"An awful pause, prophetic of the end."

When they look with a trembling dread At the misty future that stretches on, From the silent home of the dead

Tis no lone isle in a boundless main No brilliant but distant shore, Where the lovely ones, who are called away, Must go to return no more.

No; heaven is near us; the mighty vail Of mortality blinds the eye, That we cannot see the angel bands On the shores of eternity

Yet oft, in the hours of holy thought, To the thirsty soul is given That power to pierce through the mist of To the beauteous scenes of heaven.

Then very near seem its pearly gates, And sweetly its harpings fall; Till the soul is restless to soar away, And longs for the angel-call.

I know, when the silver chord is loosed, When the veil is rent away, Not long and dark shall the passage be To the realms of endless day,

The eye that shuts in a dying hour, Will open the next in bliss ; The welcome will sound in the heavenly Ere the farewell is hushed in this

We pass from the clasp of mourning friends, To the arms of the loved and lost ; And those smiling faces will greet us then. Which here we have valued most.

Letter from England. From our own Corresponde

This year of our Lord, eighteen hundred and fifty nine, does not open well. For Earope it promises badly, and even for England its omens tion on the part of the Emperor to engage in bostilities with Austria, and the latest telegraphic despatches indicate that war is out of the ques tion,-the whole matter being settled. But Europe has had too much to do with Napoleonic policy and craft to dismiss the war question from preparations now going on at the Toulon arsenal nificance just now, -and to this must be added the necessity which presses upon the Emperor of the soldiers of which are tired enough of parades and fates and twirling their moustachios for the though withal a holiday-loving bird, and find o theless a terrible and instinctive craving for field He is not particular as to the locality of prefer, but if that be not practicable, he will not hesi ate to indulge his tastes at home. Apart from the dreadful aspect of a possible war on the Continent, one can hardly help smil ing at the incongruity of the French Emperor's suspected policy. Louis Napoleon the champion of Italian liberty ! The hero of the coup d'é at the gagger of the public press, the prosecutor of Montalembert, the very incarnation of Machia vellianism, stands forth as the apostle of the freedom of Italy! The picture is too good, and yet poor Italy is lost in enthusiastic admiration of it. To us it brings to mind the old satire :-"Toe devil was sick,-the devil a monk would be !" Every one must regret that in this case the gallant and chivalrous King of Sardinia has been made a sort of catspaw. He can little afford to link bimse'f with the fortnnes of a falling power, and few can anticipate a much brighter issue for the present family of France The princess Clothilde may have a transient prosperity in her new al iance, but there are few who think that the star of the Imperial family is in the ascendant. subjects that can occupy the attention of the reflecting mind, is the varied aspects under which evangelical Christianlty is presented, as modified by national peculiarities. Every nation has an individualty. It is this individualty that constitutes its specific identity. For example, if we just glance at Europe we shall find that, though these nations are found lying side by side, run ning into each other, standing in this relation for centuries, they still retain their peculiarities. How wide, for example the contrast between Germany, France, Switzerland, Prussia, Italy and Russia. Germany, lethargic in all its movements, strongly conservative, averse to changes and revolutions; France, fickle and restless, always seeking change, never at one stay, full of vivacity and levity; the Swiss, with his innate love of liberty, his deep and ardent attachment to the apostolic faith, the home of the much agitated apostolical succession, if a home can be found for it anywhere in this wide world. Italy with its glorious history, its heroic ancestry, its strugyour half fledged Papists do in the Church ancient Rome.

In the Britith Isles the same diversity of national feeeling and peculiarities are evinced. There is England, with its firm tenacity, its nowerful conservative tendency, its love of personal liberty, the very country bearing the marks, by its public ,and private walks through the parks and private grounds-England, the home of Protestantism for Europe. Then there is Scotland, with its broadly marked national as his expectation that he would return in characteristics-with its historical associations of which any nation may be proud - one peculabours in St. Paul's Parish, and that he liarity standing out in all its revolutions and did not give the slightest hint to any of his changes, namely, the religious element. This ly imbedded in the mind of the nation. Ireland next claims attention. Ireland, the land of genius and poetry, but of all countries the most unfortunate-its histor written in tears, a dark cloud for ages has overshadowed its dettiny. Its people distinguished for a brilliancy of talent, surpassed by no nation in the world, potsessing wit unrivalled, an elasticity that enables their spirits to rise above every emergency. an exemplification of the more general aspects, and by the subject in its more general aspects, and its aureelves to Methodism, we have ample limit carselves to methodshi, we have ample proof of the correctness of this position. In England, Ireland and Scotland, the Methodist societies are placed substantially under the same form of government, and have a constant interchange of ministers, but yet in the manifestations of the piety of Methodism there is no monotony. Scottish Methodism is characterized by its intelligence, steadiness and perseverance. It requires as much labour to convert one Scotchman as it does to convert three Eag- Wier, McDonald, B Smith, Davidson, McKen lishmen or Americans, but when converted, a Scotchman seldom backslides. He is also very frm in his ecclesiastical attachments and friend-Annand, Robertson, Archibaid, Munro, Hon firm in his ecclesiastical attachments and friendships. In Ireland there is much fervency and sidered as the highest type of Methodism. In England, as is well known, there is in Methodism a strictness of discipline that gives it great compactness, but at the same time perhaps interferes with its free development. For effi-ciency, liberality and order British Methodism is not to be sui passed.

Night.

Gently, O Night ! as falling snow O'er closing flowers and waters flow, Thy wing is cast ; And calm and deep thy shadows lie, As early thoughts that cannot die, Within the Past.

And now, in yon blue vault on high, The countless priestbood of the sky, Serene and still, With holy incense, pure and tree, Reflected from Evernity, Their censers fill.

Whence comest thou, O solemn Night ! With speaking winds, and worlds of light, A wond'rous band ? Thy presence wins, as sunbeams' dew. My soul's deep aspirations to The Spirit Land.

Dim with the bues of earthly birth, And beavy with the dust of earth, The weight of life : My struggling spirit draws from thee Power to contend with destiny-Scrength for the strile.

Thy shadows o'er my burning brain. Fall as the drops of cooling rain On the parched dust ; And gratefully I kneel to pray For a brave heart to tread Life's way-For changeless trust.
