as the case may be, and gives the bank manager full information with respect to the estimated amount that he would receive from the sale of grain which he would expect to deliver if he were able to deliver and sell it at the time of the application. He also gives information as to the quantity of grain other than wheat, oats and barley he expects to deliver during the 1959-60 crop year. The bank manager then examines everything carefully. If he makes a loan, the amount of the same and full particulars are entered in the farmer's permit book, and there is also an entry providing that one-half of the proceeds in respect to grain delivered by the farmer who has obtained the loan will be paid to the bank in reduction of the loan until it is fully paid off. The amount of the loan the producer would be entitled to would be one-half the value of his estimated grain deliveries up to a maximum of $1,500, but the maximum loan would be reduced by the amount of the proceeds from previous deliveries made by the applicant in the crop year. It is provided, however, that if a producer owes money to the Wheat Board in respect of an advance payment or a proposed provisional payment, he is ineligible to receive a guaranteed bank loan. But he may become eligible if he discharges his obligation to the Wheat Board under the other two acts I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: When do applications have to be made for a loan under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Before the first day of June, 1960.

Getting back to the explanation: he is then qualified for a subsequent bank loan, provided he has not already received total cash receipts for grain amounting to $1,500, in which case he would be able to borrow only the difference.

Under section 88 of the Bank Act a bank may take security on threshed grain, but not on grain which has not been threshed. Section 6 of this bill authorizes the bank to take security on both threshed and unthreshed grain, but the loan will not qualify for Government guarantee unless the bank takes security as provided in section 6. The bank has priority in respect of one-half of the proceeds of all subsequent deliveries of grain until the loan is paid in full.

This bill, for the reasons I have already mentioned, is necessary to supplement the provisions of Bill C-32 and is also of an urgent nature. It is hoped that it also will be approved in principle and given second reading tonight, and if necessary be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, to which Bill C-32 was referred.

Hon. Mr. Power: Is there urgency about this bill too? Is it an emergency measure?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is emergency legislation, designed to take care of those smaller number of people who cannot qualify under the 1957 act or under Bill C-32 because, as I take it, they are unable to obtain all the signatures and that kind of thing.

Hon. Mr. Power: I would like to bet a few dollars that responsible officers of the bank who have charge under this act will be scrutinizing and checking applications for loans with the care required of them by the bank in the conduct of ordinary business. I do not think a bank manager will consider there is any emergency involved; he will take much longer than 24 hours to approve one of these loans.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If he is a good bank manager he won't.

Hon. Mr. Power: Well, I wouldn't say there is much of an emergency about this.

Hon. John A. McDonald: Honourable senators, I am sure I will be expressing the sentiments of all members when I say that it was with regret we learned of the serious losses caused to many farmers through having snow cover over their non-harvested grain last fall, and I for one will support this legislation in the hope that the farmers will be able to meet their obligations, that they will be able to plan for a good crop next year and be able to pay off their loans.

There is, however, one thing that I wish to point out, and that is that there are other primary producers throughout Canada than our friends in the Prairie provinces who suffered disaster in 1959. I would not be doing my duty if I sat here and did not tell Parliament of the great losses that were suffered by the fruit growers in my own home constituency in the Cornwallis-Annapolis Valley. They lost 20 per cent by two frosts, on the nights of October 21 and 22, and in that 20 per cent loss there was a large quantity of Delicious and Northern Spies, which are two of our best dessert varieties.

Now, I think that the fruit growers in the Cornwallis-Annapolis valley, even though they are fewer in numbers than the farmers in western Canada, have just as much right to be considered when loans are being planned to help people who have met disaster. I know that for some of these fruit growers the loss in comparison is just as great as the loss suffered by some of our farmer friends in western Canada. The fruit growers had planned on making a profit last year, because they had an excellent crop and a comparatively clean crop. But their anticipated profit was all gone after the two consecutive nights of frost.

But, honourable senators, I have a surprise for you: those fruit growers, so far as my knowledge goes, have not made applications for loans; they are endeavouring to work out the loss amongst themselves. That is something new in this day and age when people have become accustomed to going to the Government for help almost at any time and for any cause.

As I said last year, I think the time has come when we must cut down on our requests of governments, both federal and provincial. If we are going to get back to sound financing in Canada we have to stop making so many of these requests. I hope that the coming budget will be a balanced budget. However, I say that when the Government is planning financial assistance for those who have suffered disaster it should keep in mind not only the people who because of their large numbers are demanding loans, but also the smaller groups, such as to those to which I have referred. And there are other groups who lost money in 1959, some of whom have already been helped by the Government. I have in mind the miners and the fishermen of the Maritimes who have received assistance. We can only hope that the fishermen will be able to equip their boats with radio devices so as to avoid a recurrence of a disaster such as was suffered in New Brunswick.

As for the miners, may I just say that I hope that the Government will make an extra effort to find additional markets for coal which is being produced by those mines still in operation. It should be remembered that in the past few years the mining force has been cut by fully a third. When I was in the provincial arena we had 12,000 active workers in the mines; today there are about 8,000. I think also the Government should make an extra effort to use our own coal in this country. The taxpayers are now contributing more than $12 million by way of subsidy on freight rates to help carry coal to the markets of this country. Is it not possible that we can expand the markets for much of that coal? When I was in Halifax over the past weekend word came through that notices are again posted for layoffs in the mines in the near future. Such conditions create terrible hardships among many people. Some honourable members may ask, why do we not close down the mines? Well, a number of mines have already been closed down, particularly the less economic ones; and a lot of people who formerly mined coal are now engaged in other work. I know our Toronto friends have many such people employed in industry in their area.

There are a lot of farmers, besides the orchardists, who have suffered hardships. I refer particularly to the small farmer, or what we might call the marginal operator. Many marginal farmers have had to leave their farms and go into industry because they could not compete in this day and age when we have discontinued using manual labour to a large extent, have sold our horses, and must now buy expensive equipment such as tractors, heavy harrows, trucks and so on. These tools cost a lot of money. I make a special plea on behalf of the small farmers and the orchardists in my part of the country, in the hope that our lending agencies of both the federal and provincial Governments will realize that there is an urgency for the making of prompt loans when applications are received. After all, loans by lending agencies are of doubtful value unless the farmers have stock, equipment and those things necessary to make their farms economic units sufficiently profitable to pay off their indebtedness.

Let me refer to the annual monthly index numbers as published in the last issue of the Economic Analyst, which gives some indication of what the small farmer is up against.

Since 1956 prices of commodities and services used by farmers have increased from 247.6 to 273.5 in August of last year, while farm prices of agricultural products have advanced only from 234.5 to 235.9 in last October.

Surely no other evidence is necessary to illustrate that the farmers, especially the small operators who cannot afford to increase their acreage or use expensive machinery, are caught in this cost-price squeeze. Therefore, I am sure you will bear with me as I make a special plea to our Government loaning agencies to be a little more generous minded to these people so that they can make economic units out of what would otherwise too often be uneconomic units. Because, honourable senators, there cannot be found places where children can be brought up under better conditions with respect to their future welfare than many of the farms of this country. It makes me feel very badly when I hear of small farmers having to close up shop and, in too many cases, moving into the nearby cities where their working conditions, as well as living conditions for themselves and their families, are not nearly as good.

May I say a few words further about our orchardist friends down in Nova Scotia? What I am about to say applies equally to orchardists of Ontario and Quebec. The British Columbia orchardists have fared better, in that they have a better marketing system, which is what I wish to refer to. Here is another chance for the Government to be of help to these people, by seeing to it that the marketing regulations they already have are properly enforced. This applies particularly to the marketing of this last year's crop, because there were a number of so-called salesmen or truckers who went into the valley, bought apples as cheaply as they could from the farmers, and loaded them up. These apples had not been properly packed and they had not had the advantage of cold storage. They were taken into Halifax and Sydney and sold for whatever the truckers could get for them. It was not a regulated market, but an unregulated market.

There was a time during the Second Great War when we were privileged to enjoy regulated marketing through the Marketing Board. Many of us at that time expressed the hope that we would never have to go back to unregulated marketing, but we did, because the marketing board of that day made some mistakes. One of the mistakes—and I am sure it need never be repeated if we do go back to the central marketing system—was that it was a not too democratic organization. In work of this kind it is absolutely necessary for the producers to be kept informed of all that goes on, and to be able to take an active part in directing the marketing of their produce.

I hope, honourable senators, I will be excused for taking up so much of your time. I have to say that I approve of this legislation, with the one reservation expressed by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, that I am sorry the other legislation has not come along at this time. Albeit, there is a good reason for not bringing it forward at this time and we may get that in committee tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, it has been pointed out that this legislation is urgently needed, and after listening to the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) tonight I understood it was going to fix up all his troubles. However, clause 4 of the bill reads as follows:

> The minister is not liable under this act with respect to guaranteed loans made before the 1st day of June, 1960—

Hon. Mr. Power: That clause refers to the 25 per cent and the 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You have to read it right through. You have to read subclauses (a) and (b).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It does say the 1st day of June.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government what is meant by the reference to the part of the loan, or to the loans for which the minister is not liable? It reads:

> —twenty-five per cent of that part of the aggregate principal amount of the guaranteed loans made by the bank that does not exceed one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—

Does that have anything to do with a specific loan to a farmer of not more than $150,000, or does it have to do with a branch bank, because later on you see that the total that can be loaned by all banks is $50 million? If there are 10 banks, each could lend $5 million. If I understand it correctly the word "bank" here must mean a branch bank. I am just as confused about this as was my honourable friend when he explained the other bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, I was not confused.

Hon. Mr. Power: What does it mean?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Government tonight has mentioned four bills, and I am not sure whether or not a farmer can take advantage of more than one of them. The honourable Leader of the Government mentioned the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I understand there has to be a complete loss before a farmer can take advantage of that act. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is not correct, no. If the yield is not over a certain number of bushels per acre he can qualify under that act for a certain payment, of which he has already paid a considerable amount on account because 1 per cent is deducted from the proceeds of all his deliveries to the elevator. That is entirely different from this legislation and has nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then, I am correct when I say he can take advantage of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and also of the Prairie Grain Provisional Payments Act of 1960?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, but if he was able to take advantage of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act the amount that he would get under these other acts would be infinitesimal. It would be practically nothing, because he would not have the grain.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Suppose a farmer has two farms; suppose he has one of 100 acres on which he can qualify under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and another of 100 acres on which he can qualify under the Prairie Grain Provisional Payments Act of 1960. Can he take advantage of each act without the relating of one act to the other?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think that would depend on how far apart the two farms were. If one farm was in a drought area he might get it. If they were close together they would be taken together and considered as one operation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask this further question? Could he also qualify for payments under the hidden legislation that was mentioned earlier in the evening?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I object to that remark. There is no hidden legislation at all, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not know what it is. I will withdraw the word "hidden" and say that he would not qualify under the legislation which has not come forward and about which the house is not informed.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would advise the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that all the deliveries made by the farmers are kept on record, so a farmer cannot get a second payment. He can't get the applications in. I have tried to get them in—I quite honestly tell you that—and it can't be done. A farmer has come and said: "Why can't I get one in? I have had a poor crop." And I have replied, "Well, you can't qualify and there is nothing that can be done. Everything is on record at the elevator company." So nothing can be hidden there. That is the way they test whether a farmer is telling the truth or not. Unfortunately for us in Manitoba this business is handled in Regina. We have to write to Regina giving certain proof. We can prove that a farmer has only had so much of a crop but the authorities in Regina will write to the grain company which has full records. We can't get away from that. I had a half dozen farmers come to see me this year and I had to turn them down. I told them that there was no use writing because everything was on record.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I have no intention of opposing this bill any more than the one that has just preceded it. I have a simple mind and, not being a lawyer, an accountant or a farmer, I have not the slightest idea of the details of this legislation, but I take comfort in the thought that I know as much about it as do most members of this house, and under these circumstances I will not object to passage of the bill.

There is one observation I would like to make at this time. I have listened to the description of the legislation and the urgency for it. The honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) tore at our heartstrings by telling us of the terrible conditions undergone by the farmers in his province. Well, I can only observe that there is something wrong with our whole economy when in the west a great industry like agriculture, which has formed so much of the backbone in the development of Canada, finds its individual participants in their present dire straits. The honourable senior senator from Winnipeg told us of a man farming on beautiful rich land. He had thirty cows producing milk for sale in Winnipeg, yet he found himself walking the streets looking for somebody to lend him $500. This sort of thing does not make sense and it points up a condition that is a disgrace to this country, that the individual participants in an industry which has contributed hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of this country should be placed in the humiliating position where, in the face of a temporary reverse, the ordinary facilities for securing credit cannot take care of their needs and they must come to Parliament to get even the most modest loan guaranteed. It is about time that our people should be able to do something other than apply to Parliament for individual guarantees.

The honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) has said that the farmers in Nova Scotia have looked after themselves in spite of the fact they suffered severely from weather conditions. It is a good example for the west to follow, and those who are responsible for their welfare had better make sure that persons engaged in the industry get a larger share of the wealth produced.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to present some 18 petitions in divorce, which makes a total of 377 petitions presented so far.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator give the house an estimate of how many petitions he expects to receive this session?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There is approximately a month yet for the filing of divorce petitions. It is my hope that the presentation of these petitions has been more prompt this session than previously and that there is not a great backlog awaiting presentation. That is my hope but I have no knowledge at all of how many are still to come.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Copy of Order in Council P.C. 1960-38, dated January 12, 1960, designating the Minister of Public Works as the appropriate minister with respect to the National Capital Commission. (English text).

Report of the National Gallery of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 10 of the National Gallery Act, Chapter 186, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Return of Permits issued under the authority of section 8(5) of the Immigration Act, Chapter 325, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Exchange of correspondence between the United Kingdom High Commissioner and the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding arrangements whereby it will now be possible for persons in the United Kingdom, formerly resident in Canada, to qualify, subject to certain conditions, for United Kingdom family allowances, retirement pension and unemployment benefit by virtue of their previous residence or employment in Canada.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE OF JUDGES

Hon. J. W. DeB. Farris: Can the honourable the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) state when the motion which appears on the Orders of the Day for a humble Address to Her Majesty in regard to judges is likely to come up for discussion?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am unable to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, can the honourable leader find out?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It stands on the Order Paper for February 4. I will try to find out.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE

SUBSTITUTION OF MEMBER

Hon Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Smith (Kamloops) be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Wood on the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, January 26, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED CANADA INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Léon Méthot presented Bill S-7, to incorporate United Canada Insurance Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, February 2.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

ADDITION TO MEMBERS

Hon. George S. White, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Courtemanche be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committees on Transport and Communications, Natural Resources and Canadian Trade Relations.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY—FIRST READING

Hon. William R. Brunt presented Bill S-8, respecting the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Thursday next.

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION—FIRST READING

Hon. Harold Connolly presented Bill S-9, respecting the Canadian Public Health Association.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Thursday next.

COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has called a meeting of that committee for this afternoon to consider the bills which were given second reading last night. I would therefore move that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure, to resume at the call of the bell, at approximately 5 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.10 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN PROVISIONAL PAYMENTS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-32, to authorize provisional payments for the 1959-60 crop year in respect of unthreshed grain in the Prairie provinces, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it will have to be with unanimous consent. As far as I am concerned, I am glad to give that consent.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I did want to say just a few words on the third reading of this bill to the effect that I think all honourable members have been in favour of it. We all sympathize deeply with the grain producers of western Canada in the loss they sustained in the late fall and early winter of last year when the snow came so suddenly and covered up their grain before they could get it cut. Then there was a clearing season, as I understand it, and some of the farmers got their grain partly cut, and then more snow came. It is very difficult indeed to farm under those conditions, and I want to assure the western farmers that as an easterner I sympathize deeply with them in their problems.

When this legislation was introduced into the Senate I had every intention, as I still have, of giving it my wholehearted support. I regret, however, that more information was not given to honourable senators. I do not know why the information was held back, for there was no hostility to the bill in this chamber. I think it would expedite the work here, especially in matters on which we are in accord, if the fullest information were given at the earliest opportunity. Had that been done in the present instance this bill, I believe, would have gone through the house in less than an hour last evening. We did get additional information this afternoon; and all I can say is that, with the information we have—which, even yet, is not complete —I give the bill my wholehearted support.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN LOANS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-35, to provide for short-term credit to prairie grain producers, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave, I move the third reading now.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I refrained from speaking on the previous bill, C-32, but I just want to let the house know that I, too, am disappointed in the line of action which has been taken, and more particularly in the debate which took place on this bill. I did not participate in that debate—I always feel that I am not knowledgeable enough on farmers' problems—but upon reading the debate I reflected that that should not have stopped me from participation. I was looking for the honourable senators who have always professed in this house to be the farmer's friends, and was very disappointed that not one of them, particularly from the other side of the chamber, raised the very important question of interest rates. This is emergency legislation to help the farmer, who was particularly hard hit. The purpose is to lift a burden off his back, yet no attempt has been made to fix an interest rate that he could afford to pay. Last session my honourable friends opposite took great credit to themselves when, under the Farm Credit Act, the Government fixed the interest rate on farm loans, guaranteed by the Government, at 5 per cent. The rate seemed a fair one, giving the farmer a reasonable opportunity of repayment, and we all agreed to it. The farmers borrowing under the Farm Credit Act were not in trouble; yet, as I say, provision was made for them to obtain loans at 5 per cent. But this bill applies to the farmer who is in trouble—lots of it—emergency, distress; such were the terms used in introducing this legislation; yet he must go to a bank, and the best arrangement he can make for a Government guaranteed loan is at 6 per cent interest.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you think that is an exorbitant rate of interest?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Well, it is the utmost that he can legally be charged: that is all. He cannot be charged any more. I do not say it is exorbitant. The difference between 5 per cent and 6 per cent may not mean much to my honourable friend, but it means quite a bit to farmers. In any event, if we are trying to help them let us go all out in the attempt. We might even have subsidized a bit of that interest. I do not know how much money is involved or how much each farmer's loan will be—it may be in the neighbourhood of $1,000—but the principle is there. Whatever argument may be put forward for not having fixed a lower interest rate, I point out that we are not consistent. In one set of circumstances we do our best to give farmers a fair deal. In another set of circumstances—in this case—we stop debate on the Address, declare an emergency, bring in legislation to help farmers, and then in the final analysis we fail by not doing our utmost to help them. Let me ask, where can you get a 5 per cent Government guaranteed loan today? What better can you get? Yet in spite of that we are giving a 6 per cent Government guaranteed loan.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is the honourable senator sure the banks are going to charge 6 per cent on all these Government guaranteed loans? Have they stated they are going to charge this rate?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I rather like that question. I was afraid you were going to ask me, "How do you know the banks would loan at 5 per cent?" I am not sure of the answer to that, because I am not a banker. It occurs to me if the Government had inserted 5 per cent in the statute the banks would have loaned the money at that rate. They are not as hungry for the almighty dollar as some people allege them to be. They have co-operated on other occasions and I am sure they would have co-operated in this emergency.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I too wish to ask a question. I would like to know if the Government has any assurance that the banks will lend, at any rate of interest, even under a Government guarantee. I ask that because, while I have had no personal experience along this line, I have heard of many instances of businessmen having federal Government bonds as security who could not borrow from banks at any rate of interest; they were advised to sell their bonds because the banks did not have the money to lend. So I ask what is the difference between a federal Government guarantee and a federal bond? If a bank would not lend money on the security of a Government bond, what are the chances of it lending any on a Government guarantee? I wonder if the Government has any assurance that the banks will lend at even 6 per cent in the existing tight money situation.

Honourable senators, as I understood the evidence in committee, the western farmers have a record of paying off their obligations 100 per cent. But what I would like to hear more about concerns the examples cited in this house last evening—and I had occasion to read about them afterwards in Hansard—examples cited by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), who undoubtedly knows as much about affairs in western Canada as anybody in this house. I notice that he is not in his seat at the moment. It saddens me that farmers have to come to the Government of Canada for guarantees of loans on such a large scale. The honourable senator gave three examples of distressing conditions among agriculturalists who I should have thought would be in reasonably fair circumstances. For instance, one owned 400 acres of land valued at $100 an acre, and he had 26 cows, whose milk was delivered to the city of Winnipeg. Yet he said to Senator Haig: "What am I going to do to get money to buy feed for my cattle? My feed is all under the snow. Is somebody going to lend me the necessary money?" Senator Haig's observation was, "Nobody is going to do that unless he happens to be in the Selkirk asylum."

The honourable senator said he had travelled all over the province of Manitoba and that the situation he described was a general one. He was not referring merely to isolated cases.

What has happened to the economy of the west when, as I said in my remarks last evening, millions, almost billions, of dollars have been distributed among the farmers engaged in grain growing, yet they now find themselves in a distressful situation? It is certainly not because assistance has not been given to them. I read in this morning's paper that Mr. Crump, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said the railways were spending $70 million in excess of their costs to carry wheat to the seaboard. Indeed assistance has been given to the farmers from all directions. Whether the amounts have been adequate or not, I do not know, but I cannot understand why it is that those engaged in a major industry such as grain growing should be in the direful circumstances that this request would indicate.

If the situation is as it has been described to us, I am in favour of giving assistance. But I would remind honourable senators that at the election two and a half years ago the voters in the west were evidently very much dissatisfied with the then Government, for they voted out all the members of that administration between the head of the lakes and the west coast. I would suggest that during the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), who I believe are the two members of this house most familiar with agricultural conditions in western Canada, should tell us what they think ought to be done to remove the necessity for farmers of the west applying to Parliament for financial assistance.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak in this debate, but I am prompted to do so by what the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has just said, particularly his reference to the remarks made last evening by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig).

I think it must be admitted that the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg referred to only three isolated cases of farmers in distress. I am sorry that I stepped out of the chamber for a few minutes, before his remarks were made, but as I read them in Hansard he referred to only three cases. Like other senators from western Canada, I have some knowledge of conditions in that area, and I do not think the assessment given by the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg is entirely an accurate one.

A couple of days ago I received from Winnipeg a copy of the Speech from the Throne delivered at the opening of the present session of the Manitoba Legislature. I have sent out for a copy of the Speech, and if it reaches me while I am still on my feet I will give the exact figures, but my memory is that it showed the value of agricultural production in Manitoba in 1959 exceeded slightly the value in 1958.

Honourable senators, I wanted to say this because it was my impression that during the debate on this so-called emergency legislation—I will not say "so-called"; it is emergency legislation—we have received a somewhat distorted picture of agricultural conditions of western Canada. It is true that we have had this emergency in regard to grain; but those of you who take a good look at agricultural production statistics in western Canada must recognize that at the present time grain is only one of the factors in the agricultural economy of that part of our country. Indeed, in my own province of Manitoba—I have not the figures—grain is from year to year becoming less and less important in the whole agricultural picture. Although it is true that individual farmers have suffered loss resulting from the unusual weather last fall, the large majority of farmers have not been affected by those conditions. As we know, this emergency legislation is designed to help the individual farmers who have suffered loss. I do want to say that there should not be left in this house a false picture of agriculture in western Canada during the current year, or of the crops, by and large, that we have had. I make these remarks because I feel there ought to be some sense of proportion in our thinking on this problem.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, January 27, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture Act, Chapter 66, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report on Activities under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, for the Crop Year 1958-59, pursuant to section 12 of the said act, being Chapter 213, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 14 of the Penitentiary Act, Chapter 206, R.S. 1952. (English text).

NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Aseltine presented Bill S-10, to incorporate Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to establish a corporation to manage and develop the harbour at the city of Nanaimo in the province of British Columbia. The powers of the proposed corporation are similar to those of other harbour corporations established in the past.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is proposed to go ahead tomorrow with this bill and the two harbour bills that are already on the Order Paper. Accordingly, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be placed on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 2 to 21 and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED ICEBREAKERS

On the notice by Hon. Mr. Isnor:

That he will inquire of the Government:

What are the names of the Government-owned icebreakers used by the Department of Transport?

Give name of each icebreaker as used by the Department of Transport, and the place of operation as of January 19, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when I may look forward to a reply to this inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, when inquiries are made of the Government we immediately ask the appropriate departments to run down the information. We inquire from them every day until we get the answers and I do not think anyone can do more than that. I shall be glad to furnish the answer to the honourable senator's inquiry at the earliest possible moment.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, January 21, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on Thursday, the fourteenth day of this month, it was our privilege to be in this beautiful chamber along with diplomatic representatives and dignitaries from state and church when our newly-appointed Governor General, in the dress of a major-general, entered the chamber with his stately and dignified wife to open the Third Session of the Twenty-fourth Parliament of Canada. It was indeed a charming and picturesque scene, which will long be remembered by those of us who were here.

Many of us recall the misgivings which some Canadians had when, in 1951, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent suggested to His Majesty King George VI that a Canadian-born citizen be his personal representative in Canada. That was a break with tradition which, some felt, would result only in weakening the ties which bind the commonwealth together. The last nine years have shown how right were those who agreed with the then Prime Minister, and how wrong were those who took a different view. Never have Canadians been more conscious and more proud of being members of the great Commonwealth of Nations than they are today. Our first Canadian-born Governor General, the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, relinquished his office after having served his country with a charm and dignity equalled but never surpassed by any of his distinguished predecessors.

The present Governor General assumes his high office with the good wishes of Canadians from coast to coast. He has served his country well both on the field of battle and in the field of diplomacy. He is a man of great distinction and, at the same time, of great modesty. I am sure we were all deeply impressed with the opening sentences of the Speech from the Throne, which were probably written by himself. May I be permitted to read them? His Excellency said:

> I am happy to greet you as we meet for the first time at the opening of our Parliament.
> My appointment as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen in Canada is an honour which moves me profoundly. I invoke Divine help to guide and strengthen me that I may serve well the Parliament and people of Canada in carrying out the trust confided to me by the Sovereign.

The Governor General then proceeded to read the remainder of the Speech from the Throne which, according to custom, was prepared by the Government and sets forth the Government's appraisal of conditions throughout the world and in Canada and also some of the main legislative proposals which the Government has in mind. I am sure we were all impressed with the ease with which His Excellency read the Speech in both English and French. While he was reading it in French the thought occurred to me that in this bilingual country there are comparatively few English-speaking Canadians who can both converse and read in the two languages, while on the contrary the majority of our French-speaking Canadians speak with equal fluency in either tongue. I use the expressions "French-Canadian" and "English-Canadian", honourable senators, merely for differentiation, for, after all, we are all Canadians. I do not need to go beyond the confines of this house to find Canadians who come from districts where French is the language employed from day to day but who speak equally well in English. For example, there is our esteemed Speaker, who is equally eloquent in both French and English.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I could name other senators who have a similar command of both our official languages; and I must admit that sometimes it puts me to shame when I think how inadequate is my knowledge of that language which was spoken by those who first set foot on this soil. I am glad to say, however, honourable senators, that more English-speaking Canadians are beginning to acquire not only a writing knowledge but a speaking knowledge of French. At the present time there are three television programs and one radio program which have large audiences in many sections of English-speaking Canada. Also, in my own city of Brantford and in other cities there are classes in French which are being attended by eager and enthusiastic audiences of all ages, from the pre-kindergarten to the post-seventies. We have in Brantford a number of citizens who have gone beyond the age of three score years and ten who are starting to acquire a knowledge of French.

The radio program to which I refer is entitled Time for French. It is a purely instructional program and it is heard over the C.B.C. on Saturdays at 1.30 p.m. Honourable senators might like to follow some of these programs.

Two of the television programs are also for instructional purposes. One entitled Chez Helene, is heard at two o'clock, five days a week over the C.B.C. and is for children of pre-school age. It is very simple French, but I find it quite interesting to follow.

The other program is entitled Speaking French. It is heard on Saturdays only, at 6 p.m. and it is conducted by Professor Vinay of the University of Montreal and Sir George Williams University, assisted by Miss Phyllis Clapperton.

I can recommend these programs to honourable senators who are interested, as I am, in acquiring a knowledge of the French language.

Another very good French program on television which I hear when I am at home in Brantford, over channel 11, from Hamilton, is entitled Joindre les deux bouts. It is sponsored by the caisses populaires and is a rebroadcast of a program originating in Montreal. It can be followed by advanced students in French, and it is appreciated especially by French-speaking Canadians living in the vicinity of Brantford and in the Niagara peninsula.

Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and these other stations for giving our English-speaking audiences an opportunity of obtaining a knowledge of that language which is not generally spoken in the district in which they live.

May I take the opportunity to say how pleased I am and how pleased we all are to see you, Mr. Speaker, back in your accustomed place. We know that while you continue to preside over the deliberations of this house the dignity and decorum of Parliament will indeed be maintained on a high plane.

We are also very pleased to see the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) back in his place, in his accustomed good health and spirits.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He is almost hors de combat today.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We know that under his leadership legislation and the business of the Senate will be brought forward and advanced as rapidly as possible, but at the same time without undue haste and without any effort on his part to prevent the fullest discussion of all legislation both in this house and in committee.

Honourable senators, during the last year the Senate has been capably represented at various parliamentary international meetings, and I trust that from time to time throughout the session those who have represented the Senate will give to this house an account of what took place at their meetings and their impressions of what they saw and what they heard.

I would, however, like to refer to the Canadian delegation to the United Nations. That is perhaps the most important of all international gatherings. Decisions affecting not merely one or two countries but the peace of the world are made at the meetings of the United Nations.

I would like to point out, honourable senators, that at the last assembly there were representatives present from 82 nations. Canada was entitled to 12 Parliamentary representatives, and—take note of this—all of them, with one exception, were chosen from the House of Commons. The senator appointed to represent this house was our distinguished colleague the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). Unfortunately he was unable to remain throughout the meeting of the Assembly, and another equally distinguished senator, the honourable gentleman from Shawinigan (Hon. Mr. Méthot), was selected to take his place. But when that distinguished senator found it impossible to remain at the United Nations, what happened? Instead of appointing another senator to fill out his term, the Government appointed a member of the House of Commons. So for at least a portion of the time the United Nations was in session the Senate had no representative there at all.

I feel that when the original delegation was appointed there should have been at least two representatives from the Senate, one of whom might have been chosen from the Opposition side.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Early last year I brought this matter to the attention of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and I know that he made representations on behalf of this house. Since then there has been a change in the ministry in the Department of External Affairs. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if you join with the Leader of the Government in representations on our behalf the present Minister of External Affairs will not be able to resist them, with the result that at the next meeting of the United Nations the Canadian delegation will include at least two senators.

Honourable senators, will you allow me this opportunity of welcoming to this house our newly-appointed members?

Although women claim no special privileges in the Senate I claim the privilege of welcoming first the newly-appointed woman member. It was not my privilege to have made the acquaintance of the Honourable Senator Olive Irvine before she came to this house, but I read in the press that, like many distinguished Canadians—indeed, like many other members of this house—she for a time taught school. She also has taken a great interest in the beautification of Ottawa and was for a time a member of the National Capital Commission.

The honourable senator is the seventh woman to have been acknowledged to be a person within the meaning of the British North America Act and therefore eligible to sit in the Senate. She will find here five other women, all of whom have made outstanding contributions to the work of the Senate, both in the house and its committees. They join, I am sure, with all other senators in extending to our newly-appointed woman senator a very hearty welcome.

(Translation):

It is with the greatest pleasure that I welcome to the Senate the Honourable Henri Courtemanche who, until recently, was Secretary of State for Canada. I regret that the honourable senator is not in his seat at the moment. From 1949 to 1953, I had the privilege of sitting with him in the House of Commons where he showed great talent as a parliamentarian in the ranks of the Opposition. I am sure that, on the Government side, he will be equally successful in the Senate. He is a distinguished member of the Quebec Bar where he has made a name for himself. He is now the youngest member of the Senate and we trust that, in the very distant future, he may be one day its oldest member.

Last Thursday he moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne in an impeccable and harmonious French which was admired, if not understood, by his English-speaking fellow citizens. I congratulate him most cordially and trust that, as he is perfectly bilingual, we will soon have an opportunity of hearing him express himself in English with equal facility.

(Text):

Honourable senators, having congratulated the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, I now wish to welcome and congratulate the seconder of the motion, the Honourable Frederick Murray Blois who, unfortunately, is also unable to be in his seat today. The honourable Senator Blois is a man of wide experience both in public and in legislative matters. Immediately before being summoned to the Senate he was Executive Assistant to the Minister of Highways of Nova Scotia, and for a number of years prior to that time he had been Leader of the Opposition in the Legislature of that province. Doubtless his experience there will stand him in good stead as a Government supporter in this house. His speech on Thursday last was a very interesting one, and he left no doubt in the minds of any of us as to the outstanding contributions which citizens of his province have made to the cultural, political and business life of Canada. We are indeed happy to have the new senator with us.

Honourable senators, the proposers of an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne have had a very difficult task this session, because the Speech was without doubt a great disappointment, not only to parliamentarians, but to the public generally. Newspaper editors have not failed to express their disappointment. The editor of Le Droit, in the issue of January 15, set forth the feeling which is generally prevalent in the country. I do not intend to read the editorial, but I would like to mention its heading. It is entitled Déception. Though that word has other meanings, I understand in this instance it means "disappointment". That editorial begins in these words:

(Translation):

The Speech from the Throne read by the Governor General yesterday afternoon in the Senate chamber is one of the most disappointing which we have ever perused.

(Text):

The editorial sets out reasons for the disappointment, but it is not my intention to go into them at this time.

The Speech from the Throne is noteworthy, not for what it contains, but for what it leaves out. For instance, there is no mention of unemployment. One would have thought there would be some reference to that question in it, especially in view of the fact that as of January 7 last there were 722,834 Canadian citizens unemployed, or about 6 per cent of our working population, compared with 749,556 at the same time last year, or about 7 per cent of the working population at that time. Some may say that these figures are exaggerated, that they should be 549,000 and 574,000 respectively. Honourable senators, whichever figures you choose, you will still find that there are only 25,000 fewer unemployed in Canada today than a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask, are those not the figures only of persons who are registered as unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have quoted both figures, those who are drawing unemployment insurance and those who are registered as seeking work. That is why I say some honourable senators may think that the figures should be lower than those I first quoted.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Some say they should be higher.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Some may think they should be higher. I take the middle course, not too much to the left, not too much to the right, just intermediate.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Just medium.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. I was saying what I thought some honourable senators were thinking.

I was pleased to note that the seconder of the motion for an Address in reply was bold enough to refer to the question of unemployment, even if the Government of the day thought it better to leave any reference to it unsaid. Leaving any reference to it unsaid this session is quite different from what took place last session, when, as I pointed out, there were only 25,000 more unemployed than this year. In the Speech from the Throne at the opening of last session there was this statement:

My Government has taken action to reduce unemployment by expediting national works programs—

That was last year. The unemployed today are asking, what is the Government doing about the problem this year? The answer may be: well, most of you are on unemployment insurance.

Honourable senators, on any scale of unemployment much higher than at the present time, the Unemployment Insurance Fund could quickly disappear. We have seen what has happened to it over the years. Please note these figures: on December 31, 1956, about three years ago, the fund stood at $926 million; at a similar date one year later it had shrunk to $625 million; and by the end of last year it had dwindled to $471 million.

With the permission of the house I would place on Hansard figures showing the balance to the credit of the fund as of December 31 in each of the years from 1955 to 1959. Honourable senators will note that as of the end of last month the fund stood at about half of what it was at the end of 1956.

Year ending:	Balance at credit of fund:
December 31, 1955	$890,857,489.63
December 31, 1956	926,776,830.22
December 31, 1957	877,470,144.39
December 31, 1958	625,363,366.21
December 31, 1959	471,094,255.96

Notwithstanding the increased rates that were put into effect last year, it is clear that the fund is not even now on an actuarially sound basis, and that it can only continue to deteriorate should unemployment increase or remain at noticeably increased numbers for any considerable length of time. I believe that unemployment is one of the most important questions with which we have to deal at the present time. We are thinking little about it because we feel that there is unemployment insurance behind the worker which protects him when he is out of work. Mark my words, honourable senators, if unemployment increases this year, next year, or the year after, there will be not much left in this fund.

Another glaring omission from the Speech from the Throne is any reference to tight money. You will recall that one of the main planks in the election of this Government to office two years ago, and one of the slogans, was: Elect us and your tight money problems will disappear like dew before the sun. But what have we got today? We have the tightest money and the highest interest rates in the history of the country, and money is becoming tighter, and interest rates higher, every day. Who suffers from this? Everyone, and in many ways. We have higher federal taxes, higher provincial taxes and higher municipal taxes. In practically every city and town in Canada taxes are being raised. If a tax rate last year was 45 mills, the chances are it will be nearer 50 mills next year. But even with this higher tax rate many cities and towns cannot borrow money to meet their most pressing needs. The seriousness of this problem was emphasized the other day by Mayor Robert Simpson, President of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. From the Brantford Expositor of January 20 last I will quote part of the report of a meeting at which he spoke:

> It may be necessary for municipalities to "strike" and stop all capital programs if the interest rates on capital expenditures continue to rise, the President of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities said here last night.
> He said he thought the interest rate on capital expenditures was "definitely going to go up" but that most municipalities had reached the limit of their borrowing powers.
> The temper of the people has also changed, he said. "They are getting to be a little vicious."

This is rather strong language honourable senators. Nevertheless, it does emphasize the problem with which the municipalities are being faced. You may ask me what has happened to all the money that previously was available for bonds. Well, we know that during the last year the federal Government has taken up about 60 per cent of all available money; the provincial Governments have taken what they could of the balance, and after industrial issues had been provided for there was very little left for the municipalities. Some of them, if they have not already gone to the United States to borrow money may be forced to do so. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has warned against that, and I join with him in that warning; but in the interests of health, education and the general well-being of our fellow citizens a source of money must be provided from which our municipalities can borrow to meet the capital expenses which every municipality is faced with today for such things as sewers, water, schools, hospitals, bridges, streets, et cetera.

Honourable senators, there will be a dominion-provincial conference in the near future. I realize that many very serious problems will come before that conference, but I do trust that one of the items near the top of the agenda will be consideration of the plight of our municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would that include the banks and other financial institutions?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They are not in any plight.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, I am referring to the conference which will take place, I understand, in Ottawa within the next few months between representatives of the provinces and representatives of the dominion. It is at that conference that I hope the provinces and the dominion will not forget the municipalities in this hour of need, because there is a great need.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Is the honourable senator suggesting that the banks are in some predicament?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, the banks are having a lovely time, and so are other financial institutions.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have been talking about the plight of the municipalities, and I cannot emphasize it too strongly. I must also make reference to the needs of the provinces. They are not getting their money very easily. They have to wait until the dominion Government takes up all the money it wants for bonds. The province of Ontario did expect to get quite a large additional amount after it gave such great help toward the election of this Government. During the last election Ontario was promised that it would get at least $100 million more a year. Has it got it? No; far from it. What it has got is high interest rates. The failure of the Government to carry out the promise to Ontario can result only in one thing, increased taxes in Ontario, and unless all the provinces can somehow get more money there are going to be increased taxes in all of them.

The Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, the Honourable Mr. Allan, has not been backward in saying what is going to be done in his province. Speaking at Hamilton the other day he made it abundantly clear that Ontario would either have to get more money from the federal Government or increase provincial taxes. More recently, the Finance Minister of Quebec, the Honourable J. S. Bourque, speaking at Montreal, stated that that province also would have to get more money. I will read just a few sentences from his remarks:

> Our provinces and even our municipalities are forced to borrow on the United States market to obtain the funds necessary for essential purposes, thus creating a serious liability for the Canadian currency and involving risks of exchange losses.

That is what is happening in two provinces. We sympathize with them, and we do regret that the Government has not carried out its promise to give the provinces more money. If it is not able to do it, and if it knew it would not be able to do it, why did it make the promise? Of course, that was only one promise it made. It will not be long before the provincial and municipal Governments rise up and remind the federal Government of the tortuous path of broken promises to them which has followed since it came into office.

Honourable senators, there is another glaring omission from the Speech from the Throne, and that is any reference to defence. As honourable senators know, the present Government came into office in the summer of 1957. This is the fourth Speech it has prepared for delivery at the opening of Parliament, and it is very noticeable that this is the first time any reference to defence has been omitted. I have the quotations from the previous Speeches and if the house will bear with me I will read them. In the fall of 1957 the Government said in the Speech from the Throne:

> My ministers believe that Canada's active participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is essential for the preservation of peace. You will accordingly be asked to maintain modern defence forces in being which, together with those of our allies, will continue to act as a deterrent to attack upon any part of that alliance.

In the 1958 Speech from the Throne the Government said:

> —my advisers will ask your support to maintain, in co-operation with our allies, armed forces adequate to deter any potential aggression.

In 1959 the words were:

> You will be asked to provide for maintaining the effective power of Canada's defence forces.

This session people are asking: Why is there no reference to defence? Has the Government a very good reason for not having mentioned defence? Can it be that the Government intends to reduce drastically our defence spending? What is the Government's policy on disarmament? It is significant that by omitting from the Speech from the Throne any mention of defence the Government does not commit itself to any defence expenditures this year. Does this mean that Canada may be considering going it alone in the matter of disarmament? Does it mean that Canada, admittedly unable to defend itself against the forces of powerful nations, is going to rely for its defence entirely on the United States? These are only some of the questions which the people are asking.

The omission from the Speech from the Throne of any allusion to defence has raised all kinds of doubt. People are beginning to doubt whether the Government has a policy on defence. If it has such a policy, let it take the people into its confidence. Let it be forthright. The feeling throughout the country is that on questions of defence the Government has no clear-cut policy; that it is wavering; that it is vacillating; that there is a difference of opinion in the cabinet as to whether we should arm more or arm less, or whether we should arm less for defence and more for offence, which some claim in modern atomic warfare is the only sure defence. All this is very confusing and disturbing and calls for a forthright statement from the Government at the earliest opportunity. The people would like to know just where the Government stands and what it proposes to do about defence.

We learned with interest that the Government proposes to set up a committee on defence. Just what the powers of that committee will be we do not know, but it seems to me that a committee of that importance might be a joint committee of members from both houses. I have a special reason for suggesting this. I have made other suggestions to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) which he has advanced to the Government and which the Government has accepted. At this time I suggest very seriously that any special committee set up on defence should be a joint committee. The main reason for my suggestion is that on both sides of this house there are members who are especially well qualified to sit on such a committee. For instance, one honourable senator who could contribute much to the work of such a committee is a former Minister of National Defence. He would be a great acquisition to the committee. We also have an honourable senator who was Chairman of the Committee on Defence Expenditures in the other house. He had an excellent record in the last war—both in the ranks and as an officer. Another honourable senator held a very important administrative post in connection with our war effort. He is well qualified to sit on any defence committee. I see another honourable member of this house who had a distinguished war record and has since achieved a distinguished record in the business world.

I am sure that if, the committee on defence were made a joint committee these men would contribute greatly to its work. I understand the committee will not be a large one and we would not expect a large representation from this house. It will deal with a non-political matter and I should not think it would be necessary to have a larger representation of those who support the Government in the Senate than of those who are supposed to form the Opposition. I mention this to the Leader of the Government in the hope that he will bring it to the attention of the Government. I repeat, I am satisfied that if these men were appointed to the committee the Government would benefit from their assistance.

Honourable senators, there is only one more matter which I should like to mention. The Speech from the Throne makes this reference to international trade:

> International trade is one of the chief bases of Canadian prosperity and must continue to be a major interest of this Parliament.

No one will disagree with that statement, but I trust that the interest of the Government will be productive of better results this session than it was last session. The Speech from the Throne last session stated:

> In response to suggestions put forward by my Government a Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference was held in Montreal last September.

Honourable senators will remember that conference, which was attended by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and received such glowing headline publicity. I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government just what far-reaching decisions there have been on the part of the United Kingdom to remove restrictions on imports. What restrictions have been removed, with the exception of quotas? Have any customs tariff reductions been made as a result of that great conference? I would also like to ask him to what extent our trade with the United Kingdom has increased as a result of that conference?

Of course, honourable senators, the facts speak for themselves and they are a disappointment. Let us first consider the position of our exports; and when considering these figures let us not forget the promise of the Prime Minister on assuming office that he was going to divert at least 15 per cent of our trade with the United States to the United Kingdom. We must keep that in mind. It is very gratifying that exports for the year 1959 to all countries reached the impressive total of $5,179,600,000—over five billion dollars—but, notwithstanding that promise of a 15 per cent diversion, by far the greater part of that gain was due to our increased exports, not to the United Kingdom, but to the United States. Our exports to the United States increased by $292 million, while those to the United Kingdom increased by only $16 million.

As far as imports are concerned, unfortunately only the figures for the first nine months of last year are available, and as there is apt to have been a favourable change within the last three months it would be unfair for me to compare the total with the figures for the previous year. Statistics for the nine-month period do, however, show that imports from the United Kingdom during that time increased by the infinitesimal amount of one-fifth of one per cent. Another fact which appears, and which we regret, is that during that period Canada had a tremendous deficit in overall trade.

Another question I should like to ask is, what has the Government done to implement its promise, given either directly or by implication to manufacturers, that it would increase our customs tariffs? Will anyone tell me that such a statement was not made during the last election? The Prime Minister, as reported in the Hamilton Spectator of May 14, 1957, while speaking at Guelph indicated that it was time to set up protection for many manufacturing companies which were being forced to the wall. Promises to the same effect were made in other industrial centres in whose factories great numbers of textile workers are employed. But, like many of the Prime Minister's promises, they have faded into thin air. What I would like to ask particularly is, has the Government renounced its policy, which in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald received the grandiose name of "the National Policy"? Has it gone back on that policy of high protection, and does it now admit the soundness of the Liberal policy of low tariffs and a free flowing of trade? Let the Government say what its policy is. Or has it too many advisors? Is it vacillating between high protection, tariff for revenue, and free trade? At the present time the business world is in a quandary. It knows not what the Government may do tomorrow in connection with trade. Business can make no long-range plans. It is about time, in the interest of the well-being of our citizens, that the Government announced in no uncertain terms its policy on trade and tariffs.

We read a great deal these days about the Common Market and a Free Trade Area, and we are informed now that the Government is about to take—in fact, about a month ago began to take—an interest in these two European markets. Today we see in a paper the headline "Inner Six Relations Eyed Here", and this report:

Canada may soon establish diplomatic relations with the six-nation European Common Market, reliable informants said today.

The dispatch is from London, dated January 26, 1960. After the Common Market has been in existence for more than a year the Government is approaching it. Other Governments—Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom—have had diplomatic representation there ever since its creation. What has Canada done? Canada sat back and did nothing. Will anyone say it was not warned? All I need to do is to remind honourable senators of the warnings which were given in this house as long ago as November 19, 1957, when the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) formally drew the attention of this house to:

the desirability of Canada following the example of other nations of the Western world in seeking to enlarge her trading area to those countries whose governments are prepared to wholeheartedly co-operate in achieving the maximum economic benefits to all concerned.

On May 28, 1958 he said this:

I believe that the only way we can reduce the cost of living and solve our other economic problems is for Canada and the United States to follow the lead of those NATO partners who have already joined the European Free Trade area.

And, on January 28, 1959:

It remains, strange to say, that Canada, the foremost advocate of economic co-operation, and the fifteenth and only remaining member of NATO, as far as I know is taking no action whatsoever.

Apparently, honourable senators, some action has been taken. It may be too late. But, I suppose, better late than never.

Other honourable senators made speeches in this house similar to those of the honourable senator from Shelburne. But, oh, they were not important! I assert, honourable senators, that these men did know what they were talking about. The Government has had this warning, and I hope it will now go forward with all confidence, knowing that both Houses of Parliament and the people of Canada expect it to develop Canadian trade to the highest possible extent, not by restrictions but by encouraging the free flow of trade.

I come now to the close of my remarks. I would remind the house that we have now entered on the sixth decade of the twentieth century. During the first five decades we have lived through two major devastating wars and a number of minor ones. Let us hope that the sixth decade is the beginning of a long era of peace throughout the world. Great scientific achievements, far beyond our wildest imaginations and even inconceivable and incomprehensible to most of us, have been accomplished during this century, but especially during the last two decades. Unfortunately those efforts have been devoted largely to the perfecting of the art and engines of war. If these achievements could now be used for peaceful purposes, it is impossible for us to conceive of the happiness they would bring to mankind. I am sure that our Government will do all in its power, and I trust that the nations of the world will unite with it, to encourage our scientists to make even greater advances, all of them to be used, not for the destruction of the human race, but rather for the preservation of those things which we hold dear, and for the betterment of mankind.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Aseltine, debate adjourned.

CANADA-NETHERLANDS INCOME TAX AGREEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act, 1957.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill for the purpose of amending the Canada-Netherlands income tax convention. The original act ratifying this convention was enacted in 1957 and was entitled the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act, 1957.

This convention is somewhat different from most of Canada's income tax conventions in that it is a supplementary convention, namely, a convention to change certain features of the original convention, which was signed in 1954 although not ratified by Parliament until 1957. Canada has entered into supplementary income tax conventions with only one other country, namely, the United States. In fact, two supplementary income tax conventions have been entered into with that country for the purpose of making appropriate changes to meet problems that have arisen from time to time.

The proposed supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the Netherlands is intended to settle certain problems encountered by both countries under the terms of the original convention. Three changes of substance have been made. The first two bring the convention closer to the terms of our other income tax conventions, while the third constitutes a departure from the normal rule, although it is not expected to make much difference in practice.

The first change merely provides for deletion of certain special termination provisions that are contained in articles VII and VIII of the original convention. The convention itself of course contains, as do all the other tax conventions, provisions for termination of the whole convention. For certain reasons, however, articles VII and VIII contain special termination provisions, but it is admitted now, and indeed the parties, Canada and the Netherlands, have agreed that these special termination provisions are no longer necessary. Consequently, the first change which is being made is to delete the termination provisions in these two articles.

The second change concerns the reduced rate of withholding tax applicable to dividends going from a subsidiary company in one country to its parent company in the other country.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable gentleman permit a question? The portion of his remarks which he has just concluded deal, I take it, with article I in the schedule to the bill?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, article I in the schedule to the bill, which deals with articles VII and VIII of the original convention.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Has the honourable gentleman the information as to why these termination provisions are to be removed, or is it intended that we should get this information in committee?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Perhaps it will be better to ask for that information at the committee stage. I can give it to my honourable friend substantially if he wishes, but I was hoping not to go into any more detail in the house than necessary.

As I have said, all income tax conventions, including this one, contain provisions for termination of the whole convention. But at the time this convention was negotiated, which was as far back as 1953 or 1954, although ratification by Parliament did not occur until 1957, it was thought, I believe particularly by the Netherlands, that Canada might desire to change the general practice of a 15 per cent withholding tax: namely, that our withholding tax might be increased to, say, 20 per cent, and in that event the Netherlands wanted to have the privilege of terminating those particular articles VII and VIII without terminating the whole convention. However, I do say to the honourable senator that I think it will be preferable to try to get a more complete explanation of this aspect in committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Under these proposed changes is any notice of termination necessary?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, six months' notice. If, for instance, Canada wished to terminate the whole convention by January 1, 1961, it would be required to give notice of termination six months prior to that date.

I come now to the second change I referred to, which concerns the reduced rate of withholding tax applicable to dividends going from a subsidiary company to a parent company in the other country. As we all know, the general rule is that there is a 15 per cent withholding tax on the income going from Canada to countries with which we do not have tax conventions. However, in the cases of countries with which we do have tax conventions that 15 per cent item is generally modified; indeed, it is modified in various ways with various countries. Part of the reason for this bill is that the Netherlands is a beneficiary of certain advantages greater than those given to other countries. Consequently, the purpose of the second proposed change is to bring the convention more into line with conventions with other countries.

For instance, in the original convention with the Netherlands no withholding tax was levied on dividends going from, say, a company resident in Canada to a company resident in the Netherlands, if the Netherlands company owned at least 50 per cent of the shares of the Canadian company. In our convention with the United Kingdom the Canadian withholding tax is nil only if the parent company owns 100 per cent of the stock of the subsidiary company. In our convention with the United States the provision requires a minimum ownership of only 51 per cent, but the withholding tax rate is 5 per cent. So, a United States company is required to hold 51 per cent of the shares of a Canadian company, and the withholding tax to which Canada would be entitled would be 5 per cent. On the other hand, a Dutch company is required to own only 50 per cent of the shares of the Canadian company, and the withholding tax is nil.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Why is there a distinction?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: These distinctions are and have been over the years simply matters of bargaining. In tax conventions I suppose it is one quid pro quo for another quid pro quo, and as a result the provisions as to withholding tax are not uniform in regard to all countries.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I understand the honourable gentleman is now discussing paragraph 3 of article VIII of the original convention.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is to be deleted. Would the honourable gentleman tell us what the position is before the proposed deletion of this paragraph?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I have been doing just that. The position under the present convention is that if a Dutch company owns 50 per cent of the stock of a Canadian company, the dividends from that Canadian company flow to the Dutch company without Canada getting any withholding tax. The same applies also, of course, in reverse.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And what is the proposed change?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am just coming to that.

Under this amended convention a Dutch company, in order to qualify for a reduced rate, will have to own 100 per cent of the shares of the Canadian company, and the rate will then become 2½ per cent rather than nil. However, there is one exception. Perhaps it would be just as expeditious to read paragraph 3 as to explain it, and that will remove any possibility of error. Paragraph 3 of article I reads:

> 3. Notwithstanding the second paragraph of this article the rate of tax shall not exceed 2½% if the dividends are paid by a company which is a resident of one of the States to a company which is a resident of the other State, provided that during the whole of the taxation year the latter company owns all of the voting stock of the former company (except directors' qualifying shares) > either alone or in association with not more than three other companies which are residents of that other State, but each of these companies must own at least 10% of the voting stock of the former company.

May I now expand on that very briefly? That means that if a Canadian company is owned by four Netherlands companies, none of which owns less than 10 per cent of the voting stock, then the dividends from the Canadian company would flow from Canada to those four Netherlands companies subject to a withholding tax deduction by Canada of 2½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In the example you use there are four companies. The convention says not more than three.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There can be four.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. The words are, "or in association with not more than three other companies".

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There need not be only one company holding 100 per cent; but there could be as many as four companies, so long as none of the four companies held less than 10 per cent of the voting stock of the Canadian company. That is the last part of paragraph 3, which provides that, "each of these companies must own at least 10 per cent of the voting stock of the former company."

May I say to honourable senators that I am sure more complete information regarding this convention will be made in committee. As honourable senators know, tax conventions are sometimes difficult and technical, and not easily explained.

The third proposed change, which is rather unimportant, is a slight change in regard to the question of alimony being paid by a resident of either country to a resident of the other. The present convention contains a provision in regard to alimonies which is different from what is the general rule as to taxation of alimonies being paid as between country and country. The change made by this supplementary convention brings the position in this regard into conformity with the provisions of other tax conventions.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I want to say only a word about the bill, which I think has been very well explained by the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). I would hope that when it is in committee we shall have before us not only these proposed amendments, but if possible also the original convention, so that we may see what is being amended and what is being left in the convention.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I trust that no one will object to the remarks I propose to make, which are really a repetition of the remarks I make every time an income tax convention comes before this house. For some years now I have been rising to protest against the method adopted for changing the law of the dominion of Canada as regards these conventions. The purpose of the present amendment to the convention with the Netherlands is to alter the substance of the law of Canada.

My honourable friend has just pointed out that the subject of his remarks is technical and difficult, and not easy to explain. I will grant him all that, and I think the people of Canada who are affected by the law in this form will join very heartily in that statement. As a matter of fact, the methods adopted are confusion worse confounded. If my honourable friend, an experienced and able lawyer, finds it difficult to explain and, therefore, difficult to understand—for if he understood it clearly he would not have difficulty in explaining it—what about the ordinary businessman, or the practising lawyer who is asked for advice about the law as it now stands as the result of our swallowing a whole convention made between the executives of these two countries? I have protested that this is not the way to legislate, and I had hoped that by continually stating the proper procedure I would cause a little common sense to percolate into the minds of the departmental officers responsible for the existing method of procedure.

It is constitutional law that the executive may enter into agreements, treaties and understandings with foreign countries. That is the prerogative of the executive, but the executive has no power to change the law of the land without the consent of Parliament. The proper procedure for the executive, when it is coming to Parliament, is to phrase any proposed change in the law in usual form.

What is required here is an amendment to the Income Tax Act in which the substance of these agreements is expressed by the usual methods and in the usual language, and in such a way that the business interests which are concerned will clearly understand it. Had that been done in the first place, instead of bringing the whole convention to this house and throwing the book at us, there would have been no difficulty now in making the proper amendments to the law, or in giving a simple explanation of them.

Again I protest, in the hope that by constant reiteration this idea will in time penetrate the slow intelligence of those who keep on submitting this kind of legislation to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, may I correct a misstatement that I think the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) made. I do not think I said I had any difficulty in explaining this bill. In fact, I think I know enough about it to be able to continue with the explanation in even greater detail. What I did say was, that in regard to these tax matters it is sometimes difficult to make oneself understood by a house which consists in the large majority of laymen as opposed to lawyers whose business takes them into these fields. What I meant was that it is difficult to make these intricate tax matters fully understood here, and that it is more appropriate to obtain a full explanation in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If I have in any way misrepresented the remarks of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), I withdraw my comment; but I wrote down the words which he used at the time, and my notes indicate that he said the subject was technical and difficult and not easy to explain.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I was being overly modest.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I wish to make a point here which has only an indirect bearing on the comment of the last speaker, but is in reference to the introduction in parliament of bills such as this one, dealing with tax agreements with various countries. We have had these bills before us year after year. I think the complication in the introduction is due largely to the fact that before such a bill can be introduced an actual agreement must first be entered into. Is that not the position?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: It is not a case of our meeting here and passing a bill which will permit of an agreement being made. Rather, we are being asked to confirm an existing agreement. When we have been dealing with bills of this nature previously, that has been the situation, and it does make for complications in our consideration of them. I understand that this procedure cannot be avoided because an agreement has to be entered into and signed before the necessary amendment to our laws can be made. I think the departmental officials who actually negotiate these agrements should be brought into committee as witnesses.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This agreement was entered into on October 28, 1959.

Hon. W. Rupert Davies: That is the point I referred to on the last occasion when income tax conventions were before us, that they come to this house merely to be rubber-stamped. We have no say about them; we cannot make a change in them. They are prepared by the department. As I suggested before, there should be some consultation between the members of both houses about these conventions before they are brought to us, instead of our being asked to rubber-stamp them under the existing procedure.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I want to say something that I think needs to be said at this stage of our proceedings. When we dealt with two complicated bills in committee yesterday many senators around the table voiced considerable criticism, not because there was any question of the knowledge or capacity of the witnesses, but because the wrong witnesses, and not enough witnesses were before us.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No. no—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Well, you and I heard it. The honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You were asking about something which had nothing to do with the bill at all.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No. I was supporting you yesterday.

It has always been the boast of this house that it does its most effective work in committee, and my short experience confirms that view. I had some experience in committee in the other place. There, when a bill came to a committee the appropriate minister was generally at the first meeting. If he could not attend, he was excused and his deputy attended with his advisers. If the deputy was asked a question he might say, "I am not conversant with this point but Joe Doakes here knows all about it and you can get the information from him." That was quite satisfactory to the committee because the minister or the deputy minister was responsible for the information given. I suggest that whenever we deal in committee with a matter involving a Government department, the deputy minister of that department should be there. In that way we shall get business done. If we do not insist on the attendance of at least the deputy minister, bills will be held over while we await additional witnesses. If we allow the present practice to continue it will end up in the submission of departmental memoranda to Senate committees. That would be an intolerable state of affairs.

I have no thought of casting reflection upon the witnesses who attended the meeting yesterday. They had certain knowledge, but they did not have the background information that some honourable senators wanted to obtain and discuss. It is essential that all relevant information be available to us, for we have time to reflect upon it and we want to consider legislation fully. Sometimes House of Commons committees are in a hurry. They do not have as much time as we have. The Senate has a reputation for delving into matters thoroughly.

All I am asking is that the appropriate deputy minister appear on every occasion when his department has a bill before a Senate committee. In some instances we will have the minister, but if he cannot attend we are willing to accept the presence of the deputy minister together with his witnesses. There should be no excuse for the deputy's failing to come and tell us what a certain bill is all about as he sees it, and then produce whatever additional witnesses he may require. I think that should be made a rule to be strictly observed. I hope the honourable Leader of the Government will see that this is done in the future.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I wish to support the remarks just made by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll). This is a most vital matter to the Senate. I, too, do not wish to cast any reflection on the witnesses who appeared before the committee yesterday, but I would point out that there is a definite limitation imposed on any departmental witness. A committee chairman who knows his business will definitely rule out any question on policy put to a departmental official. That type of question should be put to a minister only or, I presume, his parliamentary secretary. That is a factor of great importance.

Honourable senators should bear in mind that the Senate of Canada, consisting of 102 members, is perhaps the only legislative body in the world which is without ministerial representation and some form of parliamentary secretaryship. This fact in no way reflects discredit on the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). As he is not a member of the cabinet, it is of vital importance that when we are considering a departmental bill in committee either the minister concerned or his parliamentary secretary, who is supposed to be thoroughly advised on policy, be present and prepared to answer questions on policy.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, for my own information I would like to address a question to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). Could he inform me whether prior to October 1957, when I came to the Senate, a deputy minister always appeared before a Senate committee when a bill from his department was under consideration?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would say without hesitation that prior to the present administra- it was always the practice for ministers to be present at such committee meetings or to have their deputies attend. Of course, I cannot speak of the practice prior to my coming to the Senate, in 1953.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have been in the Senate for 25 years and that has not been the practice.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then, the question should have been directed to the honourable Leader of the Government himself (Hon. Mr. Aseltine).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Sometimes it has been done, but not always.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I frankly say I was terribly disappointed with the way the emergency legislation was handled in committee yesterday. We did not have the information we wanted. One witness told us it was a matter for the Department of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That had nothing to do with the bill we were discussing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It had a great deal to do with the question of emergency which we were discussing, and if the bills before us had not been emergency measures I surely would have asked for an adjournment of the hearing in order that we might call other witnesses. The two witnesses who appeared were very capable within the limits of their knowledge. One witness had a good knowledge of his own department, and the other witness, a charming young lady—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): She has a good name.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —was well qualified and gave us certain information.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Her name was MacDonald. Is she any relation?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is an unfair question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would be proud to claim her as a relative. But, honourable senators, I do not want to be diverted from the seriousness of this matter. I agree entirely with what the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) have said. We should have witnesses in committee who can give us all the information we require. They should be the top witnesses available. We have had this co-operation from the honourable Leader of the Government in the past, and now that the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Spadina has drawn this matter to his attention, I have no doubt we shall get the same co-operation in the future.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, inasmuch as I was Leader of the Government in the Senate longer than anybody else living in Canada today, I might say, on behalf of the present Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), that during the time I had the honour to hold the position which he now holds there certainly were many committee hearings when neither a minister nor a parliamentary secretary was present. There is no question about that. Nevertheless, in a legislative body of 102 members which has no representation on the federal cabinet—I say this without reflection on anyone, but it is the first time since Confederation that this condition has existed—the Leader of the Government cannot possibly be as conversant with Government policy as he would be if he were a member of the cabinet. I do not wish to embarrass the honourable Leader of the Government, but what I say is fact, and I think that when the Senate, the senior body of the Parliament of Canada, is considering Government bills it should have the right to question the appropriate members of the cabinet, for they are members of the Privy Council and should know the background of various policies. If the ministers are unable to attend our meetings they should send their parliamentary secretaries. After all, there are about 40 of them altogether, so surely it is not too much to ask that a minister or his parliamentary secretary come before us in committee when we are dealing with important legislation. I admit that this was not always done during my period of office, but it is a good practice and should be followed today more than ever.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) what will be the business before the house tomorrow? I had not expected that the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement bill would be considered today, so the motion for second reading took me somewhat by surprise; but in view of the excellent explanation which was given I did not move to adjourn the debate. I believe some honourable senators who are not present would have liked to take part in the debate. However, they can do so on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I apologize for not having informed the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) of the intention to proceed with second reading of the bill today; but I have been fighting a very heavy cold, so I was not able to get to my office early this morning. I do not expect that the debate on the Address will be proceeded with tomorrow; but, as I have previously stated, the three bills relating respectively to the harbours at Windsor, Oshawa and Nanaimo will, so far as I know, be up for second reading tomorrow; and later, perhaps, there will be the royal assent to certain legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand that the third order on today's paper, namely, the second reading of Bill S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland, will not be taken up tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is so. The honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) has asked that it go over until next week. He wishes to obtain certain information with respect to the subject matter, and I agreed that it be postponed. Also, as I am reminded by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), certain private bills will be presented for second reading tomorrow.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, January 28, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

January 28, 1960

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Thursday, the 28th January, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

E. Joly de Lotbinière,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa

OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: May I ask His Honour the Speaker to be kind enough to make a correction in Hansard for me? The necessity for the correction was brought to my attention by the honourable senator from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith). Yesterday in speaking in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne I said, in effect, that at the beginning of this year we entered upon the sixth decade of the twentieth century. I feel quite sure that statement is wrong and that probably we entered upon the seventh decade of the twentieth century, but I am not sure that even that is right. It may be that we entered upon the last year of the sixth decade of the twentieth century. In fact, honourable senators, I am very much confused and I would appreciate it greatly if His Honour the Speaker would help me to make the necessary correction for Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think we are all confused.

The Hon. the Speaker: On the 31st day of December 1900 we finished the last decade of the last century, so the first decade of this century started on the first day of January 1901. The first decade ended on December 31, 1910, and the second decade started on January 1, 1911. Therefore, according to my reckoning, the sixth decade of the twentieth century will end on the 31st day of December this year and the seventh decade will commence on the first day of January, 1961. The request for a correction is therefore granted accordingly.

Happy New Year to you all!

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Time will tell.

Hon. THOMAS FARQUHAR

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, I would like to draw the attention of honourable senators to a very happy anniversary. Today is the 85th birthday of my room-mate, the Honourable Senator Farquhar.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Congratulations.

Hon. Mr. Farquhar: Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Farquhar is a valued and able member of the Divorce Committee. As chairman of that committee, may I voice the wishes of all its members for his long life and much happiness.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Honourable senators, may I add one word, partly because of the great esteem which I feel for the Honourable Senator Farquhar, and also because he spent a large part of his early life in helping in the development of British Columbia, particularly in the southeast area. He assisted very largely in bringing about the early development of that far western province.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following reports:

Report of the Tariff Board, dated November 16, 1959, relative to the investigation ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting hosiery and knitted goods, being Reference 125 (Textiles) (English and French texts); together with transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, Chapter 261, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the International Joint Commission on Principles for determining and apportioning benefits from co-operative use of storage of waters and electrical interconnection within the Columbia River System. (English and French texts).

Report of Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, for the year ended December 31, 1959, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter 183, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1959, together with the estimated expenditures for 1960, under the authority of Chapter 19 of the Statutes of 1956, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of a branch line from a point at or near Bartibog in a westerly direction to the Tomogonops River in the vicinity of Little River Lakes in the province of New Brunswick, pursuant to section 8 of the aforementioned act. (English text).

Report of the work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1959, together with estimated expenditures for 1960, under the authority of Chapter 49 of the Statutes of 1953-54, respecting the construction by the Canadian National Railway Company of branch lines from St. Felicien to Cache Lake, Cache Lake to Beattyville, and Cache Lake to Chibougamau, in the province of Quebec, and from Hillsport to Manitouwadge Lake, in the province of Ontario, pursuant to section 8 of the aforementioned act. (English text).

Report of the work performed and expenditures made as of December 31, 1959, together with the estimated expenditures for 1960, under the authority of Chapter 13 of the Statutes of 1957-58, respecting the construction of a line of railway by the Canadian National Railway Company from Optic Lake to Chisel Lake, and the purchase by the Canadian National Railway Company from the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, of a line of railway from Sipiwesk to a point on Burntwood River near Mystery Lake, all in the province of Manitoba, pursuant to section 11 of the aforementioned Act. (English text).

DIVORCE

PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented certain petitions.

He said: Honourable senators, not long since I presented some 377 petitions for divorce, and at that time I assured honourable members that there would be more to come. I now present a further 18, making in all 395.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: What is the last date for filing petitions?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: About a month hence.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: February 24.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon Mr. Roebuck presented reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 22 to 36, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 2, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

WINDSOR HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act is very short. I think I should recall to the minds of honourable senators that the original act setting up the Windsor Harbour Commission was passed in April of 1957. If any honourable senator desires to refer to that act he will find it set out in full in Chapter 38 of the Statutes of Canada, 1957.

This particular amendment arises as the result of a request made by the Windsor Harbour Commissioners to the Minister of Transport. Once the request was made the Department of Transport had surveys and inspections made of the water-front property in the vicinity of Windsor. They found there was a considerable quantity of water-front property and other contiguous land fronting on the water opposite the town of Ojibway and adjacent to the city of Windsor. It was found further that it would be advantageous to the orderly and proper development of the Windsor harbour to include these lands in the harbour development. Before the final step was taken the department communicated with officials of the town of Ojibway, and learned that they supported this proposal and were in favour of the amendment.

The bill itself is minor in character. It makes one small amendment to section 4 of the original act. The amendment simply extends the south boundary of the Windsor harbour from the southern limit of the city of Windsor to the southern limit of the town of Ojibway, and then westerly to the international boundary. The extension southerly of the control of foreshore for harbour purposes involves a distance of two miles, and authorization of that extension will be permitted by this amendment.

If this bill receives second reading today I will propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. Power: Did the honourable senator say who was the proprietor of this land at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Some of it is owned by the town of Ojibway and some by individuals and corporations. This bill does not vest the title of the land in the commission. It makes it possible for the commission to develop the land for harbour purposes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Without taking possession?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No; it can eventually take possession. This bill places the land under the commission's jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Power: Does it give the commission power of expropriation?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is contained in the original act. The commission can expropriate land and develop it.

Hon. Mr. Power: What additional powers does it get under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: None. This just extends the length of the Windsor Harbour.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Brunt) can tell us how many public harbours in Canada are administered by bodies incorporated by Parliament, or otherwise, such as this one, and how many are administered by the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I cannot give that information to the house, but I will endeavour to see that it is available in committee. I can name offhand a number that are administered by incorporated bodies: for instance, the Montreal Harbour Commission, the Toronto Harbour Commission, the Lakehead Harbour Commission, the Vancouver Harbour Commission and the Windsor Harbour Commission. Later I am going to introduce a bill to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commission and another bill to incorporate the Nanaimo Harbour Commission.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Have you any examples of the other type?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I do not have an example of the other type.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: These smaller harbour commissions do not come under the National Harbour Board?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, they operate separately.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Under what body do they come?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are set up and created by statute, and they report to the Department of Transport. If you will look at the original bill setting up this particular Harbour Commission you will find that the bylaws must be approved by the Department of Transport, and the financing also must be approved by that department. If the revenues are a sum that is more than the amount required to operate, the surplus money comes back to the dominion Government. The original act under which this harbour commission was set up sets out all of those powers and everything else necessary in order for the commission to operate in a proper and efficient manner.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Later on today I understand we are to consider a bill to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners. Will that bill give all the information with respect to the setting up of that commission and its responsibility to the dominion Government?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It will give it all in detail. In fact, all the bills setting up harbour commissions are taken off one model. They are all very similar. There are a few differences of a minor nature between the different bills.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will reserve my questions about the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners bill until we are dealing with it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-5 is to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners. This corporation, when set up, will develop and manage the harbour of the city of Oshawa. The powers of the corporation are similar to those granted to other harbour corporations which have been set up and established in the past.

For the information of honourable senators, I think I should point out that an interdepartmental committee composed of engineers and economists from the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works has carried on investigations for some time with respect to the development of the harbour at Oshawa. Most of the investigation has been carried on since the opening of the seaway last June, because it is since that time that this harbour has started to develop in a small way.

As a result of the studies it was found that although at the present time there was no immediate requirement for harbour works outside or beyond the scope of the usual dredging, this harbour, being located only 17 miles east of Toronto, would, in due course, likely develop because of the establishment—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It will likely be taken in by Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think the people in the county of Ontario will have a little bit to say about this.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I was thinking of the way Toronto is taking in all the adjoining territory.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It has not gone outside York county as yet.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is doing its best.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have been speaking to people in Oshawa who are looking forward to the absorption of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As a result of the studies it was found that the harbour at Oshawa was likely to develop in due course because of the establishment of industries in the vicinity of Oshawa which would require marine transport. Furthermore, it should be pointed out that in addition to these surveys and studies, the municipal council of the city of Oshawa made a formal application to the Minister of Transport, requesting him to set up a harbour commission, and the council indicated its intention and willingness to provide water-front property now owned by the city for management and development by the commission. I am advised that this is the usual practice when any city or large town in Canada requests that a harbour commission be set up.

At the present time the Department of Transport operates a wharf at Oshawa that is used for the handling of coal, fuel oil and gravel, from which the city of Oshawa derives an annual revenue of $18,000. These facilities, upon the setting up of a harbour commission in Oshawa, would be turned over to the commission together with all the harbour revenues that the city is now collecting, and the commissioners would administer the operation of the harbour.

The purpose of the bill is quite simple. As stated previously, it is to set up this harbour commission for the city of Oshawa. In August 1958 I sponsored in this house a bill to incorporate a commission known as the Lakehead Harbour Commission. The present bill is almost identical with that one, and for that reason I do not at this time propose to deal with the clauses individually in this bill. However, I will mention a few of the matters covered by it. First of all, it provides for three commissioners. Under the Lakehead bill there were five commissioners. The reason for the difference is that the Lakehead bill involved two cities, while this bill involves the city of Oshawa only. Two of the commissioners will be appointed by the Governor in Council, and the third by the City of Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How are appointments made to the Lakehead Harbour Commission?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: In the same manner.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But in what proportion?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That information is contained in the Lakehead bill which was passed last year.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The proportion is three to two.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think one commissioner is appointed from each city and the remainder by the Governor in Council. It is set out in detail in that legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is it customary to have the majority of the commissioners appointed by the department?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I believe so.

This bill provides for the term of office of all commissioners, the oath of office, the election of a chairman and the constitution of a quorum.

The general powers of the commission are set out in detail in clauses 10 to 12 of the bill. Clause 13 deals with the matter of bylaws which may be passed by the commission in order to function properly. Incidentally, it might be pointed out that all bylaws must be approved by the Governor in Council before they become effective and operative.

Clause 14 is an important one, dealing with the borrowing powers of the commission. Clauses 15 and 16 deal with the finances of the corporation and provide that the surplus revenue over and above that required for reasonable working capital shall be payable to the Receiver General.

As is customary in bills such as this there are clauses dealing with the expropriation of land—all commissions must have this power—the setting of harbour rates, the seizure and detention of vessels. And, finally, there are three general clauses near the end of the bill—a clause dealing with the administration of oaths, a clause prohibiting all members of the commission from having pecuniary dealings with the commission, and a limitation clause with respect to the commencing of any action against the commission. I believe it is two years.

The final clause of the bill states that the act shall come into force at a date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Honourable senators, in closing all I have to add is that if the bill receives second reading today I shall propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, there are one or two questions I would like to ask in connection with this bill. When we were considering the Windsor bill a few minutes ago some mention was made of the difference between harbours operated by commissions and those operated by the National Harbours Board. I wonder if the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) would explain to the house on what basis it is decided that certain harbours will be under the National Harbours Board and others will be under local commissions. I realize that this information was given last session, but I am sure a number of honourable senators would like to have their memories refreshed on this distinction. If the honourable gentleman from Hanover has not the information at hand, perhaps we could get it in committee or on the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will see that honourable senators get the information either in committee or on third reading. As I recall it, when dealing with the previous bill I may have been wrong in including the harbour of Montreal among those that are administered by incorporated bodies. It sticks in the back of my mind that the National Harbours Board administers those harbours where there is ocean shipping.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is another bill dealing with the port of Nanaimo, which is under a harbour commission.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: When I introduce the Nanaimo bill I think you will find that the traffic there is not ocean-going. It is traffic that takes place between the lower mainland in the province of British Columbia and the city of Nanaimo itself.

Hon. Mr. Power: I understand that one of the reasons for incorporating the Oshawa Harbour Commission is that it hopes to handle ocean shipping.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The harbour will develop because ocean shipping will go into it, but I do not think Oshawa could be considered an ocean port.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I may be wrong.

Hon. Mr. Power: Montreal is not on the ocean; neither is Quebec City.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There was some argument about that last year when the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) introduced a motion to close the harbours of Montreal and Quebec City for a certain period every year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Can the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) tell us what sized ships will be able to get into the Oshawa harbour when it is established?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: At the present time I think ships with a draft up to 14 feet can get in.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I mean when the harbour is completed. I understand the harbour at Toronto can take ships of much greater draft than that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If the honourable senator cannot give us that information we could get it from a representative of the Government in committee. There are one or two other matters I would like to inquire about. Are the rates which are fixed by harbour commissions determined according to a certain standard set up by the department for all harbour commissions, or does each harbour commission itself decide what the rates will be?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Section 18(1) of this bill provides that:

> The valuation of goods on which ad valorem rates are imposed by bylaw shall be made in accordance with the provisions of the Customs Act as far as applicable and the provisions of that act shall, for the purposes of such valuation, be held to form part of this act as if embodied herein.

I think that is the formula which will be used to determine the harbour rates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not see how that fixes the rates which will be imposed upon cargoes. I cannot follow the honourable gentleman's reasoning, but even if he is correct would he say that there is a standard by which rates are fixed in other harbours?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable gentleman please repeat his inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Rates are fixed by all harbour commissioners?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would like to know what the standard is by which those rates are fixed. Can each habour commission say, "The rates so far as this harbour is concerned will be such-and-such", without relation to what rates might be fixed in any other harbour?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not think so. As far as I have been able to ascertain, a similar clause is contained in all legislation setting up harbour commissions. Therefore all commissions would have to use the same method.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: Not necessarily the same method. They would have to use the method set forth in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is a similar clause in each bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Section 18 of the bill deals with the valuation of goods on which ad valorem rates are imposed. I do not see that that has anything to do with dockage, but it may be that I do not understand it. I do not follow it this way, and I doubt if any other honourable senator does.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Clause 13, subclause (1)(h) authorizes the corporation to fix the rates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I believe that in Toronto the rates are set by bylaw.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is so.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: And approved by the Department of Transport.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: By the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: By the Governor in Council through the Department of Transport. That provides that there shall be uniformity, but nevertheless with a consideration, a realization, of the local situation. Rates in one of these ports may not be the same as in another, and this for various reasons. That matter, however, is subject to the discretion of the department and as expressed by order in council.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wish to thank my honourable friend. Clause 13 (1)(h) is more appropriate to the question than the clause to which I was referred a minute ago.

I should also like to know where in this measure there is provision that there shall be uniformity of rates throughout the various harbours in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is none. There was never intended to be.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: So there can be one rate at Oshawa, another at Toronto, another at Hamilton, another at Windsor, another at Welland?

Hon. Mr. Haig: And another at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is quite possible.

Hon. Mr. Haig: We have, and have had for years, a harbour commission at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that for ocean-going vessels?

Hon. Mr. Haig: No. It is not necessary that the vessels shall be ocean-going.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am pleased to know that Winnipeg has a harbour.

I have another question. It is provided in clause 14 that the corporation can borrow money for the purposes of defraying the expenses of "constructing, extending and improving the wharves, structures and other accommodations", and may issue debentures, and there is a provision that such debentures "may be secured upon the real property vested in or controlled by the corporation". I understand that these debentures can be issued only with the prior approval of the Governor in Council. Does the Government guarantee in any way payment of the principal of or interest on those debentures, or are they merely a charge upon the property of the harbour?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As far as I know they are only a charge upon the property of the harbour commission. They are issued by the harbour commission; and I have never heard of the Government guaranteeing the debentures of any harbour commission. It might be that, if the commission were in difficulties, it would appeal to the Government, and in a special case the Government might have to guarantee the debentures in order to develop the harbour.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: There is one question I should like to put to the sponsor of this bill. I do not know whether he can answer it right away; if not, I hope that he will be able to give the answer in committee. It relates to clause 12. Evidently at the present time the land within the limits of the harbour belongs partly to the city of Oshawa and partly to the federal Government, and also there are some private properties. It may be that there are buildings on these properties, and until expropriation takes place it will not be known which will and which will not be the property of the harbour commission. In the meanwhile will the commission have, in some way or other, control of these properties?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It will control the matter of how the properties can be developed; for instance, what changes are to be made, whether a building can be erected or whether it can be enlarged. These matters will be under the control of the commission, although it will not actually own the land and buildings which are now the property of private persons or corporations until it either purchases or expropriates them.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: But before expropriation can the commission prevent a man from using his land? I understand it can, and I should like to know.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If such use is detrimental to the harbour, yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I follow this line of reasoning a little further? Perhaps I could ask the honourable sponsor of the bill this direct question in relation to property of the character mentioned by the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard): If property rights of that type are interfered with, are the riparian owners entitled to compensation for loss?

In the next place, I notice that subclause (5) of clause 12 makes reference to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Now some of these riparian property owners may have established, either by having water lots or by having acquired the rights over the years, certain rights to use the water in the area which is now to be within the harbour. Will the sponsor of the bill inform us whether or not, under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act and under the practice of the department, these water rights are similarly protected; will there be compensation for loss of any of these water rights; and is it the practice of the Department of Public Works, which administers the Navigable Waters Protection Act, to pay compensation for the loss of any rights that riparian owners might lose?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Rather than attempt to make a guess at the answers, I will have an expert before the committee who will provide the honourable senator with definite and positive information. I think the matter will be better dealt with in this way.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) give us some idea of the financial relationship between the city of Oshawa and the harbour commission? I observe that any profits made by the commission are payable to the dominion Government. This harbour commission will enjoy certain privileges, such as the use of roads, police protection, and so forth. Will it pay any taxes to the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have never heard of a harbour commission paying taxes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The ownership is in the dominion Government.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I would like to ask if any thought or consideration has been given to reclassification of the smaller harbour boards or harbour commissions, located as they are along the interior waterway, to meet the growing demands of ocean traffic by reason of the development of the St. Lawrence waterway. We all know that in 1935 the National Harbours Board was entirely reorganized to centralize the control over harbours which were really salt water harbours and concerned largely with international traffic. Now a good many of the new harbours which are developing in the interior waterways have a traffic almost equal to that of a coastal harbour. It seems to me that, rather than allow time to develop problems in connection with divided jurisdiction and divided interest between a local municipality, be it Toronto or Oshawa or Hamilton or some other city, and the National Harbours interests as now represented by the so called National Harbours Board, more of these harbours should be under the board, and we should make very certain about the local interests involved in the group which would come under the Department of Transport as such, because it is there that questions of finance arise.

The change that took place in 1935 gave complete control to the National Harbours Board over the finances of the Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, Vancouver boards and so on, and there was a good deal of controversy at that time as to whether or not that was a fair arrangement. Anyhow, it did effect a good deal of savings in the administration of these separate harbours, and I thought the same idea might be applied to the consideration of placing some of these growing Great Lakes harbours under the National Harbours Board rather than leave them in a group now tributary to the Department of Transport.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand that no survey is being made, but the Government does, when representations are made to it, and in proper cases, set up harbour commissions such as the one that it is proposed to set up for Oshawa. But I do not believe that any survey to classify harbours has been undertaken up to the present time.

While I am on this point I might add that many municipalities will likely be applying to the Department of Public Works to have their harbours deepened so that larger vessels can go into them. A request of this kind has been made by Port Credit, and I think it will be only a matter of time until other small towns on the Great Lakes will be making similar requests. But I do not think any survey has been made.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I was thinking of the Toronto and Oshawa harbours. Both of these places today have harbour commissions which are directly responsible to the Department of Transport. Both harbours are looking forward to increased traffic owing to the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and it seems that their character has changed completely, potentially at any rate. That should be taken into consideration.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY—SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-8, respecting the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I think this should be called Brunt day in the Senate, since I am sponsoring one bill after another.

This bill, honourable senators, is entirely different from the two we have just dealt with. It relates to the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada.

This organization was founded in England in 1804, and as early as 1808 an auxiliary of the society was formed in Nova Scotia. Shortly thereafter other auxiliaries of the society sprang up in the settled areas of Canada. Finally, in 1904, it was decided that all the auxiliaries throughout Canada should join together and form a national society. Accordingly, an act of incorporation was passed by the Parliament of Canada during the year 1906. If any honourable senator desires to refer to this act he will find it set out in detail in chapter 74 of the Statutes of Canada, 1906.

This original act was amended by chapter 78 of the Statutes of Canada, 1930. Following the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation, in 1949, a further amendment was made to the act by deleting from the name of the society the words "in Newfoundland". This particular amendment can be found in chapter 43 of the Statutes of Canada, 1949.

During the year 1959 several meetings of all these auxiliaries located throughout Canada and of the general board of the society were held, and finally it was unanimously agreed that for the better advancement of the work of the society further amendments were necessary. The purpose of this bill is to bring about these amendments.

Clause 1 of the bill changes the name of the society from The British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada to Canadian Bible Society, Auxiliary of The British and Foreign Bible Society. The British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada is the national Bible Society for Canada, and one of the 23 national societies of the world.

The present title conveys to the general public the impression that the society is a British and foreign society and therefore not primarily a Canadian responsibility. The new name will designate the society as a Canadian society in a way that the present name does not. It will also preserve the close and intimate link with the parent society, the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Clause 2 of the bill is a very simple one: it makes it possible for Canadians to be appointed to the general board which manages the affairs of the society. However, there is provision in this clause that the majority of the board shall be elected by the various auxiliaries or districts located throughout Canada.

Honourable senators will note that by paragraph 3 of clause 2 the existing constitution of the society is preserved and confirmed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Who are "prominent Canadians" within the meaning of the explanatory note opposite page 1 of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Your definition is as good as mine.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have not got one. I do not know what the note means.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, I won't attempt to designate who are prominent Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, no.

The sole purpose of clause 3 is to restate the objects of the society.

Many honourable senators will recall that last session the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) presented to this house a bill providing certain amendments to the articles of incorporation of the Boy Scouts Association. Among the changes which that particular bill proposed was one which either removed the restriction on the value of real estate which the Boy Scouts Association could own or in the alternative greatly increased the value of the land which this association could own.

The purpose of clause 4 of this bill is to do exactly the same, namely, to remove existing restrictions on the value of the real estate that may be held by the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada—or, to use its proposed new name, the Canadian Bible Society. I am advised that the present value of real estate that may be held by the society is $1 million. Since this figure was set by an amendment mentioned earlier by me, which was passed in 1930, the value of real estate has increased very substantially. Therefore, it is thought advisable by all concerned that the society should now ask for the removal of this restriction altogether.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is it subject to the mortmain laws of the province?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I imagine it would have to be.

Finally, clause 5 of the bill would broaden the basis of admitting constituents to the society. The various auxiliaries across Canada which at present constitute this society may call themselves districts instead of auxiliaries. This change, however, does not imply any change in their relationship to the society. I have here the constitution and bylaws of the society, and I shall be happy to loan them to any honourable senator who is interested.

That is all I have to say regarding this bill. If it receives second reading I will propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-10, to incorporate the Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill to incorporate a corporation to be known as the Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners is very similar to the one to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners. For that reason I do not propose to deal with any clauses of this bill; rather, it is my intention to make a general statement as to why the Government has seen fit to introduce this bill, and when it has received second reading I will move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

The Municipal Corporation of the City of Nanaimo and the Chamber of Commerce of the same place presented a petition to the Minister of Transport urging establishment of a harbour commission for the harbour of Nanaimo, British Columbia. The city advised that upon enactment of the necessary legislation to set up such a commission it would transfer and vest in the harbour commission harbour front property now owned by the city for development and management by the commissioners.

The minister agrees with those who sponsored this petition that the orderly development of the harbour would be furthered by the setting up of a local body to direct and administer the affairs of Nanaimo harbour.

It should be pointed out that the harbour at Nanaimo is a natural one. It is open the year around for deep-sea vessels and is protected from the open waters of the straits of Georgia by the outer island of Gabriola and by the inner islands of Newcastle and Protection. The strategic location of the harbour provides an excellent loading and unloading point for the two main services connecting Vancouver Island and the lower mainland by ferries which are operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway and Black Ball Ferries Limited. During the entire tourist season of last year the ferries carried upwards of 1,250,000 passengers, 300,000 passenger cars and 50,000 trucks and trailers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that the volume of traffic over any number of years?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No; these are last year's figures.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How did they compare with figures for previous years?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have no idea. I just took the figures for last year. I did not ask for a lot of statistical data, because we will get that when the bill is considered in committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If this is any indication of the volume of traffic there, it strikes me as strange that an application was not made earlier under the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand that this is the first application that the Department of Transport has received. Probably up to the present time the local authorities were content to operate the harbour themselves.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator whether the services that have been in existence for a long time between Vancouver and Seattle and which were disrupted some time ago as a result of labour troubles, have largely been replaced by a service between Vancouver and Nanaimo? Is this not one of the reasons for the harbour enlargement at Nanaimo?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That would be one of the reasons.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: My honourable friend the senator from Cariboo (Hon. Mr. Turgeon) can probably give us the latest information on the extent to which the services between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle have been restored.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: The situation is still very bad.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I mention to the house that the highway from Nanaimo to Victoria has been completed in the last couple of years. I was over it about a year and a half ago and I asked the same question. That route is now being used regularly and carries heavy traffic.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, at the present time the Department of Transport operates what is known as the Government Assembly Wharf and the Deep Sea Wharf. These wharves have an approximate length of 1,150 feet, and they are used for the handling of lumber, pulpwood, fuel oil, iron ore, chemicals and sundry other products that pass over the wharves each year. The gross annual income derived is approximately $30,000.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is for ocean-going traffic?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Some of it is ocean-going traffic, and some of it moves to and from the mainland.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not understand why this harbour would not come under the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Mr. Brunt. When the expert is before the committee on the consideration of this bill he will provide the answer. The Government is simply introducing the bill at this time to establish a harbour commission. A petition has been presented by the City of Nanaimo, and it has the backing of the local Chamber of Commerce. This is what the people of Nanaimo want, and that is why the bill is before us. If they did not want it the bill would not be introduced at this time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does my honourable friend know whether they want the harbour under the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, they want their own commission.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Could the city not arrange to have the harbour operated by the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not know. This bill provides what the city asked for.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I do not suppose the honourable sponsor of the bill can indicate the probable amount that will be spent on development of these harbours.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It would be interesting to have that information with respect to Oshawa, too.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

This bill proposes that all the facilities of the two wharves be placed under the management of the commissioners.

I might point out, in addition, that the Department of Transport collects in the neighbourhood of $16,000 annually in harbour dues, and some $23,000 annually as rentals from the leasing of water lots. These revenues, of course, would immediately be available to the commissioners.

As I mentioned earlier, the purpose of the bill is to set up a harbour commission. There will be three commissioners, two appointed by the Governor in Council and one by the City of Nanaimo.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will they be under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have never heard of that being the case. There is nothing said about their being under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission, nor as to whether they will operate as a Crown corporation outside the Civil Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Are their employees under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: A certain amount of clerical work will have to be done.

Hon. Mr. Power: And harbourmasters will have to be appointed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: After competition.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As I have said, the bill says nothing about whether the commissioners will be under the Civil Service Commission or whether they will operate as a Crown corporation which, as all honourable senators know, is outside the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

If the bill receives second reading I will propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DIVORCE

SENATE PAGES HOCKEY TEAM

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to inform the house that Canada's youngest hockey league opened its schedule on Saturday last at the Aylmer arena. I am also pleased to be able to report that the team composed of the page boys of the Senate defeated the page boys of the House of Commons by a score of 6 to 2.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, January 27, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, a year ago, in opening my remarks in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, I stated how pleased I was to see in attendance on both sides of the chamber so many of my friends, all in good health, full of vim and vigour, and ready and anxious to get ahead with the session's business. I do not intend to repeat those remarks on this occasion, but those are my sentiments tonight. I want you to know, honourable senators, that I have a very high regard indeed for each and every one of you.

We had a good session in 1959, and we accomplished a great deal of work, if the size of the volume of debates of the session is any indication. It is the largest volume since 1923.

In spite of what the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) said the other day about the contents of the Speech from the Throne, I expect the session of 1960 to be a busy one. There is a great deal of legislation to come before us. I would like to remind honourable senators that last year I was able, on behalf of the Government, to introduce in the Senate quite a number of Government bills which were considered here first and then were sent to the House of Commons for consideration there. I hope to be able to do as well this year, or perhaps a little better. Also there will be a certain number of joint committees of the Senate and House of Commons set up, to which members on both sides of this chamber will be appointed. I trust that the goodwill and co-operation which prevailed last session will continue throughout this session. Every possible opportunity will be given honourable senators to examine the legislation brought before this house.

Some remarks were made last week with respect to the attendance of ministers and deputy ministers as witnesses before committees to which bills are referred by the Senate. I would like to remind honourable senators that in the past we have had ministers themselves appear before our standing committees. For instance, the Minister of National Defence, the Honourable Mr. Pearkes, came before the Standing Committee on External Relations and dealt with NORAD. Also, the Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Mr. Harkness, attended at one of our committees to explain the South Saskatchewan Dam Project. I believe the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Fleming, appeared before our Banking and Commerce Committee to explain the Estate Tax Bill. On several occasions we have had deputy ministers as witnesses. I recall at the moment the Deputy Minister of Justice—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And the Honourable Mr. Hamilton also came up.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, the honourable Alvin Hamilton, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, has been before Senate committees two or three times.

I want you to know, honourable senators, that on every occasion we will do our best to obtain either the minister or his deputy, or some other highly informed official, to give information to the members who attend committee meetings.

I would like now to thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition for the very kind remarks which he made about the three new members of this chamber. He welcomed them in his usual interesting manner, and I am sure they greatly appreciated his remarks. I also wish to say something about the new senators, but in a little different order. I propose to welcome them in order of seniority. First, the Honourable Senator Blois. He was kind enough on very short notice, indeed, to second the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I think I can say for all of us that he did an excellent job, and I am sure he will be a very valuable member of this chamber. He has had long experience in municipal affairs of his native province. He was a councillor of Truro for many years, and he was deputy mayor. He was a member of the Truro Electric Commission, Chairman of the Board of School Commissioners, a trustee of Colchester County Hospital, President of the Board of Trade, and for a long time Managing Superintendent of Stanfields Limited, of which firm he is still a director. He also is a director of a number of other companies: Electrical Distributors Limited, Atlantic Electric Stores Limited and Colchester Broadcasting Company. At the time of his appointment to the Senate he was, as has already been stated, Executive Assistant to the Minister of Highways for Nova Scotia. For that reason he was made a member of our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, where his advice and assistance should be valuable in connection with highway matters.

I would like to read a sentence or two from an editorial in a Halifax newspaper:

> The new appointee to the illustrious Upper House, Fred Murray Blois of Truro, has the advantage of having served as an executive in private enterprise, a community leader, a legislator and a civil servant—a combination that should give him a particularly good grasp on the wider affairs of state that he now will be called upon to study and adjudge. He is a man with a keen mind and insight into public affairs and with a continuing record of wise judgments. He will be a valuable addition to the chamber of sober second thought in Ottawa.

Honourable senators, next I would like to say a few words about our new lady senator, Olive Lillian Irvine, of Winnipeg, Manitoba. Mrs. Irvine is a real westerner. She was born, brought up and educated in Manitoba, where she has lived all her life. She taught school for some time, as did many others of us here. If I may say so, I also was a teacher in Manitoba. My first school was in a little town called Pilot Mound. I taught at other schools in that province and at one or two in Saskatchewan during summer holidays when I was a university student. Senator Irvine has had the same type of experience. She is also very familiar with public affairs through a long and varied experience in women's work and with philanthropic organizations and, as was previously stated, she was recently appointed a representative on the National Capital Commission, to which she made a very worthwhile contribution. It was the record of her achievements in these spheres that earned her an appointment to the Senate, for which she is well qualified. Honourable senators should not forget that it was a group of women from the Prairies who, some thirty years ago, launched a campaign to have the women of Canada designated as "persons". In spite of that fact, it is noteworthy that Senator Irvine is the first woman from the Prairies to be appointed to the Red Chamber. I heartily welcome her, and I know that she will take a prominent part in the business of the Senate.

Honourable senators, I now have the pleasure of saying a few words about my good friend the Honourable Henri Courtemanche, P.C., B.A., LL.B., who has been well known to most of us for quite a number of years. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1949. In 1953 he was unsuccessful in the federal elections but was re-elected in 1957 and in 1958, and shortly thereafter he became Secretary of State of Canada. I have known him more or less intimately during all these years. He is a lawyer by profession and I feel sure he will find plenty of scope in the Senate for his many talents.

I wish to congratulate him most sincerely on the very fine speech he made in moving the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. He had practically no time at all in which to prepare his speech. I do not know whether he worked all night on it, but he delivered it the very day after he was sworn in as a senator. I did not think of asking him to say a few words in English with the result that he made his entire speech in French, but I assure you that the honourable senator is bilingual and we shall be hearing from him frequently in both languages. I welcome him most heartily to the Senate.

I was going to make a few complimentary references to His Honour the Speaker, but he was not able to be present tonight, so I shall make those remarks later. I know that everyone here is glad that His Honour is in good health and will be with us during this session. He performs a very important function in the Senate. He conducts affairs of Parliament and presides over our sittings impartially and fairly at all times.

Honourable senators, I have a very high regard for the honourable Leader of the Opposition and I would like to say a few things about him. The position of Leader of the Opposition in the Senate is, in my opinion, a highly important one, and it has been most capably filled by the honourable senator from Brantford (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) during the three years he has held it. His experience as a former Speaker of the House of Commons and later as Leader of the Government in the Senate is a valuable asset, and his good advice with respect to the conduct of the affairs of this chamber has always been much appreciated by me. I am glad he is in good health and still with us.

Next I wish to refer to two important events which took place in 1959. The opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway by Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and her six weeks' visit to Canada with His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, were, in my opinion, the highlights of the year, Many of us saw the first ship pass through the St. Lambert Lock, and shortly thereafter were present at the official opening of the Seaway by Her Majesty and the President of the United States of America. That was an historical event of great national significance, in that the Queen of Canada and the President of the United States of America met on the most friendly terms on Canadian soil for the ceremonies. On her tour of Canada our Queen, with Prince Philip, met Canadians in all walks of life. They saw Canada from east to west and from south to north, and endeared themselves to everyone. We wish Her Majesty good health, a long life and much happiness. Our hope is that she and her family will visit us again in the near future. We also wish her well in the difficult days that lie ahead, probably this week or next week; and we all say "God Save the Queen".

Another event of significance in 1959 was the installation of a new Governor General in the person of Major General Georges P. Vanier. His Excellency succeeded the Right Honourable Vincent Massey, who had illustriously filled the office of Governor General for the past seven and a half years. Those of us who attended the installation ceremonies were much impressed with the dignity of the new Governor General, his facility in both French and English, and the graciousness of his charming wife. We wish him every success in his important new position.

I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks made last week by the Leader of the Opposition, when he spoke with great respect about these two distinguished Canadians. The appointment of the Right Honourable Vincent Massey as the first Canadian-born Governor General at the suggestion of the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, was a happy one. The appointment of Major General Georges P. Vanier, as the second Canadian-born Governor General, at the suggestion of our present Prime Minister will, we believe, also be a happy choice. In this connection, I would like to make a few remarks which have no political significance whatsoever. Prior to the appointment of the Right Honourable Vincent Massey all the previous Governors General had been residents of Great Britain. His appointment, made early in 1952, created a precedent. A session of Parliament opened in February of that year. Before that session opened I had a talk with the honourable senior senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), who asked me if I had ever read the memoirs of Sir Robert Laird Borden. I said I had not. He advised me to read pages 900 and 901 of volume 2 of the memoirs, where I would find that Sir Robert was one of the first Canadians to advocate that someone other than a resident of Great Britain be appointed Governor General of Canada. Upon looking up the pages mentioned I found that in 1919 Sir Robert Borden met with Generals Botha and Smuts of South Africa and discussed this whole question, and they arrived at the decision that there was no reason at all why a resident of a country where a Governor General was going to be appointed should not be selected for the office. Sir Robert even went so far as to interview Lloyd George on the question, but the memoirs indicate that he did not get very much consideration at the time. After that, Sir Robert Borden talked the matter over with John W. Dafoe, editor of the Winnipeg Free Press with whom he was very friendly, and they came to the same decision. I do not intend to read from the pages I have mentioned. I would like to say, however, that on March 13, 1952 the honourable senior senator from Ottawa made an excellent speech in the Senate, in which he referred to Sir Robert's attitude and gave quotations from his memoirs. These may be found at pages 46 and 47 of the Debates of the Senate for 1952.

Honourable senators, with those preliminary remarks, I would like to say something about employment. The Leader of the Opposition was, I thought, more or less critical the other day when he made his remarks about employment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No doubt of that, I hope.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought so, anyway. Nevertheless, I still have a high regard for him. However, he completely overlooks the municipal incentive works programs, which at the present time are employing many men throughout the whole of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How many?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Last year there were some 40,000 persons employed. This year, on account of the fact that we were able to start earlier, there are at present some 34,000 persons employed, and the number is going up every day and is expected to reach 50,000. I know they are doing work in parts of Saskatchewan. The municipality of Rosetown, for example, has a project under way and it has been approved by the Government.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition also overlooked the fact that, all in all, 181,000 more Canadians are at work this winter than was the case a year ago. His figures were based on registrations made with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but they do not give the true picture.

I would remind honourable senators that this is not the first time we have had unemployment in Canada. There was unemployment during the time the former Government was in power. In fact, in 1954 and in 1955 unemployment was very serious. The Right Honourable C. D. Howe, in the House of Commons, was put to it on several occasions to explain why there was so much unemployment. In February and June 1954 and in 1955 he stated emphatically that registrations with the Unemployment Insurance Commission did not show the true picture of unemployment, that the true picture was the one which the Dominion Bureau of Statistics gave out. He stressed that point strongly. I can refer to the pages in Hansard, if desired, but I think most honourable senators agree with what I have said.

The latest report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, for mid-December, showed there were 370,000 unemployed, which is 5.9 per cent of the labour force. At the corresponding time in December 1958 the unemployed represented 7.2 per cent of the labour force. In September, 1959, according to a statement made by the President of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, less than 3 per cent of the labour force in Canada was unemployed, which, he said, allowing for temporary unemployment and unemployables, was considered to be full employment. Well, if 3 per cent unemployment in September was full employment, then 5.9 per cent unemployment in December—taking into consideration seasonal factors—is a pretty good showing.

As I said before, the former Liberal Government had similar problems when it was in power. I would like to give some Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures to honourable senators, beginning with 1946. That year the unemployment figure was 4.6 per cent of the labour force. In 1947 it was down to 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What date in each year?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not got the date in each year.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Is that the average for the full year?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think that would be the figure in the fall.

In 1948, it was 3.2 per cent; in 1949, 4 per cent; in 1950, 6.1 per cent.

Then, of course, the Korean war started and employment was practically full for some time. At any rate, in 1951 it was down to 3.3 per cent; in 1952, it was 4 per cent; in 1953, 3.4 per cent. In February 1954 it went up to 6 per cent, and to 7 per cent in March 1954. In March 1955 it was 7.4 per cent of the labour force. In 1956 it was 5.5 per cent; in 1957, 5.6 per cent. In 1958, when the recession was under way, it went up to 9.4 per cent. In December 1959 it was down again to 5.9 per cent.

This, honourable senators, shows the trend ever since 1946. As I say, unemployment is not a new thing in Canada. It seems to work in cycles, and the former Government had plenty of it to contend with.

Next, I wish to say a few words about Canada's defence policy. The honourable Leader of the Opposition will, I know, pardon me for making reference to him again. He complains that no mention of defence is made in the Speech from the Throne. Now it is true that within recent years there has been some mention of the defence forces in the Throne Speech, but there is no requirement that every department of the Government should be referred to therein. During most of the period that I have been a member of the Senate the party now in opposition was in power, and I cannot remember any Speech from the Throne which mentioned everything that the Government intended to deal with during the session.

The policy of the present Government with respect to defence was clearly stated in the White Paper of April 1959. I have a copy of it in my hand. Anyone who reads Part I, Defence Policy, will find there the policy of the present Government with regard to defence.

In so far as fiscal and financial policy is concerned, I leave that for the economists. I prefer that they deal with it. I would like to refer honourable senators to certain speeches made recently by the Minister of Finance: one on October 8, 1959 to the Empire Club of Canada, at Toronto; one on November 4, 1959 at the Union Commerciale Mauricienne, at Shawinigan, Quebec; and one on January 11, 1960 to the Canadian Club of Toronto.

I am sure that the Government and the Minister of Finance are doing everything in their power to prevent inflation and to balance the budget, and I think they should have the co-operation and assistance of all of us to accomplish that end. Honourable senators, I don't know the difference between tight money and loose money. I don't know that there is such a thing as tight money. But if there is tight money, there must be loose money, and exactly what either term means or how far we should deal with it, I do not know. I am not an expert in money matters, and I leave those questions to the people who understand them.

Honourable senators will remember that when I spoke about this time last session in the debate on the Speech from the Throne I tried to show that 1958, everything considered, had been a pretty good year and that Canada was making good progress in conquering the recession. There were some cases of business failures, but on the whole 1958 was a pretty good year, and I think I was able to convince honourable senators to that effect. I remember also stating at that time that I had great hopes for 1959. Nevertheless, there were quite a number of pessimistic speeches made during that debate and I found myself almost, if not entirely, convinced that we were on the downgrade, that we were facing disaster, and that 1959 might be the beginning of the end.

But what do we find? One only has to read the newspapers, and particularly the financial papers, to learn that 1959 was one of the better years in Canada, that we in that year experienced quite a boom, and that the prospects for 1960 are better than ever. Over the past two or three months I have been taking clippings from various financial and other newspapers of Canada, and I have gathered quite a pile of them, which I could have brought with me to show what they indicate. I may say, taking them all in all, they lead me to the belief that 1959 was an exceptionally good year. It is true there were some failures, but in my opinion, and if the clippings which I have gathered from the newspapers are correct, it was almost a boom year.

While dealing with 1959, let me say a few words about agriculture. Canada in that year enjoyed a reasonably successful year. Cash farm income from the sale of products for the nine-month period from January to October was more than $2 billion, which was up 2 per cent from the like period of 1958. Cash farm income in that nine-month period of 1959 was higher in all provinces, except Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Saskatchewan. Returns from livestock and livestock products amounted to almost $36 million more than in the corresponding period of 1958. The return from field crops was about the same as in 1958, about $720 million. However, there were lower returns from wheat, oats, potatoes, fruits and vegetables, which were more or less offset by higher Wheat Board payments, sale of barley, flax and tobacco. These figures for the nine-month period of 1959 do not include Newfoundland.

I have in my hand the figures for the corresponding nine months in 1957, which give the total cash income for that year for all provinces except Newfoundland as $1,845,929,000; for the corresponding period in 1958, the figure was up to $2,007,769,000; in 1959 it was up to $2,048,442,000; and in all provinces, except the ones I have mentioned, the cash income was up somewhat.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: May I ask the honourable leader why he leaves Newfoundland out of these figures?

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I presume it means we have no income at all in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Will the honourable leader tell us the net farm income for 1957 and 1958? He cannot know the net figures for 1959 yet, but we would like to know the net figures for agriculture for 1957 and 1958.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The information I have shows just the total cash income. The total cash income for all of 1959 was $2,776 million, which is approximately the same as for all of 1958.

Next, I would like to say something about trade in 1959. During 1957 and 1958, which were recession years, world trade fell by 7 per cent. In the United States of America exports fell by 17 per cent. In other recessions Canada suffered a decline in commodity exports, but in 1957 we set an all-time high record for sales and volume of exports. In 1958 we came within 1 per cent of 1957. For the first 10 months of 1959 our exports increased 3 per cent over those of 1958, and for the whole year they amounted to approximately $5,200 million. In ten years exports have increased by $2 billion, and imports by about the same amount. Canada has maintained her position as the fourth trading nation in the world.

Trade relations between Canada and the United Kingdom recently have shown steady improvement. Imports from Great Britain have risen from a pre-war figure of $114 million to $522 million in 1957, and to $527 million in 1958.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: To what year does the figure of $114 million apply?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not the year; I have it just as a pre-war figure. I took that information from a speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I will try to find out what year was referred to. The pre-war figure was $114 million. By 1957 it was up to $522 million; and by 1958, to $527 million; and it will be approximately $580 million for 1959. Exports to the United Kingdom remained close to $800 million during the four years preceding 1959, and were approximately the same in that year.

With the removal of import quotas and restrictions the United Kingdom market is now opening up and there are prospects of an increase in trade between the two nations.

Honourable senators will remember the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference held in Montreal in 1958. After that conference the United Kingdom made three major liberalization moves in the latter part of 1958 and early 1959. Controls were completely removed from a wide range of items, such as foodstuffs, manufactured consumer goods, machinery and equipment. As a result, exports of canned salmon increased from $4.6 million in the twelve months ending September 30, 1958 to $30.4 million in the same period of 1959. Liberalization of cheese took place in June of 1959. Our exports of cheese to the United Kingdom totalled $5.2 million as compared with $1.9 million in the corresponding months of 1958. Other liberalized items, such as honey, canned soups, leather footwear, synthetic fabrics, cotton dresses, electric ranges, tools and certain types of machinery, are now being exported to the United Kingdom in substantially increased quantities. Also, honourable senators, effective on February 1, 1960—yesterday—the United Kingdom restrictions were removed from unmanufactured tobacco, tobacco manufactures other than cigars, synthetic rubber, fresh, chilled and frozen fish, and transistors. This is also the case with an increasing number of other countries with which we trade. World-wide institutions such as the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank, and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade have been, and will continue to be, a big help.

However, our imports have been rising more rapidly than our exports, and as a consequence our trade deficit for 1959 will likely not be much less than it was in 1956, when we had a record deficit. Personally, I am not greatly worried about that—perhaps I should be—because we are now embarking on a period of great expansion. Our economy has been developing very rapidly, and during such periods it has not been unusual for large trade deficits to occur. The imbalance is usually taken care of by the inflow of capital funds. Canadian exports now find their way into 129 different countries. Markets are opening up all over the world for Canadian products that can compete with the products of other exporting countries. All we have to do is to keep our costs low enough and go after the business, and we will be able to take full advantage of these new markets.

Something else having to do with trade is the completion of the St. Lawrence Seaway, to which I wish to refer briefly, and to compare it with the route via Churchill on Hudson Bay in which my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) is so much interested. The St. Lawrence Seaway, which was opened to shipping in 1959, establishes a new major artery of international trade which should benefit the whole of Canada. By reducing the number of locks from 22 to 7 a saving of time averaging 20 hours has been achieved, and by the construction of a 27-foot waterway instead of one of 14 feet larger ships are able to go through without transshipment of their cargoes. Formerly the maximum load was 2,500 tons, and this has now been increased ten times, to 25,000 tons. As a westerner, I am particularly interested in the fact that large lakers carrying up to a million bushels of grain will now be able to go from the head of the lakes to the Gulf of St. Lawrence without unloading. This should reduce freight charges on the movement of grain from the Prairies to the Atlantic, and it will naturally mean a saving of several millions of dollars every shipping season for the grain growers of western Canada. I recently read a speech by the Minister of Transport in which he is reported as saying:

> Already the trend to larger ships and larger cargoes is becoming evident in the results of the first few months of operation. The overall average load on the St. Lawrence up until the end of August was 3,500 tons which is considerably higher than the maximum cargo capacity of the old canals. We can expect the trend towards larger cargoes on the seaway to continue, since it is too early for the complete replacement of older and smaller vessels.

After reading that, and seeing in the press that one ship had carried one million bushels of oats through the Seaway in one load, I was disappointed to learn that the average cargo was so small.

Naturally, as a wheat grower, I am personally interested in the Hudson Bay route. I would like to refer honourable senators to a report by the secretary of the Hudson Bay Route Association which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of October 21, 1959. It states that almost twice as much wheat per ship was shipped from Churchill as from Fort William in 1959, despite the fact the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway brought ocean-going ships to the Great Lakes ports. The report goes on to say that the northern sea route to Europe out of Churchill is 1,000 miles shorter than from the lakehead and means a saving of 17 cents per bushel on some 21½ million bushels carried by 58 ships with an average cargo of 370,000 bushels. The report further states that it took 70 ocean-going vessels to carry 13½ million bushels from the lakehead, an average shipment of 190,000 bushels.

I always have been an advocate of increasing the facilities at Churchill. I have always been an advocate of the St. Lawrence Seaway also, and I feel sure that when the Seaway becomes better known larger ocean-going ships will take advantage of it, with the result that the carrying charges of grain from the west will be considerably reduced. When that takes place our trade will be increased with all foreign countries.

With reference to my statement that 1959 was a prosperous year and one of the best we have had, may I say I found in the Financial Post of December 12, 1959 an article with regard to Newfoundland, stating that the landings of fish were running about 20 per cent above 1958. The value of the catch was up 28 per cent, reflecting better prices, and for the ten months ending October last the total landings were 527.7 million pounds, compared with 443.5 million pounds for the same period in 1958. The value of the 10 months' catch was $14 million, as against $10.9 million in 1958.

Honourable senators will be glad to know that I am almost finished speaking of 1959 as such a good year, but I would like to summarize some of the highlights of the year before I leave this part of my speech. Industrial production increased by 8 per cent, resulting in total employment being on the average 3 per cent higher than in 1958. By November 1959 unemployment was 18 per cent below the level of the year before. And on account of increased rates of pay and steadier employment, labour income increased by 8 per cent over the previous year, 1958. There was a rise in 1959 in consumer spending, which was up 6 per cent in the total, and while Canadians have been spending more they have also been saving more.

In 1959 there were 140,000 housing starts, which were somewhat fewer than in 1958, but the completions were approximately the same, 147,000. I saw a newspaper article which said that in the city of Calgary new construction had reached $100 million for the second year in succession, of which amount housing starts accounted for $42 million. In the city of Saskatoon building permits were the highest in history, having increased by $5 million over 1958, to $35 million. There were 1500 new homes erected.

I have already mentioned our total exports in 1959 as being $5.2 billion. Principal increases were in wood, mineral and metal products, including lumber, woodpulp, newsprint, iron ore, iron and steel and asbestos. Sales of wheat were down somewhat, but held fairly close to the high level of 1958. The flow of heavy exports of beef to the United States tapered off somewhat, but retail sales were higher than ever in 1959. In Saskatchewan they reached nearly the $1 billion mark, up 3.75 per cent from 1958.

In 1959 the gross national product was up by 7 per cent over 1958. The premium on the Canadian dollar is still quite high. Farmers would like to see the premium on the Canadian dollar reduced, to give them more money for their crops. A reduction in the premium might help to increase trade. At any rate, the Canadian dollar still remains high, some 5 per cent or so above the United States dollar.

Production of farm implements in 1959 was up. Production of natural gas was up one-fourth over the figure for 1958, and estimated 1959 production is 428 billion cubic feet. Production of crude petroleum is up 27 million barrels, and during the week ending January 2, 1960, Canada's steel mills operated at 102.5 per cent of rated capacity. Production of steel ingots in 1959 was nearly 6 million tons, 30 per cent greater than that of 1958, and 12 per cent above the previous record of 1956. Pig iron showed a similar percentage increase over the previous peak of 1957. Production of motor vehicles was up by 4 per cent over 1958.

Railway car loadings also were up. Canadian mills shipped to all markets 6½ million tons of newsprint in 1959, which was quite an increase over that of 1958. No doubt, honourable senators, I could mention many other instances to show what a wonderful year 1959 was.

Now let us look for a moment at 1960. According to a survey made by the Financial Post, 1960 will be a record year for many. Some one hundred executives in various kinds of businesses were interviewed, and the survey shows relative price stability at a very high level of sales and profits. These executives see:

(a) Domestic sales up in 1960 for three-quarters of all companies; others will hold their own.

(b) Exports will show sturdy year to year gains.

(c) Prices will remain more or less stable with most firms, with a moderate rise in others.

(d) Wages may be up slightly.

(e) Overall spending will show a modest year to year gain.

All this applies to mining, oil, public utilities, merchandising, construction, food, textiles, pulp and paper, beverages, miscellaneous products such as chemicals, drugs, rubber and tobacco.

(f) Gross national product expected to be up from 5 per cent to 7 per cent.

Statements made by our bank presidents at their annual meetings are generally optimistic for 1960.

The recession appears to have been overcome and we may be entering a boom period. If so, the trouble will be to keep the boom within bounds and under control.

From what I have said, 1960 should be a year of new growth in most sectors of the Canadian economy. There is only one way for Canada to go, and that is forward. I look ahead to the future with great confidence. I have great faith in our people and in our country. I believe we have the wisdom and the courage to face the challenges of the future in such a way that by the collective efforts of the Canadian people, with industry, labour and all other segments of our economy working together, and the Government co-operating, we can, if given peace, rise to heights undreamed of.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson debate adjourned.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES LAWS REPEAL BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John G. Higgins moved the second reading of Bill S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill was initiated in the Senate. Under Term 22 of the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada certain fisheries laws, relating to the export marketing of salt fish from Newfoundland to other countries or to any province of Canada, were defined. These had all been passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland prior to Confederation, that is, before April 1, 1949. They were as follows:

Act No. 11 of 1936 entitled An Act for the creation of a Newfoundland Fisheries Board; Act No. 14 of 1936 entitled An Act to prevent the export of fish without license; and Act No. 10 of 1942 entitled an Act respecting permits for the exportation of salt fish. There were also acts passed in 1938, 1942, 1943 and 1944, all of which were nothing more than amendments to the first act, namely, the one that created the Fisheries Board.

Term 22 of the Act of Union set out that the fisheries laws of Newfoundland and all orders, rules and regulations made thereunder should continue in force in Newfoundland, as if Union had not been made, for a further period of five years from the date of Union, and thereafter until the Parliament of Canada should otherwise provide; and that these laws were to be continued to be administered by the Fisheries Board. The Fisheries Board had, as I have remarked, been created by Act No. 11 of 1936. The Terms of Union did provide—and this has nothing to do with the matter before us, because the period expired in 1954—that the fisheries laws could be repealed or altered by the Parliament of Canada with the consent of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Newfoundland within the period of five years.

I may also say that under Term 18 of the Terms of Union all laws in force in Newfoundland at, or immediately prior to, the date of Union should be continued as if the Union had not been made, subject to repeal or alteration by the Parliament of Canada or the Legislature of the Province of Newfoundland according to the authority of the Parliament or the Legislature under the British North America Act and amendments thereto. Likewise, all orders, rules and regulations made under any such laws should be continued subject to revocation or amendment by the appropriate constitutional authority.

In 1959 one of the acts mentioned, namely, No. 10 of 1942, entitled An Act respecting permits for the exportation of salt codfish, was repealed by the Parliament of Canada. Honourable senators will find the bill repealing this act discussed in the Debates of the Senate for 1959, at page 1048. In moving the second reading of this bill I said, as appears on that page:

> The purpose of this bill is to repeal Act No. 10 of the Statutes of Newfoundland, 1942 which is The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, 1942. This act is restated in chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952. From the bill itself it would seem that there are two acts, namely, The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, 1942, No. 10 of the Statutes of Newfoundland, and The Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, chapter 211 of the Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, but, as I have said, these are the same act.
> Under this act the exclusive right to market salt fish is held by the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, usually known as NAFEL, which is a name composed of the initial letters of the words in the full name. This exclusive right of NAFEL expires on July 31 of this year. After that date no permits for the exportation of salt fish shall be necessary.
> Under the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, NAFEL was continued in the right to this exclusive licence to export salt fish for five years. NAFEL had been given this right some years previously by an act of the Newfoundland Legislature. After the expiration of the five years, which was in 1954, that exclusive right was renewed year after year, up to 1958, when it was intimated to NAFEL that the right would cease one year thereafter, namely, on July 31, 1959.
> As the necessity to control exports of such fish by permits is no longer required, because the exclusive NAFEL export licence has been terminated, it becomes necessary to do away with the continuing requirement for export permits under the act by repealing the act.

The remaining acts—that is, all the acts except No. 10, which, as I have said, has been repealed—relate to the Fisheries Board, which, by virtue of paragraphs 2 and 3 of Term 22, had been brought within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. The said board has been continued to date.

Since the proclamation in Newfoundland, on May 1, 1958, of the Federal Meat and Canned Foods Act, which deals with all canned foods, including canned fish, and the Federal Fish Inspection Act, on July 1, 1959, and the repeal of Act No. 10, namely, the Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act, as of August 1, 1959, the said Newfoundland Fisheries Board has ceased to have any functions. The remaining acts are still in effect, and the board still exists in theory, but for no practical reason. These acts are now redundant and unnecessary and serve no useful purpose. They have been superseded by the Statutes of Canada relating to the fisheries that now have been brought into force in Newfoundland. Therefore it is proper and fitting to wipe them off the statute book, with all the rules, orders and regulations made thereunder, and consequently the Fisheries Board should go out of existence legally.

I may remark that the identity of Newfoundland fish is preserved.

An amendment to the regulations of the Fish Inspection Act added Schedule D, which deals entirely with the various kinds of Newfoundland fish. Anyone who wishes to learn about the kind of fish in Newfoundland, as well as the curing of fish, will I am sure get much enlightenment from a reading of this Schedule D.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pratt, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION—SECOND READING

Hon. Harold Connolly (Halifax North) moved the second reading of Bill S-9, respecting the Canadian Public Health Association.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill represents the combined views of officials of the Department of Public Health and the Canadian Public Health Association.

The original statute was brought down in 1912, and although there have been many changes in public health practices and conditions since that time the language of the statute itself has remained static. This bill represents an attempt to modernize the language of the statute and make it conform to present-day conditions.

If there are any major changes—and I don't think there are—they are confined to two provisions, for:

First, the lifting of the $250,000 limit on real property holdings. This limitation was incorporated in the original statute in 1912.

Second, some flexibility in the matter of the location of the head office. The head office up to now has been located in Ottawa, and it is contemplated to move it immediately to the city of Toronto, where it is felt the business of the association can be carried on more expeditiously.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? If the bill is expected to abolish the limitation on the association's ownership of real property, will the mortmain laws apply?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): I would think so. The practice in all statutes of this kind in recent years has been to remove limitations on the ownership of property. I recall that in 1958 the Canadian Women's Press Club came to us with a similar request and we agreed at that time to lift the limitation placed on its ownership of property.

There is no intention on the part of the Canadian Public Health Association to go into the real estate business. This amendment is requested simply because the operation of the association has grown. Originally its membership was composed of 12 or 15 members, but today it is in excess of 2,000. It works closely with the federal Department of Health and with the health departments in all provinces.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator say if the Canadian Public Health Association is composed of voluntary members right across Canada?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): It is entirely voluntary. As a matter of fact, although the association has never conducted a membership campaign, it hopes to gradually attract more voluntary members so that its objectives as regards public health generally will become more widespread.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What is the purpose of the association? What does it do?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): It is very active in such matters as polio, in diseases of crippled children, and in all matters pertaining to public health which have a direct application to Government ventures in all provinces, but which lack voluntary assistance aside from the Government support that is given.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The objectives are set out in the explanatory notes.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North) bill referred to Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

UNITED CANADA INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Léon Méthot moved the second reading of Bill S-7, to incorporate United Canada Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate United Canada Insurance Company, which is sponsored by the Royal Exchange Group of insurance companies, the oldest and most important of which is Royal Exchange Assurance, which was founded in 1720.

In Canada seven members of the group were operating in 1959 and were licensed by the Department of Insurance at Ottawa. They are: Royal Exchange Assurance; Car and General Insurance Corporation, Limited; the Motor Union Insurance Company, Limited; The Local Government Guarantee Society Limited; National Provincial Insurance Company Limited; The State Assurance Company Limited; and United British Insurance Company Limited.

During the year 1959 the premium income of the Royal Exchange Group from its Canadian operations was in excess of $10 million. The group has on deposit with the Department of Insurance in Ottawa securities having a value in excess of $12,250,000.

The National Provincial Insurance Company Limited, The Local Government Guarantee Society Limited, and The State Assurance Company Limited have now withdrawn from doing business in Canada to make way for the new company. The deposits to the credit of these three companies will be transferred to the Royal Exchange Assurance which has assumed all liabilities of the three companies in question. It is intended to replace the three above-mentioned companies by a Canadian insurance company to be known as United Canada Insurance Company, which will be in a position to participate in the future growth and prosperity of Canada.

As honourable senators will see by section 1 of the bill, the applicants for incorporation are: Mr. James T. Buttery of Montreal, manager for Canada of the Royal Exchange Group, Mr. James Walker Henderson of Montreal, assistant manager for Canada of Royal Exchange Group, and Mr. A. J. Campbell, Q.C., of Montreal.

Section 2 of the bill provides that these persons shall be the provisional directors of the company.

By section 3, the capital stock of the company will be $1 million, divided into shares of $100 each; and by section 4, the amount to be subscribed before the general meeting is called for the election of directors shall be $500,000.

Section 5 provides that the head office of the company will be in Montreal.

By section 6 of the bill the company seeks authorization to write all classes of insurance other than life. The classes of insurance which the company will initially write are those set forth in section 7(1) of the bill.

It is proposed that the company will begin its operations with a paid-up capital and surplus of $780,000, divided as follows: paid-up capital, $520,000; paid in capital surplus, $260,000.

As honourable senators are aware, specific deposits are required by the Department of Insurance with respect to each class of insurance which an insurance company is licensed to write. The amounts set forth in section 7(2) represent the amounts of the deposits required with respect to the classes of insurance therein mentioned. The effect of that subsection is that the company must increase its paid capital or its surplus before obtaining permission to write the additional classes of insurance therein referred to.

Section 7(3) contains a requirement that the company must, through its operations, either increase its surplus or pay in more capital.

Section 7(4) provides that when capital paid in amounts to at least $500,000, and capital paid in together with surplus amounts to $1 million, the company may write all the classes of insurance authorized by section 6.

This bill is in the form which similar legislation has followed in recent years. It has been submitted to the Superintendent of Insurance and in its present form meets with his approval.

Objection is sometimes raised that there are too many insurance companies doing business in Canada, and that accordingly new companies should not be incorporated. Although I think this is not a very sound argument, I may say that in the present case the fact is that three British companies will withdraw from business in Canada and will be replaced by one company, which will be a Canadian company.

I trust that I have supplied honourable senators with the necessary information on second reading of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Will the honourable senator permit a question? Could he tell us to whom the stock in this company will be offered? Will it be offered to the Canadian public, or will the Royal Exchange group take up all the stock?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Honourable senators, I would not like to feel obliged to answer that question at the moment. I suppose the Royal Exchange group will certainly buy some stock. However, the bill, I expect, will be referred to a committee, and the manager of the company will be present and be able to answer that question.

Motion agreed to.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Méthot, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 22 to 36, which were presented on January 28.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, reports adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 3, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, last evening, when a number of documents were tabled, I read a brief description of each of them, and in one description there occurred the word "epizootics". Some honourable senators asked me the meaning of the word, but I was unable to give it. Fortunately, the honourable gentleman from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt) was able to tell us what it meant: a disease of animals. I took the trouble to look up a dictionary, and I find it gives this definition:

Epizootic—pertaining to a disease affecting many animals at one time; correlative of epidemic—an epizootic disease; especially a form of influenza among horses.

I think that pretty well covers it.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 67 to 79, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill SD-14, for the relief of Enid Grace Pascoe Dawson.

Bill SD-15, for the relief of George Barrington Redfearn.

Bill SD-16, for the relief of Shirley Veronica Hannah Groves.

Bill SD-17, for the relief of Leonia Szafarz Falk.

Bill SD-18, for the relief of Audrey Louise Bryan Sevigny.

Bill SD-19, for the relief of Janet McMillan Sim Sinclair Kerr.

Bill SD-20, for the relief of Jacqueline Joly Mazurette.

Bill SD-21, for the relief of Shirley Evelyn Ellis Bertram.

Bill SD-22, for the relief of Sally Emden Rohr.

Bill SD-23, for the relief of Barbara Steinberg Shapiro.

Bill SD-24, for the relief of Olga May Hospadaruk Edwards.

Bill SD-25, for the relief of Georgette Rosenberg Korman.

Bill SD-26, for the relief of Julianna Catharina Mehilercsik Jutras.

Bill SD-27, for the relief of Helen Kurtzman Bernard.

Bills read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

NON-MILITARY TYPE AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

What are the numbers of automobiles not purely of a military type owned by the Department of National Defence in

(a) Canada,
(b) United Kingdom,
(c) Continental Europe,
(d) U.S.A.,
(e) In any other geographical area?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows: (a) 498, (b) 14, (c) 74, (d) 16, (e) 6.

DISARMAMENT

REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Mr. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. Is the Republic of China included among the countries with which Canada will be associated in trying to reach a satisfactory basis for disarmament?
2. If not, why not?
3. Does the Canadian Government believe that a satisfactory arrangement for disarmament can be achieved if China, with the largest population in the world, is not included in the negotiations?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have the following answer to the honourable senator's inquiry:

1. It is assumed that by "Republic of China" is meant the "Communist People's Republic of China." The answer to this question is "No".

2. The membership in the ten-power disarmament committee is the result of agreement reached by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States, France and the Soviet Union to bring into being a disarmament negotiating group. This ten-power committee was set up following acceptance of the resulting invitations and there is no suggestion for a change in the plan to have these ten nations deal with negotiations on the question of disarmament.

3. Our belief is that we must take one step at a time in this new approach to disarmament. The immediate problem is to reach some agreement with the five Eastern powers which are to be members of the ten-power team. Depending upon the progress made in this direction, the possible association of other countries, including the Communist People's Republic of China, in any disarmament program would no doubt be one of the questions which would be considered in due course.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, one of the great disadvantages of following the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in welcoming the new senators, and in referring to the remarks of the mover and seconder for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, is that the speeches of both leaders were so completely informative and expressed in such felicitous terms that they leave nothing for the rest of us to say.

Nevertheless, I want to join with them in welcoming, first, the Honourable Olive L. Irvine, whose charm and experience in public affairs will add to the charm and experience of the other lady members of this house, who have greatly enlightened us and contributed much to our deliberations.

I should like also to extend a hearty welcome to the mover for an Address in reply, the Honourable Senator Courtemanche, who comes to us as an experienced parliamentarian. We enjoyed his eloquence and pleasing delivery, and as well his excellent and informative material.

I am sure, honourable senators, it would not be amiss if I added a special word of welcome to the Honourable Senator Blois, from my native province of Nova Scotia. Indeed, we are not only from the same province, but at present from the same town of Truro, although I must admit he has lived there much longer than I. I have known our new colleague for a long time, and I support what the Leader of the Government said about Senator Blois' long experience in public life and the contribution we may expect from him to this house.

I am sure these new senators are proud to become members of this house, because experience shows that Prime Ministers over a long time have held a very high regard for the Senate, for the ability, experience and keen perception of its members. That is indicated by the fact that the Government gives us a minimum of information with regard to legislation, knowing that our ability is such that we will get the necessary information anyway. The present relationship between the Senate and the Government is not peculiar to this Government; it has existed for years. It existed when I was a member of the Government, so I know whereof I speak. There are, including Parliamentary secretaries, 40 members of the Government to explain legislation to the House of Commons, whereas in the Senate we explain it to one another. We do a very, very good job of it. There was a time, a few years ago, when we thought we would like to see more of the ministers. That was during the period when I was Leader of the Government. We put into effect a procedure whereby any minister could come over here and introduce his legislation. Four ministers took advantage of the procedure and they did very well here. The procedure remained effective until one honourable senator, who is not with us any longer, made a most spirited attack upon the system. He said that so far as he was concerned he liked the explanation given by honourable senators in this house very much better than that of anybody who might be imported, and he thought it was high time that the new practice was stopped. I took the cue, and I do not think I ever invited a minister to come here afterwards. I do not think the honourable senator who now leads the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has done so either. I think it is just as well, because he has the same advantage as I had when I was Leader of the Government, in having around him a great wealth of talent, possessed by honourable members who can explain the legislation as well as anyone else.

Nevertheless, some honourable senators would like to have an opportunity sometimes of questioning ministers in committee, particularly on questions of policy. I afforded that facility to a limited extent, and my honourable friend the Leader of the Government has done it as well. Perhaps that practice will continue.

I want to compliment the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition for their speeches, which are always of a high quality. I thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition for some personal references that he made.

I am not going to refer to any matter mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and in this I am not being disrespectful. It happens that there are many honourable members who wish to participate in the debate, and I do not want to cover too much ground. In speaking to a matter which is not dealt with in the Speech from the Throne I have an excellent precedent, one set by the Prime Minister himself. Of course, I am not qualified to do what he did. I cannot produce a second Speech from the Throne. The Prime Minister did that, and it was said by some of his friends that it was one of the most skilful things ever been done in Parliament.

The usual procedure, as we all know, is that after an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne is moved and seconded the Leader of the Opposition makes his contribution. But, the Prime Minister outwitted the Leader of the Opposition by waiting until the leader had finished speaking and then producing a second Speech from the Throne, on which the leader had no opportunity of commenting, so the Prime Minister encountered no criticism on the second Speech from the Throne and he had all the advantage of newspaper publicity. Some say it was one of the smartest parliamentary tactics used since Confederation. Whether it was or not is another matter, but I do think it established a precedent in these circumstances for one to speak on something that has nothing to do with the contents of the Speech from the Throne.

Honourable senators, in this debate I am going to content myself with endeavouring to deal with one solitary thought. Even at that I may be taking on a lot. I wish to confine myself to the single question of how we are going to reduce the costs of production in Canada in order to meet world competition. I may make some ancillary references that have a bearing on this question, but this will be the subject with which I shall deal.

I do not suppose there was ever a time when I was more confused than I am today as a result of statements made by those in authority as to Canada's economic future. There have been many conflicting opinions regarding this subject and much prophesying has been done by competent persons. For instance, late in September of last year the Managing Director of the International Monetary Bank in Washington, of which we are a member, made a certain remark in a most important speech that has been widely quoted. In effect, this is what he said: Generally speaking, world inflation is over. Goods are in plentiful supply from various sources. Competition is becoming fiercer and fiercer, and those who deviate from international price trends assume grave risks.

Well, Canada is one of the deviators. One of the listeners to that speech was, of course, our Minister of Finance, Mr. Fleming, and not long after he returned from Washington, about the middle of October, in his official capacity he made an important speech which the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) referred to in passing as one of three excellent speeches by the minister. Incidentally, I did not care for some of the remarks made by the minister and I thought he could have dispensed with them, but that is neither here nor there. In this particular speech the Minister of Finance said that inflation is the enemy of growth and that creeping inflation is the most dangerous, because it is so insidious. He said that we could not stop it without paying a price, and if we did not pay the price and maintain the value of our currency while others were maintaining theirs the consequences as regards our trading position might be catastrophic.

Honourable senators, those are strong words, but they are not mine. The circumstances surrounding that speech resulted in a most curious reaction on the part of the Prime Minister. I presume the Minister of Finance had consulted the Prime Minister as to what he was going to say in his speech, but a few days beforehand the Prime Minister cut the ground from under the minister's feet by telling a TV audience that there was no inflation, because although he inherited some of it from his predecessors he cured it as soon as he got into power.

The statement by Mr. Fleming was a pretty drastic one for the Minister of Finance to make, and a curious thing about it is that, although I watched carefully in the press afterwards, I found not one single instance of support for him from his colleagues in the Commons. Nor did I see any record of support for him from members of this house, although they probably know more about the subject than do the members of Commons. If any honourable member here did support the minister I hope that will be made clear later in this debate. For my part, I supported him publicly—with curious reactions. The only letter I received from any Conservative, whom I recognized as such, was from the minister himself, thanking me for my support. I received some letters from persons whom I recognized as Liberals. A letter from one of my colleagues in the Senate simply "took the hide off me". Another honourable senator accosted me and took me to task. I am told that many of my Liberal friends were much annoyed with me.

Frankly, I do not blame them. Here was the minister appealing for support against inflation; and, after all, a Liberal would need a lot of Christian charity to forget the treatment by Mr. Fleming and his supporters of Walter Harris when he called for similar support two and a half years ago. I do not think I have any particular amount of Christian charity; but last session when the honourable senator from Saint John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson) brought in the Finance Committee's report on inflation I stated here that I would support the Government if it attempted to deal with inflation, and I kept my word. I cannot understand why the Prime Minister himself would cut the ground from underneath Mr. Fleming, and why not one of the members of his Government or not one Conservative member of this house supported Mr. Fleming publicly. Therefore, I have reason to believe that there is not much support for his viewpoint. That is another thing that confused me.

Then the Governor of the Bank of Canada got into it and told us that we have all been living beyond our incomes for the past five years, and that we have been borrowing money, largely from the United States, to make up the difference between the growing amount we have to pay that country for servicing our obligations and the constantly growing deficit between our imports and exports. He said that if we don't increase our exports and reduce or limit our imports we shall be heading for a balance of payments crisis. Those who drafted the Speech from the Throne evidently thought silence was golden and did not mention the problem at all. In the other house the Minister of Trade and Commerce delivered a very eloquent and clear-cut speech stating that we need not be worried about it, that our prospects were magnificent. It was much along the line of the remarks of the honourable the Leader of the Government here (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) last evening. I did not hear the minister's speech, but he could not have done a better job in advancing that idea than did the honourable Leader of the Government.

However, running through these conflicting opinions there is just one common thread, that we can only have prosperity if we keep our costs down. The Leader of the Government, with all his long experience and hardheadedness, qualified all he said last evening by stating that prosperity could be achieved in that way only.

Honourable senators, it is on the question of how to reduce production costs, and the problems involved, that I want to offer some suggestions. Before I do so, however, I wish to point out that Dr. Firestone, economic adviser to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, took the platform on this subject of future prospects, and although he agreed that the chances were good for the late sixties and seventies, he hedged as regards the early sixties; he said he thought 1960, and probably 1961 would be all right. But he warned us to watch out then, saying we shall likely be faced with a recession that will far exceed anything we have known since the post-war period.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It will "make our hair curl".

Hon. Mr. Robertson: It will "make our hair curl", as my friend says. It would be a very difficult matter to handle. This practice of saying "Things are not so good now, but they may be all right in the seventies" is not satisfactory. It reminds me of an experience that I had in 1948 when representing the United Nations in Paris, and later in England. I was much interested in noting the great difference between rationing in the two countries. Both countries had coupons, but France was very generous with them, or at least it was to us, for we were classed as tourists and got virtually everything we wanted to eat, although citizens did not. When I went to England, however, I noticed that rationing was enforced drastically, with no favourites. We got what the other fellow got, no more and no less. I was very much impressed. I talked about this to people in Glasgow, and particularly in a restaurant where I did not know the waiter was a strong supporter of the Labour Government, and to whom I suggested that the fairness of the method was greatly to the advantage of Britain. However, he got it into his head that I was a dissatisfied visitor from North America complaining about the food in Britain. He said to me—politely, as one would expect him to say to a guest, but nevertheless firmly—"Oh, well, I know it is pretty bad, but it is better than it was a year ago, and Cripps says it is going to be all right in 1952." That is like Dr. Firestone, who is not quite so sure of the immediate future, but says things are going to be all right in the seventies.

On the need to reduce costs of production, various suggestions are being made. The main one comes from the Government, in the form of exhortations to labour and management to do something about it, to get costs down or the inevitable consequences will follow.

Well, as far as I can gather, management's retort to that is, "It is not our fault; it is the fault of labour for asking too much, and of the Government for taking too much away from us in taxation." But labour says; "It is not our fault; labour costs have got very little to do with this problem; it is caused by the high profits which manufacturers are making, taxes which the Government is taking off our pay cheques, thus reducing our take-home pay, and high costs of distribution."

Honourable senators, my judgment for what it is worth, is that we shall not get very far with exhortations.

Some people are saying we ought to adopt strict controls like we had during the war, to keep down wages, prices and interest rates, to control everything so as to enable us to meet the competition that we must face from abroad. Not many people have advanced that proposal, although from predictions about the new party that is about to come into existence I gather that it might very well be its viewpoint. I don't think very many people in this country will go for it, particularly as long as conditions stay as good as my honourable friend the Leader of the Government predicts they will. But if circumstances changed, if as a result of severe competition from outside there was rising unemployment in this country and we lost severely in our export markets, then in desperation we might turn to controls, because we would then have a very ugly public in this country, and if anybody else had a better solution we might be in for trouble.

This is where I am going to venture to make a suggestion. My belief is that there is only one possible way of solving the problem, and that is by following the example of the small Western European countries and letting competition do the job. You know, we are great fellows for competition in this country. We talk an awful lot about competition, we make after-dinner speeches about the virtue of competition, saying that is the system we were brought up under and the system we are going to die under, but often it does not have much opportunity to function. I am suggesting that some people in the Old Country today know far more about economics than we ever thought of, and we should realize that fact and learn something from what they are doing. Our fiscal and trade policies which are based on the hope that we can continue as the highest-cost producer among the industrial nations of the world are as obsolete as the horse and buggy. Our domestic industries would be faced with great difficulties even if our population was twice as large as it is today.

We are members of GATT, so little or no relief can be given by way of additional tariff protection even if it were thought desirable. We should recognize the worldwide revolution that is taking place in economic thinking and practice, and that we are becoming encircled by five economic giants, three long established and two coming into being, whose production costs through mass production technique will be so low as compared with ours that our industries will be swamped by their competition.

In order to assure that our costs will be gradually reduced, in order that we can meet world competition in both our domestic and export markets, we should immediately seek to join a larger trading area. We should at once, I believe, enter into negotiations with, first, the United States of America; and secondly, the Outer Seven and Third, the European Common Market, to remove progressively all the barriers to trade over a period of years, perhaps ten.

We should leave ourselves free to make similar arrangements with other countries, both commonwealth and non-commonwealth, as and when it may become mutually desirable to do so. The Government should seek the co-operation of labour and management and all others concerned and be prepared to follow the example of the European countries of extending financial assistance to those industries which need it, in order that they can equip themselves to compete successfully in the export markets and meet competition in our own domestic market.

I suggest, honourable senators, that in the world we are living in there is no possible chance of our continuing successfully with 17.5 million people in this country. Sooner or later we shall have to do these things. We have the choice of dealing from strength or from weakness. While we are strong and our prestige is high, let us seek to associate ourselves with those countries with which over the years our trade has been the greatest, and thereby avoid keeping all our eggs in one basket. Let us do it from strength and do it now, and do it concurrently, lest, mind you, our industries become so swamped by competition that cannot possibly be kept out by tariffs, and our economy becomes so weakened in servicing this vast accumulation of debt which we have incurred in recent years, that we may have to go on hands and knees to our biggest creditor and sue for terms.

I say, let us do it before it is too late. I have no personal objection to the idea of an economic union with the United States, but I am aware that quite a lot of people in this country have.

If we become associated with a group of Western European nations and the United States we can maintain our competitive advantage. By progressively removing our tariff barriers and lowering our costs we can compete and not have to appeal to countries to limit the quotas of goods they ship to Canada, which is being done today and which is our only alternative at the present time. Do not let us tarry. Let us act at once.

I suppose that initially my interest in the Common Market was particularly keen because over the years I had so much to do with attempts to have article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty implemented. Honourable senators, particularly the more senior, will recall that it was my honour some ten or twelve years ago to introduce the North Atlantic Treaty in this house. I remember well the discussions we had at that time, as to what was then a very radical step for us in this country to take. Indeed, I was brought up in a school that did not even admit we were at war when Britain was at war. My honourable friends opposite had pretty well come to that conclusion. Yet, we came to the point where we solemnly bound ourselves for 20 years that if one country was attacked the other would join in its defence. It was a revolutionary step for North America, and particularly Canada, to take. However, there was a saving grace: some of us were already aware that there was provision for a degree of economic co-operation and the elimination of trade rivalry, such as we had never witnessed before. That provision was written into the treaty and was ratified by all Parliaments, but it never was implemented.

However, some five years later some of us formed an association. And let me say it was not a party affair; it transcended parties in this house. As the then Speaker of the house, I was elected chairman of the association, with the present Prime Minister as vice-president of the steering committee. Mr. Gordon Churchill, as he then was, represented the Conservative party. There were many who showed little interest, but in the intervening years we were able to interest people of other nations in it.

To make a long story short, in due course we met in Paris in 1945, with one single idea and purpose. Some of us may have been interested in seeking military co-operation. For my part I did not know much about it. We were interested in the economic side of the picture, because we believed that the burden of armaments would sooner or later cause us trouble unless we had the financial strength to support them.

We went on year after year, with committee after committee being set up. I never knew there could be so much frustration as we experienced in our attempts at that time. Then just the other day the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, on their return from Paris, reported to the other house that a new committee was to be set up which, in effect, superseded the preceding committee. There was no ceremony; there wasn't even any reference on the part of anybody in that house to the fact that this spelled an end to a great ideal, as far as its implementation by NATO was concerned. No one said that there were many honourable members who belonged to the earlier committee who deserved a great deal of credit. Let me remind you that the 25 members who went to Paris paid their own expenses, an almost unheard of procedure in these modern days. The idea was that we would go to Europe by plane to examine the military installations in France and Germany, but we would stay in Paris a week. And this, as I say, was done at our own expense; the Government could not make an appropriation to cover expenses. And after all that, the whole thing was over without any ceremony or regret.

I have placed on the Order Paper a question whether the recent report does not mean that the long-cherished ideal of implementing article 2, providing for co-operation through NATO, has now disappeared. Mind you, in doing so I am not being critical of the Government for its participation in this action, because I know it was inevitable. When the day came that Britain became associated with Switzerland, Sweden and Austria, I knew that these countries never could or never would be members of NATO. I knew then that our economic co-operation through NATO was too circumscribed. Nevertheless, considering all the work that was done on it over the years, I cannot avoid having a little regret that no one in the House of Commons saw fit even to mention the facts or the background of the situation. However, as I say, the situation is an inevitable one. Britain may have felt that the treaty was too exclusive as far as the rest of the commonwealth was concerned; and the United States may have felt the same way because it left out Latin America.

No one will take much note of what I have to say, but I would like the Government to come forward and present the case in its proper light and to say that what has been done is the sensible thing to do. But what do we do now? We need to become associated with something that is going on in some concrete way, rather than passing resolutions. When Mr. Brentano, the Foreign Minister of Germany, was in Canada I said to him that I felt that the Common Market was implementing the purposes of article 2, that the countries concerned got tired of waiting for something to be done by Britain and North America. I believe that is the reason for their action. And take note of how they have succeeded. Their economic co-operation which strengthened their general base has led to the elimination of international trade rivalry. That was the purpose of article 2.

Look also at the miracle that has happened to the relations between Germany and France. I can well remember the time when the Saar Valley and other places were household names. Today the memory of them has all but disappeared. Mr. Neal, President of the Committee on Economic Development in the United States, mentioned to me that he felt the new trend would have great repercussions. Indeed, he went so far as to say that the Common Market in Europe would have more political and economic repercussion than the explosion of the first atomic bomb. After the setting up of the Common Market, the seven nations which, for one reason or another, could not join in it linked themselves together in the Outer Seven under the leadership of Britain. Britain offered us a similar arrangement, but there seemed no overwhelming enthusiasm for it, as far as I know. The Outer Seven has been formed, and they are now following the established practice of gradually getting their costs down. Over a period of time they will reduce their tariffs and adjust their industry to participate in future production. They are bringing into being the fifth economic challenge: a Common Market consisting of Russia, the United States and Japan, each of which has a population of 100 million or more. The Common Market countries have 175 million people, and the Outer Seven have 90 to 100 million. We are the sole industrial nation to stand alone, and we have not a ghost of a chance of meeting competition through mass production. We are not even keeping the markets of our own 17 million people. At the first of the year I noticed an editorial in the Montreal Gazette stating what proportion of our market in Canada we have lost. We are becoming hopelessly outdistanced. Most of our domestic industries have less than 50 per cent of our own market. With a limited market such as we have we cannot possibly meet outside competition against these economic giants.

I suggest to this house that there is only one alternative, and that is that we proceed to join them. I do not know how much headway we will make. I do not know what difficulties we will encounter. Because I want to see this done concurrently, we should do it first with the United States of America. Mr. Howe told me once that immediately after the Common Market was first suggested the then Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce called him and asked him what he thought about a Common Market on this side of the Atlantic between Canada and the United States. Mr. Howe said: "Well, I think, perhaps, economically it might be sound. I do not know where this development is going to carry to in Europe, but there is a political side to it." There always has been. Just what angle that will take remains to be seen, but if we accompany economic co-operation with the United States with a similar arrangement with the Outer Seven and the Common Market we would not only be doing a great job for Canada in getting our costs down and making prices truly competitive, but we would render great assistance to the millions of people in this country with fixed incomes who are being crucified by higher costs. Also, Canada would be the linch-pin which must inevitably join the nations of the Atlantic community. There must be something of that kind between us in the face of Soviet pressure.

Honourable senators, I am as much convinced today as I ever was that Russia has no intention of launching a nuclear war against the United States. She has no intention whatever of doing that. Why would she, even if she thought she would win? She could win only a mass of smoking ruins. I can never understand why China was not brought into the discussion of disarmament. Do you think Russia would undertake a nuclear war with the West, having due regard to all the risk that would be involved, and leave China intact to come in through her back door with her millions of people? No; I think Russia is just as convinced today as she ever was that her system is better than ours, and her chance of winning economically is infinitely better than her chance of winning militarily.

I am not so sure that she is not right. If we do not get a little common sense into our heads I think she will continue with this process of dividing the Western world, a process which goaded us into activity to form NATO. We would never have dreamed of NATO if Czechoslovakia had not fallen. Russia, with her great financial strength and natural resources will throw everything into the economic offensive against the Western world, and divide it if she can. She might be successful. The country which stands to lose most in that shuffle is Canada, because Russia has three times as much of everything that we have. The late Senator Charles Hawkins told me that Russia's forests are twelve times the size of ours. She can outdo us in everything we have.

Mr. Maulding, president of the British Board of Trade, said his offer was still open to Canada, but it was not clear whether the offer was by Great Britain or by the Outer Seven. For myself, I would go all out for the Outer Seven. It may be that the Common Market countries would present more difficulties; I am not sure. When I was in Washington, in November, I attended the conference of NATO Parliamentarians. I was not a member of the Canadian delegation; I was there in my capacity as Honorary Life

President. I heard Professor Walter Hallstein, President of the Common Market Commission, speaking on the subject of relations with other countries. He was under attack because those from the Outer Seven were accusing him of creating a condition that would result in a trade war between the two groups. He said he did not believe that, and he did not like that at all. He said what we have to be very careful about is that in the process of creating a bridge between the two groups in Europe we do not create an even greater gulf between the two sides of the Atlantic. He said: "As far as I am concerned, the fact remains that if it were not for the generosity and kindness of America and Canada we would have continued as an object of charity, and now we are a partner, and we will never forget it. What we must do must be in co-operation with them." I do not know what the objections would be, but I am sure that Canada has a sufficient backlog of goodwill to enable it to make the necessary arrangements.

There may be something going on about which I know nothing, but I submit that that is what we should do, and in due course it is what the United States will do. Professor Hallstein said that Mr. Dillon, United States Under-Secretary of State, was already negotiating with the Common Market to the greatest degree possible under the powers given by the Reciprocal Trade Act of the United States, but that is a very limited degree. So far as I know, we are arranging no negotiations.

Honourable senators, this is our opportunity. I feel we should give very serious consideration to what is a better alternative than to stand by and watch our domestic industries being swamped by outside competition which we can do nothing to stop, while in due course our export industries dwindle and die. The other is the alternative I would choose, and I bespeak the careful consideration of it by this house.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Boucher, debate adjourned.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES LAWS REPEAL BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins for the second reading of Bill S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, before discussing the subject of the bill now before the house, may I be permitted to offer a personal word of congratulation to the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) upon the very forceful and enlightening address he has just made. I believe the substance of his speech provides a strong basis of leadership for the members of Parliament, and from it I trust will come a movement for greater and more realistic international trading relations which are fundamental to the progress of this country.

In introducing the Newfoundland Fisheries Laws Repeal Bill the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) outlined the legal and constitutional position very clearly. It is not necessary for me to dwell at length on that aspect of the bill which, as has been pointed out, is needed to give legislative effect to the many changes and annulments that have already taken place.

As the honourable senator has said, before Union the Newfoundland fisheries laws, applicable to both domestic procedure and exports, were administered by a department of Government known as the Newfoundland Fisheries Board. The application of their authority was very broad and covered, among many other responsibilities, supervision of the assorting of quality, or "culling" as we term it locally, as between the fisherman and the local buyer, and licensing of exporters, with registration of their plants and inspection of fish when being packed for export. Of these responsibilities the federal Government now retains only the issuing of certificates of registration of salt fish plants and the inspection of the fish when being exported. I am sorry that it was not found feasible by the federal Government to retain authority for supervising quality at the time the fish is passing from the fishermen to local buyers. As a matter of fact, that is the stage of inspection which has most effect on the quality being produced by the individual fisherman. The quality will never be any better than the care that is taken in the first handling, which includes the washing and salting prior to the final processing for market.

During the past fishing season this particular responsibility of the federal fisheries inspectors ceased—it had until then remained the responsibility of the federal Government under an arrangement—and was assumed by the provincial Government, which has not set up any inspection system to take its place. No doubt it intends to do so, but it was not done for the traffic of the past season.

I really think the special circumstances of this industry should have influenced the federal departments to continue this responsibility. As it stands now, the federal inspectors—and there are many—have to be spread around the coast to supervise for marketing. I am sure that an interlocking of the two responsibilities could be made to work quite satisfactorily. The federal and provincial officials should get together to work out some joint policy in this respect.

As the bill before us is simply a confirmation of repeals that have already been made of a number of acts since Union, there is nothing to be said against passing the bill.

What I am particularly concerned with now is to see that the laws for export inspection will have a reasonable local application. In the regulations of the Fisheries Inspection Act of July 1, 1959, Schedule "D", which was referred to by the honourable senator from St. John's East, sets forth in considerable detail the conditions of packaging and inspection for export of pickled and salted fish, which in the main conform to the established practices of the Newfoundland trade. To illustrate the need for such special provision, in the salted codfish section of Schedule "D" there are about three dozen different grades and sizes which have to be kept separate to satisfy the demands in various markets of the world. This variety of grades is unusual in commodities for export, but it is something that has developed in the fish trade over the centuries and very careful handling is required in order to meet the needs of customers abroad. As a matter of fact, some of the packages also have to be distinctive for different markets, because in many cases they are used in other trades abroad after the fish is taken out, and preference in buying may be influenced by the type of packages used. I mention this because of the very great need for the authorities to keep local customs of inspection and so forth in effect, although they may differ from those that prevail in other provinces. There should be close consultation with those actually engaged in the marketing before changes are made in inspection rules and procedure. As an example of the peculiar circumstances involved, in North Brazil, where Newfoundland salted codfish was introduced three centuries ago—and it has been going there ever since—they prefer fish with less salt content and different in appearance and size from what is desired in South Brazil, where the fish was introduced a century later.

The Newfoundland salted fish trade extends to South America, Central America and the whole of the Caribbean area, as well as to several European countries. Contrary to what one very often hears, I can say that some years ago Newfoundland set up a very far-seeing marketing policy for this industry. It might be useful to give a little background here as illustrative of the need for having the industry's requirements come under special consideration and not just be swept in under trade rules and regulations which are set up for other provinces and other commodities. When the depression of the thirties hit the industry so hard, as it hit industry throughout the world, Newfoundland exporters organized marketing groups which combined shipments to certain areas and distributed the returns to shippers as they were received from the various markets of the world. These were entirely voluntary organizations. The prices available were publicized, and I know from experience there was no background of secrecy whatever.

When the war came, the Combined Food Board of Allied Countries allocated shipments at controlled prices to all leading markets. To meet this condition Newfoundland exporters set up a Marketing Administration Committee. I had the privilege of being one of the organizers of that body. It operated under the supervision of the Fisheries Board, a department of Government, and the chairman of the board attended directors' meetings. Fishermen's representatives were informed of the net results from the markets. At the request of these representatives, buying from the fishermen was done competitively, not at agreed prices. Immediately following the war and the abolition of the Combined Food Board, all controls outside of Newfoundland were abolished. The exporters then had to make one of three choices: Would they each sell to the foreign markets competitively? Would they work together in groups, with each group selling to the different markets, as quite a number of them had done previously? Or would they set up one marketing organization which would act on behalf of all concerned?

An approach was made by the exporters to the Commission of Government, and it was recognized by the Commission that in the interests of orderly marketing there should be one organization with exclusive exporting rights. While the actual selling and shipping were admittedly the responsibility of the marketing organization, it was an agreed condition that a Government respresentative, the chairman of the Newfoundland Fisheries Board, would sit in at all meetings of directors and be fully kept aware of prevailing export prices. It was also agreed at that time that a basic price should be paid by the buyers to the fishermen and that any receipts over the level of that basic price would be split between the fishermen and exporters. Of course the exporters actually bought the fish and paid for it, as it takes a whole year to market the production of a few months' fishing.

That arrangement proceeded very well, and the industry made good progress. The stage was reached, however, when the representatives of the fishermen's organizations considered they would do better for the producers by changing to a policy of competitive buying among the exporters than by the agreed split of the market proceeds. This change was then made. The Government of the day followed along with the policy of having exclusive marketing rights centred in one organization of exporters, with a stipulation that all local buying would be strictly competitive. A primary consideration in adopting the policy of centralized export marketing was that, in order to meet the organizational and Government controlled buying in many of the markets abroad, a pooling of specific qualities and sizes within Newfoundland was essential in order to make the foreign contracts. As a matter of fact, a great deal of controlled and centralized buying still prevails in some of our principal markets. About four years ago the federal Government nullified the full effect of centralized control by authorizing the uncontrolled sale of the product to other provinces from where it could be exported competitively with Newfoundland. Quite recently foreign marketing has been thrown wide open for any individual exporter in Newfoundland. Centralized marketing with legal and official status has been completely abandoned. As things stand now, however, the full strain of competitive foreign selling has not been thrown on the industry. Newfoundland firms which were in the central marketing body have remained together in one exporting organization. This has helped to maintain a better level of values than otherwise would have been possible.

Honourable senators, I am having this background of information concerning the Newfoundland salt fish industry brought to your attention and recorded here because we know from experience that it is very necessary to keep the officials of Government departments constantly aware of the special conditions applicable to this Newfoundland trade. When the change to which I referred was made in the federal regulations about four years ago, I am sure that the main consideration was to have the rules and regulations fall in line with a general provincial pattern. Unquestionably there was not a recognition of the special and distinct circumstances of the Newfoundland industry.

The only federal controls now remaining are those in the grading and packaging for export, which in themselves are very essential.

I wish to make this appeal on behalf of the industry and the fish producers in Newfoundland, that the Government of Canada through the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Trade and Commerce should not restrict or eliminate the necessary rules and regulations simply because they do not fit in with the general pattern of procedure in their provinces. Our fishermen need encouragement in more modern production methods, they need supervision in salting and curing, and they certainly need more incentive than they now have to produce the distinctive qualities and sizes that so many of the overseas markets demand.

World consumption of salted fish of our type has been increasing; the production now runs around 500,000 tons a year, of which only about ten per cent is produced in Canada. Most of the production is by the European countries, as well as Russia and Iceland, and a great deal of the product is taken by the boats of those countries from the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

I would certainly like to see a more active and constructive policy in force for a progressive revival of the salted fish industry, with which this bill is chiefly concerned. Our whole fishing industry needs far more attention than it is getting. The one bright spot at present is the increasing production of frozen cod fillets, which are finding a market in the United States, and that is the only market available for them. The other chief branch of the industry, the salted codfish industry, is of world-wide interest.

The provincial Government is pursuing an active policy in encouraging more modern vessel construction, as well as providing other forms of promotion. The federal research station in the province is working now on new processing methods which I hope will be helpful. Community fishing stages and holding rooms are being built, also with Government assistance, federal and provincial. We need these present efforts and a lot more to pull this industry out of the doldrums into which it has drifted.

As I have mentioned before in this chamber, one of the great factors retarding our progress has been the high subsidization of this particular industry by competing countries. While I do not think it is necessary for us to adopt the same pattern of subsidies that such countries as France, Norway, and Iceland have put into effect, I think we should be able to meet it with encouragement in other forms which could be just as effective in promoting the business and maintaining stability in it as subsidies are in these other countries. In October last the Fisheries Council of Canada presented a case to the federal Government for more specialized assistance than is now given. The council considered that greater encouragement for investment capital in the industry was of first importance. Among the recommendations were incentives to increase and maintain efficiency of the fishing fleets, and more adequate depreciation on fishing vessels built in foreign yards as well as in Canadian yards was advocated. The council also stated that construction subsidies should be more in line with today's costs than they are, and that subsidies should extend to larger boats than at present. It was also recommended that some portion of the earnings before taxation should be applied to abnormal expenses in refitting boats.

I might say that the Fisheries Council of Canada made a close and competent study of conditions in the industry and I hope its recommendations are being taken very seriously by the Government.

I feel, honourable senators, that if over the next five years reasonable incentives can be given to encourage investment of capital, and certainly to stabilize more adequate earnings for the fishermen, the industry can have a really good come-back. However, the alarming fact is that if sufficient incentives are not provided within a very few years, we won't have fishermen available for the industry. Ocean fishermen are bred to their occupation; they do not crowd in and out just on the blow of a whistle.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pouliot, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 37 to 66, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, moved adoption of the reports.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, is the mover of the motion going to speak on it?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Well, honourable senators, I wish to bring a few facts to your attention.

The Divorce Committee sat today, will sit tomorrow and again on Friday. During the past two weeks the committee has been sitting every day of the week, which means that its members are giving most of their time to the study of divorce petitions. At present the only ground for divorce is adultery, and I think it is easy to foresee what would happen if there were more grounds for divorce. There are sympathetic cases that are not eligible for relief under the existing rules of the committee.

If the rules were amended to provide other grounds for divorce, the membership of the committee, which is already large, would have to be considerably increased, and probably most members of the Senate would not have time to deal with much legislation other than divorce bills.

But there is more to the matter. It is that one is not sure that the divorce courts in eight provinces of Canada are intra vires of the provinces. If they are not it means that all thousands of applicants for divorce will come to the Senate of Canada. In my humble view, the only valid divorces are those which are sanctioned by an Act of Parliament.

It is a tremendous question, and we come to the point that the only possible way to deal with the matter is to transfer jurisdiction over family rights, over marriage, which at present is in the Parliament of Canada, to the provincial Legislatures. If that were done, my honourable colleagues, who are very able, all of them, and who could perform much more useful tasks than dealing with divorce cases, would be free to do more important work. It is in order to give to them the same relief that the Divorce Committee gives to victimized consorts that I would like to see them relieved of the painstaking and unpleasant obligation to sit on that committee. It is to be hoped that at the earliest opportunity the Government will consider favourably presentation of a request to the imperial Government for a transfer of the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada to the provinces.

Honourable senators will note that I have mentioned the jurisdiction over marriage. The right to grant divorce is included in the jurisdiction over marriage. What would be more important would be some legislation depriving divorced persons of the right to remarry. If such legislation were passed the number of divorces would be greatly reduced in all provinces of Canada.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, let me first express my appreciation of and thanks for the sympathetic attitude of the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) toward the members of the Divorce Committee. It is true that the committee is now sitting every day, and will continue to do so for a period of three weeks. At the conclusion of that period we shall sit in the regular way, on Mondays and Fridays, when most other senators are at home, and on the intervening days we shall hear contested cases, of which there are now some 25 or 30 on record. So, what the honourable senator has said about the divorce work being a burden is quite true.

While I have no sympathy for myself, because I look upon our work on the committee merely as a piece of public service that we are sent here to do and are paid for doing, I certainly am concerned about other senators who sit on this committee and who by doing so are at times precluded from attending other functions of perhaps a more important and more interesting nature. Be that as it may, as long as the rules and conditions of divorce are as they are today, it is our duty as a chamber to take care of this work. I think I can say on behalf of everyone here, including the members of the Divorce Committee, that so long as that obligation rests on our shoulders we senators are prepared to discharge it. So we can forget about any sympathy in the matter.

However, that is perhaps not all the honourable senator from De la Durantaye said. It may be that the Senate would be a more effective house if the members of the Divorce Committee devoted themselves to other matters. But that matter is not within our control. The honourable senator has, for the second time this session, suggested an important alteration in the divorce laws of this country, and his observations have received some publicity. It is for that reason that I submit we should view this matter in the light of history.

In the years preceding 1867 when Confederation was being considered by the statesmen of that time, the question of divorce was a matter of discussion and debate. At the conferences held there was a majority—I feel sure a very large majority—from the province from which the honourable senator hails, who were opposed to divorce in any form, and who were desirous of having no legislation on that subject. Others, however, felt that it was the right of the minority to exercise the right of divorce if they considered it meet and proper to do so. So to protect that minority in the province of Quebec the statesmen of the time came to a compromise agreement. That compromise was that the Parliament of Canada should have the right and power to pass private bills to deal with the matter of divorce, if it thought this proper, and that arrangement was consented to by the majority in the province of Quebec. That was the agreement, tacit though it may have been, that was arrived at at that time.

My honourable friend says the only way to relieve Parliament of that obligation is to do something which the statesmen of that earlier time were opposed to doing, namely, to allow the question of marriage and divorce to be governed by the local legislatures where, it was then felt, the majority might not recognize the rights, privileges and interests of the minority. The situation in that respect has not changed. If the province from which my friend hails wishes to remove from the Senate the duty of trying divorce petitions, the way is open to it, and it is an easy one. It is one which would cause no hardship to that minority which still disagrees with the majority in the province with regard to divorce. The simple answer is consent on the part of the province to the establishment of a divorce court in that province.

I am sure the Senate would agree to that change and would pass it unanimously; certainly those senators from provinces other than Quebec would agree to such a proposal. In that way Quebec would have a divorce court such as is established in Ontario and in the other common law provinces of Canada, and the whole problem would be settled.

But to ask us as senators of Canada to disregard the rights of the minority in the province of Quebec, and to change what was decided at the time of Confederation, is surely asking us to go too far. It is impossible for us to give up that jurisdiction which in those earlier days it was thought we should exercise, namely, the jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, and allow it to be handled by the provinces. If such were done it would permit the greatest possible variety of legislation on this individual and fundamental right. It is most important that human rights in this respect should bear some degree of uniformity throughout the provinces.

I would not for one moment join in the suggestion made by my honourable friend from De la Durantaye. Although it would be a relief to be no longer burdened with these cases, I would not be a party to leaving the minority of the various provinces subject to the prejudices, various views, religious principles, and so forth of the people in those provinces. It is necessary that we retain this jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I appreciate what the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has said. I would like to ask him just one question: What would happen to the Standing Committee on Divorce of the Senate if all the divorces granted by provincial courts in eight provinces of Canada were declared invalid, legally and constitutionally?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I submit that that is an academic question. I am quite unable to answer it. It is something that is very unlikely to happen, and I am sure that if something of that nature did occur we in the Senate would join with honourable members of the House of Commons in dealing with the situation with the greatest possible rapidity.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: May I ask one question of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck)? What would prevent Parliament from appointing two or three judges in a federal court, such as the Exchequer Court, from hearing divorce cases exclusively? Was that ever discussed, or has that ever been thought of?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it was thought of.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I brought in a bill along that line.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Honourable senator who now leads the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) once introduced a bill with two clauses: one was to introduce rules of divorce similar to those in force in the United Kingdom, and the other was to transfer jurisdiction in divorce to the Exchequer Court of Canada. I supported that bill to the extent of the suggestion of widening the grounds of divorce, but I was unable to follow him in the suggestion that we transfer the jurisdiction to the Exchequer Court, although I was perfectly ready to transfer it to the ordinary courts. I thought the Exchequer Court was not the proper tribunal to which to transfer the jurisdiction. My remarks on that occasion are fully set out in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did you favour the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I do not think that is the proper court to which to transfer jurisdiction. If we are going to transfer jurisdiction to the courts it should be transferred to the ordinary courts which sit in the province, so that witnesses would not have to travel all the way to Ottawa to be heard. It should not be transferred to the Exchequer Court of Canada, which is concerned with matters of Government revenue and similar matters, and not so much with trials and contests between litigants. The jurisdiction should go to the Supreme Court of the province, and I mean the Supreme Trial Court and not the Appeal Court. That was my view, as a lawyer, in the matter.

I refused to support legislation that had even the appearance of coercing the province of Quebec, and that is my position now. I am willing to transfer this jurisdiction when the province of Quebec agrees to it. I am not prepared to do anything that even appears to be high-handed or oppressive or coercive to the province of Quebec. When the leaders of opinion in the province of Quebec consider this situation and our position in it, and come to some reasonable solution, I am sure they will find all of us in this house ready to co-operate with them to the very last degree. They can rest assured that so long as men of my mind are senators we will never do anything that is oppressive to that province.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to say just a word. If the solution suggested by the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) were adopted I know, and everyone knows, exactly what would be the result. Suppose the jurisdiction were transferred to the provinces, the province of Quebec would then acquire jurisdiction but would not set up any courts in the province. Honourable senators from that province have continually voted against the bills which I have introduced. The minority in that province—and this might be true also of the minority in Newfoundland—would not be able to get any relief whatsoever by way of divorce. If I may say so, I think that is what was in the mind of the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has many gifts, but unfortunately, he has not that of mind-reading.

Reports adopted.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-1, for the relief of Frank Gerald Donnelly.

Bill SD-2, for the relief of Romeo DiIorio.

Bill SD-3, for the relief of Marie Evelina Simone Lorette Charest Gelinas.

Bill SD-4, for the relief of Yvette Dubois Leduc.

Bill SD-5, for the relief of Lily Cohen Turner Hamburger, otherwise known as Lily Cohen Turner Hamburg.

Bill SD-6, for the relief of Marthe Turcotte Bazire.

Bill SD-7, for the relief of James Joseph Kalmin.

Bill SD-8, for the relief of Barbara Dolores Jones Ogilvie.

Bill SD-9, for the relief of Margaret June Barrie Belanger.

Bill SD-10, for the relief of Hannah Margaret Burlie Griffiths.

Bill SD-11, for the relief of Ruth Sherman Roll.

Bill SD-12, for the relief of Francis Lawrence Bray.

Bill SD-13, for the relief of Beverly Cowan Moore Robinson.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I would like to know if all the reports, with the evidence, have been tabled?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, they have. Every one of these bills has been tabled, and in every instance the report of the committee has been adopted.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the house adjourns may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) what the business of the house will be tomorrow?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: The debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne will be continued. I am not prepared to proceed with the motion standing in my name and I propose to ask that it stand for probably three or four weeks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Thank you.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, in taking part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne yesterday, the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned that cabinet ministers and deputy ministers were available for attendance at Senate committee meetings, which of course is something we all regard as most desirable. However, I want to call my honourable friend's attention to the fact that some years ago the rules of this house were amended to permit any member of the cabinet in the House of Commons to introduce legislation in this house. The amended rules provided that he be allowed to attend here and take part in the debate just as though he were a member of this chamber. It was hoped that this would result in more of the substantial and bigger issues being initiated here for discussion. That amendment has been taken advantage of in some cases, but not very often. There is a good deal of discussion going on now about the amount of work which members of the House of Commons have to do, and at different times the complaint has been made here that we do not get enough to do.

I would ask the honourable Leader of the Government if he has ever been in touch with the ministers of the cabinet to ascertain whether some of the more important legislation that is usually introduced in the Commons could be introduced here.

Ministers used to say they wanted to keep control of their own legislation. Of course, the amendment to our rules enabled ministers to come here, take part in the discussion on their bills from the beginning to end and do everything but vote. So they could keep full control over their legislation. I suggest there ought to be a revival of interest in that scheme and I would ask my honourable friend if he has called or if he will call this matter to the attention of the various ministers.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am not very much in favour of that system. I will say that most of the important bills must originate in the other house because they have to do with money matters. Under the British North America Act they could not be properly introduced in this house. During the two or three years that I have been Leader of the Government here there have been no other bills of such importance that it has been necessary to bring a minister here to deal with them. I agree with what the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) said this afternoon, that under that system we would not get any more information from ministers, and perhaps not as much as we get by following our regular practice. We have no right to cross-examine them. I do not know just what the stand is on this matter at the present time. I will take it into consideration and talk it over—

Hon. Mr. Farris: And forget about it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: —with the powers that be and see what results.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Perhaps some more cabinet ministers will be appointed to this house in the near future.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, while I certainly do not wish to disagree with the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), I rather agree with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). I am not much in favour of having ministers come here to explain their legislation. They explain it in the House of Commons, and if we wish we can read what they say.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator from Vancouver South wanted more legislation initiated here.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, after all we are a house of sober second thought, and probably the best arrangement is the present one, whereby legislation introduced in the House of Commons is discussed here in the light of what has been said over there and any further information we have been able to obtain. I have never had any difficulty in finding out about legislation when I have spent the necessary time doing so. We can always call for the deputy ministers and their departmental assistants to appear in committee, and in that way we probably get our information from the same source as the ministers do—and we might even get it better. I think our system of committees is a very fine one. It provides us with all the avenues of inquiry, opportunities of study, investigation and so forth. I would just as soon keep members of the other house away from this chamber and carry on our work as best we can. So far this practice has been most effective. I am not much concerned about whether ministers come here or not. They can come if they wish to; I am not opposing their coming.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I think the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) have overlooked that our rules were amended in order that more bills could originate in this house so as to relieve the pressure of work on the Commons. So much work is done in the Commons that Parliament has to sit for six or seven months of the year.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You have a point there.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Some very important legislation has been initiated in this house from time to time. When I first came to the Senate I used to be more filled with enthusiasm about work in the Senate than I am now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You must have been overflowing then.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes. I worked with others to have our rules amended in this way because every time we spoke to a cabinet minister, as I did several times, about coming here, he would reply, "Oh, no, I don't want to introduce my bill in the Senate; I want to have control over it." I am not suggesting that cabinet ministers should come over here merely for our benefit in hearing them speak. I am pointing out that our rules were amended so that ministers could maintain control over their legislation and still introduce it here.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have raised the point that most of the important bills are money bills and they cannot be introduced in this house.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, we have dealt with the Shipping Act, the Banking Act and the Criminal Code here.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And we still initiate such legislation here.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Not as often as we ought to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I initiated about fifteen or sixteen Government bills in the Senate last session, and I hope to be able to continue the practice.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We arranged that ministers could control their bills, but not that they should control us. That is the trouble.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 4, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following:

Further Supplementary Estimates (1) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Report of the Fisheries Research Board of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 15 of the Fisheries Research Board Act, Chapter 121, R.S.C. 1952. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

MONTREAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Léon Méthot, for Hon. Mr. Monette, presented Bill S-11, respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Is this for a new company?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: No, it is an existing company which seeks power to add a French version to its English name.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: With leave, Tuesday next.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 80 to 106, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-8, respecting The British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendments.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, Mr. H. D. Langdon, solicitor for the society, and the Reverend Kenneth McMillan, general secretary of the society, appeared before the committee when the bill was being considered this morning. At the close of the committee's meeting they asked me to try to obtain third reading of the bill today, because all their printing will be held up until the bill has been passed by both houses and given the royal assent.

For that reason, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Horner, that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

WINDSOR HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That will be Tuesday next, I presume?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would like to know whether the bill will be placed on the Order Paper for third reading at the next sitting or Tuesday next, or will the next sitting be Tuesday next?

The Hon. the Speaker: It probably will be.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I suppose the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) wishes to know when the next sitting will be?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I propose to submit a motion that the next sitting be on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. Euler: In the afternoon or evening?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am sorry there is so much impatience. It will be next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Barring an earthquake.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Which will be Tuesday next?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-10, to incorporate the Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I move that the bill be placed on the Order Paper for third reading at the next sitting, Tuesday evening.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, before the bill is given the third reading I would be grateful if the sponsor, the Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Brunt), could give us the reasons why it is considered necessary to establish a harbour commission at Nanaimo, and, I might add, at Oshawa. Long experience has convinced me that wherever a harbour commission is established the expense for administration of the harbour commences to mount. I think that once in a while at any rate, we should have some little regard for the taxpayers of this country. Therefore, being a doubting Thomas in this matter, I hope that my honourable friend will be able to produce the necessary reasons to convince not only a doubter like myself, but the whole house, that this bill is well merited.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I regret very much that the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) was unable to attend the meeting this morning of the Committee on Transport and Communications, because this matter was thrashed out there. I think that the reasons given in committee were valid ones, and they were stated much better than I could hope to state them. I will endeavour to have the verbatim report of the committee's proceedings printed before next Tuesday, and if it is I will see that the honourable senator gets a copy, in which he will find all of the reasons set out in detail.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I do not think you need to go to that expense.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the bill does come up for third reading, I feel it is essential that this morning's proceedings of the committee should be printed and distributed. I shall not be prepared to go on with the third reading until I have an opportunity of reading those proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is to be hoped that every honourable senator will have a printed copy of the proceedings before next Tuesday evening.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILLS

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bills S-4, an Act to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act, Bill S-5, an Act to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners, and Bill S-10, an Act to incorporate the Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners, recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bills.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Now.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North), report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 9, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

Bills read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FISHERMEN'S BENEFITS

Hon. Donald Smith inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What was the date of amendments and additions to Unemployment Insurance Regulations which provided for benefits for "year-round" fishermen?
2. How many fishing weeks in each quarter of the year are necessary for classification as a "year-round" fishing vessel?
3. Does classification as a "year-round" fishing vessel depend on meeting any specific standards of size? If so, what are these standards?
4. In Nova Scotia, during 1959, how many applications for non-seasonal benefits as "year-round" fishermen have been (a) approved? (b) refused?
5. Are fishermen, who are otherwise qualified, entitled to benefits for any week during which their actual net share received from their "employer" amounts to less than $9? If not, why not?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have the following answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry:

1. 28 November, 1957.

2. No number of weeks specified in regard to a vessel. However, the Unemployment Insurance Regulations define a "year-round fisherman" as a fisherman

(a) whose last employment prior to his claiming unemployment insurance benefit was on a vessel that, in the opinion of the Unemployment Insurance Commission,

(i) ordinarily carried on fishing operations at all times of the year, and

(ii) employed the crew under a contract of service or similar arrangement, resulting in their having no control over their employment and unemployment and the circumstances concerning their separation from employment being readily verifiable, and

(b) who has been in contributory employment as a fisherman in at least six weeks in each of any four consecutive calendar quarters during the period of the most recent seven quarters prior to the date of his claim.

3. See 2. In determining whether the operations of a fishing vessel and the conditions of employment of its crew come within the description in subparagraph (a) (i) and (ii), the commission takes into consideration the size of the vessel and several other factors such as the type of vessel, the kind of fishing in which it engages, the size of its crew, the continuity of its operations, and the degree to which the employment of the crew approximates employment under a contract of service.

4. During the calendar year 1959 applications for benefit as "year-round fishermen" were received from 197 Nova Scotia fishermen working on vessels of the type described in 2(a). Of these, 155 qualified for benefit as "year-round fishermen" and 42 failed to meet the qualifying requirements.

5. For a week in which he is unemployed, a fisherman or any other claimant who is otherwise qualified is entitled to unemployment insurance benefit at the weekly rate appropriate in his case without any reduction in the amount unless he has earnings in excess of one-half of his weekly benefit rate. If his earnings exceed one-half of his weekly benefit rate, his benefit for that week is reduced by the amount of the excess. Therefore, if a claimant's weekly benefit rate was $18 or more he could earn up to $9 in a week without loss of benefit.

HON. CAIRINE R. WILSON

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

(Translation):

Hon. Mariana B. Jodoin: Honourable senators, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, may I offer our best anniversary wishes to the Hon. Senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), who was the first woman to be appointed to the Senate?

(Text):

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the honourable senator from Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin) for her kind remarks.

I feel rather concerned to learn that I have, by the most considerate reckoning, entered on my fourth decade in this honourable house. I was asked this morning by a reporter if I were the senior senator. My deskmate (Hon. Mr. Lambert) asks if he is the junior senator from Ottawa. He is my senior by a few days, but I regret that I am by a long way his senior in this honourable house.

I am grateful for the good wishes. Unfortunately, these events creep up all too quickly on us now. I cannot say that I have acquired grey hairs in this chamber; I only wish that I could perhaps have made a greater contribution over the years that I have sat here.

I may say that ever since I entered this chamber in fear and trembling as to how I might be received by the male members, I have met with the greatest courtesy.

I thank you all.

ESTIMATES

TABLED IN COMMONS EARLIER THAN IN SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called may I say that I was shocked yesterday when I left this chamber and learned that the supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, 1959-60, which up to then had not been tabled here, had been tabled in the other place. But that shock was nothing to the one I received a short while ago on learning that the main estimates for the next fiscal year, 1960-61, were tabled in the other place this afternoon, though they have not been tabled in the Senate.

We are to adjourn until Tuesday next and we shall be without these estimates until that time. It has always been the custom to have the estimates tabled in both houses simultaneously.

I do not know whether I should bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, or to that of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). In any event, I am bringing it to the attention of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I may say that I did not know that the estimates were tabled in the other house today. I have not received them yet. I may receive them before the Senate adjourns today, and if so I will ask leave to table them.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-1, for the relief of Frank Gerald Donnelly.

Bill SD-2, for the relief of Romeo Diliorio.

Bill SD-3, for the relief of Marie Evelina Simone Lorette Charest Gelinas.

Bill SD-4, for the relief of Yvette Dubois Leduc.

Bill SD-5, for the relief of Lily Cohen Turner Hamburger, otherwise known as Lily Cohen Turner Hamburg.

Bill SD-6, for the relief of Marthe Turcotte Bazire.

Bill SD-7, for the relief of James Joseph Kalmin.

Bill SD-8, for the relief of Barbara Dolores Jones Ogilvie.

Bill SD-9, for the relief of Margaret June Barrie Belanger.

Bill SD-10, for the relief of Hannah Margaret Burlie Griffiths.

Bill SD-11, for the relief of Ruth Sherman Roll.

Bill SD-12, for the relief of Francis Lawrence Bray.

Bill SD-13, for the relief of Beverley Cowan Moore Robinson.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before this motion is put I would like to send to His Honour the Speaker, to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and to the honourable Chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) extracts from the Confederation Debates pertaining to marriage and divorce. I will not have anything to say on the subject for the time being, but I would like my honourable colleagues to glance over these debates at their own leisure during the weekend, and I will draw my conclusions when other divorce bills come up on Tuesday evening next.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I can assure the honourable gentleman that all four of us, though I speak for myself particularly, will read this memorandum with great care.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. William A. Boucher: Honourable senators, in rising to speak to you today, I am deeply and humbly conscious of the great honour and privilege of being a member of this chamber. My first words must be to express my warm and heartfelt appreciation for the many kindnesses and courtesies that have been shown to me by the distinguished and very able members of the Senate. It is an experience I will always cherish.

Honourable senators, we are living in a dynamic and wonderful age, which imposes great responsibilities on the Parliament of Canada, of which we are a legal and vital part. Perhaps it would assist us in discharging these responsibilities if we looked back for a few minutes to see how we arrived at our present position with its great possibilities.

Coming as I do from the vast area of northern Saskatchewan, I would like to pay tribute to our pioneers, indeed to all pioneers of western Canada, to those who blazed the first trails by establishing the fur trade and who thus brought to the attention of peoples all over the world the great opportunities offered in Saskatchewan. From the year 1890 to 1910 development was rapid, impelled by a very noble longing by people to own their own land, to have greater freedom, and to live in peace. They came—peoples from the eastern and central provinces of Canada, from the British Isles, from all over the continent of Europe, people of different customs and languages. We are proud of them. They gave us their best, their all. When we remember that the progress I shall indicate all came within the lifetime of many honourable members of this Parliament, we realize the truth of the statement "They builded better than they knew". Railway lines were extended to keep pace with the settlers and grain production increased by leaps and bounds.

We have many and varied resources in northern Saskatchewan—minerals and forests and fish—but the great majority of our people love the land and cultivate it. I make no apology for bringing them to your attention, for commending them to you. You will realize that their achievements have meant much to the people of all Canada, not least to the people of the great central provinces of our country, and wheat is still a magic word for Canada. The late Dr. Cora Hind in her Story of Wheat tells us that in October 1876 R. C. Steele arrived in Winnipeg looking for 5,000 bushels of seed wheat because the wheat crop in Ontario was practically a failure that year. All he could assemble was 857 bushels. That was before Saskatchewan started to grow the wheat that has brought fame and wealth to all Canada. Those 857 bushels were taken by steamer up the Red River and eventually to Duluth. The first Canadian wheat actually quoted on the Liverpool Corn Exchange of Britain was in 1892, less than 70 years ago.

From this small beginning has grown the great grain-growing industry of western Canada, of which wheat is still the principal cash crop, and which in any average year amounts to more than 800 million bushels of all cereal grains, and puts into circulation, even at today's lower prices, more than a billion dollars of new money. Our grain—that is our feed grain—is also the basis of a growing livestock industry, one of which we are quite proud. This industry too is growing by leaps and bounds in northern Saskatchewan.

It is noted that this tremendous achievement of production was made by the pioneers of northern Saskatchewan, who refused to admit any limitations, and who will carry on with courage, even in this year when so many of our crops are out in the snow and so much of our livestock has to be sold for lack of feed. We would like the people of all Canada to understand that we do not ask for anything that we have not ourselves earned and paid for.

I would call attention today to two or three things which were basic to the achievement of our people and the progress of our production. They are even basic to our continued production. The volume of this production benefits many people in many areas of Canada—the people who haul our grain, the people who handle it, the people who process it, the people who sell it. If we read the report of a recent inquiry we find that many people of Canada actually benefit from this production more than do those who primarily produce it.

Perhaps the outstanding item basic to this development is the cost at which our terrific volume of production is hauled. Here too the pioneers in Canada builded even better than they knew. Here too I pay tribute to our early Governments, our pioneer businessmen and our pioneer railway builders as well as our farmers. All realized that no great production could be achieved without railways to haul it to markets.

Apparently too all realized that the long rail haul to and from western Canada—lacking the saving protection of water competition—would make it impossible to establish a stable industry without statutory freight rate protection. Here I think the genius of the people of Canada for reaching workable solutions to all problems showed up at its best. We got the railroads and the statutory rate protection and it was paid, as I shall show, principally by the people of western Canada, and to a much lesser extent by the people of all Canada, who, as I have indicated, benefited by this production.

For the history of this achievement I would cite an Act of Parliament dated February 15, 1881 assenting to an agreement made between the Government of that day and the Canadian Pacific Railway. This agreement subsidized the C.P.R. to the extent of $25 million from the Treasury of Canada, plus 25 million acres of land then held in trust for the people of western Canada, plus land for roadbeds, station grounds, workshops, dock-grounds and water-fronts, plus free duties on materials and certain specified freedoms from taxation. When we consider that the people of western Canada bore their full share of the $25 million subsidy and the tariff and tax concessions, it would not be unfair to say that 85 per cent of the subsidies to the C.P.R. came from the people of western Canada.

In this respect I would quote from Oscar Skelton, a name which is highly revered wherever Canadian affairs are discussed. This quotation is taken from The Railway Builders, at page 159:

> The fact remains that the bulk of the resources utilized in the original building of the railway were provided or advanced by the people of Canada. The Canadian Pacific is as truly a monument of public as of private faith.

The next susbidy was made when basic freight rates were established. Here I would quote from the report of the Royal Commission on Transportation dated February 9, 1951. As you are aware, the chairman of that Royal Commission was the Honourable W. F. A. Turgeon, the very distinguished brother of my honourable friend from Cariboo. At page 238 of the report is the chapter headed "Crowsnest Pass Rates", and the first sentence of that chapter reads:

> The rates known by this name form an important part of our freight rate structure.

> The line of railway was built, the Government paid the Company a subsidy of $3,404,720,

Let me remind you here, honourable senators, that this was in addition to the previous $25 million.

> and the agreement concerning freight rates became fully effective on September 1, 1899.

Again, I would remind you, honourable senators, that at this time and for this purpose the Government of British Columbia, having control of its own resources, turned over to the C.P.R. an additional 250,000 acres of rich land. This fact is stated on page 240 of the Royal Commission's Report of 1951. You know that in 1925 Parliament made a readjustment of these Crowsnest Pass rates, and established them for grain and grain products by statute. Surely no one will now claim that these gifts, these payments and land subsidies, and the contingent rich corporations which they brought to the C.P.R., should be left out of account when western freight rates are considered.

Hon. Mr. Reid: They never have been left out.

Hon. Mr. Boucher: Surely no one will deny that the great advance made by bulk handling of grain, the great increase in volume since the first 857 bushels were shipped from Winnipeg, and the great technical improvements in rail transportation make it possible to haul at lower costs now than were possible when the agreement was made.

For the record I would quote again from the report of the Royal Commission. This is the considered opinion of the commission, as taken from page 243, and it refers to a certain submission made by one of the railroads:

> It is assumed in this presentation ... that the Crowsnest Pass rates on grain and flour have always been a burden either upon the railways or upon the shippers and consignees of other commodities.

The company's assumption in this respect is not borne out by the facts.

On page 244 of the report, referring to a formula by one railroad that sought to prove losses at the present rates, the Royal Commission said:

...it is not possible to say what might be the product of the application of some other formulae asserted to be more accurate.

With great respect I would ask the elected Government of Canada not to remove the grain growers' statutory protection. It would eventually be the end of the growing of grain for export in western Canada, and the impact on the rest of Canada would be little short of disastrous.

Perhaps the second factor in establishing the great industry of growing grain for export in western Canada is the ability and willingness of Canada to trade in the greatest possible freedom with any part of the world that will trade with it. I would, again, plead with the Government to keep and even to extend the avenues of trade that we have. The consequences of any other course are too dangerous to contemplate. One of the penalties surely would be more complete subservience to our great and friendly neighbour. Our people came to Saskatchewan to acquire independence and freedom. More than ever these are worth keeping in the world of today, and it is our solemn duty to keep them.

(Translation):

Honourable senators, my first words in French will be to express my deep appreciation to the illustrious and distinguished members of the Senate for the courtesy and kindness they have shown me. I well remember the warm welcome with which I was greeted upon entering the Senate.

You are all familar, no doubt, with the story of the great western migrations which occurred during the nineteenth century in the country of our neighbours to the South. And in our own country there were similar migrations. In 1882 our Saskatchewan pioneers left the Red River to settle with their families on the shores of the Saskatchewan River, nearly 600 miles farther on. Grouped together to facilitate the formation of parishes and to give their children a religious education, these pioneers were inspired by the spiritual values resulting from their deep faith and indomitable courage. At that time so far removed from our own, they already understood the necessity of learning the two languages of the country and they did everything they possibly could to obtain bilingual teachers.

(Text):

Honourable senators, at this threshhold of a dynamic period of progress and achievement, I would plead with the people and the responsible Government of Canada to preserve the great values of our Canadian life, so that our country shall be in the future, as it has been in the past, a land where opportunities are limited only by our own ability and industry.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 67 to 79, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-14, for the relief of Enid Grace Pascoe Dawson.

Bill SD-15, for the relief of George Barrington Redfearn.

Bill SD-16, for the relief of Shirley Veronica Hannah Groves.

Bill SD-17, for the relief of Leonia Szafarz Falk.

Bill SD-18, for the relief of Audrey Louise Bryan Sevigny.

Bill SD-19, for the relief of Janet McMillan Sim Sinclair Kerr.

Bill SD-20, for the relief of Jacqueline Joly Mazurette.

Bill SD-21, for the relief of Shirley Evelyn Ellis Bertram.

Bill SD-22, for the relief of Sally Emden Rohr.

Bill SD-23, for the relief of Barbara Steinberg Shapiro.

Bill SD-24, for the relief of Olga May Hospadaruk Edwards.

Bill SD-25, for the relief of Georgette Rosenberg Korman.

Bill SD-26, for the relief of Julianna Catharina Mehilercsik Jutras.

Bill SD-27, for the relief of Helen Kurtzman Bernard.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

ESTIMATES TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I will now table the Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is wonderful.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I wish to say it was an oversight that a copy of these estimates did not reach me before this afternoon's sitting of the Senate began. Copies have been sent to the Senate Post Office and every senator will find a copy in his mail box.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for the action he has taken in this respect.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And the promptness with which he acted.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 9, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 9, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Speaker of the Senate

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the report be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire what is the date of the Civil Service Commission's report?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There does not appear to be any date on the report except April 1, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is when it is to go into effect. I want to know the date when the report was made. . . . The report has just been handed to me and I see a date at the top, February 4, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I cannot assist my honourable friend in this.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to present 18 petitions in divorce.

Honourable senators have often expressed interest in the progress being made by the Divorce Committee, of which I have the honour to be chairman. I like to make reports from time to time so as to keep my fellow members informed.

As of February 8, petitions filed totalled 439, which is a very large docket. The number of petitions heard and recommended was 143. There are 5 petitions pending completion, which have some technicalities holding them up, otherwise the number would be 148, or just a litle over one-third of the docket as it stands today. However, as was pointed out the other day, petitioners still have until February 24 to file petitions. As of February 8 there were 283 petitions still to be considered.

I thought honourable senators might like to have these figures.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Can the honourable senator tell us how many contested petitions have been heard?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: None as yet. We have received contestation notices in about 30 cases; I cannot give you the exact number. Not long ago I reported that we had 25 such cases, but some more will have come in since then. It will be somewhere between 25 and 30 cases. Something more than 10 contested cases have already been set for trial. May I point out that we now have several lawyers on our committee. There was a time when I felt myself to be rather alone in that regard, and I heard all the contested cases by myself as chairman. Today we have no fewer than six lawyers on this committee, and I am very glad to report that they are all generous with their time. The ten or more contested cases have all been assigned to chairmen who are lawyers, and I know they will perform the task well and properly. The members of the Committee on Divorce agree that a lawyer is needed as chairman on each subcommittee hearing a contested case. I am very grateful indeed to those of my colleagues who are lawyers and who have kindly consented to chair these various hearings.

The committee has been sitting every day from Monday to Friday since the sittings commenced, and will continue to do so until next Friday. For the first time in three weeks we shall have Friday off. Commencing on Monday of next week we shall sit in the regular way on Mondays and Fridays, and the contested cases will be called on Tuesdays. So we shall have a pretty full docket.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations, Consolidated Index and Table of Amendments for the period January 1, 1955 to December 31, 1959, pursuant to the provisions of section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the administration of allowances for Blind Persons in Canada, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 12 of the Blind Persons Act, Chapter 17, R.S. 1952, and amending Statutes. (French text).

PRIVATE BILL

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-12, respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will the honourable senator please explain?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators may recall that in the session of 1958 Parliament passed an act respecting this railway company, providing for a financial reorganization of the company. It had had quite a checkered career from the financial standpoint and for a period of some more than forty years, I think, had really been under the control of the creditors. The financial reorganization was arranged in order to pay off the then existing creditors by a new issue of securities. After this was ratified by Parliament new securities were issued and the old debts were paid, and for the first time in something over forty years this company began to function under the direct control of its shareholders. At the annual meeting last year it was the shareholders who elected the directors who are now operating the company. As they have started to operate in the normal way they have found that the bylaws and the original charter under which they were incorporated 60 years ago need to be tidied up and brought up to date. This bill is for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Thursday next.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 107 to 140, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY—REFUND OF FEES

Hon. William R. Brunt, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the parliamentary fees paid upon the Bill S-8, intituled: "An Act respecting The British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada" be refunded to Messrs. Birks, Langdon & Co., Toronto, Ontario, solicitors for petitioners less printing and translation costs.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill SD-68, for the relief of Mary Pirie Wood Hunnisett.

Bill SD-69, for the relief of Marine Tony Jakovich.

Bill SD-70, for the relief of George Henderson.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

EXPENDITURES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) What is the approximate average annual level of expenditures in recent years of the Department of National Defence for civil salaries, pay and allowances for Service and Reserve personnel, travel and transportation, Service and Civilian construction, supplies, and miscellaneous expenditures for the provinces of

(a) Nova Scotia,
(b) New Brunswick,
(c) Prince Edward Island,
(d) Newfoundland.

(2) What presently are the numbers of Service and Civilian personnel of the Department of National Defence for each of the above provinces?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have received the following answer to this inquiry:

1.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

TWENTY-NATION ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) Does the report of the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on January 18 that a Twenty-Nation Economic Committee was to be set up indicate that the NATO powers have abandoned the idea that the spirit and letter of article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty should be implemented through the medium of he North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

(2) If so, did the Canadian Government concur in this decision?

(3) If so, what are to be the future activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

(4) What is the size in rooms of the new NATO building in Paris?

(5) What was the total cost?

(6) What was Canada's share of the cost?

(7) What is the size of the Canadian permanent delegation to NATO?

(8) What is the annual cost?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have received the following answer to this inquiry:

1. Article 2 of the treaty states that the "parties will contribute towards the further development of peaceful and friendly international relations by strengthening their free institutions, by bringing about a better understanding of the principles upon which these institutions are founded and by promoting conditions of stability and well-being. They will seek to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies and will encourage economic collaboration between any or all of them." A Committee of Three was appointed by NATO in 1956 "to advise the Council on ways and means to improve and extend NATO co-operation in non-military fields and to develop greater unity within the Atlantic Community". The committee's report which was approved by the NATO Council in December 1956, concluded that there should be a substantial expansion of exchange of information and views in NATO in the economic as in the political field, and suggested that such economic consultation should seek to secure a common approach on the part of member Governments where the questions are clearly related to the political and security interests of the Alliance. The report went on to state the view that "Action resulting from such a common approach however should normally be taken by Governments either directly or through other international organizations". In another part of this chapter the view was expressed that "NATO is not an appropriate agency for administering programs of assistance for economic development, or even for systematically concerting the relevant policies of member nations". In the light of the recommendations contained in that report there was established a Committee of Economic Advisers subordinate to the Council of NATO where consultation on economic problems of interest to the Alliance have been taking place as and when this seemed desirable. It seems clear, therefore, that the decisions taken at the Paris meeting imply no change in the existing pattern of consultation developed in NATO. Consideration is now being given to the possibility of replacing the existing Organization for European Economic Co-operation, in which we participate as an associate member, by a new consultative organization with new tasks, and objectives appropriate to the situation in the 1960's, in which Canada and the United States might participate as full members. Whatever may be the outcome of the studies which are being undertaken by the twenty nations, which includes all NATO members, the practice of close consultation in NATO on economic matters affecting the strength and well-being of the alliance is expected to continue.

2. Answered by 1 above.

3. Answered by 1 above.

4. (a) Total area of office building, 545,800 sq. ft.; Ancillary services and garage, 247,600 sq. ft.: Grand Total, 793,400 sq. ft.

(b) Total office space, 157,760 sq. ft.

(c) Standard size office units, 10' x 16'.

(d) Total number of office units, 986.

5. Total cost, app. $10,750,000.00.

6. Canadian share, 6.08% or $653,489.00.

7. Size of Delegation of Canada to the North Atlantic Council and to the Organization for European Economic Co-operation, 30, including Canadian and local staff.

8. Annual cost, 1958-1959—External Affairs—Operational expenditures, $300,240.00; Capital expenditures, $9,166.00; National Defence, $50,000.00; Defence Production, $30,422.00; Finance, $29,548.00.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, while we are on the subject of inquiries, may I bring a matter to the attention of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine)? I refer to the answers given on February 4, our last sitting day, to questions of which I had given notice at an earlier date. I would point out that some of those questions were in fact not answered.

My question No. 3 read:

Does classification as a "year-round" fishing vessel depend on meeting any specific standards of size? If so, what are these standards?

The answer given to that question was simply that the Unemployment Insurance Commission takes into consideration the size of the vessel. What I would like to know is what are the standards of size which might have to be met.

Question No. 5, which was not adequately answered, read:

Are fishermen, who are otherwise qualified, entitled to benefits for any week during which their actual net share received from their "employer" amounts to less than $9? If not, why not?

The answer I received referred to the earnings of the fishermen; and I think the word "earnings" was used in the context of the definition in the regulations and means the share of the gross catch after a deduction of 25 per cent. My question was with respect to the actual take-home pay of the fisherman. The question is based on some inquiries I have had from long-liner fishermen who have said their craft have been denied qualification as year-round fishing vessels because of size, and for what other reasons I do not know. A further complaint which they have brought to my attention was that they can go out on a deep-sea fishing vessel, have some bad luck with trawl, and when they come back they have nothing to share among the fishermen. Therefore, they feel the crew, under those circumstances, should be entitled to unemployment insurance for that week, if they can otherwise qualify for it.

Perhaps my honourable friend the Leader of the Government would make some further inquiry for me?

STANDING COMMITTEES

PROPOSED REFERENCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with may I direct a question to the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine)? I have not given him notice of the question, so I would not expect an immediate answer. I wonder if it is possible for some procedure to be evolved by which the estimates which were tabled on February 4 can form the basis of a discussion in this house as to the general financial position. Unless some specific action is taken honourable senators will have no opportunity of discussing this matter until, in due course, the Supply Bill based on the estimates comes to us, and that generally happens on the last day of the session. Perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government would give this some thought, and maybe consult with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), with a view to finding some method whereby the estimates in whole or in part will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, or some other method which would give the many honourable senators who are interested in the estimates an opportunity of discussing them.

I would also request the good offices of the honourable Leader of the Government for the purpose of having two committees of which I am a member, and in which I am particularly interested, in some way or other undertake activities in respect to the matters pertaining to them. One of the committees I am referring to is the Standing Committee on External Relations, and I happen to know that its chairman (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) has something in mind himself, which he mentioned to me some days ago. I am also greatly interested in the subject of trade relations, and it may be that the honourable chairman of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations (Hon. Mr. McLean) also has something in mind for consideration. I think some opportunity should be given to members of these committees to meet and discuss matters in which they are interested. Time goes by quickly, and it seems to me that we should arrange to have these committees called together soon, in order that those of us who are not directly connected with more active committees might pursue certain matters that concern us. I would appreciate the honourable leader's efforts in this direction.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will take the honourable senator's remarks under advisement.

WINDSOR HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill S-4, to amend the Windsor Harbour Commissioners Act.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time I have a few observations to make. Before I do that I would like to thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for making the verbatim report of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of February 4 available. I am not a member of that committee, and this report made it possible for me to acquaint myself with some harbour commission problems which I was not aware of. I hope that procedure will be adopted more often so that important matters will be made known to those of us who are not members of certain committees or cannot attend every committee meeting.

As I understand the present situation in this country the National Harbours Board looks after ports in the larger cities and what are called "ports of national significance". From that definition the city of Toronto and the city of New Westminster are exempted. They are well financed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are they not of national importance?

Hon. Mr. Croll: They are exempted for particular reasons, because they did their own financing. Then, there are various small harbours under the Department of Transport, and they have harbour masters who manage the traffic. There are approximately 300 public harbours and about 2,000 public wharves. The honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) put it very well when he said that the difference is that a public harbour has a harbour master and the other has a wharf master. That is about the only difference between them, and as far as I am concerned I am prepared to accept that definition.

The St. Lawrence Seaway has changed the character and concept of cities and towns on the Great Lakes. I am going to quote from the record of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Thursday, February 4. The honourable senator from Halifax North (Hon. Mr. Connolly) was the Acting Chairman. I will start at page 11, where there is a question by the Acting Chairman:

> With the increasing importance of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the consequent increase in importance of ports along that Seaway, is it contemplated that eventually these ports will come under the administration of the National Harbours Board?

Mr. Stead, Assistant Deputy Minister, Marine, replied:

> I am not aware of any present thinking along these lines, Mr. Chairman. These harbour commissions are usually set up on an appeal from the local city council, boards of trade, and that sort of thing. We welcome this initiative but there is really quite a marked difference, with the exception of Toronto and New Westminster, between the level and size of the Harbour Board ports and these others. I would not like to say what will happen in future times with respect to these various ports.

The report continues:

The Acting Chairman: I think earlier in your remarks you referred to the Gibb Report. As I recall it that report proposed that local councils should be set up at all these ports which come under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board. Are there in fact such local councils set up in the ports of, say, Montreal, Halifax, Quebec City, and Vancouver?

Mr. Stead: I do not think so. That is a matter for the National Harbours Board management and I do not feel competent to speak for them. There is a Harbours Board with a head office in Ottawa that manages them, but whether they have any consultations at the local level I am not sure.

Then Senator Connolly from Ottawa West stepped in with a question:

I do not want to be monopolizing the time of the committee but I think what was in the minds of many honourable senators who were interested in this bill and spoke about it in the house the other day, and they did so out of order for the most part, is this: with the development of the Seaway many of these ports that were formerly inland ports may now in effect become ports for the call of foreign ships, and so perhaps in respect of some of those ports they are going to have just as much business as ports on the coasts.

Now, is it going to be necessary to have some standard form of administration to prevent the kind of competition that had developed when the Gibb inquiry was made? Is there likely to be trouble develop in the Seaway because of competition from these various individual ports, one fighting with the other to get traffic? I take the example only of Hamilton and Toronto. Can that kind of thing develop to the disadvantage of trade in the Seaway?

Mr. Stead replied:

I suppose that is possible. Under the bills we have before us, and similar ones, there is power in the Government to question and, in effect, not to pass schedules of rates if they get into a price war, for example. Our principal interest is not to stifle competition between ports but rather to ensure that the revenues that they would get from the schedule of rates they propose are adequate to their responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That applies only to ports coming under the authority of the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am just reading from the record. Senator Connolly of Ottawa West went on:

There are eight ports, and of these eight I suppose Halifax, Saint John, Chicoutimi, Three Rivers, Quebec, Toronto are all in one respect or another either in the Seaway or in competition with ports in the Seaway. Then within the Seaway system itself, we have Toronto, Hamilton, Belleville, Windsor and the Lakehead and they are operated in a different way. And then we have also places like Sorel, Kingston, Port Colborne, Whitby, Port Credit, Seven Islands, Rimouski, Baie Comeau, Ste. Anne des Monts, Gaspe and other ports that are administered in a different way. In view of this, is the traffic that uses the Seaway going to run into difficulty and is this the best kind of arrangement to have—different authorities at different places?

To this Mr. Stead replied:

Perhaps I can say in reply, Mr. Chairman, that all the harbours administered directly by the Department of Transport operate under one standard set of rules, rates and so forth. As regards the others I think we must balance the advantages of having, let us say, standard rates, standard charges, against the value of having local initiative involved in these things. There is some advantage in setting up a local management that will go out after business and endeavour to play their part in developing the country generally. We have a competitive system in this country and this is one aspect of it, and we are only too happy when initiative is shown and people are willing to give their time and energy to developing their port, and if we enforce a standard set of rules on all of them the local initiative would be stifled, and one has to balance these two desiderata.

Various aspects of the legislation are dealt with in the continuing discussion, and finally at page 27, which is the next to the last page, the Acting Chairman, Senator Connolly of Halifax North, got in another word:

Getting back to the question I asked originally, and apropos of what Senator Power just said, we have the National Harbours Board administering one group of ports, and the Harbour Commission another group. What is the conflict between those two great agencies?

This question was answered by Mr. W. J. Manning, Director, Marine Works, Marine Services, who said:

They both answer to the Minister of Transport.

The Acting Chairman pointed out that the National Harbours Board is a separate organization, and the record continues:

Mr. Stead: In fact, we have a satisfactory working liaison with the National Harbours Board. I am not aware of any cases of direct conflict. I am not quite sure what you have in mind, what sort of conflict?

The Acting Chairman: You cannot predict when any of this group of ports, which your department administers, will become part of the National Harbours Board's setup, if ever.

Mr. Stead: I think this would depend on future development.

The Acting Chairman: Is it possible that one day the National Harbours Board will administer all ports in Canada?

Mr. Stead: I think in many cases there would be local objection. The tendency is for the local community to want to have a voice in governing their own affairs.

The Acting Chairman: But there were local objections before in other areas, which were overriden by Canadian authority.

Senator Power: If I may speak in support of that statement, one of the reasons for the creation of the National Harburs Board was to do away with pressure from the local harbour commissions wherein there was local representation.

The Acting Chairman: That is right.

Senator Power: One of the reasons for creating this is that they desire to have local representation, just the opposite. I would not attempt to give any judgment on the wisdom of this.

Mr. Stead: We are never free from pressure.

Honourable senators, I have read enough from the report of the committee's proceedings to indicate what was the tenor and the thought. I started out by saying that the St. Lawrence Seaway had changed the character and concept of cities and towns along the Great Lakes. Then I read that part of the report which I thought was pertinent and which indicates beyond a doubt that up to the present time there has been no change in the approach to these various ports. There has been no thinking, no policy and no action—nothing at all has been done. Obviously the smaller cities and towns along the St. Lawrence waterway are reaping the fruits of neglect. I speak to the Windsor Bill but my comments are applicable to the other harbour commissioners bills.

Here is what happens. Some port facilities are wanted in some of these smaller communities and people go out and attempt to drum up business. The businessmen say, "All right; when you get your port ready you come around and we will do some business with you". Then they go back to the municipality or to the people who are concerned and say: "We have got to build a port here. We need some money. Money is expensive. Money is tight. We have to have some financing." They are told, "Well, if you get your business we will see what we can do in the way of financing in order to make facilities available."

So, there are these people who have these harbour ideas in mind, people who have the water flowing past their door and who have the opportunity to capitalize on this natural gift and who can use the business, but who are caught in this dilemma almost to the point where the question is: which comes first, the chicken or the egg? On the one hand, they have no facilities because they have not the money; and on the other hand, because they have not the business, because the facilities are not there. The result is that only the larger cities have these port facilities. Last year the city of Toronto had a rise of 28 per cent in shipping. Montreal had 20 per cent increase in shipping facilities. Halifax had a record year. It is said that they have the best facilities—

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It has the best longshoremen, and has diverted a good deal of trade from New York. The Honourable Senator Isnor has been speaking for Halifax in the Senate council, and that helps, too. As a matter of fact, Cornwall, Prescott and Kingston have all suffered as a result of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Can the honourable senator give us the increase for Halifax?

Hon. Mr. Croll: My memorandum says it had a record year, which means the best year it has ever had.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I wonder if the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) is satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think the increase was about 11 per cent last year. Of course, I am never satisfied; I always hope that we can do better.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I admire your frankness.

Hon. Mr. Croll: When we speak of Toronto and Montreal, we speak of $50 million installations. Hamilton is spending $5 million this year. The larger cities are spending like mad in order to promote the very best harbour facilities. The little places could also provide good harbour facilities, but they just have not got enough money to get into this business, and that is unfortunate. The result is that these larger communities are becoming richer and the smaller communities are staying poor. What these smaller communities need is the know-how, and they can only get it from the National Harbours Board. They have the administrative capacity. They need credit, and they need their potentialities assessed, and also need capital investment.

I notice that the member for Hamilton, speaking in the House of Commons on February 2 last, said that his city had been very fortunate in what it had received for port facilities grants and assistance in dredging and in recent loans. I am not envious at all of Hamilton for getting these things—I don't see why it shouldn't—but I find there are a very large number of smaller ports along the way that could use free grants, dredging facilities and credit for the purpose of building the ports up.

Let me give an example, one that I think will be appreciated. Here is the city of Windsor. Flowing past it is the Detroit River, one of the great and beautiful rivers in the world, with more traffic passing its front door than passes through the Suez and the Panama canals combined. That city seems to suffer from chronic unemployment. I noticed this morning, on the financial page of the Montreal Gazette, as I have no doubt others did, that the Ford Motor Company had a record year in 1958—more cars, more production, more profit—but still there are 10,000 unemployed in that city. There is a city that could use a port and provide some facilities. It could provide considerable employment and business. On the other side of the river, in Detroit, boats were lined up last year awaiting their turn, yet there were no facilities on the Windsor side at all.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is there not a port at Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Croll: There are some private facilities. They are trying to establish a good port. What they need is dredging and harbour facilities, and they also need capital investment. It is all a question of how quick a boat can turn around. They want to know how good the facilities are. Even if a port is small it has got to be good. But nothing is being done, as indicated by the Assistant Deputy Minister, Marine, and the result is that each day they are falling behind the time table for the needs of the Seaway. The city of Toronto, a great port, has a representative in the city of New York. Some of you may know him—Louis W. Byrne, who opened an office for the purpose of drumming up business. He is a shipping authority. Toronto can afford to do these things, and as a matter of fact it does. I have said that Detroit's facilities are jammed, and it is building as quickly as it can to make adequate provision to meet tomorrow's needs.

On the other hand, we are doing nothing in Canada, just absolutely nothing, to help these people benefit from one of the great, imaginative undertakings in this country. The St. Lawrence waterway was not built for Montreal or Toronto or Hamilton, but for all of us, and it was built in order that others may benefit if they provide the facilities. There is no reason why facilities should not be made available for these other smaller places. I do not suggest heavy expense, but they need money, they need credit, they need facilities, and they cannot get them. The municipalities cannot afford it, money is too hard to get, it is too expensive, and their credit is already extended. Unless they can provide facilities immediately we are going to find the show will be over before they can get into it. In some of these cities, such as Windsor and Oshawa, business is good, yet they have a lot of unemployment. Unfortunately the very nature of the automobile industry lends itself to fluctuations in employment. Both the workers and the employers are trying to avoid that. The companies do not like it any more than the workers do, but they say it is not possible to avoid it, because of the habits we have created for ourselves in seasonally buying motor cars. Good ports in those places could mean a stable income for them and could mean year-round employment. That is the kind of investment that we could afford to make in these municipalities where capital investment is needed.

We talk about unemployment in this country today, but unemployment is centred in places like Windsor, Quebec City, some parts of Cape Breton, and in other areas. If we can create capital investment and help industry in those communities we shall be doing something useful. As a matter of fact, capital investment in such communities should receive our attention. When we have an opportunity such as this I do not think we ought to miss it. The time for action is now.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I do not propose to discuss the claims of Windsor, but the other evening when this bill was up for third reading, I asked a question that had to do with the matter of costs to the federal treasury. I have read the report of the committee's proceedings and note that that point was not touched upon in the discussion. I must confess that my knowledge of this business of creating harbour boards by special acts of Parliament is rather sketchy, and in the case of Oshawa and Nanaimo, particularly, I am desirous of knowing whether or not the creation of a harbour commission will impose any additional burden upon the treasury. If it will we should have pretty clearly before us the compelling reasons that make the legislation necessary.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do honourable senators wish me to answer that question now, or does someone else wish to speak on the bill? I understand if I speak now I will close the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator merely answers the question, that will not have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I referred the inquiry made by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) to the Department of Transport and I have received from it a written answer, which I propose to read, so that it can be placed on Hansard. It is as follows:

First of all, it would be difficult to determine whether any increase in expenditure that might have been observed after a commission was formed was attributable to the formation of the commission as such or to other factors such as the growth of the port. It might also be that any such increases in expenditure should have occurred, anyway, as a result of past growth of the port had the means (that is, the kind of local administration normally provided by commissions) been available.

Harbour commissions are usually sponsored by serious-minded local groups such as Boards of Trade, and the department feels that this sponsorship should be taken seriously. We feel that with this sponsorship there is some likelihood that interested local business men will support the work of the harbour commission when formed and give it meaning and vigour. This does not mean that the department accepts all such petitions from boards of trade and the like, and rejections have occurred when there is not a significant harbour interest for such a commission to administer. The tests here may include the amount of revenue being received from Government facilities existing or likely to exist in the port being inadequate to cover the costs of having a local commission; also, the amount of property available for development on the waterfront can be a factor.

Even if the costs of administering a port by a small local commission are higher than they would be under departmental management, this is unlikely to have much effect on users of the port as harbour charges must be competitive. Moreover, the department believes that there is an offsetting advantage by way of the local interest and initiative that is more likely to be forthcoming with local management than with centralized management operating from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, honourable senators, that is a reply that will require some thought. I notice my honourable friend is smiling. If he could explain what that reply means I would be very grateful to him.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: You will have to take legal training.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is about as clear as mud.

Hon. Mr. Power: It will have to be dug up and dredged at Government expense.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My question was a very simple one. Surely when we pass legislation setting up a harbour board in a city like Oshawa we should have some knowledge of what the proceeding may involve for the treasury.

I am well aware of the fact that in many small places—I am not including Oshawa in this description—in many places where harbour boards are set up the expectation is that the expense of a few harbour commissioners and probably an office and a stenographer will be met from local revenues that accrue to the board, but if the local revenues are not sufficient to cover the expenses of the newly-created board, does it then fall back upon the federal treasury? I submit that in setting up a harbour board, even in a city like Oshawa, we surely should have some idea of what it may ultimately cost the treasury. I do not like these open-end commitments which leave the matter for determination wholly in the future, because under these circumstances the temptation is always strong upon communities which think they require a harbour to set in process the machinery to get one.

Honourable senators, I must say that I think the answer which the honourable senator has supplied the house, and which he tells us has come from the Department of Transport, is wholly inadequate.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I may say to the honourable senator that I will inquire from the Department of Transport just how much, if any, money has been paid out by the department over say the past 10 years to each harbour commission to cover deficits.

When the matter was before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, one of the experts was asked if the Government ever had to guarantee bonds for one of these local commissions, and the answer was no. Personally, I doubt very much if any great sum has been paid out, but I will obtain the information and give it to the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Just on the matter of guaranteeing bonds, my memory may be at fault but I think in some instances in the past harbour boards have issued bonds which have been taken up by the Government. They then became an obligation of the Government. Will my honourable friend inquire into that also when seeking the information he just mentioned a moment ago?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, in so far as the port of New Westminster is concerned I may say that the Government did build an elevator many years ago and bonds were issued to cover the cost of it. I might say also that the New Westminster port authorities have always paid the interest up to date.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Apropos of the inquiry by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), and to the suggestion that the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) check with the Department of Transport, it could well be that some of these expenditures would be found in some other department, such as the Department of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not undertake to check all Government departments.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No doubt there are other expenditures in connection with harbours which come under the Department of Public Works. For instance, all the dredging in connection with this harbour will be paid by that department. Everything done in connection with harbours operated by commissions is a charge on the treasury, with the exception only of works on the land. If it is necessary to put up another lighthouse, or to add more signals or buoys of any kinds, such expense is not borne by the commission, but by the Government, through the Department of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is true whether the harbour is under a local commission or the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is so. But when a commission is set up the harbour is enlarged, and there is no doubt in the case of Oshawa, and other places where harbours are being established, that the cost of maintenance after a commission has been set up will be more than at the present time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Brunt, seconded by the Honourable Senator

Emerson, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Subject to the getting of the information requested.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will get it, if it is available.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

OSHAWA HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill S-5, to incorporate the Oshawa Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before this bill passes I would like to say a few words about the work of the committee. In the first place, I think we are indebted to the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Brunt) for the kind of witnesses he produced before the committee on the consideration of this and the two similar bills we have before us. The witnesses who appeared know the business conducted in these ports, and the kind of administration that has gone on.

If I have a criticism to make about the material that has come to us in connection with the seaway, it is that the question that has not been answered deals with the overall policy in respect of the administration of these ports in the Seaway system. As the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) indicated by quotations he read from the record of the committee proceedings, there are in the seaway system three different authorities operating. First, we have the National Harbours Board administering ports like Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec and Chicoutimi. Next, we have public harbours being administered under the authority of the Department of Transport. And finally, we have the individually incorporated, so to speak, harbour commissions, which operate ports at such places as Belleville, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, the Lakehead, and now one at Oshawa.

The committee referred a number of times to a report made before 1936 by Sir Alexander Gibb, which is now referred to as the Gibb Report. That report resulted in the establishment in 1936 of the National Harbours Board to take over seven national ports. The reasons given for the recommendations made in the Gibb Report, as stated in the House of Commons when the National Harbours Board bill came before Parliament for consideration, were many and varied. It found that local pressures were making administration in one port different from that in another, when these great national harbours were under the administration of local harbour commissioners. It found that in some cases excessive building was going on. It found that the accounting procedures were not the same in all ports, and that there was cut-throat competition in respect of rates. It said the country must face the difficulty of changing local administration, once it has been established.

Honourable senators, I now say, and I agree with the honourable senator from Toronto Spadina, that the concept of the seaway for the eastern end of this country is a very great concept. It is one that has involved bold imagination and great planning; and I think in the administration of the seaway the same kind of imagination and planning should be applied to the development of facilities within that great system. I think there should be the very best of administration in all of the port facilities, and this will probably result in a reduction in cost of the facilities to be operated there. Further, I think it will make for orderly progress if an overall policy for the development of these ports is undertaken.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable senator a question? Does he advocate that all the ports on the St. Lawrence should come under the control of the National Harbours Board?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Certainly I as an individual senator am not in a position to say that all these ports should be under the National Harbours Board. But I do think that when facilities have to be developed in the seaway system they should be developed in accordance with a policy that will apply to the entire system, so that there will be no duplication of services or excessive spending. In that way I think the great advantages which can flow from the system will be available for all people who are affected by the installation of the seaway system.

The one impression that I got from listening to the discussion in committee last week was, whether you make it a policy or whether the Government decides to announce a policy, I think it is necessary to point out the need for an overall policy, as a result of the information we received.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the third reading of Bill S-10, to incorporate the Nanaimo Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, other speakers have been given some leeway with respect to the subject under discussion, and I would like to make a few brief remarks following along the line of thought expressed by the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly).

Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent in creating these ports along the St. Lawrence Seaway, and I think they should be subject to the same rules and regulations as are the other ports governed by the National Harbours Board. I have in mind particularly the matter of rates. Some of the ports mentioned are close to the central manufacturing sections of Canada, the population of which represents 40 or 42 per cent of the total population of this country. All the industrial life is there, and it is only right that those ports should be used in every possible way. It is only natural and human, I suppose, for the manufacturers to use them whenever it is possible to do so. But, in view of those facts, I think there has been a certain amount of discrimination. I hesitate to use that word "discrimination", but the fact remains that the ports on the east coast are at a disadvantage so far as shipping manufactured articles is concerned, because of the closeness of those recently created ports on the St. Lawrence to the manufacturing centres. Those ports have been established as a result of a very large expenditure of money by the people of Canada. I have nothing in mind to suggest at the moment, but serious consideration should be given to providing some means whereby the eastern ports can be allowed a shipping rate which will compensate them for the advantage that the central Canadian ports enjoy, which advantage was made possible by this large expenditure I have mentioned.

I am drawing this to the attention of the honourable Leader of the Government in the hope that it might bring forth fruit—that some special consideration will be given to those two large ports in the east, namely, the port of Halifax and the port of Saint John.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-14, for the relief of Enid Grace Pascoe Dawson.

Bill SD-15, for the relief of George Barrington Redfearn.

Bill SD-16, for the relief of Shirley Veronica Hannah Groves.

Bill SD-17, for the relief of Leonia Szafarz Falk.

Bill SD-18, for the relief of Audrey Louise Bryan Sevigny.

Bill SD-19, for the relief of Janet McMillan Sim Sinclair Kerr.

Bill SD-20, for the relief of Jacqueline Joly Mazurette.

Bill SD-21, for the relief of Shirley Evelyn Ellis Bertram.

Bill SD-22, for the relief of Sally Emden Rohr.

Bill SD-23, for the relief of Barbara Steinberg Shapiro.

Bill SD-24, for the relief of Olga May Hospadaruk Edwards.

Bill SD-25, for the relief of Georgette Rosenberg Korman.

Bill SD-26, for the relief of Julianna Catharina Mehilercsik Jutras.

Bill SD-27, for the relief of Helen Kurtzman Bernard.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 4, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, may I, first of all congratulate the mover and seconder of this motion upon their eloquence. I would also like, in a humble way, to extend my sincere welcome to the three new senators who are taking their places here for the first time.

I wish briefly to discuss Canada's health and welfare program. I do not seek to direct any excessive attention to this program, but I hope to point out some ways in which it may more adequately serve the needs of the people of Canada. Most of us here will recall the days when sheer poverty and dire distress were at the mercy of charity of a municipal stature. Early in the century it was clear that the municipalities were unable, in some cases even unwilling, to provide properly for the welfare and needs of the people. The imposition of high income tax has dried up charity in this particular respect, and that is very unfortunate. All down through the ages charity has been considered one of the cardinal virtues. People who can should help those who are in need. That is good for both parties. To apply a quotation from the classics:

It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown.

When one reads the British North America Act one wonders how the Government could get into a welfare program. It happened in this way. Just before the First World War, as a result of repeated crop failures many of the farmers in the west were in desperate straits. The federal and provincial Governments provided them with food, seed grain and fodder for their stock, in return for mortgages. Now, as I understand it, a mortgage given under such conditions means the death grip; certainly it has meant the death grip for many of those farmers. It was hard to get money on the farm. The average income was supposed to be about $1,200, and many farmers had much less than that. Many who were never able to repay the advances found that when they moved away they could not sell their property because of the mortgages against them and the interest that had accumulated. This turned out to be very unfortunate.

Just recently another calamity has been visited upon the farmers in the northern part of the western provinces. If the grain that lies underneath the ice and snow at the present time is destroyed I do hope that the federal Government will be lenient in collecting on those advances.

The federal and provincial Governments definitely got into the welfare business in 1927. It was then that they established the system of old age pensions. Then came the thirties, with the depression, accompanied by despair and all the ruinous conditions of that time. Dust storms and drought reduced production to little or nothing, and what was produced would not bring a fair price. Wheat sold at 26 cents a bushel, beef at 1½ cents per pound on the hoof, eggs at 10 cents a dozen, and so on.

Once again relief was needed and the federal Parliament, in order to rehabilitate these drought areas, passed the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Under that act some 51,691 dugouts, stock-watering reservoirs and small irrigation schemes, were constructed. The dominion provided the services of the civil engineers and the surveyors, and paid about half the cost of moving every cubic yard of earth that was moved. Then it was found, of course, that large irrigation schemes were needed. It was relatively easy to harness the water and streams running down the east slope of the Rockies. The dominion Government donated the cost of putting in these large reservoirs and the main connecting canals. It spent about $67½ million on this work and about 1¼ million acres or more of land were irrigated. So, relief was given to those living close to the irrigated land; but there were others on dry land, and to assist them the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was passed. Under this act, if the yield was less than four bushels per acre the farmer could get $2.50 per acre up to 200 acres. If the yield was four to eight bushels per acre he could get $1.50 up to 200 acres. In that way relief was given to these people.

In 1943 the Beveridge Report was published. Lord Beveridge came here and in the Railway Committee Rooms of the other house he explained his system for more equal distribution of the wealth of Canada. Then the Marsh Report on Social Security in Canada was published. These two reports were followed by the Hagerty Report on health insurance.

Faced with these things the Government of the day committed itself to social security in a rather big way. The amount of old age pensions was increased. Family allowances were instituted. Generous donations were given to assist in the building of hospitals all over the country, and special grants were made for the fight against tuberculosis, polio and diseases of that kind. More important than all, right at that time the Government set up the Department of National Health and Welfare, a department which has turned out to be very efficient in looking after nutrition, pure food, drug adulteration, drug addiction and things of that kind.

Since then the Old Age Assistance Act has been passed for those who qualify under the means test. Legislation has been enacted providing pensions for people between 65 and 70, widows, blind persons, and disabled persons. The provinces have continued their plan of mothers' allowances, and of course soldiers still get pensions through the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The question arises: have we a welfare state in Canada? The best definition of a welfare state that I could find was, a country in which the Government had assumed responsibility for the economic and social happiness of the people. We have gone a long way along that trail. Probably we are not able to go farther at present but at least it is time we reviewed the whole system to see if it is working out in the best interests of all.

We all realize that what makes life dreary and dull is lack of motive, and nothing is so destructive of human morale as idleness. As has been mentioned tonight, thousands of people find themselves unemployed during some seasons of the year. I do not believe that any Government can completely cure this condition. It is industry which provides employment in a big way. Many people who are unfortunate enough to be out of work draw unemployment insurance. Some of them get seasonal employment by doing inside repair jobs that have been reserved for the winter months. Employees should save up for the rainy day which comes when they find themselves unemployed.

I suggest there should be less discrimination against men over 45 years of age when seeking employment. In New York state there is a law which forbids such discrimination, and it works out fairly well. There is less absenteeism and less labour turnover among men over 45; they show more judgment and loyalty, and employers are able to adjust pension plans pretty well.

Honourable senators, there are a great many men and women in this country who have passed beyond the working years who need some thought and attention. Many of them like to live in their own homes. We have lots of welfare workers. In England welfare workers visit older people in their homes and look after their cleanliness, their clothing, their health, and even cook meals for them once or twice a week. All that is very much appreciated. Homes for the aged should be built in local areas so that friends and relatives of the aged can visit them, and make their lives a little brighter and happier. Alberta has a pretty good scheme; it is building homes for the elderly people, one or two homes in every constituency in the province, because there will be more aged people as times go on. Aging is a wearing out of the tissues, with difficulty in restoration. There comes a time in the lives of all of us when nature no longer rebuilds and replaces the fibres and tissues that are worn out. It is a continuous process. Some of us try to think that it is not noticeable, but it is usually a noticeable process, and it is as relentless as the passing of time itself. There is no escape. There is no elixir of life, no medicine to prevent aging, and no remedy which will rejuvenate. We are therefore faced with this problem, and will be faced with it more and more as time goes on; we must prepare for it and make the best of it. The way to live a long time is to live a lot while you are living. There is much to be said for moderately active existence, because it adds years to life and adds, life and interest to the years. Of course, by making use of the knowledge we have, sickness and accident can be and is prevented in a great many cases. In the time of the Roman Empire the expectation of life was about 23 years. Then gradually on into the nineteenth century it extended slowly. In 1900 it was 47 years. In 1930 it jumped to 60 years, and now it is about 68 years for men and 72 years for women.

The point I wish to stress is this: The expectation of life for men and women over 45 has not correspondingly increased. We still have the degenerative diseases with us. Let us look at the list of the causes of death in a year: Heart disease, 33 per cent; cancer, 16 per cent; vascular lesions, 11 per cent. These are the captains of the men of death, and it is to these that attention and thought should be given. For instance, it is pretty clearly proved that excessive smoking of cigarettes and inhalation of exhaust fumes account for the increase in cancer of the lung in recent years. Yet how many people are convinced of that, and how many pay attention to it? Again, experiments seem to prove that eating excessively of animal fats increases cholestrol in the blood and leads to thickening of the arterial walls. Of course, more experimentation is needed here. We know that the human system is susceptible to 151 different viruses, that these viruses cause the common cold, pneumonia, epidemics of influenza, polio, and perhaps nervous diseases, yet we have very little protection against these viruses because not enough is known about them.

Another point I wish to make is this. Do people realize the tragic effect of worry, fear, anger, anxiety, emotional upsets and excesses of every kind upon the clotting time of the blood and the liability to vascular accidents? In fact, as someone has said, it is the kick of the favourite horse that kills—too much to eat, too much to drink, too much work, too much play. We spend a lot of time and money on saving the life of the condemned murderer, and I am all for it, but if we spent as much time and thought on some of these diseases we could save the lives of a great many people.

My fifth point is that a great deal can be done to prevent death by violent accidents. After every weekend we hear of motor accidents and deaths. In the city of Medicine Hat, with a population of 22,000, with narrow streets, and lots of automobiles, there has not been a fatal motor accident for more than five years. This is not only a Canadian record, it is a North American record. It has been accomplished because the police are alerted, because they have the co-operation of the television and radio authorities, as well as of the newspapers and the people generally.

Honourable senators, I believe that the social welfare system we have in Canada has brought happiness and contentment to many Canadian people. I believe it has caused a steady demand for goods and services which helps out in an economic way, and I believe that when the opportunity is favourable Canada will go forward rather than backward along these lines. However, I must say that in Canada we do not need any form or system of state medicine. I am quite convinced of that. Sixty per cent of the people are now protected against disaster by prepayment plans for hospital and medical care. Those who cannot join such a plan can always be assured that the hospitals and the medical profession in Canada will see that they do not suffer for lack of attention, and will provide the best attention whether they have the money to pay for it or not.

In closing, I want to say that last summer I attended a medical convention in Edinburgh. At one of the meetings a large theatre was filled by thousands of doctors from all over the commonwealth. All attention was centered on one eminent specialist, who was speaking freely from the knowledge he had gained. The speaker who received all that recognition, and very great applause, was none other than our confrère, the Honourable Senator Sullivan.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Sullivan, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

MONTREAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gustave Monette moved the second reading of Bill S-11, respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company.

He said:

(Translation):

Honourable senators, I have much pleasure in sponsoring this bill. It is not difficult to understand; the principle only requires a brief explanation.

The company, which bears an English name, wishes to secure a legal translation of its name, so that it will be known under both names and may do business throughout the country under either. That is provided in section 1.

Section 2 provides that these new powers dealing with the translation of its name shall not in any way impair its rights or liabilities.

(Text):

I have great pleasure in moving the second reading of this bill, and I feel quite proud in doing so. Toward the end of last session a similar bill was passed by this house, but it was to authorize the reverse procedure. It was a bill in which our honourable colleague from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt) was interested. The name of the company was L'Assurance-Vie Desjardins, and among other powers the bill asked for authorization to translate the French name of the company into its corresponding English version and to use both names, all for the purpose, presumably, of doing a more extensive business, as this company expects to do.

The desire to use the name of the company in both languages is a sign of the times. It indicates a growing understanding between the two peoples in Canada through the diffusion of the two languages.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Secondly, there is, not only in the minds of the owners of great enterprises, but in the minds of their clients as well, a feeling that it is a good thing to have sales representatives who can do business in either the French or English language.

I think this bill, like the one I mentioned which passed last year, marks a happy time in our history.

(Translation):

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Do you not think it would be advisable, in the title of the bill, which reads "An Act respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company" to add: "La Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie de Montréal"?

Hon. Mr. Monette: It is a question of procedure with which I am not familar. The bill is introduced on behalf of the company as it exists at present. Its name will be officially translated as soon as the bill has been passed. It seems to me that those who drafted the bill should not be blamed for having introduced it under the only existing name.

(Text):

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I ask the sponsor of the bill if he ever looked into this aspect of the matter? When a public statute goes into the Statutes in English the title of the act is stated in that language, and in the French version of the statute the title is translated into French. I take it that this is not the practice in the case of private bills. I wonder if there is any special reason why in the case of a private bill the title is not official in both languages, other than perhaps the fact that in a private bill a company is given a name and that name must be in the language in which the application is made. Does this mean that if a petition comes to this house in French the name of the company must be in French from then on, and if a petition comes in English the name of the company must always be in English?

I do not ask the honourable gentleman for an answer just now, but I think there is a difference between a public and a private bill in this respect, and I wonder why that should be.

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, it is gratifying to feel how much enlightenment one can receive by listening to another.

While the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) was putting his question I was thinking of what reply I could make. In the private bill incorporating this company the name given was in the English language, and therefore the legal name of the company is an English name. If this bill passes, the company will then have two official names, one French and the other English. As to the effect of translating into French a name expressed in English, I am sure the honourable senator could give a better explanation than I, in view of his experience and qualifications in these matters.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I presume this bill has been printed in both languages. I have before me only the English version, and I would like to know what the company's name is in the French translation.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I have not a copy of the bill in the French language, so I am very sorry not to be able to answer the question of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 80 to 106, which were presented on Thursday, February 4.

On motion of Hon Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-28, for the relief of Barbara Jean Gillies Harris Cooke.

Bill SD-29, for the relief of Evelyn Annie Macleod Vaillancourt.

Bill SD-30, for the relief of Erwin Thomas Steppan.

Bill SD-31, for the relief of Donald Snowdon.

Bill SD-32, for the relief of Mary Nisbet Clements.

Bill SD-33, for the relief of John Thomas Francis White.

Bill SD-34, for the relief of Helen Frances Estelle Kearney Freeman.

Bill SD-35, for the relief of Joseph Alphonse Yves Jean Gabriel Lalonde.

Bill SD-36, for the relief of Omer Therrien.

Bill SD-37, for the relief of Helen Elisabeth Millar Ramshaw.

Bill SD-38, for the relief of Marie Rita Dube Hould.

Bill SD-39, for the relief of Stella Jean Margaret Newman Lamartine.

Bill SD-40, for the relief of Larry Orsa.

Bill SD-41, for the relief of Margaret Estelle Eleanor Evans Lanese.

Bill SD-42, for the relief of Brenda Mary Pardy Thacker.

Bill SD-43, for the relief of Jean Brasgold Martz.

Bill SD-44, for the relief of Lily Schucher Cohen.

Bill SD-45, for the relief of Anna Margaret Laurie Cannon Stevenson.

Bill SD-46, for the relief of Glafira Milczyn Sohn, otherwise known as Vera Milczyn Sohn.

Bill SD-47, for the relief of Militza Anich Racette.

Bill SD-48, for the relief of Joan Emily Wills Meehan.

Bill SD-49, for the relief of Roger Vermette.

Bill SD-50, for the relief of Rose Vosko Ribkoff.

Bill SD-51, for the relief of Vivian Phyllis Steine Skolnik.

Bill SD-52, for the relief of John Gilbert Oakley.

Bill SD-53, for the relief of Eard Bernard Lapierre.

Bill SD-54, for the relief of George William Douglas Edmonds.

Bill SD-55, for the relief of Marie Rose Nicola Lapenna McLaughlin.

Bill SD-56, for the relief of Delema Grace Mullin Simon.

Bill SD-57, for the relief of Earle James Andrew Aspell.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 10, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN REASSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson presented Bill S-13, respecting the Canadian Reassurance Company .

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Tuesday next.

CANADA-NETHERLANDS INCOME TAX AGREEMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-2, to amend the Canada-Netherlands Income Tax Agreement Act, 1957, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the hurry?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There is no hurry.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED CANADA INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-7, to incorporate United Canada Insurance Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Monette, that this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have no objection to this bill's being read the third time now, but I think it is a very bad practice to have bills read a third time on the day that they are reported from committee. However, I wish to assure honourable senators that I take no objection in this particular instance.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, we often heard a protest against this practice from the lips of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when he was sitting on the Opposition side of the house. I should like to know how he reconciles the views he held then with the views he holds now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would like to add a word. I have frequently asked that divorce bills be read the third time on the same day that they were given second reading. However, I think they are rather in a class by themselves. The passing of divorce bills is mere routine in processing the work of a judicial committee, and I do not apologize for doing so. But legislation such as we are dealing with now is in a different class. I am very firmly of the opinion expressed by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). This is not the first time I have taken this stand. I have done so over and over again, when the previous Government was in power as well as during the period that the present Government has been in office. There was no earthly reason why we should have passed the preceding bill today. We could have waited and observed the rules, the proprieties. I think we ought to do that in this case and in every case except when there is a reason for doing otherwise, and then that reason should be explained to us.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, would the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) tell us what the urgency is?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is not my bill; I have nothing to do with it. It is a private bill.

Hon. Mr. Méthot: Honourable senators, I am not pressing for the third reading at this sitting. I will withdraw my motion, and move instead that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 141 to 152.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, I move that they be considered at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Haig: This goes both ways. I object.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is perfectly all right for anyone to object. But do not think I have any axe to grind in this matter—I am only trying to do the job that falls upon me as chairman of the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, under the rules these reports may be considered at the next sitting. Therefore, leave of the Senate for their consideration at that time is not required.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I requested leave of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I object to the giving of leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: No leave is required.

Motion for consideration next sitting agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill SD-71, for the relief of Jean Ludger Villeneuve.

Bill SD-72, for the relief of Robert Marcel Castets.

Bill SD-73, for the relief of Sarah Mary Shirley Collins Stewart.

Bill SD-74, for the relief of Stella Jean Dunn Breitman.

Bill SD-75, for the relief of Klari Margo Farkas Bodo.

Bill SD-76, for the relief of Vera Eileen Rath Croucher.

Bill SD-77, for the relief of Rena Kanofsky Perzow.

Bill SD-78, for the relief of Pearl Thorne Chipman.

Bill SD-79, for the relief of Joan Ethel Brooks Clarke.

Bill SD-80, for the relief of Ann Aaron Regenstrief.

Bill SD-81, for the relief of Eleanor Agnes Overall Cannon.

79955-1—9

Bill SD-82, for the relief of Betty Zaracoff Ferstenfeld.

Bill SD-83, for the relief of Kenneth Alan MacKenzie.

Bill SD-84, for the relief of Honoria Evelyn Day Matthew.

Bill SD-85, for the relief of Rene Georges Clement.

Bill SD-86, for the relief of Mary Eva Sheila Redmond Beards.

Bill SD-87, for the relief of Geraldine Anne Mary McElligott Parsons.

Bill SD-88, for the relief of William Gordon Jack.

Bill SD-89, for the relief of Eileen Coates MacPherson.

Bill SD-90, for the relief of Maria Lozinsky Truby.

Bill SD-91, for the relief of Willie Pomerleau.

Bill SD-92, for the relief of Patricia Frances Turley Raustis.

Bill SD-93, for the relief of Mary Jean Olive De Vouge Tremblay.

Bill SD-94, for the relief of Dorothy May Vallis Odell.

Bill SD-95, for the relief of Jimmy D'Abate.

Bill SD-96, for the relief of Mary Semenyshyn Shuch, otherwise known as Mary Semenyshyn Shuck.

Bill SD-97, for the relief of Monique Bauset Malo.

Bills read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: On division.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IMPORTS FROM JAPAN AND OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) What procedure does the Government follow in arranging with such countries as Japan to limit their exports to Canada?

(2) Is it a verbal agreement and, if so, who makes the agreement?

(3) If it is a result of correspondence, will the Government table copies of the correspondence?

(4) What particular exports to Canada does it apply to?

(5) What is given or implied to induce exporters to voluntarily limit their exports to Canada?

(6) Are any other similar arrangements contemplated and, if so, with what countries, and covering what products?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have received the following answer to this inquiry:

(1) Japan maintains restraints on its exports to Canada of cotton fabrics, some cotton garments and other cotton products, a number of spun rayon garments, braided elastics, stainless steel flatware, and hardwood plywood. The purpose of these restraints is to avoid disruption of the Canadian market and serious damage to Canadian producers of these commodities. Some of the measures were introduced by Japan, acting entirely on its own; others followed consultations between representatives of the two Governments. It should be noted that article 6 of our 1954 Trade Agreement with Japan provides that both countries will give sympathetic consideration to representations made by the other on matters of trade. Article XXII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, to which both countries subscribe, also provides for consultation on problems arising out of the operation of the agreement.

Representations by the Canadian Government have been confined to situations where damage has occurred to Canadian industry as a result of a large and sudden influx of particular Japanese products. The Japanese Government has usually been willing to adopt export restraints in such cases. In no case has it been necessary for Canada to impose restrictions of its own.

(2) Consultations are carried on between representatives of the Canadian and Japanese Governments. Both the consultations and the arrangements which result from them are verbal. In August 1959 the two Governments announced the result of one important series of consultations by means of simultaneous press releases in Ottawa and Tokyo.

(3) Answered in the reply to Question (2).

(4) Answered in the reply to Question (1).

(5) The Government of Japan and exporters in that country accept the principle that it is in their own interest to avoid disruption of Canadian markets. They recognize that their long-term position in exporting to Canada will best be served by orderly trading practices. The Japanese are therefore willing to apply restraints on the exports of particular products to Canada when they are convinced that such measures are necessary to ensure orderly participation in our markets for these goods.

(6) The Canadian Government examines trade problems as they arise and seeks solutions which are appropriate to the circumstances of each case. While the Government always tries to anticipate difficulties and to be ready for them should they occur, it is not possible to predict future policy with respect to these matters.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE ON GOVERNMENT ADVANCES

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) How is the size of the interest rate determined that is charged by the Government for moneys advanced to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

(2) How often is the rate changed?

(3) When was the last change made?

(4) What is the present rate?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

1. The interest charged by the Government on moneys advanced to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is based on the approximate cost of Government borrowing.

2. The recent practice has been to review the rate and amend it, if necessary, every six months.

3. October 1, 1959.

4. 5¾ per cent.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-28, for the relief of Barbara Jean Gillies Harris Cooke.

Bill SD-29, for the relief of Evelyn Annie Macleod Vaillancourt.

Bill SD-30, for the relief of Erwin Thomas Steppan.

Bill SD-31, for the relief of Donald Snowdon.

Bill SD-32, for the relief of Mary Nisbet Clements.

Bill SD-33, for the relief of John Thomas Francis White.

Bill SD-34, for the relief of Helen Frances Estelle Kearney Freeman.

Bill SD-35, for the relief of Joseph Alphonse Yves Jean Gabriel Lalonde.

Bill SD-36, for the relief of Omer Therrien.

Bill SD-37, for the relief of Helen Elisabeth Millar Ramshaw.

Bill SD-38, for the relief of Marie Rita Dube Hould.

Bill SD-39, for the relief of Stella Jean Margaret Newman Lamartine.

Bill SD-40, for the relief of Larry Orsa.

Bill SD-41, for the relief of Margaret Estelle Eleanor Evans Lanese.

Bill SD-42, for the relief of Brenda Mary Pardy Thacker.

Bill SD-43, for the relief of Jean Brasgold Martz.

Bill SD-44, for the relief of Lily Schucher Cohen.

Bill SD-45, for the relief of Anna Margaret Laurie Cannon Stevenson.

Bill SD-46, for the relief of Glafira Milczyn Sohn, otherwise known as Vera Milczyn Sohn.

Bill SD-47, for the relief of Militza Anich Racette.

Bill SD-48, for the relief of Joan Emily Wills Meehan.

Bill SD-49, for the relief of Roger Vermette.

Bill SD-50, for the relief of Rose Vosko Ribkoff.

Bill SD-51, for the relief of Vivian Phyllis Steine Skolnik.

Bill SD-52, for the relief of John Gilbert Oakley.

Bill SD-53, for the relief of Eard Bernard Lapierre.

Bill SD-54, for the relief of George William Douglas Edmonds.

Bill SD-55, for the relief of Marie Rose Nicola Lapenna McLaughlin.

Bill SD-56, for the relief of Delema Grace Mullin Simon.

Bill SD-57, for the relief of Earle James Andrew Aspell.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, in rising to speak to you today I hope it is not too late for one to extend very sincere congratulations to the mover (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Blois) of an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne for their most gracious speeches in opening this debate.

I would be remiss at this time if I did not thank my honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for affording me the privilege of participating in this debate. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my esteemed colleague from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) for the kind remarks he made yesterday pertaining to an occasion at Edinburgh in which I took part. However, honourable senators, I consider that his kind reference pertained not so much to an honour to myself as it did to an honour to Canadian medicine and this venerable chamber to which I have the privilege to belong.

St. Augustine once said:

> Every great and commanding movement in the annals of the world is the triumph of enthusiasm.

It has been my privilege over the years to address national societies not only in my own country and in the United States, but in South America, the United Kingdom and Europe. Nowhere and at no time in the history of this young country has Canada been held in higher esteem and acclaim that it is at this very moment.

When His Royal Highness the Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, gave his presidential address to the Canadian Medical Association he chided the Canadian people for their low standard of physical fitness, and he challenged Canadian doctors to take positive steps to correct this defect.

Honourable senators, to begin with there are certain inherent difficulties in saying anything sensible about this subject. We are all interested in physical fitness, whatever that may mean. We in the Canadian Medical Association—and I am now speaking with its full approval—were undertaking to do something useful in promoting physical fitness prior to the President's speech, but the latter has served to focus attention on it. As doctors—and I speak as a doctor—we are inclined to undertake the assessment of physical fitness in the same way as we assess other aspects of health and disease, by defining and measuring normals and variations. This is essentially the physiological approach to fitness, and it leads to the assessment of tests of exercise tolerance and other devices to measure the elusive entity "fitness". This is the happy hunting ground of the physical educationist, the coach and the physiologist, but they have not been conspicuously successful in devising reliable tests of sufficient simplicity to make them useful tools in the hands of either doctors or laymen.

Still another opinion of physical fitness is that expressed by the ordinary man in the street. Physical fitness to him is not only a physical but a mental attitude. It is an interest in, and a willingness to participate in, physical forms of recreation, besides an ability to sustain such participation or activity to an extent commensurate with an age somewhat younger than that of the participant. Positive good health, infrequent illnesses, a cheerful optimistic attitude toward life and our fellow men, ability to work hard with our muscles on occasion, and a reasonable resiliency after such work are commonly accepted attributes of physical fitness. The maintenance of normal weight, a plentiful reserve of energy, a reasonable amount of good muscle tone and power available when called on, average agility and co-ordination, complete the picture of a person who is generally accepted as a fit man or woman. It is the picture of a physically active individual.

We are inclining to the belief that this is a more useful approach, and one which relates more closely to the Prince Philip's interest in the subject.

In the Department of National Health and Welfare there is an interdepartmental committee which is studying the role of the federal Government in this whole area. The committee is under the chairmanship of Dr. E. A. Watkinson, of that department.

Many of you, honourable senators, will recall the history of the National Physical Fitness Act. This legislation was passed in 1943. Its purpose was to assist the provinces by grants to promote recreation, sports and exercise, and it established a National Council on Physical Fitness. The latter proved to be a completely ineffective body, and the provincial programs were not much better. The act limped along for more than ten years until it was finally repealed, in 1954, at the instigation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The repeal of this act constitutes the only instance I can think of where give-away legislation was withdrawn. It really must have been a complete failure, and it is now mentioned only in connection with various recommendations which are being made to the Government for establishment of a National Fitness Council.

Every one of us is interested in physical fitness, but we are not merely interested in the physical fitness of someone who is 18 years of age. As the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) said yesterday, people today are living longer. We want a sensible program, so that a person of 45 years of age or 65 years of age will have some criteria of what to do and what not to do.

The program of the Royal Canadian Air Force began originally under that outstanding Minister of National Defence for Air who is now the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). That was a program to promote fitness among personnel of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the brochure on exercise which has been produced has received a good deal of favourable public comment. The Medical Branch did not originate this venture, but did act in an advisory capacity.

The Canadian Medical Association, through the chairman of its Committee on Public Health, Dr. Duff Wilson, its secretary, Dr. Arthur Kelly, and its executive has done a great deal of work, and has given me some facts and figures which I trust will be in the record for all provincial departments of health and the federal Government to utilize in the future.

In speaking to the Royal Society of Medicine a couple of years ago I prefaced my remarks with these words:

> The true physician is no soothsayer, but rather one who opens the curtains and windows of the sick room to let in the light of wisdom and the fresh air of common sense.

I would like to have some common sense brought into a discussion of physical fitness. The term "physical fitness" has different meanings for a variety of purposes. To the medical and legal professions a physically fit person is a person who is in average good health, whose body is functioning at a normal, average pace and efficiency; an individual who is able to complete his day's work. He is free from disease. This concept is also accepted by some physiologists, whereas others find in the term "physical fitness" a higher level of efficiency, such as > —the ability of the organism to maintain internal equilibria as closely as possible to the resting state during strenuous exertion, and to restore promptly after exercise any equilibrium which has been disturbed.

I hope that is not too technical, but that is a problem that confronts the medical profession today, and we are not bringing out a definite platform until we are sure of what we are talking about. This definition visualizes a reserve of physical resources available on occasions which are over and beyond the demands of ordinary work or living. This concept approaches that of physical educationists, coaches and trainers who, dealing often with the ordinary, healthy young person, expect or demand a state of physical fitness or efficiency which is associated with a trained and elite athlete.

When a group of twenty active young men from various professions and vocations were asked their definition of physical fitness they used such terms as "ability to do what you want to do", "reserve after a good day's work", "freedom from fatigue", "being in good condition", and "having good wind".

Here, then, is a variety of concepts, and it might be useful to deal with these in turn.

The normal state of freedom from disease acceptable to the medical and legal professions may be disposed of quickly, except as I will deal with it later when discussing "exercise tolerance". Medical science has arrived at a picture of the normal individual which is dependent on certain standards of hearing, vision, heart sounds, blood-pressure reading, and blood chemistry. This picture takes little cognizance of the individual's capacity for work, his agility, his co-ordination, his endurance and muscle power over and above his regular daily duties. This definition and standard is acceptable to the legal profession.

As already stated, this medical view of "fitness" is also accepted by some physiologists who alter the concept somewhat to admit the reaction of the individual to work. Fitness is that state of the human body in which the organism is able to exert himself or herself close to the normal limits for his or her age, sex, et cetera. However, fitness as a capacity of the individual to restore various internal equilibria after strenuous exertion appears to concern most of the physiologists working in this field. Each of these definitions presupposes standards by which the physical fitness of the individual may be assessed.

In a discussion of the body's reaction to "strenuous exertion" the physiologists tend to exclude three of the accepted components of physical fitness: for example, strength, speed and co-ordination. Tests for muscular power have produced unsatisfactory and varying results in different hands. It is also difficult to measure co-ordination and speed. Natural endowment plays an important part here. Physiologists have concentrated, therefore, on the investigation of the individual's stamina and endurance when offered the challenge of physical work. Work is divided into two classes, aerobic and anaerobic. By aerobic we mean unable to live without oxygen, and by anaerobic we mean thriving best without air. In the anaerobic effort there is a powerful muscular contraction over a short period of time and there may be no oxygen intake over this period. The 100-yard dash is a good example of this. In aerobic work there is a prolonged effort in which, finally, the oxygen intake balances the oxygen demand. Anaerobic work depends upon the muscle cell, but in aerobic effort the oxygen-carrying capacity of the body—circulation and respiration—which bears a close relationship to endurance, plays the dominant role.

"Maximum physical performance" will be determined by (a) the capacity of the energy-delivering processes and (b) the mechanical efficiency—technique and skill—of the individual. Provided the mechanical efficiency does not vary too much, the individual's capacity for oxygen intake should be decisive in his ability to sustain heavy prolonged work. This leads to the statement, "The superiority of the athlete lies in his ability to meet the demand for oxygen."

P. O. Ostrand wrote a very extensive article in the American Physiological Review, volume 36, 1956, in which he pointed out: The oxygen intake is measured in millilitres per kilogram per minute, and the most outstanding characteristic of the elite athlete is a high capacity for oxygen intake per kilogram of body weight.

Such athletes are John Landy and, of course, the great Maurice Richard. In the case of John Landy it was 76.6 millilitres per kilogram per minute, compared with an average for college students of the same age of 53.6 millilitres per kilogram per minute, and there was nothing remarkably different in pulse rates or pulmonary ventilation. Landy used chiefly leg and shoulder muscles, but a champion skier who used still more muscle groups showed an oxygen intake of 86 millilitres per kilogram per minute. We are unaware of the upper limits.

Training improves performance in two ways. First, by increasing techniques of skill for a particular or special performance. In this way the body machine functions more economically. Secondly, by endurance training which aims at general strengthening of the oxygen-transporting system. Training tends to produce a slower pulse with increased heart-stroke volume. There is an increase in heart-muscle mass and storage of glycogen in the liver. Skeletal muscle mass increases and vascularization improves. Pulmonary ventilation per litre of consumed oxygen decreases and restitution after work occurs more rapidly. During a period of training the pulse rate can be reduced at rest, at work and in recovery from work, and a good standard of physical condition presupposes a rapid adaptation of the circulatory and respiratory organs to the demand for work. A high standard of physical condition means that the organism can stand heavy muscular work over a period of time. A sound program of physical exercise—and I emphasize this—would develop a capacity for work which would lie well above the load of daily work with a reduction in fatigue.

As to physical fitness tests, I quote from Johnson, American Review of Physiology, 8.335-568, 1946:

> Quantitative assessment of physical fitness is one of the most complex and controversial problems in applied physiology. The situation arises in part from the lack of general agreement on what constitutes fitness for withstanding various types of stress, and in part from lack of agreement on what measurements allow valid comparisons among individuals exposed to the same stress.

Varying demands upon the organism produce varying responses, which not only make a definition of physical fitness difficult but make its measurement well nigh impossible.

We are beginning to see the problem that confronts us. To further complicate matters, "motivation to do well" is, no doubt, a factor in any assessment of physical fitness. We are talking of physical fitness for the whole Canadian public. It may interest honourable senators to hear about a new book, The Freudian Ethic, by Richard LaPiere, Professor of Sociology at Leland Stanford University. The Freudian Ethic is defined as the idea that "man cannot and should not be expected to be provident, self-reliant, and venturesome; that he must and should be supported, protected and socially maintained". I would think that over most carefully.

Fitness of the respiration and circulation for prolonged heavy work is indicated by testing the oxygen carrying system. Cardiac output is difficult to measure during periods of heavy muscular work; oxygen intake capacity is a valuable method of testing but, in both these, collaboration on the part of the subject is urgently needed. This may produce overstrain and is probably not advisable in untrained, older subjects or patients. Resting tests will ascertain presence of disease but give little information with regard to capacity for hard, muscular work. Thus a determination of vital capacity breath-holding time, maximum breathing capacity and maximum expiratory force is more or less useless as a functional test on healthy individuals, chiefly because results vary too widely and quantitatively. They show an unsatisfactory correlation to physical fitness. A determination of the amount of hemoglobin probably is the best investigation at resting conditions.

Investigation of the different functions during recovery does not give reliable information. For instance, the correlation in the same person between the pulse rate during constant work and the pulse rate after the end of the work is relatively high, but may vary a great deal with another person whose physical condition is about the same. Recovery values may be followed in the training of individuals, but there is no value in comparing with other individuals.

Some tests use pulse rate beyond rest level during work and recovery from this work. The lower the sun the lighter the load on circulation. Theoretically it is incorrect to evaluate circulatory system by net pulse—for example, pulse rate during work minus the pulse rate during rest—because of the great difference in cardiac stroke volume. An attractive test consists in instructing the subject to do standard work at one or more work intensities where the work time for each intensity is at least five minutes. Different functions have been examined in such a test—oxygen intake, lactic acid increase, pulse rate caused by the work or the amount of work performed at a fixed pulse rate. There appears to be a high correlation between heart rate when performing submaximal work such as cycling, running or the step test and the maximum oxygen intake. Explanations for this are not obvious—the pulse rate increases rectilinearly with oxygen intake. Maximal heart rate reached during exhausting work was about 195. This apparently applies to persons of 18 to 39 years. We are not sure of the validity when testing older or younger people or patients with disease in the oxygen-transporting system.

Ideally, the individual should be examined during muscular work of submaximal intensity, using great muscle groups, so that mechanical efficiency remains fairly constant. The work load must be carefully determined and reproducible. The treadmill and bicycle argometer seem to be the best apparatus. Investigations should be made four to five minutes after the start of the work, and work intensity should not be too high, so that motivation plays a part. On the other hand, work level should not be too low, for here again psychical factors play a part. Very few tests satisfy all these demands for, as already mentioned, most of the tests are taken at rest or during recovery. Furthermore, in "exhaustive" tests, psychic factors greatly influence the results. E. A. Harris wrote an excellent article dealing with this matter, which appeared in the British Journal Lancet on August 23, 1958.

Physiologists are not the only investigators who have concerned themselves with the assessment of physical fitness. Medicine and, in particular, the cardio-respiratory specialists have searched diligently for a simple means of measuring physical efficiency.

Cardiologists speak of "exercise tolerance tests". These are closely related to tests of fitness for athletics, industrial and military purposes. Many tests have been evolved but all fall short of the ideal. It has been shown, for instance, that in the case of the Harvard Step Test there is little correlation between ability to perform athletic feats and recovery rate after the test. It is considered of more value to look for responses during exercise for indication of fitness. Changes in the pulse rate after exercise are poorly understood. In a test devised by Muller, the rate of the rise in pulse rate with the increasing rate of work is measured and there appears to be some correlation here. Fit subjects tend to have a lower heart rate than unfit subjects, but the factors producing the tachycardia are poorly defined and, therefore, difficult to control experimentally. No exercise tolerance test based on heart rate can be confidently recommended. Differences in oxygen debt, using exercises well below maximal level, are demonstrable between subjects, and such tests appear to be suitable for clinical use. Furthermore, such a test appears to provide a truly objective measure of performance. Oxygen debt is almost the only indication that the exercise which preceded it was "inefficient". Thus far no clinical test has been devised to the point of practical usefulness. Harris concludes his article by stating that there is a necessity for (a) further research on conditions under which oxygen is contracted and repaid in health and disease, and (b) better understanding of mechanisms whereby the heart rate increases during exercise, if we are to assess exercise capacity with reasonable accuracy.

I think the time is close when we will be able to do that. The very fact that we can now open up the chest and examine the living heart will probably be the solution to that particular problem.

Dr. Duff Wilson, Chairman of the Public Health Committee of the Canadian Medical Association, in his observations of the Canadian Standard Efficiency Tests as demonstrated by Dr. Doris Plewes of the Department of National Health and Welfare, makes some very pointed suggestions.

Physical fitness, as conceived by physical educationists, coaches and trainers, whose concern is the physical education and development of the individual, the promotion of games and improvement of sporting skills, involves not only the stamina, as measured by the oxygen carrying capacity of the body, but also muscle power, agility and co-ordination. Standards based on a great many observations have been established. These are used to indicate to the individual person his state of physical efficiency. It is not clear how these standards are arrived at—whether by observations on superior athletes or by observations on a great number of subjects with the medium chosen as the representative figure. The chief value of these tests lies in stimulating interest in physical activity. But it is possible, also, that comparing the results of the tests might indicate to the individual his progress in a training program. Too often these tests rest on faulty physiological premises and, in the light of the discussion referred to, do not indicate physical fitness as defined by the physiologists. There may be, however, no attempt on the part of the physical educationist to satisfy the exacting demands of physiology, but, believing firmly in the benefits to be derived therefrom, they may merely wish to awaken a sedentary public to physical activity. To the physical educationists, physical fitness—which seems to be synonymous with physical efficiency—is achieved or induced by physical activity directed toward developing higher standards of all four components of fitness, even though the standards may seem to be somewhat higher than is practical for the average Canadian.

Still another opinion of physical fitness is that expressed by the ordinary man in the street. Physical fitness, to him, is not only a physical but a mental attitude, an interest in and a willingness to participate in physical forms of recreation, besides an ability to sustain such participation or activity to an extent commensurate with an age somewhat younger than that of the participant. Positive good health, infrequent illnesses, a cheerful, optimistic attitude toward life and his fellow men, ability to work hard with his muscles on occasion, and a reasonable resiliency after such work are commonly accepted attributes of physical fitness. The maintenance of normal weight, plentiful reserve energy, a reasonable amount of good muscle tone and power available when called on, average agility and co-ordination complete the picture of a generally accepted fit man or woman. It is the picture of a physically active individual.

A group of 20 men, in the 20-to-30-age group and coming from varying vocations, were interviewed. These men ranged from superior athletes to men who had no interest in athletics. They were all physically active men who, if in a sedentary occupation, would take regular physical exercise; and if not taking regular exercise, their job was an actively physical one requiring a good deal of hard muscular labour. They were considered to be in good physical condition from personal knowledge, and in the lay sense of the term were "physically fit". The interviewer reviewed family and past personal history, asked a few questions about their "philosophy" of physical exercise, their concept of physical fitness, types of recreation they enjoyed, personality, et cetera, and certain body and muscular measurements were taken. The intention is to repeat this interview once yearly for some years, primarily to get a "man in the street" opinion of physical fitness and to compare measurements and results of any tests which may be administered over the period of life which appears to be the most crucial as far as the maintenance of physical fitness is concerned.

Of these 20 men, some 17 were available for the tests. These were supplemented by 23 high school students varying again from the superior athlete to the student who took no interest in athletics. The students were all from Grade XIII and ranged in age from 18 to 20.

The 40 men participating in the tests were grouped into superior athletes, average athletes and non-athletes—with 6 men in the first group, 20 in the second and 14 in the third. The results of the tests and comments follow:

1st Test: ORGANIC EFFICIENCY TEST—Step Test

Superior athletes (6)			6
Average athletes (20)		2	18
Non-athletes (14)	1	1	12

This is pratically an anaerobic test and, therefore, depends almost entirely on the muscle cells. Furthermore, the relationship of increased heart rate to exercise is not clearly understood. (I referred earlier to criticism of the Harvard Step Test). This appears to be borne out by the fact that there seemed to be so many failures among all the personnel taking the test, and especially among known athletes. Aside from the value of the test as a measurement of organic efficiency, an important factor appeared to be an initial nervousness and apprehension felt by personnel when faced with the test. It is possible that the improvement that apparently results from certain training techniques may be due to an increasing familiarity with the test. Again, because of the great number of failures, it is suggested that the standards are much too high and impractical. This test might indicate a little more if carried to the limit of endurance or to a certain pulse rate.

2nd Test: MUSCULAR FLEXIBILITY TEST—Floor Touch

Superior athletes	6
Average athletes	18	2
Non-athletes	11		3

Motivation played a tremendous part here. It is difficult to see how this test could demonstrate a degree of physical efficiency, although the ease with which the floor can be touched with fingers or hands is taken as an indication of a physical prowess of some sort.

3rd Test: A TEST OF ARM STRENGTH—Shot-put

Superior athletes	6
Average athletes	20
Non-athletes	10	2	2

Unless this test is closely scored there is a good possibility of cheating. The results were rather interesting, in that the known field athletes appeared to have a better score than the men who had developed good shoulder musculature from hard work. As a test of physical power it appeared to be too limited in its scope. Ninety per cent of the candidates passed this test.

4th Test: STRENGTH AND ENDURANCE OF ABDOMINAL MUSCLES—Sit-ups

This is another anaerobic test and, therefore, no special indication of endurance, especially seeing that almost all the participants were sore for days afterwards—even the most active and athletic. Motivation and the competitive spirit were strong factors here.

5th Test: STRENGTH AND SPEED (Leg Muscles)—JUMP AND REACH

Superior athletes	4		2
Average athletes	11	3	6
Non-athletes	7	1	6

It is difficult to see how this test assesses speed, but it might be considered an indication of co-ordination. This is too much an inherent attribute to be of much value in determining individual physical efficiency. There seems to be little doubt, however, that improvement is possible with training up to a certain point. The highest score recorded here was made by a superior athlete with extremely well-developed arms and shoulders but only moderately well-developed legs.

6th Test: TEST FOR MUSCULAR ENDURANCE (shoulder and arms)—Chinning

Superior athletes	5	1
Average athletes	9		11
Non-athletes	4	1	8

There appears, here, to be a correlation between athletic ability and a successful test. Motivation was again a strong factor here. Some of the participants who worked at hard jobs and had very well-developed shoulder and arm muscles did more poorly than athletes who showed no remarkable development of these muscles. Is it possible to conclude that some other factor besides muscle power is a factor here? Has the weight of the participant, in proportion to his muscle development, anything to do with the result?

7th Test: TEST FOR MUSCLE POWER AND CO-ORDINATION—Standing 3 Hops

Superior athletes	3	1	2
Average athletes	9	3	8
Non-athletes	2	3	9

Athletes, here, appeared to do better in this test also. Co-ordination seems to be again a big factor.

8th Test: TEST FOR ORGANIC ENDURANCE—The Endurance Drop-Off Test

Superior athletes	4		2
Average athletes	10		10
Non-athletes	8		6

As is recognized, some cheating is possible in this test. "Wind" is a good indication to most of us of physical fitness, and this is a test in which the development of oxygen debt results in the "drop off". A little longer run might indicate the true stamina of the participant as the oxygen debt is gradually overcome and the oxygen intake begins to correspond. If it were possible to measure the oxygen intake and the pulse rate at this point and compare it with resting states, it would seem to offer the best possibility of a satisfactory test for physical fitness. It is difficult to see how it could be applied clinically, however, except in normal individuals.

The Canadian Medical Association, speaking through the chairman of its Committee on Public Health, Dr. G. E. Duff Wilson, records the following observations:

Assuming that Canadians in general are not physically fit, is this a factor in increased hospitalization, widespread disabilities amongst Canadian children, increased mental disease, juvenile delinquency, etc., as suggested by His Royal Highness in his presidential address? You will recognize that this is very difficult to determine. Most of the work that has been done on the relation of physical fitness to general health has been done without defining or assessing physical fitness, but has compared the morbidity and mortality statistics of physically active groups with physically inactive or sedentary groups—always, of course, to the advantage of the physically active. We think it is safe to assume at this stage that physically active people are "better" physically, mentally, etc., than sedentary types, but we are a good way from proof. Observations by physiologists and the definite improvement in performances, which are the results of training, indicate without doubt that training increases physical efficiency and physical fitness. The problem then resolves itself down to attempts to increase the physical activity of Canadians.

Physical Fitness Tests: These are often designed by physical educationists with the chief purpose of demonstrating unfitness. In my opinion these are presently unsatisfactory for this purpose, but, at the same time, it would be interesting to know:

(a) The maximum activity level of the normal healthy human being and how this varies with sex and age.

(b) The factors normally limiting the upper level and, therefore the physical performance.

(c) The individual performance of tests designed especially to assess essential physical components of some special sport or endeavour. Considerable work has been done on this.

(d) The individual's response to training—a lot of important work has been done in this field.

(e) The response of the individual, i.e. in physical performance to rehabilitation procedures, e.g. after cardiac infraction.

(f) The level of physical performance of the average, generally accepted physically fit individual, as compared to the maximum performance as indicated in (a) above—for Doctor Plewes' demonstration picked men whom he considered to be physically fit.

(g) The means whereby a reasonable state of physical fitness, as in (f) above, might be attained and maintained.

For all these approaches to physical fitness tests, basic research is needed. For instance, we are still unaware of the reasons for the tachycardia which exercise produces, or conditions under which oxygen is contracted and repaid in health and disease.

What can doctors do to increase the physical activity of Canadians?

(a) We can advocate research in universities, governmental agencies and internationally in the World Health Organization.

(b) We can make certain that the physical education in our schools is adequate—and that is a provincial matter.

(c) Visual aids to education of the general public in physical fitness—films, TV programs.

That would be a good use to put TV to.

(d) We might throw the columns of the C.M.A. Journal open to original work on the subject.

(e) Pamphlets have been tried by the American Medical Association.

(f) Lectures—at our own meetings.

(g) Local Physical Fitness Councils—promoted and backed by local medical societies, primarily to ensure adequate local physical recreation facilities.

(h) Publication and widespread distribution of present knowledge on training, rehabilitation, exercises for age, sex, in order to maintain physical fitness.

The chief reason for the preoccupation with physical tests is in the hope that some simple, reliable, repetitive, physiologically sound test might be evolved which would enable doctors to determine easily—even within their offices—the physical fitness of their patients. Besides uncovering any abnormalities, this test could be used to stimulate the patient to even greater physical activity and physical forms of recreation, the advantages of which to health and vigour everyone is aware. No such test, which could be applied clinically, seems to be available so that the medical profession is thrown back on other ways and means in which they might exert their influence to increase the physical activity of Canadians.

We are not interested in promoting vitamins, and so forth, but in promoting experimental work so that, based on sound physiological and medical principles, a program will be evolved in the future to help the whole country and the public at large.

Of all the outdoor sports, walking and swimming require the least equipment, yet both provide excellent exercise that can be graded in intensity and duration according to the individual's ability. Mere recollection of the belief held by all drill sergeants that route marches are the fastest method of converting civilians into toughened soldiers will cause many feet to ache. Yet the very wealth of this country, which is able to provide more than adequate nutrition and sufficient space for physical exercise, has tended to make Canadians so indolent that even walking has come to be considered an unbearable chore. If the present trend continues, paediatricians —that is, baby specialists—will soon have to drop from the list of milestones of physical development the age at which a child learns to walk.

Canadians as a people are a hybrid race, and as such should possess a natural vigour, but our wealth and the advance of automation have sapped our strength. The little red school house which characterized the Canadian scene at the turn of the century has been replaced by the consolidated school, and children no longer walk two or three miles between home and school twice a day as their grandparents did, but instead are picked up at the gate by the school bus. In the city, where it is unusual to be even a mile from school, many children are driven to school by their parents. It is a common complaint to doctors that housewives are kept busy every afternoon after school providing a jitney service, taking children from school to dancing or music lessons and other group activities.

If funds are made available at any level of provincial or federal government to provide facilities for encouraging physical fitness, it could well be spent in providing footpaths and trails, both in cities and throughout the countryside, as an encouragement to hikers and others who wish to walk. Throughout the country, rights of way as footpaths could be established across the countryside. These could follow farm lanes, river valleys, or other topographical features. They would constitute a much needed recreational facility whose value would increase progressively as the population grows.

Establishment of public footpaths and encouraging people to use them would be an active step in promoting physical fitness among the Canadian people. In case anyone feels that I am against physical fitness, my final word is, "Go take a walk."

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 107 to 140, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, reports adopted.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-58, for the relief of Marie Simone Louisette Bellemare Lafond.

Bill SD-59, for the relief of Elisabeth Lebherz Denig.

Bill SD-60, for the relief of James William Neilan.

Bill SD-61, for the relief of Donna Lois Marchand Silverman. (Annulment.)

Bill SD-62, for the relief of Leo Proulx.

Bill SD-63, for the relief of June Laura Welby Leger.

Bill SD-64, for the relief of Dorothy May Kenny Mulcair.

Bill SD-65, for the relief of Margaret Kathleen Graham Lane.

Bill SD-66, for the relief of Hubert Shirley Quartz.

Bill SD-67, for the relief of Claudine Fernande Yvette Thibaudeau Tarride.

Bill SD-68, for the relief of Mary Pirie Wood Hunnisett.

Bill SD-69, for the relief of Marine Tony Jakovich.

Bill SD-70, for the relief of George Henderson.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 11, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following report:

Report for the financial year 1959 compiled from returns made by the chartered banks of Canada, on information set out in Schedule "Q" to the Bank Act, pursuant to section 119(1) of the said act, Chapter 48 of the Statutes of 1953-54.

PRIVATE BILLS

MUNICH REINSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —FIRST READING

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson presented Bill S-14, to incorporate Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Molson: With leave, Tuesday next.

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION— REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Clarence J. Veniot, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-9, respecting the Canadian Public Health Association, and directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 153 to 164, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 16, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if it is his intention to proceed with the bill covering the supplementary estimates as soon as it is received in this house?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, that is what I would like to do. The debate in the other place is not yet completed, but the probability is that it will be completed on Friday. If the bill comes to us in time, I would like to proceed with the first stage at any rate on Tuesday next. We could possibly complete the debate on the supplementary estimates and obtain royal assent to the bill some time next week.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not necessarily on Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Motion agreed to.

LAND USE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONDUCT INQUIRY

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald):

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to consider and report on land use in Canada and what should be done to ensure that our land resources are most effectively utilized for the benefit of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people and, in particular, to increase both agricultural production and the incomes of those engaged in it;

That the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Barbour, Basha, Bois, Boucher, Bradette, Buchanan, Cameron, Crerar, Emerson, Gladstone, Golding, Higgins, Horner, Inman, Leger, Leonard, MacDonald, McDonald, McGrand, Méthot, Molson, Pearson, Power, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh, Taylor (Norfolk), Taylor (Westmorland), Turgeon, Vaillancourt, Wall and White.

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical and clerical personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the four preceding sessions be referred to the committee.

I would like to outline very briefly my reasons for bringing this motion before the Senate. I am sure we all want to commend the committee which has sat so faithfully during the last four sessions for the industry of its members and for what they have been able to accomplish.

The honourable senators mentioned in the motion were members of the committee last session, and many of them were members during the previous three sessions as well. Quite a number of them approached me, stating that they thought they could still do much work in investigating land use in Canada, and they asked if I would consider bringing in a motion to set up the committee once more so that they could go ahead with this work and, perhaps, complete it and bring in a final report this session. During the last session, as honourable members know, they spent quite a lot of time investigating small farm holdings with a view to finding out how these could be made more profitable, and it is my opinion that the committee should continue to investigate that branch of land use.

Having said that, I would like to refer to the invitation which was extended to the committee last June by the Canadian International Paper Company. This company has a forestry farm in the Laurentians, at Harrington, Quebec, just across the Ottawa River from Hawkesbury. Although I was not a member of the committee I muscled my way into the invitation which was so kindly extended by Mr. Johnson, the president of that great corporation. One reason why I wanted to go was that the company said they would show us how small farm holdings with wood-lots on them are handled in the province of Quebec. Having been interested for many years in Saskatchewan in the planting of trees to be used more or less as shelter belts around farm buildings, and having been instrumental in planting some 30,000 or 40,000 trees, I wanted to find out for myself exactly what work was being done in Quebec. So I went along with the members of the committee. We were taken by automobile from the Parliament Buildings on a Friday morning and we spent most of that day and all of Saturday at the Harrington Tree Farm as guests of the Canadian International Paper Company. We were royally entertained. I can say that without any fear of contradiction. We were shown exactly what they were doing. In the territory there are many small farms with wood-lots on them, and in order to instruct the owners in the management of their property and ensure continued production of trees the company set up a body of forestry experts who have planted a great area of the valley in trees. The company showed us how this was done by machinery, with one man planting the trees and another covering over, and so on. They have a wonderful plant at Harrington, and every year they hold a great forestry picnic to which all the local farmers and other citizens in the community are invited. It is on this occasion that the small wood-lot and farm holders are instructed in tree planting and tree conservation.

I found it all most interesting and I am sure the members of the committee did too. It is this type of thing that the committee can look into with considerable benefit to this country, and I hope it will continue its good work.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am pleased to join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in seconding this motion. In doing so I would also like to join with him in saying a word of commendation to the committee, which was set up originally under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) and is now under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Lumsden (Hon. Mr. Pearson). Both these honourable gentlemen have given direction to the committee, which has been very faithful to its duties and has done a very good service for the country.

At times the members of the committee may feel their efforts have been to no avail and that they have not received much commendation, but I find that their efforts have been appreciated. I myself have read a number of favourable comments about the committee and its work. I would like to refer to one such comment, an editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail on July 20, 1959. Under the heading "The Myth of the Family Farm", it said:

> The report of the Senate Committee on Land Utilization is a remarkably bold document to come from Ottawa. It bluntly proclaims that "farming is no longer a way of life but a business", and it recommends that farmers on marginal land, who cannot make a living from it, should be encouraged to find other occupations.

I will not read it all. It went on to say:

> This will be heresy to most farm organizations and to most politicians.

A little farther on there was this statement:

> The committee deserves a commendation also for two of its other recommendations: that the official federal and provincial soil surveys now in progress be speeded up and that land be classified according to its appropriate use; and that the study and management of water resources be expanded—
> This is wise and overdue advice. Canada has been, and still is, woefully negligent in studying and protecting these basic national resources. As examples of what this neglect may lead to, we need only point to the pollution of Ontario streams, and the relentless disappearance of the Niagara fruit lands under a flood of uncontrolled urban and industrial growth.

That is a very encouraging editorial, and it is quite proper that the committee should have been congratulated for the splendid work it performed.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the house an interesting article written by Roderick Goodman in the Globe Magazine of January 17, 1959. It does not refer to the committee, but it does discuss the kind of work which the committee has been doing.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to discuss farm problems in general. I have never set myself up as an expert on farming, but I was quite interested to read an article appearing in the Industry, a paper published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which reveals that:

> In 1958 the number of Canadians working in manufacturing industry approached 1½ million, an all-time record. This is over 300,000 more than in 1948 and means that Canada's manufacturing labour force has increased nearly 30 per cent in the past decade.

With regard to agriculture, the article reveals that:

> In the same period, the number of Canadians employed in agriculture has fallen by more than 400,000 or 35 per cent.

That is, the number employed in industry has gone up by 30 per cent during the last decade, while the number employed on farms has dropped by 35 per cent.

It is not my intention to discuss farming generally, but I would like to refer to fruit farming. The editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail, to which I referred a moment ago, discussed what is happening in the Niagara Peninsula. I have looked up some of the tables of fruit production in Canada and I find that in 1948 the production of apples, pears, plums, prunes, peaches, apricots, cherries—sweet and sour, strawberries, raspberries, loganberries, grapes and blueberries had a gross value of $40,616,000.

In 1957, nine years later, the value was $39,704,000; that is about $1 million less. In 1958 the total value of the fruit crop in Canada amounted to $43,262,000. Honourable senators will see, therefore, that there has been comparatively little difference in the dollar value of Canada's fruit crop during all those years. The population of Canada increased from 12,823,000 in 1948 to 17,678,000 in 1960, an increase of about 40 per cent during those years, and yet there has been practically no increase in the dollar value of our fruit crop. Of course, during that time there has been an increase in prices. If I may be permitted, I will quote from a table filed in this house last session by the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), so there is no question as to its authenticity. At page 488 of the Senate Hansard of 1959, in a column headed "Percentage of yearly increase of prices over constant 1949 dollar," the table showed an increase of over 34.4 per cent. So even with an increase in population of about 40 per cent and an increase in prices of about 34 per cent the dollar value of fruit grown in Canada has remained about constant. It may be that fruit has not increased in price along with other products, and I have no way of ascertaining that, but it is a striking fact that there has been practically no increase in total dollar value during those years.

I am particularly interested in the Niagara Peninsula district. As honourable senators know, there is a great production of fruit in that district; in fact, I have it on very good authority that 57 per cent of all fruit grown in Ontario and about 26 per cent of all fruit grown in Canada is grown in the Niagara Peninsula. Honourable senators will realize, therefore, how important that section of Ontario is to the whole dominion. Canadians like to eat fruit, but we do not like to import it. Frankly, honourable senators, fruit production in that area is dropping off rapidly, and there is a danger that fruit grown in that district will almost completely cease within the next thirty or forty years. The explanation is that industry is creeping in, that subdivisions are being set up, that housing is being established and trunk highways built through the very best farm lands.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Can the honourable senator tell me how much territory in Niagara the Seaway takes, if any?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: At the moment I am discussing fruit lands in the Niagara district, which is not affected by the Seaway. I have not got definite figures regarding the Seaway in other districts. I have it on very good authority that within the next twenty-five years the population of the Niagara district will increase by over 1,500,000, and that these additional people will settle there to engage in industry and not in order to farm.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask the honourable senator a question? That figure is the expected increase in population in that district, is it?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, in that district. The people of the Niagara Peninsula are concerned about it.

Mr. R. K. Matthie, of St. Catharines, Manager of the Ontario Pear, Plum and Cherry Growers' Marketing Board, and Llewellyn Smith, president of E. D. Smith and Sons, canners—and a grandson, I believe, of a former senator—are very concerned that these fruit lands are being taken up and that before long there will be not nearly sufficient fruit to meet the ever-growing needs of our population.

Dr. Putman, head of the University of Toronto's Geography department, says that within the next comparatively few years the Peninsula will lose 125,000 acres to urban development, judging by the present rate at which houses and industry are being located in that district. During the past five years more than 30,000 people have moved into the area, not to farm, but for industrial purposes, and during that time they have taken up three thousand acres of prime fruit soil. I have not the figures to show how much soil there is there, but honourable senators know that it is not a wide peninsula and it is only on one side of the escarpment that fruit is grown to great advantage.

Another distinguished authority, Professor E. G. Pleva, head of the Geography department at the University of Western Ontario, says that in time science may assist in bringing about greater production. His opinion is that at present there is not a large enough population to make this feasible. This is his warning: The production per acre "will not come about until increased population demands it".

He goes on to say:

> By that time, this increased population will be sitting on the land where it should have found its food.

I feel I should bring this whole subject to the attention of the house. Specifically, I have no solution, but I think we should realize where we are going in so far as the production of fruit in this country is concerned. I know you will immediately say to me, "If a farmer has 100 acres of land and is offered a very high price for it for industrial purposes, how are you going to prevent him from selling?" I have not the answer. If I owned the land at the time I would want to take the high price too. We would all want to take the high price. But that does not mean we should ignore the problem. I say we must think about it and do something about it. If we fail to take some action which is fair to the farmers who own that land now, honourable senators, I am afraid that, probably not in my lifetime but in the next 20 or 30 years, Canadians will be eating not homegrown but imported fruits only.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I want to say just a word or two. Your Special Committee on Land Use brought in its final report in the latter part of last session and it contained a number of recommendations. One was that the committee request the federal Deparment of Agriculture to send a delegation to the United States to study and report on rural development programs.

You will be pleased to know, honourable senators, that the federal Government, through the Department of Agriculture, named a committee composed of officers of that department, and designated Dr. J. F. Booth, Director of the Economic Division of the Administration Branch to head it. The other members of the committee were: A. E. Barrett, Assistant to the Director General of the Research Branch; S. F. Shields, Regional Director of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration; R. A. Stutt, Head, Lands Economics Division, Administration Branch.

This committee set out a planned program of travel through the northern areas of the United States. They started in Washington state and pretty well covered the northern part of the United States, ending up in Maine, although they did not travel in that order. They went to Washington, D.C. and conferred with officials of the Department of Agriculture there, and they conferred with officials in the different states through which they travelled. They have now almost completed their report, which is a very voluminous one. I have seen part of it, and I believe it is a very worth-while report which would be of great interest to the Senate. The Land Use Committee will probably be receiving the report very soon, and will consider whether to adopt it or reject it, or reject parts of it. In any event, the committee will, I presume, bring the report before the Senate later on.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, I feel that I should say something in relation to the work of this Special Committee on Land Use. I think you will recognize that my interest in agricultural matters more or less forces me to say something on this subject.

I am in favour of the setting up of the committee again. I believe it has done a lot of effective work. Honourable senators will probably recall, however, that just before the close of the last session I did state that I was not satisfied with the progress made by the committee. I am still of that opinion. I have been a farmer all my life and have lived on a farm, and I have been engaged in the formation of administrative policies for agriculture for a great number of years, and it may be that I see some of these problems a little differently, perhaps a little more clearly, than others who are not as familiar with them.

I think there are certain fundamental principles which the committee should have recommended. After all, it has been sitting for four years—this will be its fourth session—and not too many recommendations have come from it. Let us not forget that the farm people of Canada are expecting this Senate committee to do something for agriculture. Only yesterday I noticed in a report from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that the price of farm products in the interval from December 1958 to December 1959 dropped 6.44 points. I am not talking about net income or profits, but of the prices of goods that farmers sell. The index is down 6.44 points in the year, and we all know that the cost of production is going up all the time. We have heard a great deal about the cost-price squeeze, and it is getting more serious all the time, so much so that it is becoming a matter of national emergency.

I am disappointed that this committee cannot sit during the recess. I think it could do some very effective work if it did meet during that period. I know that all members of the committee will do their best to make recommendations regarding various problems of agriculture, but I do believe we have not the time to do so. Last session we sat but once a week—in the latter part of the session this was in the evening—and then during the entire recess we were not able to meet at all. If it goes on in that way it will be years before we can deal with many problems.

I feel there are certain phases of agriculture that we are not in a position to make recommendations about because—and I think we all recognize this—we are going through a transition period. Production policies have changed, mechanization has become widespread, automation is on the increase, and vertical integration, as some call it, has been with us for a number of years. In these circumstances it is difficult to make recommendations with respect to specific matters relating to production. But I am of the opinion that we could make recommendations in regard to production of certain commodities in areas where they can be produced most economically.

During my first session in the Senate I made a few recommendations in relation to agriculture, and with your permission, honourable senators, I would like to refer to one of them. At that time I recommended—and I still recommend:

> A national Act of Parliament with a broad general application and with sufficient flexibility to apply to all sections of Canada and its operation in any province subject to similar provincial legislation, having to do with water and soil conservation, forest resources, land drainage, irrigation, water control, land use, and so forth.

It seems to me that that is a policy of general application which we could adopt. I hope that if this committee sits it will be given sufficient time to do a real job, because I am not far from the truth in saying that a great many farmers are disappointed in the committee, as they feel we have not presented the recommendations that we should have presented in the four sessions that the committee has been sitting.

In viewing the whole situation I support the views expressed by the former chairman, the chairman last session, and the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald).

I will not now go into the various problems affecting land use, because I may have an opportunity to do so later on. I do think, honourable senators, that these constitute one of the great emergencies facing the Canadian people—not only farmers, but Canadians generally. The committee should devote prompt, serious and careful attention to it, and I hope it will be given plenty of time to do this.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS

PROCEDURE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to direct a question, perhaps to His Honour the Speaker, on a matter which may be regarded as trivial, but it has to do with a practice which, if continued, may conceivably interfere with the rights of honourable senators. I have noticed, particularly this session, that whenever an honourable senator makes a motion he almost invariably asks for leave of the Senate.

My contention is, and I think the rules of the house will bear me out, that when a senator is in order under the rules he has the right to move a motion without using the words "with leave".

As I say, this may be regarded as a trivial matter, but many people are governed by precedent, especially members of the legal profession, and if this practice is continued it may eventually interfere with the rights of senators in presenting motions which are in order. I submit that the words "with leave" should not be used when a motion is being presented in accordance with the rules.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED CANADA INSURANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Léon Méthot moved the third reading of Bill S-7, to incorporate United Canada Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-58, for the relief of Marie Simone Louisette Bellemare Lafond.

Bill SD-59, for the relief of Elisabeth Lebherz Denig.

Bill SD-60, for the relief of James William Neilan.

Bill SD-61, for the relief of Donna Lois Marchand Silverman. (Annulment.)

Bill SD-62, for the relief of Leo Proulx.

Bill SD-63, for the relief of June Laura Welby Leger.

Bill SD-64, for the relief of Dorothy May Kenny Mulcair.

Bill SD-65, for the relief of Margaret Kathleen Graham Lane.

Bill SD-66, for the relief of Hubert Shirley Quartz.

Bill SD-67, for the relief of Claudine Fernande Yvette Thibaudeau Tarride.

Bill SD-68, for the relief of Mary Pirie Wood Hunnisett.

Bill SD-69, for the relief of Marine Tony Jakovich.

Bill SD-70, for the relief of George Henderson.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, at the outset of my remarks in the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I want to make one or two comments regarding two recent speeches we have heard, one by the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) and one by the honourable senator from North York (Hon. Mr. Sullivan). I trust that each and every senator, and the people of Canada in general, will take to heart some of the advice on health given by these two eminent doctors. I had to smile at the concluding remark of the honourable senator from North York: "Go take a walk." May I say to him and to all other honourable senators that I personally have been greatly perturbed by the strong trend today of taking the youth off their feet and putting them in cars. I fully believe the future generation is in great danger of losing the use of its legs. A great educationalist touring the world said the difference he found between the requests of students in Toronto and those of students in India was that in India the cry was for more bread, whereas in Toronto it was for more parking space. I say that considering the numbers of children being transported to school today, it is little wonder that the health of our young men is not as good as it perhaps could be.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What do the children in New Westminster say?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I don't mind my friend's interrupting me, but if he wants a debate on New Westminster youth I will gladly take him on.

The main theme of my remarks today has not much to do with sockeye salmon, but with the great controversy now going on in British Columbia regarding the Columbia River and the generation of hydro-electric power generally.

It is interesting to note, honourable senators, that at a time when Great Britain and the United States are keeping within their budgets, Canada is not. I can speak more freely perhaps than many honourable senators because I sat in the House of Commons and listened to remarks of the then Opposition members who were at that time out to defeat the last Government, which was eventually defeated in 1957. I remember that the great claims of the present Prime Minister and the present Minister of Finance were: Put us in office and we will show you what will be done; we can easily cut $500 million from the expenditures, and reduce taxation.

As I now read the estimates of Government expenditures, I am somewhat amazed at the direction in which we are drifting. This year we find, not a reduction—nor indeed are we trying to balance our budget as the United States and Great Britain are—but an increase of $70 million, besides a general increase in our debt over the past two years of $1,200 million.

A great writer once said, and it bears repeating, that the trouble with the people of Canada today is that they have reached a position in life where they are not shocked at anything. No matter what takes place in life today, the Canadian people seem not to be shocked. Indeed, they are not yet shocked by what is happening to our governmental financial situation. We have placed on the shoulders of future generations a burden of millions and millions of dollars of additional interest payments through action taken with respect to the last conversion loan. Our total debt is now $15 billion.

Perhaps in these days of high finance $15 billion does not seem much, but let us not forget that the interest charges alone have increased by $94 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Per annum?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, over last year.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Have you the total?

Hon. Mr. Reid: The total is $744,400,000. That is the total interest that the people of Canada are called upon to carry.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Each year?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Each year until the debt is paid. Until we reduce the debt that is the interest we will pay; and as we make more expenditures and do not balance the budget, our interest charges go up because our debt goes up.

The estimated deficit this year is $393 million. I repeat that, while our two greatest trading countries, Great Britain and the United States, have made every effort to balance their budgets, and are doing so, Canada goes blithely on spending money like —I was going to say like a drunken sailor, and perhaps that is as good an expression as one could use. Our trade deficit is $500 million, and that too is going to place an extra load on our finances.

Well do I remember the accusations made against the last Government in connection with the C.B.C., and I remember too the promises that were made by this Government that it would do something about them, and that it would put its house in order. Yet we find that the estimates for the C.B.C. are increased by $2 million and are now over $70 million. I wonder just how high the C.B.C. expenditures will go. Indeed, I am beginning to wonder, honourable senators, if we are not reaching that stage that was reached in ancient Rome when it was found to be good politics to keep the people entertained. Rome gave them bread and circuses, and we are now providing them with entertainment and social security.

My last thought with respect to this phase is about the Minister of Finance's advice to the Canadian people to increase their rate of saving. I wish he would take some of that advice himself, because he evidently is not doing so. As Charles Lynch wrote:

> The picture is scarcely that of a forward looking, prosperous nation, at grips with its destiny and out to prove that the 20th century does, indeed, belong to Canada. The impression is that while other Western nations may be feeling their oats, Canada is having to scrimp to make ends meet.

I pass from that, honourable senators, to my chief purpose in rising on this occasion, namely, to speak in regard to the Columbia River, with a view to clarifying the problems there and outlining a few facts regarding the river itself.

The Columbia River lies in northeastern British Columbia. It has a length of 1,270 miles, of which 465 miles are in British Columbia. From below the boundary to the sea there are some six or seven dams in the United States section of the river which produce some 6½ million kilowatts. On the Canadian side we have at present four or five smaller dams producing about 500,000 kilowatts.

Under the proposals which have been made and discussed over many years a dam is to be built 200 miles from the boundary in British Columbia at a spot called Mica Creek. That dam will be 740 feet high and will produce a lake 73 miles long, and from it there will be developed, or can be developed, over 1,500,000 kilowatts. This is one effect such a dam would have both on the Canadian side and the American side: on the American side it would increase the 6,500,000 kilowatts now being produced from the Columbia River to 13 million kilowatts, or, in other words, it would double the power now being produced; on the Canadian side it would increase the present 500,000 kilowatts to 2,500,000 kilowatts.

You might ask: "What has the Mica Dam got to do with it?" In the spring of the year the dams downstream overflow when the melting snows start to run, and after that comes a period when the water is cut away down until, in some months, some dams on the lower Columbia in the United States are not operating because of lack of water. The engineers who have been investigating this great scheme have pointed out that the water stored in the wintertime in the ice and snow could be held back and stored behind this great dam. When released it would generate, first of all, at Mica Dam, 1,500,000 kilowatts on the Canadian side, and then go on to help the four or five smaller dams that we have, and finally on to the United States, during the periods when the water would be low, thereby doubling the production of hydro-electric power in the United States and in Canada as well.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask if it is proposed to build this one dam at Mica Creek, or is another large dam to be built?

Hon. Mr. Reid: On the Canadian side we have four smaller dams which would be increased or built up to capture the extra water that would come from Mica Creek at certain seasons of the year, and it is by the addition to these dams that our supply of electricity would increase from 500,000 kilowatts to 2 million kilowatts. It is a magnificent project. It lends itself to the production of great gobs—shall I say?—of electrical energy.

Hon. Mr. Barbour: Do you know the length of this dam that will be 740 feet high?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No, I do not have that figure with me, but I will get it for my honourable friend. From the photographs I have seen I do not think the length of the dam is very great at that point. It is away up a few hundreds of miles from where the river ends, and I do not think the river is wide above the dam.

Negotiations have been going on for years and years. The last time I spoke to the house regarding salmon I pointed out what I believed was a danger to the salmon of the Fraser, for a proposal had been made first of all by General McNaughton, head of the International Joint Commission, to divert the waters from the Columbia through a 17-mile-long tunnel into the Fraser River. I pointed out that this would wipe out the $50 million salmon industry of the Fraser River because in order to divert the water through that mountain tunnel it would be necessary to construct 11 dams on the Fraser. It would not be sensible to merely open up a big tunnel and let the water run down into the Fraser without dams; the idea was to construct 11 dams and build up a lot of power.

I would like to indicate to the house the amount of hydro-electric power that could be made available in British Columbia without even touching the Fraser River. It is estimated that the Peace River dam project, of which I will speak later, could develop 4 million kilowatts; the Liard River in the north could produce 4 million, and the Columbia River could produce another 4 million kilowatts, of which 1½ million would be generated right at Mica Dam, the balance being supplied on a paid-back basis to Canada from the United States in lieu of benefits that country would receive from the extra water delivered from the Mica Dam. This power would be harnessed at Mica Dam and could be kept captive until needed.

The Clearwater River, in northeastern British Columbia, is capable of producing 2 million kilowatts; and the Homathko River, which runs to the coast a little north of Vancouver, could, it is stated, produce 1,200,000 kilowatts.

There are many other rivers from which could be developed a small amount of hydro power, but the ones I have referred to could produce a total of 14 million kilowatts without interfering in any way with the Fraser River.

In a statement to the commission some years ago General McNaughton put it up to the Americans that if they could not reach an agreement Canada would divert the waters of the Columbia to the Fraser in order to help bring about a settlement with the United States.

Something new has entered the picture, in that special interests known as Wenner Gren would like to develop the Peace River project. They have come into the picture and have approached the B.C. Electric and the B.C. Power Commission to sign contracts. As recently as February 4 this year, Mr. Williston, in a speech to the Legistlature of British Columbia, had this to say.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Who is Mr. Williston?

Hon. Mr. Farris: He is a cabinet minister, is he not?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, Minister of Lands and Forests of the province of British Columbia. He said he was convinced in 1957 that there never would be an international agreement on a downstream benefit return related to value created, so long as the Americans felt Canadians would be forced to develop the river for their own power needs within ten or fifteen years. He said:

> Any such Canadian development would have destroyed our bargaining position.

This is the most important part of his statement:

> However, as soon as the power potential of the Peace River was known, a change in American strategy became evident.

You can take your choice of that statement or the one made by General McNaughton—in which he is supported by the present Government—that an agreement could not be reached between Canada and the United States and so it was suggested that the water be diverted from the Columbia to the Fraser.

I might point out here that negotiations are proceeding very smoothly at the moment. In fact, I believe the commission is sitting today in Ottawa and will be sitting again tomorrow. Both American and Canadian delegates are present, but I do not suppose any intimation will be given of the results until a much later date.

Incidentally, I would like it to be strictly understood that nothing I say in this debate is intended to interfere with the completion of an agreement between Canada and the United States on the Columbia River.

As I mentioned before, the Wenner Gren interests entered the picture with the Peace River development. Honourable senators may remember that last year a Mr. Mainwaring appeared before a Senate committee and stated for our records that his company, Peace River Power Development Company Limited, was desirous of exporting electrical power to the United States. Well, I am not sure whether his former company, B. C. Electric, is, for he is not connected with it any longer and has become president of Wenner Gren. His statement to the public of British Columbia now is, "We don't need exports." I wonder what his company will say when they hear the latest news from British Columbia about the B. C. Electric, for it appeared in the newspaper just this morning that B. C. Electric have purchased a coal mine some 40 miles from Bridge River, where their Bridge River hydro lines run from Vancouver, and that they are ready to develop their electricity at the coal mine. They claim—and I have the figures here—that they will be able to produce 2 million horsepower for 50 years. As one of the owners of the mine said, "As long as there is enough coal in this district, the sockeye of the Fraser River are safe."

The people of British Columbia are confused and wondering just what is going to be the end of all this bargaining. In my opinion, it could be some time before a final agreement is reached with the United States, because behind the two statements of what has hindered or helped decisions by U.S. interests to be willing now to negotiate an agreement there is one outstanding fact which has never been made clear to the Canadian public. However, as one who has done some little research, I am in a position to inform honorable senators just where unforeseen trouble might arise now. The six dams on the United States side of the line were built when Roosevelt was President of the United States. Roosevelt was all in favour of public power. Now the picture at Washington has changed. President Eisenhower is against public power. As a matter of fact, he withdrew his Army engineers and put them somewhere else, investigating other hydro developments, and was lukewarm with regard to any agreement with Canada on the Columbia River. In my opinion, the real reason why no agreement has been reached between Canada and the United States is that behind the scenes there is a fight between private and public power, and unless that is resolved there may be no agreement for years to come.

As honourable senators know, in 1930 there was passed in Parliament the treaty setting up the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission. But do honourable senators know that it took seven years before that treaty was signed at Washington, owing to fighting behind the scenes? And I can visualize that there might be fighting behind the scenes between private and public power, because there is more trouble over water problems at the moment among senators and congressmen at Washington than over anything else. There is trouble in connection with the demand for water from Lake Superior by Chicago, and there are two or three other rivers in which the Americans are interested because they want to use water from Canada. I hope there is a settlement soon, but I see no great rush on the part of the Americans to make one. The agreement has all been worked out by officials, but I think it should be understood by senators and by the country in general that the last word in the development of these rivers rests with British Columbia. It is true that the Columbia River flows into the United States, but the 465 miles are under the provincial jurisdiction of British Columbia to a large extent. The same applies to the Peace River. The Minister for External Affairs, the Honourable Howard Green, has said that he is definitely against the development of the Peace River and that no export permit will be given. I am not going to debate that statement of his at all, but I merely wish to make this comment—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What would be his reason for taking that attitude?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Well, out in British Columbia they claim this is the biggest political fight that has occurred in years. Perhaps that would answer the honourable senator's question. I am not getting in between the participants if I can help it, other than to say that as far as the Peace River is concerned there is one criticism I make, not about its development, but about the giving away of an empire. I am told, and it has not yet been denied, that no one can get any rights for timber, oil, gas, or minerals in the 1,000 miles of that part of our territory in British Columbia because that area has been promised to the Wenner Gren interests. I am wondering just how many political fights we are going to be in, and if the B.C. Electric are now going to say, "We will not or cannot wait for the Columbia or Peace River power." And they know what they are talking about as far as power is concerned. They were saying only the other day that it might be 1968 before Peace River power will be available. They also said that it might be thirteen years before the Columbia River power would be available.

Hon. Mr. Barbour: Is it not true that it was estimated that the British Columbia Government would get $4 million if this dam were built?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No one can tell what the provincial Government will get. It has been estimated that the dam at Mica Creek will cost at least $500 million, and Premier Bennett has put an estimate of $1 billion on the project. It should be borne in mind that under the agreement we are going to get back 50 per cent of all power developed on the river. No one can say what we will get from the United States for the flood protection of the Mica Dam. And there is another factor which should not be overlooked. Besides the hydro-electric development in the United States this dam will prevent the great flooding of hundreds of thousands of acres, a problem which up to now has not been solved, and the statement has been made that they are willing to pay Canada $100 million to $150 million a year for 50 years to prevent the flooding of the lands by the building of the dam at Mica Creek. That about completes the story of the Columbia River.

Now I wish to come back to the Government's statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Howard Green, when he was Acting Prime Minister, which clearly showed that Ottawa will not remain passive if Premier Bennett tries to push through any scheme which would prevent development of the Columbia River. This may very well be an election year in British Columbia, and then the cry of provincial rights will be put forward. The one part I do not like regarding the Government's stand, of course, is that the Minister for External Affairs time and time again says, "We will reserve the right or power to divert the water from the Columbia to the Fraser," and that just might very well be used as one of the arguments by American interests for not reaching a final agreement. I hope an agreement will be reached soon. I have been careful this afternoon not to say anything that might be interpreted as likely to interfere with the development. I took a strong stand against diversion of the river, and I am as strongly opposed to it as ever, pointing out to honourable senators that in our rivers in British Columbia we have 14 million kilowatts of hydro power available, if developed, without having to use the Fraser.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the honourable senator if the federal Government exercises any authority except in so far as navigation is affected?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, it has threatened not to give a permit to export power. It is difficult to see how on the one hand it would allow the export of natural gas while on the other hand prohibiting the export of electricity.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Then the question of navigation would not enter into the matter at all?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No, there is no navigation question at all on the Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: When the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) spoke last session he was very much concerned about the sockeye salmon. Has that problem been resolved?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No; and it will be no problem until there is talk about diverting the waters of the Columbia to the Fraser, or building dams along the Fraser. Up to the present time, because of public sentiment and support, shall I say, belief that the public is behind us, we have been able to preserve that great river for the salmon fisheries, always pointing out that there are other places where ample power can be developed.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Has the question of diversion of the Columbia into the Fraser become an issue today or is it just a threat? Has it been proposed at all? Is there any likelihood of its being done?

Hon. Mr. Reid: If in the final agreement to be entered into between the Governments of Canada and the United States Canada remains adamant and insists on a provision that at any time we feel like it we will divert the Columbia waters into the Fraser, it will become a red hot issue, because then the threat might be more than a threat. I think that answers the honourable senator's question.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If a dam is built at Mica Creek would it be practicable to make the diversion?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Oh, yes. If the dam was built the waters could be siphoned through the proposed 17-mile tunnel into the Fraser River. But if that happens, good-bye salmon. That is why I repeatedly point to the number of other rivers available for power development, and the great amount of power which can be developed in British Columbia without interfering with the Fraser at all. If the Fraser were the only river one would not have the same argument.

Honourable senators, I appreciate the attentive audience I have had.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-12, respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company was incorporated in 1899. It constructed and operates a railway line running north from Sault Ste. Marie, crossing the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Franz, and crossing the railway lines of the Canadian National Railways at Oba and at Hearst. It also has a branch line running to Michipicoten Harbour on Lake Superior, and through a subsidiary it owns and operates six bulk freighters.

This company defaulted on its bonds about the time of the first Great War, and almost continuously from that time it operated under the direction of a committee of bondholders to whom all the common shares of the company were transferred under the terms of a voting trust agreement.

In 1958 the company applied to Parliament and an act was passed authorizing a financial reorganization of the company. It provided for a new issue of $11 million of first mortgage bonds and debentures and $4 million of preferred shares.

After that act was passed the financial reorganization was successfully carried out. The bonds and preferred shares were sold, and with the proceeds the company paid off its old bonded indebtedness of some $10,300,000 together with arrears of interest of over $5 million, and redeemed its old preferred shares. This was finally accomplished in March of 1959.

The old voting trust agreement was terminated and, at the annual meeting of the company held in April 1959, for the first time in a great many years the shareholders were directly represented at the annual meeting and elected their own nominees as directors.

As might be imagined from the fact that during such a long period the company was under the direction of a bondholders' committee, since April 1959 the company has found some minor difficulties in carrying out the administration in a normal way under the directors elected by its shareholders. This bill is for the purpose of clearing up those minor difficulties. It really deals with matters that concern the internal economy of the company, as honourable members will see as I run over the details of the various amendments.

Subsection 1 of Clause 1 provides for general meetings of the company being held anywhere in Canada. Subsection 2 provides for an increase in the board of directors to a maximum of 15, and under subsection 3 the quorum shall be not less than four directors. Subsection 4 provides for the appointment of alternate directors. Subsection 5 provides for the appointment of an executive committee of the directors. Subsection 6 provides that the foregoing subsections shall apply notwithstanding anything contained in the Railway Act.

Clause 2 of the bill deals with the matter of increasing the capital or the bonded indebtedness of the company. The particular reason for the clause is to remove an unduly restrictive provision that would now require a vote of two-thirds of all the shareholders of the company in order to authorize an increase in the capital stock or an issue of debentures. The company has to apply to Parliament in any event for permission to increase its capital or to borrow any more money, and the provision in clause 2 is to the effect that the application may be approved by a vote of two-thirds of the shareholders present at a meeting, provided that shareholders representing at least 10 per cent in value of the capital stock are present at the meeting or represented by proxy.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the honourable gentleman if there is any intention on the part of the company to use these funds for the purpose of extending the lines of the company? I have reference to the borrowings provided for in this clause.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: There are no actual borrowings provided for in this clause. It is simply an enabling clause. If the company desires at any time later to replace existing debentures or increase the capital stock in any way it will have to apply to Parliament again, and before doing so it will have to obtain approval of the application to Parliament from its shareholders as provided in this clause. The clause would not authorize any borrowing at the present time; it simply provides the procedure to be followed if the company does at any time desire to increase its capital stock or issue debentures.

Clause 3 provides that officers are eligible to be elected directors of the company.

Clause 4 brings the provision as to dividends into conformity with existing accounting practice, by saying that dividends may be paid out of any funds of the company available for that purpose.

Clause 5 provides that proxies need not be under the seal of shareholders.

Clause 6 eliminates the application of section 123 of the Railway Act in dealing with contracts made by a director with the company, and instead brings the company under the provisions of section 96 of the Companies Act, with respect to the general rule that a director must declare his interest in any contract and refrain from voting.

Clause 7 provides that apart from the special provisions of the Railway Act that are contained in this bill, the Railway Act will still apply to the company.

Honourable senators, if the bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, where the president and officials of the company will be available to supply further information.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire from the honourable senator whether the provisions as contained in this bill were passed at a general meeting of the shareholders?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: At the end of the explanatory notes to the bill there appears this paragraph:

At a special general meeting of shareholders held on the 8th day of December 1959 a resolution was carried by the unanimous vote of 194,020 shares represented at the meeting in favour of the application to Parliament for the enactment of the present bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PRIVATE BILLS

COLLEGE OF GENERAL PRACTICE OF CANADA —FIRST READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw presented Bill S-15, to incorporate The College of General Practice of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Explain, please.

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Honourable senators, this organization has been in existence for some time, and it feels that it could obtain its objectives better if it were incorporated. The specialists have their incorporation in the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the Canadian Medical Association is incorporated. The general practitioners wish to improve and maintain a high standard of practice. They will be able to do this by publishing a journal and theses, and also by post-graduate work. No doubt they feel that they need to be incorporated to do that. The College will have nothing whatever to do with the licence to practise medicine, and it is not intended that it shall have buildings and equipment or anything of that kind.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Thursday next.

MATADOR PIPE LINE COMPANY, LTD.— FIRST READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson presented Bill S-16, to incorporate Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Thursday next.

NATIONAL SANITARIUM ASSOCIATION— FIRST READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard presented Bill S-17, respecting the National Sanitarium Association.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will the honourable senator please explain?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, the National Sanitarium Association was incorporated in 1896 for the purpose of treating and curing persons affected with pulmonary disease. This is the association that constructed the first sanitarium in Canada, the sanitarium at Muskoka. It also constructed and has maintained the sanitarium known as Toronto Hospital for Tuberculosis at Weston, and the Gage Institute. Owing to the remarkable results that have been accomplished in curing tuberculosis these hospitals now have a good many empty beds. The purpose of this bill is to amend their powers so that they will not be restricted to the care and treatment of pulmonary disease only, but that their beds, facilities and funds may be used for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with any disease whatsoever.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Thursday next.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on a point of order, may I be allowed a word of explanation? When I requested that this bill be explained, a number of senators asked, "Why, on first reading?" I would point out that under the rules of our house a bill automatically gets first reading when it is introduced. When his Honour the Speaker asks when the bill shall be read the second time, honourable senators would like to know something about the bill before deciding it should be read a second time. It was for that reason I asked that an explanation be given, and I believe this is a very good practice.

The Hon. the Speaker: I believe so too.

MONTREAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—
REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-11, respecting the Montreal Life Insurance Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with one amendment.

Amendment read by the Clerk Assistant:

Page 1, Line 9: Strike out the word "La".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Next sitting.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 165 to 191, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill SD-98, for the relief of Rivka Fridman Nimrod, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Nimrod-Lothan, otherwise known as Rivka Fridman Hebel.

Bill SD-99, for the relief of John Frederick Alfred Webster.

Bill SD-100, for the relief of Mary Prukker Wigmore.

Bill SD-101, for the relief of Elizabeth Rudolph Beauchemin.

Bill SD-102, for the relief of Georges Delrue.

Bill SD-103, for the relief of Marie Claire Georgette Cronier Brault.

Bill SD-104, for the relief of Marie Therese Louise Forest Morin.

Bill SD-105, for the relief of Donat Savoie.

Bill SD-106, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Andre Sicotte.

Bill SD-107, for the relief of Stanley Willington Burton.

Bill SD-108, for the relief of Hannah Bitensky Bidner.

Bill SD-109, for the relief of Katherine Elizabeth Moore Shaw.

Bill SD-110 for the relief of Mary Margaret Young Doulton.

Bill SD-111, for the relief of Iris Margaret Leslie Sankey Jolliffe.

Bill SD-112, for the relief of Mary Glen Keirstead Routliffe.

Bill SD-113, for the relief of Helen Balacan Berinbaum, otherwise as Helen Balacan Berne.

Bill SD-114, for the relief of Morris Arthur Bergeron.

Bill SD-115, for the relief of Erica Theresa Schockner Giwertzman.

Bill SD-116, for the relief of Boris Moses Ovrutzky.

Bill SD-117, for the relief of Mac Ravitsky.

Bill SD-118, for the relief of Timothy David Rudston Thomason.

Bill SD-119, for the relief of Anne Smilovitch Portnoff.

Bill SD-120, for the relief of Violet Sandra Miller MacKenzie.

Bill SD-121, for the relief of Reva (Rita) Hutkin Agoston.

Bill SD-122, for the relief of Jean Ann Brown Craig.

Bill SD-123, for the relief of Frances Malofy Marzitelli.

Bill SD-124, for the relief of Louise Dupuis Papineau.

Bill SD-125, for the relief of Georgette Malick David.

Bill SD-126, for the relief of John Priestley.

Bill SD-127, for the relief of Caroline May Alexander Clements.

Bill SD-128, for the relief of Ellen Schwarz Blok.

Bill SD-129, for the relief of Nijs de Vos.

Bill SD-130, for the relief of Lucien Girard.

Bill SD-131, for the relief of Emilia Arcoragi Fisher.

Bill SD-132, for the relief of Michael Kaluta.

Bill SD-133, for the relief of Andre Marsolais.

Bill SD-134, for the relief of Jozefa Lukasiewicz Bielicz.

Bill SD-135, for the relief of Beverley June Russell Ehrhardt.

Bill SD-136, for the relief of Edith Hirsch Distelman.

Bill SD-137, for the relief of Lise Johanne Carreau Wolczecki.

Bill SD-138, for the relief of Charlotte Stilman Shulman.

Bill SD-139, for the relief of Gail Rabinovitch Golden.

Bill SD-140, for the relief of Marie Rose Lucette Durocher Di Iorio.

Bill SD-141, for the relief of Nelson Cyr.

Bill SD-142, for the relief of Ivy Baldwin Collier Wright.

Bill SD-143, for the relief of Joseph Alain Jean Guy Berube.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION—THIRD READING

Hon. Harold Connolly moved the third reading of Bill S-9, respecting the Canadian Public Health Association.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, this type of legislation, which enables the Canadian Public Health Association to carry on its benevolent projects more efficiently, is something that all honourable senators will support and it does not need any words from me to secure its passage through this house.

May I say right here, while legislation regarding health and welfare is before the house, that I would like to congratulate and compliment the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) and the honourable senator from North York (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) on their valuable contributions to the subjects in the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

The Canadian Public Health Association, which is made up of individuals sincerely and deeply interested in the field of public health and welfare who are desirous of giving voluntary assistance to Government projects for the improvement of public health, was organized and incorporated under a federal statute in 1912, even before there was any full-time public health department in any Government in Canada.

I am sure honourable senators will forgive me if I remind them that my province of New Brunswick has been and still is most progressive in this field of public health. Some senators may not be aware that the honourable senator from Sunbury (Hon. Mr. McGrand) was Minister of Health and Social Services in the New Brunswick Government for eight years, during which time many interesting measures were introduced, including one for the establishment of the first free cancer clinic in any province in Canada. Honourable senators also may not be aware that in 1918 New Brunswick set up, under the Honourable Dr. W. F. Roberts as Minister, the first full-time Department of Health, with cabinet status, in any Government in the then British Empire. We are proud of our record in this regard.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-71, for the relief of Jean Ludger Villeneuve.

Bill SD-72, for the relief of Robert Marcel Castets.

Bill SD-73, for the relief of Sarah Mary Shirley Collins Stewart.

Bill SD-74, for the relief of Stella Jean Dunn Breitman.

Bill SD-75, for the relief of Klari Margo Farkas Bodo.

Bill SD-76, for the relief of Vera Eileen Rath Croucher.

Bill SD-77, for the relief of Rena Kanofsky Perzow.

Bill SD-78, for the relief of Pearl Thorne Chipman.

Bill SD-79, for the relief of Joan Ethel Brooks Clarke.

Bill SD-80, for the relief of Ann Aaron Regenstrief.

Bill SD-81, for the relief of Eleanor Agnes Overall Cannon.

Bill SD-82, for the relief of Betty Zaracoff Ferstenfeld.

Bill SD-83, for the relief of Kenneth Alan MacKenzie.

Bill SD-84, for the relief of Honoria Evelyn Day Matthew.

Bill SD-85, for the relief of Rene Georges Clement.

Bill SD-86, for the relief of Mary Eva Sheila Redmond Beards.

Bill SD-87, for the relief of Geraldine Anne Mary McElligott Parsons.

Bill SD-88, for the relief of William Gordon Jack.

Bill SD-89, for the relief of Eileen Coates MacPherson.

Bill SD-90, for the relief of Maria Lozinsky Truby.

Bill SD-91, for the relief of Willie Pomerleau.

Bill SD-92, for the relief of Patricia Frances Turley Raustis.

Bill SD-93, for the relief of Mary Jean Olive De Vouge Tremblay.

Bill SD-94, for the relief of Dorothy May Vallis Odell.

Bill SD-95, for the relief of Jimmy D'Abate.

Bill SD-96, for the relief of Mary Semenyshyn Shuch, otherwise known as Mary Semenyshyn Shuck.

Bill SD-97, for the relief of Monique Bauset Malo.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before these bills are read the third time I wish to bring to your attention a few points which are worth consideration. But first may I say that my honourable colleagues may be surprised to learn how much interest the Canadian people at large take in the proceedings of the Senate. In discussing the divorce bills I am not looking for any publicity, but the Senate Debates are widely read. You will be surprised, Mr. Speaker and honourable colleagues, when I read to you a letter that I received from a gentleman, whom I do not know, who lives at Flin Flon, Manitoba:

Honourable Sir:

re: Debates of Senate

Vol. 108 #10, Dated Feb. 3/60

From your remarks on page 100, I take it that you are opposed to any reforms to wider grounds for divorce. In that you have my support. How can I be of any help to defeat such a measure either in the Senate or the House of Commons.

Also in the Senate Debates Vol. 108 #11, Feb. 4th, page 109, you have presented to certain members extracts from Confederation Debates pertaining to marriage and divorce, will these be read into the Senate Debates? If not, could I procure a copy of the same?

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience. I thank you for hearing me.

Respectfully yours,

I have received other letters like this one, and it is comforting to realize that our fellow citizens are showing a deep interest in what is said in the Senate. And this is not an exception. I will not take the time of this honourable house by reading any more letters, but honourable senators might be surprised at the attention that has been paid by the Canadian public at large to what is said right here—and it is well-deserved recognition of what is said when my colleagues are addressing this house.

I will not read all the extracts that I have made from the Confederation Debates of 1865, copies of which extracts I have sent to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the honourable leaders and honourable chairman of the Divorce Committee. I have not the facilities to have more copies made of those important papers, but later, on another occasion, I may familiarize the house with what was said a long time ago by those gentlemen who have been called the Fathers of Confederation. They were the lawmakers, and it was in their day that the Constitution of our country took shape. It is most interesting to realize what was their viewpoint, because it is on account of that that the Divorce Committee of this honourable chamber deals with divorce petitions now. It is because of the opinions and the will of those gentlemen that Parliament passes legislation to grant divorces that are legally valid. I will quote the then Prime Minister, the late Sir Etienne Pascal Taché, who was also Receiver General and Minister of Militia. In answering one of his colleagues he said, as appears in the Confederation Debates, at page 344:

If the honorable gentleman will but take his pen, he will be able to note my answer: "The word 'marriage' has been inserted to give the General Legislature the right to decide what form of marriage will be legal in all parts of the Confederation without in any way interfering with the rules and prescriptions of the Church to which the contracting parties belong."

Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, who was Attorney General for the East, or for Lower Canada, was no less explicit. He said:

But the nullity of the marriage must first be proved to the satisfaction of the ecclesiastical authorities and under the Canon Law, and then Parliament might only do it on that evidence, for it would be omnipotent.

The Honourable Mr. Dorion, who was Liberal leader at the time, interjected this remark:

Then, the federal Parliament will be omnipotent.

And Attorney General Cartier said:

Yes, in that respect.

Those who have read these official documents and who have considered what was said also by another of the Fathers of Confederation, Sir Hector Langevin, must have noticed that the reason why they were giving jurisdiction to the Parliament of Canada over marriage was to have uniformity in the celebration of marriage in each province. Unfortunately, I must say, later on it proved to be only a pretext. But if we look at the concluding part of that debate to be found in the last pages of the Confederation Debates of 1865, we realize that the provinces had not one iota of rights in the Address that was voted to be sent to the Queen asking for a Constitution. It happened on March 13, 1865. In the Address to Her Majesty containing a draft of Confederation, there is, in the first place, an enumeration of the powers of the general Parliament. Section 29 reads as follows:

The General Parliament shall have power to make Laws for the peace, welfare and good Government of the Federated Provinces (saving the Sovereignty of England), and especially Laws respecting the following subjects:—

And then follow 37 paragraphs, each dealing with a particular subject. Paragraph 31 reads:

31. Marriage and Divorce.

Section 32 reads:

All Courts, Judges, and Officers of the several Provinces shall aid, assist and obey—

Mark you, they use the word "obey". Obey whom?

—the General Government in the exercise of its rights and powers.

And for such purposes shall be held to be Courts, Judges, and Officers of the General Government.

Pardon me, honourable senators, but I find it formidable that at that time the provincial judges were supposed to "aid, assist and obey"—I repeat obey—"the general Government in the exercise of its rights and powers, and for such purposes shall be held to be courts, judges and officers of the general Government".

According to this, it was not justice that had to prevail, it was the will of the central Government.

Now, I will read the powers of the local legislatures. Section 43 says:

The Local Legislatures shall have power to make Laws respecting the following subjects:

15. Property and civil rights excepting those portions thereof assigned to the General Parliament.

That is now the Parliament of Canada.

Section 45 says:

In regard to all subjects over which jurisdiction belongs to both the General and Local Legislatures, the laws of the General Parliament shall control and supersede those made by the Local Legislature, and the latter shall be void as far as they are repugnant to or inconsistent with the former.

And it is to be noted, honourable colleagues, that in that Address there was no reservation whatever to give to the local legislature any jurisdiction with reference to marriage and divorce, nor even for the solemnization of marriage.

Well, the stand taken by the Fathers of Confederation that they were keeping for the central Government jurisdiction over marriage in order to have uniformity was just a pretext. But there it is not mentioned —it appeared later on in the British North America Act. At the time of the Confederation debates, or at the time when the Address was voted by United Canada to have a new Constitution the provinces had no jurisdiction over the celebration or solemnization of marriage as they have now.

Now we come to the British North America Act. I have some other documents to bring to the attention of His Honour the Speaker, the honourable leaders, and the honourable chairman of the committee. I am sure they are familiar with them, but in order not to be misunderstood I would like to be permitted to read that part of the Constitution which concerns marriage. I refer to Part VI of the British North America Act, 1867, entitled "Distribution of Legislative Powers," sub-titled "Powers of the Parliament".

91. It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively—

Mark you exclusively.

—to the Legislatures of the Provinces, and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive—

Mark you, exclusive—

—Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated: that is to say—

I give two subjects only:

21. Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

26. Marriage and Divorce.

That section concludes with these words:

And any Matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section shall not be deemed to come within the Class of Matters of a local or private Nature comprised in the Enumeration of the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

Now appears the sub-title "Exclusive—" mark you, exclusive—"Powers of Provincial Legislatures".

92. In each Province the Legislature may exclusively—

Now mark you, exclusively——make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say—

I quote from paragraphs 12 and 13.

12. The Solemnization of Marriage in the Province.

13. Property and Civil Rights in the Province.

The B.N.A. Act contains another section which has been wrongly interpreted because the first seven words of that section have not received the attention they deserve. I refer to section 129, a most important section of the act because it refers to legislation that was in existence at the time of Confederation, whereas sections 91 and 92 were for future legislation. Section 129 is altogether different, therefore, it should have preceded sections 91 and 92 of our constitution. Let us read section 129:

Except as otherwise provided by this Act—

Those are the seven words to which I referred a moment ago.

—all Laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick at the Union, and all Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and all legal Commissions, Powers, and Authorities, and all Officers, Judicial, Administrative, and Ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick respectively, as if the Union had not been made—

That is the first part of the section. It means that all the laws in force in Canada—and Canada means Upper and Lower Canada, and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the time of Union—remained in force as if the Union had not been made, except as otherwise provided for by this act.

That section was drafted in haste, and that is the reason why the second part is perhaps difficult to understand. But its meaning is obvious. I quote the second part:

—subject nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland,) to be repealed, abolished, or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Legislature of the respective Province, according to the Authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act.

If we are not to tear up sections 91 and 92, then the only meaning of the second part of this section is that the federal Parliament was to be empowered to repeal or amend legislation that had come within federal jurisdiction by virtue of the new Constitution. On the other hand, the provinces had no right to amend legislation that came under federal jurisdiction, but they had the right to amend or repeal legislation that had remained within provincial jurisdiction. I hope I have made myself clear.

There was a considerable amount of carelessness in the drafting of that section, but any section of the law must be interpreted in its entirety and according to the context of the other adjoining sections in the same statute. This is very important. There were courts of divorce in Nova Scotia and in New Brunswick; there were none at the time in either Lower or Upper Canada. The question is: Did those provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and, later on, Prince Edward Island, join Confederation with the understanding that they would keep their legislation concerning divorce courts? If one reads section 129 of the British North America Act without prejudice, and without having one's mind deformed by fallacious jurisprudence, it is impossible to deny that the provinces that were joining Upper and Lower Canada at the time of Confederation were bound by the British North America Act and could not legally maintain their courts of divorce, because the jurisdiction with respect to those matters was attributed exclusively to the Parliament of Canada. That is one important point.

I submit that there is no provision with regard to the jurisdiction of the tribunals, and even if those courts had existed since Confederation they would not be any more valid and the divorces that have been granted by them would still be ultra vires. I would say the same thing with respect to the province of British Columbia and the other western provinces.

I now have to mention a very important judgment of the Privy Council. It is in the matter of a reference in 1912 to the Supreme Court of Canada of certain questions concerning marriage. The case covers some 350 pages of one volume of Supreme Court of Canada Reports. The judgment of the Privy Council, which was rendered by Lord Haldane, an eminent jurist and who had a great reputation in Great Britain during his lifetime, is summarized in (1912) Appeal Cases, page 880, as follows:

Under sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, the exclusive power conferred on the provincial Legislature to make laws relating to the solemnization of marriage in the province operates by way of exception to the exclusive jurisdiction as to its validity conferred upon the dominion, and enables the provincial Legislature to enact conditions as to solemnization, and in particular as to the right to perform the ceremony, which may affect the validity of the contract.

This refers implicitly to the meaning of the words "exclusive" and "exclusively" which are found so often in sections 91 and 92. What happened was that in 1910 or 1911 a member of Parliament sponsored a bill concerning the celebration of marriage which caused worry to the Government of the time, and it did what it had to do. It submitted the case to the Supreme Court of Canada. The answer of the Supreme Court of Canada was that that bill would be ultra vires of Parliament, and the Privy Council maintained the decision. If it is true that the Parliament of Canada has no jurisdiction whatever over the solemnization of marriage, in virtue of the Constitution of Canada, we have to conclude for the same reason that the provinces and the provincial courts—such as the Supreme Court of Ontario, which is a tribunal of provincial jurisdiction—have no authority whatever over matters that are excluded from their jurisdiction by the British North America Act.

Honourable colleagues will answer me that there are courts of divorce in the province of Ontario. A bill was passed by Parliament in 1930 to establish divorce courts in the province of Ontario. Honourable senators, I wonder if you have had time to look at the first two volumes of the Commons Hansard of the first session of 1930, where the whole discussion is reported. You could go one year farther back and consult the Commons Hansard of 1929, and there you would see that the very same legislation was introduced by, if I remember well, a member of Parliament who belonged to the United Farmers of Alberta. That bill to establish divorce courts in Ontario was defeated in 1929. Similar legislation was brought in again at the following session and there were strong objections, but not on party lines. There were Conservatives and Liberals who favoured the measure, but there were Conservatives as well as Liberals who opposed it. I for one had the opportunity, and I used it, to vote eight times against this single legislation. There were various motions to push it aside, to give it the six-months' hoist, et cetera. Once the bill was defeated, in 1930, by the Speaker's vote, but afterwards there was a small majority in favour of the bill and it passed.

Was that legislation valid? I understand it was difficult for the Government of the time, when the bill was passed, to refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada because we were on the eve of an election and both parties could have used that opportunity to make exaggerations, but Mr. R. B. Bennett was strongly in favour of the bill. It may explain why no reference was made after the election, to the Supreme Court of Canada to test the validity of that bill. My leader, Mr. Mackenzie King, took no part in the debate and remained outside of it. But Mr. Lapointe, then Minister of Justice, mentioned that there were objections from many angles, especially from the constitutional angle.

If the Constitution means something and marriage and divorce are exclusively within federal jurisdiction, was it possible for the Parliament of Canada to create divorce courts in the province of Ontario? It seems quite out of the ordinary. Since then thousands of divorces have been granted by the courts of that province. The question that is in our minds is: are they valid or are they ultra vires? Are they a nullity? It is a big question. The other day when I heard my honourable and distinguished friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) say he knew what I had in mind, I told him that he did not. What I have in mind is to establish our position as lawmakers in order that never again may we have any legislation that is just an illusion, legislation that gives people the illusion of a right. It is a matter of very great concern.

The judges take the law as it is and it is for the members of the legal fraternity to bring the judges' attention to the constitutional aspect of any law. Unfortunately, according to my knowledge, everyone has taken the law for granted and has not considered it with regard to the Constitution. Some day I will give more details about the legislation of 1930 that established divorce courts in the province of Ontario. You will realize, Mr. Speaker and honourable colleagues, that it was not a matter of playing politics; it was a union of a group of men who belonged to both parties, but who unfortunately were not numerous enough, who fought that legislation. It is now history. I thank you, honourable colleagues, for having listened with so much attention to that exposé with regard to the law. We must endeavour by all means to amend it if we want to have legislation that stands up and that is worthy of our country and of you, honourable colleagues.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, first of all we must admit that my good friend delivered a very well-prepared speech, for which he must be congratulated. However, I find it very difficult to reconcile his attitude with what he said when he spoke on the question of divorce on February 3 last, in this house, as reported in Hansard at page 100, column 2:

> It is a tremendous question, and we come to the point that the only possible way to deal with the matter is to transfer jurisdiction over family rights, over marriage, which at present is in the Parliament of Canada, to the provincial Legislatures.

If I follow his argument of this evening correctly, I understand he wants that jurisdiction to be taken away from the Legislatures and given back to the Parliament of Canada. I would like him to explain that, because I do not understand his point.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I thank my honourable colleague. What he said is very far from my mind, and I must tell him that I have not finished my exposé. However, I presume it is long enough for this evening, but my intention is to give it drop by drop, in order to convince my honourable colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can't do it!

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Oh, no? Oh, no? Time will tell. This matter deserves to be discussed seriously until we come to some understanding that will settle the question forever. I have the greatest respect for my colleagues, all of them, and I want them to be free men and free women.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable senator answering the question that was put to him?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

This is why I hope that in a future day that is not too distant divorce legislation will be banned from the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as I moved the third reading of the bills in question, honourable senators will bear with me if I make one or two remarks in reply to my honourable friend from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot).

My first remark is to compliment my honourable friend on the industry with which he prepared his very learned and erudite address of this evening. My second remark is not so complimentary, perhaps not so acceptable. It is to raise the question, Mr. Speaker, of the propriety of an address of this kind on a motion to pass specific bills with regard to divorce. The address was not directed to any bill; no information was given us with regard to the bills; no thoughts were expressed which would tend to lead us to pass or to reject the bills. I humbly submit that an address of that kind, which is the first drop in perhaps a bucket of water—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: A couple of buckets.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: —is not properly delivered on such an occasion as this. If the honourable gentleman would like to discuss at great length the subject of marriage and divorce, the constitutionality of provincial courts, and various things of that kind, I suggest he should originate such a debate in the form of a resolution of some kind, or a bill or what not, in order to bring it properly before this house, in which event the rights of debate would be governed by our rules. I submit that it is not the custom of this house, nor is it parliamentary procedure, to divide a debate into as many drops of water as there are motions from time to time in the routine proceedings of the house.

Perhaps my friend will pardon my presumption in suggesting that he was out of order.

Honourable senators, I found it a little difficult, like my good friend who just preceded me, (Hon. Mr. Dupuis), in determining in my own mind just what the purpose and the finality of the honourable gentleman's argument might be. I think he wished to prevent us from being led astray by what he regarded as fallacious jurisprudence. The jurisprudence in question consists of decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada and the decisions of the Privy Council in Great Britain. If my friend believes that the constitution of the courts of the province of Ontario to which he referred is beyond the jurisdiction of the dominion Parliament, the place to argue that question is in the Supreme Court of Canada, not these legislative halls. We are not likely to take any procedure which will change the present situation, even with regard to the divorce court. Taken on the basis of public good, the courts of Ontario handle some 1,500 to 2,000 divorce cases per year, and it is not likely that this chamber will take any action which would prevent that number of litigants from having their rights determined by a provincial court.

However that may be, I rather think that the purpose of my friend's argument, or the portion of his argument which we have heard this evening, is directed toward the suggestion which he made on the first drop of his argument last week, when he advocated that marriage and divorce, or at least divorce, should be placed within the jurisdiction of the provincial Legislatures and that honourable senators should pass a resolution asking the imperial Parliament to change our Constitution to that effect.

It was in support of that idea that he presented to me—and I thank him for it and am highly appreciative of the honour—and to the two leaders a memorandum of extracts from the Confederation Debates, a book which is in the library of Parliament.

Honourable senators will remember that when he spoke last week I replied to him, saying that the Fathers of Confederation decided this question and had reserved marriage and divorce to the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada in order to protect the minorities in all provinces, and particularly in the province of Quebec.

I would ask your pardon if I read some excerpts from the honourable gentleman's own memorandum on this question.

With regard to marriage—and my friend goes so far, I think, as to attack the validity of the dominion Parliament's legislation with respect to marriage—I read from page 8 of his memorandum. He has already quoted the Honourable Mr. Langevin, who was Solicitor General. The Solicitor General read this clause setting out how the word "marriage" was proposed to be understood:

> The word marriage has been placed in the draft of the proposed Constitution to invest the federal Parliament with the right of declaring what marriages shall be held and deemed to be valid throughout the whole extent of the Confederacy, without, however, interfering in any particular with the doctrines or rites of the religious creeds to which the contracting parties may belong.

I call your attention to the words, "validity throughout the whole extent of the Confederacy".

The Solicitor General goes on to say:

> The whole may be summed up as follows:—
> The central Parliament may decide that any marriage contracted in Upper Canada, or in any other of the Confederated provinces, in accordance with the laws of the country in which it was contracted, although that law might be different from ours, should be deemed valid in Lower Canada, in case the parties should come to reside there, and vice versa.

In other words the reason for giving jurisdiction over marriage to the dominion Parliament was to ensure that we have uniform laws with regard to marriage, so that a marriage contracted in Lower Canada should be valid in Upper Canada and a marriage contracted in Upper Canada should be valid in Lower Canada, or in any of the other provinces which at that time or later on were to become part of the Dominion of Canada.

The importance of that subject, of that decision, and of the reason for the decision, is obvious to everyone within the sound of my voice.

Now, divorce is to some extent in the same position.

At a little later date the Honourable the Solicitor General of that time, in advocating Confederation, again read that clause that I have just recited, and the report goes on in this way:

Hon. Mr. Dorion: Will a local Legislature have the right of declaring a marriage between parties not professing the same religious belief invalid?

Hon. Attorney-General Cartier: Has not the Legislature of Canada now the power of legislating on that matter, and yet has it ever thought of legislating in that way?

The Attorney General was pointing out that a general Legislature such as that of Canada at that time, or of the Parliament which it was proposed at that time to constitute, would not legislate in a partisan way, or according to the dictates or prejudices of any sect or religious group. And that, of course, has been our experience. Then the Honourable Mr. Remillard, of Bellechasse, made these remarks, which have the same application today as they had in those times:

At the present day, all the Catholic members from Lower Canada are opposed to divorce as a matter of expediency and of conscience, and yet, even in the existing Legislature, they cannot prevent it. Why, therefore, blame the Government for not having prevented in the federal Parliament that which they cannot even prevent here?

After an interruption he continues:

Has it ever been very easy to impose in Lower Canada laws upon the English inhabitants of that province, and to prevent them from obtaining what they consider as a right? No; it would have been an act of injustice to endeavour to force our opinions on this subject on the English and Protestant population of Lower Canada; and if an attempt had been made to do so, Confederation would probably have failed, because the majority of the members of the Conference would have maintained their claims, and this would have been sufficient to prevent Confederation. There can be no doubt but that the bishops and the clergy have consulted together respecting this article, and that they came to the conclusion that it is an evil which there are no means of preventing. I have confidence enough in the clergy and bishops of Lower Canada to believe that if that clause, on which so much stress is laid, was of a nature to do any injury to our religious interests, they would loudly exclaim against it and have justice done us. Our bishops are not in the habit of standing in fear of the civil authorities, when their duty calls them to defend the interests which are entrusted to them.

He is arguing that this clause giving jurisdiction over divorce to the Parliament of Canada had not been opposed by the bishops and other authorities of the Roman Catholic Church at that time.

Then Mr. Harwood goes on to say:

If the control of matters connected with marriage and divorce had been assigned to the local governments, what would have been the fate of our coreligionists in Upper Canada, who are in a minority in that province?

There was a minority of Roman Catholics in Upper Canada just as there was a minority of Protestants in Lower Canada.

He continued:

Moreover, everybody is aware that it was by the help of the Protestants, who think as we do on this subject, that we have hitherto escaped the passing of a divorce law. Divorce is not looked upon with a favourable eye by all Protestants; far from it... We must bear in mind, also, that there are Catholics elsewhere besides in Lower and Upper Canada; they are to be found in all the Lower Provinces, and what would be their position if these questions were left to the local legislatures. The Catholics, therefore, of both Upper and Lower Canada, as well as those of the Lower Provinces, are directly interested in the removal of these questions from the local legislatures. It seems to me that every man who studies this question in a Catholic point of view, as it stands in the five provinces, will find that the conference was perfectly right in not leaving the question of divorce to the control of the local governments.

I take that quotation from my friend's own memorandum. Why he supplied it to me, I do not know, in view of the argument he has placed before us. But the facts of those days are the facts of today. We in this house have always been considered the protectors of minorities. Surely we are not now to be asked to leave the minorities on this question in the various provinces, be they Protestants or Catholics, entirely to the mercy of the various majorities in the provincial legislatures.

The same consideration, which apparently moved the clergy in those days to consent to and not to oppose the present Constitution with regard to divorce, I have no doubt actuates them today. I have not heard the leaders of any church asking that this subject of divorce be left to provincial Legislatures. I am sure we would be doing a very great disfavour to all the religionists in every province were we to listen to arguments of that kind.

Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to make a correction?

The Hon. the Speaker: The correction, if it is made, should be very brief. I agree that this debate is out of order. I did not so rule, because no objection was made to it. When the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) made an objection I did not rule it out because I wanted to give him a chance to answer, which was only fair.

When the next "drop" comes in this debate —now that we know the dimensions it is taking—I think the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) should introduce a bill to amend the 1930 legislation dealing with the establishment of divorce courts within the provinces, or a resolution of some kind to bring the matter formally before the house.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, on the point of order, I have no doubt that His Honour the Speaker is correct in his ruling. However, I may say that ever since I have been a member of this house an honourable senator has been given an opportunity to speak at almost any time and on any subject. I came to this house directly from the House of Commons where the rules, as you know, are strictly adhered to, and I was under the impression that the same procedure was followed here. But I was advised in no uncertain terms that in this house the rules are followed according to the spirit and not the letter. The result is that we are frequently out of order under our rules. This, of course, is not the first time the rules have been abridged.

I quite agree with His Honour that this is not a desirable practice. My objection is due particularly to the fact that we come into this house tonight, for instance, expecting to debate certain matters which are on the Order Paper. I presume the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) had expected to speak tonight in the debate on the address in reply to the Speech form the Throne. We had expected to hear him, but it is now so late an hour that he may not feel inclined to speak.

I have been placed in the same position myself, in that I have on occasion come into the house expecting to make a speech on a certain subject and some other honourable senator has raised another question and debated it for about a half hour—on one occasion I think the debate lasted an hour. While I did not feel much like speaking at that time, I did speak, and I believe I made an even worse speech than I am accustomed to.

The Order Paper carries a notice by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) that on Thursday next he will draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada. I presume that if the honourable senator had risen in his place on Thursday next without notice, and proceeded to bring this subject to the attention of the house, no one would have objected to it. In that event we might have debated it for an hour that day. But he has taken the proper course by giving notice that he will bring that matter to the attention of the house on Thursday.

I quite agree with His Honour the Speaker that if an honourable senator intends to discuss a subject which is not on the Orders of the Day, it would be preferable if he did so by way of a motion or a bill or notice of what he intends to discuss.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with regard to the point of order raised, I have always understood that if no objection was made it was the spirit of the house that the debate should be allowed, assuming, of course, that it is so allowed with the full consent of honourable senators. Had an objection been made to this debate I would certainly have sustained it and ruled the debate out of order. I believe that is what should be done. Therefore, unless objection is made, the Chair will take for granted that debate is going on with full consent of the Senate.

With regard to the unexpected happening in the Senate, I do not believe that that is a bad thing.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wish to make a correction. I sent copies of official papers which I have read in order that Your Honour, the honourable leaders and the honourable Chairman of the Committee could peruse them and know what the discussion was about. What my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has read from was not a memorandum but extracts from the Confederation Debates.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN REASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-13, respecting the Canadian Reassurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators this is an act to incorporate a company under the name of Canadian Reassurance Company and, in French, Compagnie Canadienne de Réassurance.

The incorporators of the company are merely provisional directors, and I will say a word or two in a few moments in regard to the intended ownership of the company.

The capital stock of the company is to be $1 million which may be increased to $3 million, and the amount to be subscribed before the general meeting for the election of directors is called is $1 million. In fact, the company proposes to pay into surplus another $1 million.

The head office of the company is to be in the city of Toronto in the province of Ontario, and the company is incorporated for the purpose of making contracts of life insurance, personal accident insurance and sickness insurance. However, I am informed that the company will restrict its activities entirely to reassurance; that is to say, this company does not propose to go to the public and sell policies directly to it. It is entirely a reassurance company.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: But it is empowered to sell contracts?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, it is empowered to do so, but that is the information I have been given. This will be the only company incorporated in Canada which will carry on the business of reassurance in the field of life insurance.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Are there any companies incorporated outside of Canada carrying on that business within Canada?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. There is a great deal of reinsurance done by Canadian companies with companies in other countries. I will come to that in a moment. I will name a company which, indeed, will be a sister company to this one, namely, a reinsurance company incorporated in the United States. When I say "a sister company" I mean a company which is owned by the intended owners of this company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are there other Canadian companies which are doing reinsurance business?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I will just carry on if you will allow me, but I will have something to say in that regard in a moment. The owners of this company will be a corporation by the name of Swiss Reinsurance Company of Zurich. This is the largest purely reinsurance company in the world. It also owns a company called Canadian Reinsurance Company, which reinsures fire, casualty and marine risks. The company being incorporated by this bill has a quite similar name. There is only a very slight difference, the name of the company being incorporated by this bill being Canadian Reassurance Company. However, the usual consent has been filed by Canadian Reinsurance Company to the incorporation of this company under so similar a name. The reason for the consent, of course, is the fact that both these companies will be owned by the same parent company, namely, Swiss Reinsurance Company of Zurich.

I told the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) a moment ago that I would say a word in regard to other reinsurance companies in Canada. As far as I know the only other reinsurance company of any kind incorporated in Canada is the one I have just referred to, Canadian Reinsurance Company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Did I understand my honourable friend to say that company does fire and casualty insurance?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, that company reinsures fire, casualty and marine risks only.

This company will be governed by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, and the certificate of registry which will be granted by the Department of Insurance will restrict the business of the company to reinsurance. That is the information I have received from Mr. K. R. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance. Consequently, although it would appear from this bill that this company will have the power of an ordinary insurance company, its business will be restricted to reinsurance by the Department of Insurance.

The proposed incorporation has been discussed and approved by Mr. MacGregor and his department.

The majority of the directors will be Canadian citizens, ordinarily resident in Canada. The company will be managed by a Canadian, Mr. Robert R. Gallagher, F.S.A. Mr. Gallagher has for seven years been engaged with a company called North American Reinsurance Company. I have no doubt that many honourable senators have heard of this company. It is a very large reinsurance company, whose head office, I believe, is in the city of New York. That company also is owned by the Swiss Reinsurance Company of Zurich, the owners of the company now being incorporated.

It is proposed that the company to be incorporated by this bill will commence to do business in May 1960.

Honourable senators, I hope that my explanation of this bill has been complete enough, but if there are any questions that I can answer, I shall be happy to do so.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is my honourable friend suggesting that the Superintendent of Insurance will issue this restrictive certificate without even a request from the company for such a restriction on its operations?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: My understanding is that the company desires to be only in the business of reinsurance and it has requested that it be restricted accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: At this time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, at this time.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, it seems to me that that point needs clearing up. By the powers given in section 7 it is quite clear that the company may make contracts of life insurance, personal accident insurance and sickness insurance; that is, it may engage in those types of business. So far as I have been able to ascertain in a hasty reading of the bill, there is nothing that would even commit the company to reinsure.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Except the name.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Except the name, and that would scarcely do it.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If, as the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) said, the intention of the promoters is to engage in reinsurance only, why not state that in the legislation? I am not going to oppose the measure tonight but I think when it goes to committee this point should be cleared up. As a matter of fact, there are various ways today by which the classes of insurance mentioned here can be covered by reinsurance, but I again point out to the house that there is nothing in this bill that even hints, except in the title, that the business of the company is to be reinsurance and not the active business of life insurance, personal accident insurance or sickneess insurance.

Perhaps as the years have passed we have become a bit careless in defining our legislation. I belong to the school that believes that legislation should clearly set out the limits of its purpose, and I hope that when this bill goes to committee it will receive pretty careful scrutiny in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think it will.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, in a spirit of fairness I would like to direct the attention of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) to something in this bill. It is not necessary that he should answer me at this time, for it may be more appropriate to get the information in committee. Then, again, he may feel that some consideration should be given to the language in the bill.

If the business is going to be confined to that of reinsurance, then at the time the company starts to do an act of reinsurance there must already be in existence a contract of life insurance for instance which has been entered into by some other life insurance company with an individual. That poses a very neat question as to whether the power to enter into a contract of reinsurance with respect to an existing life insurance contract is a power which comes within the scope of the objects set out in section 7 of this bill, wherein the company is given authority to make contracts of life insurance, personal accident insurance and sickness insurance. If the operation of the company is to be confined solely to reinsurance of contracts of life insurance, personal accident insurance or sickness insurance already in existence, the question is whether section 7 of the bill should not specifically give the company power to engage in the business of reinsurance as well as in the forms of insurance mentioned therein.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Could the company not get that power under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, which will apply under section 8 of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It could. That may be the answer.

Hon. Mr. Wall: May I bring the attention of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) to section 3 of the bill, which seems to be very oddly worded, if I may put it that way, with reservations. It reads:

> The capital stock of the company shall be one million dollars, which may be increased to three million dollars.

I do not recall any previous bill with that kind of permissive quality in one of its clauses.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, referring first to the remarks made by the honourable senators from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden)—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators will understand that if the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) speaks a second time on this bill it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I must confess that I read today the section to which the honourable senator from Churchill referred, namely, section 7, and upon noticing the wording I was somewhat surprised at its inclusiveness. Consequently I called Mr. MacGregor on the telephone and made certain observations to him along the lines of the remarks made in this house tonight by the honourable senator from Churchill. Mr. MacGregor explained to me that the company would be restricted by his department to reinsurance. I confess to honourable senators that I did not pursue the matter further because I expected it would be discussed in committee, where Mr. MacGregor will appear as a witness. We will undoubtedly have a full opportunity to examine this point on that occasion. I do want to say that I think the point in that regard has been well taken at the moment—certainly until we have an explanation of the matter from the Superintendent of Insurance.

In regard to the remarks made by the honourable the junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) concerning clause 3 of the bill, I really do not think this clause is unusual. It may be, and if it is, it can be discussed and perhaps amended in committee, if necessary.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think the purpose of that clause is to enable the company to increase its capital stock without coming back to Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

MUNICH REINSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —SECOND READING

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson moved the second reading of Bill S-14, to incorporate Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill which you have before you is similar in form to others which have previously come before the house, and is in fact extraordinarily similar to Bill S-13 which has just been read the second time. However, it has certain points of interest, and perhaps a difference which I should explain.

In the first place, this bill is to form a Canadian reinsurance company which will be the wholly-owned subsidiary of a German parent company known as the Munich Reinsurance Company, or, in German, Münchener Rückversicherungs Gesellschaft, which has a long history, being founded in 1880, and is engaged exclusively in reinsurance. It is a large company, having total assets in excess of $200 million, and last year had a premium income of some $147 million. The parent company is the second largest reinsurance company in the world. Approximately two-thirds of its business is done in Germany, and one-third is foreign business. Throughout its history the company has done a very substantial foreign business, and it is rather interesting to note that of two of its larger claims, one came from the great catastrophe in San Francisco in 1906, and another from the tragedy of the sinking of the Titanic prior to World War I. Actually by 1914 this German parent company was the largest reinsurance company in the world, but in the course of two world wars it lost that position. However, after 1950 the company was permitted to resume its foreign business, and as a result it has now come back to be the second largest reinsurance company in the world. Since 1955 the Munich Reinsurance Company, the parent company, has been operating a branch in the United States through an office in New York, and just in December last it formed the Munich American Reinsurance Company for life business with head office in Atlanta.

Incidentally, may I remark that while, as I said, the company has been operating in the United States since 1955, in actual fact it was operating there before the turn of the century, but of course during the war it was taken over.

The company has been operating in Canada since November 1957 through a branch in Toronto. This branch has already built up quite a substantial business and has at the moment a premium income of the order of $2½ million a year. With the incorporation of this new Canadian company the parent company proposes to start it off by ceding 50 per cent of the business being carried on through the branch. This should insure a good start for the Canadian company.

The Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada will have a paid up capital of one million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I wonder if I may interrupt the honourable gentleman before he goes on to the other clauses? I notice in Bill S-13, which has just received second reading, that clause 1 sets forth the name of the company in French. In the bill now being explained the name is given in the English language only. Is there any reason for not having it also in French?

Hon. Mr. Molson: Nothing was said to me about that. I do not know whether, as the company has already a German name in Germany, it felt that to express the name trilingually would lead to complications. That point simply was not mentioned. With the head office being in Montreal, one would think the name should be expressed in the French language. I would be glad to take up that point, and I thank the honourable senator for mentioning it.

I was saying that the Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada will have a paid-up capital of $1 million; and there will be a paid-in surplus of a further $1 million before business commences.

The directors of the company will be nine in number, of whom five will be Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Clause 5 of the bill says:

> The company shall not commence any business of insurance until at least one million dollars of its capital stock has been bona fide subscribed—

Does that mean Canadians may subscribe to the capital stock?

Hon. Mr. Molson: No. Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada will be a wholly-owned subsidiary. I have inquired of some of my insurance friends about this question of reinsurance companies coming into Canada, and I have been generally informed that it is a very good thing to have reinsurance companies in any insurance market. It enables our insurance companies here to spread their risks in our own Canadian market instead of going overseas, as they have had to do in the past. For that reason I think it would be beneficial to our general insurance picture to have this company incorporated.

I have also consulted Mr. MacGregor, Superintendent of Insurance, and find that the company has complied with all the regulations of his department.

I do not think there are any clauses that need further elucidation.

May I repeat that the company will confine itself exclusively to reinsurance, as its parent company does, and will write all classes of risks with the exception of life. As will be seen, clause 7 provides a very comprehensive list. If I remember correctly, it covers all classes with the exception of life.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I do not wish anything I say to be taken as questioning or bringing into issue the merits of this bill, nor the merits of reinsurance in Canada as against Canadian companies reinsuring outside of Canada; but I notice that clause 5 of the bill declares that the company may, when $1 million has been paid in, "transact all or any of the classes of insurance authorized by section 7 of this act". It raises the same question which I already put forward for serious consideration under the previous bill, and that is that the powers which are specifically sought are powers to transact any or all of the classes of insurance set out in clause 7.

To illustrate the question that is bothering me: I regard a contract of insurance—of course there may be a statutory definition in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, which I have not looked at recently—I regard a contract of insurance as a contract entered into between an insurance company and some person called the insured. It is easy to understand what are the elements of the contract of insurance, but a contract of reinsurance is a contract between two insurance companies, between the company that carries that contract of insurance and another company, a third party, which is prepared, for a consideration, to undertake or to share some of the risk which the original company has undertaken. The person who is insured is not a party to that second contract at all, and whatever the agreement may be it does not affect him because he has his contract with the company that insured him.

It strikes me, therefore, that in those circumstances it would be closer to reality if we set out what is intented to be the object of the business that the proposed reinsurance company is going to do. Why tell us that it will engage only in the business of reinsurance, and that the certificate of registry which the Superintendent of Insurance will issue will confine its operations to reinsurance, when in the bill itself, we see that the objects are to write contracts of insurance between this insurance company and persons looking to be covered by certain types of insurance?

I raise that question in good faith and only with a desire that bills of this kind should clearly state the powers that are intented to be taken. I do not necessarily say the powers to be immediately exercised, because companies often take broader powers than they intend to exercise immediately. If this company intends to exercise the powers of reinsurance I think the bill should say so.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I still think that the honourable senator's difficulties will be cleared up by clause 8.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In view of the lateness of the hour, honourable senators, I will merely draw attention to the fact that the sponsor of the bill said that the company will carry on the business of all kinds of insurance with the exception of life insurance, but you will note from clause 7, paragraph (o), that the company will carry on life insurance so far as livestock is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Maybe it is only accident insurance on livestock.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Molson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 153 to 164, which were presented on Thursday, February 11.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, reports adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 17, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William H. Golding, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 192 to 204, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Golding presented the following bills:

Bill SD-144, for the relief of Shirley Loraine Knodell Burke.

Bill SD-145, for the relief of Rene Lassonde.

Bill SD-146, for the relief of John Pastor.

Bill SD-147, for the relief of Margaret Dunn Hepburn Sanderson.

Bill SD-148, for the relief of Maurice Sykes Ward.

Bill SD-149, for the relief of Clark Alvin Graham.

Bill SD-150, for the relief of Noeleen Natalie Adams Lamond.

Bill SD-151, for the relief of Harry Gillman.

Bill SD-152, for the relief of John Philip Bowers.

Bill SD-153, for the relief of Carl August Christensen.

Bill SD-154, for the relief of Barbara Joan Marsh Wolfe.

Bill SD-155, for the relief of Barbara Ann Tuppen McIntosh.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION—REFUND OF FEES

Hon. Harold Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the parliamentary fees paid upon the Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act respecting the Canadian Public Health Association" be refunded to the petitioners, less printing and translation costs.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 11, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, to begin with I would like to avail myself of this opportunity of congratulating the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne for two very interesting speeches which, I trust, will be the forerunners of others. It is also my pleasure to welcome those two senators together with our new lady senator (Hon. Mrs. Irvine). They will find life pleasant here, and I am sure their experience will be, as mine has been, that all the other senators are kindly, pleasant and affable, and always ready to encourage them when they rise to speak.

There comes a time in every man's life when he feels a change coming over him. He no longer has an exuberant spirit. He ceases to play games and becomes a spectator. He perhaps loves the easy chair and his slippers. His back may still be strong, likewise his heart, and his legs may be virile, but he does not want to engage in active sports. He may lack co-ordination of eye and muscle, but he likes to play golf. He realizes he has attained middle age. He knows he is robust and healthy, but young people, sometimes so critical and intolerant, may disagree, forgetting that in a short while they will be in the same position as he. Such a person entered a drug store and said to the young person in attendance: "Have you anything for grey hairs?" The reply was: "Nothing, but the greatest of respect". That person did not have respect; he was only being flippant. It is said that this is the time when people become garrulous. If that is so, they are garrulous with the wisdom of experience and the knowledge of years. It is a time when a man can draw on all he has learned by experience over many years.

I am surprised and shocked at the feeling that is held by many people in Canada about the Senate. I am surprised what little knowledge the general public has of the working of the Senate. If the Senate throws out a bill, immediately there is an outcry that the old men of the Senate are trying to run the country. If the Senate agrees with a bill and passes it, then the people say, "The Senate is only a rubber stamp."

We continually hear remarks about reforming the Senate or that it is an unnecessary institution. I suppose it is still true, as it has been throughout the centuries, that the general public reads and runs. You sometimes wonder if it only runs and never reads. It seems to me that nobody can get a real insight into the machinery of the Senate unless he comes here and tries to find out the truth. The year I have spent in the Senate is enough to warrant my talking with some more authority than the individual who has probably got his insight into the Senate from somebody just as ignorant as himself.

As I stand here and look in front of me and see many of the older class of senators, of the generation before mine, I am surprised at the feeling there is about the Senate. I can remember what an impact it was a year ago when I first heard some of those senior senators speak in virile voices, their forms strong and stalwart, and without a note in their hands.

What a galaxy of stars in the firmament of debate: the force and power of a Crerar, an Euler, a Farris, a Roebuck and a Haig! And what of the placid efficiency of a Beaubien, and the rugged, common sense of a Quinn, a Golding and a Horner? Verily can I say, in a paraphrase:

> Age cannot wither them, nor custom stale,
> Their infinite variety.

To young men I would quote the words of wisdom:

> Miss not the discourse of the elders.

Youth should realize that such men are not old but mellow, like old wine.

I look around me here and I see men who have gained pre-eminence in the public life of the country and in law, medicine, engineering and other professions, in industry, shipping, finance, farming and forestry, some of whom have gained national reputation, and some, international reputation—men who are well worthy to take part in the deliberations of this great body.

I know it has been rare for the Senate to throw out a bill sent over from the other house, but sometimes it has done so, and often it has made amendments. I feel that this house does not want to interfere lightly with bills that come from a house composed of duly elected representatives of the people, but I feel equally sure from my experience here that if some matter comes before the Senate that in principle requires dissent, then dissent will be given without fail.

It was heartening for me to read a few days ago a great tribute paid to the Senate by one of the best-known columnists in Ottawa, writing in one of the leading newspapers. He wrote as follows:

> The Senate is quiet, businesslike, dignified. It is leisurely, completely predictable. It does not waste time. It gets its business done quickly without rushing. It functions noiselessly. It is completely and authentically masculine . . . So next time you want to see the nation's business being softly and satisfactorily done, go to the Senate.

Amid the storm of criticism thrust around the Senate these peaceful words of praise have a sound of infinite kindness and yet of masculinity.

Young people, I suppose, think they have everything in their generation that we did not have in our younger days. I am talking about those of my generation, or older, in the Senate. Young people imagine we must have had a very uncomfortable childhood. They will point to refrigerators, radios, frozen foods, TV sets and aeroplanes and wonder how we older people managed at all when we were young. I remember reading an answer to that by a person who pointed out that the great George Washington, whose beautiful estate in Mount Vernon, is still visited by sightseers in the thousands every year, never rode in a train, a motor car or an aeroplane; that he never saw an electric stove or a furnace, and if you had mentioned electric light to him he woudn't have known what you were talking about. But he owned a vast estate that had an abundance of game and fish; his home was beautiful, his furniture was wonderful; and he performed meritorious services for his country and for liberty in days of peace and war, and he seems to have lived a contented life. That was more than 150 years ago.

Moreover younger people forget that there is nothing new under the sun.

> "We have conquered the air," he said,
> "And time and distance have sped,
> Our liners race,
> Through realms of space,
> With our silvern wings outspread."
> Said the old, old woman: "My, my, what fuss!
> The swallows could do it long before us."

But let us go back a few years to the age in which I was a youth. That was a time of good and simple, substantial things. Then wood was wood and iron was iron, and liquor wasn't water. Perhaps in that day young children were in bed at ten and then their parents had no worry about them. Middle-aged men were respectfully addressed as "Sir". The girls had rosy cheeks, and the colour did not represent a colour nature never designed. We thought that it was a good time, and that life was worth living. There were no unemployment forms and no income tax forms to be filled out, and books were not taxed. You paid your bills with the money you earned; and if you did not have the money to buy an article, well, you did not buy it. Generally when you bought something you did not wonder if the bailiff would come and take it the day after. Of course, it is easier to buy things now. All you have to do is to borrow whatever you want at about two per cent per month, and you are sure to own what you buy if you can keep it. It is easy to borrow to pay your debts, and then you will feel like the old woman who proudly said she was out of debt because she had borrowed enough money to pay all she owed. Anyway, her credit must have been good.

This reminds me of a story of a gentleman in my home town who was always in need of cash. When he was pressed very hard by his butcher or his grocer he would sign a three months' note, have it accepted by the grocer or butcher, and say very happily—"Well, thank heaven, that amount is paid."

Sometimes in the olden days we would, as a last resort, give a note at the bank for a loan at six per cent per year. We remembered the interest; but the mathematical minds of today do not give a thought about two per cent per month. In fact, they do not think of any interest at all. That brings me to something I am going to point out. We were taught by our parents that if we did not have the money to buy an article we should not buy it, and that we should take credit only as a last resort. Of course, if we had had to pay 20 or 24 per cent per annum on what we borrowed, we would have borrowed nothing and bought nothing.

There were no finance companies in those days. Today I am afraid that too many people are encouraged to buy various things they cannot afford. The most unfortunate result is that too often the borrower loses the article he has bought and the instalments he has paid, no matter how large the amount. Often no proper attempt is made to realize the highest price for the article seized so that the borrower might get back some of his money, even when most of the purchase price has been paid. I have never heard of anyone getting back any part of his money in those circumstances. I am speaking only of Newfoundland; I do not know what the practice is in other provinces.

I think it is time that legislation was brought in to provide some protection for people who are so encouraged to borrow. Oftentimes the public must be protected against itself. A man's worldly possessions should not be taken from him capriciously and he be rendered destitute. Contracts of money lending should be hedged around by clauses protecting the borrower where it is equitable that he be helped. After all, that has been the law for centuries regarding pawnbrokers. In England the law in regard to money lenders was and still is very strict.

Commercial affairs have become so complex that it takes a lot of trouble for a man to know what he has bought and whether he owns what he has bought. As a result of some laws that have been passed in recent years, like the Conditional Sales Act, the Bulk Sales Act and measures as to liens and chattel mortgages, the purchaser does not know what he is buying nor what he gets when he buys. Everything has been made more difficult for the ordinary man today. Once it was that when a man bought a house he got ownership of the house and all the fixtures in it, or what was agreed to be sold. But now, after he buys a house he finds that the built-in bath is bound by a conditional sales agreement and that there is a lien on the electric stove, and if there is a cat in the house that is probably held under a chattel mortgage.

Talking of financial institutions, let me turn for a moment to another matter, that of fire insurance companies. Except in the case of a death in the family, nothing is more appalling to a man than the destruction of his home and possessions by fire. That is a time when he needs help and sympathy. In Newfoundland, before Confederation, the attitude toward and methods of settlement of claims by fire insurance companies were quite different from what they are now, in some cases. Then, after a fire took place, the adjuster of the company would meet the insured, his lawyer or his agent, and discuss the loss. There would be no attempt or intention to prolong negotiations, or unduly to beat down a claim. A settlement would be shortly and amicably arranged. But now the adjuster for the insurance company, at least in some cases, thinks that his duty is to obtain the payment of the lowest amount by compromise. He keeps prolonging negotiations and requiring better proofs of loss until the patience of the insured is worn out and a poor compromise for the insured is effected. And sometimes the statutory period of a year within which legal action can be taken has passed and the luck of the insured has run out. An insurer can then, to use the vernacular, sit pretty and do nothing, and is required to pay nothing.

Another matter I wish to draw to your attention is the attitude of some insurance companies with regard to depreciation. I find that in some cases their attitude is altogether unreasonable. A house built 40, 50 or 60 years ago is probably a better house and in better condition than one built yesterday. It contains better materials and better workmanship and in the long run will outlive a modern one. Yet one would think that the insured, in the event of a fire, has a liability on account of 50 years' usage of the house. When I say this I do not refer to all or many adjusters or say that many insurance companies permit unfair treatment of an insured, but I know that too often this does occur. Some insurance companies in Newfoundland are very careful and prompt in their settlements. I know that, for instance, unfair treatment of an insured person would not under any circumstances be tolerated in the office of my confrère the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) who carries on, among many other projects, the business of fire and other insurance. I am sure that his humanitarian principles and his high regard for business ethics—and you know him well enough to think as I do of him—would permit no advantage to be taken of anyone.

I would like to refer to one other matter which I think important at this moment, and that is the announcement in the Speech from the Throne that a department of forestry will be set up. I presume that this department will deal not alone with the conservation of forests, but with a kindred subject, the conservation of game. I am aware that the forests are under the care of provincial Governments, but a federal department will be able to carry on investigations dealing with forestry problems as a whole in such a way that it will be a boon and blessing for provincial Governments. There are some matters in forestry which affect all the provinces, and not the least is the control of bugs and other insects which destroy trees. Destruction of forests by insect pests has been appalling all over North America. The preservation of forests is a duty to be taken most seriously.

The conservation of wild-life of the plains, forests, rivers, lakes and oceans is far more necessary than we, can realize. The problem of providing food for the years to come is an important one, and it becomes more important as the population increases. Food is absolutely essential, and nature provides the machinery for us to obtain it. But this machinery must be looked after. At present big dragger boats tear up spawning grounds on the Grand Banks off Newfoundland and destroy every year thousands of fish in the dragging process. The same thing happens along the shores of Newfoundland and Canada generally.

A few days ago the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) drew the attention of this house to the lamentable fact that a great deal of the fruit belt in the Niagara Peninsula is being depleted. Can we save what is left? Canada has been blessed with the means of producing food in abundant quantities. The great Prairie belt is a producer of millions of bushels of wheat, barley and other commodities, and the other day we were reminded by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) that the Fraser River produces $50 million worth of salmon every year.

The earth and the sea and all the wild-life therein were given to man to enjoy, but man must be guided in his enjoyment by prudence and justice. Their use was to be governed by the principle that it was to be subject to the rights of future generations. Nature replenishes. We are entitled to the produce, but we ought not to destroy that which produces.

It has been said that the history of the North American continent is staged against a forest background. Ever since the first settlement the forest has played a most important part in the commercial and social life of the communities. It furnished the timber to erect the homes, the fuel to heat them and fences to mark off the boundaries. It provided the materials to build boats; and from the tall firs and spruce were made the masts for ships that sailed the seven seas. The ties for the railway came from it, and we still subsist on the bounty of the forest for the same commodities. The forest provides the raw materials for the great paper mills in which employment is given to thousands of people, and it is thus the basis of one of the great economic ventures of this country.

Countries today are faced with terrific problems caused by abuse of nature. Great floods are ravaging lands, and erosion of the soil is turning what were once rich woodlands or grassy fields into arid deserts. Mistreatment of watersheds through the large-scale removal of forests and other soil-binding vegetation inevitably causes most of the floods.

The greatest menace to our forests is fire, and the greatest criminal in this destruction is the fire bug. It should be everybody's business to see that the careless camper, the indifferent smoker, is treated in the way he should be, as a menace against whom everybody's hand and voice should be raised and who should be condemned at the bar of public opinion as not fit for the privilege of citizenship. The loss caused by him is incalculable. The timber industry, the fishing industry, the farming industry and the trapping industry all suffer through forest fires. Hunting grounds are destroyed, rivers lose their sources of supply, and often private homes are wiped out and villages and towns threatened with destruction. If devastating forest fires are allowed to continue, the ruin of the country is assured, a condition from which there will be no come-back. Financial troubles may be cured, but the loss of a forest is irretrievable.

Honourable senators, all this matter is relevant to any discussion of wild-life. Preservation of forests and conservation of wild-life go hand in hand. Preservation of forests is a vital matter to the lover of wild-life. Wild-life has ever been associated with the forests in history, song and story. In the olden days —in the days of Robin Hood—the forests were patrolled because of the game which they held. Game was then the primary purpose of the forest. With the advent of the white man into our part of the world, the North American continent, the importance of game as a source of food and clothing and a means of commercial return became apparent. Fur trading was one of the first economic activities of the westward movement. It was a vital part in the upbuilding of the west. The great westward movement would not have progressed as quickly as it did without forests and game.

Canada long ago recognized that with the opening up of wildernesses by railways and industrial concerns, and the drainage of swamps and the taking over of vast stretches of country for agricultural purposes, it would be but a matter of time when all the haunts of animals would be destroyed and animal life would cease; and, realizing the difficulty of adequately enforcing game laws in large spaces, acted with commendable foresight and established wild-life sanctuaries or refuges in which all animal life is either absolutely or partially protected.

Canada has reason to be proud of her national parks which are the great Canadian sanctuaries. Jasper Park with its 4,400 square miles, and Rocky Mountain Park with its 2,750 square miles, both in the Rocky Mountains; the Gaspesian Forest and Game Preserve with its 2,500 square miles and the Laurentide National Park with its 2,700 square miles, both in Quebec; and the other sanctuaries, mostly of a smaller size, in the other provinces, are examples that point the way to show us what we may do, what we can do and what should be done to preserve our forests in Canada.

Let not stories of abundance lull us into a false sense of security. The very abundance of an animal is sometimes the cause of its ruin. This is borne out by the history of many wild animals which formerly roamed the world in vast numbers but are now extinct. The Passenger Pigeon, which ranged over the North American continent at the middle of the last century in such millions that we are told the sky in some places was darkened by them in their flight, is now a thing of the past. The Great Auk, that roamed among the islands around the shores of Newfoundland, was slaughtered in hundreds of thousands for the sake of the oil they contained and are now no more. Where are the Curlew and the Plover, great game birds of 50 years ago? It might as well be asked: where are the snows of yesteryear? Once countless herds of buffalo, as thick, naturalists tell us, as the leaves of the forest, wandered over the plains of Canada and the United States, yet so frightful was their slaughter that their history presents the colossal tragedy of a reduction from millions almost to the point of extermination, and of being saved from absolute extinction only by the foresight and the efforts of the Canadian authorities who saved and preserved the last of their species which could then be counted in bare hundreds. Within a few years the same story may be repeated of our beaver, otter, fox, bear, lynx, marten and caribou.

We have an example nearer to this present time in the story of the wild duck. At the beginning of this century large tracts of land in the United States and western Canada which provided marshes for this bird were drained and turned into agricultural land. During the First Great War extensive farming was started there and further marshy lands were dried up or drained. Then came the drought, starting in 1922, which lasted for some years, so that the marshes became withered and dried and ducks died in this drought cycle by hundreds of thousands.

Fortunately there were some seriously minded men who realized the danger and, through their efforts, the necessity of an international restoration movement was recognized. In 1938 the ducks began to sweep across the North American continent in hordes and the extinction which seemed imminent was avoided.

I read recently in one of the newspapers published in Newfoundland that sea birds in the thousands are being killed around the coastal waters of Newfoundland as the result of oil pollution caused by passing steamers which dump oil or oily water into the sea. Once the birds touch the oil slick they are doomed. Among such birds is the eider duck, which is the source of eider-down, a most valuable product and of great importance particularly in northern latitudes.

There are those perhaps in whom indignation rises at the thought of the destruction of the Passenger Pigeon but whose conscience is in no way troubled at the possibility of the extinction of animals we now possess. Why is this? What brings about this mental attitude? It is because we can look back on the past and can properly judge it by the experience of the intervening years. The past stands before us in clear lines and bold relief.

But the present is too much with us and around us to be understood or realized or visualized We cannot see the forest for the trees. We miss the obvious. To use the words of a great orator:

> You cannot see the thing that is at your feet. You can look back on the past, you may look forward to the future, but there is a dust that follows in the flying feet of the years that puts a haze before your eyes, and prevents you, unless you look very closely, from being able to see the things that are near.

Let us build for the future. Let us make this country of Canada such that, like children of the morn, we can raise our hands to the high heavens and pray in rapturous tones:

> Let us praise God for the day, for the warmth of the sun, for the stir of life and for honest toil that wins food and rest. God be praised for the day. For the earth, the sustainer of life; for the hills, the plains and the dales, and for the beauty of meadows and fields, of flowers and of trees. God be praised for the earth.
> For the sky, for the shifting clouds and the glory of sunrise and sunset. Let us praise God for our land—for its forests and valleys and headlands, for its lakes and rivers and all the wild life therein.
> Let us pray that what we have we shall use with prudence and justice.

Now that I have brought you through the rich pastures, beautiful forests, verdant valleys and majestic mountains and streams, and shown you the wild-life therein, I trust that your guide has not wearied you too much. Let us sit down and talk quietly just for a minute and, as men will, talk in the woods, which we are just leaving, of perhaps unimportant matters.

I never expected to be a millionaire and I know now I never shall be one; but I equally never expected that I would be taking part in dissertations and deliberations over millions and millions of dollars and have with others the power of arranging the payments of this immense sum and deciding how it is to be spent. It is amazing to realize that one who never dealt in finance is asked to vote on money bills involving colossal sums. One almost gasps at the thought of it. I wonder if we sometimes may get lost in the magnitude of our power and lose our sense of proportion.

One day a timid little man was attending a lecture on astronomy. At one period the lecturer said, "In 350,000 years' time the sun and the earth will meet and there will be chaos and absolute destruction." The timid little man looked up with a frightened look and asked the lecturer, "How many years did you say?" The lecturer replied, "350,000 years". The timid little man sighed and said: "Thank heaven. I thought you said 250,000 years."

Perhaps the time will come when we may become indifferent. Money will mean nothing. And we may be saying to ourselves: "After all, what's a few millions here and there?"

I saw in the Saturday Evening Post a picture showing two men coming down the steps of the Capitol at Washington. One was saying to the other: "Personally, I don't think that anybody is justified in talking an hour on a mere $40 million project."

One time many years ago a planter—that is a small merchant in places outside the capital city of St. John's, Newfoundland—came to St. John's and, meeting Mr. Gordon, of the then well-known firm of Baird, Gordon and Company, he said: "Mr. Gordon, with regard to the $20,000 I owe you—" Mr. Gordon interrupted him, saying, "You mean $30,000." The planter looked at him steadily and replied: "It makes no difference. I won't pay the $30,000 and I can't pay you the $20,000."

And it seems to me, as I am sure it is impressed on you, that I am beginning to lose all sense of time; in fact, I lost the sense of timing long ago in the deep forest of talk. At this moment, instead of standing up and talking of millions I should be realizing my tuppence worth and come down heavily to earth. The Socratic gadfly has at last come from the woods to sting me into silence, a consummation devoutly wished for by you, I am sure, for some time.

Hon. Olive L. Irvine: Honourable senators, I deem it an honour as a new member to be given the privilege of speaking in this debate. May I compliment the mover of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Blois) on the splendid addresses they delivered.

You, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate most heartily upon your continuance in the high office of Speaker of the Senate.

To you, sir, the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), may I offer my sincere congratulations on your holding the high position of Government Leader in this house. We from the Prairie provinces—and, indeed, we from the west—as westerners, cannot help but rejoice in the success and achievements of our colleagues from that part of Canada. I hope honourable senators will excuse me when I say I am naturally extremely proud of the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of the Government in the Senate both come from western Canada.

May I take this opportunity of thanking not only the honourable gentlemen from my home province of Manitoba, but all members of this house and heads of departments for the warmth of their reception since my entry as a member of this august body, and for their generous friendship and assistance.

I feel deeply honoured on being the first woman appointed by the present Government to the Senate of Canada, and also on being the first woman ever appointed from the three Prairie provinces to sit in this house as a representative of women. May I offer my congratulations to the five lady senators who have so efficiently represented the women of Canada here for many years, and I look forward with anticipation to making my contribution.

As a Canadian I cannot but rejoice in the fact that the story of our dominion is a heroic saga. Here for centuries lay the vast expanse of Canada stretching, in the words of the Psalmist, from sea to sea, rich in natural resources, enjoying a climate which is vigour calling unto vigour, and only waiting for man bearing in his hand the conjuror's hand of civilization to turn that untouched domain of yesterday into the flourishing dominion of today.

We know that it was not until the seventeenth century that Cartier, Cabot and Champlain skirted the eastern coast. Nearly three hundred years of history passed by while the fertile valley of British Columbia called in vain. The northwest prairies blossomed and withered with each forgotten season. Mighty rivers, silent and mysterious moved from the heart of an unknown Canada. The waves thundered on the rugged coast where it fronted the Atlantic Ocean. Beyond it was the unknown east, and from it breathed, as the sun set behind its forest, a sense of history still to come; the murmur of many voices caught as in the undertone of its rustling woods.

But it is now as if the globe had shifted on its axis and tilted Canada toward the sun. Human effort now has changed from tropic plants to northern minerals; from the jungle to the rock; from the forced labour of the Egyptian slave to the leaping power of the northern waterfall.

Canada is a beautiful country. The Canadian landscape artist is born to a rich heritage of the most varied motifs. From the peach-covered hillsides of the Niagara Peninsula to the tundras of the Arctic; from the great Atlantic breakers on the coast of Newfoundland, across the pastoral and industrial provinces, to the dry clear air of the Prairies and over the Rockies to the moist Pacific slope, the various atmospheric conditions are associated with a landscape equally varied in its physical characteristics. Add to these the dramatic differences in seasonable environments and the painter has inexhaustible resources of material. These qualities make Canada irresistible to the tourist, too, catering as they do to the love of nature, beauty set in an invigorating climate with opportunities for summer and winter sports of all kinds.

How many of us stop to think of the beauty that surrounds Ottawa, our national capital? Last year more than 250,000 visitors entered its gates. This number will be doubled in the course of a few short years, and it is imperative that each one of us take national pride in its beautification.

For the past year I have been a member of the National Capital Commission, representing the province of Manitoba. May I suggest that all become familiar with the work that this commission is doing. Its membership consists of 20 members, and being national it includes a representative from each of the provinces. It provides for committees, and in particular for an executive committee. The object and the purposes of the commission are to prepare plans for, and assist in, the development, conservation and improvement of the national capital region, in order that the nature and character of the seat of the Government of Canada may be in accordance with its natural significance. We see the result of its handiwork on every side.

It was the people from the British Isles and Old France who first settled in this great country. They were followed by men from Norway, Denmark, Holland, Poland, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Iceland, Greece and other ethnic countries. They realized that Canada was a land of opportunity for individuals and organizations who had a forward look and who were not afraid to work. Canada has reached its present eminence under the stimulus of the northern climate; the initiative fostered by life in a new, vast and rugged country; and the courage and self-reliance bred of great open spaces and freedom of enterprise, movement, speech, religion and politics.

Canadians do not form a compact group, but are a collection of diverse races, as I have mentioned, moulding themselves into a nation that takes its pattern from the land of their adoption. They are held together by love of country, common interests and loyalty to the Crown.

All Canadians must honour the great statesman who exercised a most potent share in moulding the destiny of the Dominion of Canada, and our own great west especially. We read with pride of the foresight of Sir John Alexander Macdonald, who insisted on the passage of the British North America Act, which practically shaped the Constitution of the dominion, and his great interest in bringing about Confederation.

Well we remember the difficulties experienced in building our line of transportation across Canada, which led to the opening of our great country. One of the greatest men in this endeavour was Donald A. Smith, who later was to become Lord Strathcona. For the benefit of many of our honourable senators of Scottish ancestry, may I say that Donald Smith was the first president of the St. Andrew's Society of Winnipeg, back in the year 1871.

With the initiation of the railway through the west in the early eighties, our province came into being. It is to our ancestors of French culture that we owe our thanks for the foundation of our province. Here, too, we have learned that in nation building, toleration of one another is not enough. It is only when we have learned mutual affection and respect that we discover the cement that we need to bind us together.

It is to my province of Manitoba that women of Canada must give thanks for the privileges they enjoy today. To women such as Dr. Amelia Yoemans, the first woman physician in Manitoba; the late Dr. E. Cora Hind, whose initials were well known in agricultural circles throughout the dominion and around the world, and Mrs. Nellie L. McClung, who became famous as an author, we owe much. Mrs. McClung later moved with her family to Alberta and was one of the five Alberta women who played such a valiant part in bringing before the Government the need for a decision by the courts on whether or not women should be considered "persons" under the British North America Act and thus eligible to be called to this house. It was due to their persistence that the question was finally referred by the Government to His Majesty's Privy Council, which ruled in favour of the recognition of women as "persons".

Women of Manitoba were the first to be granted the franchise.

With the initiation of the railway, we had the great boom of the early eighties and the rush for homesteads. This drew colonists from all parts of the Empire—Cockneys who did not know "Haw from Gee", remittance men and Oxford graduates. Winnipeg became a babble of tongues, a clatter of hammers.

All was not forever rosy. Well we remember the depression of the thirties. We feared the west was gone. Even the stoutest heart drew anxious breath, till, presently, mother nature showered the Prairies with soft rain and buried them in green, as a mother would pass a soothing hand over her child's feverish forehead.

As we pass over the years we cannot but be amazed at our rapid growth and development. Manitoba used to be known as the "Gateway to the West", but with our Government's northern development program I now feel that it can be called the "Gateway to the Unlimited Empire of the North". Already one of our brightest pages is the record of discovery and exploration of our incalculable oil and mineral wealth.

The touch of King Midas has turned desolation into a fairyland—a strange fairyland indeed, where the poisoned breath of smelters withers and obliterates life, and where uprooted trees and dynamited rocks show how hydraulic plants can tear the heart out of primitive nature—and yet a fairyland too, where the snug winter lights twinkle back at the sulky thermometer, and where in summer the aeroplane hovers over still lakes as silvery as its own wings.

Climatic conditions are being overcome and winter employment goes on uninterruptedly to a great degree. Polyethylene tents with wood frames provide the necessary protection for the workers, while heaters give warmth to all construction so it may proceed. These tents remain around the construction from the time the foundation digging is completed until the structure is finished. Even the pouring of concrete is scarcely affected by low temperatures. Research has produced additives that permit the concrete to harden in the middle of winter. The same applies to mortar used for bricklaying and concrete block work.

The year 1959 will be recorded as a difficult year for many Manitoba farmers. Excessive moisture conditions blighted any hope of a harvest for many whose farms are located in the agricultural area east of the Red River. The unprecedented snowfall of early October and subsequent sub-zero weather, extending over a large area of the province, abruptly ended the completion of what appeared to many farmers to be a promising harvest. In the more favoured agricultural areas, production was reasonably satisfactory. Approximately one million acres of unharvested crops, representing 20 to 25 million bushels of grain and other crops, remain snow-covered with little hope of salvage.

Lying in the southwestern portion of our province is the federal constituency of Lisgar, which I have chosen with pride as my designation. In the early 1870's many from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec immigrated to this section. In 1889 my father and mother, of Irish extraction from the county of Manvers in Ontario, answered the call of the west, and it was there that I was born and raised. My constituency now proudly boasts —and I use this word "boasts" in its real meaning—people from practically all nations.

Throughout the years we have learned to work together and play together in a spirit of true Canadianism.

The eastern boundary of Lisgar is the famous Red River Valley; the western boundary is the constituency of Brandon-Souris. To the south we have the United States border and to the north the famous Assiniboine River. The adjoining northern constituency was once the home of the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, a man whom my father taught me to admire and respect when I was a very young child.

Lisgar encompasses one of the finest areas in western Canada for the production of fruit, vegetables, livestock and grain. We are following the pattern of many Canadian communities in changing from completely rural to a truly unique diversified type of farming, including many types of industry. The production of alfalfa, registered seed, canning crops, poultry and livestock, and mink ranching have helped greatly in stabilizing the economy of the district, and as a consequence related industries have developed. Creameries, hatcheries, plant nurseries, feed processing and seed cleaning plants are strategically placed in and around our progressive towns.

May I, in summing up this great land of ours that we call "home", state—and I am sure you will all agree—that upon the whole surface of the globe there is no more spacious domain than Canada open to the activity and genius of free man.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pratt, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

MONTREAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-11, respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps I should explain the amendment recommended in the report of the committee. It is a very simply amendment and was made at the request of the sponsors of the bill. As honourable senators will recall, the bill provided for a French name for Montreal Life Insurance Company, so that it might alternately be known as Montreal Life Insurance Company or by its French name, Compagnie d'Assurance Vie de Montréal. However, in the bill the word "La" was inserted before "Compagnie", and at the request of the sponsors of the bill the committee struck out the word "La". That is the sum and substance of the amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot, for Hon. Mr. Monette: Next sitting.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 18, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-47, to amend the Department of Justice Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Wednesday next.

PRIVATE BILLS

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson presented Bill S-18, to incorporate Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Wednesday next.

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-12, respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with one amendment.

Amendment read by the Clerk Assistant:

Page 3, line 13: Strike out "ten" and substitute therefor "twenty".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Next sitting.

LAND USE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, Chairman of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada, presented the first report of the committee, as follows:

Your committee recommend:

1. That their quorum be reduced to five members.

2. That they be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of their day-to-day proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I notice that the number of copies required is greater than usual. Would the chairman or some other honourable member of the committee explain why this is so?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: The usual number of copies in English is asked for, but there is an increase in the number of French copies desired. Last session we were short of copies in French and could not meet the demand, so it was decided to increase the number from 200 to 300.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: All I can say is that I am pleased to hear of this evidence of greater interest in the committee's work.

Report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 23, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

JEWISH SETTLEMENT IN CANADA

BICENTENARY OF FIRST ARRIVAL—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll rose pursuant to notice that he would "draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada".

He said: Honourable senators, this year Canadians of Jewish origin are celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of their settlement in Canada. Some came under the French régime, and some to the colony of Nova Scotia, a little before the year 1759, but it was not until the arrival of the British that permanent settlement began. The history of the Jewish community in Canada is, therefore, as old as English-speaking Canada itself. It began in 1759, the most significant date, next to 1867, in the history of our nation. The first Jewish settlers to make their home here permanently came with the army of General Amherst and served under Wolfe. During the two centuries since then their contribution to the growth and development of Canada has been many-sided. The Right Honourable Vincent Massey put it well when he said they have formed "a fruitful and fertilizing stream in Canadian life".

The two hundredth anniversary of the Jewish settlement in Canada has been rightly taken as an occasion for thanksgiving among all members of the Jewish faith, for here in the new world, in marked contrast to many places in the old world, the Jew found a soil favourable to his growth. Today the Jews of Canada live in harmony with all other groups, and their contribution in peace and in war bears eloquent testimony to their integration into the Canadian social, cultural and economic pattern. They have lived in accordance with their ancient traditions and beliefs; they have advanced and found self-expression according to their abilities; they have served and sacrificed, even as their fellow Canadians, and have become part and parcel of the greater community of Canada.

One hundred years before the Act of Confederation placed Canada on the road to nationhood Jewish pioneers were helping to carve a homeland out of the wilderness. Most of them are unknown to fame, their identity merged with that of their fellow Canadians of French, English, Ukrainian, German, Russian and Italian origin.

One man whose name is still remembered was Aaron Hart, an officer with General Amherst. After he turned to the ways of peace, Mr. Hart became postmaster of Three Rivers and a man of substance. When he decided to remain in Canada he returned briefly to London and married Dorothea Judah. He had a family of eleven children, all born in Canada. His descendants were to leave their mark on Canadian life and letters for a hundred years and more.

Ezekiel Hart, a son of Aaron Hart, played a distinguished part in bringing political equality to the Jews, and, indirectly, to all minority groups. In 1807 he was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada, but was unable to take his seat because he would not swear the oath on the New Testament, which was "on the true faith of a Christian". Nothing daunted, the citizens of Three Rivers elected him again, and he was expelled again. On January 31, 1831 a petition was presented asking that Jews be given full rights of citizenship. It provided that they would possess the same rights as any other subject of the Crown. The great Louis Joseph Papineau fought on the side of Hart, and his aid was most prophetic. For just as the French Canadians of Three Rivers fought for the right of a Jew, Ezekiel Hart, so a few years later the Scotch Protestants of Cape Breton fought for the right of a Roman Catholic, Lawrence Cavanaugh, who had been denied a seat in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia. Thus was the battle for basic rights being won more than a hundred years ago. Indeed, the story takes on a double significance. The Act of 1832, which first granted civil and political rights to Jews in Canada, came twenty-five years before Britain herself enacted such a law.

Thus Canada, in 1832, kindled a beacon light of freedom, unfettered by the old prejudices of Europe. The new land, by giving political equality to the Jews, released their quickening participation in the development of Canada and set the pattern for all time to come: they were not asking for nor given special privileges, nor burdened with special responsibilities.

The first two hundred years were interesting, stimulating and exciting—full of hopes and achievements. Here was a vast land beginning to stir from a long sleep. As this awakening nation moved into the wonders of the nineteenth century, the pioneers found new challenges, new hopes and new dreams to stimulate their effort. There were trials and problems, there was grief and frustration, yet through it all Canadians of Jewish ancestry throve and multiplied and served the nation well. Their contribution has been a constructive one, encompassing political, economic, cultural and religious ends. When they formed a modest community, the service which they rendered was modest. When they became more significant, they began to render greater service.

It is interesting to trace the growth of the Jewish community from the best available records:

Year
1759	1
1831	107
1841	154
1851	451
1871 (four years after Confederation)	1,333
1880	1,914

A trickle soon became a torrent at the turn of the century, as Canada received thousands of weary and destitute Jews, fleeing from the persecutions and intolerance of their homelands. Most of them came from small settlements—from Lithuania, Poland, White Russia and the Ukraine—and they settled not only in the great cities but in the north country and across the plains, in countless towns and villages. They were finding their place in the greater community.

In 1920 there were 125,000 Jews in Canada. Most of the second large wave of Jewish immigrants arrived between 1920 and 1939. Many were from Poland, and others were refugees from Nazi persecution in Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia. In 1945 there were 180,000; in 1960 there are 250,000, 60 per cent of whom were born in Canada. The Jewish immigrants after the Second World War were mainly those who had miraculously survived Nazi concentration camps. Since then small groups have come from Hungary, after the 1956 revolution. Still others came from North Africa.

In the course of this interesting growth the Jews continued to produce their pioneers too. Many by-passed the centres of population to strike into the lonely, sparsely settled areas. They became peddlers, farmers, lumbermen, cattle dealers and merchants. They moved east and west, helping to establish communities in the Prairie provinces and in British Columbia. Side by side with other ethnic groups they worked to bring about a Canadian nationality.

All this began in Three Rivers 200 years ago. As their numbers grew and their economic standards improved, cultural and charitable institutions were strengthened by their generosity. Professional and educational life was stimulated by their interest. Artistic and cultural life was enriched. Commercial life became more dynamic. Their sons and daughters fought and died in two world wars. During those 200 years they captured as part of their essence the image and vitality of Canada, while never relinquishing the best of Jewish tradition, which is, after all, one of the fructifying influences in Western civilization.

The history of Jewish immigration to Canada is the history of all immigration to Canada. We immigrants, and the sons of immigrants, did not come, in the main, from some dark European morass, where learning and culture never flowered. It was not ignorance that led us to reject our homes and our friends and the countries of our birth, and out of all the lands to choose Canada. We were actuated by the same impulse which in earlier times led others to make the same venturesome journey from the old world to the new: the desire to escape from drudgery without hope of security, hunger born of social injustice, and religious faith without the freedom to practise it.

We came in search of a land where we could call our soul our own and with hard work could see a better life for our sons and daughters, and with some luck could approach old age in dignity and security. We made our choice: we gambled our lives and those of our families, and we have never regretted it. Soon we found new roots. They took hold in more nourishing soil. We settled easily into the new scene and the old one faded. In time we could say with pride that Canada was no longer a refuge—it was home, in its truest sense.

There were setbacks, of course, and the disease of anti-semitism which swept parts of Europe did not leave this continent unscathed. But it was a sickness which never became deeply rooted in the minds of the Canadian people. As befits a nation of minorities, we have always had a great awareness of the fact that any challenge to the rights of one group is a menace to the rights of all.

The growth of the Jews paralleled the growth of Canada; the election of Jews to public bodies ceased to be regarded as an unusual event; and in the professions, in the world of art, culture, education and the commercial life of this country, the Jews made and continue to make noteworthy contributions as Canadians.

In this progressive democracy the rich soil of freedom has brought forth many blessings: the right to practise religion without let or hindrance; the right to develop one's potential to the fullest extent; the right to justice and equity before the law; the right to be human beings and not ciphers. Canada has done well by its minorities and the minorities have done well by Canada. The very fabric of nationhood is woven by diverse patterns, all blending into the whole.

For the history of the Jews in Canada is substantially the record of every other ethnic group as well. It has become a commonplace to speak of this country as a land of minorities, or to talk of the "Canadian mosaic" as opposed to the "American melting pot", but I wonder how many of us ever stop to marvel at the many and diverse peoples that make up this nation. The other day I set down some of their names on paper and was amazed to find that they represent almost every letter of the alphabet—Armenian, Bulgarian, Chinese, Danish, Estonian, Finnish, Greek, Hungarian, Icelandic, Japanese, Latvian, Macedonian, Norwegian, Portuguese, Romanian, Slovak, Ukrainian. This list could easily be doubled, and I have not included the larger groups, such as German, Scandinavian, Netherlands and Polish.

We must also take into account Canadians of British and French origin, both of them minority groups, for according to the census of 1951 the British proportion of our population was 48 per cent, and the French proportion was 31 per cent. According to the census of 1958 the British proportion is 45 per cent, and the French proportion is 30 per cent. Thus it can truthfully be said that every Canadian, regardless of the colour of his skin or the church he worships in, belongs to a minority group. In this, I believe, resides one of our saving graces. To those who complain about the absence of a Canadian national consciousness I say: "Take a closer look at a slice of Canadian life. Its richness and variety will never fail to surprise you."

We are not a "melting-pot". I think we are something better—a nation where the individual can still retain something of his individuality; where the men and women in the towns and country are human beings; where we may still speak differently, dress differently, worship in different ways, eat different foods, and think different thoughts. We are a nation in which we have an agreement: I will respect your rights, and you will respect mine. So long as this compact lasts we need never fear for our existence as a nation.

We and our fathers came to this country not only in flight from something, but also in search of something. What we were looking for, and found, is today's Canada. It is my sincerest wish that all Canadians—the little community of Jews whose two hundredth birthday is being celebrated this year and the members of every other group—may find the fulfilment of all their hopes and aspirations.

To Canadians of Jewish origin who make up less than one and one-half per cent of the total population, and who are now starting on their third century, I say: "Welcome. This is your home, and your children's home."

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am sure we have all listened with very much interest to the very eloquent remarks which have just been made by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and I am very happy to have this opportunity of saying a few words with respect to this matter which has been so capably presented by him.

As he points out, this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of Aaron Hart, the first Jewish settler in Canada. I am not sure whether it was in 1759 or 1760 when Aaron Hart landed in this country, but at any rate the bicentenary of his arrival is being celebrated this year, and not only by the Jewish people of Canada but by Canadians generally, for Canada is made up of divers and numerous races and creeds, as has been just stated, and the progress and achievement of Jewish settlement in our great country from the time of arrival of the first settler to the present is significant to all of us.

I am sure that honourable senators are intrigued with the story of Ezekiel Hart. He was first elected to the Legislature of Lower Canada in 1807, but it was twenty-five years later before he was allowed to sit in that body. During this period Ezekiel Hart advocated religious tolerance, and the culmination of his efforts in 1832 was the passing of the Act of Emancipation, which was assented to by King William IV and which declared, in part:

> That all persons professing the Jewish religion are entitled to the full rights and privileges of other subjects of His Majesty and capable of enjoying any office or place of trust within the province.

It is interesting to note that these rights were attained in Canada some twenty years before they were attained in the United Kingdom. This act was an attainment of extreme importance in the struggle for freedom and non-discrimination in Canada.

Since the year 1760 Jewish settlement has taken place over the length and breadth of Canada. For example, in my own province of Saskatchewan during the 1880's and 1890's agricultural settlements under the Baron de Hirsch, the Jewish Colonization Association and other organizations came to the province to establish Jewish farm communities, and many of these families continue to live there today. In fact, in 1905 we had a settlement about 20 miles north of Rosetown which flourished for about 20 years. A number of these people have left the district now, but there are still some who take an active part in farming operations in the famous Rosetown area.

Although numbering under a quarter of a million in Canada, the Jews have contributed mightily to our country's development. We all appreciate the eminence of their contribution to the arts, science, medicine, literature, law, philanthropy and business. This constructive contribution, honourable senators, is exemplified by that of our esteemed colleague from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), who has had a very colourful career in Canada. He was born in Moscow, I believe, and came to this country at the age of five years. He graduated as a lawyer, and became Mayor of the city Windsor. He was elected on several occasions to the Legislature of Ontario, and held several ministerial portfolios. On several occasions later he was elected to the House of Commons. To top it all, he was appointed to the Senate a few years ago.

Honourable senators, I take great pleasure in expressing my sincere appreciation of the very important part that Canadians of the Jewish race have played in the development of Canada in the past. They have my best wishes, and I am sure the best wishes of every member of this chamber, for the immediate future and for all time.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am of course most happy to associate myself with the address delivered in such eloquent terms by the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), marking, as it does, the two hundredth anniversary of the permanent settlement of Jews in Canada.

As I listened to the remarks of the honourable senator I could not help but think of the great contribution that has been made by the Jews to the performing arts, to the industrial life, to the professions—especially law and medicine—and to the public life of Canada in these two hundred years.

The moving force which impelled Jewish people to come to this country—and, as the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina pointed out, they came in two substantial waves of immigration, the first between 1882 and the beginning of the First World War, and the second between 1921 and the beginning of the Second World War—was an escape from persecution in the lands from which they came. One would have thought it possible that the circumstances which forced these people to uproot themselves, which deprived them in many cases of their possessions and incomes, and which generally dislocated them in their ways of life, might have had the effect of rendering them an ineffective force in the community, but this has not been the case. In fact, the effect has been entirely to the contrary. Great contributions have been made by them. And no doubt great contributions will be made in the future by people of Jewish origin now living useful and productive lives in Canada.

The impact of our Jewish fellow citizens in the fields of music, literature and art has been vital and significant. The prominent position taken in the industrial life of this country by Jewish businessmen, many of whom have prospered, has been useful and progressive, and I am particularly happy to pay tribute to them, not only for helping to create economic prosperity but also for the substantial assistance they have given to the various philanthropic endeavours to which they have diverted much of their substance.

But, honourable senators, we in this chamber are particularly interested in and associated with public life and it is therefore not surprising that I should today want to say a special word about Canadians of Jewish origin who have played so prominent a role in the political activities of our time.

The first Jewish member of Parliament elected to the House of Commons was Henry Nathan. He was elected in 1871 for Victoria, British Columbia, and was the forerunner of a substantial number of Jews who have since then from time to time sat in our Parliament. When I was a member of the House of Commons I came to know and admire such distinguished members of Parliament as Samuel Jacobs, Peter Bercovitch, Maurice Hart and Leon Crestohl, all of whom sat, as Mr. Crestohl still sits, for the constituency of Montreal-Cartier.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: And there was Samuel Factor.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes; I am coming to him.

As my honourable friend from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) points out, there was also Samuel Factor, Member of Parliament for Spadina who, during the time we were both in Parliament, became one of my close friends. He subsequently was appointed and continues to sit as one of our eminent judges for the county of York.

Today, Toronto, the Queen City of Canada, has as its chief magistrate Mr. Nathan Phillips; and until last year my home city of Brantford, the Telephone City of Canada—in fact, the Telephone City of the world—had as its chief magistrate Mr. Max Sherman. Both Mr. Phillips and Mr. Sherman are among our highly respected Jewish citizens.

I am sure, honourable senators, that it is quite fitting that I should make a special reference to one of the most distinguished Jewish Canadian citizens of our day, namely, our colleague who has drawn attention to this bicentenary, the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll).

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has said, Senator Croll came to Canada as a child from Moscow. He first came into prominence as Mayor of Windsor, in 1930. As has also been mentioned, in 1934 he was elected to the Legislature of Ontario. He remained a member of that body until 1944, and served as Minister of Public Welfare, Minister of Municipal Affairs, and Minister of Labour. His parliamentary career, however, was interrupted by distinguished service in the Canadian Army during World War II, which he entered as a private and left as a colonel. He then succeeded Mr. Factor as member of Parliament for Spadina, and during the course of his career in the House of Commons he was regarded as a most positive force. In 1955 he was appointed to the Senate, and he has the distinction of being the first person of his race to be so honoured. And today there is unanimous agreement as to his great abilities as an active and a most effective member of the Senate.

That being so, I am particularly pleased to speak to this matter to which attention has been directed by our colleague, and to pay tribute on this occasion to the rich contribution made to Canada by Canadian Jews for 200 years, and to express the certainty that that contribution will continue in the future as it has been in the past.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with this matter and to congratulate the honourable member from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) on the very fine remarks he has made.

I would like to take advantage of this occasion by giving to honourable senators a short report of a trip by the Canadian delegates to the Australian meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, who received an invitation from the Israeli Government to visit Israel on their return from Australia. This invitation was accepted and the members of the delegation visited Israel. The leader was the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, who was accompanied by Mrs. Michener, and the other delegates were Senator Donald Smith, and myself, from this chamber; Leon Crestohl, M.P., Theo Ricard, M.P., Harry White, M.P., Harold Winch, M.P., Fred A. McCain, M.L.A., New Brunswick, and Mr. Montgomery, Assistant Clerk of the House of Commons. We were very happy to accept this invitation, because we had already found in Australia that our meetings with delegates from the other parts of the commonwealth, and in particular the delegates from those countries of Africa which are so much in the limelight today, certainly gave the members of the Canadian delegation a much better picture of the real situation than they could ever gather from the press or the radio.

So it was in Israel. From 1948 on we have all heard so much of this small country and what has been accomplished there. No matter what you have read, I say to you that it is impossible to believe it all unless you have actually been there to see it. I will just mention a few brief facts about the geography of Israel. Honourable senators may be surprised to know that its area is only 7,816 square miles. That whole country is considerably smaller than the former riding of Hastings-Frontenac which I represented in the House of Commons. The entire length of the country is 260 miles. The width varies from 9.3 miles to 70 miles; the highest mountain, Mount Meron, is 3,962 feet; the Dead Sea, the lowest point on earth, is 1,286 feet below sea level. In this country, where we have so many lakes and rivers, it is interesting to note that 73 miles of the Jordan River are within Israel, that the Yarkon River is 16.1 miles, and the Kishon, 8.1 miles. The climate of the Mediterranean is warm in summer, and the winters are mild; rainfall varies from 1.2 inches in the south to 37.4 inches in the north.

Some idea of how production has increased within the ten-year period from 1948 to 1958 may be obtained from these figures:

Old and new crops ..	1948	1958
Citrus fruits	273,000 tons	460,000 tons
Grapes	18,000 "	40,000 "
Subtropical fruits ...	13,000 "	32,000 "
Bananas	3,000 "	30,000 "
Sugar beets	None	115,000 "
Cotton	None	21,000 "
Rice	None	1,500 "
Grounds nuts	None	28,000 "

One of the most interesting features of that country is the great area of soil which has been reclaimed. In the same ten-year period 202,500 acres now in production have been reclaimed by irrigation, 42,500 acres by the terracing of hillsides and mountains, and 55,000 acres by the draining of swamps. Another interesting fact is that in that period no less than 55,250 acres of land have been planted with 52,670,000 trees.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Will the honourable gentleman permit a question? Where do they get the water to use for irrigation?

Hon. Mr. White: They get it principally from the Jordan River.

In that period the population has increased by 136 per cent; imports have increased by 180 per cent, and exports by 378 per cent. Road building in 1948 was 897 miles, and in 1958 it was 1,661 miles. In the ten-year period miles of railway increased from 120 to 398. The merchant marine of that small country increased in the ten years from 14,000 tons to 235,000 tons, comprising 34 passenger and cargo vessels, fruit carriers and tankers. I am informed that there has been a still larger increase since 1958. Air lines use the latest turbo-jet engines.

Our delegation came from Teheran and arrived at Tel Aviv, a beautiful modern city on the shores of the blue Mediterranean, with very fine beaches, fine hotels along the beach, good stores, avenues and apartment houses. It even has sidewalk cafes, the same as there are in Paris and Vienna. The old city of Jaffa is now merged with Tel Aviv, and this gives the tourist an excellent opportunity to see and observe both the old and the new. We are told that Jaffa is over 4,000 years old. According to legend it was built by Japheth, a son of Noah. Jaffa was the scene of much fighting in 1948, and the tourists today can see many of the ruins caused by the war of that time. This city provides everything that the tourist could wish. The shopping districts and stores meet the needs of every class of tourists. One of the main streets in the city is called Allenby Road, which is a familiar name to any soldier of World War I.

A thing that the visitor to Israel soon becomes conscious of is the great attention that is paid to education. Our delegation was taken to a recently opened technical school near Tel Aviv which provides a four-year technical high school course in electronics and radio, electro-mechanics, tool and die making and precision mechanics. In addition, regular high school subjects are taught. This school will eventually handle 800 students, both boys and girls. We were told that during the ten-year period from 1948 to 1958 more than 11,000 young and adult students had graduated from this type of school. In the present school year there are enrolled more than 4,500 boys and girls in the age group of 12 to 18, who are taking courses in 25 vocational training centres located at 19 different places. In addition more than 1,500 adults take courses in the evening. One of the very interesting things we noticed when being shown around this very modern school in Tel Aviv was a bomb shelter underneath the basement.

After we left the school we were on our way to the city of Haifa and we visited the old Roman town of Caesarea on the Mediterranean. This had been a Roman capital for many years and it was later occupied by various crusaders. It was very interesting to have pointed out to us in the old ruins the Roman architecture with the crusade period architecture imposed on top of it. A future attraction for tourists will be the old Roman ruins recently discovered near Caesarea and now being excavated. There you will find many of the same type of ruins which you see in the buried city of Pompeii in Italy.

We were also taken to a very interesting exhibit. It was a gift to the nation, and a special museum has been built to house it. There we saw every type of glass that has been used in the period B.C. down to the present time. Some of the glass bottles exhibited there are the rarest in the world.

Haifa, a city on the slopes of Mount Carmel, is a seaport of Israel and becoming one of the industrial centres of the Middle East. It contains automobile assembly plants, chemical fertilizer plants and large cement factories, and there is now being built north of the city an oil refinery.

We were shown one of the areas which had formerly been a swamp. Some 15,000 acres had been reclaimed, and when we were there they were planted with fruit trees and sugar cane.

We saw many of the historic sites which one reads about in the Bible. We were shown where many battles had taken place, different places where King Solomon's armies had fought. In one place six or eight cities had been built one on top of the other, and a slice had been cut off the mountain so you could easily see evidence of each period of civilization.

We visited a community farm on the Jordan River near the Sea of Galilee. This is a collective settlement where all property and land are held in common. It is a very large farm containing stock, fruits, poultry and everything of that nature. Anyone may join it, and those who join may leave it at any time. The community provides for all the needs of its members, and all marketing is on a co-operative basis. This farm is on the Jordan River, which is much in the news today on account of the dispute between the Israeli Government, Syria and Jordan in regard to the piping of water from the River Jordan to irrigate the Negev desert.

From there we went to Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee, which is a very fine tourist centre. Then we went to the city of Nazareth, which naturally is of interest to everyone. There we saw the St. Joseph Church, which is built over the location where the carpenter shop of Joseph was located. Near Capernaum there is a gentle slope which is called a mountain, and it was on this mountain that Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount, in which he said, "Blessed are the poor . . . Blessed are the meek . . . Blessed are the merciful . . ." And it was near there that the miracle of the multiplying of the loaves and fishes was performed. It is impossible for anyone to leave the shores of the Lake of Galilee or to visit the cities of Capernaum and Nazareth without being moved by that Presence which defies and surpasses our common comprehension, a Presence which will leave a deep impression on you for the rest of your life.

We visited the city of Jerusalem, and our Ambassador was able to arrange permission for the delegation to cross the line and visit the Arab section of the city. We were very fortunate to see the various holy places. The place that I was most impressed with was the Garden of Gethsemane. We were told that the olive trees growing there today are over three thousand years old, that they were there in the days when Christ walked in the garden.

Our delegation laid a wreath on the monument of Benjamin Hurzl, founder of the Zionist Movement.

From there we were taken to a military cemetery. Honourable senators, I have seen many military cemeteries in various parts of the world, but I have yet to see a finer monument to soldiers than the one outside the city of Jerusalem. It is situated on the side of a mountain. Stones, flowers, terraces—everything about it, in my opinion, was nearly perfect. A special monument to boys who served in the navy was rather unusual. It was in the form of a large pool, and around the edge of the pool, about four inches below the water line, was a small stone monument bearing the name of deceased naval veterans.

We also visited the new university at Jerusalem. There had been a university on Mount Scopus, but when the armistice lines were withdrawn it was within the boundaries of Jordan. The new university is a very fine modern institution, not yet completed. It was interesting to be shown the first building erected at this university, known as Canada House, which was donated by a Montreal lady.

While there we had the opportunity of seeing the famous Dead Sea scrolls and the jars in which those scrolls were found. A very fine explanation of those scrolls was given us by one of the university professors.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Did you see any of the scrolls?

Hon. Mr. White: We saw the scrolls, yes. They are displayed in large glass cases about the size of two desks in this chamber.

We were taken by air from Tel Aviv to Eilat, which is on the Red Sea. As we got off the plane and walked toward the exit we could see the Canadian flag and hear a large number of people singing O Canada. We were much surprised and could not understand what was going on, until we recognized a delegation from the city of Toronto which was making a tour of Israel.

Eilat is the location of the famous King Solomon mines. I was very greatly interested to learn for the first time that the King Solomon mines were operated for the production of copper, which in those days had four times the value of gold.

To illustrate how small the world is—and every one of us has experienced these occasions—the engineer in charge of the mines asked me where I came from. When I told him Ontario, he asked, "By any chance, do you know where the small village of Marmora is located?" I said "Yes; I live exactly eight miles from there." I added, "I presume you were there inspecting the Bethlehem Steel mine?" He said "That is correct." When I came home I spoke to my next-door neighbour, who is an engineer at the mine, and he said that he knew the man well, calling him by name, and said that he had taken him around the mine.

One other interesting experience, and something that I have never had before, was a trip in a glass-bottom boat, in which we were shown some famous coral beaches.

Huge new port facilities are planned for that area and will form the gateway from Israel to Africa and Asia.

We took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Canadian troops stationed at the Gaza Strip. We in this country should be very proud of the job that our troops are doing in that area. Certainly, it is no pleasure trip for them. The Israeli officer in charge was able to gather together some Canadian troops so that we could have a short chat with them.

The countryside in this area is all sand. The station where the troops are located is about 300 yards inside the Egyptian border. It consists of a small building with three sides, not more than 15 feet square, with one end open, and two soldiers are placed there for 24 hours at a time. They have a telephone and binoculars, and can see the next station on either side of them.

We were fortunate enough to have an interview with Prime Minister Ben Gurion, who told us that he was prepared to answer any question we might wish to ask. I said to him that in 1956 I had spent some two weeks in the Arab countries, had seen various Arab refugee villages and heard their side of the story, and I wondered if he would care to comment on the situation. He said he would be very glad to do so. He readily admitted to me and the rest of the delegation that many of the Arabs had never received compensation for the lands that had been taken from them; that as far as the Israeli Government was concerned they were ready and willing at all times to negotiate.

We also had an interview with Mrs. Meir, the Foreign Minister who, in my opinion, is a very brilliant and capable lady. I asked her if she would care to comment on the Suez situation. One of the things that struck me forcefully was the non-partisan way in which she proceeded to explain both sides of the question, and to readily admit that there had been mistakes and errors on both sides.

We were also received by the President of the State of Israel. We attended a symphony concert, and I can say that, as the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald pointed out, music is very important to the Jewish people. This was in Tel Aviv, where we listened to a very fine orchestra, in which I counted some 40 violins alone. I was impressed by the attendance of a large number of men at the concert.

At the King David Hotel in Jerusalem, after an official dinner, there was an exhibition of folk dancing, which I found most pleasing. The boys wore blue shirts and dark trousers, the girls wore blouses and skirts, and they were all in their bare feet. I was sitting beside Mrs. Meir, and I asked her from what school or academy these boys and girls came. She said there was no school or academy, that this was a part of the training every youth in the country receives in folk dancing.

Honourable senators, I have jotted down a few of the things that impressed me in my brief visit, and I have listed them in this order:

In ten years more than a million immigrants from other lands, many without skills or money, speaking many different languages, received, cared for and worked into the economy of the country.

The very efficient type of receiving centre for immigrants.

Tens of thousands of new cement homes.

Millions of trees planted. Outside Jerusalem six million trees planted, one for each Jew killed in World War II.

The new paved highways, extended railway lines, new port facilities, and new factories.

The great irrigation system, and others that are planned to bring water from the river Jordan to the Negev desert, a very great distance.

The new and efficient air lines, ocean-going vessels and freighters.

The large number of schools, hospitals and cultural centres.

The cultural development in schools, the love of the people for music and art; the many native crafts that have been re-introduced and developed; the way in which culture becomes part of the life of each student.

The re-claiming of the desert where sand from 5 to 15 feet deep has been removed and where now grow oranges and other citrus fruits. The drudgery and hard physical toil necessary to reclaim swamp lands.

The removal by hand of stones from fields where it was impossible to put a bulldozer; the stones piled in rows that the bit of land in between the rows could be cultivated.

The terracing of the sides of the hills and mountains for the growing of oranges and olives.

The service of both boys and girls in the armed forces.

The friendly nature of the people, not boastful, but proud of their achievements in so short a time.

The importance of the family unit, the universal desire for education, and the fine type of healthy children.

The importance of religion and the respect for tradition.

The engagement of Jews in every type of primary industry, factories, road building, etc.

And above all, the complete unity of the entire country where men, women and children appear to be united with one purpose to make their country a nation, against desperate odds.

The fair treatment to Arabs who remained in Israel. There are eight Arab members of Parliament. Education is free to Arabs, and the youth are not liable for compulsory military service.

You must admire their democratic form of Government, and you are also impressed by the grim determination of the people of Israel, and the armed forces of the country, to resist aggression.

There is much to see in Israel, and the Government has been particularly active in assisting the tourist industry. I have here, as you can see, a large number of tourist pamphlets. Just to give you an example of what this country is doing, I am holding up a large map of Israel. The fine print down one side recites the verses of the Bible referring to places on this map, and letters indicate where they are to be found. The map also indicates where certain events of importance referred to in the Bible took place. There are small books and pamphlets for every city, most attractively produced, such as one I have in my hand now, which is on Israeli shopping; and here is one on the Dead Sea. There are all sorts of tourist agency guides, and every possible thing is done to assist the tourist agency.

A few days ago the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) in a very fine speech referred to the position of our foreign trade and our future place in the export markets of the world. After a short visit to Israel and seeing what has been done there in one decade I predict that within the very near future you will find that country competing for export trade in the markets of the world, and on a large scale.

In conclusion, I wish to state how much I appreciated my visit to Israel, the courtesy of the Israeli Government in extending the invitation, and the superfine way in which our delegation was treated in every respect. I would say to every honourable senator who might be in Europe: "Do not miss a trip to Israel." The climate is ideal. There is much to see in this country steeped in history and tradition, and which is a land where time stands still for the student of the Bible, and where there is much to see in the style of 1960. To see for yourselves the development which has taken place in ten years will be a revelation to you. I think I am safe in saying that any visitor to Israel will come away with great admiration and respect for its people, who have accomplished so much in so short a time as a nation with a great ideal and a centuries-old dream which they are determined will come true.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

MONTREAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Léon Méthot, for Hon. Mr. Monette, moved the third reading of Bill S-11, respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, when this bill came up for second reading certain questions were put to the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). While I was passing through Montreal on Tuesday he gave me a few notes which answer these questions, and which I would like to read to the house.

"When this bill came up for second reading, on February 9, the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) raised the following questions:

Is there any special reason why in the case of a private bill the title is not official in both languages, other than perhaps the fact that in a private bill a company is given a name and that name must be in the language in which the application is made? Does this mean that if a petition comes to this house in French the name of the company must be in French from then on, and if a petition comes in English the name of the company must always be in English?

"The honourable senator was kind enough not to ask for an answer just then. The Honourable the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) also joined in the debate on the question. At the time, I could offer but a summary explanation, as follows:

In the private bill incorporating this company the name given was in the English language, and therefore the legal name of the company is an English name. If this bill passes, the company will then have two official names, one French and the other English—

"Since then I have given consideration to the matter. As the honourable senator from Ottawa West suggested, the title of a public act appears in English in the English version and in French in the French version. The same is true of a private act incorporating a company—with this difference. There is involved in such a case not merely the title of an act, but also the name of a company. When a petition is presented to Parliament to incorporate a company under a specific name, provision is made in the legislation for the use of that specific name, and no other, unless an additional name in another language is specifically requested by the petitioners. I have here—honourable senators may examine them if they wish—some examples of what happens in practice.

"The title of Bill S-27 as passed by the Senate on June 17 last year is, in the English version, 'An Act to incorporate The Free Methodist Church in Canada', and in the French version, 'Loi constituant en corporation "The Free Methodist Church in Canada" '.

"The title of Bill S-28 as passed by the Senate on June 25 last year is, in the English version, 'An Act to incorporate Standard Trust Company', and in the French version, 'Loi constituant en corporation la "Standard Trust Company" '.

"And in the operative sections of both these statutes the name of the company appears only in the English version. No French equivalent is given.

"It is clearly necessary, therefore, for a company incorporated by Act of Parliament, under an English name only, to apply to Parliament for the addition of a French name if it desires one. The same principle applies of course to companies incorporated under the Companies Act—the Letters Patent must be amended accordingly.

"The foregoing constitutes the reason for the present bill respecting Montreal Life Insurance Company."

Honourable senators, that is the end of the memorandum.

In my electoral division we have an example in the city of Trois Rivières, or Three Rivers. When the city was incorporated the English version of the statute referred to it as "Three Rivers", and the French as "Trois Rivières". Since then the English version has been amended so that the name "Trois Rivières" is used in that text.

The city of Shawinigan Falls was incorporated under that name. Later someone translated it into "Les Chutes Shawinigan," and now, according to an amendment, it is called "La Cité de Shawinigan" or "La Ville de Shawinigan", and it is no longer "Shawinigan Falls". Each change had to be approved by the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I thank the honourable senator for the explanation and, through him, the honourable senator who prepared the memorandum (Hon Mr. Monette). It is good to have it on the record.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I would ask your indulgence at this late hour in the afternoon so that I may proceed with my contribution to the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I do not expect to be in the chamber in the early part of next week and may not have another opportunity of participating in the debate.

At the beginning of my remarks I wish to refer briefly to the controversial issue on which the last session of Parliament terminated—the Newfoundland Additional Grants Bill. I was sorry that I could not be here to take part in that debate. I had gone to Newfoundland for a short time, intending to be back here when that legislation came before the Senate. Little did I expect that prorogation would come within a few hours after the introduction of the Newfoundland Additional Grants Bill. I heard of the closing of the session on the very day I had booked to return. I know that my presence here at the time would not have made the slightest difference in the passing of the bill. As a matter of fact, there was no alternative to passage of the bill in the circumstances, but I certainly would have liked to put myself on record in the matter.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We missed you very much.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Thank you; and I missed being here. I was sorry to be away. I must say I was very much impressed by the points raised by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and also by the honourable senators from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) and Saint John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins). I read with very great interest indeed the full debate as reported in Hansard.

There is no purpose in my entering into a long review of the subject at this time, but I would like to say that there was a lack of consideration of the contractual position which was outlined in Term 29 of the Terms of Union. It is true that the overall position taken by the Government of Canada was improved from what had been announced previously when it was said this was a final and irrevocable settlement and a clause was substituted calling for review in 1962.

The weakness of the changed position, however, is that the review is set down to come at a time when general consideration is to be given to relations between the provinces and the federal Government. In other words, by clear implication the federal contractual obligations to Newfoundland are just swept under a ceiling of federal-provincial relations.

Apart altogether from the general character and responsibilities of such relationships, there is a contract signed, sealed and delivered under legislative authority of Canada, the United Kingdom and Newfoundland. It had the whole breadth and the sanctity of a contract within the commonwealth. Under that contract, matters in connection with maintenance of public services of my province, as defined in Term 29, have to come up for specific review. Financial adjustments in relation to the same have to be made quite separately from matters of general application in a dominion-provincial conference. A true and proper enforcement of Term 29 does not affect in any way the grants and assistance to the province, including Newfoundland, which are the outcome of federal-provincial conferences.

I just want to say at this time that the circumstances of the new province are, from the point of view of economics, public services and finance, entirely different from those of the other provinces. It couldn't possibly be otherwise, Newfoundland having lived apart until ten years ago. The continuing nature of those contributions to public service was unmistakably written into the signed agreement.

We all want a right approach to this matter, I am sure. What is required is more understanding of the circumstances and conditions than have been revealed. Despite all the best will in the world, it is easy to fall into misunderstandings and failures when generalities, no matter how liberally expressed, are allowed to creep in and take the place of a specific and properly directed approach. I do hope that the relationship of Newfoundland and the Dominion of Canada will not have to be under continuous strain because of lack of appreciation of my province's special circumstances. An improvement of great value in the relations could come right now by a clear and definite statement that the continuing obligation of the federal Government under Term 29 is recognized, as it must be as time goes on. I have frequently said in this chamber that what Newfoundland requires more than anything else is understanding by the Government and by the people of the other provinces of its unique circumstances and its needs.

By comparison in every respect Newfoundland is a new province and will remain so for many years. Many of our problems have to be analyzed separately from those of Canada generally. For instance, we are practically a 100 per cent foreign trade province as far as our industrial production is concerned. In reverse, we are nearly a 100 per cent Canadian trade province as far as our purchases are concerned. That fact in itself imposes problems within Newfoundland which are not of general application to the rest of Canada.

Transportation is one of our great problems. With our narrow-gauge railway, normal carload shipments cannot go through to destination outside the province without double handling. More of our imports and exports go through indirect channels of distribution because of that fact, thus increasing costs more than would be the case if we had a standard-gauge railway.

Unfortunately, the application of a 50-50 basis of federal and provincial costs of the Trans-Canada Highway is impractical to Newfoundland. An across-the-nation policy in this connection is unrealistic as applied to Newfoundland. Illustrative of that is the fact that the difficult terrain and bridging of numerous rivers creates abnormal costs as compared with other provinces. The ratio of miles to population is twice that of the next province, and five times that of Ontario. Newfoundland still has to build the largest proportion of Trans-Canada Highway of any province. The province simply has not got the sources of provincial revenue to meet the cost of creating this essential service. More local roads are badly needed and will cost the province large sums of money. Even more essential services than roads, such as schools, hospitals and other welfare obligations, must have a preference in provincial Government expenditure, so a 50-50 basis of Trans-Canada Highway costs is just not feasible for the province. Unfortunately this was one of the many matters which were not specially provided for when the Terms of Union were being considered. It can also be taken as an illustration of many very important issues that have to be dealt with on the basis of goodwill and mutual understanding.

I want to use this occasion to reiterate the appeal which I have made in the past, for both sides, provincial and federal, to come together in the cause of fairness and common good. I say with all sincerity, let both federal and provincial Governments forget the rough and tumble of the political arena and in some cases personal battles of recent times, and get down to one issue, how best to serve the people and to be fair to all.

A matter of very great consequence to Newfoundland, and particularly to the city of St. John's, is the closing down of the Pepperrell Air Force base, which is scheduled for August 1 of this year. To give you some idea of the economic effect on the province and to St. John's in particular, I will state a few facts.

The base was established in 1941. About 1,200 Newfoundland people are constantly employed there on a full-time basis. The most recent figure I saw was 1,274. The civilian payroll for the past year was about $5 million. There have been about 5,200 military and civilian residents on that base. That makes a fair-sized town within a city. That number is in addition to those of the United States personnel who rent more than 1,000 apartments and houses in the city of St. John's. The Pepperell Air Force base expenditure in 1959 was $11,822,635. Withdrawal of this great expenditure will be a severe blow to a large segment of the population of St. John's and should be met by joint effort of Governments—federal and provincial—and our people.

The announcement by United States officials in Newfoundland on the "phasing out" of the Pepperell base has indicated a willingness, in fact an eagerness, to be co-operative in lightening the immediate impact of the situation. From our close connections with these fine people, we know their expressions of co-operation are genuine and sincere. On previous occasions, here and in the other house, references have been made to splendid relationships that have been developed with the United States personnel and the citizens of the province.

On this subject I would like to quote from a speech recently given by Mr. William Christensen, the United States Consul-General, at a Burns' night dinner in St. John's. Mr. Christensen, who has been there for some years, participates prominently in public welfare work and is most highly regarded. He said:

> Since that day in 1941 when the first United States troopship came into St. John's harbour, many thousands of my fellow countrymen have been stationed at Pepperell (now being phased out after 19 years of extraordinarily warm relationships with the people of St. John's and Newfoundland) and at the great defence bases in Stephenville, Argentia and Goose Bay.

He went on to say:

> How can I, as an American, adequately say how indebted we are to Newfoundlanders for their warm reception when we landed in 1941, and for the extraordinary relationship we have enjoyed since then. We owe you a debt of love—and while we can take some satisfaction that over the years we have made not an insignificant contribution to the economy of Newfoundland, how does one repay a debt of love? Well, I think we have made a significant start. Some 25,000 Newfoundland girls have married United States servicemen. That represents a lot of love! And the end is not yet.

Honourable senators, I would like to go on and quote from that very fine speech as reported in the local newspapers, but time does not permit. However, what I have given indicates the depth of feeling in a very real way.

With the closing out of the Pepperell base it is most appropriate, I am sure, to mention that informal suggestions have been made to Newfoundland organizations that some of the area will be available for public and welfare services. In this connection I would like to put forward a suggestion to the Department of National Defence. An approach should be made to the United States authorities to obtain portions of the properties for use as training bases for the Canadian services. In a review of the Department of National Defence reports of 1959, I find that in 1958 there is a listing of 24,880 naval trainees in seven places in Canada—19,407 of them in depots in Nova Scotia and most of the others in British Columbia. Pepperell, being within the boundaries of the city of St. John's, and out there by the Atlantic ocean, would be ideal as a naval training site. The number in training for the army in 1958, according to the defence report from which I am quoting, is listed at 19,192. They were located in 14 different places, mostly in the central provinces and a few in the west. The Royal Canadian Air Force had 18,210 trainees located in 12 places spread throughout central Canada and the west.

This makes a total of 62,282 trainees, as the term is used, mostly in year-round training for the three services during 1958. To be correctly understood in this matter I should point out that the numbers I have given are not necessarily numbers of individuals. Being listed as trainees in several courses, there are probably many who are taking more than one course at a time, and it is the number of persons in courses in one year that is recorded. The numbers, however, have a great significance in the point I am raising.

I question whether anywhere throughout Canada accommodation can be found which is as adaptable and as well equipped for the purpose of training personnel as is Pepperell. The area covers 1,635 acres; there are 208 buildings, which include schools, hospitals, recreational centres, and buildings for every conceivable need. The total cost of establishing this modern centre is given at $30 million, and one who has seen the growth of the centre at close range over the years may well believe that that is a very modest appraisal of its value. I certainly think that an approach by the Canadian authorities would be very favourably received, and such a use would lighten very considerably the impact of this closing-down policy on St. John's and the province. Such a move by our Defence Department would be good for the services as well as our people.

The Speech from the Throne mentions the subject of international trade. I would like, honourable senators, to take a few minutes to refer to that subject, which is fundamental to the livelihood of the people of all the provinces of Canada. As a matter of fact, it is interwoven into the whole economy of the nation more than any other matter. It is basic to making a livelihood directly and indirectly, right through the dominion. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), spoke very forcefully on this matter quite recently. As we all know, the developments that are taking place in Europe by reason of the combinations of countries for mutual trade, and in fact for mutual protection, are becoming a matter of world-wide importance. Two of the most outstanding factors developing throughout the world today are industrialization of densely populated and underdeveloped areas, and the grouping together of nations in common trading policies. This grouping, while at present in its formative stages, is being promoted to a degree which makes it obvious that any country that does not fit into this new framework will pay a terrible penalty for isolation.

Judging by the general expressions from industry, labour and Government, I think the Canadian outlook in this matter has been unrealistic. We are altogether too apt to think that what goes on in the United States and succeeds there can likewise succeed here. We overlook the fact that that widely spread nation of 50 states running from the temperate zone almost down to the tropics has a tremendous common market of its own by reason of its great diversification of natural materials. It is altogether different from the dominion of Canada, situated more or less in the north, with far less variety of raw materials and a scattered population. The ability of Canadian people to meet the needs for maintaining an adequate standard of living, welfare services, education, the necessary defence measures and so forth, depends on how well we can hold a forceful and profitable place in international trade.

I think in too many instances we give excessive protection from imports to some industries that do not fit naturally into our economy. While we have to be realistic and adopt a proper measure of protection for industry which by nature is sound and adaptable to the country's needs, we must not lose sight of the fact that exports have to be a major consideration in the prosperity of our people. To have export trade on a sound basis we must also have a liberal policy toward imports, because unless foreign trade is of mutual advantage it just ceases.

The honourable senator from Shelburne gave us a very fine review of the developments in the European Common Market project, which embraces 175 million people, and in the Outer Seven countries of Europe, with 100 million people, who are planning to operate more closely together. In 1957 I had the privilege of being at the Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce in Italy, at which 64 countries were represented. At that time the European Common Market agreement had just been signed, and it was most interesting and helpful to hear the views of the leading industrialists, from the European countries particularly, discuss the implications of that agreement. I must say that while a great deal of uncertainty as to the immediate outcome was expressed, I did not hear anything but a positive approach to the overall benefit which would come from such a method of working together. The strong impression which I brought back from that gathering was that this movement will set up new conditions in world trade which will affect us, and any country standing alone, very badly unless we learn, and learn quickly, to develop a more co-operative outlook on foreign trade than at present exists. We certainly have to watch our tariff walls in this country, and industry has to keep itself geared to efficient production at competitive world prices.

The higher our tariff walls go, the more rigid is our protection against importation of goods from other countries. This as a policy will make us very vulnerable to what I might term a creeping isolation from international trading relations. If we in Canada look at this situation in a broad way and adopt a policy which is for the general good rather than what is just for the benefit of those involved in specific industries, we will share in increasing world prosperity rather than be isolated from it.

One of the things we have particularly to see to in the industrial development of this country is that our international trading is safeguarded by reasonable relations of production costs to those of competing countries, especially those countries which are customers or potential customers of ours.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

COLLEGE OF GENERAL PRACTICE OF CANADA —SECOND READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw moved the second reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate The College of General Practice of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, a large group of general medical practitioners in Canada have been organized for some time and have been working to maintain a high standard of practice, especially among those doctors who go into the homes of people. Especially in these days, when there is so much specialization, it has been shown that there is a real place for this organization, and it is now felt that it can do better work if it is incorporated as a legal entity. The Canadian Medical Association has recognized the need for having the practitioners in this branch of medicine incorporated, and it has contributed a substantial amount of money to meet the expense of doing so.

The College of General Practice of Canada will have nothing whatever to do with the granting of licences to practise medicine; that is entirely a provincial matter. It will not have the effect of increasing the costs of medical service; in fact, medical service should be less costly, as general practioners will feel more confident in attending cases which would ordinarily be referred to specialists.

The college will not be a teaching institution as such, although it will encourage and perhaps assist in the teaching of undergraduates along the lines of general practice.

The various ways in which the qualifications of general practitioners are to be maintained and improved are set out in section 3 of the bill. Under paragraph (h) of that section it has been suggested that every member of the profession take two or three weeks off from practice at least every two years for postgraduate work arranged by the provincial chapters.

The present officers of the board will hold office until the first annual meeting is held. Further financing of the college will be done by each member paying a fee of about $25, if he chooses to join the organization.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, bill referred to Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

MATADOR PIPE LINE COMPANY, LTD.— SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-16, to incorporate Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd.

He said: Honourable senators, as you will see by the name of the company proposed to be incorporated by this bill, it is a pipe line company. The purpose of the incorporation is to assist in the solution of an oil marketing problem which exists in the state of North Dakota.

As honourable senators are aware, a great deal of oil is now produced in the state of North Dakota, and most of this is transported to markets in Minnesota and Wisconsin by tank car. The distance from the oil fields in North Dakota to these markets is in the neighbourhood of 200 to 300 miles, and the cost of transporting the oil by tank car is, I am informed, $1.10 a barrel, which is a pretty excessive cost considering the present value of crude oil. It is therefore proposed that there be constructed from a gathering point in North Dakota a pipe line to the Manitoba-North Dakota boundary, this to be done by a company incorporated in the state of North Dakota.

The persons who are sponsoring this bill, and the company to be formed thereby, therefore propose to construct a pipe line of 10-inch diameter from the Manitoba-North Dakota boundary, approximately eight miles east of the Manitoba-Saskatchewan boundary, to Cromer, Manitoba, where the pipe line will connect with the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pipe line. As honourable senators are aware, the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company transports oil by pipe line all the way from Alberta to Sarnia, and indeed as far as Toronto, and it maintains a pumping station at Cromer, Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand that the source of the oil that will be transported by the pipe line, according to this bill, is in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, the source of the oil is in the United States.

As I have said, it is proposed to deliver oil from North Dakota to the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pumping station at Cromer, from where it would be carried by the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pipe line into another pipe line which leads into the states of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And on into Sarnia?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. The destination of this oil from North Dakota, which is now carried by tank car, is points in Wisconsin and Minnesota where the oil is presently sold. As I have said, the intention is that the oil be transported by the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pipe line from Cromer, Manitoba and into the United States again.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are there to be any outlets in Canada for that oil?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. It is not proposed to ship that oil to any points in Canada, but to points in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But the line does go through Canada and it could be tapped?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: The Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pipe line at present goes through Canada; then, you will recall, it goes up to Superior and Duluth, where it crosses the international border, and there it connects with other pipe line systems which take oil into the United States. That is what is proposed to be done in this case.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do I correctly understand the honourable senator to say that probably none of this oil will go east of Duluth, and then it will start south?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. It will not go east of Duluth, but it will start south to Wisconsin and Minnesota at Duluth.

The length of the proposed pipe line in Manitoba—that is, from the United States-Manitoba Border—will be approximately 60 miles. As I said, the proposed scheme will merely re-route the oil referred to, and it is not anticipated there will be any displacement of any presently existing market for Canadian crude. On the other hand, the building of the proposed pipe line will produce revenue for the Interprovincial Pipe Line, and also, of course, it will result in the building of this short pipe line in the province of Manitoba.

The applicants for incorporation, as shown in the bill, are three members of a Calgary legal firm together with a Mr. Cortlandt Scoville Dietler, oil producer of the city of Denver in the state of Colorado, and Elmer Goodman Balsam, oil transporter of Miles City in the state of Montana.

The capitalization of the company is to consist of 100,000 common shares without nominal or par value, and 18,000 preferred shares of the par value of $50 per share. It is not intended that any of the company's funds be raised by public financing either in Canada or the United States. I am informed that any required financing will be done through private sources and institutions.

The company will be limited to operating within the province of Manitoba and outside Canada, and it will also be limited to the transport only of oil and other liquid hydrocarbons.

It should be realized that the granting of a charter does not of itself permit the company to proceed with the project which has been outlined. The company will have to make application for that purpose to the National Energy Board for permission to construct and operate a pipe line such as is proposed. The bill specifically provides that the company is subject to the National Energy Board Act and any other general legislation enacted by Parliament relating to pipe lines.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Perhaps it is not of very great importance, but it arouses my curiosity when I hear that this pipe line is proposed for the export of oil to the Minnesota and Wisconsin markets. My question is this: Why is this method taken rather than the building of a line from Superior where it could tap the Interprovincial Pipe Line?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Well, the idea is to take the shortest route. The purpose is to get this oil from North Dakota into the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's pipe line by the shortest route. It will then be taken through that line to Duluth and Superior, whence it will be diverted south to the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin. If, in the alternative, these people wanted to build a pipe line direct from North Dakota to their present markets, such a pipe line would cover a distance of 200 to 300 miles. By doing it this way they are able to achieve their purpose with a pipe line 60 miles long, and in that way divert the oil into the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's system. I hope that answers the question.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is rather interesting to note, as I see it, that this pipe line from, say, Cromer in Manitoba to the ultimate destination of the oil will be much longer than would a pipe line built from, say, Superior, where it could tap the Interprovincial Pipe Line system. Tapping it at Superior would mean the building of a shorter line to its ultimate market than tapping it at Cromer.

I admit, honourable senators, that the point is not very important. If these people want to spend money, they can. Presumably they know what they are doing. This is just a matter of curiosity on my part.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: If the honourable senator will permit it, I have two or three questions. The answer to one of them is very simple. Would he give us the size of the pipe line?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It will be a ten-inch pipe line, and I am told that the cost of constructing it will be approximately $4 million.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Do you know its daily capacity?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, I have not that information.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understood the honourable senator to say that this pipe line was to be used exclusively for the transmission and transportation of oil in Canada—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And outside.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is what I am coming to. Why are the sponsors asking for the right to build a pipe line outside Canada if they only want to transport oil within Canada?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I believe that is the common practice. I have noticed that every one of the Canadian pipe line companies seeks authority to build in Canada which, of course, is as far as the jurisdiction of Parliament goes, but all of them that touch the border also have included in their bills power to build outside of Canada. That is common to all these bills, so far as I know.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They would not need that power in order to do what they are asking permission to do?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does not this bill propose to permit this company to sell its oil in Canada? I would point out to the honourable senator that clause 6, at line 22, proposes to give among other powers, the privilege of —gathering, transmitting, transporting, storing and delivering of oil—

Then down in line 27 we find the words:

—and buy or otherwise acquire, transmit, transport and sell or otherwise dispose of and distribute oil—

It seems to me we are giving the company power to import oil into Canada and to dispose of it in this country.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Well, to that I would say "Why shouldn't we?" I think it would be very wrong for us to voice the view here that we should not permit the importation of oil. Our Maritimes economy needs importation of oil by tankers and not by pipe line. Why should imported oil not be sold in Canada if it is convenient to both the buyer and the seller and the sale is subject to existing tariff and other regulations?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is not the point I have raised. I would have no objection at all if permission were granted to sell in Canada, but I am trying to understand this legislation and I have asked the honourable gentleman who introduced it if it is for transportation purposes only. As I understand it, the bill gives the company far greater power than the mere power of transporting oil through Canada. If I am wrong I would like to be corrected. I am not arguing the merits of whether the oil should or should not be sold in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think the quick answer to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is this. There is a distinction between the corporate powers that a company acquires by its act of incorporation and the question whether the company can import oil from the United States into Canada and sell it in our markets. The importation of oil into Canada and its sale here is entirely governed, as I understand it, by the National Energy Board Act. At the same time, when this company acquires corporate powers to transport oil, it requires powers to sell, because it will actually be selling oil in the United States. Consequently, the company as a corporate entity must have power to sell, and that is entirely irrespective of whether sales are to be made in Canada or any other part of the world.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The first words of paragraph (a) of section 6 of the bill refer to what can be done within Canada.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do want to submit that any matters in respect of import of crude oil into Canada come within the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board and are entirely outside the question of corporate powers in a bill incorporating a company. I suggest that we can have further explanation with respect to this particular matter in committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would hope so.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: If the bill is given second reading I will propose that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

NATIONAL SANITARIUM ASSOCIATION— SECOND READING

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill S-17, respecting the National Sanitarium Association.

He said: Honourable senators, I crave your indulgence at this late hour to put some remarks on the record in connection with the National Sanitarium Association. That organization was incorporated by act of the Parliament of Canada in 1896 and its purpose was primarily to deal with the isolation, treatment and cure of pulmonary disease. That was the only disease the association was authorized by charter to deal with.

I think I should say at the outset that I am a member of the Board of Trustees of the National Sanitarium Association, as is the senior member of the Senate, the honourable senator from Leeds (Hon. Mr. Hardy).

When the association was chartered, in 1896, the disease of tuberculosis was a very dread one. It was commonly called consumption because of its wasting character, and owing to its prevalence and serious nature it was known as the White Plague.

A number of public-spirited citizens in Toronto and Montreal organized for the purpose of constructing the first sanitarium in Canada for the treatment of this disease. The prime mover was Sir William Gage, a distinguished Toronto citizen and philanthropist. It is interesting to note that in the first instance he thought this sanitarium should be located in British Columbia because of the advantages that province offered in elevation and pure air which would assist in the treatment. The difficulty, of course, was that most of the patients would be from eastern Canada and there was the problem of transportation, even though at that time the Canadian Pacific Railway offered to carry patients from any part of Canada to a sanitarium in British Columbia free of charge. Notwithstanding this, it was finally decided that the sanitarium should be constructed in Ontario, where the elevation was not as high nor, may I say, the air quite as pure.

The sanitarium was built at Muskoka. It pioneered in sanitarium treatment for tuberculosis and it is still carrying on. Subsequently this association constructed the Toronto Hospital for Tuberculosis at Weston, a suburb of Toronto. Later on it established also the Gage Institute, with branches as clinics for out-patients, and for conducting mass surveys whereby groups of citizens could be given X-ray examinations for the purpose of discovering the disease in its incipient stage and thus facilitating treatment and cure and, of course, helping to prevent the spread of tuberculosis. Honourable senators may be interested to know that last year the Gage Institute, in its mass surveys of groups such as students and employees of factories and offices, conducted over 270,000 individual examinations and over 220,000 X-ray examinations.

I should like to put on record the story of the remarkable success that has taken place in the treatment of this disease since this first sanitarium was established. Of course, the success was due to the work of many people, and this organization was only one in the field. The story is interesting because it has to do with one of the miracles of modern medicine. The death rate from tuberculosis has dropped steadily during this century. The great break-through took place since World War II with the discovery of certain antibiotics that have the quality and the power to overwhelm tubercle-bacilli. I have here a table prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics giving the deaths and rate per 100,000 population from all forms of tuberculosis, by provinces and for Canada as a whole, from 1937 to 1958. With permission of the house I will place the table on Hansard so that it may be studied at leisure. I shall quote only one or two figures from the table. Commencing with the year 1937 the rate of deaths in Canada as a whole was 60.9 per 100,000 population. In the last year shown on the table, 1958, deaths dropped to six persons per 100,000 population, a decline of 90 per cent. This means that more than 9,000 people who are now living would be dead but for the great progress and success achieved in the treatment of this disease.

Nova Scotia	710,000	Manitoba	870,000	Yukon	13,000
				Northwest Territories	20,000

SOURCE: Tuberculosis Statistics 1958
Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

I should also like to give some figures relating to the Northwest Territories. One of the things that the white people brought to the Indians and the Eskimos, who form a higher percentage of the population in the Northwest Territories than in other parts of Canada, was tuberculosis, and since they had not much resistance to the disease they suffered more extensively than did the white people. In 1945 the mortality rate in the Northwest Territories was 1,058 per 100,000 of population, but by 1958, in a period of 13 years, it had dropped to 90 persons. I think that is a very remarkable story. It is a great tribute to all those persons who have been engaged in this battle against tuberculosis, particularly to the medical profession—to those doctors who have really dedicated themselves in the field of research and the treatment of this disease. It is not a field they would have entered with any great expectation of reward, measured in terms of dollars, yet they have already received their reward, as they thought they might, in terms of persons cured and lives saved. I think we all owe them a great debt of praise and thanks for that quite remarkable record.

The decrease in the number of deaths has also been accompanied by a reduction in the length of time for treatment in sanitoria. For example, in 1952 the length of stay for an average patient at the Weston Sanitarium was 509 days. In 1958, just six years later, largely because of antibiotic drugs the length of stay had been decreased to 275 days, or almost by one-half.

This success story, however, has brought with it problems of surplus capacity and surplus beds. As of January 31 in our two hospitals, namely, Muskoka and Weston, we had a 1,056-bed capacity, and on that day 458 beds—that is 44 per cent of the total—were vacant. We have been asking the Ontario Department of Health to ascertain how we can put our surplus capacity to the best use and devote our energies to other matters.

In that connection, I might mention that we have in our hospitals some of the 100 families with tuberculosis that were recently brought to Canada under an international arrangement for taking some tuberculous refugees, and there is every expectation, from reports I have received of those patients in our hospitals, that they will be restored to health and become useful citizens of Canada. I express my own personal strong conviction that we can do much more of that. We need have no fear of bringing to Canada as refugees persons who are afflicted with tuberculosis, because we can treat them and cure them, so that they will become good, sound, healthy citizens of Canada.

Of course, notwithstanding the fact that we have these empty beds, the battle against tuberculosis must go on. We cannot afford to be complacent about it. There is always the possibility of a resurgence of the disease. In any event, the efforts of an organization such as ours should go on toward the goal of eradication of the disease.

However, in looking at the problem as a whole along with the Ontario Department of Health we have reached the conclusion that we should also make our services available for treatment of diseases other than tuberculosis. We have buildings and beds, doctors and nurses, laboratories and research facilities, funds and resources. Therefore, this bill strikes out the section of the original charter that confined the activities of this organization to pulmonary disease only, and gives us the opportunity of expanding our services and using all our resources for the care and treatment and, we hope, cure of persons afflicted with any disease or disability whatsoever.

That, honourable senators, is the purpose of and the principle behind this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, bill referred to Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 192 to 204, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Golding, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, reports adopted.

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Golding, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-144, for the relief of Shirley Loraine Knodell Burke.

Bill SD-145, for the relief of Rene Lassonde.

Bill SD-146, for the relief of John Pastor.

Bill SD-147, for the relief of Margaret Dunn Hepburn Sanderson.

Bill SD-148, for the relief of Maurice Sykes Ward.

Bill SD-149, for the relief of Clark Alvin Graham.

Bill SD-150, for the relief of Noeleen Natalie Adams Lamond.

Bill SD-151, for the relief of Harry Gillman.

Bill SD-152, for the relief of John Philip Bowers.

Bill SD-153, for the relief of Carl August Christensen.

Bill SD-154, for the relief of Barbara Joan Marsh Wolfe.

Bill SD-155, for the relief of Barbara Ann Tuppen McIntosh.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Next sitting.

NEWFOUNDLAND

ELEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF UNION ACT

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, before we adjourn may I refer to a note that was passed to me by a friend while I was speaking about Newfoundland earlier? It reminds me that the act to approve Newfoundland's entry into Confederation was assented to in this Parliament on February 18, 1949, eleven years ago today. So we are just at the end of the first year of the second decade.

If this sitting could be turned into a social event, which it cannot be, I would suggest that my good friend on the opposite side of the house, the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins), start the singing of the Ode to Newfoundland. But, honourable senators, as that cannot be done on this occasion, all we can do is to follow on as best we can and continue, as occasion permits, to talk to a sympathetic audience of what is owed to Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Honourable senators, the only thing that keeps me from singing is the fear of eggs and bricks. I suggest that the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) should demonstrate a little less humility and sing it himself. He may have been a choir boy.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 23, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 23, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

BIRTH OF A PRINCE—ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

Resolved: That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the ...Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our congratulations to Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the birth of a Prince, and to assure Your Majesty that this happy event affords the greatest joy and satisfaction to your faithful Members of the ...House of Commons of Canada.

Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house has passed an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen, expressing congratulations on the occasion of the birth of a Prince and requesting Their Honours to unite with this house in the said Address.

Attest

LÉON J. RAYMOND
Clerk of the House of Commons

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald):

That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Address by filling up the blank spaces left therein with the words "Senate and".

Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words with respect to this matter. In the first place I would point out that the procedure being adopted is that outlined in Bourinot's very valuable work, at page 261. I would point out also that on the insertion of the words "Senate and" the Address becomes a joint Address of both Houses of Parliament.

I am pleased indeed to present this motion to this honourable house at this time and I feel confident that it will receive your cordial and unanimous support without any urging on my part.

This motion is, of course, presented in consequence of the very happy event which took place last Friday, something which had not happened for more than one hundred years, namely, the birth of a prince to a reigning sovereign.

By passing this motion we join with the House of Commons in a humble address to Her Majesty, congratulating Her Majesty and Prince Philip on the birth of a prince, and expressing on behalf of the Senate and the Commons that devotion and attachment which our Queen is so well entitled to receive.

Honourable senators, I am, as I am sure all of us are, wholeheartedly in favour of this joint Address, and wish to have it fittingly engrossed and transmitted to Her Majesty as quickly as possible. After the motion has passed I shall submit some other motions with a view to having the Address transmitted as quickly as possible to our gracious Queen.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I feel that I am very fortunate in that it falls to my lot to second and to express on behalf of those who form Her Majesty's Opposition in this house our wholehearted support of this motion. Millions of people throughout the world, and especially the millions who make up the commonwealth, are taking today about the happy home life of the royal family composed of our beloved Queen, the Prince Consort, Prince Charles and Princess Anne, and now enlarged by the birth of another prince.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The strongest links which bind together the far-flung realms and territories of our commonwealth are similar happy homes in many varied climes which during the past few weeks have been united in a very special way with the home of our gracious Queen.

I do not think I could do better, honourable senators, on the occasion of the birth of Her Majesty's third child, than to quote, with a few necessary alterations, from the speech made by the Right Honourable Winston Churchill in 1948 on the occasion of the birth of Her Majesty's first child, who is now the Prince of Wales. At that time Mr. Churchill —as he then was—said:

Our ancient monarchy renders inestimable service to our country and to the Commonwealth of Nations. Above the ebb and flow of party strife, the rise and fall of ministries and individuals, the changes of public opinion or public fortune, the British monarchy presides, ancient, calm and supreme within its functions over all the treasures that have been saved from the past and of the glories we write in the annals of our country.

He continued:

Our thoughts go out in a special way at this time to the mother and to the father. I have no doubt that the little prince will be brought up in all those traditions of constitutional government which make the British monarchy at once the most ancient and most secure in the world.

He concluded with these words:

I hope that among the principles which will be instilled into him will be the truth that the sovereign is never so great as when the people are free.

Honourable senators, we rejoice with the Queen, Prince Philip and their family, and may I, in the words which were used by the minister at St. Andrew's Church on Sunday last, express the wish that the new baby will be a comfort to his parents and a help to his people all the days of his life.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, allow me to add a few words in French to say how happy we from Quebec—that important part of the Canadian people—feel over this event.

We pay our respects to our Queen because to us she is the symbol of dignity, and an example of grandeur for all mothers in the commonwealth. Long live the new prince! Long live the Queen!

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I now move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald):

That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that house that the Senate do agree to the Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince, and have inserted in the blank spaces therein the words "Senate and".

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald):

That the following Address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General, namely:—

To His Excellency Major-General Georges Philias Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-chief of Canada:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Senate ... of Canada, in Parliament assembled, have agreed to an Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations to Her Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip on the birth of a Prince, and respectfully request that Your Excellency will be pleased to transmit the said Address to Her Majesty the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald):

That the Honourable the Speaker do sign the said address to His Excellency the Governor General on behalf of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered, That the Clerk do go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that the Senate have passed an Address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the Joint Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince, and requesting the House of Commons to unite with this House in the said Address.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance on Co-operative Credit Societies for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter 70, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance on small loan companies and money-lenders for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter 70, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Exchange of correspondence between United States and Canadian officials concerning pilotage on the Great Lakes, dated February 19, 1960. (English text).

PILOTAGE ON GREAT LAKES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether the correspondence concerning pilotage on the Great Lakes, which he has just tabled, is in accordance with the terms of the Canada Shipping Bill which was passed by this house last session and allowed to remain undecided on the Order Paper of the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I believe the correspondence is similar to the bill, but I received the documents only a moment ago and have not had time to digest them. If it would satisfy the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) I would ask, with leave of the Senate, that this exchange of correspondence be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard. If this is done honourable senators will have a full opportunity to examine the correspondence in detail and ascertain whether it complies with what we in this house tried to do last session when we passed the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

With leave, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), that the exchange of correspondence between United States and Canadian officials concerning pilotage on the Great Lakes, dated February 19, 1960, be printed as an Appendxi to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Arising out of that reply, I wonder if the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) can tell us if there is any likelihood that the bill, which we considered in such detail and so extensively last session, will come back to us in the current session as a result of subsequent negotiations between this Government and that of the United States?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I shall have to find out about that and inform honourable senators later on.

Motion agreed to.

For text of correspondence see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 212-13.

PRIVATE BILLS

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF CANADA—FIRST READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson presented Bill S-19, to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris presented Bill S-20, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, may I have your permission to say something about this bill? Its purpose is to enable the British Columbia Telephone Company to acquire the shares and to become a shareholder of any company or companies having objects in whole or in part similar to the objects of the British Columbia Telephone Company.

I wish to speak to two matters, and I ask for your consideration. One concerns the merits of this bill. Of course, I would not presume to ask any honourable senator to deal with its merits except in so far as he believes them to be in the interests of the country. I am sure that a bill of this nature, the only result of which would be to make the telephone service of British Columbia more effective in that province, will meet with the approval of this house. It is similar to legislation that has been in existence for some time as far as the Bell Telephone Company is concerned. That is all I will presume to say on the merits at this time.

However, I am asking for the indulgence of the Senate. I am not sure, but I think that during the long period that I have been a member of this house I have never before asked for the indulgence of the Senate. I am interested in this bill, and after I have moved the second reading I want to elaborate a little bit on it. Also I should like to be present when the bill is before the committee. I have to go back to Vancouver on Friday, so I am asking the indulgence of the house to have the second reading take place tomorrow and consideration in the committee on Thursday. I think the president of the company, or the vice-president and comptroller, should appear before the committee. If I am given this indulgence I will wire the president of the company to be here on Thursday, but if any honourable senator feels that the indulgence should not be granted I would like him to speak now, or for ever hold his peace.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand the honourable senator's request is that the bill be presented for second reading tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is right. I am asking that the bill, with consent of this house, be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

I am assured that the bill will be distributed in the morning. However, as it contains only one paragraph I will read it now:

1. Chapter 66 of the statutes of 1916—

that is the British Columbia Telephone Company Act

—is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 9 thereof, the following section:—

"9A. The company shall have power to purchase or otherwise acquire the shares, and become a shareholder, of any company or companies having objects in whole or in part similar to the objects of the company: Provided that no agreement therefor shall take effect until it has been submitted to and approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. The company shall also have power to allot and issue to the shareholders or any one or more of them of any such company or companies, shares either ordinary or preference, or both, in the capital stock of the company in whole or in part in payment of or in exchange for the shares of any such company or companies, and to so allot and issue such shares as fully paid up or as partly paid up as may be agreed upon between the Company and the holders of such shares."

That is all that is involved. I propose to speak in some detail on the second reading tomorrow, if I am permitted to do so, or the following day, and I am sure that honourable senators will not need any further time in order to be able to do justice to the bill in expressing themselves either in support of or against it. That is the reason why I am asking for this indulgence.

With leave, I now move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

EASTERN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor presented Bill S-21, respecting Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Isnor moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved, with leave, that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW CANADA'S ROLE —DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, it is understandable that in this house there should be general and continuing interest in the subject of Canada's relationship with other countries of the world. For one thing, in the Senate there sit many persons who have come here directly from the other place, where, to my knowledge, some of them were dedicated students of foreign affairs. But more especially we have here people of more mature years who have had greater opportunity than younger men to contemplate the broad problems involved in our external relations.

Furthermore, I think it to be our common belief that honourable senators should have opportunities to meet with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other officials of his department and, indeed, with other ministers whose work may touch upon the subject of external relations, and thus keep abreast at first hand of the events in the international sphere in which Canada is a participant.

Also, by reason of the mature experience of so many honourable senators in this field, it seems to me that we should not merely desire to listen to what is being said by others in these matters. On the contrary, I am sure that this house can make a definite contribution towards the thinking on the various problems in the broad field of international relations.

Indeed, I think it has been customary that not only should the Standing Committee on External Relations have the function of examining bills that come before this house respecting our external relationships; it should also take a positive part in making the influence of this body felt in these relationships.

This motion, therefore, besides having the stated effect of authorizing the Standing Committee on External Relations to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, may also serve as an opportunity for honourable senators to make themselves heard in this house with regard to these problems.

I think one can say with certainty that in so far as Canada is growing and developing in strength and power at a faster pace than most countries of the world, it seems evident that as the years go by this country will require to take a more and more active part in the consideration of international questions and their settlement. This fact alone may give added interest to the subject-matter of this resolution. I hope honourable senators will take advantage of it and let the house hear their views in respect of Canada's role in international affairs.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the motion is adopted I would like to advance a suggestion which I made when I spoke on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Honourable senators will have observed that the motion authorizes a review of the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It will be recalled that I pointed out that at the last session of the General Assembly of the United Nations the Senate had a single representative there and for only part of the time. We had a most capable representative, one of whom the members of this house could be proud, the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette). Unfortunately he could not stay throughout the session. When he left, his place was taken by another distinguished and capable member of this house, the honourable gentleman from Shawinigan (Hon. Mr. Méthot). Unfortunately again, this honourable gentleman also could not remain for the balance of the session, and his place was taken, not by another senator, but by a member of the House of Commons. I do not even know who he was. He may have represented the Senate well, but my point is that a member of the Senate should have been delegated. I will even go so far as to say that if there was no one available from among the Government supporters in the Senate, then surely someone could have been appointed from the Opposition side of this house. After all, in this chamber we are not very strict about supporting one side or the other. In any event, this house was not represented at the latter part of the sittings of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

I am going to renew my appeal to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that representations be made to the Government, and especially the new Secretary of State for External Affairs. He is a man well known to all of us. He is reasonable, as was his predecessor, but the latter had not been in Parliament long and probably was not as familiar with the workings of Parliament as is the present minister. I do feel that representations should be made by His Honour the Speaker and the Leader of the Government that at the next sitting of the General Assembly of the United Nations at least two members of the Senate be appointed delegates, one of them from the Opposition side of this house.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In effect the protest of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has already been registered, and I hope for better results next time. I do not suppose the honourable senator has ever been overlooked in a matter like this, but I would point out that this is not the first such occasion on which the Leader of the Government has not been consulted in the way he would have liked.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, I did not know this matter was coming up today. I will therefore move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-144, for the relief of Shirley Loraine Knodell Burke.

Bill SD-145, for the relief of Rene Lassonde.

Bill SD-146, for the relief of John Pastor.

Bill SD-147, for the relief of Margaret Dunn Hepburn Sanderson.

Bill SD-148, for the relief of Maurice Sykes Ward.

Bill SD-149, for the relief of Clark Alvin Graham.

Bill SD-150, for the relief of Noeleen Natalie Adams Lamond.

Bill SD-151, for the relief of Harry Gillman.

Bill SD-152, for the relief of John Philip Bowers.

Bill SD-153, for the relief of Carl August Christensen.

Bill SD-154, for the relief of Barbara Joan Marsh Wolfe.

Bill SD-155, for the relief of Barbara Ann Tuppen McIntosh.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: On division. Honourable senators, with regard to these bills, may I ask the honourable chairman why the numbers of the reports do not correspond to the numbers of the bills? The present system makes a study of the bills much more difficult. For instance, on the report No. 153 we have Bill SD-144. To put it another way, looking at the Orders of the Day, Order No. 1 shows Bill SD-144, while the number on the report is not 144, but 153. The second bill in the order for third reading is numbered SD-145, while the number on the corresponding report is 154. The third one is numbered SD-146, while the report is 155, and so on. I will ask the honourable gentleman if he will be kind enough to explain why the figures do not correspond to each other.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I did not have notice of the question, and perhaps it is a little difficult to give a satisfactory explanation. The reports are numbered not with reference to the bills but in order as they are presented. Later on the reports are considered by this house, and, if adopted, a bill based upon each of them is presented. The number of a bill has no particular reference to the number of the report; rather each bill is given a number in the order of its presentation. I am not sure that it is possible to change that arrangement. It might be of some advantage to have a reference on the bills themselves to the reports on which they are based; that could be done if it would be of any real service to the senators who are looking them over. If anyone desires us to do that I am sure we would be prepared to accommodate him. Offhand, I do not see how we could make the number of the bill coincide with the number of the report: they are two entirely different things, they come at different times and so in different order. However, I will look into the matter and see if I can accommodate my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I thank the honourable gentleman. It might not be difficult to do what he suggests if we had not three sets of bills. We have "C" bills that come from the House of Commons, we have "S" bills from the Senate but not relating to divorce, and the "SD" bills which are Senate divorce bills. As there is a special category of bills pertaining to divorce, it would be much easier to have corresponding numbers for the reports and for the bills than it would be if we had only one category of bills in the Senate. We have on the Order Paper bills bearing certain numbers, and we have those bills on our file, but there is nothing to indicate the reports on which they are based. An indication could be given by mentioning both numbers, the number of the bill and the number of the report, and then there would be no difficulty.

There is the additional difficulty that we receive them in haphazard numbers. I hope that I make myself clear. Instead of having 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and so on we have, say, 1, 5 and 20, and then we have other bills that come in between. The numbering is not consecutive, and it takes a lot of work; it takes the time of the stenographer to put the whole thing in order, when it should be presented to us in a logical manner. I do not mention the names of the parties, for I am interested only in the practice. The practice has been changed and amendments have been made to the rules of the Divorce Committee, but they are made when the honourable members are hearing the cases, and we who are not present know nothing about the matter. The members of the committee know that a divorce case is between a certain husband and wife. But the rest of us have only the names of the parties. Those names pass very quickly in front of us, with the result that we know nothing about them; and it requires weeks of work in order to know what case has been dealt with before the Senate when a bill is passed. They are processed fast. And we are not content to pass one bill at a time; we pass a bunch of bills at a time, and we do not know any more about a number of bills together than we know about each one in particular.

Therefore it would be a great victory over ignorance to know something about these bills. To achieve this we would have to take the bills separately and catalogue them one after the other, with supplementary numbers for the bills and for the reports.

The report must come necessarily after the bill because it is the bill that is referred to the committee after having been read.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is the petition that is referred to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Does the petition have a number or is it without a number?

I understand that the petition comes to the house. The Divorce Committee cannot examine any petition unless it is ordered to do so by the Senate. Does the number of the petition correspond to the number of the report? They at least must correspond with each other, it would seem, or there would be more confusion.

I hope honourable senators understand what I am trying to explain. What creates some embarrassment is that the numbers on the reports and on the bills are not the same and there is no reason for that. When the petition comes before us it has no number, and must be filed with the name of the individual, but that does not help us. In the keeping of files it is essential that the numbers correspond with each other.

I would like to have the other side of the picture. It may be different from what I say it is. All I want to do as a member of the Senate is to understand what is going on in this chamber, and with the present system in divorce proceedings it is impossible to understand anything or to answer any question. The members of the Divorce Committee do their work conscientiously, but what do the other senators know about the bills? We know nothing, and yet we pass them just the same. I find it revolting that the Senate passes legislation without being properly informed about it. Mark you, honourable colleagues, I say that not at all by way of criticism of honourable senators who do their duty on the committee; but this is a system which is functioning wrongly, and there is nobody in this chamber who can justify the Senate for passing legislation when we know nothing about it.

In the first place all I ask for is information so that we will know what is being done, not for purposes of criticism, but just to be informed and to be in a position to answer the press, or anyone who asks about this kind of work that is done by the Senate, a kind of work which is different from all other work, which is studied deeply and conscientiously by all. It is a particular work which deserves great attention.

I have expounded my opinion about it and I hope to be enlightened by those who know more than I do. But at the present time at least three-quarters of the members of the Senate know nothing about the divorce legislation that passes like a cinema before our eyes. We see just the titles of the bills. We must pass 10 or 20 or 30 bills at a time, otherwise we would be considered narrow-minded and not aware of our duty, which is to pass this legislation with closed eyes!

I do not feel like reading all those reports, but if I want to read one for my own or someone else's information, I would hope to be able to single it out from the others and be posted on it.

That is all I have to say, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have already given the honourable senator my assurance that I will look into this matter and see if we can make the work of matching the bills with the reports a little easier for him. But I see no reason for the heat with which the matter is brought up. Every bill and every petition and every report has the name of the petitioner clearly indicated upon it and they run in a general way in succession—the early petitions are the early bills and so on. The matching up of the report with the bill by the name could be done in a very few minutes.

My friend complains that he knows nothing about the reports. Let me assure the house that I have never yet asked it to pass a report from the Standing Committee on Divorce unless the report was on the Clerk's table. Those that were presented today and set down for consideration at the next sitting were on the table when I made the motion. Any senator who wishes to look at any of them may do so right now or at any other time.

To say that it is an impossibility to follow the petitions, the reports and the bills is entirely wrong. It may be that we can make it a little easier for the honourable gentleman to match these reports and bills, but to say that honourable senators know nothing about this business and are passing bills with their eyes closed gives an absolutely wrong impression. It is impossible for the Divorce Committee to transfer knowledge of these bills to any particular senator. Every senator must get that knowledge for himself. My honourable friend said it would take weeks of work to follow these reports and bills, but let me say that it has taken weeks of work on the part of the committee to produce these reports. We sat five days a week during the last three weeks, and we are sitting now three days a week and will continue to do so for weeks to come. Of course, it is not easy to follow what the committee does, but I know of no way whereby we can simplify it. I cannot give my honourable friend a pill to swallow which would enable him to understand all this complicated and difficult work.

Let me point out that the numbers of the bills and of the reports necessarily do not correspond. There are many reports that are not followed by bills. In every case in which the petition is withdrawn and fees remitted, no bill is presented. There are reports of the committee with respect to rules which we adopt from time to time, and of course no bills are necessary in those instances. So the order of the reports necessarily does not coincide with the order of the bills.

It may be that on every bill when it is presented we could note the number of the report upon which the bill is based. I will consider that suggestion.

I have been chairman of the Divorce Committee now for more than six years, and in that time this house has accorded me and my committee the honour, the distinction, of passing every report we have placed before the house. Every report, without exception, has been passed. We as a committee feel our responsibility in making reports which are so favourably received by our fellow senators and we are conscious of the confidence the house places in us. Of course, there is no attempt to conceal anything; the work and proceedings of the committee are an open book.

Any honourable senator has but to look at any report which I lay on the table and he will find the complete proceedings and even the very wording of the evidence upon which we have based our recommendation. It is there for everyone to read. The proceedings, the report and the evidence are all printed and sent to every senator and every member of the House of Commons. My honourable friend receives those printed reports and, if he has the industry to do so, he may read them from cover to cover.

Hon. Gustave Monette: Honourable senators, may I put a question to the chairman of the committee?

I note on the Orders of the Day for today the third reading of, for instance, Bill SD-144, an act for the relief of So-and-so. I also note on page 200 of No. 17 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of this house that Bill SD-144, an act for the relief of So-and-so, was given second reading on Thursday, February 18. If I am not mistaken, Bill SD-144 in each instance pertains to the same person. I take it, therefore, that that bill carries the same number, SD-144, throughout its second and third reading stages?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Monette: And I assume that when the bill was first presented to the house it bore the same number, SD-144.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is correct. At the time of first reading the bill is given its number.

Hon. Mr. Monette: So, am I to understand that from the first reading of a bill until it is given third reading and passed by this house it bears the same number?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Monette: So anyone who wishes to see what has happened with respect to a divorce bill may follow its progress by reference to a specific number.

The honourable chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has said that the report of the committee may not always carry the number that is applied to the corresponding bill. As has been said, it may be possible to have the number of the report which deals with the evidence of investigation and so on related to the bill which follows the report. If that were done one could easily trace the course of a particular divorce petition and the bill based thereon through their various stages.

Speaking for myself, I say very humbly that I am satisfied with the explanation that has been given. Moreover, for the moment I cannot participate in the very great work of the committee, and my feeling in that regard is respected by this house. I am not, therefore, inclined to criticize the work of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, may I point out to the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette) that the bill to which he refers as an example, Bill SD-144, was given first reading on February 17, and that it bears the same number on first reading as it does on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Monette: And that bill refers to the same person?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The same person.

Hon. Mr. Monette: May I repeat that I am fully satisfied, and do not intend to criticize my honourable friends who have the courage to do the tiring work of the Divorce Committee and do it so well.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, on a point of order, my honourable friend who has just spoken did not understand the point I made. I agree with him that a bill bears the same number throughout its first, second and third readings. My point was that the number of the report is not the same as that of the bill which follows it, and that makes for difficulty if we have to look up certain bills during the week-ends when the office of the Clerk of the Committee is closed.

I do not want my honourable friend to impute a motive to me. I have a high regard for the committee staff and other public servants who serve the committee, as I have for the senators who sit on the committee.

My point was that I wanted the numbers on the reports to relate to the numbers on the respective bills. Let me say, I never fail to give due praise to the senators who do the painstaking work of the Divorce Committee.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 18, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, after offering my best wishes to our Queen, I feel it is my duty to extend my most respectful greetings to our Governor General, Mr. Vanier, whose whole life has been a model of dignity and courage. Both he and his worthy wife are living symbols of the nobility of character we admire.

May I express in the same tribute my congratulations and good wishes to the mover and seconder of the Address, to you, Mr. Speaker, to the Leader of the Government, to the Leader of the Opposition as well as to our new senators.

It is sometimes claimed that compliments and congratulations mean nothing. I am rather inclined to believe, with Lacordaire, that, although "love" is only a word, it takes on new meaning with every repetition. Similarly, congratulations take on a new meaning every time they are expressed with sincerity.

The Speech from the Throne indicates that "Canada's general economic position has greatly improved during 1959". And it adds that "the prospects for 1960 are favourable". But despite these results and the forecasts for 1960, there are still some causes for surprise and amazement.

Our exports during 1959 reached $5,179.6 million, which is very nearly a record and quite an increase over 1958. On the other hand, our imports exceeded our exports by several hundred million dollars, our total imports being $5,634.7 million. It was especially with the United States that our trade deficit increased in 1959.

Moreover, the number of housing starts for municipalities with a population of 5,000 or more dropped by 7 per cent. This is probably due, in part, to increased construction prices and to the higher interest rate.

If we are to maintain our economic activity, we must do everything we can to promote construction, which supports the economic progress of the country better than any other industry. I fear that such will not be the case in 1960 and that construction may slow up considerably.

But there are some institutions which are still lending money without any help from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I mean the Quebec caisses populaires. In 1959, the Quebec caisses populaires, which are only small organizations, made loans on mortgages amounting to $83,786,000, as against $77,176,000 in 1958, and these figures do not cover all the loans made because a great deal more money was loaned to their members. The average interest rate charged by the caisses populaires is 6 per cent, including insurance in case of death.

During 1960, the Caisses populaires will probably not be in a position to lend as much because they also are finding that savings are not expanding as much as last year; nevertheless, they will still be able to give efficient help to the small wage earner.

From the monetary angle, we have during the last year witnessed extraordinary changes which leave us somewhat puzzled. On the one hand we have the high interest to be paid on loans today and, on the other, the scarcity of savings to be found in financial institutions.

In an address he gave last January in Winnipeg, the Governor of the Bank of Canada had this to say: "For the last five years, we have been living beyond our means." In other words, if we want to continue prospering and developing, let us live within our means.

Over the last ten years the value of goods and services produced has nearly doubled, going from $16,343 million in 1949, to $34,750 million in 1959.

True, at least half of such gain may be laid to price increases, but the fact remains that the volume of production has increased 50 per cent in 10 years, and this is particularly interesting when you consider that Canada's population showed an increase of only 27 per cent during the same period. I would also point out that, over the last ten years, the average real personal income has increased 20 per cent, from $950 to $1,150.

These developments could not be entirely financed by the savings of Canadians. We have had to import a great deal of capital, machinery and equipment. These last few years our capital investments represented 25 per cent of the gross national product, while in the United States such investments did not exceed 18 per cent of the gross national product.

According to the federal Bureau of Statistics, direct foreign investment has, in Canada, increased from $2,713 million in 1945 to $8,829 million in 1956; and foreign investment, through the purchase of Canadian shares and bonds, from $4,379 million to $6,727 million over the same period.

And if we go further back, we find that in 1930 capital invested in Canada totalled $7,614 million; in 1945, $7,092 million; and in 1956, $15,556 million. In 1957-58 we imported still more capital.

According to the Gordon Commission report, 68 per cent of the capital invested in the oil industry comes from abroad. Foreign capital accounts for 51 per cent of our chemical industries, 95 per cent of our automobile industry and 45 per cent of the pulp and paper industry.

It is claimed, moreover, that 60 per cent of the capital invested in our manufacturing industries is owned by non-residents.

We fully agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada when he claimed in Winnipeg, on January 18 last, that we were spending too much, that the rate of development of our personal savings is not in harmony with that of the economic development of the country and that we are importing too many consumer goods, all of which helps to tip the balance of our imports, as against our exports.

In expanding too fast, we have to borrow too much from abroad and all the profit on such capital leaves the country. We are also importing too heavily in equipment and consumer goods and are thus running a dangerous risk of throwing our economy out of balance, of losing gradually our economic autonomy, and, by the same token, of weakening the foundations of our political liberty.

I said that savings in our financial institutions had increased much less in 1959. In 1958 private savings in the banks had gone up more than $600 million but in 1959 the increase was only $56 million. This is certainly due, in large part, to the sales of bonds by the federal and provincial Governments, by municipalities and by large corporations. Depositors, instead of leaving their money in the banks at 2¾ per cent interest, prefer to take advantage of the higher interest rates on bonds.

I gave certain figures. May I offer a few more. I said chartered banks in 1958 had increased their savings by more than $600 million. Let us now look at the year 1959. During the first six months the chartered banks saw their savings increase slightly more than $357 million, but during the last six months, there was a decrease of more than $301 million, which means a surplus of a little more than $56 million.

There is something that surprises me. It is claimed that figures can be juggled so as to mean anything you want them to. I read in the Statistical Review of Canada, issued on February 9, 1960, that:

> Chartered bank loans, at the end of November, totalled $6,261 million, which is an increase of nearly 18 per cent over the $5,325 million of November 1958.

It is often said that the banks are no longer lending money, but these figures would seem to disprove this contention.

True economic progress cannot be maintained unless it is based on monetary stability. That means that we must prevent inflation in any form. It would also seem that consumer credit is much too extensive. One of the reasons for this is the extravagant publicity by which our people are led to believe that the most futile things are absolutely necessary; as their needs expand, the people go into debt. And they go into debt not only in order to purchase, but in order to borrow at fabulous interest rates, ranging from 24 to 36 per cent.

As Mr. A. S. Paradis, the president of the Quebec East caisse populaire, so aptly said at a recent meeting of the members of his organization: "Let us live within our means if we want to have the means to live". This should be the slogan of all well-thinking people.

In spite of high interest rates, people have become somewhat suspicious of the future particularly as concerns long-term bonds. Short-term bonds sell rather quickly, but long-term ones are not so much in demand.

Our colleagues from the west often speak of the problems of the farmers in their part of the country. I should like to take this opportunity to examine the problem of eastern farmers, from Ontario to the Atlantic coast.

While western farmers are up against complicated economic difficulties, those in the east are often faced with a much more distressing situation.

Some economists contend that, with the increase in population throughout the world, in a number of years the earth's production will be insufficient to feed mankind. On the other hand, we in Canada have millions of bushels of unsold wheat, hundreds of thousands of cases of eggs and hundreds of thousands of cases of canned pork in stock. The situation is still more alarming in the United States. However, the Canadian farmers, and especially the farmers in eastern Canada, are in a difficult economic situation. When a report by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics claims that the cost of living is down, the data when analysed shows that only the price of agricultural products is down, while that of all other commodities is going up.

Why do we have such large surpluses of certain products? Is it because large commercial or industrial businesses have tried to take the farmer's place and in so doing have deprived him of a fair standard of living? Rural people leave the farm. Farmers' sons are no longer interested in living in the country and move to the cities. If some day the land is no longer capable of feeding mankind, it will not be because it is no longer productive, but indeed because it has been abandoned.

Under present conditions farmers' sons are no longer interested in staying on the farm. Why, they ask, should we work ten, fifteen or eighteen hours a day on the farm while in the city people are working eight hours a day, five days per week. Indeed they may be working only six hours a day soon. In addition, salaries are higher and living conditions are better. Why should we remain on the land, always hard up, with no hope of ever making both ends meet? Farming is dying out for lack of workers.

According to the latest statistics published on February 8, 1960, the index of prices obtained by farmers for their products last December was 231.4, a decrease of 2.5 compared to the revised figure for November 1959. That index also represents a 6.4 decrease compared to the December 1958 figure of 237.8. That means that farm product prices are down 6.4 points in a year, while the farmer has seen the price of commodities that he has to purchase increase from 237.4 in January 1958 to 252.5 in August 1959, the latest figures that I was able to obtain. Now, adding that 15.1 increase in the cost of goods that the farmer has to buy to 6.4 decrease in the selling price of his products during 1959 you get a difference of 21.5 to the farmer's disadvantage. The situation is becoming very serious and must be taken care of.

Canada is not the only country where farmers are faced with hardship. Our neighbours to the south also have to contend with similar difficulties. An investigation carried out by the American Agricultural Marketing Service has shown that the cost of marketing agricultural products in the United States went up from $9 billion to $36 billion between 1940 and 1958, an increase of 400 per cent in 18 years. It was also shown by the same investigation that only 40 per cent of the consumer's dollar is retained by the farmer, while 60 per cent is absorbed by overhead or marketing costs.

The problem is no different in Canada. According to the report of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads in food products, published in September 1959—the figures shown in that report are for 1957 and earlier; it is unfortunate that the data for 1958 was unavailable as the differences would have been much greater—in 1957 the Canadian farmers received:

53.9 per cent of the retail price of beef;

59.7 per cent of the retail price of pork;

77.1 per cent of the retail price of butter. That percentage is much higher than those of the other agricultural products because of the support price of $0.64 a pound on butter.

70 per cent of the retail price of Grade A eggs;

37.5 per cent of the retail price of broilers;

53.5 per cent of the retail price of fluid milk;

41.1 per cent of the retail price of evaporated whole milk;

34.2 per cent of the retail price of wheat flour;

41.6 per cent of the retail price of potatoes;

18.3 per cent of the retail price of canned tomatoes;

25.4 per cent of the retail price of fresh apples;

44.8 per cent of the retail price of sugar beets;

20.3 per cent of the retail price of canned peas;

And the report adds:

It is claimed that the sale boosting services bring about price reductions, attract customers, increase the volume of business of an enterprise, reduce the costs per unit handled and finally make it possible to cut the prices down. The evidence submitted in Part IV of the report shows that during the last decade, the increase in the volume of food consumed in Canada just about kept pace with the increase in our population. Consequently, it is obvious that the efforts of the foodstuffs industry—wholesale and retail processing plants—did not have much of an effect on the volume of per capita consumption of goods. It can rightly be expected that any rise in food consumption in Canada during the next ten years will follow the increase in our population, from a quantitative point of view. What is the use, then, of the numerous efforts made to push the sale of food products?

The report states that the average prices of 6 out of 10 items mentioned remained stable and that there was a slight increase in 1958; however, the farmer's share kept on decreasing in the case of pork, fluid milk, evaporated whole milk and processed cheese. If we look at the table included in that report and which covers the period from 1949 to 1957, we note that the retail prices paid to our farmers in general for agricultural products have a tendency to go down.

We feel that one of the main causes of the reduction in the prices paid to farmers is the cost of the competition between dealers in food products. The sale boosting methods used by those corporations are extremely costly and it is the farmers, first, and then the consumers who have to foot the bill.

It is said in that report that:

From 1949 to 1958 agricultural prices, that is the prices of primary products sold to the food industries, remained fairly stable but the retail price index of food products increased by 20 per cent. The value at the farm as compared to the retail value went down from 59 per cent to 44 per cent. In our analysis of sale costs (Part IV, Volume 11), we estimate that the prices of goods and services used in the sale of food products went up 43 per cent and that the marketing services increased by 28 per cent per food product unit.

We feel that the constant rise in the prices charged to the consumers should be a cause of concern. If that is the case, we must also take into account the elements tied in with the prices of goods, including the general cost increases and the nature of the additional services paid by the consumers. We have mentioned that competition in the field of services is considered as important. In our opinion, if a constant rise of the general level of retail prices is to be prevented, it is absolutely necessary for those who sell goods to become more and more interested in finding means of cutting down prices. By that, we mean that less importance should be given to competition in the field of services inasmuch as those services absorb price reductions.

I am not ready to say that everything that is contained in the report is correct and has been proved; there are certainly mistakes and erroneous judgments, because no human being is omniscient; one can make mistakes in certain fields because one has been ill-informed. An effort has been made, however; facts have been brought to our attention. It is for us to draw conclusions. I have been struck and troubled by one sentence though: it is said on page 66 that there is no solution to the farmers' problem. I have always thought that man could find solutions for problems created by his fellow-man, providing efforts are made to find such solutions. It is therefore, up to us to find a solution to that problem. Let us first examine the causes.

The farmer is an individualist. He lives on his farm as a king in his castle and he is little inclined to join with his neighbour in order that together they may do what they cannot do alone. It is hard for him to believe in co-operation. It is true that in certain localities in the east as in the west we have fine co-operatives. In my province of Quebec we have formed very fine ones. Unfortunately a small minority can sometimes destroy the wonderful work of a co-operative. However, we have a good reason to hope that the farmer will see in co-operation one of his best chances of success.

The Special Committee on Land Use in Canada—a committee which has been active in the Senate for the last three years—will study this problem and attempt to find a solution. Too many farmers in Quebec and in the Maritimes own small farms of low fertility. It would be more profitable if such lands were allowed to revert to forests. It may be that some people should abandon their present farms, to settle where the land can be cultivated more profitably and with better results. In certain areas such a policy would be hard to apply, but it may be the only alternative we have to achieve something in that field. In so doing, we would be in a position to place farming on a more practical basis and mechanize farm work; then we would be able to improve production and lower costs. Alone on his farm, the farmer cannot claim any longer that he can compete with the larger agricultural undertakings. I just singled out something that is more apt to kill farming than all other causes: it is the fact that today those big corporations want to organize what is called integrated agriculture. The mere thought of it is frightening. The feed man sells the farmer the feed he needs. He pays the latter so much per hog or per hundred in the case of chickens to look after the rearing of the stock. When the time comes for selling, it is very often the same organization that buys, with the result that prices get lower. The feed man made his profit when he sold his goods and, when he buys poultry or pork at a lower price, he is protected. The farmer gets crumbs and he remains dependent upon those organizations. That is why I declare that one way to break away from that kind of bondage is to resort to the co-operative formula.

There is a thing that always struck me: when there was a reduction in the prices of agricultural products—eggs, beef, pork, etc.—such as the one that took place in recent years, did you benefit from this decline in prices when you bought those products at the grocery store? Very little. The operating costs of those large chain stores are so high that they cannot cut their prices and the consumers are so exacting that they cannot reduce the sale prices. Gift stamps must be paid for, because they are not free. Nevertheless, when some grocers refuse to use them, buyers go to the stores where they can get them. Stores cannot give free of charge goods that are fairly expensive. It is not only the organization that is to blame, but the consumer too. As a result, the farmer gets less for his products and becomes discouraged; and the consumer, unfortunately, falls into the trap. It would seem that people no longer stop to think, that they have no time left to reason things out.

If we want to give efficient assistance to the farmer, we must help him to produce economically, either by enlarging his farm or improving it, or by giving him access to productive lands. But where farms can be improved, one way to help the farmer is to lend him money at a reduced rate of interest. There are farmers who could improve the quality of their land, but who cannot pay 6 or 6½ per cent interest. They are hampered from the start. Then, they get discouraged and often lose confidence in themselves. Let us help them to become better producers by encouraging them at the beginning. The agricultural price support pattern which was adopted by Canada and the United States has benefited large corporations; industrialists have even built huge chicken houses and piggeries, but individual farmers cannot afford such costly equipment. How can they take advantage of the Agricultural Prices Support Act in the same way as those large organizations which could be described as financial organizations and which have created surpluses of certain agricultural products on the American markets as well as on ours?

The federal Government has replaced its price support formula by deficiency payments. What will be the results? I cannot say. Will the farmers experience once more a reduction in the prices of their products? Time will tell. However, one thing is certain: a new production system must be developed, and where land cannot be farmed economically it must be returned to the forest. Where the soil is good for farming, its productivity should be increased if possible.

By resorting to co-operative methods, establishing adequate agricultural credit and devising a system of land classification, I believe that it would be possible to help effectively our farmers. Would it not be appropriate for our Senate committee to deal in earnest with this problem, to set determinedly to work and, instead of merely receiving reports from every part of Canada, to take whatever steps are necessary to become well acquainted with the whole situation? Let the committee roam about, let it go to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, and then to western Canada; let it see for itself what is going on, what is being done or what should be done, let it visit the farmers at home. Country people do not all possess the education of university economists, but they have a sound philosophy, good horse sense, they are in a position to give advice and to show that the farming problem can be solved. Possibly, for a university professor or a city business man this problem may seem difficult but, I repeat, as it is a human problem it can be solved by humans. This may take years, but let us get to work in real earnest and we shall succeed.

Before concluding my remarks on agriculture, I would like to say a word about the reference to the maple sugar industry in the Stewart report. I believe that this is a peculiar problem and I do not want to blame the investigators or the secretary, but I feel that if people had been further consulted there would not have been erroneous statements made. For instance, it is erroneously claimed that in the province of Quebec the maple syrup is not as carefully prepared as elsewhere, that quality is lower because the product does not undergo preliminary refining on a scale comparable to that in the other provinces. Why, Ontario produces only an average of 3,500,000 pounds of syrup yearly compared with 25 to 30 million pounds in Quebec! I wonder what was the basis for such a statement. Indeed in Quebec in the last 20 years 95 per cent of rusty or hard-to-clean sap pails have been replaced by aluminum buckets. Today, upon entering a sugar bush after the maple trees have been tapped and the sap pails hung, we have the impression that the pails are silver plated. A great number of sugar producers have replaced their old rusted spiles by aluminum ones. As a result, maple syrup produced in Quebec does not contain any lead and it is much clearer than it was in the past. Moreover, Quebec is the only province where grading of maple products is compulsory; indeed, grading is not in force in the other provinces. All the blame must not be laid on the commissioners and on the secretary, however, but they arrived at conclusions on a subject with which they were not familiar. They should have consulted those who knew before passing judgment.

To conclude my remarks about this farm problem, I admit that the problem is a difficult one, but it is not insoluble, and the more difficult it is the harder we must work in order to find a solution. Let our Senate committee strive more earnestly than ever and, thanks to the knowledge of some people and the experience of others, it will find a solution for the greater benefit of our farmers. Tomorrow perhaps we may set an example for our neighbours and, with better methods, we may achieve a more rational, more economic organization. The land will yield more products and those who have predicted that food will be insufficient to feed the people of the earth a hundred years from now will have merely repeated Malthus's error. There will be plenty of more wholesome and more evenly distributed food. Our country will not be a dying land, but a country where wheat grows in the living land.

At present, the unrestrained competition of Far Eastern countries arouses some fears. We should, we are told, act with more common sense, stop wasting, and stop weakening our material and spiritual resources. But apparently that cannot be done. We cannot ask a child to do without a lollypop or an adult to refrain from buying a costly rug for his home when he can buy one at a lower price and more in keeping with his means; those things are unthinkable because in a democratic country it seems we have the right to do what we please, the freedom to commit all sorts of foolish things that lead to ruin. That, it seems, is modern psychology: we must not prevent children or adults from asserting themselves, and how! In the United States people are showing some concern over such behaviour; some people have grave apprehensions about the future of democracy. Take, for instance, the great columnist Walter Lippmann, the great economist John Kenneth Galbraith, whose opinions are shared by educators and many serious-minded citizens. According to their theory, which is sound, we Americans and Canadians are becoming too soft, we are too fond of luxuries, we want to own the biggest and flashiest cars, the costliest houses, such as split-levels, etc.; we may have reached the point where we are almost worshipping material comforts. On the other hand, in Russia people live frugally, enormous efforts and money are being devoted to educate the nation; they are building industries, and, reckoning on our moral and physical decay, Mr. Khrushchev makes it a point to brag that within ten years Russian economy will have outstripped the American economy.

To live reasonably does not mean that one must live miserably, much less in poverty, but to live in an honest sufficiency. An honest sufficiency helps to practise virtue, while luxury, extravagance and abuse are contrary to virtue which keeps one in a happy medium.

It has become difficult to live reasonably and to restrain one's wants, because of the "education" we have had over the last twenty-five, thirty or forty years and because of the fact that we can obtain nearly everything without much effort. Some people have never learned to discipline themselves or to live with moderation.

To this rule of common sense, which reasonable people preach and try to practise, it is objected that it is hardly possible in a democratic country. If that is so, I fear that democracy will not survive much longer. It may be claimed that such remarks only serve to scare people, that such forecasts will never materialize and that they can only interfere with our progress. We have nothing against progress; on the contrary, we want it to continue, provided it is for the good of humanity and not for its enslavement. What we want is that there should be moral progress corresponding to technical progress and that material prosperity should rest on the progress of moral and spiritual values. Indeed, the true progress and peace of nations can only rest on the essential values which nurture the soul and raise the individual's mind and heart. Technical progress will turn to humanity's disadvantage unless it contributes to the survival of moral and spiritual values.

I hoped that the speech I have just delivered would be not only heard but also understood by all the senators here, as I was under the impression that at the opening of this session the simultaneous translation system, as used in the other house, would be organized here. Unfortunately, it is not so.

Let us hope that in the near future we shall have a simultaneous translation system in this house.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne), debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

ALGOMA CENTRAL AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill S-12, respecting The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps I should offer a word of explanation of the one amendment which the report proposes in the bill.

This is a private bill of The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, which asks for certain special powers in relation to its internal organization, such as the holding of meetings of shareholders and so forth, slightly different from those which it would otherwise have under the general provisions of the Railway Act. The only amendment which the committee made was to specify that notice of meetings of shareholders should be given 20 days before the meeting instead of 10 days, as was suggested in the bill, 20 days being the standard period of notice provided for in the Railway Act.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, on behalf of Honourable Senator Leonard, that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 198)

Exchange of Correspondence, including Aide-Mémoire, between United States and Canadian Officials concerning pilotage on the Great Lakes, dated February 19, 1960.

AIDE-MEMOIRE

In discussions of Great Lakes pilotage between United States and Canadian officials following the receipt of the Canadian Aide-Memoire of September 11, 1959, the Canadian officials were informed of the provisions of a proposed draft bill on the subject which was prepared by representatives of interested agencies of the Government of the United States. The principal purposes of the proposed bill would be to establish certain pilotage requirements for the navigation of United States waters of Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River by vessels operating on ocean routes to and from Great Lakes, and to provide a basis for a regulated system of pilotage to meet those requirements.

Provision is made for co-ordination of this pilotage system with a Canadian system on the basis of reciprocal recognition of and equitable participation by United States and Canadian pilots in the pilotage of the vessels to which the bill would be applicable. These pilots would be registered by an appropriate agency of their respective countries, and vessels to which the bill is applicable would be required to have registered pilots in their service for the navigation of designated United States waters. It is the understanding of the United States Government that Canadian waters will also be designated in which the services of registered pilots will be required.

In undesignated waters of Great Lakes, the vessels to which the proposed bill would be applicable would be required to have on board either a registered pilot or an officer of their regular complement who would be qualified for the navigation of the undesignated waters and licensed either by United States Coast Guard or the appropriate agency of Canada.

As a result of the above-mentioned discussions, the Canadian representatives indicated that their Government would be prepared to recommend to Parliament that legislation be adopted permitting co-ordination on the above indicated basis, if United States enacted legislation along the lines of the proposed draft bill. It is the United States Government's understanding that provision would be made to restrict the registration of Canadian pilots to persons, other than members of the regular complement of a vessel, who hold a masters certificate or equivalent licence, unlimited as to tonnage, issued by the Department of Transport to authorize navigation of Great Lakes and pilotage services on routes specified therein.

The term "equivalent licence" as used in the proposed United States draft bill means a licence issued to a St. Lawrence River pilot to authorize the navigation of those portions of the river specified therein. In this connection Canadian officials explained that St. Lawrence River pilots are specially trained for pilotage in the districts for which they are licensed, and that they are not required to obtain a master's certificate, although some do hold such a certificate. Under the proposed co-ordinated arrangements, Canada would register the holder of a St. Lawrence River pilot's licence solely for pilotage service on that river.

The Canadian officials further indicated that the Canadian Government would include in any proposed legislation such provisions as might be considered necessary to authorize the Department of Transport to issue certificates qualifying for the navigation of the "open" (i.e. undesignated) waters of Great Lakes those officers of the regular complements of ocean vessels who meet the following requirements:

(1) Hold an appropriate certificate of competency as master, valid for voyages in any part of the world and issued or recognized by the country in which the ship is registered.

(2) Have the experience of at least two round trips, within the preceding two years, in the "open" or undesignated waters of Great Lakes where the vessel will be operating.

(3) Possess a working knowledge of Great Lakes rules of the road as evidenced by exam.

(4) Have proficiency in the English language, to be tested also by exam, sufficient to make effective use of the radiotelephone.

(5) Have knowledge of the practice of following separate upbound and downbound courses on Great Lakes, giving due regard to the suitability of such courses for deep draft vessels.

The substance of the proposed draft bill which was the subject of the above-mentioned discussions is now embodied in a bill introduced in the Senate as S 3019. The Government of the United States of America would appreciate being informed as to the accuracy and applicability of the foregoing understanding of the intentions of the Canadian Government with respect to S 3019.

The State Department,
Washington, D.C.,
February 19, 1960.

February 19, 1960

Mr. Ivan B. White,
Department of State,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. White,

The agreement of the Canadian Government which is transmitted concurrently herewith to the terms of the Aide-Mémoire in regard to the Bill on Great Lakes pilotage is subject to the following reservation. Section 9 (c) of the Bill does not fully meet the Canadian requirements in that lake vessels which occasionally operate through the St. Lawrence to the Maritime Provinces in the Canadian coastal trade are not covered. The Canadian Government considers that these vessels should be covered and understands that United States officials concerned with this matter are sympathetic to the Canadian position.

During discussions between the appropriate officials of our two governments, United States officials indicated that the position of such vessels could be protected under Section 3 (a) by not being designated pursuant to the Section.

We would appreciate receiving assurance that in the event S-3019 is enacted into law, the Department of State will recommend to the President that Canadian vessels operating primarily on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River which make occasional trips to the Canadian Maritime Provinces in the Canadian coastal trade be excluded from the designation of foreign vessels to be made by the President under Section 3 (a) of the said bill.

Yours sincerely,
S. F. Rae

Canadian Reply

Aide-Mémoire

An Aide-Mémoire presented to the Canadian Embassy in Washington by the Department of State on February 19 outlines the manner in which Canadian and United States legislation aimed at establishing certain pilotage requirements for the navigation of the waters of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River could be co-ordinated if the legislative proposals contained in a Bill known as S 3019 are approved by the United States Congress. In the event that that Bill does become law in the United States, it is the intention of the Canadian Government to submit to the Canadian Parliament legislative proposals which would effect just such a co-ordinated pilotage régime in the Great Lakes in the manner indicated in the United States Aide-Mémoire.

February 19, 1960

Mr. S. F. Rae, Minister,
Canadian Embassy,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Rae:

With reference to your letter of this date in which you request assurance that, in the event S 3019 is enacted into law, the Department of State will recommend to the President that Canadian vessels operating primarily on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River which make occasional trips to the Canadian Maritime Provinces in the Canadian coastal trade be excluded from the designation of foreign vessels under Section 3 (a) of the said Bill, I take pleasure in stating that the Department will make such a recommendation.

Sincerely yours,
Ivan B. White

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 24, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following report:

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for the year ended December 31, 1958, being Vol. I Abstract of Statement of Insurance Companies in Canada, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter 70, R.S. 1952.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONVENIENT CREDIT LIMITED—FIRST READING

Hon. Gustave Monette presented Bill S-22, to incorporate Convenient Credit Limited.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Monette moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN REASSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-13, to incorporate Canadian Reassurance Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with two amendments.

Amendments read by the Clerk Assistant:

1. Page 1, line 25: After "thereon." add the following:

"It may then transact all or any of the classes of insurance authorized by section 7 of this act."

2. Page 2, lines 3 and 4: Strike out clause 7 and substitute therefor the following:

"7. The company may undertake, transact and make contracts of insurance, including contracts of reinsurance, for all or any of the following classes of insurance:

(a) life insurance;
(b) personal accident insurance;
(c) sickness insurance."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, you will have noted from the reading of the report that two amendments were made. The second one is the important one. The first reference to the subject-matter occurred when the bill was being given second reading. Briefly, I may say that the purpose of this amendment is to put into the bill a specific authority or power to engage in the business of reinsurance rather than have the company rely only on the ancillary power to engage in reinsurance as provided for in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. In that statute, which is a governing statute for insurance companies, there is a provision that if you incorporate in accordance with the form which is contained in Schedule I of the act, by virtue of so doing you acquire certain ancillary powers, one of which is power to reinsure your risks and, in the language of the act, to reinsure risks of another company carrying on the same kind of business. The difficulty facing the sponsors of the bill was this: if you had a company such as this company which was going to engage in the business of reinsurance, even though it had power to write life insurance and personal accident and sickness insurance, could you say that at the time it reinsured a risk of a life company directly carrying on life business it was at that instant carrying on the same class of business as the life company? Some of us in the committee felt very strongly that we could not go that far. After the discussion had taken place I stated, as one of those taking this position, that if the sponsors of the bill still insisted they would like it to remain in the form in which it was presented, I for one would make no further objection. They then agreed that they would like to have an amendment in accordance with the point of view which had been expressed by myself and others.

The sole purpose of the amendment is to make absolutely certain that the company can carry on reinsurance business in the fields that are provided in a broader way as a special power, rather than in the narrower way which may be open to it as an ancillary power under the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICH REINSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-14, to incorporate Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with two amendments.

Amendments read by the Clerk Assistant:

1. Page 1, line 13: After "Canada," insert the following:—
"and, in French, La Munich, du Canada, Compagnie de Réassurance," 2. Page 2, line 4: After "insurance" insert the following:—
",including contracts of reinsurance,"

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that it be adopted now.

Honourable senators, perhaps it will suffice to give only a short explanation of the proposed amendments. The purpose of the second amendment is to provide the company with special power to engage in reinsurance, and the reasoning which applied to the amendment to Bill S-13 applies to this bill. The same motive impelled the committee to make the change, and the change was accepted by the sponsors of the bill.

The other change was made at the request of the sponsors of the bill so as to provide for the name of the company in French. The bill itself originally provided for the name in English only.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden, for Hon. Mr. Molson, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 218 to 236, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's first report.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their first report, as follows:

1. Your committee have in, obedience to the order of reference of February 9, 1960, considered the following report from the Civil Service Commission:—

"To the Honourable Members of the Senate
The Civil Service Commission has the honour—"

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the second report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their second report, as follows:

1. Your committee have, in obedience to the order of reference of February 9, 1960, considered the following report from the Civil Service Commission:

"To the Honourable Members of the Senate
The Civil Service Commission—"

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt presented the third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts make their third report, as follows:

Your committee recommend:—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

On the Notice of Inquiry by Hon. Mr. Pouliot:

That he will inquire of the Government:

1. Are there any correlative obligations and responsibilities to the Canadian Bill of Rights referred to in the Speech from the Throne of this session?
2. If so, what are they?

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, this inquiry has been standing on the Order Paper since February 3 and I am wondering when the Government will answer it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Some little time ago I informed honourable senators that every day we endeavour to obtain answers to questions on the Order Paper. I have not yet been able to get an answer to this inquiry of the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot). While I am on my feet I might say that the Government is at a loss to know exactly what the honourable gentleman means by his inquiry and I would be glad if he would elucidate it, if convenient.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I shall do so in due course.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not mean now. I would appreciate it if you would tell me privately afterwards just what information you require.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am always ready to oblige the honourable Leader of the Govermnment (Hon. Mr. Aseltine).

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, there are two motions standing in my name on the Order Paper, asking for the production of certain papers. In the House of Commons the practice was to ask a question and have it answered by the Government, and we used to make a motion for the production of papers. I do not intend to debate the motions standing in my name, but I would very much like to have the papers that are referred to in the motions made available. These motions are very clear and easy to understand. The same is true of my inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was not referring to the motions of the honourable gentleman when I asked him to elucidate. I was referring to his inquiry which to me is not intelligible.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It is, but the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) does not want to understand it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Donald Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, first of all may I join with those who have already complimented the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I do so with a great deal of pleasure. In the case of the honourable gentleman who moved the address, he and I are old friends from away back in House of Commons days. I particularly compliment him on his speech, which I read in Hansard, and I welcome him most heartily to this chamber.

An excellent speech was made also by the seconder, the honourable gentleman from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois) who, like the mover, has joined us this session. I trust that he will continue to be one who, as occasion permits, will join with the rest of us from Nova Scotia in pointing out the beauties of our native province.

I am delighted to join with those who have already congratulated the new lady member, the honourable senator from Lisgar (Hon. Mrs. Irvine), upon her appointment to this chamber. Since she has already participated in this debate I now have the opportunity to congratulate her on her ability to make an excellent speech.

I wish our new colleagues well in their future work in the Senate.

Honourable senators, as has been indicated by my colleague the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White), it was my good privilege and fortune to be chosen as one of the delegates from Canada's Parliament to attend the Biennial Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, which last fall met in Australia. I at first express my grateful appreciation for this opportunity which was presented to me. I wonder whether the fact two members from this chamber were appointed as delegates to this conference is not a rather good reflection on the influence that our good friend the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has on what is going on in Parliament in general. I suspect that he had quite a bit to do with it and I wish him success in any future endeavours in connection with such activities. I will not say whether the Senate of Canada was well represented, for I do not know. It is not for me to say. I do maintain that when two delegates from the Senate can join with six or seven delegates from the House of Commons, we must concede that this should be considered more or less adequate representation from this body.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And good representation too.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): In order that the honourable Leader of the Government may not feel too highly complimented on this matter of pressing for greater representation from the Senate, I should include in my compliment the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), who on several occasions has gone on record urging that the Senate have greater representation at functions of this kind.

Of course, the opportunity to attend the conference brought many other opportunities with it. I think the most important of all the other opportunities was that of association with delegates of all races, colours and creeds from parliaments of every commonwealth country and from all parts of the world. Travelling as we did by air, rail and highway on a six-weeks' pre-conference tour of Australia, there was a continuous opportunity for close association and exchange of ideas; and I may say that if no conference had been held the mutual benefits derived from the exchange of ideas would have made my long journey to that great country of Australia quite worth while.

I do not intend to deal with what went on at the conference, except to say that it did discuss subjects of great importance of an economic, social and international nature, and the discussions were very valuable. I think I should reserve any detailed account for a more appropriate occasion, and perhaps for another body. Of course, I refer to the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

Australians proved to be excellent hosts to us in our seven weeks' stay. The six states vied with each other in providing us with hospitality and opportunities for examining all facets of their life and industry. We saw a country booming with prosperity and expansion, with a standard of living very close indeed to that on the North American continent. We were shown the great forest industries and gold mining of West Australia, and an unending display of magnificent wild flowers—perhaps the greatest display to be found in any area in the world.

Then we went to South Australia, which has a balanced economy of agriculture and secondary industry, and to Queensland, whose tropical and semi-tropical agriculture forms the basis of a sound economy and a good life. Next we went to New South Wales, one of the industrial hearts of the nation, with great agricultural areas. From there we went to Victoria, to see its magnificent wooded hills, valleys of vinelands, citrus groves and pasture land. There, too, we were shown the huge brown-coal industry, with its power and gasification plants which form the basis of a large-scale development of industry. Next we visited the state of Tasmania. It is an island of beauty which had a particular appeal to me because it is so much like my own Nova Scotia, with its valleys of apple orchards, forest industries, beautiful coastline and rivers —a tourist paradise. Finally, we went to Canberra, Australia's capital city, whose development and growth are under the careful supervision and planning of the Australian Capital Territory Authority. Then we made a short journey to the Snowy Mountains hydro-electric development, Australia's Kitimat project, whose ultimate cost may be almost $1 billion.

I found that each of the states could offer a diversification of employment in an environment of beauty and recreational opportunities, and an Australian way of life that seemed to provide more time for family and friends. In almost every part of Australia, however, we found that they had a common problem, and a very serious one, that is, a shortage of water due to a very low annual rainfall. I do not know whether it would be quite appropriate, but I think perhaps it would be, for me to say that one of the favourite expressions employed there when discussing the arid country, and what they are doing to bring water to those parts, is after this fashion: "This part of Australia is one of the very few places in the world where the trees go looking for the dogs." Tremendous water collection and distribution systems have been built, however. For instance, the gold mining city of Kalgoorlie, which has a large population—I have forgotten the figure—receives its water through a pipe line 350 miles long. Rivers and lakes, of course, are few and far between, and the great Australian hope is for development of fresh water sources from sea water or through the use of controlled nuclear explosions which could release presently undiscovered supplies underground. With an assured water supply, the development of many thousands of square miles of presently unproductive land area would result.

There has been in the post-war years keen rivalry, I believe, between Canada and Australia in the matter of immigration. Australia has outbid us in assisting the passage of those who are becoming new Australians, and perhaps has provided more encouragement to prospective immigrants in other ways than we have in the past. I should like to say this: When they have solved their water supply problem, do not be surprised if their now empty land is settled at a rate far more rapid than was the case in our western Canadian development, and even more rapid than in the United States. Australia will then have the capacity to provide a food supply for a large part of the world's rapidly growing population.

A moment ago I referred to the slower pace of the Australian way of life which seemed to provide time for family and friends. It also seemed to me a way of life with recreational opportunities for all the people. Even the small towns we visited, and we visited a lot of them, had made provision many years ago for large areas of land for public use, and as a consequence facilities for cricket, football, tennis, bowling and swimming are now available. In connection with swimming, I am reminded of a very interesting organization which we learned about, and of whose ability we were given a very interesting display. I refer to the life-saving organization which has spread all over Australia. I was amazed to learn that since the inception of the organization of these life-saving clubs 115,000 lives have been saved from certain drowning in the surf which rolls at all times on the magnificent Australian beaches.

At the sites of the water storage developments public recreational parks are always provided. It was interesting, too, to observe, even in rather small towns, that provision had been made for public participation in music and art. On all sides I was impressed by the co-operative effort that must have been necessary in order that Australian people could have such a full life, and it may be because of such opportunities as I have tried to describe that in Australia such crimes as armed bank robbery never occur. I took the trouble to ask one of the police departments in the city of Melbourne about bank robberies, at a time when there was a great succession of them in our country, and the department's representative said, "I would have to go a long way back in my files to recall when the last bank robbery occurred in Australia." I suggest that is something that we could think about.

Perhaps the most striking example of co-operation that I observed is the fact that union representatives sit down with government-appointed conciliators and arbitrators and work out schedules of wages and hours which are binding on both employers and employees. Thus they settle their dispute through compulsory arbitration. Legislation along this line, I learned, has been developing since 1904 both in the national and state Parliaments of Australia.

As a final observation on the Australian scene I should like to mention the fact that in Australia there is a rather comprehensive and well-operated scheme of sickness insurance which takes care of medical and surgical expenses as well as costs of hospitalization. I believe there must be some people there who continue to object to such a method of sharing the costs of sickness, but I must say that those of whom I made inquiries—of course, they were patients or people who might find themselves in the patient class some day—indicated they were entirely satisfied. I should say right off that this is not an argument for a similar scheme in Canada, at this time, but is simply mentioned in the general description of Australia's way of life.

I must say that my lasting impression of the Australian tour will be that of its people. If I had searched for appropriate farewell words as I left their magnificent country I could not have found more appropriate ones than those which were used very recently by the retiring Governor General of Australia, Field Marshal Sir William Slim. This is the way he put it:

> Wherever we have met you, you have shown a kindness and friendliness that has made the most tiring day worth while and the dustiest mile a happy adventure. I don't think you will ever lose your basic quality of kindness, which makes you the kindest people in the world.

I am sure that my colleague from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White) will agree with those sentiments.

Honourable senators, when one has travelled the great distance from Nova Scotia to Australia he finds himself half-way around the world. Since the Australian Government had contracted to pay for my trip out to Australia and back by the most direct route, it seemed that I should not lose the opportunity to add a little distance and pay the little extra it might cost me to come back by another route. In other words, we went down across the Pacific, and the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac and I, with others, took various routes and returned around the world. We had an opportunity, therefore, to visit quite a number of other countries, and for the most part these had to be short visits. The countries visited by my colleague and myself included Hong Kong, Thailand, Iran, Israel, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Spain and Portugal.

In some of these countries our Canadian Ambassador had arranged for us to meet and talk with members of Parliament and their political leaders. This was an interesting experience and provided an opportunity for a worth-while exchange of ideas and information about our respective countries.

Such opportunities came to us in Turkey and in Iran. We could have nothing but admiration for the people of these countries and their leaders, standing as they do in close proximity to Russia and meeting a constant threat of communist domination with a steadfast determination to remain free. They look to the West for continuing support and encouragement, both military and economic.

At this period in the political and economic development of Old Persia it was interesting for us to observe that the Shah, by his own example of dividing and distributing his personally-owned agricultural land to peasants, is making a real effort in persuading other owners of large holdings of land to make it possible for tenant farmers in Old Persia to have for the first time the satisfaction and security of farm ownership. I could not help but think what a worth-while contribution would be made to this movement if Canada were to join with other free nations in seeking ways and means of providing modern agricultural implements to some of these individuals.

Honourable senators, to have an opportunity to see for the first time these eastern and southern European countries which I have mentioned was certainly an exciting, stimulating and educational experience. I believe Parliament would be composed of much better informed members if such opportunities were made available to more of them more frequently.

I should like now to add something to that which my colleague said about Israel in the very fine speech he made here on Thursday last. During our visit, which was made at the invitation of the Government of Israel, we saw every region of the country and examined all aspects of Israeli life. My colleague described the country in a very fine manner and I am sure all of us have a better understanding of Israel than we had before he spoke. But I want to refer to some things other than those which he mentioned. All members of the delegation, which was headed by the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, were greatly impressed with the results of the valiant and dedicated effort which has gone into the program of nation building in that ancient land. It is a land from which the Jewish people were scattered to all corners of the world, subsequently humiliated, tortured and almost destroyed, but just as there remained in Palestine a portion of the original wall of Solomon's Temple, which was to become known in modern times as the "Wailing Wall", a holy place of worship, so too the lasting seeds of Jewish religion, culture and civilization were carried by the people wherever they went, and a natural desire to return to their ancient homeland became to them a burning sense of destiny. I believe it is of interest to observe that as only the west wall of the ancient temple remained in Palestine, so only the western segment of the Jewish people has survived to build the State of Israel.

That there is today the independent State of Israel is of course due to the enterprise of many people, both Jewish and non-Jewish. On various occasions during our stay we were reminded by Israeli leaders and officials that at the top of the list of the non-Jewish group must be placed the names of two Canadians. One is the Honourable Ivan C. Rand, a former member of the Supreme Court of Canada, whose report as Chairman of the United Nations Special Commission provided a basis for agreement on the partition of Palestine. The other is the Honourable Lester B. Pearson, whose skilful diplomacy behind the scenes and on the rostrum of the United Nations played a large and important role in influencing the decisions to accept the Senate of Israel as a separate and independent nation with membership in the United Nations.

Furthermore, we listened on occasion to praise of the highest order for Mr. Pearson's imaginative Nobel prize-winning proposal of the United Nations Emergency Force, which enabled the State of Israel at the time of the Suez crisis to withdraw her troops from Egyptian soil and get back to her own task of nation building. I might say that the recent concurrence of the Canadian Government in a large loan to Egypt for enlargement of the Suez canal without insisting on a guarantee of unmolested passage is a rather sad postscript to this accomplishment.

As we all know, the threat of war in the Middle East is a continuing and increasing one. Disturbing indeed are recent reports of the United Arab forces being recruited by General Nasser for the purpose of threatening peace in this area. I agree with the closing words of an editorial in a recent issue of the Ottawa Citizen, which had this to say:

> As passions cool, as the U.A.R. builds up its economy and becomes more concerned with domestic reform than with foreign adventures, hostility toward Israel may diminish and the chance of negotiating a peace settlement can be seized. But that is in the future. For the time being, all incidents that can lead to war must be prevented in advance.

I firmly believe that future aggressors will meet in Israel a far stronger foe than that which drove them back to their own borders during the war of independence ten or more years ago. The Israelis at that time were led by soldiers trained by the British and with the experience of fighting side by side with the British through Italy, France and Germany, but they were without modern arms and equipment. Aggressors will meet a foe even stronger than that which in 1956 cleared the Arab raiders from the Sinai border and gave protection to Israeli shipping through the Gulf of Aqaba into the Red Sea and to the vital port development at Eilat. They will meet a force of highly trained, well equipped and dedicated young men and young women. These are the product of a first-class educational system, with pre-military training in youth camps and full-time combat training during two years or more for all physically fit young citizens.

These people, the majority of whom have come to Israel as immigrant refugees from Europe, Asia and Africa, bringing with them their different languages, customs and civilizations, and even different complexions, are as one in their determination to have, for the first time in centuries, a homeland of freedom and opportunity. They will not be easily dislodged from their farms, from their citrus groves, which now occupy the rich, irrigated land recovered by their own hard labour from beneath the desert sands. Neither will they be easily dislodged from their newly developed primary and secondary industries, their modern housing developments and their educational facilities.

Referring to the latter, I should like to point out that their rapidly expanding Hebrew University in Jerusalem is staffed with what I would judge to be teachers of the highest calibre, and is attended by students eager to learn so that they may better serve their country. The Weizman Institute of Science, one of the finest in the world, is undertaking pure scientific research and development of almost unexcelled quality. Of some interest to Canadians is the fact that it is from this institute that Canada purchases its "heavy water" requirements for our own scientific work. The leaders of the nation have laid great stress on technical education, and many such institutions are providing the skilled manpower so much needed in a rapidly developing economy.

We were impressed by the fact that, despite the necessity of allocating resources for economic and educational development and for defence, the Israeli people have insisted on parallel development of the arts. Each town, whether new or old, has its community centre with an auditorium and public library. The larger cities have facilities for music and art which are of an order to make Canadians feel ashamed of their own efforts in these fields.

Many of these facets of Israeli life which I have mentioned impressed us very much. The most impressive of all, however, seemed to me to be the tempo and intensity of the work being undertaken by the people and apparently supported in full by the trade union movement, which is strong and includes both those in industry and in the professions. All seemed vitally concerned with the task of building and defending their nation. I wish them well in their dedicated task.

During my tour my interest was not centered so much on the usual tourist attractions, of which there are very many, such as the magnificient temples of Thailand, the ruins of the Grecian and Roman civilizations, the museums of Tehran and Istanbul with their fabulous treasury of precious jewels, and the familiar places of Biblical history in Israel. In those countries where I was privileged to spend the most time I was impressed to a much greater extent by my observations of their way of life. Common to both Australia and Israel was evidence of a pioneer spirit expressed in a zeal to work, and work hard, in a co-operative and unselfish society in order to build a better nation. In this regard I believe it is time Canadians took stock of their individual attitudes toward their contribution to nation building.

I have returned to Canada convinced that other land areas are in the stages of a development process which will in due course place them in a position to offer competition in supplying world markets with primary and secondary products of a kind that will carry the threat of serious dislocation of our foreign as well as our domestic trade. The present era is not one for complacency on our part. New and imaginative approaches should be made to our trade position in this rapidly changing world, and in the national interest every effort must be made to keep our production costs from rising above world market prices of the future.

Finally, I believe we in Canada should remain unconvinced that we now have devised the ultimate in our way of dealing with social and economic problems. Many of these problems today can be solved only by an open-minded and comparative examination of what other countries are doing, together with a bold and imaginative development of even better policies which will lead to a happier way of life shared by all regions of Canada. Nowhere in Canada is there equal need for such a bold and imaginative approach to social and economic problems as in the Atlantic region.

Last session, during the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I made reference to the historical background of these problems and expressed the opinion that the time had arrived for the Government of the day to take bold and extraordinary steps to improve the economy in this region of Canada. On this occasion I shall repeat, in brief, the suggestions I made then. There have been no alternatives offered since that time; in fact no mention of any kind has been made of the Atlantic region in the Speech from the Throne since the pre-election session of 1957-58. These were the things I suggested last session:

1. Regional priorities for defence production contracts and other Government purchasing.

2. Encouragement of private capital investment in these provinces through special depreciation and other taxation concessions.

3. A new approach to the transportation problems brought about by increasingly high freight rates—and I made particular reference to the effect that a new freight rate structure would have on expansion of steel manufacturing.

4. Long term loans in the form of equity capital to encourage the establishment and expansion of industries in the Atlantic region.

There is nothing new or startling in the provision by governments of special incentives for the establishment of new industries in economically lagging areas. It has been recently pointed out by two publications in the Maritimes that such incentives have been found to be effective in such countries as the United Kingdom, Italy, France and, more recently, in Belgium. The publications to which I refer are almost in a class by themselves in their respective fields. One is the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, which I believe is one of Canada's outstanding newspapers, and the other is the Atlantic Advocate, that very fine monthly which is edited by Brigadier Wardell, who spoke at a meeting of the Canadian Club in Ottawa just the other day. These two splendid publications are spending a great deal of time examining our problems and putting forward suggestions of what it appears to them ought to be done with a view to creating some hope for the future.

It appears to me that the economic position of the Atlantic region is, at present, a precarious one. The region is affected seriously by a tighter-than-ever money policy. It is in the shadow of the threat of increasingly higher freight rates. Its trading position in forest products and fish is adversely affected by the premium on the Canadian dollar in terms of United States currency. This premium may be due, in large measure, to the inflow of American capital seeking to reap benefit from our extremely high interest rates. There is deep concern for our future position in export trade, in view of the formation of new world trading patterns. The distressed position of our important coal industry is familiar to everyone, and an additional 6,500 men are expecting to be laid off at any time.

Perhaps the most convincing evidence of our present economic position is contained in the unemployment figure of over a month ago for the Atlantic region. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics survey there were 75,000 unemployed workers, or 14 per cent of the labour force of the Atlantic area. That is the lowest estimate from any official quarter. The actual figure at present may be even more than the 125,000 active claimants for unemployment insurance in this region as of January 31. Not since the thirties has such a situation existed.

It was disturbing to us in the Atlantic region to learn, as a result of the recent inquiries of the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), of the degree to which our economy depends on direct expenditures by the Department of National Defence. In measuring these expenditures in Nova Scotia, I want to point out that the defence payroll alone of $77 million is one-tenth of the total gross personal income of the province. The total of $184 million spent in the Atlantic area is $34 million more than the expenditures there by the great DOSCO empire.

At this point when it is being determined what shall, in the future, be the form of Canada's contribution to modern and effective joint defence methods, the Atlantic region stands in a precarious economic position indeed. When the day of international agreement on disarmament arrives, as it surely must if we are to have a world at peace, new policies leading to alternate employment in the Atlantic region must not only have been developed, but put into effect long in advance of that day.

As the Halifax Chronicle-Herald put it in a recent editorial:

> The need for specific plans for new peaceful economic pursuits that would be ready to take the place of our varied and expensive military efforts should be obvious to anyone.

But, as the years go by blow after blow is falling on the economy of the Atlantic region of Canada, and we are now finding ourselves in somewhat the same precarious and dangerous position that is described in Edgar Allan Poe's classical short story The Pit and the Pendulum. Perhaps I should close with this quotation from the story and allow you to put your own interpretation upon it:

> And then my vision fell upon the seven tall candles upon the table. At first they wore the aspect of charity, and seemed white slender angels who would save me; but then, all at once, there came a most deadly nausea over my spirit, and I felt every fibre in my frame thrill as if I had touched the wire of a galvanic battery, while the angel forms became meaningless spectres, with heads of flame, and I saw that from them there could be no help.

Hon. A. B. Baird: Honourable senators, at the outset I would like to take this opportunity of congratulating the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

It also gives me much pleasure to welcome the three new senators, especially the new lady senator, the Honourable Mrs. Irvine. Her maiden speech in this chamber will ever be remembered by those who were privileged to hear it.

Honourable senators, I intend to be very brief this afternoon—in fact, a little briefer than usual.

As you know, it took the Governor General thirty minutes to deliver the Speech from the Throne in English and possibly slightly longer to deliver it in French. That gives time for a feast of reason. But I, for one, failed to get much meat. Perhaps that was because I expected too much, because of the host of rumours flying around and the carefully heralded strength and activity of the Government forces. Perhaps it was because the meat was so cleverly concealed, or even omitted in its entirety. As I sat and listened very carefully to the speech I found myself becoming increasingly amazed that the proposals of the Government in the matter of defence were not mentioned. As I studied the text of the speech later I realized that reference to the subject was carefully avoided in the text, and that I had not missed hearing part of the speech which could have referred thereto. I am sure that the people of Canada have a vital interest, as I know they have a financial interest, in what the Government proposes to do in regard to defence matters. Are we of the Senate supposed to get our information from the newspapers, in the same way as we obtained the news that the Government has agreed with the United States to add units to the Dew Line at a cost of $300 million or so, of which Canada is expected to pay one-third, with the United States continuing to control operations?

Incidentially, Federal Electric, the United States company which manages operations on the Dew Line, seems to be introducing another United States refinement to our Canadian northland, namely a form of compulsory segregation between the white employees and the Eskimos.

I look with intense concern upon the manner in which the present Government of Canada is acceding to the continued encroachment of the United States upon Canada and Canadian rights, as revealed to us in various newspaper stories. Could it be, I ask, that it is more convenient for the Government of Canada to reveal each move as an accomplished fact rather than as a proposal? I, for one of many, intensely dislike controlled money, and find myself compelled to protest "managed exchange," which is to all intents and purposes a surtax on our exports raising the sales price to our customers in the United States by almost 5 per cent, and costs the people of Canada the loss of many export sales plus the considerable sums spent on the carrying out of this controlled exchange.

Governor James E. Coyne of the Bank of Canada is reported to have said at Winnipeg recently that Canada is in a vulnerable and precarious position by trying to spend more than she saves. Almost at the same time the Prime Minister announced the intention of establishing a royal commission to probe all Government operations with the ultimate aim of reducing governmental costs to a minimum. This announcement of Government plans was not included in the Government policies presumed to have been revealed to the House of Commons and the Senate a few days earlier in the Speech from the Throne. Certainly it seems the Government is merely drifting from point to point in a sort of delaying action, while in fact it hasn't had time to establish a policy for Canada or for itself. As the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons said, "The Government still makes the mistake of confusing movement with progress—and adjectives with action."

I could go on criticizing the lack of Government policy-making and action during the past two years but, unlike the Government, I do not believe mere words can win the "war for progress" that is being fought day after day by Canadians in all walks of life.

After all, the plan is the thing. Get a good plan, form a policy, then go ahead and make it work.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 18, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Croll, who drew attention to "the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada".

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, for various reasons people from many distant lands have come to make Canada their permanent home. We have reached a time when in regard to racial origin 25 per cent of the people of Canada are neither French nor English. Such groups as Icelanders, Russians, Germans, Mennonites, Ukrainians, and Doukhobors have come here and are making their contribution to the welfare of the nation. But as we are observing a Jewish anniversary at this time I will confine my few remarks to the record of the Jewish people in the Prairie provinces.

It was in 1882 that the first Jewish immigrants located in those wide open spaces of the prairies, where they have retained their racial identity. They were bewildered and sometimes dismayed because they were strangers in a strange land. They had many things to contend with. Some of them endured privations, and some were not welcomed with open arms. Some met a measure of intolerance. But they had one thing in common, and that was determination to succeed. When the dark days of depression and despair came in the early years of this century, the Jewish people asked for and received less in the way of relief than did most other peoples.

The children of these early Jewish settlers did very well at school. They realized that they had to work hard and that they had to be especially efficient if they were going to succeed. Many of them have succeeded and become prominent merchants, doctors, lawyers, and so on. During the two World Wars 16,000 Canadian Jews were in uniform, upholding the honour and the way of life of the land in which they were making their home.

As to special attainments of the Jewish people in Canada, I know of one town in the west where there is only one person of Jewish faith, and he was the Mayor. The city in which I live has had a Jewish Mayor for many years, and under his leadership really great things have been accomplished. Mayor Harry Veiner is a man of initiative and ability and he seems to have almost uncanny judgment. He is a colourful character and travels a lot. Wherever he goes he creates a sensation, but he is always thinking of the welfare of Medicine Hat.

May I put on record what one very prominent Albertan said at one time:

> Canada has had occasion to welcome many Jewish immigrants to her shores until they now constitute an important, stable and progressive element in our population. They have made their distinct and valuable contribution to the political, commercial and cultural life of our nation and will, I feel sure, continue and enlarge that contribution in the years to come.

That statement was made by the late Lord Bennett when he was Prime Minister of Canada. Moving eastward in the Prairie provinces we come to Saskatchewan, where our present Prime Minister has his home. Dr. J. T. M. Anderson, a former Premier of the province, made this statement:

> George Eliot in one of her books says, "The Jews are among the aristocracy of every land." History justifies the statement. From the dawn of the ancient civilizations through the shadow of their decay to the morning of a new era in the life of mankind the influence of Jewish traditions has been a factor of ever-increasing potency in the ordering of our world's affairs.

A gentleman who came from Manitoba and who is held in very high esteem by the people of Canada, once said:

> The spiritual literature of Israel forms part of the very fibre of our being. To it we turn in our brightest hours of hope and in our deepest sorrows.

Those words were spoken by the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen.

> Since the granting of equal rights in 1832 the Jewish people of Canada, true to their age-old traditions, have taken an active and honourable part in the public and political life of Canada.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I had not intended to take part in this discussion, but was moved to do so by the eloquence of my friend and colleague the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll). May I say to him that he is one of the finest examples of his race in this country, and we are the better for his being among us.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: In the course of his remarks he stated that there were about a quarter-million Jews in Canada. I find that these are apportioned approximately as follows: Montreal, 100,000; Toronto, 85,000; Winnipeg, 23,000: Vancouver, 6,000; with lesser numbers in other cities and towns across the land. Wherever they are these people are industrious, energetic and imaginative. They have brought great resources of industry and talent to industry, to business, to education, law, medicine and the arts.

Henry Joseph, who came to Canada in the latter part of the 18th century and settled in Berthier, Quebec, was one of the founders of Canada's Merchant Marine. Sigismund Mohr, an engineer from Germany, pioneered the installation of electric light and telephone service in Quebec City. David Oppenheimer was one of the pioneer industrialists of Vancouver and served several terms as mayor of that city.

However, it is not my purpose to dwell on this aspect of the Jewish contribution to Canada, but rather to say something about the role of the Jewish people in education and the arts.

In this respect, many people are not aware of the very special role that the Jewish synagogue plays in the community. The synagogue has always had a wider role than purely a house of worship. It has always served as an educational and community centre function as well, and I think a good deal of the encouragement to do well and to succeed in educational and cultural pursuits stem from the leadership and inspiration in the synagogue.

Most Jewish children receive some form of special Jewish education, although over 85 per cent of them attend the public schools. The remainder go to private schools. Those who attend the public schools receive some supplementary religious instruction in Sunday and late afternoon Hebrew schools.

Education has always had a high priority and pride of place among the Jewish people. Such organizations as the B'nai B'rith, the Local Councils of Jewish Women, and many others, have been active in promoting and encouraging scholarship among Jews and Gentiles alike, and some of the brightest Gentile scholars have won Jewish awards.

One of the most encouraging and exciting signs of a growing Canadian maturity is the spring-like growth of the arts in Canada in the post-war years. This new vitality is not restricted to any particular region nor to any particular art form, although there are variations in the degree of vigour and enthusiasm as between one form and another in certain parts of the country. And in no part of the country do we find as great a liveliness as in Quebec—in Montreal, in particular, with Toronto and Vancouver following second and third. This is natural, because Montreal is more cosmopolitan than any other city in Canada, and the finest example we have of the blending, stimulation, and challenge of the two dominant cultures of English and French. Also it has been enriched beyond measure by the artists who have come from other lands and have found in Montreal a tolerance, maturity and sympathy almost European in its encouragement of all who have talent, regardless of origin.

As an English Canadian, let me at once give the major share of the credit for this new and healthy vitality to our French Canadian partners who have set the pace and injected some of the challenge and daring, the willingness to explore new forms and ideas, which has stimulated the whole Canadian art world from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Victoria. Artists like Borduas, Pellan and de Tonnancour, and writers like Roger Lemelin and Gabrielle Roy have established a new dimension and a new understanding in the field of letters, based not on their French Canadianism but on their universality. It is no accident, either, that our own Hugh MacLennan has found himself and become Canada's best known novelist since moving to Montreal.

In the field of the theatre all of Canada owes a debt to Gratien Gélinas, who, more than any other person, deserves the title "the father of Canadian theatre". In music, Claude Champagne's Quebec Suite and Suite Gaspésienne are rich contributions to Canadian music and to Canada's musical status.

However, to the liveliness and stimulation of our French-speaking colleagues we must add the competitive challenge of the Jewish community, which in proportion to its size contributes more people to the creative arts and education than any other ethnic group in Canada. Jewish poets, authors, musicians and composers have gained national and international recognition in recent years.

Isidore Ascher, who was born in 1835 and died in 1914, was Canada's first Jewish poet. A. M. Klein won the Governor General's Gold Medal in 1948. Lionel Shapiro, before his untimely death, had gained fame as a war correspondent and writer.

Ellen Ballon, the pianist; Madame Pauline Donalda, the Covent Garden opera star and, in recent years, director of the Opera Guild; Alexander Brott, the violinist and composer; John Weinzweig, one of our most successful younger composers; Walter Susskind, conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra; Ethel Stark, conductor of the Women's Symphony Orchestra; Harry Freedman, the brothers Adaskin, Boris Berlin, and a host of others of the Jewish community have greatly enriched our Canadian music.

Painters like Lillian Freiman, Eric Goldberg, and Louis Muhlstock, are represented in our National Gallery and in many galleries abroad.

In radio and television the names of Lorne Greene, Nathan Cohen and Percy Saltzman are almost household words.

In science, medicine and law, and at almost every university across the land, Jewish scholars on the faculties are making a significant contribution to Canadian education.

In their new homeland of Israel the Jewish people have astonished the world with what they have been able to do in establishing a vigorous and viable modern state against almost overwhelming odds.

There is a lesson for all Canadians in the attitude and the success of the Jewish people toward education and the arts, and the sooner we learn that lesson the better it will be for Canada. The Jewish people have achieved notable success in education and in the arts in our country and in their new homeland of Israel because they believe in and apply a very simple formula, and one which is open to any Canadian. The parents have a high regard for and give priority of place to a good education for their children. They believe in and insist upon a disciplined family life and they provide a constant encouragement to succeed.

They are willing to work hard and to sacrifice for what they believe. They believe that the arts and humanities are essential to the fullest expression of the individual, and these have a high priority in their thinking. Would that more Canadians showed the same industry, discipline and dedication to purpose. It would be a good thing for Canada.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I too would like to pay a humble tribute to the Canadians of Jewish origin who have in the past so enriched our Canadian life and who are continuing to do so at the present time. Particularly I would like to speak briefly of the Jewish women. I would like to remind honourable senators that without the encouragement and cooperation of their women over the past two hundred years, particularly during the pioneer days, Jewish men in Canada could not have reached that eminence in the arts, in medicine, science, literature, law, business and philanthropy about which we have heard in this debate.

I would remind honourable senators that many Jewish women through their own outstanding talents, and their diligence in developing those talents, have made and are continuing to make a much valued contribution to our Canadian life. The honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) told us, in his very excellent address of Thursday last, that even before Aaron Hart came to Trois Rivières some Jewish people had gone to the Maritimes. That was as early as 1750. But these, as we know, were not permanent settlers; the people came and they went.

It is interesting to know that the first Jewish woman who came to Canada arrived in Quebec from France in 1738. Her name was Esther Brandeau, and I think the especially interesting thing about her arrival was that she came disguised as a boy. Actually she served as a seaman on the ship St. Michel under the name of Jacques La Fargue. It was some time before it was found out that she was a woman, and this discovery caused considerable embarrassment to the authorities at that time.

Miss Caroline Hart, a direct descendant of Aaron Hart, was an outstanding Jewish woman who was supervisor of a model school for kindergarten teachers in Ontario from 1885 to 1892, and in 1890 she was made inspector of all the kindergartens in the province of Ontario. This was a new venture, at the time, and in the official organ of the kindergarten movement of America it was said of her:

> The rapid extension of the kindergartens throughout Ontario and the Dominion of Canada has been mainly due to her ability and enterprise.

The article went on to say:

> Canadian kindergartens speak her name with pride and gratitude.

A woman of Russian and Polish Jewish origin who added lustre to Canada was Pauline Donalda. She was the daughter of Fanny Goldberg and her husband Michael Lightstone, of Montreal. Pauline took the stage name of Donalda out of gratitude to Sir Donald A. Smith, later Lord Strathcona, who had assisted her in her career. The honourable senator from Lisgar (Hon. Mrs. Irvine) referred to Lord Strathcona in her very outstanding speech last week, on which I congratulate her heartily, and express the hope that we shall hear from her many more times. Pauline Donalda toured the world as a concert artist and was acclaimed as a great Canadian singer and artist.

There have been many Jewish women who have been active in the field of philanthropy and perhaps to us who live in Ottawa so many months of the year the name of the late Lillian Freiman—Mrs. Archibald J. Freiman—is among the best known. Mrs. Freiman was known throughout Canada for her large-scale efforts on behalf of less fortunate people. She had great organizing ability, and I have read that she was practically given charge of Ottawa's efforts to deal with the influenza epidemic in 1917. During and after the First World War her work with the Legion made her very well known indeed and she received many honours for it. She helped also to raise funds for Roman Catholic and Salvation Army projects. One undertaking for which she is especially remembered is the bringing over from the Ukraine in 1920 more than 100 Jewish orphans and placing them in Jewish homes in Canada.

These, honourable senators, are only a few of the Jewish women of whom all Canadians are proud. The honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron) mentioned other names, including some that I had intended to bring to your attention, which I need not do now.

There have been few Jewish women in the political field, but the same thing can be said of Canadian women in general, and this was especially true in the earlier days. At the present time we are all proud to know that in Toronto Mrs. Ida Segal has been very active on the Board of Education. Mrs. Beatrice Hayes, president of the Montreal Council of Women, is also a member of the Montreal City Council.

The work of Jewish women's organizations deserves some mention, too. The National Council of Jewish Women, which was organized before the turn of the century, is greatly interested in the matters of health, welfare and education. The council works for greater social, economic and cultural opportunities for all people, and has many scholarships devoted to this purpose. In late years it has done a great deal to improve the situation of older citizens. Jewish women's groups have supported old folks' homes, organized Golden Age Clubs and carried on many similar projects. They have been pioneers in this field in Ottawa and many other places.

Other Jewish women's groups have as their main objective the giving of support and help to Israel. Hadassah, first organized in 1917, is the strongest of these and provides help and assistance in Israel similar to what we associate with Red Cross work in our own country.

Through the funds they raise, hospitals are founded, and training is given in the care of mothers and babies, in the prevention and treatment of certain diseases, and in the upbringing of children. The work supported by Hadassah is not limited to Jews in Israel, but is provided for Arab citizens living in Israel as well. It should be remembered that while Hadassah raises in Canada large funds for work in Israel, the money is spent in Canada for equipment and goods which are shipped to Israel. This increases business in Canada.

In his extremely interesting speech on Thursday last the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White) mentioned among other things that impressed him in Israel:

> The service of both boys and girls in the armed forces.

This I think is illustrative of the place of women in the Israel of today, where they are in every way sharing on an equal footing with men both advantages and responsibilities in the astonishing development that is taking place in that country.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I join in the tributes which have been paid on previous occasions and are being paid today to our Jewish fellow citizens. I would, if I may, adopt as my own many of the remarks which I have heard this afternoon in commendation of the Jewish people in Canada; but more particularly, I would like to be associated with the statements made by the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson), who sits to my left. Jewish women are the most faithful and wonderful wives, and the most devoted mothers. I could bring proof to bear on that assertion in the fact that the Jewish families follow more closely than any other members of our population the old injunction, "Honour thy father and thy mother." The Jewish women, as the honourable senator said, are active, industrious and most sympathetic; they are generous in their contributions, both of themselves and their substance, in all good works.

Honourable senators, we are very greatly indebted to the senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), my honoured deskmate, for having called attention to the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada. He has given the members of this senior legislative assembly of the Dominion of Canada an opportunity to express our admiration for the energetic and historic group to which he himself belongs. May I add that I am personally grateful for this opportunity of expressing my deeply felt gratitude to the Jewish community for the friendship and generosity which have over the years been extended to me and which have meant so much to me in my public career.

I have of course known the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina for many years. It does seem to me as though I had always known him. We entered the Legislature of Ontario at the same time; we became part of the Hepburn administration in 1934, we served together during the years when that administration was rendering democratic and useful service to that province, and together we left that administration when that period of usefulness had ended.

I was in the House of Commons during the war years while my honoured friend was serving his country in the armed forces overseas. We were together in the Parliament of Canada during the early post-war years, he in the House of Commons and I in the Senate; and as my colleagues well know, we have occupied this double desk ever since my friend arrived in the Senate.

The senator from Toronto-Spadina and I have had a common approach to most public questions, because, generally speaking, we start from the same basis and aim for the same objects. I confess that it is rather difficult for me to describe adequately the comradeship and genuine affection that has developed in my mind over these years as a result of our intimate association. I was not able to be present to hear my friend make his speech a few days ago on this subject, but I read his remarks with sympathetic interest and I congratulate him on the truths which he expressed, on his eloquence, and generally on his masterly address.

Honourable senators, in the 200 years that we have now under review the Jewish population of Canada has grown from a single unit to approximately a quarter of a million persons. That is a notable increase, and I am sure a very satisfactory increase from their own standpoint. But bearing in mind the important part played by the Jewish people in the economic and social life of Canada, it is rather difficult to appreciate that the ratio of Jews to the entire population in Canada is about one to seventy-five. In other words, the accomplishments which we have heard described most acceptably in so many fine speeches are altogether out of proportion to the number of persons involved. They occupy a position in society that must be attributed to something more than mere numbers.

It is not my intention this afternoon to attempt to describe the part that the members of the Jewish faith have played in Canada, in business, agriculture, manufacturing, the professions and in public life, for the detail is far too great. I would hesitate to attempt to name individuals who have played notable parts, because there are many and there is the liability of overlooking some who should be mentioned and whose contribution is also great. However, I think it sufficient for our purposes to say that where intelligence, industry and devotion to the object in hand are factors, the Jewish men and women in Canada are always found in action. I can say from personal knowledge that no group of our population is more industrious and law-abiding, more faithful in their family relations, or more public spirited and generous than are our Jewish compatriots.

It has been my good fortune to have been associated in a minor way with the Jewish community in their attainment of their great ideal, the re-building of the Jewish homeland in Palestine. I too have for a long time referred to myself as a Zionist. I confess it is as a Christian-Zionist, but nevertheless a Zionist, because I have long believed in the establishment of the Jewish nation in the land where David and Solomon ruled, and where the Founder of Christianity lived and died.

I thought it was a wise thing in many ways to have such a nation located on the shores of the Mediterranean. I am not at all unique in this because, honourable senators, Canada spoke in no uncertain voice when Mr. Lester Pearson was Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs, and when the United Nations was inquiring into the situation in the Middle East and considering the establishment of the State of Israel. We were right at that time in the part we played. We were right, and Israel has proved we were right by her wonderful accomplishments, following the establishment of that state, in economic development and in democratic government and procedure, and in intellectual and social progress. In the offering of a refuge to the oppressed of all lands, and in the ability to survive—which is something —Israel has justified the faith which we possessed at the time of her creation. Canadian Jewry has justified our Governmental action of those early days by the constancy and the generosity with which it has supported the new and struggling State of Israel.

We are right now in paying them tribute. We were right when we brought Israel into existence, and we have been right in every support which we have given. And we would be right now, honourable senators, if Canada would declare publicly, so that all men may know, that Canada will not tolerate an attack upon Israel by her enemies.

I do not question the ability of the State of Israel to survive. Israeli people proved that ability in the war of liberation when they were attacked by no less than five invading armies and almost barehanded drove them out of Israel. The work of the Jewish army at that time was heroic, and the results of its heroism were—I am not overstating it —miraculous.

But, honourable senators, the State of Israel does not want war. Israel needs peace —peace in which to complete the great work it has begun. It needs freedom from boycott and discrimination and constant attack in order that it may complete the refuge which it has offered to the oppressed from all over the world. I suggest that the Canadian Government can acknowledge the debt which non-Jewish Canadians owe to our Jewish compatriots by telling Mr. Nasser in the plainest possible terms to keep his Arab hands off the State of Israel.

To the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina I would like to say: "May I through you wish all my Jewish friends and fellow citizens many, many happy returns of this day, and may the next two hundred years bring to them increase in numbers, prosperity, health and happiness, and much opportunity for high-minded public service."

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, my contribution to this discussion will be very brief. Nevertheless, I realize that there is important business on the Order Paper, and with the understanding that this order will be called again I move adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned I would like to say that not long ago I had the honour of being invited to address—

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Honourable senators, I moved adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) wishes to say a few words. I have not yet put the question.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I do not want to take up the time of honourable senators, and my speech for once will be very short. Not long ago I had the honour of being invited to address the Christian and Jewish Society under the stipulation that my speech would not last for more than one minute, and it is a speech of that length I will make now.

For once I agree with most of what has been said. It is a great satisfaction and a great contentment, and a cause of rejoicing, to feel that the atmosphere of the Senate has been more serene than ever during this debate. There has been no friction, and it has been enjoyable to listen to the tributes that have been paid to the Jewish race and to minorities in general.

Now, honourable senators, I wish to convey my personal impressions of this debate to you. Perhaps you will agree with me. One of the great privileges that members of the Senate and the House of Commons have is that in coming from all parts of Canada they meet some of the most interesting people. They meet great Canadians whom they would never have met if they had not entered public life. This is a great reward, and among the friends that I have made in my political career there is one whom I have known since 1934 when we were together at the Kennedy Collegiate stadium in Windsor. There were six of us there on the stand, but the only two surviving are my honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) and myself. It was a fine occasion. He was there with his leader, the late Mr. Hepburn, and the other Liberal candidates of the city of Windsor. I admired what my honourable friend said, and afterwards when he became Minister of Labour he rendered most excellent service to his province. He got information that no other Minister of Labour in Ottawa or in any province had ever thought of getting. Then to my great pleasure, after a fine war record, he was elected to the House of Commons, where we sat together for some years. Subsequently, to our mutual surprise, we were sworn in as senators of Canada on the same day. We do not always share the same views. Sometimes we disagree wholeheartedly, but we remain friends, which shows that friendship is more important than politics.

The other Jewish gentleman whose name I wish to mention with great joy is Mr. Leon Crestohl, the present member for Montreal-Cartier in the House of Commons. He too is a great Canadian, a member of the legal fraternity and a man of great culture. I have always appreciated his friendship very highly. I want to add two persons to those whom I have already mentioned, namely, the distinguished wives of Senator Croll and Mr. Crestohl. The two husbands and the two wives are all great Canadians.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris moved the second reading of Bill S-20, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company.

He said: Honourable senators, I think I should say something at this stage about this bill. Last night I asked for the indulgence of the house on a pure matter of procedure, and I appreciated the courtesy of silence I got, which in a very emphatic form indicated agreement with my request. On this occasion it would be presumptuous for me to ask for any indulgence. I am only asking what this house, in my long experience of 23 years, has always to my knowledge given to any bill, and that is due consideration for the interests of the public.

Honourable senators, this legislation purports to amend the provisions of the constitution of British Columbia Telephone Company, whose act of incorporation is chapter 66 of the Statutes of Canada, 1916. The name of the company at that time was Western Canada Telephone Company, later changed to the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Section 9 of that act gave the company power to acquire all or any part of the property, real or personal, undertaking, business, powers, contracts, privileges and rights of any company having similar objects. But the act did not give the company—and I presume this was an oversight more than anything else—power to acquire outstanding shares from any individuals. So it will be seen that this amendment does not go very deep into the matter of principle, for the company now has power to acquire the assets and goodwill of another company. This amendment largely simplifies the procedure of accomplishing what the company has been able to do in a roundabout way.

The bill at least confirms the principle of the desirability of larger companies in Canada acquiring and operating smaller companies, and that is one of the features peculiar to telephone companies as distinct from many other types of companies. In our laws we have provisions against monopolies, and in some types of competitive business this is highly desirable. On the other hand, we can all understand, for instance, that if you had competing telephone companies in the same city you would have an intolerable situation. In addition, the more centralized a telephone company can keep its wider scope of operations the more effective and better will be its service to its consumers.

The Bell Telephone Company has enjoyed all the powers that the British Columbia Telephone Company enjoys at the present time, and it also enjoys the additional power which the British Columbia Telephone Company now seeks. I will not bother to read this provision at this late hour, but it is found at chapter 67 of the Statutes of 1880. It is quite a long section, and it ends up with these comprehensive words:

—or to become a shareholder in any such corporation.

The Bell Telephone Company has acted under that interpretation ever since.

Honourable senators, I want to say a few words about the British Columbia Telephone Company. I think it can be fairly said that the company is highly regarded throughout British Columbia. It was incorporated in 1916.

The company operates over 90 per cent of the telephones in the province of British Columbia and is the second largest telephone company in Canada. At the end of 1959 it served 505,432 telephones, and had a gross investment in telephone plant of over $243 million.

The immediate object of this bill is acquisition of the shares of the North-west Telephone Company. There is no great difficulty about acquiring the shares, and it is highly desirable that this should be done. The North-west Telephone Company was formed in 1928 to develop telephone communication by radio to the more inaccessible communities on the coast of British Columbia. Anyone who knows British Columbia, either by having been there or even by looking at the map, knows what a tremendous amount of inaccessible area, consisting of mountains and valleys, there is in that province. This was the first commercial application of the use of radio to provide telephone service in British Columbia's mountainous terrain, where it was not economically possible to build or maintain wire lines. The venture had never been undertaken before.

Subsequently, British Columbia Telephone Company acquired the charter power to provide telephone service by radio and is now operating radio-telephone communication in British Columbia on an expanding scale. For example, British Columbia Telephone Company in 1958 completed the British Columbia portion of the Trans-Canada micro-wave radio relay system, which means that there will be a micro-wave system of transmission from Vancouver to Montreal.

I have here a note from one of the officers of the company which expresses some important considerations in favour of amalgamation with British Columbia Telephone Company:

Increasing interest and dividend rates have contributed substantially to the rising cost of providing and maintaining telephone service. Experience has shown that the issue of securities in large amounts and the ability to provide a somewhat higher security rating makes it possible for larger companies such as British Columbia Telephone Company to attract capital at rates considerably lower than a comparatively small company such as North-west Telephone Company.

The North-west Telephone Company is faced with heavy commitments for expansion and improvement in the area served by the company in central British Columbia. The communities in that area, although widely separated, have experienced phenomenal growth which has every indication of continuing. The necessity to provide telephone facilities to meet this development has created and will continue to create a financial burden which is most difficult and costly for a small company to carry.

During the past ten years British Columbia Telephone Company has acquired the Mission Telephone Company Ltd., Chiliwack Telephone Ltd., The Kootenay Telephone Company Ltd., and a large part of the Dominion Government Telegraph and Telephone System.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Could all those companies not be acquired by taking over their assets?

Hon. Mr. Farris: That could still be done, but it has proved to be cumbersome and unsatisfactory and the other method is much better.

The officer of the company goes on to say:

In each case improvements in service and equipment have been immediately evident and many thousands of dollars, which the smaller company could not provide, have been spent in expansion and modernization.

These considerations have an important bearing on telephone rates and indicate that the cost of providing service for a small company serving communities in rural areas will rise more rapidly and reach higher levels than those of a large communication system such as the British Columbia Telephone Company, serving the more densely populated areas of the province.

I wish to point out also that a very important part of this amendment is the very last sentence in the bill, which reads as follows:

...and to allot and issue such shares as fully paid up or as partly paid up as may be agreed upon between the company and the holders of such shares.

That is a very important power in the interests of the public. British Columbia Telephone Company today has future commitments in millions of dollars. If I were as good at figures as many of my colleagues are, I could state the amount. In any event, I know it is very large. Those investments and heavy commitments, with the high rates of interest that prevail today, are a serious problem for the company; and if in addition it had to acquire shares of other companies and pay the higher rates of interest it would face a mighty big expense and a difficult one to finance. This section of the bill, therefore, involves more than mere procedure, it involves basic essentials.

Honourable senators, while the immediate object of this company is to acquire the North-west company, as to which there will be no difficulty, it also has its eye on several other smaller companies that are operating under difficulties in the province, and it would be an extremely good thing, not for the shareholders, but for the subscribers of those companies, if the companies were taken over by the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does the company operate beyond the province?

Hon. Mr. Farris: No, it does not. This company by its charter was declared to be for the general benefit of Canada and is entirely under the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada.

While I am very glad to be frank with this house in stating that acquisition of the North-west Telephone Company is the immediate objective, it would not be good policy to mention any other companies that the British Columbia Telephone Company has its eyes on. As a matter of fact, it has no definite company in mind, but if we had to come back and get special powers for each one the shares of every such company would go so fast that you wouldn't see them.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Has the company got its eye on Bell Telephone?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, I do not know. I might say that the Bell Telephone Company will not have its eye on the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Bell Telephone Company is not in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Farris: No, it is not in British Columbia; and I think it would be very foolish to make such an attempt.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: The British Columbia Telephone Company is very co-operative with the Bell Telephone Company, I understand?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes. It is a good thing to be co-operative in business, a most desirable thing, and particularly in the telephone business.

This is not part of what I had intended to say, but it occurs to me that today in New York you can push a button and talk directly to Seattle; and before very long we are going to be able to pick up the receiver in Montreal in the same way and talk to Vancouver, Victoria, and other distant points. This cannot happen unless there are large operations with tremendous financial backing—with ability to finance not only what has to be done immediately but any stage of scientific developments and improvements that will give the best service.

Honourable senators, I could get warmed up on this subject and talk for some time, but I think I have said enough to give you the picture and to emphasize that the kind of power sought in this bill is needed not only in the interests of the company's subscribers but of the people of Canada generally. Because of the silent assent I got last night—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Silence is golden!

Hon. Mr. Farris: Yes. If second reading is given to this bill, I shall move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to be discussed tomorrow. Mr. Armstrong, Chief Clerk of Committees, informed me today that I shall have to impose upon the good nature of honourable senators again. He has handed me another resolution which I will move after the bill has been referred to committee, as I hope it will be.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The Chief Clerk of Committees tells me that in order to have the bill considered in committee tomorrow I must obtain the unanimous consent of the house to the motion which I now move:

That Rule 119 be suspended in so far as it relates to the Bill S-20 intituled: "An Act respecting British Columbia Telephone Company".

If this motion were not passed the bill could not be considered by the committee for a week. I may say that Mr. McLean, president of the company, is either in Ottawa or in New York on his way here and will arrive tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 205 to 217, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the reports be adopted.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I move adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will the honourable senator give the reason why?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Because I want to make a carefully drafted speech.

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Dupuis—

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: No.

The Hon. The Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Pouliot, seconded by the Honourable Senator Croll, that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, on account of the help I received from the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) I will not insist on making a speech on these bills.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 25, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following report:

Report on activities under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, being Chapter 175, R.S. 1952. (English text).

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. W. R. Brunt, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-20, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next.

May I say just this. I feel sure that all who were present at the discussion this morning will be convinced that the expedition in no way lessened the liveliness of the discussion.

Motion agreed to.

STATISTICS

On Reports of Committees:

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce: Honourable senators, I have no formal report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, but I have information, which I think the house would like to hear, on the committee's proceedings.

The time limit for filing of petitions expired yesterday under Senate Rule 110, which allows six weeks from the opening of the session for filing of petitions for all private bills. The time limit has now expired, and I am in a position to inform the house how many petitions will require consideration at this session.

There were 589 petitions filed, which is the largest docket we have had since I have been chairman of the committee. I think I am safe in saying it is the largest docket we ever had.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: There must be extra good times in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps that is the explanation, or it may be bad times.

The petitions already heard and recommended number 228. Ten petitions have been withdrawn, for various reasons, the chief one being that the parties have become reconciled. We are always happy to receive information of that kind. In every such case we permit the petitioner to withdraw the petition, and we return the fees paid, less $25 for translation and printing costs.

Petitions partially heard number 4 and petitions to be disposed of at the present number 347. As the total number of petitions is 589, we have not yet quite reached the half-way mark, but we are close to it.

At the 1959 session 420 petitions had been filed prior to the time limit provided by Rule 110. With 589 petitions now filed for the present session there is an increase this year of 169 petitions.

It is said that hard cases make bad law, and hard cases sometimes make bad administration. The extending of the time for filing last session was done out of the kindness of our hearts and for good reasons which I need not repeat now, but reasons which will probably not recur at this session. The extended date last year was April 17, by which date a further 29 petitions were filed, bringing the total for that session to 449.

At the present session 26 notices of contestation have been filed, and of these at least three have been disposed of.

To date 238 petitions have been either recommended or withdrawn, as against 125 on the comparable date last session. From this you will see that we have been making rather marked progress so far.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Have there been any rejections?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They will be among the petitions partially heard. I referred to those that have been partially heard, and I do not wish to say anything more on that point.

There is another point, however, that I would like to mention before I sit down. Honourable senators will remember that the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) said that he had experienced some difficulty in tracing bills to the reports. The system now in vogue has been that followed since, I suppose, 1867, when the committee was first constituted. I have never heard of any complaint on this point before; nevertheless, the honourable senator has a point. It is easier to trace reports by reference to their numbers than to the names of the petitioners. I am now in a position to inform the honourable senator that he will find the number of the relevant report on the lower left-hand corner of the front page of every bill which he receives in future.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 1, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEES

Hon. William M. Wall inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

(1) What is the exact operative definition of the term "refugee", as currently being applied in carrying out the regulations and the attendant administrative practices of the Department of Immigration?

(2) What is the differentiation now being made by the Department of Immigration between those residents of Canada who

(a) may sponsor as landed immigrants a refugee or a refugee family as defined in (1) above; and

(b) who may sponsor as landed immigrants others than those defined as refugees?

(3) How many of the 106,928 immigrants who were admitted to Canada during 1959 were sponsored

(a) as refugees,

(b) as others?

(4) How many of the refugees and of the other landed immigrants respectively and referred to in (3) above, were sponsored

(a) by individual Canadian residents?

(b) by private organizations and associations, exclusive of public authorities at the three levels of government?

(5) At the commencement of World Refugee Year, in June 1959, how many refugees were there in Europe, in or outside refugee camps?

(6) Since the initiation of World Refugee Year, in June 1959, what is the sum-total of refugees who have been sponsored in Canada

(a) by the various levels of government?

(b) by individuals and interested organizations?

(7) Were the 100 refugee families sponsored by the Canadian Government chosen by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees? What supervisory or other role was played in this choosing by Canadian immigration officers?

(8) Including the 100 families who have been sponsored by the whole Canadian community through the instrumentality of the federal Government, how many refugees are likely to be admitted to Canada during World Refugee Year?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have received the following answer to this inquiry:

1. A bona fide refugee means a person

(a) displaced from his country of nationality or citizenship as a result of events arising out of World War II who has not been permanently resettled in his country of present residence, or

(b) who, being stateless or a citizen of one of the undermentioned countries, fled therefrom since closure of the International Refugee Organization on December 31st, 1951:

Albania	Lithuania
Bulgaria	Poland
Czechoslovakia	Roumania
Estonia	East Zone of Germany
Hungary	U.S.S.R.
Latvia	Yugoslavia

2. (a) citizens or permanent residents of Canada or organizations, agencies and municipal or provincial authorities may sponsor refugees or refugee families, whether relatives or non-relatives, from Europe.

(b) residents of Canada may sponsor the admission of relatives in accordance with the attached extract from the Immigration Regulations. Attention is directed particularly to subsections (c) and (d) of Regulation 20.

3. In 1959 immigration statistics record 59,360 persons (including refugees) admitted as sponsored immigrants. No separate tabulation is made of the number of sponsored refugees included in this total.

4. In 1959 immigration statistics record 53,929 persons (including refugees) admitted under the sponsorship of their relatives in Canada and 5,431 persons admitted under the sponsorship of others in Canada. No separate tabulation is made of the number of persons admitted under the sponsorship of private organizations, associations or public authorities. In addition, no separate tabulation is made of the number of refugees included in these totals.

5. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimated that in mid-1959, 113,700 non-settled refugees remained in Europe, of which 23,700 were living in 114 official camps in Europe.

6. (a) Since the inauguration of World Refugee Year, 342 refugees have been admitted to Canada under the auspices of the federal Government in the special movement of tubercular refugees and their families.

(b) No statistics have been maintained of the number of refugees admitted under other sponsorship during this period.

7. The tubercular refugees and their families were nominated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and referred to Canadian immigration officials in Europe who determined their admissibility under the Immigration Act and Regulations apart from the medical disability in respect of tuberculosis.

8. The federal Government's immigration program enables thousands of refugees to be admitted to Canada annually. It is the policy of the Government not to distinguish between refugees and other immigrants, and immigration statistics do not record the number of refugees included in the annual immigrant movement. Therefore, the number of refugees who have been admitted to Canada thus far in World Refugee Year is unknown and it is impossible to estimate the number who may be admitted during the whole of this period.

IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS

Admission to Canada

20. Landing in Canada of any person is prohibited except where the person falls within one of the following classes of persons who may be landed in Canada if such person meets the requirements of the act and of these regulations:

(a) a person who is a British subject by birth or by naturalization in the United Kingdom,

Australia, New Zealand, or the Union of South Africa, a citizen of Ireland, a citizen of France born or naturalized in France or in St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands, or a citizen of the United States of America if such person has sufficient means to maintain himself in Canada until he has secured employment therein;

(b) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Austria, Belgium, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden or Switzerland or who is a refugee from a country of Europe, if such person undertakes to come to Canada for placement under the auspices of the Department or, if the Department has given its approval thereto, for establishment in a business, trade or profession or in agriculture;

(c) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Egypt, Israel, Lebanon, Turkey, or of any country of Europe or of a country of North America, Central America or South America if such person is the husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister, as well as the husband or wife and the unmarried children under 21 years of age of any such son, daughter, brother or sister, as the case may be, the father, the mother, the grandparent, the unmarried orphan nephew or niece under 21 years of age, the fiance or fiancee, of a Canadian citizen or of a person legally admitted to Canada for permanent residence who is residing in Canada and who has applied for any such person and is in a position to receive and care for any such person; or

(d) a person who is a citizen of a country other than a country referred to in paragraphs (a), (b) or (c) or in section 21, if such person is the husband, the wife or the unmarried child under 21 years of age, the father where he is over 65 years of age, or the mother where she is over 60 years of age, of a Canadian citizen or of a person legally admitted to Canada for permanent residence who is residing in Canada and who has applied for and is in a position to receive and care for any such person, but no such child shall be landed in Canada unless his father or his mother, as the case may be, is landed in Canada concurrently with him.

21. The Government of Canada having entered into an agreement with the Government of India, the Government of Pakistan and the Government of Ceylon with respect to the admission to Canada of 300, 100 and 50 persons annually from such countries, respectively, the landing in Canada of persons from any such country is, notwithstanding section 20, limited accordingly to such numbers of persons respectively, and in addition to the husband, the wife or the unmarried child under 21 years of age, the father where he is over 65 years of age or the mother where she is over 60 years of age, of a Canadian citizen or of a person legally admitted to Canada for permanent residence who is residing in Canada and who has applied for and is in a position to receive and care for any such person.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CASE OF LEWIS D. DUNCAN, Q.C.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved, pursuant to notice:

For copy of the notes of the Judges and of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Mr. Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C., who has been sentenced to a fine of two thousand dollars for having challenged one of the Justices of that Court.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I now table the documents requested, and I have a copy which I am sending to the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I would like to know who were the judges who sat and gave judgment in the case of Mr. Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C. These names do not appear in the judgment. I would ask to have the answer to this inquiry completed. Thank you.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

COMMISSIONS OF JUDGES REFERRED TO IN PROPOSED AMENDMENT RE TENURE OF OFFICE

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved, pursuant to notice:

For copies of the forms used for the commissions of the Judges of the Superior, District or County Courts referred to in the motion which appears on pages iii and iv of the Routine Proceedings of February 3, 1960.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am tabling documents under this motion, and am furnishing a copy to the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot). The honourable gentleman asked for the forms used for the commissions of the judges of the Superior, District or County Courts. The Minister of Justice states that the number of such forms is approximately 70 and that after a consultation the honourable senator agreed to accept production of the four basic forms used by the department.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I am very grateful to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for having tabled these documents.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

On the notice of inquiry by Hon. Mrs. Fergusson:

1. Have any representations been received by the Prime Minister or by any other member or members of the Government to appoint a woman member to the National Parole Board?
2. If such representations have been received, by whom were they made?
3. If such representations have been received, what, if any, action is contemplated by the Government?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government when I can expect to have an answer to my inquiry, of which I gave notice on February 2?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would ask the honourable senator to be patient for another day or two. I am doing the best I can and hope to have the answer at the next sitting.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Thank you.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN REASSURANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, moved the third reading of Bill S-13, to incorporate Canadian Reassurance Company.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, this bill was amended in committee. I did not happen to agree with the amendment, but I think there were only two or three who felt as I did. That, of course, does not say I was wrong, and I still feel the amendment is not a proper one. However, as the company accepted it I will not oppose it. I am not suggesting that reference to the amendment should necessarily be made when the bill is presented for third reading; I am merely drawing attention of the house to the fact that the bill was amended in committee and that I was not one of those who supported the amendment.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

MUNICH REINSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA —THIRD READING

Hon. Donald Cameron, for Hon. Mr. Molson, moved the third reading of Bill S-14, to incorporate Munich Reinsurance Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Bill SD-176, for the relief of Marie Paule Andree Mercier Rowney.

Bill SD-177, for the relief of Alexander Leslie Mittler.

Bill SD-178, for the relief of Beatrice Jean Madsen Rockburn.

Bill SD-179, for the relief of Emma Strachan MacInnes Creery.

Bill SD-180, for the relief of Vira (Vera) Kotyk Marsden.

Bill SD-181, for the relief of Shashi Kumar Pande.

Bill SD-182, for the relief of Ethel Georgina Pottle Pallen.

Bill SD-183, for the relief of Marilyn Shendelman Kagan.

Bill SD-184, for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Vinet.

Bill SD-185, for the relief of Martha Dammel Reiche Domnauer.

Bill SD-186, for the relief of June Isabella Adamson Hogan.

Bill SD-187, for the relief of Wincenty Strzelczyk.

Bill SD-188, for the relief of Janina Rodzoch Nowak.

Bill SD-189, for the relief of Margaret Ruth McLellan Kennedy.

Bill SD-190, for the relief of Hazel Ina McEwing Hickey.

Bill SD-191, for the relief of Marie Marthe Alberta Ladouceur Parenteau.

Bill SD-192, for the relief of Olga Gokler Crisan.

Bill SD-193, for the relief of George Graham Thresh.

Bill SD-194, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Porcheron.

Bill SD-195, for the relief of Paul Drolet Massue.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wish, in the first place, to thank the chairman of the committee for the trouble he took in giving instructions to have the number of the report placed on each bill. However, the word "report" is misleading. What I have before me contains two things, the transcript of the evidence and a report.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And the petition.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes, but if you look at it you will see that there should be five words, "transcript of evidence and report", instead of only "report". The report is here with us, and without the evidence which is included therein the Divorce Committee could never render any decision. I was right in shocking some of my honourable colleagues, although that was not my purpose, in moving adjournment of the debate on the motion to adopt certain reports of the Divorce Committee, because here I have two reports which I received in the mail this morning, Nos. 156 and 157, and which I could not find before. In spite of the fact that these reports had not been distributed to my honourable colleagues and to myself, the bills based on them were on the Order Paper for several days for second and third reading. The matter should be checked, and I am sure the honourable chairman of the committee will give definite instructions so that no bill is put on the Order Paper unless the report has been distributed beforehand to every honourable senator.

I am very glad that the honourable chairman has given instructions to have the number of the report printed on each bill, so that we can proceed just the same as is done in all courts. Mr. Speaker knows, as a practising lawyer, and any man who has been in business knows, that the evidence in a case must bear the number of the case itself, because the evidence is the marrow and heart of the case. Any lawyer who has practised for a month or two knows that. I was surprised that in this chamber that practice had not been followed. It is the simplest thing on earth. It should be done, and it has been ordered by the chairman; but one had to ask for it, when it should not have been necessary to ask for it.

Honourable senators, I want to say that I have great respect for the Chair, and I realize here, as I did in the House of Commons, that Mr. Speaker has the right to call me to order, and even to lecture me, if he will—I know he will not do so without any reason, and I hope the occasion will never occur. However, I am not to receive any lecture from any one of my colleagues. I stand here as a member of the Senate of Canada, and I am sincere in my work. Honourable senators are not bound to agree with me, but on the other hand, I want them to have respect for my opinions as I have for theirs.

With regard to the fact that I did not adjourn the debate on second reading of these bills, bills that are now before us for third reading, I must pay a special tribute to my honourable colleague, the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), who, although he had seconded the motion for adoption of Reports numbered 205 to 217 from the Standing Committee on Divorce, was gracious enough to support my motion for adjournment of the debate on that motion.

This comes to what I said yesterday. We may differ wholeheartedly and entirely in matters of principle, but differences of opinion shall never affect friendship. Something which is no less important is fairness—fairness based on the understanding of the rules and practices of Parliament, of the British Parliament as well as ours.

My intention is not at all to make any filibuster, the purpose of which is to delay. I do not want to delay. I have said what I intended to say for a long time. During the five previous years that I have had the honour to sit in this distinguished chamber I have tried to feel the pulse of the Senate. Now, having gained some experience from listening to those who had more experience than I had, I am in a position to defend and promote ideas and principles in which I believe. And, mark you, honourable senators, I do not do this as a Roman Catholic, I do not do it as a French Canadian, nor as a lawyer, but I do it as a senator of Canada, so that the people of Canada shall not lose the respect they have for the institution to which we are so proud to belong.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think I should explain that I have never asked this house to pass a bill on divorce, or on any other matter, when the supporting report was not on the Table. The report may be seen at the Table by any senator while the house is in session, or in the Clerk's office after the house adjourns. The reports which my friend said he had received after the bills based thereon had been passed are printed copies of reports that I had laid on the Table in the first instance.

The report is not printed until after the bill has been passed, and the chief purpose of printing is to have the material sent to the Commons. No other private bill is printed and distributed in that way. The committee report on other private bills is not printed and distributed, but honourable senators can see it in the Clerk's office at any time after it has been presented to the house.

Divorce proceedings are in a special position, however, in that we print the report and send it to the Commons. However, we don't do this until after the bill has been passed, so it is impossible to accommodate my friend in that particular.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I want to be clearly understood. It makes no sense to receive today the reports of the evidence for bills which have been previously on the Order Paper. There is no reason why we should not wait until we have the reports at hand before we put the bills on the Order Paper. That is my view, and I have expressed it in the best English that I can and in a manner to be understood by all. I will give you an opportunity to think a little about it. I do not contend that I am the only one who is right. Neither do I contend that anyone, from the chairman of the committee down, has any more rights than any other individual member of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have never claimed any.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Well, it is a good thing to admit it.

In answer to the honourable senator from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. Monette), who has told us that we should remain in super-isolation and in admirable indifference with regard to divorce legislation, I will mention to him an interview that was given by a Roman Catholic English Jesuit to the effect that Roman Catholics could take part in any matter that is decided by the Constitution. I do not say that those are my words. My honourable friend is free to say what he likes, but he has no reason to lecture me because I take another stand. It is my own business. It is his business to decide what he wants to do, and he may do it conscientiously, according to his best judgment. Similarly, I will act conscientiously and according to my best judgment.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, first of all I wish to extend congratulations to our Speaker on the dignity, graciousness and impartiality with which he fills his high office in this august chamber. It is a pleasure to have him again with us. We are also pleased to see the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in this house in their seats directing the deliberations of the Senate in their usual capable and amicable manner.

I take this opportunity to extend a very warm and sincere welcome to the three honourable senators who have recently joined us here. It is a very special pleasure to welcome among us another lady senator, the Honourable Olive L. Irvine. I wish for them a long and happy sojourn in this house. They will make a very worth-while contribution to our deliberations. Senator Irvine's maiden speech of last week was excellent and interesting, a forerunner of what we may expect from her in the future.

I would add my congratulations to the mover of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the honourable senator from Rougemont (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and to the seconder, the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois), on their very interesting speeches.

On previous occasions I have brought to the attention of honourable senators the great importance of the tourist industry to Canada, and again I wish to emphasize the value of this business as a factor in our economy. Tourism is everybody's business, and it is important that it have the recognition and co-operation of all citizens in order that the fullest potential of this industry can be attained. There is a tremendous job to be done in making Canadians aware of the influence of the tourist business on the economy of this country. In fact, since it is our third largest industry, it is vital to our economy and necessary to our growth and development.

Tourism now is a continuing industry, not just seasonal. We have been prone to think of a tourist as someone who comes to our country once a year on a vacation, but that has changed. Think of the conventions, meetings and business trips that bring people from one place to another. All these things mean expenditures which have an effect on and enter into every phase of the economy and growth of this country and provide a source of income for many thousands of our citizens. Tourism means all the economic activity in connection with visitors and travel; so to foster and aid the tourist industry in Canada should be, and is, a sound investment.

Competition is keen. Europe is now on a competitive level, as are many other countries. Someone facetiously suggested that perhaps we should arrange loans to European nations so that payments would be made to us after each tourist season. Canada should glamourize her attractions to a greater degree —east, west, north and south—for this business of tourism is not just regional or provincial, but is a national affair. I repeat, it is everybody's business. Whatever you do for a living, this industry contributes to your income. Tourists spend money. They buy food, living accommodation, gasoline, entertainment and all the things that make up and are necessary to a pleasant holiday. Tourism does not take from our natural resources. We sell tourists food, of which we have ample; we sell them our goods, services and transportation; and for the tourist industry we do not have to package these things for export.

We must encourage travel within Canada. I believe that Canadians should know their country first. This would be a tremendous factor in national unity, and a united nation is a powerful nation. In a country as widespread as Canada we need to know one another better, and to understand one another's problems. All for one and one for all—that is the way to attain complete unity.

It is a fact that few industries have developed so fast during the past decade and a half as has the tourist industry, and this is only a short step, just the beginning. With better transportation facilities, more and better accommodation and eating places, Canada has almost no limit in this business of tourism. We must exploit our natural attractions for we have them, unlimited.

Every area, every part, of Canada has some historical background which, if properly exploited, would attract visitors. And what we, perhaps, regard as ordinary, because we live with it, might be exceedingly interesting to tourists. Other countries are spending huge sums of money on promoting their tourist attractions, so I would suggest, honourable senators, that we do not fall behind in this very competitive business. We need to get things done instead of merely talking or making plans for the future which are as quickly forgotten as an unsuccessful candidate after an election. Now is the time for action to make the Canadian public aware of how important this tourist industry is to Canada's economy.

The Maritime provinces are one section of this great country which offers the summer vacationer one of the most diversified and entertaining holiday areas in Canada, indeed in North America. Long, warm, sunny days and cool restful nights provide the essence of comfort for those people who leave the humidity and heat of the cities. There are sports and entertainments to please the taste of everyone. Each of the Atlantic provinces has its attractions which are peculiar to it alone.

I would like to congratulate our sister province, Nova Scotia, on the very beautifully illustrated booklet which I have received from its tourist department. It is a magnificent effort. I may add that, from what I have seen of Nova Scotia—and that is a considerable amount—the views are not in the least exaggerated. Nova Scotia has very lovely scenery and many historical attractions. Of course, that is also true of the other three Atlantic provinces. I have visited New Brunswick and Newfoundland and each has its special appeal to a visitor.

Now I wish to tell honourable senators about some of the attractions and facilities we have for tourists in my province. It was in 1534 that this small island welcomed the first white man to her hospitable shores. The Micmacs called it Abegweit; the French called it Isle St. Jean; for a short time it was known as New Ireland, and eventually it became Prince Edward Island. It has also been given such glamorous names as "The Garden of the Gulf", "The Eden of Canada" and "The Million Acre Farm", but to its own native people it is always "The Island". And, of course, what other island is there? Here is Canada at its best, "The Garden Province".

This smallest province has something new this year, and this is it: A tartan! Let me point to the colours and tell you what they mean. The red represents the soil; the green is for the grass and trees. We are very proud to possess this tartan.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: Does one have to be a Scotsman to wear that tartan?

Hon. Mrs. Inman: We would let you wear it if you like, Senator.

Prince Edward Island is separated from the mainland by Northumberland Strait, a body of water 150 miles long and about nine miles wide at the narrowest point. This point is where we hope to have a causeway some day. Owing to tidal currents this strait is never entirely frozen over, but winter navigation is often difficult, owing to floating masses of ice.

The earliest regular winter crossings began in 1828 in open boats, with the courier getting the equivalent of $16 per trip. At the outset trips were made only monthly, then weekly; and later they were made daily, when weather allowed. The rates were finally reduced to $2 per trip for each passenger with 40 pounds of baggage. The boats were about 40 feet long, fitted with runners. They were rowed across the stretches of open water, then hauled by the crew, aided by the passengers, over the ice pans. Women, children and elderly men were excused from this duty. And, by the way, if you took a chill you didn't have the benefit of something strong to drink.

It is a long call from those days, and visitors to our province can now travel in comfort in palatial train and automobile ferries.

Visiting Prince Edward Island is an experience and a complete change. It is almost like going to a different world. And when you get there, you will never want to leave. It is so restful, peaceful and surprisingly lovely. It has a charm that brings people back each year. It has a pull they cannot resist.

This province, as honourable senators know, is the cradle of Confederation, and the Confederation Chamber is one of the most historic spots in Canada. In that room one can almost feel the spirit of the "Fathers" as they sat around the great old table, building the Canada of the future.

Nature has been kind to this little province sitting in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It has one of the best climates in North America, with no great extremes of heat or cold, and no floods or long dry periods to destroy property or crops. Indeed, the weather has been so good this season that our Island may soon be in competition with Florida as a winter resort.

Relaxation comes naturally in this beautiful green and red fairyland surrounded by blue waters. Perhaps that is why there are more octogenarians there, considering the population, than in any other province in this country. There are many miles of uncrowded beaches, and miles of sand dunes providing a background to the white capped waves of the ocean which roll in to caress the white sandy beaches.

The Island is truly a tourist's paradise, landscaped by nature herself. Jacques Cartier's description portrays very aptly the rich red soil and brilliant green grass, and the fragrant trees and fields of this province; he said it was "the fairest land that might possibly be seen". It is of the utmost importance that this natural beauty be cherished and protected in every way possible.

One of our Island's principal attractions as a tourist centre is that it can cater to and satisfy so many tastes and needs of the visitors to her shores. It has a particularly strong appeal for the family who holiday together—and this is a family age. It has long stretches of white sand that are to be found all along the coastline of 1,100 miles, with charming seaside hotels and resorts providing excellent accommodation and entertainment for children and teenagers as well as those of adult age. Swimming, boating, horse racing, golf and tennis, and everything and anything to add to the pleasure of a holiday are available.

Here, too, are 2,184 square miles of constantly changing scenery to be explored and enjoyed, with endless opportunities for a really delightful health-giving vacation. Our main roads are well paved and driving is a pleasure, without congested traffic problems to contend with. I hope the Government will continue its Roads to Resources program. This has been, and will be, of great value to our tourist industry.

If fishing is the tourist's cup of tea, it can be had on the Island in any way desired. Speckled trout up to 18 inches long can be caught in the streams and ponds, and in the rivers during July and August one can hook sea trout of generous proportions. If it is deep-sea fishing that one enjoys, there are cod up to 50 or 75 pounds, and haddock and mackerel in abundance, in the waters surrounding this island province. A day at sea with a good catch to show on return in the evening is a most satisfying experience.

If one enjoys shellfish, our bays and rivers will never prove a disappointment. Oysters may be found on many shores and can be picked up very easily; and, of course, our oysters are the finest to be had. Island oysters, even in the nineteenth century, were preferred to any other oysters on this side of the Atlantic, and still are top favourites. In the earlier years they were found in great quantities and used for fertilizer. Lobsters in season are plentiful, and visitors to our province in May and June can enjoy this delectable crustacean. A visit to the lobster canneries is worth while. To eat a lobster hot from the boiler is something to remember. The Lobster Carnival at Summerside in July is one of the big events of the summer, and a great attraction for visitors.

Honourable senators are no doubt familiar with the early history of this smallest province, and it is a treasure house of history. It is a history of adventure and romance. Perhaps one of the most romantic names of the French régime was that of Count Jean Pierre de Roma, who with three partners began building a new world on a grant of land at the convergence of three rivers—the Montague, Brudenell and Cardigan. This was the first Acadian settlement in the province. De Roma and his companions established and built storehouses, dwellings, wharves, bridges, forts and all the things necessary for the comfort of the settlers who came with him. He dreamed of ruling over a large and happy colony, the centre of a great commercial empire stretching to the West Indies. This was not to be. His partners became dissatisfied and he had to buy them out. One misfortune after another overtook him, until one day a band of privateers from New England looted and burned the entire establishment, and the work of thirteen years was destroyed in a few hours. De Roma and his family escaped into the forest, and later reached Quebec. From the windows of my home in Lower Montague I can look across the water, less than a quarter of a mile, to this historic spot and try to visualize the dream that ended so tragically.

There are many interesting places and things to see in Prince Edward Island. Green Gables, made famous by Lucy Maud Montgomery, is at Cavendish, and here also is one of the finest golf links in Canada, easily accessible from all the north shore hotels and resorts, as well as from Charlottetown and Summerside. Distances are not great on the Island. On the south shore there is a rock at Cape Wolfe where General Wolfe is said to have landed and eaten breakfast on his way to Quebec.

An hour or two spent in the recently opened museum in my home town of Montague is well worth while. There one can see many articles of interest from the early pioneer days of the Island. It is one of the smaller museums in Canada, but each year it is being added to. A visit here is a real lesson in early Prince Edward Island history.

We have in Prince Edward Island something not to be seen anywhere else in the world. It is at Woodleigh, the country estate of Lieutenant-Colonel E. W. Johnstone, near Burlington. Anyone visiting the Island should not leave without seeing this remarkable and beautiful place. Colonel Johnstone has a hobby, the erection of scale models of famous and tradition-steeped buildings and settings. It is like being in fairyland to visit these "Woodleigh replicas". There is a 12-foot stone model of Glamis Castle with the moat and drawbridge complete. The chimes from York Minster welcome you as you enter by the lodge gate. The Minster itself is 26 feet in length, 9 feet high and 12 feet wide, not including the octagonal Chapter House attached to the north transept. This structure, with its 145 windows composed of thousands of pieces of coloured glass, when illuminated at night is a sight not soon forgotten.

There is the Stoke Poges Church of Gray's Elegy, Penn Manor House, Ye Old Blue Dragon Inn—which is large enough to enter, Shakespeare's birthplace, and Ann Hathaway's cottage with its picket fence and flower garden. There is a sundial, a wishing-well, and a set of stocks used for punishing criminals in a past era, which anyone is welcome to try out. There is also a lovely lily pond alive with goldfish which children love. Colonel Johnstone has opened his beautiful estate to the public, and many thousands come each year to visit this magnificent and unusual display of replicas.

Another historical spot, among the many historical places of which this province can boast, is called Belfast. This settlement is not named after Belfast in Ireland. It was the site of one of the earliest French settlements. The French called their village "la Belle face", meaning "the beautiful view", and it finally became abbreviated to Belfast. In 1803 Lord Selkirk brought about 800 Highlanders to this area. The settlers were told that tea grew wild in the swamps on the Island, that whisky flowed from the trees, and that bear hunting provided a de luxe sport.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: What a paradise!

Hon. Mrs. Inman: In spite of the fact that these stories proved to be just "tall tales" the Scotsmen stayed. They imported their tea, made their own whisky and shot all the bears. They built a beautiful church in the district, known as St. John's Presbyterian Church. The tower design was taken from Sir Christopher Wren. Inside the church you can see a memorial to Mary Douglas, the little daughter of Lord Selkirk, whom he brought over when she was eight years of age and left with one of the Scottish families. She grew up and married, and when she died she was buried in the cemetery by the church. The minister of this church preached in two languages, Gaelic and English, and each group contended for supremacy. Back of the gallery there is a little square window where the sexton could look out when the minister was ready to begin his second service, and know when to ring the bell.

It was in this settlement too that the Belfast Riot of 1847 took place—on election day, March 1, 1847, when Scotsmen and Irishmen got into a fight over their respective candidates. Several men were killed, the polls had to be closed and the election held later under military supervision. The fight continued all day, and all the way from Belfast to Charlottetown, a distance of 25 miles. No wonder some of our older citizens used to recall those days and say that elections were no fun any more, that they were too tame. Politics was serious business in our Island in those days and it still is, although we do not go quite so far as killing at our elections now—but no doubt the urge may sometimes be strong.

Apart from the Island's possession of warm sun, salt sea air, historical sites, and everything required for a restful, peaceful holiday, possibly the feature that most impresses itself on the tourist is the genuine friendliness and hospitality of the people. The Islanders love people. This is perhaps a big reason why so many thousands return, again and again, to visit this beautiful little province.

Prince Edward Island expects a tremendous growth in the tourist industry in the coming years, and to take care of the transportation of tourists across the Northumberland Strait we must have more and better facilities. There is no doubt in the minds of our citizens generally that the most important project that could be instituted by this Government to relieve the congestion of traffic across the strait would be the construction of the much-discussed causeway, but judging by the way it is being kicked around as a political football, and by the stalling and evading, it looks as though this is something that may come only in the dim and distant future—if ever.

It has been announced by the Government that a contract has been let for another auto ferry. This is a move in the right direction and I commend the Government for its foresightedness in this matter. When ready for service this ferry will be of very material aid in transportation, but it may not be ready for two years or perhaps longer. In the meantime the bottleneck will continue and this province must lose many thousands of dollars each year in the tourist industry while waiting for the new boat—a very significant factor in the economy of a small province.

I would, therefore, respectfully suggest that an effort be made before the tourist season opens to secure the services of one or two auto ferries to relieve the transportation problem at our ferry terminals. There must be ferries available for purchase now that the Seaway is in full operation.

Accessibility to our province and increased accommodation for visitors are our greatest needs for expansion of our second largest industry, which perhaps is soon to be our major industry. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick", but again "Hope springs eternal". We Islanders live in hope of having a causeway some time. But until that time comes we urgently need increased ferry service, as the boats now on duty, even with the new one expected in two or three years, will be insufficient for our summer traffic. Last season 250,000 tourists visited our province. We hope and expect a considerable increase in the coming season.

Eighty-five per cent of tourist travel is by road, and our visitors who come by automobile do not enjoy a wait of five or six hours or even longer before getting on the boat to make the crossing to the Island.

Why do we have to wait so long to have our requests granted? Perhaps we are too polite when asking, or too modest in our demands. Our people are noted for their modesty regarding their province. However, failure to succeed with the first effort is not real defeat. The failure to keep on fighting is what shoves losers into the discard, and let it never be said that Islanders are afraid to fight for anything they consider of benefit to their province.

The situation clearly indicates that if we are to get the fullest potential from our tourist industry we must look to the Government for adequate transportation facilities. And why not? "Federal aid" is simply a system of taking money from the people and making it look like a gift when you hand it back.

In conclusion, I would respectfully but urgently bring to the attention of this Government the great need for a Department of Tourism so that the promotion and expansion of this dollar-producing industry may be brought up to its full potential, not only in Prince Edward Island but in every province and region of Canada.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, in rising to participate in this debate, may I take this opportunity of congratulating the mover (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Blois) of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne upon their excellent speeches. I know the new senators are going to be a worthy addition to this honourable body.

I propose to speak on trade problems, which are becoming more serious every day, especially for Canada, for we know that around 30 per cent of our population depends directly or indirectly on the export trade of the country. Hardly a day passes that we do not see articles in the press stating that this country must put forth greater efforts to increase its export trade. We all agree with this, for the reasons are self-evident. To try and analyse trade as I see it, I shall start at the bottom.

We Canadians possess half a continent of the finest resources in the world. Adam Smith, the founder of our political economy far more than a hundred years ago, stated that all material wealth comes from the land, sea and forests. This statement has never been challenged in any way. After I left high school and entered the banking business, one of the first volumes I read was Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations and I shall never forget the great impression it left upon me. Later on, after I entered world trade on a large scale, covering many countries, that book was a great help to me. It was plain that all our bills, national or otherwise, had to be paid from production: for example, what we derived from land and sea. In other words, if we went up in the air and stayed there long enough, we could not meet our obligations; or if we went down into the bowels of the earth, unless we discovered a mine, we would be equally unable to meet our obligations.

We derive raw materials from our resources, and on a per capita basis Canada has more of these resources to draw from than any country in the world. From raw materials we manufacture commodities that give us our standard of living, and it will be a happy day when we arrive at the point where today's production will pay today's bills and the passing on of enormous unproductive debts to future generations shall cease.

There is not a balance sheet in the land that has any assets, profits, earnings or surpluses thereon but you can trace the same right back to Mother Earth. Few of us, if any, supply very much for our own needs. We produce special goods and services for the society we live in and withdraw other goods and services therefrom. Therefore, the vast majority of the commodities we produce go into multilateral trade channels, both domestic and foreign. Trade, as we know, is made up of transactions. One half of a trade transaction consists of real wealth, commodities; the other half is a medium of exchange, or, in plain words, money.

Now, one would naturally think that real wealth, by which we live, would be the predominant or most important part of trade transactions, but such is not the case in practice. Money is generally in the driver's seat, although the only value money has is due to the fact that it is convertible into commodities. In other words, commodities place the only value on money it has ever known. In these circumstances it is self-evident that the flow of money and goods into trade channels must be kept in equilibrium if our country is to have the maximum economic growth. Turning the tap on and off in either case is not a healthy situation. Manipulation by producers of prices of commodities which enter into trade transactions that interfere with free competition would immediately bring the producers into conflict with our Combines Act, if such manipulation could be proved to be for the benefit of the few and not the many. But there is no such law or statute when the other half of our trade transactions—that is, money—may be manipulated and the value changed, whether for the benefit of the few or otherwise.

Canada's present international trade situation is not in an enviable position—far from it. We are being challenged by many nations of the free world. The Prime Minister was right when he spoke recently of the trade challenge of the Soviet Union that will also have to be met in the near future. Russia is not only organized well from a military standpoint, but its economic power is increasing very rapidly at a faster rate than ours, and we can rest assured the Russians are going to take advantage of every opportunity to battle for world markets. Their production is held closely to the needful things that strengthen their country. Many luxuries and really needless commodities such as we have are discouraged. I quite agree with James Muir, President of the Royal Bank, who recently stated that too much of our production is given over to frills, junk and gingerbread. Russia is making trade loans today at 2½ per cent to foreign nations of the free world.

I have before me some recent figures that will give an idea of the standing of some of the leading nations of the free world which are our competitors, as to their place in export trade as compared to ourselves. These figures, which are taken from the United Kingdom Trade Information Service, are from 1956 to 1959. At the beginning of 1956 West Germany had 15.4 per cent of the world's export trade; in 1959 it advanced to 18.5 per cent. Japan, from 5.1 per cent advanced to 6.3 per cent. Italy, from 3.4 per cent, advanced to 4 per cent. The Netherlands, from 3.8 per cent, advanced to 4.2 per cent. Sweden, went from 2.7 per cent, up to 3.1 per cent. Canada, at start of 1956, had 6.1 per cent and in 1959 dropped to 4.9 per cent. This is rather a grave situation for Canada. It is true that our exports have increased, but that does not tell the whole story by any means. World trade has grown at a faster rate and we have not held our own. Our share has gone down from above 6 per cent of the total to below 5 per cent of the total. We are the most vulnerable of any nation, as we depend to such a great extent on export trade. Germany shows the greatest growth, and at the present time it has no unemployment; in fact it is short of labour and is spending a great many millions of dollars on automation and in modernizing its industrial plants.

Germany's plants were practically all renewed after World War II, and therefore it must be remembered that those plants are only about 12 or 15 years old. Germany has no shortage of funds, and her present bonds, 5 per cent (1980), are selling in New York at 106. I think the Governor of the Bank of Canada, who is charged with managing our federal debt, should take note of this.

Germany's Minister of Economics, Ludwig Erhard, is one of the most outstanding financial men of Europe.

At the end of 1959 our deficit trade balance with the world was about half a billion dollars, and our foreign financial commitments for interest on loans, dividends and other services amounted to many hundreds of millions of dollars more. The final figures are not in, but I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that they would be between $600 million and $700 million. That is in addition to our trade deficit.

We can only cover this economic gap by reborrowing to a great extent or increasing our exports. We all know the latter is the only sensible course to take. The question can well be asked: Are there serious difficulties holding up our export trade, and if so can anything be done to solve these difficulties before we reach the crisis that lies ahead? What are the flaws in our economy? I think these questions can be answered.

First, I know we have the resources and the brawn and the brain to greatly increase our exports. Many, many millions of dollars will be needed for the automation and modernization of sections of our industrial machine, especially medium and small-sized plants. It might be said that this will bring industry into conflict with the high interest rate and tight money policy of the country. I do not think it will be long before we agree with the report of the Congressional Committee in the United States, which has been holding hearings for a year or more. The committee, according to its report, has decided that the tight money and high interest rate policy of the United States has about outlived its usefulness, and that from now on a greater increase in economic growth should be its main objective. Here in Canada I have no hesitation in stating that, whatever may have been the merits of this policy in the beginning when we were told it was inaugurated to hold down the price level, in the last year or two, for every point it may or may not have held down our cost of living, it has added far more than a point to the cost of living of future generations. In this connection I would like to quote what President Eisenhower had to say a short time ago about this sort of finance, in answer to a question at a press conference:

> I got the idea it would be a good thing for me to write a letter to my own grandson and try to tell him he should stop supporting me. I would like to get over the idea to the younger generation—the people 30-40-50 years younger than we are, and say whenever we add to the national debt one single more dollar you are helping to support me, because I am living on debt I am passing on to you. You are the one to pick up the tab.

This is the view of the gentleman who holds the highest political position in the free world. Deficits and loans for interest payments and current expenses passed on to future generations, without the wherewithal to pay on the other side of the ledger, simply add many millions to their cost of living which is unfair and unjust.

Secondly, under our present monetary policy we are placing a penalty on exports and a premium on imports. Our dollar is inflated in foreign markets around 5 per cent, which in turn means a reduction in the tariff of a like amount. This does not make sense when we have such a large trade deficit. We continually read in the American press about United States exporters being priced out of foreign markets, but Canadian exporters are at a far greater disadvantage compared with exporters across the border. Exporters have to carry large inventories, as the products they produce are to a great extent seasonal and money in Canada costs one per cent more to finance inventories than it does in the United States. The export business of the free world is financed almost exclusively, one might say, by either the British pound sterling or the American dollar. Both are at a sharp discount in Canada. On the other hand, the Common Market of Europe and the Outer Seven, our competitors, are glad to accept these currencies at par. As stated, the American dollar is at a discount of around 5 per cent in Canada. Therefore, when a Canadian exporter takes payment in American dollars, as he is obliged to, this 5 per cent discount has to be met. This, added to the one per cent more he pays for money, puts the Canadian exporter at a disadvantage of 6 per cent in foreign markets. This 6 per cent acts as a tax on Canadian exporters which amounts to well over $150 million per annum.

I checked with the pulp and paper people and they told me that every point of discount meant $10 million a year to that business, so five points means $50 million. I also checked up with the metal people, and they claim that the exchange rate is costing them nearly $100 million yearly. So I know I am safe in saying that the figure is well over $150 million per annum.

If this unnecessary penalty were removed this amount would appear in the profit and loss accounts of our exporting companies, and the federal Government would receive under the corporation income tax half of this amount —well over $75 million per year. The export business is highly competitive and the profits are very moderate, not enough to stand a 6 per cent penalty, or anything like it, so a great deal of export business is being lost to Canada, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars per annum, and this at a time when we need to export to the limit, as our deficit trade balance plainly shows.

On the other hand, orders for many millions are being placed in countries outside of Canada for goods which can enter Canada in competition with our own manufactured products, on account of this back-door reduction in our tariff, thus causing unemployment at home. I am not a protectionist, but I believe if we have a tariff it should be a stable one. If our dollar were stabilized in foreign markets, as the British pound is, the gap between our exports and imports would not be long in disappearing, for then our dollar would reflect trade instead of being the tool of debt transactions and speculators.

Some three years ago the British Government appointed what is known as the Lord Radcliffe Committee to investigate the workings of the British economic and monetary system. It was the first committee appointed in England, I think, since the time of the Macmillan committee, and it was given very wide powers. The members of the committee consisted of some of the top bankers and economists of England such as Sir Oliver Franks, Chairman of Lloyds Bank; Viscount Harcourt, Managing Director of Morgan Grenfell and Company; A. K. Cairncross, Professor of Economics at Glasgow University; R. S. Sayers, Professor of Economics at the University of London; George Woodcock, General Secretary of the United Kingdom Trade Union Congress, and several others of equal renown. Lord Radcliffe, Justice of Appeal in the House of Lords, was Chairman.

After two years of close study and many hearings on all phases of the British economic and monetary system, the findings of the report were unanimous. It was handed down last August and in all likelihood will be fully accepted and adopted by the British Government. I may say that some of the main parts have already been adopted. The report has now become quite famous. I have a copy and have read it with great interest. It takes two or three days to read as it is quite lengthy. If any honourable senators wish to read it they can have it to read. It is an extremely interesting report.

The report said the effect of bank rate changes was unpredictable and that the true responsibility for any changes in the bank rate lies with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and that the announcement should be made explicitly in his name. The Bank of England can be given instructions by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Bank of England is described as being essentially subordinate to the Government. The policies to be pursued by the central bank, the report states, must be from first to last in harmony with those avowed and defended by ministers of the Crown. Monetary policy cannot be taken as a form of economic strategy which pursues its own independent objectives. It is part of the country's economy as a whole and must be planned as such.

The economic strategy, the committee says, has three domestic and two external aims. The domestic aims in England are, first, high and stable employment; secondly, stable purchasing power; and thirdly, steady economic growth. The external aims are, first, favourable balance of payment providing capital to invest; and second, strengthening of sterling reserves.

These objectives should work concurrently, but the report states they are not always compatible with each other and only the Government can choose which to stress at any given time. We have been stressing only one of these aims here in Canada—stable purchasing power at the sacrifice of all the others—and our weapon has been monetary action in high interest rates and tight money, whereas the report states plainly that monetary action alone cannot do the job, that it must be associated with the other aims.

Let us consider the first aim, high and stable employment. We know what the monetary policy of high interest rates and tight money did to employment. It brought on a recession that caused an enormous amount of unemployment in all parts of the country. On a per capita basis, if Russia had proportionately as many unemployed as we have, it would have eight million people walking the streets and on the backs of the taxpayers. England, instead of having 500,000 unemployed as it has now, would have nearly two million idle; and West Germany, which now has no unemployment, would have two million idle.

As to the third domestic aim—steady economic growth—this very important factor in our economy was slowed down very considerably.

Let us consider now the external aims. First, a favourable trade balance with other nations. Under our monetary policies we are steadily going more and more the other way, piling up trade deficits by the hundreds of millions and sinking ourselves in billions of dollars of debts to foreign countries by mortgaging the heritage our forefathers left us.

As to the second external objective, strengthening of monetary reserves—our monetary reserves have been going downward, if anything, while the reserves of progressive nations like England, West Germany, Japan and others have been rising rapidly. Outside of South Africa and Russia, Canada has more known potential gold in the ground than any other nation—enough to pay off a large portion of the national debt at least—but no new gold mines of any importance have been opened up in Canada since the last war, simply because the Bank of Canada does not pay an economic price for domestic gold. The price is set in terms of American money, which is at a considerable discount with ours.

A few months ago I inquired what the monetary reserves held by the Bank of Canada were then, and was told they were a little over a billion dollars in gold and something over $800 million in American money and American short term securities, treasury bills and so forth. In other words, the reserve behind our money is partly based on another nation's money. This hardly inspires confidence, when we could mine plenty of Canadian gold to establish an adequate all-out gold reserve, and in addition give needed employment in our mining districts.

It is quite true that our monetary system traces its ancestry to Great Britain. British banking institutions still command the brilliant services of men whose outstanding ability to deal with monetary affairs is admired the world over. But we seem to have gotten very much out of line with England in our financial thinking in recent years. The Radcliffe committee commends the British Government for maintaining a fixed rate for sterling in foreign markets through their equalization fund, as has been the system for some years, and strongly advises against a fluctuating currency such as Canada has.

It is well known that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has around him extremely able financial men to advise him. He also has the advice of the top brains of the Bank of England before he takes any important monetary action, as, for instance, before he makes any change in regard to the bank rate or the interest rates in general, which, the report says, is the responsibility of the Government and should not be determined by the market, as the Government is the largest borrower. Here in Canada, judging by what has happened, our monetary management seems to be pretty much a one-man operation by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Coyne, which is quite different from what is happening in England, where they have hundreds of years of experience in monetary affairs.

Confidence in our economy must have a centre or starting point, and that centre is the bank rate which should be kept stable, not a rate that is changing continually. The Montreal Star quotes the federal Minister of Finance as saying in a speech made in Toronto a month or two ago:

> If Canada does not maintain the stability of her currency while all other principal countries are doing so with theirs, we will certainly be priced out of world markets with results that will be catastrophe for Canada.

I think we would all agree with that statement, but it is just as important to stabilize our dollar abroad as at home, and constructive action needs to be taken in this regard. We just cannot afford to be out of step with the British pound and the United States dollar, which are the trading mediums of exchange of the free world. Even Russia sells gold for British pounds. Our unstable and undependable dollar in foreign markets is ruinous to the export trade of the country. Many large importers in foreign countries like to contract for Canadian products to be delivered over a period of months, and it is most difficult indeed for Canadian exporters to make such contracts when they are faced with a fluctuating dollar. Great Britain must find that a stable pound in foreign markets pays off, otherwise she would not fix the value of sterling abroad year in and year out as she has been doing.

In many statements made in the press and elsewhere, the people of Canada are urged to save more so that they will not have to mortgage their heritage to foreign countries to carry on ordinary day-to-day services. Now, there are two kinds of so-called savings. Paper savings, or investments in one another's debts, cancel themselves out and do not enrich the country as a whole. True savings can only be founded on an increase in the real wealth of Canada, which has to come about through the economic growth of our country. Those who talk about more savings should define what they mean. After undergoing for four years a policy of tight money and high interest rates, there is no question in my mind but that this policy has seriously interfered with the normal economic growth of Canada. When we see that each bond issue that comes on the market has to have a higher coupon rate to be saleable—which, of course, drives all previous bond issues downward, entailing heavy losses to investors—and first-mortgage lenders asking 8 per cent, and second mortgages costing anywhere from 10 to 15 per cent, we must realize what a rat race for money is going on in the country.

It is true that the banks, as far as they go, are still lending money at 6 per cent; but our tight money policy has by-passed the banks, and hundreds of millions of dollars are now being loaned by lenders outside the banks at usurious rates. Such a situation is not conducive to a normal growth in our economy—far from it.

The tight money policy being pursued year in and year out has forced our provincial Governments, municipalities, cities, and Crown companies to go to the United States and borrow many hundreds of millions of dollars annually via bond issues in order to get funds to keep up the ordinary services for which these Governments are responsible to their citizens—services such as education, hospitals, roads, bridges, and sundries—practically all current expenses. In 1956 these bond issues amounted to $425 million; in 1957 we mortgaged ourselves via foreign debt for $732 million; and in 1958 it was $629 million, a total of $1,786 million. The figures are not available for all of 1959 as yet, but in the first three-quarters of that year we mortgage ourselves for around half a billion dollars. These loans are borrowed in American money, which immediately has to be thrown on the exchange market in New York to be converted into Canadian dollars. This creates an artificial demand for Canadian dollars—apart from trade—and drives our dollar to a substantial premium. In other words, our dollar is being made the tool of debt and speculators, instead of a dollar to serve trade, which is its primary function.

The inflation cry is no excuse for forcing borrowers to go abroad for funds, as purchasing power turned loose in the economy of a country has the same effect no matter where the money comes from; and when the funds are not made available in Canada, but come in from the United States, the inflation argument does not hold water.

The United States is trying to hold interest rates down as it is helping to finance most of the poorer nations of the free world, and we line up with the latter in seeking financial aid. Such large loans, mostly for current needs, will ultimately be ruinous to the economy of Canada. The United States dollar will purchase more for the American people at home than will our dollar buy for us here in Canada. I agree with Premier Frost of Ontario, and Mr. Walter Gordon, who headed the federal Government's economic commission, that in present circumstances the premium on our dollar is absurd. It has been stated that an equalization fund would cost Canada a great deal of money. I certainly do not agree with this statement. We have legislation for such a fund, as this country has set up an equalization fund several times in the past. In the present circumstances it would be a revolving fund, and to start with the only deficit the fund would incur would be the difference in exchange, which would really be a paper deficit, until such time our dollar is brought back to par with the United States dollar; then the deficit would be wiped out, and the increase in taxes received by the Government from the exporting companies would amount to many millions per annum, as stated. Ultimately the Government and the country are bound to profit through the operation of an equalization fund. Any surplus in American money accumulated could be invested in gold, as the Bank of Canada already uses the American dollar as its measuring stick for purchasing gold. Buying gold to increase our reserves, as the other progressive nations are doing, would serve to strengthen our foreign debt situation.

The gap we are now facing in our trade balance is reaching dangerous proportions and can only be closed by a large increase in our exports. To accomplish this, our exporters must be placed on a par with the exporters of other countries so as to meet world competition, otherwise Canada's share of the export trade of the world will continue to decrease. The first step to be taken is to remove the millstone that is now around the neck of every Canadian exporter, that is, the premium on our Canadian dollar in foreign markets.

The dollar premium has also seriously affected the tourist trade of Canada. Last year Canada had about $100 million deficit in her tourist trade. That is, the amount spent in Canada was $100 million less than we spent abroad.

The Canadian Exporters' Association, representing exporters from all across Canada, at their annual meeting a few months ago, passed unanimously the following resolution, which I would like to put on the record.

> Whereas the premium on the Canadian dollar is seriously damaging the export trade of Canada and whereas if the export trade continues to be seriously impeded, this can have a most damaging effect on the economic stability of Canada.

This resolution was presented to the Government by a delegation.

Since then, both the Fisheries Association and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have passed resolutions along similar lines. Other trade associations are now considering making representations to Ottawa.

Canadian trade is being challenged at present in every market of the world as never before. Competition is becoming more intensive each month. Time is running out on us. However, we Canadians have the resources of brawn, brain and materials to meet this great challenge successfully. All we ask is to be placed on a fair and equal basis with our competitors throughout the world.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take part in a formal way in this debate, but I am stimulated to rise and say a few words because of some of the remarks of the honourable senator from Murray Harbour (Hon. Mrs. Inman), particularly with reference to the province of Prince Edward Island.

In the course of her remarks the honourable lady senator referred to the fact that in Province House at Charlottetown there is a room called "Confederation Room". I know that Province House is not the oldest building in Canada. There are many buildings that are very much older. But, so far as I know, Province House is the only remaining building which was used by the Fathers of Confederation in their negotiations which led to the ultimate passage of the British North America Act in 1867.

I mention this because the building is nearly 100 years old, and in a few years we shall be celebrating the centenary of Confederation. Many projects are being discussed as worthy of completion in connection with that great event. It seems to me that, perhaps, one of the projects which might be considered by the federal authorities, in collaboration with the people of Prince Edward Island, is the restoration of Province House at Charlottetown, and making it fire proof. It is still used as the seat of the provincial Legislature and is situated in the provincial capital, and if it were destroyed it would be a great loss and a great tragedy to the whole country. A project such as this can be thought of, and can be planned, perhaps, even in time for the centenary celebrations, and I hope that the Government here in Ottawa, and also the Government at Charlottetown, will give the idea some consideration.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Savoie, debate adjourned.

JEWISH SETTLEMENT IN CANADA

BICENTENARY OF FIRST ARRIVAL— DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 24, the adjourned debate introduced by Hon. Mr. Croll, who drew attention to "the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada".

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I was a little hesitant to move adjournment of the debate yesterday because my contribution to it will be very brief indeed, but I did not wish to proceed then as I knew there was some legislation of an urgent nature which the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) wished to speak to. I tender that explanation in view of the very small contribution, in length of time, that I am going to make.

I appreciate the fact that the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) has drawn to the attention of the Senate the fact that this year marks the bicentenary of the arrival of the first Jewish settler in Canada. To the various remarks that have been made already I can add only a few words. I heartily concur in them, and I wish to compliment my honourable friend and the race from which he comes upon the splendid contribution they have made to Canada's life—in this respect our honourable colleague himself has set an outstanding example—and to wish them well in the future.

In the speech of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Croll), there was one item which, although I must confess I knew it before, I was glad to be reminded of, as perhaps other members of the house were. It is something that some of us are apt to forget. He said:

> We must also take into account Canadians of British and French origin, both of them minority groups, for according to the census of 1951 the British proportion of our population was 48 per cent, and the French proportion was 31 per cent. According to the census of 1958 the British proportion is 45 per cent, and the French proportion is 30 per cent.

I do not think many of us realize to what an extent this country of Canada is represented by people of all other racial backgrounds. An amazing thing in this connection is that in the great country to the south there is a larger proportion of people of British Isles racial origin than there is in Canada. Perhaps I should make an explanation in regard to that. Some years ago I had occasion to address two or three audiences in the United States, one of which included a representative number of members of Congress. I had noticed in the census of 1951 the fact that in the changing trend those who were of British Isles racial origin were in the minority in Canada. I was using the figures of the 1951 census, which showed the proportion to be 48 per cent. I then became curious to find out what the proportion was in the United States. I wrote to the Census Department at Washington, and found out that the last United States census which determined the racial background of citizens was made in 1921, and that since then the practice of ascertaining racial background had been abolished. But at that time the proportion was somewhat over 50 per cent. I am assuming that that proportion has continued in the intervening years, and I may say that at that time it was indicated by the census officials at Washington, in answer to a question from me, that they thought that that was a reasonable assumption.

At any rate, the fact remains that 45 per cent of the people in Canada today are of British Isles racial origin, and I would not be surprised to find from the census of 1961 that the percentage has decreased somewhat.

I thank the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), for reminding us again of this fact, and I say, "Truly, Canada is a land of minorities."

Debate concluded.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George S. White moved the second reading of Bill C-47, to amend the Department of Justice Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill, as indicated in the explanatory note, is simply to authorize the appointment of two Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice.

The consideration which warrants this change is the increase in the volume of work done by the Department of Justice, and the increased importance of the status of that work, owing to increasing complexity and scope of Government business, bringing the Government, as it does, into contact with many outside organizations, which perhaps was not the case in earlier years. There has been a change and a steady development in the nature and responsibility of the work undertaken by the Department of Justice for other departments of the Government and for the Government as a whole in connection with the legal advice, counsel and representation that must be afforded the Government in the discharge of that work, and in the official relationships on a legal basis that ensue from the nature of that work.

With the possible exception of the Department of Finance, the Department of Justice enters more directly into and has more direct relationship with the work of all the other departments of the Government than does any other single department. It is the responsibility of the Department of Justice to advise all other departments and to draft the legislation of all other departments.

Another reason for the proposed change is the volume and nature of relationships of the Department of Justice with every other department of Government and the fact that these relationships are frequently carried on at a relatively high departmental level.

For these reasons it seems appropriate to provide for two Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice.

The Minister of Justice stated in the House of Commons that it is intended to appoint the two officials who now occupy the positions of Assistant Deputy Ministers of the department as Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman from Hastings-Frontenac (Hon. Mr. White) has given a clear general statement of this measure. As he said, all it proposes to do is to authorize the appointment of two Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice. At the present time there is only one such appointment. It may be recalled that it was the intention of the former Administration, as expressed by the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent, to appoint two Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice, so the present Administration is merely carrying out the work so well begun by the former Administration. No doubt in the not too distant future the present Government will have some ideas of its own to bring before Parliament.

It will be apparent that I cannot oppose this legislation. In fact, I am completely in accord with it. However, I would like to have more information about it. Almost three long years have passed since the present Administration came into power, and I have forgotten just what the responsibilities of these two Associate Deputy Ministers were to be. I hope the sponsor of the bill will suggest that it be sent to committee so we can get some idea of just how the work will be apportioned. We would also have an opportunity then of finding out the scope of work done by the Department of Justice, which is very large indeed. I certainly will support the measure.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Can the honourable senator from Hastings-Frontenac inform the house what salaries will be attached to these positions? Will there be an increase in the salaries of the two gentlemen who are to be dignified with the new title?

Hon. Mr. White: I am advised there will be no change in the present salaries. As the honourable gentleman knows, these salaries are in the discretion of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. White: I am advised there will be no change. It is an additional honour that is being given to these two gentlemen. I would point out to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that the bill does state what the duties of the two Associate Deputy Ministers of Justice will be.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In a very general way.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes; but, as the honourable senator knows, the duties of a deputy minister are not specifically defined anywhere.

If the bill is given second reading, I will move that it be referred to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

EASTERN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the second reading of Bill S-21, respecting Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is very simple and I will make my remarks as brief as possible at this late hour. It may be recalled that on March 23, 1954, I sponsored a bill to amend the act of incorporation of the Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company, which act was passed in 1917. At that time I gave the background and details as to the company's operations, and explained that the authorized capital stock of the company at the date of incorporation was $10 million, divided into shares of $100 each. As a result of the war the company became more or less inactive for a number of years, and its capital was reduced to $75,000. In 1954 a bill was introduced to increase the capital in the amount of $5 million because of a contract which had been entered into for the laying of 2,200 miles of submarine cable from Clarenville, Newfoundland to Oban, Scotland. As many honourable senators know, it was a highly successful venture. If I recall correctly, the four parties to the contract were the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada Overseas Communications and Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company along with its parent company, American Telegraph and Telephone Company. A submarine cable consisting of 32 lines was laid. It was put into operation about two years later and has been in operation ever since.

This request for another increase in capital is made on account of a contract of a somewhat similar nature entered into in 1957 by the French Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company. Under this contract there have been constructed or at present are being constructed telegraph communications, submarine cables, from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland and from New foundland to the United Kingdom. The amount already spent on that project is approximately $3 million. The cost of materials and equipment used at Sydney, Nova Scotia, and in Newfoundland amounts to roughly another $1 million. The work has not yet been completed because of the need for funds to carry out the terms of the contract, and the company is asking that its capital be increased from $5 million to $10 million.

The head office of Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company is at Halifax, Nova Scotia. That is why I have the honour of presenting this bill. All the employees of the company are Canadians. The Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company has a board of nine directors, five of whom are Canadians. If I recall correctly, representatives from the Maritime Telephone and Telegraph Company, Halifax, have a representative director on that board, and the New Brunswick Telephone Company, with whom my honourable friend from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) is associated, is also represented on the board.

Honourable senators, I think that is all I need to say in connection with this trans-Atlantic cable construction and the contract which was entered into on September 30, 1957.

Material and equipment cost in the neighbourhood of $1 million and was purchased in the United Kingdom.

My friends in Newfoundland, of course, are well aware of the work being carried on by this company, particularly in regard to a tunnel from Clarenville, Newfoundland, to Terrenceville, a distance of about 25 miles, if I remember rightly, on the northeast coast of the island.

If this bill receives second reading, I shall propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I should like to ask the honourable member a question or two. I notice that in 1953-54 the capital stock of the company was increased from $75,000 to $5 million, which is a terrific increase in the capital stock, in view of the fact that the original capital stock of $10 million was later reduced to $75,000. Is the $5 million increase that is asked for the amount that was required to pay the company's share of the trans-Atlantic telegraph and telephone system?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I thought I made that fairly clear, but perhaps not to the satisfaction of the honourable senator. I will try to do a little better. I said that in 1917 the original capital stock was $10 million, and that the company became inactive and carried on for a number of years in a more or less dormant condition. Then it required capital to carry out the terms of the first contract which I mentioned, and that used up the full amount of the $5 million which had been requested in 1954. Now the company has a somewhat similar contract, under which the construction costs will be in the vicinity of $4 million to $5 million.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would like to ask a question of the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Isnor). Section 1 says, in part:

—the capital stock of the company shall be ten million dollars divided into shares of one hundred dollars each, which may be issued in whole or in part in such manner as the directors determine—

Well, what is the manner of the issue of the stock? I can understand the part of the section which says "may be issued in whole or in part . . . . as the directors determine"; but what privileges are we giving as to the manner of issue of the stock? I do not know what "in such manner" means.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It means that the issue is partly paid up. Some companies do that.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Perhaps the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt), who is a lawyer, will help me to give an answer?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Some companies issue all their stock as fully paid-up stock; some issue it as partly paid up; and still others have stock issued that is fully paid up and partly paid up. I think that is one reason why that wording is in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would think so. Perhaps also, since there is an outstanding liability of roughly $4 million, the company will have to secure that amount in the form of an issuance of stock. However, a detail of that kind can be better answered by the legal authority who will represent the company when the bill is being considered in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In that event, I should think the bill could be better drawn. If it is intended that the stock be issued at such consideration as the directors may determine, I think that is the way it should be expressed. If there are to be other manners of issuing, I would like to know what they are. When we are asked to pass a bill, what we are talking about should be defined. It might be almost anything.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The stock could be fully registered or bearer stock. Some companies have bearer stock with coupons attached to it, as well as registered stock. That is another manner of issue.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think that is a detail which could very well be determined in committee. We dealt with the British Columbia Telephone bill in committee this morning and had a very very fine discussion on it.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I will say so.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The information we got was enlightening, especially in regard to the interpretation of one clause. Perhaps similar questioning will take place at the committee meeting at which this bill is considered.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Isnor, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 218 to 236, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, reports adopted.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE APPROVED AND ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first, second and third reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Committee, moved that the first report be approved.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will the honourable senator explain? We had no explanation when these reports were brought in.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, the report is printed in Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate on page 227. There it is set out in detail, and I do not see that there is anything more I can add that will be helpful. The report simply recommends changes in the salary scale for the Speaker's steward. It sets out the present salary, starting at $3,720 with a maximum of $4,170; and pursuant to the report of the Civil Service Commission the minimum will now be $4,050 and the maximum $4,500.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Could my honourable friend tell the house when the last change was made in the salary of this official?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am sorry I cannot give you that information. I presume changes have been made in the past but I have no information on that particular point, and there is nothing in the report of the Civil Service Commission regarding it.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I think it is fair to say that this report was made by the committee a year ago in connection with this matter; and, if you recall, I asked a question as to the date of the report, and the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) at the time could not give me the date. It transpired later that it was February of 1959, and it has been more or less held up by the Civil Service Commission since that time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: By whom did you say the report was held up?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do not wish to blame the cabinet—that is the last thought I had in mind. But it was first held up by the Civil Service Commission from February to July. Then it was sent to the Governor in Council, through the Minister of Finance, and he in turn, if I remember rightly, held it until the opening of this session, when it was returned to the Treasury Board, which sent it for action to the Clerk of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Because Parliament was then sitting.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes. It was referred to the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, and it is that committee's report we have before us today.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I think it is rather important to know when the steward's present range of salary, $3,720, to $4,170, was established. Was it three years ago, five years ago or twenty-five years ago? It is rather important to have that information. If it were established only a year or two ago, for instance, that fact might affect the judgment of some of us as to the wisdom of the rather substantial increase, where the minimum goes from $3,720 to $4,050 and the maximum from $4,170 to $4,500. I am not opposing the increase, but I would like to know when the last range was established.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I am advised that what this report actually does is to bring the salary of the Speaker's steward in line with the salaries of other people in the Government service who are performing services that are considered equivalent to those of the Speaker's steward. But nowhere in the report is there anything as to when the last increase was given to the Speaker's steward. If honourable senators so desire, I am willing to have the matter stand until I can obtain that information for the house; or if the report is approved I will undertake to see that the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) gets the information. I am entirely in the hands of the senators.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I presume that my honourable friend has not before him the information as to the other officials with whom the comparison is made?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: He stated a moment ago that this proposed increase is to bring the steward's remuneration to something like a comparable basis with that of other officials whose duties, I presume, are somewhat similar. All I am saying is that I think it would be useful to the house to have a little fuller information, with respect to not only the position of Speaker's steward, but the position of Assistant Postmaster, dealt with in the next report. Let me say again, I am not opposing the recommendation, but I do think we should have additional information.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I understand the salary of the Speaker's steward in the House of Commons has been brought up to this new salary scale, which we now propose to adopt for the Speaker's steward in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Are we bringing the remuneration of our steward up to the remuneration of the steward in the other house?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I understand you said a moment ago that the steward of the other house was being brought up to this new scale. I presume you meant the opposite?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The salary of the steward in the Senate is being brought up to that of the other house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are the two salaries going up together?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are both going up together.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: There is an increase for both.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think we ought to have more information. I am not opposing the recommendation, because from a glance at the figures it would appear that it has been too long delayed. However, I think when the Senate is asked to increase the salary of one of its employees we should know whose salary we are increasing. So far the name has not been mentioned. We should know what the Speaker's steward does, how long he has been employed in that position, and such other things as a careful employer would want to know about an employee before changing his salary rate. It may be that we should send the steward some compliments and perhaps a bouquet of roses.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Perhaps we might raise the proposed scale a little more.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps we could do that.

It is not to be considered for a moment that I am opposing this recommendation, but I do think we should hear the whole story. I suggest that we let the matter stand until a later time so that we may get the information.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: All I ask is that every honourable senator who has a question to ask put it on the record so that I shall be in a position to answer it. I cannot anticipate all the questions honourable senators may wish to ask, and unless they are put on the record I shall not be able to obtain all the information desired.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You ought to know all about the report before you ask us to act on it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I just cannot have all the information at my fingertips; and if honourable senators do not put their questions on the record, the next time the report comes up I shall be faced with questions that I cannot answer.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I would like to put a question on the record. I note that the present scale of salary for the Speaker's steward starts at $3,720, and it would be four years before he reached a salary of $4,170. Under the new scale the starting salary is $4,050, and in the second year it goes to $4,200. I would like to know why the scale has been so changed that the steward's pay would go up to $4,500 in less than two years from now.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I attended the meeting of the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts committee at which this question was considered very fully. There was present at the meeting the Clerk of the Senate, who is in very close touch with the various employees of this house and what they are doing; he also has a very good knowledge of how their work compares with that of employees in similar positions in other branches of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Reid: But they work twelve months a year; this man works only six months.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That may be so. What I am saying is, the Clerk of the Senate knows what this employee is doing and how his duties compare to with those of employees in other Government offices in Ottawa, and in fact throughout the country.

The question before us is that of increasing the salary of the Speaker's steward over the next four or five years by $330. He is now getting a maximum of $4,170, and his rate when he reaches the top of this proposed scale will be $4,500, an increase of $330. That is all the house is asked to approve.

When one thinks of the spending of billions of dollars of public funds which we approve, some of which we will probably pass within the next two weeks, in not much longer time than we are taking to consider this increase of $330, it does seem to me we are giving somewhat undue importance to the item.

I think it is proper for all honourable senators to inquire about every last dollar being spent by the Government, but I would remind honourable senators that this house has appointed a committee composed of some 25 members who have been instructed by the house to look after the internal affairs of the house, subject of course to our approval. I do think that honourable senators, instead of taking the time of the house to discuss the question of an increase of $330 over a period of four or five years, might do better to attend the meetings of the Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts committee where they could get all the information and details from the Clerk of the Senate. I express that as my personal opinion only, and of course everybody is entitled to his opinion.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I stand reproached.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not want any honourable senator to think he stands reproached. I am saying that I think it would be better to ask these questions in the committee meeting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My only protest was that we did not have a satisfactory explanation. It matters not whether the expenditure is $1 or $1 million, we are entitled to an explanation, and a comprehensive one. We got more information from the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition on this matter than we did from the sponsor of the report.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I have certain additional information, if you wish to hear it. I propose to read the report dated February 25, 1959 made to the Civil Service Commission:

> The Clerk of the House of Commons and the Clerk of the Senate have requested the Civil Service Commission to review the class Speaker's Steward with a view to an upward revision in the salary range.
> At present, there are two positions in this class—one in the House of Commons occupied on a temporary basis by Mr. C. Cleroux, HC-SA-68, and one in the Senate, occupied by a permanent employee, Mr. M. Nadeau, SC-A-24.

I omit the figures of the present and proposed salary scales.

> The Steward is responsible mainly for arranging domestic services required for the proper discharge of the social functions of the Speaker. He is expected to prepare menus and invitations and to announce the guests at formal dinners and luncheons held by the Speaker and to assist in a junior capacity in the performance of secretarial duties. He also acts as confidential messenger, arranges appointments, deals with mail matters and acts as valet for the Speaker during such hours as may be required. He is frequently required to work unusually long hours.

The duties of both positions in the Senate and the House of Commons are comparable and it is considered that parity in the rate of compensation should be maintained.

In reviewing these positions, the Organization Branch has given careful consideration to such factors as formal nature of the duties, the hours of attendance of the Speaker, allowance for certain meals and uniforms, etc. Comparison has also been made with other positions in the Federal Service and the Armed Forces and more particularly with the positions of Steward, Prime Minister's Residence ($4,860-$5,310) and Official Car Porter and Steward ($3,780-$4,230).

In the light of all the information obtained, it is considered that the maximum of the class Speaker's Steward should be $4,500. This would place this position at the same level as the Assistant Chief of Protective Service ($4,050-$4,500) and the Assistant Supervisor of Char Service ($4,050-$4,500).

Then it is recommended that the salary range of the class "Speaker's Steward" be revised from the present four figures to the four new figures, effective February 1, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you. We are now in a position to pass it.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I must say that that is a rather impressive argument. I have just one question to ask: Has the Speaker's steward any duties when Parliament is in recess, which is usually for five or six months of the year?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Even though Parliament may sit for only five or six months in any year, I understand both the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the other place frequently come to Ottawa when both houses are in recess, and the stewards must be available at all times.

Report approved.

SECOND REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the second report be approved.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not think I can do better than to read a similar report which has been made in connection with this change in salary. It reads as follows:

The Clerk of the Senate has requested a revision in the salary range of the class Assistant Postmaster, Senate, and the promotion of Mr. H. Aubry from Clerk 4, SC-A-59, to Assistant Postmaster, Senate, SC-A-20, effective April 1, 1959.

There is a class Postmaster, Senate, with a salary range of $4,500-$4,650-$4,800-$4,950 and there is a class Assistant Postmaster, Senate, with a salary range the same as that of Clerk 4, namely $3,570-$3,720-$3,870-$4,020. There are also two permanent positions of Clerk 4 on the establishment of the Senate Post Office.

The position of Postmaster has been vacant for about four years.

A request has now been submitted for the filling of both the positions of Postmaster and Assistant Postmaster. It is considered that the present salary range of the class Postmaster, Senate, is correct in relation to the class Postmaster, House of Commons, $5,130-$5,580, and in relation to other Postmaster positions in the Post Office Department. It is considered also that a classification of Clerk 4 which has a maximum similar to that of Postal Clerk 2 is correct for the employees engaged on sorting incoming and outgoing mail and attending the counter. In view of the fact that the employees are required to work on shifts, it is necessary to have an Assistant Postmaster. A maximum of $4,350 would provide a differential of $330 between the Assistant Postmaster and the Clerks 4 and a differential of $600 between the Postmaster and the Assistant Postmaster. The Organization Branch is of the opinion that this would be the proper rate.

It is therefore recommended that the salary range of the class Assistant Postmaster, Senate, be revised from $3,570-$3,720-$3,870-$4,020 to $3,900-$4,050-$4,200-$4,350, effective April 1, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How many postmasters are there in the post office of the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: One.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How many employees are there looking after the mail?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not know exactly how many there are. However, I believe that there are four in all.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, we have heard an explanation of the duties of the Speaker's Steward. I note that the maximum salary of the Assistant Postmaster is below that of the Speaker's Steward. I am not familiar with the responsibilities and duties of the Assistant Postmaster, but it appears to me on the surface that it is a full-time job. The Assistant Postmaster is working twelve months of the year. It is also my opinion that the responsibility of the Assistant Postmaster is considerable, and the salary seems to me to be out of line with it. I certainly have no objection to the recommendation, but it seems to me that the responsibility of an Assistant Postmaster is such as to warrant the paying of a salary equal at least to that of the Speaker's steward.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator (Hon. Mr. Brunt) for his explanation, and I would like to say that my experience with our post office has been very satisfactory. I have found the officials there courteous, pleasant and very attentive to their work. They keep a record of where we all are during the recesses, and they send our mail forward. They do their work well. I am rather inclined to agree with the honourable senator from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) in his observations. I think this may well be reviewed once more in view of the very satisfactory service which these gentlemen are giving us.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, I simply wish to support what has been said by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I have had nothing but courteous and efficient treatment from the officials of the Senate post office. Never have I had cause for complaint. I am not for a moment criticizing this proposed increase, but I do think there is something to the point raised by our honourable colleague from Westmorland (Hon. Mr. Taylor) as to the relationship between the salary of the Speaker's steward and that of the assistant postmaster.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I can only say that there is just one Speaker's steward. If his services are required for twelve hours a day, then he must work twelve hours a day. As I understand it, all the Senate post office employees work on a regular shift basis. They have definite, set hours. In addition to that, we are guided by reports prepared by the Civil Service Commission. I consider that the persons who prepare these reports are, if I may use the word, experts in determining salaries for Government employees. They do this work for twelve months a year and when they make a recommendation I for one feel inclined to accept it, even though, as in this case, it might appear that one employee is underpaid as compared to another.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Honourable senators, I am not competent to pass judgment in this matter but I would say that when the Clerk of this house is on the job and something is recommended, I will support it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: So will I. What we have said has not been in opposition to this increase. Let us accept it. It may be that what I and others have said on this occasion will benefit these other gentlemen in years to come.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I can only say that in future I will try to do better when presenting these reports.

Report approved.

THIRD REPORT

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the third report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, the committee recommends that William B. West, chief repairman, be retired on January 1, 1960, and be granted an allowance under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act, and that Mr. West be granted, in lieu of five months' retiring leave with pay, a gratuity equal to the difference between five months' salary and annuity for that period.

I cannot give the figure, as I understand the annuity has not been worked out as yet, but I would estimate it to be somewhere between $600 and $800.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, I just want to make one comment regarding this item. I want to eulogize this employee. In my experience since coming to Parliament he has proven to be one of the most willing and capable employees doing this work.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would join with the honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) in his remarks, and I extend to Mr. West my best wishes for the years to come. He has been capable, willing and industrious. His courteous and satisfactory service has been appreciated by others as well as by me. I wish him well.

Hon. Mr. Higgins: I agree with the comments that have just been made. I had some work done by Mr. West and I found him to be a most capable cabinet maker and a most affable gentleman. His services were always reliable. I understand that a good man has taken his place.

Report adopted.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the Honourable Senator Croll, for adoption of the Reports 205 to 217, both inclusive, from the Standing Committee on Divorce.—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) requested me to inform the house that earlier today, when speaking to the third item on the Order Paper, for the third reading of certain divorce bills, he made the remarks he had intended to make on the motion now before the house. As our honourable colleague has nothing further to say with respect to this motion, I would presume that reports Nos. 205 to 217 may now be adopted.

Reports adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 1, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 1, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

BIRTH OF PRINCE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

Resolved: That this house do concur in the Address of the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the Joint Address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen offering congratulations on the birth of a Prince, by inserting in the first line of the Address from the Senate the words, "and Commons".

Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house doth unite with the Senate in the said Address.

Attest

LÉON J. RAYMOND
Clerk of the House of Commons

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Custodian of Enemy Property for the calendar year 1959, pursuant to section 3 of the Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, Chapter 24 of the Statutes of 1947. (English and French texts).

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations 1960, Wednesday, February 24, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance on Loan and Trust Companies for the year ended December 31, 1958, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter 70, R.S. 1952.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 237 to 253, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

CASE OF LEWIS D. DUNCAN, Q.C.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators the following is the answer to the supplementary inquiry by the honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) which appears at page 234 of the Senate Hansard, Thursday, February 25:

The names of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada who sat and gave judgment in the case of Mr. Lewis D. Duncan, Q.C., are:

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice; the Honourable Mr. Justice Robert Taschereau, the Honourable Mr. Justice I. C. Rand, the Honourable Mr. Justice R. L. Kellock, the Honourable Mr. Justice J. R. Cartwright, the Honourable Mr. Justice G. Fauteux and the Honourable Mr. Justice D. Abbott.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FISHERMEN'S BENEFITS

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the following is the answer to the supplementary inquiry by the honourable senator from Queens-Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Smith) which appears on page 116 of the Senate Hansard. Tuesday, February 9, respecting questions Nos. 3 and 5 of the inquiry of which he gave notice on January 28 and which is set out on page 107 of Hansard, Thursday, February 4:

No specific standards as to the size of a vessel are laid down for establishing whether it is a year-round vessel but the determining factors such as size of crew, continuity of operations and so on are usually present in respect to the larger boats.

Any week in which a fisherman earns less than one-half of his weekly benefit rate he is paid benefit in full. If in any week he earns in excess of one-half of his weekly benefit rate, his benefit for that week is reduced by such excess. Thus, if a claimant's weekly rate of benefit were $30 and he earned $10, he would still receive $30 benefit. If, however, his earnings were $20, he would receive only $25 benefit—the $5 earnings in excess of half his weekly benefit rate being deducted from the regular $30.

IMMIGRATION

DR. CHUNG WOOK KIM—INQUIRY AS TO DEPORTATION

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if he is able to give any additional information regarding Dr. Chung Wook Kim, the Korean doctor of Vancouver, who was to be deported.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no information with regard to this gentleman at all. I will endeavour to obtain it, and if I am successful I will inform the honourable senator.

BILL OF RIGHTS

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, the other day the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) suggested, as reported at page 216 of Hansard, that I should be more specific in my question about the Bill of Rights which is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. There is nothing nicer than to spread happiness around oneself, and in compliance with the suggestion of the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) may I be permitted to change my notice of inquiry into a notice of motion for Wednesday, March 9, as follows:

That there are correlative obligations and responsibilities to the Canadian Bill of Rights referred to in the Speech from the Throne of this session.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 25, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Calixte F. Savoie: Honourable senators, allow me, before dealing with a subject that is very near to my heart, to join with previous speakers in this debate in extending my warmest congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the honourable senator from Rougemont (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois).

Those two honourable senators have assuredly discharged their duty with a great deal of tact and ability.

In extending, in my turn, the heartiest and most fraternal welcome to the three recently appointed senators who have joined us, I remember the warm welcome and hospitality shown to me when I first came to the Senate, in January 1956. I am deeply moved when I remember all those acts of kindness and courtesy, and I sincerely wish that the three new senators will find in this house all the happiness, brotherly feeling and satisfaction that I have found here myself. I do not doubt that our new colleagues, with their wide knowledge and experience, will make a most valuable contribution to this house.

In recent years we have heard a great deal of talk about education, and many people are engaged in making a careful study of our educational system, in closely examining curricula and in submitting proposals for the substantial improvement of our present educational system, which has been so much in the news in recent years. Since education is everybody's concern, it goes without saying that, at a time when the study of educational problems gives rise to so much discussion, we must have sound ideas on education to be able to enlighten and guide those entrusted with the education of the youth of this country. It is therefore essential to take our bearing so that we may know where we are going and what we are striving for.

(Text):

Honourable senators, if I have chosen to speak on the important topic of education, it is not because I think I have the qualifications to do so. The only qualification that I have in this respect is the fact that I am the father of a family of eleven children whose education had to be attended to, that I have taught school in the public schools of my native province of New Brunswick for some fourteen years and that I have always been keenly interested in the great cause of education. I sincerely believe that the spirit of a people is condensed in the system of education that it has; and, by system of education, I do not mean the methods, the curricula of studies and the internal mechanism of the school, for those elements are subordinate to the true ideal of education. What really counts are the purposes and ideals of our educational system about which so much has been said in recent years.

It is not an essay that I propose to present to you on such an important and serious topic, but rather an informal discourse exposing my views on education, about which it is the duty of all of us to be much concerned.

Education, in recent years, has been the subject of so much discussion that, at times, we are tempted to ask if our minds are not somewhat blurred in the conception we have of education. It may so happen that the highest aims and ideals of education can be thwarted through misconception, apathy, indifference, irresponsibility, ignorance and what not. Every Canadian mindful of his duty and responsibility in the field of education must contribute his share to such a worthy cause by suggesting, appraising, criticizing and bringing forth facts to improve our present Canadian systems of education.

The last half century has witnessed two world conflicts in which millions of lives have been sacrificed for the cause of world peace and human freedom, but we are still longing for that lasting peace and that human freedom. In the troubled world of today, when we are engaged in a cold war for the conquest of the minds and souls of men, what line of defence and what lines of attack can be established to win this cold war of ideas? What role can education play in this gigantic struggle?

In 1957 Khrushchev said:

> The communists will destroy capitalism, not with nuclear weapons but through the spread of the ideology. We are as sure of this as we are sure that the sun will rise tomorrow.

Just a few months ago he said:

> The choice for America is war or co-existence and that communism will sooner or later rule the world.

On the other hand, less than a year ago Admiral William H. Stanley, former United States Chief of Naval Operations and Ambassador to Moscow, declared:

> The choice for America is moral rearmament or communism.

We are therefore opposite two ideologies bidding for the conquest of the world: communism and Christian democracy. The superior ideology, Christian democracy, will win, provided that we dedicate ourselves to it, that we live it generously and passionately as individuals, as groups and as a nation.

To understand fully the extent and the strength of these ideologies it is necessary to resort to education. Educators have it in their power to mould our future, asserted Dr. Penfield, Conference Chairman of the Canadian Conference on Education that met in Ottawa two years ago. That being true, education must be a powerful force that can operate miracles, provided it is properly organized, well understood and generously accepted.

Never before have people so deeply concerned themselves with the criteria of education on all levels, commencing at the primary and secondary schools and carrying through to the university and other institutions of higher learning. It is true that the various exploits of the Russians in the space age have aroused us out of our complacency and have thrown the Western world into a state of uneasiness and at least of temporary confusion. But before those exploits were accomplished, educators and those entrusted with the security of the Canadian nation in all parts of Canada began to question the very basis of our educational systems and to ask themselves whether the steps taken thus far and whether the basic principles of that education are indeed the right ones. In fact, leaders of industry and heads of corporations who had previously interested themselves in education only as it represented for them a future source of labour, now have begun to ask themselves, and rightly, how they might in their own way foster and encourage education. For they have come to realize, as have other leaders of our national destiny, that all these great natural resources of our nation are of little value unless we produce the engineers, the scientists and the technicians to convert these raw materials into a form readily available to meet the ever-increasing needs of our Canadian economy. And those of our leaders who are even more directly concerned with education, and leaders of public opinion, included among whom are newspaper editors and moulders of our political and national life, got it thoroughly in their minds that education is not simply a matter of feeding the mind with uncorrelated data and abstruse theories, but that education concerns itself with the formation of all the higher faculties of man's nature. The public itself fortunately now realizes, as never before, that education cannot be divorced, except with great danger to the full development of the human personality, from the great spiritual and moral values which have constituted the true greatness of our past heritage and of the individuals that made it possible.

The advent of all the Russian scientific achievements has already served a significant purpose for it has succeeded, as perhaps little else could, in focusing the attention of all thinking Canadians on the urgent need for reassessing the value of our educational systems and in underlining the vital importance of thorough and accurate training on the part of our youth. The public today is demanding a return to the fundamental principles on which our culture, our common faiths and our democratic ideals were originally founded. Nor, as repeated by various educators, does this mean the innovation of new ideas, nor a finding of new definitions, new theories or new principles. It consists rather in redefining the old, recasting them slightly to meet the altered needs of society. Mr. Kurt Swinton, Conference Committee Chairman of the Canadian Conference on Education, pointed out:

> The aims and purposes of education and perhaps even of Canadian society must be redefined.

And as an editorial on education has emphasized:

> Too much attention has been paid to the immediate results rather than establishing a set of objectives for its population as a whole.

What is then required is a re-evaluation of the basic principles on which our schools were originally founded to ensure that our youth are firmly educated in the eternal and spiritual values which have constituted the basis of education in every age and which, even today, when taught by qualified educators on all levels of education, are sufficient to meet the challenge of the modern world of space concept and flying missiles. To repeat, Canada's vast forests, her extensive mineral resources, her mighty turbines for the creation of electrical power, are all useless and without value unless there arises a generation of young Canadians well and thoroughly trained in how to utilize these resources for the good of industry and the nation. These resources are worse than useless if, through omitting the real and eternal values in education, we lose the battle of ideas to an atheistic and materialistic philosophy.

We are in the midst of a gigantic struggle, and it is to the youth of the world that the present leaders must look for the solution of the great problems that lie ahead. The weapons and the tools in the forthcoming struggle will be different from those of the past, for the prize of tomorrow's great struggle is not geographic terrain nor economic profit. The youth of all democratic nations have a most important role to play in the great struggle now being waged between the opposing ideologies of democracy and communism. In the final analysis, it is in the idealistic minds of youth that the final battle in this great struggle will be fought and won. It is therefore of primary importance that our Canadian youth, our Canadian boys and girls, be properly trained and well prepared to meet the challenge of the communist world. Where and by whom shall they be prepared and trained? The answer is simple: the educational institutions at all levels—family, primary and secondary schools, colleges and universities.

Education, as we all know, is primarily based on a philosophy of life. Let me quote a great French educator, Dehovre:

> Education is for a race or a nation the only means of self-preservation. It is the agency by which it conserves its past accomplishments, renews its spiritual life and transmits to its youth the heritage of ideals and institutions. In other words, the ideals of education are the ideals of a race and culture.

Man is made up of two substances, one is material and the other is spiritual. The work of education is to consecrate itself to both the spiritual and the material. To work on one at the expense of the other would only show deep ignorance or neglect of what the integral education of a child of God should be. Someone has wisely said that "evil is due to ignorance and can be cured by education". We can add to this another truth, that "ignorance breeds evil".

The important agent in education is the child. Unable to provide for himself, he is entitled to physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual education. It is through physical education that the child will develop physically; it is by intellectual education that his intelligence will be developed and cultivated; it is through moral education that his character will be moulded, that his will shall be strong, firm and just; it is through religious and sentimental education that his heart will learn to be good, kind, compassionate and to love. In a word, it is by education that the child will become a man of duty, a man of character, a man of heart, a man of wisdom, a man of action. It is through civic education and training that the child will grow up in the love of his country, in a true and Christian love that will not degenerate into narrow nationalism. The words of Sir Richard Livingstone are of particular importance today. Like many others before and after him, he cites the great need of reinstating the moral and spiritual values in our education:

> The efficiency of a community will depend on its technical and vocational education. But the quality of its civilization depends on something else. It depends on its standards, its sense of values, its idea of what is first and what is not. Our knowledge of the sciences, natural or social, fixes the limits of the course within which the yachts on which humanity must sail but does not indicate the goal of their voyage still less supply the wind to fill the sails.

As the education of the child begins at birth and continues throughout his entire life, the first education that he receives and the one that leaves indelible impressions takes place in the home. The family is the fundamental unit of society. It is its very life blood. Not only is the family the first agency in education, but it is also the most important and the most effective of all formative agencies because it is the source of all education and without it higher education will be incomplete.

During the last few decades, many events have imparted to minds and to morality a new turn. The family, unfortunately, could not easily avoid the danger of being contaminated. There are ills that corrode the family and its slow decay spells also the gradual corrosion of society itself. The problem in our modern home is that it is losing sight of the true values that constituted its greatness in the past and ignoring the sense of what it is in reality and what it should always be.

H. R. Matthews, in discussing "the role of the home in education", says:

> What is our role in the home or family area with reference to the formal education of our children? The home should provide an atmosphere in which the basic needs of the child can be satisfied. What kind of a home fulfils these conditions? The answer is simple—a happy home. The happy and contented mother with no knowledge of psychology, who loves her children, is a much better parent than an unhappy and discontented mother with a Ph.D. in child development.

The basic principle in the home is love; first, love of God and then mutual love between husband and wife, mutual love between children, father and mother. A home will be happy if there is love, and where there is love there is sacrifice. It is "by the law of sacrifice that love is revealed". There cannot be sacrifice without faith in God and without religious teaching.

No one can ever replace the parents, especially the mother, in the education of the child. The mother, the real mother, is by nature a great educator; she dreams great dreams for her children. Her maternal instincts, her motherly love, devotion and self denial imprint into the heart and mind of the child lasting impressions that will be a determining force throughout his entire life.

The mother's place is at home. How many mothers, however, do not understand it and, without being compelled by economic reasons, seek positions outside the home? What about their children? Well, those who can afford it place them in day nurseries. But basically every child needs his mother, and the care and proficiency of those who look after them cannot make up for the motherly affection and care, the formation of the heart and of the mind that only a mother can give.

What about the mothers who work because they are compelled to do so for economic reasons? Mrs. Henrietta L. Gordon, Director of Publications and Information of the Child Welfare League of America, who recently gave an address to the Conference on Child Placement at the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, said:

> Some of the mothers who work because they must for economic reasons should be subsidized to stay home.

The shifting of the mother from the home to factories, stores, etc., is one of the main ills that corrode our modern society because it attacks and weakens the very unit of that society—the family.

But there is another evil which is greater than the one just described, and that is the breaking up of homes through divorces. The last fifteen years have seen a disheartening increase in the number of divorces granted in Canada. From 1944 to 1958, inclusive, over 90,000 divorces have been granted; to be exact, 91,271, as compared with 25,955 during the previous fifteen years, 1929 to 1943 inclusive, an increase of about 250 per cent. These figures demonstrate not only a weakening in the fabric of the institution of the family but they point to the moral deterioration of people who should be parents with a sense of their high calling. How many children were affected by these thousands of broken homes and what became of them? I attempted to find out the exact number of children affected by these dissolutions of marriages and what became of them, but I was told by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that there was no available information thereon. That is very unfortunate indeed! If we only knew what has been the fate of those unfortunate children we might change our minds about divorce. Let me quote a Canadian teacher on this point:

> Children from these broken homes are thrown on their own resources and find in the gang the security lacking at home and become proud of the title of "juvenile delinquent".

This situation is really depressing and what has been said reveals that the family is disintegrating; and, as the family is the life blood of society, that disintegration spells also the disintegration of the Canadian nation. These are indications that something is definitely wrong and that our Canada is beginning to decay from within. In 1928 there were 75,772 marriages and 790 divorces, the rate being then one divorce for every 96 marriages; but in 1958, thirty years later, there were 130,523 marriages and 6,211 divorces the rate being therefore a divorce for 21 marriages, an increase of over 350%. If the divorce rate is to continue to rise, and the indications are that it will, the decay of the family will ultimately bring about the decay of our people as a nation. Let us not forget that the family is the barometer of a nation, and that it is in the home that the nation is decided. What happens in the home now and tomorrow will some day, perhaps sooner than we expect, happen in our Government. As we behave in the home, so shall the nation behave.

If I stress the importance of family education, it is because I am deeply convinced that it plays a very important part in the building up of a nation. The family is the training school for democratic and Christian life but only on condition that family life be not disrupted, that the home be not a school of egotism, of neutralism and of other undesirable and dangerous "isms", that each parent learn to put up with the failings of his or her consort, accept sacrifice for the sake of the children and recognize that his and her most important duty is to surround them with love, respect, dignity and honour and ever keep a firm eye on their religious and moral formation.

Let me quote here Sir Ronald Gould, President of the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Profession:

> You have to remember that the people who live with a child at home also have a very big responsibility for the well-being of the child. You ought to remember that the moral and the intellectual and the physical standards depend to a very great extent upon the home. Indeed, they form a bigger part of the child's education than very many people have ever realized.

If the first factor in the education of the child, the family, plays its role well, the task of the second factor, the school, will be greatly facilitated. The school being the extension of the home, much of what has been said about parents can be applied to the teacher, who receives from the parents a mandate to continue and help to complete the education of the child. We are complaining over and bewailing the failures of our educational systems and I believe we are partly justified in doing so. The public in general is inclined to blame the school, and in turn the school is disposed to throw the blame on the home. Who is right and who is wrong? I am not qualified to answer that question, but I might risk saying that both are wrong in their conception of education. If the home fails to understand its role in the education of the child, as I have tried to explain, and if the school refuses to accept its full responsibility, then something is definitely wrong and, sooner or later, something will snap. If it is the parents' responsibility to look after the moral, religious, physical and intellectual formation of the child, and if the school is really the extension of the home and if the teacher is the mandatory of the parents, then both factors must have the same conception of the enormous task to be accomplished and both must be properly equipped to do the job properly.

It is inconceivable to think that in the home religion must occupy the first place while in the school it has not even the place of a pariah. Are we logical in affirming that the school is the extension of the home and the teacher the mandatory of the parents? If so, we are superlatively illogical in admitting that schools must be neutral in matters of religion. Neutralism is one of those "isms" to which I alluded a while ago; it is an ideology which is as bad as communism and which certainly disintegrates our so-called modern democracies. To attempt to save the world from utter destruction without religion is Utopian. Neutral education as regards to religion is a meaningless expression, because man being by nature a religious being his education must be religious, otherwise it will not be a human education. A few years ago the Most Reverend George Frederick Kingston, Anglican Archbishop of Nova Scotia and Primate of all Canada, declared:

> A return to religion is a crying need in Canada to stem a growing tide of secularism which is having an insidious influence on our nation. The emphasis on the material at the expense of the spiritual is greatest in Canadian homes and schools which, in many cases, are failing in their obligation to provide a rising generation of young Canadians with a proper appreciation of spiritual values. If educational institutions divorce education from religious influence, they breed a type of robot youth morally untrained to face life.

Let me quote another statement which emanated in 1953 from the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States representing some 35 million Christians. I quote from Life magazine:

> Our culture is in danger of becoming pagan. To prevent this tragedy, religion must be placed at the very heart of education.

If, thus far, I have said little about the twofold problem that Canada faces today, namely, the quality and quantity of teachers to master the situation, it is because I am of those who believe that, before erecting a structure, one must be sure that it can support the whole weight and even more. Throughout my discourse I have endeavoured to do just that, namely, to lay the foundation of what I believe our Canadian educational structure should be, the very structure where will be moulded the minds of tomorrow. That foundation must be solidly laid with intellectual and material values reinforced with morals, ethics, religion, and human values. That is education in the full sense of the word. Schools and universities must educate and not only instruct, as is generally the case at the present time. In a brief presented two years ago by the Canadian Teachers' Federation the Prime Minister was informed of the inadequacy of many teachers now engaged in that profession. It was stated:

> Many thousands of young Canadians are dependent for their education upon teachers who are immature, relatively uneducated and inadequately trained for the job.

A group of educational experts at a meeting held in Geneva last year reported:

> Education is being devalued in many countries by the employment of a large number of unqualified teachers, by lowering standards for admission and for qualification and, in many cases, people are allowed to teach without training or qualifications.

These specialists in education added that teaching should be considered by leaders in all fields as well as by the public in general as "an investment in the intellectual, moral and material progress of mankind".

Let me quote K. R. Swinton again:

> Canada is spending annually about $1¾ billion on defence and about $1¼ billion on education.

He continues by saying:

> This situation will be the reverse in a few years and Canadian taxpayers must be taught to look on education as a capital investment, not as an expense as most do today.

The teacher is the very soul of the school as the parents are the soul of the home. The duty of both is to mould the child's character and make of him a useful and well educated citizen. That being said, I ask a simple question: Are those who are at present teaching in our halls of learning fully prepared and qualified to undertake the great task that lies before the modern educator? Ten or twenty years ago, before the youth of our nation were asked to concern themselves with various ideologies and scientific developments that now threaten the very bulwark of our Christian and democratic way of life, a teacher was not expected to form minds and character to the same degree as is required today. The situation now requires much more from the modern teacher for he must not only be a leader and a dynamic personality in his own right but, much more important, he must be able to inspire, to fortify and to inculcate in the sceptical minds of modern youth a firm and reasoned belief in Christian and democratic ideals. This is not a task for weaklings or for those who blindly and without question accept the beliefs of others. I repeat that we are in the midst of a great struggle and we are not sure that we can win it. The youth in Russia know what communism is since it is instilled into them from their childhood and the state sees that it is done and that it continues to be done by educators at all levels of education. Unfortunately some of our young people not only ignore the dangers of the communist ideology but they do not know what Christian democracy is. We must awaken to realize that with Sputniks and Luniks wending their circuitous course through the orbit and with the opposing ideologies of democracy and communism struggling to tilt the weight of world opinion and especially to gain the support of the young idealistic minds, it has become a matter of first importance that those in positions of authority and influence shall be able to give clear and positive answers to the questioning minds of the youth. The young men and women of today require just such answers, and that is the task of the educators at all levels, beginning with the family. We have a tremendous job on our hands and our duty is to find a tangible solution to the great problem of the quantity and the quality of teachers about which I shall say just a few words.

We all agree that the social prestige of the teacher is not what it should be. Would that fact explain why there is a scarcity of teachers and why there are so many unqualified teachers in our schools? If so, are we willing to grant the social prestige that should be accorded to the teacher? Are we also prepared to grant the educator a professional status on a par with the lawyer, the doctor, the engineer, the scientist, et cetera? More important, are we willing to assure a salary scale that is proportionate with the ability and the working hours demanded of the conscientious educator? Are we prepared to admit that education is a capital investment and not an expense? If we are to recruit those with a true vocation for teaching, endowed with an intelligent grasp of Christian and democratic ideals and truly capable of transmitting them to others endowed with the natural qualities of determination, self-confidence and moral strength which should be the mark of every teacher, then we must begin to restore to this profession the prestige which it merits. The teaching profession must then be more attractive, more appealing, hence more lucrative. The salaries paid at all levels of education, especially at the higher levels, are definitely too low; they are far below the comparative level of earnings of other professions that are not more important than the profession of educator. As a consequence, the young men who are thinking of embracing the teaching profession are compelled to turn away from that career precisely because of the uncertainty of the future in as far as earnings are concerned. But we need more teachers, more educators. We need better teachers, who must be highly trained and educated, and this demands more money. It might look like a vicious circle, but however vicious it may be it must be destroyed; and the sooner it is broken, the better it will be for our people as a nation.

The only way to solve the twofold problem that Canada faces today, namely, the quality and quantity of teachers needed to master the situation, is, as I have just said, to make the teaching profession more important, more attractive, by making it more lucrative. That is the only practical solution. If that is done, young men and women of superior minds and in larger number will gladly accept teaching as a profession, and that is exactly what is needed in the great crisis that we are going through. Western democracy threatens to lose the contest for the minds of men not, certainly, because we wish or plan to do so or because even a small minority of our country would wish it so, but rather by simple default. What are dollars and cents in comparison to such a loss? If by expenditure of moneys at all levels—federal, provincial, municipal, and family—and by the co-operation and understanding of all our industrial corporation and other organizations, each of which has a vital stake in the matter, we safeguard the minds of our youth and save our democratic and Christian civilization, the financial sacrifice will be a small wage to pay indeed.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that we are engaged in a crucial struggle for the conquest of the minds and souls of men, and following that statement I asked two simple but important questions: First, what line of defence can and must be established to win this cold war of ideas? Secondly, what role can education play in the gigantic struggle in which we are engaged?

If a hot war took place, our first line of defence would no doubt be the H-bomb and other nuclear weapons. Whatever weapons are used, such a war would demand huge sacrifice of money and human lives on the part of the Western world, but no sacrifice would be too great to save our Christian civilization. To build up our line of defence, men of superior minds in all fields of activities will be at work: highly trained engineers, scientists, technicians, military experts, all of whom are educated and prepared in our schools and universities. But if the present cold war should persist and if Khrushchev is right in saying that the communist will destroy capitalism, and therefore democracy, not with nuclear weapons but through the spread of the communistic ideology, then other means of defence will and must be used. Our first line of defence in this case will be education, for to combat an ideology such as communism another ideology must be used, and naturally it should be Christian democracy. But our people must know what Christian democracy is; they must know what it means, they must believe in it and live it passionately. That is the work of education. Our educational system must be so organized as to inculcate in the minds of our Canadian people the dangers that confront the democratic world, and what kind of civilization we are defending and what financial sacrifices we are ready to make to save that civilization. If education is our first line of defence, are we prepared to spend as many billions to build it up as we would to put up the line of defence for a hot war?

In So Little for the Mind, Hilda Neatby says:

> In the existing cold war no one would think of saying bluntly that we are spending so many billions a year to push back the Russians. We are defending our civilization and we are prepared to allow a lavish expenditure of lives as well as money in the process. It seems not unreasonable to suggest that we should know something of the nature of civilization that we defend. It seems quite in accord with the best scientific procedure to examine the civilization and determine the faith which has given it life as a means of deciding whether it is worth defending.

Let me bring this discourse to an end by quoting the words of one of the greatest statesmen of our times, Sir Winston Churchill:

> The flame of Christian ethics is still our highest guide. To guard and cherish it is our first interest both spiritually and materially. The fulfilment of spiritual duty in our daily life is vital to our survival. Only by bringing it into perfect application can we hope to solve for ourselves problems of this world and not of this world alone.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bois, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-18, to incorporate Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill provides for the incorporation of a company by the name of Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada. The bill is in form as settled by Mr. MacGregor, Superintendent of the Department of Insurance. Some of the petitioners for incorporation of this company are residents of the United States, but the majority of them are Canadians resident in the city of London, Ontario.

The authorized capital of the company is to be $1 million, divided into shares of $100 each, and the amount to be subscribed before the general meeting for the election of directors is $500,000.

The head office of the company is to be in the city of London, Ontario.

The objects of the company are to undertake and transact practically all kinds of insurance except life insurance contracts. Section 6 sets out the various classes of insurance which the company is to be empowered to transact. The company cannot carry on any business until $280,000 of the subscribed stock has been paid in, and then it can carry on business in only the classes of insurance specified in section 7, that is a limited classification of subjects of insurance.

Then, to carry on additional classes of business certain additions must be made to the paid-up capital of the company, as provided in subsection 2 of section 7 of the bill.

This company will be a wholly-owned subsidiary of a corporation by the name of Delta Acceptance Corporation Limited, a company incorporated under the Ontario Companies Act, whose head office is in the city of London. It carries on business in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario and, as its name implies, it is a company that is in the business of discounting commercial paper such as automobile sales contracts and so forth. Delta Insurance Corporation is quite a large company, having assets of over $38 million. It has a wholly-owned subsidiary by the name of Crescent Finance Corporation Limited, which holds a federal small loans licence.

It is proposed that the company to be incorporated under this bill will be used by Delta to write coverage on assets which are financed by it. I understand it to be a fact that practically every one of these major acceptance companies which finance automobile paper and other paper of that kind has its own insurance company subsidiary. Delta Acceptance Corporation is now doing the same as is done by these other major companies, namely, incorporating its own insurance company.

I believe the petitioners for incorporation of the company are all men of high repute and good standing in their communities.

Honourable senators, if this bill passes second reading tonight I will propose that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF CANADA—SECOND READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the second reading of Bill S-19, to incorporate The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I think perhaps that I should explain this bill at least briefly.

The purpose of the bill is to permit the amalgamation of four existing Canadian Lutheran church organizations into a new church organization to be known as The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada.

The four existing Canadian Lutheran churches are:

(1) Board of Management of the Canadian District of the American Lutheran Church, the chief office of which is in Calgary, Alberta. This is a corporation incorporated by a Statute of the Parliament of Canada in 1913.

(2) Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada, the chief office of which is in the city of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. This is a corporation incorporated by the Parliament of Canada in 1951.

(3) Norwegian Lutheran Church of Canada, the chief office of which is also in the city of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. This was incorporated by letters patent under the Dominion Companies Act in 1922.

(4) West Canada District of the United Evangelical Lutheran Church, the chief office of which is in Standard, Alberta. This church body carries on as an unincorporated organization.

These four Lutheran churches of Canada are affiliated with similar churches in the United States of America. Their American counterparts are at present in the process of amalgamating into one single organization to be known as the American Lutheran Church. Therefore the main purpose of this bill is to conform to what the similar churches of the United States are doing at the present time.

The congregations of each of the four existing Canadian Lutheran churches have held conventions approving of this amalgamation. Although the proposed amalgamation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada and the new American Lutheran Church of the United States will be affiliated, nevertheless it is to be stressed that the proposed new Canadian organization to be created by this bill will, through its board of trustees, have complete management and control of its own property and affairs in Canada from its chief office, which is to be in the city of Saskatoon.

The present locations of these four churches are as follows:

The American Lutheran Church at present has congregations in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church, including the Norwegian Lutheran Church, at present has congregations in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

And the United Evangelical Lutheran Church at present has congregations in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

The geographic area covered by the present congregations, therefore, lies between the Pacific coast in British Columbia and the Lakehead in Ontario.

The form of the bill follows closely the pattern which has been used by Parliament for many years in connection with the incorporation of other religious organizations. I may also add that form of the bill has been approved by the Law Clerk of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I presume it has been approved by the Law Clerk as to form only?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is right.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, bill referred to Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

CONVENIENT CREDIT LIMITED—SECOND READING

Hon. Gustave Monette moved the second reading of Bill S-22, to incorporate Convenient Credit Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is for the purpose of incorporating a small loans company under the Small Loans Act. The name of the company, as shown by section 1 of the bill, is Convenient Credit Limited, and, in French, Le Crédit Commode Limitée.

The petitioners belong in two categories, the first being a number of executives of other companies of the city of Vancouver, and the second being a number of executives of companies of the city of Montreal.

Section 2 of the bill provides that the petitioners shall be the provisional directors.

By section 3 the capital stock of the company shall be $500,000, which may be increased to $1 million.

Section 4 provides that the amount to be subscribed before the provisional directors may call a general meeting of shareholders shall be $100,000.

Under section 5 the company shall not commence business until $250,000 of the capital stock of the company has been subscribed and $100,000 paid thereon.

Section 6 provides that the head office of the Company shall be in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Section 7 bears out what I said earlier, that the company is incorporated pursuant to Part II of the Small Loans Act, and to it all the provisions of that act shall extend and apply. I may add that the bill is in the form prescribed by the Small Loans Act, which is for the purpose of incorporating small loan companies; of course the bill has been verified by the officers, but the form is that prescribed by the act.

Honourable senators, this being a private bill I know it cannot be considered in committee this week. However, if it is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Could the honourable senator tell us what rates of interest will be charged by the new company? For instance, will it be 1 per cent a month, or as much as 24 per cent a year?

Hon. Mr. Monette: That is a proper question, because, as I have said, section 7 provides that the company be incorporated pursuant to Part II of the Small Loans Act, and be subject to all the provisions of that act. It is in the general provisions of that act that the rates of interest to which my friend refers are mentioned. The rate of interest could be 2 per cent per month on a loan for not longer than fifteen months, and, for a longer period, 1 per cent a month. This private bill will be subject to the provisions of the general act in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The 2 per cent per month is the maximum rate?

Hon. Mr. Monette: That is the maximum rate. We are, of course, not asking that the company should always exact such a high interest rate. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is quite correct, that is the maximum that may be charged. Of course I have not verified the amendment passed, I think, in 1956.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, to answer precisely the question asked by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), the rate is 2 per cent per month for the first $300 loan, 1 per cent for $300 to $1,000, and one half of one per cent on $1,000 to $1,500. This is not a very low interest rate.

I am wondering whether the name as translated in French is a proper translation.

Hon. Mr. Monette: I think the translation is correct. The name in English is "Convenient Credit". Crédit Commode means that it is easy to arrange for small loans. I think it is a proper translation and one that is easily understood.

There is in our midst another French-speaking lawyer from the province of Quebec who is well qualified to say whether the translation is a proper one.

(Translation):

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: What would my honourable friend think of the word convenable?

(Text):

Hon. Mr. Monette: Commode is a more nearly accurate expression than convenable. "Convenient" and commode connote the usefulness or the practicability of making loans. They also mean "handy". "Convenient" means convenient for all purposes, for convenience and also for practicability.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Monette: Honourable senators, I had thought at first that this bill would go before the committee tomorrow, but I am apprised that as it is a private bill it cannot be considered in committee until next week.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Monette bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES LAWS REPEAL BILL

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Higgins, seconded by the Honourable Senator Blois, for second reading of the Bill S-3, intituled: "An Act to repeal certain Fisheries Laws of Newfoundland".—(Honourable Senator Pouliot).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) is not in the house at the moment. This being a Government bill, he asked me if I would agree to having the order stand over until tomorrow. Because it has been at the bottom of the Order Paper for so long I move, with consent of the Senate, that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for tomorrow as Order No. 1.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 2, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, concerning the sugar industry in eastern Canada, pursuant to sections 18 and 19 of the Combines Investigation Act, Chapter 314, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Copy of the capital budget of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ending December 31, 1960, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1960-92, dated January 25, 1960, approving same.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next, March 8.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES LAWS REPEAL BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 3, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Higgins for the second reading of Bill S-3, to repeal certain fisheries laws of Newfoundland.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, after I had the privilege of listening to what was said by the honourable senator from St. John's East (Hon. Mr. Higgins) and the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) on this bill, I was so much interested that I went back to what had been said last year, on July 15, at the end of the session, when I was at home. I was struck by the fact that a piece of legislation concerning the fisheries of Newfoundland may be repealed by an act of Parliament, provided the repeal is approved, not by Legislative Assembly of Newfoundland, but by an order in council. I thought the approval of the Legislature would be required, but I looked at sections 18 and 22 of the Terms of Union and I saw it was stated right there that the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council was enough.

After having listened to the two good speeches that I mentioned, one on February 2 by the honourable senator from St. John's East, and the other the day after, by the honourable senator from St. John's West, I looked at the record of July 15, 1959, and there I saw two other good speeches that were made, one by the honourable senator from St. John's East and the other by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I agree with what they said, so I asked myself, "Why should I repeat what has been so ably said by others?" That is why I will not continue on at great length to repeat what three of my colleagues have said so well and in a manner that deserves every praise.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, has the honourable gentleman who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. Higgins) considered whether the house might like to have it referred to a standing committee? Unfortunately, the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt), who spoke on the bill, is not present, and probably will not be here for a few weeks, because he is on a very important tour in Australia in connection with Government work. I recall that when the honourable senator from St. John's West spoke he referred to the importance of proper inspection. He felt that the inspection had been done well under the former provisions, before control of the exportation of salt fish was taken over by the dominion Government. If I remember his remarks correctly, he was quite concerned as to whether that inspection was continuing, and it occurred to me that if the bill were referred to committee there would be an opportunity to inquire from the representatives of the federal Department of Fisheries with respect to this matter.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I do not think there is any objection to referring the bill to a standing committee, but it seems to me that we might be able to get the information in some other way. However, I imagine the sponsor of the bill would not have any objection to its going before a committee if the Senate so desires.

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, some honourable senators may have forgotten the explanation of the bill, as it was made such a long time ago. According to No. 18 of the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland, all fisheries laws existing at the time of Confederation were to be kept in force until repealed. It will be remembered that the Exportation of Salt Fish (Permits) Act was repealed last year. Before that time the other provincial acts having to do with fisheries had been taken over by the federal authority. The only act remaining is the one creating the Fisheries Board, which looks after the exportation and inspection of salt codfish. That board has no work to do, because the other acts which dealt with the export of codfish have been repealed or taken over by the federal authority. This bill, in effect, does away with the Fisheries Board, which was created by act of the Newfoundland Parliament.

I do not remember fully the remarks of the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt), but I understand that he was talking only about the inspection of salt codfish. That inspection cannot now be carried out under Newfoundland laws, because they are repealed. My honourable friend may suggest that the regulations under the fisheries laws of Canada be changed so far as Newfoundland is concerned. There is, of course, nothing to stop that from being done, but it has no bearing on the bill now before us.

I have no objection to this bill's being referred to committee for consideration, but I see no necessity for it. If the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) wishes to have it referred to a committee, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, unfortunately I am not qualified to ask questions of officials who might appear before the committee, because I am not a great fisherman of salt fish. I am a fisherman of some distinction in the fresh waters.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Higgins moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

(Translation):

Hon. Henri C. Bois: Honourable senators, it is with pleasure that I join with my colleagues in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They acquitted themselves of the task with eloquence, discretion and ability.

These new senators and the Honourable Mrs. Irvine I most cordially welcome in our midst. I should be remiss were I not to pay my respects to our Speaker and to express the high esteem in which I hold him. He fulfils his duty with a smiling mastery and great tact and sometimes even with genuine humour. I offer him my sincere wishes for good health and would even go so far as to congratulate him upon his dignity and his ability.

The Speech from the Throne contained the following paragraph:

> The securing to farmers of a fair share of the national income through the maintenance of prices of farm products, has received constant attention and continues to be a matter of prime concern to my Government. Our farms have yielded surpluses which have necessitated a revision of existing measures to stabilize farm prices to ensure that their basic purpose is achieved without the wasteful accumulation of surplus stocks.

That is both a proof of goodwill toward the farmers and a discreet admission. It is an admission of the difficulties which may arise from any direct interference with prices on the part of governments, particularly prices of farm commodities. Of the good intentions, we have never had any doubt, and of the admission, however discreet, we could not help feeling that it would have to come some day. Far be it from me to discuss in detail the efficiency or appropriateness and the probable effects of the various measures which have been first adopted, then put into effect, or the value of the amendments subsequently made to them. This price support legislation has been qualified as temporary; it is bound to be repealed sooner or later. When that will be, no one knows, and it would take a smart fellow to foresee the date, because experience has shown that once such measures are implemented they become permanent. In this particular field, and particularly under the democratic system, they remain in effect much longer than had been foreseen. After all, everyone knows that there is nothing so durable as something temporary!

I think we all agree that action was necessary and that it had to be taken as quickly as possible, for the farmers had already started to settle their problem by leaving the farm. They were selling, leasing or deserting the land.

May I quote some figures:

	1921	1931	1941	1951	1956
Prince Edward Island
Number of farms	13,701	12,865	12,230	10,137	9,432
Population %	N.A.	63%	53.7%	47.6%	43.6%

New Brunswick
Number of farms	36,655	34,025	31,899	26,431	22,116

In the United States, since 1950, the number of people living on the land has dropped by 3,900,000. The last rural census showed that there are 21,200,000 people on farms, that is one person out of every eight of the total population. In 1950 the proportion was one out of six, and fifty years ago it was one out of every three.

The problem which is of concern to me, the abandonment of the land, is far from being peculiar to Quebec, or to Canada, or to the United States or even to any European country over the last fifty years.

Who can blame the farmer for leaving the land? It is only natural for a man to choose the best paying occupation. In our country, as in others, there have always been people who changed their occupation. And that is as it should be. As the number of men who have to work for a living decreases, there will be a proportionate increase in the number of those who can devote their time to the moral, intellectual and social uplift of mankind. The increased rate of such a change may be attributed for the most part to the sudden progress made, of which no one had any inkling 20 or 25 years ago. The slow and steady stream has become a raging torrent which may carry everything on its way. The danger is that it may not leave us with the same values as heretofore; those values may be destroyed or very nearly so unless we take measures to soften the blow. There is no use trying to take refuge in sterile inaction. There is no setting back the clock. Action had to be taken. But was it the best that could be taken? I very much doubt it. As a matter of fact I do not believe so. I agree that the breach had to be filled and that the urgency of the situation required action. But something else should have been looked after. There should have been a carefully chosen objective and appropriate means should have been taken to achieve it.

All the information and opinions that we were able to muster show that the preservation of the family farm is the paramount objective to be achieved. Of course, the farm will have to be adapted to the modern requirements of low-cost production and consumer demand. That calls for wider and more varied knowledge and greater financial means on the part of the farmer. Besides, he will have to substitute collective action to individual effort, especially as far as the processing and marketing of several agricultural products are concerned. That in itself is a monumental task. In order to determine the crops which should be developed, introduced, abandoned, etc., there is a modern field development technique which takes into account the size and shape of the fields, topography, water supply, fertility, presence or absence of boulders, etc. In the field of stock-raising, there is a technique which takes into account the strains and breeds which are most desirable in view of the types of soil and of the markets available, and the importance of the rules of genetics, feeding, herd management and veterinary medicine on the breeding, development and health of livestock, to say nothing of equipment, machinery, proper distribution of capital, etc. Obviously, it would take too much time to go into details. Tremendous changes have taken place in those fields but few are the farmers who have been able to keep up with them, and fewer still the number of those who had the means to do so. If we consider that the 1951 census showed a total of 134,336 farms in the province of Quebec, of which 24,187 were full-time farms and 21,189 were operated on a part-time basis—that is, farms having a gross income of $250 to $1,199, whose operator worked 100 days or more outside his farm and received from it an income less than his income from other sources—and if we realize that out of 53,577 farms the sale of products gave less than $2,500—which leaves only 35,181 farms which yield an income of $2,500 or more—then we can easily understand why the farmers' financial resources were insufficient to enable them to adapt themselves to the new conditions, unless they worked like slaves and provided their families with a low standard of living. The same situation prevailed in other provinces at that time, but the picture we have drawn should be sufficient to show that, in general, farmers cannot save enough money from the operation of their farms to introduce the changes which are absolutely essential to their survival. How could farmers be provided with the necessary capital? That is a difficult problem, but it is not insoluble. Let us point out immediately that the people who were entrusted with the granting of loans by government or semi-government bodies were mainly preoccupied with the value of the guarantee offered and that they did not give much thought to the results obtained with those loans. Thus, too many mortgages were used for the consolidation of debts. In many cases, more or less profitable results were achieved with the loans granted for farm and building improvements and for the purchase of machinery. In other words, no critical study was made of the use of those loans. This is what should be done. Every precaution must be taken (1) to discourage the continued operation of uneconomical farms which could not be converted into profitable enterprises; (2) to ensure that a man who thinks of nothing else but leaving is not kept on the farm against his will; (3) to prevent the carrying out of improvements which are not immediately profitable.

A sound knowledge of agriculture and rural economy, as well as familiarity with the locality and people, is required. Only with decentraliaztion of the organization empowered to grant or refuse loans can good results be expected. That organization should be required to seek the co-operation of local movements, co-operatives, credit unions, farmers' trade associations, banks, chambers of commerce or tourists' information services, all of which are or will become constructively interested in the rational development of all local resources. Its delegates would be the chief agents of the central organization in that group, in the event, as can be expected, that provincial Governments want to participate in such a scheme to gear agriculture to the new conditions resulting from the factors mentioned above and from the rapid industrial development of the country in the last few years. Those delegates would be key-men. Their job would be to determine in co-operation with the farmers the farming system to be adopted, the various stages to be reached, the total credit required, the dates on which payments would be made and the use, as required under the plan, to which the loans would be put.

I think that in every province qualified personnel could be readily found or trained.

That method of simultaneously placing at the farmer's disposal both the result of a study of his problem made with his co-operation and the financial means to solve that problem might very well succeed in helping the farmer out of the difficulties in which he has become involved, more often than not through no fault of his own.

You may be surprised to learn, honourable senators, that such work has been going on in Quebec for over 30 years. The only difference has been and still is, as far as I know, that no special credit is available. The membership of those organizations was made up of average farmers who agreed to follow instructions. They proceeded at a speed geared to their own means. Today 8,000 to 10,000 farms throughout the province have undergone that treatment, as it were. The overall result is more than satisfactory. I have given you an outline of that plan in order to get the benefit of your experience and of your knowledge, which, as I know, are extensive. Agriculture is and will remain "a local science". The work of the Special Committee on Land Use in Canada is proceeding slowly and is often somewhat impeded by the fact that some of its members are incapable of devoting at least part of the period between sessions to an on-the-spot study of the facts. I have every confidence in the capability and sound judgment of the people associated with the committee. I have known most of them for many years. But many of my colleagues believe as I do that local contacts are most important.

A report was submitted by the royal commission which well deserved the appreciation it received. It showed in particular that the farmers were not responsible for the increase in prices paid by the consumers. On the contrary, they were also affected by the increase, considering especially that the selling price of agricultural products has remained stationary and is now on a downward trend. The royal commission has recommended the adoption of federal legislation on co-operation. These things are all very useful, but why say that the problem with which the agricultural producer is faced cannot be solved? A solution can surely be found, as evidenced by the co-operative creameries, cheese factories, slaughter-houses, mash processing plants and warehouses for the storage of bulk purchases of goods used by farmers, all of which have been financed by farmers and are successfully managed by them. Indeed, the problem is not beyond a solution. As time goes on, farmers will find a solution on a basis sufficiently broad to be permanent.

Before concluding, honourable senators, may I ask this question: Is it not strange that we should, and with justification, for that matter, spend huge sums on agricultural research and experiments, while at the same time devoting large sums to price support schemes? Strange indeed! Would there not be "something rotten in the kingdom of Denmark"?

Honourable senators, I have endeavoured to give a broad outline of the agricultural problem of the moment. Farming plays an important part, not only from an economic standpoint but also from a social and national standpoint. It is and will remain the best safeguard of our way of life. It deserves our most attentive care and our greatest consideration, and its loyal sons deserve a remuneration in keeping with the tasks which they perform.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I had not intended to take part in this debate, but after listening the other day to the excellent speech made by my friend and colleague the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean) on a subject close to my heart, I thought I should add something to what he said.

Before doing so I should like to take this opportunity of joining with the previous speakers in this debate in welcoming our new colleagues to this chamber. I am sure they will enjoy the atmosphere here and, apart from the new friendships they will make and the happy experiences that will be theirs, I am sure they will find, as I have, that it is a great privilege and distinction to be a member of the Parliament of Canada.

Honourable senators, at the outset I think I can assume we are all agreed that export trade is vital to Canada and that present trade statistics indicate our export trade is out of balance; in other words, we are buying more than we are selling. I am sure that those who have had any experience in business will agree that this is not a desirable situation.

My honourable friend from Southern New Brunswick pointed out the serious handicap to and great damage being inflicted on our export trade as a result of the high premium on the Canadian dollar. I want to follow up his remarks by indicating the extent to which this damage is being inflicted on the giant forest industry of Canada. We can talk all we want to about Canadian wheat, oil and uranium, but never let us forget that Canada was built on wood and grew up on wood, and that our forest industry has played a prominent role in our history. We are apt to overlook the fact that our forest industry is still very powerful and influential and exerts a tremendous factor in the economy of this country. There are in Canada today 130 pulp and paper establishments, along with 6,300 sawmills, employing approximately 400,000 persons.

The other day a distinguished son of Nova Scotia, Mr. Dean R. Rogers, of the Consolidated Paper Corporation, Pembroke Division, spoke at the annual convention of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, in Montreal. I was struck by his statement that the forest industry of Canada is the greatest single component in the economy of this nation. Do not let us forget that. It is first in employment, first in wages paid, first in freight loaded, and first in new capital invested. The exports of this industry for the year 1959 amounted to $1½ billion, which in the gross national product of Canada represents twice the output value of all the metal mines in this country. That figure, $1½ billion, which is the amount of the value of the exports alone of this industry, is made up of the following figures, which I thought might be of interest: $300 million represents wood pulp; $722 million, newsprint; $44 million, other paper products; $321 million, lumber; $116 million, other wood products. The total of $1½ billion is $100 million higher than in 1958.

That is the job that the lumber industry, or the wood products industry, is doing for the economy of this country in the matter of exports. It does not take a mathematician to figure out the penalty this industry is paying for the high premium value of the Canadian dollar. We all know what the premium on the Canadian dollar was during the past year. We can make some mental calculations, and it works out to somewhere between $60 and $70 million. That is what that item has cost the industry during the past year alone. When I say that 50 per cent of the value of the output of all the sawmills of Canada is exported, and that 92 per cent of all the newsprint made in Canada is exported, it will be realized just what this industry means to Canada and how much Canada needs it.

Before I leave this point, I want to quote a statement by Mr. D. W. Ambridge, President of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Ottawa Journal. In commenting on the year's operations of his vast company—and it is a vast company—he said:

> It is discouraging to hear from financial authorities that our Government can find no satisfactory weapon to attack and overcome the persistent high Canadian dollar premium. Apparently they believe that the damage being done to Canada's export trade is more than offset by the advantages of permitting a free market for the Canadian dollar. It is to be hoped, at this juncture in the history of world trade, that their judgment on so vital a matter will prove to be correct.

So far I have been talking from the national viewpoint. I want now to come closer home to our provinces by the sea, for if the forest industry is important to Canada, it is the very life blood of the provinces on the seaboard. Honourable senators are familiar with the fact that the transportation problem from our eastern provinces shuts us out more or less from Canadian markets, so our lumber in the early days was all shipped by water to the United Kingdom. It was loaded in ships and sent across the ocean, yet a very large percentage of the output of our sawmills in the eastern provinces is marketed in the United Kingdom. Our pulp and paper mills in the eastern provinces also, to a very large extent, if not entirely, sell their products to the United Kingdom and to the United States. We have in those provinces 13 pulp and paper establishments; we have 1,615 sawmills, which employ upwards of 15,000 persons. I think it will be realized from these figures that the economy of those provinces, especially that of my own native province of New Brunswick, is largely dependent on the industries of the forest.

In the annual report of one of our largest companies, Fraser Companies Ltd., which operates pulp and paper plants at Edmundston, Newcastle and Atholville, the president, Mr. Crabtree, refers to the loss incurred in the conversion of United States funds to Canadian funds, which totalled last year for that company alone, $1,225,575—a staggering amount. Those of us who come from New Brunswick are aware of the fact that the Atholville plant of the Fraser Companies Ltd., which is near Campbellton, has been obliged to run on a two- or three-day schedule for some time. One of the factors responsible for that is unsatisfactory markets, which is contributed to by this nefarious dollar exchange rate, the result being that today there is a lot of unemployment in the town of Campbellton.

When one considers the penalty that has to be paid by exporters to the American market by reason of this exchange rate it is indeed surprising that we are able to meet the competition and keep these plants going. I am not surprised that Fraser Companies Ltd. finds difficulty in meeting competition and keeping its plant at Atholville in operation, for its products are all marketed in the United States.

But lest we think that it is only goods to the United States that pay this toll, I wish to remind honourable senators that we have to pay this export tax—for that is what it is—on all goods shipped to the United Kingdom, a market which our Government has been drawing to our attention very much in the past two or three years in the hope that more trade can be diverted across the water to the United Kingdom. Goods shipped to the United Kingdom are sold in sterling currency, and the shipper's bill of exchange, handed to a Canadian bank, is negotiated in New York and converted to American dollars. So the Canadian shipper, whether he ships to a sterling area or to the United States, is penalized to the extent of the premium of the Canadian dollar over the American dollar.

Honourable senators who look at the financial pages of our newspapers will notice in the column of foreign exchange quotations—for instance, in yesterday's papers—that the pound sterling was quoted at $2.66\frac{9}{16}$ in Canadian dollars and $2.80\frac{13}{32}$ in American dollars. In other words, the manufacturer in the United States who ships his goods to a sterling country such as the United Kingdom receives more than his Canadian competitor because the pound sterling will buy more American dollars than Canadian dollars. That is the hurdle which every Canadian exporter faces at the present time, and I ask this chamber if that is not a ridiculous situation in view of the fact that every economist in Canada today is hollering for more exports.

The honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick, in emphasizing this situation, alluded to the United Kingdom where, he pointed out, there is a stabilization fund established through the Bank of England which regulates the exchange rate of the pound sterling. That operates between a low of $2.78 and a high of $2.82. Those are American dollars I am talking about. In other words, if there are buying pressures which would have the effect of forcing the rate up to, say, $2.81, the pound is sold, and if there are selling pressures the pound is supported at or near $2.78½. My honourable friend from Southern New Brunswick said Canada might adopt some such sort of scheme, and it would work here just as well as it has worked over the years in Great Britain. That suggestion is not new. My honourable friend from Southern New Brunswick has been trained in finance and is a student of currencies. He tells us he knows whereof he speaks, and he feels that the proposal is sound and feasible.

I repeat, the proposal is not new. At a meeting of the Senate's Standing Committee on Finance last year when the Governor of the Bank of Canada was present I pointed out to him something of this situation and of the difficulties which exporters were facing, and I asked him if it would not be possible, feasible, and sound to do something here in Canada such as was being done in the United Kingdom. The Governor, I think, had not given the matter much thought—at least he was not very enthusiastic about the suggestion and I think he remarked that it would cost a great deal of money. I am frank to admit that I do not know whether it is a sound proposal or not, but I think it is well worth study, exploration and examination. I think there is too much at stake for us to sit idly by and not make some examination of the proposal to determine whether it is or is not sound.

So, honourable senators, I am making a suggestion to the Chairman of the Senate's Standing Committee on Finance (Hon. Mr. Emerson), who knows conditions in our province of New Brunswick, who knows everything I am saying this afternoon is absolutely correct, who knows how much the economy of New Brunswick is tied up with the forest products industry and our export trade, and who knows that this condition affects not only the management of these corporations but also the employees and as well the standard of living in our province. I say to him that I think this question is so important at the present time that we in the Senate should not miss the opportunity we have to do something for Canada by calling in the experts, the men who know—officials of the Department of Finance, and others who study these things—who ought to be able to give us some advice as to whether or not the proposal is sound. I think it is an opportunity and a challenge, and I present it to my honourable friend for his favourable consideration.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McKeen, debate adjourned.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW CANADA'S ROLE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, February 23, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this afternoon we have had quite a treat here in the two speeches that have just been delivered. We have heard an expert on agriculture, although I was not able to follow him as well as I should have been, and then we heard another expert, a specialist in business and trade. I think it is well to call attention to the fact that herein lies the strength of the Senate, that its members include men of experience and knowledge who are able to contribute something of great value to its debates. I hope that I am able to do as well.

I am sure that the house will be pleased to see this very important committee on external relations being activated, and I hope that the chairman (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) will see to it that the committee is given considerable scope in studying the many aspects of the United Nations and of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I expect to discuss a few of them this afternoon.

First I want to compliment the Government on its firm and persistent advocacy of disarmament. Our hope is not peace by mutual terror but by disarmament, comprehensive, inspected and enforced.

Canada, by reason of its membership in the ten-nation committee on disarmament, which is meeting later this month, can play a very useful part in endeavouring, first, to avoid internal differences between the Allies, in order that we may reach some common policy, which we have not yet reached, and with the further hope that we shall be able to reach some agreement with the communist bloc on disarmament in order that we may begin the many phases of disarmament. Much time has already been wasted by debating whether armaments and controls should precede or follow the solution of political differences. The truth is that in many instances work on both must go along together, since they are both part and parcel of the same problem. And so the disarmament conference could not come at a better time for this country, because we are in the process of making up our minds whether to plan our main defences by manned aircraft or missiles or both; and we are even now constructing two missile bases, even though the missile that is to be fired has failed six times and may fail again.

Further, we are not clear on control of nuclear weapons used by the Canadian forces on Canadian soil.

These are just a few of the problems that require a decision.

There has been some reduction in defence estimates amounting, I think, to 6 per cent. It is slight, but it is a beginning, and if it is a forerunner of what is to come the Canadian people will welcome it.

There are many areas of tension in the world today. Berlin has been on the agenda for some considerable time, and seems no nearer to solution. Now we must add to that the tension in the Middle East. Bitter tensions are becoming more pronounced, and trouble seems to be brewing. It all stems from the closing of the Suez Canal to Israeli ships or those carrying cargo on behalf of Israel. The Danish ship Inge Toft has been refused admission to navigate the Suez Canal since May 1959. Despite intervention by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Egypt is adamant. He was unable to sway them. By denying passage to Israeli ships or cargo, Egypt has broken the terms of the 1888 convention on the freedom of navigation. Moreover, she has ignored a specific ruling by the United Nations Security Council, which ruled that ships of all nations had the right to use the canal. Further, she has ignored her own promise to the United Nations to keep the canal open to the ships of the world.

This continued provocation leads to a sense of frustration. It seems that Israeli rights are conveniently forgotten. Piracy is ignored. The arbitrary limitation of Israeli export trade appears to be accepted as permanent. This must inevitably lead to trouble. Israel in her own interests must break the stranglehold. How she will do it will be a matter for her to decide.

It is very difficult to understand, in the light of such lawlessness as I have indicated, that the vote of Britain, the United States and Canada should recently have provided $50 million from the World Bank to Egypt for improvements to the Suez canal. If Canada felt that she must go along and support the loan, she had an obligation to protest and demand that certain conditions should be imposed. It is regrettable that she did what she did. The press reports that large forces are piled up against a frontier in an area where there have been two major explosions within a dozen years. The situation is dangerous; it can become grave, if freedom of shipping at Eilat, Bay of Aqaba and Suez is menaced.

In so far as our defence is concerned, we have now reached an atomic stalemate. A balance of terror has replaced the old concept of a balance of power. The assumption is that the weapons which are now available will not be used.

The danger of accidental war has never been greater, and it is more likely to increase as atomic weapons and missiles get into more hands. I have in mind particularly communist China.

I think it is about time that sanity and realism were brought to bear on the Chinese situation, where recognition is long overdue. It is clearly understood that diplomatic recognition of a régime does not involve approval. I would remind the house that we recognize and have a representative here of a state that practices slavery; yet we hear no protest about it. Recognition is simply a device to help others live together for better or for worse. We have to live with communist China. How we can possibly and effectively decide on world disarmament without 700 million Chinese being represented is beyond all reason. That situation makes about as much sense as one of the reasons given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for refusing to recognize China, when he said:

> ... that the Chinese Canadians of the west coast are violently opposed to the communist régime and all sorts of trouble might ensue if a consul from the Peking régime made his appearance in Vancouver.

An Hon. Senator: When did he say that?

Hon. Mr. Croll: My honourable friend asks when the minister made that statement. It was in January of this year.

I wish to say a few words about Germany. I can best start by saying that Germany is up to her old tricks. We thought we had disinfected and deodorized her, but we find that as her physical strength grows, so does her arrogance. This is not a new subject. There was a lengthy debate on Germany in the House of Commons in 1951. Then in 1955 that house had a debate, as the Senate did, at the time Germany was admitted as a member of NATO. Perhaps in the light of what I have to say I might indicate to the house my attitude in 1951. At that time I said:

> When the fourth session of the Twenty-first Parliament opened on January 30, 1951, at the earliest opportunity, which was during the debate on the Speech from the Throne on February 6, I spoke at length of the dangers of rearming Germany. My words appear on pages 114-118 of Hansard for February 6, 1951. There I discussed at length many of the problems which now face this house. The tenor of my speech was that we must approach the problem of German rearmament with the greatest caution and safeguards, and with the memory of what an armed Germany cost the world in blood and tears in two world wars. We cannot afford to chance it once again without adopting precautionary measures, safeguards and controls.

Then, as I have said, in 1955 the matter came up for discussion again, at the time Germany was permitted to enter NATO and to rearm herself. During the course of that debate in the Commons I concluded my remarks with these words:

> This is a momentous decision which, for good or ill, may determine the fate of generations. What we do now is with the hope and prayer that we are avoiding a greater catastrophe—at the very best it is a choice of evils. I believe this house knows my background, upbringing and family tradition. Seared and burned in my memory are names that will forever live in infamy. I have had thousands of representations and many delegations which have made a very deep impression on me. There is scarcely a home in one portion of my riding that has not suffered. I am a man torn. I have done much soul searching. My heart, instinct, intuition and emotions say no. My head, logic and realism say yes.
> I admit that the realities cannot be denied. There is no middle or alternative course. Without this step that we propose to take now, there can only be chaos. With great reluctance and a heavy heart I shall do what needs to be done at this time, without joy and with the greatest of misgivings.

I voted in favour of the measure to endorse Germany's rearmament and her entry into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The recent German-Spanish episode is worthy of examination. First, I recall to this house that it was twenty years ago that Hitler's Luftwaffe used the Spanish Civil War as realistic training for its forces, which turned out to be a dress rehearsal for something that was very real a little later on. On Tuesday of last week, February 23, there was a full and complete denial of any approach to Spain by the German Government for either supply or training facilities. I quote from the Globe and Mail of February 24:

> Canada has been neither consulted nor informed of any negotiations between West Germany and Spain concerning German military installations in Spain, External Affairs Minister Green said today.

I quote from the Globe and Mail of February 25:

> External Affairs Minister Green told the Commons today that he had received a specific denial from the West German Government that it was negotiating with Spain for military bases or training facilities.

I quote from the Globe and Mail of February 26:

> While continuing to insist the whole thing was a journalistic pipedream, External Affairs Minister Green today said the Canadian Government should have been consulted by West Germany concerning that country's plans to locate military installations in Spain.

And further on:

> Recalling that he had given the house yesterday a specific denial from the German Government that negotiations had taken place, Mr. Green then read a similar denial received from the Spanish Ambassador to Canada.

You have there a denial. According to Mr. Green's statement this was all news to him and, indeed, a journalistic pipedream. You have a denial from the West German Ambassador, and a denial from the Spanish Ambassador, and this morning, in the Globe and Mail of March 2, is a letter by the Vice-Consul in Toronto who also makes a denial even at this late stage. I am reminded of a definition I once read of an ambassador, which said he was an honest man sent abroad to lie for the good of his country. How well that fits this particular instance! The Vice-Consul at Toronto joins the parade a little late but, nevertheless, he repeats what is obviously an untruth in order to bolster up the position of his Government. This has turned out to be untrue. It is unfortunate that such dishonest statements should have been made by high officials in the German Government and the Spanish Government, and that they should be repeated by the ambassadors to the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada.

Germany's claim that present supply and training facilities are inadequate does not stand up, because rear supplies are the function of NATO, and they have adequate facilities. Germany has dumps in Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Norway, and German aircraft are using firing ranges in Turkey. It is quite obvious that the real reason was to secure ranges for testing strategic weapons in secret. It is well for this house to recall, as I indicated in the quotation from the speech I made in 1955 in the House of Commons, that it was nine years after World War II that Germany was permitted to rearm. To allay the fears of German militarism and aggression the West stipulated that German rearmament would be under NATO. Now, without consulting NATO, West Germany has made an approach to Spain.

The Windsor Star of February 26, under the heading "Now", contains an article written by H. L. MacPherson, who says this, and I think he sums it well:

> West German moves to obtain military bases in Spain have been getting a fast hosing down—with cold, cold water. This quick dousing makes sense. Dependability of those Germans in a situation in which they might become a balance of power still is too uncertain to be trusted. Letting 'em branch out would only add to the risk.
> For a long time the only safe Germany will be one with a foot on its neck. This widespread conviction doesn't rule out acceptance of such support as in their own self-interest those Germans will give the West. But it doesn't extend to the point of forgetting too much. One thing to remember is that apart from a few executions, imprisonments and natural deaths the old German General Staff still is pretty much intact.

Mistrust and fear of Germany run deep—mistrust that she is prepared to make a dangerous adventure to regain German preeminence on the continent; fear that she may well plunge Europe into disaster. I am not sure that honourable senators know it, but in another year the German contribution to the ground strength of NATO will be greater than that of all the other Allies combined. She has now 1,000 supersonic fighter bombers which can carry nuclear weapons across the Iron Curtain. In addition, she has two types of missiles, the Mace and the Matador, each of which has enough range to reach Russia. As for NATO warheads, all honourable senators are acquainted with the statement made by the President of the United States who has asked for power to hand over bombs and warheads to Allies which have proved reliability—and by Pentagon standards Germany is reliable.

The reaction to the approach to Spain, when it became public, was instant and unfriendly, which indicated that the world has not yet forgotten the Hitler-Franco alliance of World War II. Germany was told by the United States and Britain not to go ahead with the Spanish idea, for the reason that the bases which she would operate in Spain would be under control that was contrary to the NATO concept, but Germany felt she could ignore the misgivings of the Allies. Negotiations were commenced in 1959 when Germany sent an official mission to Spain. They did not come to light until February.

At this point I would quote from a report appearing in yesterday's edition of the Montreal Gazette:

> Britain today acknowledged that West Germany is legally free to produce nuclear weapons outside its own territory but Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd expressed the conviction in the House of Commons that West Germany would not do so.

In that light it was interesting to read a press report appearing on February 29 in the Toronto Star headed "Krupp Turns Down Bid To Make Arms In Spain." This report, datelined Bonn, Germany, reads in part as follows:

> The German steel king, Alfried Krupp, who supplied arms for Hitler in World War II, has turned down an offer to participate in making Spanish arms, informed industrial sources said today.
>
> The disclosure of the offer and its rejection came in the middle of an international row about West Germany's attempts to lease military supply bases in Spain.
>
> Krupp, industrial sources said, was offered an opportunity to participate in a new arms plant to be built next to a large steel mill now in operation in Bilbao.
>
> Key discussions were held in Spain early in December when Krupp visited there as the guest of the Spanish Ambassador to Germany, the Marques de Bolarque.
> Krupp and his host ostensibly went to Spain to hunt game but it was learned today they spent most of their time discussing the weapons factory project.

Here we find that negotiations were going on in December of last year between Germany and Spain, and all of a sudden there turns up in Spain a man named Krupp who is associated with guns and war and slave labour. He has been in this nefarious business all his life, and his family has been in this nefarious business all their lives.

Hon. Mr. Reid: He is associated with Cyrus Eaton too.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am doing well enough by him without the addition of anything by my honourable friend. The Winnipeg Free Press of February 9 had this to say:

> The vast Krupp empire in the Ruhr will most probably remain intact. Neither West Germany nor the United States appears to be very keen on pressing Mr. Alfried Krupp to dispose of his coal and steel assets in accordance with the undertaking he gave to the Allied powers.
>
> The agreement between Mr. Krupp and the Western Allies was signed shortly before the Federal Republic achieved full sovereignty in 1955, and was to be implemented by January 31, 1959.
> Instead of disposing of his holdings, Mr. Krupp has increased them to such an extent that his is today the greatest concentration of heavy industry in Europe. It employs some 100,000 people, and its yearly turnover is well over a billion dollars.

The report goes on to say that Mr. Krupp maintains he cannot find buyers for his holdings, indicating that they involve a considerable amount of money. I have here a press release emanating from Bonn, Germany, which appeared in the January 26 issue of the Toronto Globe & Mail. It indicates that Mr. Krupp has been given an extension of another year in which to sell his coal and steel holdings, and the report says:

> The West German Government more than a year ago asked the Western powers to release Mr. Krupp from his obligation to sell.

Honourable senators, what I am saying to this house is something which appears very obvious to me, that here was a West German mission going into Spain and Krupp invited to Spain for the purpose of setting up an arms factory. Here was an armament scheme being planned behind the backs of the NATO Allies. This seems obvious to me, and it was for this reason I stated very boldly that Germany is not to be trusted and she is still to be feared.

Though we have said "Never again" we have helped to rebuild Germany and we have permitted her military development within NATO. Though Germany promised that Nazis would be barred from public service, three very prominent members of the present cabinet are notorious Nazis. There was the further promise that the Krupp empire would be demolished. This promise was not carried out and Krupp is now the most powerful industrialist in all Europe.

We have got to, whether in this house or in any other assembly of free men, speak up and guard against the resurgence of German militarism. NATO has underwritten the security of Europe for fifteen years and it is time we said to Germany "Never again". This time we must mean it, for I think it is quite obvious that you cannot trust Germany with a sling-shot, a pop gun or a water pistol. Somehow she will make a war weapon out of it.

What has come out of this? Certainly confidence in Germany has been shaken. I am not one of those who had too much confidence to begin with, but something else has happened that is very disappointing from my point of view, and I believe from the point of view of this house.

I can recall within most recent memory when the opinion of this country was sought, when our views were courted, when we were consulted, when we were made aware and we were at least informed. How the mighty have fallen! We now read about it in the newspapers. That is the way that the Secretary of State for External Affairs first hears about such important and vital matters. What a comedown for us! No one took the trouble to inform us. No one asked for our views. We are paid-up members of NATO, and there are very few who meet their commitments to NATO as Canada does. Yet we were entirely ignored. That is a new situation for Canada. It is an unpleasant one and I hope it will not be repeated.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson, debate adjourned.

Bill SD-203, for the relief of Daniel Edward Napasney.

Bill SD-204, for the relief of Pauline Mary Ann Irene Patry Gaudreau.

Bill SD-205, for the relief of Rose Ella Katherelos Parry.

Bill SD-206, for the relief of Gwendolyn Marion Mizener Nassif.

Bill SD-207, for the relief of Joseph Ernest Coutu.

Bill SD-208, for the relief of Joseph Henri Berube.

Bill SD-209, for the relief of Maria Hocheder Weber.

Bill SD-210, for the relief of Sherrill Oridge Glandsdorp.

Bill SD-211, for the relief of Bronislaw Kulawik.

Bill SD-212, for the relief of Pauline Sornin Barrett.

Bill SD-213, for the relief of Sandra Maxine Shoore Sheydwasser.

Bill SD-214, for the relief of Margaret Maclaren Harris.

Bill SD-215, for the relief of Irmgard Poikonen Horvath.

Bill SD-216, for the relief of Estelle Labelle Baxter Robertson.

Bill SD-217, for the relief of Alphonse Yared.

Bill SD-218, for the relief of Andre Lamothe.

Bill SD-219, for the relief of Rita Hamel Labranche.

Bill SD-220, for the relief of Lionel Boucher.

Bill SD-221, for the relief of Eliza Boudreau Filion.

Bill SD-222, for the relief of William Leslie Baillie.

Bill SD-223, for the relief of Pauline Handji Edelstein.

Bill SD-224, for the relief of Molly Brenda Stein Butterman.

Bill SD-225, for the relief of Laurette Biron Valade.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the house adjourns may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is his intention to proceed tomorrow with the motion standing in his name for an amendment to the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I shall not proceed with this motion tomorrow and I propose to ask that it stand for a week or ten days. I shall give the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and other members of the Senate full information in plenty of time.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 3, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report on the operation of agreements with the provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 9 of the said act, being Chapter 28 of the Statutes of 1957. (English and French texts).

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-47, to amend the Department of Justice Act and had directed the chairman to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. George S. White moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before making the usual motion with respect to adjournment of the Senate I would like to point out that when this afternoon's sitting is concluded we shall have dealt with all the legislation on our Order Paper, and the only business left will be the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and several motions and inquiries.

For some time now we have been expecting to receive Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1960, authorizing certain supplementary estimates. Up to the present moment it has not been passed by the other house, but there is a possibility that it will be passed and sent to us before the end of the week. In that case, I would like to be able to begin dealing with the supplementary estimates on Tuesday next. The only object in adjourning until Monday would be to give the Appropriation Bill first reading that day. In order to avoid adjourning to Monday I ask for unanimous consent of the Senate to having consideration of the supplementary estimates commence on Tuesday evening. If I am able to obtain unanimous consent I shall be glad to move the usual notice of adjournment.

In the meantime, may I ask honourable senators to study the supplementary estimates, copies of which have been in their possession for some two and a half weeks, so that we shall be able to go ahead with them when the bill comes to us? In case the bill should not be printed over the weekend, although I think it will be, I would suggest also that honourable senators bring their copies of the supplementary estimates with them to this chamber on Tuesday evening.

Honourable senators, have I the unanimous consent of the house?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, speaking for myself, I am glad to give that consent, on the distinct understanding that the bill will not necessarily receive second reading on Tuesday evening. I am prepared to give consent to the extent that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) may proceed then with the motion for second reading of the bill. We may dispose of it on Tuesday evening, but I could not guarantee that.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is quite satisfactory to the Leader of the Government.

I therefore move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 8, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: May I ask a question? Do I understand the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to say that this is Appropriation Bill No. 1?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, for 1960.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Does it not contain the final supplementary estimates for the present fiscal year, which ends March 31, 1960?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Appropriation bills are numbered consecutively in the calendar year. This is Appropriation Bill No. 1 for the year 1960.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But it contains the final supplementaries?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There may be further supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand there have already been at least one and possibly two supplementaries for the present fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We had a supplementary Appropriation Bill last session, but I am not in a position to say whether the one we are waiting for will contain the final supplementaries for this fiscal year or not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This is called Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1960, just to confuse us a little more.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think that is a very fair statement.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It may not be intended to confuse us, but I must say it is quite confusing to me to see that this is Appropriation Bill No. 1 when I recall distinctly that we have had previous appropriation bills for the present fiscal year. It is confusing to me, honourable senators, and it may be confusing to other members.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I went into that question quite fully last year when I explained the last Appropriation Bill of the session, No. 5. On inquiry from the Department of Finance I found out that appropriation bills are numbered consecutively, starting with No. 1, in each calendar year, no matter what fiscal year they refer to, and I explained that to the Senate, if I remember correctly.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: As far as I am concerned it is a matter of indifference whether the bill is called No. 1 or No. 51. The important thing to understand, I think, is that these supplementary estimates are to clean up the business for the present fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is not necessarily correct, I am sure, because these supplementary estimates were tabled about a month ago and the Government has until the end of the month to table further supplementary estimates, if it sees fit to do so.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is true, we might have further supplementary estimates yet.

Do these particular estimates apply to the fiscal year 1959-60 or to the fiscal year 1960-61? My point is that they apply to the fiscal year 1959-60.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is the important point.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: May I inquire from the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) whether honourable senators will be at liberty to discuss items in the main estimates when we are considering these supplementary estimates?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: These would have nothing to do with the estimates for 1960-61.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: But would honourable senators be free to discuss items in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The estimates we shall be considering next week are supplementary to the main estimates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it seems to me that if an item for a certain department appears in the supplementary estimates for 1959-60 an honourable senator would be free to discuss that item in the main estimates for that year. But if the item does not appear in the supplementary estimates, I would not think he could discuss it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not agree with that observation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I do not believe I should be called upon to decide a point of order before the matter actually comes before the house. If on Tuesday evening next the supplementary estimates come before the house and an objection is taken or a point raised in the debate, I will decide it at that time. I do not think I should rule on it in advance.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, may I bring to your attention the fact that on previous occasions debate has not been limited or restricted in any way when supplementary estimates are before the house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) some further comment?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was only going to remark, Mr. Speaker, that these supplementary estimates are supplementary to the main estimates, and their total is supplementary to the grand total that is already before us. Everything that is mentioned in the supplementary estimates therefore increases the main estimates, and the widest discussion should be allowed.

Motion agreed to.

Bill SD-240, for the relief of Sonia Slovsky Coppel.

Bill SD-241, for the relief of Shirley Huberman Schreiber.

Bill SD-242, for the relief of Paulette Goldberg Slepp.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved, with leave, that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

SENATORS NOT INVITED ON INAUGURAL FLIGHT OF JET-POWERED SERVICE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) a matter which, to my mind, is a slight on the members of the Senate, especially those from British Columbia.

As honourable senators know, Trans-Canada Air Lines is inaugurating its jet-engined passenger service with a flight from Montreal to Vancouver. A few days ago every British Columbia member of the House of Commons was invited to participate in that flight. I am not speaking for myself particularly, because I doubt whether I would accept the invitation, but I do think it is a slight on this house that no senators from British Columbia have been given the privilege of travelling on that inaugural flight.

I would like the honourable Leader of the Government to draw that fact to the attention of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and find out the reason why senators from British Columbia were ignored.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): You could go by C.P.A.

PRIVATE BILLS

MATADOR PIPE LINE COMPANY, LTD.—THIRD READING

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson moved the third reading of Bill S-16, to incorporate Matador Pipe Line Company, Ltd.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before this bill is passed I would like to make some remarks about it. They arise out of the very interesting discussion we had yesterday when the bill was considered by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I think it is fair to say that every time a pipe line bill comes before Parliament, and certainly before committees of the Senate, we are a little concerned about just what our position should be, and in this bill I think we had a typical example of the problem that confronts us from time to time.

On this occasion we had a bill which conformed to practically every other private pipe line bill that has come before Parliament. The form of the bill was quite satisfactory to the committee, but, in addition to the form of the bill, the powers that are given to any of these companies to develop a pipe line project, as well as the project itself, have to be considered. The honourable senator who sponsored the bill (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) explained the project, and his explanation was very helpful.

What is proposed in this particular case is that oil from the Williston basin, which is south of the Canadian border, will be transported across the Canadian boundary to the main pipe line of the International Pipe Line which runs through Manitoba, and will be taken from that point to refineries in Wisconsin or in Minnesota. The question that occurred to several members of the committee was whether or not this oil would be in competition with western Canadian oil which was going through the same Interprovincial Pipe Line facilities to those same refineries in that section of the American market.

The evidence indicated that at the present time oil from the Williston basin is, in fact, going to these refineries, and it is transported there by tank car at the rate of 5,000 barrels a day at $1.10 a barrel. It was explained that this project would undoubtedly make it possible for that oil to get into that refinery area at a cheaper rate and, probably, in a much greater volume. A question then arose in the minds of most honourable senators on the committee as to whether or not the introduction of larger quantities of this oil would in fact preclude greater sales of Canadian oil in the same area. Having regard to the fact that the existing producing Canadian wells in western Canada are cut back to 25 per cent of their productive capacity, a further question arose as to whether or not we should allow these facilities to be established and to operate to the detriment of production in western Canada.

Honourable senators, my own view is that even though these questions do arise we are not qualified and are in no position to refuse the application for the charter. My reason for saying that is as follows. During the last session of Parliament the National Energy Board Act was passed, and the National Energy Board has the power and the authority to consider applications for pipe line projects of this kind. But before the board can consider an application those who are behind the project must qualify themselves, and the only way in which they can do that, and develop a pipe line to cross either an interprovincial or an international boundary, is by becoming incorporated under an act of Parliament. While there may be in the minds of honourable senators who are members of the committee some unanswered questions with respect to the ultimate validity of this project, I think, having raised these issues, the Senate will be doing the proper thing in passing the bill. If there is to be any question of the value of the project, or if there is to be any question about the extent of competition that might be developed against Canadian oil in those American markets—and I do not think that is necessarily a bad thing; it may cause the Canadian interests some difficulty, but competition is not a wrong thing for them to have to face—then those questions will be considered elsewhere, namely, by the National Energy Board. I think that in the circumstances the committee was justified in recommending passage of the bill.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) has referred to the competition that might face western Canadian oil in the United States through the routing of this oil from the United States into Canada and then back into the United States. I would point out that the bill gives the company power to do more than that. The company is asking for power not only to transport oil but to sell oil in Canada. As honourable senators are aware, oil produced in the United States would be brought into Canada by a pipe line which joins into the Interprovincial Pipe Line system and then be carried back into the United States. But under this bill the company would not have to carry the oil back. It will be observed that section 6(a) of the bill, page 3, lines 27 to 30, gives the company power to:

> —buy or otherwise acquire, transmit, transport and sell or otherwise dispose of and distribute oil and other liquid hydrocarbons and products thereof.

Honourable senators, I have made these comments to bring to your attention that the powers we are giving this company are quite wide. I am not opposing the bill, but I do feel that when legislation giving a company certain powers is presented to this house we should know just what those powers are. It is all very well for an honourable member to say that the intention of a company is this and that. A company may have certain intentions today, but tomorrow, when it possesses wider powers, its intentions may be altogether different. I repeat that we are empowering this particular company to do more than merely transport oil.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EASTERN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor moved the third reading of Bill S-21, respecting Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COLLEGE OF GENERAL PRACTICE OF CANADA —THIRD READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw moved the third reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate The College of General Practice of Canada.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. Stanley S. McKeen: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate I would like first to compliment the mover and seconder of this motion. I also wish to congratulate them on their appointment to this chamber. I would offer my congratulations also to the other new senator, the honourable lady from Lisgar (Hon. Mrs. Irvine). Membership in the Senate provides them with a great opportunity to serve this country, and they have started out well in their first speeches here. Other honourable members who have participated in this debate have shown our new colleagues the interest which senators take in the business of this country.

I had not intended to take part in this debate until I felt prompted to do so by the senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean), who apparently prompted also the senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) to speak here yesterday afternoon. I think his speech will be of as great interest to the country as it was to the senators, for it touched on vital parts of our economic industry. This afternoon I wish to add to what has been said, because in the west—not only in British Columbia, but I think in all the western provinces—we are particularly concerned with the export trade of Canada. It is our export trade that has been building up industries and making them flourish and providing employment. We in British Columbia, like the people in New Brunswick, started our industry out of the woods—out of timber—and I believe today it is still the largest industry in British Columbia. At first the forest industry was just sawn lumber. Today it includes pulp and paper, plywood, and many other products of the forest. It provides the greatest amount of employment in the province.

In Canada, it is generally conceded, export trade amounts to about 30 per cent of the total, and domestic trade to about 70 per cent. In British Columbia—and I think in the Prairies too, and possibly also in New Brunswick—you can turn those figures right upside down. Our export trade in British Columbia is about 70 per cent of the province's total trade, and our domestic trade is 30 per cent. In fact, our export trade may go a little higher than 70 per cent, considering that the national average for exports is 30 per cent, although Ontario and Quebec are not big exporting provinces. The fact that Canada is losing its position in export trade is of vital concern to these provinces in the export business. There was a time when Canada's exports put her in third position in world trade. Now we are down to sixth or seventh position. During the past year I believe we have been passed even by Japan. One of the reasons given is high production costs in Canada.

A British Columbia member of the House of Commons went abroad on a trip for the Government and visited many countries. When he came back, although he was a socialist and maintained that he would continue to be one, he said that the high cost of labour in Canada was one of the causes of our high production costs and one of the factors in shutting us out of foreign markets. With that he also included, as I think we must, the high cost of taxation. By taxation I do not mean federal taxation alone, but taxation at all levels, municipal, provincial and federal, because it is a considerable cost to all industry.

It is also said that another cause of our high production costs is high profits in business. When such a charge is made, all three groups, labour, government and business, will deny it emphatically. Labour will tell you they are asking for a fair share of the profits of business, but are not getting it. That is a question that gives rise to argument during every negotiation. Governments will tell you that their costs are up because the electors are asking for more and more all the time. It is not that the Government by itself is spending the money, but the people are demanding more and more services. Business says that the high price of borrowing money today and the high taxes and labour costs compel it to increase its prices, and as it increases its prices labour wants more wages. Similarly, the Government wants more taxes. So there is a spiral among the three groups, all of whom are asking for more.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Does he entirely overlook the fantastic land values?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: No, I do not entirely overlook land values. They are one of the costs of production today. In our province the high cost of timber is another factor, but in that case the Government is selling timber. I grant you it is getting a great deal of that profit, although there are private firms too which are making a profit out of timber, which they have carried and paid taxes on for many years.

I wish to refer also to our exchange problem. Today there is a premium on the Canadian dollar of 5½ per cent, which in effect subsidizes all imports into Canada and puts a tariff or an export tax on all goods going out of Canada. Our good senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill) said last evening that it amounted to $1½ billion in the forest industry alone. When it is realized that $1½ billion represents $750 million of taxation to the Government, it can be seen where we are losing money, not only through business, but by reason of the fact that the Government lacks that revenue. I think that $750 million would have been very welcome to the Department of Finance last year. I understand that the average discount on the U.S. dollar last year was 3½ per cent. It is now approximately 5½ per cent. Unless it goes down drastically during the remainder of the year we are going to be in a worse position than ever and will be priced out of the market altogether, because that 5½ per cent discount means that the American selling goods to Great Britain or to any other country will have an advantage in the market of 5½ per cent over the Canadian producer. I might point out that the United Kingdom lumber market, at least as far as British Columbia lumber is concerned, has gone away down. The U.S.S.R. has gone into that market and cut the prices of lumber, so the bulk of the lumber being shipped to Britain now comes from Russia, not from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask a question? What does the honourable senator suggest is the cure for that 5½ per cent premium on Canadian money?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I am sorry I haven't got the answer to that. However, I think the Department of Finance should give the matter very serious consideration. Whether or not there is a logical answer, whether the cost of eliminating the premium will be too high, I am not in a position to say; but the problem is a serious one which is causing and will cause unemployment in this country, and the shutting down of more industries, if it not solved. There is one way to solve it, of course, and that is by means of a stabilization program. I do not say that I am advocating a stabilization program, but my honourable friend asked if there were ways of doing away with the premium, and I am suggesting this as one way.

If the Government could supply buyers abroad with Canadian dollars, they could finance the supply of money for municipalities and provinces in Canadian funds, and thus take them out of the American money market.

One of the causes of this high rate of exchange is that our municipalities, cities and businesses are going to New York to borrow. When they borrow, say, $100 million they have to buy Canadian dollars for use in Canada, and that has the effect of sending the Canadian dollar to a premium.

Ordinarily, our imports are greater than our exports, and in that case the Canadian dollar will go down, because you have to get United States dollars to pay out, but when the reverse is true you would expect it to balance itself. We now have a deficit in our export trade, yet our money is at a premium. The reason for that paradox is that we have so much investment capital coming into Canada it more than offsets the deficit in our trade balance.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Pardon me a moment. How are you going to stop that? That is what I cannot figure out.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They do not want to stop it.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I am afraid there are wiser men than I who have not been able to figure it out. I am simply mentioning some of the problems that we face and that need to be solved.

In the old days, when we were on the gold standard, when the exchange rate went down all that happened was that we went and got gold and transferred it from one country to the other, and kept the exchange within the cost of shipping gold from one country to the other; but once we went off the gold standard we ceased to have that control of the fluctuations.

I am not suggesting that we go back to what we did in the war and put a fixed valuation on our dollar, and I am not suggesting a devaluation of the Canadian dollar. I do not think that is the answer.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Is there not devaluation?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Well, there is a devaluation in effect when the purchasing power of our dollar goes down, but it is not in the field that is commonly known as devaluation as between countries where one devalues its money for purchase by another country, and the Government sets a rate. If, for instance, the American dollar would buy $2 in Canadian currency, that would be a type of devaluation, but when your Canadian dollar will buy only half the quantity today than it did formerly, we say the dollar is devalued to the extent of 50 per cent. The prices of a great number of products today are such that your dollar will buy only what 50 cents would buy thirty years ago. That is a devaluation that comes about by inflation, and I think if we bring in some of these controls we may find runaway inflation.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Does the honourable senator suggest that the gold standard as used previously should be used at this time?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I think the trading nations of the world have not got gold enough to do it. If they had, I'd be all for it. If it could be done, we in Canada at the present time would be receiving gold. The United States is supposed to have $19 billion worth of gold, and that country is not doing it. If the United States would ship its gold here and keep its money at par, that would be most advantageous for Canada. But I do not think we can tell the United States to do that.

Reference has been made to labour union officers who promise their members more and more in order to get elected. They promise that if elected to be officers of the union they will get the workers higher wages, more fringe benefits, more holidays and other benefits, and when they are elected they are pretty well forced to try to do that, so they attempt it. If they do not succeed the members will say, "Well, we are going to get somebody else". So, in order to prove to the union that what they promised was obtainable, they call a strike, and then everybody loses—labour loses, the business they call the strike against loses, and the general public loses.

In British Columbia we have gone through a strike that turned out to be very expensive. We had a three-month strike in the forest industry and I venture to say that the men who were on strike will never recover the money they lost during that strike, and I do not think that the community will make up the money that was lost during that time. We cannot blame the union leaders, for they are not the only ones who do that. I think we who have been politicians in our day have also been guilty of making promises to the electors of what we were going to do when we were elected, and I don't think anyone who seeks election is free from that. All politicians have done it, every one, and once they have got into power they are then met by the promises they made, so they start to raise this, that and something else, and the electors keep pressing for higher benefits.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I cannot plead guilty to that charge.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Well, I do not know whether you can or not, but if not maybe it was because you did not have to offer anything more. I think there are very few who have not offered more when they were trying to get elected, so we cannot say that the union people are doing anything more than the politicians have been doing. I think there is an even break on that score. Nevertheless, both groups have endeavoured to do that very thing and have raised the cost of living in the process.

I want to point out today some of the disadvantages of the control of Canadian industry by United States capital.

Some of us think that maybe we want more initiative left to the individual and have him invest his own savings rather than take more money from him and look after him in his later years. That is a matter open to question which I am not going to debate this afternoon.

In Canada our early pioneers came from France, Great Britain and other points on the continent and they started to open up this country, and, as in the province of New Brunswick, they started to cut down trees and use the lumber for building ships and houses and things like that. They needed capital to build saw mills and other things, and they got their capital from Great Britain. We on the west coast also got our capital principally from Great Britain.

Probably at that time the United States was also getting its capital from Great Britain. But a great amount of that risk capital which was invested by Great Britain, and which it continued to invest, slowed down at the time of the First World War. Then we started to get some capital from other countries, and at the time of the Second World War it started to flow the other way, as a lot of the money that had been invested in Canada went back to the Old Country, and the slack was taken up by the United States.

In 1939 the United States bought 40 per cent of Canada's exports and supplied us with 66 per cent of our imports.

At that time Great Britain was buying 36 per cent and exporting to us 15 per cent. By 1957, some 18 years later, the United States was buying 60 per cent of Canadian exports and providing almost 75 per cent of our imports, while the share of Great Britain had fallen to 17 and 9 per cent, respectively.

Before World War II non-resident ownership represented about 38 per cent of the money in Canadian industry and commerce. By 1954 the ratio had fallen to 32 per cent. In the period 1946-54 savings by Canadian citizens were large enough to finance all but 6 per cent of the investment in Canada, but they did not invest. Canadians during that period invested about $1¼ billion in other countries, which added to the already heavy investment they had abroad.

After this period, when we stopped getting money from Great Britain, we went to the United States for most of our capital. Although Canadians had invested more money in their own debt than foreign capital, there was direct investment from the United States in particular industries until they controlled those industries. The influence of the United States on the accelerated growth in some of these industries was very marked. American investment was directed to industries that would supply raw material and semi-finished material to United States factories.

This impact on the finances of Canada was one of the dominant effects of American investment. The overall dependence of our finances was not so great, but the dependence in certain lines of industry was very great.

Our Canadian investment increased and pretty well met our financial needs in agriculture, utilities, institutional services, housing, and Government. In those respects the financing was predominantly done by Canadians. But just recently provincial and municipal Governments have gone into the American financial markets, which is one of the factors that have affected the exchange rate. The American dollar has suffered a discount by reason of this American money coming into Canada. This is not a healthy condition, because the day will come when the exchange rate will reverse itself and we may well have to face a heavy discount on the Canadian dollar, such as we had during the last war.

The book value of the total foreign investment in Canadian industry during the years 1900 to 1957 increased to approximately $17,100 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is just the increase?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: That is the increase. In 1900 the foreign investment in Canadian industry amounted to $1.2 billion.

As I mentioned, the investment of American capital in Canada has been very selective. The biggest investment, I think, is in the petroleum industry, although there is heavy investment in the pulp and paper industry as well. The Americans also have practically complete control of our automobile and rubber industry. The domination by the United States in these two industries has an effect on Canada which I think is detrimental to our interests in some respects because there is restriction on exports from Canadian plants which are subsidiaries of American plants.

I want to make quite clear that I am not against foreign capital coming into Canada. I think we need the capital to open up this country. If Canadians are not going to invest their money in the equity or risk capital required to develop this country's natural resources, those resources will not produce any jobs or pay taxes. If foreign capital is willing to come in and develop the country, I am in favour of it. At the same time I wish to point out the disadvantage connected with it, namely, that the exports of Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies are restricted. The parent company will not export from a subsidiary company unless it is advantageous to do so because of a tariff arrangement with another commonwealth country, or for some other reason that makes it advantageous to export from Canada.

We had a case in Canada about a year and a half ago of a Canadian factory, a subsidiary of an American company, wishing to export automobiles to China. The American parent company did not want this done, because it would contravene an American law. This interference was objected to by the present Prime Minister, but the automobiles were not exported.

A change in trading arrangements is now taking place in Europe, where the Outer Seven and Inner Six are forming themselves into a group. Companies who want to take advantage of the tariff barrier should establish factories within that area. Of course, Canadian factories that are subsidiaries of American companies do not have the opportunity of doing so, but American factories have already been set up in the area. That arrangement is having an adverse affect on Canadian factories.

I am not against Canadian factories, nor American factories, being established in a foreign country, but the disturbing feature is that we are getting imports from Europe, including automobiles. Last year we imported from Europe 26 per cent of the automobiles sold in Canada. That percentage represented the increase in automobiles sold; I think the production here remained practically static.

We have to import into Canada as well as export to other countries, because the export business is not a one-way street. What is disturbing is to find an American company building a factory on the continent, and then exporting the product of that factory into Canada and selling it here to the detriment of Canadian workmen. I think that sticks out as one of the effects of United States domination of Canadian industry.

We have other cases. There is the pulp and paper industry, for example. To build up our primary industry we must build up our secondary industries. We have a lot of natural resources here. Every country, when it commences business, starts by exporting its raw materials. England started in that way, the United States started in that way, and so did we; but there comes a day when you try to develop your own secondary industries and take your production beyond that of just raw materials.

The pulp and paper industry was first established in the United States. They cut most of their own pulp timber there, and afterwards they came up to Canada and started getting their pulpwood here. There are certain things we could have done. We had practically a monopoly on it, and we could have charged more money for our pulpwood, but the Government felt it would be better to develop the industry here. That particular industry needs a lot of cheap hydro-electric power, which we had, and we also had the raw material. They resisted the building of their factories up here. However, in 1891 the Government of British Columbia prohibited the export of timber cut from Crown grant lands. That was the first move. In 1900 the Government of Quebec imposed what was, in effect, an export duty, but the fee was reduced approximately one-third if the pulpwood was processed in Quebec. Ontario followed in 1902 by prohibiting the export of pulpwood.

In 1909 the United States offered to reduce the tariff on low-grade papers coming into the United States if the provinces would cut out their prohibition of export of raw material. The provinces did not agree to that, so the United States put a duty of $2 a ton on Canadian paper. This duty was immediately passed on by the newsprint companies here to the newspapers in the American states who were buying the paper. Enough pressure was brought on Congress to have this repealed. In 1913 the Underwood tariff repealed the duty on newsprint, or paper with a value of less than 2½ cents a pound. Since that day we have had free entry of newsprint into the United States, although there still is a substantial tariff on finished papers—fine papers or coated papers; in fact, it is so high that it keeps that class of paper out of the country. Because of that we do not have the plants there. That is one industry in which we have had a hard fight all the way along, but we did finally establish a secondary industry.

We have another example in the coasting trade. Being in this business, I know something about it. It may surprise you, honourable senators, to know that it is an advantage for a Canadian citizen in the coasting trade to become an American citizen, because he then can engage in the coasting trade in the United States and in Canada. We allow Americans to come up to Canada and engage in our business. They are doing it and have done it for years. They can form a Canadian corporation which is owned 100 per cent by Americans, and can operate on our coasts; but a Canadian in the United States cannot own more than 25 per cent of a shipping company there, and even at that he can have no hand in the management of the company. That is very much of a great disadvantage to us, especially on the west coast. Some changes will occur because of the coming into being of the State of Alaska, but they will apply to the Alaskan trade only. I think that the thing should be on a reciprocal basis. I do not care whether or not Americans can incorporate a Canadian company to engage in that trade, but whatever they can do I feel we should also be able to do.

Another fight we had in Canada with respect to our raw materials had to do with nickel. That is a very interesting story. Nickel was discovered in the Sudbury basin in 1883, and there was extensive exploitation of it in that year. That was the year when nickel began to be used as an alloy for armour plate. The nickel was refined by the Orford Company of Ohio, an American company. A drive was put on by the Canadian Government to start refineries in Canada, but it was resisted. One of the claims was that the Canadian company —it was Canadian Copper, which later amalgamated with the Orford Company—could not have refineries here because it did not have the process for refining, and the Orford Company in the United States, which was closely affiliated with it, had a refinery. That fight went on for quite a while, but got nowhere. Then in 1900 the nickel company put pressure on Congress to have the duty on ore or matte cut off, but the duty on refined nickel left on. That was done at that time by the McKinley Tariff. That pretty well cut out importation from other countries, because Canada was the closest source to them. Finally they got 100 per cent of the American market. Then in 1913 they built a second factory or refinery, not in Canada, but in New Jersey. I think that was a mistake, because if there was anything they could have done to stir up the Canadian people, that was it. In 1913 the pressure became very great. Canada, in the meantime, had passed a law to put a 10-cent duty on this nickel, but it was never proclaimed.

The Province of Ontario then tried to get Parliament to proclaim it, but it would not do this. So the Ontario Legislature passed a law which put a licence fee on the amount of ore mined, but the fee was to be refunded if the ore was refined in Canada. That act was never proclaimed. The story was that if the province did proclaim it the company would close down the Sudbury mines.

Then the war intervened, and the rumour went around that the United States was shipping nickel to Germany. Specific charges were made that on two voyages the submarine Deutschland had taken Canadian nickel to Germany. Both the Canadian Government and the Ontario Government appointed boards of inquiry, and in the face of a possible expropriation of the mine and a subsidized refinery for the ore the company yielded. At that time there was also a new electrolytic process developed for refining ore. They did not need chemicals. They needed cheap power. So in the face of this the company capitulated and built a refinery at Port Colborne and started refining in Canada. That was another fight that proved successful after many years. It illustrates that you have to fight foreign investment controls when their interests run contrary to Canadian interests. I am in favour of capital coming in if we do not have it ourselves, but it is a shame that our own people will not risk more of their own capital in our natural resources by buying equity stock rather than bonds and debentures.

As to the oil and gas business, the first well was brought in at Black Creek, Ontario, a year before the first Drake well was discovered in Pennsylvania. However, as honourable senators are aware, the oil business in the United States went ahead by leaps and bounds, whereas the industry in Canada almost wilted on the vine. We discovered gas in Medicine Hat in 1890 and oil in the Turner Valley in 1914. That oil could be taken right from the well and put in an automobile and it would run. It was straight gasoline. I must confess it was not good for the engine, but it would run on it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It had a bad smell.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Yes. It was called wet gas, and without being processed it could run a car engine. In any event, this is one of the industries the United States has really gone to town on, and I venture to say that of all foreign investment in the Canadian oil industry today the Americans have 90 per cent.

In 1956 the total investment in mining, smelting, petroleum exploration and development, was 66 per cent non-resident, of which the United States' share was almost 75 per cent, whereas in 1926 their share was only 38 per cent. The latest figures available indicate that American investment in the oil industry in Canada totals approximately $1,144 million. Only today the Senate passed a private bill giving an American pipe line company power to transport some of its oil through Canada—and there is a suspicion that it might even be distributed here.

I think I have given the house quite a few examples of Canadian industries that are controlled by Americans, and I have illustrated that their interests are not identical with ours. It is rather important, therefore, that we endeavour to gain as much control of these industries as we can.

One thing that helped start our nickel industry and our pulp industry was the electric power which was available in Ontario and Quebec. Companies operating in these industries—and the same is true of the aluminum industry—will locate where they can get cheap power. This is also true of the development of similar industries in the northwestern states of Washington, Oregon, Utah, and Idaho. They have been able to get cheap hydro-electric power from developments at the Grand Coulee Dam and Bonneville. Power has been cheap because a lot of the cost of constructing the dams was charged against reclamation. That was in the time of President Roosevelt, when they had a big reclamation scheme and much of the cost was charged against flood control and irrigation, so that the ultimate cost of power has been quite cheap. That development brought in industries.

In British Columbia we have the chance of developing the Columbia River to create a big power supply. We have the Peace River Power Development Company in the Peace River, and developments on the Homathko River, Olsen Creek, and the Clearwater River. The plans for those projects are now on the drawing board and if they are followed through the result will be a great development of the natural resources of British Columbia. A large plant on the Columbia River would be developed by the United States in cooperation with our federal Government and the Government of British Columbia. The power would be highly beneficial to the southern area of British Columbia and possibly a part of Alberta. The grid they have connects all those northwestern states I have mentioned and also southern British Columbia. They trade power back and forth, and it is interesting to know that they actually store electricity. When I first heard this I thought it was rather strange. I believed you could only store electricity in the form of batteries, but I found out it can also be done by storing water in reservoirs. I know something about this, for I happen to be a director of the Peace River Power Development Company, and I have learned a great deal about power in that area.

This is what happens. The plants are all interconnecting, and if you have a plant and a reservoir which is not full and I have one that is overflowing, I will call your plant and say: "My dam is overflowing. If you will shut your power plant down I will run mine to full capacity and supply you with all the power you require for your customers. You can store the water in your dam, and when my power is down you can wheel the power back to me." I think there is a charge of one mill per kilowatt made for storing. The trouble is that in the northwestern states this storage scheme can only be carried on for a twelve-month period, for in March of each year all dams are filled to capacity and one dam will not store water for another at that time.

Today the B.C. Electric Company, which supplies power to the lower mainland, is building a thermal power plant with an immediate capacity of 300,000 horsepower and an ultimate capacity of 900,000 horsepower. Some time ago it opened up one in Port Mann which produces 100,000 horsepower. That will illustrate the shortage of power. However, the company is not actually short all the time, but only in the peak periods, and it can sell more firm power with the added plants. The Peace River Power Development Company has a reservoir covering some 900 square miles. It is in the form of a "T", the top bar of the "T" being 200 miles long and the stem 60 miles long. It has a storage capacity of 88 million acre feet in that area, which is more than six times the Grand Coulee dam reserve, five times that of the proposed Mica Creek on the Columbia River, and more than all of the reserve of British Columbia and the Northwest states at the present time. That storage of water will help the lower mainland as well. It will take from seven to ten years for that reservoir to fill. We do not often have a drought in British Columbia—in fact, we get a lot of rain—but we could withstand three or four years of drought and not reduce the Peace River power.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Have they found a way of transmitting the electricity yet? It seems to me that I read somewhere that the proper way of doing it had not yet been found.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: They are doing it now in both Sweden and Russia. To take it to Vancouver would be 600 miles, but to take it to Prince George would be only 60 miles. This thing is developed in the north country as well in the lower mainland. It is claimed that the power going down the trench, that is, 600 miles, will not be more expensive than going the 300 miles, where you have to go over three mountain ranges. The upkeep of facilities would be far greater over the mountain ranges than down the trench. They transmit that power at 600,000 volts. The higher voltage allows them to take it a greater distance. Another advantage is that the total potential of this is about five million horsepower in the Peace River in British Columbia, but there are also downstream benefits, and those benefits are in Alberta. The benefits are flood control and the development of power on the river through Alberta. Another added bonus is in the Mackenzie River, which is fed by the Peace River out of the lakes there. During the flooding period there is water for navigation, but by controlling that there would be a longer period of navigation on the Mackenzie River, which runs out to the Arctic Ocean.

I suggest that if we are looking for exports, one export we can make which does not take anything away from our resources is hydro-electric power. Once a hydro-electric power plant is installed it can be developed to its full point. Take the Peace River power, for instance. The first unit could produce 800,000 to 1,000,000 horsepower, and that could be used in British Columbia. No export is needed for that. In connection with the Columbia River, I believe a deal has been made that if and when power is developed it will be sold to the American side, but as it is, we cannot export any power to the American side.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: If you start exporting electric power to a clientele in the United States, how would you eventually get the use of it yourself? Would you cut off those users?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Well, this would be surplus for about 25 years. They would have to build a thermal plant—which they are doing today in the northwestern states—to take care of the surplus requirements. The British Columbia Power Company is doing that through the Power Commission in British Columbia. In some places they are putting in diesel power, which is very expensive. They believe that within 25 years they will have nuclear power. If we can get into this business early, it must be remembered that within thirty-five or forty years a hydro-electric plant can be paid off, and that if nuclear power comes in within about thirty years the capital cost will be wiped off. Therefore, the cost of power is going to be away down. Once the capital cost is paid off, all that has to be done is to keep the turbines going; you have to see that rain and snow are held, otherwise the water will flow out to the ocean. It is the only power that does not deplete the resources of the country, and peculiarly enough it is the only energy that is not controlled by American capital.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Who would control the Peace river? What about Wenner-Gren? What part of that would he own?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: That would depend who put up the money for the plant. They will have to raise $350 million for the plant, and at the present time the shareholders in this company are Canadian, English and Continental. The company at the present time has spent about $5 million, and will possibly spend another $2 million before it knows whether it is going to have a power company or not, because it has to apply to the provincial Government for the water rights. It must apply for a hearing, and anyone else can apply at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is it a provincial board?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Yes, it is a provincial board—a provincial water board and a provincial utilities board.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does the matter eventually come to the National Energy Board?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I do not think so; but if they are going to export power they will have to go to the National Energy Board. I think they would have to apply to the Government under the Navigable Waters Protection branch, because the Peace River is, in parts, a navigable stream; but there are no commercial fish there.

Hon. Mr. Horner: But is it not true that immense resources other than power have been granted?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: No, they have not been granted to anyone yet. They have an immense area which is covered by a Government reserve and some three or four years have been spent in surveying it. A lot of people would have gone back and homesteaded that land, and if and when the company started to go ahead it would have to buy these people off. But nothing has been granted to anyone. That is a misconception. What they did do was to put a reserve on there and let them go ahead and survey. The survey must be, and was, turned over to the provincial Government. After it is in, they can apply. But they were not given anything at the start. Of course, that survey is going to be an advantage to them, for when an application is in they are going to be in a far better position than somebody who has not got the survey.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I understood that as part of the agreement they undertook to spend $5 million, and that they would then receive the right from the Government.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I think they agreed to spend $5 million; but whatever the amount was, they put up $500,000 deposit as a guarantee that they would do this surveying and turn the survey over to the Government; then they could apply for any land or minerals or anything else they wanted in the area.

They planned a power development which was taken over by a group composed of the following: The Associated Electrical Industries, Ltd., of London; the British Insulated Callender's Cables Company of London; Canadian Utilities Limited, of Edmonton; Norman R. Whittall, Limited, a brokerage house in Vancouver; Close Bros. Ltd., a brokerage house in London; John Laing and Son Limited, of London; Power Securities Corporation Ld., of London; Taylor Woodrow (Overseas) Construction Ltd., of London; Wenner-Gren B.C. Development Limited; Bernard Gore Ltd., of London; Hy. Ansbascher & Co. of London; Western Development and Power Limited, Vancouver; Wood, Gundy & Co. Ltd.; and Nesbitt, Thomson & Co. Ltd. The Wenner-Gren B.C. Development Company are the largest shareholders.

Up to now there are only a few million dollars in the treasury, but $350 million will have to be subscribed for the first step, if this goes ahead, and then the Wenner-Gren Company will not be the predominant shareholders. The ultimate development will cost in the neighborhood of $800 million to $1 billion.

Hon. Mr. Buchanan: Does that group have enough shares to control the company?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: At the present time they have enough to control the company though they do not control the board.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: In regard to Wenner-Gren and his associates spending $5 million for this exclusive reserve for the purpose of surveying it, would the honourable senator say what Wenner-Gren was supposed to get in return for that? Was he supposed to get some benefits or privileges as against other applicants?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: In the first place, of the $5 million spent on this particular development Wenner-Gren, I think, spent $2.7 million. He felt that there was a sizeable power development there and turned it over to these other people who joined with him to see if they could advance the project, and they have spent the $5 million.

He is continuing to spend in regard to a railroad, which has nothing at all to do with the power development, and also on some mining properties. All he is getting is the right to go in there to do this survey work and keep the land clear so that if he makes an application to develop the power he will not then be called upon to pay off a lot of people who are established in there. But he has no title to anything yet.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Does he get no benefits at all?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: Certainly he gets a benefit. He gets the benefit of being able to go in there and make all these surveys and then of being in a preferred position because he will know all about this property. When he is ready to put in a bid he will know what he wants and he can put in an appropriate bid.

The same thing applies to the power development group. They have made an engineering report, they have looked at all possible sites, they have picked the one they want, and they are now in a position to call for tenders for work on that project within six months.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Can the honourable senator tell us how long these preferred rights will last?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I do not know, but so far as the water rights are concerned the report had to be in by the 31st of December, 1959. It was put in by that date and is now being considered by the water rights branch. I do not know how long the Government will take to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: During the period Wenner Gren had the right to go into this reserve were other prospectors for mineral properties excluded from this property or not?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I believe they have been. That is the advantage that the company has. I think all survey work was prohibited when this reserve was put on that area.

Hon. Mr. Buchanan: Does it not have the exclusive right of prospecting a certain area for a certain number of years? Is that not part of the agreement?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I think that is so, but I am not clear on that. I have no knowledge about the Wenner-Gren B.C. Development Company or any other projects. The only company I happen to be a director of is the power development company.

If there are any other questions I shall be glad to answer them, if I can.

One thing about this development is that there will be a big effort to get industries to locate up there. A delegation from Elliot Lake came to Ottawa because of the shutdown of the uranium mines. To make enriched uranium they need a lot of cheap power, and Peace River is a possible site. That won't solve the Elliot Lake problem today, because the power won't be available until 1968 in any event. If it gets started in the spring, the first power will be delivered probably in 1968.

But there are other industries which might be interested. A tire company made a survey and explored the possibility of locating in the Peace River country near Fort St. John, because there is a lot of sulphur and oil there, besides this power to be developed. That was one of the larger American companies. There are other projects. Two or three pulp mills are envisaged, because there is a lot of pulp timber in that country.

We feel that if the company gets the right to develop this power the same thing will happen there as happened in the northwestern United States where large industries, notably the aluminum industry, settled and developed that area. There are many resources up there—in fact there is hardly a resource you can mention that is not in that area.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You mentioned a period of eight years before power can be delivered. Does that mean the time for construction only or does that include the time to raise the finances?

Hon. Mr. McKeen: They will be ready to go ahead if they get the authority in the spring, and it will be 1968 before power can be sent out over the transmission lines. They have gone right ahead with the financing simultaneously with other development, their engineering and so forth, and they consider that they are well ahead as far as that is concerned. They have not got the money, but they apparently will have no trouble in raising it. As a matter of fact it looks as if maybe they would take no money from American interests. There is no American capital in there yet, and there is nobody representing American capital in the set-up.

The interesting thing is that this is one industry the Americans have not control of. You can cross this country and, aside from the few power companies associated with pulp and paper companies, they are not in the hydro-electric business. I may say that I welcome any foreign capital, particularly British capital, as profits from this project would supply Great Britain with dollars for Canadian purchases. I say this because I think perhaps Britain's interests and ours may lie a little closer together and not be so competitive, as nearly every product we have for export the Americans also have, and we are competing with them all the time. One example is wheat. Another is uranium; we are now shut out because of the production of uranium in the United States.

Honourable senators, I have taken much more time than I had intended. Let me conclude by making clear that I am in favour of the investment of foreign capital in Canada because I think it is required to build up our country. But I also want to encourage Canadians to participate in the equity financing of our natural resources. We as a country can gain far more by having Canadians participate in equity financing in Canada than by doing as they have over the past ten years, investing $1-1¼ billion outside Canada. Had that money been invested in Canada it would have almost taken care of the total investment of American capital in our oil industry today. Perhaps we do not have the know-how that the Americans have, but we are in a position to help ourselves. The more Canadians invest at home, particularly in secondary industries, the more jobs and the more prosperity we will have. In that way we will be a truly prosperous country and will own our own birthright.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Buchanan, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 8, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 8, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-51, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

Bill read first time.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: With leave, I move that the bill be read the second time now.

Honourable senators, this Bill C-51, which has just come to us from the other place, has to do with certain supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1959-60, in the sum of $32,360,511. I have looked over the bill carefully, and find that it is in the usual form for bills of this kind. The supplementary estimates are set out in a schedule to the bill. These supplementaries, of which honourable senators have had copies in their possession for some time, were first considered in the other place on February 5 last, and were under consideration there on and off from that time until they were finally passed yesterday.

Honourable senators, I propose to deal briefly with each vote, if that is satisfactory to the house. When I conclude my explanation of each vote, I shall be glad to answer any questions that I can; and when I am through with the bill I presume that honourable senators who want to make any general or specific remarks will have plenty of time to do so.

The first vote is No. 611. This vote is to provide for payment of compensation, under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Regulations, for animals slaughtered in connection with the control and eradication of contagious diseases. This supplementary estimate is required to cover increased brucellosis compensation payments due to increased testing, and increased scrapie compensation payments resulting from the new scrapie eradication program announced last August. In the main estimates for 1959-60 $1,500,000 was provided. The supplementary estimate is for $830,000, which would make the total required for 1959-60 $2,330,000.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator if the rabies infection that has been going on in Ontario has anything to do with the increased amount?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, not as far as I know.

I come now to Vote 612. The purpose of this vote is to provide freight assistance on the movement of feed grains from the Prairie provinces to British Columbia and eastern Canada. Originally $20 million was set aside in the 1959-60 estimates for this purpose, but last July, just before Parliament prorogued, an additional sum of $1 million was added on account of the 17 per cent increase in freight rates. In the first five months of the fiscal year monthly payments represented increased tonnage of 32,000 tons per month over 1958, and it appeared that freight assistance would be required on 3,100,000 tons for 1959-60. However, after the first five months the volume dropped somewhat, and a figure of 3 million tons appears to be a more accurate estimate. The cost on the 3 million tons, it is estimated, will be $24,500,000, of which $21 million has already been voted, so there is required this supplementary vote of $3,500,000. I could give the figures for each province, but I do not presume honourable senators wish me to go into that much detail. At any rate, this item is to cover assistance on the shipping of feed grains from the Prairie provinces to British Columbia and to all the eastern provinces so that they can secure for the fattening of their animals at reduced cost.

I will deal next with Vote 613. Honourable senators are no doubt aware of the fact that because of the abnormal and unseasonable snow storms in western Canada last fall, many thousands of farmers were unable to harvest their crop. The Government, in order to provide some compensation for the farmers who suffered misfortune, offered to share on a 50-50 basis with the three Prairie provinces in a scheme of assistance, subject to Parliament's voting the necessary money. The basic provisions, which are conditions of federal assistance, are as follows: Farmers would not qualify unless at least 50 per cent of their cereal crops were unharvested, and would then benefit only to a limited extent, the maximum benefit being $3 per acre on a maximum unharvested acreage of 200 acres. For other crops the benefit is limited to a maximum of $600 per farm. Within these limitations the different provinces—that is, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—developed their own specific programs, which are entirely provincial and are administered by the provinces themselves. In Manitoba they worked out a scheme which is different from the scheme in Saskatchewan, and in Saskatchewan they worked out a scheme which is a little different from that in Alberta. I do not know whether honourable senators will want me to go into those three schemes and differentiate between them.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Did the provincial Governments contribute 50 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, 50 per cent. It is estimated that the total amount of the federal Government's contributions will be $6 million.

Hon. Mr. Wall: May I ask a question. Except for administrative expenses, will most of this money return to the federal treasury?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, none of it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is a gift.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is a straight donation, if that is the proper word, or contribution.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Has my friend the terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council? I notice that the item refers to terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council. Does the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) know what those terms and conditions are?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not the Order in Council with me, if that is what the honourable senator is referring to. The vote is to cover:

> Contributions to the Governments of the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, of one-half the amounts paid by the Governments of those provinces to farmers in respect of unharvested crops to a maximum of $300 in respect of any one farm; and to authorize, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, contributions to the Governments of those provinces (or their municipalities) in respect of the administrative costs incurred by them in making such payments to farmers.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I do not want to hold up my friend. Perhaps he will get the information. I would like to know what the terms and conditions are.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not that information with me at present, but I will try to have it available.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I suppose each of these provincial schemes was approved by the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think that that would have to be done.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not sure of that. I thought it was left to each province to work out its own scheme.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Each province worked out its own scheme, but I do not know whether the schemes would have to be approved or not.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not necessarily. The terms and conditions might take the place of an approval.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For example, Manitoba formulated its plan and it was submitted to the Government. When Alberta and Saskatchewan formulated their plans, those too were submitted to the Government. I can give honourable senators some information with regard to those plans if they wish to have it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think the question was whether the plans of each province were approved by the federal Government. If the honourable leader has not that information now he might be able to provide it to the house before the bill is given third reading.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If we pass this supplementary estimate of $6 million and pay the money to the provinces to reimburse them for what they have paid out, shall we not be giving approval? I may say that as of February 24 some 19,620 cases had been approved in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: By whom?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: By the province. In Alberta and Saskatchewan applications are made to provincial councils, which recommend approval or rejection and, if necessary, appoint their own inspectors. In Manitoba applications are made to the municipalities, which send them to the Government for processing. Five thousand claims have been made in Alberta and 4,000 claims have been made in Manitoba, but not all have been approved. The closing dates were January 23, 1960, in Manitoba, January 30, 1960, in Saskatchewan, and February 29, 1960, in Alberta.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would the honourable leader permit a further question? I assume the procedure is that each province investigates every claim and either approves or disapproves of it. Having done that, does the province concerned then pay the claim and file for reimbursement? Is that the procedure?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, that is the way it is done. For the last five or six weeks the provinces have been making payments on claims that have been filed and approved.

I come now to Vote 614, for the sum of $300,000, to cover contributions to the Governments of the Prairie provinces in respect of transportation of fodder and straw. This vote also is required because of the fact that in many parts of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, particularly in the northern areas, there was a shortage of these commodities and the farmers were unable to carry the transportation costs. The railways reduced the freight rate by one-third, and when this vote is passed the provinces and the dominion will be paying the other two-thirds on a share-and-share-alike basis. The calculated costs are $175,000 in Manitoba, $300,000 in Saskatchewan and $50,000 in Alberta, making a total of $525,000. The vote for $300,000 is just a little more than half the $525,000.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Does this item cover transport of fodder and straw within the respective provinces?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, these items were not moved out of the respective provinces.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: This was all as a result of the same catastrophe?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, the same catastrophe that created a disaster area where everything was snowed under in those provinces. Most of the feed and straw was snowed under—as it still is—and fodder and straw had to be shipped in from the southern areas where the threshing had been fully completed.

I come now to Vote 615.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Before the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) leaves the votes under agriculture, I would like to take this opportunity of saying, on behalf of the farmers of my own province, at least—and I feel quite sure I am speaking for the farmers of all the Atlantic provinces—how very grateful we are that the Government is continuing this freight assistance policy. We also wish to thank the Government for including the extra freight assistance.

I would ask the honourable leader how much each province received by way of assistance and what was the freight rate per ton. If he has not that information now, perhaps he could give it to the house at a later time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What vote is that?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Vote 612.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have that information here. The amount expended for this purpose in 1958-59 by the federal Government was $20,327,334. As I have said, it is estimated the amount required in 1959-60 will be $24,500,000. This would be distributed as follows:

British Columbia	$ 2,000,000
Ontario	6,000,000
Quebec	11,500,000
New Brunswick	1,600,000
Nova Scotia	2,500,000
Prince Edward Island ..	500,000
Newfoundland	400,000
	$24,500,000

Does that answer my honourable friend's inquiry?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes, thank you. Do you also have the rate per ton to the different centres?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The average overall rate is $8.13 per ton. If you multiply 3 million tons by $8.13 you get approximately the total amount required. Naturally, the rate to every province is different.

I was about to deal with Vote 615. This makes financial provision for a municipal winter works incentive program to be undertaken for the winter 1959-60 on the same basis as the program which was introduced last year. It is to be effective from December 1, 1959 to April 30, 1960, with the federal contribution remaining at 50 per cent and applying only to direct labour costs incurred by the municipalities on the projects approved by the provinces and accepted by the Government of Canada. It is estimated that the amount required for that purpose this year will be approximately $15 million, and that is the amount of the supplementary estimate.

Provision is also made this year for Indian reserves or bands to be included in this municipal winter works incentive program, they thereby becoming eligible for the same assistance as municipalities. In 1958-59 the program ended on May 31, because of the fact that it was extended for an additional month on account of winter conditions. Last winter some 700 municipalities participated. In all, 2,327 projects were approved, and these involved a proposed expenditure estimated at $62 million during the period from December 1, 1958 to May 31, 1959. The federal Government contributed $6,463,763.68 last year toward that program, which provided 1,019,000 man-days work, or, in other words, 35,534 jobs. This year, as of February 12, the number of jobs provided by the 1959-60 program has risen to 38,083, and it is expected that before the end of April the total will be considerably over 40,000.

Next is Vote 616, and I would like to refer to Vote 617 at the same time. These votes have to do with the travel expenses incurred by senators and members of the House of Commons when returning to their homes at Christmas and coming back again, and going home at Easter and coming back afterwards if there is an Easter adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the idea of the one dollar?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That simply gives authority.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is the way it is always put; the amount is not stated. It merely gives authority to the Government to pay when the amounts are ascertained. The reason for putting the vote in now is that honourable senators will not have to wait three or four months for their money, as they did last year. As soon as they come back from the Easter recess they will be able to file their claims and receive their money without any waiting.

Hon. Mr. Reid: There will be no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: We can pass that item now!

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Vote 618 has to do with the provision of $800,000 for contributions to the provinces, pursuant to an agreement entered into by Canada with the provinces, of amounts equal to one-half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for campground and picnic area developments. This vote provides for federal contributions toward expenditures made by the Governments of the provinces on campground and picnic area developments along the Trans-Canada Highway, and also as a winter works projects across Canada during 1959-60, in accordance with agreements entered into with the provinces. In the main estimates $1½ million was provided for this kind of work, and it is estimated that another $800,000 will be required. I will try to explain that. Payments to date amount to almost $1 million, and it is estimated that for the balance of the fiscal year $350,000 will be required for payments under the Trans-Canada Highway program and $950,000 for payments under the winter works program. These bring the total of the vote, including this supplementary estimate of $800,000, to $2,300,000.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Have all the municipalities taken part in the scheme?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No, this is only provincial.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Is there a breakdown by provinces?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have not the breakdown by provinces. This is in accordance with the agreement between the dominion and the provinces. I have talked to certain people who made the trip from the east coast to the west coast, and they told me how pleased they were that along the main highway these facilities were available for them. In addition to providing work, this will, I think, help to a great extent in fostering a satisfactory tourist business.

Vote 619 is to provide for the purchase from the United States Government of the Canadian portion of a pipe line which extends from Whitehorse to Fairbanks, plus the oil at present in the pipe line. This pipe line, formerly known as the Canol pipe line system, was built during the last war, and it was arranged that when the war was over and the pipe line was no longer required for military purposes Canada would purchase the line from the United States. Although quite a long time has gone by since the end of the war, an appraisal of the line has only recently been made. The value of the line was estimated at $1,710,777, but certain credits taken off that amount reduced the price of the pipe line to Canada—that is, the amount we have to pay the United States for it—to $617,021, plus the value of the oil in the pipe line, $51,920.40, a total of approximately $670,000.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Are we buying the pipe line from the United States Government?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. They built it.

The next vote, No. 620, is for administration, operation and maintenance of the National Aviation Museum. The amount is $75,000. I would like to point out that on September 28, 1959, the cabinet approved the establishment of a National Aviation Museum which is to be planned as part of the National Science Museum. The cabinet also delegated responsibility for its administration, operation and maintenance to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

If honourable senators have a copy of the estimates before them they will find the details, on page 6, comprise salaries, professional and special services. Those details are not in the schedule to the bill. That is one reason why I asked honourable senators to bring their copies of the estimates here this evening.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Where will the National Aviation Museum be established?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is now at Uplands, but will likely be in Ottawa later.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not like to interrupt the honourable leader, but he has referred to page 6 for details of the National Aviation Museum vote, and honourable senators will notice after the name of each item and before the amount there is a figure in brackets. Could the honourable leader tell the house what that figure refers to?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: At the back of the book of estimates there is a large-sized sheet folded up and placed in a pocket.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is the information which was first furnished on the suggestion of the Finance Committee, under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not know, but these numbers mentioned here refer to the departments that are named on that large sheet. These figures have no other significance.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They refer to different classifications of expenses in that table?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. I have a copy of that large sheet here if the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) would like to see it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I recall now to what the figures refer.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I come now to Vote 621. This vote is for $2,000, which is required to defray part of the cost of holding the First International Symposium on Arctic Geology, which was held in Calgary from January 11 to 13, 1960. Canada agreed to pay half of the cost. The other half has been paid by the province of Alberta.

Vote 622 is required to provide for expenses arising out of payment for programs for forest access roads and trails submitted by the provinces for 1958-59, which had to be carried forward to 1959-60, mainly because of adverse weather conditions during the period from November 1, 1958 to March 31, 1959. In the main estimates $1 million was provided, and this supplementary estimate is for $596,000, which is the amount required to finish the job.

For the information of honourable senators I will state the amount owing to each province:

Newfoundland	$2,963
Nova Scotia	12,509
New Brunswick	1,516
Ontario	203,609
Manitoba	37,021
Saskatchewan	60,244
Alberta	38,951
British Columbia	239,024
	$595,837

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Nothing for Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Nothing for Quebec. It has its own program.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: That is interference with provincial autonomy.

Hon. Mr. Reid: British Columbia did all right.

An Hon. Senator: As usual.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Would the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) allow me a question with respect to Vote 622? The same would apply to Vote 618. In each of those votes reference is made to agreements between the federal authority and the province. I have checked and have been unable to find that such agreements, or copies of them, have ever been tabled in this house. Would the honourable leader be able to correct that defect?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will see what I can do about it. I do not have any agreements with me. I presume these agreements were made by correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The votes do not say.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Vote 623 provides for payment of $25,000 to cover the expenses of the Royal Commission on Coal. These expenses include the payment, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, of honoraria or allowances to officers or other persons permanently employed in the Civil Service.

Vote 624 deals with the expenses of the Royal Commission on the Great Slave Lake Railway. The commission was directed to inquire into the respective merits of the alternative routes which might be followed by a railway line to be built from northern Alberta into the southern portion of the District of Mackenzie, Northwest Territories. The purpose of constructing this railway is to contribute to the development of that portion of the Territories tributary to the Great Slave Lake.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Will the honourable leader state how much of that amount is for honoraria for civil servants and how much for other matters?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no division of the amount. I imagine the portion for honoraria would be infinitesimal.

Vote 625 has to do with the purchase from the United States of America of the United States Embassy located at Nos. 1, 1A, and 3 Grosvenor Square and Nos. 37 and 38 Grosvenor Street, London, England. Canada submitted a tender for $4½ million, and the amount of $450,000 shown here is merely 10 per cent of the purchase price offered by Canada.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Is Canada going to sell the present Canada House?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Canada is not selling the present Canada House, but we have bought what is known as the Hampton site. As I understand it, the authorities came to the conclusion that the Hampton site was not giving them exactly what they wanted. The buildings were razed, and plans were developed for a building to house the Canadian Government agencies in London which were located outside Canada House. Subsequently the location of the Hampton site proved unsatisfactory, chiefly because traffic and parking considerations were difficult. Disposal of the Hampton site, in March, 1959, to the United States Government at a price of $2,750,611.69 effected recovery of all our costs.

Hon. Mr. Davies: I think we are well rid of the Hampton site, if I may say so. I do not think it was suitable at all.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: At least we got all our money out of it.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I am not quite sure of the figures as quoted by the honourable leader. Was the original cost $4½ million?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No. That is for the embassy we are purchasing now from the United States. We have sold the other property that we had purchased, and on which we had intended to build, to the United States.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I understood that $450,000 was 10 per cent of the purchase price of the original property.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, of the new premises.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Was there any loss in connection with the first purchase?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: No loss at all? Perhaps the leader would give us the figures, just to make sure.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not have the figure at which it was purchased, but I have the figure at which it was sold. The only statement I have here is: "Disposal of the Hampton site in March, 1959, to the United States Government at a price of $2,750,611.69 effected recovery of all of our costs."

Hon. Mr. Isnor: If we had the purchase price we would know exactly.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I suppose in addition to the purchase price there would be what was spent on tearing down old buildings and improving the site.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: And legal fees.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is obvious that the number of dollars which I have just mentioned in this item would be the amount, or approximately the amount, that we had in the project. However, I will get the exact cost price.

I do not intend to deal at any length with Vote 626, which has to do with the payment of a pension to a Mr. Casserly, a former locally-engaged employee of the Trade Commission Service in Kingston, Jamaica, in the amount of $508. The Treasury Board approved the payment of the pension, effective January 1, 1960. However, it is the usual practice to secure approval of Parliament before paying a pension of this type.

Vote 627 has to do with the National Energy Board, this being the first appropriation to cover the costs of its administration. Particulars are given on page 7 of the further supplementary estimates which honourable senators have had in their possession for some time. It covers salaries, professional and special services, travelling and removal expenses, freight, express and cartage, postage, telephones and telegrams, advertising, office stationery, supplies and equipment, material and supplies, and sundries, to a total of $177,000.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I would call the attention of the honourable leader to the fact that the first item is salaries, $110,200, and the second item is professional and special services, $25,000. Is that $25,000 in addition to the salaries?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is to provide for the payment for the services of special consultants and legal counsel engaged to render technical and professional assistance at the public hearings of the board.

Next is Vote 628, the particulars of which will be found at page 7 of the further supplementary estimates. There are many details there having to do with the construction of the ice-breaker John A. Macdonald, $1 million, and additional construction projects carried over from 1958-1959, and so on. I can put all the details on the record if honourable senators wish me to do so, but as we have had these particulars for more than a month I thought I would not need to do that.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Perhaps you could make a statement for the record that marine services in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway amount to $3,500,000. Would you make a statement like that?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, no. The larger part of it relates to shipping in the neighbourhood of the Maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: And the ice-breaker John A. Macdonald is not used on the St. Lawrence, but in the north, so it cannot very well be charged up to the seaway.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What about the last item, $1 million, Vote 629?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Vote 629 has to do with a supplementary estimate of $1 million for dredging in the St. Lawrence Waterway in 1959. In the main estimates there was the sum of $4,094,000 for that purpose, and with this supplementary estimate of $1 million the total amount required for 1959-60 is $5,094,000.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is for dredging in the St. Lawrence?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In Vote 628 I see that you are modifying C. D. Howe.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is an expensive job!

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Finally, Vote 630 has to do with the Northwest Territories. This is not an expense. It is a loan that is being made to the Government of the Northwest Territories. The Interdepartmental Committee on Federal-Territorial Financial Relations, in its report on the Northwest Territories, approved by the cabinet on July 23, 1957, recommended that the Government of Canada lend the Government of the Northwest Territories the money required for capital expenditure on education during the five-year period ending March 31, 1962, after first applying $250,000 from the accumulated reserves of the territorial Government. In accordance with the recommendations $800,000 was borrowed, and it is now found that an additional $400,000 is required to supplement the general funds of the territorial Government. The territorial Government is to pay this back to the federal Government with interest.

That, honourable senators, is a brief explanation of the supplementary estimates.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we are indebted to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) for having given us information in regard to these various items. It is very difficult, of course, to remember all the details, but he has intimated that if any member of this house wants further information he will do his best to obtain it.

When the honourable Leader of the Government opened his remarks tonight he referred to the fact that the supplementary estimates provide for the payment of $32,360,511 in addition to the main estimates. I will not say he neglected to say how much had been spent before, but in considering these estimates, I think we should at least remember the amount of money that we have approved so far during the present fiscal year. We have been spending a lot of money; in fact, more money than has ever been spent by any other Government at any other time in Canada.

The main estimates which were approved by this house last July amounted to $5,595,848,557. That was not all. We also approved supplementary estimates of $120,-529,834. With the present supplementary estimates we will have approved the spending by the Government of a sum amounting to $5,748,738,902, which is a very large sum of money. And, honourable senators, I will remind you that this is not all. Before the end of this month we shall have additional supplementary estimates to approve, but in what amount they will appear, I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: My figures are a little different. I have the figure of $5,682,000,000. There is a little difference there, but I do not know the explanation of it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Probably the Leader of the Government has had his figures added on an adding machine. I added the figures myself, so I will not place them in competition with his as to accuracy, but I think he will agree with me that the total is a very large sum of money, and that that is not the end. I do not intend to dwell longer on this amount. I have spoken before about expenditures, and what the future holds for Canadians who will have to pay these bills, so I will not discuss that point any further this evening. I do not intend to discuss any of the items to which the honourable Leader of the Government has referred, except the one which perhaps has aroused more interest throughout Canada than have any of the other estimates.

I refer to Vote 615, under the Department of Labour, in the amount of $15 million. The purpose of the estimate is to pay the provinces under the Municipal Winter Works Incentive Program during the fiscal year 1959-60 and 1960-61 amounts not exceeding one-half of the cost of the labour incurred in the appropriate periods. This item has focused public attention on the ever-present question of unemployment in Canada.

Honourable senators, I offer no apology for making some observations this evening on unemployment, which I admit is a very difficult and complex problem and one which surely does plague us.

In a country endowed with matchless natural resources and gifted with industrious and intelligent people who are well educated to the realities of the day, I often wonder why we should not be better able to adjust our affairs so as to eliminate as far as it is practicably possible the often tragic and unfortunate problem of unemployment. In the past there has been disagreement as to the exact number of persons out of work in Canada. During my remarks in the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne I expressed amazement that the speech made no mention of unemployment. Honourable senators may recall that I referred to the distinction between the two sets of unemployment figures which are often quoted. One set, put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, indicates the number of persons which the bureau estimates are seeking employment at a given time. The most up-to-date figure in that category is 504,000. The second set of figures, put out by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, shows the number of persons in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits at a given time. The latest such number is 782,000.

Now, one figure is an estimate which the Dominion Bureau of Statistics arrives at after making certain inquiries and the other is a definite figure of the number of people who are drawing unemployment insurance. I would draw attention of honourable senators to the great difference between these two figures, which is 278,000. The number of persons receiving unemployment insurance benefits is more than 50 per cent larger than the number estimated by the Bureau of Statistics as unemployed.

I am very glad that the Minister of Labour has stated he proposes to request the officials of the Bureau of Statistics, the Department of Labour and the National Employment Service to produce one figure which will likely be more accurate statistically than any now available. I am not going to say who it was that suggested this be done, because if I did I might be ruled out of order, since the suggestion was not made in this house. Nevertheless, I am very pleased that the minister has accepted the suggestion. If carried out it will be a step toward ending the confusion that has arisen in the past from these two sets of figures, which are always at variance with each other and often very contradictory. It will be difficult to produce one set of figures acceptable to all. In the past efforts have been made to do this, but without success. In any event, I am sure honourable members will agree when I say that unemployment is a knotty problem with which to grapple. Solutions are not easy to ascertain. I think, however, it is fair to say that the difficulty is one of such magnitude and importance that there is room for a real effort to be made at all levels of Government, federal, provincial and municipal, in co-operation with each other and with the business community and the labour unions of this country. These forces should co-operate in an endeavour to bring about a solution to this ever-troublesome problem, which is complicated by particular as well as general features. As an instance I would mention the case of the Maritime provinces, which are slowly declining as effective economic units in relation to the rest of Canada. That statement is in accordance with what has been said by prominent Canadians both outside and within this chamber.

It has been pointed out many times, and in fact only in the last few days, that there are various types of unemployment. Perhaps I may be permitted to mention a few. There is a type known to the experts as cyclical unemployment, which results from variations in the business cycle. The experts seem to agree that this type is not having a great effect on the general employment situation at the present time.

The second kind of unemployment, and one which is much more important in terms of the facts of life of Canada, is seasonal unemployment. This condition arises because of the extreme variations in our climate, and accounts for probably one-half of our present unemployment. It affects particularly such industries as lumbering, fishing, building and, generally, outdoor occupations.

Various solutions have been suggested to combat seasonal unemployment. It is indeed a matter which requires considerable study. It is a complex problem, affected by regional considerations; it is a problem which has been with us over the years, but more particularly during the past few years. In fact, we are now supposed to be living in a period of expansion and prosperity. In such a period in the past we did not have the seasonal unemployment we have had during the past two years. The Government has told Canadian working men that no one would suffer from unemployment. The Government must have known that there would be unemployment this winter, yet the only apparent effort it made to solve this problem was through the so-called winter works program, which is the basis of Vote 615 in the supplementary estimates before us. I would say that the winter works program is good as far as it goes, but it is surely symptomatic treatment rather than therapeutic treatment. In all, it will provide only 40,000 jobs for perhaps a very short period of time. It can, I suggest, be characterized as a drop in the bucket, and as in no way a solution to the general condition of seasonal or other unemployment.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Do you suggest a higher vote for dealing with winter unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will have some suggestions to make to the honourable senator, if he will just contain himself and be patient. I only hope that the suggestions I make will meet with his approval and that he will join with me in trying to put them into effect.

Honourable senators, I have already spoken of two types of unemployment. The third type is that known as technological or structural unemployment, which in a large part results from the phenomenon of automation and comes about as improvements in industrial techniques and efficiency put men out of work. A classic example occurred at the time of the invention of the motor car, when persons who had been engaged in the construction of carriages suddenly found themselves out of work. There was a period in which they had nothing to do, and it took some time for many of them to obtain work in the automobile industry. But in the long run the automobile industry provided much more work for the general population than the carriage industry had ever contemplated. Today we find a number of industries affected by technological unemployment, and the Government has done little or nothing to assist in the solution of their difficulties, other than to say that it is studying the problem.

Nothing, for instance, seems to have been done for the textile industry. That industry is now exposed to serious competition from synthetic products. It is operating under difficult conditions, and at the same time it faces the dilemma of providing a comparatively small domestic market with a great variety of products.

Little or nothing has been done for the coal industry, at one time so basic a feature of the Canadian economy, except to set up a royal commission to study its difficulties.

Nothing has been done by the Government for the uranium industry, which today, as all honourable senators know, is in serious straits, principally because of international complications.

Nothing was done to keep together the highly skilled group of workers in the aircraft industry, especially in Toronto, who last year were set free from their occupations by cancellation of Government contracts.

Honourable senators, the Government cannot entirely wash its hands of the responsibility for the conditions which continue to prevail in the industries which I have mentioned. As a result of its do-nothing policy, seasonal unemployment is being allowed to develop into chronic unemployment, a condition which we should, if at all possible, prevent from taking place. That is the condition we appear to be facing today, and it is not being combated with sufficient relentless force by the Government; and the worst feature of it is that if left alone it can become a more or less permanent condition.

Honourable senators may fairly ask me, as the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) did a moment ago, if I have any solution to suggest. First of all, may I mention some of the suggestions which I have heard from time to time, and which no doubt honourable senators also have heard. I think they are worth repeating.

It has been suggested that there be undertaken a general survey of seasonal unemployment, with particular emphasis on regional analysis. It has been suggested that a national advisory board be created to consider questions of economic development, employment and automation. It has been suggested that the Government's vocational training program be expanded. It has been suggested that there be set up a capital fund to assist the development of industry in the Atlantic provinces. It has been suggested that a federal-provincial conference be held. It has been suggested that a conference of labour and industry be held. It has been suggested that public works under all levels of government be so planned and timed as to provide maximum employment in winter. It has been suggested that a municipal loan fund be set up to encourage municipalities in the provision of work at appropriate times and in appropriate ways.

Honourable senators, I endorse all these plans, and I trust that they will receive most careful consideration.

I have a proposal of my own, which I would like to advance.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is the one we want. We all know the others, which came from the other place.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I was not in the other place, and I did not hear them. I make these suggestions not for the consideration of the other place, but for the consideration of this place.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is the Senate in which I am particularly interested, and if the Senate can do anything to solve this very trying and difficult problem I know that all honourable senators will join as one body to bring about a solution, if it is possible. I say that the Senate of Canada, as all honourable members will agree, is composed of men and women of wide and diverse experience in practically every walk of life. All are experienced in the careful and diligent sifting of evidence in public matters which come before this house and its committees.

I would propose to the Government—and I trust the honourable Leader of the Government will pass this suggestion along—that the Senate seriously consider referring the whole question of manpower to one of its committees or to a special committee, where impartial and unbiased attention could be given by the members of this house to the general problem of unemployment and its effects upon our national life and the individuals concerned. That is the suggestion I make to this honourable house.

I would remind honourable senators of the excellent work done last year by the Standing Committee on Finance, under the chairmanship of the honourable senator from St. John-Albert (Hon. Mr. Emerson), in its study of inflation. I would also remind honourable senators of the equally good work done by the Finance Committee in previous years. I referred tonight to one instance whereby presentation of the estimates has been improved so that we are now able to get more information than we previously could.

I refer also to the excellent work done by a committee of this house and the assistance it gave to the government in the revising of the Criminal Code.

I would also remind honourable senators of the splendid work and the assistance given by a committee of this house when the Income Tax Act was being revised.

In all these matters this house was of great assistance to the Government. I advance the proposition that similarly good work may very well be done by a committee of this house in connection with manpower, employment and unemployment in all its aspects.

We are told on all sides, and particularly by the Government, that we have come out of the recession and are in a period of relatively high prosperity. I would not presume to anticipate the Minister of Finance, but it would not surprise me if he were able to balance his budget during the coming fiscal year. At the same time, however, there is a considerable volume of opinion to the effect that 1961 may not see the same buoyancy that is attributed to 1960. If that is the case in 1961, and if by any standards there are well over half a million people unemployed in Canada, as there are in this year of prosperity, then it surely is necessary for us to view with grave alarm a possible falling off in the economy next year, when related to the question of unemployment. That is one reason why I feel that if a committee is to be set up to consider this question it should be set up soon.

At the same time we should be giving much more serious thought to the possibilities of an even more trying and difficult condition as far as jobs are concerned in the future. If that is so, I would suggest that we ought to give most earnest thought not only to the very difficult unemployment position in which we find ourselves today, but also to what might well become a critical period in these matters over the next few years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator if he is going to move for establishment of such a committee?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I had not decided at the moment to make such a motion. I feel that to do a respectable job we would need the co-operation of the Government, and it might be better to make the suggestion to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) so that he could pass it along to the Government. Whether or not we should take a different course and decide to go along with it in any event, I would leave for further consideration.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I have a few remarks which I should like to address to the house on these supplementary estimates.

The Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) gave a summary of the total amount that Parliament has voted, including these present supplementaries, for the fiscal year 1959-60, which ends with this month. That total, including the main estimates of a year ago, and the two supplementary bills that have been presented, will run to something over $5,748 million, but that is not all. That does not include all that the Government pays out, because it does not include the amounts required to pay old age security, which in the present fiscal year are estimated to amount to $577 million. So the total amount expended or proposed to be expended in the present fiscal year is approximately $6,325 million.

Now, if we take a look for a moment at the prospect for the next fiscal year, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, to refer to it—I may be out of order, but I know your kindness—the main estimates provide for $740 million in round figures. The old age security estimate for the next fiscal year is $590 million, and if supplementary estimates—

Hon. Mr. Haig: Will the honourable senator permit a question? Is not part of the old age pension charged to special incomes not included in the general income? I think if you will look at the record you will see that the cost of that is charged to special incomes, and it is only the carry over or the shortage that has to be paid out by the Government.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am well aware of that, honourable senators, but what I am pointing out to the house is this, and I am sure my honourable friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) will, on reflection, agree with me, that if we pay out during this present fiscal year $577 million on old age security, it has to come out of the taxpayers' pockets. There is no question about that. The mere fact that when this old age security plan was introduced there was set up the so-called 2-2-2 formula, did not mean that the money would not come from the taxpayers. It does. All the formula did was to dress up the plan and perhaps give it a little better appearance.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But that money never gets into the general revenue.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: He never said it did.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Whether it goes into general revenue or not does not matter. The point I am making is that the taxpayers pay it, and my honourable friend will not deny that.

Now, if we project supplementary estimates for the next fiscal year to the same degree as we have had for the present fiscal year, then our spending for the next fiscal year will run to the order of about $6,480 million, an increase of approximately $150 million over the present fiscal year.

It is all very well to talk about the importance of providing against unemployment. It seems to me that all political parties today accept that theory. Not only is it accepted in this country, it has been in a large measure accepted in the United States and in the United Kingdom. I would ask my colleagues in this house to reflect on what that means. If our Government is to be responsible for providing work for people, providing jobs so that all people are employed, then I say it cannot be done unless the Government takes far greater powers than it possesses today to regulate the lives of individuals. If we go on in this present way we shall come to a point—and I dislike making predictions—where we shall have to choose either to revise our whole concept of this aspect of protection against unemployment or reach the decision that we will clothe our Government with the powers that it will necessarily require to deal with it. I am quite willing to stake my reputation on that premise. That, honourable senators is a prospect that frightens me.

Take unemployment insurance. It was a measure that was entered into on the basis of an insurance principle. It has gone far away from that principle altogether, and unemployment insurance today is being used for the relief of unemployment. The insurance principle upon which it was founded has been largely thrown out the window. Today we have, in the figures which the Leader of the Opposition quoted a short time ago, the spectacle of 780,000 people drawing unemployment insurance benefits. If my memory is correct, that was the figure given by the Minister of Labour in the other place a short time ago.

Let us look at what that means. These payments go on for 52 weeks a year, and if my memory serves me aright, they amount to around $36 per individual per week. How long is the Unemployment Insurance Fund going to remain solvent with that strain upon it? True, at the last session of Parliament we increased the contributions from both the employer and the employee.

Hon. Mr. Barbour: And we extended the period over which benefits would be paid.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes; I mentioned that a moment ago.

We increased the payments from the employed person and from the employer, and correspondingly we increased the contributions by the federal Government to bolster the fund. As honourable senators are aware, the contribution of the federal Government is 20 per cent of the total amount required, and that increased the contribution by the Government by about $14 million since the amendments came into force. But there is another aspect of it. That put an additional strain on every manufacturer, on every industry in this country, on every employer of labour, and that at time when we are facing in foreign markets the sternest competition we have had in fifty years. If this be all right, I am bound to say that as far as I am concerned I cannot see where it makes sense.

I wish to deal for a few minutes with the estimates. The Leader of the Government gave a rather extended explanation of the various items, and I would like to comment briefly on some of them.

If I were to offer a general criticism of these estimates it would be this. For the present fiscal year the Minister of Finance budgeted for a deficit of $393 million. Now, it is possible that he may perhaps be within that amount by $50 million—it is impossible to say at the moment. The deficit for the previous fiscal year, as I recall, was $650 million. This year I should think it will be at least $350 million. And this, honourable senators, is at a time when we have been boasting about the buoyancy of our economy.

The general expectation is that 1960 is going to be a very good year, but there are a few small clouds appearing on the horizon. Anyone who reads the financial papers must be aware of this. Will this tendency of an ever-expanding economy continue, or are we going to pause and perhaps slow down? If we pause and slow down, make no mistake, it will soon be reflected in the revenues of the country.

I say frankly to this house that we are not economizing as we should be today, at all levels of Government. There is not a single province in Canada today whose budget has not, so far as I am aware, increased substantially. The same is true of our cities, or practically all of them. If we examine the provincial budgets we will find they are duplicating in very large measure many of the expenditures at Ottawa. Let us not forget that the welfare state philosophy is not practised only by Ottawa; it is practised by every province and every large city, all of which have in their budgets large items for this purpose. I would venture to say that if we took the total expenditures under the broad heading of social security we would find that this year the Canadian people are spending under that heading $2 billion, at all levels of Government, and this apart from soldiers' pensions. My honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. Croll: "At all levels of Government", you add.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Let my honourable friend study the figures and put them together. He will then find I am not very far out.

May I make this observation? This is at a time when we are supposed to have had a prosperous year, when everything is going well with us, and in a young country with endless opportunities for development and growth. If we have to spend now at this rate, what will happen if unhappily we should run again into a period where the sun of prosperity is behind the clouds for two or three years? That would make a difference because governments can get money from the taxpayers only. They can borrow it from people, but today people are rather loath to lend to the Government. Let us make no mistake about that. They are rather loath to lend to the Government, particularly on long-term loans. We may borrow from the United States, as we have been doing largely in the past year, and mortgage ourselves for the future to that country. That is not a desirable thing to do. And if we fail to get revenues in this way, then, of course, we can resort to the old-fashioned method of printing money, which we have done to a substantial degree, believe me, since the end of the war. I am not referring to the present Government particularly, but to the experience since the end of the war. If anyone reads financial history or economic history he will be convinced of one thing, that when that happens the danger signals are flying, and flying very definitely.

Honourable senators, I have only a few comments to make on these estimates. Under Northern Affairs and National Resources there is an amount of $800,000 which, it is noted, is to supplement a sum of $1,500,000 for camp sites and picnic area development. Have we lost all sense of proportion? At a time when our finances are unquestionably strained, at a time when taxation is at the highest level it has ever reached in this country—higher than it was during the war—how can we justify the spending of $2,300,000 on camp sites and picnic grounds? Does it add up to common sense? This was undertaken three years ago. It was started in 1957 or 1958 in order to help solve the unemployment problem, and now it looks like becoming a permanent fixture in our whole spending program. These are the places where I think we need to do some hard thinking.

Then there is the acquisition of the Canol pipe line system. Maybe my memory is at fault, but my recollection is that there was some engagement by the Canadian Government at the time the line was built that Canada would take it over at a certain valuation to be agreed upon. That pipe line, as a matter of fact, was built 17 years ago this coming summer.

I do not know about the National Aviation Museum, but it strikes me it is a thing we could well put off for a few years until we get into a little sounder shape. And these other things—I do not wish to keep the house —are all much of the same type. I think we have become too anxious to do too much almost at once.

I come back to the point that we do need to give care to our public finances. I do not wish to criticize the Prime Minister, but I do think when he made his commitments—and they were commitments—that full employment would be maintained, that no one would suffer for lack of a job, he had not given to them the full reflection they needed. I submit that if that is to be the policy of our Government we should decide to discuss openly with the people the principle of whether or not it is a responsibility of Government to see that everyone has a job. If the answer is in the affirmative, then let us be brave enough and strong enough to take the measures necessary to implement it. But in the final analysis that cannot be done, in my judgment, without the Government's taking unto itself power to regulate where people will work, the number of hours they will work per week and the wages they will earn.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They are not doing that in England.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) shakes his head. I would like to see him work out the problem as it is developing at the present time because, as it appears to me, there is no other solution for it.

I know that compassion cannot be absent from our hearts, but I am confident that many thousands of people today are drawing unemployment insurance and receiving relief in one way or another who could very well get along without it. They did it in the past, and I do not see why they cannot do it now. The unfortunate are in a different category altogether. So far as the unfortunate are concerned, I would hold out both hands to give them the necessary help.

The great virtues of the Canadian people who made this country what it is were self-reliance, initiative, pride and industry. Are we losing these virtues? If we do lose them, it will be a very sad day for Canada.

Hon. Frederick M. Blois: Honourable senators, being a very new member of this house, and also a backbencher, I trust the few brief remarks I am going to make will not be thought to be out of order.

I have listened to the remarks of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in regard to unemployment. He had an advantage over me in that he had his remarks prepared, and I am speaking entirely "off the cuff".

In the first place, I want to say that I agree with a great deal of what he said. I believe if it be possible for honourable members of this house to do anything that would shed any light on, or in any way assist in relieving, the unemployment situation in this country, it is our duty to do our part.

Over a period of years I have had a great deal of experience in the employment of workers. For some forty years I was fortunate enough to be with a firm which did not have much unemployment. We took care of that ourselves. As the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), who sits across from me, well knows, in the tough times we carried on. Fortunately, we were a firm which had sufficient money to be able to do it. But we had faith in our country. We had faith in the goods we were manufacturing, we had faith that our employees would help us out; and they always did, and we always disposed of our goods. It seems to me that any inquiry into unemployment undertaken by a Senate committee would have to be carried out, if possible, in an unbiased and non-political manner. I say in all fairness that I do not think the honourable Leader of the Opposition was altogether unbiased in his remarks tonight, as perhaps I would not be if I had prepared my comments for tonight. But it does seem to me that we in the Senate, and perhaps those in the other place, do a lot of talking without getting down to rock-bottom base of a problem.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition referred to the textile industry. I think perhaps I know as much about this industry as anybody in this house, as I have been in it for some forty years. I know how tough a time it has had down through the years, not only under the previous Government but under several of its predecessors. I tell you that this country should be proud of its textile industry, for before things got as bad for the industry as they have been in the last ten to twelve years it gave employment to more Canadians than any other individual industry did. This fact is probably not generally known. Furthermore, during the last war the textile industry of this country not only supplied the needs of the armed forces of Canada, but it helped other countries as well, and it was able to do so on very short notice.

The textile industry felt the depression of the thirties less and recovered much more quickly than any other Canadian industry. We all know that textile goods are coming in from other countries, but perhaps we could take this to heart and do a little thinking as to how many of us are buying and wearing Canadian manufactured textiles. Some months ago I had the opportunity of speaking at a board of trade meeting and we were all amazed at how many Canadians are buying textiles manufactured outside of Canada. The same is true of other articles. To look at this matter squarely we should examine our own methods and determine whether we are doing our part to build up this country of ours.

A lot can be said for the suggestion of the honourable Leader of the Opposition that a Senate committee be appointed to seek a solution to the unemployment problem in this country, and again I would suggest that if such a committee is appointed it should conduct its survey in a non-political manner.

Honourable senators, it is now ten o'clock, and I will not delay the house longer, but I thought that someone else on this side of the house should take part in the debate. Perhaps nothing would do more good for the Senate than helping to improve the unemployment situation, if we could. I realize that unemployment exists in other countries, but we are primarily interested in this Canada of ours.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, after the vigorous remarks of the honourable gentleman from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) I do not purpose offering any solution to the question of unemployment. But I would say that if those responsible for leadership in this country do not move rapidly to improve the position of agriculture and cut down costs so that our producers can hold their domestic and export markets, then, of the unemployment we are facing at the present moment we can say, to use a slang expression, "We ain't seen nothing yet". We do not fully realize what we are coming up against by way of competition.

While I am inclined to agree with my honourable friend from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois), as I always am, because I know him to be a very intelligent person, I would point out that we have got to do something more than say "Buy Canadian". We have to produce goods on a competitive basis. If we don't, then we are going to have unemployment in this country to a degree that will make our heads whirl.

I want to refer particularly to the supplementary estimates in connection with the assistance being given to the grain growers of the west. When the Prairies Grain Provisional Payments Bill and the Prairie Grain Loans Bill were before the house I supported them 100 per cent, just as I support this vote 100 per cent, but I cannot get away from feeling that however desirable and necessary assistance legislation is at any particular time, the idea of our farmers coming to this house for assistance year after year, not only under the present Government but the Government of which I was once a member, is not good.

Recently I read certain briefs issued by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Interprovincial Farm Council. They radiated from one end to the other the terrific problem the agricultural industry is encountering by way of rising costs—the cost squeeze—as a consequence of which farmers are asking Governments to do this, that and the other thing. I can see their point and I am willing to give my utmost support to temporary measures of assistance, but surely we can get some sound, permanent policy that will enable the farmers to prosper. I would hazard the guess that in the last ten years some $15 billion or $20 billion went into western Canada from the sale of its products. If at the end of such a period they have to appeal to Parliament for further assistance because their costs have gone up, while at the same time some of their prices have gone down, then it can be seen they should have had a larger share of the wealth they produced.

I would like to ask the western senators where the $15 billion or $20 billion went. Who got it? When I was Leader of the Government in the Senate—a position now occupied so graciously by the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) —and was dealing with western agriculture, it did not take long for western senators, particularly the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig), who was then Leader of the Opposition, and the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), to get on their feet and in no uncertain terms tell the Government what should be done to effect a permanent cure of the problems of western agriculture. They had no hesitation whatever. What amazes me is that with these problems before us today the senior senator from Winnipeg and the senator from Blaine Lake, among others, seem to be overcome by a fit of bashfulness. They never showed signs of bashfulness when they were on the Opposition side of the house and I was on the other. What is wrong with them now? Why don't they give an expression of opinion? Why do they not tell this house where the money is going?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Give us a chance.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: You have had chances. I have been sitting here for three weeks waiting for the honourable gentleman to say something. If I had not spoken tonight this bill would have gone through without a further word. I am glad he is going to tell us what the cure for the west is. I say it is not good enough to have these temporary solutions, and to have so basic an industry as agriculture in this country placed in this difficult and humiliating position. The money went into the west. Where is it now? Why is it necessary to come here to have the Government guarantee bank accounts for farmers in the west? The western farmer has an amazingly good record of paying his bills, yet he cannot borrow money. Agriculture in the west seems to be in a bad way. There is something wrong, and my honourable friends should not sit in their seats and refuse to make any comment if they know the cure. I know the senior senator from Winnipeg used to feel that the great obstacle to a prosperous agriculture was the existence in the other place of so many Liberals who did not know what should be done for agriculture, but there is now not a Liberal member from the Manitoba border to the Pacific coast. My honourable friends have a clear field now on which to bring in their plans for the betterment of agriculture in the west. I have not heard from them yet, but it is pretty nearly time that we did hear from them. I would like to hear what the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg proposes to do about it, or what he says the trouble is, and also what the honourable senator from Blaine Lake has to say.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I will answer the honourable gentleman. My home city of Winnipeg has a tax agency. The province of Manitoba pays about $15 million to $20 million a year toward the tax revenue. I admit that is only a little money compared with what is paid by the big provinces of the east, but over the years it amounts to a lot.

The farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta may have funny ideas as to what they should get for their grain, but as a class they are not surpassed by people in any part of Canada, or in any part of the world, for that matter. They are clear thinkers and good citizens, every one of them. They are capital people; they have been up against a hard struggle, have had difficulties through the years and have come out on the top.

My father and mother landed in the west and homesteaded there. They paid $10 for half of a quarter-section of land and settled on it. They brought up eight children, of whom I am one, and all of us are university graduates. All of us have made a living, and none of us have been on relief. It must be remembered that the west has suffered from bad weather and bad conditions. Last year was impossible. No one who has not lived on the Prairies could begin to realize what bad weather conditions did to that area last year. We had it too dry in the spring, and when the rain came in June and July it was too heavy. This was followed by snow and rain and generally bad weather, until the end of October. Think of the plight of a man having a quarter-section of, say, sugar-beets, and the whole crop lying under a foot of water, completely lost. That is the kind of situation we face in our province. The same applies to Alberta and Saskatchewan.

It is true that sometimes the western farmers have asked for too much and exaggerated their demands. However, I want to point out that these people of the west are a free people. During World War I and World War II the young men from our western provinces compared favourably with the young people all across Canada in joining up to go and fight for our country. I know what I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Nobody would deny that.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Well, I know they can't deny it.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Nobody is denying that. Where does the money go? That is what we want to know.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Those are the conditions we were brought up in. We pay higher freight rates than the central provinces or the Maritimes have to pay. We have to pay for the long haul. The west started out with nothing. I will not sit in this house and hear any kind of criticism against the farmers of western Canada, no matter by whom, and no matter whether they vote Liberal, C.C.F., or Social Credit, although I think they should vote Conservative. I will stand up for the western farmers and protect them, no matter for whom they vote. I was raised with them, I went to school with them, and understand them. I married a girl from the west. The western farmers are the best kind of people in Canada. However, they have had an awful struggle, a fierce struggle, and are trying to work out of it. They do not want money from anybody, they only want their share. I will bet my honourable friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) a dollar to one cent that his province of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have got more out of the dominion Government than the western provinces have got in all their history. For instance, they got the Intercolonial Railway, and we carried the load.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: What about Hudson Bay?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Hudson Bay is paying. We are sending a great deal of grain through Hudson Bay. Last year was the best year.

Honourable senators, this is the first time I have had a chance to say quite candidly that I am very proud of the farming communities of the three Prairie provinces. No matter of what nationality the people are, or where they came from, they have become good Canadians, every one of them, and are fighting hard to make a good living for themselves and their families. They are proud to be Canadians; they are very loyal to Canada. When they meet depressions, however, and face trouble all the time, naturally they rally to something which will give them hope of assistance.

On the question before the house, I am worried about the Opposition in this chamber on one point. They tell the Leader of the Government here (Hon. Mr. Aseltine)—and he is a very nice chap when you get to know him—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Some of us like him very much. I have known him personally for about 50 years. He has been a member of this house for more than 25 years. Do you know why we like him? When he tells us he is going to do a thing he always does it. It is nice to have a fellow do that.

When the Liberals on the other side of the house speak they always criticize what the Government is doing, yet I have never heard one of them tell us how to cure the ills for which they blame the Government. There is no use in saying that the Government caused this or caused that.

I can never forget an incident that occurred in the west in the depression years, around 1932. A man was walking down a street in Winnipeg, and when passing Eaton's big store he smashed a window and picked up two loaves of bread. He was arrested. Next day the Attorney General was asked "What did you find out about the man who smashed Eaton's window?" He said, "We found out he had six children at home and there was no food in the house". I said to him then that if I had been in that man's position I would have taken four loaves. That is the kind of thing we have to take care of.

I want to say to my honourable friend that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta do not want a cent of money from anybody else in Canada. We only hope that Providence will give us the right kind of weather so we can grow crops native to our provinces. Given that, we will not only take care of those crops but will pay the debts we owe to Canada, and pay our share of taxes, all without a murmur. That is what the people out there will do. We are a proud people.

Of course you will say that in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan all the people voted for John Diefenbaker. I think Manitoba and Alberta went for him fully. Well, let me tell you that they just woke up that time; that was the first time we got them away. They voted for John Diefenbaker for the very reason that they will always vote for a good man. John Diefenbaker is a westerner himself, and he understands the people. He tried then, as he is trying now, desperately, to solve their problems as they arise. I don't care what you say—you can criticize him from now until doomsday, but you cannot take out of their minds just what the delegation of women from Elliot Lake said about him a few days ago, that he is trying to do the best he can for the west because he was brought up among westerners. I too was brought up there.

Let me tell you a little story. It is a personal one, I will admit. In 1889 or 1890 we were farmers and my mother was a good butter maker. I used to get on Mollie, our horse, and ride bareback to town with three or four pounds of butter and a few dozen eggs in a basket. There I had to buy a pound of tea, a little sugar and some salt and pepper. I always had to figure to have about 20 cents left at the end of the buying; with 10 cents of that I would buy candies, and the other 10 cents I would take home to mother for the collection in church next Sunday. That is the kind of life we had to live, a pretty ordinary life at that time. But now the people are starting to develop industry in that part of Canada. Our western provinces are supporting education to a marked degree. We have a fine university in each of the Prairie provinces, and our Governments give considerable sums of money to maintain these institutions. Large sums of money go to the public and high schools of those provinces and the boys and girls there can get an education equal to that given in any other part of Canada. All these things mean good for our country.

Honourable senators, I apologize for speaking at such length, but I had to answer my honourable friend. When he was the leader of this house he let us on the Opposition do as we liked, but we never got away with anything.

I have nothing to say about either the main estimates or the supplementary estimates that come through at this time of the year to balance up the country's accounts. Let me say, though, that I think Mr. Fleming will not be very far out in balancing the budget this year. He is putting up a great fight to balance the budget. It is all very well to say that if men who are working for $4 an hour would work for $1 we could sell our goods more cheaply. But the question is why should these men not get $4 an hour if everybody around is getting that? Honourable senators, I have no answer to that.

The budget will be brought down between now and the first of April. The honourable Minister of Trade and Commerce, whom I happen to know very well, has spoken of the prospects for the coming year and he has said they are reasonably good. But it does not matter how good the year is, unless we in the west get fair crop conditions we are always up against it.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? When he next speaks will he answer my question?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I told you that from Manitoba alone they paid $15 million a year into the treasury of Canada, and I think Saskatchewan and Alberta paid more than we did.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You mean the farmers paid that?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: My question to my honourable friend was: Why did the farmers not get a larger share of the selling price of their grain?

Hon. Mr. Haig: There is no way on earth that I can answer that question. I do not know what people did with their money during the last 25 years. I tried to get as much of it as I could by being a good lawyer!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we proceed with any other business I would like to obtain the unanimous consent of the house for resuming consideration of the Appropriation Bill tomorrow, not only as the first of the Orders of the Day, but ahead of the preceding two motions, which might take a great deal of time. I would like, if possible, to have second reading of the bill tomorrow, and perhaps if everyone who wants to speak does so, it might get third reading and receive royal assent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is agreeable as far as I am concerned that this bill be the first matter to be discussed tomorrow, with no conditions attached as to when it will pass.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I present a number of petitions in divorce, and I wish to inform the house that these are the last of them.

HON. A. B. BAIRD

ABSENCE DUE TO ACCIDENT

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I make a comment on behalf of myself and all members of the Divorce Committee.

I wish to express the sorrow we feel in the painful and unfortunate accident suffered by one of our members, the honourable senator from St. John's. Senator Baird is now in hospital, and will be there for a considerable period of time. All my colleagues on the committee, with whom Senator Baird is very popular, wish him a quick and complete recovery.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: So do we all.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has said, we all join with the honourable Chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) in his wish for the speedy and complete recovery of Senator Baird.

PRIVATE BILL

INTERNATIONAL LOAN COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn presented Bill S-23, respecting International Loan Company.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 9, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before the house adjourned last evening I asked for the unanimous consent of the house to have the resumed debate on the motion for the second reading of Appropriation Bill No. 1, the supplementary estimates, taken up as the first order of business today. I presume, therefore, that will be done.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Aseltine for the second reading of Bill C-51, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to deal with the details of the bill before us. It is rather too great in detail, when it is considered that the sums of money we are asked to approve today are supplementary to the estimates we have already approved.

I do wish, however, to endorse heartily the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that a committee be formed—I suppose on some later motion —to examine industriously and, I hope, with an open mind the vexed question of unemployment. I know that, as he has said, the figures we have at present are confusing because there are too many of them. They come from various sources, but they boil down to this, apparently, that there are something in the order of 500,000 citizens of Canada ready and willing to work who are out of employment.

It is difficult, I suggest, to estimate the hardship, suffering and frustration that come to a worker who finds himself out of work, his source of supply for himself and his family cut off, his time no good, with no place for him in the economic sun, his rent unpaid, the debt to the grocer rapidly mounting, his children not properly clothed or fed, and the lines of worry and care rapidly deepening on the countenance of his wife. That is a terrible situation! I have never had such an experience, but I have seen others in that position and I can tell you it is not something to be envied. It is a terrible thing for every such individual and when the persons who are affected in that way in our community number something like half a million, many of whom are to be counted as families, I look upon it as a national disaster, and I fancy most honourable senators agree with me.

I am not greatly interested in the statement attributed to the Prime Minister, that if he were in power no one would suffer from unemployment. When he made that statement he was evidently not thinking of unemployment; his mind was on votes. So we must not take that too seriously, except to the degree that it teaches the Canadian people that picturesque phrases do not pay grocery bills, and that in the future they should watch out for such buncombe or hogwash instead of falling for it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can the honourable senator tell me if all these people he mentions are actually suffering, or are they getting unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How would you like to live on unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is not the question.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is the question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is the answer.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: These people are not all getting unemployment insurance benefits, by any means. Unemployment insurance runs out very rapidly, and that is not the answer to unemployment. Supposing a man can for the moment carry his family with the insurance benefits, his future is far from satisfactory, and the fact that he is out of work and his time, as I said, no good is a terrible thing in any community.

I will have something to say about unemployment insurance and other payments which the unemployed man is receiving, but let me add, that were it not for the welfare legislation of the Liberal party and the previous Government there would be an entirely different situation in this dominion today. I was here in Ottawa during the Bennett régime, and I can remember seeing soldiers posted outside the Parliament fence and around the gates to keep the unemployed from the Parliament Buildings.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Engineered by the Liberal party.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If that was engineered by the Liberal party, the ammunition was given to it by the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. Horner: They manufactured their own ammunition.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was in Toronto at the close—

Hon. Mr. Horner: I was in Toronto, too.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: —of the Bennett régime; I was in office in Toronto, and I remember hunger marches on the city of Toronto by men whose minds were filled with hate and who were making a great public demonstration. You do not find that today. The populace is remarkably quiet under the circumstances. It is accepting these conditions more quietly than I would if I were in their place. The reason for the difference between then and now is the welfare legislation of the Liberal party.

The suggestions which were made by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), and also, I think, in other places, are all right in themselves, but they do not mean very much. Conferences and royal commissions will stave off the need for immediate decision, but they do not go very far. I suggest that if we are to tackle this question at all—and I hope we will—we must go to the root of the problem. We should study the cause of unemployment, and the remedy, if there is one—and there is—impartially and boldly. I am all for an inquiry by this body, if those who undertake it are seriously bent on finding the cause and applying the remedy. I am not interested in gaining time, or in skating around the difficulty, or in a futile search for some answer which will supposedly help the public without getting the difficulty off its back.

If you are going to make omelets you have to break eggs, and the question of dealing seriously and effectively with the problem of unemployment involves changes in our economic arrangements that will break eggs for some people if they make omelets for others. As I see it, the enterprise of employing men is divided into three factors. First, there is the factor of our great natural resources in Canada. It is not so much the amount or even the richness of our natural resources, but rather their availability for use that counts in promoting enterprise and thus employing men. Second, there is the question of the capital with which to develop our natural resources; and third, there is the manpower for doing the work and providing the management. These are the three great factors which we must take into consideration if we are to promote that industry, activity and enterprise in our community which will absorb these half-million or more of unemployed people.

While it is true that we have great resources, we must not forget that the economic situation has changed in the lifetime of honourable senators. The free land of the west is no longer available. It is practically all gone. The arable land in all of the provinces has been taken up and is held in private ownership. One can no longer register for a claim and commence a business of lumbering, farming or mining. Our forest lands, at least those that are available and usable, are for the most part under lease, and our vacant urban lands, which are very important in this relationship, are held at prices so high as to be almost unusable. For instance, the city of Montreal has vacant land which is assessed on the books of the city for 1958 at $37 million. All that land is suitable for use, otherwise people would not want it and it would not have value, but just try to get a square inch of it! Try to buy enough on which to construct a commerical building or a house. You will find that the price is so high as to make your enterprise of very doubtful profit. The used land in the city of Montreal is assessed at $395 million, and of course the assessment of land is notoriously low in all our cities, including Toronto. Metropolitan Toronto has an assessed value of land as great as $820 million—that is getting close to $1 billion of land value. I am quite sure that if the land were assessed at anything like the price that is being asked for it the figure for land value would be over $1 billion. I am not speaking about building values or business assessment. I am speaking about that value which attaches to the sites of these great cities by reason of the presence and activity of the community and its expenditure on streets, police and a thousand other things of that kind, values which are not due to the activity of the owners, except as part of the community, but are due to public activities and are therefore the property of the public. I suggest that if we are to make our wonderful resources available for development we should shift the nuisance taxes from enterprise, from people who do things, and levy them upon land values.

Let me give a little illustration of what has happened in Canada within my knowledge and in my generation. At one time I lived in northern Ontario, in the town of New Liskeard. I went there in the summer of 1904; I was the editor of the local paper. I was thrilled by the exploits of the army of prospectors who used to go into the wilderness with picks and shovels in their hands and packs on their backs, searching for signs of valuable mineral. That was a fine enterprise. They were splendid men, bold and hardy. Where is that enterprise today? It is all gone, and has been gone for a long time. Why? Because with every claim they staked, the area for prospecting became less and less. They staked these claims at every sign of calcite and every sparkle of quartz. Then what happened? Well, they were supposed to do work on the claim for three years, and they did. At all events, they registered their proofs of it. Then it passed under patent from the Crown and from then on they paid taxes at the rate of five cents an acre per annum—two dollars for a mining claim of forty acres, a claim which ostensibly was to be a mine. Frequently they did not pay even that. I know, because when we took office in Ontario there were huge arrears of taxes.

What has happened so far as these claims are concerned? Well, the nickel claims have passed into control of the nickel combine, and a vast territory is held for a song, a mere pittance of five cents per acre per annum. A few claims have been developed, and the others are held, not for development, but rather to forestall those who might develop them. If honourable senators wish to promote the mining enterprise—not the mining monopoly, but the mining enterprise, wherever it may be—the way to do it is to multiply the tax of five cents an acre per annum to a fair percentage of the true value. You would then throw open many square miles of territory for re-staking by those who would use it.

Let me give another illustration—and there are thousands of others. I planned at one time to build a house in the city of Toronto. My late wife was complaining about stairs, so I thought I would build her a home in which there would be no stairs. I was amazed to find that to obtain ground in the city of Toronto upon which to erect a house would cost at least $6,000. This sum was simply to get someone out of the way in order to allow me to carry on the enterprise of house builder. The result was that I did not build a house. My experience was that of hundreds of others. What is the great difficulty with regard to house building by the public? Why, the high price that the nation and later the occupier has to pay for just room on which to build a house in a country of hundreds of thousands of square miles in area. That is the national housing corporation's great difficulty, and that also is why private capital looks askance at house building. It is the high price of land.

The first factor is the availability of our natural resources for use by labour and capital. The second factor is the provision of capital. Expenditures from the public treasury of the Dominion of Canada for the year 1959 amount to something in the order of $6 billion. Honourable senators, how can an individual lay up capital when the Government takes from him one-third to one-half of all his gross earnings? How can a corporation gather the capital that is required for extension of its operations or for founding a new enterprise when the Government carries off 45 per cent of its profits annually?

We have been talking a great deal, I notice, in the papers and elsewhere, about American capital coming into Canada. I say, thank God it does come in, and I hope it will continue to do so. I do not know what the economic picture in Canada during the past few years would have been but for the coming in of American capital. We talk about the advisability of our resources being developed by Canadians with Canadian capital. But how is it possible for Canadians to accumulate the capital required for our own enterprise when our Government carries off about one-fifth of our gross national product? And this huge amount is levied almost entirely upon enterprise and not very much on mere ownership. New Zealand has a federal land values tax, and municipal taxes in that country are raised almost entirely from land values.

The great city of Sydney, in South Australia, which has a population of 1.5 million people, raises all its taxes from land values and has none of these nuisance taxes that we have in Canada.

If our Government is sincere in its expressed desire to cure this vexed problem of unemployment by the promotion of enterprise, then I say there are several things which should be done, and I will enumerate them.

In passing, let me say something to the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). Observe that none of these proposals requires a Government with such wide power as he described, the power to say, "Come and he cometh and go and he goeth", to place men in jobs, to fix wages and all that sort of thing. I think the cure for too much freedom is more freedom, and the cure for abuses of Government is not multiplication of the powers of Government but, usually, reduction of such powers. We can depend upon the patriotism, the ambition, the energy and enterprise of our people to promote economic progress.

These proposals are not necessarily in order of merit. I suggest the first thing we should do in Canada today is to lower our tariffs in order to promote trade, for trade is one of the great factors in our economy. The honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois) suggested more "buying Canadian". That is fine. But I say that much more important than "buying Canadian", is "selling Canadian", because only by selling can we buy Canadian. Only by buying abroad can we sell abroad the products of our lands, of our forests, of our mines and of our cities. Accordingly we should lower our tariffs rather than raise them.

The test of the usefulness of an industry in our community is whether it can make its way at a profit. If an industry must depend upon other industries for its profits or upon inflated prices of the things it sells, then it is not an advantage to the community, it is a disadvantage. It is not an asset, it is a liability. All industries should be subject to that test of whether they can survive and operate at a profit. The workers who are employed in a losing industry should go into one more suitable to this community. We should lower tariffs.

Next, we should cut down our governmental expenditures and live within our means. This business of piling up great debts is a terrible thing. I repeat, we should live within our means. Think of it: we are spending $1,600 million a year on national defence. How much of that is pure waste, I do not know. None of us can follow it in detail. It is a fantastic amount, much of which goes down the drain. I will give you one illustration, and that is the Arrow. We poured $500 million into the building of an aeroplane and sold the scrap for $300,000.

As to welfare expenditures, I think they are our best money. Without such money as unemployment insurance benefits, mothers' allowances and old age pensions we would face a drastic situation in this country that would far exceed in its ruinous character the amount of money we are spending on welfare. Aside from welfare, however, we should reduce the fantastic amounts which we are spending and we should cease in that way to deplete the capital of our citizens.

We should lower the income tax. We should lower the tax on corporations, and so leave more of corporate profits for capital expenditures, in order to build up enterprise and absorb labour.

And finally, we should study the shifting of the burden of taxation from the fruits of enterprise and labour to the fruits of monopoly, chiefly to land values. Let us so encourage industry and, at the same time, so discourage the holding of national resources out of use, that we will cure the vexed question of unemployment.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I think the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) accused me last evening of being bashful. Well, he is quite correct. I plead guilty. At the times he spoke of when I had something to say, it was only because it was necessary that someone should say something, for we were placing the country in the position which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has just been complaining of. That was why I protested. I understand the honourable senator from Shelburne would like me to deal with the assistance of $15 million given to western farmers because of their snowed-under crop. Well, I certainly know the situation, for I have driven through many miles of the country and seen what has taken place. Much of their fine crop is lying under snow and is wet. A good part of the crop was taken off, but the farmers lost 20 cents a bushel on grading because the grain had to be dried.

While some farmers have been able to bear this financial burden, others have found it difficult to pay their ordinary store accounts and so on. It was therefore decided, as the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has pointed out, that the federal Government, in conjunction with the provinces, should pay a limited sum to cover the unharvested grain.

I have heard it said that it would have been better to advance the money and let the farmers repay it, if they could, when they harvested their crop in the spring. It is just possible that many of them will be able to salvage their crop. I well remember one spring when conditions were ideal, and the crop was harvested without any serious loss. But let me remind my honourable friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), that those farmers who do salvage their crop will have to pay income tax on their profits; and let me point out to him that a few farmers in the province of Saskatchewan will pay more income tax a year than will all the farmers in his province.

Let me tell you why we find ourselves in difficulty today, and why the farmers of western Canada are appealing for assistance. When the Government of which my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity formed a part was in power, I came out of my bashfulness to protest against its give-away policy on wheat to the British Government during the war years, with only the proviso that they would "have regard". Well, we know the kind of regard they had: like the shrewd businessmen they are, they were mighty careful to see that we would not in some way try to get back what they had gained. That policy on the part of the former Government meant a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to the western farmer, so why begrudge them a few dollars of assistance now? And, as I have said, those who are able to harvest their crop and do not need the help will be paying their share in income tax.

As honourable senators know, I have never hesitated in this chamber to speak in support of matters which I believe would help to create better and more independent men and women. I am all for such things. But I am against schemes which I maintain have deteriorated the moral fibre of our people.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity spoke of the vast land of the west that is no longer available and said that was the cause of some unemployment. I maintain that if people would accept the kind of work which I as a young man accepted, and would work under the conditions and for the hours I worked, not one man in Canada need be idle today. Anyone who has tried to hire men recently will know that to be the fact.

Another occasion when I came out of my bashfulness to speak was when I protested against the setting up of the unemployment insurance fund. I said that with the words "suitable employment" in the act, it could never be successfully administered. And that is just what we have found out. In the days when the Ottawa Valley was being built up, what did the unemployed family man do for winter work? He left his wife and children behind and went into the bush. He would be away as long as seven or eight months, without even a letter from home for two or three months. His wife and children took care of the place in his absence. But what happens under the unemployment insurance scheme? The seasonally unemployed man says he can't leave his wife and family; he must take them with him, and somebody must provide a home for them.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity apparently is of the opinion that a land tax would cure a lot of our ills. In my opinion it would not cure any of them. He suggests that land for homesteading has gone. Let me say that there is today greater opportunity for the young man to establish himself in western Canada than there ever was in the homesteading days. Those were the days of real hardship, when a man had to walk on trails over unbroken land, swim rivers and so on; and when he did reach his land and set himself up, he had no ready market, and even if there had been a market he would have had no way of getting his products to it. Today any man who is worth his salt and is willing to work can obtain credit; he can walk into that area and buy a farm for practically the price of the buildings, the fences and the improvements. But, no, young men are not willing to work. They want an eight-hour day and a five-day week. You just can't break off in the midst of your summer-fallow, when the weeds are getting ahead of you, and insist on short hours of labour.

I repeat, land is available. Farms have been abandoned. There is still land in the Peace River country for anyone who wants to take it. For instance, the honourable senator from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) has a beautiful farm, and the conditions under which he would sell it offer much more rosy prospects than his father faced when he went to the west. So it is all down the line: these places are available, but no one wants to work.

The difficulty today, and what I fear most, is this eternal talk of blue ruin. You can bring it about by talking about it. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity referred to conditions under the Bennett Government. Let me say, I personally knew men with $2,000 and $3,000 who were riding the freight trains for no other reason than to embarrass that Government. They are well off today, and they had no reason for doing what they did. That was the time when Mussolini and his crowd marched on Rome and took possession of the Italian Government. Much of the marching that took place in Canada in that period was done with the intention of taking over our Government.

I hesitate to say this, honourable senators, but there seems to be an opinion abroad among senators and others that the country is surely going to pot because the Liberal party is not in power. They think there is no man in the Conservative party capable of leading the country in difficult times. Mind you, I have never shared that view. I say their attitude makes the work of the Government still more difficult in these already troublesome times.

That is all I intend to say today, honourable senators.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I have to agree to some extent with the remarks of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) when he says that everybody can go to work if he will take the kind of job we took when we were young, but for my part I would not like to see my boys out with a yoke of oxen breaking the Prairie sod and living in a sod house.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is good stuff for them.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Well, I would hope they could do better than that, and I think we should try to make it better for them. As I understand it, that is one of the things we are trying to do.

One of the reasons why I felt called upon to speak today was that there seems to be a considerable amount of misunderstanding as to just what the situation is in western Canada with regard to the farmers, and the maximum of $600 we are voting to give assistance to those farmers whose crops were snowed under.

In the first place, I would like to say that in Alberta—and I am speaking entirely of Alberta, although this will apply to the west in general—in the last harvest season it rained practically every other day during the latter part of August and the early part of September; and then early in October we had a heavy snow storm which deposited four to eight inches of snow in the district where I live and over the northern part of the province. More than half of the crop there is not even cut, but probably it is in as good shape as if it were.

Today we seldom use a binder. The main reason for this is that we cannot get help, and we have had to purchase expensive combine harvesters. Therefore, generally we are a little later in harvesting our crop, and last fall we—particularly those of us in northern Alberta—were left with crops unharvested. For instance, if I may refer to my own case, I have over 200 acres in crop on my farm, and I got about 40 acres of that harvested. What I did harvest tested a little more than 20 per cent moisture. Grain with that moisture content is dangerous to keep. As a matter of fact, any grain with over 16 per cent moisture content may spoil by heating. It is considered to be dry at 13.6 per cent, and you are taking a chance in keeping it when it tests over that.

Honourable senators, I would like to give you some idea of just what the farmer has to go through, and what conditions he has to comply with in order to be entitled to this help. In the first place, he has to make an application to the council of either the county or the municipal district in which he lives. Our province is divided in three ways. We have counties, municipal districts and local improvement districts. A farmer has to make the same type of application whether he lives in a county, a municipal district or a local improvement district.

To be eligible for assistance a farm operator must have less than 50 per cent of his grain harvested, and have an average yield of grain threshed in terms of wheat of 10 bushels or less per seeded acre. If the yield is 5 bushels or less, he will receive $3 per acre on a maximum of 200 acres; and if it is 10 bushels or less, but more than five, he will receive $2 per acre on a maximum of 200 acres. Payments will be made only to farm operators, so landlords are not eligible. Only one payment will be made to a farm unit. All yields of farm crops will be converted to yield in terms of wheat as per P.F.A.A. schedule.

Honourable senators, you may remember that in January when we were dealing with two bills which were up before the house which guaranteed loans to farmers I protested that we were discriminating against the coarse grain farmer because in respect of oats he could get only 20 cents a bushel on six bushels per acre, which is $1.20 whereas the wheat farmer could get 50 cents a bushel on 6 bushels per acre, or $3. It does not matter now whether he has oats, barley or wheat. It is paid on the basis of so much an acre, and it is a much fairer proposition.

The application for assistance should be delivered to the secretary-treasurer of the municipal district or county in which the farmer happens to live. I might say that farmers can obtain application forms from either the secretary-treasurer or the provincial Department of Agriculture. A farmer who has less than half of his grain threshed must file his application with the municipal council. The application is to be completed by the farmer, but in most cases he gets the grain elevator agent to help him. The reason for this is that in the western provinces any farmer who sells grain must have a permit book issued to him by the Grain Board, in which book every bushel that he sells is entered. The permit book is kept at the elevator where he sells his grain, or, I would say, at least 90 per cent of the books are kept there. A farmer may carry it around in his pocket, but usually he does not do that. He just leaves it at the elevator, so that it is there whenever he takes in a load of grain. A farmer cannot sell that grain without producing his permit book. As I say, the elevator agent generally helps him to make out the application. The number of acres that he puts down must, of course, jibe with the number of acres noted in the permit book, because that permit book is taken out for the previous 15 years and it can be followed up. It is one way of telling whether a farmer is putting the right acreage on his application.

Some people have said to me that all farmers in Alberta will file an application and get $600. Well, such is not the case. In my own district at least half of the farmers have not filed applications. At least, I make that statement because I am quite sure that more than half the farmers did not have 50 per cent of their crops unharvested. In my county more than 1,000 farmers put in applications and only 19 of them were found not eligible.

In the municipal office there is a large map. If you go into any municipal office you will see on the wall a large map measuring about 4 feet by 10 feet. That map shows all the land in the district, together with the names of the farmers who occupy the land. When the applications come to the municipal office they are pinpointed on this map, so it can be easily seen whether there is more than one application for any single parcel of land. In some cases a man may have made a mistake in his description of the land or have given the wrong township.

Land division is considerably different in Alberta from what it is here in Ontario. I do not know how it is in the Atlantic provinces. Our province is divided entirely into sections which, in turn, are divided into quarters. There are four quarters in a section and thirty-six sections in a township, and in our county there are upwards of sixty townships. That will give you an idea of the size of the county. If an application is wrong as to the land description, or if two applications are made for the same land, it will be necessary to contact the applicants or perhaps even to make an inspection. The applications are checked by the secretary for mathematical errors before being placed before the municipal council for its approval. If they are found to be in order they will be signed by the reeve and the secretary-treasurer, dated, listed, and forwarded to the Field Crops Branch of the provincial Department of Agriculture, which is responsible for making payments direct to the farmers.

The municipal council in my district is composed of seven councillors, each of whom must live in the district he represents. They probably know every farmer in their respective districts and are thus well qualified to pass on applications.

The Government will pay the county $1 for each application processed, and if the council considers it necessary to have an inspection the Government will pay the cost of an inspector at the rate of $15 per day and 12 cents per mile for travelling. As a rule council is able, if it wishes, to procure the services of P.F.A.A. inspectors to make these inspections. These inspectors are used to this sort of inspection and are well qualified to do the work.

There are other hardships our farmers have had to face this year that are a little worse than usual. I think all honourable members are aware that in recent years, because of the surplus of wheat—and in these last two years we have had a little larger carryover of oats and barley than we would like—we have encouraged our farmers to go into mixed farming and raise hogs and poultry. Well, this policy did not work out very well last year. When in Alberta, two weeks ago, I picked up an article in the Red Deer Advocate, part of which reads as follows:

> Buyers reported to The Advocate Thursday noon that the open market price fetched by grade A hogs shipped from Red Deer had dropped to $17.80 per hundredweight,

Those are dressed hogs.

> the lowest price paid here for hogs in many years. This price compares with the last federal price support level of $20.15 which expired on January 9, when the Canadian Government replaced price supports on hogs with a deficiency payment plan.

Further on the article says:

> At the same time, predictions were being made in packing plant circles that further declines in hog prices were in the offing.

So much for hogs. Egg prices fell as low as 8 cents for grade A large and 7 cents per pound for grade A fowl.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: What date was that?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: About the middle of February.

When I was home I talked to a farmer friend of mine who had shipped to Edmonton a crate of poultry on which he netted 45 cents per fowl. I said: "That's pretty cheap. How big were they?" He replied, "Oh, five or six pounds". He said he had some more, so I drove out to his place, just three miles from Bruce, to get some. He chopped off the heads of ten fowl. There wasn't one under five pounds, but he sold them to me for 50 cents apiece.

Now, you cannot produce grain to feed poultry which sells at that price, to say nothing about getting any pay for your labour. I think it illustrates the plight of the farmer today in that part of the country. We are talking about voting a few hundred dollars for a farmer who has probably lost his crop and is forced to sell his poultry at 50 cents a head and his hogs for 17 cents per hundredweight dressed. So you can see he is in pretty bad shape and is well deserving of assistance. This is no fault of his own. It is not a case of poor farming or poor management. He finds himself in his present predicament as a result of circumstances over which he has no control.

The last date by which a farmer could file an application for assistance in Alberta was February 29. I have a statement here that was made by Mr. R. M. Putnam, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Alberta, who says that more than 10,000 applications were made by Alberta farmers for relief payments on unthreshed grain. Up to the time of this statement 1,000 of those applications had been processed and the cheques sent out. The average amount paid the farmers was around $300, just half the allowable maximum amount.

I would like to address a few remarks to the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who seemed so astounded last night that western farmers should need any assistance. I don't know why he should single out the western farmers, for the situation of all farmers across Canada is similar. If the situation is not similar then why, just before we passed this legislation granting assistance of $6 million to western farmers, did we pass legislation granting freight rate assistance to farmers all across Canada, including Nova Scotia? This assistance has been given for years; it is not something that has come up this year for the first time. There is nothing special about the situation of the farmers who benefit from the assistance. They were not snowed under; they were able to harvest their crops. But, we are asked to vote $6 million for the three western provinces—that is, $2 million for each province—and the honourable senator is astounded. Yet we vote $2,500,000 for the farmers of Nova Scotia and it does not bother him at all; he does not even seem to notice it. That is all right, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It depends on whose ox is gored.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: This has been going on for 15 years, and in that period of time we have voted a total of $321 million for assistance to farmers in the eastern provinces, including Nova Scotia. In checking back for a couple of years I see that Nova Scotia got about ten per cent of the total, which figures out at $32 million. I think the farmers there needed it, and I voted for it. I was not astounded.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: We helped the west out by buying grain, didn't we?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: That is right. You helped us out by getting cheap grain from us in order to compete with us in producing hogs and cattle and chickens. In other words, we subsidized the farmers of Nova Scotia in order to enable them to compete with us on hogs and cattle and chickens. That is the reason why our hogs and chickens are so low in price.

So I feel sorry that my friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Roberston) takes the attitude which he does. I would like, however, to compliment the senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald), who is quite satisfied and even thankful that he got a little help from us western farmers. He evidently does not grudge us a little help. We in the west did not ask for help every year, as you did; we asked for help just once in a while.

I hope we shall not hear any more about western farmers always looking for a handout and being a sort of poor relations, because that is not true, as anybody who knows the situation will agree.

Hon. Austin C. Taylor (Westmorland): Honourable senators, as a representative of the farmers of Canada, more particularly of the Atlantic provinces, I feel I should have something to say in relation to one or two items in the supplementary estimates.

I wish to compliment my honourable colleague from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh) on his presentation on behalf of the western farmers.

I recall that about three years ago I made, as I thought afterwards, some quite heated remarks in support of an item similar to Vote No. 612. First, however, I should like to refer to Vote 611: "Health of Animals Division—Compensation for animals slaughtered".

The honourable senator from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) complimented the Government yesterday on carrying out a wonderful program. I also wish to compliment the Government in this particular field, because it has brought brucellosis under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. That is one of the most important features of that act, for brucellosis is closely associated with a human disease known as undulant fever, and while there is a great deal of satisfactory work done in the elimination of brucellosis, and compensation given for animals that must be destroyed, the very fact that the disease is now included under the act makes the present act a vast improvement over the former one.

I am not going to compliment the Government on freight assistance as thoroughly as my colleague from Kings (Hon. Mr. McDonald) did yesterday, because the Government is only carrying out one of those good Liberal policies adopted many years ago by a Liberal Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): I am glad that the Government is doing so, and I hope it will continue to do so. I want to suggest to this Government that freight assistance come under a federal act so that the farmers of Canada from year to year will not wonder whether or not the policy is going to be continued. As far as my province is concerned, and I think the same applies to all the eastern provinces, and also probably British Columbia, there is no single policy adopted by the federal administration which is of so much help and assistance to the farmers as this freight assistance policy. In my province agriculture must be built on the livestock industry, and unless we can secure grain in large volume at reasonable cost it will be too bad for us in the Atlantic provinces.

I have secured some figures which I think will be of interest. As I mentioned a moment ago, this policy was brought into effect by the former Government. That was in 1941. In 19 years of operations the Government has spent $300 million to assist the farmers of the five eastern provinces and British Columbia in getting western grain to those provinces. Another point of interest is that over that period of time 50 million tons of coarse grains and mill feeds have been shipped from the western provinces to the eastern provinces, and to my mind it is the best market the west has had.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It would not have gone to those provinces except for the help they got in the freight rates.

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): That is quite true. I was one of those who in former years fought for some assistance in this regard. Under the original plan we asked for the export rate on coarse grains and mill feeds from the west to the Atlantic provinces. That was the first application. I think I pointed out at that time, about two or three years ago, that coarse grains and mill feeds could be shipped from western Canada to the seaboard, to Halifax and Saint John, sent to Germany, unloaded, loaded again and shipped back to Halifax or Saint John, and sold in Saint John cheaper than we could buy it directly from the western provinces. That was one of the reasons why we were handicapped in the Atlantic provinces.

I am glad the Government is going to continue its policy of freight assistance. I am not too bashful to ask for assistance for the farmers of Canada, because of the conditions under which they have been labouring over the years, and, in my opinion, will be labouring for a number of years yet, considering the state of flux the agricultural industry is in, on account of competition, mechanization and new technological changes, which require changing over our whole program. I have no hesitation in asking this Parliament, or any other Parliament, to give assistance to the farm people of Canada so that they can put themselves in a position where they can stand on their own feet after the transition period has expired.

Honourable senators, I wish to give some information and figures to show the position of the farmers today. We have heard a good deal about farm income, both gross and net income, and the rest of it. Gross income does not mean very much to me; the net income is what does mean something to me. I have taken these figures from the Canada Year Book, and in doing so I go back to 1952 and I follow right up to 1959. It is true that the figures that I intend to give for 1958-59 are estimates only, but I followed back over the years to 1952 and I found there was very little difference between the preliminary estimates and the final expenditures as compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I am only going to give you the two outside years, 1952 and 1959, to indicate what has been happening.

The net income of farm operators, from farming operations, including estimated retail value of farm homes and supplementary payments made under the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the western grain acreage payments, for 1952 and 1959 are as follows:

	1952	1959
Prince Edward Island	$ 20,921,000	$ 11,870,000
New Brunswick	36,689,000	18,853,000
Quebec	277,144,000	185,103,000
Ontario	447,629,000	325,212,000
Manitoba	156,806,000	101,624,000
Saskatchewan	565,514,000	237,327,000
Alberta	359,849,000	241,433,000
British Columbia	39,539,000	52,080,000
Nova Scotia	19,382,000	15,886,000
	$1,923,473,000	$1,189,388,000

So there was $800 million less net income in 1959 than in 1952.

Honourable senators, that has not occurred by reason of lower prices only, but because of the tremendous increase in costs of production. That gap between costs of production and net income of farmers or the prices they receive for the goods they sell has been growing greater and greater until it has become a national emergency.

I was rather disturbed at some of the remarks made by my honourable friend from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) last evening. I listened very attentively, and at times I thought I could see written across his forehead the words "Free Trade". I made up my mind, and indeed I have felt for a long time, that I would go along with that to a great extent; but, as I mentioned once before in this house, I am not prepared to go along with it if it is going to be a one-way street. If there is going to be free trade down the street there must be free trade up the street. That is why at the moment I am still saying there must be some support and some protection for the farm people, because, after all, there is no more stabilizing influence in all Canada than the farm population.

I should like now, honourable senators, to bring to your attention one or two other points. I have before me some figures prepared in 1957 which give in detail certain amounts spent by the dominion Government on behalf of various industries in Canada.

To the Department of Fisheries, on behalf of various activities of the fishing industry, the sum of $1,962,548 was paid.

The Department of Labour was paid out of ordinary revenue the sum of $67,374,016. Included in that amount is $1,016,679 for administration of the Government annuities office, $28,982,936 for administration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and $37,363,867 as the Government contribution to the insurance fund.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: In what year was that?

Hon. Mr. Taylor (Westmorland): 1956-1957.

In the same year there was paid out in gold, coal, iron and steel subsidies the sum of $18,270,141.

A total of $26,634,259 was paid out for shipping, railways and canals. Included in this last item is the cost of administering, operating and maintaining free canal services, $6,786,091. Not for one moment was consideration given to the fact that the farmer is paying for the protection of hundreds of industries in this country through tariffs and other taxes of which the farmers pay their full share. For that reason I have no hesitation in saying before this house or before any group that I am not abashed in any way when I ask that the Government give consideration to the farmers, not only at this time, but until such time as they can get on their own feet. I assure you that the farmers are not anxious to ask for handouts or subsidies. They would much rather stand on their own feet and pay their own costs, if you like. But I say they need support at the present time, that farmers and their families all across this country are in need of support in view of what has happened over the last few years. The honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) mentioned, for instance, the hours that these people work—seven days a week, 52 weeks a year. We must give some consideration to that aspect.

The agricultural problem is a very serious one. I believe the Prime Minister probably did not know what he was facing when he made certain statements in the 1957 general election campaign. May I quote from a speech he made at Massey Hall in Toronto on April 27, 1957:

> We will assure the farmer of his fair share of the national income by maintaining a flexible—and I underline the word 'flexible'—price support program to ensure an adequate parity for agricultural producers based on a fair price-cost relationship.

Now, we all know that that has not been done. And I think we must all admit that one of the most difficult problems facing any Government today is how to bring about a condition of that sort. Let us face the facts. I do think that instead of piling up farm surpluses under our present set-up and methods of production and our present system of mechanization and all the rest of it, we should be getting some of this food to the needy peoples of the world to keep them from starving to death or at least to see to it that for a few days of their lives they would not go to bed hungry.

A number of years ago, when I attended a meeting of the International Federation of Agricultural Producers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented a plan to the Food and Agriculture Organization in which they recommended that an international food bank be set up, and that money should be provided for this purpose by the western nations or by the F.A.O. But they were not successful with it.

I do not wish to compliment the present Government any more than I should, but I believe credit should be given where credit is due. The Government recommended to the F.A.O. conference held in Rome last November that an international food bank should be set up, that the nations belonging to F.A.O. should contribute funds for this purpose and that such a bank would supply food to needy countries where there are millions of people who never have enough to eat from the time they are born until they die. Instead of giving some of the surplus food we have in Canada to Canadian people who are well able to pay for it, I think we would be much better off, if we ever hope to save democracy for the world, by sending food to people who do not have it. In my opinion there is no more honourable way of bringing about good feeling between peoples of different nations than by first giving the hungry enough to eat so that they are strong enough to go ahead and try to make a living for themselves.

Therefore, honourable senators, I wish to express full support of those items to which I have referred. I do not make special reference to the vote for $6 million—I think the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) said it was $15 million—to provide assistance to the farmers of western Canada. That matter has been well covered by the honourable senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh), and I support it. I would not wish to do anything that would widen the split between east and west. I know the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) in his remarks last evening did not wish to cause any rift between the east and the west. I must say, however, that when I heard him ask the senators on the Government side where the money was going, I thought he had reference to the money that was being paid by the Government to the western farmers. Having since read his remarks I now have a more accurate picture of what he had in mind, and I firmly believe that there is complete understanding between the east and the west. There was a time during the thirties when we had difficulty in appreciating each other's problems, but the situation has now changed. Indeed, if we in the east did not have good relations with the west we would never have received the transportation assistance we now have on feed grain for eastern farmers. I assure honourable senators that the relations between the east and west are of the very best, and I hope that nothing will be done here to change that happy situation.

In closing, may I say that I appreciate what has been done for the farmer, and I hope that more will be done for him. I also hope that the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) will bring to the attention of the Government the need for legislation to put the freight assistance to farmers on a permanent basis, so that they can go ahead from year to year and plan for the future.

I should like to repeat what I said some time ago when speaking on the subject of land use in Canada, that the time has come when this country should have legislation for rural development. By that I mean legislation which will take the place of the present P.F.R.A. and the M.F.R.A. and other measures. I would like to see a comprehensive act brought into force that will take in all the related measures in each province, so that each area may be able to meet its problems and get such assistance as necessary from the national Government. I am not going into the details of that proposal—I trust I shall have an opportunity at a later date to do so—but I strongly feel that legislation along that line should be introduced as early as possible.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I do not propose to involve myself in the debate between the east and the west. I am just a poor citizen of Ontario—

An. Hon. Senator: Poor?

Hon. Mr. Croll: —who pays the shot, no matter which way it goes, and am very glad to do it.

My purpose in rising today—and I shall be brief—is to support the very constructive suggestion made by my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for the appointment of a committee of this house to study the manpower situation in this country. I should like to enlarge on the scope of the idea he proposed, because I think the time for positive action in this respect is long overdue.

Let me briefly indicate that the problem of unemployment has various aspects. We talk of seasonal unemployment: that comes to us, and has been coming to us every winter, and is aggravated by habits and patterns. We even think in terms of winter unemployment, and what is even more unfortunate, we actually plan for it. We have what we call cyclical unemployment, which is due to the ups and downs of business and is a condition that can take place at any time. Indeed, it is happening more often than not these days. We have what we call technological unemployment, which results from automation. It has come upon us rather suddenly and we are not properly prepared for it.

Be that as it may, we have these three aspects of unemployment, and we have had them for some considerable time.

We now have what we call chronic unemployment, a condition that is very much like a disease and has continued for a long time. Every month I receive certain figures from the Department of Labour, a service which honourable senators can obtain if they wish. Let me refer to the figures I have before me to indicate what I have in mind when I speak of chronic unemployment. I shall give the unemployment figures for two comparable dates, namely, January 15, 1959 and January 14, 1960, and the regions and cities to which they apply.

Region and Local Office	Jan. 15 1959	Jan. 14 1960
Atlantic Region
St. John's, Nfld.	17,651	18,422
Moncton	10,990	10,159
Quebec Region
Montreal	84,653	83,165
Quebec	18,050	17,457
Ontario Region
Hamilton	17,811	16,811
Toronto	67,377	72,225
Prairie Region
Winnipeg	23,105	22,440
Calgary	10,218	11,270
Edmonton	18,021	17,039
Pacific Region
New Westminster	11,948	10,959
Vancouver	36,185	34,116

My purpose in bringing those figures to the attention of the house is not to criticize the Government, but to indicate to you that the problem is becoming a deep one. I can obtain for you the figures for the year before that, and indicate to you that this is something comparatively new and something that is very dangerous. It is affecting the economy and the morale of this country.

How do we deal with it? Well, unless we know the symptoms, unless we know what has brought this on, we are not likely to be able to find a solution. We are faced in this country with a situation in which 10 per cent to 12 per cent of the working force is unemployed. That should stagger the minds of all honourable senators. If I recall correctly, during the depression the total unemployed averaged 15 per cent of the working force, although I am not sure of that figure, and I may be wrong. Now we have from 10 to 12 per cent of the people unemployed. You cannot attribute that to seasonal employment. You cannot attribute that to cyclical employment. This goes much deeper than that, very much deeper. We look around and try to find a possible cause, and we say that much of it is due to automation, and much of it is chronic. But in any event we cannot any longer ignore it.

One of the things that has contributed to a great amount of unemployment in this country is the Government's policy with respect to housing. I know that we Liberals are the people who are blamed for tight money, but, believe me, money has never been as tight as it is at the present time, particularly for purposes such as housing. A year ago in this country loans made in the month of January under the N.H.A. totalled 2,993. In January of 1960 the loans accepted under the N.H.A. totalled 100. That will show you how tight money is.

I said that I was not going to blame unemployment upon the Government in office at the present time. I am prepared to forgive the Government for having said in 1957, upon taking office, that the unemployment problems belonged to the Liberals. Very well; there was some justice to that. In 1958 the Government still had not had too much time and the problem still belonged to the Liberals. I will accept that statement because there was some justification for it. Now, I say to my friends opposite, do not smile, because I am going to read you something that will pin it on you forever and a day. You said that in 1957, in 1958 and in 1959. You admitted in 1959 that the Government of the day should bear some of the responsibility, but I would like to refer you now to something that was said on March 3 this year. I am looking at page 1699, on the left side of the page,—

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: What are you reading from?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Hansard of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not supposed to read from that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes, I am. I have done it on many occasions, as you and others have. This is the Minister of Labour speaking:

> The government as a whole—I have said this on previous occasions and I repeat it—has assumed the responsibility for unemployment. We have said that right from the start, and this is possibly the only time that a federal Government in this country within recent years has accepted that responsibility.

I go on:

> This present Government is responsible for that problem and has been responsible for it. I, as Minister of Labour, answer on behalf of the Government in this respect.

Now, that should settle it for everyone.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That means just looking after it, looking after employment.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Of course, by getting jobs for the unemployed. That is the only way you can look after unemployed persons. Unemployment relief is no substitute for jobs. That is not a way of life, and it was never intended to be.

If my honourable friend will say that that is the policy of the Government, and that unemployment insurance is the new way of life under this Government, I am prepared to accept his statement now. I have been in political life for a considerable number of years. I have lived with the problem of unemployment. I am not suggesting here that I know the solution to unemployment, but it just does not make sense to me to deal with a problem without knowing what causes it. If the Government of the day knows everything there is to be known about the manpower of this country, then what is the solution to our unemployment problem? My suggestion is that it does not know and that no Government before it knew. There is a field here which has not been fully investigated. The Government today does not know where there are areas of surplus labour or where there are areas that are in distress. It is not possible for it to know, because there is no body under the Government administration at the present time to provide the information.

I am not laying too much blame on the Government for the situation in Elliot Lake, but it is not going to do any of us any good to be able to boast about having the nicest ghost town in North America. There comes a time, particularly in dealing with unemployment, when you have to throw politics aside. We are seeking a solution to the problem, and all I am suggesting is that this house has the time, the energy and the ability—and it can be non-partisan when it wants to—to make a study of this problem. What have we got to fear? This house proved conclusively last year when it dealt with the inflation that it can do a job. There was not the slightest suggestion of partisanship, and although the committee's report did not burn up the hustings and it was not the greatest report ever written, there were some concrete and sound ideas in it. People who had knowledge came before the committee and contributed something which assisted us in reaching a conclusion.

Let me give you an example of the lack of worth-while information. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics tells us there were 504,000 unemployed in January, and then we find that the Unemployment Insurance Office states there are 782,542 persons drawing unemployment insurance. If you subtract 504,000 from 782,000 you find there are, in round figures, 278,000 more people collecting unemployment insurance than the Dominion Bureau of Statistics says are unemployed.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Does that represent the number drawing unemployment insurance or the number registered as unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The number registered as unemployed is 755,387, which is less than the number drawing unemployment insurance. Yet, we know that a great number of those who are registered for employment are, in fact, employed and trying to get other jobs. The whole thing is confusing.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Cockeyed.

Hon. Mr. Croll: "Cockeyed" is hardly a fair term. It is too mild. One does not know where to turn and the whole thing indicates that the Government itself doesn't understand what is going on. It is impossible to make sense out of these figures. How can you deal with a problem until you know what the problem is? We hear constant talk that there are abuses under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I don't know whether there are. I do not draw unemployment insurance and the people who talk to me about it do not suggest they abuse the act, but there is constant talk that unemployment insurance is no longer operated under the insurance principle. I have heard this said in this chamber by many distinguished and renowned gentlemen, including the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar).

Hon. Mr. Burchill: And you yourself said it last year.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Well, that shows you how true it is.

But what are we doing about it? If there are abuses under the Unemployment Insurance Act—and the usual examples involve seasonal workers, pensioners and married women—then let us find out about it. I can tell you that business and industry are accused of abusing the fund in the same way that some other people are. It may come as a surprise to learn that industry is using the fund today in the same way that relief was used in another day when people were laid off work and called back when needed. Today it is common for big industries to put so many stamps in their employees' unemployment insurance books, enough to qualify them for unemployment insurance, and then lay them off and call them back when needed again. It all adds up to the fact that we are subsidizing these industries. No one is doing anything about correcting this situation. Everybody is getting his hand in the pot, but the pot is going to start running short and it may not exist at all after a while. Employees and employers have contributed to the fund and they feel they have rights, as they have under the act. We should know exactly who is benefiting under this act. We have got to have a thorough investigation of the manpower situation and its related aspects in this country in order that we may know exactly what to do.

Full employment must be the purpose of any Government in office, and it must be our purpose as well. We are a long way from achieving this goal at the present time and no one seems to have any answers. There is no shelf of work available to help out now, and unfortunately prospects are not at all good for the future. If we do not find some solution to the problem, then certain solutions will be forced upon us. Canada is a relatively new country when compared with other countries and other economies, and if we are not able to solve this unemployment problem at the present time we are going to be in for real trouble. We seem to be devoid of ideas. Great Britain, with a population of 55 million, has only 200,000 unemployed and she is worried about having that many. And listen to this. Last year Britain brought in 50,000 more immigrants than did Canada. That is something not generally known. It will not be long before an agitation is started in this country to cut down the working week to 40 hours while maintaining the same take-home pay. That will be an understandable request in order to provide work for the people. And you can't blame them.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Did the honourable senator say a 40-hour week?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: We have that now.

Hon. Mr. Croll: We have in some industries but not in the majority, not maintaining the same take-home pay. We will find that we will have to retrain people who have been replaced by automation. We should have done this long ago.

My contention is that the Senate can study this unemployment problem in a non-partisan fashion by calling before one of its committees some of the people who are concerned and others who have something to contribute to the general knowledge. Then we can make a report to the Government. The Government need not accept any part of the report, but at least the problem will have been placed before it so that something can be done. It isn't good enough to say to the Liberals, the C.C.F'ers or any other group, "Well, what's your solution to the problem?" That is not good enough. A Government has responsibilities and must come up with solutions. This is a big and important problem and we are here to help. We are offering to help, and why the Government should shut its eyes to this offer from all of us is something I cannot understand. If such a Senate committee in any way became partisan it would lose its effect and would be of no value. The country has everything to gain by such an inquiry, and the Government can be assisted by a body that is capable of doing what no other body can do as well. I support wholeheartedly the suggestion made by my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that a Senate committee be appointed for the purpose of studying the manpower situation and the incidents relating thereto.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I have a few words to say. I do not intend to be drawn into a long debate—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) speaks a second time he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not intend to be drawn into a long debate on the question of employment or unemployment at this time. No doubt that will come at a later date. When I was explaining the supplementary estimates in detail yesterday, some questions were asked which I hope I shall now be able to answer. I would also like to tell honourable senators that, in my opinion, the total estimates of last year, including supplementaries, according to the records which I have obtained since yesterday, were approximately correct.

The main estimates were $5,595,848,557, budgetary; supplementary estimates, $54,140,-979; further supplementary estimates, covered by the bill now before us, $31,960,511, making a total of $5,681,950,147. In addition to these budgetary items there were certain loans amounting to $189,676,654. I am quite satisfied that the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) included the loans which are repayable in the figure which he gave us and which I have written down as $5,748,738,902.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Were the loans for Old Age Security?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. The $577 million for Old Age Security is in addition to those payments.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That amount is not in these loans, as far as I know.

The honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) asked for a breakdown by provinces, under Vote 618, for campground and picnic area developments. The estimated federal contributions to provinces from the $800,000 requested in the further supplementary estimates for 1959-60 are as follows:

Nova Scotia	$ 12,000
New Brunswick	5,000
Ontario	500,000
Manitoba	50,000
Saskatchewan	53,000
Alberta	60,000
British Columbia	120,000
Total	$800,000

Hon. Mr. Vien: How much for Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Quebec never entered into any arrangements.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) asked a question with regard to the purchase price of the Hampton site, Vote 625. The purchase price was $2,725,000. As I stated last evening, it was resold to the United States of America for $2,750,611.69, which amount covered the purchase price and all costs in connection with the transaction.

I have answered the easy questions first.

The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) inquired whether the provincial schemes referred to in Vote 613 were approved by the Governor in Council. The answer, as I have it, is that after this supply measure has been authorized by Parliament the order in council will be issued setting forth the terms and conditions of payment, and if the provincial schemes come within these conditions the provinces will receive the contributions. It is not a question of approval, but rather a question of coming within the requirements laid down by the order in council when it is passed, and the Government is on record as to what the limits of the assistance will be.

The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) asked a question with regard to Votes 618 and 622 and asked me to supply him with certain material. I have done the best I could for him. I have laid on his desk an order in council in connection with Vote 622, with a form of agreement attached, and also order in council in connection with Vote 618. I do not know whether they are satisfactory to him or not.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The information the honourable leader has furnished is sufficient for the purposes of my question.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have answered your questions?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Only in relation to Votes 618 and 622.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Oh, you want the other one?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You will get that later.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I would really like to continue. I wonder if I could give that to the honourable senator later?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, that is all I have to say at this time. I appreciate the interest which has been shown. A good many senators have spoken on the bill. I hope it will be read the second and third times now, and that it will receive royal assent later today, particularly because some people have been waiting quite a long time for compensation for diseased cattle that were destroyed.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I wanted to ask a question.

The Hon. the Speaker: The debate is closed.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) rose to speak previously. Probably he would like to speak now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He just mentioned to me that I had referred to him. I referred to the junior senator from Winnipeg, did I not, when I gave the answer?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: He tells me I referred to the senior senator from Winnipeg. I made no reference to him whatever. I particularly used the word "junior".

Hon. Mr. Haig: I happen to be the honourable gentleman from Winnipeg. An honourable gentleman who came to this house recently is the honourable member from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson). There is quite a difference. For many years after I first came to this house I was known as the junior senator from Winnipeg, but I never liked that designation at all. If the honourable senator from Winnipeg South does not like that designation I would not mind having it, but I have been the senator from Winnipeg for over twenty years and I just do not like to give up that designation without a struggle.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You won't have to.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I will say to the honourable senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) that if I applied the wrong designation to him I apologize.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the bill is read the third time I would like to say that I am pleased that the suggestion I made on the question of manpower has met with the approval of at least three honourable senators, two on this side of the house—the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll)—and at least one on the other side of the house, the honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois). I hope it will receive the thoughtful consideration of other honourable senators. I trust especially that it will receive the consideration of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). I was rather disappointed that he did not refer to that subject when he spoke a moment ago, but probably he has not had time enough to give it the consideration to which it is entitled. I refer to the proposal for setting up a committee. I would suggest that he might read the leading editorial in the Ottawa Journal of last night. I know he thinks a great deal of the editorials in that paper, and if he will read that editorial he will find approval of an investigation of this type. True, the editorial does not say the investigation should be made by the Senate, but if there is to be one I feel there is nobody in this country more capable to make it than a committee of this house. I do trust the Leader of the Government will give very careful consideration to the suggestion.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

CONVENIENT CREDIT LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-22, to incorporate Convenient Credit Limited, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with two amendments.

Amendments read by the Clerk Assistant:

1. Clause 1, lines 14 and 15: Strike out lines 14 and 15, and substitute therefor the following: "are incorporated under the name of Laurentide Finance Company, and, in French, Laurentide, Compagnie de Finance,"

2. In the title: Strike out the title of the Bill and substitute therefor the following: "An Act to incorporate Laurentide Finance Company."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the only change made in the bill was a change of name and that was done at the request of the promoters of the bill. It will be recalled that the name proposed in the bill was Convenient Credit Limited. I do not know whether the promoters had been peeking into our minds, but in anticipation of any possible objection to such a name they asked to have it changed to Laurentide Finance Company. The committee has made that recommendation, and that is the explanation of the proposed amendments.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Méthot, for Hon. Mr. Monette, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

(Company's name on third reading of bill: Laurentide Finance Company. See p. 332.)

ROYAL ASSENT

An Act for the relief of George Barrington Redfearn.

An Act for the relief of Shirley Veronica Hannah Groves.

An Act for the relief of Leonia Szafarz Falk.

An Act respecting The British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada.

An Act to amend the Department of Justice Act.

Hon. Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1960.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the royal assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS PROPOSING APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons in the following words:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to continue the examination and consideration, begun by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, pursuant to a resolution of the House on April 29, 1959, of the Indian Act, Chapter 149, R.S.C. 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That twenty-four members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as Members of the said committee, and that Standing Order 67 (1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the records, exhibits and evidence received and taken by the joint committee during the last session of Parliament aforesaid be made available to the said joint committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit while the house is sitting, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: I move that it be considered now.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators I give notice that on Tuesday next I will move the following motion:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of Parliament to continue the examination and consideration, begun by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate on May 5, 1959, of the Indian Act, Chapter 149, R.S.C. 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the said joint committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Boucher, Croll, Dupuis, Fergusson, Gladstone, Horner, Inman, MacDonald, Méthot, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh and White;

That the records, exhibits and evidence received and taken by the joint committee during the last session of Parliament aforesaid be made available to the said joint committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

PRESS REPORT

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, now that the urgent Appropriation Bill has been disposed of, and before Education Week is over, I have to rise on a question of privilege, the subject-matter of which is the sensationalism of prefabricated interviews and the falsehood of some scoops.

Sensationalism is defined as "The use or effect of subject-matter and literary treatment calculated to arouse excited interest and emotional response".

On Friday last, March 4, in the afternoon, I received an urgent call from a Press Gallery reporter for a five-minute interview. I answered him that I was too busy to receive anyone. Although he did not tell me what it was all about, as he was very insistent over the telephone I told him to come up.

A black-out which stopped the elevators occurred at that very moment, but he was so eager to see me that he walked up three flights of stairs to my sixth-floor office to show me the External Affairs bulletin of January last, which he was holding in his hand and which I had not received nor read. After he had drawn my attention to Professor Arnold J. Toynbee's six-and-a-half-page speech on "The Problem of World Population and Food Supply", which was therein, I told him that to have published it in an official Canadian periodical was pure nonsense.

I have no apology to make for that statement, which could have been broadcast from all the loudspeakers of the land, but it was far from being sensational enough "to arouse excited interest and emotional response".

To provide for a good weekend scoop to appear the morning after on the third page of the Saturday Telegram, the reporter had to magnify what I had said by putting on my lips what he had on the tip of his pencil or what he had previously written in his note-book.

To my great surprise, I did not recognize my statement when I read it the day after in the Telegram. It was as follows:

GOV'T "TRASH" ON BIRTH CONTROL ATTACKED
(The Telegram, Toronto, Saturday, March 5, 1960, by Peter Dempson, Telegram Staff Reporter,

OTTAWA—A Quebec senator yesterday criticized the federal Government for publishing in one of its booklets a speech by a world-famous historian advocating birth control.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot said the Government in effect was endorsing the views of Dr. Arnold J. Toynbee on family limitation.

The speech by Dr. Toynbee was given to the Food and Agriculture Organization's conference in Rome last November.

It appears in the current issue of External Affairs, published by the External Affairs Department. The blunt 69-year-old Quebec senator who has frequently spoken out against divorce and birth control said in an interview the Canadian taxpayer should not be expected to pay the cost of publishing "such trash".

I have spoken many times about divorce, but only once on birth control. It happened seventeen years ago, on May 17, 1943, and my remarks are on pages 2744 to 2747 of the Commons Hansard.

What surprised me much more was to read on the same day, Saturday last, March 5, a similar interview which had been published simultaneously in the Ottawa Citizen. The headline was as follows:

SENATOR ATTACKS
EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
BOOKLET ARTICLE
By Greg Connolley
Citizen Parliamentary Writer

—whom I do not know, whom I never met, and to whom I have never spoken.

It is evident that both reporters had concocted their scoops together.

Then, the Canadian Press took for granted that both so-called interviews were accurate and gave them the widest publicity.

To conclude: Since I have been elected to Parliament it has been my practice to make no attack elsewhere than from my seat in the House of Commons or in the Senate, and an accurate report of all my speeches can be found in the Hansards of both Houses of Parliament, and you may be sure that I never asked any ghost-writer for his services. Believe it or not, I make my own speeches.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 15, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE CARDINAL STEPINAC

Hon. John J. Connolly rose pursuant to notice that he would "draw to the attention of the Senate the significance of the career of Aloysius Cardinal Stepinac, who died in Yugoslavia on February 10, 1960".

He said: Honourable senators, the critical world spectacle today, I think it is fair to say, is the contest between the east and the west. There is on both sides a build-up of a military establishment, and there is a development of economic rivalries, which I think threaten the established order of things as civilized people want to see them. To try to ameliorate these conditions, goodwill tours have been undertaken by such prominent world statesmen as the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the President of the United States, to win support for their views and for the position of the west, not only among the uncommitted countries, but as well with countries and the peoples of countries behind the Iron Curtain. Similarly, the leader of the Russian state has been making goodwill tours.

But many people ask, why is this explosive situation being developed? It seems to me that the answer lies beyond the realm of military or economic or even diplomatic science. The two systems certainly are the antithesis one of the other.

The west, as we understand it, is heir to the culture of the Mediterranean basin, the humanism of Greece, the law and order of Rome, the monotheism of Israel and the Christian dispensation. That culture involves the ideas of personal dignity, personal goodness, free institutions, personal responsibility and the acceptance of the rule of law. All of these things are the acknowledged patrimony of mankind. They are the hallmarks of the west, they are the rules by which the west wants to live, they are the rules which civilized people want to see applied. We think they are the rules of enlightenment.

Contrasted with that culture and basic to the Russian policy is the philosophy of Marx and of Engels. We call it communism. It is a philosophy thoroughly materialistic in theory and in practice, in content and in method. It is state controlled, it is totalitarian, it is authoritarian. For it the life of the spirit is a sham. It rejects both the Christian ethic and the mysticism of the east. Its methods include subversion to its purposes of men and of nations. The god is the communist state, and Marx and Engels are its prophets. It is preached by its adherents with the fervour of a religion.

At times when crises arise within nations, a great man emerges as the symbol of the hopes and aspirations of his people. One such man was Don John of Austria, the leader of the forces of Europe which stemmed the Turkish tide in the sixteenth century, and of whom Mr. Chesterton wrote:

The last and lingering troubadour to whom the bird has sung
That once went singing southward when all the world was young.

So too was Lincoln in the contest between the states; so too was Washington in that country at the time of the gaining of independence; so too was O'Connell at the time of the Catholic emancipation in England; so too was Churchill in the England of the late war.

And such indeed, I think, was Stepinac for the Croates and indeed for all Yugoslavs since 1939.

Aloysius Stepinac was born of peasant stock, a citizen of the Austro-Hungarian empire. He was ordained as a Catholic priest in 1930. In 1934 he was consecrated Coadjutor Archbishop of Zagreb. At that time he was probably the youngest Catholic Archbishop in the world. Two years later he became Primate of Yugoslavia and his seat was in the capital city of Zagreb. His diocese was over nine hundred years old. He was primarily a spiritual leader. He was a man of great organizing capacity and essentially a man of pastoral interests.

In 1941 he saw his country overrun by the joint armies of Hitler's Germany and Mussolini's Italy. For him and for his people the four-year Axis occupation was a nightmare. For preaching against the ideas of the totalitarian state, for insisting on freedom of religion and freedom of education, and for his attachment to the rights of free men, regardless of religious denomination, he was placed under arrest and restricted severely in the conduct of his ministry.

With the defeat of the Axis powers he had hoped for happier days for his people. But communism came, and with it came persecution for him and for those who believed with him in man's freedom and in personal dignity. His prestige was great and the Tito régime realized the threat he presented to the establishment of the communist state. In 1946 he was tried by the courts of the communist junta. We now know through the writings of Mr. Richard Pattee that the trial was a sham. He was sentenced to sixteen years at hard labour. But even a ruthless régime like the communist Government of Yugoslavia could not continue this persecution unabated.

He was released from prison after five years of his sentence had been served, but he was forbidden to resume his functions as Primate of his people. He was exiled from Zagreb to the small village of Krasic and there he remained with his people for nine years until his death, one month ago today. I think perhaps he might have thought of these people a little in the way Mr. Chesterton thought of the people he wrote about when he described the situation which was corrected at the battle of Lepanto:

Christian captives sick and sunless, all a labouring race repines
Like a race in sunken cities, like a nation in the mines.
They are lost like slaves that swat, and in the skies of morning hung
The stairways of the tallest gods when tyranny was young.
They are countless, voiceless, hopeless as those fallen or fleeing on Before the high King's horses in the granite of Babylon.

For his people, and certainly for the hundred thousand of them who kept watch in the cathedral square of Zagreb the night before he was buried, Stepinac was their shining cloud by day and their pillar of fire by night.

He was created a cardinal, a prince of his church, in 1953, but his red hat will not hang in his cathedral. He was never invested with it. For this he would have had to travel to Rome. This journey would have meant permanent exile from his people, because the Government would have refused his re-entry to Yugoslavia. He remained with them in silent protest in their plight. Those who could escape have come to lands of freedom, and many of them are in Canada working out a new life, far from the land of their birth, it is true, but breathing here the air of freedom. For them, as well as for all who are still bound by the iron grip of communism, and regardless of religious denomination, the memory of the humanity, the charity and the spirituality of Stepinac will burn as a flame of defiance to the repression of a people.

In conclusion may I adopt the words of an editorial that appeared in the Montreal Gazette of February 11 last:

Yesterday his sufferings ended, but his name will endure. Wherever in this world of so much cruelty and hate a Christian of any denomination seeks courage, he will only have to recall the name of Stepinac to brace his faith.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, I rise to associate myself with the tribute which has been paid to His Eminence the late Aloysius Cardinal Stepinac.

I wish to thank the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) for bringing to our attention the tragic death of Cardinal Stepinac, this noble champion of the freedoms and the rights of his beloved Croatians and Yugoslavians, this brave defender of the spiritual rights of the church of which he was such a devoted and loyal servant, this collaborator—yes, but on the side of justice, and freedom and Christ! The name of this spiritual leader of some seven million Roman Catholics in Yugoslavia will remain enshrined in the hearts of his people because he was a symbol of a heroic Christian martyr who kept his faith unaltered and unshaken while he was personally subjected to vicious humiliation and persecution in a deliberate attempt to discredit him and, by this means, to discredit and undermine the church to which he belonged. The name of Aloysius Cardinal Stepinac will live on because he was a symbol of protest against unjust and unjustified state interference in spiritual affairs.

The Cardinal believed and maintained that no compromise was possible over the division which exists between church authority over spiritual matters and state control over temporal matters, and he endured his unjust imprisonment and his virtually self-imposed exile in his tiny native village —in fearless silence.

The name of this priest of God will be remembered with many other modern martyrs because he was, in fact, a symbol of the opposition of all free, Christian people to an atheistic dogma of communist statism; because he stood firm for what he believed, and the free world hath great need of men who will stand firm for what they believe to be just and true.

As I too bow my head in humble and fervent prayer before the memory of this heroic servant of God and man, my heart is filled with agony at the ghastly and ghoulish price which godless communism has visited upon the many millions of Christians in the countries over which it has fastened its pseudo-democratic political régimes. This persecution, especially of the Catholic church, has been brutal, unceasing and relentless. In Lithuania, in Estonia, in Latvia, in Byelorussia, in the Ukraine and in Hungary, the story of persecution and martyrdom is much the same. Wherever communist statism has completed its cycle of planned suppression and persecution, the church has become the church martyred and oppressed, the church silent.

Most honourable senators will remember the special session of Parliament in 1956, which was called to consider, among other pressing problems, the tragic events connected with the brutal suppression of the Hungarian uprising. Hungary's story of religious persecution merits our attention as an example of what has been going on in the last decade. During the Soviet occupation, the Bishop of Györ and some 30 priests were immediately executed, and in 1948 alone the number of priests imprisoned rose to approximately 600. The first year of communist rule resulted in the nationalization or liquidation of 3,000 primary schools, 85 colleges and secondary schools, a Catholic university, the Faculty of Theology of the University of Budapest, and almost all the seminaries. All religious orders were liquidated, and the monasteries and the convents were transformed into barracks, hostels and offices, while many churches were closed or changed into military depots, libraries and museums. The modern church of the parish of Queen Mary of Budapest was demolished, and in its place arose a gigantic monument to Stalin.

This brutal attack against the church then led to the imprisonment of Cardinal Mindszenty, Archbishop Grosz and other members of the hierarchy. Today Cardinal Mindszenty lives as a refugee in the American Embassy in Budapest. Archbishop Grosz is in prison, as are Bishops Badalik, Petery, Schvoy and Szabo. His Excellency Bishop Papp is confined to his palace, and Bishops Rogats and Kovacs are confined to hospitals as being gravely ill. Only Bishop Hamvas has been permitted to perform his episcopal duties. The Hungarian Catholic Church is thus alone and without its hierarchical leadership, while religious persecution continues in spite of the consternation and the condemnation of the whole Western world.

Honourable senators will understand why I take this opportunity to draw their attention to the martyrdom of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in what we call Western Ukraine, after its inclusion in the Soviet orbit just fifteen years ago. As a matter of historical record, the Ukrainians were the first victims of communist religious persecution, for they were the first to be subjugated by the new Bolshevik régime. The first to suffer were the Ukrainians in Eastern Ukraine, who were predominantly orthodox. By 1960, for example, the Ukrainian Autocephalic Orthodox Church, with is Metropolitan Lypkivsky and a hierarchy of approximately 80 bishops, had been completely suppressed.

Just fifteen years ago, honourable senators, during the night of April 10-11, 1945, the new communist masters of Western Ukraine began the systematic and brutally repressive liquidation of the entire Ukrainian Catholic Church, which then numbered some five million faithful. Into hard-labour prisons and into concentration camps went all of our Ukrainian Catholic hierarchy, several thousands of our clergy, and many more thousands of our outstanding lay leaders. A year later, in Lviw, the capital of Western Ukraine, under the watchful and direct supervision of the dreaded MVD and through the lips of a tiny corporal's guard of terrorized priests, there was perpetrated the farcical break of juridical ties with Rome, followed by the equally farcical plea to "Papa" Stalin that he should grant his permission to reunite the "re-converted" Ukrainian Catholics with the Russian Orthodox Patriarchate, which had been revived for reasons which I need not discuss at present. Methodically and inexorably there took place, almost before our very eyes, the liquidation and the martyrdom of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, with its proud heritage of many centuries of close ties with the Western democratic world—a church which had been a trusted and beloved leader of its peoples in their struggle for freedom, for justice, and for national independence. And the Western world was strangely silent, as if it did not believe that such things could happen in the twentieth century.

With deep humility, I ask you to remember the name of Metropolitan Slipyj, still living but condemned last year to another seven years of prison; the names of Bishops Budka, Charnetsky, Khomyshyn, Latyshevsky, Romza, Gojdich and Hopko, all of whom were imprisoned and condemned, or who have died in prison or been assassinated. I ask you to remember the fantastic losses the Ukrainian Catholics suffered—almost 3,000 clergy, 500 seminarians, over 1,000 nuns, over 3,000 parishes, over 4,000 churches and chapels, 195 religious houses, 35 Catholic editorial houses, 38 Catholic publications and thousands of schools.

Honourable senators, February 10, 1960 brought to a close the heroic life of a valiant foe of communist atheism, Aloysius Cardinal Stepinac, Archbishop of Zagreb and Primate of Yugoslavia. Not only is it appropriately fitting, but it is indeed imperative that free men—ordered by their deep spiritual convictions and motivated by their belief in justice, in honour, and in the innate dignity of all men whose inalienable rights must not be transgressed or trampled upon—should pay their respectful homage to this servant of God, whose persecution, arrest, and eventual imprisonment and martyrdom caught the attention of the whole Western world, for his martyrdom was a symbolic example of the tragic fate of so many, many more. Lest free men forget, honourable senators, who . . . when . . . how . . . by whom . . . and for what!

Hon. John G. Higgins: Honourable senators, let us praise great men; let us remember good men, so that their deeds shall forever be an example to all of us. Above all, let us glorify the names of those men who kept the torch of liberty aflame when the lamps of freedom were extinguished.

Let us regard the characters of those who faced torture and death rather than submit to the dictates of the tyrant and of evil, for they are the men who kept before the world the eternal principles of Right. Let them become a spectacle before all men to show that an act of sacrifice is necessary so that the fundamentals, the loyalties and the verities shall hold sway, and that there shall not pass away from the earth the great principles that should rule the world.

Such a man was the great Cardinal about whom my honourable friend and colleague the senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly) has spoken so feelingly, so eloquently, so truthfully and so glowingly. We may be sure that when this great man departed to the eternal bourne from which no traveller returns the good Lord met him and said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

All that we ordinary humans can say—and in all humility, with bowed heads and in reverence—are these kindly and Christian words, Requiescat in pace. May eternal light ever shine upon him.

PRIVATE BILL

LAURENTIDE FINANCE COMPANY—THIRD READING

Hon. Léon Méthot, for Hon. Gustave Monette, moved the third reading of Bill S-22, to incorporate Laurentide Finance Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

(Company's name on previous stages of bill: Convenient Credit Limited. See pp. 214, 264, 326.)

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 3, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. John A. Buchanan: Honourable senators, just slightly over a year ago two of my colleagues and I, a trio tabbed "The three Johns," were summoned to this chamber to take the oath of office and become members of this august body. I shall never forget, and will always treasure, the warmth and graciousness extended to us by all honourable senators at that time. I want to stress particularly the kindness and goodwill shown to me by a number of those honourable senators on the opposite side of the house. I trust that by mentioning a few names in this connection I will be committing no breach of what is considered good parliamentary decorum.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) was most friendly. It so happened that his late brother, the Reverend George Macdonald, was a special friend of mine, and knowing George and his general benevolent attitude toward his fellow man I knew that the honourable senator could not have been otherwise. The honourable senator from Cariboo (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), whose first love was sunny Alberta, where he sat for several years in the Legislature, has been a real pal. The honourable senator from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Beaubien), who had just travelled on the train with a mutual friend of ours, immediately greeted me and welcomed me as a friend. The honourable senator from De la Durantaye (Hon. Mr. Pouliot) took me by the arm and led me through the corridors to the reading room, the library, the smoking room and other places of interest and said to me: "Use them, my friend. They are for you." Now, I had through Hansard watched the political activities of the honourable senator from De la Durantaye over the years but I had never met him, and I must admit that I was surprised to find him to be the kindly, gracious gentleman who was welcoming me to the Senate. I thank him now.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: You are very gracious.

Hon. Mr. Buchanan: The lady senators have been most charming and gracious. The honourable senator from Sorel (Hon. Mrs. Jodoin) is even teaching me a few words in French. As she passed my desk on this occasion she greeted me with "Bonne chance". You never can tell, but I may in a few years become really bilingual.

I should like to speak for a moment of the honourable senators from my own province. They have all been most kind and helpful. The honourable senators from Medicine Hat and St. Albert (Hon. Mr. Gershaw and Hon. Mr. Blais) are venerable members of the medical profession and much beloved throughout those areas where they have practised. Then we have the honourable senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh), a farmer who can always speak on agricultural matters, as you heard him yesterday, and be depended on for good, sound advice. Next we have the honourable senator from Banff (Hon. Mr. Cameron), who is widely known as an educationist and recognized especially for his work in developing the cultural side of our Canadianism. If any honourable senators have not previously done so, they should visit the Banff School of Fine Arts. A trip to Banff for no other purpose than to see what our honourable colleague has accomplished in this connection would be very rewarding. Then we have the honourable senator from Lethbridge (Hon. Mr. Gladstone), whose special mission in the Senate is to speak for his people, not only in Alberta but throughout the dominion. His work toward betterment of the lot of his people has already been fruitful and I am sure will continue to be so.

Our Alberta representation in the Senate is probably unique in that there is not a member of the legal profession in it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Too bad.

Hon. Mr. Buchanan: And only one of the six, the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw), has ever sat in either the House of Commons or a provincial Legislature. We have no doubt been summoned to this chamber because it was considered that each had a contribution to make, because of his experience and special training.

My activities over the years have had to do mostly with the general development of Alberta and the Northwest Territories as a practising surveyor, a civil engineer and a general contractor, so for the most part today I would like to discuss with you the general potentialities of our province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories, together with our responsibilities and the challenge created by them.

However, first I want to take this opportunity of welcoming to the Senate our three new members. I wish them every happiness in this chamber and I want them to know that we are indeed glad to have them with us. I know that we on this side of the house are especially proud to have with us the honourable and charming lady senator from Lisgar (Hon. Mrs. Irvine), and I trust that before too long others of the fair sex will join her.

I wish now to congratulate the mover (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche) and the seconder (Hon. Mr. Blois) of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both these honourable gentlemen won great credit for themselves on their first appearance in this chamber and I feel sure that each will make a great contribution over the years. The honourable senator from Colchester-Hants (Hon. Mr. Blois) gave us a very close and interesting peek into the life of the people of Nova Scotia and the present aggressive development of his province. He stressed the great contribution that each of four races had made to the life and well-being of the province. I just wonder, since each one of them had made such a contribution, what would be expected of anyone who had the blood of all four nationalities running through his veins.

My paternal genealogy credits me with French, Irish and Pennsylvania Dutch, whilst my maternal side has English, Irish and Scotch. This mixture of bloods probably created in me a restlessness that pushed me out into new regions to seek adventure and new challenges. In any event, in the spring of 1910 I headed west for sunny Alberta.

I would like to digress momentarily from my main theme to discuss a topic which to me is most important and to which I have, with others, given a good deal of thought. I am prompted to do so at this time after listening to the remarks of the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) on Wednesday, February 3, in which he chose to confine himself to the single question: How are we going to reduce the cost of production in Canada in order to meet world competition? The economists and the financiers all have their theories of pressures to exert, to adjust the production and price set-up. All proposed remedies are of an abstract nature, which do not directly deal with the problem. None of them come up with a proposal that distributes the responsibility of making the necessary adjustments apply equitably on each individual within the dominion. Each has the effect of eventually forcing an adjustment by way of creating pressure, which cannot long be contained. Something must give way, and many, in all walks of life, suffer real financial loss in the adjustment.

There is still talk of inflation, and inflationary trends and influences, yet it is largely admitted that world inflation is over. Does it not follow, therefore, that our whole problem is production costs? Costs are made up of raw material plus labour. Canada has been so blessed with raw materials that we are almost independent in this regard. We can, ourselves, with our own raw material, produce almost all the requirements of our people. Since that is true, and the raw materials already belong to us, it follows that our production costs are almost totally labour, when considered in the widest sense —when one includes administrative, sales and distribution personnel as labour. Therefore, labour and management costs control our whole economy, and only through them can we possibly meet competition.

We must, then, conclude that the Prime Minister's exhortations to labour and management have been aimed in the right direction, but I am forced to the conclusion that up to the present time effective co-operation has not been forthcoming. I doubt if it can or will be given voluntarily without the creation of some medium through which negotiations must proceed and settlements can be definitely resolved. I leave this thought with you.

If some such a medium for co-operation were established, then the situation so created, coupled with the availability of raw materials of almost every kind within our border, would allow us to build a foundation to our Canadian economy that could establish the following basic controlling features:

1. Equitable relative values between rates of pay and living costs.

2. Equitable hourly rates as between each trade and vocation.

3. Equity between employee and employer.

Assuming that all the basic controls, 1 to 3, were effectively established, then values and costs would become relative and equitable across the board.

It follows that we would have thus created the requisite conditions by which we could build planned development on a base which would maintain high living standards, stop the inflationary spirals and meet competition in the open world market.

What we actually will have done is reverse the present trend by establishing costs of goods at a lower level than now, through equitably controlling and equalizing labour-management, sales, and distribution costs at a generally lower rate than now exists. The one governing factor, however, must be that the cost of goods and the purchasing power made available must be kept in balance. In other words, we cut production costs, but in so doing we reduce selling costs so that the money earned in production will purchase as many goods and services as it did previously, or more.

We will have thus introduced a process by which we can plan development, check the inflationary spiral, and manufacture at a price that will meet competition in the world market, all the while maintaining the high standard of living that we now enjoy. All of this can be done within the orbit of free enterprise, and if done now will probably prevent a long era of class strife, which is bound to come into being if we do not at once equitably deal with the whole problem and create the medium through which it can be accomplished.

Honourable senators, these suggestions are made at this time because it is my considered opinion, as I am sure it is yours, that world trade competition is going to become much keener in the near future than it is now. I am one of those people who believe in trying to predetermine future adverse economic forces and pressures and to prepare in advance to meet them head on, where and when they occur, with the most effective plan we can devise to neutralize their effect.

However, honourable senators, we have reason to be optimistic about our trading position at the moment. It is a matter of record that those engaged in Canada's export business have been doing very well indeed. As evidence of this I should like to read from an editorial by J. H. Goldsmith in the Montreal Star of March 2, under the heading, "Exports Doing Well":

> In spite of many gloomy opinions in various quarters in recent months about Canada's ability to maintain a competitive position in the world's export markets, the actual figures on exports are nothing to feel despondent about. The latest figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, covering the month of January, are quite cheering in fact.
> The exports for the month were not only in excess of the imports—indicating a 'favourable' trade balance—but they were the highest ever shown by any January. Moreover, it was the third successive month in which the exports were larger than imports.
>
> The report shows that there was a 'favourable' trade balance in January of $25.4 million. This compared with an 'unfavourable' balance of $55.3 million in the first month of 1959. Thus the trade position improved by a total of $90.7 million.
>
> This excellent showing reflects credit on those engaged in Canada's export business. Moreover, it should help to dispel the dire predictions about the danger of Canada being crowded out of the world's markets.
>
> The fact remains that Canada has many products that the world needs and is eager to purchase. Canada's businessmen are efficient and have the necessary know-how to conduct their business so as to maintain a high level of sales to their foreign customers.
> Both in individuals and in nations, it is not desirable to be complacent. But, it is equally undesirable to indulge in self-depreciation. It is much better to follow the middle course, thereby adhering to the advice of the ancient philosophers who advocated moderation at all times.

Honourable senators, I listened intently to two recent speeches in this house, one by the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi (Hon. Mr. Burchill), and the other by the honourable senator from Vancouver (Hon. Mr. McKeen). They were, to me, both most interesting, because they dealt largely with matters connected with development of our natural resources, a subject which is always stimulating. Each dealt, in part, with the premium on our Canadian dollar and discussed the loss through its operation that we suffered last year in our export of wood products, estimated by the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi as being between $60 million and $70 million.

However, to obtain a complete picture one must look at the national balance sheet as a whole when analyzing the effect the premium on the Canadian dollar has on the whole Canadian economy, and when one does that it is found that by computing the net result on an average premium of 4 per cent, which was that used by the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi in arriving at the loss of $60 million to the wood products industry, one determines that due to this premium Canada as a whole was $23.732 million better off for the year 1959 than if our dollar had been at par. This is so because our total imports were valued at $5,654.7 million, while our total exports were valued at $5,060.9 million—$593.9 million less than our imports.

Notwithstanding this net result for last year, however, I am quite in agreement with the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi and the honourable senator from Vancouver that this matter of the premium on the Canadian dollar and the effect on our whole economy is of such importance that it merits a thorough study.

However, I would recommend a slightly different approach than that suggested by the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi. I would like to see the Chairman of the Finance Committee (Hon. Mr. Emerson) set up a small research subcommittee of probably five persons whose duty it would be to make a complete analysis of international exchange in all its ramifications. How does it work? What medium of influence, pressure, or action of any nature can be taken to control and maintain our dollar value at a point which is to our economic advantage and requirements?

I should like to see both the honourable senator from Northumberland-Miramichi and the honourable senator from Vancouver on such a subcommittee. They are very modest as to their knowledge of the subject, but it is obvious that each has very definite opinions as to the approaches that might be made to our problem, and they, with three other interested senators, might well come up with a solution that the experts could not well reject. After all, our experts and so-called experts sometimes do get into a rut and if not rescued and activated along sane, progressive lines they really bog down.

If in our bid for world trade we are able to reverse the trend, as is now indicated, so that the value of exports is greater than that of imports, then I would say it is most important that we maintain the value of our dollar at or slightly below par. Let us search for the formula by which it can be accomplished.

Now, honourable senators, I shall get back on track and proceed to follow the theme that I previously announced.

One day early in March, fifty years ago, I received a wire from the Surveyor General of Canada requesting me to join a survey party, which was about to proceed to Alberta, to do special work in connection with a number of coal properties in the foothills west of Edmonton. My better judgment told me to stay where I was and follow the career I had previously mapped out for myself, but my desire for adventure urged me to meet the challenge and go west, so I threw discretion to the winds and I accepted the post offered me.

We arrived in Edmonton about the middle of March under bright sunny skies, the snow all gone and beautiful balmy spring weather prevailing.

Honourable senators will recall that the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) was engaged in building a railway beyond Edmonton in 1908, which was two years prior. Now, honourable senators, you all know the natural initiative and drive of the honourable senator from Inkerman, so wouldn't you have expected that he would have his railroad completed to transport us in 1910? Do you know what happened? We followed a pack train out of Edmonton and travelled on foot. It is true that steel had been laid for something over a hundred miles on the frost, without ballast, and when we were ready to travel the whole railroad was out of commission. However, in line with the Honourable Dr. Joe Sullivan's recommendations to maintain fitness, we went for a walk—a 250-mile hike.

We had a wonderful summer in the foothills, so much so that I then and there planned a return trip to the area, and beyond. I dreamed of a trip from what is now Jasper to Banff. This was to be taken with one or two friends, each of us with a saddle horse and one pack horse. We were to follow the foothills and use what pack trails we could find. I regret to say that I never found time to make that trip as I had planned, but many honourable senators no doubt have travelled the same route by car, for now it is traversed by an all-weather highway. If you have travelled it you will understand the why of my plans and my dreams. Honourable senators, if you have not yet made that trip, plan to do so. I am sure there is not a more scenic drive, through rugged wonderful mountain scenery, any place in the world.

The area in which we worked became later the coal branch along which many large and important coal companies developed. Even in those days we bragged of Canada's wealth of energy and claimed that Alberta alone had one-seventh of the world's known coal supply. Then coal was king and had no serious competitor. We were sitting on top of the world.

At that time, little did we think that during our lives we would see many of our great coal mines close down and large deposits of coal go undeveloped, because through the perfection of the diesel engine and the discovery of large quantities of the necessary fuel, coal could no longer economically compete.

After the season's work was completed I came back to Ontario, but I knew then that the lure of the west was too strong for me to resist, so back I went to my home in Edmonton, where it still is, and more beloved than ever. A few months later I formed a partnership and established in Edmonton a business by which, since then, my work in surveying, engineering and general contracting has taken me from southern Alberta to the Arctic Ocean, and from the west boundary of Saskatchewan to the east boundary of British Columbia and beyond. This was the beginning of an experience which gave me the privilege of being closely associated with an era of development that has been rarely, if ever, surpassed.

The first opportunity of participation came in March of 1913, when I was given a contract to survey eight townships located 50 miles beyond what is now Hines Creek, the terminus of the Northern Alberta Railway, north of the Peace River. We had to organize a party of 25 men immediately, provide transportation and camping facilities and supply and transport food to last the crew six months. The distance from railhead to our first camp was 350 miles, and all the roadways were mere trails. We used a combination of three teams and about a dozen pack horses for transporting our camp, personal luggage and so forth. Revillon Frères freighted in all the food and other goods, which they themselves supplied and placed in a log cache, which they had built at the location of our first camp. I wish, honourable senators, to pay tribute here to these pioneer trading companies such as Revillon Frères and the Hudson Bay Company for their great contribution toward the development of our country. They did a tremendous work in the early days. Here was a typical case: A young man without financial means, but with a survey contract in his pocket, needed a season's supplies. They saw that he had them, where he needed them, to be paid for from the payments received as the work progressed.

I learned a great lesson, at this stage, of the necessity for the control of production costs. I was young and practically without experience, and up until then had given little consideration as to the probable cost of the job I was to do and its relation to the amount I was to be paid for doing it. However, I was soon to be pulled up short and forced to take a long hard look at myself.

I boarded the train for Athabaska to begin my journey to the Peace River country and on the train was an experienced, generally recognized efficient superintendent of survey operations. As we chatted he said: "Buck, I am sorry to see you taking that contract up in that country. You are bound to lose money. The overhead of travelling up and down is just too much to overcome." Well, honourable senators, I apparently had a wildcat by the tail. I could not lose money because I had none, or very little, to lose. I had bought everything on the cuff, and it had to be paid for. What was the solution? I just said to myself: "Buchanan, you have to work and plan yourself out of this mess. You must improve on the other fellow's methods, and make it pay. There is no other way out."

My friend had indeed rendered me a great service without realizing it, for if he had not warned me I know I would have lost money and, as it turned out, in the end a reasonable profit was made. This all goes to prove that if there is the desire to cut production costs and a will to work at it, then it can be done. We have to apply this principle on a national scale, right now, if we are going to meet competition.

After this I spent several years in the area north of Peace River town, and watched the arrival of many of the settlers who were to become the backbone of that great country. I am sure, honourable senators, that no area ever welcomed a finer type of pioneer than did the Peace River country. Nevertheless, we haven't been quite fair with them, for many settled there as early as 1913, with an understanding that they would be serviced with a railway, but all of those west of the Peace River, and north toward Fort Vermillion and beyond, are still waiting for that railway. It is to be hoped that when the railway to the Northwest Territories is built their rights will receive full recognition, in which case there is no doubt in my mind where it shall go.

After my mission was completed in the Peace River area my work became more varied, with a trend toward construction rather than surveying, and a tendency to cover a much larger area. It brought me more in touch with the Northwest Territories, and indeed during the war I acted as cost engineer for the American Government, on the famous Canol project, which, with its many ramifications, had to concern itself with road building, pipe laying, oil drilling and prospecting, and transportation of every type, including lake and river transport.

I merely mention this, honourable senators, to show you that I have been privileged to study the potential resources of the territories, first-hand, and to form my own opinions of what should be the policy of our Government in connection with their development on a sound, aggressive scale.

At this point, in order to stress the vast size of the area, I give you a comparison recently used by the Honourable Alvin Hamilton, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which was that the Northwest and Yukon Territories would hold three Ontarios and still have place left for Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Honourable senators, the geological formation is such that along the Mackenzie Valley and on a large portion of the islands of the Arctic we have reason to hope for large oil and gas reservoirs, while in the balance, which takes in the Great Bear and Great Slave Lake areas, and to the east, we have indications of nearly every known metal.

Now, honourable senators, let us go back to Alberta, and see if we can find a key from what happened there as to what our master plan should be in the Territories. We know that we had certain oil seepages in a number of points within the province, and at many points gas pockets were discovered in shallow wells of varying depths. Gas seepages even occurred on gravel bars in river beds. On many occasions, travelling down the Peace River, I have stopped and cooked my meal over a gas flame which burned continuously during low water, on a gravel bar of Tar Island. These occurrences were assessed by many to be a definite indication of large pools of oil, but they didn't necessarily point to the exact location. Nevertheless, a number of oil companies set up exploration branches with the required geological personnel to guide them, and started to work. None were very successful for some time, and many became quite pessimistic about their whole venture when, all of a sudden, after already having spent $16 million, Imperial Oil made a strike in the Leduc field. After that the oil companies moved in with the most modern technique by seismograph, etc., and since then the pattern began to develop and now oil and gas have been discovered at intervals along the full length of the province, and we have built up a gas reserve of astronomical proportions.

As regards oil and gas development in the Territories, I feel that we can largely leave it in the hands of private companies and corporations, for they have the necessary capital and are merely working on an extension of the formation they already know. I feel sure there will be sufficient competition to assure aggressive and total exploratory development.

It is my opinion, however, that we should deal quite differently with the potentially mineralized areas. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, in addition to its usual custom of determining and mapping the general geology, should be required to go one step further and immediately apply the latest techniques in geophysics and other useful known scientific methods to discover the locations of any anomalies that may exist.

These should then be plotted and become public information. This work for the most part has been done by private companies and its extent has depended largely on the amount of money set aside for exploration in that particular year. The investigations have, therefore, been haphazard and without continuity.

I feel sure that if my suggestions were adopted, development would be greatly accelerated. Mining companies and individuals would vie with each other for the privilege of proving, or disproving, the value of the plotted anomalies, and work would go on apace. Controlling regulations would naturally have to be enacted to conform with the new development policy which of necessity would require immediate and concentrated investigation as a condition of continued tenure.

Honourable senators, we have the responsibility and indeed the privilege of developing that vast northland. We have indications of great mineral wealth, but for the most part large bodies of ore have still to be located. Much money will have to be spent to locate them, if they exist, as was done in Alberta in the search for gas and oil, where indications that large reservoirs of gas and oil existed were probably not as great as that minerals do exist in the north. Yet Alberta has been repaid a thousandfold, and still revenues will pour into her public coffers from oil and gas for years to come.

Canada's real challenge is to make the most of her northlands, and I believe, honourable senators, that each one of us should urge that our Government embark on a vigorous program using the latest, proven, up-to-date techniques to discover and delineate all possible commercial ore bodies. This is our task! The results could be tremendously rewarding!

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

INTERNATIONAL LOAN COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. John Hnatyshyn moved the second reading of Bill S-23, respecting International Loan Company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Honourable senators, this bill has as its sole purpose the change of the name of the company. May I briefly explain some of the objects of the company and the reason for the proposed change of name to Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation?

This company, International Loan Company, was incorporated in 1920 by chapter 91 of the statutes of that year, and is entirely in the business of lending money on the security of first mortgages on real estate. It operates entirely on its own capital, supplemented by a loan from the Royal Bank of Canada running up to approximately a half-million dollars. The company's total assets are about $2 million. Honourable senators will see that it is not a large company, but it has carried on a fairly successful operation throughout the years and has consistently managed to pay dividends to its shareholders.

In respect to this proposed change of name, honourable senators will realize that there are a great many small personal loan companies in Winnipeg and elsewhere, and the company is being continuously bothered by requests over the telephone and otherwise for small loans on the security of furniture and other types of security that small loan companies accept. That is probably because the name International Loan Company implies such an operation. The company tried to get its name changed to International Mortgage and Savings Corporation, but this could not be arranged because the first two words in the name of a company that was incorporated recently in the province of Quebec are "International Mortgage". The next best name was chosen, namely, Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation.

This name has been approved by the Companies Division of the Department of The Secretary of State. I should also point out, honourable senators, that possibly at some time in the future this company may enter into the business of soliciting savings from the public, much in the same manner as do the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation and similar companies. That is the reason for the inclusion of the word "Savings" in the new name, thus labelling it a repository of savings. I think I should mention also that the company's charter permits this operation.

In brief, the whole purpose in changing the name is simply to have one more in keeping with what the company is doing than is the present name.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 15, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 15, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INDIAN BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-2, to amend the Indian Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Further Supplementary Estimates (2) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

The Canada Gazette, Part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations 1960, Wednesday, March 9, 1960, pursuant to section 7 of the regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter 241, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance and Statement of Accounts for the year 1959, pursuant to the Bank of Canada Act, Chapter 13, R.S. 1952. (English and French texts).

Paper entitled "Text of Disarmament Plan", for the Ten-Nation Disarmament Conference, opening at Geneva, March 15, 1960, released by the five Western Powers represented on the ten-member committee. (English and French texts).

PRIVATE BILL

WABUSH LAKE RAILWAY COMPANY LIMITED AND ARNAUD RAILWAY COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. William R. Brunt presented Bill S-24, respecting Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, the purpose of the bill is very simple. It is to bring the two railway companies under the jurisdiction of Parliament, the Railway Act and the Board of Transport Commissioners, and also to give these two companies the right to build additional railway lines prior to the first day of January, 1961. All construction would be subject to authorization by the Board of Transport Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask where these railways are located?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: One is in Labrador, in the province of Newfoundland, and the other is in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Power: What are their names again?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 270 to 285, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill SD-243, for the relief of Richard Austin Evans.

Bill SD-244, for the relief of Marion Mary Treen Frosst.

Bill SD-245, for the relief of Joyce Mary Whiteman Rogers.

Bill SD-246, for the relief of Vera Arlene Perry Locke.

Bill SD-247, for the relief of Beatriki Bourboulis Angelidis.

Bill SD-248, for the relief of Jessie Margaret Cross Joly.

Bill SD-249, for the relief of Guy Labrosse.

Bill SD-250, for the relief of Joyce Agnes Catherine Wilkinson Greenwood.

Bill SD-251, for the relief of Jacques Cormier.

Bill SD-252, for the relief of Mary Lorraine Little Copping.

Bill SD-253, for the relief of Sylvia Trachimovsky Fox.

Bill SD-254, for the relief of Kathleen Shannon Keene.

Bill SD-255, for the relief of Jean Elizabeth MacCuaig Vinters.

Bill SD-256, for the relief of Lucy Sekora Budnik.

Bill SD-257, for the relief of Joyce Middlehurst Walker.

Bill SD-258, for the relief of Patricia Shirley Rydberg Menzies.

Bills read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SENTENCES AND EXECUTIONS

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. How many persons have been convicted for murder and sentenced to capital punishment during each one of the last ten years?

2. How many of them have been executed during each one of the last ten years?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the answer is:

1. The number of persons sentenced to capital punishment is as follows:

1950, 21; 1951, 19; 1952, 26; 1953, 22; 1954, 25; 1955, 18; 1956, 19; 1957, 12; 1958, 21; 1959, 18; 1960, 3 (to March 10).

2. The number of persons executed is as follows:

1950, 10; 1951, 11; 1952, 10; 1953, 8; 1954, 10; 1955, 6; 1956, 5; 1957, 3; 1958, 3; 1959, 3; 1960, 0 (to March 10).

Explanatory Note: The figures for the years 1950 to 1954 are those which are set out in Appendix "B"—Capital Case Statistics to the Report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Capital Punishment. In preparing the statistics each case has been treated as having been dealt with by execution in the same year as that in which the sentence of death was imposed. That is to say, if a sentence of death was imposed, for instance, in November of a particular year and was executed in February of the following year, the case is treated, for the purpose of these statistics, as having been one where the sentence was imposed and executed in the same calendar year.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JOINT COMMITTEE—SENATE MEMBERS

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), the following motion standing in my name:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of Parliament to continue the examination and consideration, begun by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate on May 5, 1959, of the Indian Act, Chapter 149, R.S.C. 1952, and amendments thereto, and to suggest such amendments as they may deem advisable, with authority to investigate and report upon Indian administration in general and, in particular, on the social and economic status of the Indians;

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the said joint committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Boucher, Croll, Dupuis, Fergusson, Gladstone, Horner, Inman, MacDonald, Méthot, Smith (Kamloops), Stambaugh and White;

That the records, exhibits and evidence received and taken by the joint committee during the last session of Parliament aforesaid be made available to the said joint committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses under oath; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to report from time to time; and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Honourable senators will remember that last session a Joint Committee on Indian Affairs was set up, but quite late in the session, the motion having been passed in the Senate on May 5. The committee held twelve meetings and received valuable information from the Honourable the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and several department officials. The committee also called and heard evidence from the Six Nations Council, the Six Nations Confederacy, the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia and the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood.

This, honourable senators, was the first general review of Indian affairs since 1951. However, the time was too short to hear all those wishing to make representations and the committee unanimously recommended in its report that a similar committee be appointed early this session to carry on the investigation and studies, so that all those groups and organizations which have indicated a desire to make representations may be afforded an opportunity to submit briefs and give oral testimony.

The committee also recommended that every opportunity should be given for the hearing of representations of Indian groups, organizations and bands. These are the people primarily concerned and they should be given priority.

Honourable senators, I hope that this motion to reconstitute the joint committee will receive the unanimous approval of the Senate.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has stated, a Joint Committee on Indian Affairs was set up last session and had a number of hearings but did not finish its work. I think we all agree that it served a very useful purpose and we want it to finish its work. The committee was unanimous in recommending that it should be reconstituted this session.

The committee was dealing with quite a difficult and very important problem. As honourable senators know, there are Indian bands on various reserves scattered from one coast of Canada to the other. They are not all living in the same circumstances. Some are more advanced than others in an economic sense, and some are more highly developed socially, shall I say, than others.

The Indians have served Canada well in the past. For instance, they were of particular service to Canada in the War of 1812. But I am not going into what the Indians have done for Canada in the past. They have done a great deal.

I feel it is the desire of everyone in the Senate, regardless of political affiliation and the part of Canada from which he or she comes, that we should do whatever is in the best interests of the Indians and as far as possible do what they would like us to do.

I think the committee should be very careful to make sure that any recommendations for amending the law affecting Indians will be so set forth that, if adopted, there can be no misunderstanding as to what the law means. In the past there has been considerable misunderstanding, and for that reason there seems to be a certain amount of suspicion among the Indians in regard to legislation that has been passed by this Parliament. I feel that can be avoided to a large extent in the future if the act clearly sets forth just what it means. The act should be worded in such a way that not only parliamentarians and lawyers but the Indians themselves will understand it.

Honourable senators, I am very pleased to second the motion of the Leader of the Government for reconstitution of this committee.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, may I ask the sponsor of this resolution (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) if it is intended to refer to this committee the two bills which we have just received from the House of Commons—Bill C-2, to amend the Indian Act, and Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Elections Act, which deals with Indians and their right to the franchise.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is not the intention.

Hon. Mr. Power: Well, why not, may I ask? If there is anything important to citizens of this country or to our allies by treaty, such as the aboriginal inhabitants, it is whether or not they have the right to vote or whether they wish to have and exercise that right.

I should imagine that would be a proper question to refer to the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The bills have already passed the other house, and if they are to be referred to a committee of this house they would ordinarily go to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour to be dealt with. I have never had occasion to refer a bill from this house to a joint committee of both houses.

Hon. Mr. Power: I fail to follow the logic of my honourable friend the Leader of the Government. The fact that the bills have passed the other house is something, but we in this house have certain rights and privileges too, one of which is to examine legislation that comes from the other house. Now that I think of it, I have known joint committees of the Senate and of the House of Commons to spend an entire session studying legislation. I was chairman of one such committee for several years, a committee that dealt with bills for pensions for returned soldiers. I am sure there have been other instances.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The old age security measure.

Hon. Mr. Power: The old age security measure. I think also of one that is dear to the heart of my honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), the revision of the Criminal Code. Also the question of capital punishment was studied by a committee of both houses.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Those matters were different.

Hon. Mr. Power: I fail to follow the argument of my friend the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I think there would be considerable difficulty in referring to a joint committee of both houses a bill that has already passed one house. How could the House of Commons appoint members to a joint committee to consider a bill which that house had already passed?

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I am inclined to agree with my honourable friend from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power). Certainly these two bills that have been introduced here tonight, aimed at conferring the franchise on Indians, are important bills. We read reports in the newspapers that the Indians—at any rate some of them—are very doubtful about whether or not they want this legislation passed. Surely it is not beyond the ingenuity of the Senate, and my honourable friend who leads the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine)—

Hon. Mr. Power: And of the Government, particularly.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —and of the Government, to find a way by which this matter could be considered by the joint committee and have evidence presented to it.

Having said that, I wish to say something more. This is unquestionably an important committee for several reasons, one of which, and not the least, is the fact that we have incorporated in our main estimates for this year in two departments of Government a total expenditure of $66 million for Indian and Eskimo education, betterment, health and that sort of thing. That approximates $375 per head for the men, women and children of our Indian and Eskimo population. That is a figure which, in my judgment, should have some examination in the other place.

I have another suggestion to make to honourable senators who will constitute part of the joint committee: that they seek to go beyond Government officials and Indian chiefs to get information about the condition of the Indians. I venture to suggest that the committee could get no better or more reliable information than that which could be secured from some of the missionaries who labour among the Indians in these far-flung parts of Canada. I have seen reports—and I have no reason to doubt their authenticity—that the missionaries, those heroic men who have gone into the wilderness to try to improve the lot of our Indians, are very much concerned with the methods by which the Government seeks to bring the Indian people to the higher level of our civilization. Sometimes when I consider all the aspects of our present civilization I wonder if, after all, it is very much better than that which the Indians had.

An Hon. Senator: Give the country back to the Indians.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I have seen reports in the press, for instance, of missionaries who are concerned about the wholesale desire of Government officials to bring help and succour to the Indian, that the Indian is developing an attitude of mind that he need no longer look out for himself, that he will be looked after—

Hon. Mr. Horner: The same as the rest of us.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —by the Great White Mother. When one considers the fact that the Indian population, and the Eskimo population also, is accelerating at an increasing rate, one wonders where it is going to end. There was a time, perhaps seventy-five years ago, when the popular impression in Canada was that the Indian population would solve its own problems ultimately by extinction. That was a very harsh and improper attitude to take. Since then there has been a great change in the conditions under which the Indian lives; for instance, medical care has enormously improved.

I recall quite a number of years ago—so many that I hesitate to count them—when I had charge of the Indian administration of the Government service. When representations were made to me that the department should do something toward eradication of tuberculosis which was rampant among the Indians I asked these gentlemen to meet and offer suggestions to me. They suggested that we should have a survey of all Indian schools to discover the incidence of tuberculosis among the pupils. When I received the final report I was shocked. The X-ray examinations showed that there was not a single Indian residential school that did not have one, two, three, or half a dozen cases of active tuberculosis.

Much success had attended the efforts to eradicate tuberculosis among the white popuation, but one of the most eminent T.B. men in Canada told me at the time—and I could not dispute the logic of his statement—that we could never eradicate the disease among the white population so long as every Indian reserve was a centre of infection. From that time on I directed a great deal of effort toward a solution of this problem—or, at any rate, in making a start toward a solution of it—and quite substantial progress was made in that direction.

These are questions that the committee should study. It is all very well to obtain advice from officials of the department, but you must go outside and ask the people who actively work with these Indians, day in and day out, week in and week out, and ascertain their opinions of Indian problems. Believe me, if the committee does that it will tap a source of information that, in a practical way, will be very, very useful to it in its deliberations.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 10, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech at the opening of the session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Courtemanche, seconded by Hon. Mr. Blois, for an address in reply thereto.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself warmly and sincerely with the congratulations and best wishes which have been directed to our new colleagues, among whose number we especially welcome the gracious lady from Manitoba (Hon. Mrs. Irvine), and with the recognition that has been paid to the two senators who have initiated this general debate on the address (Hon. Mr. Courtemanche and Hon. Mr. Blois), to which each made an interesting and valuable contribution.

The debate on the address has been characterized by many excellent discussions upon a variety of subjects, and I hope I shall be forgiven for singling out the thought-provoking, sweeping and vigorous discourse of the honourable senator from L'Acadie (Hon. Mr. Savoie). It was heart-warming to listen to a lay champion stress the cardinal importance of education, in the crucial and, indeed, never-ending struggle for the conquest of the souls and the minds of men, a struggle made more urgent by the Soviet challenge. You will remember that the honourable senator stressed that through education we must not only build up our first line of democratic defence by educating adequate numbers of men and women of superior technological, professional and other productive skills in all fields of economic and societal endeavour, but that this first line of defence will be inadequate if we do not make certain that these men and women are firmly educated in the moral and spiritual values that are basic to any sound system of education.

This evening I also shall speak a little about education. Specifically, I propose to discuss three problem areas, problem areas concerned with making more effective and more justly distributed the federal contributions to the sum total of our Canadian efforts in education. It is true that I have mentioned two of these problem areas before, and I make no apology for bringing them to the attention of the Government again. It needs to have them brought to its attention many times. This I shall continue to do until something is done, because I am convinced of their importance in safeguarding and developing our most treasured and precious of all national resources, namely, our human resources, without which, honourable senators, any new national developmental policy, whatever be its term of duration—whether it be ten years or more—will never reach the heights Canadians may have been led to envision.

It is true that the past few years have witnessed a resurgence of public interest in, and public concern about, education at all levels; and it is encouraging to note the many changes and advances being made, especially at provincial and local Government levels, to provide better educational facilities and opportunities, and to distribute these more equitably so that there may be at the elementary and secondary school levels greater equality of educational opportunity.

However, it is well for us to remember that our sum total of expenditures in education at all levels does not appear to have merited any more financial support than has been true, for example, of our mounting expenditures for new and used automobiles and their operation, for tobacco and liquor, for travel, and for many other things and services. It may be of interest to honourable senators to know that between 1957 and 1959—a period of two years, and the 1959 figures are estimates—there has been in Canada an overall increase in educational expenditures of between $110 and $125 million. But in the same period we have increased our expenditures on liquor and tobacco by almost $137 million, and our expenditures on new and used cars and the operation thereof by almost $230 million.

It is also true that we have been improving the relationship between the number of students in our colleges and universities and our total population or our college-age population. I shall refer later to the fact that our university enrolments are rising annually by a rate of 8 to 10 per cent, while our total population is gaining about 3 per cent. However, we might wish to remember that a week or so ago, as reported by the Canadian Press, it was possible—and I stress the words "it was possible"—for the Soviet ambassador to tell a Laval University audience that the U.S.S.R. had in its 767 universities a student enrolment of 2,100,000 students, while the following five Western democracies, namely, Canada, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Italy, with a combined population almost equal or identical to the U.S.S.R., had a university enrolment four times smaller.

Checking on figures contained in a UNESCO publication which I hold in my hand, and which I identify by the title Study Abroad, 1959-1960, I note that the U.S.S.R. figure for students at universities is 2,110,860. The United States figure is 3,036,938. The other five countries combined—that is, Canada, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Italy—have a combined enrolment of 678,000 students, which really makes the ratio about 3 to 1.

Now, I know that these figures need further dilution and adjudication to make them statistically comparable both from the point of view of time and from the point of view of definition of students, but even these revisions, honourable senators, would probably indicate that per 1,000 of total population the United States and the U.S.S.R. each has university enrolments two or two-and-a-half times higher than ours in Canada. I want honourable senators to keep this current and relative disparity in mind as we consider the problem areas which I wish to describe now.

I believe that there exists in Canada a continuing need for more national interest and involvement in the field of university and college scholarships, bursaries and loan funds with a view to providing greater equality of educational opportunity in our institutions of higher learning. I mention this problem area again simply to re-emphasize that large numbers of deserving and intellectually-able students are not now able to enter our colleges and universities because of their financial inability to pay for increasing tuition and other university costs. I contend that this is a great national loss which we cannot afford. We may find it difficult to extend to our colleges and universities the now generally accepted principle of free education at the elementary and secondary levels, and that is exactly why we must continue to ameliorate the existing inequalities by enlarging and extending our student-aid programs.

Honourable senators, within one year it is estimated that the average university costs to students and their parents have gone up from $1,270 to $1,400. That is an increase of $130, and during that period there have been increases in scholarships so that on the average across Canada there is available in scholarships now $100 of the $1,400 that is necessary to cover the costs of university education. The level of scholarships has gone up from $90 to $100 on the average that I mentioned, that is, by $10. The other $120 must be provided by the parents and the students.

On previous occasions I indicated how Canada compared with other Western democracies in the total availability of scholarships and bursaries, as these are related to student population, and I mentioned, for example, that in the United Kingdom about 75 per cent of the students have scholarships available to them. The United States is almost equally high. Somewhat hopefully, I must confess in retrospect, I had pointed out that the Commonwealth Government of Australia has in successful operation a very comprehensive scheme of national scholarships covering almost one-half of the university and college enrolments. During our election campaign of 1958 there were hints that this question would be brought forcefully to the Government's attention and that something might be done to initiate a scheme of national scholarships and bursaries, but a rather significant silence has now descended upon this problem area, and one even hesitates to trespass upon this calm and peaceful atmosphere. However, honourable senators, in view of our increasing university enrolments, balanced as they are to some extent by increased student-aid programs being provided by provincial and by private resources, may I respectfully remind the Government of its responsibility in helping to increase the availability of higher educational training to thousands of young Canadians who are not now able to avail themselves of these facilities.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Does he know the present proportion of students in this country who are receiving scholarship or bursary aid of some character in comparison with the 75 per cent he mentioned in England?

Hon. Mr. Wall: The last survey I know of quoted a percentage of roughly 32 per cent. There was an additional problem which I might mention. The average scholarship available was low in amount, which I tried to point out indirectly by saying that it costs $1,400 to educate a student. On the average the scholarship available is $100 per student.

I would say this. Through the instrumentality of a national scheme of scholarships, bursaries and loan funds let us, for the greater and richer national destiny we often speak about, construct the access roads to the invaluable human resources upon which our future progress and development are predicated. If the Government subscribes to the principle of equality of educational opportunity in more than academic terms, then its concomitant belief in the principle of distributive justice presupposes more than a kind of silent default in this important problem area.

My suggestion is very simple. Let the Government plan to do something soon in initiating a comprehensive, national scheme of scholarships and bursaries. This would be an admirable way of bringing direct aid to the competent and able young Canadians who need this help, in whatever province they may reside and whatever college or university they may choose to attend. This individual, grant-in-aid approach would not contravene any provincial jurisdiction in the field of education. I believe we allocated close to $10 million for our current roads to physical resources program up in the north. Let us begin with 10,000 national bursaries and scholarships at a similar annual cost of $10 million, gradually increasing the number of scholarships and bursaries available to perhaps thirty, forty or fifty thousand.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I would like to know if the granting of these scholarships might not contravene constitutional jurisdiction as far as the rights of the provinces are concerned. Has the honourable gentleman studied this aspect of the question? If so, we would like to know his conclusion, for we are very much interested.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I would say, honourable senators, that scholarships are now being granted through the federal Government, through the National Research Council, through the Canada Council, on an individual basis to students without any contravention of any constitutional jurisdiction at the provincial level.

I would like to conclude this argument by saying that at national, and therefore better distributed expense, these scholarships would provide greater equality of educational opportunity and greater resultant social mobility, to which our democratic way of life is dedicated.

I should like to touch upon another problem, and that is the level of national support now being given to our colleges and universities through federal grants. Honourable senators know that the sum total of these grants is calculated on the basis of the estimated total population of Canada multiplied by $1.50 per person, and by this means we say how much money the Canadian Government will give in federal grants to universities. That money is then divided among the provinces on the basis of its total population. Because the student enrolment is increasing at an annual rate of between 8 and 10 per cent—and it must be remembered that this student enrolment increase varies among our provinces—and because the estimated population of Canada increases at less than 3 per cent per annum, and this rate of population increase also varies from province to province, there arise two what I call "dilution problems". First, there occurs an overall yearly dilution of the per-student level of national support of between $16 to $18—dropping, for example, from a Canadian average of $289 per student in 1958-59 to $271 in 1959-60. Secondly, provinces with a rapidly rising student load, but a slower total population increase, suffer a greater relative dilution of this national per-student support. For example, from 1958-59 to 1959-60 British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Quebec each received from $12 to $17 less per student, whereas Ontario's loss was $21, New Brunswick's $26, Alberta's $36, and Prince Edward Island's $72. This change, honourable senators, occurred in one year.

Our "level of support and distribution" formula, as I call it, results not only in this annual dilution—and a dilution which is discriminatory in its effects upon the different provinces—but it also results in what we may term the problem of unfair differentials in the per-student national grant to the colleges and universities in the various provinces. Excluding Newfoundland, these per-student grants range this year from a low of $203 in Nova Scotia to a high of $342 in Ontario.

I would respectfully suggest that further study should be given by the Government to a university grants-in-aid formula which would (a) prevent this annual dilution and eliminate its discriminatory effects and (b) introduce a greater measure of equalization in per-student grants going to the various provinces, to level out the differentials which presently exist.

Last year I suggested upgrading the per-student grant of the provinces below the national average—up to this national average, which upgrading would provide some measure of equalization. Suggestions have been made of a flat per-student grant of so many dollars to be paid to the eligible colleges and universities through the National Conference of Canadian Universities and if so desired through some other intermediary provincial agency on the nose-count of the number of eligible students. The figure of $300 per student would be a little improvement on the present average grant.

Whatever the means adopted, it does seem important that the sum total of federal university grants, or tax credit allowances, should have a more direct relationship to the actual student load in these institutions in the different provinces, thereby doing away with the present discriminatory differentials and preventing the annual dilution which I have described. All provincial grant structures are so geared that there are increases or decreases in direct proportion to the educational load. Our federal university grants structure is somewhat unique, in measuring one thing, that is, total population, and then using this measure to fit something quite different, student enrolment in colleges and universities.

My next suggestion in the line of education involves the expenditure of a tiny amount of money for very rich national returns.

Honourable senators recognize that the federal Government is engaged, directly or indirectly, in an extensive amount of research or aid to research in a variety of areas which are of national interest and concern. A perusal of the main estimates will readily validate this statement.

Now in education, but for statistical data and related statistical studies which are done by the educational division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and, but for scholarships and fellowships which are available through the Canada Council, and some of these may involve some form of educational research, I believe that I am correct in saying that the federal Government provides no grants in aid for educational research as such.

It is not my intention to speak to you about the many problem areas in education which would benefit from continued and organized study by some national organization for educational research, but I believe sincerely that educational practices and techniques must continue to be studied and evaluated in the light of changing conditions and new technological advances, and I further believe that many of these research problems may be handled most effectively on a co-ordinated and national basis. There is such a national organization for educational research which has lately come into existence, called the National Advisory Committee on Educational Research; it is sponsored by the Canadian Educational Association and membership in this association is enjoyed by each of the departments of education. This National Advisory Committee has a small educational research office, and this acts as a clearing house and a liaison agency, as a library and reference centre, and it is beginning to disseminate information on educational research through a little publication called The Canadian Research Digest.

So much for the story of the background. How did this get started? Well, it got started in 1957 because one of our large corporations gave $100,000 to the Canadian Education Association for this purpose and asked that this sum be expended over a period of from three to six years.

What this undertaking needs is additional and speedy assistance in the form of funds. I see no reason whatever why the federal Government should not recognize the importance of strengthening educational research on a national level. Hence, I suggest that the federal Government—purely on a grant-in-aid basis and with no strings attached—should provide the Canadian Education Association with a very modest annual contribution to be spent for educational research under the direction of its National Advisory Committee. The initial sum of $50,000 per year would enable this committee and its office to undertake needed and highly significant research activities—and would be a further indication of our national concern with and responsibility for further educational progress.

Now, honourable senators, I wish to turn to a totally different subject and speak a little about World Refugee Year, leaving the problem of immigration proper to another and, I hope, more auspicious occasion. Because one of our distinguished colleagues, the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) is honorary chairman of the Canadian Committee for World Refugee Year, it is with some hesitancy that I make a few observations about Canada's contribution to World Refugee Year, which is to end officially in June, 1960.

I make my observations in the context of two public addresses of the Honourable the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, one delivered to the Hamilton Council of Women early in November, 1959, and the second to the Canadian Welfare Council at the end of January, 1960.

In the first address the minister gave a review of what Canada did to accept refugees for humanitarian and for self-interest reasons —for, as the minister confirms, the refugees that we did accept have proved to be a tremendous asset to Canadian economic and social development.

The minister explained that to December 31, 1958 an estimated 231,000 refugees—I am dealing in round figures—were admitted to Canada, although in fact there may be many thousands more who came through other countries. This figure includes the 37,000 Hungarian refugees brought into Canada when our humanitarian motivation was dramatically high. Our identifiable expenditures for the admission and welfare of refugees in Canada proper is conservatively estimated at about $25 million; our contributions to international relief and rehabilitation agencies amount to about $185 million, making a total identifiable outlay for refugees of approximately $210 million.

Then, honourable senators, in this address follows this remarkable statement by the minister, which I shall quote in full:

> How we are engaged in World Refugee Year—a dramatic effort sponsored by the United Nations to clear the European camps and to rehabilitate all the hard-core refugees. Many of these refugees have known no other home for years. Among them are children who were born in the camps and have never had homes as we know them. These people have no chance for a decent life if we do not take them from the confines of their present existence. We cannot better demonstrate our religious and democratic ideals than by helping our fellow men in their distress.

I agree. And by the "we" I want to believe that the minister means all Canadians, all 17½ millions of us. I ask this simple question: what better way is there to make this communal "we" effective than through the instrumentality of the federal Government in co-operation with our provincial and municipal authorities?

The lead the honourable the minister speaks about—and I am referring to the 100 families the Canadian Government has sponsored—is encouraging. However, if Canada is to make anything near the kind of humanitarian and dramatic effort which we were proud to make in 1956-57, when Canada accepted as immigrants approximately one out of five Hungarians who fled their native land—and I believe Canadians do not begrudge this effort, but rather look upon it with justifiable pride—and if Canada is to make a really signifiant contribution to the resettlement and rehabilitation of some 23,000 European refugees in the camps alone, then this lead is inadequate on both counts.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator referred to 100 families. How many persons are involved?

Hon. Mr. Wall: The figure given was just over 340. I tried to find that in my notes, but was unable to do so.

Furthermore, honourable senators, our aid-refugee drive to supplement this governmental lead has bogged down in what the Financial Post of February 20 calls a hassle, with the unfortunate result that the non-governmental sponsorship of additional refugees has never got off the ground. The reason is simple: we are asking only a segment of the Canadian population to add to its present burden of voluntary and charitable endeavours the sponsoring of these additional refugees at a total cost that is difficult to determine. The honourable the minister hopes and expects that much more will be done in this way because, as she puts it, the Government has the duty to consider the extent to which public funds may be jutisfiably committed to a movement of this nature, and, therefore, the federal Government has no alternative but to ask that private sponsors undertake this burden on a voluntary basis. Of course, there is an alternative, and the statement of the Honourable Howard Green shows what the alternative is. The trouble is that we do not know how many additional refugees are going to be sponsored by the Government.

The question then arises, what is the sponsorship formula that individuals or organizations are asked to undertake? Why do these associations and individuals regard this formula as too heavy and too indefinite? From the special explanatory booklet and from the statements of the minister, we find that this sponsorship involves the following:

1. Payment of travelling expenses to place of destination.

2. Providing accommodation and maintenance on arrival.

3. Arranging and paying for institutional care for those who are ill for an indefinite period—I gather the cost will be about $15 or $20 a day.

4. Finding employment for the newcomer; or, if the sick refugee is the head of a family, accepting the responsibility for the subsistence and welfare of the family until the breadwinner is well again.

5. Generally accepting responsibility for the persons brought to Canada until they become eligible for normal municipal and provincial social and welfare benefits after they "establish residence".

The minister estimates that the average period during which a sponsor may expect to bear the full measure of responsibility undertaken to be one year. This one-year average means that many individual cases will be a responsibility for longer than one year. Hence the concern and hesitancy of these potential non-governmental sponsors; hence the lack of sponsors; hence the request of the Canadian Welfare Council for a conference with the minister or with the cabinet. Such a conference did take place, with what results I do not know.

I note that the Board of Directors of the Canadian Welfare Council agreed to back the suggestions made by a special steering committee at its January conference, which conference included federal, provincial and municipal officials, and as well the representatives of voluntary organizations from across Canada.

What are these suggestions? The first is that the federal Government, in consultation with the provinces, undertake to bring in additional families. Personally, I believe that we could double, and perhaps triple, the number of families sponsored directly by the federal Government. This would enable each and every Canadian to share this burden and its eventual benefits, as equitably as possible. Not by some welfare agencies and some individuals rising once again to still another challenging responsibility to be added to others, but by the national Government doing more in this regard, will we all share in the enhancement of Canada's reputation as a land of hospitality and humanitarianism.

I refuse to believe that Canadians would begrudge additional national financial contributions to this kind of cause, knowing that all would share in them, and knowing further that welfare agencies and welfare-minded individuals everywhere would follow this more generous governmental lead on our behalf, and with our money, with the kind of additional and auxiliary assistance which they are best equipped to give.

The second suggestion of the Welfare Council calls for a change in the federal Government's present policy of asking private sponsors of refugees to undertake full and continuing care of them, with no time limit. The directors of the Canadian Welfare Council, quite properly, I think, are asking that the responsibilities of the sponsors be limited to: (a) paying the transportation costs for a refugee family coming to Canada and (b) assisting in the family's settlement and integration into a Canadian community.

What more can we ask of voluntary help? This means that the Canadian Welfare Council believes that private sponsors should not be required to assume any responsibility for the cost of health and welfare services and benefits which are traditionally provided in Canada under public auspices. Surely this is a reasonable position.

World Refugee Year is fast drawing to a close, and it may take some time for the formula for this sharing of public health and welfare responsibility to be worked out, unless, of course, individual provinces take the initiative themselves—and that may happen. I believe that the Canadian Welfare Council recommended that the federal Government take immediate action to arrange for acceptance of this public responsibility for health and welfare services. Time is pressing. I believe that the Council has also asked for some relaxation of quota restrictions to permit Canadians to adopt orphaned children of Asiatic origin.

I would like, honourable senators, to feel that the present Government will rise to the challenge that is inherent in these realistic and reasonable recommendations. I believe Canada is the richer and the better because of her national decision in 1956 to accept nearly one out of every five Hungarian refugees at a national cost of somewhere between $15 and $20 million. This decision was prompted by a high sense of idealism and humanitarianism, and I do not believe that it was ever regretted by the average Canadian. Nor do I believe that a more idealistic or humanitarian approach to World Refugee Year will ever be a political liability to the Government, or to any government, provided the Canadian people know what is being done, and why it is being done that way.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered that the said address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this house as are members of the Honourable the Privy Council.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

Ordered: That the 24 members of the House of Commons to act on behalf of the house as members of the Joint Committee on Indian Affairs be as follows: Messrs. Dorion, Badanai, Baldwin, Barrington, Cadieu, Charlton, Fraser, Gundlock, Hardie, Henderson, Howard, Jorgenson, Korchinski, Leduc, Martel, McQuillan, Michaud, Montgomery, Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria), Pickersgill, Robinson, Small, Stefanson, and Thomas; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that the foregoing members have been appointed to act on behalf of the Commons on the said Joint Committee of both houses.

Attest

LÉON J. RAYMOND
Clerk of the House of Commons

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following document:

Report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture Act, Chapter 66, R.S. 1952. (French text).

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. David A. Croll presented Bill S-25, to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, this bill requires the disclosure of interest rates and finance charges when credit is extended, so that the borrower or instalment buyer will know exactly what rate of annual interest he is charged for a loan or purchase and what his total cost will be.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Croll moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING

Hon. R. B. Horner, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, presented the committee's first report.

Report read by Clerk Assistant:

The committee recommend that the time limited for filing petitions for private bills (other than petitions for bills of divorce) which expired on February 24, 1960, be extended to Friday, March 25, 1960.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Horner moved with leave, that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I understand there are a few bills that some honourable senators desire to proceed with and that they would like to have passed as soon as possible. I cannot say of what importance the bills are, but all bills are important to their sponsors.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I say, in support of the motion, that the members of the committee unanimously agreed to the report.

Report adopted.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 286 to 294, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's fourth report.

Report read by the Clerk Assistant:

Your committee recommend:—

1. That William D. Foran, Chief of Protective Service, Senate, be retired on April 1, 1960, and be granted an allowance under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

2. That Mr. Foran be granted, in lieu of six months' retiring leave with pay, a gratuity equal to the difference between six months' salary and annuity for that period.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Brunt moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BILL OF RIGHTS

CORRELATIVE OBLIGATIONS AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot moved, pursuant to notice:

That there are correlative obligations and responsibilities to the Canadian Bill of Rights referred to in the Speech from the Throne of this session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Who is the honourable senator's seconder?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: My deskmate, the genial senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh).

Honourable senators, great progress has been made from the time of St. Paul, who said:

—in journeyings often, in perils from floods, in perils from robbers, in perils from my own nation, in perils from the Gentiles, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils from false brethren;—

At the present time very few people suffer from all those perils.

My intention today is to speak about liberty and freedom, two synonymous words. In order to revert to fundamentals one has to go to a book which is indispensible, a book that may be quite large, although there are small editions. I speak of the dictionary. There we find "liberty" defined as follows:

Freedom from external restraint or compulsion. The sum of the rights and immunities of all the citizens of an organized civil community concurrent with the guaranteed protection against interference with such rights and privileges (civil liberty), or the state or condition of those who have the right effectually to share in framing and conducting their government (political liberty), or of those who are free from external restraint in exercising rights without the province of a government to control (individual liberty). Individual liberty now generally involves freedom of the person in going and coming (personal liberty), equality before the courts, security of private property, freedom of opinion and its expression, and freedom of conscience.

"Freedom" is defined in this way:

Freedom, liberty, licence mean, as here compared, the power or condition of acting without compulsion. Freedom, a very general term, may imply at one extreme total absence of restraint and at the other, an unawareness of being hampered in any way; liberty often differs from freedom in implying a power to say, do, etc., what one wishes, as distinguished from being uninhibited in doing, thinking, etc., or a release from restraint or compulsion (as, to have the liberty to come and go; to set at liberty); licence implies liberty that consists in breaking laws or rules, and is sometimes regarded as an abuse and other times as a privilege.

"Right" is defined as:

That to which one has a just claim; any power or privilege vested in a person by the law, custom, etc.

"Obligation":

Any duty imposed by law, promise, or contract, by social relations, etc.

"Responsibility":

Accountability; also moral accountability; as, the responsibilities of parenthood.

"Restrict":

To restrain within bounds; to limit; confine.

"Limit":

That which terminates, circumscribes, or confines; the utmost extent; as, the limits of knowledge.

"Confine":

To restrain within limits.

To summarize all that I have found in the dictionary concerning the definitions of "liberty" and "freedom", one must come to the conclusion that liberty means the right to enjoy freedom within certain bounds, provided that one does not interfere with his neighbour's own liberty. Therefore, there are limitations to liberty from the beginning. We can go back for centuries to the time when the Ten Commandments were given by God to Moses. That was the law that applied to the whole world, and the law which governed the world for centuries. Naturally, as man became implicated in wickedness there were more laws passed—religious and civil laws—to restrain him, and those laws are necessary inasmuch as man lives in society. A man is free to choose his own religion, but after he has made the choice he is bound by the laws of his church. The man who lives in society is bound by the laws that apply to all the citizens of the community—and the word "community" applies to the country or province, or city; it is the place where a man lives.

My first conclusion is that the words "liberty" and "freedom" are very relative in their meanings, because a man who enjoys liberty cannot by-pass the laws that govern society. At the time of the French Revolution a group that was called the sans-culottes—the men who led the revolution—said that there was no law to hold them or to prevent them from doing anything that they wanted to do, and a school was formed which shared those views. I was not at all surprised when I read in the Treaty of Versailles after the First World War, and in the Covenant of the United Nations, the part that dealt with the liberty of the individual. The liberty of the individual was more restricted during the war than it was in peacetime. Naturally, in times of war the aim of each country is the salvation of the country. That is the first law, and the private individual has to make a sacrifice of his liberty, to a large extent, to promote the success of the state in pursuing the war.

I cannot understand how it is that anyone can speak of liberty or freedom without qualifying those two words so that no one is deceived. If any one of us addresses a group of students and speaks only of their rights without mentioning any of their obligations, then those young people are necessarily misled. They will think only of their own liberty without thinking of their own responsibilities, which are numerous.

The purpose of the law is to define what each man, woman and child has to do in society. In this country the Parliament of Canada has criminal jurisdiction. It has the jurisdiction to enact the Criminal Code and its amendments. The provinces also have the right to pass acts that may affect to a certain extent the liberty and freedom of the individual but which are necessary to prevent chaos from existing in society. There are in our federal country two main systems of laws: the federal laws and the provincial laws. The municipal laws which govern the cities, towns and townships come under provincial laws. Therefore, there are two groups of civil laws in this country.

There is one thing that I desire to say now after an experience of thirty-six years under this roof. It is that I wonder how many people know what liberty is. Very often they ignore it, and they ignore it purposely, because they claim full liberty for themselves while denying it to others. How many times did I notice it when I was sitting in the other chamber? Prominent men who did not understand British Parliamentary practice, who did not understand the rules, were claiming full liberty for themselves, and for themselves only. According to them, other people were not entitled to enjoy the same rights as they were claiming for themselves. In this country life would be unbearable if there were no tolerance. Tolerance is respect for other people's honest views. Naturally, it sometimes implies a large degree of self-control, but we cannot have harmony and unity in the country unless we understand that other people have the right to differ with us.

If we look at the judicial history of the United States we realize that the most famous judges of that country have been those who had the courage to differ at times from the opinion of the majority. I may quote some of them, particularly Judges Frankfurter and Brandeis of the Supreme Court of the United States, who expressed their qualified and well-reasoned personal opinions often in contradiction to the ruling of the majority.

What constitutes democracy? It is government of the people, by the people, for the people. You may say, my dear colleagues, that that is a commonplace remark. Well, it was made by Lincoln, who was repeating what had been said centuries ago by one of those wise men who knew the meaning of democracy. One should be free to express within the law any honest opinion. Perhaps it will take a long time to see the realization of any suggestion, for when a suggestion is made to intelligent men and women, they weigh it. They may not accept it at once, but by discussing it they may come to what I may call relative truth. Truth is the same as liberty in civil matters. It is quite relative, but there is a great satisfaction for anyone in considering any matter objectively and without prejudice, to meet the good judgment of other people who consider the same thing objectively and without prejudice. This is what I mean by relative truth.

Naturally, behind the Iron Curtain no one would dare to express the views I have just enunciated. It is not permitted to express oneself freely over there, and I must tell you that in this country, which is democratic by name, it is at times most difficult to express personal views without feeling an unpleasant reaction and being subjected to some kind of circuitous retaliation for speaking as a free man or a free woman. I could quote numerous examples of what happened, to my personal knowledge, under this roof twenty-five, thirty or thirty-five years ago. I would not do so today about the Senate. I may have a better opportunity to do that or to write it on another occasion, but what is important now for the Parliament of Canada? It is not to pass any legislation concerning human rights. In the Atlantic Charter, Roosevelt and Churchill mentioned quite clearly the kind of freedom they wanted the people to have. It is freedom from fear. How many people do not have the opportunity, or do not take the opportunity, to express freely what they have on their minds because they fear what will happen to them—the kind of abuse that they may get if they go on to explain what they have in mind and what is their sincere belief? I could elaborate at great length on that.

I have just drawn this matter to your attention, honourable colleagues, and my conclusion will be brief. It is that action must be started as soon as possible, and must be persisted in, to educate the Canadian people as to the real meaning of liberty. And who could do that? The press could do it if it were honest enough, if it were not too ponderous, if it were open minded, if it were sincere, if all the journalists were true Canadians. We have some high-calibre journalists, men who are just as able and who deserve to be as famous as the best-known journalists of this continent and of Europe or anywhere else.

If they are true to their duty to inform the people, as they should be, they should be the apostles of true liberty, of liberty that is respected by laws that are in force, and laws that we will not want to have changed in this country.

Another word, before taking my seat. As this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces I do not see how any federal legislation of any kind could be passed in that regard; but as there have been most interesting and illuminating speeches made on education, which is a provincial matter, I thought this would be a good occasion to speak on liberty, and that it would be a real service to the Canadian people to tell them the meaning of it.

CRIMINAL CODE (CAPITAL PUNISHMENT) BILL

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the order:

Second Reading of Bill S-6, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code (Capital Punishment)". —(Honourable Senator Croll).

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, I ask that the second reading of this bill stand until April 26 next.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order stands until April 26.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW CANADA'S ROLE— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations, upon taking the necessary action to call his committee together. I realize that his specific reference to the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is probably not necessarily restricted to those particular items, but would rather form a basis for an opportunity for those of us who are interested in international affairs to obtain some first-hand information on many questions that are before us.

In offering a few comments under this motion, I have to admit that my knowledge of the United Nations is not as great as it should be. I have not been a delegate to its meetings for some years. I attended in 1946, when it was still sitting at Lake Success, and in 1948 at Paris. During the intervening period, however, a great many things have happened, and other honourable senators who have been present at the meetings would be in a better position than I to deal intelligently with any matters that are before that body.

On the other hand, I have long been interested in NATO, about which I should like to say a few words. I have always been particularly interested in the question of Germany's association with NATO—military, political and economic. The limited sources of information at my disposal are only those of an ordinary member of Parliament. I have had a growing admiration for the superb job I felt the Adenauer Government was doing in keeping the balance between those Germans who, on the one hand, did not want to re-arm, and on the other hand, her allies, who were urging her to do so. I also thought Germany was displaying sound judgment in seeking economic co-operation and elimination of trade rivalries in the relations between herself and her allies. In each case I believe she was displaying political courage, sound judgment and far-sightedness, characteristics that I believe should be applauded and emulated by her allies rather than condemned.

Now I am disturbed and, to say the least, slightly bewildered at the turn recent developments have taken. Frankly, I do not want to believe the interpretation that is being placed on recent developments and, I do not intend to believe the conclusions that some have arrived at until I am better informed than at present. For my part, I trust the Germany that is represented by the Adenauer Government. I confess to bewilderment at the conflicting conclusions drawn from what seems to me the relatively small outbreak of anti-semitism in Germany and newspaper reports that Germany was seeking bases outside her own territory, particularly in Spain.

However, I am greatly impressed by credible reports regarding the attitude adopted by the two peoples who suffered most from the brutality and savagery of Hitler Germany.

Yesterday New York dispatches quoted the Israeli Premier, David Ben Gurion, after an interview he held there with Chancellor Adenauer, as having said:

Adenauer has confirmed his belief that the Germany of today is not the Germany of yesterday.

It is only fair to say, however, that the New York Times, in stating this, referred to the fact that in Israel itself there are various schools of political thought which feel that the premier should not have had an interview with Adenauer, so the matter is by no means as simple as those few words from the dispatch might suggest.

David Ben Gurion was quoted as saying further:

> that his people could not easily forget the blood bath of Hitler's Germany, but he recalled that he had told the Israeli Parliament last summer that Germany had changed from the days of Hitler and that after meeting the chancellor he feels sure his judgment is correct.

Drew Middleton, one of the most experienced correspondents of the New York Times, writing in the March 13 issue of the New York Times Magazine, and reporting on the viewpoint and reactions of leading NATO countries in respect to these various questions says, as regards France:

> The French believe that the Germans have learned their lesson—they see 1945 as the final defeat of German desires—and that it presents an opportunity to restore continental stability and achieve unity.

This view of Mr. Middleton is confirmed by the action of France as a result of the Treaty of Rome, by which France, Germany, Italy and the three Low Countries not only agreed to the maximum economic and cultural co-operation but publicly stated that their goal is political union. Surely, honourable senators, this is one of the miracles of our times.

Nevertheless, we would be foolish, I believe, not to realize that grave doubts and fears exist among some of the NATO allies. Mr. Middleton, in the same article, refers to the doubts and fears existing in Britain, Norway and Denmark. He concludes his article with this striking paragraph:

> A very dangerous situation can develop if this division over Germany is not reconciled. Perhaps the worst thing that could happen to Germany, and perhaps to the West as a whole, would be for Germany to be left hanging in the middle of the alliance, wanted by some, rejected by others. There is no surer way than this to feed the fires of nationalism and force the Germans to conclude that their salvation lies in making a separate deal with the Soviet Union to unite East and West Germany.

As far as Canada is concerned the situation is not very clear. The honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), who holds strong convictions and is courageous and fearless in giving voice to them, brought the matter to the attention of this house, expressing his own doubts and fears. On the other hand, the Government does not seem to be greatly exercised. Late in February, answering questions in the other place, the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed some annoyance that he had heard nothing from individual NATO Governments before the matter of the Spanish bases was made public, and stated he intended to bring the matter up in the NATO Council. He expressed doubt as to the accuracy of the reports, saying that he had had specific denials from the ambassadors of Germany and Spain.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina was not greatly impressed by these denials and referred to a none-too-flattering definition of ambassadors in general coined more than a hundred years ago. For my part I would not like to feel that Canadian ambassadors would lie on behalf of their country or that our Department of External Affairs would ask them to do so, and I certainly am not going to assume that the Canadian External Affairs Department personnel are more virtuous than those of our friends and allies. I cannot say that I agree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina in all of his conclusions, but I certainly agree with him that we in this house are entitled to more information on this subject than we have yet received. Since the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs late in February I have heard of no further statement that he has made on the question.

On the other hand the Halifax Chronicle-Herald carried a curious dispatch by the Canadian Press stating that Canada had chastised West Germany for its European NATO partners' secret negotiations to obtain supply depots in Spain. The article went on to say that informants said the chastisement was administered in the NATO permanent Council in Paris by Canadian representatives as well as by spokesmen of several other NATO countries. Certainly the whole matter is very confusing, and I commend and welcome the action of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South in making it possible for us to get more information.

Let me say to this house something that honourable senators already know: I possess no special information that is not open to all of us. But in matters of this kind I have a faith founded on very simple ideas. I believe that no one can indict a whole nation, and that no nation has a monopoly on good intentions. In every nation there are evil and ambitious men who are unscrupulous and brutal in their efforts to secure power, and even more so in holding on to it after they get it. If the victors in World War I had used better judgment in the peace terms they imposed and in supporting Germany's early democratic government, it is quite possible that Hitler and what he stood for might never have secured power, and that World War II would never have occurred. We were much wiser after World War II, and results up to the present moment at least prove that fact.

I suggest to honourable senators that a strong Government under Adenauer has been dedicated to the making of butter, not guns. The German people were happy that the allies forbade them from making armaments. The Germans concentrated on economic development for the first ten years after 1945.

But times and opinions change. We invited Germany to join NATO, which she did in 1955, but the move met with terrific opposition in Germany. Even today the official opposition, the Social Democratic party, is resolutely opposed to Germany's joining NATO; the members of that party say that when they secure power they will do their utmost to extricate Germany from its membership. But even after Germany joined NATO and assumed obligations, her contributions to national defence were relatively small. In 1958, according to the NATO Letter, the estimated national defence expenditures by Germany, including what she contributed to NATO, were $200 million less than Canada expended. Yet Germany has 55 million people as against Canada's 17 million, and her economy is bounding. In the last year or two the United States has urged Germany to do more, since we on this continent were spending on defence three times as much as were the 13 European partners together. Although I do not know, I suspect that Canada joined with the United States in urging Germany to do more by way of military contributions. I have never heard any suggestion to the contrary. I have seen no reference to Canada's part in this respect, but I would say that if I had been in the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs, or the responsible minister in Canada, I would have joined the United States in asking Germany to make greater contributions.

Under pressure Germany increased her military expenditures, by how much I do not know. I do know, however, that as a result of the increase there were riots in German cities, protesting the expenditures. It was a most unpopular step to take.

I would emphasize that the official opposition party in Germany was constantly pointing out that membership in NATO would lead Germany to the position in which she finds herself today. A cabinet crisis developed between Erhard, the Minister of Economic Affairs, and Strauss, the new Minister of National Defence. My honourable friend from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) referred to Germany's growing air force. Actually, Germany could not manufacture planes on her own, and hence the question arose between Erhard and Strauss. Erhard wanted nothing whatever to do with armament construction; and Strauss put forward the familiar argument that they would need buildings to service the planes when they got them, and with a little additional effort the buildings could be extended to allow for assembling and thus provide employment. But Erhard stood resolute against any armament construction at all, saying that there was no need for the employment, that they had no unemployment. He pointed out that if and when disarmament came, it would mean economic dislocation. Relations between Erhard and Strauss became so bad that at one point Erhard threatened to resign. However, he did not. Strauss had his way, and the buildings will be constructed in which to assemble the planes of perhaps French or American design.

I have only mentioned these matters so that honourable senators will understand the attitude which preceded the present situation. Up to this point the complaint was that Germany was not doing enough. When the question of her joining NATO was first broached, her Government was anxious that her military effort should never become the tool of any unscrupulous group, or be taken over by anyone with an ulterior motive, and her Government asked the Allies to integrate Germany's armed forces with the French, British and Americans. The Allies refused to accede to that request, so Germany had to build up an army of her own. That is the second point.

When the further demand was made on the part of the Canadian Government—and I say this cautiously, because I do not know what attitude our Government took—Germany pointed out that if she increased her armaments, including her air force, she would have to get more bases.

I never can be sure in what light one should construe some newspaper reports, but I would refer to another article that appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, as to Germany's attitude and viewpoint, in which it was said that two years previously Germany had made representations to General Norstad in an effort to procure bases in France. Negotiations were never concluded, nothing definite was arrived at, and in each instance she was turned down. To what extent there were subsequent negotiations I do not know, but for my part I cannot see any terrible sin in obtaining bases outside her own territory. Canada is not militaristic, but we have bases in France and Germany, have we not? The United States, one of the NATO partners, has tremendous bases in Spain. It must all resolve into a question of whether what Germany did was done behind the backs of her NATO partners. I think that is the whole issue, and that is not very clear in my mind today, so I welcome every opportunity of getting more information on it.

I am not going to detain the house much longer, but I would be remiss if, after referring to the military side, I did not say a word about the economic side. Honourable senators will recall that early in 1955 a group of us representing all parties—and I was in distinguished company, because the present Prime Minister of this country was vice-president of the organization of which I happened to be president—undertook to communicate with all the NATO nations, with those people who wanted the spirit and letter of Article II implemented. From the early part of 1955 we wrote to all these countries, and I went to the United States two or three times. I was Speaker of this house at that time, and we were dealing with Speakers in the other countries. I went to the United States and to Britain. All the countries agreed to send us the names of their delegates. At the outset we did not communicate with Germany, because at that time she was not a member of NATO. However, she did become a member on May 1, and on that date, as I remember, we had a letter ready which we immediately air-mailed to the Speakers of the two houses in Germany. Almost by return mail we had a letter back saying that they would be delighted to join with us, and again almost by the next mail, we had the names of the members of the German delegation. For the next two months we worried the United States, Great Britain and the other members to do something. They were always going to act, but kept delaying. Finally the British appointed their delegates about ten days before the conference opened on July 18, and the Americans appointed theirs only two days before the conference opened, and only then at the point of the gun, so to speak.

I remember well the resolution and the business-like manner with which Germany complied with our request. There was none of the dilly-dallying that the United States and Britain indulged in. The same characteristic ran through the whole effort to implement the spirit and letter of Article II with respect to economic co-operation.

It is now ten years since we solemnly put our signature to the treaty with the other countries, and we have not done a single thing, so it has ceased to exist. Those countries in central Europe—I am referring to the Six—having become disillusioned by the dilatoriness of the United States and Britain, went ahead and implemented among themselves the spirit and letter of Article II, and in doing so they have created something that a friend of mine in the United States has called as great an economic and political upheaval as the exploding of the first atomic bomb. The rest of us are now scurrying around wondering what on earth we are going to do about it. In my judgment, this action of Germany was clear-cut leadership. I say to you that in the economic field their intelligence and good intentions appeal to me. What the Six have done among themselves in Europe, in my judgment, is what we in the West have got to do. If we do not do it on our own initiative, then Khrushchev will force us to do it, just as he forced us into NATO originally. Germany has shown the kind of leadership I admire, and I am not going to believe the worst of the Adenauer Government until I have evidence to the contrary placed before me.

Some time ago the Minister of Finance said in the House of Commons that the idea of economic co-operation in NATO is a thing of the past. It has gone, and a new organization is being set up in Europe. The committee is composed of twenty members, and a subcommittee of four decides what the committee of twenty is to do. The committee is now larger than NATO. It includes Switzerland, Austria and Sweden, which are not members of NATO and never will be. I am told there is a very strong movement on foot to have the membership left open to include one or two members of the commonwealth, as well as others. However, the lead in that direction, the inspiration, and the driving force, whether we like it or not, came, in my judgment, from the business-like approach of the Germans.

I suggest we should think twice before anything is done, because the Germans are a proud people. I believe the Adenauer Government is honest in its approach to this question; it is concerned that no Hitler will rise again in Germany, and we ought to be equally concerned. If we had been concerned about that after the First World War, probably there never would have been a Second World War.

So I say to the honourable Chairman of the External Affairs Committee (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) there is a great deal of work for your committee to do. I would like to see the questions concerning the new arrangements that we are entering into with the United States and the Atlantic community gone into. There is something brewing in that respect. It is of very great importance to all of us, and I would like the ministers concerned to come before the committee and tell us all about it.

Also I would like to hear more about the committee on Canadian-American relations. I understand that 24 delegates of the Canadian Parliament are going to Washington after Easter. I would like to know what our delegates from the Senate will talk about when they get there. Those are most important and vital matters, and your committee would be a proper place in which to discuss them.

Further, I would like to see the GATT question explained and discussed before your committee. I can imagine, sir, that perhaps you may feel that is a borderline case, more properly associated with Canadian trade relations. It is, however, external in its nature. However, I would bow to your ruling, whatever it happens to be. I do trust it will be discussed before whichever committee is regarded as the appropriate one.

There is another question. Right now, as I understand it, there is a suggestion of our participating in the organization of the Atlantic states of both North and South America. I am not sure of the initials that stand for the name of this organization. Frankly, at the moment I know nothing about it, and I am desirous of obtaining information.

There are many more matters I wish to know about Mr. Chairman, and to which I would like to draw your attention. In conclusion I can say only this, that I commend you for your action in calling the committee together, and assure you that I will be only too happy to participate in its work in any way I can.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bradette, debate adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 270 to 285, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 17, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to advise you that I expect we shall receive some time before the end of the week the bill to amend the National Housing Act, which is now before the other house. On that account, before making the usual motion to adjourn, I would ask for unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed with the second reading of that bill as the first order of business on Tuesday next. Have I the consent of the honourable members of the Senate?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I think all honourable senators would probably agree to the proposal of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). It seems to be a reasonable one, provided he does not require that we finish discussion on second reading next Tuesday. On that understanding, I would agree to the discussion commencing on Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the leader the name of the bill of which he was speaking? I did not hear it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is a bill to amend the National Housing Act. It is quite an important measure.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is the bill in our possession now?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: No. The bill has not passed the other house yet, but I expect it will be passed there before the end of the week. I would not want to lose two days between the first and second readings in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I presume the bill could be distributed by Monday, at least, so that we may have it in advance of the next sitting?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Immediately the bill is received from the other house copies will be placed in the post office boxes of honourable senators.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 22, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

APPEARANCES OF PRIVATE DETECTIVES BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

In how many cases did each one of the private detectives appear before the Divorce Committee during each one of the last five years?

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I present the answer to this inquiry.

For text of answer, see appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 373-4.

INDIAN BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. James Gladstone moved the second reading of Bill C-2, to amend the Indian Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I take pleasure in moving the second reading of Bill No. C-2, an Act to amend the Indian Act.

Before proceeding with my remarks in connection with this legislation, may I take this opportunity, which is the first one I have had at this session, to express my pleasure that our Speaker continues to preside over our deliberations with his customary charm and ability. May I extend my regards also to the genial and capable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and to the equally courteous and able Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). I would also be remiss if I did not welcome to our ranks the three senators recently appointed. They will, I am sure—they have given ample evidence of it—contribute substantially to our discussions here and also give aid and comfort to the comparatively few of us who represent the Government party in this chamber.

Honourable senators, the purpose of the present bill, in conjunction with its companion bill, No. C-3, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, is to remove the restrictions which stand in the way of the exercise by the Indians of Canada of the federal franchise on an equal basis with other citizens.

During the late 1940's a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons recommended that the federal franchise be granted to all Indians. Certain amendments to the Canada Elections Act in 1950, and also to the Indian Act in 1951, implemented this recommendation, but only in part. Indian veterans and their wives and Indians ordinarily resident off reserves were given the franchise on the same basis as other citizens. However, the great bulk of the Indians, namely, those on the reserves, were required to waive their statutory right to exemption for taxation on or in respect of personal property held on their reserves, before they could exercise the franchise. The present proposal is that the restriction, which applies to Indians living on reserves, be now abolished.

Honourable senators, the legislation now before us is of great importance to the Indian people of Canada. It is legislation which I heartily endorse personally, but as I am here as a representative of my people I must express their views also.

The legislation will extend to all treaty Indians the right to vote in federal elections. At the present time, the only ones with this privilege are war veterans, those who live in the north, and those who waive their exemption from paying income tax on their reserves. As a member of the Senate, I can stand and speak to you today, but I cannot go to the polls and cast my ballot. Like most of my people, I have no vote, no part in choosing the people who will be our representatives in the other place. The proposed legislation will correct that situation. It will permit my people to vote, and I hope the day will soon come when treaty Indians will be among our elected representatives.

But, on behalf of my people, I must express a fear which exists in the minds of many of them. Too often in the past the Government has given with one hand and taken away with the other. It has made the Indians suspicious—and rightly so—of any action which in any way changes their status. Previously such changes were usually for the worse, not for the better.

Please remember that many of my people have had only a limited education. This was the only kind available to them under the past policies of the Government. They do not understand the duties or responsibilities of the Indian Affairs Branch, the Indian Health Services, the House of Commons, the cabinet, or the Senate. To them it is all "the Government". And, over the years, the Government has come to be feared.

This proposed legislation is viewed with mistrust by some Indians for several reasons. One of the most important is that they feel the federal vote will in some way endanger their status as treaty Indians. Another is that in the past the only way an Indian on his reserve could get the right to vote was by starting to pay income tax. Now they are getting the vote and are afraid that the next step will be to enforce the paying of taxes. Others know that, with our poor education, some of our people do not know how to vote or do not understand anything about federal politics. They fear that there is some trickery involved that can do them no good, but which might do them some harm.

If I thought for one moment that any of these fears were justified, I would fight this bill to the very end. I would never support any legislation which could eventually bring hardship or harm to my people. However, I feel that this is an honest attempt on the part of the Government to bring our people to a greater level of equality with our fellow Canadians, but without any loss of our treaty rights. I do not believe that the Government would attempt to use this legislation as a lever to force anything distasteful upon my people. I pray to God that my trust is well founded.

Perhaps the greatest fear at the present time is the existence of section 112 of the Indian Act. This section can force any Indian out of treaty status without his consent. As long as he is over 21, able to support himself, and has advanced sufficiently to become a citizen, the Government can appoint a three-man committee to review his case and recommend his expulsion from his home, his relatives and his friends. Many of my people fear that the acceptance of the federal vote is a step toward the use of this section against them. They believe that to use their vote would be to risk losing their status as treaty Indians. You may tell them otherwise. You may even make promises. But as long as section 112 remains in the act, it hangs over their heads as a threat. The sooner this section is removed from the act, the sooner the Government will start to re-establish its trust with my people.

Another problem which exists with respect to the vote is the lack of understanding. My people have not been shown how the vote can benefit them. They have seen their war veterans vote, but they have failed to see any results which are tangible evidence that it has done any good. I hope now the Government will initiate some educational program to explain the vote and the responsibilities and benefits which will come to them. I am sure that there will be no hesitation now on the part of many persons actively engaged in politics to visit our reserves and to see our problems first hand. Soon our people will no longer be just Indians. They will be voters.

Do not feel that any hesitation by my people in accepting the vote is any indication that they are not interested in the affairs of this country. It is just that we have become cautious and distrustful after so many years of being ignored or victimized. We want to work side by side with our fellow Canadians and I believe the extension of the vote is an important move in that direction.

Therefore, honourable senators, in moving the second reading of this bill, I do so in a spirit of trust and honour between my people and the Government. It is a great advancement for the Indians of Canada.

In warmly supporting this legislation I am thinking not only of the present Indian population, which is growing rapidly; I am thinking also, and perhaps primarily, of the generations of Indians to come. I hope and pray that their lot will be better than that of their forefathers and that in the future they will play an increasingly significant and helpful role in the development of this great country. It is my heart-felt belief that passage of this legislation will contribute more than many of us realize to the welfare of the Indian population and to the fair name of Canada.

Honourable senators, the companion bills, the joint effect of which I have outlined, were dealt with in a special way in the other place. It was there unanimously agreed that the discussion on both bills would take place exclusively on the motion for second reading of Bill C-2, an Act to amend the Indian Act. It was also agreed that there would be no discussion on the motion for second reading of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act. If other honourable senators agree, a similar procedure could be adopted by the Senate at this time.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, this house is very fortunate in having such a member as the honourable gentleman from Lethbridge (Hon. Mr. Gladstone) to propose the second reading of this bill. He has done so in a very fair manner and he has explained clearly the attitude of his people toward this legislation. I think I can say at the outset that we all join with him in the wish that the bill will in no way endanger the status of his people as treaty Indians but that it will mark the beginning of a great advancement in the position which the Indians hold in the dominion of Canada.

The honourable gentleman comes from a great race which has served Canada well. There was a special instance of this in our time of need some one hundred and forty years ago. We must never forget the great obligation under which we shall always be to the Indian people of Canada. For that reason I am very glad that we are in a position to say to them that we want them to vote with us as equal citizens in every way and we hope they will accept the offer of the right to do so.

Honourable senators may be interested to know that Indians have had the right to vote in Canada from time to time. Prior to 1885 they had this right by virtue of the provincial acts of that day. In that year the federal franchise was given to Indians living in the provinces east of Manitoba, and it is to be noted that they did vote in the federal elections of 1887, 1891 and 1896. In 1898 the Franchise Act was repealed and the Indians' right to vote was determined by entitlement of persons eligible to vote in federal elections. Most Indians were not on provincial lists and accordingly they actually lost the right to vote in 1898. In 1920 the Government of the day brought in the Dominion Elections Act, whereby Indians were disqualified, excepting those who had fought in World War I. In 1944 the Indians who fought in World War II were given the right to vote, and in 1948 the right was conferred on wives of Indians who fought in the two world wars. In 1950 the Canada Elections Act was amended so that Indians ordinarily resident off reserves were entitled to vote; also Indians living on reserves could vote, provided they signed a waiver of their statutory right to exemption from taxation on or in respect of personal property held on their reserves.

Some honourable senators will recall that in 1940 a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons recommended that the federal franchise be extended to all Indians. But it was found at that time that many Indians did not want the franchise, so Parliament, wisely or otherwise, decided that the recommendation should not then be put into effect.

From time to time since 1920 there has been a feeling that Indians should get the vote. As I have said, it was given first to returned soldiers and their wives; then to certain Indians living off reserves, and also to those living on reserves who waived an exemption from payment of taxes. I do not know how many thousands could have signed the waiver, but the number of those who signed it and thereby expressed their desire to have the right to vote was only 122.

The honourable sponsor of this bill explained, and I thought quite fairly, that even at the present time all Indians in Canada do not want the vote. As he has said, they fear that if they were enfranchised they might lose their rights under their treaties with Canada.

The Canadian Press conducted a recent dominion-wide survey in an attempt to get the views of the Indians with respect to this matter. I have the survey here.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: When was the survey made?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In February of this year. I happen to have here the Canadian Press report, written by John LeBlanc, which appeared in a newspaper published by one of our distinguished senators, the Kingston Whig-Standard. Mr. LeBlanc points out that Indians now have the right to vote in four provinces—Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba and Nova Scotia. In the last provincial elections the Indians cast a very large vote in some parts of Canada, but in other parts their vote was small. I come from a part of Canada which is distinguished to a large extent by what was done for it by Indians who stood nobly by this country in the past. They took up their homes in the vicinity of the city of Brantford, where it is now my privilege to live. As honourable senators know, near that city is the Six Nations Reserve. It is not one of the largest reserves in area, though probably the largest by population, which, as of December 1, 1959, was 7,304. The Indians on that reserve had the right to vote in the last provincial election, but few of them exercised the right. I had the exact figures, but cannot lay my hand on them. The Canadian Press dispatch says that about 750 were eligible to vote. I should have thought more than that had cast votes, but the dispatch adds that only a few did so.

Honourable senators will recall that at Cornwall none of the Indians would vote at the last election. In Manitoba the Indians generally have accepted their right and are voting. I am making just a general statement. In British Columbia also the Indians have used their right to vote. The article states that in Nova Scotia provincial officials say the vote on some reserves runs as high as 80 per cent of eligibles. Prince Edward Island has a limited franchise, and officials say the Indians there take an active interest in voting.

In Quebec, apparently, the Indians have not taken too kindly to their right to vote. According to this newspaper report, at Quebec's big Caughnawaga reserve of more than 3,000, near Montreal, Chief Councillor Matthew Lazare says the giving of the franchise to Indians is an attempt to take their birthright away from them and that those on that reserve do not want to vote. Apparently they did not vote in the last provincial election. Another Indian Chief on that reserve said they did not want the vote, but they did want education.

Honourable senators will notice that Indians do not have the right to vote in Saskatchewan. Premier Douglas explains it in this way:

> It has been offered several times ... They don't want it. When the Indians show they want it, they will have it.

Honourable senators, I have made these references to what is taking place among Indian bands throughout Canada in order to point out that many bands do want the right to vote, but the desire for enfranchisement is far from unanimous. The Indians have other grievances, which I think we must take into consideration.

I am glad that not only the subject of voting but the whole question of Indian affairs is to be considered further by this joint committee. As I say, the Indians have their grievances, but they also have their rights, and we must try to determine just what those rights are. We want them to know that we would like them to be equal citizens with us, to share all the rights, all the privileges and all the opportunities of citizenship. I stand firmly with the honourable senator from Lethbridge (Hon. Mr. Gladstone) in saying that I hope this bill is one more step forward which will bring us together as equals.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Will the honourable senator permit a question? I believe he said that a number of Indians had been given the vote on signing a waiver of exemption from taxation. Is that exemption large enough to include income tax, estate tax, excise tax, sales tax, and municipal taxes? In other words, are the Indians exempt from the payment of all dominion, provincial and municipal taxes?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure they would not be exempt from sales tax. For instance, on purchases which they make at Brantford they have to pay the same sales taxes as the rest of us pay.

I am glad the honourable senator raised this point, because if there is any misunderstanding that acceptance of the right to vote will take anything away from the Indians it should be cleared up in the bill, so that they will know just what effect the legislation will have upon them. Of course, nothing is being taken away from them; they are to retain every right and every privilege they have at the present time. But if they feel that their treaty rights are being weakened by the bill—not taken away from them, but even weakened—then it occurs to me that there should be a preamble to the bill stating that they would lose no rights whatsoever. There are frequently preambles to other bills, but there is not one to this bill. There is some uncertainty as to the position of the 122 Indians who signed a waiver of exemption from taxation on income. If they feel they are still bound by the waiver and will have to continue to pay income taxes, notwithstanding this bill, why not put a few words in the bill to assure them definitely that they will be exempt from the tax? It would not weaken the bill, but rather would strengthen it. We want to have as few misunderstandings as possible between the Indians and the rest of us. In fact, there should be no misunderstanding at all.

If this bill goes to committee we should take a very careful look at it and make sure that something is inserted to reassure the Indians that the legislation will deprive them of nothing, but instead will benefit them.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, before second reading is given to this measure I would like to make one or two remarks. I was very pleased that the honourable senator mentioned the provinces which had given Indians the vote. I speak subject to correction, but I understand that British Columbia was the first province to have an Indian member in its Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In any case, British Columbia was not far behind any of the other provinces in giving the vote to Indians.

There are two suggestions I want to make. As many honourable senators know, I had the privilege of being on the previous Indian Affairs Committee, which sat during some three sessions. I put in six weeks of my own time, not officially, but unofficially, visiting the various chiefs and reserves in British Columbia. I heard many things from the chiefs and those I met spoke very freely with me. I do not want any misinterpretation placed on what I say to honourable senators, that invariably everywhere I went every chief and all whom I interviewed had the same request, namely, that their children should go to the same schools as the white children. And I don't mind saying that after I returned to Ottawa, some two weeks later, over 50 per cent of the chiefs sent me a letter withdrawing the suggestion they had made to me. It seemed to me that some pressure had been brought to bear on the Indians, for they had spoken to me frankly; they were not pressured, shall I say, to say what they said to me. At one place, near Chilliwack, I spent a whole day and met twelve chiefs, who represented twelve tribes. After that I went to the interior and met chief after chief, sometimes two and sometimes four at one time, and they all expressed the same complaint about education. British Columbia is, I believe, the most forward province in regard to education for Indian children.

I am going to make one suggestion, that perhaps the word "Indian" in itself should be done away with. Why should we, after a hundred years, still call the first Canadians "Indians"? Honourable senators who have contacts with Indians, as I have, realize that some of them are so far removed from their ancestors that they probably do not have more than 10 per cent Indian blood.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Are they not proud to be called Indians?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Many are, but some do not particularly care. I suggest it as a change that we should think of. I maintain in all seriousness that we have set them apart too long by designating them by that term.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You won't let the term "Scottish" be taken away from you.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I have always maintained that I am a Canadian, and if my voice betrays the country from where I came I am not ashamed of it. But ever since the day I came to Canada I have called myself a Canadian. I want to be designated a Canadian, and I cannot understand anyone who dislikes being known as a Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You are not afraid Indians would be offended if you called them Scotsmen?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Well, I will tell you, if there are any good Indians the Scots can take some of the credit for that. You know the story about the Scotsman who told the Englishman that in the early days many Scottish factors married Indian women. The Englishman said, "You wouldn't find an Englishman doing that." The Scotsman replied, "No, the Indians had to draw the line somewhere."

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I ask if this is a proper subject to debate on St. Patrick's Day?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I thought I would get in my remarks before anybody started on St. Patrick.

In all seriousness, some thought should be given to my suggestion. I know conditions are not the same today as when I first came to Canada. There used to be a sort of stigma attached to the word "Indian". For instance, sometimes it would be said of a drunkard, "He's an Indian". Now we are getting away from all that and I am just wondering how many hundreds of years will pass before all Canadians are called Canadians. People of many races who live in or close to the cities and towns have followed the call of nature and intermarried, and today I think you cannot say that the standard of living of Indians is not as good as those of other Canadians. On visiting an Indian village on Vancouver Island I was amazed at their fine modern homes. They would match the homes in good districts in any city in this country. Every Indian had a motor car and the children were going to public schools. All the men were fishermen and doing well.

I know I may be ahead of my time in saying this, and probably I won't live to see it accomplished, but I would like to see all people who are Canadians call themselves Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable senator a question: Did he say that the schools in British Columbia prohibited Indian children from attending their classes?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No. I said that British Columbia was extending public schools to the Indian children and was leading the way toward having Indian children attend the public schools and mix with the other children. Believe me, when you separate the children you separate the families.

Hon. Mr. Haig: There has never been any such prohibition in Manitoba.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, before the bill receives second reading, may I inquire whether it is to be referred to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I ask this particularly because of the fears expressed by the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Glastone) with regard to section 112 of the Indian Act. Since the bill would repeal section 86 of the act it would seem to be logical to repeal section 112 also if it is causing any concern. I hope that point will be raised in committee.

I am glad the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) referred to the uncertainty as to whether 122 waivers of income tax exemption will be cancelled by this legislation. What is the definite opinion on that?

Generally speaking, honourable senators, I think it is a source of deep pleasure to us to deal with a bill of this type and to know that the Indian people of Canada are going to be given the franchise, which, as citizens of this country, they deserve.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. James Gladstone moved the second reading of Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

He said: With the permission of honourable senators I would ask that the same action be taken on this bill as on the previous bill. When it has been given the second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would be pleased to concur in the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Lethbridge (Hon. Mr. Gladstone). I should, however, like to mention briefly one point. A question was asked by the honourable junior Senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall)—

Hon. Mr. Haig: Better be right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) agrees with what the honourable junior senator had to say. He questioned whether the waivers signed by 122 Indians would be automatically cancelled by passage of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have the opinion of the Department of Justice that the waivers will be cancelled by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am glad to know that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has the opinion of the Department of Justice on this point. However, as he and all other lawyers in this house know, the Department of Justice has at times given opinions which the courts of the land have not upheld.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not very often.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: To wit, the Canadian Breweries case.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: To wit, the Canadian Breweries case, as mentioned by the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt).

Even though the honourable leader has the opinion of the Department of Justice, he might very well get an opinion from another source on the effect of passage of this bill. My suggestion is that the committee should carefully consider whether or not a clause covering that point should be added to the bill, notwithstanding the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice.

I do not intend to argue the point at this time; I merely say that when the bill goes to the committee I trust that serious consideration will be given to that question.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I rise to defend the Minister of Justice. I do not think he is as bad a lawyer as the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) would indicate by his remark, nor do I think the officials of the department are bad lawyers.

Having practised law for some fifty-four years, I am sometimes shocked to hear that judges do not always agree with what I think the law should be.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Surely not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I can understand that.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It shocks me to hear a judge say "Case dismissed" when the law in the case seems to me to be all on my side. However, when I am before the Court of Appeal I sometimes find the judges there agree with the trial judge.

We have in this house a few lawyers—not very many—and I believe their combined wsidom is adequate to work out a solution to this question without bringing the opinion of the Department of Justice into it. I have great confidence in the committees of this house. From a legal standpoint they have, with few exceptions, been able to work out their own opinions in matters of this kind. In some instances they have differed with the views of the lawyers employed by the Government. That is only natural, because most senators who are members of the bar—men and women—have had a good deal of every-day practice, and thereby have obtained a broader experience than is gained from sitting as an arbitrator and giving opinions on certain questions.

My suggestion is that we refer these bills to the proper committee without attaching any conditions. I am sure it is the desire of all of us, as expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, to give the Indians a square deal. We want to give a fair deal to these people who have so long been inhabitants of this country and helped us through troublous times, particularly during the two Great Wars when they came forward in such large numbers to help defend the name of Canada.

For the reasons I have given, I would suggest that we consider the bills in committee, without requesting the opinion of the Department of Justice on the question that has been raised. I would leave the legal questions to the judgment of our own lawyers, and for once we may be able to override the Department of Justice officials, if they are wrong.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gladstone, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

WABUSH LAKE RAILWAY COMPANY LIMITED AND ARNAUD RAILWAY COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. William R. Brunt moved the second reading of Bill S-24, respecting Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill pertaining to two railway companies which have been incorporated under the laws of two of the provinces of Canada. The first company, the Wabush Railway Company Limited, is a Newfoundland company incorporated under the laws of the province of Newfoundland. The second company, the Arnaud Railway Company, without the word "Limited", has been incorporated under the laws of the province of Quebec. Both these companies were conceived and came into being in connection with the development of the vast iron ore deposit at Wabush Lake in Labrador, in the province of Newfoundland. Furthermore, both railways form an intricate part of a scheme which is being developed to transport iron ore from Wabush Lake to a dock in the vicinity of Seven Islands, in the province of Quebec.

In the case of the Wabush Railway Company Limited, the proposed route of this railway lies wholly within the province of Newfoundland, and it connects the Wabush Lake area to the now existing Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway at mile 224. This railway will be built for a distance of approximately 40 miles.

The proposed route for the Arnaud Railway Company lies wholly within the province of Quebec, and runs from a point near mile 8 on the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway to the dock site at Pointe Noire. The length of this railway will be approximately 20 miles. The companies which are interested in developing the iron ore propose to use the services and railway facilities of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway between mile 8 and mile 224 of this railway.

It should be pointed out that the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company is what is commonly known as a federal railway company, incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, and is under the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners. The two railways referred to in this bill are what are known as provincial railroads, having been incorporated under the laws of the provincial Legislatures. In order to complete in the proper manner the transportation network that is necessary to bring the whole project under the jurisdiction of one authority, namely, the Board of Transport Commissioners, this bill is now being presented to Parliament.

The requested legislation which we are considering today has ample precedent in our legislative history. Furthermore, this legislation is considered to be in the interest of our Canadian economy and to the general advantage of Canada, and when passed it will bring these two railroads under the jurisdiction, first, of the Parliament of Canada, secondly of the Railway Act, and finally, of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

I would like to take just a few minutes to speak about the development of the Wabush Lake project which is being undertaken at this time by a company known as the Wabush Iron Company Limited.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Is that the Cyrus Eaton company?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I do not think so. I will eventually tell you who owns this particular company.

This company has leased a vast iron ore deposit in Labrador, and the necessary rights have been accorded by the province of Newfoundland to develop the mine and to concentrate the crude ore into a product of such outstanding quality that it is the hope of the company it will be used in steel mills throughout the world.

Wabush Iron Company Limited is owned and operated by several steel companies, one of which we are familiar with, namely, the Steel Company of Canada. The other companies that are interested in the development of this mine include Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, Inland Steel Company, Interlake Iron Corporation, Pittsburgh Steel Company and Mather Iron Corporation.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are they all in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are all in the United States, except the Steel Company of Canada, which is a Canadian corporation.

Beginning in 1957, Wabush Iron Company Limited undertook an orderly and thorough examination of all the aspects involved in such a large capital undertaking as this. Its work included an examination of the ore deposit in order to ascertain its extent; secondly, an examination of the best processes to develop and concentrate low grade crude iron ores; and, finally, it has been necessary for this company to work out and determine the final cost at which iron ore can be delivered to steel company consumers.

A pilot plant began operations on March 1 of this year, and it is estimated that by the end of the current year the investment in this undertaking will exceed $20 million. In order to develop the property fully in accordance with the present plans a capital investment of between $150 and $200 million will be required. As all honourable senators will know, in order to develop a project such as this a mine must first be opened, then a plant has to be constructed, incidental maintenance facilities have to be provided, a new town created, and finally, facilities have to be provided to transport the ore from the mine to the steel companies.

Initially, it is expected that the productive capacity of this mine will be in the neighbourhood of 5 million tons per year, with production gradually increasing until maximum production of 10 million tons per year is reached.

The transportation of iron ore in the quantities mentioned and over the distances contemplated is of major importance to this venture, and as presently planned the Wabush ore would move over the three railroads which I have previously described. The Wabush Railway portion is already under construction in accordance with a joint arrangement which has been entered into between Wabush Iron Company and another company in this area which is doing similar work. I am advised that the sub-grade is largely completed, and that track-laying will be completed later this year. Furthermore, according to studies made by qualified engineers and experts, no substantial improvements or changes will have to be made to the roadbed of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railroad in order for this latter company to properly handle the projected tonnage which I referred to earlier.

At the present time the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railroad handles ore for a period of eight months a year. When the Wabush ore is ready to be shipped this company intends to ship it for the entire year. This will be made possible largely by the ability of the Wabush Company to control the moisture content of the concentrated ore, thereby eliminating or, at least, substantially reducing, the problem of handling frozen ore.

Construction of the second railroad referred to in the bill as Arnaud Railway Company will be timed to coincide with development of the Wabush iron ore property. At the present time Wabush Iron is not in a position, and does not intend, to construct a single new railway directly from the mine to the St. Lawrence River. The movement of ores from the deposit will be carried out on a train-load basis. By that I mean that once enough cars have been assembled to make up a train-load they will proceed across the three railroads as described for a total distance of 280 miles. Once the cars are emptied they will return as a group in a train-load to the iron ore property in the same manner.

The middle link of this transportation system, namely, the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Who owns that company?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The Iron Ore Company of Canada, I believe, is the owner of this railroad.

The Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company is a federal railroad company which is subject to the jurisdiction of the federal regulatory authorities, and, as might be expected, Wabush Iron Company Limited is going to have to enter into negotiations and make lasting arrangements with this middle-link railway for the economical transportation of its ores, and such arrangements must come under the jurisdiction of a single regulatory authority. In Canada there is only one such authority, that being the Board of Transport Commissioners. Enactment of this bill will bring these two companies under the authority of that board also.

Honourable senators, with your permission I would like to take a few moments to describe briefly the capital structure of these two railroads. I think you will be interested in it. The first mentioned company, the Wabush Railway Company, was incorporated on April 20, 1955, with an authorized capital stock of $20 million divided into 2 million shares of a par value of $10 each. Up to the present 173,048 shares have been issued and are outstanding. These shares are owned as follows: Wabush Iron Company Limited 173,039 shares. There are nine directors, each of whom has one share.

The Arnaud Railway Company was incorporated on March 5, 1959, with an authorized capital of $1 million divided into 10,000 shares of par value of $100 each. Of the authorized capital 1,000 shares have been issued and are outstanding at the present time. This stock is held as follows: Wabush Iron Company Limited, 989 shares; A. M. Minnion, a Canadian, one share; Rodney A. Patch, a Canadian, one share; and one share has been issued to each of the nine directors.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Am I to understand that there are two Canadian and nine American shareholders?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will tell you the nationality of the shareholders. The nine directors of the Wabush Railway Company Limited are: H. G. Hilton of Hamilton, Ontario, a Canadian; V. W. Scully of Hamilton, Ontario, a Canadian;—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of the Steel Company of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Both of them are connected with the Steel Company of Canada. The other directors are:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I ask if the two railways, the Wabush and the Arnaud, are now in operation?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, they are just being built.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Neither is operating?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. The roadbed for one railroad has been completed and they are commencing to lay rails. In connection with the other railroad, they hope to have it completed by the time the iron ore property is in production.

Hon. Mr. Power: The Canadians who own two shares, are they directors too?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Power: One share each?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Power: They have not been mentioned as directors of Wabush.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I thought those were the first two names I mentioned, H. G. Hilton and V. W. Scully of the Steel Company of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Power: Does each own one share in Arnaud Railway Company?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Power: The remaining shares are held by whom?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: By the Wabush Iron company.

Now I will deal with the bill itself, which is very straightforward. Section 2 states that the railway works and undertakings are declared works for the general benefit of Canada. These words have their origin, I understand, in section 91 of the British North America Act which gives the Parliament of Canada the right to declare provincial railway works to be works for the general advantage of Canada. This means that such railways become subject to the jurisdiction of this Parliament rather than remaining subject to the jurisdiction of the province under whose laws the railway company was originally incorporated.

The Railway Act provides, in section 7, that Parliament may by special act declare a railroad, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special act passed by the Legislature of any province, "to be a work for the general advantage of Canada". In such event the Railway Act applies to the railway and to the company constructing and operating the same. Pursuant to this particular section, and to the B.N.A. Act, many special acts have been passed by Parliament declaring railways to be works for the general advantage of Canada. If any honourable senator wishes it, I could give a list of about twenty railroads that have been brought under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Any recently?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes. The most recent one seems to have been the Lacombe & Northwestern Railway Company, which was incorporated in 1928-29 under the laws of the province of Alberta.

Once a provincial railway is made subject to the Railway Act of Canada all the provisions of that act apply. That is to say, the railway will be subject to the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners as to its construction, operation, specifications, safety, tolls, tariffs, and generally all matters relating to the operation of the railway. Until this declaration is made and until the Railway Act is made to apply to each of these provincial railways, the Board of Transport Commissioners and the Parliament of Canada have no jurisdiction over these two provincial railway companies.

Section 3 of the bill is divided into two subsections. The first provides that the companies shall continue to have the rights, powers and privileges which have been conferred upon them by the various provincial acts. This, I understand, is in keeping with the past practice in bills of this nature and it is necessary that these rights, powers and privileges be confirmed and not upset in any way by the enactment of the present bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about amendments in the future?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Once they are under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada I do not think a provincial amendment could affect them in any way. It could not override the dominion statute.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Not unless it is in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, it is not in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (West Ottawa): What about amendments the company might require in the future?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the companies not come here? Once this bill is passed these two railways will be under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask another question? I do not look for the answer now, but perhaps at committee stage the honourable senator might be able to satisfy us. These companies have been incorporated provincially. Perhaps the sponsors of the bill would be able to tell us at the committee stage whether there are any powers which have been conferred upon these companies by these provincial statutes or letters patent which they could not have had by incorporating federally.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will endeavour to get that information.

Hon. Mr. Power: Perhaps the honourable senator would allow us to have a look at the statutory agreement referred to in The Wabush-Carol Agreement, which apparently is an act of the Legislature, and which in some way may affect the rights conferred on these companies. I note that the bill as drafted says, in section 3:

> Nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to affect or render inoperative any of the provisions of the acts of the Legislature—

If the honourable gentleman had said in his opening remarks that this bill would conform with the acts of the Legislature, perhaps I would have understood him better; but here we are laying down as a rule that nothing we do here, even placing these corporations, these railways, under the control of the Board of Transport Commissioners is to be construed as rendering inoperative provisions of certain legislation and certain agreements made by the Legislature of Newfoundland. That is perhaps going pretty far.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The sole purpose of that, as I think I mentioned earlier, is to provide that the companies shall continue to have the rights, powers and privileges which were conferred upon them by various provincial acts.

Hon. Mr. Power: You are trying to get the best of both worlds, that is what you are trying to do.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Let me just repeat something else, and I understand that this is in keeping with the best practice in bills of this nature, that it is necessary that these rights, powers and privileges be confirmed, and not upset in any way by the enactment of the present bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a question? What worries me in this connection is the relationship of these companies to the province. To begin with, I would like the honourable senator to tell us how much they are paying for the ore they take from the province.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That information can be obtained in committee. That is why we send these bills to committee, to get all the details. I cannot possibly get down to details such as this and come up with an answer of that kind. If the bill is referred to a committee, representatives will be there from the iron ore company and they will furnish that particular information.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very well. One of the reasons why we discuss a bill of this kind before it goes to committee is to warn the sponsors of the bill of what they will have to meet when they are in the committee. I think one of the very important features of this bill—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I finish my remarks in connection with the bill? Then if the honourable senator wants to speak on the bill—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am not speaking on the bill, I am asking a question about it

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You asked how much they were paying for iron ore, and my answer is that that information will be provided in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But go ahead, if you want to.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would prefer to finish the presentation, and then if there are questions I will answer them if I can, and if I am unable to answer I will endeavour to have the answers when the bill is referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I will wait.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Paragraph 2 of section 3 grants to Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited the power to construct, prior to January 1, 1965, and the power to operate a railway from the mine to the Quebec-Newfoundland boundary; and further grants corporate authority to Arnaud Railway Company to construct, prior to January 1, 1965, and to operate a railway from its connection with the line of Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited at the Quebec-Newfoundland boundary down to the St. Lawrence River at or near Pointe Noire, which is about twenty miles from Seven Islands.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is that after January 1, 1965?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Prior to January 1, 1965.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am talking about the operation.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The railroad must be constructed prior to January 1, 1965. Once it is constructed it will have the right to operate as long as its iron ore is being shipped.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I did not think it was clear in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would like to point out at this time that it is not the intention to construct, and these two companies do not contemplate constructing, a separate railroad from mile 224 down to mile 8, which will parallel the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway line. The authority, however, is requested at this time so that if appropriate arrangements cannot be worked out between these two provincial railway companies and the Quebec North Shore Labrador Railway, an alternative method of transporting the ore will be available. In other words, if it is found that a satisfactory agreement cannot be worked out with Quebec North Shore Railroad, then they will have the right to build a parallel railway line. However, if such railway line is to be built it must be built before January 1, 1965, at which time the power to build lapses.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will they have to get the approval of the board?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Oh, yes.

The next thing I was going to mention is that if such a full-length railway is built it will have to be built under the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners, who will determine the terms, conditions and provisions under which such construction can take place.

Section 4 of the bill provides that—

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask a question, before you continue? I am a bit perplexed in this case. Normally, when a railroad is incorporated it is stated in the bill the points which are to be reached by the railway, that is to say, from such a point to such a point. In this bill, paragraph 2 of section 3 says:

> Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited may construct, prior to January 1, 1965, and may operate a railway from the mine of Wabush Iron Company Limited, near Wabush Lake, in Labrador, by the most convenient route to or about the Quebec-Newfoundland boundary, to connect with the railway—

I do not think my honourable friend can tell me just where the Quebec-Newfoundland boundary is.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I can't. I have a little map here.

Hon. Mr. Power: Well, if the map was filed in the province of Quebec, you will find that large sections of what my honourable friend may take to be Newfoundland territory are included as belonging to the province of Quebec. That would leave the description of the route and the railway somewhat up in the air, because one line goes to the boundary of Quebec in Newfoundland and the other takes on from there. If we do not know where the boundary is, where are we going?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Well, there is one other point described, thank heaven—the boundary between Newfoundland-Quebec at mile 224 of the Quebec North Shore Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. Power: Who said that, the Quebec North Shore Railway or the province of Newfoundland and the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am just saying that we have two descriptions of the point, and surely from these we can fix it, even though there is a dispute.

Hon. Mr. Power: There is nothing in the bill that I can see which says you are to go to mile such-and-such of the Quebec North Shore Railroad.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right. No, it is not in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Power: It is not in the bill. Normally in such a bill we do describe the points which are to be reached by the railway, and I am indicating to my honourable friend, without endeavouring to perplex him, that that information is not in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I always like comments by the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power), because he can really raise a worth-while problem. I will bring the matter to the attention of the sponsors and will try to have the answer when the bill is being considered in committee.

Section 4 of the bill provides that this company shall be subject to the Railway Act of Canada. This I discussed earlier.

A question may be asked as to why no reference is made in this bill to the Companies Act of Canada. The Companies Act contains a provision which in effect states that such act does not apply to railroads.

Section 5, the final clause of the bill, grants to the two companies authority to enter into agreements with any company for selling, conveying or leasing the railways of the company or for purchasing railways or for the amalgamation of railways, all of which shall be subject to section 153 of the Railway Act, which sets up the procedure for agreements of sale, leasing and amalgamation, which are only permitted after a company is so authorized by special act of Parliament. Most of the bills which have been presented to this Parliament with regard to railway companies contain sections similar to this one. As a matter of fact, a similar clause appears in a special act incorporating the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway, which act was passed in 1957.

Finally, I might mention that at present there are no agreements outstanding between the Wabush Railway and Arnaud Railway as to rates, amalgamation or otherwise, dealing with any other railway companies.

Honourable senators, if the bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Before the honourable senator finishes, I would like to ask him just one question, and again it may be that he has not information to answer: Does he know the origin of the name "Arnaud" in connection with this company.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have no information as to that.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I was asking some questions and perhaps making comments at the same time. I was saying that the problem that presents itself to my mind in this incorporation is the relationship between this company and the Province of Newfoundland. I suppose we could leave the Province of Newfoundland to take care of itself, but that is not the principle on which we operate in this chamber. We are very careful to protect provincial rights, so I would suggest that we have the concurrence of the authorities of Newfoundland before we pass this bill, and know that it is satisfactory to them. For instance, I would like to be assured that the rights of the provinces with regard to the collection of money dues which are levied per ton of ore are properly protected. I would like to have detailed information on the agreement between the Province of Newfoundland and these two companies. They have now three companies. The Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway has been operating for some little time and carrying something like 12 million to 14 million tons of ore—iron rust is what it is—over a railway of about 300 miles in length. The ore is brought down to a switching yard at Seven Islands. It passes out of this company's possession there into that of another company which does the loading. I can quite understand what the arrangement will be with the Wabush Railway Company. They will use a portion of the North Shore line, deliver their ore, as the North Shore does, to the loading company, whereupon it will be transferred to ships and carried off to the United States for the most part. It is nearly all going there now, so I understand, from the North Shore Railway.

It may involve some little difficulty if my honourable friend's estimate of the amount of ore that is to be carried is as high as he says—something like 10 million tons. That, however, is not our problem, but the problem of the engineers. Our problem is to protect the public rights of the people of Newfoundland in a deal of this kind. No doubt the province has entered into an agreement with Wabush and the other railway for the payment of so much per ton; that is what is happening now with the North Shore and with the people who finally get the iron ore and use it. There is an agreement to pay so much per ton—I do not remember the amount, but it is very small.

I would like to be sure that after that agreement expires, and the province has the right to review it and perhaps change the figures, we shall not in any way be interfering with any rights which the province may have or may have retained. It is not likely we shall be doing so, but I would want to be assured of that before I agree to passage of this bill. The railroad will be declared to be for the general benefit of Canada and therefore under federal control, instead of being under control of the Province of Newfoundland. That is my concern with regard to the matter.

I think my honourable friend will find he is pretty optimistic when he says this road is to operate all year. The Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway runs for only about eight months a year and freezes up in the winter. It does, however, run small freight and passenger trains very irregularly during the freeze-up, perhaps not more than one a day or two a week, to serve the little towns and small settlements along the line.

The North Shore is a railroad about 300 miles long, and is operated in two divisions. At the central divisional point there is a very small settlement, and at the far end there is another small settlement. One can scarcely call them towns; they are settlements, and they must be continually supplied. That is all that railway does during the winter months.

I feel my honourable friend is a bit optimistic when he thinks that the Wabush will be able to run for twelve months of the year. It will have some pretty severe conditions to meet. I am afraid the men who operate the trains under those conditions will find it most difficult, particularly so when the last agreement between the North Shore and Labrador Railway and its men provides for a reduction in the operating crew on trains. All over the dominion of Canada trains carry two men at the rear. In this area the railway has eliminated one of those men, the rear brakeman; it has also eliminated the fireman. That means the railway is running with a skeleton crew, cutting expenses in every possible way, chiselling to the last degree in its function of carrying this valuable ore. To me it looks like a great bonanza for those who are investing the money.

Honourable senators, I am very jealous of the rights of the Province of Newfoundland in connection with the use and exploitation of its vast deposits of iron ore.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I answer the questions of the honourable gentleman?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are you closing the debate?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No, I am just answering the questions he has raised.

My understanding is that this bill has been submitted to the Government of Newfoundland and that it has no objection.

With respect to the shipping of ore for twelve months of the year, I can only rely on the information that was provided to me by the engineers who work for the Wabush Iron Company Limited. They tell me they can ship their ore for twelve months of the year.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Can they ship by sea for twelve months of the year?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand that that part of the St. Lawrence is open throughout the year.

Thirdly, as to congestion, it is quite possible there may be some congestion in the switching yards, but there will be none in the unloading of the ore from the railway cars to the boats, because the Seven Islands railways have their own loading docks and wharves.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does the Wabush company have its own loading docks?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, they are entirely separate. This 20 miles of railway to be built at the south end will go around the present wharves and docks now being used, to the new wharves and docks being constructed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator referred to the fact that the Province of Newfoundland had no objection to this bill. What about the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand the bill has been submitted to the Province of Quebec and that it has no objection.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I say a few words about this bill? We are all indebted to the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) for the kind of explanation that he traditionally and consistently brings to the house about complicated measures of this kind.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: As I understand his explanation, it is proposed, in effect, that these two railway companies will construct certain lines of railway to run trains, partly over their own tracks and partly not, to connect a mining development inland with the seaport. It is proposed that facilities which are now owned and operated by the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company will be used by these companies under an arrangement either to be worked out between the companies or to be ordered after an appropriate application before the Board of Transport Commissioners.

I think there is some analogy between the situation we are asked to deal with here and a situation which confronted us a week or so ago in connection with the application for incorporation of the Matador Pipe Line Company Ltd. The proposal in that case was that the company build a line from the United States border into Manitoba, there to connect with the facilities of a trans-Canada pipe line system called Interprovincial; that the oil introduced into the trans-Canada system would then be taken down to the refinery areas in Wisconsin or Minnesota. One of our problems was whether or not that project was a valid one. From the point of view of the members of the committee and of this chamber, our position had to be that we did not have the facilities to determine whether or not the project was a valid one.

As I say, I think there is an analogy between that situation and the one now before us. In the case of the Matador Pipe Line Company's application, we said we would incorporate the company, to enable it to go before the National Energy Board and there submit its application and have it tested, if necessary, by any opponent to the project.

It seems to me that we are now being asked to qualify two companies so that they can go before the Board of Transport Commissioners for an order to enable them, under certain terms and conditions, to use facilities now owned by the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway, which are subject to the jurisdiction, as I understand it, of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

While I have said we have no facilities in our committees to deal with projects of this kind and to decide whether such a project is a valid one, I think we like to know as much as possible about the value of the project. Therefore, I would suggest to the honourable senator from Hanover that this idea be brought to the attention of the sponsors of the bill, so that we shall be given as full information as is available on the project. That is one branch of my remarks.

The other branch of my remarks is perhaps of little consequence. I asked the honourable senator a moment ago whether he knew anything about the derivation of the word "Arnaud". Everybody who talks about the iron ore development in Labrador and eastern Quebec associates the work being done there with the Iron Ore Company of Canada. It seems to me that the names "Iron Ore Company" and "Arnaud Company" have a similar ring. I am wondering whether there is likely to be any confusion arise out of the use of the name "Arnaud".

I simply draw that matter to the attention of the Senate to be considered when the bill is in committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: There is quite a difference in the spelling.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There is no question about similar spelling. One is spelled A-r-n-a-u-d and the other is I-r-o-n O-r-e, but when you pronounce them they are not so dissimilar.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, before this bill is given second reading, may I say that I was impressed by the wording of clause 2, and I wonder why it is in the bill at all. As I understand it, the object is to ship ore largely, or almost wholly, for the benefit of two provinces and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Is that not for the benefit of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is what I am wondering about. Will you be good enough to enlarge on that point? You put your finger right on it when you mentioned the St. Lawrence Seaway. The clause reads:

> The railway works and undertakings of the companies are declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

I repeat what I have said so often in this chamber, that this is just one more big undertaking for the benefit of one section of the country. I do not believe that clause 2 is required in the bill at all.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DIVORCE

BILLS—SECOND READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-243, for the relief of Richard Austin Evans.

Bill SD-244, for the relief of Marion Mary Treen Frosst.

Bill SD-245, for the relief of Joyce Mary Whiteman Rogers.

Bill SD-246, for the relief of Vera Arlene Perry Locke.

Bill SD-247, for the relief of Beatriki Bourboulis Angelidis.

Bill SD-248, for the relief of Jessie Margaret Cross Joly.

Bill SD-249, for the relief of Guy Labrosse.

Bill SD-250, for the relief of Joyce Agnes Catherine Wilkinson Greenwood.

Bill SD-251, for the relief of Jacques Cormier.

Bill SD-252, for the relief of Mary Lorraine Little Copping.

Bill SD-253, for the relief of Sylvia Trachimovsky Fox.

Bill SD-254, for the relief of Kathleen Shannon Keene.

Bill SD-255, for the relief of Jean Elizabeth MacCuaig Vinters.

Bill SD-256, for the relief of Lucy Sekora Budnik.

Bill SD-257, for the relief of Joyce Middlehurst Walker.

Bill SD-258, for the relief of Patricia Shirley Rydberg Menzies.

Motion agreed to and bills read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 286 to 294, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, reports adopted.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. William R. Brunt, Chairman of the committee, moved adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to refer briefly to the service of Mr. William D. Foran, Chief of the Senate Protective Staff, who is the subject of the recommendation in this report.

Mr. Foran was first appointed to the Senate Protective Staff on December 20, 1920. Prior to this date he had been a member of the old Dominion Police Force, which was absorbed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. During the First Great War he joined the Canadian Armed Forces and served for five years overseas with the Canadian Army Service Corps and the Canadian Army Medical Corps. During that war he won the Distinguished Conduct Medal.

Mr. Foran was made a Sergeant of the Senate Protective Staff on April 11, 1946, and Chief of the Senate Protective Staff on June 11, 1948. His combined service with the former Dominion Police Force and the Senate Protective Staff is nearly forty-eight years. During his nearly forty years on the Senate Protective Staff he has rendered good and faithful service. Last October he suffered a serious illness, from which he has not fully recovered. He is in his seventieth year.

The recommendation of the committee is that Mr. Foran be granted a superannuation under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act and that he be granted, in lieu of retirement leave, the maximum gratuity payable under the provisions of that act.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) in extending to Mr. Foran the appreciation of all of us for the splendid service which he has rendered the Senate over the years. His efficiency and his courtesy at all times have been unfailing. He has, indeed, been an outstanding public servant, and I am sure we wish him much happiness in his days of retirement.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 22, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 22, 1960

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL HOUSING BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-53, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Bill read first time.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John Hnatyshyn: With leave, I move that the bill be read the second time now.

Honourable senators, before explaining the bill before the house today, I would like to review briefly the significant events in the housing field in recent years, with particular reference to the year 1959. But first, a word on the background leading up to this period.

You will recall the economic situation in mid-1957, when the country was headed toward a general recession. The state of the economy, and the housing situation in particular, pointed clearly to the need for a vigorous departure in housing policy. House building was recovering only haltingly from an 18-month decline. During the third quarter of 1955 the demand for capital funds to finance the 1955-56 boom had first begun to reduce the availability of mortgage money for house building. The annual rate of housing starts in the first quarter of 1957 reached a five-year low of 86,000 units, ending a decline that had continued for nearly a year and a half.

In the second quarter of 1957, housing starts recovered to an annual rate of 118,000, prompted partly by an increase from 5½ per cent to 6 per cent in the interest rate on N.H.A.-insured mortgages authorized by the previous government early in 1957. Other long-term interest rates continued high, however, and rose somewhat during a resurgence of mortgage lending by private lenders under the act on a scale that would come close to meeting the demand for N.H.A. mortgages.

In the competition for mortgage funds among eligible applicants it was usually those in the lower income ranges who lost out, with the result that the average size of loan increased and the limited amount of money available was being used to meet the needs of fewer borrowers.

There were, then, three main elements in the housing situation that this country faced in the summer of 1957. First, a decline in the rate of economic activity in general, bringing unemployment problems and the prospect of severe unemployment in the coming winter. Second, a lower rate of housing activity than we had experienced for a number of years. Third, a very active demand for N.H.A. mortgages, which could bring about a rapid increase in house building, if funds were made available, and provide added employment opportunities for the coming winter.

This, then, was the situation when this Government took office in 1957.

One of the first moves of the federal Government was to direct Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to extend its direct lending programs. The National Housing Act, 1954, authorized C.M.H.C. to make loans for house building on the same terms and conditions as the insured loans made by approved lenders. For this purpose, under section 22 of the National Housing Act, Parliament had authorized Government advances to C.M.H.C. of up to $250 million. By the middle of 1957 the corporation had used only about $100 million of these funds, at the direction of the previous Government. The new Government released the balance of $150 million remaining in the section 22 appropriation, beginning in September, 1957, to encourage the building of small homes.

To meet the strong demand for these small-home loans, several amendments were made to section 22 to increase the appropriation. In December 1957 the amount was raised by $150 million to $400 million; in May 1958 it was raised by $350 million to $750 million; and in March 1959 the appropriation was raised by $250 million, making it $1 billion. Honourable senators are aware that by the end of October 1959 C.M.H.C. had sufficient applications on hand to commit the balance of the section 22 appropriation, and, accordingly, it decided to stop accepting new applications. When it stopped accepting new applications, that did not mean that all the houses were completed, because there were some 82,000 houses that were being constructed during this winter. As a matter of fact, of the $1 billion that was appropriated under section 22 there is still some $200 million to be paid out. What we are dealing with now is a further appropriation aside from the $200 million that has not been paid out.

I should like to point out that direct lending during 1957 and 1958 on the part of the Government was an important factor in the amount of house-building activity. Under the small-home loans program the corporation approved loans for 25,000 dwellings in 1957, of which 16,000 were approved in the last four months of the year. During 1958 the corporation approved loans for more than 30,000 dwellings, including a small number of rental units, thus raising the total number of units for the two years to 55,000. I should mention that, apart from the 2,500 rental units financed in 1958, all these loans were directed to prospective home owners in the lower-income groups.

In addition to the small-home loans the corporation also made loans in 1957 for 4,124 limited-dividend units, and in 1958 for 6,282 units. These loans were made to limited-dividend companies to finance construction of low-rental dwellings in areas in which conditions of shortage, over-crowding or sub-standard housing existed. The accommodation was directed toward the lower-third income level, and the projects were designed so that their capital costs would be consistent with low rents.

In passing, I will say that during each of the last three years the corporation has, at the direction of the Government, established a quota for loans to builders. The purpose of this, of course, was to stimulate employment throughout the country and to assure the widest possible distribution of the available funds.

Honourable senators, I now come to a review of 1959. It was a good year for housing, with starts at 141,000 units, the second highest on record, and with completions at more than 145,000 units, only 1,000 less than the record level of 1958. Despite the decline in housing starts, expenditures on new housing amounted to $1,758 million, only 1.3 per cent less than the $1,782 million outlay in 1958. And, as I have already mentioned, in order to help finance this program the Government brought in an amendment to section 22 of the National Housing Act, which was assented to on March 20, 1959 and increased the amount available under the act to $1 billion.

The annual figures, however, fail to reveal the progressive withdrawal of private lenders from insured lending under the act, which was subsequently compensated for by C.M.H.C. lending toward the end of the year.

The acceleration of economic activity in 1959 and the rise in personal expenditures and non-residential investment increased the demand for long-term funds. General long-term interest rates rose rapidly and steadily diminished the attractiveness of 6 per cent insured mortgages to lenders. Early in 1959 insured lending by the approved institutions was close to the 1958 rate, but it fell off as competitive interest rates rose. By the last quarter of the year the approved lenders had virtually stopped making insured loans. The banks stopped almost entirely. Altogether, the banks, life insurance companies and trust and loan companies approved insured loans in 1959 for about 25,000 units as compared with 46,000 units during the previous year.

To offset this decline in insured lending, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was compelled to increase its direct lending. The Government felt that a heavy direct lending program toward the end of 1959 was justified on two grounds: that it would prevent a sharp decline in housing activity and that it would maintain employment during the winter. For the year as a whole, lending by C.M.H.C. remained high, with loans approved for about 32,000 units, only slightly below the 1958 level. But the demand for C.M.H.C. direct loans in the autumn of 1959 was so great that by the end of October the corporation, having sufficient applications on hand to commit the remaining funds under section 22, stopped accepting new applications and went on with 82,000 houses that were still not completed and were being built this winter.

The final development in housing policy in 1959 was the increase in the maximum interest rate allowable on insured loans under the National Housing Act. As honourable senators know, the rate was raised last December to 6¾ per cent from 6 per cent in an effort to create a greater flow of private money into insured mortgages during the current year. I assure you, the Government was most reluctant to make this decision, as it would place additional financial burdens upon the borrower. In this instance, however, there was the choice between virtually no loans under the act from the approved lenders at 6 per cent, and a flow of loans, which we hope to get, at 6¾ per cent.

I think I could safely assume that many people would have preferred to see the Government maintain direct lending through C.M.H.C. at the high level of the two previous years. But this is not possible. The provision of public money on such a scale has important fiscal implications, since it adds to the cash requirements of Government and contributes to cash deficits. Under certain economic conditions, Government cash deficits are appropriate, as was the case in 1957 and 1958 and, to some degree, in 1959. We anticipate in 1960, however, a year of comparatively full use of the country's national economic resources, a year in which the benefits of C.M.H.C. direct loans must be balanced against the broader fiscal difficulties that would be raised by continuing C.M.H.C. lending on the same scale as in the past two years.

The economic outlook for 1960 suggests that N.H.A. housing will merit less direct Government support than it received in 1958 and 1959. Two factors, the outlook I have just mentioned and the progressive withdrawal of the approved lenders, influenced the Government to encourage a higher rate of lending by permitting the private lenders a yield of 6¾ per cent on N.H.A. mortgages.

The present indications are that the approved lenders have started to resume activity, but it is by no means certain that they will maintain the same level as they did in 1959, when they financed some 25,000 units. We can expect an increase in the participation of the life insurance, trust and loan companies, which during 1959 approved loans for 11,000 units. The position of the banks, however, is uncertain. During 1959 they approved loans for 14,000 units, but they virtually stopped lending in the latter months of the year.

Honourable senators, the resolution before us has two purposes, the main one being to increase the appropriation available under section 22. I have already explained that this appropriation sets the limit on the amount that the Government may lend to C.M.H.C. to carry out its lending programs. And I have mentioned that the appropriation has been raised in three stages from $250 million to $1 billion, which was totally committed by the end of October 1959. The proposed bill would increase the appropriation by $500 million to $1.5 billion so that C.M.H.C. can continue its mortgage lending for some time.

I must point out that the additional $500 million is intended to last beyond the current year. Loans by the corporation totalled in excess of $343 million during 1959. This year the Government would like to cut this amount substantially, perhaps by as much as one-half. The reduction in C.M.H.C. lending will present some difficulties, since the demand for N.H.A. funds in 1960 is likely to be high, even at the 6¾ per cent interest rate.

Merely to withhold loans from builders and to continue with limitations on the size of dwellings built with C.M.H.C. loans may be insufficient to keep the volume of C.M.H.C. lending within acceptable limits. It will probably be necessary for the corporation to employ a more restrictive allocation technique. But I feel I must emphasize that there is no readiness on the part of the Government to continue mortgage lending at the same high levels of the past two years.

The second part of the amendment deals with section 13 of the act. The present position is that a limit of $4 billion is imposed on the amount of mortgages that C.M.H.C. may insure. This figure bears no relationship to the amount of mortgage loans the corporation may make; rather it relates to the amount of mortgage debt that it may insure. In all probability lenders will ask the corporation to go beyond the $4 billion limit during the current year, and this amendment seeks to increase the authority to $6 billion.

Honourable senators, this ends my review of housing in recent years and my remarks on the amendments before us.

I would like to discuss briefly the broader view of the Government's housing policy.

The main housing objective of the Government is to maintain an annual average rate of new building higher than the rate necessary to keep up with the growth of Canada. Our economists suggest that we require about 125,000 new dwellings each year to meet the needs arising out of family formation, immigration, replacements for lost dwellings, and other factors. During the past three years the total number of starts has averaged 143,000 —far more than enough to meet the basic needs alone.

To obtain improvements in the national housing stock, we must build houses faster than the need for them grows—and then keep them in good condition. Some years it may be difficult to maintain a rate of building that, if continued, would be considered adequate over the long term, but we can compensate for these periods in other years and maintain a satisfactory average rate over the long pull.

During much of the past ten years the demand for N.H.A. mortgage money has been far in excess of the supply. This Government has devoted public funds to N.H.A. mortgage lending in all parts of the country. In fact, since September 1957, C.M.H.C. has committed close to $900 million in mortgage loans. Sometimes broader fiscal considerations have required a moderation of direct mortgage lending, and at such times the Government, as it did recently, has prompted a greater flow of mortgage funds under the act by charging a higher interest rate.

In providing public funds for mortgages, a basic tenet has been to direct the assistance to the lower-income ranges of eligible N.H.A. borrowers. These groups will always receive the greatest concern on the part of the Government. Our concern has been proved by the establishment of the small-home loans program, lower down payments and higher loans, all of which I mentioned earlier.

While I am on the subject of housing for lower-income families, I feel it appropriate to mention the urban redevelopment and public housing programs that this Government has supported since 1957.

First, in the field of urban redevelopment, there has been a considerable increase in activity in recent years. In 1959 alone, federal grants were approved to assist ten municipalities in conducting urban renewal studies, which usually precede urban redevelopment projects. In the same year, three cities obtained grants toward the cost of the redevelopment of blighted areas. In these three projects the Government has undertaken to give financial assistance under section 23 of the act to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost of acquisition and clearance.

In addition to this, the federal Government in conjunction with the provinces and the municipalities, has entered into construction of low-rental housing units under section 36 of the National Housing Act. Some 3,600 of these units have been given final approval or are at present under construction. Preliminary investigations are under way in connection with another 2,200 units.

The federal Government has also cooperated with private enterprise in the provision of low-rental units for families of modest income under the limited-dividend section of the act. This activity has increased spectacularly in the last three years. I have already mentioned that in 1957 and 1958 the corporations made loans for more than 10,000 limited-dividend units. In 1959 loans were made for more than 4,500 units. These loans were made to companies who were willing to limit their dividends to up to 5 per cent of their paid-up share capital. I should add that many of these units—1,316 in 1957, 1,212 in 1958 and 970 in 1959—were designed specifically for elderly persons and they were sponsored by various organizations which did not seek to make a profit at all.

In conclusion, honourable senators, may I say that I am proud to support this bill, which will enable Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to help Canadian families finance homes they might not otherwise be able to afford.

I know that a number of senators will wish to take part in this discussion. After the debate is finished I will, with the approval of the house, move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Will the honourable senator permit a question: He mentioned the rate of interest as being 6¾ per cent. Does that rate include insurance on the life of the purchaser?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That includes mortgage insurance.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: And the rate is 6¾ per cent?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, that includes mortgage insurance.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Does it include life insurance on the purchaser?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It does not include that.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I wonder if the honourable senator would give us a little more information. Out of the 145,000 completions in 1959 he said that 4,500 units were completed under the limited-dividend provisions of the act, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I would also ask how many of these 145,000 units are small homes, what is the average cost of these homes, and what is the average income of the buyers? That would be one question.

My second question is: What is the sum total of loans that are now insured by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not sure that I have that information with me, but I can get it. The act as it now stands permits insurance up to a ceiling of $4 billion, but this total amount has no relation to the amount lent.

My understanding is that there is provision that houses may be built for a minimum of $5,000 and there may be some built at that price, but I have not that information. The average cost of a house today will be between $12,000 and $14,000. The present appropriation of an extra $500 million is primarily to help people whose incomes are under $5,000 a year, because it is felt that those whose incomes are higher than that should go to approved lenders and they will be able to get a loan from approved lenders.

As a matter of fact, I would like to point out that the raising of interest rates has induced private lenders to start lending money. Starts in January and February of 1959 amounted to 8,856, whereas this year, although they were extremely low in January, in the following two months they have totalled 8,525, all of which is a clear indication that there are many private lenders outside of banks. It is a question whether banks will be allowed to lend at 6¾ per cent on housing loans, if they are not allowed to do so on commercial loans. Banks are not permitted to charge more than 6 per cent interest, and I do not think there is any possibility of a change being made now which would allow them to increase this rate. So we must count the banks out of this, and leave it to the other lending institutions, such as trust companies, insurance companies and others which have been lenders for this purpose before. It appears from the figures I have just given that these other lenders are going into the field.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would the honourable senator permit a question: Has he any information as to the number of houses in the various provinces that have remained unsold? I am interested in the province of British Columbia, and I may say that in my own district there are some 300 houses that cannot be sold.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I gave the figure as 141,145 starts, and British Columbia started 16,691.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How many were sold last year?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have not got that figure.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Did the honourable senator not say there were some 300 houses unsold in his district?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes, that was for one district alone. I have the totals of the houses that have not been sold in every district.

I have another question. Did the National Housing Act come into force only in 1957?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. I have already said that it commenced in 1954. At first the sum of $250 million was appropriated, but up to the time the present Government came in only $100 million had been used.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The act says 1954, and it is so stated in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: It says so in the bill, and I am sure I mentioned it in my remarks. The fact remains that this Government has spent, as I said, $900 million, as compared to $100 million spent between 1954 and the mid-summer of 1957.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Honourable senators, may I ask a question which the honourable senator may not have the information to answer at the moment? He stated that $343 million was committed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for direct loans for building. I wonder if when the bill is considered in committee we could get the breakdown of the $343 million, as to how much of it went into limited-dividend housing, how much into urban redevelopment, and how much went into community studies and such matters dealing with housing.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: That information is certainly available.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, we have had an excellent presentation of this legislation from the honourable senator from Saskatoon (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn), who has told us something of the history of the act and has given a forecast of what we are to expect in the immediate future. In fact, he has left out very little. He has lauded the Government for the huge amount of money it has put into housing, and he takes great satisfaction from the fact that these many millions of dollars have been spent for that purpose. I am not criticizing him for what he has said, but he will observe from some figures which I shall give later that the figures in respect to building for a certain class of our population are not as laudatory, so far as the present Government is concerned, as are the figures which he gave.

The honourable senator from Saskatoon mentioned that the National Housing Act came into effect in 1954, but he mentioned it in a rather offhand manner, so much so that the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) brought the matter to his attention.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is why I asked the question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of course, we all know what administration was in power in 1954, and we realize that the bill now before us is just carrying on the very excellent legislation which was presented to Parliament by the former administration. And may I remind my honourable friend and the house that at the time the former administration introduced this legislation the interest rate on housing loans was not 6¾ per cent, but 5½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: And it was increased to 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But since that time, in 1955, the interest rate was reduced to 5¼ per cent. So the honourable senator can take some satisfaction from the fact that the amount of the loans has increased, but he should also realize that at the same time the interest rate on the loans is at an all-time high.

Honourable senators, I do not rise for the purpose of criticizing this legislation unduly. In fact, so far as I am personally concerned I am in favour of it, but I am not in favour of the regulations under which it is to be administered.

The honourable senator from Saskatoon stated that at the present time Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation can loan a maximum amount of $1 billion, and that under this bill that amount is to be increased by $500 million. So from this time forward

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be able to loan a sum not in excess of $1,500 million.

The honourable senator from Saskatoon said—and it was emphasized in the other house, though I need not refer to what took place there—that priorities will be given to citizens seeking loans who are in receipt of an annual income of not more than $5,000. As a matter of fact, the Government has stated that for the present, in any event, no loan will be given to any person who has an annual income of more than $5,000. So honourable senators will note that the consideration for making a housing loan, and I may say the only consideration, is the number of dollars which the applicant is making annually. No consideration is given to the question of need, nor to whether the applicant has one child or seven or eight children. The only question asked is: "Are you making no more than $5,000 a year?" If the answer is, "I am making no more than $5,000 a year", the application is accepted. You may say $5,000 a year is a medium income. Probably it is. But I say there should be some other considerations.

If, for instance, the applicant is a husband who is making $5,000, and his wife is employed and has an income of $2,400, those amounts are not added together to make the income of the applicant $7,400. He is still regarded as being in the $5,000 class. But, on the other hand, if an applicant with a wife and three or four children, with an annual income of $5,500, makes application, he is not considered. Or, if a married man with no children applies to the corporation for a loan, he gets it, provided he is not making more than $5,000; but if a man who has four or five children, and is unable to find a home with enough bedrooms in which those children can sleep, is making $6,000 and applies for a loan, he is told that he cannot get it because his annual income is too high.

Honourable senators, I ask you: does that not discourage people from having large families? Some honourable senators laugh. I am putting a very serious question to the house, and I hope I put it in such a way that the Government will see fit to change the regulations so that a man with a medium-sized family, and whose income may exceed $5,000, will have a chance of building a home. If a man and a woman have four children, how many bedrooms do they need in their house? Let us say they have two boys and two girls. In that case they can get along with three bedrooms, because two of the girls can sleep in one bedroom, and the two boys can sleep in another bedroom, and the father and mother can sleep in the third bedroom. But when there are three girls, and one boy, or three boys and one girl, it is not very long before there is a problem in that home.

Honourable senators, at the present time the Government is not encouraging—in fact, it is discouraging—the building of houses with four bedrooms. You would be amazed to hear how few four-bedroom houses have been built. I say that this is becoming very serious to people who want to raise a family. They are beginning to think they are living in a country where there is almost a form of birth control. They have to house their children, and they have to have bedrooms in which the children can sleep. I am told that today in many homes where there are five and six children, and where there are only three bedrooms, the children are sleeping practically all over the house. Is that encouraging good Canadian families to be large? I say it is most discouraging. These people—the people who want to have large families—are now the forgotten people in Canada.

I have here some figures to which I referred a minute ago and which are not so laudatory of the efforts of Canadians to provide housing for their families. These figures have been given to me by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and with permission of honourable members I will place them on Hansard. I am going to deal only with the four-bedroom houses. In 1958 there were built in Canada by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and approved lending organizations 74,609 houses.

(For table see p. 381.)

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: That is four-bedroom houses?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is the total of all types of houses. My friend will be surprised when I tell him the total of the four-bedroom houses.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is for the year 1958?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, in 1958 there were 74,609 houses built by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and approved lending organizations, and of those only 4,249 were four-bedroom houses—4,249 out of 74,609.

Honourable senators, where is a person with a medium-sized family going to live? Where is he going to find a home?

Let me give you the figures for 1959. As the honourable senator from Saskatoon has stated, not as many houses were built during that year with loans from the corporation and approved lending organizations. However, there were built that year 60,839 houses, but of those only 4,631 had four bedrooms.

Honourable senators, the problem is what are we going to do with our large families?

(1) Bachelor Apartments.

Are we going to do nothing? Are we going to discourage our Canadian people from having large families? This is one of the most serious problems with which the Government is faced, and it is doing nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I wonder if he has the figures for 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957 with respect to four-bedroom houses.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator is now going back to the past. What has been done is done.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Let us have the entire picture since the passing of the National Housing Act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What has been done is done. I am not so critical of what has been done. In my opening remarks I said that I hoped what I had to say would have some influence on the Government, to induce it to face up to this problem, and face up to it now. What is the use of living in the past and saying: "They didn't do it; why should we?"

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I just wanted the record complete.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Think of that—a Government which claims it has vision saying: "They didn't do it; why should we?" I am saying to the Government in all seriousness that I hope it will do something about this. It may be that it has not realized—

Hon. Mr. Horner: I have known instances where a man with one child was more concerned about housing than a man with a large family. In my own family we had six boys, but there was only one bedroom in the house, and the boys were quite comfortable in that one bedroom.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That may have been so. I happen to know two of the boys who are in Parliament today, and they are very fine boys, indeed, but I might point out to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) that he might have been —no, I will not say "less fortunate", but if he had had three girls and three boys he might have found more difficulty in getting along with one bedroom. Also, if he had had a small house—a house of the type which is being built today—he would have found it very difficult to get along. I do not think there is any senator here who does not think it is a very serious problem. I feel sure that every honourable senator realizes this is a problem, and that it is the Government's problem, because it is the Government which is in power. The Government must face up to it.

My friends on the other side are always asking me to make suggestions, and I am never loath to do so. I would suggest to the Government that the annual income of $5,000 should not be the only criterion, or the only yardstick, by which loans are granted. It should be more flexible, and something more than the annual income of $5,000 should be considered. Let them take into consideration the size of the family.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask this: Has not that question of salary been the first consideration since this act was passed?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will say to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake that if it has been, it is time the practice was changed, and I hope he will do his part to get it changed.

I will go further and say that there should be an incentive to people with large families to build homes with at least four bedrooms, and I would suggest that the incentive for such people should be a reduction in the rate of interest on their mortgages. Yes, I say a reduction. Give some consideration to the man and wife who are prepared to have a large family. Help them. Do something for them. We have made it difficult enough for them to get a home. Now we should go the other way and give them some help.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) permit me to interrupt to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I want to be clear on one point. Is the honourable leader advocating that the rate of interest charged on mortgages which are placed on four-bedroom homes be less than that on mortgages placed on three-bedroom, two-bedroom and one-bedroom homes? For instance, the standard rate, as we all know, is 6¾ per cent today. Is the honourable leader advocating that on a four-bedroom house the rate of interest should be less than 6¾ per cent?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will go that far. I will ask the Government to give consideration to that proposal. We are faced with a problem of having too many houses with only three bedrooms. The Government must do something to encourage a man and his wife to have a good-sized family. We should help him to get a home that is suitable for his requirements and it would not hurt any of us if the interest on the loan on such a house was a little lower than the interest charged on houses with three bedrooms or less.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Has the honourable leader considered the situation of a man who has a small family but would like to take care of his aged mother and father?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That problem is very closely related to the one which I have mentioned. I have talked of married couples with six children. Of course, the problem becomes even more intense if a couple has four children and must support an aged mother or father as well. That family requires one more bedroom.

I am not going to blame the Government too much for the present situation of which I speak, but we as Canadians are not facing up to the problem. We claim that we have the second highest standard of living in the world, yet a man and his wife with five or six children cannot find a home in which to live.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Surely they can live in a three-bedroom home.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My honourable friend from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) says that a man and his wife and their five or six children can surely live in a three-bedroom house?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I don't know how long my honourable friend wants our standard of living to be rated the second highest in the world, but I doubt very much that a father and mother and six or seven children can live in a three-bedroom house. This is a problem with which many families are faced, but if the Government does not think it is a problem then let the Government forget what I have said. I know there are thousands of couples throughout Canada today who have not got homes in which they can properly house their children. If the Government does not think this is its problem, then I say to these people "Unfortunately, it is your problem." I have brought this great problem to the attention of the Government and I do hope the Government will at least give some consideration to it.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I wish to say a word or two about the building business, for I happen to know something about it, having been actively engaged in the building of houses in the city of Winnipeg after World War I, from 1921 until 1929. I would say that of all the houses we built, 90 per cent of them had only three bedrooms. We never had any trouble selling three-bedroom houses, but the minute we built four-bedroom houses trouble started. The real estate man would ask, "How many bedrooms do you want, four?" The prospective buyer would say: "That's just a little too large. I'd like a three-bedroom house."

If you examine the building records for the past ten years in Toronto or Montreal or any other Canadian community you will find that the great majority of the building permits have been for three-bedroom houses. When this bill is in committee the President of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be asked how many four-bedroom and three-bedroom houses have been built in Canada during each of the last ten years. I am sure the answer would be surprising. While it may not be difficult to heat a four-bedroom house in the warmer parts of Canada, such as in southern Ontario, it is a problem in the colder communities. A four-bedroom house requires greater care and upkeep. I can speak from experience. I think the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) said that he had quite a few children. Well, I had six myself. They are all living yet. Better than that, I have fifteen grandchildren. I never heard one of my children complain to me that they could only get a two-, three- or four-bedroom house. I never had any say in what they bought. They bought to suit themselves. The honourable Leader of the Opposition is wrong. It is not the responsibility of the Government to provide four-bedroom houses. The responsibility of the Government is to see that houses are built and that a man and his wife can afford to pay for them. The whole problem is not one of construction but one of getting houses paid for after they have been built. Our cost of living is going up. Houses of the type that cost $13,000 or $14,000 today were built in my time for $7,000 or $8,000. The house I am living in today was built for $7,000 for a man and his family and we made a profit of $500 net cash from it. Today when that house is valued by the Government for estate or succession duty purposes, they place the value at $16,000.

Hon. Mr. Power: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Haig: And the house is twenty years older. I had a battle royal before I could get them to put the value of one such house down to $15,000. One of my boys had a house built in Winnipeg which he bought for $4,000. He sold it this summer for $15,500.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The income tax people will look after him.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The interesting thing about it is that it was only a three-bedroom house.

The problem is not one of how many bedrooms, but of the house itself. What we want is to make a house as useful as possible, remembering all the time that if the house comes back on our hands we can sell it again. I am not a bit afraid that the houses will not sell or of their not being occupied. The first problem is what will happen if there is a slackening off. The honourable Minister of Trade and Commerce says there will not be a slackening off, but the Governor of the Bank of Canada indicates there may be a slowing down. Nobody can possibly know. The Government is right in trying to have houses built as economically as possible, provided such houses answer the needs of the people.

My honourable friend says that the people need four-bedroom houses. I would like to know how many fathers in this chamber have four children. I am sure there are a good many who have not.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: They are too old.

Hon. Mr. Haig: My honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition has not that many children.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have more than that many grandchildren, and they all live in four-bedroom houses.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: They are very fortunate.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The Leader of the Opposition must be rich.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am only rich in that I have my eight grandchildren.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I have six children to take care of, and I have 15 grandchildren to remember and love.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Your average is not as good as mine.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would be satisfied if four-bedroom houses were built, but as a businessman I would build three-bedroom houses if I wanted to sell them. I learned about all this from a good practical builder some years ago. Like my honourable friend, at that time I shouted often for four-bedroom houses, but this builder said: "Nothing doing, Jack. Those houses could come back on our hands, and if we build three-bedroom houses we can sell them again. Also they do not cost so much to build."

Honourable senators, this matter can be settled quite easily if my honourable friend will ask the head of the corporation to come and tell us what his record shows for each year. You will be surprised at the record.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You won't be proud of it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: My friend will find that when his Government was in power three-bedroom houses were built, just as now. I would have done the same thing, knowing that I had to protect the taxpayers of this country. The honourable gentleman is the first to say that the Government is spending too much money. It is spending money to help people out. I am not complaining. However, this money must come back to our people, it must be recovered, and it should be put into houses we can sell again. You would be surprised how many four-bedroom houses are passed up, and how many people pick the three-bedroom houses because they are cheaper.

Honourable senators, for these reasons I support the bill, and I hope that if it goes to committee we can get answers to all the questions my honourable friend asked. If he will ask the manager of the housing corporation to come I know that he will get a very able presentation of the whole case on behalf of not only the Government but of himself. The present manager came before our Finance Committee last year. He is the best man I know of in Canada to answer the questions which should be asked of him.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I wish to say only a few words. I am not against the bill, I am for it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear hear.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: But with some explanation. I agree with my leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). However, I disagree with the honourable senior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) when he said the only object is to furnish money to build houses. That is not so. We are building up a system of social security in this country, and if we want to increase that social security it will be necessary to provide a good house for each family. The experience I have had with social organizations in my constituency is that when we have packed five or six children into two rooms we have increased delinquency and the number of criminals. Not all children have the advantages of parenthood that my colleague from Winnipeg has. He can have control of his children, because they have enough rooms to live in, but when 80 per cent of our families have five or six children living in two rooms, that is a condition that is absolutely terrible socially. My honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) says that in his family six children were packed in the same room. Well, I am the youngest of fifteen children.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: How many bedrooms?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Eight. It would probably have been very bad for me if we had had to be packed in two bedrooms.

I want to say a few words on only one point. In the past twenty years our caisses populaires in Quebec have borrowed from our neighbours more than $1 billion in loans. Now we have $271 million out in loans on mortgage, and the average loan is $4,000. The first thing that is asked of the borrower is why he wants to have a house. First, we investigate his morals. Secondly, we ask him, "Have you any children?" If the family consists of only a father, mother and a dog, we say it is unnecessary to loan the money. The total amount loaned last year was $83 million. In 1958 it was $77 million. I am afraid the demands upon us this year will be too heavy, because the banks are now not lending for housing construction. They cannot charge more than six per cent interest, and the loans for housing are at 6¾ per cent interest. The interest charged by our caisses populaires in Quebec varies from 5 per cent to 6 per cent, plus life insurance on mortgage. For what reason? Because we want to protect the family. The family is the foundation of the nation.

If we cannot organize our social security better than we have done in the past we shall have failed in our destiny. It is to prevent this that we have developed our caisses populaires. Our people are not receiving salaries of $5,000 a year; the average annual salary is between $3,000 and $3,500. We have co-operative organizations to build houses, and they have managed to reduce the average cost from $15,000 to $10,000 or $11,000. That is a big reduction. We want the Government to help the co-operative movement throughout all Canada, and in this way to help our families. If we have a policy of that kind, we will be proud of Canada in the future.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Wall, debate adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

MOTION TO DIRECT COMMITTEE TO REVIEW DEPARTMENT'S ANNUAL REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William M. Wall moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour be authorized and directed to review the Annual Report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, excluding that portion of the Report which deals with the Indian Affairs Branch; and

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

He said: Honourable senators, I make no apologies for suggesting this study, and I make this motion in good faith and for reasons which I shall explain to you briefly and, I hope, satisfactorily.

May I remind my honourable colleagues that I gave notice of my intention to move this motion prior to the interesting and significant discussion which has since taken place in this house concerning the suggestion of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for a manpower study. You will recall that the honourable Leader of the Opposition suggested that the Senate undertake a study of the serious national problem involving more effective utilization in useful and continued employment of our available human resources, and that several honourable senators spoke in support of this idea. I recognize the importance of a manpower study, perhaps by a special select committee, and I would gladly support a motion to get this kind of study under way.

I recognize also that it would not be desirable to have too many committees studying too many problem areas at any given session, and quite frankly I have been waiting for a rather simple decision to be made, for I was given to understand that the manpower study suggestion was under advisement.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: It is.

Hon. Mr. Wall: I had even felt that perhaps I should withdraw my motion, if there was some assurance of intent or commitment to go ahead with this manpower study and if there were additional assurances that the terms of reference for this study would be broad and flexible enough to include some consideration of our present immigration policy, together with its administrative practices and procedures.

I make this last comment simply because the general problem areas of immigration and emigration are important facets or factors in the more effective utilization of our potential human resources, and mixed up somewhere in all this are our citizenship policies and practices.

However, honourable senators, I do not know what further and specific action is likely to be taken to meet this suggestion for a manpower study, and because of this lack of apparent indication or clarification of intent I feel that I should proceed now with the formal explanation of my motion and the reasons which prompt me to present it to you.

Furthermore, I believe that my motion to refer the annual report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour merits our attention and support, even if the manpower study were to be organized.

Although these studies would to some extent be complementary and supplementary, they are certainly not exclusive or antagonistic in nature, and their findings likewise would be complementary and supplementary. Certainly a study directed specifically to immigration and citizenship would give these matters more thorough attention than might be possible in a general manpower study.

If it is felt by honourable senators that benefits would come from both studies, if both are to be organized, then I believe honestly and sincerely that this house can find the time and can find the personnel needed to undertake them.

I have previously expressed to honourable senators my basic belief that through the instrumentality of its standing or special committees, the Senate could perform a very worth-while and useful public service by conducting fact-finding reviews or studies into areas of wide public interest and national concern. Many honourable senators have explained repeatedly that the members of this honourable house are well equipped to undertake this type of impartial study, and I personally believe that we should plan to make several such fact-finding reviews at each session of Parliament.

During the 1959 session, as you remember, the Standing Committee on Finance performed this kind of public service with commendable impartiality and with creditable success in a problem area of great national interest and concern. A similar observation is applicable to the activities of the Land Use Committee, a committee whose activities are now well under way again, under the guidance of its steering committee and its hard-working chairman (Hon. Mr. Pearson).

Last year there was a brief, perhaps too brief, reactivation of the Standing Committee on External Relations. I am pleased to note the motion now before us which will authorize this particular committee to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. In moving his motion the Chairman of the Committee, the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), pointed out that there was in this house a general and continuing interest in the subject of Canada's relationships with other countries of the world, and that his motion would enable honourable senators to make a definite contribution toward the thinking on the various problems in the broad field of international relations. The honourable sponsor also indicated the value of the opportunities that would be accorded to us to meet with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with senior officials of that department, and indeed with other ministers whose work may touch upon the subject of external affairs, in order to keep abreast of the events and problems at first hand.

I submit that these general considerations are applicable to the motion I have introduced. Although my motion will not entail and does not envisage the wide-ranging scope, the latitude and extent of review which are inherent in the motion of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South, because a study of citizenship and immigration has to do with what may be more properly termed an internal, national problem area, I do believe that this house has a continuing and deep interest in the subject of our immigration and citizenship policies and practices, as these are determined and administered in the light of our changing economic needs and in harmony with our changing expectations and attitudes to these policies and practices.

I should now like to tell you a little about the fine work done previously by the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, and why the time has come to activate it again so that it may make further important contributions.

Honourable senators, I believe it is of some consequence to remember that but for some discussions upon immigration problems in the other house, chiefly on the estimates, and in 1955 on a motion to go into supply, and but for the last inquiry made by the Senate's standing committee seven years ago—just a year after the act was revised in 1952—there has been no careful study made of the operations of the Immigration Act of 1952 by any standing or special committees of Parliament for quite some time.

At this point I should like to make a brief reference to the most useful work previously performed by the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour at a time, honourable senators, when our policy of immigration selection and admission was not only generally restricted, but also heavily weighted in favour of rather narrow groups—I am thinking of farmers and unskilled labourers; and at a time when there was a great humanitarian concern about refugees and displaced persons; and at a time when there was evidence of a growing public demand for a liberalization of our immigration practices and policies.

The Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour did yeoman and most meritorious service in 1946, when it had 11 sittings and produced a report; in 1947, with 14 sittings, and a report; in 1948, with 10 sittings, and a report. There were additional sittings in 1949, 1951 and 1953.

It is interesting to note that besides ministers and senior Government officials, a large number of interested organizations and public-spirited citizens appeared before the committee to offer their responsible observations and suggestions. It is equally interesting to note how many of the recommendations which the committee have made in those reports were accepted by the Government and resulted in significant changes in our immigration policies and practices through Orders in Council, through changed regulations, and eventually in the revision of the Immigration Act in 1952.

For example, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), in moving the reactivation of the work of the committee in 1947, was able to point out that the 1946 study was followed by two revisions of the regulations and the establishment of new immigration inspectional offices in Europe, in line with the Senate recommendations; and on May 7, 1947 the honourable senator was able to tell his committee members that the Prime Minister had announced new changes in the Immigration Act, in all regulations and orders in council, that were very sweeping and were in direct line and parallel to the recommendations of the Senate. Incidentally—and this I would like to mention—the 1947 report was able to describe the great progress then being made in wiping out the legal ban against marriage and in making admissible whole family units—then a new concept—which our experience has since proved to be not only more humanitarian and generally acceptable but, indeed, eminently practicable from the point of view of integration of these newcomers.

This brief overview of the committee's work makes me enthusiastic about the kind of contributions it may make again if we activate it for this purpose. I know that many Canadians are seriously concerned about our current immigration policy and practices, and I believe the time has come to review them on an organized basis, providing a public forum where evidence may be freely given and impartially examined and assessed.

I would be unfair to my honourable colleagues if I did not express my personal convictions with respect to immigration. Without entering into my personal observations about the many problems—and a lot of them are bogey problems—which are involved in the integration of newcomers into our way of life and these I could make, for I am the son of an immigrant—let me state simply and unequivocally my belief that a vigorous and sustained policy of a much higher level of immigration is for Canadians a stark necessity. We need people to harness and utilize the abundance of our natural resources. We need people to purchase the products of our industries, rather than exporting materials in raw and semi-raw form. We need people as taxpayers to distribute among more Canadians the burden of our public expenditures. We need immigrants to balance off the export of Canadians to more industrialized and more fully populated countries like the United States. We need immigrants for their religious, cultural and other skills, for their experience and hidden human resources and reserves which they will bring with them, to share with us. It is true that letting in still another immigrant is an act of kindness to him and, we hope, to the sending country, but it is undoubtedly a greater act of kindness to ourselves.

We now come face to face with this basic fact about which many Canadians are gravely concerned, and about which many questions are being asked. During the preceding two years, honourable senators—that is, in 1958 and 1959—there has been a rather dramatic decrease in the number of landed immigrants in Canada. In 1957 the number of landed immigrants, in round numbers, was 282,000; in 1959 the number had dropped to 107,000, which is about 60 per cent of the 1957 figure. This is a very, very dramatic decrease. But when we counterbalance this with emigration figures, which we estimate to be about 50,000 based upon ten-year averages—and I got them for 1945 to 1955, because for some reason which I could never understand we apparently do not keep accurate statistics on emigration—our net intake of immigrants—the net, the balance—has nosedived from 232,000 in 1957 to about 57,000 in 1959. That is an apparent reduction, honourable senators, of approximately 400 per cent, in two years.

It is natural, therefore, that questions are being asked which denote increasing concern and dissatisfaction about an overall policy on immigration; questions like: Why is this policy not clear? Why is it so difficult for us to determine where we are going with respect to immigration? Why is this policy not consistent, because we are apparently, during relatively prosperous times, in the cold phase of an alternately hot-and-cold immigration policy?

During the past two years, and on its record, the present immigration policy seems to run counter to the undisputed proposition so vigorously championed by leading Government exponents, especially during the 1955 debate on immigration, that Canada needs more people which she must gain through a vigorous, and not restrictive, policy of immigration. It is a policy which some people say is a kind of gloomster or pessimistic policy of reduction, and hence a kind of national planning for a little Canada. In other words, honourable senators, it is a policy to which one might apply with some validity a phrase coined back in 1955: "Immigration if necessary, but not necessarily immigration".

But for some minor changes which are contained in orders in council, the law and the rules and regulations governing immigration today are exactly the same as they were under the former Government, so we must assume that the spirit and the method of application of these rules have been changed quietly and subtly—from the flexibility that is needed to have our immigration policies injected with noticeable and measurable dosages of, I would say, idealism and humanity plus a vigorous "going-after" new immigrants, to rigidity and apparent discouragement of sponsored and other immigrants, if my limited experiences with specific immigration cases is any criterion.

How else are we to explain this dramatic decrease in the number of landed immigrants? On page 23 of the last Annual Report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration the Director of the Immigration Branch explains this decrease in exactly one sentence of eighteen words:

> The decrease can be attributed to diverse factors, including particularly adverse publicity abroad about economic conditions in Canada.

I, for one, want to know a great deal more about these diverse factors; and although I believe that some of these factors are of an external nature and are, perhaps, beyond our control or jurisdiction, I also believe that many of these factors have been of our own choosing and of our own making, and I am anxious to know why this is so.

In this context I would like to refer honourable senators to pages 119 and 120 of the report of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects, which examines Canada's immigration policy on purely economic grounds. There are several pages devoted to this examination, and on page 120 are these words:

...it is our conviction that the economic advantages of continued immigration are substantial enough to justify an attempt to maintain a stable immigration policy even through periods of mild recession in Canada.

And further on:

...we think that the interests of all Canadians would be best served by resisting the temptation to turn the administrative tap off and on with every temporary change in business conditions.

I would like to draw your attention to an address given by the Honourable the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when she spoke to a Winnipeg audience on January 26 last. In this address she outlined what I believe to be her basic theses concerning the societal, economic and other desirable benefits of immigration. Coupled into this speech was a denial that immigration is a significant factor in the level of unemployment, and I bring to your attention, without comment, this significant summary statement of the minister:

Until then however,

—speaking of 1965, according to the text—

—Canada could continue to absorb immigrants at as high a level as possible.

The Prime Minister, speaking to a Toronto audience on April 25, 1957, made this interesting commitment to the Canadian people:

We believe that Canada needs increased population in her development to keep pace with her vast resources. To that end we will undertake a vigorous immigration policy. We will overhaul (the Immigration Act's) administration to ensure that humanity will be considered and put an end to the bureaucratic interpretations which keep out from Canada many potentially good citizens.

Yet, within two years the net immigration intake has dropped almost fourfold and the number of landed immigrants dropped from a previous six-year average of 174,093 to the present two-year average of 115,888. Why?

I could, of course, quote a very interesting resolution passed by the Conservative party at its convention held in Ottawa on December 1 and 2, 1959, but I shall just pass it by and mention it in passing.

I am almost finished, honourable senators, but I wish to say that my motivation in presenting this motion is also caused by my belief that there is a need to examine into the administration of the Immigration Act. I believe that we should consider the criticisms which have continued to be expressed in the past over such problems as these. Certain regulations have been branded and are continuing to be branded as sweeping, ill-judged and giving tremendous arbitrary power to special inquiry officers. And the definition of a special inquiry officer is exceedingly pertinent in this respect.

There are concerns about the use of section 61 of the act which gives to the cabinet very wide legislative and regulatory power, in effect giving it the entire responsibility of deciding who can be assimilated and therefore those who can come to Canada, which is really the main point of the immigration law. There are problems dealing with sponsored cases, especially concerning relatives of Canadian citizens. It would be interesting to know how these sponsored cases are working out and whether there are any discrepancies between our regulations and administrative practices. There are concerns expressed about the location and the activities of our field inspection officers in relation to the number of immigrants that are coming from the places where these officers are located. Then there are the very touching and very thorny problems of deportations, active or suspended; and a suspended deportation, of course, can deprive the Canadian resident of any hope of becoming a Canadian citizen. Then there are concerns and questions asked about what is being done about the codifying of our regulations and our judgmental interpretations so that we might know more about what legal rights may be attached to immigration, so that individuals may know more about the reasons leading to a refusal of their applications.

Honourable senators, you will have noticed that I have spoken more of the general considerations which have prompted me to present this motion. I have referred only briefly to specific problem areas in which I am interested—and I believe other honourable senators are too—but which I believe would best be presented to the committee if the committee is activated and given an opportunity to study these problems.

The exclusion of the section dealing with the Indian Affairs Branch anticipated the reconstitution of the joint committee studying Indian Affairs, which fact has been accomplished.

Honourable senators will notice that the motion is so framed as to give considerable freedom and flexibility to the members of the committee in reviewing also the activities of the Citizenship and the Citizenship Registration Branches. I believe that this motion is timely and I hope that it will meet with your support.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Wilson, debate adjourned.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I should like to address a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, the honourable gentleman from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt). I should like to ask if at the next sitting of the house he would make a statement for the benefit of honourable members on the present situation concerning the Canada-United States interparliamentary committee for improving relations between members of Parliament and members of Congress. Specifically I should like to know if a constitution has been prepared and, if so, where a copy might be obtained; if there is a report on the meeting which I understand took place last summer; what plans are on foot for the next meeting, and what agenda is contemplated.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will get the information.

DIVORCE

BILLS—THIRD READINGS

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill SD-243, for the relief of Richard Austin Evans.

Bill SD-244, for the relief of Marion Mary Treen Frosst.

Bill SD-245, for the relief of Joyce Mary Whiteman Rogers.

Bill SD-246, for the relief of Vera Arlene Perry Locke.

Bill SD-247, for the relief of Beatriki Bourboulis Angelidis.

Bill SD-248, for the relief of Jessie Margaret Cross Joly.

Bill SD-249, for the relief of Guy Labrosse.

Bill SD-250, for the relief of Joyce Agnes Catherine Wilkinson Greenwood.

Bill SD-251, for the relief of Jacques Cormier.

Bill SD-252, for the relief of Mary Lorraine Little Copping.

Bill SD-253, for the relief of Sylvia Trachimovsky Fox.

Bill SD-254, for the relief of Kathleen Shannon Keene.

Bill SD-255, for the relief of Jean Elizabeth MacCuaig Vinters.

Bill SD-256, for the relief of Lucy Sekora Budnik.

Bill SD-257, for the relief of Joyce Middlehurst Walker.

Bill SD-258, for the relief of Patricia Shirley Rydberg Menzies.

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed, on division.

FINANCE CHARGES (DISCLOSURE) BILL

ORDER FOR SECOND READING STANDS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill S-25, intituled: "An Act to make Provision for the Disclosure of Information in respect of Finance Charges".—(Honourable Senator Croll).

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, on behalf of the honourable senator from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll), who expected to be here this evening, but unfortunately was obliged to go to his home through illness, I ask that this matter stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I should like to secure the unanimous consent of the Senate, if possible, to proceed with the debate on the National Housing bill as the first item of business when the house meets tomorrow afternoon. The debate was adjourned by the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall). My reason for making this request is that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, which is to meet tomorrow morning, is prepared to meet again when the Senate rises in the afternoon, as well as in the evening. Therefore, if the National Housing bill should be referred to committee tomorrow, the Banking and Commerce Committee would be ready to consider it. May I have unanimous consent of the Senate for this order of business?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 23, 1960

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL HOUSING BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn for the second reading of Bill C-53, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, in introducing Bill C-53, an act to amend the National Housing Act, the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) spoke in complimentary terms of the progress made since the present Government took over and, indeed, in general terms, since the initiation of this very useful legislation by the previous Liberal Government. We all share in the satisfaction which the Government, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the construction industry in general must feel in the progress made so far.

Last year it was estimated that housing construction gave employment to 250,000 men. The sponsor stated there were 145,000 completions and 141,000 starts, and that the projected target for the future is about 125,000 homes per annum. He stressed the fact that the Government was concerned that the emphasis should be on small homes and on limited-dividend provisions of the act, and that housing be provided for people in the lower-income bracket.

Now, all that is very fine, but we should not overlook the problem areas which do exist and have existed for some time, and which have become increasingly serious. I believe that these problem areas are very significant for our better understanding of how the National Housing Act is operating.

Honourable senators, I am not concerned with what is in the bill. The bill as such is good, as far it goes, and I intend to support its two principal changes. What concerns me is what I do not find in the bill, and what was not adequately explained in the other house nor in this house yesterday.

My purpose will be to list and to explain some of these problem areas which indicate, to me at least, that the National Housing Act is inadequately meeting housing needs of the very Canadians who need housing most, namely, the low-income group. There are a great many in this group, indeed the majority of the Canadian people; they are fine and upstanding Canadians, yet they have had very little opportunity to buy new homes with low down payments and a reasonably long term of repayment.

Granted, honourable senators, that we are making a bit of progress, but we must assess realistically what this progress is and what remains to be done to an act which may need changing or streamlining, with the Government, naturally, leading the way. We welcome the emphasis of the sponsor in saying that the new direct loans will be made mainly to the low-income groups. The eligible income figure quoted to this house was $5,000 or under, and I heard some place—I believe it was on the radio—that under the present Government some 400,000 units have been built. The question that puzzles and bothers me is: How many of these 400,000 units have been built for Canadians earning $4,000 or less in annual income? According to the sponsor of the bill, in two years direct loans were made for 55,000 small homes and rental units, but in the limited dividend field in 1952 there were 6,282 units built, and in 1959 the figure had slipped to 4,500. It would be interesting to know how many of those 55,000 homes were in fact allocated to Canadians earning $4,000 or less annually. I shall explain later why I am using that figure of $4,000, which is very important and significant.

Better still, since the beginning of direct loaning we have now allocated or committed $1 billion of public funds for housing, and I should like very much to see a breakdown of this amount to ascertain: how much went into small homes and how these were distributed among various price levels and among what income groups, how much into limited-dividend rental units, how much into urban redevelopment schemes of older areas, and how much into apartments, which are beginning to take a larger and larger amount of these housing funds.

The honourable senator who sponsored this bill pointed out that in 1959 the Government had committed $343 million to housing. Again it would be very interesting to know—and this was the question I posed yesterday—where this $343 million went. For example, how much of that money went into apartment buildings, and what kind of apartment buildings were they? It would be very interesting to me to know the names of the buildings in Winnipeg into which some of this money went. I believe the minister admitted that out of this $343 million only $25 million went into limited-dividend corporation loans. I would like to know how much of this $343 million was allocated under Part V of the act dealing with urban redevelopment. How much was allocated under section 36 of the act, which has to do with low-rental units, and how much went into small homes? Again it is crucial for us to remember the definition of a small home, for the average definition of an average price and an average income of the Canadian who can buy such a home is very, very misleading.

Honourable senators, I would like to bring to your attention a few statistical figures. For, whatever the reasons—and some of those we know: high cost of loans, improvements, money, materials, construction and perhaps the relatively high level of profits on houses—the fact remains that housing costs are up and the average for small homes is now $14,612 per unit. Therefore the down payments are up, the monthly payments are up, and if you want to qualify you have to have annual earnings which are reasonably high up in the scale.

As a result of advertisements that appeared in both Ottawa newspapers over the weekend I have been doing some work dealing with the kind of homes that people can buy in the various new development areas, what the down payments are, how many plans they can choose from, and how far they would have to go from Ottawa to get a home, and so on. It might interest honourable senators if I said simply that when you get to the stage where you talk about a home-seeker or client who is earning around $4,000, you will be told that he cannot possibly buy any of these houses. That is the problem that faces us and that I want to validate with statistics.

I have in my hand a Dominion Bureau of Statistics pamphlet called The Distribution of Non-Farm Income in Canada by Size, 1957. On page 21 we find estimates of the number of Canadian families and unattached individuals who were earning $4,000 and less in Canada in 1957. The percentage of those Canadians was 56.7 per cent.

I also have in my hand the latest Canadian Statistical Review, for February 1960. On pages 7 and 8 there is a preliminary release of the same kind of figures for distribution of non-farm income for 1958. I find on page 8, in table 1, that of 4,460,000 Canadian families and unattached individuals, 1,632,000, or 36 per cent, are earning $3,000 or less, and that 2,404,000 of those 4,460,000 are earning $4,000 or less. This sampling study is validated by taxation statistics. I have in my hand Taxation Statistics of 1959, and on page 8 is given the breakdown of Canadian taxpayers who paid taxes for 1957. I find that out of 4,076,465 taxpayers, 1,683,953, or roughly 40 per cent, earned less than $3,000 per year. Another 1,052,061 earned between $3,000 and $4,000 per year. So of all Canadian taxpayers 2.7 million are earning $4,000 or less annually.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Have you any breakdown as to how many of those taxpayers are married and how many are single?

Hon. Mr. Wall: No. This is a composite table of all Canadian taxpayers.

So we face a problem which can be stated very simply. The ordinary Canadian, the small man with the small income, cannot come near to buying one of these new houses which are being built and about which we are talking in thousands. We say we have built so many thousands. I say the average man cannot come near to buying one. If you want to validate that statement, speak to some of the people who work in the building and ask them whether they have ever thought of buying a new house and why they cannot do so.

I have in my hand Canadian Housing Statistics for the third quarter of 1959, and page 18, table 26, deals with incomes of applicants under the National Housing Act. I am not interested in the averages. The averages are often quoted, but they are misleading, because they do not tell the whole story.

I want to stress the fact that in the second and third quarters of 1959, 8.4 per cent and 8.7 per cent, respectively, of all loans made under the National Housing Act went to people whose salaries were under $4,000. That means we are providing approximately only 8 or 9 per cent of new housing units for roughly 55 or 56 per cent of our population.

A great deal is made of the statement that the Government has been doing much in the small-home field, and we are glad that so much has been done. True, the honourable the minister stated that 52.6 per cent of the loans to purchasers of these small homes went to people with incomes of $5,000 or less, 24.9 per cent to people with incomes between $5,000 and $6,000, and so on. But when you assess that 52.6 per cent you find that only 8.7 per cent of those loans went to people earning less than $4,000. In other words, you again find a heavy concentration of small-home building for people in a specific salary bracket which is far above the $4,000 that I have been talking about and which I consider rather important.

Last year I asked for a breakdown of these small-home loans and we got the breakdown in our committee. The breakdown—and I do not think this year's will differ very much —was very significant. It showed that only 13.1 per cent of the small homes were bought by applicants with an income under $4,000.

The heavy concentration was among people earning between $4,000 and $5,000—40.7 per cent. The proportion bought by people with incomes between $5,000 and $6,000 was 24.2 per cent.

The important thing is to relate the number of those people to our total population and consider why so much housing is going into that particular area. We were told by the honourable sponsor of the bill that under the limited-dividend plan 6,282 units were built in 1958 and 4,500 in 1959. We have to compare this number of units with the total number. Last year there were 145,000 completions. Now, 4,500 related to 145,000 is a very small number.

So what we are dealing with, honourable senators, is a prolonged and unremedied shortage of new housing for people of low incomes, and we find that the filtering-down theory is not working as well as we had anticipated. The filtering-down theory is a simple one. It says that if you build enough good houses for the people who can afford to buy them, then in course of time, as other houses are vacated by their original owners, they will filter down to people in the lower-income brackets. The fact remains that this is not happening.

The Monthly Review of the Bank of Nova Scotia, for February 1959, which is devoted to "Housing—Time to Take Stock", says:

> Though the overall adequacy of housing has been improving, there is a residual core of Canada's population which has not been able to take advantage of the new opportunities offered.

Further on it talks about one approach to this housing problem for low-income families, namely through the small-home feature, and it says:

> But even the "small home" had an average price of about $13,000 in 1958, while the median family income was probably around $4,600.

So, honourable senators, if it is true—and I contend it is—that the very people whom the National Housing Act was supposed to benefit, namely, the low-income and low median groups, are not benefiting, because of the variety of reasons about which we know, perhaps the time has come to look at the National Housing Act and check to see whether changes might be made. I want to suggest one or two.

Perhaps the amount of loan needs to be increased again, and the amount of down payment needs to be cut down.

Perhaps the period of mortgage needs to be lengthened to avoid the need for second mortgages with their fantastic bonuses and their basic costs. I am told that the bonus discounts on second mortgages run as high as 50 per cent, and that 25 per cent is very common indeed.

Then this problem arises: Why is there so much reluctance—under the act—to do anything about slum clearance and urban redevelopment? After all, we had a purpose in mind when this part of the act was framed. It is evidently not meeting that purpose. Probably something needs to be changed.

Another problem that perturbs me is, how can we do more under section 16 of the act with respect to limited-dividend housing for people with incomes of $3,600 or less? Much more should be done. Some 4,500 units out of 145,000 completions are just a pittance.

Perhaps, honourable senators—and this I think is very cogent to the problem—we should amend the definition of a housing project in the act, which definition is presently related to that of a family housing unit as a self-contained unit. Perhaps the time has come for us to think of amending that definition to allow the building of the dormitory type of accommodation for old folks, for example, or for university students.

This brings to mind one additional point; some way must be found for the easier financing of older homes. One has only to telephone a real estate agent in this city and say to him that you have three or four children and you need a house with three bedrooms—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Four bedrooms.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Very well, four bedrooms —that you have in cash $1,500 or $2,000 at the most, and ask him what you can buy in the older type of home with that down payment. Let me assure you, honourable senators, the answers you get will be highly disconcerting and disappointing. The agent will point out that it is very difficult to make a purchase under those terms, that once in a while he may get an older house that is owned by a person who is prepared to take a first mortgage over a long period of time and accept a low down payment, but that does not happen very often. The problem is, how can we more adequately bring into play public funds so that people can buy the older, good quality type of home, perhaps remodel it a bit, and pay off the loan over a long period of time, as can now be done with the new home? In other words, why is it not possible for the Government to take up mortgages for the purchase of older homes and for their improvement, with repayment on a long-term basis? Why are we concentrating on new homes alone, and ostensibly leaving out between 54 and 57 per cent of our Canadian people whose incomes are in the $4,000-a-year bracket?

Those are the problems, honourable senators, that prompted me last year to inquire with all seriousness why, when we were putting an additional $250 million into the housing field, we did not allocate that money by statute, or in some way show the intent of Parliament, that so much of it should go into limited-dividend units, so much for small homes, so much for low-rental apartments—and, as you will remember, I put in a plea for the construction of university residences. By so allocating loans, all the housing funds would not go into a narrow segment of accommodation for a limited segment of our population.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable senator if he has any record of the percentage of those who were unable to qualify, who were already provided with housing by companies, or who were farm employees and furnished with a house? In other words, has the number of people in these classes been deducted from the total number of those who could not qualify?

Hon. Mr. Wall: The remarks of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) are pertinent, and I regret that I do not have that type of statistics at hand; indeed, I do not know whether they are available. But that does not detract from the argument that it should be possible for half of our population to have reasonable access to the new houses that are being built with public support.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: May I ask a question? Does the honourable senator mean that half the population of Canada is in this low-income bracket and looking for houses?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Let me answer by posing this question: Does this mean that only the people who are earning between $4,000 and $5,000 are not housed this year, and therefore should get 40 per cent of all the small homes that are being built or were built last year? The argument works both ways.

Honourable senators, when I spoke last session I recited at length the incomes of families and related them to loan applications under the National Housing Act. I said at that time that we were not doing much under the act for families with incomes of less than $3,000. The figures are indeed pathetic. I pointed out that in 1951 some 13.2 per cent of the National Housing Act loans went to families with incomes of $3,000 or less; in 1955 that percentage had dropped to .3 per cent, and in 1958 it had been reduced to .2 per cent. In other words, for about 36 per cent of our families we are providing .2 per cent of our National Housing Act loans. That is a statement of fact, from which you may draw what conclusion you wish.

The figures with respect to National Housing Act applicants in the $4,000 income class show this dramatic decline. In 1951 this group received 55.3 per cent of the loans; by 1955 the percentage had dropped to 13.9 per cent, and in 1958 it stood at 9.3 per cent.

In other words, honourable senators, the little man cannot buy a new unit, nor can he buy an older unit. The next question is, what can he rent? Are we providing new rental accommodation for these families in sufficient quantities? I know that a lot of apartments are being built, and some of them may go to this low-income class, but I doubt if the percentage is very high.

The sponsor also told us that there were built in 1957, under the limited-dividend provisions, 4,124 units. In 1958 2,500 rental units were built—I refer you to page 276, because those figures confuse me a little—and in 1958 there were 6,282 limited-dividend units which, I gather, are also rental units.

I would like to relate those figures to the total of 55,000 units that were provided by direct loans under the National Housing Act during the previous two years. The percentage is difficult for me to calculate because I am not certain whether the figures I have quoted, namely 4,124, 2,500, and 6,282, are to be added together, which would give a total of about 12,000 units and which is a fairly large number, or whether there is a duplication in those figures.

The honourable senator also pointed out something which we are all very pleased to note, that under section 36 approval has been given for 3,600 units of public low-cost housing. I presume they are to be built next year.

All this, of course, is encouraging, but it adds up to very little to these people with low incomes. That is the particular point that I want to bring to the attention of honourable senators, with the suggestion that although we might say that we have done very well and that we have made progress—and truly we have—much remains to be done; and certainly the Government must continually study this National Housing Act and how it is being applied across the nation, and to make more certain that in this big public effort—where another $500 million of public money is to be given in direct aid of housing—the man who is earning $4,000 or less will get some kind of a reasonable share of the new housing that is being provided with public support, the share which he is not now getting.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, in the time I have at my disposal I intend to make a few observations on what has already been said in the debate on this bill. I am prompted to rise, not because of the contents of the sponsor's (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn's) presentation, but rather because of its colouration. I want to take nothing away from the Government in what it has done, so long as it encouraged the building of 161,000 houses in 1958 and 140,000 in 1959. I was cheering for it—silently, but nevertheless cheering.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is quite an admission.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I rather thought that the sponsor had inadvertently allocated to the Government 100,000 houses. I did not want the Senate to be left with the impression that it was not noticed on this side. He said that 400,000 houses had been built during the time this Government has been in office, but I would point out that at least 100,000 were built because of policies that were put into effect in the first part of 1957 by the then Government.

On the other hand, let me say this, that what we did yesterday is of not much importance today. We paid for our folly. As a matter of fact, we paid for it on two occasions in the voting booths. What we are concerned with now is what you as a Government are doing today. Perhaps at this time I can put it in one sentence: At the present time it is easier and cheaper to raise money to build a barn than a home. That is the state of affairs at this time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Would the honourable senator elaborate on that statement? From where do you get the money to build barns?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not need to elaborate on it. It is a fact. I could have made it a little stronger, but I did not.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The honourable senator is a city fellow.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I would like to know how you get easier and cheaper loans on barns than on houses?

Hon. Mr. Croll: If the honourable senator asks any farmer he will find out that farmers can get money at 5 per cent interest under any of the farm loan acts.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The money is lent not for the building of barns, but for the purchase of farms.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Money is lent also for whatever is required in the way of farm improvements.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: You cannot get a home improvement loan to build a barn.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You mean a farm improvement loan.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The C.M.H.C. direct loans are not budgetary items. It is returnable money. These loans are repaid. This is not money that is spent; it is money that is lent at interest. If you look at the record you will see it indicates that the 25-year loans are being repaid in about twelve or fifteen years, or much faster than was originally anticipated. Last year C.M.H.C. lent $343 million. This year it intends to lend $150 million, with an outside figure of $175 million. At the same time we in this country are faced with an unemployment problem of very great proportions. I have the figures. The report issued by the Department of Labour dated today, March 23, indicates that there was an increase of 50,000 people unemployed during January. In every region of Canada, except the Pacific region, there has been a considerable increase in the number of people looking for employment.

Construction is one of our sure-fire employment possibilities. It has been in the past and it is now. If there is one opportunity for creating employment, it is through the construction industry and the building of homes.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation went into the direct lending field for some years prior to 1954. In 1954 the Government of the day decided that the banks should provide mortgage facilities under the National Housing Act. They were reluctant to get into the business but we pushed them into it, for there was a vacuum that needed to be filled. There was a social, moral and economic obligation and a responsibility to which the banks responded. The need had to be met either by the Government continuing in the direct loan field or through some other agency. The present Government has eliminated the banks from the field by its fiscal and monetary policy.

There were some 5,000 bank branches in Canada and through them we were able to meet the need at every whistle-stop in this country on a friendly, understanding basis. The local bank manager knew his customers and their credit ratings and he took an interest in making provisions for their homes. That source of borrowing is no longer available to the people of Canada. From 1954 to and including 1958 the number of bank loans on housing units was as follows:

1954	16,906
1955	34,457
1956	15,896
1957	15,687
1958	26,135

This amounted to about 110,000 loans and an investment of about $300 million. Last year, as far as I can ascertain, the loans numbered approximately 14,000. During the period from 1954 to 1958 the bank loans averaged about 20,000 a year. Many of these went to large municipalities, but a big number went to small municipalities.

Let me indicate how badly we are doing with bank loans at the present time. I will give honourable members a few comparable figures on loans granted by banks:

Date	No. of Loans
December, 1958	900
December, 1959	17
January, 1959	670
January, 1960	11
February, 1959	883
February, 1960	6

This represents a total decrease of 2,419, almost 99 per cent.

Loans by trust and loan companies in the same months were as follows:

Date	No. of Loans
December, 1958	579
December, 1959	117
January, 1959	516
January, 1960	160
February, 1959	1,043
February, 1960	550

This represents a total decrease of 1,331, almost 62 per cent.

As of March 11 this year Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation granted direct loans totalling 1,143, whereas last year at this time it had granted direct loans totalling 5,314.

Hon. Mr. Haig: If my honourable friend were a bank manager, and could lend his bank's money to some of the large companies or the Government at 6 per cent, would he loan it to borrowers for housing at 7 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Croll: All I can say is that I would do exactly what my honourable friend would do under those circumstances. I am not blaming the banks for not making these loans. My point is that the Government, through its policy, has eliminated the banks from this business.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The banks are still in the business.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Not at 6¾ per cent, because they are not permitted to charge that interest rate.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Does my honourable friend mean to say they cannot lend the money if they want to?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The banks are limited to 6 per cent under the act.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Banks are assumed to have a certain amount of business acumen, and if they can get more interest on their money they naturally take it. So long as the interest rate was within the 6 per cent area the banks were more than happy to do this business, but they cannot do it at present.

Under this legislation we are being asked to vote a large sum of money which the Government does not intend to use at the present time but may decide to use at some future date. We have a need right now that is as great as any we have had. Statistics indicate that almost 400,000 people in this country need housing. They are doubling up, and the minimum requirement is 125,000 units in order to meet family formations. Although we are told that 125,000 houses will be built this year, because of the amount of money that is available and the lateness of the season the Government will be lucky if even 100,000 are built.

From a study which it made some time ago Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation estimated the minimum need for this country to be 136,000 houses a year. The Gordon Commission made a similar study over a similar period of time and said we need a minimum of 148,000 houses a year. We speak about the low-income group and people earning below $5,000 a year. The maximum loan such people can receive is about $12,200. If you deduct the insurance premium of 2 per cent from that amount it leaves approximately $12,000. Those of us who know anything at all about housing and land availability know that in communities such as Oshawa, London, Chatham and Windsor, which are not our largest, the land alone costs the home builder $4,000. What kind of a house can you build with the $8,000 that is left? And you have to pay a great deal more than $4,000 for a lot in Toronto. It just does not make sense. There is no shortage of money in this country. The Government recently put out a convertible loan for $1 billion, if I am not mistaken, and it was oversubscribed in an hour.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Can you give us any idea when that loan was offered by the Government?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Just recently. I may be wrong as to the total amount. But I know that it was oversubscribed within an hour.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right, but it was not for $1 billion.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You are right. I misread my notes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It was for $300 million.

Hon. Mr. Haig: $200 million.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It was a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Nobody argues that point.

Hon. Mr. Croll: In any event, the loan was oversubscribed within an hour. I know there is money available if the Government wants to reach for it in order to provide housing facilities, and housing projects provide employment.

We have to ask ourselves these questions: Why are we reducing housing? Is there a need for fewer houses? Are we short of families to occupy homes? Have we removed the slum areas from our various cities? Have we enough low-rental housing? Is there a shortage of manpower? Is there a shortage of material? My suggestion is that the need for housing is greater than it has ever been. With the number of unemployed in Canada today, and the amount of employment that could be made available through construction, there must be some reason which I cannot fathom at the moment why the Government is not pushing the housing construction industry a great deal further than at the present rate of about 125,000 homes a year.

I do not know what the future holds in store in regard to unemployment, but the present picture does not appear to be very bright. We must do something bold and courageous to restore to the people of Canada confidence in our economy. One way of doing that is by providing more housing and thereby providing more employment. That is what we should be doing.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, my contribution to this debate will be brief, because I anticipate that my good friend across the way (Hon. Mr. Horner) has some observations to make, and since his observations are usually based on sound practical sense I hope not to detain the house too long.

I listened with great interest to all the eloquent arguments that were put forward last evening and this afternoon about the great need for housing for low-income groups, and the dire things that may happen if this need is not speedily met. It led me to wonder how in the world we ever got along in this country before the blessings of Government housing were brought into being.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Because I can recall a period in our history when we could not get the advantage of Government loans—if it is an advantage, as to which, on the whole, I have some doubts. It seems to me that we are getting things somewhat out of proportion. We talk about the need for housing for low-income groups—and it must be adequate housing. I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) would advocate that they should be four-bedroom houses or three-bedroom houses; but the interesting thing to me is that the honourable senator who sponsored this bill last evening (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn) spoke very eloquently upon it. He dwelt upon the need, and the Government's recognition of the need, of providing housing for low-income groups. My honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition spoke of the same thing. Then we had the extraordinarily eloquent plea from the honourable junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) on this point. As a person with, I hope, some practical sense, I should like to know what these honourable gentlemen have in their minds as a remedy.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: How are we going to meet this dire condition? The honourable junior senator from Winnipeg says, "Reduce the down payment, spread the payments over a longer period of years." How many years?

Hon. Mr. Wall: Forty years.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is up to thirty now.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Are we prepared—and this is the crucial thing that we should face up to honestly—to sacrifice public funds to bring this about, or to risk public funds for this purpose? Are we prepared to put an additional burden on the taxpayers of the future? Let us be honest about it. Are we going to subsidize housing for low-income groups?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is what it amounts to.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: If so, let us be honest about it, and let us agree on it; but to go along in this sort of Alice-through-the-Looking-Glass manner seems to me to be very largely illusory.

This is quite an extraordinary bill. What is the chief motive behind this proposed legislation? There are two possible motives: (1) the honest desire to improve housing conditions, and (2) the rather hidden view of relieving unemployment. Is it one or the other, or is it both—and to what extent? I think we should have some information about this. The Prime Minister, certainly in his election campaigns, gave the country to understand that if he headed a government no one would suffer from lack of work. Is this one way of implementing this promise? And where is the building of housing going to cease? Our colleague from Toronto-Spadina (Hon. Mr. Croll) talks about family formations. You can prove almost anything with statistics. May I say that in the eighties and nineties of the last century and the early decades of this century people flocked to western Canada in tens of thousands of families a year, and they did not do it on the strength of any information they got from statistics as to their chance of survival if they went there. If they had depended on statistical surveys, on information provided by these bright lights who burn the midnight oil to solve all our problems, they never would have gone to that country—never for a moment. The chances were against them.

Are we now by these means, by all this ardour, to get the Government into everything and solve everyone's problems, whether it be wheat, or competition from outside goods, or anything else?

In our desperate ardour to help in all these ways we are destroying, I fear, the very qualities that led the pioneers to go to western Canada, for example, and build up a great part of this country into a very productive area. Well, it may be all right, but on that aspect of the argument I think I shall have some support from my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner).

Hon. Mr. Horner: Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I know of people, and some of them are still living, who went to western Canada sixty and seventy years ago and whose first home was a sod house. They could not get lumber, they didn't have the money to buy it, but they had faith in themselves and they had faith in the country. And what did they do? They went out on the prairie, they plowed it up and brought in the sods to build their homes, and they lived in those homes for two, three or four years until they could afford better ones.

I want to tell you, honourable senators, that that is the kind of spirit that makes a nation—

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —and if you undermine that, you are lost.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator tell us how much they paid for building lots in those days?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am speaking of immigrants who went to our western country and settled on farms.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But they did not have to pay $4,000 for a small building lot.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, let me give you an illustration of my own case. When I got married I had to procure a house. I was working in a small town at the very honourable occupation of managing a grain elevator. I didn't have much money, but I never thought of going to the Government or to a municipality for any. I wangled through. It was not easy, but the experience was good for me, because it imposed a certain kind of discipline on me.

I was about to remark about the fellow countrymen of the honourable senator who sponsored this bill (Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn). Some sixty or sixty-five years ago, when our Ukrainian friends commenced to come to this country in considerable numbers, they did not have much money: they had barely enough to pay $10 to enter for a free homestead. They settled in a part of Manitoba that I was familiar with, and started to build their fortunes.

On weekends some of them walked ten to fifteen miles to and from a job with some neighbouring farmer. I recall that well, because my father was one of these farmers, and every Saturday night his hired man—a Ukrainian—would walk twelve miles back to see his family. What was the result? Through struggle and effort this hired man and his fellow Ukrainians built a community which today is one of the most prosperous communities in that part of the country.

Why there should be spread abroad the impression that it is absolutely necessary—that it is positively necessary—to have all this Government assistance in building houses and in everything else, is to me a pretty difficult matter to understand.

I want to make just one more comment, and that is with regard to the legislation itself. The bill proposes to increase the amount the Government may advance to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from $1 billion to $1.5 billion, and of that extra $500 million the Government, I understand from the sponsor of the measure, will spend probably $150 million to $175 million this year. If that is so, why do we vote the additional amount? Why not vote $175 million and let the corporation apply for more next year, after it has made a report to us?

This method of dealing with the public funds, I am bound to say, does not appeal to me. It is quite true this is not a budgetary item, but it is equally true that the Government must borrow the money before it can go ahead with the loans for housing. And that, honourable senators, is a consideration which I think is worthy of the attention of this house.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I am delighted that the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) preceded me. My remarks will now be briefer, for he said some things much more eloquently than I could have said them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Before I forget, I would like to correct an impression which I may have left last night when I interjected a question about the man with a small family. I want to say that I have nine of a family, six sons and three girls.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You forgot the girls last night?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: He wasn't given a chance to mention the girls.

Hon. Mr. Horner: In my home there were four bedrooms besides a little room off the kitchen that served as a bedroom. I remember that when one of the boys, the one who is the doctor now, had scarlet fever, this small room off the kitchen served as quarantine room for him and me until he recovered.

That house of mine, may I say, had neither a first nor a second mortgage on it. I built it with all the cash I had. It was a sod house and it was the most comfortable house I ever lived in: it was warm in winter and cool in summer. That was the third house in which I lived before coming to the Senate. As I say, there was no mortgage on my house. I always felt about a house the same as I did about any car that I drove. I do not say that I never paid interest to the banks, but I never would sit behind the wheel of a car and move it one foot until it was fully paid for.

Judging by all the figures and statements that we have listened to in this debate, it seems to be assumed that no man in Canada is able to build a home for himself, that the Government must come to every man and offer to do it for him. There cannot be any idea more ridiculous than that. As the honourable senator from Churchill so well pointed out, the people who pioneered in the west made out somehow, but I wonder what would have happened if the present notion had been prevalent throughout the country when he and I were young. We had no thought that it was Government's responsibility to find us employment and take care of us when we were out of work. These were things we did for ourselves.

As to people who are not able to qualify for house loans, I maintain that in a great many cases companies provide houses or other types of living quarters for their men and their families. In days gone by lumbermen used to go to the camps where they spent as much as ten months of the year. Speaking of accommodation, I am reminded of the two types of bunks used in those camps. One was called a "muzzle loader" and the other a "breech loader;" one you got into head first, and the other you entered from the side.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to discuss this bill further except to say that housing loans have helped out a great number of people. I agree with the advice offered by the honourable senator from Churchill, that every man in Canada should attempt to build his own home, and get his mortgage paid off as quickly as possible so as not to have to make interest payments. In other words, he should build his house, pay for it, and live in it, and stay out of these financing schemes.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, there is one thought I would like to leave with you concerning the small-wage earner. I do not know how many honourable senators have spoken personally with people on small salaries who have undertaken the purchase of a house with a small down payment. Like most of my colleagues in the house, I was brought up the hard way and did not buy anything I could not pay for. But I have recently spoken to two or three men in the labouring class who had bought houses with $500 down and payment of the balance spread over 25 years. From my conversations with them I got a new slant on their outlook and point of view, one which I think is worth passing on to the house this afternoon.

These men told me that before buying a house they had rented at a cost of from $75 to $90 a month, and that when they were out of employment and could not meet the rent they had to move out. Now, they said, we have bought a house of our own at a cost of $11,000, with $500 down, and we have a monthly payment of $80, which includes the taxes. But, they went on to point out, if they were out of work, under the terms of the agreement of purchase they could not be dispossessed of their homes; furthermore, with a payment of even $80 a month, they were building up a little reserve for their future.

I pass along that bit of information to my honourable colleagues who have not taken the time to speak to workers in this class and find out what they have to do if they try to live like human beings. In the light of this information I have come to the conclusion that there is a great deal of merit in encouraging the building of homes for persons in the lower-income classes.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of the Master of the Royal Canadian Mint for the year ended December 31, 1959, pursuant to section 21 of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, Chapter 315, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report on the operations of the Exchange Fund Account for the year ended December 31, 1959, together with the report of the Auditor General on the audit of said account, pursuant to sections 26 and 27(2), respectively, of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, Chapter 315, R.S. 1952. (English text).

PRIVATE BILLS

INTERNATIONAL LOAN COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce reported that the committee had considered Bill S-23, respecting International Loan Company, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with one amendment:

Page 1, line 8: Strike out line 8 and substitute therefor the following:

"International Savings and Mortgage Corporation, but such".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think the report should be explained.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, the bill which was considered in committee and which we now have before us proposed to change the name of the International Loan Company, which was incorporated in 1913, and substitute therefor the name Federal Mortgage and Savings Corporation. It developed, however, in the consideration of the proposed new name by the Superintendent of Insurance, that there were two objections to the name, that the field was already occupied by other corporations. The name "International Savings and Mortgage Corporation" was suggested, and is now incorporated by way of amendment to the bill. This new name perpetuates the word "International", which was part of the original name of the company.

That is the only amendment proposed to the bill.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden reported that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, had considered Bill S-18, to incorporate Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate with four amendments:

1. Page 2, line 4: Strike out "for all or any" and substitute "in any one or more"
2. Page 3, lines 1 and 2: Strike out these lines and substitute:—

"(2) The Company shall not commence business in any of the other classes of insurance authorized by section 6 of this Act until"

3. Page 3, lines 44 and 45: Strike out these lines and substitute:—

"in this section the Company may transact business in any one or more of the classes of insurance authorized by section 6 of this"

4. Page 4, line 2: After the word "including" insert "in the liabilities".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, the bill with which this report deals follows a form which has been, I would say, generally used in the incorporation of insurance companies for a great many years. In the course of considering the bill I thought it contained some language which was not properly descriptive of the things that the company was attempting to do. I consulted the Superintendent of Insurance and our Law Clerk and we felt some changes were necessary in order that the language might more aptly describe what was to be done.

Let me illustrate. One of the amendments which you heard read is clause 7 (4) of the bill. That clause as originally drawn, and as contained in a great many similar bills, reads:

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in this section the Company may transact all or any of the classes of insurance business authorized by section . . .

Actually, that language is very loose, because what is transacted is business in any one or more of the classes of insurance. You do not transact any or all of the classes; it is the insurance business that you carry on.

Over the years the words have become misplaced so that the clause has to some extent become meaningless. We felt that it is never too late to make a change which is an improvement, even though the form may be regarded in some quarters as sacrosanct because it has been used for so long.

Then, in clause 7 (5) there is a definition of "surplus". That word is used frequently with reference to a formula for determining what business may be done, to what extent it may be done, and what money has to be in the till in order to do it. This amendment puts a dictionary definition on the word "surplus". We thought it was not clearly expressed in the bill, which stated:

> ..."surplus" means the excess of assets over liabilities, including the amount paid on account of capital stock and the reserve of unearned premiums...

What does that mean? What it intended to say was that "surplus" means the excess of assets over liabilities, including in the liabilities the amount paid on account of capital stock and the reserve of unearned premiums. We felt that the definition should state what was intended, and we approved an amendment to make it do so.

The first two amendments are concerned also with a change of language. With respect to the amendment to clause 6, on page 2, over the years the catch-all expression "for all or any" has been used and it has been included in this bill. What the draftsman really meant to say was "in any one or more". That makes sensible and easy reading.

There is one more amendment. The same explanation applies to it as to the amendment to clause 7 (4).

These amendments are not substantial in the sense that they change the purpose for which this company seeks incorporation. They are substantial in the sense that they give us a better form of bill for the purpose of reflecting what the company which is to be incorporated may do or may not do.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden, presented the following report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-2, to amend the Indian Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted.

Report adopted.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the following report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Elections Act:

> Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the report be adopted.

Report adopted.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 295 to 304, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE

FORECASTING OF STORMS IN ATLANTIC AREA

Hon. John A. McDonald inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

> Is it not possible for our Government, through its Meteorology Branch of the Department of Transport, to supply those living in the Atlantic area with more satisfactory forecasting of approaching storms?
> Last summer there was the gale that caused the loss of 35 fishermen off the New Brunswick coast and more recently the big storms of February 3 and March 9 that caused further loss of life and property. It is believed that the Department has a competent staff at Halifax, Moncton and Gander with a high percentage record of correct forecasts; but there must be a lack of weather information from the Atlantic coastal area that makes it impossible for them to forecast storms approaching our shores from the Atlantic Ocean.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, the answer to this inquiry is as follows:

> The Department of Transport is at present conducting a thorough investigation into this matter.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, last evening the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) addressed three questions to me with respect to the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group. I now have the answers.

The honourable gentleman's first question was:

I would like to know if a constitution has been prepared.

The answer is that no constitution has been prepared for this committee. However, at the first meeting of the committee, which took place at Washington in January 1959, sixteen basic rules were set up, and these are the rules which govern the conduct of the committee's meetings. At this late hour I do not propose to read the rules and I would ask permission of the Senate to have them made an appendix to today's Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See appendix "A" to today's Hansard, p. 403.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The next question asked by the honourable senator from Shelburne was:

Is there a report on the meeting which I understand took place last summer?

This committee met on June 25, 26, 27 and 28, 1959 at Montreal and Ottawa. The American section of the committee published a report which, with leave of the Senate, I would ask to have printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See appendix "B" to today's Hansard, p. 404-17.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand the Canadian counterpart of this report will be published within the next ten days or two weeks. When it is received it will be presented to the Senate.

The last question asked by the honourable gentleman from Shelburne was:

What plans are on foot for the next meeting, and what agenda is contemplated?

On February 8 a meeting took place in the city of New York between the Honourable Mark R. Drouin, Speaker of this chamber, the Honourable Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons, United States Senator George D. Aiken (Rep.) of the state of Vermont and Representative Edna F. Kelly (Dem.) of the state of New York. The agenda for the spring meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group was discussed, and it was agreed that the meeting will be held in Washington during the week following Easter, commencing on Wednesday, April 20. Among the topics the Group plans to discuss are defence and disarmament, boundary waters between the two countries, and common economic problems. Consideration is being given to a short trip to defence installations of interest to both countries. The members also considered a return visit to Canada by the American delegation in August. I have here the agenda for the forthcoming meeting, and with leave of the Senate I would ask that it too be made an appendix to Hansard.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See appendix "C" to today's Hansard, p. 418.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE TO REVIEW CANADA'S ROLE

On the Order:

Resuming the postponed debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Thorvaldson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.—(Honourable Senator Bradette).

Hon. Mr. Bradette: Honourable senators, I would ask that this order of business stand until tomorrow. In view of the fact that I have been waiting for some time to speak on this motion, I would ask further that, with leave of the Senate, it be placed on the Orders of the Day as the first item of business for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Agreed.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I would call attention to the fact that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will meet immediately after the Senate rises. The committee is to consider the National Housing Bill, and I hope all members of the committee will attend.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 402)

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

BASIC RULES FORMULATED AT FIRST MEETING

Washington, January 1959

Basic Rules:

(1) Proper press releases should be made to the press by appointed members of the committee.

(2) Individual members are at liberty to advise the press as to what proposals were discussed at various meetings, but without attribution.

(3) The Governments concerned could not be committed since this parliamentary group has no authority of any kind to commit the Government of either country to any of the conclusions reached at the meetings.

(4) The name of the association of the two groups would be Canada-United States Interparliamentary group. "Canada" and "United States" would be interchangeable, depending on which was the host country.

(5) There should be a continuing relationship of the legislators of both countries in order to discuss various problems which might arise from time to time.

(6) It was agreed that two meetings should be held yearly, one in each country.

(7) It was agreed that there should be a Steering Committee of 8 or 9 members from each country who would be permanent members of the committee, and for each meeting 10 to 15 legislators for each country would be added and rotated for the different meetings. The total number on the committee should be 24 from each country.

(8) Should either country desire to change the number of permanent members on the Committee, notification would be given to the other country.

(9) There should be a joint relationship between the staffs of the groups of the two countries in order to arrange schedules and make other necessary administrative arrangements.

(10) Appropriate staffs would be provided by each group as required.

(11) No country would have any experts sit in and take part in any of the discussions.

(12) The Canadian group would report to the Parliament of Canada; the United States group would report to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The Canadian group would keep the Department of External Affairs informed of all discussions and developments which take place, and the United States group would keep their State Department informed of all discussions and developments which would take place.

(13) Each country would pay the transportation of its members to the host country and would pay all hotel bills incurred in the host country. The host country would pay all other expenses incurred in connection with meetings held in the host country. All other expenses to be shared equally by the two countries.

(14) It was agreed that meetings would be held alternately in the two countries.

(15) It was agreed that the Agenda Committee should consist of the Joint Chairmen from the two countries, and further, that the Agenda for each meeting should be set up by the Agenda Committee. However, the Agenda might be added to by the other members of the group upon the giving of proper notice to the Agenda Committee.

Finally it was agreed that items not on the Agenda could be brought up at any general meeting of the Committee provided sufficient time remained to have a discussion of such items.

(16) It was suggested that the groups at the meetings might be divided into smaller parties on occasions and visit areas in the host country which were of specific interest to the members of the Committee.

FOREWORD

This report, as required by Public Law 42, 86th Congress, is herewith respectfully submitted. This report describes the important discussions of the second meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, held at Montreal and Ottawa, Canada, June 25-28, 1959, in which delegations from the House and Senate participated.

These meetings mark a significant beginning in what will be a continuing and sustained effort to promote mutual understanding and good will between Canada and the United States. The conclusions in this report emphasize: "As future meetings involve additional parliamentarians from both countries, the work of the group cannot fail to have a helpful effect on the deliberations of the legislative bodies of both countries in deliberations affecting United States-Canadian relations."

EDNA F. KELLY, Chairman.

JULY 29, 1959.

SECOND MEETING OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mrs. KELLY, from the delegation of the U.S. House of Representatives to the second meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, submitted the following

REPORT

[Pursuant to Public Law 42, 86th Cong.]

BACKGROUND

The United States and Canada share a common geography. Each of these nations has a common heritage, common interests, and common objectives in domestic, national, and international relations. Each of these sovereign nations has economic, diplomatic, and military problems which directly derive from their close association and from the threat to the free world of the Communist leaders of the Kremlin in their desire to enslave mankind. Their celebrated undefended common border, which is proof to the world of the ability of two nations to live peaceably with each other, nevertheless gives rise to many problems which test their capacity to resolve.

On the executive level of government between Canada and the United States, there has been and is a close relationship. The need for closer understanding on the legislative level has been brought to our attention in the Special Study Mission Report of Representative Brook Hays and Representative Frank M. Coffin[1] which was issued on May 5, 1958, following a study of the relations between the United States and Canada. In this report they recommended exploration of formal recognition of United States-Canadian relationships as a continuing area of interest by a subcommittee or a joint committee. They further recommended periodic visits to each country by the parliamentarians of the other.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker of Canada on June 8, 1958, endorsed the Hays-Coffin recommendation[2] and suggested the formation of an interparliamentary group. Following this suggestion, Senator Aiken of Vermont introduced Senate Resolution 359 in the U.S. Senate, authorizing a study of the problem of United States and Canadian parliamentary liaison. S. 359 passed the U.S. Senate on August 8, 1958. Following its passage, Senator Aiken visited Canada and undertook discussions with Speaker Michener of the Canadian House of Commons and Speaker Drouin of the Canadian Senate, looking toward the formation of an interparliamentary group and establishing the framework for such an organization. Subsequently, Representatives Hays and Coffin again visited Canada with the approval of the Speaker of the House and held further discussions with Canadian officials concerning the establishment of such a group.

The first meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group was held on January 9 and 10, 1959, in Washington.[3]

The delegation from the U.S. Senate was appointed by the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the delegation from the House of Representatives was appointed by the Speaker of the House.

At the January meeting there was discussion of topics of mutual concern to the United States and Canada, of agenda for future meetings, and of the procedural mechanisms which would be necessary.

On February 18, 1959, the Honourable Edna F. Kelly introduced House Joint Resolution 254, authorizing U.S. participation in the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, providing procedural guidelines and authorizing the appropriation of funds for the expenses of the U.S. delegations to meetings. The resolution passed the House of Representatives on April 15, 1959, and passed the Senate on June 1, 1959, with amendments. The resolution was approved by the President on June 11, 1959, thereby becoming Public Law 86-42.

At the January meetings an invitation was extended by the Canadian group to the U.S. delegation for meetings to be held in Montreal and Ottawa in connection with the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The invitation included 24 U.S. representatives.

The President of the Senate named the following as representatives of the Senate: Senator George Aiken (chairman), Senator J. W. Fulbright, Senator Theodore Francis Green, Senator Alexander Wiley, Senator Hubert Humphrey, Senator Homer Capehart, Senator Mike Mansfield, Senator Wayne Morse, Senator Frank Carlson, Senator Frank Church, Senator J. Allen Frear, and Senator E. L. (Bob) Bartlett; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives named the following Members to the House of Representatives group: Representative Edna F. Kelly (chairman), Representative Frank M. Coffin, Representative Chester E. Merrow, Representative Walter H. Judd, Representative Harold D. Cooley, Representative Russell V. Mack, Representative Wayne N. Aspinall, Representative Gerald R. Ford, Jr., Representative Sidney R. Yates, Representative Frank Ikard, Representative Leonor K. Sullivan, and Representative Thaddeus J. Dulski.

[3] The members of the Canadian delegation to this meeting were: Hon. Mark Drouin, Speaker of the Senate; Hon. William R. Brunt of Hanover, Ontario; Hon. Sydney John Smith of Kamloops, British Columbia; Hon. Roland Michener, Speaker of the House of Commons; Hon. Lionel Chevrier, Member for Laurier; Hazen Argue, Member for Assiniboia; William L. Houck, Member for Niagara Falls; Erik Nielsen, Member for Yukon, and Richard D. Thrasher, Member for Essex South.

The members of the U.S. delegation were: Senator George D. Aiken, Vermont; Senator Homer Capehart, Indiana; Senator Mike Mansfield, Montana; Senator Wayne L. Morse, Oregon; Representative Edna F. Kelly, New York; Representative Frank M. Coffin, Maine; Representative Chester E. Merrow, New Hampshire, and Representative Walter H. Judd, Minnesota.

These delegates constitute the steering group of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group.

The Canadian delegation was composed of the following: From the Canadian Senate: Speaker Mark R. Drouin, Hon. William R. Brunt, Hon. Lionel Choquette, Hon. Mrs. F. E. Inman, Hon. Norman Lambert, and Hon. Sydney J. Smith; from the House of Commons: Speaker Roland Michener, Miss Margaret Aitken, Mr. Richard A. Bell, Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse, Mr. Erik Nielsen, Mr. Arthur Smith, Mr. R. D. Thrasher, Mr. Egan Chambers, Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan, Mr. Paul Martineau, Mr. H. C. McQuillan, Mr. George R. Muir, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, Hon. Paul T. Hellyer, Mr. A. Denis, Mr. Alan A. Macnaughton, Mr. Gabriel Roberge, and Mr. Hazen Argue.

JUNE 25-28 MEETINGS

The second meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group took place in Montreal and Ottawa, June 25 through June 28. Meetings were held in Montreal on June 25 and 26, and in Ottawa on June 27. In addition to the above-mentioned delegates, Senators Dennis Chavez, Francis Case, Edmund S. Muskie, Winston L. Prouty, and Representatives Joseph W. Barr, Byron L. Johnson, and Robert R. Barry served as de facto alternates.

Two plenary sessions were held, one at the opening of the meetings and the other at the close. The remaining sessions were broken down into three sections each. Each section was composed of eight Canadian representatives and eight United States representatives. Each of the sections was devoted to one of the main agenda items; that is, (1) defence and defence production, (2) economic and trade problems, and (3) boundary waters. In each case, since the Canadians were the hosts to this meeting, a Canadian delegate served as chairman of the panel while two U.S. delegates were named for each meeting to serve as associate chairmen. The defence section was chaired by Speaker Drouin of the Canadian Senate. The associate chairmen for the United States were Representative Edna F. Kelly, and Senator George D. Aiken. The economic and trade problems section was chaired by Speaker Roland Michener of the Canadian House of Commons, while the associate chairmen for the United States were Senator Wayne Morse (Oregon) and Representative Walter H. Judd (Minnesota). The boundary-waters section was chaired by Mr. Erik Nielsen, member of Parliament, and the associate chairmen were Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (Minnesota) and Representative Frank M. Coffin (Maine).

Under the procedures adopted by the group at the first meeting in January each delegation is to make a report to its own legislative body. It was generally agreed at that time and reaffirmed at the June meetings that the delegations would not make recommendations to their respective legislatures. The reasoning behind this decision is that the group is primarily a forum for discussion of mutual problems and a mechanism whereby mutual understanding can be furthered. It is the purpose of these meetings to enable the legislators of the respective countries to become better acquainted with each other's problems and thereby to bring more knowledge and understanding to bear in the consideration of legislation which bears on relationships between the United States and Canada.

Similarly, the group followed the rules laid down at the January meetings with respect to chairmanships. Under this procedure the host country provides the chairman for each meeting, while the chairmen from the visiting delegation are jointly responsible for the responses of their respective delegations. Pursuant to understandings reached between the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives, future meetings in the United States will be presided over by a "chairman for the meeting." The "chairman for the meeting" will be the presiding officer, but he will be assisted by and equally responsible with the co-chairman from the other U.S. legislative body. The "chairmanship for the meeting" will rotate between the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives.

Each section made a report of its work to the final plenary session. These reports, which will not be published, endeavour to summarize the discussion and conclusions of the section. A press release (communiqué) was issued jointly by the co-chairmen of each delegation, at the conclusion of the final plenary session. Much of the material contained in the reports is contained in the press release, a copy of which is appended. (See p. 9.)

DEFENCE MATTERS

The group concluded that there is a broad measure of agreement between Canada and the United States on basic defence policies and on measures to implement that policy, and that there is an unusual degree of interdependence between Canada and the United States in the defense field arising from the problem of defending the North American Continent. There was general realization that the defence problems of the United States and Canada are so inextricably intertwined that, for all practical purposes, the two countries should, in this area, be considered as a single entity. The group stressed the need for legislators to have maximum access to defence information consistent with security considerations. This necessity arises from the responsibility of legislators to make decisions relating to defence expenditures.

The Canadian group placed particular emphasis on the desirability of utilizing Canadian engineering skills and industrial capacity in defence production, both in the production and in the research and development field. The U.S. representatives agreed that there was considerable merit to the Canadian point of view but stressed that implementation of such a policy must of necessity be subject to numerous practical considerations.

The group was agreed that there is a need for exchange of views between Canadian and U.S. legislators on matters of common concern in the defence field so that they may discharge their responsibilities more effectively. The group was of the opinion that the formation of the interparliamentary group is a welcome development in this area.

The group discussed numerous other topics including the need for manned aircraft in the air defence of the continent, problems arising from the stationing of U.S. troops in Canada, control and storage of nuclear warheads, development of the Alaskan-United States Highway and channels of communication between the United States and Canadian Governments on defence matters.

ECONOMIC AND TRADE MATTERS

The section on economic and trade problems discussed problems between the United States and Canada arising from trade in oil, gas, uranium, lead and zinc, copper, nickel, iron ore and aluminum.

Oil.—The Canadians expressed satisfaction that the United States had exempted Canada from the mandatory import controls on crude oil and expressed the hope that the exemption in favor of Canada would continue. Concern was expressed by the Canadians that the U.S. decision might be frustrated by administrative regulations. In the opinion of the U.S. members, the exemption in favor of Canada was an important precedent. The view was expressed by the U.S. members that there seemed to be no foreseeable probability of a reimposition of import controls on Canadian oil. The Canadians also urged the removal of the current 10 cents per barrel import duty on Canadian oil which, in their opinion, places Canadian producers at a serious economic disadvantage. The U.S. members, however, pointed out that the present oil surplus creates serious economic difficulties in some parts of the United States. There was general agreement that the oil problem must be considered on a continental basis.

The U.S. delegation pointed out that Canadian oil can move economically into certain portions of the United States. They added, however, that in the event oil supplies were to be imperiled by political disturbances in other oil-producing regions of the world, it might be essential to move U.S. oil to Europe, thereby creating an even larger American market for Canadian oil. In the opinion of some U.S. delegates this is a security factor which cannot be overlooked, and it must be taken into consideration in the oil supply pattern.

Natural gas.—The section discussed the difficulties attending efforts to export Canadian natural gas to deficiency areas in the United States. The principal difficulty is the delay in securing administrative approval for such transactions. The Canadians suggested that the Federal Power Commission be authorized to admit as evidence material which is earlier submitted to and accepted by the Canadian Energy Board. Such a process would reduce the time for administrative decision and would simplify the administrative procedure.

Uranium.—Current overproduction of uranium creates serious economic difficulties in both the United States and Canada. The Canadian members expressed the hope that the United States would continue to buy substantial quantities of Canadian uranium even after the expiration of the present long-term contracts, most of which come to an end in 1962 and 1963. The Canadians pointed out that Canadian production of uranium had been expanded at the request of the United States when there was a deficiency in uranium. Now that there is an oversupply, the Canadians believe that their producers should not be foreclosed from the market.

The U.S. delegates pointed out that the United States and Canada each contributed what they had in order to meet a common threat during the period when uranium production was being expanded. Canada contributed its raw materials, while the United States contributed its processing capacity, weapons know-how, and capital.

Some members on the U.S. side suggested as a solution the scaling down of quantities currently being delivered under the Canadian long-term contracts with a concurrent extension of these contracts into the future. The problems connected with the marketing of uranium were discussed at considerable length.

The U.S. delegates alluded to the worldwide power shortage. In view of this power shortage the long-term prospects for uranium production are good. It is inevitable that uranium will become a source of large-scale power and will thereby help meet the shortage. Consequently, in their view the long-term prospects for Canadian uranium are good.

Lead and zinc.—The Canadians expressed concern over the recent imposition of import quotas on lead and zinc by the United States. Fear was expressed for the future of Canadian producers if import quotas are maintained. The Canadian members also forcefully contended that the U.S. restrictions on lead and zinc imports were contrary to the obligations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Some U.S. members suggested that an alternative method might be a combination of production subsidies and of a mandatory increase in the tariff. The group was in general agreement, however, that lead and zinc problems should be considered on a continental basis and from a long-term point of view.

It was the general consensus that in the long run economic factors are such that the Canadian mines should be able to sell lead and zinc profitably to the United States.

Copper.—The Canadian members were apprehensive of the possibility that import controls might be introduced on imports of copper into the United States. Apprehension was also expressed that the copper market may be further affected by sales from U.S. strategic stockpiles. The U.S. delegation expressed the view that there was little likelihood that copper would be released from the stockpiles since there would be no substantial economic advantages to the United States from such action.

Iron ore, aluminum, and nickel.—Iron ore: The U.S. delegates pointed out that the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway may very well slow down the utilization and sale of low-grade U.S. ores since the great U.S. deposits of high-grade ore are fairly well depleted. Considerable expense was incurred by the United States in the development of the lower grade ores. Now that relatively high-grade Canadian ore is available, the U.S. delegation believes that some steps should be taken to insure utilization of the U.S. deposits. The Canadians are disturbed at the growing competition from Chilean and Brazilian mines developed with U.S. capital.

Aluminum: The Canadian members pointed out that Canadian production of aluminum was only 55 percent of capacity while U.S. production is being maintained at approximately 85 or 90 percent of productive capacity. The Canadians suggested that the United States should buy more Canadian fabricated aluminum products.

Nickel: The recent entry into production of U.S. mines in Cuba has caused concern in Canada. The Canadians are also disturbed that unrefined Cuban nickel enters the United States free of duty while Canadian exports in the form of refined metal are subject to duty.

General considerations.—It was generally recognized that marketing problems are similar on both sides of the border and that they should be considered on a long-term continental basis.

Some of the U.S. delegation was of the opinion that the long-term prospects for Canadian minerals and sources of energy are good.

Whatever the immediate hardships suffered by the Canadian extractive industries, Canada does have huge reserves of minerals and energy sources which are not in short supply when viewed on a long-range basis. Furthermore, Canadian production will be more efficient than production in other areas of the world. Consequently, in their opinion the long-term prospects are in favor of the Canadian producers.

The suggestion was made that a possible solution might be the establishment of a continental common market between Canada and the United States for basic minerals. It was further suggested that this possibility might be extended to all Western Hemisphere countries.

Mention was made of the initiative taken by the United States in establishing an Inter-American Development Bank.

BOUNDARY WATERS MATTERS

The group, meeting as it did in connection with the dedication of the St. Lawrence seaway, took adequate notice of the unprecedented achievement of both countries which made possible the completion of one of the world's greatest engineering projects.

This achievement and indeed these meetings are a good omen of further co-operation and the achievement of satisfactory solutions to the many problems in this area.

The group agreed that the jurisdiction of the section on boundary waters should include practically all boundary matters, such as communications, the utilization and conservation of water resources, recreation, wilderness areas, etc. It was further agreed that boundary waters should be conserved and utilized on a basis which would be fair to both countries and in such a manner as to confer maximum benefits on both countries.

The group agreed that unilateral action should not be taken in legislative or administrative matters affecting the interests of both countries without entering into discussions aimed at reconciling divergent views.

It was agreed that the steering group of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group should explore the adequacy of existing bodies and procedures having jurisdiction over boundary-waters problems, specifically the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence seaway, and report its findings with suggestions to the group.

The group concluded that it would be desirable for the International Joint Commission to finalize its plans for the joint development of the Columbia River so that the optimum development of the Columbia Basin might get underway as soon as possible.

A presentation was made to the section on the problem of the Chicago diversion and the group expressed its hope that consultation between the United States and Canada on this subject might lead to constructive proposals. The group recommended that the steering committee of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group collect all existing reports, studies, and other data relating to problems of pollution, recreation, conservation, power utilization, industrial development, port facilities, and navigation in the Great Lakes area. It was recommended to the steering committee that it review and evaluate this material looking toward the making of further suggestions at the next meeting of he steering committee.

The group noted with interest the pending economic feasibility studies of the Passamaquoddy tidal power project and noted the possibility that the study may indicate that mutual benefits will accrue to areas in both countries if the power could be made available. Mention was also made of the preservation of a Minnesota wilderness area and the development of mutually beneficial electric power grids along the international border.

The group noted that many of the irritations between the United States and Canada are frequently the product of fundamental differences which exist between our two systems of government.

CONCLUSION

The House section of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group draws the following conclusions from this second meeting:

1. The promise of fruitful deliberations held out by the preliminary meeting in January was completely fulfilled.

2. The discussions, both in the three working groups and in the plenary sessions, showed on the parts of the participants from both nations a moderation and sensitivity to the problems of the other nation that made possible to a remarkable degree the outlining of substantial areas of agreement, without prejudice to the positions of either nation on controversial issues.

3. The ample opportunity afforded for full discussion of divergent views resulted in new knowledge and understanding on the part of all delegates.

4. As future meetings involve additional parliamentarians from both countries, the work of the group cannot fail to have a helpful effect on the deliberations of the legislative bodies of both countries in deliberations affecting United States-Canadian relations. In order to take advantage of the experience gained by participants in this second meeting, future delegations should include a substantial number of those who have participated in previous meetings. Such a step will insure continuity of knowledge and interest.

5. The informal and workmanlike manner in which the sessions were conducted made a favorable impression upon the Canadian press and public. A sensitive editorial in the Ottawa Journal on June 30 reflected the impression in these words:

> We do not at all expect that because of these Ottawa-Montreal meetings, with U.S. Congressmen and Canadian MP's talking frankly, honestly and realistically about common problems, that from here on Washington is going to do everything we would like it to do about our uranium or our oil or about other things which concern us. What we may expect, though, is that when such questions come before the Congress there will be quite a few there who will have a better understanding of Canada's position. (See appendix, p. 11.)

6. In like manner it may reasonably be anticipated that problems affecting the United States and questions affecting U.S. and Canadian relations will receive more sympathetic consideration and understanding in the Canadian Parliament.

7. The atmosphere and content of the discussions and their impact on the participants and the public confirm, in our opinion, the judgment of the Congress in passing House Joint Resolution 254.

APPENDIX

COMMUNIQUE

The Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, consisting of twenty-four congressional and twenty-four parliamentary representatives from the two countries, has met for the past three days in Montreal and Ottawa. The two-day session in Montreal had been timed to coincide with the formal opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which all the delegates attended.

At a plenary meeting, the Group agreed that it was not its function to make recommendations as a body. Each national delegation will report as it thinks fit to its respective authorizing bodies.

Three committees were created to examine the main items of the agenda for the talks, as agreed in advance, under the following headings:

(1) Joint defence arrangements and problems, and co-operation in defence production.

(2) Economic and strategic significance of production and trade in minerals such as oil and gas, base metals, uranium and iron.

(3) Boundary Waters.

The Committee on Defence and Defence Production examined the basic factors in Canada-United States defence relationship. It noted with satisfaction some of the results of Canada-United States defence co-operation, as for example the establishment of radar-warning lines and North American Air Defence Command, and recognized the significant contribution these joint efforts were making to the defence of the peoples and resources of the continent. There was complete agreement that the best hope of avoiding a nuclear war rests in the collective determination of the free world to resist aggression and in the maintenance of strong deterrent forces. In this context, Canada-United States co-operation in air defence assumed special importance.

In the field of defence and defence production, it was recognized that there is a unique degree of interdependence, requiring the best use of the resources of the two countries with the minimum duplication of effort. Special attention was given to the question of what constituted a proper sharing of defence costs in the common effort.

The delegates noted that the missile threat to North America is increasing and that increased attention must be given to that threat. There could, however, be no question of dispensing with anti-bomber defences in the immediate future. The delegates were confident of the ability of United States and Canadian scientists and technicians to surpass Soviet achievements in the missile field.

It was recognized that adequate defence planning could be accomplished only by means of regular consultations, at all levels of government. Due weight must be given in such consultations to political and economic, as well as military, factors.

As it is the responsibility of legislators to make decisions relating to defence expenditures, the Group stressed the need for Congress and Parliament to have the maximum access to defence information consistent with security considerations.

Discussions in the working committee on strategic minerals took into account some of the major factors underlying Canada-United States economic relations, including Canada's high degree of dependence on external trade and the economic implications of the concept of integrated North American defence.

In their consideration of the oil question, the Canadian delegation expressed satisfaction at the recent exemption of Canadian oil from the United States mandatory import controls, and the hope that as a result Canadian crude oil would have access to the United States market on a freely competitive basis. With respect to natural gas, it was recognized that the major problem centred around the delays in processing applications for licences. The view was put forward that through co-operation between the Federal Power Commission of the United States and the National Energy Board shortly to be established in Canada, this problem might be overcome.

The Committee's discussions ranged over a wide variety of base metals. There was recognition that the problems in many minerals were similar in nature on both sides of the border, and had their origin in a temporary situation of world-wide over-production. The problems with respect to the marketing of uranium, lead and zinc, are particularly acute. It was thought that in order to control and limit the harmful consequences of the current over-abundance of certain minerals, the problem of marketing these commodities should be considered on a continental basis and from a long-term point of view.

The Working Group on Boundary Waters examined a number of matters in an atmosphere of cordiality and frankness. It was noted that, in the case of Chicago diversion and the regulation of pilotage on the Great Lakes, intergovernmental consultations had either been proposed or were in progress and the hope was expressed that these consultations would lead to constructive proposals that would prove mutually satisfactory. The Group noted that industrial development and seaway traffic in the Great Lakes region will likely give rise to complex problems in such fields as pollution, recreation, conservation, power utilization, industrial location, port facilities and navigation. These problems will be of mutual concern to the United States and to Canada; to states as well as to provinces. Further study of these problems was indicated. In so far as the Columbia River was concerned, the Committee reported its satisfaction at recent progress made by the International Joint Commission and hoped that, before long, the Commission would be making its recommendations to governments so that the governments concerned would be enabled to conclude arrangements permitting the development of the Basin to get under way at an early date. Such matters as those relating to the Minnesota wilderness area and the Passamaquoddy Development were introduced as possibly meriting further consideration at a future meeting.

The Group as a whole in the course of general discussions examined the origin of some current misunderstandings and noted that some at least of these might be attributable to the different forms of government. It was considered that much could be accomplished by encouraging legislators of the two countries to consult with and seek the advice of members who have had the opportunity of the mutual exchanges of views which the meetings of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group provide.

OTTAWA, June 27, 1959.

[Editorial from Ottawa Journal, June 30, 1959]

WHEN SENSIBLE NEIGHBOURS SIT DOWN TO CHAT

One of our bad habits of recent years has been to expect too much from international conferences, and it may well be that we are repeating the error in the case of that Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group which met here this week-end.

However, there were things about this gathering which made it different.

In the first place, these ordinary politicans of the two countries—for that is what they were—did not get together in a forest of microphones under TV lights, did not have a horde of "experts" at their elbows or on their backs, and were not chained to the propaganda or rigid policies of their respective governments. Instead, they just sat down informally to have a chat about the problems of their respective countries about how such problems flowed over from one country to the other, and about the practical difficulties involved for politicians who could not ignore easily pressures from constituents.

This was invaluable. For there is far too much assumption in Canada that Canadian problems are the only problems, that politicians in Washington should always be ready to do what we want them to do. We do not seem to understand, judging by a lot of what is said and written, that American politicians have their problems, too, and that often the things which we ask them to do are precisely the things which their own constituents insist they must not do.

It is when such things are understood, when problems are properly identified, that conferences get a chance to succeed.

We do not at all expect that because of these Ottawa-Montreal meetings, with U.S. Congressmen and Canadian MP's talking frankly, honestly and realistically about common problems that from here on Washington is going to do everything we would like it to do about our uranium or our oil or about other things which concern us. What we may expect, though, is that when such questions come before the Congress there will be quite a few there who will have a better understanding of Canada's position.

That, in itself, should be a considerable gain.

Prayers.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate of the receipt of a message from the House of Commons stating that the name of Mr. Herridge had been substituted for that of Mr. Martin (Timmins) on the Joint Committee on the Restaurant.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I table the following documents:

Report of Park Steamship Company Limited, for the year ended December 31, 1959, pursuant to section 85(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter 116, R.S. 1952. (English text).

Report of the Department of Public Works, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 34 of the Public Works Act, Chapter 228, R.S. 1952. (French text).

Report of the Proceedings under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, Chapter 269, R.S. 1952. (French text).

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. M. Aseltine presented Bill S-26, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. William R. Brunt: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that a great emergency exists with respect to one of the amendments proposed in this bill, and because it is imperative that the bill be passed through the Senate and the other place and given royal assent by March 31, I am asking for leave of the Senate to proceed with the second reading now.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, this is a rather remarkable proceeding. It has been known for months that this bill would be introduced. Why does it come to us now, on the 24th day of March, with our being told it is a matter of great urgency and that it is very important to have it approved by Parliament, and royal assent secured, before the end of the month? I, for one, wish to protest against this. If there is an urgency, why was that urgency not taken note of by the Government weeks ago, so that we might have an opportunity to discuss, consider and examine into what is a very important bill? I really must object to this procedure. On two or three previous occasions when legislation has been brought here second reading has been asked for at once in order to meet some extraordinary situation. Frankly, I do not think that this is treating the Senate with the courtesy it deserves.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I did everything possible to have the bill introduced here before today. If I have not the consent of the house, I cannot proceed with the second reading.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: I agree with all that has been said by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). It does seem unusual that this bill did not reach us before March 24, when the Government has known since January 14 that the licences which the bill proposes to extend were due to expire on March 31. I do not know what caused the delay, but for some reason or other the bill was not brought in here until today. However, while I agree with everything that the honourable senator from Churchill said, I realize we are faced with the problem that a number of licences—I do not know how many—will expire on the 31st of this month unless this bill is passed by both houses and given royal assent by that date.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Are you sure the licences cannot be extended?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Under the present act the Government has no power to extend them.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about the National Energy Board? Could it not extend the licences?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As the act now stands there is no power vested in the National Energy Board to extend the licences.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They could be extended by order in council, could they not, under the National Energy Board Act?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, but that cannot be done now, and that is the problem with which the house is faced. Are we going to tell all these companies that they will have to be out of business until the bill goes through both houses? It will be almost impossible to do otherwise unless the bill is considered here this afternoon. Whether the Senate will feel disposed to give the bill second reading this afternoon is another question. I have not had an opportunity to give full consideration to the bill, but from what I do know about it I would agree to the Government's proceeding with second reading this afternoon. If the Senate deemed it advisable to give second reading this afternoon, I for one would insist that the bill go to a committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I saw this bill for the first time only a moment ago. Before ruling on application for licences the National Energy Board may have to hold hearings, and so on, but I understand it has power to grant or extend licences and that it is its duty to exercise that power. However, the board has given us notice that it can't do it, or thinks it can't do it, or won't do it, or something of that kind. I am in a difficult position because of not knowing enough about the situation. We are told that unless we pass this bill the export of power from Canada to the United States will cease on April 1. That would be a disaster. We just simply cannot allow that to happen.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It won't.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It may be that we should criticize the Government or the National Energy Board or somebody else for putting us in the present position, but it is perfectly obvious that we cannot permit the law to fail and the export of power that has been going on for years to cease. I know something about that as a former member of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

I suggest that the honourable senator who is sponsoring this bill (Hon. Mr. Brunt) be permitted to tell us the story. I should like to hear his speech right now, and then I might be in a better position than I am now to judge whether second reading should be given today. I should like to hear the speech of the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Agreed.

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: It seems to me that the point raised by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) is very reasonable. This house is entitled to at least a clear explanation by the honourable senator who is sponsoring the bill (Hon. Mr. Brunt) as to why there was such a delay in bringing it here.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I cannot give that.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: He said that he had tried to get it here earlier. I would like an explanation as to why his efforts were unsuccessful. I think we are entitled to that.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I cannot tell honourable senators why the bill did not come over here before this. I did everything within my power to get it here, and it did not come until today.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I do not think that is good enough, honourable senators. The sponsor of the bill is a representative of the Government, and I think we are entitled to a clear explanation. If the honourable senator has not the information, he should get it, and take us into his confidence as to why there has been this delay.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Honourable members, may I point out that not only this piece of legislation but many others have been delayed in coming to the Senate because of obstruction in the other house. We are being blocked on everything. For instance, the divorce bills are being blocked by two members of the other house who are holding up that whole business.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: But this is a Senate bill.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, as far as I am concerned I am not going to veto second reading of the bill today—that is, I am not going to request that it stand over, as any senator has the right to do—but I do wish to suggest again to the Government, through the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), that it endeavour hereafter to get its legislation over here promptly. This is not the first occasion on which this kind of thing has happened.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It does not happen very often. I do the best I can.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do my best to make it possible for every bill that comes here to receive full consideration, and I am sure that this one will be thoroughly considered before it is passed. It just happens that, in my opinion, the National Energy Board has been so busy dealing with applications for licences and that kind of thing that this matter of the expiry date has been overlooked. If we do not proceed with second reading of the bill today we can sit tomorrow and Monday and Tuesday, and give the bill all the consideration that honourable senators want to give it.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Why not sit Friday and Monday?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Let me say at once that I have no intention whatever of suggesting that any fault lies with the Leader of the Government forces in this house (Hon. Mr. Aseltine).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am quite certain that he has done everything he could to get the bill here before this but the Government has the responsibility for directing the business of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I thought I was doing pretty well in having the bill initiated in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Certainly you were. But it is rather extraordinary that not once before, but several times, we have been presented with important legislation and told that we must get it through immediately. That is what I object to, and I hope this will be the last occasion on which such a protest will have to be made.

Hon. William M. Wall: Honourable senators, it has now been possible for me to read this bill for the first time. Section 2 amends section 99 of the National Energy Board Act by adding a paragraph, which says:

> A licence for the exportation of power . . . shall . . . be deemed to expire on the 31st day of December, 1961, unless on any earlier day a licence for the exportation of power . . . becomes effective . . .

And section 3, of the bill provides:

> Sections 1 and 2 shall come into force on the day this act is assented to, except

And notice this interesting exception:

> that if that day is after the 30th day of March, 1960, section 2 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of March, 1960.

That is a very interesting retroactive aspect, which I think deserves the attention of honourable senators in view of the fact that it is now being stated that this bill must be passed by March 31.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I say just another word? I think we ought to give the bill second reading today, and certainly we should hear what the honourable senator has to say.

But I rise now to protest again the suggestion by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that if we do not give it second reading today he will hold us here over the week-end. Such a threat has been made in the past, and I have protested against it. I am ready to stay here and do the business of the house as long as the house remains in session, but I do not think there should be held over our heads the threat that we have to stay here unless we give consent to second reading today. I will give no consent under those circumstances, where the consideration of public business is involved.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think I said we could sit tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Your suggestion was that if we did not give consent today we would have to sit here tomorrow and not be able to go home. I do not like such a suggestion.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, may I say a word? This house has got into the habit of not sitting on Fridays and Mondays. I hesitate to say what I am about to say, but I well remember when we used to sit five days a week, and when we had no business to do we adjourned for two weeks. That is what happened when I was sitting on the other side of the chamber, and I was there a lot longer than I have been on the Government side.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You will be back.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The time was when, if I did not get up and fight about adjournments on Fridays and Mondays, I was afraid I would lose my job.

I appreciate what the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is trying to do. I know very little about the job of the Leader of the Government in this house, but I do know something about the business of the Leader of the Opposition. Let me say that I do not think the Leader of the Government in this instance is trying to be harsh. Throughout the session he has adjourned the house regularly from Thursday until the following Tuesday. That arrangement is of no advantage to me. It just means that I have to hang around Ottawa on Friday and Monday and pretend to be busy. All I do is write letters to people in Winnipeg and elsewhere. Sometimes I go to see my friend the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). He does not call me the junior senator from Winnipeg when I call on him, although in the house he sometimes forgets that I am the senior senator from that city. I admit, of course, that the junior senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Wall) does a lot more talking and is a good deal more experienced and brainy than I am, but I am still the senior senator from Winnipeg.

I do not care whether this bill goes through today or goes over to Monday, but I do not think we should lay any charge against the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). I have appealed to him two or three times, when there were bills before the house in which I was interested, not to adjourn on Fridays and Mondays, and he has said "I will think about it." But, in spite of the pull I thought I had with him, he never did anything to keep the house sitting on those days.

The honourable senator from Churchill has gone down a little in my estimation when he has called me the junior senator from Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would remind him that I have been here for 25 years, and that is a long time.

My suggestion is that we give the bill before the house second reading this afternoon and postpone further consideration until Tuesday night.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We could have a meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee on Tuesday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The Leader of the Government is almost always here, and when he is not he has a very efficient staff to look after his office. I sometimes think his secretary is better than he is. All we need do is let her know what witnesses we want called before a committee and she will take care of the matter. We can get to the bottom of any objection anyone may have to what is being done—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Nobody is criticizing the Leader of the Government over this matter.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Very well. I agree that we should adjourn today, but if that doesn't suit you I am willing to sit tomorrow. I am sure some honourable senators have made arrangements for the weekend and we do not want to interfere with them. If I lived in Toronto or Montreal and had a chance to go home for the weekend, I would complain bitterly about being forced to sit tomorrow. I would be glad to return to Winnipeg for two or three days on the weekend, if that were possible.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am willing to do anything that the public business requires.

Hon. Mr. Haig: What I am trying to say is that there is no intention on this side to deliberately upset the present practice. Therefore, I urge the house to give this bill second reading today and have it considered in committee Tuesday afternoon. If the Leader of the Government will make that suggestion, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will consent to it, and we can have our meeting on Tuesday. In the meantime, if anyone indicates that he wishes to have certain witnesses before the committee, I am sure the Leader of the Government will have them called for Tuesday. On the other hand, if the committee were to sit tomorrow a good many senators would not be here.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, may I give an explanation of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: You should move second reading first.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. Brunt: With leave, I move second reading of the bill.

Honourable senators, despite everything that has been said here this afternoon, I maintain that this is a very simple bill, which proposes two amendments to the National Energy Board Act. The first amendment deals with section 61 of the act. This section relates to tolls to be charged for transmission of gas. There is no emergency about this section; it is with respect to the next section to be amended—section 99—that an emergency arises. Section 61, as it now reads, provides for the charging of tolls where gas is transmitted by any company through its line from any place within a province to any place outside the province. Therefore, it would seem that according to the present section 61 the National Energy Board would be excluded from regulating or fixing tolls to be charged on gas which is produced, transmitted and sold within the province of production.

This section as it is now worded raises the question as to who would regulate the tolls to be charged for the transmission of gas which is produced and used entirely within the boundaries of a province. This amendment, therefore, proposes to delete from section 61 of the National Energy Board Act the following words:

> ...from any place within a province to any place outside the province...

With the elimination of these words there will be no doubt that the National Energy Board will have power to fix tolls for the transmission of gas, no matter where the transmission of such gas takes place.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would that include transmission to the United States?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand so, yes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is pretty serious.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: How do you mean?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is a most controversial proposition.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The board can fix tolls as far as the border of Canada only.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then it would have nothing to do with tolls for transmission outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understood you to answer the honourable senator's question by saying it could fix tolls on gas going outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. The board's rulings apply to transmission of gas to the border only. No board in this country has a right to fix tolls on gas that is transmitted in the United States. We have no Canadian pipe lines that are transmitting gas in the United States. All our pipe lines stop at the Canadian-American border. The American pipe lines take over from there, and their proper authorities fix the tolls that are to be charged by the American pipe lines.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would this mean that the National Energy Board can control the rates on gas sold in Canada as well as on that going to the border?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right. It means the board can control gas sold anywhere in Canada and at the Canadian border.

Hon. Mr. Horner: What about a wholly-owned Canadian pipe line that passes through the United States?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I am not aware of any.

Hon. Mr. Horner: What about the one that goes down to Sarnia?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is an oil line. The Canadian line stops at the border. The oil is then taken over by an American company and brought to Sarnia, where it is again taken over by a Canadian company. We in this country cannot fix tolls for transmission of gas or oil anywhere in the United States. The power to do that belongs exclusively to the Government of the United States.

Hon. Mr. Reid: This is with respect to tolls on gas only?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, gas only.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask a question for purposes of clarification? As I understand it, the proposed amendment to section 61 would remove a restriction in the present law. Under the law as it stands the control by the National Energy Board is confined to gas moving "from any place within a province to any place outside the province"?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: And the deletion of the words "from any place within a province to any place outside the province" will remove the restriction?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is right. At present the National Energy Board has no power to fix a toll for transmission of gas between two points within a province. Deletion of those words from section 61 would remove all doubt as to the power of the National Energy Board to fix tolls.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about the British North America Act? Are we not infringing on the power of the province if we fix rates to be charged in the province?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I always understood transportation was a matter within the jurisdiction of the dominion Government, under the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Only when it extends beyond the limits of a province.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That question is one reason why I insist the bill must go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Yes, I am going to move that it be sent to committee.

Hon. Mr. Wall: Is it not within the jurisdiction of the utility board of a province to have something to say about the tolls charged exclusively within the province? I concur in what the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has suggested, that we appear to be moving from a strictly interprovincial matter into a provincial matter. Is not that so?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I think we can get the answer to that question when the bill is being considered in committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator allow another question with respect to clause 1 of the bill? In view of what has been said, there is in my mind, at least, and possibly in the minds of a good many senators, a question as to whether or not the National Energy Board has authority to deal with a matter which seems to concern property and civil rights within a province. I think what the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity asked may come to this: Is clause 1 within the jurisdiction of Parliament? The second question is whether there is going to be conflict between a provincial regulating authority in respect of the transmission of gas within the province and the regulatory authority in the National Energy Board in respect of that gas within the province. I quite agree that this is a matter for the committee. The law officers who have drafted this legislation probably had to consider this. As the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Brunt) has said, this is not one of the emergency features of the bill, but it is certainly something that at first blush calls for some explanation. I think we would all be glad to have evidence on it before the committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I make myself clear? I did not say that this would interfere as between two provinces. I asked the question. It strikes me that it may interfere, or it may not. Some recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada are to the effect that carriage by a carrier of either passengers or freight—by an interprovincial organization—from one point in a province to another point within the province, is within the jurisdiction of the dominion.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is the New Brunswick case.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, the Winner case, reported in (1954) D.L.R., 657.

For instance, if a pipe line has been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, then the transmission of gas in that line from one point in a province to another point within that province would be within dominion jurisdiction. Until one knows the whole circumstances, it is difficult to say whether or not the change proposed by this clause would cause argument between the jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The second amendment in the bill deals with section 99 of the National Energy Board Act. Under that section all licences for exportation of power which were issued under the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act are deemed to have been issued under the National Energy Board Act. I understand that all such licences for the exportation of electric power will expire on the 31st day of March next.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Did I understand the honourable gentleman to say that this relates to electric power only?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The first amendment relates to transmission of gas, and the second amendment—the one I am dealing with now —relates to exportation of electric power.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As I have said, all licences for exportation of electric power will expire on March 31 next. This amendment would extend the date of expiry to December 31, 1961. I understand that consideration was given to the making of an application to the National Energy Board to have the matter of the renewal of extension of these licences heard by the board, but owing to the number of applications that were being heard by the board with respect to exportation of gas from this country to the country south of us, the board did not have time to deal with the matter of renewing licences for exportation of power. It is felt by all concerned that if all the licences are extended to December 31, 1961 the board will have ample opportunity to deal with all applications and be able to renew the licences on what it considers to be proper terms.

Honourable senators, those are the two proposed amendments. As I have said, the second is the one in respect to which an emergency exists.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have nothing to add at this time. I had an opportunity of seeing this bill before the house met. I received a copy of it at noon today and I spent the noon hour going over it. All the questions which I was going to bring to the attention of the house have already been raised by other honourable senators. I feel that at this time we cannot get any further information on the matters on which I wanted information and, so far as I am concerned, I will approve second reading of the bill today but will insist, as I have already said, that the bill be sent to committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask one further question of the sponsor? Why extend the licences to December 31, 1961? Surely the board would have time to consider applications by December 31, 1960. We are being asked to extend the licences for something like twenty-one months, which is a long time.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The board has asked that the date of expiration of the licences be fixed as of December 31, 1961, so that it will have ample opportunity to deal with these matters. Other applications will be coming before the board with respect to exportation of gas from this country, and I think there is a feeling they should have priority. Another point is that in the past the licences have been renewed from year to year, and I think it is the intention and hope of the board to have full hearings at which it will go into all the facts, and afterwards possibly renew the licences for a two- or three-year period rather than ask the companies to come back each year to get what one might consider to be an almost automatic renewal.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, everyone should remember that last year it took time for us to approve of the National Energy Board Bill. Some very valuable amendments were made by the Senate, and this could not have been done in one day. It required some time, thought and reflection to come to a satisfactory drafting of the legislation. I would have no objection now to extending the licences, but I would not like any change to be made in the law without further consideration.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon Mr. Choquette): Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Brunt, seconded by the Honourable Senator

Aseltine, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure to adopt this motion?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brunt, bill referred to Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PRIVATE BILL

WABUSH LAKE RAILWAY COMPANY LIMITED AND ARNAUD RAILWAY COMPANY— AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Harold Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-24, respecting Wabush Lake Railway Company Limited and Arnaud Railway Company:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. Choquette): Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): With leave, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

NATIONAL HOUSING BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-53, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954:

Your committee recommend that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. Choquette): Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: With leave, I move that the report be now adopted.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-53 to amend the National Housing Act, 1954, and had directed him to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

Report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker (Hon. Mr. Choquette): Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before I move the usual motion with respect to adjournment, I wish to draw to the attention of honourable senators the fact that they have had the final supplementary estimates in their hands for some time, and that these are being considered in the other place now. If the Senate adjourns over the weekend, as usual, I shall have to throw myself on the mercy of the house once more so that next Tuesday evening we can commence consideration of these estimates. There will also be an interim supply bill, I presume, at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before unanimous consent is given to proceed with the interim supply bill and the supplementary estimates bill on Tuesday, I want to make it abundantly clear that so far as I am concerned I shall not necessarily agree to second reading of the bills on Tuesday. I will consent to our proceeding with consideration of the bills, but what will happen to them after that, I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is what I intended to convey, that by consent we would commence consideration of the bills.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 29, 1960, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Wishart McL. Robertson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with I wish to thank the honourable senator from Hanover (Hon. Mr. Brunt) for the complete information which he placed on Hansard in answer to questions I directed to him with respect to the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group. May I suggest that perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) might give consideration to furnishing an opportunity to debate the basic rules of the Interparliamentary Group or anything else arising out of my questions?

In the meantime, I wish to ask the honourable senator a question on one specific point. I notice that 24 Members of Parliament are to go to Washington early in April. How many members will be from the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Six from the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Can my honourable friend tell me how the six will be divided between the two parties?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand it has been the custom to divide them equally, three and three.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will the six members include his Honour the Speaker of this House or will he be an additional member?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: The six will include His Honour the Speaker, that is, if His Honour is selected as one of the six.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will he be considered as coming from our side?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: May I ask if the same rule as between the parties is followed in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not believe so.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I would expect not.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think in the other house they are divided according to representation in the house. If that practice were followed here it would result in a different proportion from this side.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: And why not?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Who decided the division of three and three?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: As far as I know, the two Speakers met and decided on the division.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I am speaking of the delegation from the Senate only.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: Honourable senators, I am a member of the committee. I did not decide on the division. I did not pick who would go, but I understand that the divisions were decided upon and agreed upon at a meeting of the two Speakers.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: I am not talking about the proportion as between the two houses. I am asking about the proportion as between the two parties in the Senate. Who agreed to the three and three?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I will put it this way. On the so-called permanent committee there are three members—His Honour the Speaker, the honourable senator from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith) and myself. I cannot recall whether we had a meeting to decide on that feature or not, but I think we were consulted on it.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Are these three members that you mention permanent members?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That was the intention.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I do not want to ask too many questions, but who made them permanent?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That was agreed upon, as I explained to the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand it was agreed upon by the three of them?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: No. At the first meeting at Washington it was felt that the original group that went from Canada and the original group of eight chosen by the Americans should form a permanent steering committee, the idea being that such an arrangement would facilitate the holding of these meetings, the arrangement of agendas and the conducting of the proceedings. That was agreed upon at the time, and that is the only agreement that was ever made in so far as members being regarded as permanent members of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Does my honourable friend not think it should be left to some authority other than the Americans? Could it not have been referred to this house?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: That is quite possible.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Is my honourable friend contemplating getting the agreement of this house? I can see that someone must take the initiative, but surely the Senate should have some say in confirming what is agreed upon. I think some provision should be made for letting this chamber decide. However, perhaps the two leaders in the Senate might consider the point.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I understand that from time to time delegates have been going from the Senate to meetings of NATO, the United Nations, this Canadian-American committee and interparliamentary committees, but I have never heard any discussion in this house on the selection of such delegates.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does my honourable friend know of any permanent member of any of these delegations?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I do not know whether they are temporary or permanent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My friend knows they are temporary and are selected on each occasion. This is the only instance I know of where members have appointed themselves as permanent members of a committee.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: Delegates to meetings of NATO and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association report to their respective associations.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: This is certainly a bad day for the senator from Hanover.

Hon. Mr. Robertson: You are equal to it.

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I have explained how the so-called—and I repeat the term "so-called" —permanent members of this committee were selected.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are they permanent temporaries or temporary permanents?

Hon. Mr. Brunt: I expect that very shortly a report will be presented to this chamber with respect to what took place at the meetings held in Montreal and Ottawa in June of last year. Possibly when that report is presented it would be appropriate to discuss this whole matter.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

EXTERNAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO REVIEW CANADA'S ROLE

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson:

That the Standing Committee on External Relations be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs, with special reference to Canadian participation in the activities of the United Nations and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Joseph A. Bradette: Honourable senators, it is with hesitation and humility that I rise to speak on the motion of the honourable senator from Winnipeg South (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson), Chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on External Relations, recommending that the committee be authorized to review the present role of Canada in international affairs. That standing committee has already done some excellent work under the capable leadership of its chairman and no doubt its studies will prove beneficial to both houses. I speak keenly on this matter because I had the great honour of being the Chairman of the External Affairs Committee in the House of Commons during the first eight years after the committee was established.

The world situation today is tense. The problems that have to be faced on every continent seem to be getting more and more serious and complicated, and their solution will require the best goodwill that all the nations can put forward.

I was greatly honoured when, last fall, I was chosen as a delegate of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization at a parliamentary conference that was held at Washington, D.C. The conference was under the very capable leadership of the honourable member of the House of Commons for Saskatoon, Mr. Harry F. Jones. I also had the pleasure of the company of the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine). He was an enjoyable companion, and I must say a great worker too, and I want to pay him this compliment, that he was always in the best of humour. I would also like to remark that we visited three or four of the large sporting goods stores in Washington and I was amazed at the amount of fishing equipment that the honourable senator from Rosetown bought.

I also wish to take this opportunity of thanking the honourable senator from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Smith) for his generous gift of splendid literature describing British Columbia, particularly his district of Kamloops. He says that in that province is to be found the best fishing in the world. Well, I suggest that the honourable senator from Rosetown pay a visit to the best fishing grounds in the Kamloops district and try out the fishing equipment he bought at Washington.

We were greatly honoured by the presence at the conference of His Honour the Speaker of the Senate, and also by the presence of the honourable senator from Shelburne (Hon. Mr. Robertson) and the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly).

Canada took an active part in the proceedings at the conference. For my part, I left most of the work on the main floor to the younger men in the delegation. I concentrated on committee work, and while so engaged met many of the members of the various delegations in attendance.

I made it a point to contact every delegate sent from the ten nations of NATO, and I found in every one of them a great spirit of tolerance. Every one of them realized the serious situation that we are facing in the world today. I was impressed by the wide divergence of opinion bound to be found in an organization of that size. In that organization there is at present a certain amount of tension. One matter that caused a lot of commotion was the NATO command controversy brought on by France. The clearest statement to date on France's position was made by Foreign Minister Maurice Couvé de Murville, in an address to the National Assembly, in which he said:

> France cannot lightly give to an authority not directly under French orders the right to decide upon a war involving 'the whole of French territory.'

He described the problem as one of great gravity, and one that must be recognized as such by France's allies. That attitude was prevalent at the conference, but I found that the delegates from France were willing to discuss it from every point of view, expressing the hope that Great Britain was behind her. Because the problem is unresolved, France has declined to accede to the American request to store nuclear bombs in France. This also is understandable from a strictly French point of view.

France is not dragging its heels on all NATO matters. The Foreign Minister reported a readiness to consider a common air defence system in western Europe, with full French participation in a network of warnings against air attacks. The sticking point remains the question of command with the authority to start the fighting. Is it a genuine point? France believes so, and her allies understand her feelings. But if a great war were actually imminent would these matters not be reduced to niceties? France would have no choice—nor would the United States, Britain or any other western member of the alliance—as to whether its whole territory were to be involved or not. It would have no choice as to whether or not to fight in the Mediterranean. We would all be in it together with all we had. Mr. Couvé de Murville certainly knows that, as does General de Gaulle. The task is to work out a kind of command that will satisfy France's needs of prestige and sovereignty and that could still act fast and effectively in case of war.

There are many potential crises existing around the world today, of which three are particularly troublesome. They are the Berlin question, the control of nuclear weapons, and communist China's ambitions. While no ready-made solution has been found for any of them, a solution is at least within the realm of possibility.

The first problem I shall discuss for a few minutes is that affecting Berlin.

For more than a year Soviet Premier Khrushchev, with all the orchestration of the communist world power bloc, has been playing variations on a theme. The theme is, "We want Berlin." Answering a question asked in Indonesia, the man from Moscow has put the demand more bluntly and more sweepingly than at any time since the Camp David conversations with President Eisenhower. If Western powers at the summit meeting in May do not accept Soviet plans for making Berlin a "free city", he says his Government will > ... sign a separate peace treaty with the (East) German Democratic (communist) Republic.

And he added, the guarantees of West Berlin will > ... cease to be valid because West Berlin stands on territory belonging to the German Democratic Republic.

Thus communism persists in the shamelessly deceitful myths that the East German puppet Government represents the disfranchised people of East Germany, that a patchwork bridge between it and the freely elected West German Federal Republic would be "a settlement among Germans," and that two million West Berliners have no right to determine the government under which they shall live.

The West will do well in the forthcoming meeting to put forth substantially the proposition it has presented before, in a form now reportedly favoured by American Secretary of State Herter, a proposition that all of Germany, East and West, be allowed to vote on whether it prefers to be unified or to continue as two separate countries. Moscow, of course, will reject this, but it will put the western position on record so the world may know what nations favour self-determination of peoples.

In his reply at Djakarta, Mr. Khrushchev came very close to setting a time limit for the action he once threatened in May 1959. President Eisenhower has said the only significant understanding that emerged from the Camp David conferences was that there would be no time limit, no ultimatum, no duress overhanging the summit discussions. If that understanding is violated, what is left of what Moscow chooses to call "the spirit of Camp David"?

The warning in the renewed threat to Berlin is that Western diplomatic and military authorities by now should be decided on what will be their response, if necessary, to the promulgation of a separate peace treaty between Moscow and its puppet régime in East Berlin. The response should be one on which Britain, France, and the United States thoroughly agree.

One proposal has been that in such a circumstance West Berlin should be declared an integral part of West Germany subject to the North Atlantic Treaty guarantees. It might not be necessary to go so far, but it certainly should be insisted that no right exists with, or can be conferred on, the East German Government to cut off access to West Berlin. The move to inaugurate higher altitude cargo plane flights to West Berlin is one step toward being ready to protect the city's survival, and as such is to be applauded.

Premier Khrushchev's threat to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, if the summit talks in May fail to result in agreement, strikes a new note. Mr. Khrushchev has talked in the past of signing a treaty with East Germany if the West Berlin issue is not settled by negotiation. But he has not explicitly linked the action to the first summit meeting. The threat cannot help but create the wrong atmosphere for the May conference.

If the threat is not dissipated the meeting will be held in a climate of pressure and impending crisis, rather than of calm and goodwill. Already, in response to the war of nerves conducted by Premier Khrushchev on the West Berlin problem, the United States has said the aircraft it sends to Berlin will fly higher than the 10,000-foot altitude set by the Russians as a ceiling, though the decision has been postponed.

Ever since he made his first moves on the West Berlin issue in November, 1958, Mr. Khrushchev's objective has clearly been the recognition of the political status quo in central Europe and the stabilization of the existing frontiers. Whatever the merits of the objective—and it does have merit as a means of creating political stability in Europe—the method chosen to reach it is almost as important as the goal itself.

Unilateral action and the threat to use force can only create grave tensions. Stable frontiers can best be established by negotiation. Moreover, the special position of West Berlin can in no circumstance be brushed aside. The wishes of 2,500,000 people cannot be ignored, nor their freedom betrayed, without serious consequences to the West's moral position. Even Mr. Khrushchev has, up to a point, recognized the West's vital interest in Berlin's political future by agreeing to make it a "free city". However, his proposals have never included sufficient guarantees to safeguard the people of West Berlin from domination by the East German communist Government.

The main thing at the moment is to try to restore the spirit of conciliation on both sides that prevailed last fall. All threats must be forgotten, and there must be a clear intention to resolve difficulties through negotiation at the summit meetings ahead. Anything less can only increase, rather than relieve, tensions.

Some have said that Germany may not be united for another hundred years. But history of the past has proven that you cannot break up and divide a great nation indefinitely. It seems to me that is as true of Germany as of other nations. No matter how long Russia tries to keep Germany divided, the day will surely come when that great nation will find its freedom.

I often spoke in the other house against tariff restrictions. I spoke in that way because I belong to a part of Canada which, like all the western provinces, is a primary producer, and most of our production has to go to the United States. We have to be very careful when we deal with any matter which affects our neighbours, because they are always present with us. I have in mind what was said during the last two federal elections. I remember too what was said in 1911—I was very young at the time—that we should not have any truck or trade with the Yankees. We have to be very careful not to repeat that, because we are bound together with the great nation to the south of us. She is not an enemy; she is a great friend.

I also remember what happened at the Mont Tremblant meeting where the leader of the Canadian Government wanted to divert a certain amount of trade from the United States to Great Britain. That was a good idea. The British people sent a very bright and intelligent delegation to Mont Tremblant, and during the last days a British representative stated that 30 per cent of the trade we had with the Americans could be transferred to Britain if we accepted free trade with that country. Some of the Canadian ministers who were present at the meeting never fully recuperated from the shock they received when that statement was made. Free trade is an absolute impossibility, but there should certainly be freer trade among the nations of the world.

We are also at the present time negotiating a Japanese treaty. This is a very serious question so far as the western provinces are concerned. We know that today Japan is the biggest purchaser of the grain produced in Western Canada. We do not want to jeopardize that. We do not want to put restrictions on Japan so that country will not have the certain amount of trade they need with Canada. On that problem we have to be very careful and use all the intelligence possible. We have to realize that the world is getting smaller and smaller, and the higher we raise tariff barriers the harder it will be to maintain peace in the world. You have only to read the history of the world to know that unfair tariff terms on countries which had no chance of defending themselves have always caused trouble. These are the things that we must always remember in our deliberations, whether in this house or in the other place.

There is one question I will place before this honourable assembly, and it is a serious one. Do we want our allies to be strong or weak? Do we want division as between the nations of NATO—they are our allies, even if not all of them enjoy the democracy that we have—or do we not want as allies some nations which are not quite so democratic as we are but which favour our way of life? Are we to be prima donnas? I have not met a prima donna, but I hear that at times they have violent tempers. Are we playing fair with those nations? We have to understand the ideas that other nations may have.

When I was a boy going to school in the province of Quebec my French teacher often spoke of l'Albion perfide, or perfidious Albion. When I took my primary English later I found that all kinds of names were given to France by people in Great Britain. We must realize that for centuries those great, noble nations fought each other although they were separated by only a small arm of the sea. They fought in Europe, they fought in Asia, they fought in Africa, and they fought on the North American continent.

Then came the resurgence of Germany and we had the entente cordiale between England and France. There is no doubt that that was one of the main reasons for the victory of the Allied nations, and that it was of great benefit to democracy, in World War I and World War II. Are we to insist that our allies must be only those with whose point of view we always agree? Some countries desire to be on our side, and it is our duty to welcome them and co-operate with them as far as possible.

Take Turkey in the first World War. We all know how hard she fought for the Germans. We know how hard she fought again in World War II. We may not agree with all she has done against freedom, but Turkey is a forceful bastion against the forces of communism in the Middle East, and is feared by Russia.

Japan was on our side in World War I, but what happened at Pearl Harbour? There were some Japanese in the United States on commercial matters when their country was preparing for the attack on Pearl Harbour. That attack was one of the most horrible things that ever happened in world history. While Japan was supposed to be having discussions with the United States she was preparing for its downfall. Yet, years before the Pearl Harbour attack when a terrible earthquake occurred in Japan, Americans and people from all other civilized countries went there with food, medicines, nurses, and so on. I have heard it said in Japan itself by Japanese: "We do not understand why Pearl Harbour was attacked." Now, we see that Japan is an anchor in the Pacific against the spread of communism in that section of the world.

In the Mediterranean, Greece and Great Britain are having some difficulties over Cyprus, but at the same time the statesmen of those two great countries have found it possible to keep their friendship intact for the benefit of us all.

I now come to Germany. I know this is quite a problem because my own motherland has suffered within a century from three horrible wars with Germany. There was the war of 1870, the war of 1914, in which France lost almost a generation, and the war of 1939. No one can forget those things, but at the same time we have to face the present situation as it exists. Certainly no one could accuse Mr. Adenauer of being a Nazi. If you know his personal history you will know he was removed from his position in Cologne by the Hitler régime, and his family also suffered at the hands of the Nazis. Some people in his Government may have been Nazis, but I doubt that those people will ever be Nazis again.

Nations which are friendly often dispute among themselves and seem to be over-sensitive and exceedingly critical on any differences that arise. Quite a furore was suddenly created when West Germany approached Spain for permission to establish air force training bases in that country, and also approached France for permission to establish military supply depots there. I cannot understand the unfriendly reactions that are generally expressed every time the name of Spain is mentioned. These are prejudices that I cannot understand. They are beyond my comprehension. I wish honourable senators could visit Spain, as I have done. I am not in favour of a totalitarian state, but I would like anyone who visits that country to ask the people there what alternative Franco had. For instance, do you think it would have been better for the communists to have dominated that country? Do you think it would have been better to have had the communists destroy the religion and everything else cherished by the people of Spain? I like to think that the Spanish insurrection will eventually result in the return of democracy to that great nation. Some people might accuse me of being pro-fascist, but I will say to this honourable assembly that Spain is not fascist, but that it is nationalist and Spanish.

Time is short, but I would like to refer to a newspaper article to help illustrate what happened in the Spanish insurrection. This article appeared in the Ottawa French-language newspaper Le Droit on June 10, 1949. The translation is my own, and I want honourable senators to listen, for I know that I am speaking to persons who believe in the principles of charity and understanding. I am the same as other honourable senators when I hear of a rabbi, a Catholic priest or a Protestant minister being persecuted. I know there is something wrong with the nation that persecutes these people. I was proud of the republic to the south of us a few days ago when it unanimously protested against the imprisonment of Monsignor Walsh in China. The Chinese communists tried to have the world believe that Monsignor Walsh was organizing a revolution in that country, and they brought the name of Cardinal Spellman into disrespect, saying that he also was fomenting revolution in China. These allegations cannot be tolerated. They are simply the work of the communist movement. We in the free world believe in free assembly and the right to practise one's own religion, but people do not have this right under the yoke of communism. To illustrate what happened in Spain during the communist revolution I will refer to my own translation of this article I have mentioned. It says:

> The Spanish communist revolution cost the Spanish people dearly. Six thousand lay priests were assassinated, and 20,000 churches were plundered and destroyed.

It is terrible to see men of the cloth—priests, ministers or rabbis—persecuted, for these are men of good behaviour and they are needed in our way of life.

The article goes on:

> The priests were methodically hunted in the mountains by dogs; they were sought after with rage in all their hiding places; they were executed in most places right on the spot and without any other reason than their sacerdotal character. The number of civilians who were assassinated largely because of their political ideas and chiefly on account of their religious ideas amounted to 300,000.

And we must remember this was done without cause. I defy anybody to contradict this. If you go to Spain you will be told this by all sections of the people. The article continues:

> The rightist elements that were most in evidence were nearly everywhere eliminated, without accusation, without proof, and in most cases without judgment and by summary execution.

That is what has happened in Spain, and again I put the question: What would have been the alternative for Franco had he not had most of the Spanish army and the Moroccans from North Africa to fight against the communist insurrection? Look what the communists did with the public treasury of Spain. They took all the gold bullion and sent it to Moscow, and it has never been returned. These are things that happened in that country. I know you are open-minded, but if you do not believe these things you can go to the proper records to find out what happened.

Why do so many of our allies do everything in their power to weaken our cause? Are we so strong and united that we can scoff and sneer at a nation like Spain? To my way of thinking we should do everything in our power to draw that nation into full partnership in NATO, and there is no doubt that thereby the Western alliance would gain strength.

Honourable senators will remember the commotion caused in the United States some two years ago when that country wanted to establish air bases in Spain. A large segment of the American public was opposed to it. People do not seem to realize that today Spain is one of the greatest bulwarks against communism, and if the communists had won the revolution who could say that communism would not have spread throughout most of Western Europe? Who would dare to deny this? Today the American people are almost unanimously convinced that it was a good thing to establish these bases in Spain for the common defence of NATO and the preservation of civilization.

The tentative, technical feelers, as the West German Minister of Defence called them, have stirred up the old distrust of Germany, particularly in Europe, and there are some echoes of this here in Canada. Even the assurance by West Germany that any final agreement will be submitted to the full NATO alliance for approval has not yet quieted down all the criticism, which I feel is most unnecessary.

The problem of evaluating Germany's actions comes from the emotional and even intellectual difficulty in separating the old Germany from the new. Germany has not been without sin and in many instances she has had a horrible past. If we want to believe that this is the old Germany flexing its muscles and again acting contemptuously arrogant, as some have stated, then there is reason to be on our guard. One can easily understand the feeling some people have about this matter. It is easy to arouse emotions by such catch-phrases as a Bonn-Madrid Axis, a Bonn-Paris Axis, and the revival of the Teutonic military might. These are phrases we hear these days, and Mr. Khrushchev, who is at present in Paris, has warned Mr. de Gaulle not to get too close to West Germany. What right has Mr. Krushchev to tell Mr. de Gaulle what to do? In this regard I am proud that my motherland is pro-German because Germany believes in the strength of NATO and the good faith of Western Germany.

Have such catch-phrases and prejudices any place in the cold, analytical business of keeping Western Europe defended? The West Germans surely are justified in asking their NATO allies to make up their minds. Do the allies want or do they not want Germany to play a vigorous, full part in the alliance? In the past Germany has been criticized for not doing enough; now she is criticized for trying to improve the effectiveness of her air force.

It might be true that West Germany has erred in the way it has gone about all this. The Germans again reveal how they underestimate the lingering distrust. They may have forgotten the past before their neighbours have, which is understandable. They saw some reactions of that state of mind when the President of West Germany visited Great Britain nearly two years ago. And who could criticize the reaction of Great Britain? No doubt the Government was courteous in receiving the President, but the British people could not forget the horrible nightmare they endured for over two years, losing the flower of their nation and suffering tremendous material losses. I myself saw the almost unbelievable destruction in one of London's suburbs. I saw one school that was completely destroyed, where from sixty to eighty little children were killed. You could still see some of their tiny limbs, arms and legs, hanging in the tree tops. The English people cannot easily forget such things. It would be absolutely impossible. But the German people see only their defence minister working with all his energies to make West Germany strong, and, no doubt, as strong as the West wants it to be. Surely, no sane man in Germany believes that his country, united or not, can ever become again the military colossus of Europe! We certainly know what country is the real colossus now, and which is to be dreaded and feared. At one time France was the military colossus of Europe. This is a calculated risk that Europe must necessarily take. Any other alternative will carry grave danger to us all.

I appreciate the kind attention honourable senators have given me, and I trust I may say a few more words about the great role that Canada is playing in the United Nations. Canada has become a leading intermediary power. Our wide contacts in all parts of the world place us in a position, for instance, to know the aspirations and ideals of Europe, of the South American countries, and many others. We are highly respected by all. I want particularly to mention the notable work that was done by the Honourable Lester B. Pearson in the United Nations. He filled a great role, and when he received the Nobel Prize there was no question of politics involved. It was simply that he was a man that was respected in all the chancelleries of the world.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Bradette: When difficulties arose between Great Britain, Russia and other nations, the judgment of Mr. Pearson could always be relied upon.

I also wish to praise the Honourable Howard C. Green, whom I have known for many years in the House of Commons. He has had wide experience as a parliamentarian. He is a diligent and capable man, and no doubt will bring great credit to Canada in its activities in the United Nations. Our conduct in international affairs in the past is a guarantee for the future. We participated to the limit, and in all departments, during World Wars I and II, not for territorial aggrandizement or wartime expansion, but to see that the principles of freedom and democracy that we so greatly cherish will prevail.

A few days ago we read of the horrible catastrophe that occurred in North Africa. Let us hope that such a like tragedy will not occur again. However, in such instances all that is best in mankind also comes into play. It is to me a good sign for the future that human nature can be so generous when it is properly led.

I will complete my remarks by saying a few words about Operation "Agadir", in which humanity is shown at its best at a time of such a disaster which has so terribly affected this section of the world. The response for aid was strong and spontaneous. At a time of such terrible mass tragedy for thousands in an earthquake-riven area, when a clear call to do so can be heard, weapons of war are turned into instruments of mercy, and swords into plowshares.

Nations that in 1911 moved toward Agadir as power rivals moved recently along parallel courses of co-operative effort. The American-built air bases in Morocco, from which the United States is withdrawing in conformity with Moroccan desire, became suprapolitical as American planes took part in the rescue work. French ships that a year or so ago may have helped escort unwanted Frenchmen out of newly independent Morocco were steaming back with welcome French aid.

Observing the way mankind moves in such crises, even the less optimistic among us recover hope. The deciding factor for humanity's future need not be simply the scope of modern destructiveness. Indeed, the larger the destructiveness looms, the easier it becomes to identify it with other non-human forces. And the more likely that mankind will deal with it in terms like those of Operation "Agadir", 1960, the more can we hope that the best in all nations of the world will predominate, so that universal peace will prevail.

Hon. Gray Turgeon: Honourable senators, I know the hour is very late, but I should like to say a few words, following the honourable senator from Cochrane (Hon. Mr. Bradette).
