period, the Transcript would have it, that Annexation was not seriously entertained by any considerable body of our citizens. The names that were procured in a few hours to the Annexation Address, proved the Transcript either very ignosate of fublic opinion or very careless of adhering to the fruth. We never expected to see the Transcript frankly acknowledge its error, but we did hope he would write less loosely; that he would pay a deceme regard to the sentiments of a majority of our respectable citizens. Our hopes have not been realized. That he expects to impose upon Montrealers, we cannot believe. They understand the true state of matters too well; and their intelligence is not likely to be brootwinked by the repetition of the old fictions. No, the Transcript is not now catering for Montreal. He is writing for the country, for distant places, where the public feeling of Montreal souly known through the medium of the Press. In the rural districts, where misrepresentations are less easily confuted than they are at head quarters, the Transcript seeks to create an impression. He is trying to induce the outposts to lay down their true, by stating, in substance, that the Montreal Annexation garrison has surrendered. On Thursday last, he re-hushed for his country readers a variety of deceptive dishes that were rejected here some months ago. He underrates the intelligence of the hardy yeomanry of the country. They are not easily deceived, and their memories are retentive of old deceits. The leading men of Montreal, or at least their names, are as familiar to the farmers of the country, as ordinary household words. Those names, appended to the Annexation Address, have been circulated far and wide. The farmers read the Transcript, then turn to the Address and the famous Protest—"the nine days' wonder?"—contrast the names, and smile at the Transcript. The smile would merge into

But to return to the Transcript. On the very day that he pronounced Annexation dead, Montreal witnessed a large and influential body of its citizens, assembled together for the purpose of organizing to complete the noble work to auspiciously begun. Sin,—The day before yesterday, there was put into my hands a pamphlet of the date of November I, with the name of Major MacDougull, of the Royal Canadian Rifles, on the title page.

In the absence of my principal, I shall follow the example of the Major's friend, in troubling you with an interjectional note.

The writer of the pamphlet most strongly condemns amonder, which, of all places, should last appear in mattern affecting honor. But, in my view, his production looks very like a series of intendees against myself.

Major MacDougall says:—" I at once declare that, from all I have since heard, I am convinced

Mr. Vane is set (sic in orig.) the ruffian I, had at first supposed from his conduct, and that his per-sonal courage is above all suspicion. Towards him I have not the smallest feeling of animosity." How far this avowal—apology, I suppose I must not call it—may be considered sufficient to assuage Mr. Vane's feelings—how far it is a sufficient compensation for such an outrage as was offered to him on so slight a pretext, I shall not say, as Mr. Vane is absent, and I am not Major MacDougall's adviser.

But, so far, I am obliged to Major MacDougall that I think it is sufficient to justify me in "countenancing a person signing himself Frederick H. Vane"—I knowing full well who he was and having known his father—I countenancing him in nothing that was wrong, but simply in the en-deavor to extricate him honorably from a disticulty deavor to extricate him honorably from a difficulty arising pertly from his own haste, and partly from that of Major MacDougall.

Major MacDougall has published a letter from his friend, to the effect that he, Major MacDougall, instructed him, Mr. D. L. MacDougall, to make it distinctly understood that he was ready to meet me, if I chose to substitute myself for my remained. Share on time.

Mr. MacDougall did tell me so, most explicitly CITY NEWS.

ORDUNATION.—A large assemblage was gathered at Gosford Street Church, on Wednesday evening last, to witness the ceremony of ordaining the Rev. Mr. Marling to the office of Minister to the Congregation accombining in that place. The Rev. Mr. Miles, of Abbettsford, delivered a very sible discourse on the nature of a Christian Church, after which the usual questions regarding doctrine, faith, and principles of Church government, were propounded to the candidate; to all most clear and satisfactory naswers were given. The "imposition of hands" was made while the Rev. Mr. Girdwood offered the ordaining prayer. The Rev. Mr. Wilkes then gave a very im, pressive charge to the Micheler; and the Rev. Mr. Getkie delivered an address to the congregation. Several Ministers of other denominations were present, and took part in the proceedings of the evening.

BARLY ShOP-SHUYTING.—We unders, and that the Hatters and Furriers have unanimously agreed to close their respective places of business at To-clook, R.M., during the Winter, commencing this evening, (Monday.) Cusomers will please remember this, and facilitate such a dealrable arrangement, by making their purchases before six o'clock. Mr. MacDougall diff tell me so, most explicitly and courteously, so as seither to give offence, nor to leave a doubt of his meaning. But it think that he will recollect that I had previously told him that I was ready to take the place of my principal, if necessary, and that I had waited at home the whole of the preceding evening, expering to do so, if nothing better could be done; and I very much fear that the mildness of my language, and my efforts to avoid the necessity of such a and my efforts to avoid the necessity of such a course, may have led him to think that I would heaitate to take it, if inevitable. This certainly, though probably not intended, is the impression the pamphlet before me is likely to convey to those who have not read the whole corres-

But Major MacDougall, probably in ignorance of the rules of evidence, forgets that none of this was reduced to writing. Such explanations made verbally, are more customary courtesies, expressing the respect the parties feel for each other; and I remember Mr. D. L. Mac Dougall himself, in a case something like this, when he forgot to desirable arrangement, by making their parchises before all o'clock.

ATHER MUN CLUE.—The Annual Meeting of this Club took place on Thursday evening fast, when we learn that the following gentlemen were elected office-bearers for the ensuing seasonic Henry Ponts, President; John Lowe, Vice-President; W. H. DeLisie, Secretary; J. Boyd, Trensurer.

We have been requested to ennounce that a meeting of the latent party of the make them, ruled, that even if not made, the readiness to do what is right should be presumed,

and I agreed with him.

It was after these preliminaries, or pending them, I forget which, but it is quite immaterial, them, I forget which, but it is quite immercrial, that I received the copy of the letter No. 9. In that letter, I find nothing of the kind, except a slight hint—certainly not more explicit than mine about "consulting a friend,"—that the Major should be "weak-minded enough" under insul!"—and I had given him none, except the carrying to him a letter, on the least of which as explains—to do something which he thinks very contemptible; and that there might be no mine take, his hypothetical "contempt?" is superlatively in greatest."

take, his hypothetical "contempt" is superintively "greatest."

If any thing fatal had happened, it would have been on the basis of this letter that I should have been tried, morally, if not legally. No verbal explanation would have been listened to, or, if listened to, have had any weight. Litero scripto the word: an apology on the ground of the limit of the tempor of the writer, or, as he call it, "indignation." It was not a cretaration, it retracted nothing; it left the real offence u absted. If was an apology most ineagre, and the tempor of the Army are often accused of being turbulent, and arrogant to civilians. But here is an unexceptionable regiment, this detachment commanded by a gentleman who relies justly on his initiated honour to atrengthen his mind against the weekness of passion. Here is Mr. Baxter his the moral to the morning after breakfast further.

If any thing fatal had happened, it would have been in the course of the survey of the fatal and the season of the first the state of the passion of the intervention of the tempor of the writer, or, as he call it, "indignation." It was not a cretarization, it retracted nothing; it left the real offence u absted. If was an apology most ineagre, and the very word indignation (is dignas) is an offence used, or rather is not conciliatory.

Major Mac Dougell is "sensible that he has on mitted a mistake." Then, if so, why this yes mishness about the word. "a pology," so son the intervention of the intervent of the tempor of the intervention of the intervent of the We need offer our readers an apology for giving up a large portion of our space to-day to the publication of the Address to the people of Ganada,—the importance of the abject inscussed,—the calm and dispassionate tone used, and the large number of influential and highly respectable names appended, alike demand that we as members of the British empire on this continent, and equally affected with our Canadian brathren by the policy of the Parent Government, be it for weal or woe, should scriously and attentively consider the matter, and be prepared when the train artives to act with wisdom, judgment, and discretion. It is not our intention at present to enter into any lengthy discussion of the subject, our remarks we shall defer to another time; at present we merely wish discussion of the suspect, our remarks we shall defer to another time; at present we merely wish to introduce the address to the favorable potice of our readers, and invite their amentive perusal of it, in order that they may be the better enabled to appreciate the remarks which we intend, before long, to lay before them.—Helifar Colonist.

bonor. And, in the face of this, this second, this gett shot (or hanged, as the case may be) for his pairs."

Does Major Macdougall imagine that I could possibly send him a challenge, or that "any gentlemm of sound intellect" could accompany me into the field in the face of such a letter as this, of which the original was retained by his friend? Why, I should, indeed, have been "a dangerous lunctic." Nothing would have excused me in going out with him then, whort of a written persumptory challenge from himself, and even that, after the reference to the Horse Guards, and time for cooling blood, would have been rather out that. Major Macdougall does not amonghed to make the strong of "indignation" in the world; though he is suit liberal in its use. I also was indignant at the attempt, (for such it appeared to me) to trample down my friend, a gentleman we'vel born as loved as any officer of the Royal Canadian Rifes.

And Major Macdougall must recollect that he has never yet told us, or the world, the most important thinse—namely, is, sold capacity & sense.

Major MacDougall seads, at page 7, a very extending the proceedings of the letter of the sense of the strong of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the proceeding of the sense of the sold of the sold of the sense of the sold of the

M., a letter is sent to the Major by the same 'ruffan,' the hearer is, very properly, kept waiting seventeen hours to give him time for better reflection on the behousness of his course; and then, a very courteous letter is put into his hand, delicately suggesting that his friend was most likely, drunk, and meditating murder, and ought to have been 'beaten severely,' that he is actionished such a character can find any one to courseance' him; and he indicates as distinctly as he can that duelling is a very odious practice, and that the matter is one of disciplins, not of honor.
